Second, that selection is not according to the Bills which are listed on the Order Paper but is according to a list of names. For purposes of convenience we have taken the names as they are printed on the Order Paper so that the Member has his choice.

I feel that the exchange today is unfortunate because if there had been a little diplomatic discussion prior to this matter coming up on the floor of the House, these Bills would have been printed on the notice board which appears in our lobby. We would then have known what the order of business was, and we could have prepared for it.

The two points which I would like to make are that, first, the selection has nothing to do with Party; and, second, the Member is called and the Member makes his choice as to which Bill or which Motion is discussed. If you will make sure I am correct, Mr. Speaker, I believe this is important for the rest of the Hon. Members of the House.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to follow where we are going here. I understood from the comments of my colleague the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody, and from watching you in the Chair, that you tended to agree that in fact you had drawn the conclusion that there had been unanimous consent given, and that you tended also to agree with my colleague the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody that the Hon. Member for Edmonton West had also indicated that whatever you ruled he would abide by.

I want to say to the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) that in fact the request for unanimous consent was raised over a week ago. I rose in the House and said that at the appropriate time we would ask the House for unanimous consent. We thought that was in fact noticed. I did consult some people, I must confess not the Hon. Member, but it is hard to consult everyone, and we thought we had general agreement to allow it to occur. I would ask you, sir, in the interest of proceeding with the business of the House, if you could not simply agree that the ruling you made is a ruling which is acceptable and we could proceed from there?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will hear other Hon. Members, but may I explain in very simple terms that my understanding is that the House had granted unanimous consent to the exchange of the two Bills. That is clear; I indicated that. However, an Hon. Member has risen in his place and indicated that he did not give unanimous consent. The Chair is not about to dispute that Hon. Member's word. That Hon. Member told the Chair that before the Chair had expressed a verbal understanding that unanimous consent had been reached, he had said no. I believe the Chair has no option but to accept the word of an Hon. Member who denies that unanimous consent had been given.

That is the difficulty which I am in. I have done what I could. I have requested the Hon. Member for Edmonton West reconsider the matter in any way he can. I certainly would recognize the Hon. Member for Edmonton West in order to facilitate the business of the House. Once he has risen and has indicated to the House that, prior to my indicating that I understood there was unanimous consent, he himself had denied unanimous consent, I have no choice but to take his word.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) said he was trying to find out where we were going and, obviously, the answer to that is exactly nowhere.

It seems to me that the question at issue here is whether or not a Private Member's Bill which has been put in of late is going to take precedence over Bills which have been on the Order Paper for a long time. One Hon. Member of this House, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), has said no, which it is his perfect right to do. I do not know why we are still arguing. Let us get on with the business of the House.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, in light of the way things are going, you did in fact acknowledge, and other Hon. Members have agreed, that there was unanimous consent within this House for what we proposed, and the ruling has obviously been changed. Does that mean we can go back a little further to when the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) came in here this afternoon, only a few minutes ago, and asked for unanimous consent to bring in the budget on April 19, with the attached items? Can I now say that I did not give unanimous consent to that? Will that be a "no" agreement within this House?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Now you are being deliberately stupid.

Mr. Anguish: What is the line? Is it one minute after, Mr. Speaker? Can you do it 15 minutes after, half an hour?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I do not know the answers to the Hon. Member's questions. Certainly he does raise quite appropriate problems of procedure. But what I am faced with is that an Hon. Member has risen in his place and indicated that he did not give unanimous consent. I do not think it is necessary for the Chair to repeat this again and again and again. I cannot proceed when an Hon. Member stands in his place and assures the Chair he did not give unanimous consent.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Edmonton West indicated that he was not giving consent, he made reference to disagreeing with the way Private Member's Business was handled by this side of the House, and by myself in particular. I wish to assure him as an Hon. Member that I have always taken the position that if one Member has the agreement of another Member to trade places, I do my best not to stand in his way. If next week he comes to me with the same proposition, my reaction would be the very same. So if he is taking this position to make a point to me, I wish to assure him that he has misinterpreted the position I take, which is consistent throughout regardless of the political stripe of any Member when it comes to a request during Private Members' hour.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, this whole thing could have been completely avoided if the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) had taken the right steps. At 11 o'clock this morning I received a sheet with item 1 and item 2 included, and the third space was empty. I did not get the sheet with the third name until just before coming into the House. The office of the President of the Privy Council makes the decision, so why did he not put this item in? It is a pretty sloppy way of doing business, I suggest.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will try to recognize Hon. Members on a point of order who have not already been heard. The Hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to confirm what our Deputy Whip has said in that the Notice Paper we got earlier today simply listed two items under Private Members' Business. It is my understanding, and perhaps you can confirm it, Mr. Speaker, that it is not the Table which draws up the names and finds Members who can perhaps participate in Private Members' hours; it is the Government House Leader's office. If that is so, it seems to me they could have avoided this problem.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, simply to clarify that, you will note that all three Members listed here today are Opposition Members. I certainly hope no one is suggesting that somehow we were picking and choosing under any other criterion than—

Mr. Taylor: Oh no, never.

Mr. Smith: Any Member who wants to accuse me of that is going to have a pretty rough ride from me.

Mr. Taylor: I have had a Bill on the Order Paper for two years and it has still not been chosen.

Mr. Smith: We are not always able to put a Member's name down until we have confirmed with him that he is ready to proceed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: I confirmed it with you.

Mr. Smith: They are not always able to do that. But anyone suggesting that the criterion in is any way discriminatory is getting on to pretty dangerous ground.

Mr. Taylor: That is exactly what it has been, discriminatory, and you know it.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, if I may add my two cents worth, first of all I would point out that the Bill being proposed is the last one on the list and is therefore being raised to first place today. Probably everyone knows that, but I think it is worth noting.

The second point I wish to make is that someone on the Government side said that the list for today was posted in their lobby. It may very well have been posted in their lobby but it was not in our lobby. The last selection of legislation for Wednesday in this lobby is dated February 22.

Mr. Lewis: But it is 1983.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I regret very much this hassle has developed and we have had this misunderstanding. It would have been much simpler just to allow this to have proceeded. No one wants to ride roughshod over anyone's sensibilities, but it seems to me that an act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone is of major consequence and importance compared to my own particular concerns. It is for that reason that I asked to have my Bill withdrawn in favour of the Bill presented by my colleague, in whose riding it is at least comtemplated that the Cruise missile will be tested. So we are very concerned about that and so are lots of Canadians.

If we cannot get this by agreement, Mr. Speaker, under Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, types of motions, I note that a dilatory motion is designed to enable the House to proceed to another order of business. Therefore, I move that the House proceed to Order No. 678.

Mr. Lambert: He cannot make a motion on a point of order.

Mr. Rose: I am sorry, that is the Bill number, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I think procedurally the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody, if I may assist him, wishes to seek the unanimous consent of the House on a point of order to produce the motion he is now referring to. That, I think, is the way he has to proceed. Before he does so, because I envisage the possibility that this may cause division bells—

Mr. Anguish: A distinct possibility.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): —I know, as do all Members who were here, that last week the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain pursued this matter. I know he sought unanimous consent at that time. I know other Members indicated that the preferable procedure would be to bring it up at the appropriate time, making that appropriate time today. So there is nothing surprising coming before the House at this moment. There has been extensive discussion of this issue. I repeat that because I think perhaps some Hon. Members may think this matter has arisen by surprise. I want to assure all Hon. Members that there is no surprise in this. The possibility of exchanging these two Private Members' Bills occurred something like a week ago.

Therefore, before I pursue that issue raised by the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody, which is on a point of order to seek unanimous consent of the House to put a motion to hear another Bill, it may be that there are some other Hon. Members who want to be heard on the issue being debated under a point of order. May I do that in the hope that this issue can finally be resolved?

Are there other Hon. Members who wish to be recognized? The Hon. Member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, may I first address a word on the competence of the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody in making a motion, having first stood on a point of order.

Mr. Rose: I did not rise on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert: The motion he put was out of order. He was standing on a point of order—well, all of us have been standing on points of order ever since I raised the question with Mr. Speaker about consent. Every one of us has been standing on a point of order, whether we said so or not. That is my respectful submission to the Chair and to the Hon. Member.

As to the question of choice, this is item 212 on the Private Members' list and there are pages and pages of Bills and debates to be resumed that the Parliamentary Secretary could avail himself of before he reached the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody with respect to today's Private Members' Business, item No. 1. Unless the Hon. Member can tell me that he consulted any and all Members before No. 212, or that for some reason or other he was able to ascertain they were not ready to go today, the rules of this House say that item shall go.

Why do we have a draw? I agree that at one time a Member whose name had been called could substitute another item from his portfolio if he had filed several. He was asked to elect which shall be his first or second item, etc. I think this happened when the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council was new in the House and was not aware of the procedure.

The priority was set in May of 1980. We have over 600 items and now there has been a change because somebody, somewhere, was able to come up with an item for the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody. Just the day before yesterday the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) said the Government was not going to allow this Bill to be brought forward. Now the Parliamentary Secretary has said that the Government has changed its mind. That is quite fair, Mr. Speaker. If the President of the Privy Council does not speak for the Government, who does he speak for in this House?

If the Minister changed his mind, that is up to him, but I object to playing fast and loose with Private Members' hour. It has already been terribly abused by the Government, first of all by extending this session into the fourth year. This denied a great deal of debate on Private Members' Motions under the previous rules. It was simply a takeover of Private Members' time by the Government as a result of not having a new session. Those on the Government side who are responsible for this do not observe the rules. The fact that they are on the opposite side today does not mean that there is an absence of prejudice. There is prejudice in that the Parliamentary Secretary did not go to those persons at the head of the list. It is not his prerogative to go up and down the list and at random ask someone if he is ready to go ahead today. That is not his privilege.

I submit it is totally wrong for one Member to exchange his place on the list with another Member. I do not know if the Parliamentary Secretary has ever attended a major cattle show and has seen classes of animals, the get of a sire or a herd. Has he seen the exchange of an animal that has done poorly for a much better animal at the gate? I have been told how this is done. He suggests that Hon. Members engage in this compliance with the rules and we arrive at the gate today and suddenly see one Member slipping the rope off his animal on to another animal—another Member. In other words, one Bill is exchanged for another Bill. We cannot do things that way, Mr. Speaker.

I am going to insist that I have a right, Mr. Speaker. My Bill was set down a long time ahead of this one and there are hundreds of others as well that have priority over this Bill. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) pointed out that the list had only two names on it and the third place was blank. At two o'clock we saw the change, and that is what I object to as well.

It is up to the Parliamentary Secretary to give ample notice to the House. The notices should have been in the lobbies yesterday showing what Bills would be heard, rather than the final list being issued at two o'clock today.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I refuse to withdraw my "No". As I have already said, if it is your decision that the "No" was not heard and that there was unanimous consent, I would have to abide by your decision—or appeal. I could not appeal, since you were acting as Speaker. But I did say no, Mr. Speaker, and I wanted to draw that to the attention of the House.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think the Chair has heard sufficient argument. Before I recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, lest some other matter of privilege be raised, I had better deal with Royal Assent at 4:30 p.m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed the following Bills, without amendment:

Bill C-130, an Act to authorize continuing financial assistance to be provided to certain international financial institutions;

Bill C-143, and Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority; and Bill C-141, an Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING CAMPAIGNING BY NON-RESIDENTS

On the Order: Public Bills.

May 2, 1980—Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections of Bill C-412, An Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (campaigning by non-residents).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I want to recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary on a question of privilege, but I wonder if we are getting lost on the point of order because, for the last time, I think I have to indicate to Hon. Members that, despite the courtesies—

Mr. Deans: May I ask—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Despite the courtesies offered by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West, he repeats and has repeated on several occasions that he refuses unanimous consent. He also informed the House—and his word must be accepted—that he made that statement. He denied unanimous consent before I had indicated that I had heard unanimous consent.

If the House wishes to address itself to the point any further, I will listen; otherwise I want to advise the House that I intend to accept the Hon. Member's word and to rule that we will have to continue with the motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose).

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the circumstances, it is a very difficult case that we have been faced with. My colleague may well have an agreement signed some time between now and the time the House reconvenes with regard to the testing of the Cruise missile. It may well affect his riding directly. It is a matter of considerable concern to him and in the circumstances, given that the Hon. Member for Edmonton West, after all of the requests made to him, has decided not to allow this debate to proceed notwithstanding that at least a week's notice was given, I move that the House do now adjourn.

• (1550)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I must indicate that the counsel I have received is that the Hon. Member cannot adjourn the House on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: I am not on a point of order. I did not rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I cannot imagine what else the Hon. Member would be rising on.

I want to make clear that when the Bill was called, the House will recall that unanimous consent was sought to dispose of all times preceding item No. 212. That consent was given. At that point, before any Bill or motion could be put to the House, the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) rose and indicated that he would like to exchange his position for that of the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish).

I am in a rather awkward position. I do not think at this moment I have any motion before the House other than that made—and I think this would be acceptable—by the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody seeking unanimous consent to exchange the two Bills. Then I must ask myself whether or not subsequent to that, as indicated by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), every individual Member of Parliament who rose in his place was speaking on a point of order. I would like to take a moment for consultation. If some Hon. Members would like to assist the Chair, I would be pleased if they do so.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to your attention that I did not rise on a point of order. I rose and you recognized me without any mention of a point of order. I rise again without mentioning a point of order, and I again move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. Gauthier: You cannot do that.

Mr. Deans: I can. It is always in order. Read the rules.

Mr. Gauthier: There is nothing before us.

Mr. Deans: I happen to have been recognized, my dear friend, if you would listen to what is going on.

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of privilege. On a point of order!

Mr. Deans: I did not rise on a point of order and I did not rise on a point of privilege.

Mr. Gauthier: We have nothing in front of us.

Mr. Deans: A motion to adjourn is always in order, and I have moved a motion to adjourn.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sitting about as close to you as anyone in the House. I heard you recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on a point of order, and I am sure the record will show that. One cannot move the adjournment of the House on a point of order. We are wasting the time of the House. It is no wonder the public says that we look like a bunch of children; we are certainly acting like that this afternoon. For God's sake, let us get on with the business of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House will see that I have benefited from the advice of the Clerk. I think the will of the House can best be expressed if we have some motion on the floor of the House, and hopefully at that point these procedural difficulties will be eased.

I have indicated several times to the House that I believe it is the responsibility of the Chair to honour the rights of individual Members. I cannot go any further than that. I must indicate that I accept the word of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West that there is not unanimous consent to proceed to an exchange of Bills. Therefore, that issue I now declare to have been ruled upon; it is not subject to the necessity of further discussion. The House has had nearly three quarters of an hour to deal with that matter. Accordingly, the proposition which I have to put before the House right now is the one standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody. Once that begins, of course, the Chair will recognize anyone who wishes to enter into debate and who may, during the course of debate, propose certain motions. That would be perfectly in order.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody) moved that Bill C-412, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (campaigning by non-residents), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Incidentally, before I proceed further, I might indicate that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, who I think is attempting to find the appropriate precedent, should look at Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, page 91, Citations 283(1) to (4) inclusive, and he will find the basis for what I have just indicated.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, therefore I move that we move to the next order of business standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), No. 458.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The intent of the Chair is to assist Hon. Members who wish to move the House in certain directions, but I am faced with procedural difficulties. The Hon. Member has a motion before the House. He cannot amend it himself unless he has unanimous consent of the House, and he cannot move another motion which is not related to his motion. Possibly he could do so, I suppose, with unanimous consent of the House, but I must ask him to seek such guidance as he wishes so that we can proceed in accordance with our Standing Orders and precedents. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) on a point of order.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) has a Private Members' Bill. Presumably he agrees with the contents of it. I wish to advise him that we on this side of the House have no objection to that Bill. It could be passed, as far as we are concerned, without debate. I suspect that if he sought the consent of the House to go into Committee of the Whole to deal with it, since it does just a bit of housekeeping with regard to the Canada Elections Act, he may well obtain that consent. If he wants to get his Bill, I think he might get it very expeditiously.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think it would be advisable for the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody to indicate whether he is seeking the floor for the purpose of debate on his motion or whether he is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the motion which I put to you earlier, that we proceed from the Bill standing in my name to the one standing in the name of the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake.

Some Hon. Members: You cannot do that.

Mr. Gauthier: There cannot be two motions at the same time.

Mr. Deans: Why not?

Mr. Gauthier: Because the rules say so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Again I indicate that I have had the benefit of consultation with the Clerk. Under the provisions of Standing Order 50, the Hon. Member cannot move a motion which in the current situation is not applicable to his own motion, and in any event because he already has his own motion on the floor. However, what I am attempting to do is to find a procedural mechanism which would allow certain Hon. Members to put before the House the issue they feel they wish to put before the House. It is not clear to me exactly what issue they want.

It might be that some Hon. Member wants to move to adjourn the House. It might be that some Hon. Member wants to put a motion, the effect of which would be that the two Private Members' Bills be exchanged one for the other in terms of debate. My responsibility is to facilitate the wishes of Hon. Members. In order to do that, I know I do not need unanimous consent. I will simply seek to recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain in debate and what transpires thereafter will be the business of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain and then possibly of the House.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I move under Standing Order 50 that the House proceed to deal with Bill C-678.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is moved by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain that, pursuant to Standing Order 50 of the House of Commons, this House now consider that Bill C-412 be withdrawn by unanimous consent and be replaced by Bill C-678 for purposes of debate now. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is not unanimous consent. I will now move to put the yeas and nays. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Mr. Lambert: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the yeas have it.

Mr. Lambert: I am still on my same point.

• (1600)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): This is worse than Friday! In my opinion the yeas have it.

Motion agreed to on division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Accordingly, the House will address itself to Bill C-678, an Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREE ZONE

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake) moved that Bill C-678, an Act to declare Canada a Nuclear Weapons Free Zone, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the co-operation of all Members of the House this afternoon in having this Bill come forward for debate in Private Members' hour. I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) who agreed to defer his Bill in favour of mine. I would also like to thank the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky) who seconded the motion so that Bill C-678 could come before us this afternoon.

It is of paramount importance to debate Bill C-678 before the Easter break for a number of reasons. One is the possibility that the Cruise missile might be tested any day now over Canadian territory. This missile has been slated for testing in the area of the Cold Lake Air Force Base and into the Primrose Lake Air Weapons Range, which is part of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake constituency that I represent here in the House of Commons.

In addition, I am very concerned about one Karen Harrison who has been fasting in our galleries for a number of days. She has stated that she will not cease her fast until such time as this Bill is given debate in the House of Commons.

I would like to say, however, that I hope this debate is only a beginning to the nuclear question and not an end in itself. We have to continue addressing the nuclear weapons problem very seriously. Bill C-678 basically does two things. First, it would declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone. That would prevent the testing of the Cruise missile over Canadian territory. The Bill would go on from there to do a number of other things. This Bill would prevent the manufacture, use, importation and export of any nuclear weapons or weaponry on or over Canadian territory.

Second, the Bill puts forward the will of this Parliament and country for the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) to go to the United Nations and present a resolution calling for the United Nations to conduct a world referendum on nuclear disarmament. This opinion, I think, has been demonstrated in referenda in municipal elections across the country. There is a growing concern over nuclear weapons and the testing of nuclear weaponry over Canadian territory.

I have a local concern having to do with the testing of the Cruise missile in the Primrose Lake Air Weapons Range. If the testing of the Cruise missile is granted within Canadian territory, the air launched Cruise missiles will be dropped over the Beaufort Sea from B-52 bombers and will cruise over the Northwest Territories, northern Alberta, into Saskatchewan in the Primrose Lake Air Weapons Range. This local concern arises over the possibility of a Cruise missile landing in some area other than the Primrose Lake Air Weapons Range. I know the Cruise missile does not have an explosive capability in the initial testing but I think that matters not for someone living in Beauval, Canoe Narrows, Meadow Lake, Pierceland or Goodsoil if this Cruise missile were to land in someone's livingroom or somewhere in those communities. This is a real concern of the constituents of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake about the testing of the Cruise missile.

If this Bill were to pass with the consent of Members of Parliament here and go to committee, it would clear up that concern for a great many people in The Battlefords-Meadow Lake constituency and for people in other areas who are concerned about the testing of the Cruise missile over Canadian territory.

In addition to that, I have a much more serious and global concern about the nuclear arms question. Many people do not see much hope for the future in face of the possibility of nuclear war. Regardless of what some people say, you would have very little chance of limiting a nuclear war once it began. People are concerned about the destructive capability of nuclear weaponry. The two superpowers have likely more parity in destructive capability than they have ever had at any time in our history, certainly since the nuclear arms race began and since the devastating effects of the atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki toward the end of the Second World War.

This is not a question of the different countries involved, be it the U.S.S.R., the U.S.A., Canada, or any other country in the world. It is not a political question about nuclear arms and about Canada becoming involved in the nuclear arms race, because it not only affects New Democrats, Progressive Conservatives and Liberals, but the Canadian community and beyond that the global community of this planet.

Canadians have been respected worldwide for a number of years, likely since Confederation, in terms of being a peacekeeping force in the world. We have, however, risen to arms during certain times in our history. Canadians have fought for the cause of this country and our freedom as well as for the preservation of democracy in other places around the world. I am sure in the face of pressing times and world confrontation that Canadians would rise to that call again. Canadians have always been viewed as peace-loving people, but a people that will fight for democracy. We are not aggressors but we do believe in the rights of individuals.

You have to have conventional armed forces, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, there may still be a need for them because of other aggressive forces in the world. But that concern and need is very different from nuclear warfare or nuclear weaponry. It is not a matter of a young person fighting in a nuclear war. Conventional armed forces would have very little play in such an event. A nuclear war, once started, would be devastating for all people whether involved in military or in public life.

I believe we have to start looking for a way to gear down, to freeze, nuclear weapons and at some point eliminate nuclear weapons from the face of this earth. I know at this point in time that might seem very idealistic to many Canadians. It is not idealistic to me. It is something that we must seriously work toward if we want to preserve this planet, if not for our own future, for the future of our children, our grandchildren and for the generations to come.

Canada has respect as a peacekeeper, and I think it is within the realm of possibility that Canada can play a role as a mediator between superpowers. We can start working toward serious arms reduction on the face of this planet, which has an economic cost which boggles the mind. If the amount spent on armaments throughout the world during a two-week period was spent on education, clothing, housing and medical needs, most of the poverty throughout the world would be eliminated. In many cases that poverty has caused some of the world conflicts which we have seen. It is that poverty and lack of equity throughout the world which has caused dissension among different races of people and within races of people themselves.

In order to maintain our credibility, we should not become involved in the nuclear arms race. If we want to seriously strive for a world free of nuclear arms, we must clean our own house before we advise others on how to solve the nuclear weapons issue.

I believe that the argument that we have a NATO obligation to test the Cruise missile over Canadian territory is somewhat false. There are other countries within NATO which disagree with the testing of the Cruise missile and the escalation of the arms race. I believe that Canada should be counted among those countries so that we may keep the respect and dignity which we need and deserve in international affairs.

There is nothing in writing which obliges Canada to test nuclear weapons on or over our territory. I hope that this Bill will pass through Parliament during Private Members' Business today so that it can go to committee where Parliamentarians can begin seriously to address the nuclear weapons issue.

There are presently 32 NDP Members of Parliament in Canada. We are united and have the total support of the NDP caucus for having Canada declared a nuclear weapons free zone and to work seriously toward nuclear disarmament throughout the world.

Since I believe this is largely a non-partisan issue, I wish to point out that there are Members from the Liberal Party and Members from the Conservative Party who support the concept of which I speak today. I do not wish to alienate those Members but have them join us in an agreement that can give Canada the self-respect and international respect that we need to meaningfully work toward having a world free of nuclear arms.

I would point out to the people of Canada that they can play a very important role in this process. Since Canadians have access to their elected officials, I would urge all Canadians who are listening to this debate, watching it on television or who will read it in Hansard, to go to their Member of Parliament or provincial member of the legislature, and to their municipal councillors, aldermen and mayors, to ask them to take a stand on the nuclear weapons issue.

With respect to Members of Parliament in particular, I think constituents should be buttonholding their MPs to make them stand up and call for a country that is a nuclear weapons free zone. As a result of public pressure, more Members of Parliament will come onside in support of the intent and purpose of Bill C-678. I believe there will eventually be a majority of Members of Parliament who support what I and my Party are proposing today.

There are many Members of Parliament who are still undecided about the nuclear weapons issue and the most effective way to persuade those Members of Parliament, from a public point of view, is to pressure them to support a nuclear weapons free zone within Canada. As I indicated, it is important that we clean our own house before we begin to tell others how our world can be improved. While our world has great potential, its people face great uncertainty in the future largely because of the nuclear weapons issue.

I also want to say that I believe that unilateral disarmament is an unreasonable scenario, as far as I am concerned as an individual Member of Parliament. A multilateral agreement among all nations with nuclear capability is required to freeze the production of nuclear arms and eventually eliminate nuclear arms throughout the world. Until that happens there will continue to be a great deal of uncertainty about the future of our world. No one wants to face the prospect of another Hiroshima or Nagasaki or face the even greater destruction which is possible today with weapons which are hundreds and thousands of times more powerful than those of World War II.

I will conclude by asking all Members of Parliament to allow Bill C-678, an Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone, to move into committee where we can give it the very serious consideration that it needs. I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Dauphin for enabling me to bring this Bill to the House, and I would like to thank Members of Parliament for their co-operation earlier today. I ask for that co-operation in continuing to work toward a solution for this real and pressing problem which not only faces Canadians but the world.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it has been a long and interesting afternoon so far. My own Bill is to be dealt with this afternoon and I doubt we will be able to deal with the third Bill on this short list.

I have some objections to the form of Bill C-678 which was brought before the House for the first time two days ago. It declares itself to be an Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone. That is something which this Party has favoured historically and which can be proven in the last 20 years of Hansard. It was approximately 20 years ago that the Conservative Government of Mr. Diefenbaker was defeated because of its position on keeping Canada a nuclear free zone.

If I may be forgiven for saying so, this Bill does show signs of being given hasty writing or editing. While it says that this Bill may be cited as the Nuclear Weapons Free Zone Act, the explanatory note says that this Bill would declare Canada to be a nuclear weapons free nation. The Bill continues to discuss such things as flight testing and the production of components therefor, which deals with many weapons. We are left somewhat puzzled as to exactly what this Bill entails.

Making Canada a weapons free zone is a fairly simple operation. I should first point out to those people who are not conversant with this subject that if Canada is made a nuclear weapons free zone, it in no way gives anyone any guarantee that other nations will respect that declaration and decide not to target us in case of a conflict. It does not mean that everyone in the world will say that they will not bomb Canada because it has declared itself a nuclear free zone. Otherwise, each of us would declare our own domiciles a nuclear free zone as well.

Back in 1979, an interesting development occurred. I was Minister of National Defence at that time and I stated that we would move the nuclear weapons that we had out of Canada by 1982. Having taken that position, which is so much in sympathy with the NDP position, they immediately voted us out of office to make sure it would not happen and put the Liberals back in. This was only history repeating itself. They did exactly the same thing in 1963, when Mr. Diefenbaker outlined his position clearly in the House of Commons. He had been to a NATO meeting in Nassau. He said:

I was in Nassau. I formed certain ideas. I read the communique that was issued there and I come to certain conclusions based on that communique. Those conclusions are as follows, and these are the views expressed also by the United States under secretary of state, George W. Ball: that nuclear war is indivisible; that there should be no further development of new nuclear power anywhere in the world; that nuclear weapons as a universal deterrent is a dangerous solution. Today an attempt is being made by the United States to have the NATO nations increase their conventional arms.

Mr. Diefenbaker went ahead with his speech in which he pointed out why they were not going to arm the Bomarc with nuclear warheads in Canada. At that time Mr. Pearson was the Liberal leader and his biographer, who is the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), as we all know, pointed out that that great Liberal leader, Mr. Pearson had reversed his position entirely and taken a bunch of sheep with him. Going from direct opposition to nuclear weapons, he turned them into a Party supporting nuclear weapons in Canada. That night, after a speech by Mr. Tommy Douglas that I am sure he would not want to have repeated in the House, the NDP once again sided with the Liberals on nuclear weapons and voted the Conservatives out of office.

So the Conservative Party has nothing to be ashamed about in our position on nuclear weapons in Canada. We were in favour of not having them in Canada in 1963 and we lost the Government over that issue. We were in favour, in 1979, of a stated fixed date to get rid of the last of the nuclear weapons that the Liberals had brought to this country, and to have them out of here in 1982. It is now 1983, but thanks to the NDP support of the Liberal position in December, 1979 we were not allowed to go ahead with freeing this country from nuclear weapons.

Bearing that in mind, one looks with a certain amount of skepticism at this latest endeavour of the NDP to take no responsibility for their actions whatsoever, when they keep on bringing this militaristic, nuclear-favouring Government that we have at the present time into office and getting rid of the Conservatives who agree with them that we would like Canada to be a nuclear free nation.

I do not wish to belabour this point. One can be a little bit cynical about the approach that has been taken to date, but it is a very serious problem. The end that I trust we all wish to attain is to see a control of nuclear armaments not only in Canada but in nations throughout the world, and particularly among the superpowers. This Party would suggest to the Government that their first duty is to do everything in their power to approach both the U.S.S.R. and the Americans and persuade them to do their very best to find a way to have an agreement to de-escalate the arms race, to bring it to a stop, and then start reducing the number of nuclear weapons that are deployed in Europe particularly, but all over the world as well.

In line with this, the President of the United States today stated that he was making a new counteroffer, moving away from the zero/zero option that he had placed before the Russians more than a year ago to an offer that he would cut down the numbers of Cruise missiles and Pershing IIs that they intend to deploy in Europe, provided that the Russians would cut down their number of intermediate-range ballistic missiles that they have deployed anywhere in the world to an equal number.

One of the reasons that I wish to sit down before we hear the knock on the door for Royal Assent is that I would like to hear what the Liberal reaction is to this initiative by the President of the United States. The United States has responded to public pressure and to pressure from allies, and I think has taken a very reasonable and forward step to resolving the impasse that both of the protagonists have had for the last six months in not moving one millimetre from their original positions. Perhaps we could then have a more hopeful Easter.

Thank you for the time, Mr. Speaker, and it looks as if my Bill will be discussed a little later than expected this day.

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, rather than go into any partisan discussion on steps being taken to control nuclear weapons concentration, I would like to give the Government's position as it currently exists.

At the end of the World War II the Canadian Government decided not to develop its own nuclear weapons. Ours was the first country with the ability and means to do so which chose instead to devote all of its expertise to the peaceful uses of the atom. We are a member of an alliance which depends for its security on the nuclear deterrent. But the Canadian Forces do not have a nuclear role in NATO's forces in Europe. When the CF-18 is fully operational, replacing the Voodoo, the last nuclear warheads will be withdrawn from Canada.

Although Canada does not itself have a nuclear role either in Europe or, shortly, in North American defence, we are considering permitting the U.S.A. to test a weapons system, the Cruise missile, which can carry nuclear warheads. I would like to explain why.

In the 1970s the United States and the Soviet Union were involved in negotiating the SALT II agreement to limit at equal levels their strategic intercontinental nuclear weapons. At this point the Soviet Union began deploying a new intermediate-range missile into Europe, the SS-20, exceptionally accurate and carrying three nuclear warheads. With a range of 5,000 kilometres, it represented a potential threat to every city in Western Europe. Several Western European Governments feared that, by introducing a new, devastating missile for use in Europe, while it was codifying a balance in intercontinental weapons, the Soviet Union intended to threaten European NATO members and split the defence of Europe from the defence of North America. Chancellor Schmidt of West Germany first drew attention to the danger.

In December, 1979, at the request of the European members of the Alliance, NATO Ministers therefore took their two-track decision. They agreed to deploy 108 Pershing II launchers and 464 ground-launched Cruise missiles each with a single warhead to replace other shorter-range missiles, in order to balance the threat of the SS-20s. Secondly, they proposed negotiations between the Soviet Union and the United States to limit land-based intermediate-range missile systems on both sides.

The Soviet Union initially said it would not take part in the negotiations unless the deployment track was cancelled. However, it subsequently agreed to discussions and negotiations began in 1981. After consultations with its allies, the United States proposed the zero option, to abolish all land-based intermediate-range nuclear missiles on either side. This would clearly be the best result, because it would remove an entire category of weapon.

NATO has always made it clear that this is not a take it or leave it proposition. NATO members have repeatedly said that they are willing to consider any serious Soviet proposal. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) told the House last week, we are not certain that the zero option is a realizeable goal. With other allies, Canada has urged the United States to look at a compromise or an intermediate solution, even though the ultimate goal of removing all of those weapons would remain. At the meeting of NATO defence ministers last week in Portugal, they listed the basic criteria for balanced and effective arms control: significant reductions based on equality of rights and limits between the United States and the Soviet Union, no inclusion of third party systems, global limitations so that Soviet missiles would not just be removed from Europe to Asia, no weakening of the USA contribution to NATO's conventional deterrence and defence, and effective verifiability.

Throughout the period of negotiations the Soviet Union has continued deploying SS-20 missiles. When NATO took its two-track decision in December 1979, the Soviet Union had just over 100 SS-20s. Now it has 351, with over 1,000 warheads. These are in addition to over 250 older SS-4 and SS-5 missiles, which have enormous warheads in the megaton range, equal to a million tons of TNT. The Soviet Union has not yet made a serious proposal which would recognize the legitimate security interests of the West. On the contrary, the most recent Soviet proposal would actually leave them with more missiles than they had when the negotiations began, and allow the United States to deploy none.

On February 10, the Canadian Government concluded a framework agreement concerning the test and evaluation of U.S. defence systems in Canada. Under that agreement, specific test and evaluation proposals may be put forward by the U.S. Department of Defense for consideration by the Canadian Minister of National Defence or his representative. If approved, a project arrangement would be concluded between the U.S. Department of Defense and the Canadian Department of National Defence. Canada may refuse any proposal.

When the framework agreement was concluded, we were aware that Canada would likely be approached for a project arrangement to test the guidance system for the Cruise missile. Because this was expected, the framework agreement specified two restrictions on such testing. Cruise missiles shall be unarmed, and any flight corridors for such testing shall be selected to ensure minimum disruption to civil aviation operations and minimum disturbance to persons on the ground.

Ministers have made it clear that if Cruise missiles are tested, the testing would be linked intimately to Canada's security as a member of NATO and NORAD and to Canada's policy on arms control and disarmament. Successive Canadian governments have supported the NATO two-track decision, which called for the deployment of ground-launched Cruise missiles in Europe if the INF negotiations fail. We are convinced that the negotiations will not succeed if the Alliance shows signs of weakness. We cannot accept a result which would require NATO to abandon the modernization of its forces in Europe while the Soviet Union retains its force of SS-20 missiles intact.

Our European allies have volunteered to deploy new missiles on their soil, in order to provide an incentive for the Soviet Union to negotiate seriously in the intermediate-range nuclear force talks. NATO did not take the initiative in introducing this class of weapons into Europe. Its European members do not want ground-launched Cruise missiles or Pershing IIs for their own sakes, but they want Soviet SS-20 missiles aimed against them even less. They are convinced that the only way to persuade the Soviets to remove these or even reduce their numbers, is to prepare to deploy intermediate-range missiles on our side.

Canada will not be providing sites for the missiles. We expect merely to be asked to help with the testing of unarmed versions of the missiles. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has pointed out, we would be poor members of the Alliance if we said we would not even consider testing the guidance system of the missiles which our allies will be deploying in accordance with a NATO decision which Canada supported.

The United States has not yet formally approached the Government to conclude a Project Arrangement for testing Cruise missiles. Ministers have made it quite clear that Cabinet will have to consider such an arrangement carefully, and that no prior commitment has been given to the U.S.A. Government. In considering the issue, they have also made it clear, however, that one of the major considerations will be the need to support our allies in carrying out NATO's two-track decision.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are very conscious of the alarming number of nuclear weapons presently in the hands of the superpowers. They dread the thought that they might one day be used, and ponder over the dangers inherent in the existence of such arsenals. We are all aware of the devastation that would result from a nuclear war. In the face of the uncertainty that exists, many groups and individuals in the West are calling for an end to the development and deployment of new weapons, judging the quantity already in existence to be ample. This applies to strategic weapons as well as the intermediate-range missiles in Europe. Is it possible to accept the status quo in these two areas, and does it make sense to do so?

The governments of the NATO countries have decided to deploy Pershing II rockets and Cruise missiles in Europe as of this year if sufficient progress is not made in negotiations concerning this category of weapons in the coming months. It would have been much easier, in the short term, to pretend that the gigantic armament effort being made by the Warsaw Pact nations, in both the conventional and nuclear areas, was only a figment of our imagination. That is what the European countries did in the thirties. The imbalance that already existed in 1979, when NATO saw the need to react to the massive deployment of Soviet SS-20 missiles, has now become even greater, because the U.S.S.R. has since almost doubled the number of these missiles. Our allies are being held under a constant threat of destruction by more than 350 of these missiles, for which the West has no equivalent.

Canada has always been an advocate of peace, justice and freedom, but it must honour its commitments. The North Atlantic Alliance, of which Canada is a founding member, was formed to avoid a recurrence of war in Europe. Our soldiers who gave their lives for the liberation of Europe must not be said to have died in vain.

The Canadian Government, in accord with the other members of NATO, is very much in favour of verifiable agreements that would limit and then reduce nuclear weapons stocks on both sides, hopefully leading to eventual elimination. However, such an objective can only be achieved if the West shows its determination not to remain indifferent in the face of what might constitute a means of applying considerable pressure. History has demonstrated that it is impossible to bring about a substantial diminution of armaments when the forces of one side outweigh the other's, as is presently the case in Europe. What reason would the side with the greater forces have to destroy or to dismantle the weapons that give it its hard-earned advantage, when no similar reduction had to be made by the other? Aggression is fostered by a state of inequality and a lack of determination, with the appearance of weakness.

Our policy is not one of confrontation. On the contrary, it is the only way open to us in the slow process of nuclear arms limitation and disarmament. It is based on the concept of deterrence, which has given us a hitherto unequalled period of almost 40 years without a major conflict in this region of Europe where military forces of unprecedented size are facing each other. And this is where the real merit of mutual deterrence lies. There can be no recourse to atomic weapons, because the superpowers have the capacity to resist a pre-emptive strike and to inflict on the aggressor a degree of destruction that would obviate the political acceptability of initiating a strike. Nor has there been any use of conventional weapons, which over the two World Wars alone were responsible for tens of millions of deaths and so much destruction.

There were more victims in the bombardment of Tokyo on March 9, 1945 than at Hiroshima; 83,600 deaths and 102,000 wounded, compared with 80,000 deaths and 70,000 wounded at Hiroshima. That is no exoneration of the travesty that happened at Hiroshima. We all hope and pray that that will never be repeated. It will not be repeated if one side, the West, shows weakness in fight in the face of Soviet might. This is the result of the state of mutual deterrence that has gradually established itself between the superpowers and opposing alliances.

The strategy of non-war and non-use of forces can exist only in so far as the fragile equilibrium is maintained. There exists a moral obligation to keep intact the state of deterrence and to negotiate in good faith nuclear and conventional arms control agreements which are balanced and verifiable and which will reduce the arsenals of both sides to the lowest possible level. It is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that both sides in this very important issue, this issue upon which the very survival of our world depends, will in fact be responsible, so that neither side will proceed to the development of any further new weapons, but will put all of their resources which they are now expending on the development of new weapons into the development of a means of peace, the development of a means of reduction of arms, and the development of the means to achieve a world where men and women and future generations can live without the fear of a nuclear holocaust and can have a reasonable hope that the world, as we know it, will survive. We will then be able to truly progress and leave the world a better place for future generations.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREE ZONE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Anguish that Bill C-678, an Act to declare Canada a Nuclear Weapons Free Zone, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I understand that my name was mentioned just before we had word from the other place. At the same time the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) was coming to her seat and had anticipated in the usual course of events to be the next speaker. At this time, if it is agreeable, I will allow her to share the time with me and speak first.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Under normal circumstances we alternate. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore was recognized to make his speech. He either speaks or he does not. He has to make up his mind. Otherwise the Chair will look to the other side and recognize another Member. That is, unless there is a disposition of the House to proceed otherwise.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it agreed that the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam speak now?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is no agreement to the proposal put forward by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore.

Miss Jewett: Thank a lot, chaps.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention at this time to follow up on the comments of the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki) which he made on behalf of the Government.

The primary objective of any arms control and disarmament initiative, including the concept of a nuclear weapons free zone, is to enhance security. The control and reduction of armaments, particularly nuclear armaments, can constitute an integral component of Canada's security policy. The Speech from The Throne at the opening of Parliament in 1980 outlined Canada's balanced and coherent security policy. The Government expressed its commitment to do its full part in increasing the military capability of the North Atlantic Alliance, to provide security for its members, and its dedication to active cooperation in efforts to achieve international agreements on equitable and verifiable arms control and disarmament measures.

For many years Canada's security position has been based on these two essential and complimentary elements. We have sought, through the vigorous and determined pursuit of arms control and disarmament agreements, to reduce the risk of global conflict and nuclear war inherent in a situation where a nation or groups of nations face each other with large and destructive arsenals. We have done this because any such war would not only threaten the survival of all Canadians, given the destructiveness of nuclear weapons, it would destroy most of our civilization. As stated in the 1980 Throne Speech:

Canada's imperative is clear. This Government must continue its strategy to suffocate the deadly growth in the nuclear arsenals of the world. We must, and we will, actively cooperate in international efforts to negotiate agreements on verifiable means of arms control and disarmament, and seek to rally others to a cause that is no less than human survival on this planet.

But we have to recognize that nations will not lightly give up the security which military strength and modern weapons provide them. For this reason arms control and disarmament agreements cannot be ends in themselves; their objective is to enhance security at a lower level of armaments. Nor can they be achieved easily and quickly. Acceptable and workable arms control and disarmament formulae are not found in the course of negotiations in which one of the parties is at a significant disadvantage vis-à-vis the other in military power. It is for this reason that the other element of Canadian security policy has required close and, in recent years, increasingly urgent attention. This is in the maintenance of adequate forces to protect Canada by contributing to the collective deterrence and defence capacity of the North Atlantic Alliance.

We are determined to do what we can by negotiation to ameliorate the international security environment, mindful always that it will be a long and difficult task and that we must tread warily. We have no choice but to make the effort. The future of our civilization may be at stake. We have therefore tried, and will go on trying, in conjunction with our friends and allies, to prevent an escalation of the nuclear arms race.

Three Canadian priorities in the nuclear arms control and disarmament field are: to support strongly negotiations to limit and reduce nuclear arms; to promote early progress toward the realization of a multilateral comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty; and to promote the evolution of an effective nuclear non-proliferation regime based on the Non-Proliferation Treaty. The Government has attached particular importance to the implementation of Article VI of the NPT, which commits all parties to pursue negotiations in good faith toward the cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date, nuclear disarmament and a treaty on general and complete disarmament.

Canada continues to pursue these priorities in appropriate international forums and in bilateral negotiations. The Government takes every opportunity to stress the importance it attaches to the negotiations to limit and reduce nuclear arms. We will continue to promote, through consultations with our allies, progress in the START and INF negotiations intended to limit and reduce inventories of both strategic and intermediate-range nuclear weapons.

The priority which Canada continues to attach to the limitation and reduction of nuclear forces and to progress toward a comprehensive test ban reflects the complementary dual approach which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) set out in his address to UNSSOD II last year. On the one hand, this approach would include progress to implement the strategy of suffocation through agreements designed to inhibit the development of new weapons systems. A comprehensive test ban treaty would be one of the main elements. This approach would be complemented by active pursuit of agreements on qualitative and quantitative reductions in nuclear arsenals through the INF and START talks to achieve a stable nuclear balance at lower levels.

The strategy of suffocation is being actively promoted in international forums, in particular at the United Nations. Moreover, we continue to contribute concretely to more specific discussions which deal with implementing elements of the strategy. Canada has called for the resumption of the U.K./U.S.A./U.S.S.R. talks on a comprehensive test ban. In the Committee on Disarmament in Geneva, we are actively participating in the work toward the realization of a nuclear test ban agreement and in the efforts of the Seismic Experts Group, which is developing an international verification system for an eventual test ban treaty. We have also continued our efforts to effect implementation of the second and third elements of the strategy. Although we are also doing our utmost with regard to the fourth element, agreements to reduce military budgets cannot be concluded until the U.S.S.R. assumes a more open policy with regard to information about its military spending.

As a strong supporter of the non-proliferation treaty, Canada is fully committed to preventing the proliferation of nuclear weapons. The non-proliferation treaty also requires the sharing of knowledge regarding the peaceful use of nuclear technology, particularly to the energy-poor countries of the world. Canada is also fully committed to doing this, but only if the transfer of such nuclear technology is properly and adequately safeguarded. Canada's non-proliferation safeguards policy has been developed to ensure that our nuclear exports do not contribute to nuclear weapons proliferation.

All Candu reactors are fully safeguarded, and operate under strict international controls supervised by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). Indeed, Canadian safeguards are more comprehensive than those demanded by competing nuclear suppliers. Despite suggestions that these measures are too restrictive, the Government of Canada has consistently resisted pressure to downgrade its requirements.

It should furthermore be understood that nuclear reactors are by no means synonymous with nuclear weapons. Candu reactor technology is designed exclusively for the generation of electrical power. To produce weapons grade materials, the spent reactor fuel must be reprocessed to extract plutonium. This process is technically sophisticated, enormously expensive, difficult to conceal and strictly regulated internationally. In the contemporary situation it is unlikely that sufficient quantities of plutonium could be diverted, reprocessed and a nuclear device constructed without these actions being detected by international authorities. Accordingly, the sale of Candu reactors abroad cannot be equated with the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Consistent with our non-proliferation policy, Canada has been strongly sympathetic, in principle, to the concept of nuclear weapon-free zones where they command the support of the countries in the area and promote regional and international stability. While we have not considered such zones to be a fully satisfactory alternative to the ratification of the non-proliferation treaty by the countries of the areas concerned, we do believe that, in the absence of universal or near universal adherence to the non-proliferation treaty and provided certain principles are observed, the creation of such zones can make a significant contribution to the objective of preventing the proliferation of nuclear weapons. Canada has supported United Nations resolutions calling for such zones in Africa, the Middle East and south Asia. We have also backed measures which would consolidate the establishment of a nuclear weapons free zone in Latin America in accordance with the Treaty of Tlatelolco, in spite of Canadian opposition to a provision in the treaty which allows for the explosion of nuclear devices for so-called peaceful purposes.

We believe that, to be effective, such zones must apply to a well-defined geographic area; be based on proposals which emanate from and are agreed to by most countries in the area concerned, including the principal military powers of the area; not give military advantage to any state or group of states; contain adequate treaty assurances and means to verify that all countries abide by the commitment involved; and not permit countries of the area to have independent nuclear explosive capability.

As stated above, the objective of any arms control and disarmament initiative, including the concept of a nuclear weapon-free zone, is to enhance security. The Canadian Government continues to believe in the concept of mutual security—a collective effort to deter aggression or to counter it if it occurs. That is why we are in the North Atlantic Alliance, which is also the framework for the NORAD agreement with the USA. The Alliance relies on a deterrent strategy in which nuclear weapons play an important part. This is unfortunately unavoidable in the world as we know it. The idea of a nuclear weapon-free zone for Canada would be realistic only if the Canadian Government were prepared to withdraw from the Alliance which has served us well and has helped to preserve peace for more than thirty years. The Canadian Government continues to believe that our defence partnership, cooperation and defence production sharing arrangements with our allies make a greater contribution to preserving peace and security than would our withdrawal into the isolation of a nuclear weapon-free zone.

In order to rationalize the defence production arrangements which we undertake in support of our collective security commitments, Canada has, since 1959, participated in Defence Development and Production Sharing Arrangements with the United States and our other Alliance partners. These were undertaken by the government of the day in recognition of the fact that Canada could not continue funding the development of complex and high cost aerospace and electronic systems for the small domestic market.

The decision to develop certain limited sectors of Canadian expertise has proven highly successful. The Canadian defence industry has established itself as a competitive producer of such diverse products as short take-off and landing aircraft, STOL, airborne reconnaissance vehicles, radio communications and flight simulators. The dual military-civilian application of such technology has allowed Canada to become a major competitor in both markets.

Given that such development and production sharing arrangements put Canadian firms in direct competition with well-established foreign manufacturers, often supported by Government subsidies and military procurement programs much greater than those of Canada, the Government of Canada has provided domestic firms with financing assistance to compensate for these disadvantages. The eligibility criteria of this program were expanded in 1968 to include civilian aerospace and avionics projects in recognition of the spill-over from military technology and Canada's increased ability to penetrate this broader market. In recent years this program has increasingly emphasized more profitable civilian production in order to enhance the return to Canadians on their investment.

Litton Systems of Canada Limited was awarded a subcontract by the United States Department of Defence through its parent company in the United States, Litton Industries, to produce a portion of the inertial guidance systems for the Cruise missile. Such production comes under the Canadian-American defence production sharing arrangement and as such is eligible for and has received financial assistance from the Government of Canada. Litton's participation in a small part of the Cruise missile vehicle program should not be taken as a change in Canadian policies instituted at the end of the 1960s to divest our Armed Forces of a nuclear weapon role. However, it is consistent with our joint defence efforts with our NATO allies who rely in part, as we do, on the maintenance of a credible nuclear deterrent against attack from hostile states.

Finally, as is well known, the only nuclear weapons in Canada are the United States air-to-air missiles which enable the CF-101 to play an effective role in the defence of North America. When the CF-18A have replaced the CF-101, this role will be carried out with conventional weapons and therefore there will no longer be a requirement for these nuclear weapons to be held in Canada.

I think my time is almost up—

Miss Jewett: There are other speakers.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): I think Private Members' Hour has almost expired. In any event I have a few more things to say. I do not know how much time is left. Perhaps Mr. Speaker will tell me.

The Hon. Member has presented Bill C-678 today. It is a very interesting Bill for all of us because the testing of the Cruise missile has received coverage in our newspapers and on television throughout the country today and in the recent past. There is one thing about the matter which really concerns me. The Bill indicates that it would declare Canada to be a nuclear weapon-free zone. My understanding of the Cruise missile and for what it would be used in Canada is that it would be merely to test certain pieces of guidance equipment, and that it would not be armed in any way. Therefore, in my view it is really not a weapon. It is not a weapon in the usual sense in that, so far as I know and have been advised, there are no weapons whatsoever on the Cruise missile.

Miss Jewett: There will be.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): There may be, but in reading the agreements I do not think we have any reason not to test this guidance system, the same as we would test guidance systems for other pieces of equipment which were not considered to be weaponry, in this sense being nuclear weapons.

The Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) suggested that in effect it was unrealistic to have such a declaration that Canada would become a nuclear weapon-free nation, when other nations may not be inclined to comply. If this is something that Canada would be expected to do unilaterally, it certainly would not be very effective. However, if there were some way that Canada in concert with other countries felt the same way, perhaps this could be considered.

The substance of the Bill would apply not only to the testing of the Cruise missile as such or the testing of the guidance system of the Cruise missile. Clause 3 of the Bill reads:

> No person, corporation, government agency or association of any nature whatsover shall develop, test, manufacture, import, transport or store any nuclear weapon, nuclear weapons system, nuclear weapons support system, or any components therefor, within Canada, its territorial coastal waters, its inland bodies of water or its airspace over which Canada has jurisdiction for any reason whatsover, including the defence of Canada or any ally thereof.

It is such a broad, all-encompassing Clause that in effect it would probably mean virtually no testing or development of any kind. In fact, in my view we would not be able to meet our commitments with the United States in agreements we have already signed. It would seem—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

Shall all items listed under Private Members' Public Bills preceding No. 458 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN FORCES SUPERANNUATION ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING RETIREMENT FOR MISCONDUCT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria) moved that Bill C-658, an Act to amend the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act (retirement for misconduct), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) on a point of order.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for recognizing me on a point of order. I have not been waiting for days to have this Bill considered; I have been waiting for years to have it considered and I find myself at the short end of the afternoon. I would ask for unanimous consent of the House that I be allowed to call it six o'clock and have this Bill considered at the next Private Members' day after the recess, so that all those people who wish to contribute to this very important Bill, which really deserves to pass, can be heard.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, that is a reasonable request. We on this side of the House always try to be reasonable, and we would be glad to accede to it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The House has heard the proposal of the Hon. Member for Victoria to the effect that his Private Members' Bill, Bill C-658, retain its position on the Order Paper and that we call it six o'clock. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Therefore, it being technically six o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(3) this House stands adjourned until Monday, April 11, 1983 at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 2(1).

At 5.20 p.m. the House adjourned until April 11, 1983, pursuant to Standing Order.

SMALL BUSINESS INVESTMENT GRANTS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-136, Small Business Investment Grants Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are three motions standing on the Order Paper at the report stage of Bill C-136, the Small Business Investment Grants Act. Motions Nos. 1 and 2, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), should be grouped for debate but voted separately. Motion No. 3, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), will be debated and voted on separately.

Mr. Ian Deans (for Mr. Orlikow) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-136, Small Business Investment Grants Act, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out line 20 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"obligation for the acquisition of depreciable assets, or the financing of research and development, or to meet operating expenses and owed by him, the Minister may,".

Motion No. 2.

That Bill C-136, Small Business Investment Grants Act, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out line 5 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"the grant is made to not less than ten per".

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we have had the opportunity of discussing this Bill and the implications associated with it, as articulated by the Members of the New Democratic Party in particular. I want to take a moment or two to refer to the specific nature of these amendments and the reasons for them.

When one looks at the content of Bill C-136, the Small Business Investment Grants Act, one's first reaction is to be supportive, to recognize it as a positive step in the right direction. It is the Government once again recognizing its obligation to assist the small business sector. If there is a sector of our country that has been overlooked by the federal Government, it is the small business sector. If one were to examine all of the various programs that have been implemented over the years to provide some assistance for the business community, and I use the business community in the broadest sense as including the agricultural sector, the fishing sector and the like, one would find that very few programs have been introduced to provide assistance to the small business sector specifically.

Large businesses—the corporate sector, the international business community—have a variety of programs designed to assist and encourage them, but by and large the small business sector has been overlooked, particularly when it comes to assistance that is real to them. Once again, I am afraid, Bill C-136 has missed the mark. It is a Bill that says to the small business sector that if they are interested in expanding their operation, particularly in terms of new equipment, we are prepared to assist them at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I do not expect that there is a single Member sitting in the House of Commons today who feels that the problem the small business sector is facing today is one of adding new equipment to their operation. The problem of the small business sector today is simply one of survival. Small business people across this country at this moment are clinging on by their fingertips on a daily basis waiting for the banks to move in, waiting for the financial companies that they depend on to foreclose.

It is now the spring season when the small business sector traditionally begins to grow and expand its operation and new jobs are created. But I am afraid that is not occurring in the spring of 1983. If you were to sit down and analyze what was happening to the small business sector in every region of this country, the small business sector is disappearing from the Canadian landscape and being replaced by the international chains, by the corporate sector.

Now, one could simply debate in itself whether or not it is to Canada's advantage to have the corporate sector predominating and growing at the expense of the small business community. I do not think there is any question in terms of the long-term viability of our Canadian economy that we have to be paying more attention to the small, family-oriented business, the business that has a commitment to its community, the business that is 100 per cent Canadian owned and Canadian controlled, the business that has a commitment to Canada, to its Province, to its sub-region and to its community. The international corporation does not have that. Its priority is to its shareholders and more often than not to foreign shareholders and to a foreign board of directors. What we are talking about in this particular Bill, a Bill called the Small Business Investment Grants Act, is a minute step in the right direction and these amendments address two of the significant weaknesses in this Bill.

Let me take a moment or two to talk about those two weaknesses. The problem is that small businesses today have difficulty obtaining funds for expansion, for buying new equipment and new plants. Small businesses today are having problems operating and just simply staying in business. Most small businesses have cut back on their employees, have cut out all of their expansion plans, have closed off whatever sectors they are able to close off, and are left with the bare bones of their small business operation.

Amendment No. 1 says that the Government has an obligation to assist the small business community during these very difficult times in two critical areas. The first critical area and the most important is assistance with working capital. The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey) is knowledgeable about the plight of the small business community and knows full well that it is lack of working capital that is causing difficulty out there today. I am sure that if he had his way he would support amendment No. 1, so I hope he does get his way. I suspect that it is his Cabinet colleagues who are holding back.

This would cost the Government some money but there is no alternative. If this sector of our economy disappears from the landscape it will mean a further erosion of the economy, fewer revenues flowing into Government coffers and more flowing out in terms of social assistance programs. We must reverse this tide and the way to do that is to provide assistance to those businesses that are having problems with working capital and through the provision of research and development money.

The small business sector of our economy is going to perform the major part in a recovery program for Canada. That is because it is able to move quickly and take advantage of the changing times much more than the cumbersome international corporation can with its inertia of bureaucracy. The small business community is able to dodge and weave, move and twist and turn to take advantage of the changes in our society. We should encourage that, Mr. Speaker. We should encourage the small business community to come up with ideas for research, for opening up new product lines, for new marketing strategies. We should be behind it 100 per cent, but we are not, Mr. Speaker. If we could assist the community with this particular borrowing procedure then we should do so.

We are not doing that, Mr. Speaker, and that is why the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and myself have decided to offer an amendment that would provide encouragement to the small business sector to carry out aggressive policies, from research and development through to production, and to provide assistance to businesses hard pressed for operating capital. It is a step in the right direction, Mr. Speaker.

I should like now to refer to the second amendment, Mr. Speaker. We feel that there is a psychological barrier that must be broken in this country if we are to give a very clear signal to the small business community that we are on side and expect it to lead a major effort in this recovery. That signal is the level of interest that a small business person must pay when he or she approaches the bank for operating funds or for new development lines.

At the moment, the Bill allows that the interest rate could drop to 12 per cent. That is not particularly comforting, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, it is a jolt. The small business community, 900,000 strong, is waiting for an indication of how seriously the Government considers its plight, and the Government is introducing a Bill to allow it to borrow money at 12 per cent for new plant. That is not a revolutionary breakthrough in terms of assistance to the small business community. If someone went to the FBDB or the Royal Bank of Canada or any lending institution now, they could probably get that same rate.

We should give this Bill some guts, Mr. Speaker, and introduce measures that will assist the small business community. One way to do that, as the amendment suggests, is to provide that the rate be 10 per cent. To my mind that is a psychological point. If we can provide money to the small business community at 10 per cent, it will give encouragement to expand; but during these times, 12 per cent offers little incentive.

With those two amendments, Mr. Speaker, we urge the Official Opposition to support us, but, more important, we urge Members of the Government to give a clear signal to the small business community by supporting amendments Nos. 1 and 2. I know the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism would accept them if he has the support of his caucus colleagues.

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make some comments on the amendments proposed by my colleague. I have a great deal of respect for his knowledge of the small business community and the concern that he has expressed not only today but in the weeks and months gone by. He knows, and I know, that we are dealing today with a Bill which was introduced on October 28 and which has had, in my opinion, and I suspect in his opinion also, a far too lengthy passage through this House. In fact, what we are dealing with is an instrument which was brought in at a time when interest rates were high, and we are dealing with it now at report stage and third reading at a time when interest rates have come down substantially from where they were when the instrument was first introduced.

I believe we must ask ourselves, is this the instrument for the future? Do we want a better instrument than this to serve the small business community? I agree with the Hon. Member that a signal must be sent to the small business community. I want to send it and I believe the Hon. Member wants to send it also. Let us send the message today to the small business community that we realize that they are the main piston in the engine of the economy, which is private enterprise. They are the job creators. Forty-two per cent of all the jobs in Canada are held in small business. If we want to create jobs we must support them. I realize the business community wants working capital. I know they want to plan expansion now. But is this the best instrument now?

I have been speaking with my small business consultative committee from across the country and we have been consulting with other groups which represent the small business community. We hope very soon to put out a small business strategy, which would be the strategy of the Government of Canada for the support of small business. The question is, however, is a Bill which was introduced on October 28, and which is now receiving final disposition today, the best instrument to support small business for the future? I would urge the Hon. Member and the Official Opposition to pass this Bill today because, really, what we are talking about is an instrument which has served over the years. Indeed, the program went into effect without the legislation. The brochures went out very quickly. We were able to use a vote within Industry, Trade and Commerce to support some of the applications, except for those from farmers and fishermen which, by the way, totalled 62 per cent of the applications under the SBIG. Sixty-two per cent of the applications were from farmers and fishermen from all across the country.

I ask for quick disposition of this Bill because it is a measure which expired, according to the period announced in the budget, on March 31. The information was put in the brochures and on the application forms. Everyone was aware publicly that this was a temporary measure while interest rates were high and which was to expire on March 31. I say to the Opposition now that we should deal with this because 62 per cent of those who applied will not be able to receive the money which we have committed to them. I do not know how many farmers and fishermen there are in Mississauga, but there are many across the country who will not be able to take advantage of this measure. There are 4,000 applications made under this program to date. I am urging the Opposition to accept speedy passage of this Bill so that we can keep our commitment to the farmers and fishermen and the other people who have applied under this program. As I say, it was a measure which was introduced when interest rates were high and I believe what we have to look at now is a much more comprehensive strategy for the support of small business.

While I appreciate the point raised by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), that working capital has to be supplied, I would remind him, and I know he knows full well, there are instruments such as the Federal Business Development Bank and such as EDP, which indeed do provide for loans for working capital. What I believe we should be focusing on is our normal lending institutions, our normal lending mechanisms and vehicles. This is a temporary measure and we should be looking now to refine our normal lending mechanisms to support small business. I appreciate the fact that he says that interest rates are still high, as indeed they are, for small business, but they are coming down. I believe we should let market forces continue to work so that they will, as I believe they will, come down in favour of small business.

I appreciate the points made by the Hon. Member, but I say to him let us pass this legislation without amendment now because it is a temporary measure which we have used, and let us look to the future for our policy towards small business. Let us refine our existing lending mechanism so that we can give a clear signal to small business that it has to be the focus, as we come out of this recession. We are for them and we are going to put in place those instruments that they need; but this is not necessarily the best vehicle.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister advise us where in the Bill this measure is limited to March 31, 1983. I notice in his blue and green publicity document that it was limited to March 31, but where in the Bill is there any limit on the life of this grant program?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, number one, it was in the budget.

Mr. Domm: Which budget?

Mr. Rompkey: This is a budget measure, Mr. Speaker. It was limited quite specifically in the budget to March 31. So first of all it is a budgetary item; it was also put in the regulations which we had hoped would be passed long before now, of course, and in all the literature which has been made public in connection with this Bill.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, if it was in the budget, maybe the Minister could tell us where. I have the budget speech here and I do not see where there is a limitation on this program of March 31, 1983. Was it the intention of the Government definitely to limit the program to that date? If that is the case, will the Minister be seeking unanimous consent of the House to amend the Bill so that it will provide only retroactive approval of advances made under this Bill up to and including March 31, 1983?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I have to repeat the point I made. We are talking about a measure which was developed when interest rates were high. We are talking about commitments which had been made and a program which would finish March 31, with other mechanisms to follow in its place. I urge the Opposition to pass this measure as quickly as possible so that indeed we can keep our commitments. I think speedy passage would be in the interest of those people who have been seeking help and support under this program up until now.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answers point out the very reason why the House should defeat this Bill. I say that because the Government has no intention at this point of using this measure as a grant program to assist small business to reduce interest costs. Indeed, the Government dillied around with Bill C-136, refusing to bring it on for debate when there was a need for assistance on interest rates. Interest rates have now fallen to the point where the prime rate is 11.5 per cent, so a Bill which subsidizes interest rates to 12 per cent is not much of an assistance program. The fact is that the Government has all of the mileage it wants out of this Bill.

I want to remind the House that the then Minister of Finance, in order to curry the favour of small business, on June 28 last said:

• (1130)

I am announcing an important new program to reduce interest costs for small businesses undertaking new investment. $400 million is being allocated to this program.

The expansion of many small businesses has been halted by high interest rates. Grants will therefore be made to cover four percentage points of interest charges, over a period of two years, on loans extended by financial institutions to both incorporated and unincorporated small businesses.

There was nothing mentioned about limitation of the grants or anything of that nature. The budget was immediately produced and another fancy brochure was produced describing what this Government would do for small business. The small business community knows what the Government has done to small business. It has raped and pillaged small business. It has taxed and regulated it to death and has destroyed it.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that unanimous consent was given to the Hon. Member to ask questions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has been recognized to make a speech.

Mr. Blenkarn: The former Minister continues to rise occasionally in the House without understanding for what purpose he is doing so.

The fact is that the Government's programs for small business have remained largely at the brochure stage. We have seen such brochures as "ABCs for Small Business" and the "Government of Canada in the Small Business Community". Other brochures have been published by DREE along with other documents from various other sources.

In order to understand what the small business community wants, I would like to refer the House to the evidence given by John Bulloch, President of the Federation of Independent Business, to the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on September 16, 1982. At that time he said:

You can get rid of half the grant and aid programs for small business in Canada. They were all created by bureaucrats in response to Ministers' questions. What can I do for small business, they are putting the heat on me? And up comes another program.

There has been no program in this country developed or asked for by us at the provincial level, and there are something like 800 of them. You could scrap half of them. Go back to the tax system, and you can get a lot of financing. If you want to start cutting budgets and cut into the business sector, we will give you all the support. We say you should be making absolute cuts in the cost of Government and cut into the business sector as well as all your other areas. They do not reach the people you want to reach. They are the bureaucratic response to political pressures. They are bubbling up all over the place; they never stop. And we have never asked for anything.

This was said by the President of the Federation of Independent Business and this program represents exactly that. Our colleagues in the New Democratic Party have put forward an amendment which essentially says that if the Government really means it all, then why not make these grants to subsidsize interest to not less than 10 per cent? Those modest Members in the NDP suggest only 10 per cent.

A review of the interest rates in this country shows that while the Bank of Canada rate is 9.5 per cent, the Government has permitted the chartered banks to set their prime rate at 2 per cent above the Bank of Canada rate. That differential is unheard of since the differential between the prime rate and the Bank of Canada rate used to be somewhere between one-half per cent and three-quarters per cent. The Government has permitted that differential to rise to 2 per cent and remain that way for a number of months.

The Government has the authority and responsibility to drive this country's prime rate down and direct the banks to do so. The fact is that the bank prime rates are significantly higher than they should be. There is no justification for a Government that really pretended to want to help small business to produce this Bill and ask for its speedy passage, knowing that it will do nothing for anyone. The Government refers to farmers and fishermen but it does not give us any statistics on the amount of money involved and why they were included in the Bill initially instead of being covered under other appropriate legislation dealing with farmers and fishermen.

The Government has indicated that it will not accept a proposal that would reduce interest rates for small business to 10 per cent. It is inconceivable that this Government of propaganda and puffery should be allowed to get away with it. I hope that the debate today, tomorrow and perhaps another day will allow us to point out the fraudulent and deceitful nature of the presentations we have heard from the Government with respect to small business. The amendments to the Bill call the Government to task. The amendments suggest that if the Government plans to take action, it should do something about inventory and the cost of working capital. It should strive to drive interest rates down to a level where business can begin to make a profit.

The Government does not do this because it would have to pay something for its advertising program. I suspect that the Government has spent about as much money for puffing up this program in its cross-country advertising as it will spend on grants under the program itself. There is nothing like $400 million in grants. We have not heard the Minister or the Government tell us how much money it has committed to this program. However, the committee received some figures back in December, and since they were modest at that time I suspect they will become even more modest as interest rates drop. If Members seriously analyze the advertising and puffery associated with the program, I suspect they would find almost as much money is spent on advertising and puffery as is spent on grants.

Therefore, we are faced with a situation in which we have a Minister who purports to act on behalf of small business. He purports to be the Minister for small business and he comes to the House to ask us to pass his Bill. He does this so he may put another notch in his rifle to show what he has done for the business community. He is a Minister who does not really have any clout, power, desire or energy to act on behalf of small business. He merely enjoys issuing his brochures but does not accomplish anything. If these amendments are not passed, it is proof positive that he will not do anything.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in regard to this matter. The Hon. Minister pointed out that the Bill was introduced on October 28, 1982. It is amazing that the Minister advises us today that the Bill expired on March 31, 1983. That was 11 days ago. In other words, we are being asked to pass a Bill which has already expired. Therefore, those people who were waiting for the Bill to pass so that they could apply for grants will now be unable to apply unless the Minister assures us that applications will be accepted under this Bill for a period of three months or six months from the time it has passed. Otherwise, it is utterly unfair. The normal procedure is for people to wait for a Bill to be passed before they make application. Those who would benefit but have not made application to date are completely out of luck unless the Minister makes that change. I think that assurance has to come. Otherwise we are almost wasting our time.

If it is possible, I would like the minister to tell us how many applications have been received to date. It would be interesting to see how many people really believed the legislation would be passed and applied under the Bill. I submit again that it is utterly unfair to bar people from applying for this benefit because the Bill was not passed before March 31. I urge the Minister at least to make this reasonably fair so that people can apply after the Bill is passed. This only makes ordinary, everyday sense.

The Bill is limited. I like the two amendments introduced by our friends in the New Democratic Party. They certainly improve the Bill and they are being debated together. The real problem today is still high interest rates. The 4 per cent remains in the Bill. There is a maximum of 12 per cent, unless the amendment down to 10 per cent is accepted. This means that a person with an 18 per cent interest rate would obtain a benefit of 4 per cent but would still be paying 14 per cent. Someone with an interest rate of 20 per cent—and there are a number of people over that—would obtain 16 per cent. Those with 14 per cent interest rates under the Bill would only obtain a 2 per cent advantage. If the amendments carry, at least these would obtain a 4 per cent advantage.

I realize that it was not this Minister who introduced the Bill, but he is now carrying responsibility for it. I ask him who we are trying to help?

I have just spent a number of days mainstreeting in my constituency. The real problem faced by farms and small businesses—and farms are small businesses as well—is that people are locked into interest rates. They had to renew at 17, 18, 19 or 20 per cent rates; they had no choice. Back in November the present Minister spoke on second reading and mentioned that $400 million was being provided to help with up to 4 per cent of interest, and this is what the Bill indicates, $400 million.

Recently the agricultural Members of the Progressive Conservative Party submitted a proposal to the Government that would cost $100 million, by which we could buy out all those high interest rates from our farmers. We could buy out those 16 per cent to 22 per cent interest rates for less than $100 million and then have the loans refinanced so that they will pay a stable interest rate. If we do something like that, we would be doing something for small business.

This Bill will be a drop in the bucket. It is too little, it is too late; it is only a drop in the bucket. It does not tackle the real problem bothering small businesses today.

I urge the Hon. Minister to bring in amendments. He could do so with the consent of the House. He could bring in amendments that would take $100 million of that $400 million and really do a job by buying out the highest interest rates, because these people really had no choice.

I do not know how many applications have been received, but the normal procedure is that people do not apply until the Bill is passed. We will not help those who have gone into receivership or gone bankrupt. It is too late for them, but we may still help many people to stay on the land and to stay in business.

Surely, if this Bill has any objective at all, it should be to keep our businessmen, farmers, fishermen and all small-businessmen viable. It is small business upon which we depend for jobs. It is small-business people who went out of business. Sure, we lost many jobs through the big boys, those firms which employed from 2,000 to 4,000 people, but many of the two million are unemployed now as a result of small businesses going bankrupt, laying off help, bringing in their wives to help because they could not afford to pay anyone from the outside, and having their children of all ages help in the store and on the farm. That is how some of them remained viable. Some farmers have gone out and worked at other jobs just to keep their farms going.

This Bill will be of help to some, but not to very many if we do not extend the application date. It could be a great deal of help if the Minister would really do a job of buying out the high interest rates and refinancing at a reasonable level.

There are other things which should be done. As the Minister mentioned, the Bill will not solve all problems. It is too bad it was not passed back in November. I really do not know why it was not. I think there would have been unanimous consent on all sides of the House for this Bill to come in. I do not know why it has taken five months, from November to March, when we took time in the House to deal with Bills which the people do not want, such as Canagrex. We wasted two full days. One of those days could have been used to pass this Bill. To rush it now, I think we have to have assurance from the Minister that people will still be able to make application, those it will help. Let us help as many as we can. The more we can help, the better. If the change I just mentioned is made, it could help a lot more people.

There are many things which should and could be done to help keep small businesses, farms and our fishing sector viable. It would not cost the Government one cent to keep many farms viable. It could simply change a small section of the Western Grain Stabilization Act, where it would make a pay-out in three years instead of five years. It would put perhaps $150 million into the pockets of farmers who are part of the program involving wheat, oats and barley. It would keep them viable.

I know a farmer who on paper today is rich. He is a relatively young man. He went to college. He obtained his Bachelor of Science degree in agriculture. Now he is rich on paper but almost bankrupt because there is no cash flow. This Bill will not help him very much. These people need help.

I see my speaking time has come to an end. Before sitting down I urge the Minister to bring in some measure with real meat in it to help small-businessmen, farmers and fishermen. They need it, as the Hon. Minister knows.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, we are here today to begin debate at report stage on a Bill, as was mentioned earlier by previous speakers, that was introduced for first reading almost six months ago, Bill C-136 respecting the Small Business Investment Grants Act. It formally enacts certain measures that arose out of one of the series of budgets brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) or his predecessor to try and repair some of the damage caused by earlier budgets. To some extent it marks a departure for the Government for, like most of its predecessors, it does little good and, unlike most of them, it does little harm either. Perhaps that is a step in the right direction for this Government and one for which we should congratulate them.

As a Bill, what does it purport to achieve? Not very much that I can see. Essentially it empowers the Minister to make regulations, and that is about all it does. At the present time, it is a near totally irrelevant Bill. At a time when interest rates and the measures contained in the Government's many budgets combine to squeeze the life out of small businesses' working capital, it expressly excludes loans for the purpose of providing working capital.

As my colleague from Bow River (Mr. Taylor) mentioned, he was on the hustings during the Easter recess. I too talked to many businessmen in my riding who pointed out the crying need for working capital, asking where they could get money to stay afloat, they are that close to the line. It is no good providing money to firms already in receivership or bankruptcy.

At a time when the Government's measures have made the purchase of new equipment out of the question for most small businesses, it expressly excludes loans for the purpose of buying used equipment. In short, it displays all the foresight and the understanding of the plight of small business that we have come to expect of this Government.

But wait. It goes even further in displaying the Government's firm grasp of the realities of life in the private sector. We on this side of the aisle have for many, many years been harping on the need for providing incentives whereby industry may step up its research and development. Lo and behold, we find that expenditures for research and development, if engaged in by small business and funded by borrowing, are eligible for inclusion in this program.

I do not want to take anything away from those small firms which have been forced to borrow to finance their research and development, but surely wherever possible a company tries to meet these costs out of earnings. Of course, it depends on the definition one applies to research and development, but for the most part it is just not the sort of thing that a company borrows to pay for.

In other words, the inclusion of research and development under the terms of this Act is not the sort of move that is calculated to strengthen and support Canadian research. Rather, it gives the impression that it is an item thrown in at the last minute so as to be pointed at later as evidence of the Government's deep and abiding concern for research and development in Canada. In short, it follows along in the new familiar Liberal tradition of not doing much good, but at least being something to crow about later. I hope, Mr. Speaker, you will excuse the pun in introducing the word "crow".

Surely the country has a right to expect better of its Government at a time like this. What else is new? The Government is tired. It is spiritually worn out and mentally exhausted. This is the best, literally, that it can come up with. How much better it would be for the entire nation if it were to shuffle quietly off to wherever mortally ill Governments, like elephants, go to die.

The classic irony of it all is, of course, that this Bill offers grants to cover interest charges on small business loans down to a limit of 12 per cent. It is all good stuff, except that the current prime rate is only 11.5 per cent. Inasmuch as small business loan rates are one to two points over prime, once again we see the Government just a little out of step with reality.

As mentioned previously, there is no question that businessmen on their own can in all probability negotiate loans without the assistance provided in this Bill. However, that really is of limited importance at the present time because the Bill has already been in effect for at least six months. I suppose that is what upsets me most about this Bill; it is not what it does, which within its limitations is good, even if it could have been done so much better. So, the most upsetting thing is the way in which it has been introduced.

After the measures legalized in this Bill have been in effect for almost six months, we are asked to debate the legislation at report stage. To do so is a waste of time. There are many more important matters that we should be addressing. Most significantly, that it should be introduced in this fashion speaks volumes about the esteem in which this House is held by the Government.

This is the Government and the Party headed by the man who once declared that Members of Parliament were nobodies once they were 50 yards from Parliament Hill. How much more graphically can this opinion be underlined than by enforcing their writ throughout the country without bothering to legalize their actions for almost a year? Their actions tell us much about this Government. They tell us that they are disorganized almost to the point of confusion. Otherwise it would have produced a Bill better calculated to solve the problems it tries to deal with.

The Government tells us that it has an ill-concealed contempt for Parliament, the parliamentary process and ultimately for the Canadian public that this Parliament is elected to represent. Otherwise this Bill would have been dealt with expeditiously with the other budgetary measures when they were still fresh and meaningful. Lastly, it says a good deal about the Government's sense of values and priorities that it did not deal with these budgetary measures earlier, preferring first, for example, to get all the old age pensioners and Family Allowance recipients under the six and five program.

So be it. The Government has shown us its soul by its handling of these matters. It is a fait accompli; let us get it over with. However, we and the Canadian people will remember this Government's stewardship, sense of priorities and confusion. It has taken us for granted for too long. If the polls have anything at all to tell us, it is that the voters know this and are waiting.

I am well aware of the Minister's sympathy for small business. As he mentioned, there are a great many small businessmen, farmers and fishermen in his area. He stated that many applications have been submitted. I believe he mentioned 62 per cent, give or take 4,000. I wonder when they are going to be processed. Are not some being processed at the present time even though the Bill has not received third reading? The Minister can hardly say no one is able to take advantage of the Bill without it being passed.

There are many small businesses in my area of Parry Sound-Muskoka crying out for assistance to help keep them afloat and possibly to expand a bit. Needless to say, they want to do this with a more preferred interest rate than is available today. Thank goodness the rates are down considerably from a year ago.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, today I have ten minutes to speak about another example of the Liberal shell game. The Minister responsible for small businesses stood in this House and said that the Bill was introduced at the end of October and, therefore, it is time to get it through the House and passed. He also indicated that the Bill is the result of a budget introduced well over a year ago. The last time I looked at the regulations for Parliament, it was the job of the Government to propose legislation and the job of the Opposition and Members of Parliament to dispose of it.

We heard earlier today from the Minister responsible for small businesses a public admission of this government's failure to act. It is true that we had a budget over a year ago, it is true that interest rates were very high and that small business was hurting because of those interest rates.

A Government interested in action would have brought forward a piece of legislation of this kind immediately and given it a high priority on the parliamentary agenda. It would have passed and it might have done the country some good. However, for the Minister to stand in this House a year later and indicate there is some urgency for its passage when interest rates are down to the level of 12 per cent, which is specified in the Bill, is to admit that the Government of Canada failed to act when action was necessary.

To stand in the House and castigate the Opposition for not acting when action is no longer necessary is the height of hypocrisy. What has the Government done for small business? All it has done is to advertise a set of what looks like positive public intentions. It said to the small business community over a year ago, "You are in trouble when you are borrowing money; interest rates are too high, so we are going to do something about it and aren't we nice guys." Then it did nothing about it.

In that same budget, however, the Government did a lot of damage to small business. It was as if it said: "Over here on the left-hand side is the help. We will advertise the help which we are not delivering. We will say that we care when we really do not." But hidden in the budget and not advertised were measures like the half-year convention which reduced capital cost allowance to 50 per cent of its former level and hurt every small business in this country.

In that same budget, the Small Business Development Bond was turned into a bail-out bond. The Government turned it into a Catch-22 bond where only businesses that were facing bankruptcy would be eligible for Government assistance. They could go to the bank and attempt to borrow money, but those loans were not to be guaranteed by the Government. The bank had to take the risk and, of course, very few loans were granted. There is another source of help that disappeared. The survival bond did not work and the development bond was taken away from small business.

Deferred profit-sharing helped small business people and their employees prepare for retirement and at the same time put increased cash flow into those small businesses. In that same budget the Government took that away. It increased taxes on employee benefits. In other words, in that budget it took immediate action on a number of measures which hurt small business in this country, which made their survival less likely and their profitability almost impossible. As the Government did that, it did not have the courage to advertise those things; it simply advertised that it was going to help those small businesses. First of all, it forced them to borrow more money and then it would help them with the borrowing cost.

The fact that we are standing in this Chamber today looking at the piece of legislation that was supposed to help a year ago tells us that the Government did not help. It hurt, but it did not help. What is particularly galling, and so common in legislation proposed by the Liberals since my time in this House, is that we get a piece of legislation and we are asked as Parliamentarians to try and amend it perhaps, but ultimately to vote for or against it. It involves the spending of taxpayers' money generally for some presumed positive social purpose. In most pieces of legislation, and certainly in this piece of legislation, you cannot find a single word about what such money is to be used for. What you find is a clause that says the Governor in Council shall make regulations. What that means is that the Cabinet shall decide who, if anybody, gets the money.

Are Cabinet decisions made in public? No. Are Parliamentarians invited to come before Cabinet and suggest what might work for the people in their riding or the people in this country? The answer to that is no. Cabinet decides on regulations in secret. Cabinet decides basically on recommendations that are put forward by civil servants, people who get a salary, who work for the Government, who do not face the threat of layoff, who do not have to meet productivity standards. They advise the Cabinet on what the regulations should be for small business. Where is the democracy in that? Where is the expert knowledge which small-businessmen represent? Who can speak to Cabinet on behalf of the small-businessmen of this nation?

If you look at some of the material which the Government has put out on this particular piece of legislation and its presumed help, you immediately spot the very first example of the lack of understanding that Cabinet and the civil service has of the world of the small-businessman. One of the small parts of this piece of legislation and the regulations which Cabinet is proposing for its implementation is to tell Canadian small-businessmen that if they buy a new piece of equipment, they are eligible for Government help. However, if they buy a used piece of equipment, they are not.

As a small-businessman who belongs to small business organizations and has done so for years, one who meets with small-business people on a regular basis, let me tell you that they are cost-conscious. One of the characteristics of the small-business people of this nation is that they do not have large amounts of money. Quite often their enterprises are sort of "Ma and Pa" operations, family operations with two, three or four employees. When true small businesses in this country of that size need a truck to deliver things in the city, they do not go out and buy a new truck; they go out and buy a used truck. That is the nature of small business. It is important that as the regulations for assistance in an Act of this kind come forward, those in this Chamber, Parliamentarians who are in touch with small business, have a say in where that money should go. It is not right, it is not appropriate, and it is not helpful for Cabinet alone to make those decisions.

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to discuss Bill C-136 which will provide the legislation necessary to implement the Small Business Investment Grants Program, the SBIG, as outlined in the June, 1982 budget. This program will provide grants of up to 4 per cent to reduce interest costs to as low as 12 percent for small businesses in Canada.

Before discussing the substance of C-136, I would like to examine the current state of small business in Canada to provide some insight into the necesssity and feasibility of the proposed legislation. Based on the findings released by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, to date in Canada there are between 700,000 and 800,000 fewer Canadians employed in the small and medium-sized business sector than there were in 1981. Small business has been hard-hit by the economic situation in Canada, which has worsened over the past couple of years. Over 50 per cent of the small businesses in the Canadian Federation of Independent Business have reported cutbacks in employee numbers during the past two years. These people have joined the ranks of the other 1,598,000 Canadians reported out of work as of January, 1983, not to mention the 500,000 Canadians no longer looking for work.

The President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has currently been urging the Government to adopt policies to bring down interest rates and encourage new business to be formed and existing businesses to expand. The development of small business is crucial to the country's economy and the sector's health is fundamental to any economic recovery.

Few businesses at the present time are making any plans for increasing their hiring or their investment. On a national basis 66.7 per cent expect to remain at the present employment level, 7.9 per cent reported they would hire additional people this year and another 9.1 per cent said they would rehire workers they were forced to lay off previously, while 8.2 per cent plan to employ fewer workers this year. Fully 82.3 per cent of the respondents to the CFIB survey have taken some measures of restraint, as 51 per cent reduced the number of employees and just under 30 per cent had present employees working reduced numbers of hours per week.

It is very clear to anyone, then, that the economic situation imposed on this country by our present Government has chronically damaged many small businesses in Canada and discouraged many businessmen from developing their own small businesses. The restraint placed on the small business owners and their employees has increased the already high unemployment rate and added to the dismal state of the economy.

Restraint measures, employment cutbacks and reduction of employee hours have occurred in all regions of Canada in varying degrees. Restraint measures are at a high in British Columbia where firms imposing restraint have reached a level of 88.6 per cent, followed by Newfoundland at 87.1 per cent. In my own Province of Prince Edward Island, the reduction in employees is at a national high of 64 per cent, with the national average being 50.9 per cent, and it ranks third in the area of employee wage restraint in the independent business sector. How can any businessman be expected to have any confidence in the Canadian economy and general economic policies.

The small business community in Canada, with its entrepreneurial and innovative capabilities which can give us new products, processes, jobs and enterprise, is being dealt a heavy blow by our current economic situation and the present Government's economic policies. The desperately awaited business recovery will not occur without concrete and substantial changes in the business environment.

In view of these worries about public policy and the risk of interest rate increases, the responding businesses are making few plans as of now for increasing their hiring or investment. The independent business universe is a quilt of many patterns and colours. It includes many new firms just starting and growing, mature firms which are growing, and businesses which are being drastically changed to meet altered product demands or technological conditions, as well as many stable and mature firms. Interest rates remain a real concern for the small-businessman and they must be assured the rates will stay down before doing any hiring or investing.

The major factors identified as necessary to hire more workers are increased confidence in government policy and consistency and assurance that interest rates will not shoot up again. Businessmen are waiting for concrete and substantial evidence of a real change in governmental direction before committing themselves. They cannot be blamed for that. The small-businessman must ask the federal Government for concrete policies which will ensure him a stable economic recovery.

The hesitation of independent businesses to expand their operations is understandable when we examine the background of cutbacks they have been made to deal with due to our recession—a recession deliberately brought about by the federal Government. Small businesses have been affected by the restraint measures through the reduction in the number of their employees and the reduction of the employees' working hours per week. They have been forced to reduce or postpone wage increases for their employees and have been restricted in growth.

Wage restraints are even more hard hitting for small-businessmen than for their employees. Owners and managers have been forced to take reductions or lower increases in compensation. The largest element of restraint in a small business is in the area of employment. A good percentage of businesses have been forced to reduce the number of employees and, according to a questionnaire issued in January, 1981 and February, 1983, the net change for the respondents was 42,479 fewer employees.

Traditionally the public sector has enjoyed effective job tenure. Recently, however, there have been notices of hiring freezes and even a few layoffs for public sector employees. From the results of a recent informal survey, it would appear that one to two thousand Government workers have been laid off and some 6,000 to 10,000 in CN, telephone companies, hospitals etc. This does not include several thousand casual workers which Governments have not kept on, and doubtless others in the numberless Crown corporations.

A further measure of restraint is the reduction in weekly hours of work for remaining employees. It is striking that just under 30 per cent of all respondents had reduced working hours per week. Laying off workers is a last resort for most firms, both because of concern for workers and because of the cost of recruiting and retraining workers later.

The impact of recession and restraint measures on the small business sector was relatively uniform across the country, yet to the extent that there were variations, the heaviest impact came at each end of the country. The response from British Columbia, Alberta, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland indicates that about 88 per cent of businesses had imposed restraint measures. Saskatchewan and New Brunswick were at the low end with 76 per cent each. British Columbia and Alberta had experienced more rapid economic growth for several years up to 1982, and had experienced a more rapid relative decline. This was shown in earlier surveys in 1981 and 1982 conducted by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business.

The same regional and provincial differences show up in reduced numbers of employees. In British Columbia and Alberta, 63 per cent and 59 per cent respectively of respondents indicated they had reduced the number of employees, compared to 51 per cent nationally. For Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland the percentages were 64 and 58 respectively. On the other hand, in Saskatchewan only 41 per cent of firms indicated they had laid workers off.

The small business consultative committee has raised a number of concerns in the area of small business. It has approached the present Government, concerned over the current imbalance of debt over equity in the financing of small firms and the role that the Government can play in providing an environment for entrepreneurship and investment in small business. The contribution of small business to the Canadian economy has been a large one. I would like to note some of these, Mr. Speaker. Some 645,000 small businesses account for 42 per cent of business employment and 25 per cent of business' Gross National Product. They demonstrate the entrepreneurial spirit and are the risk-takers to provide productivity to the economy in that some 150,000 business start-ups occurred in 1982.

There have been business failures and this is regrettable. In 1982, there were 10,765 business bankruptcies there were 410 farm bankruptcies and there were 30,463 personal bankruptcies, for a total of 41,638. In 1982, the amount of losses through business and farm bankruptcies was $2.33 billion.

Some of these people will make it back and some will not. But there are survivors—and this is the resiliency of small business.

In conclusion, the small-businessman has faced many obstacles in the path of surviving and expanding. The economic situation and policies of the federal Government have hindered the small-businessman and I would urge that the federal Government take steps to assist the small-businessman in any way it can.

• (1220)

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note once again that the Minister responsible for this Bill always leaves the House just before I stand up to speak. I notice the former Minister responsible for small businesses is in the House so perhaps he has a greater grasp of the issue than the present Minister.

I would like to comment on a few points raised by the Minister. He indicated that this Bill ran out on March 31. The final Clause of the Bill says: "This Act shall come into force on a date to be fixed by proclamation." That does not mean it runs out on March 31, Mr. Speaker. The Minister is dreaming when he comes up with that one. He said the program was in the budget, but the budget did not mean very much because it was so far off on every number that to add another $400 million does not mean anything to this Government. I am sure they spent the $400 million somewhere else.

I am delighted to see the Minister back in the House. I would like to point out to him that I believe the 42 per cent figure he gave for small business employment is quite inaccurate. Perhaps if you include all the civil servants, all the municipal civil servants and all the other government employees in Canada, he may come close to that figure, but we are talking about the people who produce products and make this country work. Right now there are 1,600,000 people unemployed. Of that number, Mr. Speaker, over 50 per cent are from the small business sector. In addition, we have 500,000 people who have lost their jobs. In my own riding, Mr. Speaker, many former one-man businesses, "Ma and Pa" businesses, with two or three people working within the organization, are out of a job and out of Unemployment Insurance. They are "out" period. I would say, first of all—and there are statistics out on this—that the small business sector provides almost 70 per cent of the total employment. Therefore, the total of the unemployed from the small business sector is probably 70 per cent of the 1,600,000 who are unemployed. This is a very serious matter.

There is a degree of blackmail when the Minister says we must pass this Bill through the House. I cannot see our passing this Bill through the House quickly because it is not a total program. It is another band-aid used to try to patch up something after the fact. They are talking about a 12 per cent interest rate. Perhaps the banks will jump in and someone who has an interest rate of prime plus one will have it increased to prime plus five, and the banks will pick up the 4 per cent from the Government coffers. Therefore, it is a bad Act presented at a bad time. It is not doing a real job. That is the important point, Mr. Speaker.

I do not like the "grants" approach. I find it smells of partisanship. I like economic reasons for doing something. I believe the program should be managed by the banks. They are in the front line. We in Ottawa do not know what is happening in Victoria, British Columbia, or St. John's, Newfoundland. We must have people on the scene. Furthermore, the banks this year are going to show an astronomical profit because they have recovered many losses which they anticipated and which are not going to occur. They had reserves in their books and they are going to recover those reserves. I believe the banks should participate and do their share during a period of high interest rates. They encourage people to come into the market to borrow money to expand when they need to get their money out. When all of sudden interest rates shoot up the fellow they encouraged to borrow money at the beginning is hurt because of the high interest rate policy. I believe that is totally unfair to Canadians, to small businesses, to the "Ma's and Pa's", to the fishermen and the farmers of this country.

I believe the Government is doing a bad job in trying to get out of the mess it got itself into. As an example, the Royal Bank of Canada is saying they will lease the land back to the farmer. I have had probably as much experience as anyone with the problems and hardships of people who have had their land expropriated. What happens to that land when it is tenant farmed is that the barns fall down, the houses are not painted, the land is unkept. It does not work, Mr. Speaker, to have tenant farmers. If the Royal Bank is so keen on putting the farmer back on the farm, then it should give him the farm and take lease payments against interest. Whatever the bank may get is better than what it had before, and it is much better off with an owner on that farm than a tenant because a tenant is not inclined to preserve somebody else's property.

For almost four years I have spoken about this subject, Mr. Speaker. What we need is a total, comprehensive plan for the micro, small and medium-sized industry. The SBIG is only a band-aid. It is not bad legislation, Mr. Speaker, but it does not do the job. It is not meeting the need. During severe times when interest rates go up is when we need relief, and not 4 per cent. We must give stability to our small industry. It cannot afford to go up and down with the Government interest rates, because the Government prints money to solve its problems and issues more bonds and runs into deficits. We need a secure plan to give those people in small industry the security which they require so that they can solve the one major problem we have in Canada, and that is creating jobs. It is jobs that we need. The Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Rompkey) knows that as well as anybody. He comes from an area which is in a tragic condition today. The unemployment situation in Newfoundland is serious and no one knows it better than he.

The Canadian Press wire had some very good points, one being that we need to restore a sound and lasting basis for real economic growth. But you cannot have a sound and lasting basis with interest rates soaring and then dropping. This situation does not provide this country with any stability.

Second, we also must address, Mr. Speaker, the importance of the entrepreneurial spirit by individual Canadians. This is their country. This country does not belong to this House of Commons, nor does it belong to the civil servants who work in Ottawa. This is the country of the Canadian people and they must be given a chance to establish a lifestyle based on the entrepreneurial spirit which built this country right from the beginning. The intervention by the Government, the regulations imposed, among other points raised by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), took this away from small businessmen. They must be removed to encourage them. We must encourage youth. These youths coming out of college cannot get jobs; everyone knows that, Mr. Speaker. We must encourage them and give them the opportunity to fund their own businesses, small as they might be. For every business which is born, one out of ten will develop into something which will create numerous jobs throughout this country.

This legislation is the absolute opposite of what is needed. The Government is now trying to patch up all the tax measures which were in the budget. For instance, the 12.5 per cent on small business dividends, Mr. Speaker, is inequitable. Canadians own those businesses! If it wants to adopt the New Democratic Party policy, it should put that tax on the multinationals. I do not agree with that, either. We need those people to create jobs also. I see my time is up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-136, which is the Small Business Investment Grants Act, and on the amendments which have been put forward by the New Democratic Party.

The impact of the legislation which the Government has presented to the House is being diminished by the events which have taken place over this winter. When the business investment grant was introduced as a piece of proposed legislation, interest rates were much higher. It is necessary that the legislation the Government introduces reflect the fact that interest rates have fallen to some degree. If this legislation, which is so important to small-businessmen, is to be effective, then I think the amendments put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) must be passed by this House.

It is important to realize that there is not really that much legislation passed by this House which helps small business. One piece of legislation with which I am more familiar is the Regional Development Incentives Act. When I was the regional development critic for this Party, I found that most of the money for regional development under the RDIA was going to large businesses. In one recent year over $70 million went to businesses classified by the Government as large businesses, and $20 million went to smaller businesses. For the $70 million to large businesses, 4,690 jobs were created. For the $20 million that went to small businesses, 4,680 jobs were created. In other words, the Government of Canada spent an extra $50 million to help large businesses and created only ten more jobs than it had with the $20 million for small businesses in this country. That demonstrates that much of Government legislation does not help small business. It also points out that small business is very important to the employment of Canadians.

A recent survey done by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business indicated that the current recession has resulted in small and medium sized businesses hiring 700,000 to 800,000 fewer people than they would have in the economic situation as it existed prior to the recession. That is 700,000 to 800,000 fewer jobs because of the recession. So when there is a Government program which is supposed to help small business, it is very important that it actually does.

The two amendments put forward by my colleague do two things. The first one allows small businesses to use this program not only for the acquisition of new equipment but for the acquisition of used equipment and the use of working capital for operating expenses. That is very important, Mr. Speaker, because 66 per cent of small businesses indicate that they are not planning expansion at the present time. Another 12 per cent indicate they will actually be reducing their production over the next little while. Those businesses are looking at economic survival. They do not want to join the 80,000 small businesses that went under last year. They want to stay in business, which means cutting operating and capital expenses. So if they can get a used cash register or scales, or other used equipment, that is a saving which might keep that business in operation. For those reasons it is important that the Government accept these amendments. I hope all Members of this House would support that.

The second amendment offered by my colleague would reduce the effective rate of interest on a loan to 10 per cent from 12 per cent. I think that is a very reasonable amendment, and it reflects the fact that when this legislation was introduced, interest rates were higher. Now, with interest rates lower, I think the Government can afford to decrease the rate so that businesses would have to pay only up to 10 per cent on a loan and still be eligible for the program. I think the Government should do this because this morning we woke up to find out that there were 1,600,000 Canadians officially unemployed in this country.

Mr. McDermid: Over two million.

Mr. Murphy: That means that in reality there are in excess of two million Canadians unemployed. We have heard from small business that they could be providing at least 700,000 or 800,000 jobs, so it is very important that we have legislation in place to help small business. Remember, small business provides about half of the private sector jobs in Canada. It is very important that the legislation we pass in this House actually assists those businesses, farmers and fishermen who qualify under the Act so that they can use this program to hire people, reduce the unemployment and welfare rolls in this country, and increase the purchasing power of many Canadians to get this economy moving again.

I am afraid that if the Government refuses to accept the NDP amendments, then this will be a hollow Act. It will not help very many Canadians. It may produce a lot of public relations, a lot of advertising by the Government as it promotes its program, but it really will not help the people it is meant to help. It will not help the small-businessmen, the farmers and fishermen who qualify. It will not help the 1.6 million unemployed Canadians. Those are very important considerations, Mr. Speaker, and I urge Government Members to support our amendments.

One of the concerns I have in the riding I represent in northern Manitoba is the fact that this Act as it is now presented allows for the purchase of new equipment only. Our amendment, which would allow the money to be used for used equipment or for operating expenses, would help many businessmen in remote communities, not just in northern Manitoba but in northern Ontario, in Atlantic Canada and in other parts of this nation. These are the businesses who have high costs because of transportation, because of their remoteness, because they tend to be dealing with smaller markets than business in communities like Toronto and Montreal. So for them new equipment is quite often out of the question. They are in a situation where they have to look around for used equipment that they can afford. When you have a potential market of only 5,000, 6,000 or 8,000 people in your community, you are not out to buy new equipment or build a new shop. You are there to try and make a few dollars to keep your family and your business going. For those businesses not to qualify under the Act as it now stands means that some of them will be going under in the future, Mr. Speaker. I urge the Government and Government Members to consider the small communities and small businesses who cannot afford new equipment. Remember them when this legislation is passed. Therefore, I urge all Members of the House to support the amendments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this discussion on Bill C-136, the Small Business Investment Grants Act. I have been in the House for quite a few years and I thought I had seen a great many absurdities perpetrated by the Government, but I must say this exercise in which we are now engaged seems to outclass them all, for a number of reasons. It was pointed out this morning that this is one of the provisions of a budget that was introduced over a year ago. Of course, we are now urged to pass it quickly so that it can become effective.

As has been pointed out, this is a measure which has already become obsolete because the circumstances which existed at that time have changed and we are now faced with a totally different situation. As well, this measure fails to engage the most pressing problem, which is the need for capital at reasonable rates to assist in weathering the economic storm until the economy is stabilized and ready to move forward. I believe that, at best, the Bill in its present form would have minimal effect and, at worse, would be completely useless. The two amendments which have been proposed and are before the House now would have some beneficial effect if they were to be included in the measure and the Bill was to become effective. As I have said before, I suggest the entire exercise is rather futile because of the economic situation having changed so dramatically since the Bill was first introduced.

For a number of reasons I consider this sector to be one of the most important in our national economy and the most deserving of consideration by the House, not just for a few minutes as suggested by the Minister but for a considerable length of time. First, it is an area of activity that provides almost unlimited scope for the expression and productive investment of individual initiative and enterprise. We are all aware of the fact that there are business and commercial enterprises in which an individual tends to become a cog in a big machine. Possibly, these large operations are essential—which I do not deny—and may be acceptable to some because of the security which they promise. However, there are many people who believe that meaning and purpose in life is found in the establishment of one's own business, farm or fishing operation, as the case may be. Perhaps it is in an area where a service is required, where one can become an integral and vital part of the community. Such entrepreneurs have usually become participants, and in many instances leaders, in the voluntary sector of those communities. Therefore, they not only render a service as far as making a living and providing employment opportunities are concerned, but also in the broader services provided by voluntary agencies.

Furthermore, we are reminded that the small and medium sized business community is the source of possibly 60 per cent of the job opportunities in this country. I believe it has been pointed out that about 42 per cent of that could be classified as small business. It is clear that the contribution that this sector has made is incalculable in terms of personal achievement, service to the community and the nation and job opportunities provided to others.

This road has never been an easy one. From the opening up of this country by venturesome individuals up to the present time, the odds have been many, their risks great and the labour tedious. In the past few years, however, the pressures have been overwhelming and these entrepreneurs have been facing insurmountable difficulties.

As has been pointed out, in 1982 a record 10,765 businesses were forced to close their doors. Business bankruptcies in 1982 were 33 per cent higher than in 1981, 63 per cent higher than in 1980 and 91 per cent higher than in 1979. This has resulted in an ever-increasing unemployment rate, as has been underlined again by the increase in unemployment figures which were just released this morning.

A recent article states that a very substantial percentage of the unemployment roll is made up of those who had previously been employed in the small business sector. In fact, one Hon. Member who participated this morning has placed that figure at approximately 50 per cent. Unemployment is increasing not only because of an increasing labour force but by a decrease in the number of jobs available. These jobs are disappearing and while this situation remains, make-work or short-term work opportunity and programs will not solve the problems facing us.

I refer Hon. Members to the first page of the summary of a booklet put out by the Federation of Independent Business which points out that this country has not been overly solicitous to the welfare of the small business community. While the Government has outlined great programs and large projects, it has been pointed out in the article that small entrepreneurs have had great difficulty even to survive let alone make their way in their field of activity.

The provisions of Bill C-136 include the farmer and fisherman. We recently saw an example of what the Government thinks about those in the farming sector who, in order to pay their bills and keep their farms intact, take off-farm jobs. Operations are reclassified and moved into a higher tax bracket because they have the audacity to take the initiative and spend more time off the farm to make a little more money in order to pay the bills and keep the farm operating. In some instances, it means that a farmer must sell out in order to pay the taxes being imposed on his operation. It is no wonder that the Government is going down the drain.

There is a growing concern over the Government's bail-out assistance for the Domes, the Fergusons and Maislins, on the one hand, and the "sock-it-to-them" treatment of the little guy on the other. The question is: Is it less important to retain 2,000 employees in many small enterprises than to maintain one or two businesses that employ an equal number? The government's actions, I suggest, have spoken in favour of the latter.

A litany of programs and procedures has been given time and time again in response to charges that the Government is reneging on its responsibility to create and maintain an economic climate conducive to strong and virile business activity. The fact remains that Canada's economic performance has been much worse than practically all other industrialized nations in the world. Apparently there is something drastically wrong which no patchwork operation or band-aid approach will solve. It will eventually come to the point where the Government must introduce a fundamentally different approach that will effectively meet the challenges facing our business community today.

I was pleased to hear a proposal by the Minister this morning, perhaps one of the most interesting proposals he has made, that the Government is working on a strategy that seems to promise some over-all benefits to the business community. I do not know how long it will take to implement that strategy. I suggest that this current situation should constitute a shock treatment to the Government but, unfortunately, instead of taking the initiative in providing the encouragement required, it moves only when it is forced into action and only to the degree that it hopes will make it appear that something is being done.

I appreciate the opportunity to have said a few words about the measure which is before us.

• (1250)

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention today to put a few comments on the record regarding the Bill before us, the Small Business Investment Grants Act. I will not repeat for preservation of time some of the comments I made prior to the Easter recess when I referred to some of the banking surveys conducted by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and its suggestion that we should have a better mix of banking. For instance, the Federation related it to the experience in the United States and the relationship to commercial banks, as well as the establishment of local banks. While the risks might be higher, the concomitant effect seemed to be that at least in smaller communities there was a larger incidence of industries established in smaller communities, whereas in our situation we have the larger national chartered banks with a very extensive branch network. We have not quite had the same experience. I know there are other factors which have to be taken into consideration, but I do not have time to get into them today.

Today the unemployment figures show that 1.6 million Canadians are unemployed. In fact, that figure could be higher. I want to put that in context with an average riding, the riding I represent. I took a look at my riding just the other day. Other than one business and one federal Government operation, namely the atomic energy research facility in Whiteshell, every other business would be classified as a small business. When I talk about business in my riding, it is small business, with the exception also of Abitibi Price at Pine Falls which is a large pulp and paper operation. I want to get into that because we deal with the forestry sector as well. By the way, the best benefit which the forestry sector has had is the exchange rate, because it has been favourable for that sector in terms of export. It has not been in terms of the Canadian climate that that sector has been able to survive, it has been because of the exchange rate. I think we should be careful about what we are talking when we talk about small business. We are talking about small-businessmen and women, farmers and fishermen along the east shores of Lake Winnipeg in my riding.

What will the Bill do? I will get to the amendments in a minute, but the Bill will bring into effect a statement made in the previous budget, namely, that up to 4 per cent of interest could be reduced to a minimum of 12 per cent; or, putting it another way, for the borrower a maximum of 12 per cent. The Government will subsidize or give a grant to a maximum of 4 per cent or reduce the rate to 12 per cent. I believe the NDP amendments reduce it to 10 per cent.

My colleague who preceded me always gives us the benefit of his valuable experience. As he indicated, I wonder whether the Bill will have any effect on the small business community. The proposal was more valid at the time it was made in the budget when interest rates were obviously at levels higher than they are today. The question must be asked: Is the Bill simply fulfilling the Government's promise in the budget? That might be meritorious because we have not seen the Government follow its promises in the past with that kind of keenness. In that sense I commend the Government; but will the Bill have any effect in my riding or in other ridings? The Bill indicates what one can do to be eligible. There is a $400 million ceiling, to be used for new disposable assets or financing research and development.

Last Saturday I received a telephone call from a farmer in my riding. He is trying to survive. When we talk about farmers and small business people, I guess we are talking about the most independent sector in society. They do not like to telephone their Members of Parliament and tell them that they are in trouble. It is not in the nature of these people. As was mentioned already, they are entrepreneurs and they are independent. They make their own decisions and they take their risks, but today we are receiving calls from these people. This gentleman laid out the problems he was facing as an individual farmer. Yes, he made one mistake. His mistake was that he gambled on Canada's economy and its future. That is the mistake he made. Many Canadians have made that mistake, but the difference this time is that with high interest rates he simply has difficulty surviving. In fact, this gentleman has been in farming for some period of time. I am not talking about a small farming operation. He is now on a family budget from the bank in order to retain his farm.

The Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) spoke about tenant farmers. In essence, this gentleman has become a tenant farmer on his own farm. I was shocked when he told me that last year—and I do not have the figure down to the penny as he did—he personally spent approximately $60 on clothing in 12 months. If we drive past his place, we see a farming business and good machinery. The fellow is working like many other farmers, not only from dawn to dusk but later. Not only did the figures hit me, but the fact that he said: "Jake, that I can handle. What I cannot handle is the instability and fear of the future". That is the situation which is being faced.

I respect the Minister as a person and as a Minister. I ask him whether the legislation before us really helps. Does it help this kind of person? If it helps or has the chance of helping a smidgen, it should be passed; I guess that is the rule of thumb around here. But I raise this case because I am sure every Member has similar cases in his or her riding. What are we doing for people who have been the risk-takers? Are we losing risk-takers? What I meant when I referred to them as being independent was that this man did not ask me for a grant. I found that interesting. I said: "Do you want a grant?" He had certain choice words to say about grants, but he said no. That was the essence or summary of what he said, but he wanted some kind of understanding that either a moratorium or a bank arrangement could be made which would allow him to continue farming, retain his dignity, and eventually pay his debts including interest charges. He was not asking for all kinds of forgiveness; he was asking for the opportunity to continue his operation.

I am one of the fellows in the House who argues for the marketplace. I have to ask what arrangements can be made in the public sector so that these people can continue operations outside the grant system. Let us face it, the Government is not in a position to give grants. With $30 billion of indebtedness, the Government is not in a position to give grants. All the Government is doing is borrowing to give grants. The argument is made that we should stimulate the economy even more. How much do we want to stimulate the economy—$30 billion of stimulation federally? How much provincially, another $10 billion? Can anyone on the other side guarantee that if we stimulated it by 10 per cent more we would have a better economy?

May I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

TOURISM

EMPLOYMENT POTENTIAL

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, the newly released figures on unemployment show that the actual number of those out of work has officially passed the 1.6 million mark. It would be over 2 million if we included those no longer drawing or eligible for benefits. They further reveal that this includes some 620,000 young people.

I have repeatedly stood in this place and pointed out to the Minister and the Government the tremendous multiplier effect exercised by the tourist industry in Canada. I have further pointed out that, because of that industry's wide geographic dispersion, any recovery initiated in and by this sector would have a much more widespread beneficial effect that could be generated in almost any other way. Yet the tourist industry is decidedly pessimistic at the present time.

TIAC, the Tourist Industry Association of Canada, is now predicting that its industry will generate 100,000 fewer jobs in the coming year than in the previous year. What a monument to the Government's economic expertise!

There are steps that could yet be taken to encourage a turn-about in this crucial, and I mean that literally, crucial sector. A major cut back on federal gasoline taxes would be a good place to start.

A new budget has been promised us next week. The Minister should know that we all—for all of our ridings have a significant tourist industry component—are watching and waiting for what the budget will include.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENT'S PROMOTION PRACTICES

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, in the Veterans Affairs Branch of the Public Service Commission of Canada there exists a problem which must be brought to the attention of the House and of the Government.

Apparently in the past few years promotions in the Public Service Commission have been based on the "merit principle". The important elements of career service and experience appear to have been eliminated. Decisions for promotions are now made on the basis of a competition. The competition exercise is a subjective assessment by the examiners of the candidates. In the Department of Veterans Affairs this competition takes very little account of the experience of those candidates who are actually veterans and who are in the upper age category. The ensuing result is that nominations for the important jobs of counsellors and supervisors, in the Hamilton area at least, fall into the hands of younger people who have had no history of serving in the Armed Forces and who do not have the benefit of years of experience in handling the problems of veterans.

I am all for giving young people a proper chance to establish themselves in key positions in the Public Service, but there ought to be special consideration given to those Public Servants who actually are veterans, and who can fully relate to the problems of veterans, when appointments as Veterans Affairs supervisors and counsellors are made.

I feel that there is some basic malfunctioning in the system. There is no question that the merit system is most commendable, but there is certainly a need in the Department of Veterans Affairs in particular to take into consideration—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

PORTS

EFFECT OF PROPOSED CROWSNEST PASS RATE CHANGES ON PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak on the issue of the changes to the Crow rate and how they affect the port of Churchill. One of the rationales given for the desertion of the historic Crow rate in western Canada is that it will improve rail services in the West and help to transport more grain.

S.O. 21

In Saturday's Free Press an official of Canadian National Railways, Mr. Doug Campbell, is reported as having told the Manitoba Legislature's standing committee that there were no plans to fix the rail track to Churchill. In addition, he said that there are no plans to prevent the shrinking of the boxcar supply in western Canada. This will result in less cars available for the transportation of grain to Churchill, Manitoba.

Since the Government has found that the only reason for changing the Crow rate is that it will improve transportation and rail services in western Canada, and given the evidence of Mr. Doug Campbell that this will not happen as far as CNR is concerned, I would ask that this House ensure that this Government does not change the Crow rate, but that it keep it there for the protection of westerners, in particular western grain shippers.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

GENERIC DRUG MANUFACTURING

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, there is something smelly about the politics surrounding the Liberal Government's imminent resolution of the prescription drug war. I am worried about a real danger facing Canadian consumers. They may soon be paying tens of millions of dollars more than they do now for the price of good health.

A critical question faces the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) who must make his recommendation to Cabinet this spring. Will the Government allow Canadians to continue to be protected under Section 41 of the Patent Act so that consumers may still buy generic copies of brand name drugs? Or, will the Government bow to pressure from the world's largest multinational drug companies which accuse smaller Canadian generic companies of piracy, in effect of stealing the rights to drugs which the multinationals spend years and many millions of dollars developing?

The multinationals are mounting an incredibly heavy lobby to get rid of Section 41 of the Patent Act. That is understandable, but who should emerge as key adviser to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and lobbyist for the multinational drug companies? Why, none other than a former Liberal Cabinet Minister, the Hon. Martin O'Connell, who worked until last January as a consultant to some major multinational drug companies and also the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers' Association of Canada.

I have some questions I would like to put, if I have the chance later this day, to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, such as: will Canadians end up paying anywhere from $100 million to a quarter of a billion dollars more on the cost of prescription drugs because of Liberal Party politics? How much money will Martin O'Connell be raking off—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

S.O. 21

NATIONAL REVENUE

REFUSAL TO REGISTER MONTREAL CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Madam Speaker, there has been a great deal of disillusion and suspicion among certain voluntary charitable groups in Montreal recently which have been refused their charitable registration numbers by the Department of National Revenue. For the most part these are neighbourhood action groups which help low income people, the poor and the aged, and work on local problems. They are disillusioned and suspicious because they know of other groups which have received charitable registration numbers and which, from all appearances are less charitable and more political than they. They are extremely disturbed with the lack of reasonable criteria to determine charitable status and the arbitrary manner in which the Department of National Revenue decides which group is charitable and which is not.

This is extremely urgent since these groups not only will not get charitable registration numbers to collect funds, but are also being refused funds by Centreaid, the United Appeal group in Montreal. I remind the Minister and the Government that it is absolutely essential that the Government be consistent in its policy for granting charitable status. I intend to pursue this at every possible opportunity.

BOOKS OF REMEMBRANCE—PLEA FOR PRESERVATION

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, the Government of Canada is planning to change the Books of Remembrance which list the names of those who gave their lives for freedom in the Great Wars, the Korean War, and the Boer War. It is changing them to make them bilingual.

The planned procedure is to take the parchment, scrape off the ranks now in front of the names, and reprint them in the two official languages; scrape off the dates and replace them in the two official languages; scrape off the division numbers and replace them in the two official languages.

These Books of Remembrance are historical documents, and to alter them in any way is to desecrate our Canadian history. If we must have bilingual Books of Remembrance, then print duplicates, but leave these historical treasures as they were originally created.

• (1410)

The President of the Royal Canadian Legion, David Capperauld, and the Legion's 600,000 members have expressed their outright opposition to this move, as have countless Canadian citizens, not because they oppose bilingualism but because they do not want history changed, and this Government is doing just that when it alters books. I call on the Government of Canada to withdraw its plans to alter the historic Books of Remembrance contained in the Peace Tower in Ottawa.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CONFRONTATIONS AT LEGAL PICKET LINES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, over the course of the last 20 years on a number of occasions I have witnessed confrontations developing on picket lines during a period of time when there was a legal strike. I raised this matter numerous times when I was a Member of the Ontario Legislature, and I raise it here today in the aftermath of an event on the weekend which saw a young man who died because a picket line that had been set up legally was breached by a truck and that young man happened to be in the way.

I want to ask that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia), recognizing the split jurisdiction in labour relations, take a serious look at the problem of having a legal picket line violated by strikebreakers set up in many instances strictly for the purpose of disrupting a legal strike, and look at whether or not it is possible to set an example at the federal level whereby it will be possible for a picket line to be maintained and set up in an orderly way without threat to the lives of the individuals who are there. I think that what has happened is unfortunate, and I note with interest and some degree of satisfaction that the company involved has agreed that, as a result of the accident—

Madam Speaker: Order.

NATIONAL SECURITY

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF CIVILIAN AGENCY

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, last month the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) tabled in this House some revealing answers to my questions about the new civilian security agency. In short, the agency does not exist as yet and, I quote, "A date has yet to be fixed for the new agency to become operational".

In 1968 the Mackenzie Royal Commission on Security recommended the establishment of a new civilian agency; thirteen years later, the McDonald Royal Commission, after spending three times as much time and some 30 times as much money, came in with the same recommendation. In August, 1981, the Solicitor General announced the Government's decision to implement this recommendation and to appoint Mr. Fred Gibson as the first boss of the new service. One year later Mr. Gibson was promoted to greener pastures, and was replaced by another seasoned bureaucrat, Mr. Ted Finn.

Today there is no trace of any draft legislation pertaining to this new agency. In the meantime the operations of the RCMP Security Service suffer intolerably, in spite of the pro-forma denials by the Solicitor General. The Government's inaction is accompanied by a discreet silence on the part of the senior security officials, although no doubt some of them will eventually step forward from the safety of their superannuated status, in the best Canadian tradition of civilian as well as uniformed mandarins. Too bad they would not do it now.

I hope, Madam Speaker, that it will not be too late for a new Government to repair the damage done to our national security by neglect and commission ever since 1968, the year in which the reorganization of our national security was first recommended and the year in which the Trudeau administration began.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

WELLAND CANAL LOCKAGE FEES

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise today to discuss an issue of considerable importance to my riding, that of lockage fees. Although all vessels using the Welland Canal are subject to lockage fees, the fee structure is designed in such a way as to effectively cause smaller boats to pay five times the rate for full-size ones. The position of the ministry on this is that the fees, which can add $3,500 to the cost of a round trip through the Canal, are needed to offset rising costs and falling revenues.

I wonder if the Minister has considered why revenues are falling? Is it because the exorbitant fees are driving many shipowners to switch to land transportation? This sounds like the classic case of the dog chasing its tail. It is a policy which defeats its own purpose. If the authorities wish revenue and usage of the Welland Canal to increase, then they should lower the fees and watch the lakers line up again to get in.

It would appear, then, that larger boats are getting preferential treatment. Why should this be the case? The smaller vessels serve ports and markets which the larger ones cannot touch. Their versatility makes up for their small size. When these ships are priced off the lakes and into the scrapyards, rest assured that the towns which depend on them will suffer. The welders who build and repair boats, the crews who work on them, and all those who rely on the Seaway for their livelihood, will be penalized as a result of the discriminatory lockage fees.

In conclusion, I would ask the Minister responsible to re-examine the lockage fees policy, in light of its harmful effects on the economy of the Great Lakes region.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF JOBLESS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As he will note, the unemployment figures have been released today and they show the highest level of unemployment ever recorded in this country. What cannot be calculated is the human misery and the human suffering that are involved in those figures.

Last month when the figures came down for unemployment, the Minister of Finance responded to the slight drop in the number of unemployed by saying, "A recovery was taking place in the economy." I would like to ask him what his explanation is this month in that the number of jobless has increased again.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like first of all to indicate to the Hon. Member that what we have now is maybe the highest number of unemployed in our history but not, as she said, the highest rate of unemployment. The rate of unemployment is lower than it has been as recently as last December.

Second, I would like to point out to the hon. lady that we also have probably the highest number of employed people in Canada at the present time that we have known for a long time, if she is talking in terms of numbers. She should keep these things in perspective.

Nonetheless, the level of unemployment or the numbers of unemployed are a source of great concern to this Government. We took a number of measures in my October economic statement, and I will be addressing this issue again in my forthcoming budget next Tuesday. I hope that the Hon. Member will be satisfied with the measures that will be contained in the budget at that time.

REQUEST FOR INCENTIVES TO HELP CREATE JOBS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, it is not a question of whether or not I will be satisfied. It is a question of whether more than two million Canadians who are out of work will be satisfied.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: That is the question. The Minister talked about numbers. I would like to point out to him that in the area of long-term unemployed—that is, those who have been unemployed for more than three and a half months—that figure has more than doubled in the last year. It has gone up to almost a million people. These people are out on the street, they are looking for jobs, they are putting in resumes, they are suffering at home, and none of the Government's programs have been of any benefit to them.

Does the Minister have any measures in hand which will provide any kind of assistance to these people through incentives to small business, or by way of wage subsidies or tax incentives that would help the long-term unemployed of whom there are now almost a million in the country?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I invite the Hon. Member to wait for the budget next Tuesday and to find out whether there are measures of the kind she has talked about. I would like to remind her that last month Statistics Canada indicated that employment grew last month by .03 per cent but the total labour force grew by .04 per cent, thereby adding 18,000 people to the number of unemployed, but employment, that is, the number of jobs, grew last month as it grew the month before.

It is interesting in that regard that a number of statistics have been produced by Statistics Canada in the last few weeks that I am afraid my hon. colleague is not aware of, but I do not think I have time in answer to her supplementary question to give all the details.

PLIGHT OF LONG-TERM UNEMPLOYED

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, the Minister does not seem to get the import of what is going on in the country. It is not me he needs to ask to wait. He is asking these two million people to wait; including the one million who have been out of work for three and a half months or more. He is asking them to wait again.

• (1420)

Let me give a specific example of a man who had worked for 25 years. He had a good work record, but has been laid off for eight months. He has filed over 400 applications but has been turned down again and again because his age is against him. He is 49 years of age.

I want to ask the Minister what is happening to people in this category, the long-term unemployed, who can no longer afford to wait, as the Minister says?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I was ready to introduce a budget in March but it was the Conservative opposition that refused to pass the Income Tax Act amendments and delayed refunds amounting to $6.5 billion for over 11 million Canadians. That is what the Conservative opposition did last March. So I have not been waiting. The budget has been delayed through the tactics of the Conservative opposition—

Mr. Nielsen: Rubbish!

Mr. Lalonde: —which delayed tax refunds to thousands and thousands of Canadians. They have delayed the refunds of 6.5 million Canadians. I am glad that those refunds are now taking place in a very expeditious manner.

I should like to remind my hon. friend that in the last few days Statistics Canada has indicated that, according to the latest statistics, industrial production has known the highest rise in more than 50 years. Second, the gross domestic product has had its highest growth in seven years. Third, according to a Conference Board of Canada survey, a record high number of Canadians indicate that they expect the economy to grow in the next six months.

That is the environment at the present time. The statistics on housing indicate that over 177,000 units are available at the current rate at the present time.

These are figures which indicate growth is taking place in the country.

THE ECONOMY

SIZE OF PUBLIC DEBT

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He is surely aware of the human tragedy caused by unemployment. He must know that youth unemployment stands at over 21 per cent. It must have been 100 per cent predictable that we would encounter these problems when one considers the policies of the Liberal Government over the last 15 years.

For example, Madam Speaker, the national debt is $150 billion. Parliament allocates $18 billion for interest on the debt, and only $1.8 billion for post-secondary education across the land, only $112 million—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that he should be asking a question.

Mr. Nielsen: Equal time!

Mr. Lalonde: I took the same time she did.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, surely the young people of this country can look to the Prime Minister, who holds the highest office in the land—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order. Does the Hon. Member have a question? He must ask it now. This is Question Period.

Mr. Thacker: How could the Prime Minister have permitted this debt to go so high, and the interest on the debt to mount so high, to the real detriment of young Canadians coming on stream today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as far as the question concerning young Canadians is concerned, the Minister of Finance has just reminded the Opposition that the budget will be brought down in eight days. It will be up to the Opposition to judge whether we are making enough efforts and policy initiatives in order to try to alleviate the unemployment problem.

On the matter of interest rates, as the Hon. Member knows, that was debated abundantly in the past year. It was a matter of an interest rate being set in the United States and, because of the open market between Canada and the United States and the free flow of funds in the United States, it was unthinkable, if we wanted to maintain a reasonable level of the dollar, that we would have an interest rate that was way out of line with that in the United States.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, I was not talking about the interest rates. I was talking about $18 million to service the debt when less than $100 million goes to agricultural research.

EMIGRATION OF YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, in the last few months 40,000 young Canadians have had to leave the country of their birth, a country with fish, forests, and agricultural potential unsurpassed in the world. How does the Prime Minister explain that over 40,000 of our young people have had to leave the country in order to find a better future for themselves elsewhere?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that is a very general question. One would have to know where these 40,000 Canadians went to. Perhaps some of them were taking the despondent view of Canada's future—

Mr. Nielsen: Following your advice.

Mr. Trudeau: —that is so prevalent amongst the Opposition these days. The Minister of Finance has just indicated that, in terms of growth potential and in the reality of the statistics in the past few months, the gross domestic product, for instance, had been growing at a rate unsurpassed for seven years.

I wish the young people would look at the reality of these statistics rather than at the gloom that is forecast by the Opposition. The Opposition talks as though it would want the Canadian economy to perform badly. It is performing well, and the Opposition is not happy about that, Madam Speaker.

LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, most Members of the House have spent the past week travelling around their constituencies, talking to people. What has become very clear in all regions of the country is that not only is our economic structure being stretched to the breaking point, but so is the social fabric of the country. A human tragedy is unfolding in many homes today as a result of the 12.6 level of unemployment. The Minister has stated on a number of occasions that we have to accept that 12.6 level or thereabouts for the next number of months.

Another leading industrialized nation virtually declared a state of emergency when its unemployement rate reached the unacceptable level, the crisis level, of nearly 3 per cent. When a country, not unlike Canada in many respects, declares—

An Hon. Member: Name the country.

Mr. Riis: Japan is the country I am talking about. When unemployment reached nearly 3 per cent it declared it to be a crisis situation requiring extraordinary measures.

Why must we accept 12.6 per cent for the next number of months, or the immediate future?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is not a question of accepting those figures; it is a question of facing reality and what can be done in a realistic and responsible way. I am afraid that my hon. friend has not addressed that in his question.

We took measures in the budget of last June and in the budget of last October, and we are going to take measures in next week's budget. I want to stress to my hon. friend, again, that there are a number of recent indicators that Canada is very much on the way to recovery. Those indicators point to a gradual reduction in the rate of unemployment in the country and a significant rate of growth in the economy. We should take all necessary steps to try to speed up that recovery, nurture that growth, and reduce the unemployement level as fast as we can.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, what becomes obvious, in spite of the Government's attempts to reduce unemployment, is that the number of unemployed continues to increase month after month. No noticeable recovery is taking place.

REQUEST THAT BUDGET INDICATE GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, in budget after budget, and Throne Speech after Throne Speech, the Government has indicated that it does not know where the country is going. There is no direction in the country. The people of Canada do not know what the Government is attempting to accomplish these days.

I want to ask the Minister of Finance if the budget that will come down in the next few days will give every Canadian in every region of Canada, in every walk of life, a very clear indication of where the country is going in the years ahead, for the first time ever.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am glad the country has not been waiting for the NDP to indicate where they want to take the country. I can tell the Hon. Member that the Government has indicated quite clearly what its strategy was and what its broad thrusts are. The former Minister of Finance tabled a document in the November budget entitled "An Industrial Strategy for the 1980s". The Hon. Member should read that document. It indicated the broad thrust that the Government is pursuing in terms of trying to equip the country with what it requires in order to grow rapidly during the 1980s and to fight the problem of unemployment and to equip the country to compete in the world.

I will address this issue again in my budget next Tuesday. I hope that the answers provided in that budget will be satisfactory to my hon. friend, although that is only a hope, a wish. I am afraid I already know the answer he will give.

• (1430)

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I believe it would be of interest to the people of Canada to know what this industrial strategy is that the Government has in place, particularly when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce says it does not exist and it cannot exist. I believe there is a real problem, Mr. Minister.

PROSPECTS FOR YOUTH

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my third question refers to the nearly one million young people who, in the next ten weeks, will be entering the job market. They will be competing for jobs which simply are not there. This will make it very difficult, if not impossible, for many young people to return to their studies and training and upgrading programs. In spite of what the Minister has said about the Government's job-creation programs, I would like to ask the Minister why the Government of Canada appears to be turning its back on, and abandoning, its most obvious resource, the young people of our country.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think the statement made by my hon. colleague is totally unfounded. The Canadian Government is spending more than $1 billion annually on training young people through its direct training programs, and that does not include the billions of dollars sent to the provinces as our contribution to post-secondary education. These amounts are being spent by the Canadian Government for the benefit of young Canadians. This year, considering the very specific problems facing young people who are about to enter the labour market, and I am thinking particularly of students, we have added another $70 million, thus raising the funding for this summer's Student Employment Program from $100 to $170 million, and recently, the Secretary of State announced an increase of $60 million for the Student Loan Program over the next two years. These are measures that were taken in recent weeks, Madam Speaker, and they clearly indicate our concern for young people and their position on the labour market at the present time, and I expect to be raising this matter again when the budget is brought down.

Before making accusations of the kind he just made, perhaps my hon. colleague would like to look at the facts and at what the Government has done in recent months, and if he does, he will realize that the Government has taken very substantial steps to try to resolve the serious problem of unemployment among young people.

TRUST COMPANIES

LEGISLATION TO INCREASE DEPOSIT INSURANCE LEVELS

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. As Madam Speaker will remember, the Minister has introduced legislation into the House to raise the deposit insurance limit from $20,000 to $60,000, as was recommended by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs some time ago. Would the Minister consider moving this legislation forward to the earliest possible date for final passage because, even though it will be retroactive back to January, many of my constituents are expressing great concerns to me, and it is causing some confusion?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I would like to repeat what I have said on many occasions. The position of the Government is that we are prepared to proceed immediately with passage of that legislation on consent of all Parties. I understand the position of the New Democratic Party is they are in agreement with it. Therefore, we wait upon the Conservative Opposition as to whether they will give consent to the passage of that legislation immediately.

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG PROFESSIONALS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development, who will know that unemployment among professional architects and engineers has reached almost 10 per cent. There are 12,000 of these professionals now out of work in Canada, virtually double the number of one year ago, following a dramatic increase in the month of March. This is particularly disturbing since architects and engineers, when they are working, create thousands of jobs for others.

Does the Minister recognize that there is a considerable lag of time between the initiation of new projects and the time it takes for work to trickle down to engineers, architects, contractors and labourers? Does he realize that the lack of new projects on the drawing boards right now means a crisis situation will probably confront unemployment professionals, and others, for some time? And what specific steps is the Minister prepared to take to stimulate a rejuvenation of major engineering projects across Canada?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, it seems perfectly clear that, in a period of economic slowdown, all sectors suffer. I certainly appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member who himself, as I recall, is an engineer. The point is well taken. It is a matter of concern to us and it is a matter of concern to the professional associations, which make representations on a regular basis to the Government. But all you have to do is look at the record, Madam Speaker, at the projects which have been initiated by the federal Government to date to see the jobs which have been created in those sectors. Of course, at the same time we must deplore the fact that there are many engineers and architects who are unemployed.

MINES AND MINING

CYPRUS ANVIL MINE IN YUKON—REQUEST FOR INTEREST-FREE LOAN

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question on the problem of unemployment is directed to the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The Government has not yet made any decision on the future of the Cyprus Anvil Mine and the jobs of hundreds of Yukoners. Why is the Government continuing to dither on this matter, bearing in mind that the Minister responsible first pledged help over six months ago, and the latest proposal of March 3 would not require any grant or permanent bailout from the federal Government? Would the Prime Minister at least tell this House, and the people of the Yukon, where he personally stands on the request for an interest-free, fully repayable loan, which would save the livelihood of so many people in the mining town of Faro, Yukon, and, indeed, in all of the Yukon?

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development explained this quite clearly a few weeks ago, when he answered a question on the same subject. The problem is far more complicated than the Hon. Member is inferring. Markets must be found and the material cannot be stored indefinitely. That is why we are taking the time to look into this matter.

LEGISLATION TO RAISE DEPOSIT INSURANCE LEVELS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre and it is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. The Minister will know that the Canada Deposit Insurance Bill was not on the well publicized letter of priority legislation issued by the Government House Leader. Will the Minister raise this issue with the Government House Leader in order to bring forward this legislation and to have the Government treat it with priority?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, what I would like to do is to indicate to the Hon. Member, and to all Canadians, that the position of the Government is that in 25 minutes we would be prepared to pass the legislation at all stages immediately in order to give the benefit of the $60,000 to all Canadians. Why are you fooling around? What kind of games are you playing? You cannot fool Canadians all of the time.

REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE GIVEN PRIORITY

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question once again is directed to the same Minister. Will the Minister make representations to the Government House Leader in order to have this made a priority on the Government House Leader's plate?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the legislation to which the Hon. Member refers is on the Order Paper. The Government House Leader—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: The Government House Leader has indicated his consent and his agreement that this legislation can be dealt with by this House as a priority, with the consent of the Opposition. Why is the Opposition withholding that consent?

REQUEST FOR PRESERVATION OF BOOKS OF REMEMBRANCE

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has the Minister received a letter from David Capperauld, President of the 600,000 member Royal Canadian Legion, objecting to the alteration of the historical Books of Remembrance of Canada in order to make them bilingual? If so, is the Minister going to support their request not to alter recorded history in this manner and preserve the books as they are? And if not, why not?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Yes, Madam Speaker, I have received a letter from Mr. Capperauld, the Dominion Command President of the Legion. May I say to Hon. Members that a number of months ago I was requested to look at ways and means by which the Books of Remembrance could be brought into greater conformity with the Official Languages Act.

A number of options were looked at, one of which was the possibility of varying the existing books, and in so doing I approached a number of experts in the field. I can tell Hon. Members that the initial response which I received has been negative. I can also say to Hon. Members that no decision has been made as to any option.

I can also say that it is my intention to examine the options, and I can assure Hon. Members of the House that it is not my intention to proceed with any of the options until such time as I have had an opportunity to discuss the concern of the Legion and of other veterans' organizations and have satisfied them.

I may say to the Hon. Member that I was in conversation this morning with the Dominion Command President of the Legion and we have organized a meeting at the first opportunity to discuss the matter further.

• (1440)

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT NOT TO ALTER BOOKS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, that is not good enough.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: I want a commitment from the Minister that he will not support the alteration of these historic documents one iota.

Mr. Nielsen: Just leave them alone.

Mr. McDermid: They are part of our national historic treasures and, if they are altered in any way, it will be a desecration of Canadian history. Will the Minister give us that commitment today?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, as I have already indicated to the House, the professional opinions we have received concerning the option of altering the existing books would suggest that is not a wise course of action. I am saying to the Hon. Member that there are other options under consideration with respect to bringing the Books of Remembrance into greater conformity with the official languages policy. Those options will be pursued, and the concerns of the Legion and other veterans' organizations will be fully addressed and met.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

FREEDOM TO PURCHASE GENERIC DRUGS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer Affairs, and it comes back to the Martin O'Connell business I raised earlier today.

Is it a fact that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in a few weeks will be taking to Cabinet a decision, one way or the other, on whether to allow Canadians to continue to buy generic prescription drugs, a practice strongly opposed by the major multinational drug companies? In addition, has the Government received representations from generic drug companies about the propriety of the minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs hiring a former Cabinet colleague, more recently a consultant to the multinational commercial drug industry, to advise him on a study of revisions to the Patent Act in which the commercial companies have a strong pecuniary interest?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, this matter is of course being discussed at the present time in other Government departments besides my own, and especially at the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The provinces have also made representations. I received letters from provincial premiers asking to have the Act reviewed and possibly amended. Before proceeding with recommendations to Cabinet, I thought it would be a good idea to seek advice on the various aspects of this problem. The Hon. Member will agree there is nothing wrong with asking for the views of a former colleague, Mr. O'Connell, whose experience and knowledge of the Canadian pharmaceutical industry are considerable. Mr. O'Connell is giving me his views on the matter. I intend to look at his position and I shall look at other views I shall receive before preparing representations and specific recommendations for my Cabinet colleagues.

HIRING OF MINISTERIAL ADVISER

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs trying to tell this House that the hiring of a former Cabinet colleague and former consultant to multinational drug companies, to advise on matters which may benefit those companies, does not constitute a clear conflict of interest and an affront to whatever shreds and tatters may be left of the Prime Minister's guidelines? Is he really trying to make us believe that?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member can think whatever he likes, but it is absolutely vital to consider various viewpoints before a decision is made either to amend or not to amend this legislation. There is nothing wrong with asking Mr. O'Connell to advise me on certain aspects of this question. The decision is not up to Mr. O'Connell and will, in the final instance, be my responsibility and that of my Cabinet colleagues. Asking someone who is very knowledgeable about the pharmaceutical field may appear to be wrong in the mind of the Hon. Member, but I am afraid it is so in his mind only, because Mr. O'Connell is advising me on an enormously complex matter that is very important to the Canadian pharmaceutical industry and to consumers of pharmaceutical products in Canada.

I should be glad to hear the views of the official opposition on this matter. Does it want to encourage the Canadian pharmaceutical industry or does it have no views on the subject at all?

LEVEL OF PREMIUMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment. On a day when unemployment has reached an ever higher level the Government has issued a report on work sharing, a program which was supposed to prevent lay-offs, but the real impact of which has been to reduce people's income, including the raising of UI premiums last fall. To get on this program you have to take a lower wage, and fully 50 per cent of the people who go on the program are laid off shortly after the program ends.

Will the Minister assure this House that he will not follow the suggestion in the work-sharing report to increase unemployment insurance premiums further?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think it is important to point out that the evaluation indicated the work-sharing program has received wide support from both the users of the program and the workers in the program itself. Over 90 per cent of the workers and 80 per cent of the employers agreed with and support the program. In fact I should point out that 80 per cent of Canadians who were asked said they would approve an increase in UI premiums for the continuation of the work-sharing program. That is the voice of the Canadians who are speaking to it, because they realize it is very important to save jobs and create a sense of security against lay-offs. That is exactly what work sharing has done in this country; it has provided very major protection for over 260,000 workers during this difficult period.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, the Minister knows full well that the work-sharing program symbolizes the Government's approach to unemployment, which in fact is to reduce workers' income. I am shocked that he has failed to assure this House that he will not raise unemployment insurance premiums.

INCOME OF WORKERS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, work sharing has reduced people's income. Going from work sharing to lay-offs reduces them further. Going onto the NEED Program reduces people's income. The policy of the Government toward unemployment has been to reduce the income of those people who continue to work. Will the Minister reject the suggestion in this work sharing report that he reduce the benefits of workers under the UIC which they have collected while on the work-sharing program? In other words, will he stop this practice of reducing the income of people who are working as his approach to unemployment?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is very sadly mistaken. The purpose of this Government is not to reduce people's income; it is to help and protect them, and give them security in the job market. If through the work-sharing program we can help avoid lay-offs, help keep people working and keep their community stable, then that will continue to be the purpose of this Government, a purpose which has obviously been broadly endorsed by all those in the program and the broad number of Canadians who were asked that question.

I did not say we would be increasing the premiums, Madam Speaker. The Minister of Finance has indicated, as have I, that we would like to maintain stability in the UI premium increase. But we must look at the new realities in the job market and take advantage of the opportunities which work sharing provides us in order to help protect workers. I am very surprised, Madam Speaker, that a Member of the NDP would be so critical of a program which has been so helpful in the protection of job security in this country.

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF CREATING PERMANENT JOBS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Right Hon. Prime Minister asked us earlier to look at the reality. I realize, in considering the unemployment statistics that were released this morning, that the Government has created 29,000 new temporary jobs between October 1982 and March 1983. However, the Minister of Finance will have to admit that Canada has lost 47,000 full-time jobs.

In that case, how can the Minister of Finance, although the indicators would have us believe that an economic recovery is around the corner, how can the Minister, when he sees these figures and these statistics referring to the creation of 29,000 temporary jobs and the loss of 47,000 full-time jobs, how can the Minister still talk to Canadians about this immiment economic recovery?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, perhaps my hon. colleague would like to look at the figures I mentioned earlier, which indicate that consumer confidence is now at its highest level, according to a survey by the Conference Board. Perhaps the Hon. Member would care to note that during the month of January, industrial production experienced its highest rate of growth in fifty years, and that during the same period, our gross national product experienced its highest growth rate in seven years. There are very clear indications that are apparent throughout our economy, including housing starts and increases in automobile sales, and if he looks at the figures published by Statistics Canada this morning, my hon. colleague will see that employment has increased. More specifically, over 75 per cent of the jobs created during the month of March were for adult male workers, which indicates thet there certainly has been some improvement in this area, where previous months had shown a substantial drop. I feel that from these indicators it is clear that there will be a recovery, and I hope that unemployment will drop in the months to come.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, it is not the first time the Minister has said that indicators are encouraging. His predecessor also made highly encouraging predictions, but we all know how these turned out, and the Minister should realize that the Government has failed if he looks at the figures that were released. Today, since we are talking about reality, as the Prime Minister said, and more specifically, about the fact that we are losing twice as many full-time jobs as we are creating temporary jobs, could the Minister of Finance inform the House whether in a week's time, he will be able to give some indication and make some commitment with respect to the creation of full-time jobs and not just jobs that actually boil down to welfare or unemployment insurance?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I made it quite clear that in March, employment increased by 0.6 per cent, with double the average benefiting adult male workers. Nearly the entire increase in jobs for adult male workers is due to an increase in the number of full-time, not part-time jobs. Of course there is always a lag between economic recovery and job creation, as there is a lag between the orders that cause production to increase and the company's decision to hire more workers. These lags are normal and understandable.

I hope that the recovery that has now become apparent will, in the coming months, produce these new jobs, as the figures for March seem to indicate. In March, more jobs were created than in February. Unfortunately, there were also more people entering the labour market than in February, and that is why we had an increase of 0.1 per cent. It is our aim, especially through the private sector, to create as many permanent jobs as possible as quickly as possible. That is the Government's position, and I hope that the measures adopted in the budget will be along those lines and that my hon. colleague will realize that as soon as the budget is brought down next week.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR REVIEW

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He indicated earlier that he thought that people should be more optimistic about the future of the country. I agree that the future for Canada is, in fact, great. I am always disappointed when things do not happen.

The Minister of Finance said some time ago that structural unemployment in the future would be higher than we have been accustomed to in the past. Does the Prime Minister think that it might be appropriate to review the current income maintenance programs such as unemployment insurance and the various welfare schemes that are available, and take into account that there will be significantly larger numbers of Canadians who will be seeking employment and unable to find it, but whose needs for a stable and reasonable income will be maintained, and to bring forward some proposals which concern revamping the income maintenance programs in this country as they exist today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a subject for which I have expressed concern, and I know it concerns other Ministers.

We are faced with a rather contradictory situation since some Provinces seem to be determined, at least one of them, to reduce the social benefits and social net which is available to all Canadians.

There is the problem of an aging population which is being addressed by the Government, particularly in the publication of our paper on retirement benefits. However, I think the Hon. Member correctly links the subject to the problem of structural adjustment. I want to tell him that it is a subject of concern to the Government. It is one that I addressed in my television talks last September and to which I referred again in my speech to the Liberal Convention in November, and one which the budget is very carefully examining.

Perhaps the Hon. Member's points could be expressed during the budget debate when he sees what importance we have given to the need for structural adjustment.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I think that the child who is crying in the gallery is crying for his or her future.

AGE OF RETIREMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): While reviewing the problems of employment and income maintenance, which the Prime Minister has said he is already doing, has he considered that the technological change that is occurring simultaneously with the increase in structural unemployment will undoubtedly impact the greatest on younger people?

Has he considered the possibility of shorter work weeks, and earlier retirement with a more adequate level of pension, as a means of ensuring that individuals and their families will not only be able to find employment in their younger years but will also be able to find a sufficient source of income in their older years to allow them to retire and maintain an adequate level of income and standard of living?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member asks if I have considered that. I believe I have done the same type of reading on the subject that the Hon. Member has been doing recently. He will note that there are other ways of tackling this problem. One is to forbid overtime work to the workers, and it is not certain that we would get easy co-operation from the unions in that regard. I know that the Hon. Member would help persuade them.

Mr. Deans: Unions do not schedule overtime.

Mr. Trudeau: There are many avenues open to us, including some used by some countries of lowering retirement age, and increasing retirement age by other countries in order to be able to finance more easily the funds necessary for the retirement of the increased size of that segment of our population.

We are all concerned with that problem. We are all reading about it. I think it is a bit premature for me to announce any policy change. However, I repeat that we would be happy to hear from the Hon. Member during the budget debate—

Mr. Deans: Will you stay and listen?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, I may not stay and listen if the Hon. Member tells me that he will beat his breast. But it does not mean that his ideas will not make their way into the minds of Canadians who are always attentive to the Hon. Member's thoughts on this subject.

HOUSING

PLIGHT OF HOME OWNERS WITH HIGH INTEREST RATE MORTGAGES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Several weeks ago the Minister of Finance suggested that he was prepared to undertake to see that Canadians who are locked into high mortgage rates would be treated in a fair and equitable fashion. CMHC has suggested that perhaps 715,000 Canadians are locked into interest rates above 17 per cent.

In the meantime a representative of one of the major lending institutions has suggested that Canadians are "SOL", simply out of luck, because there is no way they can be accommodated. Does the Minister have any specific program or plan of action to deal with this problem?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have indicated that, according to the figures I have seen, most of these high rates of mortgages related to rather short terms like one year. Many of them are being renewed now at much lower rates.

In addition, there are obviously standard rules about penalties which are understandable if someone wants to get out of a contract into which one entered voluntarily at a particular time. It is important that those penalties not be excessive, however. I have indicated what has been the general or standard practice in that regard which I found to be reasonable.

At the same time, however, there are obviously financial institutions which are in a situation where they are getting their funds in the form of, for instance, guaranteed income certificates that they have issued and for which some people are receiving 16, 17 and 18 per cent interest rates for five years. The same institution cannot issue a mortgage at 13 per cent and pay 17 per cent on guaranteed income certificates. As a matter of fact, this can happen in the same family. I was shown a case where a father had invested in trust company five-year certificates at 18 per cent, and his son had borrowed at 19 per cent. Now the son wants to have his mortgage at 13 per cent but the father does not want to give away the guaranteed income certificates at 18 per cent. There is a problem of balancing between the cost of money and the cost it takes to borrow that money.

MR. YURKO—LOUIS DAVID RIEL

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise to present a petition to the House by Joseph Ignace Riel, grandnephew of Louis David Riel. The petitioner humbly prays that this honourable House may be pleased to pass an Act for the purpose of granting Louis David Riel a posthumous pardon. Based on British parliamentary practice, a pardon can be granted by a decree by Order in Council, a Government Bill to which royal consent has been signified, a Private Member's Bill to which royal consent has been signified, or a private Bill to which royal consent has been signified.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-136, Small Business Investment Grants Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and Motions Nos. 1 and 2 (Mr. Orlikow) (p. 24327).

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I have just a few additional comments that I would like to place on the record regarding Bill C-136. Prior to the luncheon break, the point I was making was that small business, at least in my riding, refers to everyone conducting a business. That includes commercial enterprises and farmers.

An announcement was made today about the number of unemployed in Canada. There is no doubt in the minds of most Canadians that the best way to create employment is through the private sector. One reason I suggest we have lost as much employment and therefore have such a high rate of unemployment is that, as studies show, when businesses are asked whether they cut back—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted to individual speakers at this stage is ten minutes and his time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I will not misuse the time the House has give to me. The point I want to make is that when small businesses were asked whether or not they have cut back on employment or have reduced employment, up to 51 per cent said that in fact they had.

In order to create employment we have got to get back confidence in that business community or sector. I say to the Government that its upcoming budget has to address that question; it cannot be done through grants. It should create a climate of confidence and give small businesses a tax regime which allows them to make a profit. They will create the jobs.

That is how we will restore the economy rather than through this program, which in fact time has already passed by in terms of its effectiveness.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, if the actions of the Government ever equalled its rhetoric, we would probably make some progress in the House. This Bill was introduced for first reading on October 28, 1982. It had second reading debate on Monday, November 8, 1982, and there were four speakers. Here we are on April 11, 1983, continuing report stage debate.

What has happened in the intervening five months? In November, 1982 there were 961 bankruptcies, in December there were 764, in January, 1983 there were 828, and in February, 1983 there were 978. We do not have the March figures available yet, but the projected figure is 1,028 bankruptcies in that month. If we total that up, there were approximately 4,560 bankruptcies in the five months since this Bill which was supposed to help the small business sector in some way was introduced. It is deplorable that a small six-clause Bill which is three or four pages long, with not too much in it, has had to wait so long. It is an indication of the disarray in which the Government is at the present time.

When I look at the Bill I wonder just how realistic it is today. Its purpose is to give a grant in the form of an interest abatement to certain small businesses, an abatement up to 4 per cent to reduce the interest rate paid on the acquisition of assets down to 12 per cent. Thank God bank rates have dropped in that five-month period. So the value of the Bill is somewhat questionable today.

When we look at the restraint measures which the small business community has taken, they are really staggering. Eighty-two per cent of the small businesses surveyed recently have taken restraint measures, 51 per cent have reduced the number of employees they previously employed, 30 per cent of those still employed are working with reduced hours, and 66 per cent of the companies have either reduced or postponed wage increases. Most say that in comparison with what they have done, the six and five program put in place by the Government is too generous. Their action has been one of survival.

What they need now is something to assist the equity crisis they face. They have responded to the downturn in the economy by reducing their staff, cutting inventories and cancelling capital programs. That is the classical way that a small business has to react to this sort of thing.

Now they are faced with a tremendous lack of equity funds. If you talk to most small businessmen who have managed to survive, they will tell you that their earned surplus account, which is the accumulated profits that they retained in their business over the last few years, has disappeared because they needed the funds for operating. Many of them are operating today on the good graces of their bank manager. If tomorrow he is a little nervous about them, they could join the ranks of those either in receivership or bankruptcy.

Aside from the difficulties of the recession and the fact that they have had to cut back their staff and inventories and cancel capital programs, they are faced with a movement in the economy. While there is not too much reduction in the number of unemployed, they see a little bit of blue sky down the road. Those I have talked to do not want to analyze where that blue sky is coming from because a cloud might cast its shadow and it will disappear. However, they feel there may be some light at the end of the tunnel.

When they look around, they feel that if they do make a profit they will be faced with a small business dividend distribution tax of 12 per cent. If they apply to buy capital assets, they still have the capital cost allowance that was included in Bill C-139. That has a disastrous effect on their cash flow. If they try to retain their employees by giving them deferred profit-sharing, that will be wiped out for new plans. They still face a great deal of difficulty in trying to operate their business.

We need an equity program. For too long the small business community has had to rely on the banks. I am not decrying the banks; they have shareholders and they have rules and regulations they have to live by. The fact is that ever since the capital gains tax was introduced, the alternate sources of equity financing for small businesses have disappeared. They have dried up. Consequently, the only place the small-businessman can get term funds today in order to operate his business is pretty well from the banks. That is one change that has to be made.

When the Minister brings down his budget on April 19, I hope he will recognize that fact. I hope he will include in the budget a provision that will allow the small business sector to acquire equity funds from other sources.

The Minister might be wise to look at what the Province of Ontario has done with the small business investment corporations. It gives a 30 per cent tax credit to people wishing to invest in small business as a small business investment corporation. There could be something along that line. A dozen different proposals have been put forward by various small business associations, such as the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. They put forward a number of suggestions for equity planning that will get the small-businessmen out of the banks and into another type of investment funding.

To some extent the small-businessman today is being held hostage. He has to go to his bank. The banks are faced with bankruptcy statistics. They become nervous and do not want to put their shareholders and their operations in jeopardy any more than they are at present. They become nervous and tend to keep a business on a month to month basis. The bank manager says that they will take another look at it next month or the month after. You cannot plan a business on a month to month basis. You need time, projections and many other things.

In the past the banks have traditionally supplied short-term funds. They financed the accounts receivable, giving short-term financing where required. In the normal course of events they were not long-term lenders or suppliers of equity funding for the small business community. That is the area we must move in.

Looking at this Bill, I would venture to say that it could have passed in one day or a day and a half had the Government put any priority on it. Five months after its introduction, we are still dealing with it today and probably will be tomorrow. It will pass and go to the Senate where it will pass in one day because they are told it is a priority Bill. It laid around for five months. Another 4,000 to 5,000 bankruptcies have been recorded by Statistics Canada in that five-month period.

I hope that some of the high-blown rhetoric the Minister used when he introduced this Bill in the first instance and some of the press releases surrounding it will translate into action. We could then go forward with other legislation which would address the problems I have mentioned.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, while this Bill means well, it is another rather feeble and consequently ineffectual attempt to help small business in a very selective way, without assessing the root cause of the difficulties affecting the whole spectrum of our economic activity. The lack of a proper economic climate, caused by the intervention and manipulative actions of this Government over the years, means that band aid measures are of doubtful value, even though I must say they are welcome.

Before proceeding further in my remarks, the attention of this honourable House ought to be directed to a very important point made by the Hon. George J. McIlraith in the other place on Wednesday, March 30 of this year. He asked the Leader of the Government about the legitimacy of what was being done in continuing this present session without a Speech from the Throne. Personally, Mr. Speaker, like yourself, I have always had great respect for Senator McIlraith and I believe that what he says deserves serious consideration in this Chamber. I am going to put on the record a few of the remarks which he made on that date in the other place. He said:

> Honourable senators, I want to ask a question of the Government in connection with this matter.
> Assuming, as appears to be possible and perhaps even probable, that the delivery of the budget on April 19 is based on the continuation of this session beyond that date, could the Leader of the Government please arrange to explain to the Senate, when it reconvenes on the afternoon of the nineteenth, by what right the government is authorized to deliver a budget for the consideration of the House of Commons without having a throne speech?

The Senator was referring to the long established practice of having a reasonable duration of time to outline the parliamentary program. One can only imagine and reflect upon the changes that have been made in the Canadian economy, partly through the intervention and manipulation of this Government since April 14, 1980, and the advisability of struggling along in the same session with this kind of change, without doing the House and the country the courtesy of bringing in a Speech from the Throne. Senator McIlraith went on to say:

> My understanding of the long-established, traditional practice—established well before Confederation and continued ever since—is that the government must submit a throne speech at the opening of a session of Parliament, and then, when it has the vote of confidence from the House of Commons that is required—we are not involved in that procedure here—it is enabled to submit its program for the consideration of that body, and, of course, by us following upon that.

Now, we are dealing with a measure to help small business and we are all looking forward to the introduction of a budget. The whole thing in many ways seems to be putting the cart before the horse. To be dealing with select measures which, as pointed out by the last speaker, really are already partly out of date because interest rates are falling and because of other measures that are perhaps not truly indicative of what has to be done, is really an unacceptable breach of what I would consider this Parliament's sense of order and dignity to be. I just want to put this on the record because I believe that Senator McIlraith has done the country and the House of Commons a great service in demanding some explanation from the Government Leader in the Senate for what he considers, on the basis of his long and distinguished parliamentary career, an unacceptable practice by this Government. I note that Senator Olson in the other place has promised to supply Senator McIlraith with an answer on April 19.

Getting back to this particular measure, it is pretty obvious that it does not do very much for the average small business person. It is also clear that the goal of most small businesses today in this economic climate is to survive and not necessarily to expand. This Bill does not address the question of survival. For one thing, sir, it applies only to new equipment. Many small businesses and farmers very wisely buy used equipment. They do this for different reasons. Sometimes, as you know, sir, used equipment is of better quality and more suitable than new equipment. I have seen, as I am sure many Members of this House have seen in the past, small businesses lured by programs, whether under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion or under previous programs of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to invest to a far greater extent than really their businesses permit because they are under the illusion that they are getting something for nothing. Therefore, they spend far more money than they had originally intended to spend. As a result, the viability of the businesses they are attempting to improve sometimes goes down the drain. Simply because the Government is so preoccupied in trying to sell new equipment, they forget the very obvious truth that there are many, many businesses in Canada which have large inventories of used equipment which they would be very happy to sell and which in some cases, as I say, would be far more suitable to the aspiring business people who want to use them than the more expensive and sometimes inferior new equipment.

This Bill is also very vague and provides for far too much discretion to be granted to the Governor in Council to make regulations concerning the operation of the program. The only details specified in the Bill are the 12 per cent ceiling and the 4 per cent maximum grant. Also, the right of the Government to get back money that was granted to those not entitled to the money is there, and the authority to make these regulations is there. My colleague from Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is proposing an amendment that would require parliamentary approval of all Orders in Council governing the operation of the program. It seems to me that this is a far more advantageous way to go about it than to leave so much uncontrolled discretion in the hands of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that while we are waiting for the budget to come in and hoping that the Government will have done something for a change to encourage Canadian businesses, we should look at ways to do something far more imaginative to help small businesses than is encompassed in this rudimentary and very unimaginative piece of legislation.

In the United States of America, I think there are 17 or 18 duty-free ports. Just imagine, with a little bit of initiative, what we can do with a duty-free zone in Nova Scotia, one in New Brunswick and one on the West Coast, where we could establish assembly plants, and also use some of the techniques that the Americans have used with their DISK program. We could export these components, the parts of which we could bring in duty-free. We would not sell them domestically, of course, but we could export them to countries which in many instances would be only too pleased to buy them and it would improve our balance of trade. But this Government does not seem to be interested in taking any fundamental initiatives. It has the idea that you can just continue to put forward band-aid approaches and subsidize people, tell them what to do and manipulate them and hope that something will happen that will cause things to improve.

This Government and the Liberal Party have come a long way from the days when they followed the advice of Adam Smith, when they believed in free enterprise and individualism, when they believed in reform. Now, they have gotten the whole spectrum of our economy so tangled with their interventionist and manipulative strategies and their suffocating regulations that they have defeated the very purposes for which they once stood. This Bill does nothing really except provide some filler for the House of Commons to debate and raise a very few hopes in a carefully selected and very narrow area of business without really addressing some of the causes or offering much hope.

My colleague who just spoke pointed out that it is the banks which are the primary source of funds and they still require a tremendous amount of extra collateral and security for small business. There is nothing in this legislation or in any legislation to help or encourage banks to be a little bit more forthcoming with the kinds of collateral requirement that they need.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure you know many businessmen in your constituency who are sound, who are well set up and financed, and yet whose houses and businesses and inventories are covered by some sort of floating charge or mortgage that really constricts these people if they want to take a chance and get into some kind of related enterprise based on their own good training and business experience.

I do not understand why the Canadian banks are so preoccupied with covering their collateral again and again rather than allowing businessmen to have a little bit of flexibility, particularly when they have built up a good track record. The history of our country is just full of instances where, because of the ultra-cautious nature of Canadian banks and the short-sighted policies of various Governments in the past, Canadians have had to go abroad to develop and prosper. I know of one instance where a prominent businessman was asking a major Canadian bank to finance his initiatives in offshore oil development. The bank studied his proposal and they said to him: "Yes, sir, we will, but you will have to sell your house in Canada and establish a residence in Bermuda, and you will have to do it offshore. On that basis, we will finance you."

Mr. Speaker, I do not know how you feel about it but as a Canadian it makes me sick to see the kind of evasions and manoeuvres that have to be taken by a Canadian who wants to get involved in developing his own country but has to go offshore, with the co-operation of Canadian banks, to do it because of the unimaginative tax policies and the business constrictions that this Government keeps imposing.

• (1530)

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to speak this afternoon on the Small Business Investment Grants Act. It provides for an interest grant of up to 4 per cent per annum for two years to be paid to lending institutions on behalf of the borrower by the federal Government on loans made to eligible small businesses for specified purposes.

This temporary program, which has a ceiling of up to $400 million, is designed to reduce the cost of borrowing for the acquisition of certain new depreciable assets or for the financing of research and development.

I think the foregoing is the key to the Act and is important when discussing the amendments we have offered. The Bill was placed before the House in October 1982, when it was sorely needed.

Our first amendment would have the effect of allowing the grants to be applied to loans for operating expenses and other requirements. The second amendment would reduce the interest rate to 10 per cent, rather than 12 per cent. These two amendments were placed before the House on November 23, 1982, when they were sorely needed to help small business to survive. They are needed even more today.

At the present time, in April of 1983, 5,000 bankruptcies later, the need for the Bill has been reduced considerably. A lot of small businesses and farms have already gone down the drain. The need has also been reduced considerably because interest rates have come down. Instead of the 4 per cent reduction provided in the Bill, 2 or 3 per cent would probably be sufficient. Very few of the businesses that are still around hope or intend to expand.

There is still a need for our amendments, however. The events that have occurred in the economy since last October prove the validity of those amendments. The money is not needed for expansion but for survival, and therefore should be provided to the small businesses at a rate as low as is possible.

What we have here is another case of the Government failing to act when action was needed. Now it is ready to act when the cost will be less. But even if the Government decides to act now, it has not taken cognizance of its own research and studies which have cost the taxpayer two years of time and approximately $2 million. This was the cost of the small business financing review which indicated the need for financing small businesses and the need for lower interest rates if they are to survive.

The Government assures us that the Bill will solve the problem of small business. It has not defined the problem as survival, however, but only as expansion or research. If the problem is survival, let us remember that during this recession small and medium-sized businesses have released 700,000 or 800,000 employees. That is a major portion of the number of unemployed people in the country. The Government offers small business slightly reduced interest rates for expansion and research and, by those terms, has excluded over 66 per cent of the small businesses which may need money but cannot get it at a reasonable rate as things stand. These figures come from a survey conducted by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business.

The amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) would provide money at a more reasonable rate. The philosophy behind this kind of assistance needs to be examined. For instance, in Saskatchewan a Tory Government has been in office for one year. Recent Statistics Canada figures show that in Saskatchewan there are now 40,000 registered unemployed people. That is not counting the 12,000 who have returned to the farm and claim that they are farming. It is an increase of 14,000 people over the number unemployed a year ago, or a jump of 54 per cent in one year. This is the situation in a Province where the Government promised to bring the children home to good jobs and prosperity.

Other Provinces have not fared quite so badly, but the Governments of Saskatchewan and Alberta and the federal Government are adopting the same kind of philosophy—to help out the big corporations by reducing royalties and inviting them to invest, while giving very little important help to small business, farmers and fishermen. They are given only token support, Mr. Speaker.

That is exactly what this Bill offers—token support in an area where more than 66 per cent of businesses cannot use it. Unless the Government accepts our amendments, the value of the Bill is negligible. Why is it that when the Government claims it is going to do something for small business or to assist people, it throws in conditions which make it impossible for them to take advantage of the offer?

For instance, over the last year there have been a number of programs designed to help people in dire straits. However, if a small businessman wants to apply for a Small Business Bond, a bank can claim that he is not a good risk and refuse to lend the money. If he is not in dire straits and the bank would lend him the money, then the Government says it would not advance money because he is not in dire straits. Obviously, if the bank would lend him money, he is not in a bad enough condition to need the money.

Until a few months ago, farmers who tried to get money from the Farm Credit Corporation faced the same dilemma. If they were not in dire straits they could not get money; if they were in dire straits, they could not get the money because they were not considered a good risk.

Could it possibly be that the Government is incompetent? Let us hope that if the Bill passes with our amendments, it will work well to support small businesses through the recession.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, Canada is a nation of small business. There are well over 1 million such enterprises in the country. They are the lifeblood of the nation and employ in the vicinity of 2.5 to 3 million Canadians. That is approximately one-fifth of the labour force.

These businesses account for something like 25 per cent of the Gross National Product, so when the Canadian small business sector thrives, the whole country thrives; when the small business sector falls upon hard times, so do hundreds of thousands of individual Canadians. That is what we see at the present time. In fact, it is what we have seen for the past couple of years. No sector of our society has been hit harder by recent ill-conceived and ill-timed economic policies initiated by the Government than has the small business sector.

I say that because I think it is unfortunate that this has happened. The Government, having no consideration for this sector, having no forethought about what might happen, did not foresee the blows it would hammer upon the small businesses of this country. Its misguided high interest rate and its disastrous budget of November, 1981 dealt devastating blows to the small business sector of this country. About 80,000 small businesses have either gone into bankruptcy, into receivership or into insolvency as a result of these measures, Mr. Speaker.

Just recently the Canadian Federation of Independent Business carried out a survey on what kind of impact these measures have had on the small business sector. They found that roughly three-quarters of a million Canadians—roughly one-half of the total of those who are out looking for work today—were laid off by small and medium sized businesses in the last year. That was reported, Sir, in the Ottawa Citizen of March 23, when the details of their survey were released. In The Globe and Mail business supplement of March 25 there was further comment about the survey which had been carried out by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. They had this to say, and I quote:

> The survey showed that 51 per cent of the responding businesses had reduced the number of their employees since early 1981. Few had plans for increasing hiring or investment. Nationally, 66.7 per cent expect to retain present employment levels, 9.1 per cent would be rehiring laid-off workers, and only 7.9 per cent would be hiring additional people.

The picture on investment intentions was similar: 61.2 per cent planned no change, 8.8 per cent planned to bring investment back to pre-recession levels, 11.2 per cent planned decreases, and only 11 per cent planned increases.

In other words, Sir, what the Canadian Federation of Independent Business was able to establish very clearly from the data of this survey was a reflection of the doubts and suspicions which the business sector has toward this Government, doubts and suspicions, which, I may say, are very well founded. I have talked to a great many business people, both in my own riding and elsewhere in the country, about their concerns, about the pressures and the tensions and the worries to which they have been subjected as a direct result of this Government's high interest rates policies, of the reluctance of the chartered banks to provide any kind of relief to those who find themselves in difficulty, and of the continuing uncertainty which they face as to what blows the Government will be aiming in their direction next.

The budget of November, 1981 and its regressive tax measures has deeply scarred the business community of this country, not just businesses as such, not just the business sector, but the individuals who work within that sector. The budget of June, 1982 followed. It did very little to reassure the small business community that this Government knew where it was going. Oh, yes, it did impose a six and five restraint program on certain Government spending programs, but really that was nothing compared with the restraint which the small business sector had already disciplined itself to abide by.

The Bill which we have before us today, Sir, Bill C-136, the Small Business Investment Grants Act, comes out of the budget of June of last year which I mentioned. Anything which proposes to improve the position of small business operators in this country is welcome and, indeed, this piece of legislation is welcome, but in reality it will have very little impact. It offers a 4 per cent reduction in interest rates for the acquisition of certain new depreciable assets or for the financing of research and development, but it applies only to grants which are above a 12 per cent interest rate floor. It does not apply to used equipment and, as my colleagues on this side of the House have said, so many small businesses deal in used equipment. They do not always want to lay out the cost of new pieces of machinery. It also does not deal with the needs of businesses which are desperately in need of funds simply to survive.

One can say, I suppose, that this Bill is designed to encourage expansion, but if that is the case, Sir, it underlines very clearly the fact that it would have done absolutely nothing for the 80,000 businesses which went bankrupt or which went into receivership in the last couple of years. Nor will it really be of any help to the great majority of businesses which are unable to contemplate any expansion in the next year. As the survey of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business shows, they are not planning or contemplating any expansion, they are hoping just to be able to retain the status quo. Of course, these businesses, or the great majority of them, will not be able to avail themselves of this particular piece of legislation.

One of its major deficiencies, as has been pointed out on a number of occasions, is that this Bill makes it mandatory that much of the operation under its legislation will be carried out by as yet unknown Government regulations and by Orders in Council. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), has addressed himself to this very issue, that is, the ongoing tendency of Government to do everything in secret. He addressed himself to this particular aspect of the Bill by putting forward an amendment which would require Parliamentary approval for all Orders in Council governing the operation of the program, and that, Sir, is a much needed improvement to the Bill. I hope the Government has taken very clear note of it and that it will accept the proposal which my colleague has put forward.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business has declared that more confidence in Government policy and consistency is really necessary before a full recovery of the economy can begin. Nothing is more important, Sir, than that we have a climate and environment in which the business sector can flourish. Certainly, if that were to be so—and it is not so at the present time—no group would avail themselves more of opportunities to develop and to expand than would the small business sector.

It was very interesting to look at this morning's insert in The Globe and Mail. Their complete report on business referred or directed itself to small business only, and the major headline read, "Independent Entrepreneurs are a Developing Force". Well, they have been a force in this country throughout its history, and they will continue to be a force if the climate and environment permit them.

It is in that spirit, Mr. Speaker, that we on this side of the House are not only urging the Government but praying that the Government help provide that climate and that environment when the long awaited budget of next Tuesday is brought forward.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, as in so many instances in this Government's programs, this Bill addresses only part of the requirement of small business. It is to be hoped, of course, that when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) brings in his budget, he might then address the balance of the problem, and I would like to address part of that problem this afternoon.

The tax structure of this country has mitigated against the family business, whether it be the farmer, the garage man, the manufacturer or the fisherman. It started out, of course, with the inheritance tax. Later came the capital gains tax. Now we have the reduction in the capital goods depreciation allowance. As a result of these moves, the little business guy has found himself in considerable difficulty in attempting to perpetuate his business. Small businessmen are the backbone of their communities, big or small. To supplement the figures of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) let me say that when you include the farmer, fisherman, the serviceman and small manufacturer, you find that small business provides between 60 per cent and 70 per cent of the total employment in Canada. I do not contradict her figure of 25 per cent because I think that refers primarily to businesses other than those in the primary sector. I merely supplement what she has said. I wish to address those facts to the Minister responsible for this Bill as well as to the Minister about to be responsible for a new budget, because small business must be given some consideration.

I can well remember Mr. Lewis, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, referring to "corporate welfare bums". He said that they were leaning on the Government for subsidies and assistance of one kind or another. Let me point out that they did not, either then or now, get into that position through their own choice. They are there because of the burden of taxation imposed upon them. That is why they fell into that category so aptly described by Mr. Lewis. When are we going to get to the point where there is an incentive for business, small or large, to produce and employ? When are we going to realize that overtaxation creates unemployment? When are we going to realize that by reducing taxes we assist in the accumulation of working capital and stimulate demand which, in turn, will cause business to expand production and employment? We have long since reached the point of diminishing returns through taxation. Until we address that problem, all the Supplementary Estimates and legislation we may introduce are not going to succeed.

Under the current economic situation this kind of legislation should be compulsory. It does in fact lend some help to small business in all spheres of activity. But, again, it is dependent upon the public purse for assistance, which then entails regulation and interference in the small business world.

I accept the fact that there is an element of urgency in this Bill, because my constituency has a multitude of fishermen and farmers who have not been eligible for Government benefits. Therefore, I subscribe to the idea that this Bill should go through, but I also subscribe to the idea that it only partially addresses the probem. When we talk about tax consideration for individuals, not necessarily incentives but a reduction in taxes, this is the greatest stimulator of employment. If small businesses had a more favourable tax structure, how many thousands more would they employ? Yes, they might not pay as much to the Government, but then how much less would the Government be paying out? How many hundreds of millions of dollars are being spent in Government programs to provide temporary employment, and how many tens of millions of dollars might be spent to stimulate employment in the small business area, employment which is so badly required in this country? For example, our Party recently released an agricultural program in which it agreed that there should be a tax consideration for that industry of not less than 20 cents per gallon of gasoline. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that this tax reduction would make a major contribution to the farming industry. When this Government decided it should tax gasoline to the extent of roughly 80 cents per gallon, it imposed on the farmer, fisherman and forester a massive increment in costs. Then we turn around and pass a Bill which will pay grants to those same people who, if they could get tax considerations from this Government instead of tax punishment, would probably never use this legislation unless it were to create much greater employment.

How badly has the Government interfered in these spheres of endeavour? Well, let us first discuss the fishermen. In the fishing industry, we have interfered in licensing, in the qualifications of people who, in many instances have been in the industry for 10 to 40 years. They are told they are not fishermen, they should not have a licence, they cannot get a new licence. However, if they get a licence, the size of their boat is regulated, and after that the size of their catch is regulated. In other words, the fishing industry is strangulated by regulation.

With regard to the forest industry, we recently had a new commission appointed, which has in turn been placed under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley). It is another fragmentation of the administrative function of this Government. It is rather interesting to note that in the makeup of that commission, which is to study the forest industry in some fashion or other not particularly clear to me from the news release, there is not a single member of the Department of Forestry of the Government of Canada who is to be present at meetings and therefore who will be cognizant of the statements which will be made for the betterment of the industry. It just cannot be, Mr. Speaker, that we should have under Industry, Trade and Commerce a committee which is going to make recommendations with respect to the forest industry when we already have a Minister who is responsible for forestry. This does not make much sense.

When are we going to recognize the requirements of the small-businessman in the forest industry? When are we going to return to him the tax structure under which he developed his industry and without which he probably cannot continue to function? When are we going to extend to these primary industries those things which would eliminate the necessity for grants and create the opportunity for employment so badly needed?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, once again I see it is only Members of our Party who are rising to speak on behalf of small business in this country. No one on the Government side or the NDP side is rising. That is typical, Mr. Speaker, because this is another Bill which does not really do much for the small business community. The Government makes announcements across the country: "Look, folks, we are doing this, and this and this", and yet it is five months since the Bill was brought forward, and the Government has not given it any priority at all. In the meantime, hundreds of companies, which means men and women like you and me, Mr. Speaker, have lost a fortune because of broad Government policies which have bankrupted the nation as a whole.

I know the Bill is going to mean an interest abatement of some 4 per cent to bring the real interest rate on loans to 12 per cent, but that is not really going to help most companies these days because it does not really address the fundamental problem affecting small business across this country, that of a loss of confidence. It is a loss of a good business climate so that men and women will not even invest their dollars and take a chance on a small grocery store. Why could anyone put his or her money into a venture like that and work 18 hours to 20 hours a day when they will simply be taxed and hounded to death by regulations at both the federal and provincial level?

That brings me to the major point I want to make in the ten minutes that I have. The unseen battle which has been occurring in this country of which most people are not aware is the federal-provincial battle over tax jurisdiction. This battle has meant that ordinary Canadians, and small businessmen in particular, have been hurt. This battle relates to the enormous growth of Government since the Second World War, and certainly during the last 15 years under this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Liberal Government.

There are over 400 federal Crown corporations. Those Crown corporations have subsidiary corporations and sub-subsidiary corporations. As well, the Provinces have Crown corporations with similar subsidiaries. The federal-provincial battle has ensued in this area because there is no cross taxation between the different levels of Government. When the federal Government establishes a Crown corporation that is not subject to real provincial tax, the provinces respond by setting up their own Crown corporations. The over-all result is that the tax base has been reduced so that individuals are paying an enormously enhanced rate of tax to enable the federal Government to raise the $88.9 billion that it needs. We know that it will only raise approximately $50 billion since its yearly deficit for which it will have to borrow is over $30 billion.

Part of the solution to this problem is to create a business climate in which there is a proper balance between the federal and provincial Crown corporations. I argue that they should be forced to operate in the marketplace and pay their fair share of taxes, rather than escaping them and having them foisted on individual Canadians and small-businessmen. Naturally, I would prefer to see far fewer Crown corporations and more genuine private enterprises conducting these businesses presently run by Crown corporations. I believe in this approach because when Crown corporations are established and are made responsible to a certain Minister, that Minister will assume the responsibility for that corporation. Therefore, it will succeed if it takes every tax dollar and every subsidy that can possibly be obtained since it is a reflection on the Government if it fails. Therefore, whenever any of these 400 federal Crown corporations experience difficulty, they simply go back to the public purse and they are protected by various means, including a direct influx of tax revenue.

An example of this is Petro-Canada. There was $6 billion or $7 billion of national wealth poured into that corporation, not for it to create anything new, but simply to buy existing corporations which were paying taxes. Is Petro-Canada paying tax? While they may funnel in a few dollars each year, when one looks at the Estimates it can be seen that Petro-Canada receives again this year almost $400 million in spite of the fact that even the dummies in the oil industry have been making profits and paying taxes to the nation. Petro-Canada is still into our pockets and we are facing a lower standard of living in order for that corporation to succeed, because it is ours. So the first step should be to create a proper balance between private enterprise and Crown corporations.

Another drawback of Crown corporations is their size. Normally, when a new technology emerges, there are dozens of corporations and individuals who are competing for that technology. Once an individual or corporation secures that technology and adapts it, it then becomes the normal mode of operation for that particular industry. Although some corporations go bankrupt in the process, they are small and those who are employed in those corporations can easily be absorbed elsewhere. However, when a Crown corporation is established, it becomes larger and larger. It cannot face failure because tens of thousands of people are put out of work and must fall back on Unemployment Insurance. As a result, a greater amount of our tax revenue is poured into the corporation even though the technology has changed.

I will cite a classic example of this technological change, one which will never be permitted to happen again. Only a few years ago there were service stations on practically every street corner, and on the four corners in certain areas. Due to the technological change in cars, the industry was forced to adapt and to reduce to approximately a quarter of its original size. Since these service stations were owned by private individuals and competing corporations, a reduction process was evolved and self-serve stations were established.

Would this change have been permitted to occur if they were all Petro-Canada stations which were owned by the state as a whole? Of course it would not because the Crown corporation would have been able to come to us, politicians, and since it was a state-trading corporation which could not be allowed to fail, we would have had to kick in a large amount of tax dollars.

Another example concerns CNR for which we have to write off over $800 million every few years. Air Canada has to be given all kinds of special and privileged regulatory positions such as monopoly lines. As well, it receives low interest bonds. I recently read its annual report which indicates that Air Canada still has some bonds outstanding at 5 per cent interest. That is an enormous subsidy which we do not get as individuals when we go out to borrow. But our Government is not helping us a bit.

It is evident therefore, that the tax base has injured us rather dramatically. I wish to talk about the solution because the real solution lies in the business climate. There are two practical steps the Government could take to help the small business with which I deal mostly, that is, the farming community. It concerns gas taxes. Since the introduction of the National Energy Program approximately six new gas taxes have been levied on a gallon of gasoline. In western Canada particularly there are millions and millions of acres which have to be traversed at least five times a year. In the spring the farmer must go over the land to prepare his seed bed, then go over it once again to seed. He then must go over it to spray chemicals, and often once again to spread fertilizer. The land must then be swathed in the fall, then harvested, and finally gone over again in before the winter. In my Province of Alberta, the federal taxes and royalties are almost 60 per cent of the price of that gallon of gasoline. If the federal Government wished immediately to help small business, it could remove that 9 per cent sales tax, which would represent 20 cents on a gallon of gas. This would be an enormous help to small business in that area.

A second major step would be to abolish the capital gains tax. As we know from our past discussions here, the increase in value of farmland and small businesses has nothing to do with real gain. It is solely the result of inflation, which we know is the result of deficits, which in turn lead to inflation, high interest rates and ultimately to a collapse. I see that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure that the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) did not mean to mislead the House when he suggested that the NDP was not putting up speakers. We had a speaker from Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and another one from Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is not making a point of order. The Hansard record will plainly disclose those who have spoken.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, in speaking at report stage of Bill C-136, the Small Business Investment Grants Act, let me begin by saying that it is very difficult to develop a critique of the legislative provisions contained in this Bill in the short time that is available to us.

It should be pointed out that these provisions are largely academic. They were brought forward to the House of Commons in the form of Bill C-136 at a time when interest rates were much higher than they are today. Therefore, the measures that were intended to benefit small-businessmen might be largely lost as a result of a reduction in interest rates. Hopefully, those small businesses which are now seeking to borrow funds for investment purposes will find an available interest rate that is not too far above the minimum permitted by this Bill, namely 12 per cent. Nevertheless, what is important is the spirit that, hopefully, is evident in the provisions of Bill C-136. That spirit is an indication that the Government is finally looking toward that sector of the economy known as the small-business community to build for the future. It goes without saying that those of us who embrace the Progressive Conservative Party philosophy of support for small business welcome any measure which will encourage the small-business community in Canada.

It is difficult to develop any particular theory with respect to the development of small businesses in Canada over the next decade, in the time available, but let me begin by considering what is the greatest economic problem in Canada today, that is, unemployment. We learned today that unemployment has again risen to a level of 1.6 million unemployed Canadians and a rate of 12.6 per cent. That is only part of the story because, in addition to the many thousands who are unemployed, there are those Canadians who have given up looking for work and those Canadians who are employed at jobs much below their level of qualification or employed only part-time. When we put all those numbers together, we have over three million Canadians with an employment problem. I want to look at this great economic problem in relation to the small-business community.

We must be aware, as other speakers have pointed out, that the Canadian small-business community accounts for employment of almost 42 per cent of the working force. When we include in that statistic medium-size businesses, the percentage of persons employed in Canada rises to 66 per cent. If we are looking for a method of relieving the unemployment problem, which as I said is our greatest economic concern, then we are right to look to the small and medium businesses across Canada to relieve that problem and to create the employment necessary to eliminate or at least minimize the problem.

In order to find answers to what will help the small-business community generate the jobs which will allow us to reduce our unemployment problem, we should consult with persons engaged in the operation of small businesses. It is interesting to note that organizations like the Canadian organization of small businesses and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business have looked at all these problems and have made presentations which in part provide answers to the question of how we in the Parliament of Canada can help small business in its future undertakings. Basically it comes down to the fact that we have to advocate and embrace in our economic system the principle of free enterprise. We have to acknowledge that it is essential in Government, as in business, to balance the budget, that is to say, to relate Government expenditures to Government income to ensure that there is not a drain on the financial resources of the private sector in Canada.

This means that in endorsing these principles we will create an atmosphere in Canada which will be conducive not only to small businesses but to business activities at all levels. That is the first message which these organizations bring to Parliamentarians: that we must embrace the principle of free enterprise and recognize the economic fact of the necessity of a balanced budget. If we adhere to those principles, we will create an atmosphere in which it is possible for small businesses to be established and to succeed. As one Member of Parliament I want to endorse those principles and to ask and beseech the Government to give full recognition to them when it establishes its economic policy in its forthcoming budget.

The importance of establishing those principles is that they are far-reaching. They mean that a person who makes the effort to invest in and to establish a business or a business activity has a right to the profits of that business or activity and that profit ought not to be taken away by a taxation system which deprives a business person of the incentive to establish a business and to carry it on even through difficult times. When we talk about basic principles, we must recognize at the same time that they have far-reaching results.

There is an aspect which business organizations representing small-business operators across Canada bring to Parliament which I would like to underline—they fully recognize their ability to create jobs in Canada. Let me give the downside of that statement, because the Canadian Federation of Independent Business reported that in the year which elapsed between January 1981 and January 1982 there was a loss of between 700,000 and 800,000 jobs in the small and medium business sector. This gives us an idea of how this small-business sector reflects on the over-all picture with respect to unemployment and in turn the over-all status of the Canadian economy.

What can we do to help small business reverse that trend and not have a job loss in its activities in the country but have job creation throughout its activities? It is very clear—and we have been told time and time again—that the Government has to provide financial assistance to start small businesses in Canada. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business pointed out, in a presentation which was provided to Members of Parliament, that notwithstanding the difficult times we have experienced in Canada in the last few years, small-business operators have continually come forward as entrepreneurs to start new businesses. In fact, in 1982 there were 150,000 formulations. This organization pointed out that with a potential upturn in the economy in 1983 we could expect some 200,000 formulations, that is, entrepreneurs across Canada who will attempt to start small businesses. Also it was pointed out by the Federation that if these 200,000 formulations were to start up and in each case hired one or two persons, as many as 400,000 jobs would be created.

What is necessary and required from Government to encourage the start of small-business formulations is financing. It is as simple as that. Does the Government have the ability to provide financing for small-business start-ups? That is a difficult question. We are looking at a Government which has piled up a budget deficit of some $30 billion. That in itself has made difficulties for business because it raises the rate at which one can borrow funds for business purposes from every lending institution across Canada.

My answer to that is a very simple one. We cannot afford to deprive small businesses of the kind of financial assistance they need to start because if we deprive small-business operators of that financial assistance, we will simply sink into the abyss of economic depression. We have to build and rebuild the Canadian economy. We have no choice. Our only choice is to do it with the co-operation of small business.

We have seen in the House of Commons and across Canada in the past year or two the collapse of project after project, such as the Alberta tar sands project which would have employed 10,000 people directly and many more indirectly. On the East Coast we see offshore development failing to yield the kinds of jobs we thought would be yielded through energy developments in the 1980s. While I would not negate the possibility of large scale development across Canada, the hard economic fact is that we have to look to small and medium size businesses to create activities which will generate jobs and correct the unemployment problem in Canada. If financial assistance is needed to start these businesses, that is what the Government of Canada must provide.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-136 and the amendments we are discussing at the present time. I, as I would imagine a number of Members of Parliament who do not have suntans, have spent most of the holiday in my constituency visiting small businesses and those who are experiencing certain problems in today's economy. The small-business sector is one which is extremely hard hit by what we are going through at the present time. Probably the greatest single deterrent to small businesses today is the fact that they lack confidence. They lack confidence in the Government. They lack confidence in the economy. In many instances they lack confidence in themselves because of the position in which they have been put over the last number of years, specifically in the last couple of years, by this Government. Some of these businesses have money to invest, expand and hire more people, but they do not trust the present administration. They have a very real concern.

The question they ask me is what the Government is going to do to them next. They want to know what rules are going to be changed next in the middle of the game. Confidence will not be restored unless on April 19 we have a commitment from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Government, as much as that will be worth, to leave the small business sector alone. They want to be promised that the tax regime now in place will not change and that the rules of the game will not be changed part way through without proper notification and consultation. Right now they are gun shy of this Government after the three budgets that came forward in a year and a half. I believe there have been 65 or 70 changes since the infamous budget of the then Minister of Finance, now Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen).

Small businessmen want to be assured that the rules of the game will not be changed come April 19, 1983, 1984 or 1985. If they had this assurance, they would be prepared to invest and expand. I am hearing far too much about those looking south of the border to invest. They are being invited to expand in that country, to set up a plant or move their operation to the United States where they will receive certain guarantees that there will be no interference in their business.

This bothers me. It concerns me greatly. I have to hear businesses or individuals talk about leaving this country or moving their business elsewhere. The April 19 budget must restore some of that confidence to Canadian businesses, especially small businesses which are the backbone of our economy, which hire the people and produce for Canadians.

I now want to talk about the amendment of my colleague from the New Democratic Party. The Act now clearly states that these loans can only be made for new depreciable assets or for the financing of research and development. As I travel around the communities of Brampton and Georgetown, I see more and more vacancies in plants and small operations in the industrial sections of the community. For the life of me I cannot understand why these loans would not be available there.

I questioned the Minister as to why these loans were not available for older, second-hand, used equipment as well as for buildings. I know they are not eligible for land, but they are for buildings. I asked why these moneys were not approved under this program for used buildings. I cannot see the sense of erecting new buildings to take advantage of a plan like this when there are so many vacant buildings across this country. Therefore I, along with my colleagues, support the amendment brought in by our colleague. I urge everyone to support that amendment.

I now want to talk about the closing date of this program. It is not mentioned in the legislation, but the regulations state that this Act is null and void as of April 1, 1983. It is now April 11, 1983, so we are debating a Bill that has run out of steam. We are talking about a few loans that must be made to those who have applied and are waiting to receive them. We will not hold those loans up unduly.

This Government continues to say that the Opposition holds up this type of legislation when it in fact controls the timetable of this House. To blame that on the Opposition Parties is heresy. It is completely untrue. This Bill could have been put through well before Christmas and the loans made. There is no excuse whatsoever for debating a Bill that has run out of time. It is after the fact.

We will be introducing an amendment later that I hope will be supported by this House. If the Bill were to be passed as it is now, it would not serve any real purpose. On loans to small businesses, they cannot charge any more than 1 per cent above prime. Prime is now 11.5 per cent. Therefore, loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act would be at 12.5 per cent. This Act, with all the bureaucracy, forms to be filled out and everything else, would not make much sense. It would be much smarter to go under the Small Business Loans Act.

We understand that the applications that are before the Minister and have not been approved must be approved. We support that. Now that interest rates have dropped, this Bill will not have any real effect. It will be a duplication of the Small Businesses Loans Act.

I am sure the Minister has received input into his April 19 budget. I encourage him to give confidence to the business community, especially the small business community. Let him assure them that the rules of the game will not be changed when they are part way through trying to expand, trying to create employment and getting Canada back on the road to recovery.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to take part in this debate on Bill C-136, the Small Business Investment Grants Act, as it applies to operators of small businesses in Canada. It has been widely ascertained that neither the federal nor provincial Governments have ever agreed upon or accepted an economic definition of small business. What is more amazing is that people all across Canada who profess to be proponents of small business have not agreed on a clear definition either.

When talking about the size of business, Governments emphasize the size of assets, the size of sales, the number of employees and so on. I believe that size is less important in defining small business than many other factors. I believe that small is a relative term. What is small in one industry could be termed medium or large in another sector.

I believe that a small business definition is one in which a business is independently owned and managed and has at the most 500 employees. This definition of a small business is the law in the United States, and many other countries around the world have adopted it. The 65,000-member Canadian Federation of Business, the largest business organization in Canada, has also adopted this definition.

This Government, on the other hand, has not been able to reach a consensus on a general definition. The Government has resisted the concept of owner-management, preferring to use a much more vague one which allows employee-managed plants to be classified as small businesses. Hopefully this problem will be resolved in the near future to the satisfaction of everyone concerned.

The substance of Bill C-136 will provide the necessary legislation to implement the Small Business Investment Grants Program outlined in the June, 1982 budget. This program, as we already know, will provide grants of up to 4 per cent to reduce interest costs to as low as 12 per cent. This Bill also has a ceiling of up to $400 million and is designed to reduce the cost of borrowing for the acquisition of new depreciable assets or for the financing of research and development. Those eligible to receive such a loan include farmers and fishermen, small businesses and corporations eligible for the low corporate tax rate, and also partnerships and proprietorships. However, those engaged in a profession or those wishing a loan for the purchase of land, automobiles and certain other passenger vehicles and leasing do not qualify for such loans. In order to qualify for a small business investment grant, a loan application must be for an amount not less than $10,000 or greater than $500,000.

One of the problems with Bill C-136 is that since this Bill was first considered about six months ago, the interest rates have fallen to the point where the 12 per cent ceiling really means that very little assistance will be available. As well, this Bill does not address the question of the survival of small businesses, which is the most immediate concern of many small businesses today. Another concern is that this Bill applies to new equipment only. Many small businesses and farmers buy used equipment in an effort to keep cost to a minimum, and this Bill will not help in this regard. This Bill is also very vague and provides that far too much discretion be granted to the Government to make regulations concerning operations of the program. The only things specified in the Bill are the 12 per cent ceiling, the 4 per cent maximum grant, the right of Government to get money back which was granted to those not entitled to the money, and the authority to make regulations.

Small businesses, as we all know, are generators of employment and income in every region and virtually every community in Canada. Small businesses provide important goods and services that might otherwise be unavailable or limited in type and quality. They are the mechanism for much of the innovation and the risk-taking that is essential to our economic system. They are also the source of new materials, concepts, production techniques and goods that larger enterprises would perhaps not be forced to develop. As well, the owners of small businesses are usually the backbone of the community in which they live, contributing to it in many ways at a personal level. In the case of Canada, the contribution made by the small business community is indeed impressive. The one million small businesses in Canada provide 42 per cent of the private sector employment in this country. They offer a rich diversity of projects and services and have been a major factor in industrial growth, innovation and job-creation.

While we are happy to see that interest rates have fallen somewhat in the past few months, we must be aware that the ceiling of 12 per cent spelled out in Bill C-136 will now mean that little or no assistance is provided to the small business people and farmers forced to resort to this type of borrowing. I suggest, therefore, that consideration be given to lowering the ceiling of 12 per cent, which would indeed be a step in the right direction. I would also suggest that this Government immediately work on de-regulating the business and farming communities in Canada and leave the business and farming communities which have the necessary expertise and experience to run their own businesses and enterprises. Let them do the job that they are both capable of doing. This is something which is totally lacking in Governments which have an abundance of theorists but totally lack practical and business-oriented people who know what it means to meet payrolls. This country was built on the sweat and toil of free entrepreneurs with little or no Government interference. Motivation, incentives, and the desire to better oneself were the key motivators toward the goal of success. Government intervention only serves to stifle those goals, and I believe the Government has interfered long enough. The results have been disastrous, to say the least. I believe it has had its turn and has been found wanting. I believe it is time for industry to remove the shackles of Government, assert their independence, and thus get our country back on track again to improve our economy, to reduce unemployment, and to eliminate and discourage inflation.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-136, Small Business Investment Grants Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and Motions Nos. 1 and 2 of Mr. Orlikow (p. 24327).

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am, I think, happy to speak on Bill C-136 but I am really not that overjoyed. While I agree with the thrust of what was originally contained in the budget of many moons ago, back in 1982, I want to say to the House most seriously that if there ever was an example of morass and stagnation in Government business, this simple little Bill, which is high in principle and very short in pages, is to me one of the best examples that we could find. I have no intention of involving the Minister who introduced the Bill in first reading on October 28 and second reading on November 8, 1982. The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey) is a very honourable man. I gather that this was his initial baby in the House since he obtained his new portfolio, and he was congratulated on the day the Bill was introduced.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: I must say, Mr. Speaker, compared to a multitude of Bills that we have had in this House which actually give you a tendon problem in the elbow because they are so heavy and multi-faceted and contain many subjects, this Bill C-136 was quite unique. It has two and one-half pages and six Clauses. It does all the things that other Members here today have said that it was intended to do, and it came at a time, of course, when interest rates were unconscionably exorbitant and in fact was to provide a base, a ceiling, of 12 per cent, giving a subsidy in effect, as I understand it from the very brief provisions of the Bill, of up to 4 per cent to reduce interest rates to 12 per cent. That is very commendable. No one objected to that. What I really cannot understand, as some Members have pointed out today, is why in the name of common sense are we debating this Bill today just one week and one day away from another budget. Today, other Hon. Members have asked what is going to happen in the budget of April 19 and whether small business, big business, individual taxpayers and the unemployed will get the help and assistance they so richly deserve from a Government that has been incompetent.

I do not know what is in the budget, and I do not think the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey) knows either. Small business and tourism are two areas which can do more to promote jobs and build the substructure for the country, which provides the sinews of the economy in taxes and jobs, than almost any other factor or feature of Government operations.

I am glad the dean of the House is with us today but I do not know whether he is going to be greatly excited about what I have to say. This matter was touched upon by the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) and I think it is something that is of increasing concern to Members of the House. Like Old Man River, this session just goes on and on. Today is the 487th day of sitting of the first session of this Parliament which started on April 14, 1980. Is it any wonder that the life has gone out of the Government and a lethargy has taken over that is suffocating any interest in regenerating the country? When a Government that is supposed to control its own business goes on and on like Old Man River with no focus, no direction and no definition, then things are serious.

I am not going to argue matters of procedure but today the Senate is supposed to give an answer to Senator McIlraith who was a well respected House leader for the Government years ago. On Wednesday, March 30, he asked the Senate what the legal status was for the Parliament of Canada to consider anything, let alone another budget, when a couple of budgets had already been considered in this session but there had been only one Speech from the Throne. There have been budgets and financial statements and other statements of exculpation—they might even get up to five financial statements in this session as it drags on.

Bill C-136 is just two and a half pages and six clauses long. It was introduced for first reading on October 28, 1982 with only four speakers, taking a total of seven and a half pages in Hansard. The debate started at 7.25 p.m. and ended at 8.30 p.m. the same night. The Bill was then referred to Committee where it was debated in one session for an hour and a quarter and was disposed of on November 23, 1982. Then, low and behold, it lost its priority. Interest rates started to change.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I think the House is wasting time debating this Bill until we know what will be in the budget of April 19. That will do more to restore confidence than anything in the Bill. Although the Minister spoke in glowing terms about the $400 million provided in the Bill, I understand that he has reduced the amount to $60 million now. Perhaps he or someone else will be able to tell us the amount in the applications that have been approved or are still in front of the Minister at the present time. I venture to say that we are not dealing with $400 million or $60 million now.

I should like to know how necessary it is that we deal with this piece of legislation today. It has just been sitting there since it was dealt with in Committee on November 23. I surmise that the reason it has not been pushed ahead is that it has lost its relevance. Interest rates have come down. There may be a good psychological argument that because it was there, it helped bring interest rates down. I will give credit where credit is due, and if that factor, amongst others, helped bring interest rates down, I am pleased.

The report of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business shows that today 700,000 or 800,000 fewer Canadians are employed in small and medium-sized business than were employed in January 1981. The Bill would not have much effect on that situation anyway.

It is ironic, Mr. Speaker, that according to the terms of the Bill, it has already expired. As I understand the Minister's explanation, the Bill does not apply after March 31, 1983. The Bill was started with some fanfare, and it was not held up in the House. It has been kicking around since the budget of 1982 but was not pushed ahead. The Minister did not approach the House to get it through because there was a need for it. Interest rates went down.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, it is a great example of stagnation in the legislative program of the Government that we take the time of the House to deal with a Bill that is no longer relevant. I should like to know how many people are directly affected by it. If there are any, the Bill could have been passed by some type of House order and agreement with the Opposition. In principle, we are for the Bill, but the factors have changed so fundamentally that the whole thing is a farce.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a contribution to the debate on Bill C-136, not to cover old ground but merely to recognize that we are being asked to pass, almost retroactively, a measure that is quite unnecessary at this time and which will do nothing for small business in the months and years ahead. The costs and the burden of the various Government programs make it difficult for people to remain in business in Canada, and the Bill does not address those serious problems.

The Government has bungled its priorities once again. When this Party and the Party to my left from the end of 1979 until late last winter called for assistance with the high interest rates that affected home owners and small businesses, the Government was preoccupied with finding ways to bail out its big corporate friends and totally ignored the plight of the small business sector.

With a lot of pushing from this side, the Government finally begrudgingly agreed to implement the Small Business Development Bond Program which was introduced by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) in his budget of 1979. Had that program been adopted immediately, many of the small businesses which no longer exist in the country might have survived the worst economic depression since the mid-1930s.

We dragged the Liberals into the 1980s, screaming and kicking, and tried to get them to realize the plight of the small business sector. Today, in 1983, we are about to adopt legislation which is applicable only to March 31, 1983. It is designed to help people whose interest rates exceed 12 per cent, although the prevailing market rate is 12 or 12.5 per cent. The Bill is practically worthless.

The Government has failed to deal with the fundamental problems that have been crushing small businesses and leading to an unprecedented rate of bankruptcies. The small business sector employs more than 70 per cent of people who work in private agencies in the country. We have seen a massive and phenomenal rate of bankruptcies amongst those businesses which are the mainstay of our economy, and this has evolved from measures such as the National Energy Program which has destroyed the climate and the enthusiasm for investment in this country. It was compounded by the budget introduced by the former Minister of Finance on November 12, 1981, which was subsequently corrected and adjusted in December of that year, then replaced by another budget on June 28, 1982, then corrected by another economic statement in the autumn, and finally the residual measures were adopted in this House a few weeks ago by way of the amendments to the Income Tax Act, the Ways and Means legislation.

Then the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) introduced 26 new amendments to the Income Tax Act to enact measures which he did not want to accept as amendments to the principal Bill, Bill C-139, I believe it was, because he would have to admit that the Opposition had been right in much of their criticism of those various tax measures. But he introduced the changes retroactively after the Bill was passed, Mr. Speaker.

The point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is that all of this turmoil and confusion, this talk of taxing the imputed benefits of employees of small businesses, and the taxation of automobile allowances, the imposition of a regime of taxation on fuels, oil and gas and other energies which are used in the manufacturing and production of goods by our small business, all of these measures have imposed a punishing burden upon the small businesses of Canada.

Then there were the Statistics Canada experts who went around to many businesses with long and detailed forms which this Parliament never approved, with a myriad of complex and often very personal and penetrating questions, and these businessmen were told that they must comply under the threat of imprisonment or major fines. That, of course, takes away from the time they have to service their customers, to service their deficits and to make the financial and management decisions which are important to keep those businesses viable.

There is also the Metric Commission and the impact it has had on the retail sector, which consists of small businesses primarily, and the hassling of people who would sell gasoline by the gallon, carpeting by the yard and lumber by the 4 foot by 8 foot sheet size. We now have this very confused situation where you can still buy two by four lumber and four by eight sheets of plywood and three inch nails in building supplies, but you are not allowed to buy gasoline by the gallon if a merchant chooses to sell it that way, even though many Government agencies still dispense gasoline by the gallon and oil by the quart.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we have this morass of costly and confusing burdens which this Government is imposing on the small business sector of this country. Then it asks us to come into Parliament and pass retroactively a piece of legislation which cannot have any benefit to the businesses of the country beyond this day. So we ask what the Government is doing about all of this other nonsense, the offshore purchasing policies, for example Mr. Speaker, where a number of semi-submersible lifeboats are to be purchased to supply the coast-guard of Canada. Small business in my riding has produced such vessels satisfactorily, not only for the Canadian coast-guard but for the coastguards of other nations and the major oil companies, the multinationals which are operating in the Arctic and off the East coast of Canada. These boats, which are produced in Richmond, British Columbia, are being used very successfully in those cases, but when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) decides to buy a new lifeboat, he goes offshore to purchase it because certain people within the search and rescue service have decided and predetermined that there is only one type of vessel which will meet their needs. It is not so bad to have a specific type of design in mind, but when you rule out the right of Canadian small businesses to bid competitively for the right to supply such systems, then there is something drastically wrong with Government policy in the purchasing areas. That, again, is another example of the tremendous imposition of costly burdens on the small business sector.

Certain provisions of the Official Languages Act are imposing costs indirectly upon small businesses which must compete with Government-run or Government-regulated agencies which do provide services in both official languages, even in some parts of the country where it is not necessary. Small businesses which are trying to provide competitive services are forced very often to print and to publish in both languages at a considerable additional cost to them even though there is no additional return at the sales counter.

We could well spend more time reviewing the banking practices within this country. I know that this Parliament, and the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, has just gone through a major revision of the Bank Act, but, Mr. Speaker, if you had had occasion to visit your banker to borrow money, as I have had recently, you might be astounded at some of the extra costs which are being tacked on over and above the basic interest charge. For example, if you want a short-term loan for a couple of weeks, many of the Canadian chartered banks now charge you not only a set-up fee, and not only straight interest, but an additional service charge because you are not borrowing the money for long enough, which pushes the effective interest rate up to near usurious levels.

All of these measures and initiatives which have frustrated and hamstrung the small businesses of our nation have contributed to the present high levels of unemployment, which we learned about in the recent Statistics Canada figures which were debated earlier today in this House. To waste the time of the people of Canada in this Parliament in an attempt to enact legislation which is no longer effective, which is not going to be retroactive except with respect to certain applications which were entered into prior to March 31, 1983, just seems to be a ridiculous and foolish illustration of the total misdirection of priorities by this Liberal Government. As the Gallup poll indicated last week, I believe the people of Canada have had enough. They would like to throw this Government out and we would like to also.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Orlikow) negatived.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South) moved:

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-136, Small Business Investment Grants Act, be amended by adding immediately after line 21 at page 2 the following:

"5. (1) An order of the Governor in Council under section 4 shall be laid before Parliament not later than the fifteenth sitting day of Parliament after it is made.

(2) A motion for the consideration of the House of Commons to the effect that an order referred to in subsection (1) be confirmed, signed by a Minister of the Crown, shall be filed with the Speaker of the House of Commons not later than the twentieth sitting day of Parliament after the said order has been laid before Parliament pursuant to subsection (1).

(3) Where a motion for the consideration of the House of Commons is filed as provided in subsection (2), the House of Commons shall, not later than the sixth sitting day of Parliament following the filing of the motion, take up and consider the motion.

(4) A motion taken up and considered in accordance with subsection (3) shall be debated without interruption for not more than three hours and, on the conclusion of such debate or at the expiration of the third such hour, the Speaker of the House of Commons shall forthwith, without further debate or amendment, put every question necessary for the disposition of the motion.

(5) If a motion described in subsection (2) is taken up and considered by the House of Commons in accordance with subsection (3) but is not adopted by that House, the particular order to which the motion relates shall stand revoked.

(6) If a motion described in subsection (2) is taken up and considered by the House of Commons in accordance with subsection (3) and is adopted by that House, the particular order to which the motion relates comes into force immediately on the adoption of the motion by the House of Commons."

and by renumbering the subsequent Clauses accordingly.

He said: Mr. Speaker, far too often this House of Commons is presented with legislation such as is represented in Bill C-136, and it is with that in mind that Motion No. 3 was introduced.

Motion No. 3 requires that when an Order in Council is made, under the provisions of this Statute, the Order in Council must be put before Parliament and that there be a three-hour debate and a vote on that matter if it is required by Parliament. The concept here is to make sure that, when we have legislation which implies massive numbers of Orders in Council, somewhere along the line the people of Canada, by their elected representatives, should be able to say something about that type of legislation. This particular Bill in its definition, and the definition section is the kind of definition section that you are always concerned about, speaks about the word "prescribed". And what does "prescribed" mean? It means prescribed by regulation. Then when you get to the main granting section of the Bill, that is Section 3, it says, "On application to the Minister by a person who establishes . . . " what? In a form prescribed:

—that he is, pursuant to the regulations, eligible to receive a grant in respect of interest payable by the person on a prescribed small business investment debt—the Minister may, subject to the regulations, make a grant—

• (1700)

Well, the fact of the matter is that Section 4 of the Bill says:

The Governor in Council may make regulations prescribing anything that by this Act is to be prescribed and providing for all other matters and things as he deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

One begins to wonder what happened to legislation by Parliament if this type of uncontrolled regulatory power is allowed to exist. Yet it does, and it is a most dangerous type of precedent. Here we have a Bill which in no way controls the kinds of grants a Minister may make, other than that it cannot be for more than 4 per cent of the interest amount of the loan and cannot reduce the rate of interest on a loan to below 12 per cent. Other than that, there are no terms and conditions. The grants can be for anything. The grant could be to blue-eyed Liberals. It could be to people engaged in raising marijuana. It could be to anyone engaged in any kind of business the Minister decided to prescribe. There is no control. The Minister could authorize a loan to what he describes as small business, which is not necessarily a small business under the Income Tax Act. It could be a small business like Canadair or de Havilland. They are small businesses. As a matter of fact, their profits are small. As a matter of fact, their profits are non-existent. Massey-Ferguson could qualify because they could be described as a small business under the regulation. If you think about it, as long as the subsidy is only 4 per cent and the interest rate is reduced to not less than 12 per cent, there is absolutely no limit to what could be granted under the terms of this Bill. It is open all the way.

It is with that in mind, Mr. Speaker, that we introduce this kind of amendment. I say to you, Sir, that it is absolutely essential that when legislation that must perforce give the Governor in Council power to make regulations is brought before the House, it must also curtail the power of the Governor in Council to bring forth those regulations. We have seen this problem in metric conversion where we have people raising before the courts of this country the issue of whether regulations made under the Weights and Measures Act are proper. We have that kind of section in this Bill where the Governor in Council may make regulations prescribing anything. When we pass legislation of that nature, what we have really done is say to our constituents that we are here for no purpose other than to give the Government power to do what ever the Government wants to do. In a very serious and real sense we have abandoned our responsibility to the people of Canada. We have left the door open for any kind of dictatorship the Party in power wants to impose upon the country. When we had before this House legislation concerning metrication, there was no suggestion at all that metrication would be compulsory. But it was compulsory because of the provision which allowed the Governor in Council to make regulations which were never contemplated by anyone in this House when the legislation was dealt with. The same possibility exists here.

The Minister says, quite properly, that he is not going to make any grants under this Bill unless they were applied for with respect to loans made prior to April 1. We will take him at his word and we may have a further matter to bring before this House later this afternoon in that regard. But as the Bill stands now, there is the possibility that a Minister of the Crown could come forward, maybe a year or two years from now, and decide to make grants to small-businessmen carrying on business in Corner Brook, Newfoundland, and only them. That would be quite proper under this Bill. There is no requirement that what was said in a budget debate in June, 1982 need apply. The Bill becomes a statute of Canada, and that allows the Minister to make regulations to allow any kind of a grant as long as it is not in excess of 4 per cent and it does not reduce the interest rate on a loan to below 12 per cent. So a Minister of the Crown—the current Minister, and he is a good Minister—may piously say that he would not do that type of thing, but this legislation does not tie the hands of any future Minister. No one else is bound by that. This Minister may not be the Minister responsible for small business a month or two down the pipe. Some other Minister may have a new jolly green program with new jolly green brochures for jolly green grants. He may want to, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) says, hand out some jolly green dollar bills to his jolly green friends. And, Sir, he can do it. All he has to do is to get the Governor in Council to pass the regulations, and away we go.

So I say to this House that when this type of provision is included in the statute, this House must insist on an amendment in the form that I have presented to this House this afternoon, a provision that these regulations may be tabled before Parliament and that there be a debate—not a long debate, but one of three hours—and it be brought to a vote so that Parliament has an opportunity to express itself with respect to regulations. It is on that basis, Sir, that this amendment is presented.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to speak to this amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). There is no question that the amendment is a good one in that it identifies once again one of the major weaknesses of Bill C-136. Section 3 of that Bill reads as follows:

On application to the Minister by a person who establishes in the form and manner prescribed that he is, pursuant to the regulations, eligible to receive a grant in respect of interest payable by the person on a prescribed small business investment debt obligation owed by him, the Minister may, subject to the regulations, make a grant to the person or his agent of such amount, not exceeding four per cent per annum of the principal balance outstanding from time to time of the debt obligation, as would reduce the effective rate of interest on the debt obligation for the period in respect of which the grant is made to not less than twelve per cent per annum.

In a nutshell, what that says is that the Minister may decide to target certain groups for particular incentive programs. It is possible that the Minister would identify under the terms and conditions in a set of regulations that this particular Bill ought to apply to certain sectors of the small business community. Perhaps it would be small businesses involved with tourist services, perhaps those which are involved in the high-tech industry or those which are emphasizing the fishing industry or certain service industries.

What is important is that we must realize that it is open-ended. This amendment attempts to bring some accountability to the Government benches. If the Government wishes to target certain groups in the economy for some special assistance, then the purpose of this amendment is to have the Government come forward to Parliament and present the issue in such a way that Parliamentarians have an opportunity to react to this selective incentive program.

Quite frankly, I have little quarrel with that procedure. I like the idea of seeing the day when the Government of Canada will have an economic and industrial strategy in place which will enable it to target particular sectors of the economy for special encouragement and support. After all, this is not a particularly new concept. Many other countries spend a good portion of their budgets on the encouragement of certain industries. As a matter of fact, if we examine the Canadian Government's estimates carefully, we will find that this is already taking place today. There are complete sets of incentive programs for certain kinds of enterprises.

The problem concerns the fact that these programs lack any direction. They are not part of any particular strategic program and do not strive to obtain a particular goal. It is simply an ad hoc and random approach to whatever business is able perhaps to lobby most effectively or to whatever enterprise might bring a particular advantage to a selected region of Canada. These particular enterprises are being provided with certain incentives today. However, it is in the absence of a comprehensive industrial recovery program that these incentives are taking place. That is one of the major weaknesses of the program.

I am in favour of the concept of regulations being drafted that would provide encouragement for certain selected sectors of the economy which Canada sees as sectors that perhaps would bring some strategic advantage to the Canadian economy, which would provide us with a greater opportunity for world product mandating, or sectors of the economy that would give Canada a particular edge in world markets. Consequently, it is to those industries we should be giving some special attention.

As I indicated earlier, other countries do this and there is no reason why Canada should not do so as well. I am particularly concerned about this issue as a result of the information which has been provided to us lately with regard to the level of unemployment in Canada. We are presently facing a seasonally adjusted unemployment rate of 12.6 per cent. The Government of Canada tells us that this level of unemployment will be with us for some time in the future. It is saying that this is essentially a level of unemployment that Canadians must accept and consider to be a reality in the months ahead. I want to say that there are many of us who do not accept that and do not accept the premise that Canada is faced with a 12.6 per cent seasonally adjusted unemployment level, a fact which must be accepted. I believe that we can see a slow economic recovery occur in our country with an economic strategy that recognizes that certain Canadian industries possess a strategic advantage which can be developed.

I suspect that the Minister whose Bill we are debating today, the Minister responsible for small businesses (Mr. Rompkey), has identified the tourist industry as one of the critical sectors where Canada has some advantage. The tourist industry is a sector which I believe ought to be receiving a great deal more attention than it is today. It is largely a sector of small enterprises and one which caters to the family business. It is a sector that is essentially Canadian owned and controlled and from which the profits of the enterprises remain in the country for further investment. It is the type of industry in which Canada obviously has a contribution to make in terms of world tourist markets. At the moment it does not receive particular encouragement from the Government of Canada nor, I suspect, from most of the provincial Governments.

If this particular Clause were part of Bill C-136, it would provide a mechanism for the Government of Canada to target tourism as an industry that it would like to encourage, support and nurture in a number of ways. For that reason I support what Clause 3 is attempting to accomplish in principle. However, the amendment of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, would provide an opportunity for Parliament to debate those special regulations and initiatives that the Government may be taking. For that reason, I hope the Minister responsible for small business gives some consideration to the amendment at present before the House.

There is no reason for being hesitant about the regulations. One becomes somewhat skeptical when Members opposite on the Government side say that they are not prepared to come to Parliament to disclose the new set of regulations as they change from time to time. While that may be expedient in terms of Government business, in terms of Parliament being able to provide its support to economic initiatives provided by the Government I suspect that there is no reason for this amendment being supported not only by Members of the Official Opposition and the NDP, but by Government Members as well.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it would be nice if the Government Members opposite occasionally supported an amendment that made common sense. It has not been the practice of the House very often but perhaps this is one occasion when we can look for a few independent spirits on that side of the House to support us on an amendment which I suggest does make common sense.

I spoke earlier this day on the NDP amendment and mentioned the fact that an amendment would be moved later that dealt with something that is of considerable interest to me. In the course of my previous remarks, I ran out of time and forgot to draw to the Minister's attention how much more pleasant it would be to be standing in the House today dealing with a piece of legislation which would be helping small business in a meaningful way and assisting small businessmen in this country. It is a tragedy to be standing here today when that type of legislation is not before us.

I hope that the Minister would know that the greatest problem facing Canadian small businesses today is that, first, far too many small-businessmen do not have equity financing and, second, they have trouble competing in the marketplace because the markets, to a large extent, have dried up. The small businessman is quite often at the mercy of the large multinational corporation which can ride out a period of economic difficulty much easier since it has a much wider asset base to draw upon.

If we were presently examining a piece of legislation which would provide equity rather than debt financing to small business, I am sure that Members on this side of the House—certainly those from the Progressive Conservative Party—would give such a sensible piece of legislation speedy passage, because it would be helpful to the small business sector. If we were standing here today to examine a piece of federal legislation which dealt with the purchasing policy of the federal Government, we would have to remember that it spends something in the order of $90 billion per year. The United States, our major competitor just to the south of us, has had in place for years and years a small business set-aside provision which encourages the development of small business by providing a protected share of market on federal Government purchasing for that small business sector. If we were to see a common sense piece of legislation which increased the market potential of the small business sector, it would obtain speedy passage from this side of the House. That is not the piece of legislation before us today. The one before us today is more than a year old in the sense of its promise and several months old in the sense of when it saw the light of day.

This is a Bill to provide up to 4 per cent relief to small businesses that have to borrow money. As soon as we deal with a Bill to provide some amount of interest relief to some segment of Canadian society, it forces us to consider the fact that it has been in a large measure the federal Government, its borrowing habits and its $30 billion deficit, that have caused interest rates to rise historically.

It is the federal Government or the Liberals opposite who over a period of years have competed in the marketplace to borrow money. They have competed against people who want to borrow money to mortgage their homes. Interest rates shot way up for people who wanted to obtain mortgages to purchase their first homes because the major competitor for those funds was the federal Government. With an unlimited chequebook, the federal Government went into the marketplace and bid with increasingly high interest rates to borrow funds. Thus every home owner in the country who had to mortgage his home was required to pay higher interest rates, or if he wanted to purchase a car or finance a small business. We have the villain, the Liberal Party of Canada represented by its Cabinet, driving up the costs of borrowing money over a period of years, and then bringing in a piece of legislation which says, "Are we not the good guys because we will give back some of that money?" This sounds attractive to many people, but when we look at the legislation, we must ask ourselves whether it tells us to whom the money will be given back or under what conditions it will be given back. The answer to these questions is no.

In this piece of legislation Members of Parliament really have no say on who is to benefit from this expenditure of tax dollars. We find in Clause 4 that the Order in Council shall decide. When we see those words, we know they really mean Cabinet, a select group of 30-odd Members opposite who meet in secret and decide what the regulations will be. It is through regulation that one gets control. I mentioned earlier today one regulation which the Cabinet opposite wants to include, that is, if small businesses in the country buy new pieces of machinery which meet the qualifications it decides, they will be given interest relief, but if they purchase used ones, they will not be given relief. In other words, if a small-businessman, who is cost conscious and has a business which is borderline and may go under, finds a bargain in terms of a used piece of equipment and borrows money to buy it, the federal Government is saying that he will pay the whole interest charge. Let us say that the piece of equipment can be purchased for $10,000. Then he pays the whole interest shot. But the Government is saying that if he goes out and purchases a new piece of equipment, perhaps no better but simply because it is new, and he pays $20,000 for it, then the Government will give him some help. In other words, if he drives up the cost of doing business, the Government will help. It will help feed inflation and help inflation to grow, but if he is cost conscious, it will not help. If he tries to keep costs down, and therefore the cost to consumers, and tries to help a small business compete against multinational organizations, the Government will not help. But if he is wasteful and buys more than he needs, the Government will help. It is like a carrot to increase inflation and ultimately the bankruptcy rate of small business.

This is not something which Parliamentarians in their wisdom decided to do. This is something which Cabinet decided to do, an appointed body, appointed by one man, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), which meets in secret and issues regulations. The powers are enormous. This type of clause in such a piece of legislation is at its most basic level anti-democratic. The voters of the country vote for the people they want to come to this Chamber to represent their views and perspective. Then what are we given a chance to do? We are simply given a chance to vote to give Cabinet more powers, to give that appointed body more powers.

I come from Calgary. The unemployment rate, the vacancy rate and all such indicators of economic difficulty, have risen enormously in the last year or year and a half. They have had the highest rate of increase in the country. Why is that? It is because the federal Cabinet took unto itself the power to regulate far too many industries, but in particular the oil and gas industry. It was done with such understanding that half the jobs and half the economic spin-offs around the country were killed. Today we have a Minister of Energy who will roll back prices when they are already less than 75 per cent of the world price. That takes money out of the hands of businesses. It forces them into the marketplace to borrow. Then we will have a piece of legislation like this one. As the interest rates rise, the Government will help, but it will not produce any more oil or any more jobs. The situation comes about because it is not Parliament which decides, in all its collective wisdom. It is a small group called Cabinet which takes too much power unto itself. Approximately 3,500 Cabinet-type regulations a year mean that none of them are looked at with the kind of care and attention they deserve.

I hope Hon. Members opposite will rise later in the House on this amendment, take that power away from Cabinet and put it back in Parliament where it belongs so that fewer mistakes will be made in the future.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to say that I support this amendment very strongly because it really brings back into the House the responsibility which belongs here, rather than allowing it to float through an Order in Council without any reference back to the House.

There are too many things which the Government has done without our knowledge. There is a great deal that we cannot know about because it is a diverse economy and we cannot know everything about everything at all times. It is very important that legislation concerning small business be referred back to the House. I believe an over-all overhaul should be implemented immediately. Once that comes in and there is self-monitoring and perhaps private funding for a portion of it, we will not need to bring it back to the House.

The only reason legislation has to come back to the House is because of the spending of taxpayers' money. I do not think we should spend taxpayers' money. Instead we should encourage industry to survive on its own. That is really the thrust of my remarks.

I think this is a stopgap Bill. I am sure the Liberals will come up with a total, encompassing small business policy. I really believe they will do it some day. It may not be in time because we may be the Government and we will have the opportunity to put it in. Believe me, we will put in broad small business policy.

Talking about the problems in Canada, an interesting paper was put out by the University of Western Ontario giving an analysis of Canadian banking and the problems with the branch bank system, the lack of trained people to help the individual, help the corporation, assess what is required and possibly to implement.

In the United States there are many small banks, although fewer than there used to be. They are getting more into central banking because of the demand for dollars. The small bank in each town, the owner, who happened to be the banker, knew what was going on. He knew the business. He would get monthly statements and regular quarterly statements. He knew exactly where they were at. He would find people who in a true pioneer spirit, would invest capital into a company so that he could provide additional borrowing.

That is one of the areas where we in Canada have failed. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) brought out that we should have an edge in world trade. I agree with him totally. There are a great many things on which he and I agree.

What happens to us in this country is that we have to borrow so much money and pay interest on that money to try to get a business going. We do not have enough equity money coming into the market and risk capital that may make a bit more money in the future. As Members know, at the beginning it is hard to make money. It takes seven years for an industry to get under way. That is what is really addressed in this piece of literature from the University of Western Ontario.

Relating to this, I am fairly aware of what happens in Japan and the reason for their success. A great deal of it relates to the "assist export trade". In many ways the Government gets involved. In the pure financing of businesses in Japan, there are ten separate organizations. They have city banks, local banks, long term credit banks and trust banks. There are ten that split this up. It is not a monopoly they are dealing with.

An independent small entrepreneur in Japan has a variety of sources from which to get money. In addition, many of the small businesses in Japan, unfortunately, are dependent upon some of the majors. Some of the majors assist them at times when growth is not that great or when they are over-supplied. They assist them in financing their inventory. Some do, some do not, but it makes a tremendous difference.

These Japanese banks not only lend money on debt but on equity. There is a variety. I am looking at a comparison. In Canada we have four sources, of which 74 per cent are the chartered banks. The balance is split between mortgage loan companies, trust companies and local credit unions.

Germany has a much broader spectrum, as do most of the European countries, because they have merchant banks that really go into venture capital. Then they carry on. They put so much in through equity, and the balance through debt. We do not have the same facility for small business in this country. We have lost the entrepreneurial spirit. It is very difficult to get a business going. It is very difficult to raise equity capital, no matter how good the idea.

I know there is an exception. The Minister knows about it. The exception now is high technology firms. That has sex appeal. It has the possibility of a balloon, of really growing rapidly. Strangely enough, Canadians believe it has the possibility of failing. That is free enterprise, the right to succeed and the right to fail. That is why we should not step in and try to prop up marginal operations.

We have to provide something to give them a base to work from. With the tremendous rise and fall of interest rates, industry and business cannot operate. They cannot live with it. They cannot budget for it. When we have those high interest rates, we have a reduction in sales. You get a double-whammy.

While I am on sales, I will put in another dig. They hit the salesman twice as hard in the year that sales go down by charging him twice as much for standby charges on his car. That was unfair during 1982, one of the worst periods we have gone through.

In Canada we do not have incentives to get people to invest in small business. There are no incentives. One of our plans was to remove capital gains on private business. Perhaps that would attract more money. I would rather see Canadian pension funds putting some funds into small business rather than buy more preferred shares in Massey-Ferguson. I have nothing against Massey-Ferguson. I think it is great to keep that organization going, but it may be an industry of the past. Hopefully, something can be resolved for them, but we should provide a proper financing vehicle outside of Government. That is where we are failing. The individual really does not need the Government to be involved if we have a proper financial system or if we had a mini stock market to cover small businesses trying to go public.

Part of the trouble with that is that brokers take such a large piece of a small deal. Perhaps there is a way around it through the banks. I do not know. We have to address this whole problem.

In our amendment we say that we want to vet this in front of the House. Then we could make some suggestions. We could all think about creating jobs and bringing something forward. That is what it is all about. We are talking about the people of this country, Canadians. I am talking about Canadian business.

The Liberal Government is nationalistically inclined. I agree that Canadian ownership is good. Young people should be given an opportunity to own their own business. We should do whatever we can for them. Again, this Bill is a stopgap, a bandaid. It will not solve the critical problem because business cannot operate on 12 per cent interest rates. That is too high.

Not so many years ago if a man in industry could get a 15 per cent return on his investment, he was doing extremely well. Then it went up to 20 per cent. At 12 per cent it is very marginal, a potential of at least 3 per cent.

Let us look where we are going. We will not come out of the recession quickly. It will take a long time. Thank heavens it will be gradual. Possibly this time we will come out with a better economic base than we had in the past. I hope it is not a sharp turn-up. I hope the Government does not come out with gimmicks to push it straight up and then it will come straight down. If we go up too quickly, and we have seen this happen, interest rates go up. To prove my point, if interest rates go to 20 per cent, this Bill will be of little help to the man paying 20 per cent interest. If he gets only 4 per cent off that, he still has 16 per cent, and that is far more than any small business can afford.

I speak very highly of the amendment. I support it. I wish the Government would consider it. Members of Parliament deal with small business people in their constituencies. We want to give them answers. We want to know the problems. We do not know them when everything is done by Order in Council. I ask the Government to accept this amendment. Please allow us to review what is happening so that there are not so many regulations, so many powers, and so many changes to be made by the Government without its having to come to the House of Commons.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Accordingly, I call the motion lost on division.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Blenkarn) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I believe there is disposition in the House to allow a further amendment to the Bill to be presented to the House at this point with the unanimous consent of the House. On that basis I move:

That Bill C-136 be amended by adding, immediately after line 16 on page 2, the following:

(3) The Minister may only make grants under subsection (1) in respect of small business investment debt obligations that are incurred prior to April 1, 1983.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I inquire of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, who was kind enough to provide the Chair with a copy of his motion, as to whether the reading should be April 1 or March 31, 1983. It was not clear.

Mr. Blenkarn: The concept, Mr. Speaker, was that April 1 would be more appropriate because it has to be prior to March 31. The undertaking that the Government gave to the business community was that they would accept loans made up to, and presumably including, March 31, so the words "prior to April 1, 1983," solves that problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Fine. I simply wanted to make sure that the copy of the motion in the hands of the Chair accords with what the Hon. Member is seeking. I will proceed on the basis of the date of April 1, 1983.

Then by unanimous consent, Mr. Blenkarn, seconded by Mr. Rompkey, moves:

That Bill C-136, Small Business Investment Grants Act, be amended by adding immediately after line 20 at page 3 the following new Clause:

(6) The Minister may not make a grant under Section (3) unless an application for that grant is made on or before April 1, 1983.

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, we certainly accept that amendment on this side of the House. I would want to point out as well, because the point was raised by the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) this morning that he would want to make—

An Hon. Member: Bow River.

Mr. Rompkey: —I am sorry, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), that he would want other people to apply and that indeed this amendment allows that. There is no prohibition on other people applying, but they would apply to have the Act support loans that were made prior to the first of April, 1983. In other words, the contractual arrangements between the individual and the banks before April 1, 1983, would be appropriate given this amendment, so we support that amendment on this side of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, just briefly to speak to it, I believe that it is good that we have finally come to a conclusion on this particular portion of the Bill. The original concept of the Bill was that grants would be made to reduce interest rates by up to 4 per cent and reduce them to 12 per cent for business.

As has been pointed out in the debate so far today, interest rates have very much ameliorated since the budget of June 28, 1982. There have, however, been a number of people who have made application thinking the Bill would go through in accordance with the brochures issued by the Government. The concept of this amendment is to allow those people to continue to receive the benefit of the grant. The Government at no time suggested to people that they could continue to take advantage of this Bill after March 31, so nobody has been harmed. It is our view that it is imperative, though, that the Bill not have any validity after the end of March or the first of April, as you pointed out, Sir, simply because to do so would leave an open-ended piece of legislation that could be used by some subsequent Minister or some subsequent Government to enter into a rather extensive loan or grant program, and it is on that basis that we are happy with this amendment.

We feel the amendment solves the problem. It looks after those who have been involved and made application under the Bill. It allows the Bill to be completed and wound up, but it leaves this whole possibility of further grants under this legislation not available. It also solves the problem of the amendment that I spoke on earlier that was negatived on division, the amendment with respect to reviewing Orders in Council that provide for grants and the like. Since the effect of the Bill will now be terminated as of April 1, 1983, by virtue of the amendment I hope this Parliament will accept it. Should we pass it, then I suspect we will have solved the problem. On that basis, Mr. Speaker, I think we should perhaps move to the next stage of this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before I recognize the Hon. Minister may I point out that the Chair was put in possession of a proposed amendment. The Hon. Member has in fact read into the record a slightly different amendment. I want to make sure that all the Hon. Members agree to the same wording so I can dispense with any great complexities of procedure. This is the motion which is before the House, moved by Mr. Blenkarn, seconded by Mr. Rompkey. It reads:

That Bill C-136 be amended by adding, immediately after line 16 on page 2, the following:

(3) The Minister may only make grants under subsection (1) in respect of small business investment debt obligations that are incurred prior to April 1, 1983.

Is it the wish of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to delay the debate, but I do want to make abundantly clear that any small-businessman who contracted a loan prior to April 1 but who did not apply to the Minister will now have that application considered if he applies.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we are certainly planning to support this quickly before the day is out, but I do want to mention one point. While this particular amendment will bring to an end this particular granting program, I wish to make it very clear that while the debate today has articulated why this particular Bill will have minimum impact in terms of assisting the small business community, the real needs of the small business community today are not encouragement and incentives for expansion and development, but quite frankly for survival. With the difficulties facing the small business sector today and what is likely to be ahead for them, I do hope that with the termination of this program the Government will give serious consideration to bringing in a program that will help the small business sector that is ailing much more than the Small Business Development Bonds that are, by and large, unavailable to the small ailing business sector, and that the Government will do something in terms of bringing some support for small businesses requiring working capital during these very difficult times.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Blenkarn) agreed to.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I submit that the appropriate way of handling the Bill would be to proceed to third reading stage at this point. We would give consent.

Mr. Rompkey moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Rompkey moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on third reading of the Bill. I appreciate that the amendment offered by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) was accepted by the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey). It will add a little common sense to the Bill. It would have been ridiculous to spend a day passing a Bill with its application limited to March 31. The amendment at least makes it a sensible Bill.

There is one thing that I would like to say in connection with the Bill and legislation in general. The Bill is a typical example of procedures that ought not to be followed. It was introduced on October 28 for first reading. On November 8 it was presented for second reading and four Members spoke. It then went to Committee, and today it is before us for debate at report stage and third reading. Between November 8 and today, April 11, businesses were going bankrupt and into receivership. Some closed their doors, yet we took five months to bring the Bill back to the House. Something has to be done about this procedure, Mr. Speaker, because it does not make sense.

A few weeks ago the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) and I had the pleasure of attending a seminar in England which was also attended by people from 18 Commonwealth countries. No one there could understand why we started a session in 1980 and are still involved in it. A number of them said this would not be tolerated in their country.

This is supposed to be a smart manoeuvre, but not as far as the people of Canada are concerned, Mr. Speaker. There should have been at least three sessions of this Parliament, but we are still involved in the first. There should have been three Throne Speeches, but there has only been one. Does that mean that the Government has no programs to offer for the future? Was everything included in the first Throne Speech in 1980? The country needs new material and new programs, Mr. Speaker. It has been denied the right to a Speech from the Throne for two years.

To some degree this Parliament is modelled after the Mother of Parliaments although in the last few years we have ignored many of its traditions. In September or October every year the Queen goes to Westminster to read the Speech from the Throne. The only exception to this is when an election falls in the middle of the term. Otherwise there is a session every year, a Speech from the Throne every year, a budget every year and Private Members' time every year. That has been denied to the people of Canada.

We should not tolerate this type of thing, Mr. Speaker. It ignores the basis of Parliament where people have the right to speak and debate programs. Under our parliamentary system, Members have the right to raise any subject at all during the debate on the Speech from the Throne. We have been denied that since 1980.

We have had three budgets. The country would be in a much better shape if we had done without two of them—especially the budget of November 12, 1981. It ruined a great number of our industries. It sent the petroleum, oil and gas industries right down the tube, and hundreds of people became unemployed as a result. It touched almost every sector of industry. The next budget tried to correct some of the wrongs of the first but it only added to our difficulties.

If the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had called a new session in 1982 and in 1983, budgets would have been introduced as a matter of course and would have received attention. Instead, the Government has brought in mini budgets which were largely prepared by bureaucrats who wanted to get something through the House. The Minister did not even have a chance to go through them, otherwise they would never have introduced some of the nonsense that was in them.

Some of the items in the Bill prevent farmers and businessmen from retiring today. People who spent 40 or 50 years for their lives building a nest egg so that they could retire in dignity find that they cannot. The Government did away with annuities. In the first budget it said that people would have to pay a capital gains tax and that even though they received instalment payments, they would have to pay on the whole thing. This made it impossible for a farmer to sell his land to his son or daughter or his hired man or anybody else. It just about stopped the movement of land in all parts of Canada.

That was part of a budget that was brought in without thought for the people who pioneered this country. That could not happen in the Mother of Parliaments because a budget comes down regularly there. Her Majesty The Queen would have been available to read the Speech from the Throne in the fall of each year and it would have outlined the programs so that people would know what was going on.

The whole situation has been confused by the actions of the Government in carrying one session on month after month after month. This Bill is an example. Were it not for the attitude of the Minister, it would have been almost worthless. It would have expired before it was passed. It was limited to March 31 and today, on April 11, we are debating third reading.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45, deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION—REQUEST THAT MINISTER REPORT ON MEETING IN PORTUGAL—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the adjournment debate in relation to a question I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on March 23, two or three weeks ago, concerning a meeting that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) was attending in Portugal, at which time, according to the United States press, Caspar Weinberger, was "to consult the allies on controversial NATO plans to deploy United States Pershing II and Cruise missiles in December". My question which appears at page 24067 of Hansard reads as follows:

Can the Prime Minister assure the House that, on his return, the Minister of National Defence will make a statement on motions to inform the House and the country what Canada's current position is on this very important subject?

The Minister went on from Portugal to China, and circumnavigated the world during the Easter holidays. He is now back and the Canadian people are to be no wiser for the trip.

In a second answer that very day the Prime Minister, in response to my supplementary question, said, as reported at page 24067 of Hansard:

I repeated it this morning to Vice President Bush, that there has been no Cabinet decision to test the Cruise.

By that, of course, he meant the Cruise missile.

This is the position in which the House finds itself; that we have conflicting statements from two Members of Cabinet, in this case one from the Prime Minister and one from the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan). The conflicting statement by the Minister of Justice when he was Secretary of State for External Affairs was given in a disarmament debate which is recorded at page 16741 of Hansard of April 29, 1982, as follows:

Following the decision of 1979, President Carter requested some 18 months ago that we allow one of the proposed missile systems, the Cruise Missile system, to be tested in Canada. It is the Carter request, which was subsequently adopted by the Reagan administration, which has been accepted by the Canadian cabinet.

The Prime Minister, of course, has said there has been no Cabinet decision to test the Cruise. I would like to point out that this quotation from the then Secretary of State for External Affairs was not given in the "hurley-burley" of Question Period. This statement was made during an Opposition Day. The Minister would have had at least 24 hours' notice of the subject matter of that debate. His Department would have prepared a speech for him, in all probability, and it would have been gone over carefully by several other people to make sure there were no errors or omissions. There is no excuse for a Minister to say something that is not true and factual in the middle of a prepared speech.

On March 24, 1982, over a year ago, the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence records that the Minister of Justice said, referring to two questions, and I quote:

The first one really is dealing with the testing of the Cruise missile system. This was a proposal that was put forward to Canada not by the Reagan administration but by the Carter administration, some 18 months ago. As I indicated, it was considered by cabinet during 1981 and we agreed to proceed with it at that time, to proceed to try to negotiate an agreement with the United States, a framework agreement, which would cover not only this kind of testing but other kinds of testing as well.

He is saying that the proposal which was agreed to by the Cabinet was the one on testing of the Cruise missile.

Again before the same Standing Committee of External Affairs and National Defence on May 4, 1982, the then Secretary of State for External Affairs said:

We have made a decision in principle in favour of the testing of the Cruise missile. That is, we have accepted it in principle. We have not accepted it in the context of a particular subagreement, nor have we even finished the negotiation of the overall agreement.

So it affects Cruise missile testing; no doubt about it.

Then on July 23, 1982, in the House of Commons, in reply to a question by the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche), the then Secretary of State for External Affairs said:

Madam Speaker, a decision on principle on this matter was reached by the Canadian Government last year, that we would enter into negotiations with the United States with a view to having such testing, and also with a view to having a large agreement—In fact, not only have we not proceeded with that, but negotiations have not been completed on the over-all umbrella agreement.

• (1805)

On February 14, to bring it much closer to the present, we find the Prime Minister starting to back away. In answer to a question in the House of Commons as reported at page 22804 of Hansard, he said:

—whether the reference to tht by the former Secretary of State for External Affairs was not based upon an inaccurate memory of what President Carter had requested . . . I cannot say . . .

So he is intimating that the current Minister of Justice has an inaccurate memory and does not know what has happened.

On February 15, the following day, he had this to say in answer to another question:

It is not a matter of getting out of the agreement to test the Cruise. There has been no agreement to test the Cruise.

That is exactly the opposite of what his Minister was saying.

On March 15, 1983, in answer to a question in committee by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) as to whether there has been a request by the U.S. to permit them to test the Cruise missile guidance system in Canada, the current Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) said:

No. There has been no request.

That is a flat contradiction of his predecessor.

We have been led up the garden path by three different Cabinet Ministers going in three different directions. Would the Government please tell us what its position is on this vital matter and quit making fools of its members in the process?

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, the Minister returned from his trip only this morning, and it was his intention to report to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on April 19, on matters relating to the nuclear planning group meeting in Portugal. At this time I cannot answer all the questions of the Hon. Member, but I can make the following statement:

The Minister attended the semi-annual meeting of NATO's nuclear planning group just prior to proceeding to the mid-East, Asia and Australia. At that meeting the defence Ministers reaffirmed the position taken by heads of state and Governments in June, 1982, that deterrence and defence, together with arms control and disarmament, are integral to the main purpose of the alliance. That is, to prevent war, safeguard democracy and to build the foundations of a lasting peace.

As expected, the deployment by NATO of intermediate range nuclear missiles dominated the proceedings. It was widely agreed that the Soviet Union had only been brought to the negotiating table at all as a consequence of the two-track December, 1979 decision. A strong consensus emerged that the governments of the alliance should continue to support implementation of both tracks of that decision. It was also agreed that, although the zero option should be maintained as a desirable goal, the time was right for taking an initiative in Geneva on an interim agreement on ceilings which would not in itself prevent deployment of NATO systems later this year. NATO ministers considered that the Soviet Union had not made any proposals which recognized the legitimate security interests in the West, and that the Andropov proposal, based upon compensation for British and French strategic forces, was completely unacceptable.

Apart from the intermediate force discussions, the Minister's attention was drawn to the continued build-up of Soviet strategic nuclear forces, including sea and air-launched Cruise missiles. The United States provided a brief account of the status of strategic arms reduction talks.

During the discussion the United States Secretary of Defence and NATO Secretary General Luns acknowledged the visible contribution made by Canada to NATO solidarity in approving the umbrella agreement under which Cruise missile flight testing could be authorized.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. The rules relating to time allotment to Hon. Members during the adjournment motion are extremely strict. Neither the Chair nor the House itself has the option to permit more time. Accordingly, I believe I must recognize the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

THE ECONOMY—INVESTMENT IN CORPORATE SECTOR—REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO PROMOTE INVESTMENT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, on March 22, 1983, I asked two questions of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). Those questions involved the necessity to provide greater incentives in this country for equity investment in order to get the country rolling again.

It is abundantly clear from the debate today that most Members who went back to their ridings discovered that both large and small businesses are desperately short of real capital. This does not surprise me since our tax laws as they exist today make it more advantageous for a person to lend money than to subscribe money to a company in capital.

Equity investment is hard to come by, by virtue of the fact that our tax system, in almost every instance, treats those who lend money more favourably than those who put their money at risk by buying shares in a company or by the common stock approach. Consequently, businesses all across the country do not have the freedom to move.

During the past few years, the last two or three in particular, we have seen an entire series of bankruptcies, insolvencies and receiverships which have largely been caused by the fact that businesses have been borrowing money. That borrowed money has had to bear interest. The reason businesses have had to borrow money is that they have not been able to encourage people to invest money as a solid capital investment.

When one examines the tax system, one finds, as the Lortie Commission found, that when corporate tax and personal tax applicable to dividends on equity investment are combined, the total tax paid on that money, that is at risk and earning in a company, is greater than the taxes applicable if a person simply loaned the money to the company in the first place. That being the case, there is really no incentive in the system to encourage people to invest and put their money at risk.

One suggestion made in the Lortie Commission Report was to somehow index capital investment so that indexed capital investment would be treated on the basis that if and when a capital investment is withdrawn from a company it would have the same purchasing power as when it was put in. The reason for that proposal is, of course, that most capital gains, or alleged capital gains, in this country are not that at all, but really a reduction in the purchasing power of the dollar.

Let me give an example. If one invested $1,000 in 1973 and was able to sell that investment in 1983 for what one would think would be 100 per cent profit, $2,000, that $1,000 would not have in fact been made. In fact, expressed in 1973 terms, that individual would have lost $228. Under our tax system one would be taxed on the basis of having made a $1,000 gain when in truth one lost $228. This kind of thing goes on day after day in our marketplace, so that people who have any sense at all refuse to put their money at risk unless the hope and dream is that that money at risk will do far better than 100 per cent in ten years. In fact, one would have to make something in the neighbourhood of 150 per cent over a ten-year period. This is not always practical. Indeed, one begins to wonder whether such investors have been tasking the hemlock of optimism far beyond what is realistic.

In the new budget to be presented by the Government on April 19, it is essential that it do something with respect to capital gains tax. In my view capital gains tax is anti-productive, discriminatory and unfair. We would be far better off as a country if we abolished it. We have to put into the investment community some sizzle, some hope, some drive. That sizzle, hope or drive is the possibility of making a profit. When one puts money at risk, one is behind the debt instruments—the debt has to be paid, the interest to the banks has to be paid. Whether or not that debt money in the company is really earning profits for the company, it has to be paid. The investor in a company only receives what is left after expenses, the bottom line. Profits and losses are not far apart because we are talking about the bottom line. Surely in a growing country we must make it possible in our budgets for those who invest to have an opportunity to make a profit and be well rewarded, or far better rewarded than those who just lend money.

Our present tax system militates in favour of the lenders of money, banks, trust companies and guaranteed investment certificate holders, but does not do anything for the risk taker, the person we really need to go out and create the jobs we so badly demand. As of today, 12.6 per cent of the population has been statistically determined to be unemployed. In truth there are well over two million Canadians either unemployed or so under-employed as to not really be treated as employed. They want to work and should be working. We must change the system to encourage growth, production, new investment and new opportunity.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the issue raised by the Hon. Member is one on which there has been very valuable consultation with the public, based upon discussion papers presented by the Government. In June of last year, the discussion paper entitled, "Inflation and the Taxation of Personal Investment Income" was released. The Lortie consultative committee, to which the Hon. Member referred, reported to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), supporting the concept of a registered shareholder investment plan. The Minister of Finance has indicated agreement in principle with such a plan but, as the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) knows, its details are a budgetary matter, as are measures that might be taken to support new equity investment in the corporate sector.

The broader issue, the adjustment of business taxation for inflation, was addressed by both the discussion paper to which I referred and the Lortie committee. The Committee suggested a study of comprehensive inflation accounting, recognizing the major issues which would arise in any such inflation accounting system. The discussion paper referred to the complexity of such a system, possible redistributions of tax liabilities among sectors, and international complications as important unanswered questions.

Accounting groups in Canada and elsewhere have been debating these points for several years, and as evidence of their complexity there is no consensus on the best approach. In Canada, larger companies are beginning to provide inflation adjustment on an essentially experimental basis, but the methods are not sufficiently developed to serve as a basis for a tax system. Whether it is desirable to undertake such a major modification of the tax system deserves serious reflection, and is to be determined by the Minister of Finance.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South appears most concerned about equity investment opportunities. Interest rates have fallen, as has inflation. Equity markets have been performing well and the basis has thus been laid for new equity issues. The Government is very aware of the importance of a sound equity basis for Canadian business, and the need for building on the recovery which is evident in equity markets. The budget speech is the appropriate place to learn of any new initiatives. The Hon. Member will naturally have to wait for the speech to know about any specific actions intended.

Finally, I would note that the Lortie committee addressed one approach suggested by the Hon. Member, elimination of capital gains tax. The committee indicated that it seriously considered the desirability of this course of action, but concluded it would not be desirable.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—REPORTED PURCHASE OF CAST CORPORATION

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, on March 25 I raised a question with respect to the CNR purchase of Cast and the contemplated purchase of Sofati, container operators, both centred in the city of Montreal, and the impact of the decision of the Crown corporation to act in this fashion.

I also raised the issue of whether the CTC had in fact held its public hearings—it has not—in respect to the Crown corporation's purchase. The Minister said that CTC had considered the matter. It became very obvious that if it had, it was in private, behind closed doors or in camera. The decisions are not publicly known. It was for that reason I initially asked the question.

The Minister said it was not a philosophical decision, not a socialist type of decision. I somewhat disagree with that. I feel that the tendency of this Government is further presented to the public by the inclination of the Crown corporation, CNR, to get further involved in shipping structures as they relate to Canada and its international trade. I am not at all sure that that necessarily puts it under the best management or that that is the best place for CNR to spend its money.

It goes further than that. It indicates that CNR is a free wheeling organization which does not have to comply with regulations that would be imposed on the private enterprise structure. It is in fact a free wheeling, go-ahead deal, similar to many other Crown corporations to which we have extended the use of the public purse without any necessity of getting approval for the use to which they put the money.

I want to point out to the House and the Minister that if we continue to centralize, CNR, Cast and the general shipping of Canada by water to the international world in the city of Montreal, this will have a serious detriment on the rail services for freight into Atlantic Canada. The further this service declines, the more expensive it will become. The more expensive it becomes, the less attractive it will be to customers, national or international. When we moved Cast out of Halifax, we reduced the volume of traffic on the CNR. With that reduced volume, the unit cost has to go up.

The general policy of the Government had been that in the port system of Canada there should be a user pay situation. Is this going to apply in Montreal? If, for instance, a shipment came into Montreal in winter, or to any of the St. Lawrence; the Strait of Northumberland, Gulf of St. Lawrence ports, then ice breaking service is available to those ports at no cost. This puts the year-round ports, particularly that of the city of Saint John, in a position of very serious disadvantage. If there are free ice breaking services for the St. Lawrence area, it certainly will be detrimental to the user pay system which is imposed on the port of Saint John. This should be addressed. Ice breaking should either become a user pay service or compensatory steps should be taken to restore the port of Saint John to its historic position.

I also draw attention to the fact that National Harbours Board ports, including the Saint John port, are on a user pay basis. That is not the case with the commission ports or the other ports not under the National Harbours Board. Is it to be the continuing policy of the Government of Canada to make investments in the ports in the St. Lawrence and the north shore of New Brunswick which will be competitive with installations already bought by the Government of Canada in the port of Saint John? This is something of very serious concern.

I earlier cited in this House that the Port of Rimouski was built up and improved for the handling of wood products from Canada. That was after the four-term structure in the City of Saint John had been built with provincial help, and it went directly into competition with that terminal. That terminal is one of the most efficient in the world; its efficiency cannot be duplicated in other ports.

Are we then going to have Government pressure to expand other ports in the St. Lawrence Valley, in the north east of New Brunswick, to come into competition with already paid-for Government construction? Are we going to get DREE or other grants which will not be capitalized? Are we in fact going to capitalize them and impose upon them the philosophy of user pay?

I must say that I think the transportation structure in general has mitigated against the best interests of the Port of Saint John, and against Atlantic Canada, both in relation to freight rates and to the preferences which have been extended to the Commission Port in conflict and in competition with the user-pay National Harbours Port.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is dead wrong when he says that the CN Crown corporation is not subject to the regulations to which the private sector companies are subject. The whole philosophy behind Crown corporations is that they must compete with private member companies, and they are treated as private companies and must compete on that basis. He was wrong when he said that Crown corporations are treated differently by the Government.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) clearly indicated to the Hon. Member in his answer of March 25 that whatever decision is arrived at with respect to CN and Cast, it will be subject to Government and CTC approval. Discussions have indeed taken place between these companies but no approval has been granted to a specific proposal by CN.

Faced with such a proposal, the Government would have to weigh several considerations. One is the competitive position of CN. As the Hon. Member knows, CP recently entered into an arrangement with Dart and Manchester Lines to provide an integrated Trans-Atlantic container service. Containers represent a healthy source of revenue for CN, and the company is obviously looking for ways of preserving this traffic.

Another aspect the Minister would have to look at is that of multi-modalism. There is a trend in transportation today toward door-to-door service: goods may move with one carrier, a development that is efficient and to the client's advantage. Cast was a pioneer in this area and CN, even with its minority interest, was able to benefit and better serve its customers.

The Government would also, of course, take into account the impact of any proposal by CN on ports in Atlantic Canada, such as Saint John and Halifax.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 6.31 the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SMALL BUSINESS INVESTMENT GRANTS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Monday, April 11, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rompkey that Bill C-136, Small Business Investment Grants Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions with the Government House Leader in the interest of expediting matters and bringing on the important legislation, Bill C-142, which deals with an adjustment of and increase in the amount of deposit insurance and concerns Canadians right across this country. We have had discussions on this side and are content to see Bill C-136 have third reading now on the basis that the Government would then immediately call Bill C-142, which would be dealt with for the balance of the day.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I concur with the comments that have been made. I think that we could quickly dispose of the Bill that is currently before the House, in fact dispose of it right away, and move towards dealing with the legislation that effectively raises the insurance levels for savings from $20,000 to $60,000.

I want to just add one minor point. I hope that in doing so we will be able to dispose also of the deposit insurance legislation today. Although we may have minor disagreements on the numbers, I would very much like to think that we could have a worthwhile debate between now and six o'clock today and deal with that legislation through all of the stages, to show that the spirit of co-operation and effort that we think exists in the House of Commons is indeed there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we discussed the matter last night and earlier this morning, and there is now agreement for completing the third reading stage of Bill C-136 and putting the question without further debate. All parties are agreed that there will be no recorded vote on the third reading stage and that the next item to be considered will be Bill C-142. Although there is no definite agreement on disposing of all stages of Bill C-142 today, like the New Democratic Party we intend to do everything we can to have all stages of Bill C-142 disposed of by the end of the day. I want to emphasize that the Government will certainly not obstruct passage of the third reading stage of C-142 later today by withholding its agreement. Although we have no definite agreement on this item, as soon as the question is put on Bill C-136, we shall call Bill C-142, in the hope that all stages can be disposed of later today.

• (1110)

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, that is basically the arrangement, as outlined by the Government House Leader. We will naturally wish that Members who want to be heard on Bill C-142 be heard. That will depend upon being able to contact the Members who wish to speak on this very important matter. That is basically the arrangement.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The House has heard the motion of the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), seconded by the Opposition House leader in the House. Is it the pleasure of the House to agree with this proposal?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It is agreed and so ordered. Shall I now put the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-142, an Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a very short Bill indeed which is before the House today. The main purpose of the Bill, as has been indicated, is to increase to $60,000 the amount of protection carried or provided by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation on savings deposits with financial institutions in Canada that are so recognized under the provisions of the Act.

As most Hon. Members know, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is a Crown corporation that was formed in 1967 by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. The main purpose of the Corporation is to insure, within limits specified, savings deposits placed by the public with member financial institutions. The existence of deposit insurance has given security and stability to the savings deposit market in Canada and has almost completely eliminated the fear of runs against financial institutions.

All banks and all federally incorporated trust companies and mortgage loan companies that accept deposits are members of the corporation by law. Provincially incorporated trust companies and mortgage loan companies accepting deposits may become members on application if the Province of incorporation concurs and if the financial condition of the company is acceptable to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

I can give the House some statistics. As of the end of 1982, 132 federally incorporated institutions were members of the Corporation; 65 were banks and 67 were trust companies or loan companies. At the same time, there were 52 provincially incorporated trust companies and loan companies holding membership.

In so far as the finances of the Corporation are concerned, at the end of 1982 the total assets of the corporation amounted to approximately $255 million. Its income for the year amounted to approximately $14 million in the form of premiums and $25 million in the form of interest. The total deposits insured by the Corporation as of April 30, 1982 amounted to $118 billion. The corporation is a tax-paying institution. It is expected to pay approximately $12 million in taxes in respect of the 1982 taxation year.

As far as the administration of the Corporation is concerned, it is governed by a board of directors comprised of a chairman appointed by Order in Council, and, ex officio, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Deputy Minister of Finance, the Inspector General of Banks and the Superintendent of Insurance.

The three purposes of the legislation, Mr. Speaker, are as follows: first, to increase the maximum limit of insurance on each deposit, as I have indicated, to $60,000 from the present $20,000; second, to increase the borrowing authority of the Corporation, which naturally flows from the first item; third, to reduce possible misunderstanding where member institutions receive funds which are not insured deposits.

In addition, there are a few technical amendments which are not in the same category of importance as the three items which I have just discussed.

Dealing with these items in order, Mr. Speaker, first as regards the limit on the amount of insurance, as I indicated in the House on January 17, 1983 the Bill provides for an increase of insurance to $60,000 to take effect as of that date; that is, the date on which the Government's intention was announced to the House. Since the time the deposit insurance plan was first adopted in 1967, the limit has been fixed at $20,000 per depositor in each institution. All of the deposits which a depositor has with one member institution are grouped together for the purposes of that limit. However, if an individual has a deposit account in his own name and, for example, another jointly with another person, the two deposits are insured separately. Also, a deposit made by a trustee for a beneficiary is insured separately from a deposit made directly by that beneficiary.

RRSP deposits and RHOSP deposits are insured separately from deposits made directly by the owner of the plan. Thus, Mr. Speaker, although the limit has been $20,000 per depositor for some time, it has in fact been possible to obtain insurance for considerably more than that amount, either in one institution or by deposits through various institutions. The $20,000 limit was initially set with the intention of enabling the Corporation to insure the normal demand in term saving deposits of ordinary Canadians with small or moderate means, but without going so far as to be insuring investments as such and as a result interfere with the normal functioning of the financial market.

We believe that the $20,000 limit has served well and has resulted in all but a very small proportion by number of deposits in member institutions being insured, and even by amount, the $20,000 insurance limit covered a substantial portion of all deposits made with all institutions. Current estimates show that the $20,000 limit covered 63 per cent of all deposits in banks and 76 per cent of deposits in trust companies and loan companies.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, the Government recognizes, however, that a number of changes have taken place in the year since the $20,000 limit was established. Deposit levels have risen as a consequence of inflation. The existence of deposit insurance has probably had an effect in increasing this type of savings as compared with other possibilities which a person might opt for, such as investments in bonds or stock. And the existence of tax-deferred plans such as Registered Retirement Savings Plans and Registered Home Ownership Savings Plans, which I have referred to, probably have also stimulated savings of the insured type. As a consequence, it seems desirable to make an increase in the level of deposits insured at this time.

The $60,000 limit proposed was recommended by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in its report on the profit situation of chartered banks, published in July, 1982. It is estimated that the $60,000 limit will now cover approximately 78 per cent of deposits in banks and 92 per cent of deposits in trust and loan companies. I recommend, Mr. Speaker, to all Hon. Members the rationale used by the Members of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in making that recommendation. I would draw to their attention that Hon. Members such as the chairman, Mr. John Evans, for Ottawa Centre and the Vice-Chairman, Mr. Peterson from Willowdale, together with Members opposite such as the acting critic for finance, Mr. Blenkarn from Mississauga South and Pat Carney, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Minister still has time left, but I should remind him that he should refer to Hon. Members by their ridings, not by personal names. The rule applies to everyone.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your admonition. I would like to identify other Members on the Committee. For example, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) and the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) all joined in support of encouraging the Government to adopt the $60,000 limit which is in the Bill before us today. As I said, I invite Hon. Members to take a look at the study that was done by the Committee and the reasoning put forward by the Committee in urging the adoption of the $60,000 limit.

Now, some suggestions have been received that the limit should be set much higher than $60,000. The Government is conscious of these suggestions and also of the fact that in the United States under the Federal Deposit Insurance Plan the amount has been set at $100,000. However, Mr. Speaker, I understand there is a study in the U.S. which indicates that that amount should be reduced and limited. However, we believe that the limit of $60,000 would be appropriate for the Canadian plan at the present time.

It is important to keep in mind the basic purpose of the plan, which is to insure saving deposits rather than to insure investments at a level where the investor could be expected to exercise his own judgment or, for example, to seek professional advice. It is not desirable to interfere in the normal functioning of the financial market by setting deposit insurance guarantees at a level that puts all other types of investment activity at a disadvantage. It is important to note as well that the main volume of premium funds received by the Corporation comes from large, strong institutions, whereas the smaller and less known institutions are probably the beneficiaries of the plan to an extent out of proportion to their relative size. There is to be some reasonable limit to the extent to which the large institutions, for example, have therefore to carry the load or contribute to a pool of this type.

The Bill proposes no change in the premium structure. Under present rules, the annual premium required of each member institution is one thirtieth of 1 per cent of the amount of insured deposits. However, the Corporation has certain limited authority to reduce the premiums below this level if it believes the fund is adequate.

With respect to borrowing power, the Corporation now has the power to borrow up to $500 million from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. Any such borrowing is to meet financial needs to the extent that the Corporation cannot conveniently do so from its own resources. Any such loans would be at a rate of interest appropriate to the circumstances and would be repaid by the Corporation either from realization of its own assets or from revenue produced by future premiums.

It is important, if CDIC is to play its full role as a stabilizing influence in the savings deposit market, that it be of such size and, of course, have resources sufficient to make clear to everyone concerned that it can reasonably fulfil the function which it is intended to play. The borrowing limit of $500 million, set in 1967, which was adequate at that time, is of course no longer adequate. In the context of this fact, and in concert with the proposed increase from $20,000 to $60,000, it seems appropriate to provide the Corporation with access to larger financial resources to meet emergency needs. Therefore, the Bill proposes that the borrowing authority be raised from $500 million to $1.5 billion.

With respect to possible confusion where a member institution accepts money which is not insured, the Bill proposes that all member institutions be required to mark clearly any instrument issued in return for funds where the transaction does not give rise to insured deposit. I made reference to that as being the third major thrust of the legislation before the House. Certain exceptions are specified in the Bill where it is most unlikely that any misunderstandings would occur. This provision is for the purpose of meeting certain problems which experience has shown have arisen in connection with the operation of the Corporation through its mandate.

The request for this legislation has been reinforced by Hon. Members from all Parties and by Canadians in general who have written to Hon. Members, to myself or to the Department. For example, I have in my hand copies of numerous requests that this legislation be addressed quickly by the Government. For example, I have in my hand a letter from the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) dated March 1, wherein the Hon. Member refers to an urgent inquiry from Mrs. Sinclair of Vernon, Ontario. The Hon. Member recites that she and her husband are worried about bad publicity re the trust companies and do not know what to do, but that they do badly need the $20,000 which will be due to them. The Hon. Member concludes:

> I have been asked to refer the matter to you for advice and in view of the time frame involved, I would ask for your advice as quickly as possible—

I have in my hand another letter from the same Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, again with regard to constituents who are concerned about the same matter, and it is dated February 21. The Hon. Member concludes by requesting an urgent response to this matter.

Similarly, I have in my hand the same kind of letter from other Hon. Members. For instance, the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) requests a speedy response to an inquiry from one of his constituents. A similar letter from the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) requests a response to an inquiry about the status of this legislation on behalf of constituents. The letter is dated March 28, 1983 and the Hon. Member concludes by saying:

I look forward to receiving your comments to guide me in replying to my constituents.

As I say, I have also received letters from individual Canadians who have written. I have in my hand a second letter from the same Hon. Member, the Hon. Member for Don Valley West, indicating the concern of a constituent. This letter, dated March 11, asks for a report on the status of the legislation.

Therefore, I can assure Your Honour that there is a widespread interest as reflected by many Hon. Members who have written to me on behalf of their constituents asking for advice and a report on the intentions of the Government and the status of the legislation in front of us. I have a letter from the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) inquiring about the suggestion of raising the limit to $100,000, which is a suggestion made by one of his constituents. I have a letter from the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) inquiring about the implications of the legislation as far as the RRSP stock certificate is concerned. I merely refer to those letters in order to demonstrate that, in addition to the direct inquiries from Members of all Parties, they reflect the concern of Canadians generally.

Although we have had the opportunity to appear with officials before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, where some questions have been raised with respect to this matter, I have not had full opportunity to discuss the implications of the legislation with Members of the Official Opposition.

I do have a press report today from the Ottawa Citizen which raises an issue which I think I should deal with before I conclude in order to indicate the Government's position and intention in this legislation. This report attributes to the Hon. Member from the Ontario riding of Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) the statement that it is his Party's wish that the Bill be back-dated several years so that investors in such firms as the defunct ReMor Investment Management Corporation can receive more money back.

When addressing the issue of the effective date of the legislation, I indicated in my opening remarks that it is the Government's intention that the legislation be effective as of the announcement of the legislation, which is January 17. Passage of the Bill, hopefully today, would make it effective on January 17. It is not the Government's intention that the legislation should go into the past beyond the date that the Government publicly announced its intention to change the legislation.

With respect to the specific case of ReMor Investment Management Corporation identified by the Member for Simcoe North, I would add as well that I am holding a report dated March 23 from the Ombudsman of the Province of Ontario in which he addresses issues raised by the Member for Simcoe North concerning the security of investors who had deposits in that corporation.

I should draw to the attention of Hon. Members the conclusion of the Ombudsman report at page 10, which states that there was maladministration in the registration of ReMor. The Ombudsman goes on to indicate what that consisted of. I have read the report very carefully and I would not recommend that the Government consider coverage under CIDC in this situation because I think it is very clear that it was more than simply maladministration by the provincial Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. In my view, it was gross maladministration. It is my conclusion that the responsibility for the difficulties in that case must be met by the administration responsible, which is the Province of Ontario.

In principle, we do not recommend in this Bill that the legislation be back-dated beyond the date of its public announcement. Second, with respect to the request that it be made to apply retroactively to ReMor, we say that clearly on the basis of the report of the Ombudsman, the Province of Ontario should accept total responsibility for any losses over and above the insured amounts that have been covered by CIDC with respect to the depositors in that corporation.

Although the Ombudsman refers to the federal Government in the report, he is very careful to qualify his remarks by saying that he received no evidence, conducted no investigation and it was only on the basis of hearsay that he suggested that the federal Government be involved. Since he is a former jurist, I suspect that he knew that he really did not have the basis for such a recommendation and for that reason recommended that the Province cover any amount that had been suggested might conceivably be covered by the federal Government.

In conclusion, the Bill before us and the Government's request of Members that the amount of coverage be increased to $60,000 has been well received by the public. It is a matter that has been urged upon the Government not only by Members on this side of the House but by Members of the Official Opposition. As well, it is my understanding from the comments made by the financial critic for the New Democratic Party at hearings of the Finance Committee that the NDP would support the legislation.

There may be some arguments that the legislation should be increased to the larger sum of $100,000, as has been suggested in a Private Member's Bill and by some Members in the House, but I hope that I have indicated the basis for the Government's intention to proceed to the $60,000 limit. It is based largely upon the report of the Finance Committee and on the fact that those who urged the $100,000 limit, using the American experience, must now realize that the Americans themselves are moving toward reducing the $100,000 limit under their program in certain circumstances.

Finally, because this is a self insuring plan for which the financial institutions themselves provide the funding by premiums for the program, we believe it would not be wise to go beyond the date of the intention expressed by the Government to change the amounts and to go retroactively to those institutions to tell them that they must make additional levies for additional premiums, because in the long run that would simply be a charge against the system and finally against depositors and ordinary Canadians.

I join with the House Leader who urges that this legislation receive attention and disposition by the House at the conclusion of today's business.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before I commence my remarks, would the Minister accept two or three questions to determine if we could settle this Bill more promptly, much in the way we were able to settle Bill C-136 through co-operation from both sides of the House. On that basis, would the Minister answer some questions?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That could be allowed by unanimous consent since the Standing Orders do not provide for a question and answer period at this time. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blenkarn: Would the Minister advise the House whether the effective date of January 17 will enable the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to cover the losses people may suffer in Greymac and Seaway inasmuch as both of those corporations and their subsidiaries, Greymac Mortgage and Seaway Mortgage, were seized by the Province of Ontario? In other words, they were put into a form of receivership on January 7. Is it not the case, or arguable perhaps, that the people who were depositors with those corporations lost their money effectively on January 7 and, therefore, would not be covered by a January 17 commencement date?

• (1140)

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I indicated in my comments that it was as a result in part of some of the problems that were identified by the difficulties with Crown, Seaway and Greymac which gave rise to Government's introduction of the legislation. Specifically as to whether the legislation would cover all potential claimants in those companies, if the Hon. Member would grant me the opportunity, I would like to confirm with counsel that the legislation as passed would cover those cases. That was the Government's intention. I would want to be doubly sure that in fact would be the effect of the legislation. I will get the answer and give it to the Hon. Member when I have it confirmed, hopefully this morning.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for that answer. It would be our understanding that this Bill should certainly cover Greymac and Seaway and any losses that may result in Crown to depositors. If the opinion is to the contrary, can we accept the Government's undertaking to include an amendment to set out specifically that, notwithstanding January 19 being the date of introduction of this Bill, the Government will nonetheless order and direct the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to cover these losses at least?

While I am on my feet I have one further question for the Minister. He will know that the Ombudsman for Ontario has made certain claims with respect to ReMor. ReMor, as the Minister will know, was part of the Astra Corporation. He will also know that we have raised on several occasions in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs the maladministration of the federal Department of Insurance, the Department that supervises trust companies. Will the Minister take a look at those questions with respect to ReMor and Astra and the arrangements? Will he look into the fact that a number of persons made deposits in Astra which deposits never reached Astra? Those deposits went directly into ReMor. Will the Minister take a look again at the statements and the investigation of the Ombudsman to see what he can do to make some ex gratia payment to those who suffered losses as a result of Astra being allowed to conduct itself the way it did, despite warnings and evidence that the company should have been closed up ages ago?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first question asked by the Hon. Member as to whether we would accept specifically the amendment he proposed, that is based on supposition that I find an answer from the solicitors to say the legislation does not cover these companies now. If the legislation does not cover Greymac, Seaway and Crown, it would be the intention to ensure they were covered, whether in the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member, through some other device or through some other amendment worded in a different way. I will have to take that question under advisement and report to the Hon. Member. I believe we can do that through further discussion of the Bill as it proceeds, but I will look at that immediately.

With regard to the second question, I dealt with that issue in my opening remarks. I mentioned that I had seen reference to the issue by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North. That is why I urge the Hon. Member for Mississauga South to take a look at the actual report of the Ombudsman for Ontario dated March 23, 1983. In the report, the Ombudsman recites that he has investigated certain claims against the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations for the Province of Ontario. In the first ten pages of that report he details the investigation of the charges that his section conducted under the auspices of the Ombudsman Act for the Province of Ontario. As a result, the Ombudsman concluded that in so far as ReMor was concerned there was maladministration. Let me quote his sentence found on page 10 of his report:

—there was maladministration in the registration of ReMor—

By and large, the two reasons were that the registration should not have been on the basis of information the Ministry had. The Ombudsman concludes ReMor ought not to have been registered. Second, the reasons given for the registration at the time were dependent upon a follow-up monitoring by the same Ministry which, as well, was not conducted. For those two reasons, the Ombudsman found, as he says in his report, "maladministration on the Province's part".

Having read the report, with the greatest respect I would say that it was more than simple maladministration; I would say it was gross maladministration. Those two things ought not to have occurred. Therefore, when you come to the part of the report where the Ombudsman makes certain recommendations flowing from his findings, you find a very curious thing, Mr. Speaker. Dealing with the federal Government, the Ombudsman says:

Without necessarily adopting the following—

Therefore, he disclaims what he has to say following this, which reads:

—I note that federal participation in any compensation scheme has been advocated—

In dealing with the federal role, which is the issue raised with Astra firm which was federally incorporated, and the relationship with ReMor, the Ombudsman is very careful to qualify his remarks and does not adopt them to begin with. Second, he indicates that his remarks are based on hearsay evidence. The hearsay evidence is listed in four paragraphs found on page 11 of his report under items (a), (b), (c) and (d). In my view, had the Ombudsman the opportunity of talking to federal officials or of investigating the hearsay evidence put to him, he would have found that federal officials disputed the allegations in those sub-paragraphs. Indeed, the federal department successfully disputed those allegations in the Federal Court last year was successful at trial in disputing them. The case is presently under appeal.

It is the position of the federal Government that there is nothing in the Ombudsman's report that advances the case for additional consideration. There is nothing new which the Department has not considered and there is nothing new that the Department has not advanced in a court of law in defence of those allegations. Those matters are still pending.

Having said that, I qualify my comments by indicating to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South that there is the issue of tracing. If that is what the Hon. Member has hit upon, I confirm that the Department is still working with the firm of accountants investigating the relationship of ReMor and Astra. Officials are looking at the issue of the flow through of funds from ReMor to Astra. Solicitors for the federal Department have indicated that legally there could be a basis for a claim in law. Our difficulty is not with the law or the basis of liability; our difficulty thus far has been getting the evidence to substantiate in detail that flow through.

I met with the provincial Minister, Dr. Elgie, in November or December. I requested that kind of evidence or documentation. I have to date received no more information. Obviously the matter has been raised in the Ombsbudman report. Our officials have again gone back to the law firm and the firm of chartered accountants which are investigating. If a proper case for tracing is established, the Department has always indicated that that is a proper basis for a claim and will be entertained by the Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that over the last three years a number of problems were raised in the Committee with respect to the Department of Insurance. On the insurance side, we have had the defalcation of Cardinal, Strathcona and Pitts. On the trust side we have had Astra Trust, Greymac Mortgage and Seaway Mortgage Corporation. The feeling has developed over a period of time that there is something wrong with the way the Government has been supervising these companies and the way the Department of Insurance has been operating.

Second, the previous Minister introduced a draft Bill together with a suggestion for a new Trust Companies Act. Has the Minister yet had an opportunity to confer with his colleagues on the basis of forming a special committee of Parliament to look into the whole question of the supervision of loan and trust companies and what should be done with respect to changes to the Loan Companies and Trust Companies Act?

The Minister will appreciate that the same propositions are now before the Government of Ontario. Representations have been made to him by the Canadian Bankers Association and the Trust Companies Association of Canada. The Trust Companies Act has been in need of revision for some considerable period of time. There have been promises to introduce a Bill in this regard. At this stage, before going ahead madly with legislation, it might be appropriate for the Government to take the advice of Parliament and have a committee look into the entire question. Has the Minister had an opportunity to this point to discuss such a matter with his colleagues?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I have not discussed the matter in the context of a formal submission to my colleagues in Cabinet. However, I did discuss the matter with the former Minister who had responsibility for this portfolio and who was responsible for issuing the paper calling for public input into the matter.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South is correct. The Government asked for recommendations from all Canadians. We put a time limit on the public input to that process. I believe we asked for submissions as of the end of November, 1982. We received dozens of comments from interested persons. Some of those comments were late in coming. They were received toward the end of December or early January.

I have not, in consultation with my officials, satisfied myself as to the best method of bringing this matter to a conclusion. For example we have not decided whether there is a need for the matter to be addressed before a committee and whether further public input should be sought. As the Hon. Member says, the matter is now complicated by the unfortunate experience with three provincially incorporated and supervised trust companies in the Province of Ontario, Seaway, Greymac and Crown. By parallel, the mortgage companies which are subsidiaries of those companies were brought into the control of the federal Superintendent of Insurance under the federal Loans Act.

The matter is further complicated in that under the federal legislation a hearing is required when the federal Superintendent moves to take control. A hearing is required for the companies that are sought to be controlled. In those hearings they are permitted to make submissions on the Government's intended action. Those hearings are presently continuing. I spent two full days last week receiving submissions by solicitors and officers of those companies. They were making representations with respect to the federal Government's action to take control of the companies.

I cannot say to the Hon. Member at this time that I have concluded that the best way to have the matter resolved is by reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs or whether it should be some other way. I have concluded that I should not make up my mind and I should not proceed to the next step until such time as I have had the opportunity of discussing this matter with the provincial Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, Dr. Elgie, and the other provincial Ministers who have similar responsibilities.

The Deputy Ministers of the provincial Ministers of consumer and corporate affairs met last Friday. That meeting was attended by Mr. Hammond, the Superintendent for the federal Department. The issues of sorting jurisdiction and attempting to overcome some of the difficulties that may be experienced because of split jurisdiction were dealt with at the meeting of the Deputy Ministers. As of today I have not received formal advice as to the conclusion of the Deputy Ministers.

I guess I have given the long answer. The short answer would be that I am considering the request of the Hon. Member, but it is premature. I am really not at the point to make the kind of decision that he has invited me to make.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me as a Member of Parliament that any new legislation will have to come before Parliament and that legislation might be expedited if the thoughts of Members were expressed in a committee hearing prior to the legislation being introduced. The Minister will appreciate that today the question of the $60,000 insurance limit can be dealt with rather expeditiously because a committee of this House recommended $60,000. It is rather difficult for the House to say that it will not accept the Finance Committee's recommendation made only a few months ago. It is on that basis that I make the suggestion to the Minister.

While the Minister has certain problems with respect to the management of trust companies under the existing legislation, under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation legislation rather draconian steps can be taken against both federal and provincial institutions and presumably, under Sections 24 and 25, without hearings. In other words, it is a matter of a report to the Minister and the Minister makes a decision. There is no requirement for public hearings or discussions. The Minister can move quite quickly.

On that basis, why did the Minister not take action against Seaway and Greymac under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation authority rather than under the loan and trust companies authority vis-à-vis the two mortgage corporations?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, there are two reasons why I did not move under the CIDC legislation as opposed to the action now under way under the Loan Companies Act. First, the Department of Insurance of the Government of Canada acts as the regulatory and inspection agent for the CIDC in all Provinces of Canada with the exception of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Had the difficulty arisen in any Province except Ontario and Quebec, where the actual regulation and daily, monthly or yearly control is by CDIC, it is conceivable that, having a hands on control relationship with the companies, I might have exercised jurisdiction under that legislation.

In the cases that the Hon. Member has cited in the Province of Ontario, I did not exercise jurisdiction because the Province of Ontario, through its Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, and the companies that were primarily affected, the major players—no pun intended—Crown, Seaway and Greymac Trust, were the big brothers or big sisters, if you want, in the piece. The major action was in those companies.

The mortgage companies, which were federally incorporated and under the supervision of the federal Department, were really subsidiaries and under the control of the management of the provincially incorporated and controlled companies. Hence, the Department, although it shared parallel concerns with the Province, really was a minor player in the larger picture. Obviously the control decisions were made by the interlocking boards of directors and the major decisions were made in the parent company. The mortgage companies subject to federal jurisdiction were really minor players in the piece and that is why, for example, the Province moved first to exercise control in respect of Crown, Seaway and Greymac Trust. The federal Government moved subsequently, but in concert because of parallel concerns and because the companies were all interrelated in directorship, in operations and in investment opportunities. So that in effect, if the complaint of the provincial Government at the operation of the parent companies was one that could be satisfactorily concluded, that in turn would solve the problems with the subsidiary mortgage companies.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I hate to keep on going at this. I wanted to go on with my remarks, but the Minister has raised an issue. The Minister will note that there is a Quebec Deposit Insurance Corporation that handles Quebec companies, but it was my understanding, confirmed by the Minister, that all Ontario companies are registered under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, as are most other trust companies and desposit taking institutions in the rest of the country. It is only in Quebec where they have their own insurance.

Why, then, as the Minister seems to have indicated today, did the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation delegate its supervisory responsibilities to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations in the Province of Ontario, particularly when it is the credit of Canada, not the credit of Ontario, that is responsible to ante up the losses?

Mr. Cosgrove: The short answer, Mr. Speaker, is because the Province of Ontario requested it. Second, it is not accurate to say that the delegation was a complete delegation. The Province reports the results of its inspections and supervisory control to the federal Department of Insurance through the Superintendent of Insurance and his officials, so that they are in constant communication. It is a shared supervisory capacity.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, on that basis would the Government give us the undertaking now to terminate that shared responsibility and take responsibility as required under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation? If Ontario wants to insure its depositors in Ontario registered corporations, let them do so; but if they are going to be insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, surely we cannot have a situation where the Government of Canada can slither around and say: "Well, we really are not responsible because we sort of shared the responsibility with Ontario, yet at the same time we are responsible".

Will the Minister now give us an undertaking that this whole business of letting some other Ministry in some other jurisdiction do the supervisory work, presumably on contract or something like that, will cease, that we will do the supervisory work if we are responsible for the losses?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, when I made reference to a meeting of the Deputy Ministers of consumer and corporate affairs of the Provinces and the Superintendent of Insurance for the federal Government on Friday of last week, this was presumably one of the issues that was discussed and considered by the officials. But it is a working relationship between the Province of Ontario and the Government of Canada at this time. I have not received the report as to what the conclusions of the meeting of the officials were. It is obviously something that the Ministers for the Province of Ontario and the Province of Quebec will have to consider. As the Hon. Member himself said, it invites a total review of whatever level or whatever Government it is that is supervising trust company operations in Canada.

It is premature for me to give the undertaking that the Hon. Member has asked for, though it is a matter that is being considered. The timing is quite appropriate because the Province of Ontario, I understand, will be publishing a white paper and asking for public input. The federal Government has already asked for input into changes in the Loan Companies Act, and that legislation, of course, would be before this House and presumably in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for consideration.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to commence my remarks now, if that would be permissible. First of all, it is about time we finally got this Bill before the House of Commons. When I came back to Ottawa, I was disturbed to see a press release by the Minister indicating that the Progressive Conservative Party was somehow delaying this legislation. I find it incomprehensible that a Minister of the Crown would make such an allegation. I say that particularly in view of the fact that the very day the Bill was introduced in the House of Commons, a Private Member's Bill to increase deposit insurance happened to be introduced by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). That, sir, you will recall, was Bill C-665. In debate at that time, this side indicated that we would be quite prepared to accept the Government's Bill, accept a reference of both Bills to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, use Private Members' time to get on with Bill C-142, amend Bill C-665 to comply with the terms of Bill C-142, and do everything conceivably possible to put through the increase in the limits on deposit insurance.

What happened was that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) talked the Bill out. When he ran out of time, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) stood up and finished talking the Bill out. For the Minister to issue a press release saying that somehow the Progressive Conservative Party was delaying increased coverage on deposit insurance was a heinous misrepresentation of the truth.

I say that in view of the fact that in the 90-second statements that Members are permitted, on January 26, 1983 I called for a restoration of confidence in the trust system. I said that that confidence was damaged by the Seaway, Greymac and Crown matters, and that just the day before there was concern with respect to the Canadian Commercial Bank. I concluded my statement by saying:

> It is imperative that this House constitute a special committee to examine in detail all of our agencies managing financial institutions to give people renewed confidence.

Again, on February 1, 1983, in a statement in this House with respect to the Bill before us, I said:

> This Bill could be passed through this House in one day and the urgent concerns of these depositors, many of whom are retired, would be alleviated if they were covered up to $60,000.

I concluded my statement by saying:

> Let us get Bill C-142 passed. Let us get all matters concerning financial institutions before a special committee of this House. Let us get on with it.

It is about time, Mr. Speaker, today, April 12, having reorganized the priorities of this House, that we passed this Bill. I remind you that on March 30, one day before the Minister issued his obviously deceitful statement, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) said that this legislation was not a matter of priority. Presumably it could wait through the summer because it was not on his priority list. You will see that we have done everything possible, Mr. Speaker. We managed to reorganize Bill C-136. We managed to settle that affair easily with the co-operation of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey). We have been able to bring this Bill before the House today despite the fact that it is not a priority matter with the Government and that, until today, the Government has refused to let it come forward for debate.

The whole question of how we are handling trust companies and loan companies has been before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on a number of occasions. I should like to refer to the hearings of the Finance Committee held under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) on April 23, 1981 when it dealt with the question of supervision of these companies. I should like to read into the record a question that I put on that occasion and an answer given by Mr. Humphrys, then the Superintendent of Insurance. At page 53:9 of the proceedings of the Finance Committee I stated:

> Now the Loan and Trust Companies Act allows a trust company to lend up to 75 per cent of the value of a piece of real estate, a home, for example. What are you doing to monitor that situation to make sure that the companies are not just fuelling the inflationary rise in prices and are not getting themselves in a box so that if the bubble bursts on some of these inflationary prices—prices, I might point out, of properties being sold at very much more than the cost of production—we will not wind up with the situation that existed after 1974 when the bubble burst in the last inflationary boom?

Mr. Humphrys replied:

> Mr. Chairman, the comment is correct that the law puts a limit of 75 per cent of the value of the property on the amount of the mortgage loan. That is the limit of our statutory authority to control the mortgage lending of the companies. We attempt to see to it that the values that are put forward to justify compliance with this limit are well considered; but, if the market goes up and the properties are trading at the values, there is nothing that we can do other than exercise such persuasive influence as we have on company management to have regard for the fact that the prices may be pushed up in a temporary inflationary surge and that they should not get themselves hung up too severely on these values.

In other words, the Superintendent of Insurance said that he really did not do anything. I pressed him further with respect to Astra Trust when I said:

> To a large extent the answer by some of the people in the Astra Trust case is going to be that all they were doing was lending in relation to the price of the property.

That, of course, was their answer. Then I went on to say:

> Are you doing spot checks with these companies, checking out the physicals of what they claim to be mortgages on account on a frequent basis? What checks are you doing?

And later I asked:

> All right. Are your people going out and checking those appraisers?

Mr. Humphrys replied:

> Not usually, sir, no. If he is a professional and qualified appraiser, we would accept that.

That is exactly what happened to us. The real issue before the people of Ontario at the moment is the purchase of Cadillac properties for $270 million, the subsequent sale of those properties, within days, for $500 million and the mortgaging of those properties to 75 per cent of value based not on $270 million but on $500 million. The whole issue is that the Loan and Trust Companies Act allows companies to make advances on real estate to 75 per cent of value. But what is value, Mr. Speaker? It is in the eye of the beholder. We are involved in guaranteeing deposits of people who put their money in what they think are trust companies, in what they think are secure, guaranteed corporations that are supposed to look after their money as a trustee would, but we know there are some high flyers who are not supervised and who get in the marketplace and take accounts and make loans that are totally inappropriate. They pretend they are staying within the law by pretending that they are using appraised values.

We are going to pass this Bill because we need to, but that does not solve the problem. How many times are we going to allow the situation that existed with Astra, and that now exists with the Seaway, Crown and Greymac companies, to happen again?

Deposit insurance came into force in this country after the problems that occurred with respect to a corporation called British Mortgage and Trust Company in Stratford. It was a well respected trust company in the Province of Ontario that was taken over by some people who had a little different idea from most of us of what a trust obligation was. They proceeded to do the same thing—to make fancy loans based on imaginary appraisals. The company went under and was bailed out by Victoria and Grey Trust Company. There were no depositor losses at that time but deposit insurance was brought in. Now we have a series of claims and there may be more. As we all know in our own communities, instead of real estate prices rising, in many cases they have tumbled by 15, 20, 25 or 30 per cent. When the properties are mortgaged to the hilt, a tumbling of values creates a situation very rapidly where a property is mortgaged for more than 100 per cent of its value. Yet there seems to be no arrangement by the Department of Insurance, or by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, to force companies to take out of current, proper trust assets mortgages which are in excess of 75 per cent of the value of the property. There seems to be no arrangement by the Department of Insurance properly to appraise and spot check the kinds of investments held which are supposed to be back there to protect depositors.

Let us take a look at some of the evidence given before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs by Mr. Hammond, the current Superintendent, with respect to the Greymac and Seaway matters. I believe it is important that we go over that evidence today which was presented to the Finance Committee. First of all with respect to the Seaway Mortgage Corporation, the Department of Insurance determined on its own, prior to March 31, 1982, which is over a year ago now, that Seaway was in trouble. It put a $70 million limit on the borrowing of Seaway. It renewed the right of Seaway to do business on a month to month basis. Then all of a sudden this company was not being handled correctly, as is now evident. People who had put money up for guaranteed investment certificates in that company had not even received their guaranteed investment cetificate paper. The accounting records were in abominable shape. And it is now evident that, despite the order that they could not increase their borrowing beyond $70 million, in January they were at $106 million.

I ask you, sir, where is the supervision? How come that corporation was allowed to have people in charge who paid no attention to this Minister, to any Minister, to any Superintendent of Insurance, or to any rules and regulations in connection with the management of trust affairs? The answer is that the policemen either did not have the competency, did not have the staff or did not have the power. I say they had the power, perhaps not the competence. They did not have the intestinal fortitude to blow the whistle and terminate these companies.

The same thing happened with Greymac. Greymac was on a short leash from March 31 onwards, yet people put their savings in Greymac and this Department did not do anything about it. Greymac's associated company, Greymac Credit, was able to go into the open market and buy up the shares of the Crown Trust Company. Yet the Department of Insurance and the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation—managed, I might add, by the same people as the Department of Insurance, the same policemen—did not do anything about it.

The original proprietor of Greymac, Mr. Rosenberg, was able to work with his new proprietor, Mr. Player, and they were able to use the treasury of Crown Trust, the treasury of Greymac, their mortgage corporations and their trust companies, and the depositors' money which was insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, to play games and to make maybe $125 million for themselves. If the Department of Insurance and the people supervising the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation had done their duty to Canada, had taken their responsibilities in the way they should have, the damage that was done, and has been done to all sorts of people in the country, would not have occurred. The damage which has been done to the confidence of people in trust and savings organizations, and the damage done to the confidence of investors, would not have happened.

This is a serious matter. We cannot, as a Parliament, allow the kind of poor, inept, incompetent supervision which took place with respect to Greymac, Seaway, Crown and Astra to continue. The people involved in that supervision have an obligation to find other employment. The Government responsible is this Government opposite, because this situation was brought to its attention in the Finance Committee in April, 1981. It was brought to its attention again in December, 1981. I personally asked the former Minister what he was doing with respect to flash audits. He said he was doing nothing. I personally asked him how come the same problem of lack of supervision caused losses in the insurance companies of Caledonia, Strathcona and Pitt? What did he do about it? What is he doing about the trust companies? Why is there not supervision? But nothing was done. Now depositors across Canada are going to wind up paying directly or indirectly larger premiums to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to cover losses which should not have occurred, and would not have occurred had there been proper supervision.

We have a palliative. We are going to increase that insurance to $60,000 and we are, presumably, going to bail out the depositors in Greymac, Seaway and Crown. We should be bailing out the depositors in Astra also because, despite what the Minister says, despite the warnings, they did not do anything to clean up their act; and it was because they did not do anything to clean up their act that the Greymac, Seaway and Crown affair occurred. The Minister is still depending on the same people. He still has a meeting of people in Ontario. He still has not changed his method of supervision.

I asked him today why he does not bring Parliament into the picture. Let us have some hearings and get this matter straightened around. All he wants to do is talk about it. But that is not good enough. This Bill must pass, but that is not good enough, because it will not restore confidence other than the confidence of people who will say: "At least they will cover me for $60,000". What about the $3 million lost by the Peel Board of Education on a deposit made in Greymac effective January 1, 1983?

Mr. Fisher: On the advice of the Ontario Government. You know that as well as I do.

Mr. Blenkarn: What about that? What about the supervision? The supervision was not there. My friend, the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher), says that it was perhaps on the advice of the Ontario Government.

Mr. Fisher: Definitely.

Mr. Blenkarn: I am not saying the Ontario Government has not been responsible, or that the Ontario Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations is not responsible. Indeed, I say that since we are the Government that should be responsible for financial institutions, particularly those that come crying to Canada for deposit insurance, that supervision should be done by employees of the Government of Canada through the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation and no one else. They ought to be responsible. To shuffle off responsibility on some other Government is no answer to building the confidence of depositors and investors in Canada. It is the responsibility of the Government of Canada to do that, and you cannot do it by shuffling off your responsibility on another junior level of Government.

Mr. Fisher: With a regional Premier.

Mr. Kempling: It is a real Joke, isn't it?

Mr. Blenkarn: There are two or three concerns about this Bill. First of all, the limit of $60,000 is an important one. It was suggested by the Committee as being appropriate for ordinary deposits, that type of thing. Unfortunately the Committee did not put its mind to the concern with respect to cumulative registered Canada savings plans. Members will appreciate that if interest is calculated monthly at 12 per cent, money will double itself every five years. So a modest deposit of $5,000 today in a trust company, on that basis, will be worth $10,000 in five years, $20,000 in ten years, and $40,000 in 15 years. In 20 years you are out of luck because it becomes $80,000 and the insurance is only $60,000.

Because Registered Retirement Savings Plans are of such a nature that the tax implication of withdrawing the funds is pretty damaging and they cannot be easily moved around by virtue of the Income Tax Act, it is my feeling that the Government ought to consider some provision—perhaps not now because I think it is urgent that the Bill go through—to protect Registered Retirement Savings Plans to a larger amount than the present limit, and to treat them differently when held by a trust company.

The Minister made mention of tax. The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation pays regular income tax. I suppose this is a method by which Government collects its money. It strikes me that the Government is really insuring the financial system, and why the Corporation should be a profit-making institution is beyond me. It seems to me that it should be a co-operative system that would insure deposits and handle various deposit-taking institutions in accordance with the risk presented by those deposit institutions. To make a few dollars, or $12 million as the Minister said, in corporate tax is not, in my view, the important function of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. The Minister might well reflect on the fact that what we really want is deposit insurance.

I think we are not really today addressing this particular concern by trying to figure out how to derive another $1 million or so revenue for the Government of Canada. Surely to goodness deposit insurance is not a method of trying to get a few more dollars of revenue for Canada; it is to make sure that those who deposit funds with our financial institutions have a sense of security.

The Minister mentioned briefly that premiums were going up. It is unfortunate that premiums will have to rise. They have not been one-thirtieth of 1 per cent of the amounts deposited; the arrangement up until now has been one of significant reductions in premiums. So that while the Act calls for a premium of one-thirtieth of 1 per cent on deposit, that has not been the practice. Companies who have paid for a five-year period are only paying additional premiums on additional business coming in. Sir, in fact the premiums are going up because of the defalcations, because of this mismanagement. I call on this Government, as I did earlier, to form a special committee of this House immediately to inquire into loan and trust company legislation and into the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation activities, so that we can have confidence as Members of Parliament that things are being changed, that they are going to be managed directly from now on and that we can say to our constituents, all of us, that they can have faith in the deposit institutions of Canada once again.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak for a very short time on Bill C-142, an Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. The New Democratic Party agrees that this Act needs to be passed without delay. We recognize the need for an increase in the insurance levels to protect those people who trust the system and who really in many cases do not know that much about it.

I was a little surprised to find myself agreeing on financial structures with the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). That is not a usual area of agreement as far as our Parties are concerned, but controls over financial institutions need to be increased, to the extent that security of deposits is something which people can continue to count on. There should be controls to the extent that a situation such as the Crown, Greymac and Seaway Trust affair could not happen.

It is very important that we recognize the needs of the innocent depositor who puts money into a trust company, because he is going to need the money some time down the road. It perhaps pays a little better interest, but they are not in there to make a great deal of money. These depositors are not speculators, they put money in there to save because they are going to use it for their retirement. Those kinds of depositors need to be protected. They are not putting money in because they want to make a great deal of money; they want it to be safe. So we need to look at the financial structure in order to safeguard these depositors. In fact, we should look at the financial structure which allows speculation, because speculation is an attempt by people to make money from nothing. That is not part of the structure of our country.

I believe there is little doubt in many people's minds that inflation is the direct result of high interest rates, exorbitant profits and financial manipulation which makes money from nothing, from speculation. In situations where there is no production of goods, where there is no service rendered, and in our financial structure which we have developed and with which we live, should we allow the kind of money making which does not take into consideration the requirement of protection of the small depositor? Many years ago Christ chased the usurers from the temple. Here in Canada and in most of the capitalistic western countries, we have allowed many of them to come back in a kind of structure which protects very few of the people who are unable to protect themselves.

As long as we are in the kind of system which does lack control, then we as a Parliament, as a Government, must protect those people. Apparently, a great number of institutions do not believe that they have any responsibility toward their clients but, rather, believe they should have as much leeway as possible to make as much money as quickly as possible, without concern for their responsibility toward their clients. Therefore, some kind of protection is needed and should be at such a level that the small investor feels secure in putting his money into a financial institution.

A couple of years ago, the $60,000 limit seemed adequate, and it may, in some ways, still be adequate. However, it may not be adequate two or three years down the way. That is why several Hon. Members of this caucus have suggested that perhaps, while we are changing the limit, we should put it at a higher level, rather than coming back a year or two years from now trying to raise it. We must recognize that if we did put it at a higher level, we would not reduce the effectiveness of the Bill. In fact, we would expand its effectiveness to some extent.

The New Democratic Party will support the quick passage of Bill C-142 because it needs to be passed to protect the small depositors from putting the last parts of their life savings into these companies. It does not mean that our Party is happy with the system, but we do support the quick passage of the Bill, so that the people who do trust the system and make use of it can go on trusting it and using it.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, we finaly have Bill C-142 before the House, and what a long and tortuous road it has travelled to arrive here. The Minister, who is probably one of the cloudiest Ministers we have ever had in the House, has pulled every string to keep this issue clouded.

As Your Honour knows, there are conversations across the floor on various Bills. Before we rose for the Easter break, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) came across the floor and had a conversation with my colleague, the House Leader for our Party, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis). He drifted across the floor or, should I say, floated across the floor in his usual fog and, putting on a political, partisan hat, said to our House Leader: "Your friends in Toronto are anxious to have the CDIC Bill passed". That was his comment. So our House Leader, in reply, told him to go and see the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) and request that he put it on the Order Paper for debate and that we would pass it. The Minister of State for Finance did not say that he wanted the Bill passed. He did not say that the Government had a sense of urgency that the Bill should be passed. Rather, he said: "Your friends in Toronto want this Bill passed". In other words, he—

Mr. Fisher: Your rich Tory friends.

Mr. Kempling: —has no concern, as far as I am concerned, for the trust industry, the depositors or the trust companies. He is interested only in trying to play little-minded political games. That is the way he has throughout his period of responsibility for the two portfolios we have seen him holding in this House. His purpose was to try to have the Bill passed with no debate. That was his objective. It was a typical Liberal trick. He knows that the federal Government was negligent in the matter involving Astra Trust, so he does not want the matter before the House. He does not want debate. He does not want anything out in the open; he wants to keep it under a cloud. That was his purpose in doing that.

Several of my constituents lost several millions of dollars in the bankruptcy of Astra Trust. The typical, unsophisticated investor went into the Astra Trust offices in Burlington and elsewhere and, in good faith, invested their money. They received a receipt from Astra Trust. This one happens to read: "Mrs. W. Stevens, $10,000".

When one considers the profile of the average investor in Astra Trust, this is what one finds: a relatively unsophisticated investor. By that, I mean one with no experience in investing at any time in his or her personal history. Perhaps a family that had grown up and a couple was in possession of a house which they were able to sell and from which they made a profit. So mama and papa took the money and split it down the middle, perhaps $40,000 or $50,000, went to Astra Trust and invested it. They thought they were investing in a guaranteed income certificate, guaranteed by CDIC. They found out, to their sorrow, that they had invested in a piece of mortgage, because several weeks later they received a document which stated that they were a partial holder of a mortgage somewhere down in the Niagara Peninsula.

The Minister himself, in his announcement on January 17, has continued his confusing ways. He announced that the Bill was to be introduced and that it would raise insurance limit from $20,000 to $60,000. So what happened in the trust industry? All the trust companies put advertising up on their walls and advised their clients that the limit was now $60,000. It became so blatant that on March 31 the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation issued a telegram to all CDIC members telling them to stop advising people that the CDIC limit was $60,000. That was a direct result of the Minister's release and the fact that he did not have the muscle in Cabinet to have the matter brought forward. Certainly, it would have been brought forward and debated in short order in the House, but he wanted to cover it up. He did not have the muscle with the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) to get this done. He has confused this matter as did his predecessor.

The liquidation of Astra Trust, the bankruptcy of ReMor Investment Management Corporation and the receivership of C & M Financial Consultants are three events which are interconnected through a common ownership of share stock, common directors, and twisted, crooked business dealings designed at the outset to bilk innocent victims of their life savings.

A committee for the Government of Ontario sat for weeks studying the whole matter. The evidence of the connection between Astra Trust and ReMor is so plain that the only person in Canada who cannot see it is the Minister of State for Finance. He had the audacity to say, as reported in The Globe and Mail of April 8, 1983:

> Mr. Cosgrove said he has told Dr. Elgie in the past that he would like to see any evidence of a financial link between Re-Mor and Astra. Such a link would be the "only legal basis on which the federal government could be involved" in any plan to compensate those who have suffered losses.

The link is there and it is very direct. Not only are the depositors of Astra Trust victims, but some of the shareholders have been gutted by a group of financial sharks who left behind a trail of shattered lives, broken dreams, threats of suicide out of despair and a cynicism so deep that it could lead to violence. I have heard many who have come to my office threatening violence.

Victims of the ReMor scam were baited by smooth-talking trust officers who took their money, gave Astra Trust receipts to the victims and switched the money to worthless ReMor mortages. When the victims complained, they were told they were the holders of good, solid first mortgages when, in reality, they owned a piece of a fourth or fifth mortgage on a piece of property that was next to worthless and much of which was under water.

The purists in business practice cannot invoke caveat emptor, "let the buyer beware", because most of the innocent victims who entered the doors of the trust company say on the doors, the walls, the windows and counters the display of advice that Astra Trust was a member of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. They had that warm, comfortable feeling that the Government was there to protect them. Adding to that mixture of deception, the words "guarantee" and "guaranteed" were prominently displayed in the office and in the advertising on the wall charts and brochures. When one adds the fact that Astra Trust was, of course, paying a slightly higher interest rate than other trust companies, one begins to see the dimension of the scam. It was trust company with protection by the Government and it was all guaranteed.

As in most deceptive dealings, there was another side that was not up front or displayed. It was the fact that the trust officers of Astra Trust were also commission agents for ReMor. They were paid a salary by Astra Trust and a commission by ReMor. They took the money from their mark in the trust, Government protected guarantee atmosphere and switched the money into a worthless ReMor mortgage.

The Minister of State for Finance has tried to weasel out of this dirty, smelly, disgusting mess by saying that ReMor is a provincial responsibility. That has been his comment. There are dozens of unanswered questions that must be investigated. Let me list a few. Is the Department of Insurance adequately staffed? Does it have the mandate to perform adequate inspections of the trust industry? After all, it was only a short time ago that Argosy Trust left behind a trail of shattered certificate holders.

How closely were the affairs of Astra Trust monitored by the Department of Insurance? What liaison is there between the federal and provincial Governments? I suspect there is very little.

What leverage does the Department of Insurance have that it can get the Ontario Securities Commission to hold back on a stop trading order on a trust company that has violated the regulations under which it operates? Did the inspectors from the Department of Insurance refer the advertising of Astra Trust to the Ministry of Consumer and Corporate Affairs when it was obvious to anyone that it was misleading? Why did the Department of Insurance not intervene when it was apparent that the trust officers at Astra Trust were acting as commission agents for ReMor? Surely they knew the amount of money that was passing through Astra Trust. If the Government instructed Astra Trust to close down C & M Financial Services when the trust licence was given to Astra Trust, why did it act blindly to the activities of ReMor? Was C & M really closed down? The evidence is to the contrary.

Did the Department of Insurance inspectors' report to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs indicate that bait and switch tactics were being used by Astra Trust officers? If not, why not? They certainly had enough evidence.

What liaison existed between the Department of Insurance and CMHC? That is an interesting question. The present Minister of State for Finance was formerly the Minister of Public Works responsible for housing. A question was put on the Order Paper by my colleague from Simcoe North. He asked if Astra Trust Company was an approved lender for the purposes of purchasing, making and administering approved loans under Part I of the National Housing Act and, if so, what date was such a designation approved, who approved the designation and on what basis; and, if not, had the company ever been so designated and, if so, on what date was such a designation approved, who approved the designation, and on what basis? This was the reply by the Minister of Public Works who is now the Minister of State for Finance:

> Astra Trust was designated an approved lender by an Order in Council November 22, 1979. CMHC reviewed all pertinent information and documentation submitted by the applicant and was satisfied that this applicant met all criteria established by the corporation. On this basis CMHC sought an order in council designating this company as an approved lender.

I suggest that if this was put in chronological order, it would be seen that other investigations were under way at that time. There was no co-ordination at all between the Departments.

How much money was diverted from Astra Trust into a condominium in Spain? Do we really know if the money went to that development, or is it in a numbered account in Switzerland or Liechtenstein? We know that RCMP officials traced the money as far as they could. But were directors of Astra Trust so inept that they would invest trust funds in a venture that was so questionable and which was against their charter, an agreement with the federal Government? Was it chosen, rather, as a front to deliver money to a hidden account so that it could be retrieved at a later date? I suspect that this is what happened.

With a mass of regulatory violations outstanding against Astra Trust after 12 months of operation, why was firm action not taken at that time before the whole mess festered and grew into the tangled fraud that we have before us today?

I could go on, but in the final analysis the bankruptcy of ReMor and the liquidation of Astra Trust is a scar on the entire trust industry. While some in the industry express their views verbally regarding the licensing of Astra Trust, no one in that industry put their concerns in writing, through their trade association, about the licensing of Astra Trust to the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation. They knew because they talked privately about Astra Trust and the people who were directing it.

We must ask, whom do you trust? To whom do unsophisticated investors turn when they wish to invest the proceeds of the sale of their home, bequests or other funds that they may have available?

I have contended for some time that we must have an open judicial inquiry, a joint federal-provincial royal commission, if necessary, into this matter. The personal assets of the officers and directors of Astra Trust, ReMor and C & M should be frozen by the Government. The assets of their wives should be frozen so that the inquiry can determine if loans and other funds have been diverted or transferred to second or third persons to shield them from seizure as a result of the liquidation, bankruptcy and receivership of the tangled companies involved.

If the Government fails to do this, I believe that in the final analysis the trust industry as we know it today will not exist very much longer. It is a dirty, tangled, smelly mess.

One of the headlines appearing in the papers today says: "Are the Trusts Just a Bust?" That headline appeared in a weekend newspaper. The way this matter has proceeded is absolutely scandalous and disgusting.

May I call it one o'clock?

LABOUR ADJUSTMENT BENEFITS ACT

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to speak under the provisions of Standing Order 21. My subject is Bill C-78 which was passed by the House last year in February and subsequently, after being passed by the Senate, received Royal Assent in May of the same year.

I would like to draw the attention of the House to Section 17 as it applies to a person receiving pre-retirement benefits and who is, already was or subsequently becomes a widow. If this person is receiving pre-retirement benefits under Section 17, according to the Section, the benefits this person receives as a widow must be deducted, except for retirement or disability pensions provided under the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan.

Madam Speaker, in the circumstances, a woman who is widowed and is receiving pre-retirement benefits, even if her husband contributed to the Quebec Pension Plan all his life, is penalized because her pre-retirement benefits are subtracted.

I think this has created a special problem, since widows, women who worked with their husbands, are being penalized. People who have become disabled or are retired do not have equivalent amounts deducted from their pre-retirement benefits, but as soon as a woman is widowed, she loses certain amounts under the provisions of Section 17. Madam Speaker, I would therefore ask the Minister of Labour to look into this matter and amend the Act so as to avoid penalizing women who become widows.

AGRICULTURE

CALL FOR ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, there is no question it is quite evident that our farmers are among the most productive in the world. In fact it is generally agreed that they are the unsung heroes of the so-called war against inflation.

There is no question as well that Canadians do indeed receive a tremendous deal when they line up at check out counters of supermarkets and other food stores. Those who complain about the high cost of various food products are indeed missing the point when you consider that, in Britain, families spend about 30 per cent of disposable income on food. In West Germany it is 33 per cent, and in Japan food costs are 40 per cent of disposable income. In Canada we spend little more than 18 per cent of disposable income on food.

Beset by high interest rates, escalating costs, and low prices, it is remarkable that our agricultural community is able to compete in world markets. In spite of this, many consumers downgrade farmers the minute food prices increase, no matter how little. Perhaps it is time that all of us begin to understand that, unlike many other countries, we are able to buy what we want and at prices that are among the cheapest in the world.

Our farmers deserve more recognition and credit for the tremendous job they are doing. Therefore I call upon the Government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to recognize seriously and to deal seriously with their problems in the forthcoming budget by providing all assistance necessary to keep our farmers and food producers solvent. Otherwise the farm population will decrease even move to the further detriment of our economy and of the food industry in particular.

HOUSING

ELIGIBILITY OF MUNICIPALITIES FOR RRAP PROGRAM

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, commonly referred to as RRAP, has been an unprecedented success, thanks to the project officers and other CMHC employees who helped to set up the project. For instance, in the riding of Lévis alone, 117 homes were improved during the first eight months of 1982, $491,000 were lent under the program and $379,000 will be paid to citizens in the form of grants.

We feel, however, that the rural side of the program should be broadened. At the present time, only rural municipalities with fewer than 2,500 people are eligible for rural RRAP. Otherwise, they come under the urban RRAP, and the procedure for obtaining a grant is far more laborious. We feel that the Canadian Government should immediately make municipalities with up to 10,000 inhabitants eligible for rural RRAP, and plan to raise the ceiling even more in the years to come.

We are aware that if rural RRAP were offered to all municipalities, the costs involved would be astronomical. We would like to remind the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) that the program has a direct job-creating effect on a sector that has suffered considerably, namely, the construction industry. This would certainly be a welcome addition to the budget speech on April 19.

THE ECONOMY

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, yesterday in this House the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said "the economy is performing well".

"Performing well" with Statistics Canada just releasing figures that 1,658,000 people are unemployed, with some 475,000 persons out of work and discouraged from even looking for a job.

"Performing well" with business bankruptcies in Canada up 55 per cent and farm bankruptcies up 111 per cent over one year ago.

"Performing well" with 40,000 of our young people being forced to leave their Canada to find work.

"Performing well" when the pillows of hundreds of women are wet with tears because UIC has run out and there is no money for clothes or sufficient food for the kids.

The Prime Minister must be living in a different world, or perhaps he meant the "economy is performing well" for ex-Ministers like Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Gillespie, and for Senator Pitfield. Certainly the economy is not performing well for two million unemployed, for hundreds of young people about to leave university or high school, for our businesses or our farms.

I urge the Prime Minister to get out among the people and to heed the aftermath of a similar statement from a well-to-do person in France when told that the people were hungry and had no bread. "Let them eat cake!" she said.

"The economy is performing well," our Prime Minister says. Shame!

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

OPPOSITION TO ANNOUNCED WINNIPEG LAY-OFFS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, on May 1, 1983, the CNR is scheduled to go ahead with the system-wide lay-offs that it announced in January. At Transcona Shops this means that a couple of hundred young railroaders with families, mortgages, and a will to work, are facing a permanent lay-off. Yet they also know that this lay-off could be significantly reduced if the CNR were to build the 900 coal cars it needs, in its own shops, as it is now capable of doing in Transcona, for instance. This has been their hope, and mine, that, through a decision of the CNR to build all or a portion of the cars itself, jobs could be saved.

With May 1 not far away, and in view of the fact that speculation about the coal car contract has lingered for months, I suggest to the Minister of Transport that he ask CNR, in all fairness, to make up its mind so that, whatever the case may be, people will at least know what is going on and will be able to plan accordingly. People whose economic well-being is dependent upon such decisions deserve to be informed earlier than at the last possible minute.

Having said that, I nevertheless want to repeat my contention that the lay-offs are unnecessary in any case and will turn out to be an example of tragic shortsightedness on the part of the Government, whose failure to mandate the CNR to plan for the long-term, instead of responding to short-term budget considerations, hurts not just CN workers but the whole country. If there were any economic sense on the other side we would be talking about whether more people were to be hired to build coal cars, and not about reducing the effect of an unnecessary and short sighted lay-off. There is, after all, plenty of work to be done.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

EXPLANATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTAL ACTIONS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I want to raise a point which I believe is timely, with the second Commonwealth Conference on Delegated Legislation being held in Ottawa this week.

Over the course of the life of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments where the committee has been charged with the responsibility of inquiring into the legality of regulations passed by the Government, a problem has arisen. Often our Committee counsel makes recommendations which indicate that, in his opinion, actions taken by the Government are illegal. The response the Committee has had in the past often stated that the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) had been asked and had given a legal opinion which indicated the Government's actions were entirely legal. When the Committee asked for an explanation of that, the Committee was told the opinion was privileged because of a solicitor-client relationship, and it would not be given an explanation.

• (1410)

On January 13, 1977, the then Minister of Justice, Mr. Basford, wrote to the Committee to indicate that, in future, Departments would be given the responsibility of explaining to the Committee why it was that their actions were legal. Unfortunately, in recent days we found the Government backing off that, as the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) has taken the position that only the Minister of Justice has that responsibility.

It is not good enough for a Minister to say that he is acting in a particular way because, in a secret opinion, the Department of Justice has said it is okay, any more than it would be appropriate for any of us to rob a bank on the strength of a legal opinion from a lawyer that it is legal to do so. We would ourselves be—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—UNITED STATES COURT RULING

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the decision in the United States Court of Appeal overturning the ban on urea formaldehyde foam insulation used in the insulation of residential property brings to the fore the problems of all sorts of Canadians who have taken advantage of the CHIP program and insulated their homes with this foam. In some cases the foam, improperly installed, has caused health problems, but in the vast majority of cases, as was found in the Court of Appeal in the United States, there is no health hazard.

The effect, unfortunately, of the ban on urea formaldehyde foam insulation and the subsequent publicity has been to make those homes where there is no health problem totally unsaleable and unmortgageable, and the owners of those homes have suffered enormous financial loss. The Government's $5,000 grant is of little assistance. The foam cannot be removed for $5,000 and, unless a home can be certified foam-free, no mortgage company will lend, few buyers will purchase, and then only at a significant discount.

This House must deal with the problem which the ban on urea formaldehyde foam insulation has created for home owners, by certifying those homes where there is no health problem to be safe, and by guaranteeing the homes and occupants against any health hazard.

STATUS OF WOMEN

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, women in this country still only earn 60 per cent of the average wage of men because they are restricted to job ghettoes, yet the Government states that it has a commitment to affirmative action, which is a plan to rectify this systematic discrimination. What is absent is any results from the policies of the Government. In fact there is only one affirmative action plan resulting from this policy right across the country.

I want to refer briefly to the memo that was issued a year ago in Winnipeg that directed the local affirmative action consultants not to take any action in this area. It is time that the Government started to respond and to answer some tough questions about affirmative action. How many contracts have they signed? How many firms have been visited? Has the action on affirmative action that was promised a year ago, resulted in anything? If there are no results we can only conclude that the Government has no concern about the incomes of women and no real commitment to affirmative action.

EFFECT OF COURT RULING ON NARCOTIC CONTROL ACT

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, let me bring to the attention of the House of Commons, particularly of the Minister of Justice, a recent decision of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, that affects the enforcement of the Narcotic Control Act. The Supreme Court of Nova Scotia held that the so-called onus provision under the Narcotic Control Act was unconstitutional by virtue of the provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This will allow drug traffickers to avoid the responsibility placed on them under that provision of the law in relation to charges of trafficking in narcotics and other illicit drugs. This will have an adverse effect on the administration and enforcement of the Narcotic Control Act.

I hope the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) will examine this decision very carefully and bring before this House of Commons, at the earliest opportunity, legislation that will correct the effect of this court decision. I do not think when this House of Commons passed the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms it intended to benefit drug traffickers. I think the Minister of Justice can take action to remedy this result.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE ECONOMY

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who yesterday, in response to a question posed by my colleague from Lethbridge-Foothills, stated that the young people of Canada should look at the reality of statistics rather than at the gloom that is forecast by the Opposition. Since the recession which we are suffering began in this country, 401,000 young people have lost their jobs, including 10,000 people last month. There are fewer young people employed now that at any time since 1973. Given these realities, how does the Prime Minister expect anyone in this country to believe that the economy is performing well? What rate of unemployment does the Prime Minister believe we have to reach before he will say that the economy is not performing well?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will recollect that yesterday, in the exchange with the Minister of Finance, he quoted several statistics indicating the increase in job creation and the increase in productivity. I gave some statistics indicating an increase in the Gross Domestic Product over the past several months, the past three months I believe.

It is obvious that, if you look at the figures of high unemployment and the figures of still high interest rates, you can take a pessimistic view of the future. The Minister of Finance, other Ministers and the Government are not taking that pessimistic view. They are saying that there are signs of improvement. It is these signs of improvement to which the Minister of Finance and I referred yesterday. You can always look at these signs of improvement, hang your head and say it will get worse. We say it is going to get better, and we intend to have a budget that will make things better faster.

GOVERNMENT APPROACH TO BUDGET PREPARATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, with the rate of unemployment we face in this country, particularly as it relates to young people who will be coming into the workforce very soon from the schools of the nation, I cannot understand how anyone in his right mind would suggest that the economy is working well. The Prime Minister is desensitized to the plight of Canadians who are unemployed. Indeed, it permeates the press in this country, and the Government. They have become insensitive toward the human tragedy occurring across the country in terms of those who are facing unemployment.

The Government has taken the position that it is going to tough out this recession and place the consequences on the backs of the unemployed. Is this the attitude that the Government is taking in its new budget, that the economy is performing well, when one out of every five young people in the country is out of work?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to the necessity to have an open mind, and questions whether the economy is working well. I wonder if his open mind is working well. He accuses the Government of being insensitive to these problems. Not only are we not insensitive to them, we deplore the situation and we have done a great deal about it. We spent more than $2.5 billion in the June budget and in the October-November announcement of the Minister. More than a billion of this was addressed to creating jobs and helping to create skills among the young people.

It is obviously not a matter of the Government being insensitive. On the contrary, these figures indicate that we are not only telling the people that we are trying to provide jobs for them, but we are not taking the attitude that we are going to tough it out. If we were, we would be looking at the Opposition and saying, "Let us just talk about the doom and gloom". We are presenting programs. We did in the June budget, and in November. We will do it again next week in the coming budget, to create jobs, to create the skills and create the infrastructure which will help the economy pull out of its very serious situation.

I repeat, the Hon. Member's mind must not be working very well if he has not seen this, if he just wants to look at the bad side of the economy and not look at the positive indicators that everybody is recognizing. It may not be a great future, but it can be if we decide to make it so.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, for a country that has had the poorest growth rate of all of the OECD nations, it is difficult for any of us to try to be dispassionate and look at these figures in a constructive way to find anything to give us any hope for the future, with this Government in control.

I want to ask the Prime Minister a question in relation to youth unemployment. In 1977 the Prime Minister told young people of Canada at the University of Toronto, "If they don't like it here, let them find another country. If it is just a job you want, my heart does not bleed for you." In view of the fact that in 1977 there were 411,000 young Canadians out of work and now we have 658,000 young people out of work, I want to ask the Prime Minister if this is the current continuation of his philosophy and the Government's philosophy, that their hearts do not bleed for the young people of this nation.

• (1420)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is reaching to 1977 to talk about my philosophy. I would be very interested to compare my philosphy in that exchange I had at the University of Toronto or at any one of the halls of university with that of the Hon. Member. I was telling the students that the Government could not sign a blank cheque and guarantee them their future; that we could not guarantee them jobs; that if they wanted that, we would have to have a totalitarian state in which indeed we could direct students to study this and do that, and that was my philosophy. I am surprised that it seems unacceptable to the Hon. Member. Is he holding, and is his Party holding, that the Government owes a job to everyone and that the Government should be directing every student into every particular department so that he would have a guaranteed job in some part of the country regardless of his freedom to move? I would be very surprised if that were the philosophy of the Hon. Member.

Instead of digging back to 1977 why doesn't he dig back a little bit into his own ingenuity and ask himself what his philosophy is on this matter.

REQUEST FOR ADVICE FROM PRIME MINISTER

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Prime Minister. In terms of our philosophy I think it is very clear that in our Party we believe that, in a country with the riches and the scope of Canada's, every Canadian should be able to find a job.

In terms of youth unemployment, we are talking about a lost generation. We know that one out of four young men in Canada under the age of 25 is out of work. As a parent, what practical advice does the Prime Minister have to offer our sons and our daughters who want to earn their independence and pay their own way? What practical message can they take to cope with a situation that looks very bleak to them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, now the Opposition has asked me to give my advice as a parent. I give my advice as a parent to my children. I hope the Hon. Member would have the ingenuity to do the same to hers.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, if that is his attitude, I feel sorry for all the sons and daughters of all Canadians today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DESCRIPTION OF CIRCUMSTANCES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Prime Minister.

In view of the Prime Minister's statement Monday that the economy is "performing well", how does he describe the circumstances facing the half million Canadians whose jobs have disappeared and who will never return to the work bench or never return to the mine site or never return to their ordinary job because those jobs have gone forever? What hope does he offer them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, how I describe that is as a very regrettable situation. Canada is caught up in a world-wide depression, recession, whatever you want to call it. We are part of the trading nations of the world, and we are doing our best in order to make sure that jobs will be created. I repeat, we have spent more than $2½ billion in order to do that. We are announcing projects every week. There will be more in the budget next week. We are not telling people that things are going to get miraculously better overnight in Canada just because the Opposition wills it, if the rest of the world does not enter into the recovery process at the same time as we do.

REQUEST THAT TARGET BE SET FOR UNEMPLOYMENT REDUCTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has just referred to what is appropriately described as a world-wide recession. I have a question for him precisely in this context.

There are two other industrial countries, Sweden and Japan, which have unemployment levels of 3 per cent, which is one-quarter the unemployment level in this country. The other characteristic that these other two countries have, however, unlike the Government of Canada, is that the Governments of Sweden and Japan have declared a national emergency in terms of unemployment being at 3 per cent in their lands. On the eve of the budget, given the human cost of unemployment in Canada, given the economic cost of about $1 billion a month in unemployment insurance alone, will the Prime Minister give his assurances that the Government will say there is an emergency in terms of unemployment, and set specific growth targets for 1983 in terms of guaranteeing, in terms of its targets, in terms of bringing in special programs, a bringing down of the level of unemployment by a certain percentage by the end of this year?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it would be simple enough to answer the question by saying that the Hon. Member will see for himself what is in the budget next week, but I can assure him that it will not be a budget which will try to solve the problem by slogans, by saying that it is an emergency and that we must take emergency action. The judgment of the people will be on what action is taken, not on the words that are used.

INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Government of the two countries I have referred to have not talked in slogans, they have not made vague promises in the past, they have acted. That is why, even today in the world-wide recession the Prime Minister is talking about, they have only 3 per cent unemployment.

My question to the Prime Minister is in terms of action. He did promise a while ago that we would have in Canada what my Party has talked about for a long time, namely, an industrial strategy. The Prime Minister said in 1980 that the Government, and I quote him, must not remain "a passive referee" but instead become "an active player" in the economy. Just before the Parliamentary recess the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said the opposite. He said the Government should intervene only when and where the private sector tells it to. Will the Prime Minister clear up this contradiction? Does the Government believe that it ought not to remain passive, or is it going to do now what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said, simply let the private sector do what it will and let the chips fall where they may, even if that means two million unemployed Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I don't think the Hon. Member would be suggesting that the private sector itself reflects a situation where there are 1,600,000 unemployed. The Hon. Member knows that the private sector, which includes the employers, the investors and so on, has been having a difficult time of it as well. Therefore it is not for their love of unemployment that they think the private sector can do a job. I have said many times before that this Government has a philosophy which permits Government intervention in some cases. For instance, we have made that quite clear in areas like the creation of Petro-Canada, and our national energy policy, and so on.

In the overwhelming majority of areas we say the jobs should be created by the private sector, and it is the business of the Government to try to make sure that the appropriate social legislation is in place to make sure that the people who have to be helped are assisted. But, by and large, the jobs have to come from the private sector. Therefore the private sector has to have good confidence in the future of the economy, in the way it will be conducted, and in the possibility of investing soundly in order that jobs be created.

ROLE OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister knows as well as the people on this side of the House that he did not answer the question at all. No one is saying that the majority of Canadians, now and in the foreseeable future, won't be employed in the private sector. What we are asking the Government is whether, in the context of a mixed economy, it is going to live up to its own commitment to provide an industrial strategy, which is a different kind of matter entirely.

I want to ask the Prime Minister if he is standing by his old campaign promise, or is he going in the direction of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce? Will he give Canadians a sense of hope, a sense of optimism about the future, by saying the Government will play an active role in setting investment priorities in the economy so we can get more long-range jobs which Canadians desperately need?

• (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member uses the term "mixed economy", which is the one this Government has been following. If he needs examples of Government intervention and direction given to the economy, he could look to his right and he would find too many examples to please them. He would just have to look at his own position and the position of his Party on the Crow announcement that we made some months ago. Here is a case where the Government was giving direction to the economy, proposing solutions, and what happens? The NDP sits on its hands and prefers being reactionary to change—a change which is necessary to create the infrastructure in this country.

MINISTER'S APPROACH TO BUDGET PREPARATION

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Not to engage in the interesting dialectical exercise of arguing philosophy, especially with the Prime Minister, but coming down to very practical questions of politics and policy making, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Is he using, as his premise in the preparation of the budget next week, the position of the Prime Minister that "the economy is performing well"?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can understand the Hon. Member being very fearful of discussing philosophy with the Prime Minister. I want to tell him that I am preparing a budget that takes into account the current economic situation—the situation in which the Canadian economy is finding itself, bearing in mind also the world situation in which we live. I hope the measures that the budget will contain will have the support of the Hon. Member and that, indeed, he will find there the best possible answer to a very difficult situation at the present time.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, there is no problem with me in debating philosophy with the Prime Minister, but that does not answer the questions affecting the 2 million unemployed.

BASIS FOR MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, would the Minister of Finance come back to my question? Taking all these factors in the world and in this country into consideration, is the Minister writing his budget on the basis that the economy in Canada is performing well?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, there are elements in the economy that are certainly performing much better than they were previously.

Mr. MacKay: Pawn shops.

Mr. Lalonde: I mentioned the figures yesterday. Industrial production in January registered its largest increase in nearly 50 years. The gross domestic product had its highest rise in seven years. We have had housing starts at the rate of 177,000 units in the last month. We have had the largest trade surplus in our history. We have now cut inflation in this country in half in the space of slightly over one year. Interest rates are coming down. Interest rates in Canada on short-term paper at the present time are at the same level or even below those in the United States—I mean they are not below the United States but the spread has been practically eliminated between the U.S. and the Canadian rates on short-term paper. These are positive elements. Employment has grown in the last month.

Obviously, however, there are also negatives. The main negative is the high level of unemployment at the present time, which we all deplore. We are trying to address this issue even more than we have done in the past. As the Prime Minister has said, we have taken numerous measures in that regard. We are trying to see whether we could do even more, but at the same time one should not believe that there is a kind of cure-all that one budget can bring forward.

As a matter of fact, of all the questions, that I have been asked by the Conservative Opposition in the last few weeks and days, more has contained one single practical, realistic proposal, and I am not surprised.

Miss MacDonald: Open your mind.

INQUIRY RESPECTING CAPITAL GAINS TAX

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I do not know if this is a solution or a question for the Minister of Finance. The next thing I expect him to say is that he will be bringing forth a bilingual currency, redeemable in wheat and beaver pelts or something in Winnipeg.

Is he going to do something about the taxation structure, in his budget? Is he going to do anything about the capital gains structure that has not been touched in ten years?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, my answer to the Hon. Member is that I shall be bringing down the budget at eight o'clock next Tuesday evening. I invite the Hon. Member to be present, and if he is unable to come, I should be glad to send him a copy of the budget. He will then be able to see for himself whether or not the problems he is raising are considered in that document.

EMPLOYMENT

FUNDING FOR SUMMER STUDENT PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I have received a letter from a student at Sir Sanford Fleming College in Peterborough, in which he writes as follows:

> I have applied to many programs set up for student summer employment . . . One place I applied to, for example, had 700 applications for 43 positions.

If the Prime Minister would like something tangible, I wonder if he would consider abandoning the $80 million to $100 million advocacy expenditure budget of the Government and turning that money, which is spent with no return other than propaganda, to the creation of student employment programs that are so badly needed in Canada today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, since we are in the process of saving money, could I suggest that the Tory Party give up all research money allocated to its caucus research group so that we would be able to create jobs with that, rather than have them ask silly questions like this?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DEPARTMENT'S ADVERTISING EXPENDITURES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. The Department of National Defence is spending millions of dollars on advertising to recruit young Canadians into the Armed Services but, at the same time, it is turning away thousands of qualified Canadians on the grounds that it does not need them. Would the Minister be prepared to accept a major slash in advertising expenditures for recruiting purposes in his Department, and to recommend to his Cabinet colleague that the money be used, instead, for job-creation purposes elsewhere within the Government?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, what the Hon. Member is suggesting has already been done. Our publicity budget has been cut by 52 per cent and the money has been allocated for better purposes.

SMALL BUSINESS

REQUEST FOR TAX INCENTIVES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism. In view of the fact that the small business sector is the largest potential employer in Canada, can the Minister tell the House whether he has made representations to the Minister of Finance to include employment tax credits or other similar incentives for small business in his forthcoming budget in order to encourage the private sector to create jobs, as opposed to the costly and temporary make-work programs of the Minister of Employment and Immigration? These have obviously not been working. Has he made these representations and, if so, what has been the response of the Minister of Finance?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that the Minister of Finance has met with the Small Business Consultative Committee, which is my main group. It represents small-business men from all across the country. We have had lengthy discussions with the Minister of Finance, and I know he is very sympathetic to their needs. As a matter of fact, if the Hon. Member check Hansard for the answers of the Minister of Finance in the House recently, he will know that the Minister is fully aware that small business is indeed a very important factor as we come out of this recession. I know he is aware of that, and I think that is what we need to know.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, the Minister has not answered the question.

EMPLOYMENT INCENTIVES SOUGHT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Finance, who wanted concrete proposals? Will he consider giving small business some tax incentives for employment, or will he not?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is a real pleasure to receive this suggestion from a Member of the Opposition. I shall give it my attention.

AIR TRANSPORT

MIRABEL FILE

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau): Madam Speaker, my question would normally have been directed to the Minister of Transport, but in his absence, I shall direct it to the Minister responsible for Energy. Last summer, the Minister of Transport announced at a press conference a number of measures which, according to the Minister, would enhance the viability of Mirabel Airport. Earlier, the Minister of Transport had told the mayors of the North Shore and area Members of Parliament that getting the Mirabel question off the ground was a matter of political will. It is now April 12, in other words, a year later. The people of the area, the mayors and myself, are inclined to think political will is particularly lacking in Transport officials and perhaps the Minister himself. Therefore, could the Minister responsible for Energy inform the House whether any action will be taken to implement the promises made by the Minister of Transport with respect to the fuel tax so that this airport's operations will finally become viable?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that this matter is far from forgotten. I had occasion to discuss the subject with the Minister of Transport not long ago, and there are a number of technical problems. The Minister of Transport and myself intend to find a solution as soon as possible. I hope that we will be able to report on this to the House within the next few weeks.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—REPORTED INVASION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. It has been documented by The New York Times, by The Guardian, and by Newsweek magazine and other sources, that ex-Somosistas troops supplied by the United States of America, and trained in Honduras, are invading Nicaragua. Could the Prime Minister tell this House if the Secretary of State for External Affairs protested to the Secretary of State for the United States yesterday? If he did not, when and how will Canada protest?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, I answered a similar question by the Hon. Member three or four weeks ago, and I pointed out at the time that the Government condemned, without any hesitation, all foreign intervention and armed support in Nicaragua.

Regarding representations or protests to be filed with Washington or other countries that might be active in Nicaragua, the Hon. Member will have an opportunity to put his question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he returns to the House tomorrow.

[English]

REQUEST THAT CANADA FORWARD MEDICAL SUPPLIES

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): I have a supplementary, Madam Speaker, if the Prime Minister will answer. I have been informed that the invasion is taking over farm lands as well as creating great health problems with the wounded. Nicaragua has only 14 anesthetists. Is Canada prepared to increase both its medical and food aid to that country, and in what quantities?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, I have noted the Hon. Member's suggestion and I shall give him my comments on the subject some time this week.

PETRO-CANADA

RETAIL PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy who is out behind the curtain, if he would drop in. The Minister is responsible for the price of gasoline in Canada today. Two weeks ago I visited my local BP station and paid just over 38 cents per litre for a tank of gasoline. Last week, lo and behold, when I filled up at the same location, now a Petro-Canada station, I paid over 41 cents per litre. Can the Minister tell us is this the cost of buying from the Government?

Hon. Jean Chétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the decision on pricing gasoline in the market is made by the different companies, and we are not intervening on a daily basis. There has been some great fluctuation lately in the Ontario market because there is some competition between the different companies. I have seen a regular change in the price in other places in Canada. This change between those two prices has no relationship at all to the fact that BP became part of Petro-Canada.

REQUEST THAT PRICE INCREASES BE HALTED

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Energy. I have received many letters from my constituents complaining about the cost to the Government of a recent advertising campaign announcing the purchase of BP by Petro-Canada. The re-opening of the stations by Petro-Canada, and my experience with the local station, has shown me how this purchase and the advertising were paid for by increased prices at the pumps. Will the Minister please halt these price hikes and prove that the Government is not out to gouge the public unfairly?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I do not think that the Hon. Member should make a statement like that. It was absolutely appropriate for Petro-Canada to advertise that they were taking over BP. In fact they have taken over BP because it will give them many more outlets to sell gasoline. Indeed, the residents of Canada, especially in Ontario, were writing letters to Petro-Canada requesting more stations in Ontario because they preferred to buy from that company. As a matter of fact, Petro-Canada was the only company which managed to increase its share of the market compared to the others. So if Hon. Members do not want to buy from Petro-Canada, they can always buy from an international company.

PROGRAMS TO CREATE JOBS

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. There is a desperate sector of unemployed people who cannot find work because they lack experience. They cannot collect unemployment insurance benefits because they do not have enough insured weeks. They do not qualify for welfare benefits because other members of the family are supporting them. I have a constituent who falls into all of these categories, and because of this he is disqualified from any of the job-creation programs the Minister proudly refers to from time to time in this House. What is the Minister doing to find jobs for this person and the thousands of others like him who do not qualify for present job-creation programs?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member would have to be a little more specific in terms of the person himself, and we would be very glad to have representations and to receive a letter from her. But I want to point out that there are in place a number of job-creation programs which cover a broad spectrum of opportunity. There are employment programs for students. There are wage subsidies to the private sector and to small business to hire people, particularly young people and those who are handicapped. There is the Canada Community Development Program which hires a broad range of Canadians, regardless of qualifications. There is also the NEED Program which has now approved over 30,000 jobs across the country. I would suggest, therefore, Madam Speaker, that there is a broad range of job-creation programs which are available. If the office of the Hon. Member would like to get in touch with me, I would be glad to give her the information and she could pass it on to her constituents.

PLIGHT OF PEOPLE WITHOUT JOBS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary to the question posed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville. I would like to explain to the Minister that there are people who have run out of unemployment insurance benefits. They are not youths. They are in their thirties and early forties. They will not apply for welfare assistance. They may live at home with another relative, but they have no income whatsoever—none! They do not qualify, therefore, under the NEED Program. That is the group of people that we are trying to do something about, and that is the group to which I would like the Minister to direct his attention.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am very happy that the Hon. Member has raised that question, because she has obviously been operating under a misapprehension. The fact that the very person whom she has described, with the kinds of problems which he faces, is eligible under the NEED Program. We have set up a priority listing of those who are eligible, if she would like to inform those people who are caught in those circumstances that they are eligible for these areas. I would hope that she, or other Hon. Members who are so misinformed, would correct the situation in their own areas.

REQUEST FOR CLEARER CRITERIA

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I would like to inform the Minister that his offices, the Canada Employment Centres, are turning down people, saying that they are not qualified. That is who is doing the turning down.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Where are the directions coming from? Why does the Minister not get his lines of communication straightened out so that these people are not left in such desperate need?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, if there are special circumstances, or offices, where that information is not being transmitted, I would be very pleased to hear about it and I will have it corrected. But the fact is that even when we put forward, back in January, the initial set of criteria of eligibility, we did indicate that very clearly. And every Member of Parliament received that information in their own offices. All they have to do is go back and check the actual statement of announcement which did include those people. I would be glad to check into any particular cases, but I must say that the Hon. Member had that information on the very first day of announcement.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

DATE OF PROCLAMATION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Since last summer the Government has been promising that freedom of information legislation would be proclaimed on April 1 last. Recently, however, the Government House Leader said that the law will not be proclaimed until 30 days after the end of this session. Since both Opposition Parties have said that we are prepared to give immediate passage to the resolution which will appoint the Information Commissioner, what possible reason does the Government have for not moving to bring forward this resolution immediately and proclaim the legislation, other than possibly legislative blackmail by the Government House Leader, and a desire to continue the policies of secrecy and non-accountability?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, as I informed the House some weeks ago, we are working very actively to have all the procedures and material ready. We have been doing so with a view to an April 1 proclamation of the Act. However, with the lack of passage by the House of the resolution appointing the Commissioner provided for under the Act, obviously one cannot carry out the proclamation in the absence of this vital step. I am sure the Government House Leader has taken note of my hon. friend's comments about the resolution and will keep it in mind in the organization of House business.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, we are prepared to pass that resolution today, and I am sure the Official Oppositon takes the same position.

PROPOSED SCALE OF FEES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I have before me a copy of the confidential draft Freedom of Information Regulations being considered by the Government at this time. If these Regulations are implemented, proposed costs for access to information will constitute a very serious barrier to open Government, for example, $250 for a quarter hour of computer time, and a simple request for one sheet of paper will cost at least $10. Will the Minister agree to re-examine this proposed exorbitant fee scale which will mean that freedom of information will not be a fundamental democratic right but a privilege only for those who can afford it?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, no decision has been made on this matter as yet. I will take note of my hon. friend's comments. These concerns are very much on our mind as we approach final decisions on these matters.

POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY ON LEGISLATION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, has the Minister made any inquiries of the Hon. Member who just asked the question to find out whether he has now changed his mind with respect to Bill C-43 on freedom of information, bearing in mind that the NDP voted against freedom of information when that legislation was here in the House of Commons?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: So true. Typical NDP hypocrisy.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I think the facts cited by my hon. friend speak for themselves.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—ORIGIN OF WEAPONS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Defence. As he will have noted earlier today, one of our socialist Members raised the question of the rebellious action in Nicaragua and referred to external forces. Does the Minister have any knowledge or evidence, through the usual sources, NATO or otherwise, of Cuban involvement in Nicaragua, and possible Soviet involvement? In short, the use of Soviet weapons in that country?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of any such information or allegation. In our NATO meeting we never discussed these issues of Central America or other areas outside of NATO. I know for a fact, because of the trip I have just made, that the Russians are influential in other parts of the world. As far as Nicaragua itself is concerned, I cannot affirm or negate any of these allegations.

INQUIRY RESPECTING POSSIBLE SOVIET INVOLVEMENT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, in view of certain news accounts, including a report in The Globe and Mail last week-end, of Soviet weapons being used by Nicaraguan Government troops to shoot and kill some of those who are rebelling in that country, some in fact associated with Edén Pastora, would the Minister look into that situation and report on whether in fact there is such evidence of Soviet involvement in that country?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I would be very glad to investigate with the Department of External Affairs to see if both of us could get the information the Hon. Member seeks. Personally, I would like to have the information for myself.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

STATUS OF RECRUITMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of National Defence. A month or so ago the idea was put forward in this House that the Armed Forces might consider taking in some 25,000 to 50,000 short-term enlistees to give them some employment and training at the same time. The Minister seemed favourably inclined but was having difficulty with, of all people, the Minister of Employment. Has the Minister had any luck in getting that strong man in the Cabinet to go along with him?

Mr. Kempling: Straw man.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think, as you are aware from my comments, I was in favour of having, as far as the employment program is concerned, some of our youngsters enlist in the forces. But obviously, because of the need for financial resources, I have to wait for the Minister of Finance's budget to know how much money I will get in this matter.

SUPPORT FOR PROGRAM

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, considering that 108 of the Minister's backbenchers approve of this scheme, and he has the support of the Opposition, does he have any indication from the Minister of Finance that he will make some provision in the budget for this scheme which will do much to increase employment among this army, if I can be forgiven the word, of unemployed?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Caucus and backbenchers express their views on many ways of creating jobs. Among them was one to enrol some youngsters in the military. But as far as that is concerned, I think the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Prime Minister explained the many ways this Government is making job creation very appropriate. Military enrolment is one of those ways, but we have to proceed very cautiously on this matter.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON RECRUITMENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, we were gratified when Government Members supported that policy suggestion that the Minister of Finance is always accusing this side of not making, with respect to the voluntary induction of 25,000 to 50,000 of young people into the Armed Forces. I ask the Minister of National Defence, has the Government made a decision to adopt this as policy?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, as a matter of fact, when Members mention 25,000 or 50,000 people, I think that is quite exaggerated in that I wonder if we could take in as many people as that without spending a lot on infrastructure and accommodation. We have made certain suggestions to the Minister of Finance and to the Cabinet about what we could do without spending so much money on infrastructure and reorganization. I am sure the suggestions will be taken into consideration at budget time.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, may I once again put the very simple and direct question requiring a very simple and direct answer from the Minister. Has the Government made any decision with respect to the induction of any number of young people into the Armed Forces—

Mr. Tobin: Wait for the budget.

Mr. Nielsen: —to alleviate the unemployment problem?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Again, Madam Speaker, I think the Caucus and Members on this side of the House made many, many suggestions as far as job creation is concerned. Obviously we have to wait until the budget comes down to know exactly what will be done by this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIRPORTS

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL—PROPOSAL TO CONSTRUCT THIRD TERMINAL

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I will direct my question to his Parliamentary Secretary. He will know that in Mississauga a study was done with respect to the Toronto International Airport and the new terminal proposed for that airport. Would the Parliamentary Secretary advise this House why that project has not gone forward, in view of the fact that it could be built without the investment of any public money because lessees of the terminal would in fact put up all the cash required?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to reply to the Hon. Member on behalf of the Minister of Transport. The latest studies show that the demand projected for Terminal 3 for the 1980s has not materialized. The studies indicate that this demand will not appear until the 1990s so the Terminal 3 project has not been shelved; it has been put on the shelf.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: Not been shelved, but put on the shelf?

Mr. Flis: If future studies show there will be a demand, he will get his Terminal 3, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, this Government wants to put on the shelf Canadians who want jobs. That is what it wants to do.

DATE OF THE IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Government knows that we need another terminal at Malton and it could go ahead with the project without one dime of public money invested. When will the project go ahead, and when can we put people to work?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I think it is time that the public put the Hon. Member on the shelf with that kind of a remark. As I indicated earlier, our latest studies show that there will not be a need for Terminal 3 until the 1990s.

Mr. Blenkarn: Nonsense.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-142, to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I believe I have about five minutes left in which to complete my remarks. This morning before the luncheon break, I covered many phases of the Bill and related many of the details pertaining to Astra Trust. It is interesting to note whom we have seen making representations before the House of Commons on the matter of Astra Trust and other trust company matters. I do not believe we heard anything, at any time during the tortuous events involving Astra Trust and ReMor, from the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. McBain) or the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent). However, we did hear from the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and from others on this side of the House whose constituents have lost money in that affair. Until the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) stood, there had been little or no representation from the Government benches to the various Ministers who had responsibility for the CDIC.

In the few minutes left to me, I would like to leave a few more questions with the House, because I believe that we should have a full inquiry, a royal commission into this whole matter involving the bankruptcy, the receivership and the difficulties of Astra Trust, ReMor, C & M Financial Services and all the other trust companies which have been involved in financial difficulties. I say that because we need the trust industry in this country. We really cannot get along without it. Unless some strong support and help is given to that industry in the period ahead, then I am afraid it will lapse and become ineffectual as a source of financial funds.

One of the things in the Astra Trust matter which has intrigued me is the conduct of the former Minister of Finance. Two of his officials from the Department of Insurance had to be subpoenaed by a Speaker's warrant to ensure that they would appear before a committee of the Ontario Legislature. Both of the Ministers who have been responsible in the conduct of the matter involving Astra Trust have laboured again and again to try to dissociate the federal Government from that matter. In fact, the former Minister of State for Finance has said that we should not try to link Astra Trust and ReMor unconditionally. He said that the nature of the inquiries is different, that the RCMP is investigating Astra Trust and that the Province of Ontario is investigating ReMor. He has given no information to us at all but, rather, has advised his officials, when summoned before the provincial committee, not to give evidence to assist the committee in coming to a resolution.

Then we had the spectacle of the Minister standing here today and saying that there is no connection, that he wants the Minister in the provincial House to provide him with evidence of some connection before the Government will consider reimbursing those who were gutted by the ReMor operation, before they are to receive any funds from the federal Government. I think it is deplorable, degrading and disgusting, and it is unbecoming of the federal Government of this country.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise to speak today on Bill C-142, because there was a great deal of discussion and study concerning this particular matter of deposit insurance at the time of the investigation into bank profits. As indicated earlier by the Minister and by other Hon. Members, the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, of which I had the privilege and honour of being Chairman, did bring a recommendation back to the House and to the Government that the limits of deposit insurance be raised from the present limit of $20,000 to $60,000. Subsequently, the Minister indicated that he intended to do just that and introduced Bill C-142, indicating at the time of introduction that the legislation would be applied as of the date of introduction which, to my understanding, was January 17 of this year. Therefore, we are now discussing legislation which I very strongly urge should be passed, if not today, at the earliest possible opportunity, although hopefully today. This legislation would then raise the limit, retroactively back to January 17, to $60,000.

Questions raised in a Private Member's Bill presented earlier by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) would suggest that the limit should be raised to $100,000 as opposed to $60,000. At that time I spoke and indicated that I did not agree with that increase. I raised a number of reasons at that time and I will reiterate those as I go through my comments today.

First, the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs considered the question of the adequacy of the coverage of deposit insurance. Since the deposit insurance limits which we now have were established in the mid-sixties, it was clear that inflation had badly eroded the coverage which was available to depositors under that Act. As a result, our solution was to inflation-exhaust the limit of $20,000 and to bring the global limit back to a level such that the real level of protection would be the same as it was when the limit was established in the mid-sixties. To do that would raise the level of deposit insurance coverage to approximately $60,000.

After extensive discussion by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher), the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson), the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) and others, it was found that all of these Hon. Members were, to a greater or lesser degree, of the opinion that $60,000 was the appropriate figure because it simply restored the real value of that coverage. There were, of course, certain Hon. Members who believed that a slightly higher figure would be appropriate. Others, quite honestly, were of the opinion that something lower than $60,000 would be appropriate. After due discussion and deliberation in the Committee, we were ultimately able to come to a consensual agreement that $60,000 was the appropriate figure. We therefore recommended that figure in the study on bank profits to which I earlier referred. As I have said, this Bill raises the coverage to a level today which is the equivalent in real terms of the coverage when it was established in the mid-1960s. In my opinion, it provides for adequate coverage.

One reason it is essential that these limits be raised is that with today's Registered Retirement Savings Plans and other forms of savings, which are so necessary today to protect the retirement of Canadians, it is important to have enough coverage such that individuals do not have to spread small deposits among a large number of institutions in order to protect their savings. Savings of $20,000 can be exceeded very rapidly in a Registered Retirement Savings Plan, with its compound interest and so on. It is important that we not force individuals to maintain a large number of small deposits but make it easier for them to maintain their deposits in fewer accounts. The $60,000 limit would certainly provide for that.

Many individuals who have retirement funds in place now, especially those in my riding, have contacted me in recent weeks to ask whether or not their retirement savings are indeed covered by the legislation. The Minister has indicated earlier that those who have their savings in Greymac Trust and Seaway Trust would be covered by the legislation since it would be retroactive to January 17. Since the receivership did not occur at that time, the deposits in those institutions would indeed be covered by the new legislation.

Some questions were raised in the House earlier by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South as to the certainty with which the Minister holds that view. I am sure the Minister will clarify that question at a later point in this debate. The issue at hand now concerns the fact that there is a great deal of confusion existing in my riding, and I am sure in other ridings in the country as well, about whether individuals who have deposits in excess of $20,000 in these institutions which have experienced trouble in recent months are covered by the new limits of deposit insurance. That confusion must be cleared up.

A second real problem exists irrespective of whether the new limits will apply retroactively. It concerns the fact that receivers of these institutions to which we have referred have indicated to some of my constituents who have retirement savings plans which are generating income for them now for their retirement that until the legislation is passed, even though the Government intends to cover amounts up to $60,000, the individual will have the right to receive only $20,000 maximum should any of the certificates of deposit come due, minus the interest that has accrued in income to these individuals back to the date of the receivership.

For example, if an individual had $50,000 or $60,000 in certificates in one of these institutions which came due on May 1, he would be given $20,000 less the interest that has been paid for the period of two months or three months. The other $40,000 would remain in receivership and unavailable to the individual depositor. As a result, the reinvestment of that money would not be possible. Consequently, the income stream that is generated by the savings that the individual has accumulated would fall dramatically in the ensuing months.

If the legislation was not passed until September or October, those individuals who have contacted me in my riding would have to live on greatly reduced incomes since their savings would not be available to generate the income on which they are living. For that reason, regardless of whether the legislation is retroactive, which the Minister's comments make me confident it is, it is very important that the legislation is enacted as soon as possible to ensure that these term certificates can be reinvested as they become due in order to generate the income that many individuals are depending on for their retirement income. For that reason alone, I believe it is imperative that the House not be complacent about the passage of this legislation and pass it now with all the diligence which has been shown toward the legislation.

This is a relatively simple piece of legislation which does not require a great deal of analysis and study. The Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs has conducted that study and recommended to the House in good conscience that the limit be raised to $60,000. Therefore, I would ask the House to act on this recommendation and pass the legislation immediately.

It will certainly reduce the concern that many of my constituents have expressed to me, not only about the security of their savings but their ability to generate the necessary income to enable them to carry on their daily lives. I do not believe there is any reason to hold this legislation up any longer. It has been carefully considered and its contents have been recommended to the House by all parties on the Committee. I hope the House will act on this legislation expeditiously, put it through all three stages today, send it to the other place for consideration and give it Royal Assent within a short period of time.

I wish to comment briefly on the opinion that I and I believe other Members of the Finance Committee shared about the proposal to raise the limit to $100,000. When we examined this issue in Committee we rejected the idea of providing amounts greater than $60,000 as well as the amount of $100,000 specifically recommended by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands. It was the view that $60,000 is an amount that allows individuals to spread their investments efficiently in one institution in different types of savings vehicles or in a number of institutions.

As the Minister indicated earlier, an individual may have a savings account which is covered up to $60,000 as well as a Registered Retirement Savings Plan account which is covered up to the same amount. An individual may then have up to $120,000 covered in those two accounts in any one institution. Furthermore, an individual could potentially have up to $240,000 in two institutions, and it causes very little inconvenience to an individual to cover the size of his deposit and protect his savings with federal insurance. In addition, an individual and his or her spouse could have a joint account which would allow another $60,000 to be covered. Therefore, two individuals having separate accounts and a joint account would have coverage exceeding $500,000, which is far in excess of what the average Canadian will ever have in any of these institutions. Therefore, $60,000 coverage is entirely adequate for the average Canadian and, indeed, the far above average income Canadian.

What are the implications of raising these limits? As they are raised from $20,000 to $60,000, it will be necessary for the Deposit Insurance Fund to include larger amounts to offset the potential liability that exists with the insurance coverage. That will mean each financial institution will have to pay higher premiums into the fund. After all, the insurance coverage ultimately comes from premiums paid by the financial institutions. This will mean that individual Canadian savers will either have to earn lower rates of return on their deposits—because that is where the money will come from to pay premiums—or borrowers will have to pay higher rates on loans in order to make up the additional premiums. I do not think that is necessary, Mr. Speaker. If we limit the amount to $60,000 maximum, the premium increases can be minimized and all Canadians can receive the kind of effective protection they need.

In addition, as we raise premiums we have to ask ourselves what are we doing and on whom are we putting the cost? All institutions will have to pay in accordance with the deposit liabilities they have. This means that large, efficient institutions will be paying the lion's share of the premiums in order to protect small, inefficient and improperly run institutions.

What we are doing by raising these limits excessively and requiring that the premiums be raised to fund this insurance is requiring well run, efficient institutions to subsidize potential losers, the poorly run institutions. This would give the poorly run institutions a competitive edge which they would not otherwise have vis-à-vis well run institutions. We are not encouraging institutions to be prudent and well managed when we raise the amount of insurance that will be available to them. I do not think we should provide full insurance coverage for all deposits in all institutions. There should be an incentive on the part of the institution to be well managed and prudent and to make that fact known to the public. I do not think you should place all institutions in the position of having to subsidize the losses that may occur as a result of events such as those we have seen recently with regard to the provincial trust companies that have faced difficulty.

I have a couple of comments in closing. This whole issue of deposit insurance and the issues we are facing with regard to ReMor and Astra Trust raised by the Hon. Member a moment ago, and the issues that have been raised by Greymac, Seaway Trust and others in recent times, raise a much more fundamental issue in this country than simply whether or not insurance coverage is adequate for certain financial institutions or whether these financial institutions are being run properly. What we have I would say, in my view, is an archaic, fragmented system of financial institutions in Canada.

It seems to me the time is right, in fact it has been right for quite some time, for a review as to what the powers of these financial institutions should be, where they should be able to operate and how we can stimulate greater competition between institutions. I suggest the way to do that is to bring forward a revision to the Trust Companies Act and the Loan Companies Act at the earliest possible opportunity. We should at least refer that matter to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs so we can get at it.

There are other financial institutions which have also indicated their desire to have their enabling legislation reviewed; the insurance companies, for instance. Over the years I have been in communication with co-operatives. They have indicated they would like to have some enabling legislation at the federal level allowing them to qualify for deposit insurance and to operate outside the confines of one Province. There are some others.

Years back when I was a public servant at the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, a very good friend of mine and an eminent scholar, Dr. Phil Anisman who is now at York University, completed an intensive and comprehensive study of a national securities act which would start a move into a national regime of regulating securities. This would expand Canada's capital markets and make it easier for firms and individuals who wish to start businesses to raise equity capital.

These are the kinds of broader questions which have to be addressed within the context of financial markets and institutions, in addition to the very important legislation we are dealing with here today. It seems to me the time has come for us to be looking at the broader question of financial institutions in this country. We completed the review of the Bank Act, and I think we did an admirable job of revising that Act two years ago. But I think the job has only just started. We have to move on to trust and loan companies, which are badly in need of legislative review, and to insurance companies and co-operatives, such as credit unions and the Caisses populaires, and finally to the whole question of a national securities act. We have our plate full for many years to come and I think it is time we got down to business on these things.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Are there any questions?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member think the Government should structure a committee of the House to look into the proposed loan and trust companies act and the white paper concerning that together with the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, particularly in view of the fact that we have had some real supervisory problems concerning trust companies as evidenced by the losses in Greymac, Seaway and Crown? Does the Hon. Member think that is the way to proceed, bearing in mind it is the report of the Finance Committee with respect to bank profits that suggested the Canada deposit insurance limit be increased to $60,000?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, those of us who are members of the Finance Committee have for some time now been saying precisely what the Hon. Member for Mississauga South has been saying. Trust company legislation should be referred. We have asked that it be referred. I am sure the Minister will at the earliest opportunity refer that legislation to our committee or introduce legislation in the House for first and second reading. Perhaps we can get it that way. I am sure members of the Committee would be prepared to undertake the task of reviewing that legislation, making recommendations on how we could proceed at the earliest opportunity. I think that would be appropriate. I think we are capable of doing a fairly first-rate job of making those recommendations.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, bearing in mind that members of the Committee have not been satisfied over the past three years with the management of the Department of Insurance, particularly with respect to the insurance companies Pitts, Strathcona and Caledonia with respect to Astra and ReMor, and now with respect to Greymac Mortgage, Seaway Mortgage and so on, which is clearly a sleeping policeman operation, does the Hon. Member believe that the management capacity of the Department of Insurance should be specifically referred either to the standing committee or a special committee of this House?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I am of a contrary mind to the Hon. Member on that particular question, primarily because I have not, in my analysis of the situation we have been facing, been troubled by the adequacy of the scrutiny done by the federal Department of Insurance. However, I have become very concerned with the adequacy of the scrutiny given by provincial regulatory bodies with respect to trust and loan companies. I am very concerned with that. I know that concern is shared by Members of the provincial legislature and by others who have looked into this. However, I would stop very far short of making condemnations of the federal Department of Insurance, which I think has done an excellent job in dealing with the regulatory problems it has faced. It has done an excellent job with its limited manpower. I suggest that that operation has been given its mandate and its regulatory power. It has done a very good job of dealing with the problems that have come before the country in the area to which we are referring. I would not say the same, of course, with regard to its provincial counterparts.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a couple of questions with the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr.

Evans). A number of times during his presentation he mentioned the inquiry carried out by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs into bank profits. He will recall that on a number of occasions concerns regarding the banks' high risk exposure in terms of sovereign loans were raised in the Committee.

Has the Hon. Member given any thought to the possibility that increasing the depositors' insurance, as we are doing today, from $20,000 to $60,000 might encourage the financial institutions to become even more exposed as a result of this increase? I base this question on recent studies done in the United States which have found that to be the case in the American financial scene. Has the Hon. Member given any thought to the Canadian scene in that regard?

Mr. Evans: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I mentioned in my speech, if the Hon. Member had been listening a little more carefully, that one of the problems with raising deposit insurance significantly above the level that we have recommended was that it did indeed take some pressure off the institution to be financially prudent. However, I would suggest that it is not appropriate for us to reject the increase in deposit insurance as a means of ensuring prudent management of financial institutions. That can be done through the regulatory vehicles available to us. That includes the Inspector General of Banks and the Superintendent of Insurance. As I said, these two arms of Government, these two regulatory bodies, have done a very good job.

During the study of bank profits, the Inspector General of Banks raised a concern. It is on the public record. There was concern with regard to some of the issues raised by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap that we should be looking at that issue. Indeed, we did look at that issue relatively carefully. We did make some recommendations on capital adequacy and the other issues that have just been referred to. We did look at that and made recommendations. To the best of my knowledge, the Inspector General of Banks is watching that issue very closely. From all the reports I have, it seems that Canadian banks have been able to weather this storm in a very successful fashion.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would certainly like to debate that last comment of the Hon. Member, but this is not the time or the place. The Hon. Member went on at some length about the necessity for Opposition co-operation in terms of quick passage of this Bill. He stated that the Bill has been before the House for some time and it is time we wrapped it up. I believe that is the intent of the House. It is certainly the intent of my Party.

Can the Hon. Member explain why it was, when his House Leader brought forward the 13 Bills that had high priority for moving through this House, this Bill was not included in that list?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly not my job to recommend what is priority and what is not priority to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). I can assure him that in my discussions with the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove), who brought this Bill forward originally and brought it to the House today for second reading, it was clear that the Bill had priority in his mind all along. That is reflected by the fact that it is before the House now for debate on the second day after we came back from the Easter break.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) quite often has some good ideas. He is one of the more thoughtful Members opposite. Of the two suggestions that he made today, I certainly concur with the first one, that a Committee of Parliament make a detailed study of the legislation affecting financial institutions.

If the Trust Companies Act were referred to the Committee, I am sure there would be no problem with the Official Opposition, if this session of Parliament ended and another one began, in bringing the legislation back to the Committee at the same stage, as was done with the Bank Act. That makes a lot of sense when something as complex as the Trust Companies Act is being studied.

The Hon. Member's second idea dealt with national securities legislation. When he said that, it rang a bell. I must say that it got my back up. This is something of a new idea. Can he explain briefly exactly what he means. Is there to be federal Government licensing of brokers and investment counsellors? Will there be federal control over stock exchanges? What exactly did he have in mind?

Mr. Evans: I did not know we were still on questions. I was expecting this to be a speech that the Hon. Member was commencing. There is a very large document which I think is entitled "A National Securities Act" which would provide for centralized regulatory procedures for the issuance of and dealing in securities from coast to coast.

As the Hon. Member knows, the Province of Ontario has the Ontario Securities Act. It established the standard by which most other provincial Governments established their securities acts. There are very real differences. Stock exchanges in Calgary, Vancouver, Montreal and Toronto do not operate in precisely the same way. The listing conditions are not the same. I would refer to the study by Dr. Anisman, published by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs under the title of the Minister's name. It is about that thick. It is a very well researched and well documented piece of work that is highly commended.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak on this Bill which increases the present coverage for depositors from $20,000 to $60,000. I want to assure the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) that this Party is all for that Bill and has been for a long time. We would like to see speedy passage of the Bill. However, I disagree with the Hon. Member when he says there is no blame on the federal Department of Insurance or on the Government for the fiasco in which we find ourselves as far as the Deposit Insurance Corporation is concerned.

Let us hearken back to some of the old publications of 1980 and look at what was said with regard to ReMor and Astra, Astra in particular. In October 1979 Astra Trust had been under increasingly close supervision by the federal Department of Insurance for at least two years. That was prior to 1979. We are still waiting for them to come up to $60,000 of protection, which only covers inflation to this date.

Virtually from the day that Astra started to operate, it was being investigated. The company was founded primarily through the efforts of the two men, a Niagara Falls businessman named Carlo Montemurro, and a Welland lawyer named Patrick Luciani, but only after three years of negotiation with the Department of Insurance, the federal body that regulates trust companies. The Department of Insurance was reluctant to grant Astra Trust a licence for a number of reasons. One was that Carlo Montemurro had attempted to get an Ontario trust company charter and had been turned down. You can see that we must get our act together between the Ontario Government, the provincial Governments, and the federal Government, as far as trust companies are concerned. One of the reasons was, and I quote:

—Carlo Montemurro had attempted to get an Ontario trust Company charter and been turned down, for reasons the provincial Government has not made public.

A second was that Montemurro, a bouncy 46-year-old former hockey player, had been involved with the Canadian operations of Investors Overseas Services before that company went bankrupt, leaving investors around the world holding the bag for $224 million.

And perhaps most serious, Montemurro also owned an investment company called C & M Financial Consultants, which operated in effect as a mortgage broker, raising money and investing it in mortgages. Since the trust company would be doing essentially the same thing, the federal regulators were concerned .... Superintendent of Insurance and the civil servant finally responsible for issuing Astra Trust's charter: "We didn't feel the people concerned should be running two companies in the same business, especially when one was subject to federal regulation and the other was not."

Yet somehow the federal regulators overcame those misgivings and granted Astra Trust a charter and a licence to operate in February of 1977.

This is now April of 1983 and there was six years during which we and the federal Government knew this type of thing was going on, and yet the Government did not see fit even to bring in legislation such as the Bill we are looking at now, not to mention tightening up the trust laws, which probably would take a new trust and loans Act.

As much as we support the legislation and want to see its speedy passage, we cannot stand here in and say in all seriousness that as far as the trust companies were concerned the federal Government or the federal Insurance Department was doing its job as a policing agent because we were forewarned a long time ago, long before we got caught in the web of Greymac, Seaway and Crown.

The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation was brought into being in 1967 to provide protection for the deposits held by the chartered banks. The coverage at that time was $20,000 for each individual depositor and for each financial institution. At that time it was quite adequate. That figure was established some 15 years ago, so it is totally unrealistic in view of today's economic climate. As I mentioned before, $60,000 just brings us to today's rate of inflation. The proposed amount of $60,000 is an improvement, but I feel, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and some of the others have mentioned, that a more realistic sum would probably be $100,000, or $75,000 at the very least in case inflation takes us any further than it has today. That is where I disagree with the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Inflation, high interest rates, ungovernable unemployment, our youth, 15 to 20 years old, are now looking at 20.6 per cent unemployment and the large Government deficits have contributed to our uncertain economic climate and are creating fear among individuals for their personal financial security.

The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation provides deposit insurance to banks, federally-incorporated trust and loan companies, and most provincially-incorporated trust and loan companies. Credit unions and the other institutions are administered under provincial arrangements, as we are all aware.

There has been a need to increase the limit of deposit insurance from the original limit of $20,000 per person simply because there has been a significant increase in the level of deposits together with a decline in the purchasing power of these deposits. The current fiasco with Greymac, Seaway Trust and Crown Trust certainly points out and illustrates factually the need for an increase and the reason it has come before the House. As was pointed out, it was not an item that was on the Government House Leader's 13 important pieces of legislation, and yet those depositors are sitting out there chewing their fingernails, as was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

The deposit insurance coverage underwritten by the federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in the United States has been reviewed and increased over the years to its present level of $100,000 per depositor per institution. Again, I disagree with the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre. I think it is our duty to make sure that the small additional amount that would be charged would bring it up to the $100,000 level, because it is not really that much more than what is charged for $60,000.

The limit of $20,000 per depositor per institution in Canada has not been revised, as I said, since 1967, and we all want to see it done.

Many of my own constituents have been writing or calling me over the past months asking if their interest was going to be covered, asking what is going to happen, and that was explained. I will not go into it because it was reviewed by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, but they wanted to know when we were going to introduce legislation to increase the amount of coverage. My reply to them has been as stock a reply as those of my colleagues. It is not up to us, it is up to the Government. We are all in favour of it, and now we have finally got in on the floor. My constituents have all been extremely worried about their deposits, and they are going to be worried about them in the future after what has happened in the Ontario trust market. It has been quite evident over the past few years that the Government has not been offering these individuals the protection they require.

Many proposals have been suggested over the years to strengthen the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. The Consumers Association of Canada suggested again that the limit should be $100,000, which most of us on this side of the House agree with, I think, and that the confusion should be removed from the legislation to avert any crisis of confidence. That is a very difficult thing to accomplish when one looks at today's economy in general.

The Canadian Bankers' Association had suggested increasing the coverage to $40,000 with unlimited coverage for Registered Retirement Savings Plans.

With this Bill, the Government is finally taking positive steps to ensure that there will be adequate protection for depositors. Canadian investors want to be assured that their investments are protected. I do not think they care about the little bit more that it takes to protect them as far as interest is concerned. They are tired of the uncertainty, and the best way to relieve their anxiety is to provide the security the investors have a right to expect as Canadians.

Deposit insurance was originally established in the 1930s at the initiative of the United States and in Canada as well. More serious bank failures had occurred in the United States and the authorities there were afraid that there would continue to be runs on financial institutions whenever rumours arose. Thank God we have not really had that problem in Canada. But it was feared a particular institution in the United States might not be able to pay off its depositors. Here, as I said, we do not have this same worry because there has not been the same type of uncertainty, and I think the last bank failure was in the 1920s of a relatively unknown institution, according to my information.

The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation fund is financed through premiums from its member institutions. The large, strong institutions which hold the majority of deposit are the principal source of funds for the CDIC. Again I disagree with the Hon. Member from the Government side who feels that that little bit more to be charged in premiums would hurt. Some of these financial institutions have expressed concern that their premiums would increase if the limit were increased. However, when you look at the total amount of assets and the recent increase in profits of these large banks, I have no doubt they will be able to meet the increase in their premium payments.

The deposit insurance is arranged in such a manner that the proposed $60,000 is not the total coverage available to an individual. A depositor can have a deposit in an institution with coverage at all branches of that institution, whether it is a bank or trust company, up to the maximum of $60,000. That person's spouse can also have coverage in the same bank or trust company for accounts in that individual's name up to that $60,000. As well, they can have a third joint account which is also covered. Therefore, using three different accounts, a married couple, under the $60,000 ceiling, is insured for up to a total of $180,000 in a single institution.

If we were to take that up to the $100,000 mark, we might never have to worry again, not even in a review, which in my view should be at least every three to five years.

However, like everything else the Government does, it only introduces measures after things have reached crisis proportions such as with Greymac, Seaway and Crown Trust.

I think it is a bad commentary on our free enterprise system that the Government can step in and take over such corporations. In my Province of Ontario, as we have seen, without any charges being laid, the Government walked in and took over trust companies such as Kilderkin Investments, etc., and still it has not been proven to anybody's satisfaction that there has been any fill-in. It was probably necessary but the method by which it was done leaves a lot to be desired in a country as free to operate as Canada is. Again, I think that this is a step in the right direction. If they looked at what happened to Astra some six years ago, all of this could have been averted with a trust and loans Act. A lesson should have been learned from the whole fiasco of Astra Trust which went into bankruptcy in 1980. This firm, as I said, had been under federal Government supervision virtually from the day it started in operation, but in the end many small investors lost all their money. Last week Ontario offered to pay, retroactively, some $2.8 million to ReMor investors who suffered in the 1980 collapse of that company. I hope the federal Government will consider the same type of program. We need our trust companies. We have one of the finest banking systems in the world and we do not need threats of financial collapse for any reason. I hope there are no repetitions, and I hope that the Government has learned a lesson from the ReMor and Astra incidents. They need not have happened; the warnings were there. They could not get a provincial franchise but they did get federal funding. I think that we must review the system every three to five years.

We hope that the Bill, with our support, will get speedy passage, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not have a question but I am prepared to contribute to the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Are there any questions or comments at this time? There being no questions, we will now proceed to debate.

The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker).

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise to join with others in debating the principle of Bill C-142 to amend the provisions of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. This Party agrees that this is one Crown corporation that fulfils a worthwhile role in society. The corporation does not take away the rights of individuals who operate but acts as background insurance so that ordinary depositors in banks and trust companies may have some protection when putting their money into the hands of others.

It is a corporation that enabled our parents and grandparents to take their money out of the socks, from under the sofa, under the bed, and from the backyards and put it into financial institutions, knowing that even if there were a run on the bank they would be protected to a limit of $20,000. We have to make the point that the $60,000 limit is just a reflection of inflation and is not really an increase.

I was interested to hear the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) say that we have 132 federally incorporated companies that are members under the statutes, comprising 55 banks and 67 trust and loan companies. There are also 52 provincially incorporated companies. It is nice to know that there is a broad degree of participation, but I wonder if the Minister could indicate at some point what types of institutions are operating in the marketplace today that are not part of this insurance protection. Perhaps this debate will alert Canadians to take steps to protect themselves. That might be sufficient incentive to those companies not presently registered to bring themselves within the statute.

I think we need to know that deposit insurance amounts to $118 billion. That is a contingent liability that Parliament has agreed the Consolidated Revenue Fund should accept in the event of a depression and a massive deflation. If people wanted their money, Parliament would have to come up with $118 billion, less the assets of banking and financial institutions at that time. I do not suppose that is impossible because, of course, we have already had a depression in this country.

I was interested to hear the Minister argue, as did the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), that the $60,000 limit will result in some 78 per cent of bank deposits and 92 per cent of deposits in trust companies being covered. Why not 100 per cent, Mr. Speaker? The advantage of raising the limit to $60,000 is that people can now close out many of the $20,000 accounts they had in different banks. They can now consolidate those accounts to a limit of $60,000. If, by the mechanism of setting up accounts in different institutions, people can obtain 100 per cent protection for their financial assets, why do we not just incrase the limit automatically to 100 per cent of the deposit? It seems to me that by putting the limit at $60,000, if there is a depression we are going to injury the ordinary Canadian who puts all his savings into one account compared to the more worldly-wise or business oriented person who spreads that money over different institutions. So why not protect the innocent, rather than those who are sophisticated?

I was glad to see that this Bill will be effective as of January 17. I look forward to hearing the Minister confirm to the House and to Canadians that all those people who put money into Crown Trust and Seaway Trust will be covered. I think that is the purpose of the increase in the limit, and we agree with that.

This protection that is granted to our citizens should be seen in the same light as stabilization programs or crop insurance. It is there to protect the people from precipitous declines in economic activity or in an emergency that might cause them to have less certainty or to take other courses. That is a legitimate role for Parliament to play. I can stand wholeheartedly behind the principle of the Bill, as can most Members.

This also shows that good laws pass this House quickly. I hope the Government will take this as a lesson and keep Bills short and to the point in future. Any time there is a real feud in the House it is over omnibus Bills or Bills that attach a whole bunch of amendments that affect other statutes and are undesirable in certain parts of the country. In such cases, Members have to oppose a Bill although they may agree to 75 or 80 per cent of the content.

The Bill before us today shows that if the Government brings in short Bills and addresses a problem directly, the Parties can often come to agreement. The Government sometimes accuses us of obstruction but, as you know, Mr. Speaker, 120 Bills have been passed. The average time for a Bill to pass through the House is three days. That is not bad in a country the size of this one. After a Bill is introduced it takes many weeks for people all across the country to become fully aware of it and to make their views known to their Member of Parliament so that he or she can make some input in caucus and committees and also in the House Committees. It takes time to pass Bills, and so it should in such a huge country with the diversity of interests and of language and religion that, on the surface, could split the country as they have so many other countries. The beauty of Parliament is that when a Bill is introduced, there is enough time to receive input and to achieve the compromises that make our laws acceptable to the citizens.

I hope that all Members of the House will adopt the ninth report of the Standing Committee on Procedures and Organization, Mr. Speaker. That would permit Madam Speaker to have a panel of ten chair persons who would develop expertise on certain legislative matters. Therefore, when a Bill such as the Bill on the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation came up, the chairman of that legislative committee, who would be assigned the Bill, and a small group who would work with him, would have some very real skills on that particular legislative matter. It would not interfere with the Standing Committee which would be dealing with other matters like Estimates and special inquiries into Crown Corporations. I hope that Hon. Members will accept that because I believe it would be of great help to us.

While we need to have the certainty of this Bill so that people will be able to invest their money and not have to worry about a precipitous decline in its value, let us not forget for one moment that the reason we have this Bill before us is that it is the 100 per cent predictable and logical result of the policies of the Government over the last 15 years, which, instead of proposing a program and a corresponding tax for people, proposed a program which permitted people to keep the tax low and borrowed the difference.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, in this year alone, we are, through this Parliament, injecting into the economy of Canada some $30 billion more for the programs than we are taking away from the people in terms of taxation. We are taking away from the people $30 billion by way of borrowing in order to make up the difference between the cost of the program and the taxation withdrawal from people. The ordinary citizen will ultimately pay that, but for the moment we are borrowing from people with wealth, paying them a good rate of interest, then we are distributing the money among all of us citizens. That deficit, of course, Mr. Speaker, now totals over $200 billion if we add in the deficit of the Crown Corporations. That has caused an enormous inflation in the country, which in turn has led to the high interest rates, because people do believe they are entitled to a real rate of return on their money. Historically, it was always 2 per cent or 3 per cent. More recently, the real rate of return has been much greater. Even when the inflation rate was 12 per cent, the interest rates were 19.5 per cent in the 1981 issue of Canada Savings Bonds, which meant that people had a greater rate of return on their money in 1981 than ever, I believe, in the entire economic history of this country. And this was at a time, Mr. Speaker, when hundreds and hundreds of thousands of people were being laid off, and when the Old Age Security benefits of our senior citizens were being restricted to a 6 per cent raise in their incomes, some $180 this year. We Members of Parliament were taking something like $3,900 out of the economy. Deputy Ministers earning $100,000 were taking an extra $6,000 out of the economy. The reason we have this Bill before us is the result of those accumulated bad policies which have put every sector of our society in jeopardy.

There are, however, certain sectors we are protecting. We are protecting with this Bill those people with enough money to have a savings deposit somewhere. There are many Canadians in this country who do not have one extra cent which they can put into a safety deposit box, by way of share certificates or cash in the bank. They simply live on a hand-to-mouth basis. Again, Mr. Speaker, that is the result of the deficit, because when you borrow $30 billion from people with wealth and you pay that back to them at the end of the year, together with the accumulated interest, they become incredibly wealthy without having to take any risks or responsibility. Indeed, if they put their money in different institutions up to $60,000, the state will guarantee them 100 per cent return. Of course, that concentration of wealth is at somebody's expense, because every nation has only a certain amount of capital which it has developed and which is ongoing at any one time. When we add this to the people who already have wealth, it invariably comes out of the pocket of the ordinary working Canadian, and very often it is the farmer who is on the land, or the man who is working in the factory.

That is why I have argued time and time again, Mr. Speaker, that we need a whole new philosophy in times of high inflation. We need to have flat across-the-board settlements rather than percentage settlements, because that will bring our society closer together rather than making the rich richer and the poor poorer, and leading to a class society which gives people no chance but to go on the streets.

I would like to state clearly to anyone who might be listening across the country, that they need to be aware that they have this protection up to only $60,000. If they are anticipating depositing $100,000 in the bank, they should slit it up and put it into two different institutions, in order to have full protection. I would like to state again that we believe that the amendment of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) was entirely reasonable at $100,000 rather than $60,000, because it is not going to be a draw on an ongoing basis in the Consolidated Revenue Fund. As I understand it, this is a self-sustaining, self-paying insurance program with the premium rate being one-thirtieth of 1 per cent from the contributing institutions, and the only time we will get involved is if there is a depression, and the only time there is going to be a depression, Mr. Speaker, is if we leave the current Government in with its philosophy of sustaining deficits. In order to protect themselves really, Canadians must get out there in the next election and defeat the Government at the polls. That means defeating the Hon. Members opposite, who are otherwise very good people with good thoughts on business, but we must defeat them individually so we can get the Government out.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I must say this has been one of the more enjoyable days which I have spent recently in the House of Commons in terms of the quality of the debate, the seriousness of the debate and the questioning which has occurred. It has been a very positive debate. I believe Hon. Members have been really making an effort to contribute to the improvement of this legislation which is before us, and coming up with suggestions to improve subsequent legislation of a similar nature.

I listened with interest when the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) brought forth the proposal that it is high time we began to examine, via the Finance Committee, the matter of trust and loan companies in Canada. I will certainly endorse that position.

I must say, however, just to be positively critical for a moment or two, that it was January 17 when the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) brought forward this particular Bill for first reading, under a considerable amount of pressure. Pressure had mounted, particularly in the Province of Ontario, because of the problems we were having, to take some action to protect the number of depositors who were very frightened at the possibility of losing parts of their deposits because of the financial difficulties certain institutions were experiencing. When you consider that depositors' insurance rate, or amount, was set way back in 1967, it is surprising that there has not been more of an effort made by the Government to improve and update this particular amount since 1967, knowing the tragic results of the high inflation rate and what it has done across the country. However, while one might stand here and cast stones at the Government's inaction over the past decade or more on this matter, the point is, I suppose, that we are dealing with it today, and for that we should be thankful. I am certain that depositors across Canada will be thankful also when this legislation is finally passed.

I listened with interest when the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre was encouraging the support of the Opposition for rapid passage of this Bill when I remember instance after instance when Hon. Members of the Official Opposition, as well as Members of the New Democratic Party, were indicating their willingness to pass this Bill in a day's debate, a very limited debate. Let us get on with it now so that we can bring some sense of security, Mr. Speaker, to the people of Canada. These are such unnerving times, with uncertainty and fear across the country, that this is one small effort Parliament could make to ease the concern so many Canadians have regarding their deposits in various financial institutions. Members opposite were quite prepared to co-operate, yet when the Government House Leader said a number of days back, "We have some very important legislation on which we want the Opposition to co-operate to obtain early passage", it was interesting to note that one Bill was conspicuous by its absence from that list of Government priorities, namely Bill C-142 which would protect depositors across this country. However, let us recognize what small gains we do make these days and recognize that we are debating this legislation this afternoon and, hopefully, we will see its passage before the day is out.

While there is no question that the NDP supports this Bill in principle and will vote in favour of the principle of the Bill when we have the opportunity, we do have a number of concerns. My first concern is with regard to the amount we have identified as the insurable limit of $60,000 on a particular deposit. I recognize that you can make two cases. One, that the amount could be, and perhaps should be, higher. In the U.S. the maximum amount of coverage is $100,000, and there is no reason that we could not have that in Canada. When the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald) presented a Private Members' Bill reflecting that upper ceiling, a number of good examples were put forward. I remember that not long afterwards I had the opportunity to raise the issue with my constituents. In speaking at a number of town hall meetings, I found people were wondering why it was necessary to have $60,000 as the maximum, let alone $100,000. Then, through discussion with a number of people there and subsequently with Members of my caucus, it became clear that when many Canadians retire they sell their home and find themselves with a sizeable piece of change. It is not unlikely to have a typical family with $60,000, $80,000 or $100,000 as a result of the sale of their home. When invested, that amount will see them through their retirement years as a supplementary income. For that reason perhaps we ought to be looking at higher levels of depositor protection. I would encourage the Minister to give this some thought in bringing forth a subsequent Bill in the months ahead to achieve the security that Canadians are seeking today.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I supported the idea that it was to an investor's advantage perhaps to have his or her deposits placed in a number of institutions. We have seen the dangers in the last number of months of placing all our hopes in one particular venture, or putting all our eggs in one basket, when we saw the Government's so called economic strategy consisting of the large energy megaprojects in western Canada. When those projects failed to materialize, then the hopes of that particular strategy were dashed. Again, I think we want to encourage Canadians to reflect upon the advantage of placing deposits in perhaps two, three or more institutions so that they may have better protection for those hard earned deposits. However, we still recognize that under this legislation one may have a deposit of $60,000 in one institution, $60,000 in another, and $60,000 in a shared account or shared deposit between husband and wife, which again would be protected. In the final analysis, I believe the $60,000 maximum is adequate and will serve Canadians well.

I do want to mention to the Minister that in spite of the fact he introduced this legislation for first reading back in January, 1983, and made it very clear that it was retroactive legislation, it was interesting to note that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation asked its member institutions to stop advising clients that the maximum insurance provided was $60,000. In other words, the institution was advising its clients that they do not have protection to that amount at this time. If this legislation passes the House and receives Royal Assent, then they will, but at the moment the maximum allowable insurance is $20,000. So I think Canadians were, in a sense, misled to a certain extent because Bills can be amended. At least I would hope the Government has that option open to them.

Mr. Fisher: Why didn't you say that about the Income Tax Act?

Mr. Riis: Perhaps the amount we are talking about is not $60,000, but it could be amended to $40,000 or $80,000 or whatever. So I believe the Minister has to be criticized for perhaps inadvertently providing a false sense of security to Canadians.

There is a particular point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, one that deserves some analysis today and which has not been discussed at length until this point, that is, whether coverage up to $60,000 is really in the best interests of the country. Leaving aside the depositor's point of view, I would ask what that does to the institution's perception of how risky a venture it is prepared to take on. When we carried out the analysis of bank profits in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, one thing became very, very evident. The banks of Canada had over-extended themselves in many areas. They had become highly exposed and consequently were considered by some to be relatively risky financial ventures. When one looks at the year-end accounts of the class "A" chartered banks of Canada, I think one has to draw the conclusion that on a number of occasions they made some very imprudent loans and found themselves in very serious and over-exposed positions, particularly when it came to sovereign loans. Perhaps this insurance protection of $60,000 will encourage those institutions, who have made imprudent loans in the past, to continue that behaviour. It is simply speculation at this point, but it is something the American Government has been concerned about for some time. As a matter of fact, their deposit insurance institution has raised this issue.

I do not have to refer to the United States to remind Hon. Members that not so many years ago the Economic Council of Canada made a particular recommendation to Members of the House of Commons. I remember, when the Economic Council was before the Committee a few weeks ago, asking the President or chief executive officer of that particular group, Mr. David Slater, what he did for a living. Did he serve the people of Canada well? Did he advise the Government properly? He said that he did, and I think members of the committee felt that indeed we were receiving some relatively sound advice from the Economic Council. They were able to lay out what the problems were in terms of our economic future, and consequently the Government was expected presumably to respond favourably and positively to those recommendations. Well, back in 1976 the Economic Council of Canada recommended that deposit insurance premiums ought to reflect the specific risks involved in the same way that a bond rating company evaluates the diverse securities of Governments and corporations. This step would add to the flexibility of the system. Institutions which chose to hold safe portfolios would benefit from lower insurance premiums, whereas those holding risky portfolios would not. I want to emphasize that this is an insurance scheme, and usually insurance rates reflect the state of riskiness of a venture. If one is a driver today and has had 250 auto accidents compared to the driver who has had a safe driving record for the last 20 years, one will probably be paying a different rate. Compared to the person applying for life insurance who is 25 years old, one who is 80 years old will be paying a different rate because of the different risks. However, in this situation, regardless of what kind of risk one may be, regardless of how risky is a venture in which the financial institution is involved, one pays the same premium. That is quite a peculiar insurance company.

We have a similarly peculiar insurance company which is called the Maritime Pollution Claims Fund. That is the fund under which a certain levy is placed on every barrel of oil which comes into eastern Canada to protect the East Coast in the event of an oil spill. Whether one has a two-bit, old, beat-up, rusty ship or a super, ultra modern tanker, one pays the same rate. It is ridiculous, yet it is called an insurance fund. It is a ridiculous fund because obviously the old, tin-pot rusted out venture out there, filled with oil, is more of a risk than the ultra, super, brand-new tanker. The same is true with this piece of legislation. Certain trust companies which can go unnamed at this point because we all know what they are, which are over-extended, involving themselves in some questionable, peculiar activities which are imprudent by anyone's definition, are paying the same rate, 0.3 per cent of their insured deposits, as the venture which is the most conservative, the most laid back or, the best way to say it, the most "secure" venture available.

I guess what I am saying is that it is unfair. Not only is it unfair, but we must consider that we are in a situation which is quite different from the one which prevailed when the Insurance Act was introduced back in 1967. At that time, when the decision was to levy a particular premium on the insured deposits of 0.3 per cent, the banking or financial system of Canada was relatively tranquil or stable. Since then, however, the situation has changed. We are in an incrediably dynamic financial situation which is changing by the month in terms of new approaches, with new technology and techniques being applied to the way in which we manage our finances. The Inspector General of Banks himself admitted that it is virtually impossible for him and his Department to keep on top of the system these days. We have a financial system out there which, to some of us at least, appears to be out of control in certain areas in terms of the people of Canada having any sense of what is going on with regard to regulations or the ability to regulate some activities.

I will use an example of some of the questionable practices of the banks in terms of their offshore ventures. I think that if the realities or the truth were ever known, if an explanation were required as to what those ventures were, which is not the case under present legislation, Canadians would be somewhat concerned. Therefore, here we are in a situation where the banks of Canada have now expanded into the international lending sphere, which is certainly much more risky in terms of the loans Canadian chartered banks make in countries such as Argentina, Mexico, Venezuela, Columbia and the like. It is questionable whether these countries will ever repay those loans. We find today that 20 per cent of 40 per cent of the total business of some of our chartered banks concerns overseas activity. Also, the total liabilities of banks have expanded to more than 30 times their shareholders' equity.

Mr. Blenkarn: Thirty-four.

Mr. Riis: In some cases, it is as high as 34, and some months back it was as high as 38. These are highly risky, highly levered situations, again placing the situation in quite a different risk climate than we were experiencing back in 1967.

The problem that I see is that we must make some changes to the Bill before we will be happy with it. I do not believe that today is the time to offer those amendments because of the need to pass this particular legislation to bring some security to the depositors across Canada. However, I would certainly urge the Minister to consider the unfairness of requiring the same premium to be paid by both risky ventures and secure ventures. If it is really an insurance scheme, then I suggest that that ought to be changed and changed quickly.

I want to mention one other aspect which has not been considered seriously to this date. To enable the CDIC to cover deposits in the three trust companies in Ontario concerning which there was some difficulty, the federal Government must approve a loan of $500 million to the agency. The CDIC previously had only $260 million in available funds based on premiums paid to it by its 150 member institutions, including the banks and trust companies. What that means is that it was ultimately the people of Canada who had to come back and guarantee the situation. The premiums which the companies themselves were paying, that is, .3 per cent of their insured deposits, is perhaps not adequate under these dynamic financial times to provide the necessary coverage if the CDIC had to come to the federal Government to have a $500 million loan approval offered to it. Perhaps in terms of the ultimate security to Canada's depositors, these are some of the items which should be reconsidered.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) in a moment.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Regional Development—Hawker-Siddeley plant at Trenton, Nova Scotia—Request for assistance; the Hon. CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove that Bill C-142, to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred by unanimous consent, to Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair would like to remind Hon. Members that under Standing Orders of the House of Commons, under permanent and provisional Standing Order 15(3), when an Hon. Member is speaking, no Hon. Member shall pass between that Hon. Member and the Chair. I would hope that Hon. Members would adhere to that Standing Order in the future.

Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail), the Chair should first inquire as to whether there are questions or comments arising from the remarks of the Hon. Member who spoke last.

Mr. Nickerson: I would like to ask a question, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, who has just spoken, went on at length criticizing the operation of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation because, according to him, it will not operate under proper insurance principles according to which the premiums or the levy should be greater when there is greater risk. He also cited the operation of the fund which has been established to compensate people in eastern Canada who are victims of oil pollution. He said that this Bill operated the wrong way, in his opinion, because everyone was subject to the same levy. These are sound conservative insurance principles.

However, in Canada there is another insurance scheme, that is, the Unemployment Insurance scheme. This one, according to the Hon. Member's principles, presumably works backwards because the premiums are less and the benefits are greater when the risk is greater. Is the New Democratic Party advocating that unemployment insurance benefits in Newfoundland should be less than they are in Alberta, or that residents of Newfoundland should pay higher premiums? That is the natural corollary to what he was saying this afternoon.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I actually appreciate the opportunity to speak on this point because the NDP has always considered the Unemployment Insurance scheme not to be the best method of ensuring adequate incomes to people during difficult times. We have always advocated a more comprehensive universal social scheme to replace it. What the Hon. Member is making is again the kind of simplistic inquiry that one would expect from a Tory backbencher on a topic such as this. It reflects once again their, or perhaps his, inability to understand the complexity of this particular problem.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a genuine pleasure for me to participate in this debate this afternoon, to come back after our recess and sense this fresh breeze of co-operation that exists in the House this afternoon. I speak of the attitude among all Parties in the House with respect to Bill C-142, an Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. I certainly want to congratulate the Hon. Member who spoke before me, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), the NDP financial critic, for his positive attitude toward the importance of this Bill.

He did raise a few points in his comments about Unemployment Insurance and about the Minister's statements on this. However, I am sure he will agree, and all Canadians know, that the principle of insurance is based on sharing the risk with the largest number of people involved. It would follow, with respect to the Bill we are debating today, that the same principle would apply and the same benefits would accrue to all Canadians. The issue with which we are concerned today is a matter of bringing ourselves into the eighties and updating this measure to meet the needs of all Canadians in our modern times.

The main purpose of this short Bill is to increase to $60,000 the amount of protection provided by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation on savings deposits placed with financial institutions in Canada.

As most Members know, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is a Crown corporation that was formed in the centennial year of 1967 under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. The main purpose of the Corporation is the insuring, within limits, of savings deposits placed by the public with member financial institutions. The existence of deposit insurance has given security and stability to the savings deposit market in Canada and has almost completely eliminated any fear of runs against financial institutions.

All banks and all federally incorporated trust companies and mortgage loan companies that accept deposits are members of the Corporation by law. Provincially incorporated trust companies and mortgage loan companies accepting deposits may become members on application if the Province of the Corporation concurs and if the financial condition of the company is acceptable to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

At the end of 1982, 132 federally incorporated institutions were members of the Corporation, of which 65 were banks and 67 were trust companies or loan companies. At the same time there were 52 provincially incorporated trust companies and loans companies holding membership.

At the end of 1982, the total assets of the Corporation amounted to approximately $255 million. Its income for the year amounted to approximately $14 million in the form of premiums and $25 million in the form of interest. Deposits insured by the Corporation as of April 30, 1982, amounted to $118 billion. The corporation is a tax-paying institution and is expected to pay approximately $12 million in taxes in respect of the 1982 taxation year.

The Corporation is governed by a board of directors comprising a chairman appointed by Order in Council, and, ex officio, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Deputy Minister of Finance, the Inspector General of Banks and the Superintendent of Insurance.

The three principal purposes of the Bill are, first, to increase the maximum limit of insurance on each deposit; second, to increase the borrowing authority of the Corporation; and, third, to reduce possible misunderstanding when member institutions receive funds that are not insured deposits. In addition, there are a few technical amendments not involving any important principle.

As I indicated in my opening remarks, the Government has indicated the importance of bringing the Bill up to date to meet demands in the country today. The previous speaker referred to some recent incidents which occurred in a Province which caused great concern to many Canadians and certainly to investors and depositors.

I suggest that it speaks well of our present Government that we have accepted the responsibility of assuring Canadians that, through this Bill, they are encouraged to deposit their savings. We are showing them that we are prepared to take the necessary action to protect them in every way possible by increasing the amount of coverage from $20,000 to $60,000.

Another attractive feature of this measure, which was referred to by the previous speaker, is the fact that this legislation is retroactive to January, 1983. The legislation is being changed in recognition of a number of changes that have taken place. Many are aware that deposit levels have risen of a consequence of inflation. The existence of deposit insurance has probably had an effect in increasing this type of savings as compared with other possibilities such as investments in bonds or stocks in the market. As well, the existence of tax deferred plans such as Registered Retirement Savings Plans and Registered Home Ownership Plans have probably also stimulated savings of the insured type. As a consequence, it seems desirable to make an increase in the level of deposit insurance at this time. The $60,000 limit proposed was recommended by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in its report on the profit situation of the chartered banks published last July. It is estimated that the $60,000 limit will cover approximately 78 per cent of the deposits in banks and 92 per cent of the deposits in trust companies and loan companies.

Some suggestions have been received that the limit should be set much higher than $60,000. The Government is conscious of these suggestions and also of the fact that in the United States the limit on deposit insurance under the Federal Deposit Insurance Plan has been set at $100,000. However, we believe that a limit of $60,000 would be appropriate for the Canadian plan at the present time. It is important to keep in mind that the basic purpose of the plan is to insure savings deposits rather than to insure investments at a level where the investor could be expected to exercise his own judgment or seek professional advice. It is not desirable to interfere in the normal functioning of the financial market by setting a deposit insurance guarantee at a level that puts all other types of investment activity at a disadvantage.

As well, it is important to note that the main volume of premium funds received by the corporation come from the large, strong institutions, whereas the smaller and less known institutions are probably the beneficiaries of the plans to an extent that is out of proportion to their relative size. There has to be some reasonable limit on the extent to which the large institutions are forced to contribute to a pool of this type.

The Bill proposes no change in the premium structure. Under present rules, the annual premium required of each member institution is one-thirtieth of 1 per cent of the amount of insured deposits. However, the Corporation has certain limited authority to reduce the premiums below this level if it believes that the fund is adequate.

With respect to borrowing power, the Corporation now has the power to borrow up to $500 million from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. Any such borrowing is to meet financial needs to the extent that the Corporation cannot conveniently meet these needs from its own resources. Any such loans would be at a rate of interest that is appropriate to the circumstances and would be repaid by the Corporation, either from realization of its own assets or from the revenue produced by future premiums.

It is important, if the CDIC is to play its full role as a stabilizing influence in the savings deposit market, that it be of such size and have resources sufficient to make clear to everyone concerned that it can fulfil the function that it is intended to play. The borrowing limit of $500 million set in 1967 was adequate at the time. However, the total amount of all insured deposits is now more than six times the amount that was insured in 1967. In the context of this fact and of the increase in the insured limit from $20,000 to $60,000 it seems appropriate to provide the Corporation with access to larger financial resources to meet emergency needs. The Bill, therefore, proposes that the borrowing authority be raised from $500 million to $1.5 billion.

With respect to possible confusion where a member institution accepts money that is not insured, the Bill proposes that all member institutions be required to mark clearly any instrument issued in return for funds where the transaction does not give rise to an insured deposit. Certain exceptions are specified in the Bill where it is most unlikely that any misunderstanding would occur. The purpose of this provision is to meet certain problems that have arisen in connection with the operation of the Corporation over the years.

Because of these pertinent facts and of all the figures and other substantive information I have given, I encourage and urge Members on all sides of the House to assist us in the giving of second reading to Bill C-142 as expeditiously as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions, comments, debate.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: Listen to the applause, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Keeper: There is only one person applauding.

Mr. Thacker: Let those who have ears listen.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, before I get into the detail of second reading debate on Bill C-142, I would like to digress a little, but no more than did the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). He made the remark that he favoured greater federal presence in the securities business. I have some reluctance in accepting offhand that type of advice. If the federal Government gets into the business of regulating the sales and dispositions and trading in securities of corporations that are provincially chartered, I think that might cause some difficulty. If all stock exchanges in Canada were to become subject to federal regulations and all operated the same way, we might not have as good a system as we now have where legislation affecting the operation of stock exchanges is made by the various Provinces. The example that comes to mind is what happened in Ontario several years ago at the time of the MacMillan Windfall episode. At that time the Ontario Securities Commission, the Ontario Stock Exchange and the Government of Ontario of that day decided they wanted to get out of the junior end of the securities business. They wanted to concentrate solely on blue chip issues such as Inco, the Bank of Montreal, Chrysler, Massey-Ferguson and so on. When they got out of the junior end of the business, the action went to Vancouver. The Vancouver market grew and expanded because it was fulfilling a necessary function, that of raising junior capital largely for resource exploration. It was obvious to Canadians that that type of business was required in Canada. Had it been a federal decision to get out of the junior end of the business, there would have been nobody else to look to and we would probably have lost it entirely. As it is, with these things under provincial jurisdiction, people in Ontario who now realize they made a mistake want to change their rules to draw back a little of the business from Vancouver.

To get on with the second reading of Bill C-142, amendments to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, let me say that I, like just about every other Member of the House, am in favour of the provision to raise the maximum insurable deposit from $20,000 to $60,000. This amendment has been brought to us largely at the urging of the Opposition. We spoke out on this matter at considerable length some time ago before the crisis, the Greymac Trust and Crown Trust fiasco, which brought the matter to the attention of the Government and forced the Government to act. About the only sense of fulfillment we have on this side of the House, and presumably what will continue to happen until the time of the next election when we will then find ourselves on the other side of the House, is that once in a while we have the opportunity to say, "I told you so".

I would like to quote from Hansard of February 17, 1982 when I spoke, over a year ago on this matter under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I said then:

> Madam Speaker, in order to take into account the decrease in the value of money brought about by years of Liberal-caused inflation, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):
> That the maximum deposit insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation be increased from the present limit of $20,000 to a more reasonable limit of $100,000.

This allows me to say, "I told you so." It is nice to see the Government acting on my recommendations, Mr. Speaker.

What I would like to see happen in this House this afternoon is the same as what was brought to our attention by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre. We would like to see the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove), responsible for financial institutions stand in his place and give an absolute assurance that the provisions of the Bill we are debating today will apply to the victims of the Greymac Seaway disaster. There is some doubt that is the case. I see the Minister is nodding, and I hope he will do as has been asked by Members on both sides of the House today.

Personally I would have preferred it had the limit been raised to $100,000. This figure has been accepted in the United States of America since 1978. We are told the $60,000 limit corresponds, after taking inflation into account, to the original $20,000 set in 1967. It is pretty evident that inflation, even if controlled somewhat, will continue. The huge deficits run up by the present Government of Canada will guarantee this will happen. Therefore, it will only be a matter of a few years' time when we will have to address this issue again because the limit will have been eroded by inflation. If we now raised the limit to $100,000, it could probably be kept in place for a number of years.

Like the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail), I think that a system of deposit insurance is fundamental to a modern banking system. Any fractional reserve system of banking is inherently insolvent. On occasion the banking system, individual banks in particular, are subject to runs. The only way this can be stopped is to have the cash ready for depositors when they come to the window and ask for their money. If that cash is not available, the whole system is subject to the domino effect. One deposit-taking institution after another can fall by the wayside unless somebody has the cash handy to hand out.

Before a system of deposit insurance was brought into effect in the United States in the thirties and a little bit later in Canada, runs on banks and the collapse of banks, especially the smaller ones, were much more frequent than today. Probably one of the greatest advances made during the Depression years in order to ensure that repetitions of the disastrous financial collapses of that time would not reoccur was the institution in the United States of a federally-sponsored system of deposit insurance.

Before that was brought into effect, providing cash in times of crisis was largely up to the major bankers of the day, who sometimes rendered sterling services in making loans available to various banks and institutions that were in fear of collapse because of a run on them taking place.

It is a better system to have a federally-sponsored deposit insurance than to leave it up to the larger bankers in the country or in a particular area. Of the many Crown corporations that we have in Canada—and I do not know how many we have altogether but probably about 450 federally—in my opinion the Deposit Insurance Corporation is one that really fulfills a necessary function. It is something that Canadians can be proud of.

It is my intention to look at some of the provisions of the Bill. Of course, the most important one is the increase from $20,000 to $60,000 of insurable deposits. Everyone who has spoken on the Bill has mentioned this. There are other items in the Bill that deserve some attention.

The Hon. Member for Restigouche mentioned that the maximum amount that can be lent out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation will be increased under this Bill from the present limit of half a billion dollars to $1.5 billion. I would like to know where the $1.5 billion comes from. It is a nice round figure. I will be proposing some nice round figures later, which I would have some difficulty in justifying absolutely. When this Bill is at Committee stage, some explanations should be given as to why the $1.5 billion is to be imposed. Why is it that figure rather than $1. billion or $2 billion? Why was it decided that the correct figure was $1.5 billion?

I agree with the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) who, when it comes to insurance is very conservative, that the Corporation should be self-financing. I agree it is necessary that the Corporation in very particular and, in unusual circumstances, should have the authority to borrow money from the Government out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. It has to have that authority for those times when everything goes awry and it needs a lot of cash at one time. Hopefully the cash can be paid back once the emergency has receded. However, by and large the operation of that Corporation should be self-financing. It should be financed out of the premiums it charges.

The present levy is one-thirtieth of 1 per cent of deposits. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap misled the House when he said that it was .3 per cent. I am sure that was inadvertent. No doubt he will have the opportunity to correct that. It was obviously just a slip of the tongue. He cited the figure wrongly by a magnitude of ten.

I understand that CDIC presently has $260 million on hand. At least that is the figure cited in the press. It is stated that about $200 million of this could be used up as a result of the Crown Trust default, if that is the right word. It probably is not. In any event, it is the Crown Trust case. If that were to take place, there would be virtually no cash left within the Corporation. Therefore, as a very immediate measure, it should have authority to borrow from the Government.

In my opinion, the CDIC should have a cushion of about $500 million from which it could operate. Please do not ask me why I came up with $0.5 billion. I do not think I could explain it any better than the gentleman opposite could explain the $1.5 billion figure. It seems in the region of adequacy.

In order to build up that cushion, it might be necessary to increase the premium over the intermediate or short term. Perhaps a system could be adopted whereby the premium would be increased until the cushion was built up. I am not adverse to the insurance principles voiced this afternoon by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, but we might have difficulty unless we have a formula based on past experience of allocating different premiums to different deposit-taking institutions. Because the premium or levy is so small a percentage, if we were to go by strict insurance principles, the levy for different institutions might not be that much. For the sake of simplicity, we might be able to live with a system of a uniform levy. After the cushion had been built up to the $500 million range, it may be desirable to decrease the premium.

I now want to look at the different ways in which the Deposit Insurance Corporation can fulfil its function. The worst case is where an institution goes absolutely belly up, is no longer there, and the CDIC has to pay the depositors up to the maximum amount.

I am pleased to see contained within the Bill a minor amendment to Subsection 13(4) of the Act which has the effect of clearing up certain possible legal difficulties with regard to who should be paid by the Corporation. I understand that previously it had to be the depositor named in the books of the member. There might be some errors there. The owner of record of that deposit might not be the beneficial owner of that deposit, so I am pleased to see that that technical amendment has been made.

When the member deposit-taking institutions is savable, when it has not gone completely belly-up but where with a little bit of help it might get by, there are various ways in which the CDIC can operate. Formerly the main way in which it did this was to make a loan to that member. Now in the Bill there are other proposals. I am not quite certain whether CDIC had the authority to help out in these other ways, but now it is quite explicit. It now has the authority not only to make loans to the member institutions but it is to have the authority to guarantee loans. If a trust company is in difficulty and wants cash on hand to pay its depositors, it can borrow that money from a bank and CDIC now has the authority to guarantee that loan. CDIC now has the authority to make a substantial deposit in a deposit-taking institution which is in trouble, and it is pretty obvious that that has the same effect.

If depositors are standing in line wanting $200 million that probably does not exist and CDIC comes along and puts a deposit of $200 million in that institution and says that it has no intention of withdrawing those funds for some time, then the effect will be the same. It will be known that the institution has cash with which to pay its debts, make good the deposits, and the lines will discontinue.

There are certain good points about these other methods of dealing with the problem. Certainly CDIC is to be given a greater degree of flexibility than it had previously. It has a greater number of weapons in its arsenal to fight insolvency. But there are also some points about this that are not so good. First of all, when it goes into loan guarantees and deposits-making, there is no actual cash involved so it is not so hard to do and it is sometimes done under the bushel, so to speak. It is away from the eyes of the public and away from the eyes of Parliament. CDIC could perhaps over-extend itself not by cash loans but by way of loan guarantees. We see this in other areas of Government where loans have been guaranteed and the Government says, "Oh, they are never going to exercise that guarantee". But then things go from bad to worse and the Government gets hooked. I have seen that at the provincial level and it seems that I have also seen that at the federal level.

If these things are to happen, in my opinion, then there should be maximum numbers imposed on the guarantees and on the deposits in these shaky institutions and these matters should be reported regularly. These matters, I suggest, need careful study in committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any Hon. Members rising to ask questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken? If not, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke).

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I want to take just a few moments of the time of the House to add some words on Bill C-142, an Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. I, too, favour the principal proposal in this Bill to increase the amount of insurance on individual deposits from $20,000, which was the amount established in 1967, to $60,000, an amount that will approximately reflect the loss of purchasing power since that time.

It is worth noting that the Act covers deposits in 91 federal member institutions, including 29 banks and 62 trust and loan companies, and 54 provincial deposit-taking institutions, making the total of 145.

We have agreed, I think, that the limit of $20,000 was a ridiculously low amount and had to be changed. However, there is one principle that has not been addressed in this Bill, and that is that it was already easy under the $20,000 limit to circumvent the limit by moving funds around, by opening deposit accounts in different institutions or in different names because the $20,000 limit only applied to accounts that were held in one individual name.

Now the $60,000 will overcome the purchasing power problem but it will not change the fact that depositors will still be able to move funds around and put funds into more than one account in more than one deposit-taking institution and achieve coverage that perhaps the Government did not intend to give in this amending Bill.

I think it was another colleague, perhaps the Hon. Member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Nickerson), who suggested that there should not be any kind of limit at all. That is something that the Government—

Mr. Nickerson: No, it was not.

Mr. Clarke: It was not the Hon. Member for the Northwest Territories. I heard another colleague suggest that we should not have any kind of limit. I think that should be studied by the Government because it is so easy to get around this $60,000 proposal by having multiple accounts in different deposit-taking institutions. Probably all our deposits should be insured. I leave that to the Government to consider.

When the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation was established in 1967, obviously it was felt that there was a need for protection for depositors. Indeed, some three years later, the Commonwealth Trust Company collapse in Vancouver confirmed that need. The loss then as recorded by the Corporation was $5 million. There was not another loss until 1980, but by then the funds had begun to build up and build up. By 1980, the Corporation had on its books a cumulative surplus of over $200 million. By the end of 1981, the surplus in the premium account was $167 million and in the accumulated earnings, $58 million; the surplus totalled $225 million at the end of 1981. I have been unable to confirm the 1982 figure but using that progression, it is now probably $260 million in surplus.

Where is the surplus, Mr. Speaker? A reference to the Public Accounts of Canada or the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation's annual report tells us that $82 million of that surplus is invested in Government of Canada Treasury bills and another $82 million is invested in Canada Bonds. A total of $164 million has been taken out of the CDIC and invested by the Government in its own securities.

If the money has just come out of one company and gone into the Government coffers, then I would like to know what the difference is between this kind of a levy or so-called premium and a tax. I do not think the Government will be successful in answering that question because they do not answer it about many other forms of tax like Canada Pension Plan premiums and Unemployment Insurance premiums. These things all just go into the federal pot and get lost.

If it is a tax, then is it a desirable tax? The premiums for 1980 were $22 million, and the 1981 premiums were $20 million. I suggest, and I know from the annual report, that reduced premiums have been in effect for the last ten years, presumably because the surplus is building up adequately. Well, now the surplus is building up in any event. The investment surplus in 1981 was $13 million so that to tax the companies, which amounts to taxing the depositors another $20 or $22 million, seems to be totally unnecessary. All of that money, the $20 or $22 million, could be left in the company's hands. The Bill will increase the loan capability of CDIC from $500 million to $1.5 billion. I contend that there is no need for the company to build up a surplus at the rate of $35 million or so every year. This is not a private enterprise but a Government enterprise. The Government is making it possible for the CDIC to dip into the Consolidated Revenue Fund on the basis of loans for anything from $500 million to $1.5 billion. The surplus that has been building up is totally unnecessary and leads to the kind of abuses that the Auditor General reports nearly every year.

Another reason why I say this surplus is not required is that the Department of Insurance supervises all of the deposit taking institutions and also the operations of CDIC. Banks, trust companies, mortgage and loan companies and mortgage investment companies are supervised by Government. A surplus is not necessary. Altogether, 145 companies are insured in the CDIC. Even in a year as disastrous as 1982, it is extremely unlikely that these companies would produce a substantial loss. The losses produced in any year are going to be relatively small if the experience of the last 15 years is a guide. And, of course, we should not consider 1982 as an exemplary year. If CDIC should go into a deficit position, the Government has given it the power to borrow $500 million, and is now proposing that it have the power to borrow $1.5 billion. If the borrowing power were used, it would mean lower premiums for all participants in the scheme.

Looking at the financial condition of the company and even taking into consideration what happened in 1982, it would appear to me that the premiums could be suspended for the foreseeable future. Let the losses, if any, absorb the surplus and then, if the company needs to, let it dip into the borrowing power given under this Bill. If there is a big loss, it makes no difference if CDIC has to cash in its Government bonds—the Government then has to find the money to retire the bonds so that CDIC will have the money to pay its claimants—or, if CDIC simply goes to the Consolidated Revenue Fund and borrows $500 million or even $1.5 billion.

While we agree with speedy passage of this Bill, I appeal to the Government for a renewed assessment of the need for a surplus which is left in the hands of the Government rather than in the hands of the taxpayers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Francis in the Chair.

On Clause 1—

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put some questions to the Minister of State for Finance arising out of the second reading debate before we proceed to approve clauses. The Minister and I had a discussion concerning the Bill, and I think we came to an agreement but the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra has indicated that he has some concerns about the inbreeding, in effect, that is going on.

The Superintendent of Insurance is a director of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation and is responsible for the supervision and management of registered trust and mortgage companies. The Inspector General of Banks is a director and he is responsible for the banks that are covered by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. He is supposed to inspect them and look after them.

I wonder if the Minister has given any thought to changing the directorships to make sure that there is another check and balance in the process of managing the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation so that the interlocking control that seems to exist will not take place but that different people be made responsible for the Corporation than are responsible for the operation of the institutions covered by the Corporation.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, there was some discussion of the point raised by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South on the potential for change of directors or the widening of the directorships. I agree that the Superintendent of Insurance and the Inspector General of Banks are closely associated with two sectors of the economy that are large depositors in the Corporation and that this could be perceived as inbreeding.

On the other hand, I would urge that the Hon. Member consider that it is the very strength of their position that gives them the ability to advise the Corporation. They have knowledge gained in the supervision of the industry and through that, can ensure the strength and the health of the industry. On the one hand there is a danger that they may be so close and so expert that they may overlook something. Perhaps the difficulty with an expert is that he is so good at what he does he loses the larger picture.

We have not received requests from member organizations that the directorships be changed; we have not received a submission from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs advising the Government that the membership should be changed, and we have not received submissions from the public to that effect either. I agree with the Hon. Member and we have had the thought in mind.

Because we feel that the advice has been strong and the experience in the Corporation has been good, although he might refer to a hypothetical difficulty with the directorships we are not inclined to make a change at this time. If the Hon. Member wishes to develop that line of thought further I would certainly be willing, as I am sure the directors of the Corporation would be, to consider a well presented brief. We do not see any need for the change at this time but we are willing to hear further submissions on the point.

Mr. Blenkarn: Further to that issue, Mr. Chairman, the other directors of the Corporation are the Deputy Minister of Finance, the Governor of the Bank of Canada and one outside director. Obviously the Minister gets no complaints from the institutions. In the case of trust companies, the Superintendent of Insurance is their superintendent. You are surely not going to find them complaining about the Superintendent being their chief insurer, and you are not going to find very many banks complaining about the Inspector General of Banks. I have never heard a bank complain about that. That has been one of the concerns of the Finance Committee as to whether the banks were well enough supervised because they seem to get along in a very patsy arrangement with the Inspector General of Banks. The Deputy Minister of Finance, from the way this country is being managed right now, is probably having enough trouble just keeping the books of the country together. The Governor of the Bank of Canada tells us he has to bring on additional staff just to look after the borrowing requirements of the Government. It strikes me that the only people who are effective directors of this Corporation are the very persons who are responsible for making sure that these institutions are operating according to law.

Earlier, in the second reading debate, I brought out the fact to the Minister that we had real concerns. Indeed, I certainly expressed concern at the meetings of the Finance Committee in 1981, and subsequently with respect to how these institutions were being supervised by the Superintendent of Insurance. To have the Superintendent of Insurance, or his people, running the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation effectively really means that the Superintendent of Insurance can use the Deposit Insurance Corporation to cover up his own mistakes in management. Perhaps if the Superintendent of Insurance had been on the ball and had pulled the plug on Greymac and Seaway a year ago, we would not have the problems we have today with those corporations. We certainly would not have the problem with Crown Trust because the owners of Greymac could never have purchased Crown Trust. No one would have sold it to them. They could not have financed it. Therefore, the problems that this Corporation now faces would not be there had the Superintendent of Insurance done his duty.

I ask you, therefore, could we not at this point consider that very seriously and make sure that we do not have a person who is supposed to be judge on one side and judge on the other side, policeman on one side and policeman on the other side, and no cross-reference control?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, with respect, I do not believe the Hon. Member has advanced his case. As a matter of fact, I believe he has weakened his case in his representations; the point being that he has confused the role of the Superintendent of Insurance in his relationship to the Corporation. He is merely one of the directors. Along with him, as the Hon. Member has indicated, there is the Deputy Minister of Finance, who has responsibilities to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance has responsibilities under Acts of Parliament, the Administration Act. These Acts require the Minister and his deputy to act in accordance with law for the public good. Similarly, the obligations assumed by the Governor of the Bank of Canada are to act in the public good, not on behalf of the Superintendent of Insurance or on behalf of any other official of any other Ministry of Canada. Therefore, the role of the Superintendent of Insurance in that makeup is simply as one of the members, and he is joined by other officials who have a legislative responsibility, which is to act for the good of the public, generally. I believe there is, therefore, a safeguard built into the operation of the Corporation.

I do not want to appear quarrelsome, Mr. Chairman. I did say in my comments that the role of the Superintendent of Insurance, the former Superintendent of Insurance who has recently taken retirement, and the role of the new Superintendent of Insurance, were challenged in the courts, and at trial none of the statements which were repeated by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South were upheld by the court. I admit that that case is under appeal, but I would respectfully suggest that the Hon. Member really is jumping to conclusions when he makes those allegations. I emphatically reject the allegations made by the Hon. Member that the Superintendent of Insurance, or any officer or employee of the Government of Canada and the Department of Insurance acting for him, acted in any way which was less than the duty imposed by the statutes or any less than what a reasonable and efficient officer of the Government would have been required to do under their circumstances of employment. That is the case which the Government put in the Federal Court of Canada. It was one, as I have indicated, which was upheld by the independent judiciary. I certainly hope that the Hon. Member is not casting any aspersions on the judiciary in his wide brush condemnation of staff, because it is not supported by the judiciary.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister, in light of the fact that Crown Trust, Greymac and Seaway are all provincial institutions, whether he could clarify to me what the role of the federal Superintendent of Insurance is with regard to the regulations of provincially chartered institutions?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre for that question. It gives me the opportunity of indicating that, of course, in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec it is the provincial ministries which are responsible for the licensing and supervision of provincially-incorporated companies, and that includes Crown Trust, Seaway Trust and Greymac Trust. Giving the Hon. Member for Mississauga South the benefit of the doubt, I thought, when he used simply the name of Greymac and Seaway, that conceivably he may have been referring to Seaway Mortgage and Greymac Mortgage, which are, of course, federally incorporated companies. The Hon. Member will know that he raised these very questions at the Finance Committee meeting. He asked the Superintendent what circumstances prevailed vis-à-vis these companies during the last few months. The Superintendent responded that they have been on short licence and that the Superintendent had been monitoring their performance very closely, and was monitoring them very closely up until the month of December, 1982. The Superintendent was not satisfied with the performance of the companies, notwithstanding the warnings and requests that they comply with the statutes. They moved in the first week in January to assume control under Section 73 of the Act.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, that is most interesting but I thought we were talking about the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. I was wondering if the Minister could tell me, if the directors of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation are not responsible for enforcing the Act, who is? Are the Seaway Trust Company, the Crown Trust Company and the Greymac Trust Company not insured under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation? And does the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation not provide, under Section 24 and Section 25, that if that Corporation is not satisfied the securities are available to satisfy the requirements of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, it is required to do something to effect the closing down of those companies and prevent those companies from taking deposits insured under the provisions of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act? Does that not mean that he is also responsible as the Minister designated in the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, this is really a rehash of the questions we went over in this morning's deliberation. At that time I pointed out that by way of agreement between the Province of Ontario and the federal Government, the Province has the responsibility for supervision and inspection of provincially incorporated companies. Reports are made available to the Superintendent of Insurance as the agent for CDIC federally. But it is not as if the Department is acting in isolation. I have indicated in the House and Committee that, because the Superintendent was already involved with subsidiary companies of Seaway, Greymac and Crown, both the federal and provincial ministries had taken parallel steps to indicate their concern and moved to exercise supervisory control over those companies. So that although the major responsibility is with the Province, the federal Department was aware of difficulties and had moved in areas in which it has specific responsibility to take specific steps to protect depositors as well as the interests of the Corporation.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Chairman, I have two questions for the Minister. In his speech he set out the number of financial institutions covered by the statute. Are there a number of financial institutions not presently covered, and which ones are they so that Canadians can be aware of that?

Mr. Cosgrove: My officials advise that there are none that we are aware of, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Chairman, the Government has chosen to limit the amount to $60,000. We of course would like to see it at $100,000 because first, that coincides with the United States whith which we have a lot of investment going back and forth and we might as well synchronize with them, and, second and more important, some innocent people will be caught even with a $60,000 amount if there were ever a major catastrophe. That compares to the more sophisticated investor who will put his money into more than one institution and cover himself for 100 per cent. Why are we leaving at risk the less sophisticated person with, say, $100,000 who puts it in just one bank account?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, in my opening remarks I attempted to explain that when the Act was originally introduced it was designed to protect the ordinary investor in Canada. It was not designed to provide total protection to everyone, certainly not, for example, to those large companies or very wealthy individuals who would have the advantage of lawyers or accountants to advise them in their investment practices. By and large the result of the move to $60,000 would bring a great measure of protection to the majority of Canadians. As I recall the figures, it was something like 92 per cent of deposits in trust companies and somewhere in the high seventies for banks.

I would remind the Hon. Member of the study done by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and Members on both sides of the House, who looked into this issue in detail. The basis of their recommendation to increase the maximum amount from $20,000 to $60,000 had to do with the general performance of the economy. I would also remind him that if he is using the American experience as a precedent, then he should be aware that there is a move afoot in the United States to decrease the $100,000 maximum because the experience is that it is too rich. The American administration in certain areas has now moved to actually limit the $100,000 and to reduce it in certain categories. So I think that for those reasons the $60,000 is an adequate amount.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister confirm that the exposure to the Consolidated Revenue Fund is $118 billion? If there was a total collapse, that presumably would be the amount to be paid out less the value of the bank's assets which could be recovered. Could the Minister tell us what the value of those banks would likely be and what the exposure to the Consolidated Revenue Fund would be?

Mr. Cosgrove: Those facts are correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, when the sum of $60,000 was determined, was the rationale simply the increase in inflation since 1967, and did it also include consideration given to the changing nature of the financial institutions in Canada since 1967 and their over-all exposure?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I was not a member of the committee which studied bank profits and made the recommendations, but I have read it. I think both those matters were taken into account by committee members. As I recall, the most important one, and one on which they spent some time in demonstrating mathematical parallels, was the one having to do with inflation. In other words, you will find that 60 per cent is very close to the actual inflationary experience in the economy from 1967 to the time the committee considered the matter.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I would like some clarification regarding the fees paid on the insured deposit. Do all participating members, regardless of whether they have participated since 1967 or perhaps others who have been participating since 1977, do they all pay .03 per cent of their insurable deposits on an annual basis, or is there some differentiation depending on the length of time a firm has been participating?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the answer is yes. It is a uniform amount irrespective of time involved.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, I would like clarification of Clause 8(2), which says that in order to be eligible for deposit insurance a deposit must be repayable on or before the expiration of five years. I would like an explanation of that, and I would also like to know whether there are going to be other considerations set out in regulations concerning the payment of $60,000 or any portion thereof?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, as to the second part of the question, no, there are no more regulations affecting additional requirements. Secondly, the five-year deposit has always been the practice of the Corporation. This merely clarifies the practice. The thinking behind the Clause is that again the Corporation and the legislation were not designed to insure long-time deposits. It was for the average Canadian depositor, and experience shows that the majority of people in ordinary circumstances would not be investing beyond that period. It was a judgment call.

• (1740)

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Deputy Speaker, my second question is, when is the Bill to come into force? I notice that Clause 9 states:

> Subsections 3(1) and (2) shall be deemed to have come into force on January 17, 1983.

Subclause (2) states that Sections 4 and 7 shall come into force upon proclamation. I wonder why the entire Act is not coming into force upon Royal Assent. Is there some reason for delaying the bringing of this Section into force or into effect?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, Clause 9(1), which makes reference to Subsections 3(1) and (2), deals with a part of the Act addressing the amounts, the change from $20,000 to $60,000. The setting of the day upon which it was to come into effect was to ensure that it came into effect as soon as possible. After all, the whole objective is to bring that kind of peace of mind and security to ordinary Canadian depositors as quickly as possible.

On that point, the Member for Mississauga South and I have had discussions on a possible change in the date so as to secure peace of mind for a number of people involved in present difficulties with some companies in the Province of Ontario.

The other part dealing with Sections 4 and 7 concerns the question of stamping and the way in which depositors are made aware as to whether a deposit is covered by the Act. It is felt that the institutions will need some time in order to amend their business practices and put that into place. Therefore, it was thought that there should be some flexibility to ensure that all member companies in the Corporation have sufficient time to allow them to be ready to administer it properly. That is the only reason some flexibility was retained.

Mr. Taylor: I would like to ask one short question. Just to make it abundantly clear, does the balance of the Act, other than those Sections, come into effect upon Royal Assent? Second, I understood from what the Minister said that there is likely to be an amendment to Clause 9(1) later today.

Mr. Cosgrove: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Blenkarn: Today the Minister made some reference in the debate with respect to an arrangement with the Province of Ontario, the Minister responsible in that Province for the administration of CDIC work. I was wondering if there was not a written agreement between the Corporation and the Province of Ontario with respect to that supervisory work. Could he point out to me where in the CDIC statute it is stated that the authority to enter into an agreement to have the supervision required under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation can be delegated to another corporation? Could he point out how that delegation takes place and what the arrangements were and are for payment to the Province of Ontario for the supervision which it presumably did or did not do?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the officials advise me that there is no written agreement between the Province of Ontario and Canada. It is a practice between the two Departments. Second, the authority for that is under the employment of staff section, Section 39 of the Act as it presently exists. Counsel have indicated that it is sufficient legal authority, in their view.

Mr. Blenkarn: That being the case, what remuneration is paid to the Province of Ontario officials, agents and employees? How are they paid and under what arrangements are they paid? Did each of these employees or agents enter into an oath of fidelity in accordance with Subsection (2)?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I assume that the questions of the Hon. Member are raised because he is looking at the words of the Section. I am satisfied that when the provincial authorities give oath or are employed by the Province, they are finally employed by the Crown, by the Queen or by the Governor in right of the Queen. Whether it is an oath which is taken under employment in Canada or in Ontario, it is one which calls for allegiance to the public good. There would certainly be practical considerations which would flow from that employment.

Second, no, the Province does not pay Canada for the services which it provides. Obviously, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs for the Province of Ontario feels that it is large enough and well enough equipped to do the work and it is one which, as I say, is done without remuneration.

Mr. Blenkarn: I think that at some point the Minister would like to read Section 39 of Chapter III of the Revised Statutes for 1976-77. I think that on reflection he will not that the use of Ontario civil servants, unpaid and not under any oath of fidelity to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, is not the employment of staff required under the terms of the Act, that the Minister is responsible for the Act, and that his employment of staff in this regard is probably illegal.

I make that point for his benefit in that it might well arise, in the lawsuits with respect to Crown and Seaway Trust, that he has perhaps not fulfilled his responsibilities. He will know that in the take-over of those corporations, there are threats of lawsuits involving in excess of $1 billion and that he may well be in trouble with respect to his supervision here.

I suggest that he obtain counsel and consider this very closely. I suggest to him that in the meantime he direct the directors of Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation immediately to engage their own staff on some sort of a payroll arrangement because he may well be in trouble. May I ask the Minister—

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the legal advice which the Hon. Member, who is a lawyer, has offered me and the Government of Canada, I might say, free of charge. Certainly we will consider it.

Mr. Fisher: Very worthwhile.

Mr. Cosgrove: I hope it is worth more than what we are paying for it, Mr. Chairman. Neither the Government nor the Corporation has been made a party to the action with which the Province of Ontario is now involved. All I can say is that our legal advice is not the same as the Hon. Member's opinion.

Clauses 1 to 5 agreed to.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, could we have an explanation as to why the maximum amount of funds that the Corporation is entitled to borrow from the Government has been raised from $500,000 to $1.5 billion? Was it seen that in the immediate future they will have to borrow more than the present maximum of half a billion dollars? Why was it decided that the figure was to be $1.5 billion rather than some other figure? What is the justification for the request made in this section?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, when the Hon. Member spoke he made a recommendation that the amount be increased to $1 billion. That is an increase of $500 million. The Hon. Member shakes his head. What was the amount?

Mr. Nickerson: I did not suggest an amount.

Mr. Cosgrove: He did not suggest an amount and did not want us to ask him why he did not suggest an amount since he could not give a rationale. I was going to say that I wish he would not ask me the same question.

In fact, the rationale is that the increase is in the same proportion as the amount the individual premium increase has been for the deposit. Therefore, if it went from $20,000 to $60,000, in order that any potential difficulties that might arise in the future be covered, we used the same proportionate amount. It is a reserve and a guarantee. We just used that increase of two times.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, could we be told what amount of money is presently owing by the Corporation to the Government of Canada?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, it is $85 million.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 6 carry?

Clause 6 agreed to.

On Clause 7—

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister elaborate ever so briefly on Subsection (4)? That Subsection states that every person who violates any provision of this section is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months. Could he explain to whom this might apply?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I cannot really do much more than refer the Hon. Member to Section 45(1) which specifies those institutions which are subject to the penalty for violation of a section. It is no federal institution that is a member institution, no officer, agent or employee. Those are the ones who are prohibited from doing the following things in Section 45(1). I am told that the amount is a standard amount in the statutes dealing with breaches of financial undertakings.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, as a final clarification, if a participating company were to violate the terms of this agreement in a very serious way perhaps, would the maximum fine be $5,000? If that is the case, does that not seem to be just a little light?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, we must remember, of course, that this refers to a situation where the Government would feel compelled to proceed in criminal courts by way of summary conviction. It does not take into account all of the other provisions of the Act that provide supervisory control over the Corporation, for example, or for the Superintendent under companion legislation to move to control corporations and prevent them from continuing in business or require them to wind down.

For more than the $5,000, in terms of philosophy of criminal law, there is the threat of imprisonment, although it is a term not exceeding six months. But in my opinion, that would be a very salutary consideration by any person who deliberately would attempt to get around the provisions of this section.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 7 carry?

Clause 7 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 8 carry?

Clause 8 agreed to.

On Clause 9—

Mr. Blenkarn moved:

That Bill C-142, an Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, be amended in Clause 9(1) by striking out line 34 at page 8 and substituting the following therefor:

He said: Mr. Chairman, the reason for the amendment is our fear that the Bill will come into force with respect to the $60,000 only on January 17, 1983. People who have demanded moneys from Greymac, Seaway, Crown or any of their agencies in the period from January 7 until January 17, when this Bill comes into force in normal circumstances, would have no claim beyond $20,000. Rather than moving to January 6, we went to January 4, because that is the first banking day of this year since January 3 was treated as a bank holiday, representing New Years Day for 1983.

I think it is imperative that we ensure that all those people who conceivably have a claim on Greymac, Seaway or Crown be covered. I think that is the intention of the Government and that is the reason why this amendment was moved.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I have discussed this with the Hon. Member for Mississauga South and I agree with what he has said. I would say that out of abundant caution, we have agreed to make sure that there is no difficulty with the section and the Government's intention to cover those people. We believe that the Hon. Member and all Hon. Members have been very co-operative today. I think it just demonstrates that with some co-operation this House can move to take action on matters. I support the amendment.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 9, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 9 as amended agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported with amendment.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time?

Some Hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Cosgrove moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT—HAWKER SIDDELEY PLANT AT TRENTON, N.S.—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I once more raised the issue of Government orders for the Hawker Siddeley railcar plant at Trenton, Nova Scotia. I was assured at that time by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley) that he was concerned about the plant and the work force which has been idle for so long. We were also informed that the Minister has in the past tried to expedite orders for Nigeria, that he met with the Chief Executive Officer of the plant and also expressed the hope that this company would be able to take advantage of developments in offshore oil exploration. I personally, and I am sure most people in my riding appreciate these sentiments of the Minister. We appreciate his good intentions, but the path to hell is often paved with good intentions.

I am here today to raise the issue once more with the Minister and to point out that by comparison not very much is being done to find relief for this key industry in a town in Nova Scotia that is almost entirely dependent upon it. I do not want to be unreasonable, Sir, or unrealistic in calling upon the Government to expedite orders for this industry. I only want the Government to do in a small way what it has been doing for other large employers in other areas of the country at much greater cost.

We need and can use, if we are to believe the government's own policy statements, additional railway rolling stock. We need the jobs desperately in this part of Canada from where I come. We do not, for example, really need Challenger jets to develop our country, particularly the ones that are showing such unreliability and are being produced at such terrible cost by a company that everyone knows is being subsidized by a tremendous amount of frontend debt guaranteed by this Government, an amount probably well in excess of $1 billion. If we are talking about value for money or reasonable job creation, certainly we will not find it in the way Canadair is being managed or operated.

To use another comparison, CN Marine, another example of profligate spending, probably spent between $80 million and $90 million constructing a new CN ferry to operate between Borden, P.E.I. and Tormentine, New Brusnwick. The new vessell, the Abegweit, is the closest thing I have seen lately to the sea going equivalent of a car that is popularly known as a lemon. It is a vessel that has not been performing satisfactorily. The sad part of it is that the former vessel which had performed for many years could have been renovated and would have served well for another decade if $3 million or $4 million had been spent upgrading it, the same amount of money that was probably earned, in interest by CN Marine when in my opinion it squirrelled away $25 million, meant to pay for the new vessel, and kept it in an unauthorized bank account for many months.

I make these comparisons, Sir, to support my plea to the Government opposite to use a little bit of selectivity and common sense when it is dealing with large amounts of taxpayers money.

Instead of having a good vessel, perfectly serviceable, which would have freed $70 million or $80 million for useful purposes, we sold this vessel to a Chicago yacht club for considerably less than $100,000 Canadian dollars, a travesty if I ever saw one. Contrast that kind of economic stupidity with the real economic benefit that could accrue if some large orders for railcars in this amount were placed with this key industry in this town in Nova Scotia; an industry, I emphasize, that has a work force of nearly 2,000 people when the plant is employed at full capacity. There would be very little net cost to the Government in doing this because this work force, through no fault of its own, is drawing unemployment insurance benefits when it could be producing something useful.

People in my area are getting very tired of the inequalities and inequities of seeing money thrown around in certain constituencies in this country where jobs are maintained or created, regardless of the expense. Yet there is no money to ensure work by producing useful commodities or useful machinery; something that would be far more appropriate than many of the profligate schemes that are being used to buy types of equipment and vessels, such as the one I mentioned, purchases that could easily be deferred for many years.

It is very little wonder that people in this country have lost faith in the judgment and capacity of Ministers of the Crown when day after day in the House of Commons we hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) say that our economy is performing satisfactorily at a time when we have record unemployment and record budgetary deficits. Most Canadians see the difference clearly between the way things are and the way they could be if a little more attention was paid to practical, sound, business-like and appropriation practices in Government, with less attention paid to party politics and favouritism in subsidizing some industries and not others.

Instead of getting the taxpayers heavily involved with companies like Canadair, de Havilland, Massey-Ferguson, Maislin, to name just a few, it would be nice to see the Government stretch a point and make sure that certain useful equipment and machinery was ordered from companies that have not had to go to the public trough, but are still capable of producing it. These types of ventures would pay off. When they were completed, if the economy is as rosy as the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister seem to think it is going to be, and that we are in the midst of a recovery, which we all hope is and will be the case, we would have value for our money. There would be something there to justify these expenditures.

At the present time we are getting very tired of seeing selective largess in certain areas of the country at the taxpayers' expense, when in many instances there are good corporations that are capable of producing useful work, if only the Government would use a little common sense and expedite these kinds of orders.

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) has asked what the Government intends to do about unemployment in Nova Scotia, in the Trenton area, and especially at the Hawker-Siddeley plant. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that railway companies have been affected by a substantial drop in overall demand for freight cars. In fact, 20 per cent of railway rolling stock is now in storage. It is clear that the present problems are the result of a substantial drop in the use of railway transport.

However, until economic equilibrium has been restored and the surplus absorbed, the demand for new rolling stock will probably be very slight. However, there is hope yet, since the new measures relating to the Crow rate provide for the acquisition by the Canadian Government of 3,840 grain cars over the next three years. These orders should create about 1,200 person-years of work in the Canadian rail car construction industry. To ease the pressures on the industry, purchase of the first 1,280 cars has already begun.

The Hon. Member would perhaps be interested to know that Hawker-Siddeley has made a tender which, if accepted, would result in a very substantial number of jobs being created in Trenton. In fact, during the last few years, the Government has ordered more than 5,000 grain cars from Hawker-Siddeley. I therefore feel that an important step has been made which shows that the company has a good reputation for quality and that the Government does not always subsidize companies but also makes uses of the private sector. The Department I represent is continuing its search for other ways to remedy the employment situation in Trenton. Two of our main objectives are to increase exports and diversify manufacturing. The Minister has travelled to Nigeria and Indonesia to help Canadian companies making tenders for railway projects. We have talked to financial institutions in order to be able to provide competitive financing. As far as these projects are concerned, it would seem that the Hawker-Siddeley Trenton Works are in a good positiion to offer competitive prices on large orders of railway cars. Representatives of the Department are working together with Hawker-Siddeley staff to see what other products can be manufactured during periods when the demand for railway cars is weak. At the beginning of February, Hawker-Siddeley formed a consortium with CanOcean Resources Ltd. (a branck of Nova, and Alberta-based company) and they are now looking into the possibility of entering into agreements with other Nova Scotia enterprises for the purpose of developing natural gas deposits on Sable Island—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to have to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

MEDICAL CARE—STATUS OF PROPOSED CANADA HEALTH ACT DRAFTING OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, on March 17, I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to tell the House what sort of timeframe she had in mind for the tabling of the proposed new Canada health act and encouraged her to put an actual proposal before the Canadian people so that there could be informed and concrete debate about what she has in mind for the founding principles of medicare and for the future of medicare itself. The Minister said then that the Department of Justice was drafting a document, but that it was important to take the time needed to get a better act than what we have now.

On March 29, I asked her to speed up the process by which Canadians would get the long-awaited Canada Health Act, and get it in a form that would prevent what has happened the previous day when Alberta announced that it was imposing, as of October 1 of this year, a variety of user fees for emergency, out-patient and in-patient services, on top of the recent hikes in premiums in that Province and the toleration of a 35.5 per cent extra billing rate.

The Minister replied that I was being too future-minded and not cognizant enough of the powers she now has under existing legislation to do something about what is going on in Alberta.

My point, however, is this. All that the Minister can do under the existing legislation is withdraw all, and I repeat, all federal health payments from Alberta. This is clearly an option that is drastic in nature and which involves both known and unknown risks to our national health care system. It was an option which was rejected by the Special Parliamentary Task Force on Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, which recommended instead that some more gradual form of penalty be designed for Provinces perceived to be violating the principles of medicare. Existing legislation simply does not provide the federal Government with the kind of flexibility and manoeuvering room it needs, forms of which it gave up in 1977 against NDP advice to the contrary.

This is why the Minister must now make clear her proposals for a new Canada health act and how those proposals address, among other things, the need for ways to enable the federal Government to enforce and encourage practices which respect the five founding principles of medicare. The Minister must do more than wait for public opinion to work, as she did in New Brunswick. New Brunswick is not a one-Party state like Alberta, and, in any case, it is about time that this Minister actually did something about the erosion of medicare, instead of just talking about it. I suggest to her that tabling a proposal for debate, around which, hopefully, all pro-medicare people could rally, is what she must do as soon as is humanly possible.

While she is at it, she might also try to put back some of the money that was withdrawn from EPF payments just about a year ago, a step which clearly eroded her bargaining power with the Provinces and which has provided a cover for those in Alberta, Ontario and B.C., who for philosophical reasons have always resented medicare and who see in federal reductions and in the recession in general an opportunity to advocate their idealogical preferences under the guise of economic realism, instead of coming out and saying honestly to the Canadian public that they prefer more privatization of medicare.

I realize many of the difficulties involved if the Minister were to bring forward an Act without getting prior agreement from the Provinces, but I think it is at the point where she needs to act. She needs to put clear and supportable proposals before this House and before the Canadian people so that all pro-medicare people can rally to the cause of a new Canada health act which will prevent the kinds of things we are seeing happening to medicare at the hands of Progressive Conservative provincial Governments in this country.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, regarding the current status of the Canada health act, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) would like to strongly assure all Canadians that the development of a new Act is proceeding as quickly as is possible, given the importance of this issue.

• (1815)

The Provinces and others have consistently requested that the Minister put before them, in black and white, just how she intends to strengthen our existing health insurance program and specifically how she proposes to encourage the elimination of extra billing and user charges. This is exactly what she intends to do in the very near future. The Minister believes it is essential that this extremely valuable program not be allowed to deteriorate to the point where many Canadians feel they cannot get the health care they need because of various barriers that have grown in the program.

The current Canadian Medical Association campaign against the Canada health act represents the view of only a small number of the physician population of Canada which has been attempting unsuccessfully to generate general public fears about Government involvement in assuring health services to all Canadians. It has however been repeatedly made clear to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that Canadians want prepaid universal health insurance, without barriers to necessary services. She is committed to preserving this Canadian privilege.

Other professional and public groups have made known to the Minister that they would like to see insured health services shift toward health prevention and promotion. Much as she supports these moves, and the support of the federal Government is evident in grants to the provinces for extended health care services, our present system of insured health care services has a long and strong tradition and is, therefore, slow to change. While such changes evolve in our health care services, the role of the federal Government must be to facilitate such moves, but at the same time not lose the insured health services that Canadians can depend on now. Public interest in health and health care has never been higher, and we all recognize that health care services will have to be increasingly responsive to the expectations of the public. The Minister of National Health and Welfare will not fail to do her part in strengthening our national insured health service program through the introduction of new health legislation, following a meeting which she expects to have with her provincial colleagues.

TRADE—LEVEL OF CLOTHING IMPORTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) to recall the failure of the bilateral negotiations for quotas on imports of clothing and textiles from South Korea, Taiwan, Hong Kong and China. I asked him to confirm that imports are up by 18.8 per cent this year compared to last year, and to tell us when Cabinet will decide to impose unilateral quotas as requested by the industry.

The Minister was party to those negotiations and meetings but he ducked the question. I understand why he chose not to answer. It is because the Cabinet does not want to make up its mind. I also understand why he passed the question to the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan)—because that Minister was not in the House to be asked. Nevertheless, the industry wants this question answered. Will the Government protect the 150,000 workers directly employed in this industry from unfair competition?

The fact is that according to the Government's own reports, mainly the Textile and Clothing Board reports of 1980, 1981 and 1982, the textile and clothing industry of Canada is competitive; it is efficient; it is technically on a par with the industries of other countries. The productivity of this industry is as good as the productivity of other manufacturing industries in Canada, or is better than average. The capital investment rate in this industry is larger than the capital investment rate in most secondary manufacturing in Canada. In other words, we are not suffering from fair competition. We are not suffering from competition simply in terms of putting out good work and being productive.

The competition we are suffering is the result of excessively low wages, about 49 cents per hour in the Philippines in 1979, or $1.27 an hour in South Korea a year ago. These low-wage countries have been increasing their exports of clothing into Canada in the last two or three years. Yet Canada absorbs only about 1 or 2 or 3 per cent of the production of countries such as South Korea, Brazil, the Philippines, Singapore and Hong Kong. Far more could come in from those countries which have wages that no one in this House would ask Canadians to accept. No Member opposite would dare ask his constituents to work for 50 cents an hour and support a family on that. Yet, this is the implication of the Government's policy.

The Government argues that if imports are restricted, clothing prices will rise too quickly. Yet it is the price of the import which has been rising at a faster rate than the cost of living and it is the price of Canadian made clothing which has been rising at a slower rate than the cost of living. In other words, if Canadian competition is taken out of that industry, the import prices will rise much faster yet, and the consumers of Canada will be the losers.

There is no gain to Canada in destroying an industry which employs 150,000 people, mostly women, many of whom are the sole supporters of their families. There is no gain to Canada in destroying an industry which indirectly employs another 100,000 in terms of supplying material and services. There is no gain to Canada in losing the buying power of 250,000 more workers, adding them to the two million people who are already out of work.

It is the duty, therefore, of this Government to defend the garment and textile industry of Canada against unfair competition, competition based on excessively low wages. It is the duty of the Government to protect our workers against unfair competition because there is no benefit in forcing Canadians to work for 50 cents an hour. There is no benefit in destroying the industry which provides the bulk of the clothing of Canadians. Canadians, with our severe climate, would then become absolutely dependent on clothing imported from foreign companies under the control of large multinational companies which would then be able to force prices up.

If the Government wishes to force wages down by promoting unemployment, and by destroying established industries of Canada, then the policy it is following is quite logical. This Government will have to answer for its actions, if two million unemployed become three million unemployed next year because of its policy of promoting unfair wage competition.

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to hear what the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) had to say. I think the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is extremely sensitive to the concerns that were expressed by the Hon. Member with respect to import quotas for clothing, in the same way the Department was last year on the subject of import quotas for shoes. In the latter case, the Government achieved very good results by revising quotas and thus giving Canadians an opportunity to manufacture products for Canadian consumers.

As far as the clothing negotiations are concerned, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that these involve bilateral agreements and, in fact, the entire spectrum of international trade. When the agreements are signed, we will have a certain number of responsibilities and if there were any changes, there might be penalties for countries that break the agreement once it is signed. Nevertheless, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) already announced six months ago, in October 1982, a number of short-term measures leading up to negotiations with Korea, Hong Kong and China on certain changes that would make the import quota system more flexible. These negotiations have been more or less satisfactory, but there is still a lot of work to be done. Cabinet intends to make a statement on a clothing import policy as soon as the policy has been revised. This is being done at the present time, and it is one of our top priorities, because the Government is indeed very sensitive to the concerns expressed by the Hon. Member, and we certainly do not want anyone in Canada to be adversely affected by any import policy. On the contrary, it has never been the intention of this Government to make Canadian workers work for 50 cents an hour.

However, the Hon. Member will understand the Government's position with respect to its commitments to other countries. There is a matter of trust involved among various partners, because there are many different agreements covering clothing, cars, certain kinds of ores exchanged between countries, and so on. If countries were to unilaterally change contracts that were entered into on a voluntary basis in a perfectly normal way, one could hardly expect a climate of trust to exist. Therefore, before taking any radical unilateral measures, the Government prefers to explore all possible avenues, and I think that, not necessarily very soon but in the near future at least, the Government intends to act responsibly and make a very clear statement to the Canadian people on what it intends to do with respect to import quotas on clothing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 6.25 the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

IMPORTATION OF CLOTHING

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, today I would like to take advantage of the provisions of Standing Order 21 to bring to the attention of the House and of the Cabinet that the situation regarding clothing imports is such that Canadian industry is being threatened. An article published in La Presse on March 17 said that imports from the Far East, including Hong Kong, Korea, Taiwan and China, were creating an increasingly threatening situation. Before the Easter holidays, Government negotiators had meetings with representatives of the countries I just mentioned and unfortunately came home empty-handed. More and more imports are coming into the country and are threatening the livelihood of the people working in the industry. I would therefore ask Cabinet to examine the situation carefully, especially considering the many letters sent by the people concerned, and more specifically, by the Canadian Institute of Clothing Manufacturers, and also since my riding is being affected by this situation, I would urge the Government to look into the possibility of applying Clause 19 of the GATT Agreement so that we could keep the quotas, ensure that there will be no increase in clothing imports, in line with agreements we had a few years ago, and protect jobs in this industry, because, Madam Speaker, the garment industry has been severely affected by the present recession. I would therefore urge Cabinet not only to look into the matter but to make a decision as soon as possible.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

RECOMMENDATION TO DISBAND DEPARTMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, it has become quite clear to everyone who has any knowledge of the situation that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has become an anachronism, and those who live under its yoke cannot be blamed for judging it to be an instrument of colonialism wielded by a heavy-handed federal Government.

The Hon. Bud Drury in his report to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) recommended that the Department be disbanded and that its responsibilities be conferred on either the territorial governments or other federal Departments. What could be more logical than the Department of Public Works looking after public works, or the Department of the Environment looking after environmental concerns without the unnecessary involvement of another superfluous Department?

On the Indian Affairs side a consensus is rapidly developing that the Department should be replaced by a small secretariat, the function of which would be to co-ordinate funding activities and the work of other Departments in areas where they affect aboriginal affairs.

The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has outlived its usefulness, and its existence should be discontinued.

WELFARE

MEETING OF NATIONAL ANTI-POVERTY ORGANIZATION

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, today the National Anti-Poverty Organization is meeting in Ottawa and will be hosted by representatives of all Parties this evening. I was actively involved with the poor people's movement in 1971 when, following a federal anti-poverty conference, this organization was first formed. Since that time many self-help projects have come and gone, largely because of inadequate funding.

I congratulate the early pioneers, and especially those women on low incomes who have raised their children in great difficulty and are still struggling to improve conditions in their communities. I also congratulate the new NAPO which has reorganized and is showing new energy this past year.

It is not easy for poor people who live on welfare or unemployment insurance to find the energy and funds to organize and fight for their rights, and to demand changes. Yet this is absolutely essential if they are to be treated not as victims but as human beings with hope for the future.

Fortunately, many new welfare rights groups are forming and are joining with organizations of the unemployed, with churches, trade unions, and concerned citizens across the country. They are demanding changes. Many self-help organizations have demonstrated repeatedly that if they have funding they are quite capable of developing essential community services and non-profit enterprises that will help to train and put people to work on essential local services. Funds that are now allocated for make-work projects should be re-invested instead, in these kinds of permanent development. We have—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

SPORTS

ENCOURAGEMENT FOR UNIVERSITY ATHLETICS

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, on June 25 the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union will hold its annual general meeting in Edmonton. High on the agenda of that meeting will be discussions on the role of universities in the development of world class olympic athletes. An important contribution to that program will likely be made by the results of a joint study into aspects of university sport in Canada that is being undertaken by the CIAU and Sports Canada. The CIAU-Sports Canada study will examine the possibility of Government financial support for university athletic programs, travel subsidies for athletes, and scholarships for promising athletes.

• (1410)

As the 1984 Summer Olympic Games approach, increasing public awareness of the intensity of athletic competition itself, we should not overlook the intensity of athletic preparation involving in no small measure dedication, perserverance and sacrifice on the part of Canada's athletes.

Inasmuch as the joint study may well recommend increases in the funding for the development of university athletic programs and facilities, I would hope that this House will be prepared to support any recommendations which would encourage university athletics in Canada.

HOUSING

RESIDENTIAL REHABILITATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM— REQUEST FOR INCREASED SUBSIDIES

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I have a few comments to make regarding the well-known Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, usually referred to as RRAP. Yesterday, the Member for Lévis (Mr. Gourde) remarked on the successful impact of this program, and I must agree that the Program has helped a great many people. The Hon. Member mentioned a broadening of the conditions for participating in the Program, but before those conditions can be made more flexible, I would like to ask both the Minister responsible for Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), now that a budget speech is about to be brought down, to increase funding for this program. I made some enquiries and it seems that the demand for the program substantially exceeds the program's budgetary resources. The Government is advertising this program very well and very widely, but I wish it would practise what it preaches and make sure it has enough funds to meet demand. In the circumstances, I hope the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Public Works will understand the urgency of this matter for those who wish to take part in the program. I urge those who wish to apply, to do so, and I only hope their requests will be answered a little faster than is now the case, when many applications are being held up because of a lack of funding. If the Government intends to provide this service, it should have sufficient resources to do so.

HOME OIL TRANSFER PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, last year, as energy critic for my Party, I went to Boston and visited the Citizens' Energy Corporation which is headed by Joseph Kennedy, eldest son of the late Senator Robert Kennedy. One of their programs was of particular interest to Canada, the HOT Program, or Home Oil Transfer Program. When home owners convert from oil to natural gas, some oil remains in their tanks in the houses or under the gardens. The Citizens' Energy Corporation pumps out the tanks, sells the oil, and donates the proceeds to the poor.

Mr. Kennedy later visited me here in Ottawa. He met with myself, the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan), as well as Joel Bell, Bill Hopper, and Peter Toews, all distinguished Canadian civil servants. Today Mr. Kennedy, brother Michael, and mother Ethel, are in Ottawa and will visit other Canadian cities to kick off a similar Canadian program with proceeds to go to a Canadian Robert F. Kennedy memorial and to the Salvation Army. If any Canadians watching or listening to the proceedings today, or Hon. Members of this House, want more information, I wish they would please contact me. Meanwhile, on behalf of all Hon. Members, may I welcome the Kennedy family to Canada and thank them for their efforts and ideas in this important area.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) is a strong man and he has used his talents to destroy much of what all of the Prime Ministers before him built. He entered the Canadian "ring" and in one fell swoop—the national energy policy—all but killed the entire gas and oil industry. Then with a left hook—the excise tax on natural gas—he crippled agriculture and the agri-food sectors. Fighting madly, he struck at the men and women who had worked for 40 to 50 years to build a business or a farm to use it as a nest egg for retirement, by eliminating annuities and enforcing capital gains which made retirement impossible.

Still thirsting for blood, he hit at the living standard of the superannuates, the old, and even the kids, by refusing them the allowances they had been promised. With fancy footwork he let the interest rates and federal taxes rise until hundreds of businesses went bankrupt and unemployment rose to two million. With a right to the confidence of the nation, and a left to free enterprise, he sent them both reeling to the mat. Then still thirsting for money, he borrows another $19 billion, raising the debt for Canadians to pay, to more than $150 billion.

Glorying in his achievements, he darts from the "ring" and goes to the far corners of the earth leaving his Canadians divided, frustrated and depressed. Too bad this man did not use his strength to build Canada instead of destroying Canada.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

SIZE OF GOVERNMENT DEFICIT

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the numbers game which the Government is playing with the Canadian public on the size of the federal deficit for the fiscal year just ended.

• (1415)

Over the last 18 months the Government has produced five different estimates of the deficit. This creates confusion and uncertainty in the minds of Canadians because the Government's borrowing activities determine interest rates and the economic climate, which affects job opportunities. My question deals with the credibility of the Government. How can Canadians have any confidence in the figures the Government produces in the budget next week, given its past performance?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance indicated yesterday that the deficit would not be as high as that, for example, indicated during his statement to the House in October of 1982. But I would remind the Hon. Member that the Minister also indicated that one of the casualties of the downturn in the economy, and probably one of the contributors, has been the forecasters and their inability in this very erratic economic climate to project adequately or accurately any great distance into the future. He indicated as well that the detailed figures would be available in his budget next week, and the Hon. Member, together with all Canadians, will have an opportunity of looking at them in detail at that time.

Miss Carney: Madame Speaker, my supplementary question is to the same Minister in the absence of the Minister of Finance, but first I would ask the House: would you buy a used calculator from that Minister?

MINISTER'S POSITION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, Canadians know that the budget deficit is financed by borrowed money, and the Minister's admission that he has overstated the deficit leads to the suspicion that he has inflated his borrowing requirements. The Minister of Finance and the Government have brought forward the biggest borrowing bill in the country's history. How can he avoid the suspicion that the Government is cooking the books so it can borrow more than it needs in order to avoid parliamentary scrutiny of its spending programs?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I really cannot let the Hon. Member's introduction to the question go by unanswered. It is obvious that many Canadians are at this time, for example, buying houses at a rate which has greatly improved over the last few months compared to last year. Housing starts are up in the range of some 176,000. It is very apparent as well that Canadians in large numbers are buying appliances at a greater rate and in larger numbers than they have been in previous months. It is very apparent from the figures that retail sales are up considerably. Construction starts, as reported by the municipalities, are up considerably for the month of January. The Minister of Finance has indicated that these many positive signs augur well for the immediate and near future. With the support of the policies in next week's budget, we are also hopeful for the long term as well.

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, in his reply the Minister ignores the fact that the one increase in statistics which bothers those on this side of the House is the two million people unemployed.

USE OF GOVERNMENT FUNDS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, our calculations indicate that the deficit has been inflated by about $2 billion. Are the Minister and his colleagues going to perform an act of magic, like a financial Merlin, and transform these phantom savings into increased spending in next week's budget?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, in her last supplementary and in the previous question the Hon. Member has implicitly asked about the veracity and strength of forecasting and detailing studies done by Government advisers. If she is not satisfied with those forecasts she could, for example, take a look at Data Resource of Canada which has published the same kind of forecasts as those to which I made reference. I ask her to take a look at some of the private sector forecasters who are talking about an improved performance in the economy, which is no doubt reflected in and partially due to the change in the economy over the last quarter. For example, I am looking at a report of Nuala Beck, Vice-President of Pitfield, Mackay, Ross, who has confirmed a more optimistic projection for the next quarter.

• (1420)

Mr. Cosgrove: There are, Madam Speaker, with respect, many independent forecasters. If the Hon. Member is not satisfied with the Government's, there are many independent ones who agree with the Government's position.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROVISION OF FIGURES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, who has apparently ducked today, is in connection with the lack of confidence of the people of Canada in the Government. Anyone knows that any Minister of Finance, any treasurer, ought to be able to tell what he receives in income and what he spends in payments to individuals. On March 15, 15 days before the year end, the Minister gave us what he said were the actual figures. The Minister of State for Finance confirmed those on March 28 and March 29, a day or two days before the year end.

Was the Minister deliberately misleading the House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: —or is the Minister so incompetent that he cannot add or subtract?

An Hon. Member: Or both.

Mr. Kempling: He's just plain dumb.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has made comment that the Minister of Finance is not in the House today. I would draw to the attention of Hon. Members that 11 out of the 12 candidates for leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party are not in the House today. I would warn, Madam Speaker, that the attendance of the Minister of Finance in the House is better than any of those candidates this year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF FINANCE MINISTER

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, if the Minister of Finance were the treasurer of any company in this country and presented figures like this Minister of Finance did, to his Board of Directors, he would be fired without notice.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Blenkarn: And my question—

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member is not to argue. He is now asking questions.

Mr. Nowlan: Argument? That's a statement of fact. That's not argument.

Mr. Blenkarn: There is not much argument in it, Madam Speaker.

I want to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In order to restore some confidence in the country, will the Prime Minister, in view of the misrepresentations, the lack of disclosure, the wrong disclosure made just two or three days prior to the year end concerning the fiscal position of the country, now ask for the resignation of the Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker. I have heard the Opposition at least 20 times in the past six months asking the Minister of Finance to give projections, to give the Opposition figures on the future, to predict what the rate of unemployment will be, to predict what the level of inflation will be, and so on. The Minister of Finance has answered, almost each time, "These predictions are uncertainties. These predictions, I would rather not make them." Once or twice he tries to make projections which are helpful to the Opposition, and now they are reproaching him with making projections which are—

Mr. Nielsen: How long are you going to be with us?

Mr. Trudeau: —unhelpful. If they do not want predictions, they should not ask for them. If they get predictions, they should realize that they are subject to change.

Mr. Nielsen: How long are you going to be with us?

Mr. Trudeau: I am now asked by the Hon. Member for Yukon how long I am going to be with him. Madam Speaker, I do not know. I think it is time for him to go.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Can't you get a sweetheart deal?

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, we would only say that maybe they should both go together.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADAIR—REPORT OF GIFT TO UNITED STATES CORPORATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. There is a report in today's press that Canadair Limited has given an American corporation a free executive jet, plus $4 million in cash. Could he confirm whether this report is true and, if it is true, whether he has discovered the reasons for such an incredible action taking place?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, since the Minister responsible for this Corporation is a Member of the Senate, it is my responsibility to answer any questions put in the House. Unfortunately, I do not have the necessary information to be able to answer the Hon. Member's question. I shall make enquiries, and I shall then be happy to provide a more specific answer.

ALLEGATION OF FALSE SALES CLAIMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I accept that answer from the Minister. The allegations about this company's behaviour are extremely serious.

I wish to ask another question regarding the allegations that will be made tonight, I understand, on a television program "The Fifth Estate". Is the Minister aware that allegations have been made already, and will be made publicly on television tonight, that this company has faked orders and has possibly misled a committee of the House in terms of claims for sales? If he is aware of these allegations, could he tell the House whether steps have already been initiated to investigate those claims?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of such allegations. However, I may remind the House that the Government has established the Canada Development Investment Corporation for the purpose of improving management practices of certain Crown corporations, including Canadair. I am aware that some time ago, CDIC officials were making an analysis of the management situation in these corporations, including Canadair, and that as soon as the results are known, they will take corrective action if necessary, and nature of such action will be announced in due time.

[English]

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the seriousness with which the Minister has responded to the question. I understand that an internal inquiry will be launched.

My final question will go to the Prime Minister. Assuming that the allegation that Canadair has given one aircraft and $4 million to an American corporation turns out to be true, and assuming it is the case that the same corporation has misled a committee of the House in terms of sales, will the Prime Minister undertake to establish a full public inquiry under the Inquiries Act into the performance of this company, because thousands of Canadian jobs are at stake?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I think we can hardly draw any conclusions or make any commitments on the basis of allegations that are supposed to be revealed in a television program. All this is purely hypothetical. I suggest we wait until the facts are known, before making any decisions.

AIR TRANSPORT

MIRABEL FILE—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CARGO AND IMPROVED ACCESS HIGHWAYS

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Madam Speaker, my question to the Minister of Transport concerns Mirabel International Airport. One year ago, a group of mayors from the Lower Laurentides-Laval region led by the mayor of Laval met with the minister of Transport to discuss the role of this international airport. The meeting was held one year ago this week. Can the minister tell us what has happened to date following his meeting with the north shore mayors, what the Department plans to do about freight transport, which was at the bottom of the representations made by the mayors, and whether he himself has already communicated with the Quebec ministers to discuss the road network development, namely the extension of road 13 and highway 50?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I cannot give a full report on the situation, but everything that was announced at the time has now been implemented with the exception of the proposal for duty-free fuel, which is being actively considered, and as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources noted yesterday, I hope that a solution will be found in the near future.

Regarding the road network, we have no decision to announce jointly with the Quebec government. However, progress is being made for bus transport and we hope that certain amendments will be made to the proposals now in the hands of the Montreal Urban Community Transit Commission, which will greatly improve the flow of traffic between downtown Montreal and Mirabel. The Hon. Member also asked me . . . A task force has been created, namely the group usually called the Levasseur Commission, and it will report within a few days. The relaxation of the Toronto moratorium is another thing that we have done. We are keeping in mind the interests of Mirabel in relation to certain extensions of the access to Toronto. These are all measures which have beneficial effects on Mirabel. Once again, what everyone considers most important is to establish a policy for duty-free fuel, which has not been done as yet, and this is where we are now focussing our efforts.

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG ENGINEERS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Since 1981 in the field of engineering unemployment has risen some 500 per cent. In the next 60 days there will be about 7,000 engineering graduates hitting the streets looking for jobs. At present Canada is importing about 250,000 barrels of oil a day, which creates jobs in Saudi Arabia, not in Canada. When can we expect the Government to do something for those graduating 7,000 engineers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I ask the Hon. Member to wait for the budget, Madam Speaker.

FISHERIES

STATUS OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT ON PACIFIC SALMON

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It is related to the Canada-U.S. agreement on Pacific salmon. It is my understanding that because of objections from Alaska the agreement has not been ratified by the United States. First though, is the ratification process complete in Canada? In any event, since it is not going to be in effect when the fishing season opens, because the season will be open in about a fortnight's time, what steps has the Minister taken to ensure that the fishery does not degenerate into a catch as catch can situation, thereby possible destroying what is a very rich fishery on the Pacific coast?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, we have been negotiating for years with the United States about orderly harvesting of salmon on the West Coast. The treaty that has been negotiated, which will come before Cabinet for formal ratification in the near future and will on the American side have to go to the Senate, and which is supported by most fishing organizations in B.C., I think does reflect the principle of fairness that each country should harvest the fish it produces.

The Hon. Member refers to some opposition in Alaska. I hope that both in Alaska, like in Washington State, and the remainder of the Pacific coastal states, they will recognize it is in the interests of both countries to achieve this treaty. I am not looking at one country winning and the other country losing. Both will win because we will achieve fairness for fishermen on both sides.

The Hon. Member is asking me what will happen if the United States does not ratify the agreement. Frankly, I prefer to be an optimist, Madam Speaker.

POSSIBILITY OF FRICTION BETWEEN FISHERMEN

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, there are the two questions, whether Canadian fishermen not being bound by any agreement with the United States may fish, and also the problem of disputes increasing the number of friction points between Canada and the United States, between Canadian and U.S. fishermen. What steps has the Minister taken, either in Canada or in Washington, to make sure that this situation does not occur?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that our director for salmon fishing in B.C. is in constant contact with his counterpart on the Armerican side. Except for some incidents, of which the Hon. Member is certainly aware, they have managed up until now to do things in tandem so that the fears of the Hon. Member will not, I hope, be warranted.

MINES AND MINING

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. The unemployment rate in the Yukon is in excess of 30 per cent, the highest unemployment rate in the land. The entire mining industry is shut down. Cabinet meets tomorrow and will hopefully discuss a proposal to save the Cyprus Anvil Mine and put the mine workers of Faro and the Yukon back to work. Will the Prime Minister undertake to have that matter discussed in Cabinet tomorrow, and will he ensure that the proposal for an interest-free fully repayable loan will be concurred in by Cabinet, so that we can get the economy of the Yukon back to work?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, of course it is not the practice to talk about Cabinet business in advance. When Cabinet has made its final decision on the item which has been before it for discussion, of course Hon. Members will be advised, as well as the Hon. Member's constituents—

Mr. Nielsen: My constituents.

Mr. Cosgrove: —who are well aware and quite anxious to have that decision.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, once again the Prime Minister shows his total disregard for the concerns and needs of the people of the Yukon. One wonders whether the federal Government really cares about the Yukon and the northern regions of the country.

REQUEST THAT PROPOSAL TO TAX NORTHERN BENEFITS BE RESCINDED

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question, if the Prime Minister will not answer, is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. Will she ensure that the Minister of Finance in his budget to be presented next week will take special measures to ensure a resurgence and a recovery of the economy of the North by rescinding all proposals to tax the benefits enjoyed by northern mine workers, and by providing some capital relief for the building of important infrastructures with respect to the power and transportation needs of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): The Hon. Member will just have to wait until Tuesday evening, Madam Speaker.

MEDICAL CARE

MOOSE FACTORY GENERAL HOSPITAL

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. She will be familiar with the telex she received on April 6 from the James Bay Tribal Council. It is with regard to the Moose Factory General Hospital, concerning the closure of one ward and the possible laying off of 16 employees. Can the Minister tell me what has happened? Is the Ministry reconsidering the problem?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, there is no intention in my Department to close down the hospital, which is a very valuable institution. I think that is the main message that should be transmitted today to all parties concerned.

MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I appreciate that the hospital will not be closed down. My concern is the health care of the people of the James Bay area, that the facilities they have today will not be changed and that the same service will be continued.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I do not understand if that is a question but, of course, I can give an assurance.

RAILWAYS

CROWNEST PASS RATE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture whose Department has provided much of the research into the projected grain prices in order to justify the Government's policy of increasing the Crow rate. As an example, the estimate would indicate that by 1990 wheat should cost $12.40 a bushel and, therefore, farmers could afford to pay an increased freight rate. Since a slightly older study, using the same techniques, predicted $7.20 per bushel for wheat in 1983, and since the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board has just announced that the wheat price this year will be in the range of $4.50 or $4.60 per bushel, can the Minister tell the House what has gone wrong? Assumptions are probably no longer accurate. What is the Minister's position now in support of the Crow rate?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): My position in support of the Crow rate has not changed, Madam Speaker.

RATIONALE FOR POLICY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, since the decision was obviously made with bad information, since the Minister is now faced with recommendations from the Wheat Board Minister to reduce rather than to increase acreage, and since the whole basis for this policy change was to take extra products out of the country, and the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board himself is recommending that we cut back, how can the Minister of Agriculture justify that stance? What rationale does he have for maintaining his policy of doing away with the Crow rate?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes or no.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of what the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board has said about farmers planting wheat. I do know that I have not made such statements, and there has been no official Government statement that farmers should cut back on acreage. We have not taken an official position on what the United States of America is doing, that is, paying farmers not to produce. I do not know whether the Hon. Member is suggesting that we put millions or maybe billions of dollars into some kind of a program to pay them not to produce.

• (1440)

Mr. Althouse: No.

Mr. Whelan: He is not saying that. Personally, I think it is very wrong to tell them not to produce, because we only did that once and within two years we were sorry for doing it.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBILITY OF INSTALLING CF-18 SHOOTING RANGE IN LAC-SAINT-JEAN RIDING—QUEBEC GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Today, in La Presse, the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, Mr. Jacques-Yvan Morin, said that he was, and I quote:

—counting on public opinion to prevent the Federal Government from setting up a CF-18 shooting range in the P.Q. riding of Lac-Saint-Jean.

[English]

Will the Prime Minister assure the House that the Quebec Government cannot have it both ways, that is, have the F-18s at Bagotville but not have the firing range there? If they do not want the firing range and do not want to provide the ancillary facilities, there is a place in New Brunswick called Chatham which will take the planes and provide the range.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think the point is well taken. I think the Hon. Member has raised a suggestion which should bring the Ministers of the Quebec Government to reflect upon their contradictory position on this.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

INITIAL GRAIN PRICES

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who answers for the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, and it concerns the issue of grain prices for farmers. Has the Minister of Transport been in touch with his counterpart? Can he say how he expects farmers to continue to produce, when the initial price offered by the Wheat Board continues to go down? Will he not encourage his counterpart to reconsider and at least keep the initial price the same as it was last year so that farmers will have some optimism?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, under any Government at any time when initial payments are anticipated there is a debate as to how high they should be. That debate took place this year among the Ministers, the same as it does every year. The general mood was to establish it higher than some would have liked but not as high as others would have liked. That is a judgment call, and the Government makes it every year. This is the best we can make now. At the level at which they are, the general view is that the incentive to produce is still quite high.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

LABOUR, MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Privy Council or his Parliamentary Secretary. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council is in the House but he is not in his seat—he is still not in his seat.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: Now that the Hon. Member has found his seat, I hope he has the same success in finding a chairman for the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. Could he tell the House why this is the only standing departmental Committee which has not been struck? I am sure it has nothing to do with the two million Canadians who are unemployed, but I am told by the Clerk of the Committee that only the Government Whip can take the initiative in this regard, and I am not sure whether you, Madam Speaker, would permit me to ask a question of the esteemed Government Whip.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, no, I do not know the answer to that question—

Mr. Nielsen: Where is your seat?

Mr. Smith: —but I will find out. I am sure a meeting will be convened very shortly.

APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, if the problem is agreeing on a chairman, then I tell the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council that Members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition are quite willing and able to provide a chairman for that Committee.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, there are many able Members on that Committee. I do not think finding a competent chairman is a problem at all.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—ROLE OF VICE-PRESIDENT ASSOCIATED WITH ENGINEERING FIRM

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister who reports to the House on Canadair. Yesterday in the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections a document was produced which listed a group of Canadian businessmen who purportedly acted as advisers to a Montreal engineering firm, Les Ateliers d'Usinage Hall, in its attempt to gain federal Government contracts. One of the people listed on the list of advisers was a Mr. Jacques E. Ouellette, a vice-president of Canadair Ltd. Therefore, will the Minister undertake to investigate this matter and advise the House if a Crown corporation vice-president is allowed, under current conflict of interest guidelines covering such officials, to sit on an advisory board of a private company seeking business from the federal Government in a field which is so closely related?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I shall check the facts given by the Hon. Member and I shall also find out whether it is against the guidelines or common practice.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

COMMITTEE TESTIMONY

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services who undoubtedly knows of certain testimony given yesterday concerning a company known as 109609 and which, it was represented, had a connection with the Hon. Member for Lincoln. As there was further evidence at the hearing yesterday that the Minister of Supply and Services did indeed respond to certain requests with respect to contracts—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Stevens: —could the Minister of Supply and Services indicate to the House whether he has looked into these allegations, and what are his findings which he would like to share with us today?

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that he may not ask questions in the House concerning Committees. These questions should be asked in the Committee.

Mr. Nielsen: They are based on press accounts.

Madam Speaker: Is the Hon. Member rising on a supplementary to a question which was not allowed?

Mr. Stevens: No, Madam Speaker.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADIAN ARSENALS LIMITED—ROLE OF CHAIRMAN RESPECTING CONTRACTS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my earlier question and certainly my present question were based on press accounts. Undoubtedly the Minister of Supply and Services is aware of a Pierre MacDonald who happens to be chairman of Canadian Arsenals Limited and reports to the Minister of Supply and Services. Could he indicate to the House whether Mr. MacDonald at any time reported to him concerning certain contracts which have an involvement with a company known as 109609 and, if so, what has he been told about those contracts by Mr. MacDonald?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, as I understand it, again from the press reports, it is the intention of the Committee to call Mr. MacDonald before it. Therefore it is a matter which is pertinent to the Committee's deliberations, and I have no further comment to make.

Mr. Nielsen: Why not?

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN POLLUTION—MINISTER'S MEETING WITH UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister and the United States Secretary of State, George Shultz, evidently agreed in Washington this week to turn the urgent problem of acid rain over to a group of Canadian and U.S. scientists to see whether they could find some common ground on which to base a bilateral accord on acid rain affecting the two countries.

Since the very same approach has been tried unsuccessfully for the last three years, largely because the United States administration has undermined it at every turn, even to the extent of manipulating scientific findings, would the Minister tell the House what evidence Mr. Shultz gave to him to indicate that the same approach would be any more successful this time? Would it not be more forthright of the Minister to admit to the House, and through the House to the people of Canada, that he returned from Washington empty handed following meetings with his former classmate?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not think that what is proposed is a continuation of the process that had already taken place. In fact, that idea was tossed around at our meeting and it was abandoned because we finally concluded it would not lead to any further progress.

As the Hon. Member knows, there is a peer group of scientists now in the United States evaluating the results of working groups that have been dealing with acid rain, and likewise there is a scientist heading up a similar group in Canada. Both of these scientists are outside of Government service. It appeared to us that it would be very useful if the two scientists, working from an objective basis, could come together to try to sift out the differences because it is very difficult for me, or for Mr. Shultz, to deal with the matter when we are receiving conflicting advice from our scientists upon which we are attempting to base policy.

It seems to me that what we have proposed has the possibility of reducing what the Americans allege to be considerable scientific uncertainty.

We take the contrary point of view and say that there is sufficient evidence to move with abatement programs. That is the purpose of the exercise.

We hope the next time we meet to be joined by the two scientists and by the Minister of the Environment and the new U.S. administrator, who presumably will be confirmed in that office, Mr. Ruckelshaus, to try to move this very difficult problem forward.

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

CREATION OF JOBS WITH DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last year the Department of National Defence used some 4,000 term employees. These are temporary jobs. This year the Minister of Employment and Immigration has announced some 3,000 temporary jobs be allocated through the Department of National Defence under the NEED program. Already, by March 31, the Department of National Defence terminated some 1,000 temporary jobs. It appears as though the Minister is using the wrecking ball on existing jobs in order to be able to cut the ribbon on new jobs. Will the Minister take this situation seriously, will he investigate it, and will he take the necessary corrective action so that he does not destroy existing jobs in order to be able to announce new jobs?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite mistaken in the suggestion that he has made. We have looked very carefully at the situation because it was brought to our attention by certain union members.

What in fact has occurred in a few defence establishments is that the term workers had a term contract for the fall and winter season and would then go back to work for the summer season. Therefore no workers who are normally employed on defence establishments are in any way being replaced under the NEED program. We have worked very closely with my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, and received his assurances and those of the base commanders. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that he is quite mistaken in the allegations he is making.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, the Minister may claim that myself and the union are mistaken, but I remind him that last year the Department used 4,000 term positions and this year he has allocated 3,000 temporary NEED jobs. Some 1,000 term positions have already disappeared and the year is just beginning. Even though it is difficult to document the situation on the job, the union has begun to do that. For example, in Gander, a janitor, a food service worker, both regular full-time workers, have been replaced. In Goose Bay, three labourers who were on term—

Madam Speaker: Order. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, is the Minister aware that these replacements of term positions by temporary NEED jobs has begun to happen, that it is being documented, and that the criteria for his NEED program stipulate that the new NEED jobs should be extra employment and not replace existing activities? Will he take this matter seriously and investigate?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct in one small portion of his statement, and that is that the NEED program is designed to provide additional employment. But we have looked at the situation very carefully as it applies to defence establishments. What he is suggesting is not in fact taking place. What we are doing is providing incremental jobs to do work that would not otherwise be done. I would suggest to the Hon. Member, as well as to certain representatives of the union who are raising these objections, that it would be much more helpful if they would co-operate with the program rather than raising this kind of criticism.

LABOUR RELATIONS

EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS DISPUTE

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. It has to do with the prolonged negotiations between Eastern Provincial Airways and the pilots. I ask this question on behalf of all Atlantic Canadians. Could the Minister of Labour give us some assurances and indications of what steps will be taken to try to resolve this dispute which is having an unduly serious effect on the economy and on all Canadians in that part of the country? I should hope that through the good offices of the Minister of Labour we could bring about an acceptable solution to this serious problem.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I welcome the interest Hon. Member has expressed on several occasions. I would like to inform him and the House that negotiations between the parties broke off on April 5 without settlement. As I understand it, the key issue is the question of the status of pilots who were hired during the strike. At the present time the Canada Labour Relations Board plans to hold hearings starting next Monday, during which all parties will be heard. I will be glad to keep the Hon. Member informed about any developments.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I want to pose a question to the Minister of Agriculture. He has in the last year and a half spoken very frequently and has spoken publicly and positively with reference to additional funding required for the Farm Credit Corporation. He has also spoken publicly and positively with reference to the need for implementation of the agri-bond concept, with reference to the need for capital gains as relates to people in the agricultural industry, and with reference to some reductions in the cost of farm fuels, all of these being budget items.

Has the Minister had some discussion with and made some representation to his colleague, the Minister of Finance, with reference to these four items which he has spoken positively about on numerous occasions in the last year and a half? Is the Minister satisfied that these discussions have been influential enough to provide some positive results in these four areas for the budget on Tuesday night?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, we have had discussions. I am sure the Hon. former Minister is known for his patience. He will have to be patient and wait until Tuesday night.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CONTRACT GIVEN FORMER CANADIAN AVIATION COMMISSION OFFICIAL

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. He will recall that last August he approved a contract with Mr. Walter McLeish who, at that time, was still the official of his Department in charge of the Canadian Aviation Transport Administration. Mr. McLeish took early retirement some three months after the Minister had submitted the contracts to the Treasury Board. Given the Treasury Board guidelines of May, 1978, on contracts for the services of former Government officials in receipt of Government pensions, which specify that a contracting process between the Government and employees who take early retirement must "withstand the closest scrutiny", would the Minister tell us whether the $43,000 contract to Mr. McLeish for 80 days at $450 per day was given to him as an inducement in the usual way for senior mandarins to fatten their pensions, or was it to get rid of him because of the adverse reaction to his job performance as outlined in the Dubin Aviation Commission of Inquiry?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, in my Department as I think in all other Departments there is a procedure under which former employees of the Department, people who have retired from the Department, can be rehired on contract. I am just following the normal Government practice. Indeed Mr. McLeish is now on contract and doing work which I would think would be very important to the future of the air industry in Canada. He is exploring ideas with the Americans as to the maximum use of air space between Canada and the United States in terms of navigational aids, air control, equipment and procedures, et cetera. He should produce an analysis which might lead to a common approach by Canada and the United States on the manufacturing of equipment. This is a very important subject indeed, and I am delighted to have Mr. McLeish in charge of it.

RESPECT FOR TREASURY BOARD GUIDELINES

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, the Minister will know that a confidential departmental memorandum dated July 23, 1982, a full four months before Mr. McLeish retired—that is what I am getting at—raises doubts about whether the contract did not breach Treasury Board policy of 1974 concerning employer-employee relationships.

Would the Minister give us some assurance that the letter as well as the spirit of the 1974 Treasury Board guidelines were fully respected in the case of this rich contract for Mr. McLeish? Will he also assure us that there will be very close scrutiny as to whether public funds will be flowing into Mr. McLeish's companies, be it the Aero Development Company or his numbered company, No. 116598?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am aware of that. At the time there was the possibility that there might appear to some people to be a conflict between the interest of Mr. McLeish's wife, if I remember clearly, and himself. She is part of a consulting firm which was bidding on that contract. For reasons that my Deputy Minister is in charge of, this was not continued. It has been resumed since. I am waiting for a decision. It was to prevent the appearance of what might have been seen by some people as a conflict of interest that the contract was not pursued at the time.

House of Commons

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF PRINCIPAL CLERKS

Madam Speaker: I am very pleased today to announce to the House the appointment of two Principal Clerks. These two promotions are of particular significance in that they exemplify the willingness of the House of Commons to promote equality in the career paths of the employees of the House of Commons. That has to mean to promote women.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Let me say, however, that these two appointments were made through a regular competition and that the two new Clerks who come to us today are very qualified.

I thought it was important to signify this to the House because obviously it is a breakthrough at the Table of the House of Commons.

[Translation]

I therefore take great pride in introducing today our two new Clerks, Mrs. Mary Anne Griffith, who will be principal clerk in charge of research for the Table—

[English]

—Mrs. Mary Anne Griffith, who is Principal Clerk in charge of research for the Table; and Mrs. Nora Lever, who becomes Principal Clerk in charge of committees and private legislation.

[Translation]

Mrs. Nora Lever will be principal clerk of the Committees and Private Legislation Branch.

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I welcome and congratulate Mary Anne Griffith and Nora Lever, the first women ever appointed to the Table of this House. Their presence in the House will do much to enhance the position of women in our society. They will serve as visible symbols of equality in our political system. It is important that our institution reflect the reality of Canadian life, the fact that 52 per cent of Canadian women over age 15 are in the labour force.

I am confident that these Table officers will bring along with them a wealth of experience and special qualities that will serve to enrich this House.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I want to offer the congratulations of this Party to the two persons who have been appointed to the Table today even though we were not advised in advance that this was being done by the Minister responsible for the status of women.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: I should like to offer the very real appreciation of this Party. If I were to make a comment on that, Madam Speaker, I would only say that it has not come soon enough. I should also like to make the point that we expect to see many more appointments like this in the future. These have been a long time coming and they are indeed welcome. We hope to see many more.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party I also congratulate the two new staff members at the Clerk's Table. Certainly we will look forward to working with them.

We also congratulate you, Madam Speaker, for the leadership you have shown in demonstrating moves toward affirmative action, not to mention the implementation of a day care centre in the workplace. We have also noticed women working in other branches of the House of Commons staff. We hope, however, that this means a definite step toward affirmative action in all Government Departments, and certainly in the election of women to the House of Commons as well.

PETITIONS

MR. GUSTAFSON—CROWSNEST PASS FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I should like to present a petition on behalf of over 3,300 people in the Weyburn areas to the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled.

The petition of the undersigned of the Province of Saskatchewan, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that we object to the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin's transportation proposal announced in Winnipeg, February 1, 1983. It will cause serious economic hardship to grain producers, rural communities, service industries and to the entire provincial economy, through substantially higher freight rates, loss of family farms, abandonment of branch lines, fewer grain delivery points and a massive transfer of economic wealth from Saskatchewan to the railways and other regions. Wherefore we demand that the present statutory Crow rate be maintained. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray. Dated Wednesday, April 13, 1983.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I would first of all like to thank the House for their co-operation in allowing me to stand my Bill over until this time when it could be given full discussion. This is a rather unusual Bill. I have given it a lot of thought. It has been on the Order Paper for a couple of years.

If I were to be asked what there is about this Bill to recommend it to the House, I would quote Edmund Burke, who we all know and revere as a politician of outstanding stature in the days in which he lived. Just about 200 years ago when he was running for nomination in Bristol, in taking questions at the end of his speech he was asked why he wanted to be a Member of Parliament. He replied:

> I want to be a Member of Parliament so to have my share of doing good and resisting evil.

Today all Hon. Members will get a chance to have their share of doing good. I believe that "evil" is a bit hyperbolic for this situation, but there has been an injustice done in the Superannuation Act of the Canadian Forces for many years. A volunteer ex-serviceman has given me permission to use his name as an example of a case which I believe has resulted in a very serious miscarriage of natural justice. I did what I could to get this injustice corrected by writing to various Ministers, to the President of the Treasury Board, to the Minister of National Defence and to the Minister of Justice. I wrote to them on several occasions with no result. If ever I saw a case where people hid behind regulations and bureaucracy had its way, it was in the case of Lieutenant Eric Haywood of the Royal Canadian Navy.

In a letter to the then President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) on April 5, 1982, just over a year ago, I pointed out these facts, and I quote:

> In 1966, then Lieutenant Eric Haywood, of the Royal Canadian Navy, was released from the Royal Canadian Navy for misconduct. He had been convicted on December 20, 1965 on five offences dealing with misappropriation or theft. He and a civilian accomplice appear to have stolen or misappropriated $606 worth of photographic supplies from the Royal Canadian Navy.

Whether he was guilty or not is a question I do not wish to quarrel with. Quoting from the same letter:

> He was convicted in a civilian court and sentenced to two years on each count, sentences to run concurrently. He served something in the order of one year in jail and was then paroled.

His accomplice in this serious act was tried with him. They were tried in a civilian court for, I believe, two reasons; one, the regulations which operate in the Department of National Defence forbid them to sentence an officer to detention and, clearly, there was a likelihood of Lieutenant Haywood being sentenced to confinement in some court or other where they did not have such restrictions, such as a court martial. Second, his accomplice was a civilian. I will have quite a bit more to say about what happened to the two men who were accomplices in this act.

Mr. Haywood was released from the forces under Item 1(b) of the table to Article 15.01 of the Queen's Regulations and Orders for the Royal Canadian Navy, which is entitled "Service Misconduct". At the time of his release the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act had the following provisions for the payment of benefits under the Act for members whose retirement was due to misconduct. Section 10 provides that a contributor who is compulsorily retired from the forces by reason of misconduct is entitled to—and in subparagraph (b) it says, and this is the critical subparagraph which my Bill amends:

> —in the discretion of the Treasury Board if he has served in the Forces for ten or more years, the whole or any part specified by the Treasury Board of any annuity to which he would have been entitled under this section.

That means that the Treasury Board can decide to pay him all of his pension or any part of it. In fact, they could do away with it entirely. Under this authority, ex-Lieutenant Haywood was informed by the Treasury Board that he was to lose 50 per cent of his pension. It should be noted that this meant an additional punishment, without a trial or any representations made on behalf of the person most involved, Mr. Haywood. The fact that the Treasury Board is not a judicial body and the fact that the judge in a court in Saanich, British Columbia deemed that a jail sentence was sufficient punishment for misappropriation with an accomplice of an amount equivalent to $606, seems not to have influenced the Treasury Board at all. It, as I have said, added its punishment of a 50 per cent loss of pension. The amount which Mr. Haywood lost because of the findings of the Treasury Board was something slightly over $50,000 a year ago. The amount is now over $55,000 which he has lost. In my letter of April 5, 1982, I said:

> I am asking you to review the equity and justice of this heavy penalty imposed on top of the penalty for a first offence.

Frankly, it seemed to me that the two-year prison sentence for a first offence of stealing $606 was a fairly heavy sentence in itself. Then he had an additional $55,000 fine imposed by a non-judicial board in Ottawa. I pointed out to the then President of the Treasury Board in my letter:

> I have discussed this matter by correspondence with the Minister of Justice and the Minister of National Defence. The Minister of National Defence in replying to a representation of mine, informed me on March 9 that the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act was amended in 1969 and again in 1977. He then went on to say
> "Insofar as Mr. Haywood is concerned, if his case had arisen after the amendments to the Act, there would have been no change in the amount of the annuity which would have been referred to the Treasury Board for consideration. The policy of the Treasury Board appears to have changed, in that at the time of Mr. Haywood's release it seemed almost automatic that a retirement for misconduct would result in a fifty per cent reduction in the member's annuity.
> Today, the Board is perhaps more compassionate and reductions in the area of twenty to twenty-five per cent are customary."
> I respectively submit that Mr. Haywood has long ago paid the full price for the crime that he committed and that his pension should now be restored.

I finally received an answer to that, and I do not know what civil servant prepared it for the Minister. The then President of the Treasury Board, I assume, took responsibility for it. I would like to read part of it, which might give an idea of the kind of reply I have received from all of the Ministers on this matter. The then President of the Treasury Board said, and I quote:

> The recommendation to the Treasury Board was based on a certification of the Service Pension Board, as constituted under Section 22 of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, that the retirement of ex-Lieutenant Haywood was compulsory because of misconduct and a concurrence that a recommendation to the Treasury Board of a 50 per cent annuity to Mr. Haywood was warranted.
> This recommendation to the Treasury Board was based on the prevailing policy of the Treasury Board at that time which was that a 50 per cent reduction in the annuity payable to a member dismissed for misconduct was appropriate. You will understand, therefore, that the 50 per cent pension reduction subsequently approved by the Treasury Board in the case of Mr. Haywood was fully in accord with decisions taken during those years in numerous other similar cases of release for misconduct.
> It is quite true, as the March 9, 1982 letter to you from the Office of the Minister of National Defence indicates, that in the misconduct cases which the Treasury Board has reviewed in recent years (and these have been very infrequent), the Board has approved reductions in amounts lesser than the 50 per cent reductions approved in earlier years. This, I feel, is a reflection of more recent views concerning the extent to which pensions payable to contributors who are released from employment for reasons of misconduct should be abated.

He then goes on to make a very curious remark for a Minister of the Crown and President of the Treasury Board, and I quote:

There is, of course, no legal means by which the Treasury Board's decision concerning Mr. Haywood's pension could be altered at this time.

That is the reply I receive from everyone. They feel that they are not the rulers of this land, that they are not the Cabinet of the country; they are just poor, unwitting people who have to go along with and obey every decision they have previously made. I am particularly dismayed that a Minister of the Crown would write such garbage to me. He continues in his letter to me, and I quote:

Even if it were possible for the Treasury Board to reconsider the matter, any decision to do so would not, of course, be fair to other contributors who were similarly dismissed from the Forces for misconduct and were awarded a pension benefit reduced by 50 per cent.

• (1520)

I think that sums up what I meant when I said that various Ministers are beating around the bush, trying to avoid their responsibility in this matter. Now, Mr. Speaker, I went to the trouble of looking up who can be discharged for misconduct. It is possible to have a kind of subliminal fine, in this case $55,000, added to the penalty without either the person involved or the judge who passed sentence understanding it. Because the man was discharged under a provision which calls for misconduct releases, he pays that fine whether he knows it or not. I am sure the judge did not understand that. The relevant part of the Queen's Regulations is Article 15.01, which reads:

when convicted by a service tribunal of a serious offence that warrants release under this category: when convicted by service tribunals of a number of offences indicating a course of misbehaviour that warrants release under this category: when convicted by the civil power of an offence of a serious nature related to the performance of his duties which would have warranted release under this category if convicted by a service tribunal:

That is the one under which they no doubt released Lieutenant Haywood. But how do you like this one? It reads "Illegally Absent", and it applies to someone:

who has been illegally absent and will not be required for further service under existing service policy:

So you can be released for the misconduct of being absent without leave. I point this out so you will understand, Mr. Speaker, how wide ranging this can be. The Act and the Queen's Regulations provides for release from the forces for what really amounts to a trivial offence if they feel like letting you out for that reason.

As I said, I tried every way I could to get some action on this matter without the rather unusual step of producing a Private Member's Bill in an attempt to get the rules changed. I was forced to this because of the inaction or unwillingness of any of the Ministers to seize their responsibilities and do something about such an injustice.

Now, I think the explanatory note in Bill C-658 is fairly clear to everyone. It reads:

The purpose of this Bill is to limit the extraordinary discretion of the Treasury Board under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act to reduce substiantially pensions of Canadian Forces personnel who have been discharged for misconduct, sometimes for less than major offences.

The new scheme would basically limit Treasury Board's power to intervene by deeming the total period of pensionable service to expire at the time of the commission of an offence and allowing that period to be reduced by a maximum of twelve months for the purposes of calculating the annuity payable.

In this particular case Lieutenant Haywood had 26 years' service when he committed a crime. He does not wish to quarrel with or debate whether he was guilty or not. They found him guilty; he accepts that. They sentenced him; he accepts that. But what he finds difficult to accept is that they took away 13 years, one half, of his pensionable service. Now, if during that period of time his service was actually of a character such that he was misconducting himself, it is not Mr. Haywood who is in trouble; it is the Armed Forces who are in trouble if they cannot find out in less than 13 years that people are doing things which would lead to misconduct releases.

I do not think the Bill needs any further explanation except for Clause 2 on the back page of the Bill. It provides:

Section I shall be deemed to have come into force on January 1, 1946.

Now, there is a very fine legal point here. The present Superannuation Act was not in force at that time. It did not come into force until July 8, 1959. If the House wanted to amend my Bill to change January 1, 1946 to July 8, 1959, I would be quite willing to do so. It is a very fine legal point because the Bill in 1959 gave Treasury Board the authority to deduct the vested rights a serviceman had before the Bill came into effect. I expect you could get into quite a legal argument over that if you wanted to do so.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out the difference between these two people who were convicted on the same day, by the same judge, on the same charge. One was a civilian, one was a service officer, and both were sentenced to two years' imprisonment. When they came out on parole, I believe at the same time, the civilian went back to his job but the service officer was not allowed to go back to his job. He was thrown out forever. That is an additional punishment.

Not only that, the civilian can go ahead making his plans for retirement; anything he had accumulated previously was still waiting there for him. If he had an annuity, no one cancelled it; if he had a lot of bonds in the bank to live on in his old age, no one cancelled them. The service officer finds out that not only did he have to do his time and lose his job, he has also lost $55,000 so far. This seems to me to be a simple injustice, and I would like to see it corrected. I have been trying for over a year and a half to get it corrected, and Bill C-658 is kind of a last recourse. So I ask for your indulgence, that the Bill be passed and sent to the appropriate committee for further action.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise to speak in support of the Bill put forward by the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). It seeks to protect the pensions of Armed Forces personnel who have been forced to retire because of misconduct.

As the Member said, there are often cases where the charges and penalties are quite trivial compared to the past record of the person who is suffering the consequences such that this Bill is trying to correct. Lieutenant Haywood had 26 years of service and was forced to retire from the Armed Forces because of this conviction. That he lost 13 years of pensionable service time seems to be very unfair and very unjust indeed.

I would hope that, if the Bill moves beyond Private Members' hour today, the Hon. Member who introduced the Bill would consider looking at the implications of this kind of activity as it applies to the RCMP as well. I am not sure that exactly the same case applies, but if it does, I would certainly want to see members of the RCMP included in this type of Bill.

We all know the good job that members of the Canadian Armed Forces perform for us. In active service during World War I, World War II and the Korean conflict many Canadians put their lives on the line for our democratic freedoms in this country. Since the United Nations came into being Canada has participated in peacekeeping forces throughout the world and many service personnel served very admirably on such missions. Of course, we are all aware of the good job that our Armed Forces personnel do in search and rescue and helping out in times of national disasters. I know very well the job that the Canadian Forces personnel sometimes do when they are called into my constituency, The Battlefords-Meadow Lake, to help fight forest fires when there are not the person-power resources available to get some pretty extensive blazes under control. Although this is sort of a peripheral role of the Canadian Armed Forces, they certainly act in reply to the call of the country whenever we are in trouble in terms of armed conflict, national disaster or search and rescue. Quite often they are asked to do this with old and outdated equipment, inadequate resources and material to perform their jobs.

I know that all people in Canada enter the Canadian Forces of their own free will; in some cases it is for jobs, and in other instances as a service to their country. In a great many cases it is to obtain training that they want to take with them when they do in fact leave the Canadian Forces. One of the things, of course, which they plan on when they join the Canadian Armed Forces or the RCMP is the pension which is available to them.

The Bill before us today will correct some of the inequities which take place as a result of the discretionary power of the Treasury Board in terms of cutting pensions of those Canadian Forces personnel who may have done something of a trivial nature which has offended the Armed Forces, with the result that they have been asked to retire, sort of amounting to a forced retirement. When they are asked to do this, it means cutting their pensionable years in half. It is a great hardship on such personnel in their retirement years. In the case of Mr. Haywood, he had planned for some 26 years as an active member of the Canadian Forces, only to find himself in a very dire situation, I would imagine, having only half the pensionable time which he would expect to have served out in his term with the Canadian Forces.

As I mentioned earlier, I would also like to have this Bill applied to members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who, as well as the Canadian Forces personnel, often put their lives on the line for our country in service to us in times of natural disaster or whatever the call might be.

The New Democratic Party supports the intent of the Private Member's Bill introduced by the Hon. Member for Victoria, and we would be very happy to see the Bill go through the House this afternoon.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I note that the explanatory notes of Bill C-658 state:

> The purpose of this Bill is to limit the extraordinary discretion of the Treasury Board under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act to reduce substantially pensions of Canadian Forces personnel who have been discharged for misconduct, sometimes for less than major offences.

Taking it from there, I would say that contrary to what one reads in the explanatory notes, the discretion of the Treasury Board under the provisions of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act is not extraordinary but, rather, is similar to the discretion presently exercised by Treasury Board pursuant to Regulation 41 of the Public Service Superannuation Act, which reads as follows:

> Where a contributor is convicted of an indictable offence committed by him while employed in the Public Service, if the Treasury Board is of the opinion that the commission of the offence by the contributor constituted misconduct in office, any annuity or allowance payable under the Act to or in respect of the contributor shall be reduced by such amount as the Treasury Board, in its discretion, considers appropriate.

Therefore, one will see from this statement of the Public Service Superannuation Act that the individual in question is being treated just as fairly and could not expect any further fair treatment than that. Furthermore, contrary to what you read in the explanatory notes, no Canadian Forces personnel, to my knowledge, or to the knowledge of the Department so far as I know, has ever been discharged for misconduct for less than a major offence.

I submit to Your Honour that this offence was in fact a major offence. It was not only one offence, it was a series of offences. There were, in fact, five offences.

The definition of "contributor" in paragraph 10(4)(b) of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act is found in paragraph 10(5) and reads as follows:

> For the purposes of subsection (4), a contributor described in this subsection is any contributor who is compulsorily retired from the regular force.
> (a) as a result of the carrying out of a punishment of dismissal, or dismissal with disgrace, from Her Majesty's service;
> (b) by reason of his having been convicted under
> (i) section 296 of the Criminal Code, or
> (ii) section 120 of the National Defence Act for an act punishable under section 296 of the Criminal Code—

Paragraph 10(5)(b), which really deals with one of these sections about which we are concerned, continues:

By reason of his having been found guilty of an offence under section 104 of the National Defence Act that was found to have been committed at a time when he was, by reason of his rank, appointment or employment or as a result of lawful command, entrusted with the custody, control or distribution of the thing stolen;

(c) by reason of his having been convicted under any law of Canada, other than section 84 of the National Defence Act, of an offence involving traitorous or treasonable behaviour;

(d) by reason of his having been convicted under section 78 of the National Defence Act—

(e) by reason of his having been absent without authority—

This was a Section of the Act to which reference was given by the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon).

Any member who receives any one of the above-noted punishments or commits any one of the above-noted infractions has been convicted of a major offence. As such, he should not expect necessarily to receive as a right the same pension benefits as a person who was released for reasons other than misconduct. It should also be noted that although the statement was made that misconduct releases may affect those who have committed less than major offences, no attempt has been made in Bill C-658 to amend the definition of "misconduct". It may be, then, that the Hon. Member may wish to do this in the future.

Consideration must be given to the fact that, at the very worst, a member released for misconduct will receive a return of contributions under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act and Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act pertaining to this. As well, he will receive interest thereon at the rate of 4 per cent compounded annually.

Any attempt to make the proper legislation retroactive to January 1, 1946, is unacceptable for two basic reasons. I think the Hon. Member has noted his own error in this, although I do not believe he gave the appropriate answer.

First, Bill C-658 is attempting to amend the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, and as the Act only came into effect in 1959, one cannot amend an Act retroactively to a point in time when the Act did not exist. The Hon. Member did point that out.

Second, any amendment in the manner proposed would be inequitable, as some ex-members would have already chosen a return of contributions rather than elected for reduced annuities, while other members in receipt of a reduced annuity would now be deceased. All members knew, or should have known, both the legal implication of their criminal activities and also the possible pension implications. I suppose we would say that there is a presumption of knowledge as far as the law is concerned. One is presumed to know. I think that applies to all of our laws. One is presumed to know the nature and consequences of one's act, and one is presumed to know the law; yet individuals sometimes choose to commit offences. As such, they should not expect special consideration at this late stage.

I further note from the explanatory notes:

The new scheme would basically limit Treasury Board's power to intervene by deeming the total period of pensionable service to expire at the time of the commission of an offence and allowing that period to be reduced by a maximum of 12 months for the purposes of calculating the annuity payable.

In the application of this existing Section, it has been the practice of the Department in recent years to recommend the benefit equal to the benefit which would have been applied to members released for other reasons at the time of the commission of the offence. This, in fact, is a more liberal benefit than that which is recommended in Bill C-658. Moreover, the existing Section provides some discretion which might apply in exceptional circumstances. I do not really know whether special circumstances can be shown in this case, but perhaps they can. It may be that the longer period of service in itself, some 26 years, should be taken into account. It is a long period to find that one would have his or her pension reduced by one-half.

As the law presently stands, there is no reason why this decision would not stand in the absence of any other evidence to the contrary. There is, however, no such discretion provided for in Bill C-658, which is another amendment I would suggest to the Hon. Member if he intends to present the Bill on a subsequent occasion.

Since the Hon. Member is obviously referring to the Haywood case, I can mention it. I assume that was the case he was referring to when preparing his Private Member's Bill. The facts of the case are rather interesting and I suggest they should be put on the record. In October of 1965, this ex-member was convicted by the civil authorities at Victoria, British Columbia, on each of five charges of fraud and theft under the Criminal Code of Canada. He was sentenced to the term of two years' imprisonment on each count, such sentences to run concurrently. In other words, he did not serve ten years, two years for each conviction, but the five two-year terms were to run concurrently. The charges arose out of the misuse of photographic equipment which was the property of the Royal Canadian Navy Photographic Establishment at Esquimalt, British Columbia.

As a result of his conviction the ex-member was released from the Royal Canadian Navy on May 31, 1966, under Item 1(b) of the table to Article 15.01 of the Queen's Regulations and Orders for the Royal Canadian Navy entitled "Service Misconduct".

At the time of his release the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act had the following provisions for the payment of benefits under the Act for members whose retirement was due to misconduct. I believe it is noteworthy that these Sections of the Act are somewhat different from what they presently are. In fact, the Hon. Member for Victoria alluded to them in part.

Section 10(5) indicates that a contributor who is compulsorily retired from the Armed Forces by reason of misconduct is entitled to:

(a) return of contributions, or

(b) in the discretion of the Treasury Board, if he has served in the Forces for ten or more years, the whole or any part specified by the Treasury Board of any annuity to which he would have been entitled under this section if—

It goes on to indicate some other Sections as well. However, I think we should take into account that there is the presumption of knowledge of the law although it may not have in fact been known by the perpetrator of the crime. By the same token, I have never yet met anyone who was charged with a criminal offence who expected to be caught. One does not expect to be caught when committing a crime or it would not be committed in the first place. I can only assume that he did not expect to be caught in the first place. Since he was caught he should have appreciated the nature and consequences of his act.

In a meeting held on August 15, 1966, the Service Pension Board certified that it had determined that the reason for the retirement of the ex-member was compulsory because of his misconduct. At the same time the Board concurred that, in accordance with the provisions of a policy guide on discretionary awards, the member's retirement warranted a recommendation to the Treasury Board of a reduced annuity pursuant to Section 10(5)(b), Subsection 2, of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act. The so-called policy guide was one adopted by the then Associate Minister of National Defence on discretionary authority of the Treasury Board to approve certain benefits under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act.

On September 1, 1966 the Treasury Board approved an annuity reduced by 50 per cent, as has been pointed out. I am sure that at the time this was brought forward the amount involved was considered to be rather nominal in nature. The amount is as large as it is today due to the numbers of years that have passed since this order was made.

Apparently the ex-member has applied to the Service Pension Board on numerous occasions since September, 1966 for a review of his case. On every occasion the Board members were unanimous in their opinion that the Board ruling of August, 1966 and the subsequent award by the Treasury Board should not be disturbed. I think it is important to note that they were unanimous on every occasion that he took this matter before the Board.

The ex-member was subsequently granted a pardon by the Governor in Council in accordance with the provisions of the Criminal Records Act. As a result of this pardon, the Service Pension Board was faced with the problem of whether the pardon vacated the disability placed on the ex-member's annuity and whether it meant that the annuity should be restored to its full amount. It should be appreciated that when one applies for a pardon it only pertains to the conviction that was lodged and not to any of the other consequences following therefrom.

The matter was referred to the Department of Justice which advised that the pardon granted under the Criminal Records Act did not affect in any way the decision of the Treasury Board to specify that the ex-member was entitled to 50 per cent of the total annuity that could be awarded to him under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act.

When the ex-member was advised that the Service Pension Board decided that no change in the Treasury Board ruling with respect to his annuity was indicated as a result of the opinion from the Department of Justice, he appealed directly to the Treasury Board itself. After a complete review of all the material available on his case, the chief of the Treasury Board pension group advised the ex-member that as a result of the opinion expressed by the Department of Justice she could not accede to his request for a review of his entitlement under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act.

In order for a decision to be reversed in this matter, the ex-member would have to submit new evidence to the Service Pension Board concerning the original offence which led to his dismissal. As well, the nature of that evidence would have to be such that the Board could reasonably conclude that the reason for his release was not in fact misconduct as defined in the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act. I would suggest that this is indeed a very heavy onus upon this ex-serviceman. Obviously if there was any evidence it should have been presented at the time of his trial, and if there was any evidence available that was not presented, he may have had an appeal at that time.

In any event, that was not the case. In the absence of his ability to oblige this obviously extensive onus placed upon him, nothing further could be done. While the amount of the reduction may seem harsh by present day standards, we must accept the fact that penalties were more severe in cases of misconduct release at the time of the Treasury Board decision. It should be noted that in misconduct cases which the Treasury Board has reviewed in recent years, which have been very infrequent, the Board has approved reductions in amounts lesser than the 50 per cent reduction approved in earlier years. Obviously times have changed since this happened some 17 years ago. Perhaps there would be a great difference today and the amount would be less, but anyone who has received a sentence years ago cannot expect to have it reversed years later and have a lesser sentence meted out by the courts or the tribunal.

Of course, this is a reflection of the more recent views concerning the extent to which pensions payable to contributors who are released from employment for reasons of misconduct should be abated. I note that there has been a tremendous amount of correspondence in regard to this matter from various Departments, including the Department of National Defence and the Treasury Board, with the Hon. Member for Victoria.

I would point out to him that this is not as though it was a case of a first offence, as he has alleged. It is actually a situation in which there are five offences. Furthermore, they are not five offences where one conviction results; it is a case of five offences and five convictions. It is a case where there was an individual sentence of two years on each of the convictions. There is no doubt that the sentence which was meted out was a proper one for the court or the tribunal to consider at that time. The penalty was in fact served.

The Hon. Member for Victoria has talked about an additional penalty which this ex-member has had to bear, being the loss which he has sustained in his pension. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that if he wanted to consider it as a fine, it could have been part of the sentence. Not only would he serve a term of incarceration, he might have been fined as well. Moreover, I understand that he is assumed to have known the nature and the consequences of his act. He is not placed in double jeopardy, as the Hon. Member has suggested. These were five separate acts of major misconduct. The gentleman was charged on each of the five fraud and theft charges and convicted of each of them. To my knowledge there were no appeals launched on any of them.

I do not think you can analogize that the civilian and the service officer are necessarily in the same situation. The service officer knows what the terms of his service are. He knows he must follow the law. He knows there is a very high onus upon him. He knew or ought to have known that if he committed those offences that he did in fact commit and of which he was convicted, he would have to pay a penalty and the penalty could be very high, not only in terms of incarceration but also in terms of loss of pension. He knew or he ought to have known that the Treasury Board had the power to make this kind of determination. I would assume there had already been cases heard before this when Treasury Board utilized this same power.

This is a sad case, there is no question about that. This serviceman had 26 years of service. I suppose if he had taken an early retirement he would not have had the problem at all. But he did not take an early retirement; he chose to stay on. He commited the offences of which he was charged, convicted and he served his time. It is unfortunate for him but he had to follow the terms of service in his service career. He is, you might say, the author of his own misfortune in that he had to serve time and as a result lost part of his pension.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I have a few words to say on Bill C-658 which is sponsored by the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). This Bill seeks to amend the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act.

My good friend, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson), has done quite a good job of informing the House of some of the circumstances from which this Bill flows. There is no doubt the Hon. Member for Victoria is well motivated, as he usually is. I appreciate full well what he is attempting to do. I just want to say to him in all candour that I do not think he can do what his Bill asks, not because he does not have a majority in this House to support his Bill in the particular issue, but because in principle it would be wrong for this kind of Bill to pass. If we reduce this legislature, this House of Commons, to a place where we have to tailor a Bill, an act of Parliament, to the particular circumstance of every individual in this country, the permutations are large in number. I did not say a Bill for every individual in this country. That would require only about 24 million Bills. I said an Act for every circumstance in the life of every person in this nation. You are talking hypothetically of billions of permutations.

What this House is intended to do is something different. It is not intended to write a rule book to address every conceivable circumstance in the country. It is intended, among other things, I submit, Mr. Speaker, to provide protection for people as a whole in this country, to provide opportunities for them, and to provide constraints within which they must operate.

The gentleman who is the focal point of this piece of proposed legislation knew full well the constraints in which he was expected to operate. It is my understanding, and the information which my friend from Etobicoke-Lakeshore read into the record has not been contradicted, that the gentleman concerned elected, as is his prerogative, to operate outside those constraints. For that there were penalties.

I do not believe the time of the Hon. Member for Victoria, my time or your time, Mr. Speaker, would be well served if we were asked in effect to change the rules after the fact. To present a case of someone who operated outside certain legislative constraints who would now like to have the constraints tailored to suit his circumstances; is there anybody in this country who believes that is a proper role for this Parliament to undertake? I do not, Mr. Speaker. I believe, knowing the gentleman from Victoria as I do—not well, but I believe I know him well enough—I do not believe he sees that as a role for this particular Parliament.

I say to him and to Parliament that I believe he finds himself in a fairly unenviable position. He has been supplicated by an individual who clearly has a very real problem, a problem which imposes upon him many financial implications. If a sweep of the pen could make the financial situation of that gentleman easier, I am sure in principle no one here would be against it. I am not against it. But I tell you what I am against, Mr. Speaker. I am against setting a precedent which would know no end. This case has floodgate implications. If after the fact you were to broaden the constraints which were well understood, legislated in good faith and abided by almost everyone, what would happen if you were told there was one individual who chose not to abide by them? I have said already that it is his prerogative to make that kind of election. But I learned a long time ago, and I believe everyone in this House has learned likewise, that for every act there is a consequence; and for every action there is a reaction. Everything you do and everything you say triggers a set of events. Simply put, I believe—no pun intended—that this man has had his day in court.

From what I have read, I believe he has been treated fairly. I believe it is time to let sleeping dogs lie. I say to my friend from Victoria, let us put this one to bed. Give the Hon. Member an "A" for effort. He has tried, and he has aired the case. He has aired it in a proper fashion. He has done the right thing by raising the case. The Hon. Member must know there is no way that this initiative can succeed. It cannot succeed because of the awesome precedent it has the potential of setting.

Much has been made of the pardon obtained in this case. As I understand the Statute under which this pardon was obtained, such pardons are intended to facilitate the future activities of those pardoned, not to undo the past. The pardon does not say that we will undo the past. It does not say that this never happened. It does not say that the finding of the court was in error. Do not let it be suggested for a moment that the provision of a pardon is tantamount to suggesting that the court was in error in the first place. We all know that was not the reason for the pardon or the spirit within which the provision of pardons was legislated. Pardons are there to facilitate the future activities of individuals who have need of such.

The discretionary power vested in Treasury Board in this particular type of case is there for very good reason. We often hear in a country as large and as diverse as ours, trying to address many problems, that our legislation could run into the danger of lacking some compassion and flexibility. We have a number of mechanisms for addressing the problem of potential inflexibility. We do it by setting out broad parameters in law or in legislation which we put through the House. Then we allow certain discretionary powers to flow from that broad legislation. If we were to make the mistake of locking into law or statute every single possible occurrence and were to try to anticipate every wrinkle which could flow from a statute and then incorporate in law a provision to accommodate that wrinkle, of course we would be here all the time, and I do not think we would be serving the country very well.

Thus we do something else instead. We vest certain discretionary powers. Who are these people in Treasury Board? Are they people who have an axe to grind with an individual, probably? Are they people who are on a witch hunt, maybe? Are they people who get their jollies out of adversely affecting the financial situation of someone thousands of miles away? I do not believe that; I just do not believe that. I believe those people who made that decision and exercised that discretionary power properly vested in law did so fairly, with compassion and at the same time dispassionately, without grinding any axes toward any particular individual. It is not that Mr. Speaker has to take my word for it because I understand the Department of Justice has indicated exactly what I just said. Justice has said that Treasury Board acted honourably and properly in this particular case.

We cannot have our cake and eat it too. We cannot in one debate parade the Department of Justice as an instrument of Government whose advice is listened to and in this debate forget the respect we have for that instrument and say that they should have no discretion, that we should cross every "t" and dot every "i".

Let us be clear about what we are talking. We have a case which has had the benefit of the full process—the judicial, the executive and the governmental process. The case has been well aired, well heard and well adjudicated. I find no dissent. I find no minority reports from Treasury Board on the issue. I find no evidence that there were suspicious circumstances, and by that I mean circumstances which would tend to suggest that the individual was being scapegoated in some particular fashion. I find no evidence of any of this whatsoever.

Indeed, if we were to line up the forces on either side of the argument, we would find the Department of Justice, whose opinion I respect, on one side; we would find Treasury Board on the same side; and we would find Parliament on this side because it passed the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act in the first place. We would find them all on this particular side, save one or two individuals.

If I were in the gentleman's situation, I would be on the same side as he. Understandably we find the person whose pension has been adversely affected on the other side of the issue, and somewhat understandably the Hon. Member for Victoria is on that particular side of the issue. He is on that side for another reason, but an equally good one. Obviously he does not stand to gain financially in any way, but as a Member of Parliament he wants to be sure that he does the right thing. I think he is doing the right thing. If I were in his situation, I would be doing the same kind of thing. I would be airing this to the fullest extent. I would be ensuring that no stone was left unturned. I would have this matter fully aired on behalf of the gentleman concerned. But I suggest that these are the only two individuals, both for good reason, who are on the other side of the argument.

It is significant that of all speakers who participated this afternoon it is only the Hon. Member for Victoria who has spoken from his side. Maybe he wants to take a few minutes of the time of the House to find if there is someone else who will support the case he puts. I am not referring to his right to put that case. I support his right to put it, but I do not believe, in all candour, that he has a supportable case. That may well be the reason it is he alone who stands in the House and advocates his position. I say he does it because he has to. I do not say that in any pejorative sense. I defend his right to do what he is doing today, but having done it, I think he should put the issue to rest.

The case has been well aired. I believe that the right decisions have been made and that we would commit a travesty this afternoon if we took any steps which would undermine the decisions made in this case.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It will be very short. I am sure the last Member who spoke would not want to mislead the country unwittingly. The New Democratic Party supported my motion and my Bill.

Mr. Simmons: I was unaware of that. I thank the Hon. Member for bringing it to my attention and to the attention of the House.

• (1610)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and to proceed to the next order.

Shall all orders listed under Private Members' Public Bills preceding Order No. 466 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR CERTAIN UNILINGUAL PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYEES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine) moved that Bill C-666, an Act to amend the Official Languages Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I refer to the explanatory note on this Bill to amend the Official Languages Act. The purpose of this Bill is three-fold. It would amend and enshrine in legislation paragraph 7 of the House of Commons Resolution of June 6, 1973, on official languages and certain principles respecting employment in the Public Service of Canada and to extend its application to Crown corporations, the Armed Forces, and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

The amendment to paragraph 7 would provide that any person employed in the above-stated categories as of the Royal Assent of the Official Languages Act in 1969 would not be subject to the Act's provisions or the interpretations of the provisions. It would also ensure that private companies applying for or under contracts or subject to grants from the federal Government would not be forced to comply with provisions or interpretations of the provisions of the Official Languages Act which the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) is proposing in his Bill C-398.

This particular Bill would impose Sections of the Official Languages Act on the private sector, and for non-compliance they would receive jail sentences and fines.

The bill to amend the Official Languages Act would give greater credibility to the notion of the "merit principle" as a basis for hiring and promotion in the civil service by reinforcing the vested rights of a generation of civil servants who may be fully qualified for designated positions but who may not have had the aptitude to learn the French language and thus have been denied promotion.

I would point out that there has never been any all-Party approval for any of the items I have just mentioned. Any time this issue was raised in the House or elsewhere, we would get the standard answer from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or Members of his Cabinet that this has all-Party approval. I want to assure the House that there has never been any all-Party approval to dead end fully qualified, English-speaking Canadians.

Another matter that is causing considerable concern across the country is a recent speech made by the Hon. Serge Joyal, the Secretary of State for Canada, where in his speech he pointed out that he is going to turn Canada into a French state. I have no recollection of any discussion in the House of a proposal to turn Canada into a French state. In this speech that the Minister made in Halifax, he also stated that he is going to make Canada a French country, both inside and outside Quebec. I do not know what that means and how that is going to affect English-speaking Canadians, but the plan to turn Canada into a French state is something that the Government should be explaining to the Canadian people.

In the Secretary of State's recent speech in Halifax, he stated:

> My role as Secretary of State is first and foremost to ensure that my French compatriots in Canada feel with deep conviction, as I do, that this is their country and that it reflects their image.

I do not think we can argue with that. He goes on to state:

> —the ambition of making Canada a French country both inside and outside Quebec.

The Minister certainly puts his cards on the table and tells us exactly what his aspirations are. He continued:

> Because everything we undertake and everything we are doing is to make Canada a French state.

I imagine when he says "we" he is referring to the present Liberal Government.

Mr. Yalden, the Commissioner of the official languages program, has stated that it is time the Liberal Government told the country what its official languages program is all about; but its reluctance to do that is what is causing so much division and confusion in the country. I have acted in accordance with this statement of Mr. Yalden's by calling for debate in Parliament on this issue. Many of the points that the Liberals should be acting upon are described in my Official Languages Bill.

I would like to refer to a recent questionnaire that I distributed in my riding asking if my constituents would like to have a full and open parliamentary debate on whether they support the Liberal Government's policies of making Canada a fully bilingual country. I received the highest return on this questionnaire that I have ever received over the past 10 years. Ninety-seven per cent voted for having a full-scale parliamentary debate so the present Government could explain its bilingual policies to the Canadian people.

This questionnaire was also distributed widely throughout Ontario and I received approximately 1,200 of these questionnaires back. Ninety-nine point seven per cent of respondents stated yes, they wanted a parliamentary debate on the discriminatory elements of the Government's bilingual policies. You can see the concerns that we have across the country, Mr. Speaker.

Here are some points of discussion that we could have in regard to abuses of the Official Languages Act. Parliamentary legal opinion is that the Official Languages Act is very loosely worded and is open to broad interpretation. If a Minister instructs his Department to implement the Official Languages Act without filling in the details and thus without acting responsibly, then the discretionary powers of the officials charged with the duty are practically limitless. This results in the abuses of the original intent of the Act and opens the doors to broad exaggerations of the original policy. Examples of this are Franco-banks, quotas, hiring teams, and the dead ending of qualified Anglophones.

Here are a few examples of how unilingual English Canadians are being discriminated against as a result of the hiring and promotion practices of the present Government. These examples are evidence of the necessity for laws to protect English-speaking Canadians.

A former Member of a Government agency described by superiors as a "very loyal and dedicated" employee is threatening to go to court and sue for damages because of bilingual policies which prevent her from regaining her job. She has been denied re-employment only because she does not have a "desired knowledge of the French language". The following is an excerpt from her letter. I would also like to point out that this individual has two diplomas from two schools received upon learning and passing a test in the French language. This is what the individual has stated:

> As an English speaking citizen of Canada, I find this unacceptable as I have proven that I am not adverse to learning the second official language. What I cannot understand is why any federal agency or Government Department for that matter is denying a Canadian citizen employment solely on the fact he or she cannot speak one of the second official languages. In the past the foundation of hiring and promotion was based on merit. Has this long established, fair and used standard of hiring the best suited person for the position been changed to one of linguistic qualifications only?

Unfortunately that is what is happening in Canada.

> Furthermore, why are they not taking my qualifications and experience into consideration?

The staffing and personnel officer had written the following in regard to this individual in answer to this person's question regarding re-employment:

> We would like to assure you that the reason not to process your application for re-engagement is based solely on a matter of bilingualism.

There has never been any all-Party approval for any such thing. The individual's appraisal reads as follows:

● (1620)

> This young member impressed me quite favourably and I would have to say that the agency is losing a very loyal and dedicated employee.

The recommendation given at the time of the appraisal was that favourable consideration be given to an application for a position should she seek employment at some future time. Another staffing and personnel officer had made these comments: "She is reported as a good employee and should be given serious consideration should she reapply in the future."

This individual has all the qualifications but they will not rehire her because she cannot pass a certain level language proficiency test. A third authority in the Department said: "I agree with the recommendation to hire this person", but they would not hire her because she could not pass the severe language training test.

I should like to read now from an RCMP directive. It is now under investigation by the Human Rights Commission which I hope will hand down a decision very shortly. It reads in part as follows:

> Since there is still an urgent need to recruit first official language French bilingual applicants, I urge you all, Members and public servants to make a special effort towards the force's bilingual recruiting program. While normal recruiting programs such as advertising campaigns through the news media, participation in career days, high school visitation et cetera, have brought about good results, I firmly believe more can be done on an individual "word of mouth" basis. More specifically, people you come in contact with such as neighbours, acquaintances and relatives provide an excellent base to stimulate our recruiting efforts. Our employees are therefore encouraged to alert any person they may come in contact with whom they feel has the potential to become a member of the force.

What all this means is that they are recruiting one nationality for jobs in the RCMP and that fully-qualified, English-speaking members of the RCMP who do not have the aptitude to learn the French language and cannot pass the severe proficiency test are being denied promotion. That is ridiculous in a paramilitary organization. What we want is the most qualified police officers going to the most senior positions, but that is being disregarded.

I should like to quote now from a letter issued by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs regarding hiring, recruitment and promotion of Francophones. The letter points out that this is being done to the exclusion of any other Canadian nationality. This is discrimination; it is special, preferential treatment for one nationality for hiring. The correspondence reads in part as follows:

> There are many rumours circulating in the office that the hiring team presently seeking examiners has been instructed to limit their search to Francophones and particularly to unilingual Francophones. It has been further alleged that academically-qualified Anglophones have been rejected.

There has never been any discussion of any kind of policy like this and there has not been all-Party approval for any kind of discriminatory hiring and promotional practice. It is time that this matter was fully and completely debated in this House. The letter continues:

> The possibility that these rumours could be true appears to be supported by the apparent attempt to keep bilingual positions open for those Francophones being hired rather than offering these positions to bilingual examiners presently in unilingual English positions. Such rumours have considerable impact on morale in the office and invite discredit. Such practices are also contrary to the "merit principle".

The purpose of my Bill is to make paragraph 7 law. It would enshrine the merit system in law so that the Government could not implement this kind of discriminatory hiring and promotional practice. The letter continues:

> It is time that such rumours were squelched. Of the many ways in which you could do this, we would like to suggest that you assure all the staff of the office that these rumours are unfounded and that you support them by publication of the criteria being used for hiring.

English-speaking public servants have, since the passage of the Official Languages Act, consistently been losing ground in their attempts to be treated equally with their French-speaking counterparts. Another example is the case of an air traffic controller who was going to lose his job about five years ago because he did not have the aptitude to learn the French language. He had to spend five years in the courts to try and save his job and finally had to go to the Supreme Court before there was a ruling that the Government could not dismiss him because he could not learn the French language. The Supreme Court ruled on a section of the 1973 language resolution. My Bill proposes that paragraph 7 be made law. Canadian citizens would then not have to spend five years in the courts in an effort to save their jobs because they do not have the aptitude to learn the French language.

I should like to quote a portion of a memorandum which was issued following an energy sector management meeting of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. It reads as follows:

> From now on, all French-speaking candidates should be considered exceptional and, therefore, subject to clear-track hiring. Managers should feel free to hire Francophones without interference.

Why is only one nationality being declared exceptional, Mr. Speaker? I do not recall any discussions like that taking place in the debates of 1969 or 1973. There has never been all-Party approval to declare one nationality exceptional over other nationalities in this country.

An Armed Forces order states as follows:

> Government policy dictates that departments and agencies are to ensure that an equitable participation of both official language groups is achieved. With the intent of meeting this requirement the CF attempts to maintain an Anglophone/Francophone cultural balance, relative to the NRG ratio, where possible, in each rank in each officer classification. To reach this balance, adjustments may be made to the merit list sequence in order to satisfy NRG requirements.

This points out that that merit is not always used for promotion in the Armed Forces. The order continues as follows:

> Where such an adjustment has been made, the promotion of an officer who should have been promoted because of that adjustment, will be "protected". If his supervising officers' recommendations for promotion and his medical status have not changed, an officer whose promotion has been protected will be promoted when a new promotion quota is authorized for his rank and officer classification.

It could take years for that particular Anglophone to catch up, Mr. Speaker. He would lose out under an arrangement like this. This particular promotional practice has been under investigation by the Canadian Human Rights Commission since June, 1980. I hope it will hand down a decision in the near future.

One of the most ridiculous things I have come across is that today the Government is declaring that operators of English word processors be bilingual. For example, a fully qualified word processor operator cannot gain employment in the civil service because she is not bilingual even though the position she applied for is to use an English word processor. This occurred at the Export Development Corporation and is another example of discrimination. I would certainly like the Government to explain why an individual needs a knowledge of the French language in order to operate an English word processing machine. This person has a degree and all the qualifications; she applied for the job to operate this word processing machine but was turned down.

I hope the Government will agree to make paragraph 7 law so that we can stop this type of discrimination in the Armed Forces, the RCMP and the federal civil service.

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, on December 15, 1982, the Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) moved for first reading of Bill C-666, to amend the Official Languages Act. I am rather surprised to hear him talk about discrimination in connection with official languages and members of the RCMP who must have a knowledge of both official languages for their work. I think it is deplorable that today, in 1983, fourteen years after the Official Languages Act was passed, this should be a subject for debate. I think it shows crass ignorance of Canadian reality, Mr. Speaker.

However, before proceeding with a clause-by-clause examination of the proposals being made by the Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), I would like to make a few general comments which, I trust, will provide some insight into the real nature of the amendments he is proposing to the Official Languages Act and consequently help to judge the relevance of his proposal.

Clause 1 of the Bill provides that the Official Languages Act is amended by inserting, immediately after Section 35, a number of new sections.

I wondered why the Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine decided to have the amendments inserted after Section 35, and why he used the same number, followed by decimals .1, .2, .3 and .4, and kept number 40 for the clause on contracts and grants.

If we look at Section 35 of the present Official Languages Act, we see that it provides that the Governor in Council may make such regulations as he deems necessary to effect compliance with the Official Languages Act in the conduct of the affairs of the Government of Canada and departments and agencies of the Government of Canada. Now, the purpose of Section 35 is to avoid encumbering the Act with measures that are regulatory and administrative instead of straightforward legislation. If we look at the proposals contained in this Bill, we see that some of them are purely administrative, while others have already been laid down either in legislation or in separate regulations. I think this is a very important point that we should bear in mind throughout the debate this afternoon.

I would also like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the series of amendments comprised under Clause 1 of the Bill are presented under the general heading "Language of Work". I am not sure whether the Hon. Member means to restrict the scope of his recommendations to the language of work, since the Government has already provided that as a general rule, public servants, subject to the provisions of the Official Languages Act relating to service to the public, should be able to carry out their duties within the Government of Canada in the official language of their choice. If such were the case, this Bill would be even less commendable—if that were possible—because, on one hand, its long term effect would be to isolate such closely related goals as service to the public, equitable participation and working language, and on the other hand, it would legislate on aspects of the policy which do not exclusively relate to the working language as a goal. Indeed, the linguistic identification of jobs, the urgent and non-urgent staffing, as well as the exemptions apply to all civil servants, be they assigned to serve the public or to internal management or both at the same time, as it does happen fairly frequently.

In that respect, the Bill is far from being clear and, in my opinion, it reflects the sponsor's lack of familiarity with the Government's official languages policy. In any event, Mr. Speaker, we should rejoice that nearly ten years after the passage of the parliamentary resolution of 1973 by the House, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine is proposing today that we incorporate in the Official Languages Act new sections which, he states, are the extension of paragraph 7 of the resolution. That seems to me to be all the more relevant as the Hon. Member, I was told, did vote against the resolution in 1973. It does not come as a surprise to me.

Before rejoicing too hastily, however, we ought to ask ourselves whether we would be justified to take this step. Does the Bill stem from the Hon. Member's constructive intellectual progress with respect to the official languages program? Is it the omen of a better understanding of the Government's goals in the field of the official languages, an understanding based on a close, though belated, scrutiny of the Canadian reality in all its complexity?

When I read what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine is advocating in his Bill, I detect, beyond its obvious banality, rather than an evolution of his thinking patterned, as we would have wished, after the evolution of the thinking of the great majority of Canadians, but indeed an almost obsessional relentlessness to stop any progress when it comes to the official languages of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member claims that this Bill is an extension of paragraph 7 of the 1973 parliamentary resolution. Not only is he straying away from it, as I will demonstrate in a few moments, but worse still he does not respect the letter and especially the spirit of the resolution in his Bill which is supposed to be a step forward in achieving the Government's goals with respect to the official languages.

Were we to endorse this Bill, we would collectively accept to backtrack, and I am convinced that the House and most Canadians would never agree to that. Since 1969, we have had 14 years of linguistic reform, 14 years of unmistakable progress, 14 years of cooperation on the part of civil servants, which have made it possible to respect everyone's rights and provide our country with a Public Service which is increasingly qualified to serve Canadians in the official language of their choice. After so many years of sustained efforts, strategic withdrawals would be untimely, no matter how the Hon. Member is seeking our support.

Let us now consider this Bill clause by clause. Clause 35.1 provides that the chief executive officer of each public sector employee shall identify those positions under his direction that require:

(a) the use of both the English and French languages;

(b) the use of the English language;

(c) the use of the French language;

(d) the use of either the English or the French language.

The addition of clause 35.1 to the Official Languages Act does not alter in any way the official languages policy since the procedure for the identification of bilingual positions has been enforced in the Public Service of Canada since 1973 as well as those for the identification of positions where French or English are essential and those where either French or English may be used.

Indeed, since 1973, the identification of language requirements for positions is done within the Public Service of Canada on a continuous basis as soon as a new position is created or becomes vacant thus enabling managers to review constantly the language requirements of positions for which they are responsible to make sure that such identification is done in a rational way and on the basis of the clients' actual needs and/or according to their responsibilities at the working language level in matters of internal management.

At the very beginning of the linguistic reform, the fact that the Public Service was considered as being a bilingual institution had an effect on the identification of linguistic requirements of positions. With the 1977 policy revision which came as a result of a constant follow-up, according to which a position is only identified as bilingual if there is a need to provide effective services to the public or to employees, this situation was corrected and the linguistic requirements of the positions were based on the specific requirements of the job to determine the use of either language in carrying out the duties of a given position.

The Government is not trying to promote individual bilingualism but wants to make sure that bilingual positions are only created when needed so that uniligual individuals from both official linguistic groups may operate as much as possible in their first official language.

Indeed, when we look at the statistics, Mr. Speaker, we realize that the three types of unilingual jobs account for 73.6 per cent of all civil servants or 165,890 employees using one official language only as against 26.4 per cent or 59,432 employees using both official languages in bilingual positions.

This means that within the functionally bilingual federal institutions, there are 165,890 employees operating in unilingual positions, of which 135,140 or 81.5 per cent are in jobs that are identified as exclusively English, 16,870 or 10.1 per cent in jobs identified as exclusively French and 13,880 or 8.4 per cent in jobs identified as either French or English.

As may be seen, without this proposal having ever been included in the Official Languages Act, the Government has already acted on this the way the program is being implemented. So there is nothing new in the Hon. Member's proposal. Why must we oppose the addition of clause 35.1 to the Official Languages Act? For the simple reason, Mr. Speaker, that it seems unwise to include in a statute provisions of an administrative nature. As I said, under section 35 of the Official Languages Act, the Governor in Council may make such regulations as may be needed from time to time, without the Act itself having to be brought back before Parliament. The administrative procedure for the formal linguistic identification of jobs that is used throughout the departments, Government agencies considered as departments and Crown Corporations under Schedule B of the Financial Administration Act, is followed to a lesser degree, according to the type of agency and the terms of reference of the Crown Corporations listed under Schedules C and D and others that are not.

While Crown Corporations are subject to the Official Languages Act and relevant Government policies, the program may be and is indeed implemented differently as in departments. Especially so, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to the identification of jobs as being bilingual or otherwise. For various reasons, some corporations have decided on a system in which the number of bilingual people required is determined, without formally identifying any of the positions involved as being bilingual. In some cases, such a format has its merits. This kind of flexibility would be lost were Bill C-666 to pass. By way of legislation this would convey to the official languages policies a kind of rigidity that was never intended by Parliament and from which the program has been spared up till now.

These measures, Mr. Speaker are purely administrative in nature. If they were to become compulsory, the official languages policy would be deprived of all the flexibility needed to meet the various conditions it is constantly faced with.

Earlier the Hon. Member referred to some kind of discrimination where a man had to fight for five years so as to keep the job they wanted to take away from him because he could not pass a language proficiency test under the Official Languages Act—just about anything is possible in this day and age—but I suggest he went a bit too far when he accused the Government of discriminatory hiring and promotion practices. He claimed that it was unfair because this man simply lacked the aptitude to learn French and that it was discriminatory to make the learning of French a condition for hiring. I find this hard to believe in 1983, when Francophones are learning and being exposed to English, when Federal Civil Servants have easy access to all sorts of learning facilities, when a bilingual bonus is paid to all those who must speak both languages in the performance of their duties. Mr. Speaker, I think that situations such as this in 1983 . . . The Hon. Member referred to cases where individuals had to spend 5 years in court, but when he started to talk about discrimination, Mr. Speaker, as a Francophone, I just could not buy that.

Under Section 35.2, the Hon. Member dealt in three paragraphs with hiring practices for bilingual, English-essential or French-essential positions.

The first paragraph states that knowledge of the English and French languages shall be included among the elements of merit to be taken into account in the promotion of employees and the appointment of candidates to positions in the public sector.

In the second paragraph it is stated that knowledge of both official languages is a pre-requisite for appointment to bilingual positions only, and that unilingual candidates who have in the prescribed manner expressed a willingness to become bilingual may participate in competitions for appointments to bilingual positions.

On the other hand, according to paragraph 3, where a position requires knowledge of one of the official languages, and not of the other, only candidates having an adequate knowledge of the required language may participate in the competition. Again, Mr. Speaker, these provisions do not really change the official languages policy. This fact is already recognized in another legislation, namely the Public Service Employment Act.

Section 10 of the Act states that appointments to or from within the Public Service shall be based on selection according to merit, as required by the Public Service Commission. This is a reassertion of the merit principle, a golden rule of the Commission. Under Section 12(1) of the same Act, which is related to section 10, the Commission may, in determining the basis of assessment of merit in relation to any position or class of positions, prescribe selection standards as the education, knowledge, experience, language, age, residence or any other matters that, in the opinion of the Commission, are necessary or desirable, considering the nature of duties to be performed. As for Section 20, it states that those employees appointed to serve in any department, or other portion of the Public Service, or part thereof, shall be qualified in the knowledge and use of the English or French language or both to the extent that the Commission deems necessary.

In addition, under section 30 of the Public Service Employment Act, where the Commission decides that it is not praticable nor in the best interests of the Public Service, it may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, exclude such person or class of positions or persons from the operation of the present legislation. This gives some flexibility about which, in my opinion, English-speaking or French-speaking people cannot complain.

Under section 35 of the Public Service Employment Act, the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Commission, may make regulations prescribing how these persons excluded under section 39 shall be dealt with. When it comes to staffing bilingual positions, imperative or non-imperative, some sections of the Public Service Employment Act apply in a particular way.

It is interesting to note that the only element of our policy which was retained in Subsection 35.2 (2) of the Bill is the provision concerning what is usually called in bureaucratic circles non-imperative appointments. This provision has applied from the beginning of the linguistic reform and allows all unilingual candidates to apply for bilingual positions if they express the willingness to become bilingual and are able to do so within a given period.

Temporary, and in certain cases, permanent suspension of the merit principle is made possible by Section 39 of the Public Service Employment Act. The resulting exclusion order, which suspends application of Section 10 of the Public Service Employment Act, already provides that, in all cases where bilingual positions must be filled on a non-imperative basis, unilingual and bilingual candidates are eligible and can be considered on an equal footing as far as their linguistic qualifications are concerned. This exclusion applies to people whose candidacy for a bilingual position is considered for an unspecified period.

Mr. Speaker, all this shows that the new paragraph 2 included in the bill adds nothing new to the official languages policy. Moreover, it does not take into account imperative staffing which requires in certain cases, where there is a need for specialized knowledge or techniques or where certain operational necessities exist, for instance, that the linguistic requirements of a given bilingual position be met completely at the time of the appointment.

Mr. Speaker, it has in fact been said that if the proposed paragraph 2 were accepted and included in the Official Languages Act, it would mean a delay of several years in the official languages program as it would deny various departments and agencies the right to bill certain bilingual positions, with candidates who are linguistically qualified at the time of their appointment, which would remove from the Official Languages policy one of the levers with which the government has been able to hasten the pace of linguistic reform, especially in the area of services to the public.

In a few words, and I shall close with this comment, there is no need to reaffirm in the Official Languages Act something that already exists in the Public Service Act and the exclusion order on Official Languages in the Public Service. There must not be any confusion among responsibilities and jurisdictions. I believe that the flexibility of the Official Languages Act gives everyone of both official languages equal chances to apply for positions and I do not believe that there can be any suspicion of discrimination in 1983.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, when introducing his Bill, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), in explaining what he had in mind, suggested that he was trying to amend the Official Languages Act to make it more clear that the merit principle for those entering the Public Service and those in it should be made much more explicit. The Hon. Member is considered by many people in the city which I represent as being opposed to the whole concept of bilingualism. I say to the Hon. Member that if he is, if that impression is correct, then he is in the minority, not just among Canadians but, indeed, in his Party as well.

Because the Hon. Member suggested that much of what was being done was never approved by Members of Parliament, I want to put on the record a couple of paragraphs from a speech made by the then Leader of the Conservative Party in Parliament, Mr. Stanfield, when the Bill was being debated. The speech was made on May 16, 1969, and reference can be found on page 8790 of that year's Hansard. On that occasion, Mr. Stanfield said:

> This bill is placed before the House to strengthen rather than weaken Canadian unity. It is put forward for the purpose of making Canadians, whether they speak English or French, feel at home in this country to the extent that this is practical, and making federal government services available in the two languages. This was the principle which was discussed at the resolution stage. It was warmly accepted by all parties, including the New Democrats and Creditistes. Our task now is to judge the bill in the terms of these general purposes.

In the next passage, a translation from the French language, he said:

> The purpose of this bill is not to compel English-speaking Canadians to learn French, and vice-versa. This bill is aimed at providing French-speaking or English-speaking minorities with all federal government services in the language of their choice, as far as it is practical.

Mr. Stanfield went on to support the Bill in principle, and a substantial majority of Conservative Members of Parliament voted for the Bill at that time, so I believe did all Members of our Party, all Members of the Creditiste Party, and all Members of the Liberal Party.

I understand the concerns of many people in this country. I represent a very ethnic constituency in which a majority of the people are of neither English nor French origin. My father came to this country from the Ukraine almost 80 years ago. I represent people of all races, religions and colours. It would take me nearly all my allotted time to simply list the various groups of people I represent. There are Ukrainians, Poles, Jews, Anglo-Saxons, Yugoslavs, Greeks, and I could go on and on. They worry about this bilingual policy, and I can understand it. They worry that somehow this Bill and what the Government has done in recent years makes them second-class citizens. That is not true.

This is a very large country geographically, and it has a pretty small population. As I have said, the people have come from all the continents. They are of different races, different colours and different religions.

The first Prime Minister of this country, Sir John A. MacDonald, helped set up the railway company, building the CPR from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Some of us may question the way in which he did it, and some of us may think that he gave away too much in order to do it. However, if that railway had not been built, there would not now be a country of Canada, because the economic lines on this continent run north and south rather than east and west. In a similar way, in the 1970s and through the 1980s, we have had to face up to the fact that the first language of almost a third of the people of this country is French. Eighty per cent of the people of Quebec are French-speaking. Close to 45 per cent of the people in New Brunswick are French.

Mr. McCain: No, 38 per cent.

Mr. Orlikow: I stand corrected by the Hon. Member who comes from New Brunswick. Almost 40 per cent of the people in New Brunswick are French-speaking. Their forefathers were here before Canada was a country. They very strongly believe that they have a right to be served in their language—French—when they have dealings with the federal Government, with any Department or agency of the Government; just as English-speaking people, for example, in a city like Quebec City, feel that they have a right to deal with the federal Government or any of its Departments or agencies in the English language. That is precisely what Mr. Stanfield, who was then Leader of the Conservative Party, said in the part of his speech which I quoted. That is what the Official Languages Act spells out, and that is what Members of Parliament, by an overwhelming majority, supported when the Bill was before Parliament and when it was enacted.

Does that mean that Members of Parliament, whatever Party they come from, agree with everything which the Government has done to implement the Official Languages Act? Of course not, Mr. Speaker. However, I say to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine that a vast majority of the people of Canada understand the reasons we have adopted and supported this kind of policy. All the polls prove that. I do not have the time today, but when I spoke during the debate on this Bill in 1969, I placed on the record the results of polls which were taken across Canada at that time, and I could do it again if anyone is interested.

I say to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine that he should realistically look at what is happening in our own city in which the percentage of French-speaking people is relatively small. An increasing number of young people are being urged by their parents to attend French immersion schools. I have a six year old grand-daughter who attends a French immersion school. The complaints in Winnipeg are not that we have too many French immersion classes but, rather, that we do not have enough. I do not think there is one Hon. Member from Winnipeg who can deny that.

The Manitoba Government has gone a step further. It has said to the people of Manitoba that where an appreciable number of people who are of neither English-speaking nor French-speaking origin want to have a good part of their children's schooling conducted in another language, they can have it. Therefore, classes in the public school system are conducted not only in English and French, but also speaking from memory, in German, in Polish and in Hebrew, and that program is being extended.

The French immersion program is growing by leaps and bounds every year. The only thing which holds it back from growing even faster than it has is financial constraint. I will deal with that topic in a few moments.

I want to make it clear that it has never been suggested that every public servant must be bilingual. However, I have received some complaints and have dealt with individual cases where I thought a Department was implementing the policy wrongly. After all, we must recognize that in much of Canada where about 95 per cent of the people speak English, few French-speaking public servants are needed to deal with them in French. Similarly, in many parts of French Canada where there are a small number of English-speaking Canadians, few English-speaking public servants are required to deal with those Canadians in the English language.

While I do not agree with every decision that has been made by various Departments, the basic principle of bilingualism is one that the vast majority of Members of Parliament supported when it was implemented in 1969. I am sure that Hon. Members still support that principle.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine quoted certain Government documents which specifically refer to encouraging francophones to come into a certain branch of the Public Service. To understand the real situation we would have to consider individual cases, not just in a few minutes in the House but in a committee where these cases can be studied in depth. The fact of the matter is that the Canadian Public Service has had far fewer francophone public servants in proportion to the number of French Canadians. When I was studying this question in 1969 there was a report which indicated that among the 1,100 senior public servants, just over 10 per cent were francophones. When this is compared to the 30 per cent francophone population, it is evident that we have never been overstaffed with francophone public servants. Despite the fact that this percentage is probably higher today than it was in 1969, I am certain that it is still far from 30 per cent.

I am not suggesting that quotas should be put in place. I am simply saying that when one looks at the issue realistically, the percentage of anglophone public servants at this time is still much higher in proportion to the anglophone population.

I wish to say to the Hon. Member that I can understand the Public Service making a special effort to hire more francophones, and I wish it would make a similar effort to include more natives in the Public Service. In order to accomplish this we must change our old concepts about merit. While merit is an important factor when hiring and people should have the education and training that is needed for a particular job opening, if we adhere to the old ideas and very technical requirements of job merit, it will be generations before native people, for example, will enter the Public Service in any kind of appreciable numbers.

I hope the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine will consider this in the days to come: unless we make special efforts to persuade and recruit more native people into the federal and provincial Public Service as well as private sector jobs, they will remain among the poorest, least educated, least healthy, highest unemployed and worst housed in the country.

It is necessary for us to develop new concepts and consider affirmative action in order to deal with this problem. I am not opposed to federal Government Departments making special efforts to recruit francophones in areas where there have been very few of them or none at all. While merit is still an important consideration, in order to achieve our collective goal of uniting the country we must face reality and include people in the Public Service from all the groups which make up this country.

I previously indicated that I have occasionally felt a mistake was made in individual cases respecting bilingualism. The hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine, and I am sure many other Members, have heard of individual cases where people have felt they were unfairly treated because of this program, or perhaps some other program. When I have felt a mistake was made, I have taken it up with the Government Department concerned—sometimes successfully and sometimes unsuccessfully.

When we say that we support bilingualism in the Public Service, we are indicating our belief in the principle that the Public Service should be made more accessible and capable of dealing with Canadians in the language of their choice. While this policy specifically concerns English and French, there are many newcomers to this country who speak neither French nor English. It is important that they be able to deal with a Government Department or agency. Therefore, there should be people in the Public Service who speak the languages of our recent immigrants.

In conclusion, let me reiterate what I said in the beginning and what I have tried to say whenever this question has been debated in the House and elsewhere: that I and my Party support the principle of bilingualism which is the cornerstone of the Official Languages Act. We voted for it when it was introduced, as did the majority from every Party, including the Progressive Conservatives at that time. While we still believe that it is the proper policy, it is probably quite true that mistakes have been made. For example, I suggest that the program to train thousands of public servants to speak a second language, which was a major expense and effort, was a failure to a large extent and probably a mistake when it was conceived. Most of those people were unable to learn a second language sufficiently to be able to put it to practical use. A few of those who did learn the second language use it very infrequently. I believe that the money and effort would have been much better spent in educating young people and promoting a second language at the learning stage. There are ordinary citizens in Holland, Belgium, Norway and Germany who speak up to three and four languages. It is only arrogance on the part of the English-speaking people to believe that everybody else should learn their language while they do not have to learn any other language.

Therefore, we support the idea of bilingualism which is enshrined in the Bill. We support the programs which have encouraged young people and other Canadians to learn a second language. While this Bill is fundamentally good, we believe it should be reviewed. The way bilingualism is being implemented, it should be carefully studied because mistakes have been made and should be corrected. I do not believe that this amendment adds anything to the objectives which we already have.

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to speak to this amendment. After what was said by my colleague, the Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois), I would like to add a few comments on the Bill to amend the Official Languages Act tabled by the Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie).

The Bill's sponsor probably feels he is making only a few minor changes in the Act, without altering its basic principle.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order please! Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

MEASURE RESPECTING UNJUST DISMISSAL

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West) moved that Bill C-557, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code (unjust dismissal), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to Bill C-557 I would like to say at the outset that the principle of the Bill is very simple and can be stated very briefly. It is simply that workers should not be fired for obeying the law. Conversely, what this Bill would do, if implemented, is to prevent an employee from being fired or otherwise disciplined by his employer for refusing to obey a direct order from his employer if he reasonably believed that if he were to follow such an order his action would place him, the employee, in violation of any law or statute.

I think it goes almost without saying that the principle underlying the Bill itself is a reasonable one. It is a principle enshrined with regard to occupational health and safety legislation in many jurisdictions across Canada. It is one in which we have been engaged in discussions with the federal Government over the last three or four years in order to have the principle enshrined more appropriately within Part IV of the Canada Labour Code. This Bill goes much further than attempting to protect the right to health and safety of employees across this country.

That is not the kind of issue that initially gave rise to my particular concern with the need for such legislation. In fact my motivation stemmed from an incident that took place in the Queen Charlotte Islands, B.C. when sixteen loggers were arrested because they were ordered by their employer to cut an area that had been declared off-limits to logging by federal fisheries officials. Many of us felt the order of the federal Government was quite appropriate. It had followed a considerable degree of investigation and there had been considerable disagreement with the provincial Forestry Department in B.C. at that time. Irrespective of whether that initial decision not to log that area was correct, what was done was totally unfair. I and many others in British Columbia and I think across the country who were aware of the incident felt it was totally unfair to arrest and jail 16 employees of a particular logging company because they had followed the very clear and specific orders of their employer. The employer thought he was obeying the law as interpreted by the Government of British Columbia. He realized he was in some disagreement with the federal authority.

In order to allow employees to assist in the enforcement of law, I and a number of others feel it is rather important, not just for the sake of occupational health and safety, not just for health matters in a broader spirit, not just relating to matters of the environment or to matters of fisheries, that we should attempt to enlist the assistance of working people, men and women across the country, in standing up for the laws which we have enacted in our wisdom, in either the federal Parliament, the provincial Parliaments or elsewhere, and in the enactment of a law to protect society as a whole or particular sectors of it. It is unrealistic to expect a working person, particularly in economic times like these which are not so different from situations in certain industries even going back to 1979, to risk his or her livelihood and perhaps even the existence of families. We know what happens to families which go for extended periods in these times without a source of income. It is unfair to expect them to put themselves at risk and put their jobs, their livelihoods at risk, unless there is some protection for them.

The incident at Riley Creek which took place in the early months of 1979 again followed the enactment by Parliament in 1978 of a law to protect fish breeding and spawning rivers. Federal fisheries officers had to arrest loggers when their cutting operations threatened Riley Creek, an important salmon ground in the Queen Charlotte Islands. Eight employees were arrested initially and a further eight later. Following long discussion and arguments between federal and provincial Governments, finally a stay of proceedings was instituted, but the lesson was quite clear.

Surely it is preferable in the enforcement of legislation, whether environmental or in dealing with health and safety, to have on the spot enforcement by citizens. If that can be done in a peaceful and legitimate manner it is preferable than having to hire additional large numbers of inspection and enforcement officers from either federal or provincial jurisdictions. In fact, the history of enforcement of many of our laws is a very sad one. We have many, many statutes on the books across Canada, federal and provincial, in which we either did not put enforcement mechanisms into play or, for financial, budgetary or other reasons, do not provide the wherewithal for hiring inspection and enforcement officers or for hiring sufficient numbers of them to attempt to ensure that the laws we have in place are observed. It is not enough to assume, as some idealistic people sometimes do, that because we pass a law it actually changes anything. There are too many motivations which cause people to act in other ways. We are all aware of those.

I have one example and although it comes under provincial jurisdiction, it is not exactly typical, but it is a glaring example of what can happen. In the Province of British Columbia for many years we have had an Act called the Factories Act which was passed in the 1920s or 1930s. In the late 1960s many of us in my corner of B.C. became aware for the first time, that there was such a piece of legislation. We phoned the provincial Department of Labour. We could not find anyone in any Department who said the Bill came within the responsibility of their Ministry or Department. Most people, even in the Department of Labour which was finally found to be responsible, did not even know of its existence. The Factories Act provided for health, working conditions legislation, heat and appropriate light in virtually thousands of industrial installations across the Province.

When the New Democratic Party administration of Dave Barrett was elected in 1972, we found that there were two inspectors, not only to enforce that body of legislation but to carry on the inspection required by law to ensure that any new industrial installation would comply with the laws and regulations as well. When we asked them how they did their job, we were told "telephon book inspections". At that time I asked them what they meant. I asked whether they telephoned the thousands of companies on the list, just the two of them, to see whether they were in compliance with the law. I asked, "Did you just ask them that question?" They said, "No, we did not have time to do that. We just copied the names of the companies out of the telephone book and into our records to show that we had considered them."

When it came to the working conditions of thousands of British Columbians in industrial installations, that was the kind of enforcement there was of the law which the legislature of that Province in its wisdom had decided to place on the books, presumably with some debate, some decades before.

I am not suggesting that we are sinning quite to that extent. A number of my colleagues and I took tours across Canada related to what we hope are still forthcoming amendments to the Canada Labour Code. We have been told that these amendments were coming since we were first elected in 1980. We visited many parts of the country. For instance, on the waterfront of Saint John, New Brunswick, there were only one or two federal officers presumably available to consider any breaches of health and safety regulations relating to the transport industry and the docks in that entire area. They also had many other duties which took them outside the immediate vicinity of Saint John. If we want some enforcement of the laws on the books, whether it is to protect the environment and, with the increasing exploration, presumably the development of many energy resources in the far North of Canada, surely it is important to have as much self-enforcement by the people working in those industries as possible. There is no way the Government, or almost any Government, could conceivably have enough people present throughout the Arctic or in the Canadian offshore to ensure that either environmental laws or health and safety laws are enforced.

We can all say that working people, like companies, ought to do their jobs, obey the law and do the right thing, even if they put themselves, their incomes or profits at risk. We know that people do not normally do that, so the least we can do is to provide some security of employment for those who, of their own volition, decide that they should stand up and attempt to enforce the laws of the land simply by refusing to pursue tasks which they know or reasonably believe to be in violation of the laws.

I hope Government representatives will seriously consider such legislation; whether or not it is in this exact form, certainly the thrust of it. Also I hope for the support of Hon. Members of the Official Opposition. I would be agreeable to withdrawing the Bill if there were agreement that the subject matter of it be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. We hope that that Committee will soon have an opportunity to consider the amendments to Parts III, IV and V of the Canada Labour Code, which we have been assured were coming for some years now. At the same time it would be appropriate, as Members from all sides are attempting to draw up a more reasonable definition of the right of employees to refuse to obey an order when their lives are placed in jeopardy, to realize that it is the right of Canadian employees to stand up in good conscience and say that they will not do work which violates the laws of the land as passed by the House of Commons or other legislatures across the country. I think that plea is clear and fair. I hope for the co-operation of Hon. Members opposite on this occasion, but if not at this time, hopefully at some time soon in the future. Perhaps they would consent to the kind of request I have included in my remarks.

The principle that workers should not be fired for obeying the laws is self-evident. I hope other Hon. Members will see the issue likewise.

• (1730)

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I greatly appreciated the comments made by the Member opposite concerning the problem of worker safety, in connection with improvements to our labour laws which have now made it possible for workers to work safely without constraints that might engender problems of a physical nature or unfair working conditions, as a result of doing work that infringes, legislation that provides for the worker's right to job security and job safety.

Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased to be speaking to this Bill because I represent a riding where 85 per cent of the workers are unionized and employed in the private sector. Baie-Comeau, Port-Cartier, Sept-Îles, Schefferville, Gagnon and Fermont—everywhere I go I meet workers, and I believe I am very aware of the problems raised earlier by the Member opposite. I feel it is absolutely essential to have strong labour relations and just and fair laws that provide maximum safety for workers, because profits, production and a good labour force are also the result of laws that provide for a safe job environment.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, the Bill before the House today, Bill C-557, seems a little unclear in parts, because the Canada Labour Code already contains sections that are abundantly clear and already provide, practically word for word, the same elements as Bill C-557. For instance, in Section 184, it says quite clearly . . . But first I would like to quote from Bill C-557, which stipulates the following:

> No employer and no person acting on behalf of an employer shall suspend, discharge, or impose any financial or other penalty on an employee, or take any other disciplinary action against an employee, by reason of his refusal to perform an act that he has reasonable cause to believe is prohibited by law.

The Canada Labour Code, Part IV, Industrial Relations, contains the following provisions regarding unfair dismissal and unfair practice, and if you compare both paragraphs, they are very similar. I refer to section 184.3, and I quote:

> (3) No employer and no person acting on behalf of an employer shall
> (c) suspend, discharge or impose any financial or other penalty on an employee, or take any other disciplinary action against an employee, by reason of his refusal to perform all or some of the duties and responsibilities of another employee who is participating in a strike that is not prohibited by this Part;
> (f) suspend, discharge or impose any financial or other penalty on a person employed by him, or take any other disciplinary action against such a person, by reason of that person having refused to perform an act prohibited by this Part;

Both these paragraphs deal with the right of an employee to refuse to take part in activities which he thinks may be contrary to the Canada Labour Code, as well as with the rights of employees who take part in a legal strike.

For all practical purposes, these provisions provide employees with protection against any disciplinary action an employer might take against them in violation of the Labour Code. This would apply to a strike situation, but it is going even further, for the Canada Labour Code is quite clear in two other sections which resemble closely those which appear in the bill introduced by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Speaker, Part IV of the Canada Labour Code deals with health, safety and protection of employees, and I think these are major items. It is very similar to what the Hon. Member is seeking through his bill. Section 81(1) of the Canada Labour Code states, and I quote:

> 81.(1) Every person operating or carrying on a federal work, undertaking or business shall do so in a manner that will not endanger the safety or health of any person employed thereupon or in connection therewith.

Then, there is Section 82.1 which states, and I quote:

> Where a person employed upon or in connection with the operation of any federal work, undertaking or business has reasonable cause to believe that
> (a) the use or operation of a machine, device or thing would constitute an imminent danger to the safety or health of himself or another employee, or
> (b) a condition exists in any place that would constitute an imminent danger to his own safety or health, > that person may refuse to use or operate the machine, device or thing or to work in the place.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that we are really coming to the heart of the matter which the hon. member has raised, because the Canada Labour Code is clearly protecting employees both in strike and health or safety situations, when it states that an employee may refuse to use or operate a machine, device or thing or to work in the place.

Earlier, the Hon. Member gave an example of an incident he had witnessed in his riding, something to do with a forest worker who had experienced a problem because there were some factors which—it would seem, in light of the Hon. Member's remarks—did put his health or safety in jeopardy. I am surprised that anything like that might have occurred because the fact is that the Canada Labour Code is very clear about workers' rights. In that respect, I suggest that a reference to the sections I have just read would be ample proof.

And that is not all. It is clearly stated that, judging from the quotations given and related to Parts III, IV and V of the Canada Labour Code, any employee who is wronged, whether or not he belongs to a union and is protected by a collective agreement, has the option to launch an appeal in the case of unwarranted dismissal resulting from an order which itself calls for a violation of the Code. As to other laws, the Criminal Code also provides appeal opportunities for any employee forced to break the law by his employer.

In short, the Bill recommends close supervision of the application of the Canada Labour Code provisions relating to security and safety in the work place. Yet, I do not see what Bill C-557 adds at this time, because if you look at chapters 3, 4 and 5 of the Code, those aspects are very well defined. On the other hand, the Member raised a point about inspectors which is worth paying attention to. In my region for example, in my constituency of Manicouagan which I visit quite regularly, I meet a lot of union members. As I mentioned previously, 85 percent of all workers in that area are union members. It is important to go and check whether the assessment of their work place or their working conditions by workers is well founded or true to reality. One often has to turn to the inspector, but according to all current collective agreements, if the worker is a member of a union, he can file a grievance. This is the usual method used by unions in order to correct problems relating to the application of collective agreements since current agreements cover quite obviously all the specific issues raised by the Hon. Member.

That explains why I have difficulty in seeing the advantages of the Bill proposed by the Member. We may be able later on to discuss it during the question and answer period, but on the basis of the earlier presentation by the Member, I have difficulty in seeing anything that is not already in the Canada Labour Code.

As far as inspectors are concerned, I believe that each company, each union and each employee should know the various possible recourses in cases of abuse where an employer or a foreman assigns a worker to operations in an environment that seems unsafe, and the same goes with respect to equipment or work site. But with reference to the Bill introduced by the Hon. Member, after I have read the proposal, it is my view that additions could hardly be made. I have here in my hand this Bill in which it is provided, and I quote:

> 184.1 No employer and no person acting on behalf of an employer shall suspend, discharge, or impose any financial or other penalty on an employee, or take any other disciplinary action against an employee, by reason of his refusal to perform an act that he has reasonable cause to believe is prohibited by law.

Madam Speaker, this is exactly what is said in the Canadian Labour Code. And this would call for further clarification. If the aim is to protect the worker, such protection is afforded by collective bargaining. He is also protected by the Canadian Labour Code so clearly the worker is amply protected in that area.

But what I find amazing in the Hon. Member's proposal is that in my own constituency, I never had any workers coming to me and complaining that they were not adequately protected. If ever there was a lact of protection, it could have been at the Iron Ore Company where everyone was laid off, but then that is another kind of protection. It may be a matter for discussion with the next leader of the Progressive Conservative Party. The protection workers are now looking for is job security in my view, not the addition of new sections to the Canadian Labour Code. At any rate, I would like to discuss the matter with the Hon. Member, because when I read his Bill, there is something I find hard to grasp, because it seems to me that these are aspects that are already provided for in the Canadian Labour Code.

The other point that it would perhaps be interesting to raise at this time, Mr. Speaker, is how the Departments inspect the various worksites. I believe that it would be possible to improve the inspection mechanism. However, inspectors go out to the worksites to see what is going on quite regularly and there are therefore direct and regular contacts between the unions and the provincial and federal Labour Departments to determine what improvements could be made on either side. As far as I know, most often, management attends these meetings to see what can be done to improve the welfare of its workers. This occurs on a normal and regular basis in all businesses, whether big or medium-size. Even in the case of smaller businesses, provincial regulations provide normal and well-protected conditions for the workers.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, abuses are always possible. It is quite obvious that every eventuality cannot be foreseen. Two years ago, for instance, an underground gallery of the Noranda mine in the Abitibi region caved in and it was left up to the court to determine who was responsible, but the inspections had been carried out normally and the union inspectors had done their job. However, there can be unforeseen circumstances or cases of negligence. This cannot be denied. No statute can provide for every situation and it would certainly be unrealistic to think that every case can be foreseen and provided for in detail in the Canada Labour Code. This is quite unthinkable. However, to improve the situation, there is nothing to prevent the Hon. Member from making representations to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, perhaps to have additional regulations established. This would be a good thing. On this side of the House, we would be quite willing to consider new elements which could truly apply to the Canada Labour Code. However, I believe that a Bill designed to integrate the proposals of the Hon. Member into the Canada Labour Code would add nothing useful for the moment.

Perhaps it would be more interesting for a Standing Committee of the House to consider what can be done as regards regulations because in the Canada Labour Code itself the parameters are well delineated. It would be useless to amend the Code without providing further protection, because that is important. It is not enough to amend the Labour Code. We should really try to provide the worker with better protection.

If we look at the Canada Labour Code, as I said earlier, we will note that already there are provisions stating that an employee may refuse to perform work that he believes to be unlawful and the legislation sets forth certain procedures which must be followed. It would perhaps be advisable to give a few examples. There is the case of an employee who refuses to do some work because he believes it is prejudicial to his health. This is in a way the issue raised by the Hon. Member a short while ago. Now any employee who follows the correct procedure but who is fired by his employer for having exercised his right to refuse to work may lodge an appeal with the Canada Labour Relations Board. There definitely exists an appeal procedure, representative of the working world, the main task of which is to judge and interpret these circumstances. Naturally, if the employee has not followed the rules, the Canada Labour Relations Board will be unable to hear his claim; he could, however, refer to the provisions concerning unjust dismissal contained in Part III of the Canadian Labour Code, under Division V.7.

I would also like, Mr. Speaker, to remind the House that the amendments to the Labour Code that were passed on September 1, 1978, allow an employee who believes he has been unjustly dismissed to bring an appeal if his employer is subject to the Code. Except, of course, that the employee has to prove that there was imminent danger. If I interpret correctly the provisions of Bill C-557, the question of impending danger is there, and if not, perhaps the Member could rectify later. I take it for granted that the Member wishes with his Bill to focus on the health and security aspects in the work place itself as well as on the methods or the equipment used.

That piece of legislation provided for security of employment for a larger number of people since it gave non-union employees unjustly dismissed the opportunity to get their job back, whereas before only union members could do that through collective bargaining. Indeed, when an employee is dismissed because he refused to work when he felt that his health was placed in jeopardy or something else, he can apply to the Canada Labour Relations Board, and if his grievance is really well-founded, then the Board is empowered to reinstate in his job the employee found unjustly dismissed. I believe that shows very clearly that there is some security of employment, and that responsibilities must be established by a third party which is neutral with regard to the case in dispute.

So on that point, Mr. Speaker, I think there is already some protection for the employee. There is no doubt that the sponsor of Bill C-557 is convinced that with these amendments employees will be even more able to refuse to do work they believe to be in violation of the law. I am sure no Member of this House, whatever his or her political affiliation, would be against legislation aimed at improving the situation. I suggest all of us want to improve labour conditions, to insure that people who work in a given sector can enjoy as much security as is possible. However, the bill being considered does not contain anything new, as I was saying, and that is where my problem is. That is where lies the difficulty we see, on this side of the House. Really, this bill does not bring forward anything new, whether we consider it from the point of view of law or from the point of view of security at work. That is my problem. As we have seen, under Parts III, IV and V of the Canada Labour Code that were quoted earlier, an employee, even if he is not a member of a union and is not protected by a collective agreement, has many possibilities under the Canada Labour Code to seek redress when he feels he has been unjustly fired after having been ordered to commit an act which would constitute a violation to the Canada Labour Code.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize this: the worker remains free to judge by himself of the security offered either by the company he works for, by the machinery or by the work place, and he remains free to refuse to work. Then, if he is fired for having done so, he submits his case to the Canada Labour Board. The case is reviewed by a third party and justice is done according to an assessment. I believe this process does respect individual freedom and insure that justice is done.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, and I will come to the point since my time is expired, I believe that at this stage, the reasons put forward by the Hon. Member are not sufficient ground and it would be difficult for me or for Members on this side of the House to bring our support to this bill. However, we would be most happy, Mr. Speaker, to receive advice pertaining to eventual amendments which would bring about something new. But for the time being, I suggest this bill does not propose anything new and would not provide more security for the worker.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the Hon. Member has time left and would accept a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I should inform the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) that the previous speaker's time has expired. However, a question could be allowed by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, it struck me that the Hon. Member misunderstood the intent of the Bill. I would ask him to read Clause 184.1 again and see whether he would not agree that the intent is to protect broadly the right of an employee to refuse to commit an act that touched on matters outside his or her personal security, and is not meant to have the narrower intent whether a strike is in process or his own life or safety or that of other employees may be affected.

Would the Hon. Member not agree that the purpose of the Bill is to allow an employee, by refusing, to enforce other laws, for instance, affecting the security of the fishing industry or other elements of the population or hazards as a result of transportation regulations or environmental regulations such as the disposition of mine tailings or air and water pollutants? There are other actions which cannot be covered specifically in the law. Would the Hon. Member not agree that there is an argument to be made for legislation that would allow employees to enforce that other body of law, rather than society having to hire an army of inspectors to enforce each and every item?

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for his dedication to the well-being of the workers. His concern is most legitimate and commendable, but I would like to remind him that fishermen are normally considered self-employed because they frequently own their boat and they carry personal insurance. If they are members of a fishing crew, they are covered by group insurance. Here is an example that the House may find amusing. A large part of the coast of Manicouagan is inhabited by fishermen. You know very well, Mr. Speaker, the conditions these people have to live in. If you go to sea and there is a storm, there is nothing to protect you because you are 10, 20 or 200 miles away in waters now under Canadian jurisdiction, and anything can happen. Fishermen on a ship owned by a company are frequently covered by group insurance. The ship is insured. But the captain must try to bring the ship back to port as fast as possible for protection. It is not through legislation that we are going to prevent storms.

There is also a second element. We were talking about fishermen and I think it is a good example. A clear difference must be made between the self-employed fisherman and the fisherman working for a company. Let us speak about personal and collective insurance. Fishermen are now covered by collective agreements and, in certain cases, by the Canada Labour Code, just like people working on a farm, in a pulp and paper mill, in a processing plant or a factory.

Therefore, I concur with the Hon. Member about the need for protection in some areas. There are certainly cases that have been overlooked and which must be reorganized, but when we speak of air quality and pretend that it is necessary to make sure that these people are not in danger, maybe we should apply the provisions of the Canadian Labour Code to fishermen working on a lake contaminated by acid rains. For example, in case of rain, everybody would have to go home because there is imminent danger. Therefore, it would be necessary to decide what that is and I think that many factors would have to be taken into consideration. So, I assume that the concern of the Hon. Member is sincere, but as far as the application is concerned, it is not legislation at this stage which will permit to improve things, but that would probably merit further attention. I gave examples, Mr. Speaker, which may seem extreme to some Hon. Members, but if we were only a little bit closer to fishermen, we would see that my examples for the fishing industry are real. Earlier, the Hon. Member mentioned healthy working conditions. I find it difficult to include this in legislation.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to Bill C-557, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code. This is a Private Member's Bill put forth by the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen), and it had its first reading on May 2, 1980. This Bill would not, I am convinced, provide any additional protection for workers other than that which already exists under Parts III, IV and V of the Canada Labour Code and the Criminal Code of Canada.

The underlying principle of the existing provisions of the Canada Labour Code is that "Termination of employment should not take place unless there is a valid reason for such termination connected with the capacity or conduct of the worker or based on the operational requirements of the undertaking, establishment or service." The amendments made in 1978 to the Canada Labour Code which effectively protect workers from unjust dismissals, were a result of a struggle and reaction against the authoritarianism of employers of a past age.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that these amendments afford aggrieved workers safeguards against dismissal which fall in line with procedures for enabling workers to contest arbitrary dismissal, either by law or in voluntary collective agreements which exist in Belgium, France, The Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. Canada, together with other western industrialized nations, recognizes that the concept of giving workers a greater sense of security is an important step to improving industrial relations. Dismissal is no longer considered solely a matter for decision by the employer. I believe it is true to say, Mr. Speaker, that most people in industry today recognize that workers need to have proper safeguards against unjust dismissal. Great strides have been made in recent years in strengthening workers' rights and status in their employment. Employers and the labour movement alike realize that fair and sensible procedures, clearly established and understood by workers and management at all levels, can do much to improve industrial relations by preventing grievances and disputes over dismissals. The provisions existing in the Canada Labour Code allow workers who feel they have been unjustly dismissed to have ample recourse to contest the action.

The Bill presently before this House, Mr. Speaker, I would respectfully suggest, does not add in any way additional protection for workers who have been unjustly dismissed. Neither does the proposed amendment promote an increased sense of security for employees. I would direct your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that worker discipline may take many forms. However, it generally falls into three categories. There are warnings, suspensions and dismissals. Although Part III of the Canada Labour Code is concerned only with dismissals, it should be recognized that they may be preceded by some form of progressive disciplinary action, which includes at least two written warnings, followed by suspension, which in turn is followed by dismissal. The degree of progressive discipline usually relates to the severity of the misconduct by the employee, that is, outright dismissal may occur if the misconduct is extremely serious.

In any disciplinary situation there may be mitigating factors. When an employer decides to dismiss an employee he should thoroughly investigate the matter to ensure that all mitigating factors have been carefully considered. This is not only good business practice, it is simply common sense. Arbitration decisions have resulted in a list of factors which ought to be taken into consideration when faced with this issue.

Further, I believe that it is important that employees be made fully aware of the standards of conduct to which they are expected to adhere. The rules should be readily available, and the employer should take all possible steps to make sure employees know and understand them. It is the employer's burden to prove that dismissal was warranted. However, it is important to remember that both management and employees have specific responsibilities. Based on past performance, it is reasonable to assume that adjudicators dealing with appeals against dismissal will objectively judge each case on its own merits and decide whether the employer had just cause to dismiss the employee.

In light of the forgoing, Mr. Speaker, I would respectfully suggest that provisions now existing in the Canada Labour Code are designed to give employees ample recourse to redress a dismissal they judge to be wrongful, and further, that Bill C-557 should not succeed.

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, they agree that I be given the floor. My colleague from Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) was talking about fisheries and mines. My colleague from Richmond (Mr. Tardif) could also tell me all about mines.

Mr. Speaker, as to the situation addressed in Bill C-557, I think that if we consider clause 1 of the Bill and refer to Part IV, Industrial Relations, of the Canada Labour Code, we realize that the the Labour Code already provides for part of what the Hon. Member wants to do through this Bill. I shall not quote again the clause of the Bill, but I could read the section of the Canada Labour Code. As we can see, the Hon. Member states in his provision that one must refuse to perform an act that one has reasonable cause to believe is prohibited by law. Such a provision obviously covers a very wide range of situations and could cause problems. The fact is that if we consider the Labour Code—I see that I have the floor but the Sergeant-at-Arms will probably make me cut my remarks short—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being six o'clock p.m., the House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—TOURIST INDUSTRY

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its neglect of the Canadian tourist industry and calls upon the Government to recognize this industry as a major generator of employment, new economic growth, and foreign exchange and that the Government accept its responsibility to increase the visibility of Canadian tourism both at home and abroad.

He said: Mr. Speaker, today in the House we are discussing the tourism industry in Canada. As our motion indicates, we are condemning the Government for not realizing and appreciating the value of the tourism industry in Canada. Proof positive of that attitude in this House is the fact that there are only three Liberal Members on the benches across the aisle. Where are all these people who are supposed to be interested in tourism? We outnumber the Grits today by five to one.

Tourism in Canada is an area which has been neglected by Governments for some time and must be brought to the level of priority which it deserves. First, I will begin by explaining the importance of tourism to this country, and its potential, which is relatively unassisted in development and just at its beginning stages. The tourism industry employs over 1.1 million people, providing jobs in all regions. In comprehending 1.1 million people, you can say that one out of every ten people in the work force is employed in the tourist industry. Tourism is irreplaceable as a supporter of regional economic development. Tourism offers employment to both skilled and semi-skilled workers. It can provide work for many people who may not be suited to the high technology jobs which are being heavily supported by the current federal Government employment and training programs.

The tourist industry in Canada in 1981 contributed $16.5 billion to the Canadian economy. The multiplier effect accelerates the impact to $25 billion. This is an industry which contributes a tax yield in excess of $7 billion to all levels of Government, yet our Governments return only a few million dollars to help develop and foster this industry. Tourism is treated more as a source of revenue than a business. The federal Government refuses to give tourism the high priority status it deserves. Through the statistics I have just presented we should be able to appreciate the importance of the industry to the Canadian economy.

It appears that the present Government cannot comprehend tourism's importance. The present Minister of State responsible for tourism (Mr. Rompkey), in a speech to the annual national conference of the Tourism Industry Association of Canada in Vancouver in February, 1983, stated that this Government recognizes the importance of tourism and that it is providing support for its growth development. However, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Gordon Roston, Director-General of Tourism Marketing in the Canadian Government Office of Tourism, at that same meeting in Vancouver, stated that their advertising budget has been effectively eroded by more than 40 per cent over the last ten years due to cutbacks. In 1974 the federal Government spent $3 million to advertise Canada in key U.S. markets. In 1982 the commitment was $6.5 million. Considering that a U.S. marketing campaign costing $3 million in 1974 would cost $8 million today, and that the federal Government committed only $6.5 million in fiscal 1982-83, we realize that the Government has been inadequate in its support of tourism.

The Government will have to work diligently at maintaining a favourable long-term development climate. It will have to ensure that policies it has in place make investors in the tourist industry feel welcome and actively promote the earning of healthy profits. Governments have a responsibility to provide leadership through clearly demonstrated commitments to the industry. The federal Government must provide financial assistance, not only through direct grants but through financing of individual projects and joint ventures. There was $295.2 million in subagreements between the federal Government and various provinces, $266 million of which is still current and $30 million which has expired. On the average about $40 million per year has been spent over the past several years for tourist development. This is not as impressive as it sounds. Most of the $260 million under subagreements has already been spent with an estimated $5 million to $10 million available for this fiscal year. There is no indication that these agreements will be renegotiated.

What is needed, Mr. Speaker, is federal-provincial co-operation. However, the federal Government has not co-operated with the Provinces in developing a healthy tourism industry across this country. If appropriate and successful programs are to be initiated, co-operation between federal and provincial levels is essential.

At a meeting held in Saskatoon in the fall of 1980, the provincial tourism Ministers and the Minister of State responsible for tourism realized that there must be some guiding principle developed to foster tourism growth within Canada. At this meeting one of the guiding principles agreed upon stated that the Provinces were to be responsible for industry development and the federal Government was to have a supportive role in assisting provincial programs. Having come to this agreement, the Provinces developed programs for tourism growth in their respective areas.

In December of 1981 another meeting was held in Ottawa between the provincial Ministers of tourism and the then Minister of State for Tourism. At this meeting the Provinces were to present their development proposals to solicit funding support from the federal Government. However, the federal Minister scuttled the meeting, as a unilateral decision to directly fund Prince Edward Island's tourism plan was announced by the federal Government. The federal Government took over the Island's tourism plan and adopted it as their own. The other Provinces, on seeing what the federal Government decided to do in the case of Prince Edward Island, packed their proposals back into their briefcases and the meeting was adjourned. They would have nothing to do with a Government which had gone back on its promises and went around one of the guiding principles which said that the Province was to develop the proposals and the federal Government would offer assistance. They withdrew from that guiding principle. It merely thanked those responsible for putting together these proposals and programs that were developed through the industry and Government departments within the Provinces. It was thankful for the effort that was put into these programs which seemed beneficial but said that it would take over and administer them unilaterally.

The provincial tourism Ministers and the federal Minister responsible for tourism met again in September, 1982 in Digby, Nova Scotia. At this time they received the federal Minister's commitment to investigate the roles of the two levels of Government in tourism and to review statements and guiding principles that had been originally agreed to at the 1980 meeting in Saskatoon. At that time the federal Minister made a commitment to the Provinces to call another federal-provincial conference on tourism by the end of October, 1982 to discuss the problems they were having. However, that meeting never materialized.

I feel that we are safe in concluding that the federal Government is taking over provincial tourism projects not to benefit the tourism industry or assist tourism development in the provinces, but to receive some kind of recognition that it is actually taking action at the federal level.

Canada is facing tough competition on the world market. In 1981-82 the average state travel office budgets increased by 13 per cent over the previous year and average advertising budgets were up by a spectacular 48 per cent. Although international tourism has grown substantially in the past decade, Canada unfortunately did not share in this growth. The present travel deficit, which was $1.2 billion in 1981, could exceed $2 billion in 1983 and become even greater if there is no renewed investment in the industry. Without capital to upgrade, expand and build new facilities, the present employment base and inventory will continue to decline. The owners of the existing 190,000 hotel and resort rooms, the 78,000 motel rooms and the 29,000 cabins across the country are all facing the same critical problem, which is the inability to generate new equity capital for expansion. In each Province there are millions of dollars worth of projects that are unable to proceed because of this central financing issue.

The operators within the resort communities are concerned that the survival of their very operations is being threatened unless there is renewed investor confidence in the industry. This disaster will reach catastrophic proportions by this summer unless immediate action is taken by the federal Government. This lack of confidence in the industry reflects the lack of confidence the country has in our economy as a result of the actions of the federal Government.

Throughout Canada, the past 15 months have uncovered a disastrously rapid decline of construction in the tourism accommodation industry. No new hotel, condominium or chalet construction has been reported by the 30 winter and a sample of summer resorts in 1982. No resorts anticipate recreation, commercial or accommodation construction activity in 1983 and the prospects for any 1984 development appear equally bleak. This lack of construction in new tourism plant will completely eliminate any opportunity to reverse the present annual negative tourism trade balance which stands at over $1.2 billion.

Canada has fallen behind internationally over the past 10 years in tourism growth, slipping from 4.9 per cent of the world tourism market to 2.5 per cent. We have lost almost half of what we had. The situation is worsening with the continuing drop in foreign visitors. The worst problem is that the federal Government has not given equal attention to this multibillion dollar industry as it does to forestry, fisheries, agriculture and other sectors. This attitude filters down to provincial Governments and investors' confidence in the marketplace. The financial community sees investments as high-risk and charge higher rates and impose more limiting terms and conditions.

The crisis of 1983 has been brought about by the impacting of two factors on an already high-risk industry. The first is the 1981 tax changes which abruptly halted business investment decisions in resort projects, and the second is the high interest rates and declining economy.

The proposals to eliminate soft cost deductions, and the elimination of the measure that allowed for one principal residence only for a married couple, also had a harmful effect on resort development.

The overall economic downturn has devastated the tourism industry in Canada. High unemployment, high interest rates and an uncertain economic climate are affecting the tourism industry. A poor summer season will send into receivership most of those resort operators who are in borderline situations.

Without immediate Government attention, many tourism establishments will have difficulty surviving the 1983-1984 season.

The federal budgets of November, 1981 and June, 1982 did absolutely nothing to encourage tourism development. By creating a climate of uncertainty, the Government has slowed investment to a point where many tourism and construction related jobs may have been lost for many years to come. Tourism is a labour intensive as well as a foreign exchange sensitive industry, and the Government should be seizing every opportunity—I repeat, every opportunity—to expand this sector of the economy. Tourism can be used as a method of easing the impact of the recession.

The tourism industry needs signals from the Government that there will be a long-term commitment to support the industry. The federal Government must develop tax provisions that would encourage major participation in the tourism industry. Government does not understand the tourism industry. Little is known about what makes the tourism industry work or the potential the industry has to create a healthy economy. If an investment incentive is introduced or the excise tax on liquor is increased, then what does this mean in terms of employment, foreign exchange and net revenues to each level of Government? We must make this Government understand these relationships and influence it to introduce policies to build a healthier industry.

The tourism industry has potential to create construction jobs amounting to over 2,500 accommodation units annually at over 50 summer and winter resorts across Canada. Tourism has the potential to create 40,000 jobs annually across the country in the construction and operating field. Tourism has the potential to stimulate rural economic growth across the country. Increased numbers of resorts across the country will encourage Canadians to vacation at home and help eliminate the travelling deficit while encouraging other people to visit Canada.

With an upswing in the tourism industry investment would occur, and with renewed investor confidence resort projects could be started across the country. It is estimated that tax incentives could encourage about $1.5 billion of annual construction. This construction activity will generate substantial tax revenues to the federal Government. All these things could be accomplished through recognition of the potential of the tourism industry, yet the Government allows the industry to be subject to high operating costs, high interest rates, restrictive loan terms, reduced advertising budgets and other measures which hinder development.

Tourism is of vital importance to the economy of the country as a whole and that of the Provinces. In Prince Edward Island, for example, tourism is the second major industry, falling closely behind agriculture. This important industry is ahead of fishing. Tourism in 1981 produced $66 million in non-resident traffic alone for P.E.I.

The three main industries on P.E.I. support and compliment each other like a three-legged stool. The industries are closely related as tourists consume agricultural and fishing products and enjoy participation in activities related to these industries. The most important contribution that tourism makes on P.E.I. and across the country is as a major contributor to employment, both on a full-time and seasonal basis. Tourism on P.E.I. employs 4,000 full-time workers. During the summer season the number of workers employed rises to 9,000 to 10,000. This creates seasonal employment for thousands of students. The employment spin-off from tourism is tremendous.

Tourism has great potential for job creation and this is what is urgently needed in Canada today. We urge that this Government initiate an awareness of the importance of tourism to Canada which will lead to improved development within the industry. It is this Government that has created such a desperate need for jobs across this country and we urge that it realize the job creation potential of the tourism industry.

The federal Government should, through co-operation with the Provinces, develop a national tourism industry. I urge the Government to do everything it can to aid the tourist industry, thereby creating thousands of jobs for people in need of jobs, especially at a time when there has never been a greater need for jobs in Canada.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to spend a great deal of time on this topic. I confess that it is not one with which I am totally familiar from the point of view of the inner workings of the industry. Though, like most people—

Mr. Ellis: Hamilton Beach is not big.

Mr. Deans: The Hon. Member says that Hamilton Beach is not large. I want to say in response to that that Hamilton in fact has a potential which has never been realized. It distresses me frequently when I see not only Hamilton but many other municipalities across the country with potential left unused, undeveloped and if anything neglected. I will speak about that in a moment, but first I want to take a look at the industry as a whole as I understand it.

All of us in the House have travelled to various and different places. Some of us have travelled outside North America, many of us in North America and probably most of us in Canada. The question we must ask ourselves in my judgment is: Why would people want to go to a particular place? What is it about that place that is attractive enough to encourage those people who do not live there to visit it, to go there and spend time there? For example, in the Province of Ontario there are very many attractive places, such as Muskoka.

Mr. Darling: And Parry Sound.

Mr. Deans: Yes, Parry Sound, but I referred to Muskoka as one area. People go there because there is leisure activity available which is restful. It is a clean area. It is replete with lakes, rivers and wooded areas which make it attractive.

Why would people come to Ottawa? They come to Ottawa because it has been developed for the purpose of attracting people. It is the nation's capital, but beyond that it has many parks, walkways and significant downtown development. It is of a nature that encourages people to want to spend time on Sparks Street, in the Rideau Centre, walking along the canal, visiting the river or even visiting the Houses of Parliament. They are evident attractions.

Why do people decide to go to Vancouver? It is because Vancouver similarly has attractive features. It is within easy access of mountain ranges. It has access to the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. McKinnon: And to Victoria.

Mr. Deans: As the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) says, it has access to Victoria which in itself has an attractiveness that if it were located elsewhere might not be the case. Its location or the nature of its geography is its attraction.

If we are to start an analysis of the tourist industry, we must first compile some kind of accurate listing of what are the attractions. For example, what attracts people to Orlando? Nothing in the world would encourage anyone to go to Orlando if it were not for Disney World. It is fair to say that in itself it is not a particularly attractive place, being in the middle of nowhere and generally speaking very hot. People go there because there is something to draw them to that place. Why do they go there rather than to Saint John, to Halifax or to Hamilton? It is because they feel, aside from the climate, they will have things to do and see that in their day to day lives they normally do not come across. They also go because there is considerable advertising about how pleasant it is to be there and how much enjoyment there is, so that people who travel to those places see that as being a worthwhile thing to do.

However, there are other reasons they go. Even though it is much further away, it is economically more practical for many families to travel in that direction than to travel across our own country. The cost of transportation within Canada is very high. Whether it be the cost of gasoline or the cost of rail, bus or air transportation, the cost is very high. I think the Government should seriously consider the impact of that cost and whether it is an inhibiting factor. I suggest that it is.

The cost of accommodation is much higher in Canada than if one were to travel south toward the United States. I admit that it is not higher than if one is going to Europe, but in spite of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) might think, there are not many Canadians who travel to Europe. Therefore, what we are really talking about is North American travel, to the extent that we are talking about anything at all.

There are three major problems. There is the problem of trying to promote the attractive features of the various parts of the country. I think the Government could in fact be more involved than it has been in the past. However, there are two industry problems, in a sense—the cost of transportation and the cost of accommodation.

For example, a friend of mine recently returned from Florida. I think he had been there for about a week. He pointed out to me that the cost of accommodation in the Florida area and on the way there and back ran to about $22 to $26 a night. Even with the rate of exchange, that was the cost of accommodation. He owns land near Peterborough, which is an attractive area. It is an area which we are hoping to see developed as a tourist area. However, he points out to me, although I have had not had an opportunity to verify it motel by motel, but I think it is probably reasonably accurate, that the cost of accommodation in that area, which we believe is attractive enough to be a tourist area, would be no less than $40 per night.

Therefore right away, if one is travelling by automobile with a family, if one has two or three children, one must take into account the fact that a week in Florida at Disney World or on the coast some place will not cost one any more than a week in a motel outside Peterborough. That is therefore a serious inhibitor. There is nothing which would necessarily attract one to that area, unless one skiis in the winter. I mean that there is not the single attraction to entice one there. Even if one decides that one wants to travel in that area, the unfortunate truth is that the cost is at least as great as the cost would be if one went literally 1,500 miles to the south, whatever that may be in kilometres, to see something which is at least put up as being an attraction. Therefore, that is a problem with Canadian tourists.

If a person has a choice, I would choose, and I think most people in Canada would choose, to visit Canada. However, there is an economic factor which makes it more attractive to go some place else. After all, it is a little more difficult to sit outside one's motel room door on a chaise longue in the middle of January at Parry Sound than it is to sit outside one's hotel room door in the middle of January on the beach at Daytona. I think that is fair to say, so there is that factor to consider, that one can go to Daytona and live in a motel more cheaply than one can do the same thing in Canada. Not only that, but the climate is also a wee bit better in the wintertime for those who do not ski. So that is something we must consider.

Why are the costs so high? Why are the costs of accommodation so high in this country compared with those of our neighbour in the south? I suggest there may well be an answer. I hesitate to raise it, but having considered it over the years, both are free enterprise operations, as I see it. There is very little in the way of Government involvement in either of those areas. Therefore, either their actual costs are twice as high, or they are taking more out than their counterparts in the U.S. We should consider this and see which of those two is accurate. Whichever of the two is accurate, we must then begin to address it seriously if we think that tourism is to play a major part. I think everyone in the House agrees that it should be a major part of Canada's future economic well-being.

It also strikes me, as I recall from travels across the country and in the southern part of the North American continent, that if one were to consider a trip from Hamilton, Ontario, to Miami, the cost per mile, and even the cost per kilometre, is less if one travels a similar distance in the United States, because the cost of gasoline there, is infinitely cheaper. It has always been cheaper.

I remember that when I was a youngster I would go down to visit my relatives in New Jersey. It amazed me to find how cheap gasoline was. It remains that way; it is not a new phenomenon. This is not something which has flowed only from the energy policy of the Government, even though from time to time we like to blame it for everything. It has always been the case that gasoline in the United States has been much cheaper than gasoline in Canada. That will quite clearly influence a person with, let us say, $400 vacation spending money. People will look and see where they can get to at what cost, and that will influence them.

Then, of course, there is the welcome that one receives. I happen to think that Canada is as beautiful a place, naturally, as anywhere in the world. There is such a wide variety of scenery and opportunity in the country. However, how do we sell it? If one goes from here, one enters the United States, and the first thing one finds is a welcome station which will tell one anything one wants to know about that particular state. The welcome station will provide one with a map to anywhere one wants to go, it will phone ahead on one's behalf or make arrangements for one to be able to phone ahead to obtain motel accommodation eight hours down the road, if one wants it. It will even give one free orange juice, if one happens to be in Florida. One begins with that. Then as one travels across the country, one sees visible, clear indications of every national monument, of every place of historical significance, every attraction that the state would want one to see. But travel from Toronto to Montreal on the 401 and show me the same kind of thing. It is not there. The effort is not made. The time is not spent in trying to encourage people to see those parts of our country which we believe are important.

Then, of course, as one travels from one state to the next one will be told in a brief historical plaque, perhaps, or on a parchment or in a small booklet, what there is in to see in that state. Not only that, but one will be told what is in the general area so one can see its history, and also what one can be entertained by and how. We do not do that. One travels across the provincial border when travelling from Ottawa to Montreal. As you pass from Ontario into the Province of Quebec, where is the information which says that within easy access there is a sugar bush that can be visited or an historic battleground, if there is such a thing, and where is the accommodation? If you are travelling on other than a superhighway, you can have a devil of a time trying to find accommodation. Therefore, something can be done about that.

On the down side, I want to say this. I admit that accommodation, entertainment and the travel industry does create employment. My one regret is that it tends to create low income jobs. That is probably true worldwide. It frequently worries me that many of the jobs created are relatively menial and pay very little. We have constantly to recognize that that can be a problem, finding people to do the work and keeping them at work. It should be addressed, or at least reviewed to see whether the problem can be resolved.

In summing up, it is our own fault, to some extent the fault of those in the industry and to some extent the fault of Governments which could be assisting. In many ways it is caused by such things as the Prime Minister saying that the Deputy is in Europe skiing. That leaves the wrong impression. It was an unfortunate choice of words and probably reflected badly on Canada's tourist capacity.

There are serious problems in the industry. I believe we are starting at the wrong end. First, we should analyze and determine a program for the promotion of what we believe is attractive about our country, what we would like people to see. We should encourage municipalities to maintain the heritage that they have, to show off those parts of their development that reflect Canada's growth in the past, Canada's history, our roots. We should ensure it is advertised in a delicate and attractive way rather than in a garish way.

We should tackle the problem of the cost of moving people across a country the size of Canada. We should encourage our national airline, national railroad and alternate transportation methods to put together reasonable cost transportation packages to get people to various parts of the country so they can enjoy what is there. We should look seriously at the cost of motorized transportation in this country in relation to gasoline costs compared to our next door neighbour. We should look at the cost of living in a motel of no particular standing over and against similar costs in another part of the world just south of us.

As Members of Parliament, we have to begin to do this. I am not suggesting that this is not being done by others on the outside. If we think we can seriously come to grips with this, we as Members of Parliament should begin to analyze what I am discussing and try to see how we as individuals can make it more attractive for people to travel.

As I said at the start of my remarks, and I only have a moment or two left, I want to speak a bit about the area that I represent. For many years I have represented an area a significant distance into the Niagara Peninsula, down to the Grimsby line. It is almost halfway down the peninsula. It always disturbs me that that area never developed as a tourist attraction in the way that I thought it could. There is history there, ranging all the way from the battle at Stoney Creek down to many others fought there, including Lewiston and the battles of Niagara.

There is very attractive geography to be seen and enjoyed, but there is no development of the industry. What there was has been allowed to deteriorate to some extent. It is no longer as it should be. In my opinion, Hamilton has not done what it could have done with certain areas within the city. Areas that could and should have been attractions have been allowed to deteriorate. That is unfortunate.

I say to the Minister that there is a problem. I do not think we should battle over it in a partisan way; let us accept that it is a problem. Let us accept it as one of those things we can agree on. There are serious deficiencies. Government cannot, nor should it, solve them all, but they can be solved.

I suggest these problems can be solved if we make this into a worthwhile debate centring around the philosophy of what the travel industry and the hospitality industry should be all about. We must ensure that wherever support from Government will be of real assistance it should be forthcoming. However, in a country this size, the expenditure of $1 million or $2 million will not change overnight that which has been allowed to deteriorate over many years.

I look forward to hearing what the Minister has to say. I am persuaded that with a bit more effort on everyone's part there could be substantial improvements. Those improvements would serve us well in the long run. I congratulate the Hon. Member for raising the issue today. It is a worthwhile debate for a day such as this.

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the very positive approach taken by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). I hope throughout the day there will be a useful exchange and that all of us will contribute as we can to see how we can improve the tourist industry in this country.

I welcome the fact that the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) has raised this as an issue. It gives us an opportunity to debate what I consider, and I know he considers, to be a very important industry in this country. I know of his concern for and interest in the industry and his desire to see it improved. I do not want to be partisan, except I must make some clarification. As a Prince Edward Islander, I know the Hon. Member will forgive me. He knows how Maritimers debate.

I will not deal with everything the Hon. Member said. I do, however, want to deal with the Prince Edward Island portion of his speech. While the Hon. Member's motion states that the Government of Canada neglects the Canadian tourist industry, I am sure the Hon. Member will agree that it can hardly be said that it neglects Prince Edward Island, where we are involved in a comprehensive development plan costing $15 million over 15 years, 90 per cent of which is federal.

There is a $39 million federal development strategy in P.E.I. In addition, there is a $3.8 million contribution to a convention centre-hotel complex in Charlottetown. As we know, the developers had some financial difficulty. The Government of Canada is co-operating with the Government of P.E.I. and the developers and has said it will guarantee a $19 million bank loan to ensure that this convention centre-hotel complex goes ahead. That is $15 million, $39 million, $3.8 million and a $19 million loan guarantee. While the charge is made that there has been neglect, I do not think that is neglect.

There was also an indication that somehow unilateral delivery was not well received. I should like to read from an article which appeared in the Charlottetown Guardian on February 1, 1982, by Roseanne McCabe. She writes:

> You'll not find many Island tourist operators knocking the federal government's recent dollar transfusion into the tourism industry.
> "It's a first as far as major dollars going directly to help the operators," Don Groom, president of the P.E.I. Tourism Industry Association, says of the $5.4 million tourism development program announced last week.
>
> Island politicians say the federal government stole their thunder . . . but the operators don't seem to mind.
> "I'm relieved to see the federal government funding the program," says Steve Bezanson, operator of Rustico Summer Haven.

Later she goes on to say:

> Mr. Groom says the program is a "real break" for the industry. One in four persons works in tourism during the summer.

There is evidence from the people involved in the industry that they welcome these funds and the involvement of the Government of Canada in tourism in Prince Edward Island which is so important to that Province. Perhaps of all Provinces it is the one most involved in tourism and we want to see that continue.

Next year marks the 50th anniversary of active involvement of the Government of Canada in the marketing and development of tourism in this country. We began with a staff of three and an annual budget of $100,000 in 1934. That has grown into what we know as the Canadian Government Office of Tourism, or what I like to call "Tourism Canada". I do not know how Hon. Members feel about that but it seems to me to sum up the things we want to say about tourism in Canada. It is Canadian, it operates all across the country and it is unified. It has a ring to it. I put it to Hon. Members that with their support we might be able to call it "Tourism Canada" and one of these days we might even go a little further. I will not say anything more about that at the present time.

Mr. Darling: I will.

Mr. Rompkey: The Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) will have more to say about that.

The CGOT uses the most sophisticated marketing development tools available and has an annual budget of $42 million. It attracts more than 40 million people per year to Canada. The Government knows that the tourism sector of the country is important. It is a sector that is largely Canadian owned and is operated for the most part by small businessmen. There are 100,000 businesses across the country—mostly small businesses—involved in the industry.

Every year it brings $16.5 billion into the country or 5 per cent of our Gross National Product. It means $28 billion income for Canadians and one million Canadians are employed in the industry. In 1981 it brought in $7.5 billion in Government revenues. If I were in my former portfolio I would be saying how great it is to have that tax money coming in. It brings in $2.5 billion in investments and $3.8 billion in foreign exchange. It is a prime way of acquiring foreign exchange. Tourism is big business and the Government is aware of that, but the country has been beset by economic difficulties. Despite that, however, the tourism industry has maintained its relative position within the overall economy and has performed better than a lot of other industries. The growth and travel expenditure almost equals the rate of inflation. That can be matched by few other industrial sector. For a quick fix in the economy, we do not have to look beyond tourism in which a small amount of money can create a lot of jobs. Tourism outperformed forestry, manufacturing, construction and trade in levels of employment between 1979 and 1981.

That is what we have to say today to the unconverted. I assume that those Members who are in the House are here to preach the message. As the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain said, we want to send a message from all sides of the House to people in Canada who do not understand that the tourism industry is important and can perform a service for the country. It ranks first, second or third as an industry in every Province of Canada. Tourism employs women, young people, native people and unskilled people. The CGOT has more than 40 federal Departments and agencies that support the tourism industry through, for instance, Parks Canada, fisheries, the Department of the Secretary of State and others.

We should not forget the contribution of the Federal Business Development Bank. By volume and value, 23 per cent of the bank's lending flows into the tourism and recreation sector, so it is a very important supporter of the industry.

It is precisely because of the importance that the Government attaches to employment and economic growth that it has assigned a priority to tourism. The federal Government is telling Canadians, as we are doing today, about the importance of the industry.

Just recently I published a pamphlet which I hope Hon. Members will help to distribute. I know that visual aids are not allowed in the House but there it is. It says "Tourism is Big Business". More than one million jobs depend on it. I am borrowing this technique from my friends across the way, Mr. Speaker. This pamphlet has been distributed and I hope Hon. Members will help with wider distribution as we want Canadians to understand how important tourism is to them.

In the months that I have occupied this portfolio I have travelled from one end of Canada to the other. The Hon. Member for Malpeque knows that as he and I were together in Vancouver. I have been to the Northwest Territories and Yukon and before the end of June I will be back there. I have not been to Prince Edward Island yet but I am going. I think it is important that we tell the story all across the country.

Shortly after my appointment I spoke to the National Tour Association in Toronto. I was pleased when a number of American delegates said that they regard Canada as a great destination and were sending hundreds of thousands of Americans here year round. They spend $90 million per year. At that same convention, for the first time ever a Canadian was named the travel leader of the year. I was very proud that he was an official of the Canadian Government Office of Tourism.

Mr. Keeper: The Prime Minister!

Mr. Rompkey: Many Hon. Members are aware that we are in the process of creating the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and DREE. I can tell the House that tourism is a priority of that Department. We have reviewed operational plans and I am pleased to inform the House that the proposed regional tourism initiatives will represent a significant increase in federal spending on tourism development and marketing over the next five years.

• (1200)

As Hon. Members will know, the reorganization provides that federal tourism marketing operations abroad become the responsibility of the Department of External Affairs. This means that effectively we have more horsepower. We have more horsepower overseas, and as a result of the reorganization of DRIE we are going to have more delivery agents all across the country in a decentralized way. I was in Vancouver recently talking to the DRIE people there is our office, and I can say that all across the country we have strong regional centres which are able to deliver our programs.

As a result of reorganization we, in tourism, are going to have more delivery agents, not less, across this country. We will have more trade commissioners in other parts of the world also. This increases Canada's marketing presence from 21 posts to over 100 posts overseas which are administered by the Department of External Affairs. I was overseas recently in West Berlin, and while I was there, apart from visiting the International Tourist Bourse, I addressed 18 of our trade commissioners who had been assigned tourism responsibilities in various countries. There is a real market overseas. There is a market in West Germany, in Switzerland and in Italy. Our foreign visitors are increasing. In my talk I impressed upon these 18 trade commissioners the importance of tourism and the fact that they had to get out and sell the product on our behalf. I believe they will respond and I will be doing a follow-up with them.

On that same trip I opened the Canadian exhibit at the International Tourism Bourse. The Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) was with me and was helping to promote Canadian wine, among other things. The International Tourism Bourse is the largest event of its kind in the world. The federal Government brought together some 55 Canadian participants in one place in a co-operative effort to promote travel to Canada. I want to stress as well that the reorganization has resulted in a doubling of the numbers of federal tourism specialists stationed across Canada.

Our real thrust will be next year, 1984. I believe it should be regarded as "The year of tourism in Canada". The year 1984 will be the 450th anniversary of the arrival of Jacques Cartier in Canada, to begin with—the birth of Canada, if you like. These observances will have meaning for all Canadians, not just Quebec. It is a significant Canadian event. The year 1984 will also be the bicentenary of New Brunswick as a Province. It will be the bicentenary of the Loyalist settlement in Ontario.

All these events all across the country will have a spin-off for tourism and we should take advantage of them. We should make a real effort in 1984 to promote tourism. We are gearing up for that already. I can tell Hon. Members that the Government of Canada has put together some special teams in order to make sure of that.

I would like to pay tribute to my colleague, the former Minister responsible for tourism, the Hon. Charles Lapointe. He did a great job for tourism, and I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that his involvement has not stopped. He is very active in putting together and promoting this 450th anniversary celebration, and so are other Ministers. We are trying to produce a comprehensive package which will really emphasize what is happening in this country in 1984.

As I mentioned earlier, 1984 will mark the 50th anniversary of federal Government co-operation and collaboration with the Provinces and Territories. I believe we should make it a launching pad for a new initiative in tourism because I want to see tourism get a higher profile in Government circles. I intend to impress upon my Cabinet colleagues the economic and social impact of tourism and point out to them the relevance to tourism of their policies and operations.

I believe, considering existing resource levels, that the tourism program of the federal Government has been demonstrated to be a very cost-effective one. There are, however, factors working against our getting the job done, and we might as well recognize that. One prime example is that the advertising budget, due to inflation and uncontrollable cost increases, has eroded over the last ten years. This has occurred in the face of worldwide competition. For example, Governments in the United States spent nearly $200 million on advertising and promotion last year. It was reported in yesterday's The Globe and Mail that British Airways plans to spend $50 million on travel advertising in Canada, all of it to encourage people to travel out of Canada. We know that there are more than 50 foreign national tourism organizations in Canada, plus some 75 foreign airlines, which are all singing the siren song of faraway places outside of Canada. There are people in Canada who are trying to get people to travel to other countries. It is the old story. Therefore we must make sure that as many as possible of our resources are used to keep Canadians travelling in Canada. That is where the great advantage is. That is where the bulk of our money is going to come from, from Canadians as well as people from the United States travelling in Canada. There is an increasing number of tourists from Europe, but the main thrust has to be in this country, first of all, and then the United States.

I can tell the House that I am certainly going to go after more funds for the federal marketing of tourism. Then I am going to press forward with regional initiatives, as we have in the past, to improve the resources and facilities we have in a marketing effort right across this country. I want to establish a tourism industry advisory council. I want to talk to the people, the entrepreneurs, in the industry. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain made the point that Governments cannot do it all alone. We must talk to the people who work in the industry and to the people who operate within the industry. I want to tell him I intend to set up that advisory board and I am going to listen to it. I hope that we will have business and labour on that board. The future of tourism requires collective effort. It requires collaboration and co-operation and, for my part, I want to see that come about.

We are coming out of a tough time in this country when Canada has not been everything that we wanted it to be, and we have had problems all over the world. But one thing that tourism can do, apart from creating jobs and making money, perhaps as well as or better than any other Government Department, is to tell Canadians about Canada, what this country is like, what it means and how proud they should be to be citizens of Canada. Tourism can have a monumental effect on Canadian unity. That is one reason we should all be behind the program. It goes beyond dollars and cents. It brings Canadians together and it can bring Canada together. I know that all my colleagues in the House will support the efforts we make in the future to make sure that Canadians know the importance of this industry for making money, for job creation, but, most important of all, for the promotion of national unity.

Mr. Gass: Mr. Speaker, I am very encouraged by the Minister's remarks that he for one, on the Government side of the House, appreciates the value of tourism. He made a speech in Vancouver and said that the Government of Canada recognizes the importance of this industry. Well, I have some doubts about that. He went on to say: "If I had my way, the Government would do more". I was there when he delivered that speech. I believe he was sincere. I hope that he will follow through on his commitment that, as Minister responsible for tourism, he will do more.

In the speech he made in Vancouver he said: "I propose to establish a caucus committee on tourism to harness the interest that is regularly voiced by individual Members of Parliament. In time such an institution might largely evolve into a standing committee of the House of Commons". My first question, Mr. Speaker, is: What is happening with that commitment to the association? Has the Minister taken steps to initiate a standing committee on tourism?

Secondly, in his speech the Minister said: "I intend to examine your association's conviction", meaning TIAC, "and urge that tourism within the federal Government be a separate ministry". I would like his answers to those two questions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rompkey: With regard to the first question, I think the start should be made not only in caucus but the caucuses. I would like to have the caucuses on both sides of the House come and sit down with us in the Canadian Government Office of Tourism. I make that offer now. I know the Hon. Member's interest; I have talked with certain Members of the NDP about this and with certain Members on this side of the House, including our chairman of the national caucus. My staff is now in the process of setting up a timetable whereby all caucuses can visit with us. We can tell them what we have on our minds and get some input from them as to how they think that should be modified, changed or proceeded with.

With regard to the standing committee, I think that will be something we can examine and look forward to. But I think the first step should be to get caucus input, and I can assure the Hon. Member that that is being worked on very actively.

With regard to the other suggestion from TIAC that there should be a separate ministry, I can tell the Hon. Member that from my point of view it will get very serious consideration. If we are serious about what we are saying today concerning the importance of this industry, we must use all possible vehicles to focus on it and promote it.

Mr. Chénier: Mr. Speaker, the Minister not only has responsibility for tourism but for small business as well. I would like him to indicate what assistance is provided to small tourist businesses in Canada.

Mr. Rompkey: As I said in my speech, Mr. Speaker, 23 per cent of loans by the FBDB have been for tourism purposes. Within our own Department we have a program which can make available up to $25,000, or 50 per cent of the effort involved in putting together tour packages, market research, promotion brochures and that kind of thing. We do have that kind of program which can be delivered directly to entrepreneurs in the tourism industry. Of course, there is a whole range of small business programs available to tourist operators. With the co-operation of the Opposition we recently passed an extension to the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Small Business Investment Grants Act, and those mechanisms are available to the people in the industry.

More than anything, I guess, we have had an effect on small business through the development agreements with the Provinces all across the country. In that way there has been direct lending and direct grants to motel and tour operators and people with tourist facilities. So there has been a very active program of assistance to small business. We know that most of the businesses in tourism are small businesses and we have to keep them happy and healthy.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, what tends to happen a lot in the tourist industry is that we see support and promotion for the already established areas in the southern part of the country. Can we expect any kind of emphasis or support from the Minister for tourism in the north or less developed areas?

Mr. Rompkey: I am very glad the Hon. Member raised that question because I happen to represent the north. I know the potential and how important tourism can be to the north. I can tell him, as I said earlier in my speech, that I have already been to the Northwest Territories and Yukon. However, I have been invited to both places again. We do have now a very active agreement with the Northwest Territories and we have been discussing an agreement with the Yukon. I met Mr. Pearson from the Yukon when he was here a little while ago. I very much want to see an emphasis in those areas.

When I was in Yukon there were a lot of German tourists canoeing in the Yukon. There is a fair amount of direct involvement by German tourists in the Yukon. So not only Canadians but a lot of Europeans are going directly into the north because they want that wilderness experience. I can tell him that I am aware of it, I am all for it and I am going to see that it is promoted and enhanced.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, the specific concern I have relates to Wood Buffalo National Park. As the Minister is likely aware, there has been conditional approval for a road through the park which would contribute a great deal to tourism in the Territories and in Whitehorse, but also in the northern part of Alberta. The difficulty is that no Government department is prepared to put any funding in place for the development of a road in that area to open it up to tourism. Can we expect some help from the Minister in that particular regard?

Mr. Rompkey: I would certainly take a look at that situation to see what we could do. National parks, as he knows, is under a different Ministry.

I might take this time to emphasize the importance to tourism of those national parks. I said earlier that a great many Government departments have an impact on tourism. All the marinas, for example, created under the Small Craft Harbours Branch of the Department of Fisheries have been so important for tourism. Indeed, we have a special program in Quebec related to the celebrations next year, and a series of marinas that we hope will not only focus on the importance of the historical significance of the St. Lawrence River to Canada but, indeed, encourage tourists to go there.

As to national parks, I can name them all across the country. In my own Province, we have Gros Morne where the expenditures we made were so important to attracting tourists. I do not know all the details of the specific case the Hon. Member has raised, but I can tell him that I am quite prepared to discuss it with my colleagues and to be of any help we can be in focusing on that problem.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a pleasure to take part in this Opposition day. I have been in this House for ten and a half years and seen Opposition days on wheat, fish and sundry other items. Perhaps my memory is not too good, but I believe this is the first one on tourism.

I assume that tourism is not a really big business; it is merely $16.5 billion. That is peanuts, I suppose. In other words, I am being slightly facetious, because if any industry is prominent and of great importance to this great Dominion of Canada, it is the tourist industry.

That brings up the position of the Hon. Minister as Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism. I take exception to that title because, first of all, he should not be a Minister of State; that is a very high profile Department and, with all due respect to the illustrious Postmaster General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), the Minister sitting behind him is bringing in money to pay for his Department as well as a great many other Departments. We call it CGOT. I do not like that; it does not sound impressive enough. The Minister's own idea, Tourism Canada, to me, is very important. I think that matter should come up before his caucus next Wednesday and be endorsed unanimously as Tourism Canada. That is easier to sell than the Canadian Government Office of Tourism. I am quite sure that Members on the Government bench will agree with that. This is a very important Department, a big money-maker, and it can be a much bigger money-maker in the years to come.

The Minister pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that $16.5 billion is 5 per cent of the GNP. Well, let us see some of these other Department heads get up and tell us what they are collecting or putting into the coffers. I am quite sure it will not be near that amount.

The other important thing he mentioned was the generation of foreign exchange, I think he said $3.8 billion. That is a lot of money coming in, especially offshore money.

The Minister also mentioned the Department of Regional Industry Expansion, known as DRIE. I do not know whether I like DRIE as well as DREE because I am afraid you are going to dry up the funds. I am aware that DREE has done a great job in promoting tourism in the Atlantic area, but when it comes to Ontario it has been pretty hard to get any money out of DREE. I believe that $4 million was allocated for the entire Province of Ontario under a DREE provincial co-operative deal. Let us hope that that amount will be increased a great deal more.

I was also pleased to hear the Minister mention the small craft harbours and how important they are. In the Province of Ontario there are 450 small craft harbours. It is pretty difficult, when we approach the officials in Burlington, to get money. They are most co-operative, but they say: "Well, yes, we know that it is important, but word has come down from on high that there will not be money available". Years ago it had even been reduced, and in the great Province of Ontario, which has more tourists than every other Province put together, the total amount for small craft harbours was somewhere in the area of $3 million to $4 million.

However, the Government can pump $30 million or $40 million into one particular harbour. I am thinking of the harbours at Montreal, Halifax, and probably those out west. Those are certainly important, but let us get down to basics and consider where we can get the biggest bang for the bucks. I am quite sure that it is in those small harbours, because an awful lot of boats are tying up there and much gasoline is being sold there, of which rumour has it that the federal Government takes a pretty healthy cut.

In questioning the Minister one Hon. Member mentioned the fact that the Minister was the Minister responsible for small business as well as tourism. To me, small business and tourism are pretty well synonymous, because most of the tourist operators are small businessmen.

It is also important to remember that in this time of high unemployment a great many of the unemployed, I believe over half, have been laid off by small business industries and individual entrepreneurs who have not been able to continue to grow and prosper, who have had to cut down, and who, in many cases, have just closed up their doors and said they could not continue any longer. Then, of course, a staggering amount of them have actually declared bankruptcy. That is certainly very important to consider, in my view. It is why the Government must give a much higher profile to the tourist industry and should also see that money is provided in special ways, at least with long-term, low interest rates, and guaranteed interest rates. This should be done now rather than in a year or two.

Many tourist operators came to me last summer and fall with tears in their eyes. They were faced with having to renew mortgages. Sure, they could gamble. However, they had to renew for five years at 17 per cent or 18 per cent when their mortgages were probably in the 10 per cent or 11 per cent bracket before. It made the difference as to whether they would be able to keep their doors open.

I know that money is scarce. I am well aware of the staggering deficit with which the country is faced. Tuesday night will be the night when we will see what will happen. I hope that the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism has been able to have a word with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and his officials to see that something is done to help the tourist industry, because that is all-important.

I consider the fact that the Government can most blissfully find money for some other projects. Some of them have been given quite a bit of money, such as $500 million to bail out Dome Petroleum. Would it not be nice to give that amount to the tourist operators across Canada? Speaking of Dome Petroleum, $2.6 million will be given as a golden handshake to Mr. Gallagher when he turns over the reins of Dome Petroleum in September. The sum of $2.6 million would certainly help a good number of tourist operators to improve or possibly save their businesses. The sum of $1.4 billion was given for the takeover of Petrofina, with $600 million given to BP Canada to take over just the unproductive part of that particular firm. Then in the newpapers yesterday we heard about Canadair, another Crown-owned company. The Hon. Member shrugs his shoulders. We do not know just how serious it will be. The Government can find money for all these massive projects, but when it comes to the little, individual businessman, the tourist entrepreneur, the money is just not there.

If one goes to the Federal Business Development Bank, yes, it will provide money but the rates are certainly scary to a great many. Innumerable tourist operators have gone there and have then gone to ordinary banking or trust institutions and done better. I will admit that the FBDB is sort of a lender of last resort. However, when the Government can loan money out at very advantageous rates to some of these huge multinationals, surely it could do the same or more for some of these small businesses, these tourist operators across the country who will probably be providing a great many more jobs per dollar loaned than those massive ones are providing.

The tourist industry is certainly one of the most important ones. Because of its nature, it is widely spread over the entire country, perhaps more than most other industries. That would possibly include agriculture as well. It is rooted in the rural areas of the nation: Parry Sound-Muskoka, out west, Newfoundland, Labrador, the Minister's own backyard. For that reason, it seems to me that if the Government really wants to trigger a widespread recovery in our country, this is the place to start. I do not think we have done nearly as well as we should have in this area.

Conversely, there are a number of things we could do which would make a real difference. Let us consider a few statistics for a start. First, we know that over the past few years we in Canada have been running a deficit on our tourist account with the United States alone of $1 billion a year. That means that Canadians are spending $1 billion more every year than Americans are spending here. That does not take into consideration all the millions of dollars spent in Europe and elsewhere. In 1981, for example, Canadians spent $3.5 billion in the United States while visiting Americans left $2.5 billion here. That is a shocking spread which does not need to be so. Such was not the case before. In fact, the spread was always in Canada's favour.

Let us bear in mind just how big in industry it is that we are discussing. We all admit that last year was not a good year, but Ontario alone saw revenues of $7.4 billion which generated a ripple effect throughout the economy in Ontario of some $12.6 billion. That is big bucks any way one looks at it.

What, then, could we do to improve the situation for this very key industry? There are a number of things which I have been pressing personally, as has been my Party. Of course, I re-emphasize that there should be higher priority and profile given to the Ministry. There should be a Minister of Tourism per se, not a Minister of State for Tourism.

Let us next discuss taxes. Every dollar which is left behind by a tourist in the form of profit to an operator generates income tax and taxes for various other Governments. Businessmen are familiar with the idea of spending a dollar to make a dollar. Perhaps Governments should think about doing the same. In their case, of course, spending a dollar would mean cutting the taxes a bit so as to encourage more tourism.

The Minister stated that the advertising budget for tourism had been cut. While money can be saved by cutting down on advertising, the end result will be a greater deficit. It is necessary to advertise because it pays to advertise. The product must be sold. I have heard it said: "You do not sell the steak, you sell the sizzle." We need advertisements that will induce people to come to this wonderful country of Canada. Once they come here they have to be encouraged to come to the fabulous tourist area of Parry Sound-Muskoka. I assume that Prince Edward Island also has many attractions, as does Newfoundland and Labrador.

Mr. Rompkey: I have been to Parry Sound-Muskoka.

Mr. Darling: The Minister should certainly be speaking strongly about the money he needs to advertise this great country. This should be done through Tourism Canada, not that CGOT. Let us hope that will end before too long.

The Government is certainly well known for its advertising, as has been suggested to the Government from this side time and again. It squanders literally millions of dollars on advertising its own programs. But we are speaking of advertising Canada which will bring money back into the country fourfold. If advertising was not valuable, why do the automobile companies still spend millions of dollars on advertising even though they are feeling the pinch? The soap companies know the importance of advertising. Therefore I hope Members of Parliament recognize that advertising is extremely important in order to sell Canada and bring tourists here.

A factor which disturbs tourists, Canadians as well as others, is the cost of a holiday in Canada. A major cost of that holiday is the price of gasoline. That is the real horror story. By the time the Provinces and the federal Government take their share, gas is quite costly. With all due respect to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, a gallon of gasoline — I did not say litre — costs almost twice as much here as in the United States.

This raises another point. Many American tourists who visit Canada are not enamoured of the metric mess which is occurring. The Minister may smile even slightly but he knows that that is bloody well right. Do not shake your head that way, shake it the other way.

Mr. Ouellet: I am much more tolerant than you.

Mr. Darling: You are the intolerant one. I am tolerant. I am willing to accept metric on a voluntary basis but I am not willing, nor are many other Canadians, to have it shoved down our throats under the threat of "You do this or you go to jail". You have not put that guy Halpert in jail or the Members out at Carleton Place because this is still a reasonably free country.

Mr. Ouellet: They are coming here because they are seeing something different. They do not want to be in America.

Mr. Darling: They are seeing something different all right, and expensively too.

In any event something must be done to attract tourists to our country. As has been mentioned here, the Minister has been told how tourists will be attracted to our respective regions. I am aware of the fact that the Government agency, Tourism Canada, has the job of bringing people to the borders of Canada. It is then up to the Provinces to entice those people to their respective regions.

I hope that there will be 100 per cent co-operation between the various provincial offices of tourism and Tourism Canada to prevent any overlap and allow money to be distributed and spent more efficiently. This co-operation would allow the federal Government through Tourism Canada to do a much better job. Tourism Canada is a very important agency. This industry is one of the best money-makers that exists. It is not necessary to build million dollar plants to generate taxes, and that is an important consideration.

Another issue I wish to raise, which indirectly concerns tourism but has a great effect upon it, is acid rain. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) at this moment is hosting a lunch for the Subcommittee on Acid Rain. I am well aware that the Government recognizes the seriousness of the acid rain problem and that the Minister of the Environment is doing his very best to convey that message to our neighbours in the United States. If we do not address this problem in a meaningful way, our tourist industry will suffer because acid rain is already having an adverse affect on many of our lakes. I am certain the fish population in those lakes is being depleted, and while the mature fish may not be affected by acid rain, serious problems will occur during spawning and the growth of young fish in the years to come.

Once again, the funds needed to address this problem will be hard to get from the Minister of Finance or the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) in these times but there are certain matters which are very important. I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) will be able to do a selling job on the Secretary of State in the United States. He was certainly not too optimistic yesterday in answering questions from our critic, the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan). The Secretary of State for External Affairs is adept at not saying anything while talking a great deal, but he did not say anything too promising.

I want to emphasize once again for the Minister just how important the acid rain problem will be to the tourist industry through the years. We have heard statistics on the thousands of lakes that have been damaged by acid rain. Some say there are 4,000 lakes in Ontario that are in a pretty serious situation, but there are 140,000 lakes. We are among those most blessed with the facilities for tourists, including Canadians, Americans and others from offshore. It is up to us and the Minister through his department to try to attract as many of these offshore and American tourists as possible. I know that they want the most for their money.

I close by saying that we must put more emphasis on the attraction of European tourists. German tourists are coming here in greater numbers each year and they are the ones who have the money. They are the ones we want to see here.

I hope next Tuesday's budget will provide some relief for the tourist operators so that they can improve their facilities and get money for working capital. I know it is difficult to get money when one goes to a hard-nosed bank which will only lend money based on one's assets. Yet Massey-Ferguson and other companies like it can borrow with assets which do not meet what the Government shells out for them.

I want to commend the Minister for the job he is doing. I am aware that he is having difficulty with his own Cabinet colleagues but he should speak that much louder and get the support of his backbenchers. Perhaps the Treasury benches will stop and listen to how important his department is. Once again, I say that he should be the Minister of Tourism and nothing else.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, comments and answers?

Before I recognize the next Hon. Member in debate, it would be appropriate if I now look to my right. However, the Chair was advised that one Hon. Member has a travel problem. I have heard nothing since then. Unless I hear something now, I will look to my right.

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the comments of the Hon. Member with great interest. I was also very impressed by the comments made by the Minister responsible for Tourism Canada. I think we should remember that in addition to the financial aspects there are also cultural and technical factors to be considered. It is very easy to make speeches in the House and try to prove that the Government has failed to support tourism in Canada, but if we take a closer look at the facts, it becomes clear that the Canadian Government is doing a lot to develop an industry that, at first, was relatively marginal.

A good example, Mr. Speaker, is that in Quebec, the tourist industry comes first, even before the pulp and paper industry. This proves more clearly than anything else that both in Canada and in the provinces individually, tourism is recognized as one of the prime factors of development at both the provincial and the federal level.

Before I go any further, Mr. Speaker, I think it should be pointed out that Canadians themselves must be willing to become tourists in their own country. It is all very well to emphasize advertising abroad to encourage people from other countries to visit ours, but it is also very important for Canadians from all parts of this country to visit each other and learn to know their own country.

One of the basic elements of tourism is novelty. We like to exchange our own environment for something new, to experience contrast, enjoy a change of scene and see other people instead of always seeing people we know. As a country, Canada is able to provide that change of scene within its borders, and we can enjoy our differences while understanding what holds us together. I thought it was very interesting to hear the comments of the Hon. Member on Newfoundland, Canada's North and Labrador. I think that as a result of its diversity, Canada provides an incredible range of scenery and impressions. I think there are very few other countries that have so much worth seeing within their own borders. As far as the tourism industry is concerned, we have a federal agency supporting federal initiatives, and we have ten provinces, each with their own tourist offices. Some provinces even have Departments of Tourism, and all this adds up to a formidable instrument for developing the industry. In addition, there are many joint efforts being made by the Canadian Government with the provinces and the municipalities. In fact, the contribution of the latter is often overlooked.

When I was listening to the Hon. Member just now, he was wondering what the Federal Government was doing to demonstrate the vitality of the tourist industry. There are a number of brochures, and I have one here, that describe quite admirably the various regions of our country. This is a brochure that is distributed in Canada for Canadians, and there are others that are distributed in Europe and in other parts of the world such as Japan and which describe the attractions of tourism in Canada.

It would have been interesting to hear just now how many foreigners actually visit this country. Figures are always interesting. In fact, in 1982, 32.5 million Americans came to Canada. They crossed the border to visit Canada, on trips of varying duration, but the fact remains that more than 32 million people did so. That is more than the total population of Canada. I think that on both sides of the House Members will agree that if 32 million Americans came to Canada, that is primarily because there are adequate transportation facilities, the right infrastructures and finally, the right tourism facilities to make it possible for them to stay here. I feel that is important. Of course, the number of tourists may fluctuate from year to year, and the recession in this part of the world may also affect this number, but on average, these figures reflect the number of Americans visiting our country.

We had 474,097 visitors from the United Kingdom, 219,000 from West Germany, 139,000 from Japan, 132,000 from France, 79,000 from The Netherlands, 67,000 from Australia, 62,000 from Italy, 48,000 from Switzerland, 44,000 from Mexico, 44,000 from Israel, 39,000 from Hong Kong, 24,000 from Sweden and 19,000 from Belgium. I am mentioning these figures to show that we already have a substantial number of people, other than Canadians and Americans, who visit our country.

At this stage, we should find out whether our Canadian representatives abroad and our commercially oriented Departments are doing everything they can in this respect and whether more can be done to increase the number of tourists visiting our country. That is a very important point. I think that criticizing and saying that nothing is being done is of no help at all in the debate on this question. It would have been far more interesting to hear some concrete proposals from the Hon. Member on the other side of the House. We must not forget that there have been many Canadian events, subsidized by the Federal and Provincial Governments, which have attracted people from other countries to Canada, for instance, Expo 67 in Montreal and the Olympic Games in 1976, the Calgary Games, the Commonwealth Games, and in fact, Vancouver will soon be hosting a world event Transport 1986. These are events that attract tourists from all over the world to our country, but when we ask the support of the House in preparing for these events, that support is not always unanimous. Many Members of the Opposite side of the House object from time to time to these events, while they should in fact be supporting them, because it is this kind of events that will make our country better known. It is a fact that people who come to visit these events return to their own country with a better knowledge of what we have to offer.

Mr. Speaker, there are some very well designed and very well written brochures distributed world-wide that provide a host of details on our country. And for the information of Members on both sides of the House who have had occasion to travel throughout the world, I would like to add that in all airports and cities they will find quite substantial documentation on what Canada has to offer in the way of tourism.

Mr. Speaker, there is another point I would like to raise and that is, that the provinces should work together with the Federal Government to maximize the benefits of tourism for our country. The contribution of Parks Canada was not singled out earlier. If tourism was able to develop as quickly as it did in Western Canada, it is perhaps due to Parks Canada and the major impact of Jasper and Banff, and it is because of the railroads that tourists have been better able to appreciate the West and the Rockies. Then, there is Newfoundland, and I believe that the Hon. Minister responsible for Tourism Canada is very familiar with this issue. When we look at the extraordinary Bonavista Park on Bonavista Bay in Newfoundland, we can see what the Federal Government has accomplished with the cooperation of the province of Newfoundland. I think that Canadians have many wonderful things to discover in that region.

The same is true in Ontario, where Parks Canada and the federal government in designating and developing natural areas for all Canadians to visit so that future generations may continue to develop them while maintaining their touristic and natural potential. In Quebec, we have real touristic jewels in the Forillon and St. Maurice Parks. However it is unfortunate that Quebec is reluctant to participate in other such developments because more and more Canadians appreciate the great outdoors. While 60 per cent of Canadians used to live in rural areas, the trend has reversed in the last 15 or 20 years; two thirds of Canadians now live in cities and only one third in the country. Urban residents increasingly want to find recreation outside the cities, and in this regard, I believe that the development program of Parks Canada is one of the major elements of tourism development in Canada.

It is a fact that if Quebec participated more in the development of other Canadian parks on its territory, more Canadians from other provinces would visit Quebec, just as many Quebecers now go elsewhere in Canada to visit other parks. All these elements together promote tourism development in Canada. As I said earlier, it is a matter of attitude. It might not be essential to spend more money for Tourism Canada, even though it is important to have enough money to meet our various needs, but it is really important to change the urge people have to travel outside the country. It is important to change this attitude because we have too great a tendency to go outside Canada for our holidays when, with a little effort, we could perhaps benefit from what our own country and the various provinces and municipalities can offer us throughout the year. In this regard, the Canadian Government has published a brochure called Events 83. This publication lists the events which are held in various municipalities, as well as the dates of these events and a summary of activities.

So, something is being done. Perhaps Tourism Canada could be criticized for not being close enough to the people. Its brochures are kept in offices which might be somewhat overspecialized. Tourism Canada could perhaps provide more information to Canadians so that they might examine what is available, make their decision and visit their own country more easily. It is a fact that other governments, other countries, travel agencies and even transport companies in their advertising are using an approach which is closer to the people than our own government. I suggest that we should up-date our marketing methods and bring tourist information into the homes of Canadians in order to convince them to change their attitude.

Time permitting, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal now with regional tourist offices. I think we should increase our presence within provinces and municipalities, so that people may have easy access to information. It is rather surprising that Canadians are to a great extent ignorant of their own country. This is due in part to the government, the school systems of our various provinces which have no serious programs concerning the many dimensions of our country. This is something which should be checked with the provinces and municipalities. Going over my notes earlier I noticed that there have been meetings of the federal and provincial ministers responsible for tourism since 1934, I think that we should go a step further and come closer to ordinary Canadians. An effort should be made to change our attitude which compels us to stay home, instead of traveling to get to meet other Canadians, who, after all, live in the same country, are faced with the same difficulties but in an environment perhaps different from our own.

I would urge the Minister to consider my remarks carefully, to see whether there is a possibility that Tourism Canada might conclude agreements with the provinces and the municipalities. When someone spends all his time shuffling papers, he has no contact with the public. It is not necessarily a question of spending more money on a program like this one, but rather to make sure that the money is well spent and that the public does benefit from it. Even if huge amounts of money were spent to advertise Tourism Canada, if the promotional literature remains piled up in warehouses or in offices whose address is very often hard to find, not to mention the offices themselves, all that information is useless and the money is not spent or used for the intended purposes.

That is a problem faced by a lot of people who travel throughout the country. Where are those offices? Perhaps there should be agreements with the various hotel chains so as to be in more direct contact with the public and travellers. Crown corporations such as VIA Rail or CN and CP ought to publish brochures on transport facilities available to get to know our country better. There is very little tourism literature available on the Ottawa-Quebec City or Ottawa-Toronto trains. It is possible to get some information from VIA Rail, but precious little is provided about Northern Canada and about prices in the middle North Shore, the lower North Shore and the Gaspé area. Perhaps we should revise our policies so that the public will have ready access to information, and possibly that is our greatest problem right now. There is no need to spend more money, but maybe we should check with Tourism Canada to see whether all the money is well spent through Government measures or by Tourism Canada officials.

Those are the remarks I wanted to make at this point, Mr. Speaker, because the Minister gave us very clear figures when he spoke earlier. Instead of repeating those figures, I think that the important point is to tell the House and the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) that we must change the attitude of the people by getting them to know their country. There are all kinds of support measures which could be brought forward. When I speak of support, I have in mind not just large amounts of money, but also the specific avenues by which Tourism Canada is trying to make people travel within our own borders. In that respect Hon. Members might have cause to hang their heads, because we may be more inclined to travel abroad instead of travelling in this country. We merely have to recall where our own party leaders spend their holidays. Everyone is going south! I appreciate their position, but if we really want Canadian men and women to travel in this country, we should show them the way. Let us compare current temperatures in Vancouver and Montreal. I think that in Vancouver they are now more or less enjoying summer. It may not be Florida, but this is in our country and I feel that Members of Parliament should be an example in that respect. We should be travelling in Canada to a larger extent, but instead we learn from press reports that some of our ministers, or some prominent Canadians involved in the arts, in politics or in industry are vacationing abroad. A change of attitude would be more warranted than appeals for more and more public funding. At this stage, the need would be less for money and more for talent, in order to change the current approach and increase significantly the impact of funding.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, since I understand I have roughly one minute left, I would like that at the next standing committee meeting where tourism will be dealt with, both opposition and Government Members come up with suggestions concerning this matter of changing our attitudes. We might then have an opportunity to evaluate, and assess them, and see what we might be doing for the future, without criticizing whatever has been done and just asking for money. If from both sides we were to put forward realistic programs, we might then reach the same goals and even double the impact, since this would involve talent rather than mere money.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis) for debate.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): As the Hon. Member indicates, we will call it one o'clock, which assures the Hon. Member that on the calling of Orders of the Day after three o'clock he will be recognized as having the floor.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—STAY OF EXECUTION SOUGHT FOR MOTHER OF TWINS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, tomorrow a young woman will be shot to death in Guatemala. She is currently in jail with her five month old twins. Her husband was killed some eight months ago. It is a crime that this should happen any place in the world.

I have written to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and asked that he attempt, on behalf of the Canadian House of Commons, to intervene. I am asking Member of Parliament who are here to intervene also, to call the Embassy of Guatemala here in Ottawa, ask them to express to the President of Guatemala our concern over this matter, and ask that he not have this execution or the four others intended to be proceeded with tomorrow. Let us ask that every effort be extended to try to find a solution to this problem that will ultimately halt the death of people who, because of their political involvement, face the kind of persecution this woman has faced and the threat of death that she now faces.

LABOUR

LABOUR ADJUSTMENT BENEFITS ACT

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, I should like to deal once again in the House with Bill C-78, to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code. Pursuant to this bill, more specifically with Clause 13 which deals with eligibility, a 50 year old person who has been employed for 30 years in any of the designated areas of employment, namely the textile, clothing, shoe or leather industries, and who has worked some 1,000 hours in each of these 30 years may be allowed to go on what is called early retirement when his or her financial situation is jeopardized as a result of at least 10 per cent of the work force being laid-off in the plant where he or she has been working. In this connection, Madam Speaker, there are always particular cases which are brought to light of people who are 49 years of age and who have worked for 31 years, which adds up to 80, who are not eligible for early retirement, or of people 50 years of age who are receiving for the first time Unemployment Insurance benefits. These people would like to become eligible for early retirement. Maybe the Department of Labour would be well advised—

Madam Speaker: Order! The Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle).

PRESUMED WASTE OF PUBLIC FUNDS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, today I want to express my indignation at the squandering of tax dollars. In his report, the Auditor General has confirmed a fact of which we were already aware—the Government has lost all control over the Crown corporations. Perhaps it does not even know how many there are now. Is that not the best evidence of mismanagement in this country? Here are some examples of the shoddy administration and of the waste of public funds. In 1976, the Government invested $3.6 billion in Petro-Canada, claiming that it was ours, but it never said at what price. Petro-Canada even found a way to spend $6.5 million to keep empty offices in Calgary. According to the Financial Times, the profits of Petro-Canada are sheer fiction! I could also mention Air Canada which has recorded a $32 million deficit this year, and the $10 million it has overspent on its head office. I could also talk about Canadair, the latest scandal and a waste of over $2 billion. And what about Mirabel, the white elephant, the real estate firm which pokes fun at Quebecers who were needlessly expropriated?

I will conclude my remarks, Madam Speaker, by saying that the present Government has run out of wind, as evidenced by the pools, and it does not know which way to turn to make Canadians believe its management is sound. Madam Speaker, how can anyone hope the public to have faith in the credibility of the Government when it keeps on wasting public funds as it does, and when it lacks courage and demonstrate its incompetence with respect to its own Crown corporations?

GUATEMALA—PROTEST AGAINST DEATH SENTENCE FOR MOTHER OF TWINS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I share the concern expressed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), and would like to give a little more detail of the crisis that will occur tomorrow. This problem was brought to my attention by Amnesty International. The person involved is Dr. Graviola Ruth Brooks Martinez, a general medical practitioner. She is scheduled for execution tomorrow morning in Guatemala. Dr. Martinez is the mother of five-month old twins who are presently in prison with her. Her husband was killed before the twins were born.

The alleged offence is unknown, due to the secrecy of the special military trial that was conducted. Dr. Martinez is the first woman sentenced to death by the Guatemalan military tribunals since the creation of these military tribunals when a state of siege was imposed on Guatemala in July, 1982.

I would like to request the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), on behalf of all Canadians, to protest urgently and in the strongest possible terms against this inhuman, unjust and evil sentence which was based on a trial conducted without legal safeguards. I ask this in the hope that there might be a stay of execution for Dr. Martinez, thereby sparing her life and also providing some security for the welfare of her infant twins.

The Guatemalan Embassy denies that these executions are planned. I fervently hope that this is true, but previous experiences have shown that the Guatemalan embassies have not always been accurately informed by their Government.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

SHIPBUILDING

IMPLEMENTATION OF POLICY URGED

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, over four months ago the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) announced policy that would protect the Canadian shipbuilding industry and stimulate activity in the yards. The policy was welcomed by the industry as being meaningful.

Four months have lapsed and the Government has given no indication why introduction has been delayed or when the shipyards and the workers can expect the policy to be implemented. This is four months lost at a time when such policies are urgently needed, at a time when more and more shipyard workers are losing their jobs and fearing for their future.

At the Saint John shipyard employment has decreased from 2,089 in 1978 to only 820 last year. The projected figures for 1983 see a decrease to between 200 and 300 workers this year if no further work is received. This is a scenario that can be prevented.

The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) implied Canadian shipbuilders were crybabies who wanted the Government to lead them by the hand. I say this is not so. These men want to work, and want security for themselves and for their families. The Government has tantalized the industry with a program that would get shipbuilding workers back on the job and reverse the shipbuilding decline in Saint John and all across Canada, but has failed to follow through.

On behalf of Canadian shipbuilders I strongly urge the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to quit fiddling around and use next Tuesday's budget to introduce the shipbuilding policy and get our workers back to work.

AIR TRANSPORT

NECESSITY FOR INFRASTRUCTURE IN MIDDLE AND LOWER NORTH SHORE, P.Q.

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House on a section of my constituency which is on the North Shore, that is the middle and the lower North Shore, with respect to air transport. I would like the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) who has done so many things to this date for the middle and lower North Shore to become aware of the need to set up infrastructures as far as navigational aids are concerned in order to organize landings and take-offs at four main airports of the middle and lower North Shore, that is in the Havre-St-Pierre, Natashquan, la Chèverie and Blanc-Sablon areas. I would also like to point out to the House that some assistance should be provided to the provincial government with respect to the Saint-Augustin airport because in an Indian Reserve last week, a newborn baby died as a result of severe weather conditions due to the lack of a landing strip or ground instruments. Consequently, it is vital that Transport Canada should become acquainted with the needs of that area. We know that for the past three years, tremendous amounts of money have been spent there but even if runways were asphalted, without a system of ground instruments to allow landings and take-offs, the situation is hopeless. This area is situated opposite Newfoundland and considering weather conditions, a system of ground intruments should be a priority. I think that the matter could be dealt with during the negotiations between Quebecair, Nordair and Air Canada. It is very important to consider the entire vital issue, since there are no roads in that part of Canada.

DECREASE IN INITIAL GRAIN PRICES

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, at a time when farmers are being stressed to the limit by increasing costs of production and all indications are that world prices will not increase this year, the Canadian Wheat Board Minister is allowing the initial prices for grains to plummet, instead of holding prices at last year's levels. Initial prices for 1983-84 are down 12 cents a bushel for the base grade of wheat, 33 cents for feed barley, and 23 cents for feed oats. Depressed prices such as these are in no way justified at this time.

With farm bankruptcies doubling out West since last year, and such things as fuel, fertilizer and spray prices constantly increasing, how can any farmer look to the 1983-84 crop year with any optimism? To add insult to injury, the Wheat Board Minister, without batting an eye, told farmers the Government wants a 5 per cent reduction in wheat acreage and a 15 per cent reduction in barley acreage. These farmers cannot afford to cut back their production if they are to meet their debt payments.

When competing countries ask their farmers to cut back production they assist the producers with their treasuries. In Canada, as usual, the Liberals place this extra burden on the backs of those least able to afford it, in this case the farmers.

I could not believe my ears yesterday when the Minister of Transport answered a question with, "At the price level at which they are, the general view is that the incentive to produce is still quite high." I want to assure the House that this is a Liberal view and not a general view.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING IN SUPPORT OF CHANGES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the House to a major public advertising campaign which the Liberal Party is undertaking this weekend to promote changes to Crowsnest Pass freight rates.

I am informed that the Liberal Party has placed a four-page colour advertising supplement in newspapers in Ontario and western Canada. The commercial rate for this ad in one of the newspapers alone is $9,200. Obviously the total cost for ad production and newspaper space will be well in excess of the $350,000 estimated by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in the House on February 22.

Our Party regards this as a flagrant waste of public money to promote the policies of the Liberal Party. We find it doubly reprehensible that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is attempting to buy legitimacy for a policy that has been so universally repudiated in western Canada.

These advertisements are also misleading. For example, they promise 375,000 person years of work on the railways, while on May 1 Canadian National will be laying off 837 workers in shops in Winnipeg, Montreal, and Moncton.

This is typical Liberal Party advertising. Its slogan is, "Promise anything. The truth comes later and can never fully catch up."

Madam Speaker, that may be true, until the next general election.

MANPOWER

ADMINISTRATION OF MOVING EXPENSE REGULATIONS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, the objective of the Canada Manpower Mobility Program may be quite desirable, and undoubtedly many Canadians have benefited from it, but there is one aspect of its administration that requires correction.

Instances have been brought to my attention when applicants were forced by the Department of Manpower and Immigration to take more money from the Government than their actual moving expenses even when they, being honourable citizens, did not want it. All they wanted was reimbursement of their out of pocket expenses. They did not want to profit at the taxpayers' expense.

Letters to the Minister have brought about an almost incomprehensible reply boiling down to "rules are rules and must be enforced regardless of how silly they might be".

It is high time that the regulations governing the Canada Manpower Mobility Program be amended so as to restrict payments to a maximum of the actual out of pocket relocation expenses.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—REPORT OF GOVERNMENT FINANCIAL INVOLVEMENT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who is no doubt aware of a certain program aired on the CBC last night, touching on Canadair. It included the statement that in October, 1982, he and Members of his Cabinet were informed that the full range of federal involvement in Canadair would be from $1.8 billion to $2.3 billion. In that report it was also made clear that, indeed, Canadair was on the ropes.

Would the Prime Minister inform the House if, in truth, that was the report that was received by him and his Cabinet and, if so, would he care to elaborate on it today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would like to answer the question, but I have to point out that it is not within the rules to ask the Government if such and such a report is correct or not. A news report is something which should stand by itself. I did not see the program as I was busy with other things and could not watch television.

It is true that the problem of Canadair has been one with which the Government has been concerned. It is also true that when we took the measure to transfer the management of Canadair to the CDIC it was done because we wanted to see business judgment applied to a business difficulty. Therefore, we know that there are difficulties with it.

There is a likelihood that we will have to come to Parliament and ask for a supplementary estimate to assist Canadair in order to turn it into a profitable business venture. I foresee that Parliament will be able to discuss the question at that time.

AMOUNT OF INVOLVEMENT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I wonder if the Prime Minister could indicate if the total federal Government involvement — in short, the people of Canada — in Canadair may reach $1.8 billion, or possibly $2.3 billion?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker, I cannot confirm those figures. I can give the assurance that if we do come to Parliament for a supplementary estimate we will want to make sure that the financial statements of the company are made available to Parliament so that it can check them.

QUERY RESPECTING CONTRACT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice who will undoubtedly be aware that the same program contained the following comment:

> Unusual deals have been referred to the Department of Justice for investigation and it in turn has asked the Toronto law firm of Goodman and Goodman to look into some of the contracts.

Would the Minister confirm or otherwise if contracts entered into by Canadair are being examined? Specifically, could he elaborate on the contract between KRS and Canadair, which seems to be strange indeed, bearing in mind that it involves the lease of a Challenger aircraft back to the factory and the possible financing of it by the Government of Canada for certain executives of Pepsi? Is this indeed the Pepsi challenge?

Mr. Trudeau: He is over there.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Here comes Brand X.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I think the context in which the allegation is made by the Hon. Member is substantially untrue. The truth is that legal advice was given through the Department of Justice and through the engagement of outside counsel on, I believe, a single contract. This was not an investigation of any illegality or anything of that kind; it was normal advice given with respect to the interpretation of a contract. That is the only involvement of the Department of Justice in this whole matter.

ALLEGED DECLARATION BY MINISTER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who was responsible for Canadair at the time, told CBC that no member of his government could have agreed to the lay-off of 7,000 employees of Canadair because of the referendum. What I want to know is whether this means, and Canadians would be happy to be informed in this regard, that the Prime Minister or his government had decided to throw away the taxpayers' money to save the face of the Liberal government at the time of the referendum?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker, it is not at all what this means. It simply means that, like any other country which is interested in maintaining a presence in the aeronautical industry, Canada must invest public funds in the industry. This was at the bottom of this whole affair when the private sector did not seem to be able or to want to maintain a Canadian presence in this industry. The Canadian Government did what the government of any other industrialized country would do, I believe, and decided to provide public funds to guarantee a Canadian presence in this high technology industry which is of major importance for the industrial development of Canada.

Mr. La Salle: The Prime Minister should also know that the Minister responsible at the time stated yesterday that he had received a report from the company and that the Cabinet was already aware of its financial problems. In view of the circumstances and since the Minister accepted the proposal of Mr. Lear on a simple phone call, does the Prime Minister not recognize the unprecedented incompetence of his Minister in making such a commitment on behalf of his government, and will the Prime Minister have at least the decency to say so publicly today and invite the Minister to resign because of his incredible incompetence which will cost the Canadian taxpayers billions of dollars? To what extent is the Prime Minister willing to comment publicly on the incredible attitude of the Minister?

Mr. Trudeau: I am willing to comment on this attitude, Madam Speaker, and I shall do so in the context that I mentioned earlier when I gave my first reply, namely that we knew that the industry was in difficulty. If such had not been the case, the private sector would not have asked us whether we were willing to get involved in this company. The private sector would have continued to operate and to make profits for its shareholders. Therefore we knew that the company was having problems, and as I just told the Hon. Member, the question for the Government was whether we should let this important sector of the Canadian aeronautical industry in Quebec go under or whether we should try to maintain the presence of the Government, in other words of the Canadian people, in the industry. This was the decision we had to make. The Minister was certainly aware that there was a risk since the private sector wanted to get rid of its assets. The Cabinet's decision at that time was to maintain a Canadian presence in the industry. I would be surprised if the Hon. Member really wanted me to dismiss a Minister because the Canadian Government wanted to use a joint venture, and such ventures have been a Canadian tradition since the time of Sir John A. Macdonald, to keep a high technology industry in Canada with the assistance of public funds. If Sir John A. Macdonald could do so for the railroad, I do not see why the Progressive Conservative Member would not want us to do the same for the aeronautical industry.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, John A. Macdonald did it for the CPR, as the Prime Minister knows.

SELLING PRICES OF AIRCRAFT TO PUBLIC AND PRIVATE SECTORS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue, as the Minister responsible for the details of this fiasco. Would the Minister explain to the House why it is that the people of Canada, through the Government of Canada, are the only people who are paying what could be called a "fair" price for these aircraft? It has been reported that Petro-Canada is picking up one of these planes for $11.3 million, and that the Department of National Defence is going to get two for $11.3 million. I have been told that the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce and the Argus Corporation have each bought one aircraft for less than a quarter of this price, $2.3 million each. Could the Minister tell the House if this is true? And could he possibly explain why the private sector is getting such a fantastic deal, but the people of Canada are paying through the nose?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should not forget that from the outset, the Challenger program as introduced by Canadair was a great success, that it still is, and that if we continue to support this program, it will continue to be a success. The selling and pricing practices of Canadair can be readily examined by all Hon. Members when representatives of the Canada Development Investment Corporation appear before the Standing Committee, and I am sure it would be much easier to provide details on specific cases in Committee than to do so in a more general way in the House.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, there is nothing general about that question at all. It is quite specific. The Minister just chose not to answer.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF MEMORANDUM ON COMPANY'S DEBT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister, who is responsible for over-all policy in this area. My question concerns a memorandum which was given to the Cabinet last fall. If what was said on television last night is accurate, it is clear that the management of Canadair has been totally reprehensible. It is also clear, if the report is true that the Government received a memorandum indicating that the company was going to go even deeper in debt, that the Government is quite probably reprehensible in terms of its exercise of control over this operation and in terms of its responsibility to the House.

Will the Prime Minister confirm that there was a memorandum submitted to the Cabinet last fall which indicated that the corporation was going to go much deeper into debt, up to the $2.3 billion level? And if that report exists, and if freedom of information means anything, will the Prime Minister provide that report for all Members of the House so we can see what we are getting into on this?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have dealt with the substance of the question. I will not answer questions as to what documents are circulated in Cabinet, and I certainly will not undertake to make those documents public. The Cabinet system works on a system of confidentiality. Advice we receive from officials operates on that basis. I do not believe it advances the question to raise this red herring. I have admitted that the Government knew that the company was in great difficulty.

Mr. La Salle: You were warned!

Mr. Trudeau: I see the Member for Joliette wants to put in his two cents' worth, Madam Speaker! Perhaps you could recognize him later on, since he forgot to phrase his questions properly just now. Perhaps the Hon. Member would have the courtesy to let me answer the Member on the other side, who did not interrupt him when he was asking his questions.

[English]

I have recognized that the company was in difficulty. I have recognized that we had to make a very important decision there, whether to cut loose from support of the aeronautic industry in Canada, particularly in the case of Canadair, or whether we should try to find some way to ensure that better commercial decisions were made by that company. What we have done, as is known by the House, is transfer the assets to a Crown corporation operating in the commercial sector, and we believe that there will be better decisions in matters of commercial decisions taken by the CDIC than could be taken in the previous circumstances.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has a different notion about the responsibility of Government to the people of Canada than we have on this side of the House. We believe the people of Canada are spending millions, indeed billions of dollars, and they ought to know how that money is being spent. That is the issue.

• (1430)

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, since it has been quite seriously alleged that this company has given literally millions of dollars to a private American corporation, that this company's senior management has misled a committee of this House, that this company in fact, if the allegation is true, is overcharging the Government of Canada for these planes while undercharging private corporations—given all of these allegations would the Prime Minister do what he ought to do, use the authority of the Inquiries Act and set up a thorough, competent, and fair-minded public investigation into this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Once again, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is not interested in the subject; he is interested in the process. He says the people ought to know how their dollars are being spent. If he had listened to my previous answers he would have seen that I said exactly the same thing and that I think the House of Commons will have an opportunity to see how the dollars are being spent. But why this leads him to ask to look at the Cabinet documents, Madam Speaker, just shows that he is trying to bring a red herring into the subject.

Mr. Waddell: You are bringing in the red herring.

Mr. Trudeau: He is trying to see a scandal where there may or may not be one.

Some Hon. Members: We want to know.

Mr. Trudeau: Exactly. That is why I said the House will be in a position to look at the figures. We intend at that point to bring the financial statements down and have the Opposition ask every legitimate question. After that, if they think, and if it is obvious, that there should be room for an inquiry, we will look at that question.

Once again, there is an admission by the Government that we took over a failing company and it was deeply in trouble. The only question at this stage that I can answer is that the Government, rather than cut it loose and see another industry die in Canada, a high technology industry, decided to try to find some way of saving it. I should have thought that the NDP, of all parties, would not have objected to the Government of Canada trying to save a high technology industry, and do it in a rational way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

VETERANS AFFAIRS

RIGHT TO RECEIVE HOSPITAL TREATMENT IN MOTHER TONGUE

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs.

In view of the amazing decision, to say the least, made by Quebec's French Language Monitoring Board, that St-Mary's Hospital in Montreal was guilty of not adequately respecting the right of Mrs. Marie-Marthe Larose to be treated and to die in French; in view of the fact that the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Province of Quebec have reached a blanket agreement providing for certain minimum services for veterans in four Montreal hospitals; in view of the importance to all Canadians of the Charter of Rights, and more specifically language rights, could the Minister assure this House that in spite of Quebec's Bill 101, despite the French Language Monitoring Board, each and every English-speaking veteran in Quebec will be entitled to be treated and to die in English, just as much in the St-Luc and Maisonneuve-Rosemont hospitals as is certainly the case in Montreal General and St-Mary's hospitals?

[English]

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question. He is quite correct, the provision of hospital services to veterans in the Montreal area is through four different hospitals. I have no indication that the particular situation he suggests in fact exists, and that veterans are not being provided service in both languages. If the Hon. Member has a particular case, I certainly invite him to bring it to my attention and I would be happy to look into it.

CANADAIR—FEDERAL EXPRESS ORDER—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue regarding the Canadair matter. I want to refer particularly to what I consider, and what would be considered in the commercial world, as sleazy deals which apparently have been made. Would it not be closer to the truth to say that Canadair played the Government and people of Canada for suckers, and that Federal Express agreed to place an order for 25 Challengers on the understanding that they could cancel at any time without penalty, and that this manoeuvre was undertaken in order to pad the order book of Canadair 50 that they would get Government of Canada backing? Will the Minister confirm that the truth of this matter is that Canadair rented the name of Federal Express in order to fill their order book?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I do not wish to comment on any specific contract that might have been entered upon by Canadair and some of its clients. However, I would like to take this opportunity to tell Hon. Members and Canadians generally that the Canada Development Investment Corporation is currently engaged in a careful examination of all contracts entered into by Canadair and its clients, both as to the legal aspect and the matter of business practices generally followed in that sector. When that examination is completed, the Corporation will decide upon a ruling and will act accordingly.

[English]

Mr. Kempling: Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Leader of the NDP said, the only purchaser who pays the full price in this country for aircraft from Canadair is the Government of Canada.

SALE OF CHALLENGER AIRCRAFT TO TECHNIQUE AVANT-GARDE

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I would like the Minister to explain the sale to TAG, Technique Avant-Garde, particularly deal number seven, where they purchased a Challenger aircraft for $5 million and then, through a series of paper transfers, that plane was repurchased by the Government of Canada for more than $10 million. Would the Minister explain this?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I would repeat my earlier general comment concerning any specific contract between Canadair and any of its clients. I would like to tell the Hon. Member that the contract signed with the TAG Corporation is under review, like the other contracts, and indeed it is currently being renegotiated.

COMPANY'S FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the House knows that we are in a scandal which is at least 20 times as large as the Consolidated Computers scandal of last year, so my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Can he advise the House why the Canadair financial statements certified by independent accountants for the year ending December 31, 1982, are not now available?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I will inform myself and report back to the Hon. Member.

CERTIFICATION OF FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, while the President of the Treasury Board is doing that, will he also inform this House that the reason for the delay in the financial statements is because of representations made last year that there were 142 firm orders for the Challenger Jet, which orders turned out to be so much smoke and mirrors, and that the chartered accountants will not certify the Canadair financial statements?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am certainly not in a position to agree with the premise of the Hon. Member's question, but I will see what information I can properly provide on the subject.

GOVERNMENT TASK FORCE—KNOWLEDGE OF CANADAIR AFFAIRS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister said earlier that he did not have time to watch television last night. It is a sad day when Members of the Opposition have to watch television to find out what on earth is going on within the Government backrooms of this country.

Mr. Trudeau: How sad for you.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, it is well known that the Government appointed a special task force in 1981 to look into the financial fiasco surrounding Canadair and the Challenger aircraft. The Prime Minister has indicated that the Cabinet received a document in October, presumably outlining a number of the problems. So is it fair to assume, on behalf of Members opposite, that the Cabinet, and perhaps the Government itself, were well aware of the difficulties and the fiasco surrounding both the financial and marketing aspects of Canadair?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member did not waste his time watching television he would have heard me say that very thing in the House just a moment ago. He is so obsessed with what he saw on the airwaves that he did not hear me say, yes, that was one of the great worries of the Government and that is why we took the steps I indicated to have better business judgment put into this matter. That is why we transferred the assets of Canadair to the CDIC.

• (1440)

As I put it in previous statements, the matter is really—should the Canadian people, the Canadian Government and, particularly, the NDP lose their nerve when there are difficulties in areas of high technology? We know that these—

Mr. Broadbent: You've got to be joking.

Mr. Trudeau: —difficulties exist in the United States, they exist in Germany, they exist in France and they exist in Britain in the aeronautic industry. It is not a very profitable industry at this time, and the real question—

Mr. Waddell: Buy a restaurant next time.

Mr. Trudeau: —we had to address was: do we lose our nerve and bail out, or do we stay in and try to make a better turn of events? We took the second option, and that is why we turned the assets over to the CDIC.

TESTIMONY TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, a few months back, Canadair came to Parliament Hill with a number of slick presentations about the Challenger aircraft. Canadair also appeared before each of the caucuses, clearly explaining how well it was doing. Canadair appeared before the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, again to explain its case, while it requested an additional $200 million in borrowing.

At that time it was very clear that Canadair knew of the financial difficulties and this rather shameful attempt at marketing in which it was involved. Government Members opposite knew, yet nothing was said during all of those presentations and all of those hearings and not a single iota of information that was presented last night on television came out.

Can the Prime Minister tell us is this not really saying that the Government Members opposite, the Cabinet opposite, and Canadair purposely misled the House of Commons and, therefore, the people of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member described it as being a shameful attempt at marketing. Obviously, the Canadair executives were in the business of marketing a product.

Mr. Riis: Why didn't they explain it to us then?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not think it would have been a good marketing approach to come and say that it was a terrible aircraft, that it could not fly, and that nobody should buy it.

Mr. Riis: Television's the way to introduce it; is that it?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, television has done, I understand, a responsible job in reporting the facts as it sees them, but does not have to make the decision which I said the Government had to make, and that I wonder how the NDP would have made.

Mr. Riis: We want it from you, rather than television.

Mr. Broadbent: Well, give us the information. We'll tell you.

Mr. Trudeau: If the Leader of the NDP would once again listen, I said that we would give the information, that he would have the figures, that the financial figures would be brought before Parliament. I do not happen to have them today. I do not think they are ready. My understanding is that the year end is June 30, not December 31.

Mr. Stevens: They changed it.

Mr. Trudeau: I do not have them today, and I do not have them just because, by happenstance, television happened to have a program last night. Parliament will have to follow its own processes and not only be guided by the timing of television.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CARIBBEAN BASIN INITIATIVE

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and relates to a program announced in the spring of 1981 which was called the Caribbean Basin Initiative. It was to include all countries of the region and to exclude military activities of any sort. Now, after two years, I would like to know what this Basin Initiative has meant to the developing countries of the region. Also, in view of the huge military involvement of the USA in the region, I would like to know if we are still willing to be part of that program.

Mr. Stevens: Tell us about the Soviets.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the full Caribbean Basin Initiative has not yet been legislated in the United States. The aid component has been approved by Congress, but the trade and investment portions, to my knowledge, have not yet been approved by Congress, so that the five participating countries have not yet been in a position to implement the over-all initiative which, in our view, had the advantage of increasing, by a very substantial amount, American aid to the Caribbean countries and which, if implemented, would open access, without tariffs, by the American markets to these Caribbean countries.

In our view the Caribbean initiative stands on its own feet as a valuable, constructive effort to assist the economy and social structure of these countries. It is not, in our view, associated with any military or security thrust, either.

Miss Jewett: That's baloney.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): My question, which is directed to the Prime Minister, is with respect to the Canadair matter. Having regard for the seriousness of the allegations and the burden which is presently imposed on the Standing Committees of the House, and the seriousness of the allegations which the Prime Minister himself recognizes by his reference to the possibility of the matter being scandalous, would he agree to the establishment of a special committee of this House charged solely with the responsibility of making an in-depth inquiry into all facets of this affair?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member draws out of context what I said about the possibility of it being scandalous.

Mr. Stevens: That it may be.

Mr. Trudeau: I said that it was impossible to have a judgment on that. I think that my understanding of those who watch television and my interpretation of some questions from the Opposition indicate that they sensed or hoped there would be a scandal here. I have no such evidence. The Minister of Justice has indicated that we have no evidence of that, but that we are happy to have the matter dealt with in the proper way by Parliament.

I do not see any need, at this stage, for a special committee of Parliament. When the estimates come before the House, if the Opposition reaches that same conclusion at that time, I think the Hon. Member for Yukon could find out that there is something called "usual channels" to discuss the matter between the various House Leaders.

Mr. Nielsen: I am fully aware of the usual channels which reside in the mind of the Government, and they usually lead one on a constant sidetracking operation.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO AUDITOR GENERAL

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister, if I am to take him sincerely, believes that Parliament should deal with the matter. He seems unwilling to submit that which he has referred to in his previous answers as a matter which may be a scandal to a special committee of this House which would have no other responsibility than to look into the matter. Will he, then, adopt the impartial and responsible course of agreeing to a special order of the House to refer the matter to the Auditor General for a focused and special study in order that he, as an impartial servant of the House, may report his findings to Parliament?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I take the opposite view to that of the Hon. Member. From the talks I have had with the Ministers involved, with the head of the CDIC and with the Minister of Justice, I am of the opinion that there is nothing scandalous. There may have been some business judgments which could have been taken or should have been taken otherwise. That will be a matter for the House to examine. I suggest that, after that, the concern of the Hon. Member and his suspicions should be brought to the fore, and then we will decide whether there should be a special inquiry of one kind, or not.

UNITED STATES—HIRING OF LOBBYISTS IN WASHINGTON

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Cabinet has authorized our ambassador in Washington, Allan Gotlieb, to expend, as a beginning, the sum of $650,000 to engage lobbyists in Washington. Is it true that our relationships with the United States are deteriorating to the extent that we must now hire American public relations firms to represent our country in Washington?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not think that the conclusion of the Hon. Member is justified. I think that if he has been following, for example, the efforts of both the Governments of Manitoba and Canada in support of the Canadian objectives on the Garrison Diversion, he would have known that both Governments have retained the services of a professional lawyer in Washington to assist in that particular project.

• (1450)

In particular instances of that kind where Canadian interests are involved, it has proved useful to engage local professionals who know the scene and know how to carry the requirement objectives of the Government of Canada forward. I think it was rather a good idea, myself.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I take it from the answer given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that there is no point in having any diplomatic representation there. All one does is hire American public relations firms to represent Canada—to line up with the National Rifle Association or Friends of the Earth.

ROLE OF FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, does the Secretary of State for External Affairs consider this allocation of funds, which is just a beginning, as a reflection on the competence of the foreign service officers who are representing Canada in the United States, and can he say whether or not he thinks there is any point now in building Erickson's palace to house all these public servants to represent Canada? Can they not do the job and deal with Congressmen, or is it necessary now to hire public relations firms?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member continues to demonstrate his ignorance of the complexity and the diversity of the relations that exist between Canada and the United States. I have the greatest confidence in the professional capacity of the embassy staff, all of whom are doing a first rate job. It was on the evaluation provided by the embassy in the first instance that this particular initiative has been approved by the Government of Canada, which was recommended to the Government by myself.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Now I understand.

Mr. MacEachen: The Hon. Member ought to understand that the sum of money which he has indicated is just another indication of his ignorance of what is happening in Washington.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—REQUEST THAT INDEPENDENT INQUIRY BE ESTABLISHED

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I would like to return to the Canadair matter. Surely the issue here is the need to divulge all the information on this Canadair matter, whether it is a scandal, bad business judgment, or whatever.

Surely the Government cannot be a judge in its own case. Would the Prime Minister agree that what is being questioned here is not just the mismanagement of the company but the Government's handling of the affair which is being criticized? Therefore it is not sufficient to wait for the estimates to come in front of the House. Without an independent inquiry in the matter, the Government simply gives whatever information it wants and is, indeed, the judge in its own case.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker, I do not agree with the Hon. Member.

REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I will rephrase the question to the Prime Minister so he can perhaps understand it. We are dealing with CDIC which is responsible for Canadair. We are dealing with Senator Jack Austin who is responsible for Canadair, but we cannot question him in the House of Commons. We are dealing with a Government that seems to believe in excessive secrecy.

If the Prime Minister wants to be fair, as he has indicated, and wants to get all the information out on this important matter, and if he has nothing to hide, why will he not allow a public inquiry so that we can put all these questions? For the good of public enterprise in the future we can get all the information out and show the Canadian public that these enterprises can indeed be run properly.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, once again the Hon. Member seems to ignore the answers that I gave to the previous questions. We in the Government intend to put these figures out. The Government intends to have the financial statements looked at by the Opposition, but I explained that we do not have the financial statements now. I believe they are due at the end of June.

Today I was discussing with the officers of the company the possibility of getting them out earlier so that Parliament could indeed look into this matter.

Those are the steps I have taken. That is the pledge that I give. If we can get the financial statements out earlier, we will do so. The Opposition will then be in a position to ask its questions on the basis of real facts.

As I said in answer to the first question, we recognize that they will find a very distressing financial situation calling for a basic decision, either the injection of more funds—which is why I talked of supplementary estimates—or a bailing out completely.

Even though not all Members of the House have that long of a memory, I think most Canadians remember that there was a circumstance when the Diefenbaker Government decided to bail out of the aeronautics industry and got out of the Avro-Arrow. I think it has been regretted in this country ever since by those who know about aeronautics.

Once again, I would think that on this subject we would at least have a temporary understanding from the NDP and that they would set partisanship aside for the moment and remember their own philosophy.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS ON REPORTED IMPENDING EXECUTIONS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I ask him rather simply and directly whether he has made representations to the Government of Guatemala with respect to the impending executions tomorrow morning?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Madam Speaker. Yesterday, at the suggestion of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I did make representations to the Guatemalan authorities with respect to intended executions or reported executions that would take place. I have been informed today by the ambassador of Guatemala in Ottawa that no such executions will take place nor are they proposed to take place.

REQUEST THAT INQUIRIES BE MADE THROUGH CANADIAN EMBASSY

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Minister knows that representations on this matter had been made by a number of Members in the House. I would just ask him if he will in fact ask further questions, or make further contacts with our own embassy in Guatemala City, to determine the veracity of this matter. The last time that a protest was lodged with regard to executions in Guatemala, it was lodged by as notable a person as His Holiness the Pope, and the executions still took place.

I would like the Secretary of State for External Affairs to give us his word that he will go further than he has at the present time to try to head off what might be the execution of six persons in Guatemala.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have already done what the Hon. Member suggests. I have been in touch with our embassy in Guatemala. The information from the Canadian embassy in Guatemala confirms the information which I received today from the ambassador in Ottawa.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

LIST OF CORPORATIONS DOING BUSINESS WITH GOVERNMENT

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Is he, or any Minister for that matter, aware of any high ranking public official being asked to produce or producing a list of corporations doing business with the Government, with the intention that that list will be used by Liberal Party fund raisers for partisan purposes?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of any requests of any high ranking official. However, the hon. gentleman is free to ask for any information he wants relating to the contracting activity of the Government at any time, and I would be pleased to provide him with the fullest information that is available.

I can tell the hon. gentleman that I have had requests from individual Members on both sides of the House for information relating to the contracting activity of the Government. I want to tell the House that our contracting activity is open to public scrutiny. It is open on an annual basis and, indeed, the Auditor General himself, having reviewed the total process, has nothing but commendation of the contracting process of my Department.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROLE OF CIVIL SERVANTS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister unequivocably state that no high ranking public servant, and Mr. Michael Kirby in particular, who was employed in the Prime Minister's office, did not collect a list of companies, corporations or individuals doing business with the federal Government, as he did so readily when he was a deputy minister in the Liberal Government of Nova Scotia, with the purpose of Liberal Party fund raising in mind?

• (1500)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not quite sure whether the Hon. Member has asked me to give a blanket statement about a certain type of activity of which I know nothing. I do know that the raising of funds under the Canada Elections Act is available to all Parties and is published annually. The Hon. Member could see that this Government introduced that legislation—

An Hon. Member: The PCs just want the list.

Mr. Trudeau: —so there could be no reason to hide anything, and the Hon. Member should know that. He is at least ten years out of date.

PETITIONS

MR. GUSTAFSON—CROWSNEST PASS FREIGHT RATES

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) on Wednesday, April 13, 1983 and finds the petition meets the requirements of the Standing Order as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, could the Government House Leader give us some idea regarding business of the House for the next week or so?

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Madam Speaker. But first, before outlining the schedule of House business for next week, week and a half or so, I might inform the House that the House Leaders have had a discussion and agreed to the following. On Wednesday, April 20, 1983 the order of business shall be that established by Standing Order 18(5) for Friday. On Friday, April 22, 1983 the order of business shall be that established by Standing Order 18(5) for Wednesday, provided that the House shall adjourn at 4:00 p.m. on April 22, 1983.

If the House could give its unanimous consent to that, I would be in a position to outline the business of the House. This procedure merely transfers Private Members' Business from Wednesday next week to Friday next week.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this proposal?

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I am prepared to grant unanimous consent on behalf of my Party, but I would point out that since this matter involves Private Members' Business I did contact the Private Member of the Progressive Conservative Party who will be affected by this change and he, the Hon. Member for Victoria-Haliburton, is in agreement with the change.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, the New Democratic Party is willing to accept that change to allow the budget debate to take place.

Madam Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, first of all, I would like to determine the order of business for the next few days, that is, until the budget is brought down. The House is aware that tomorrow will be an Opposition Day and Monday as well. Furthermore, I now wish to formally designate Monday, April 18, as an Opposition Day. On Tuesday, April 19, we shall consider the report stage of Bill C-95, an Act to provide for sports pools and which, as we all know, also provides for substantial funding for the Olympic Games in Calgary. As agreed, next Wednesday will be a day that can be used for purposes other than consideration of private members' bills, and since it is the day following the Budget Speech on Tuesday evening, we intend to use it for the first day's debate on the budget.

The second day of debate on the budget will be next week Thursday and if a subamendment is proposed, the question will be put on the subamendment, as provided in the Standing Orders, at 5.45 p.m. next week Thursday. Next Friday, April 22, will be, as we have just decided, a Private Members' Day, which would otherwise have been on Wednesday.

I can inform the House that Monday, April 25, will be the third day of debate on the budget, and that Tuesday, April 26, will be an Opposition Day, which I shall be designating formally some time next week. Wednesday, April 27, will be a Private Members' day. Thursday, April 28, will be the fourth day of debate on the budget, and if an amendment is considered, the question will be put on the amendment, as provided in the Standing Orders, at 5.45 p.m. on Thursday, April 28.

Madam Speaker, that is what I can confirm for the time being, and, subject to unforeseen events and changes, this will be the Business of the House for the next few days.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I just want to be sure that Tuesday, April 26 is officially designated as an allotted day. That is the only question I have.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Madam Speaker, Tuesday, April 26 is hereby designated as an Opposition Day. I would have preferred to do it next week. However, I want to do it today. We are still free to change our minds, but we do not intend to.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, dealing with House business, why is it that the important Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration is the only Committee, apart from the Standing Committee on Printing and the Standing Joint Committee on the Restaurant of Parliament, that has not been convened to elect a chairman and to get on with the business of the House? This is a very important Committee. It has to deal with estimates, the question of unemployment, the impact of unemployment, the state of the Unemployment Insurance Fund, manpower training, and I could go on and on. Could the Minister tell the House why that Committee is not being struck so that it can get down to the very important business that it has facing it?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, when that question was asked yesterday of my Parliamentary Secretary—I apologize for not having been here to answer but I was in negotiations with the Hon. Member's House Leader on something else—I looked into the matter. I want to reassure the House that this Committee will be organized during the next few days, next Monday or Tuesday at the latest, so that it will be able to deal on time with the estimates and the other matters relating to labour that are very important. The Government wants that Committee to sit as early as possible.

HOLIDAYS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING CANADA DAY AND DOMINION DAY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-680, an Act to amend the Holidays Act.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I have great pleasure in introducing this Bill, an Act to amend the Holidays Act. The purpose of this Bill is to emphasize the fact that the constitutional independence of Canada was achieved on April 17, 1982 by the proclamation of the Canada Act, 1982. This day should therefore be celebrated in the future as Canada Day. The naming of July 1, marking the beginning of the Dominion of Canada, as it was known in 1867, would be restored to its historically more appropriate name of Dominion Day.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Although I shall be very brief, I would not want to let this moment pass without publicly drawing attention to the magnificent job you are doing as Speaker of the House of Commons. I wish to offer the Chair our sincere congratulations.

Madam Speaker: I wish to thank the Hon. Minister. As he can see, Speakers of the House are a tough lot.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—TOURIST INDUSTRY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gass:

That the House condemns the Government for its neglect of the Canadian tourist industry and calls upon the Government to recognize this industry as a major generator of employment, new economic growth, and foreign exchange and that the Government accept its responsibility to increase the visibility of Canadian tourism both at home and abroad.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, a year ago, but for two years, Queen Elizabeth II signed the Constitution Act. It was said that that Act was typically Canadian and that it was a compromise among all Parties. One must assume that the Government feels that it is a typical compromise with regard to tourism since no special Minister or special Department heads up tourism. Indeed it has been allocated to the Minister responsible for small business. If it has to be under the auspice of some Minister as a part time job, I am delighted it is with the Minister who represents that delightful part of Newfoundland and Labrador. However, it does not give the significance to that particular industry that it deserves.

Before lunch the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) adequately set out the jobs, the dollars, the lack of Government support and other points necessary to set the tone for those of us who follow him to expand on. Briefly let me indicate that this afternoon I will speak on behalf of my riding of Prince Edward-Hastings, but I would like to expand it slightly to include all of Hastings since the Hon. Member for Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Vankoughnet) will not have an opportunity to speak on this matter, and as he in the past has adequately represented my feelings on gun legislation and other matters, I know I speak for him when it comes to tourism in that part of Ontario.

There is no specific thrust for this second largest Canadian industry. There was very little for the first, especially when we consider that the timber industry has no Minister as well. The things which happen in the area of tourism continue to depress me. For example, recently a marina in the Bay of Quinte asked for a small business investment grant. The man very rightly wanted to use that money to purchase used equipment rather than brand-new equipment, and he was told by another Minister that it could not be done under the regulations. Surely a Minister completely responsible for tourism would have undertaken his cause, seen the sensible approach he was taking and as an advocate looked after the matter.

There is another marina called the Baycrest Marina which is dealing with the Small Craft Harbours Branch of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. While the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) is a very decent chap, he is not much concerned about marinas in the Bay of Quinte. This is not a reflection upon Mr. Moffat and his staff. As a matter of fact they were recently helpful in another harbour in Prince Edward Country, the Wellington Harbour. It is the only harbour on the west coast of Prince Edward County where the direct winds from Lake Ontario beat against it and it is necessary to have a safe harbour for sailing ships. The Small Craft Harbours Branch has approved a grant to study the opening up of this particular harbour. Just so that no one will think I am hitting at one Government only, let me make the point that the Province of Ontario has not been very co-operative in picking up the other half. We may be able to get some funds out of the Province before we are done.

The Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) mentioned this morning that the extra cost of gasoline was a very important factor in deterring tourists from coming into the area. In Prince Edward-Hastings drivers who come up from the United States are still working on tanks of fuel which they purchased there. It does not matter whether we are talking litres or gallons, United States or Canadian dollars; when they fill up their tanks at stations in the Belleville area, they remember very clearly what dollars they spent in the United States and they know very well that they are spending more money in Canada.

Also this morning TIAC was mentioned. For the record that is the Tourism Industry Association of Canada, which has done a tremendous amount of work and has co-operated very well with the Hon. Member for Malpeque. Referring to the study which it put before the Government some time ago, it indicated that Governments seemed to have the philosophy that people should not really enjoy themselves, that therefore it was fair to heap extra taxes on items such as meals, liquor and hotel rooms, and that they failed to realize the provision and sale of these items provided employment for 10 per cent of our work force. That 10 per cent or the one million people about whom we talked this morning indicates the size of the tourism industry.

The spirits industry is very important in Prince Edward-Hastings. We have a large distiller there. It seems to me that there is a lack of concentration on the tourism aspect of this industry. The indexation of federal taxes on the spirits industry at present is such that just last year the returns to the federal Government started to decrease. They have finally broken the camel's back. They have added taxes to the point where the return to the federal Government is now decreasing. I hope in the forthcoming budget next week that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) will take a look at this very unpopular and unfair tax. I do not think there is anyone in the House or throughout the land who does not agree that the taxing of those vices which some of us enjoy is fair game for Government. When we consider that $400 million worth of distillery business brings in $1.6 billion of taxes to both levels of Government, we have some idea of the inequity. I doubt there is any other industry of which it could be said that the taxes total four times its gross income.

Distillers are the only segment of the entire food industry which has to submit its labels to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs for approval before they are put on their products. Sometimes this approval is held up for eight to 12 weeks. This may sound like a very small matter but when one is in a business which is as competitive and price conscious as the distillery business, one has some idea that a hold up of eight to 12 weeks on labels is not required by any other part of the industry and is totally unfair.

Once again, if I am to be fair to the different levels of Government, the provincial laws are not much better when it comes to bars and that sort of thing. Bars are closed on election day, as all of us know. That brings about inequities which are very difficult to stomach. The most recent by-election which comes to mind was the one in the Spadina riding in Toronto when bars on one side of the street were open and the ones on the other side of the street were closed. Surely we must get away from this. American tourists coming into Ontario would not be aware of a by-election and they certainly would not be impressed if they had to change restaurants from one side of the street to the other just to have a drink.

The Province of Ontario has just completed a study which is of major importance to the tourism industry in Prince Edward County. West Lake Lodge is in the throes of being brought back. While it means very little to people in this House, nonetheless to people in the area it is of great importance.

One of the criticisms I have of the federal Government is that there are no tax incentives to allow, assist or encourage a private entrepreneur to get involved in the tourist industry. The Minister mentioned this morning the need for individuals to assist in tourism. I say to the Minister that there is a need for some encouragement. I suggest that encouragement come by way of tax incentives to help private entrepreneurs develop the tourist industry. There has been no growth in accommodation in the tourist industry for many years.

Prince Edward County is a part of the Prince Edward-Hastings constituency. It is not unlike the Prince Edward Island of my colleague from Malpeque. It is a blessed, beautiful area with lakes and beaches. I tell my friend from Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) that we have miles and miles of beaches in Prince Edward County, some of them untouched by man for weeks, months and perhaps years at a time. It is a rural area with orchards. If I had the ability to describe the scene from Lake of the Mountain, looking at the Bay of Quinte, I would indeed be eloquent, but I cannot. It is one of the most beautiful parts of all of Canada. We are prepared to share that area. It would indeed be profitable to share that area with tourists. It would not only be profitable for the local people but profitable for the federal Government. Tourism is like the goose that lays the golden egg: it is in danger of being killed.

In 1984 we will celebrate the 200th anniversary of the landing of the Loyalists in that part of Canada. It will be a year of celebration, a very exciting and historic time. I know that the Province is participating. I know of some of the student programs which I approved in the past few weeks and sent on to the proper Minister. These projects will lead up to that.

The Minister about whom I said such nice words a few moments ago has now entered the House. He might reciprocate and prove me slightly wrong by taking part in this tremendous and exciting celebration of the landing of the Loyalists. It would be a time for the Government tourism office to show its sincerity and get deeply involved.

Mr. Rompkey: Tourism Canada.

Mr. Ellis: Make it Tourism Canada. We will put that on all the flags, providing that it gets involved in this anniversary.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker it is indeed a pleasure for me to speak today on a very important industry in Canada, tourism and the tourist industry. Long gone are the days when tourists flocked in avalanche numbers to Canada from the United States and many other countries of the world. Some call them the good old days. Long gone are the days when tourists were taken as a matter of course, were taken for granted, that we were doing them a favour to let them into our country and leave their holiday money with us.

Long done are the days when our operators and tourist personnel really did not extend themselves, did not really practise good hospitality, did not really practise friendliness, in many cases provided only mediocre accommodation and served unappetizing food. They were not too concerned whether the tourist would come back another time, not interested in repeat business, as there were always plenty of other tourists to take their place.

Today, perhaps because of our economic crisis, perhaps because there are other more hospitable and more tourist-oriented countries which know the great potential of tourism and the positive effect a thriving tourist industry has on their total economy, but whatever the reason, we have not been holding up our end in attracting more tourists to our country.

Some countries actively cultivate and greatly depend on the foreign exchange earned through tourism to keep their economy viable. Over the years I have had the good fortune to visit many countries around the world. I am sure many of my colleagues have had the same opportunity. I was always impressed by the courteous, hospitable and friendly way in which I was received and attended to, whether I was shopping, in a restaurant, hotel or any other place. I was always left with the good feeling and the desire that some day I would like to revisit those countries and relive and enjoy their outstanding hospitality and friendliness.

Many of those countries, to encourage an even greater flow of tourism to their country, give special concessions to tourists in the form of vouchers to purchase gasoline at a cheaper rate, special rates on accommodations, travelling, special rates on sightseeing, etc., all kinds of gambits to cultivate and encourage this very important industry. This is what Canada has to compete with and emulate if we are to improve our tourist industry and encourage more people to visit our country.

Although international tourism has grown substantially in the past decade, Canada did not share to any great extent in this growth. For example, the number of visitors entering Canada from the United States fell some 7.5 million in 1982, mainly because of a decrease in short-term automobile traffic.

Long-term U.S. visitors numbered 10.9 million in 1982, down almost 4 per cent from the year before. In contrast to this, the number of Canadians leaving the country totalled 34.8 million in 1982. In fact, the relative growth in travel outside Canada has resulted in a tourist deficit for us ranging between $1 and $2 billion a year since the mid-1970s. The latest forecasts indicate that Canada's travel deficit could rise over $2 billion annually by as early as 1987 if something is not done to curtail the trend.

Many of the factors affecting Canadian tourism, like the changing economic climate, energy issues and travellers' attitudes and expectations, are some of the things that we and the tourist industry have to come to grips with. Another reality is the fierce competition for tourist dollars worldwide. As more and more countries develop their tourist industries, we have to work harder, much harder, to maintain and hopefully increase our current market share.

I seem to sense that one of the difficulties that has to be overcome is to get it across that tourist operators are not the only ones who benefit by the tourist dollar, but that retail businesses, such as restaurants, shops, hotels and motels, get the highest percentage of the tourist dollar. These outlets have a direct responsibility to become more active than they are now in greater promotion locally and nationally of tourism.

Collingwood in my constituency, which is noted as a ski resort in the winter, because of the lack of snow a couple of years ago suffered a considerable set back to its economy during that season. Even this year the lack of sufficent snow had an adverse effect in the community. Every businessman complained of lack of business. One thing it did bring out most forcibly is how much the town really depended economically on the ski business in the winter. It also served to increase substantially financial support and interest for the promotion of tourism in the area.

In the area around Owen Sound and in Grey and Bruce Counties, tourism is estimated to be worth $250 million and generates some 10,000 jobs. Even with this, some people in the area, according to the Owen Sound Sun Times, are still surprised to hear that tourism is here and wonder why Government should support the industry. I believe what needs to be done is to make people more aware of the importance of tourism and how everybody in a tourist area benefits either directly or indirectly, and that they do everything possible to maintain and expand it.

It is important too that people work together, not at cross purposes with each other. Resources for promotion and advertising should be pooled, have one good organization locally and be fully supported. Duplicating efforts is both time-consuming and generally less productive. Some people still do not understand or are not aware that tourism in Canada is big business, despite our mediocre supportive ways for the industry. In 1981 tourism generated over $28 billion of income and provided employment for over 1,130,000 Canadians. There are approximately 100,000 tourist businesses today in Canada. I believe this is a firm base on which to build and to regenerate the industry, because there is room for a great deal of improvement.

These improvements should start to take place as soon as next year. In 1984 we will be observing the 450th anniversary of the arrival of Jacques Cartier in Canada, and 1984 will also be the bicentenary of the United Empire Loyalist settlement in Ontario. All these events and others are a spin-off for tourism and we should take account of them. As the Minister said, 1984 also marks the 50th anniversary of the co-operation of federal and provincial governments and the Canadian tourism industry in the growth and development of tourism. The first federal Government agency entirely devoted to tourism was established in 1934.

We hope that all these events and others will give tourism all across our country a much needed shot in the arm and the impetus to raise the whole tourist industry to even greater heights. However, Mr. Speaker, rhetoric alone without concrete physical support for the tourist industry will not suffice to bolster the industry.

The owners of the existing 190,000 hotel and resort rooms, the 29,000 cabins across the country, the 78,000 motel rooms, are all facing the same critical problem—the inability to generate new capital for repairs and expansion. In each Province today there are millions of dollars worth of projects that are unable to proceed because of this financial crisis. The banking community has shown little interest in this problem and has largely refused any assistance, considering the tourist industry on the whole as very risky. It is up to the federal and provincial Governments to take a more active role in this area and to come forth with the financial assistance that is so badly needed.

In Ontario alone in 1981 $600 million worth of tourist resort building and renovations were halted due to financial difficulties. This has resulted in the loss of 17,000 construction jobs and 5,270 permanent operational jobs.

Despite the size of the tourist industry in Canada, the federal Government and the Provinces have not given attention to this multibillion dollar industry equal to that given to the forestry, mining and fisheries industries. This in itself has a negative impact on investors' confidence in the marketplace. The result is that there is a desperate lack of both capital and mortgage funds for tourist resort projects in all parts of the country. High interest rates and the declining economy have not helped either.

I believe the federal Government has a duty to support the tourism industry in a more aggressive manner. New life has to be breathed into the resort construction industry, possibly in the form of tax incentive measures and other measures that would contribute to the betterment of the industry so that it can attract a larger share of the Canadian and international tourist spending.

With the better availability of equity funds the Canadian tourism industry will be better able to develop to its full potential. It has been estimated that the right mix of tax incentives could encourage about $1.5 billion of annual construction. This construction activity plus the future employment in the tourist facilities will, in turn, generate substantial tax revenues to the federal Government. It has been estimated that the cost of providing the tax incentives will be substantially less than the future revenue generated.

Without positive solutions many more Canadian resort operators, resort hotels and resort facilities will be bankrupt in 1984. To facilitate more federal involvement I would like to see a separate department of tourism set up with its own minister in charge. Tourism is and can reach an even greater potential when full focus is applied to the tourism industry, as would happen if it had its own entity in the Cabinet. I believe the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey) has voiced approval of such an undertaking. It is to be hoped that this will be approved by Cabinet as it would indeed result in a better deal for the operators, more permanent work for their employees and a better and a more attractive deal for tourists.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize the importance of having good, pleasant, friendly personnel serving the needs of tourists. Nothing turns anyone off more than sloppy service, slovenly and unkempt personal presentation, poor accommodation and often poor food. All efforts should be made to rectify these problems where they apply. A happy, contented tourist generates by word of mouth more business in the tourist industry than all the brochures and pictures combined. An unsatisfied and disgruntled tourist can, again by word of mouth, devastate a tourist business, possibly to the point of no return. Brochures will help tourists get to an area but the bottom line and the most important area is service.

As one who grew up in the food business I know that the slogan "The customer is always right" is not an idle one. Everything should be done to ensure that the customers are really being looked after and do indeed receive value for the money spent. A contented customer is a satisfied customer. Repeat business is the lifeblood of any business, including the tourist industry. It is a source of revenue that an operator can count on which influences his cash flow, his buying and his planning. It is also a sign that the operator must be doing something right. On the other hand, if such ingredients are lacking or only partially present, that will indeed spell bankruptcy and doom to those affected. Perhaps that is the way it should be. Perhaps those operators who have no business being in the tourist business in the first place should take their leave of the business so they may be replaced by more experienced people, those with more know-how about tourism, more know-how about accommodations, more know-how about the preparation of food and meals and how to treat people as important guests in their homes.

I am sure that if all this is accomplished, Mr. Speaker, tourism in Canada will take an upswing toward greater prosperity for the whole tourist industry and tourism.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to make some comments about Canada's growing tourist industry. The motion of the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) reads as follows:

> That this House condemns the Government for its neglect of the Canadian tourist industry and calls upon the Government to recognize this industry as a major generator of employment, new economic growth, and foreign exchange and that the Government accept its responsibility to increase the visibility of Canadian tourism both at home and abroad.

The motion is very appropriate when we consider that because of the old-fashioned approach to economic development taken by the Government in the last few years, by and large tourism has been overlooked. An indication of this is the fact that there is no federal department of tourism as such; it is just something that is tacked on to the responsibility of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey). That demonstrates how the Government feels about tourism as a major growth area in the country.

I do not want to cast aspersions just at the federal Government. We see the same thing with most provincial Governments where tourism is an area of minor interest or is handled by a minor department, if indeed there is a department at all.

I know that the Minister feels very strongly about tourism and recognizes it as a potential growth area in the economy. Tourism has a lot of good things going for it, Mr. Speaker. It is a labour-intensive industry. It tends to be family oriented, community oriented and regionally oriented. It is a reflection of the true Canadian spirit. Canada calls to the world to come and visit. Yet those voices are spread throughout the country as a result of a lack of focus, lack of direction and, indeed, because there is no over-all industrial strategy for the country. It does not fall within any framework of an industrial strategy or a national recovery program. There is simply an industry, in a sense, crying out in the wilderness. When people from beyond our borders think of Canada, what images come to their minds? What do people perceive as being Canada? I believe what they perceive is a great country, a country of open spaces, a country which is relatively pollution free, a country of streams and forests and mountains with a kind of pristine environment. Most people in the world today are living in large metropolitan areas, and as any demographer will tell you, in the years ahead more and more of our global citizens will be located in densely populated urban areas which tend to be polluted with industry. Canada, as a clean, pristine, friendly environment becomes more and more an international attraction when it comes to tourists.

First and foremost of Canada's major resources are the people of Canada with their ingenuity, talents, abilities, their expertise and their zest for life. One could even say it is our most critical resource. Our resources which are often overlooked are our location as a country mid-point between Europe and Asia and our relatively clean, pleasant and attractive environment. If we were going to identify a sector which is going to attract foreign currency to the country in the years ahead, I believe tourism is that sector. Twenty years from now tourism will not be a sort of afterthought of Government activities. Tourism will in fact be one of our major thrusts in terms of economic development and job creation in Canada.

It is disturbing to look at our newspapers these days, particularly the weekend supplements, to see that the thrust now is to get Canadians out of Canada and down to the sunny climes. There are all sorts of deals by all kinds of transportation systems to encourage Canadians to leave Canada. I believe, Mr. Speaker, we should look very carefully at the reasons why people come to Canada. I believe that people come to Canada now, and have in the past, and will likely come in the future because there are some unique experiences which they can have here. Why do they go to Florida, the Caribbean or Mexico at this time of year? Because it is a unique experience. You can get rid of your winter clothes, lie in the sunshine and enjoy the heat. You can enjoy different music, different sounds, different foods. You can have an altogether different experience than you can in a Canadian city, village or rural area.

Why do people come to Canada? I do not believe we have addressed that question adequately, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest to the Minister responsible for tourism that he and his colleagues look very carefully at developing tourist packages so that when tourists leave Canada they leave having had a Canadian experience.

In western Canada we have two languages with respect to our tourist season. They are not French and English; they are English and Japanese. The thousands and thousands of Japanese tourists who are now visiting Canada tend to visit western Canada because they are represented in that cultural landscape through the Japanese language and Japanese catering facilities. When they come to that part of Canada they want to have a unique experience. They want to see a cattle drive, a rodeo or a stampede. They want to see the wide open spaces they do not see in Japan, and they do experience Canada as a place quite different from the heavily populated areas of Japan.

But there is so much more that can be done in terms of taking advantage of the wonderful tourist opportunities which exist in this country. For example, in most parts of Canada there is an opportunity to hunt and fish at certain times of the year. Yet I suspect that across this country today those families or individuals who are developing fishing camps, resorts and hunting lodges are being pushed into bankruptcy.

These are very difficult times for these people. They are hanging on right now, but if there is not some significant turnaround in the economy in the weeks and months ahead, we are going to begin to lose that very critical tourist infrastructure. If these people do not receive some level of assistance and support from Government, Mr. Speaker, we will begin to see the hunting and fishing lodges, and the resorts disappear from the Canadian landscape. And if they do remain in place, they will no longer be the family-oriented enterprise; it will be the international chain which will take over. Who is it that advertises tourist opportunities? Who is it that caters to international tourists? It is too often the national and international chains which operate in Canada. While one may say, thank goodness they are at least doing it, the point is that the small operator is being left out of the action. And I am not certain those small operations can continue to limp along with the inadequate support given by provincial and federal Governments.

It is important, Mr. Speaker, that we look at this industry much more seriously. I believe that a great deal of attention is being paid today to Government grants of one kind or another which provide assistance to the manufacturing sector. We realize that tourism is the one sector of our economy which has eroded in terms of importance and which has never been developed adequately. Existing tax breaks and grant programs tend to be focused almost exclusively on the processing and manufacturing sector. While that focus is well intentioned and, indeed, I feel should be supported, there is still the one sector which is obviously overlooked, that is, tourism. I do not believe there is a Province in Canada which has a healthy tourist infrastructure. I listened not long ago to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) when he was talking about air fares which encourage Canadians to go southward, and he was quite appreciative of these reduced air fares so Canadians could find holiday relief in the United States or other countries. But I do not see that same initiative and encouragement for Canadians to holiday in their own country. As a matter of fact, I see quite the contrary. In the mountainous region of British Columbia where I come from, what has attracted tourists from around the world and is one of the finest tourist experiences which foreign visitors can have is to travel in a domed car from Jasper to Vancouver through the Rocky Mountains, the Coast Mountains and through the interior plateau. It is a fantastic experience. I would say it is one of the most unique experiences in the world. There was also an opportunity to travel by Via Rail, get out at a stop and hike in the Alpine Meadows. Almost inevidently, you will see all kinds of wildlife alongside the train tracks or on a very simple walk up a well developed trail system. The Government has now decided they should cut off that Via Rail arm, and that particular line of track will no longer be open to the tourist traffic. Now, Mr. Speaker, for the Government to say on one hand, "We support tourism, the tourists, the entrepreneur, the developer", and then take away his or her very lifeblood, tends to make those comments ring somewhat hollow. It tends to make people a bit suspicious and cynical about the validity of the Government's intentions, be it federal, provincial or in many cases local.

There is a great deal of work that can be done to encourage the tourism sector. It ought to be done for the reasons I have stated, but there is one other which is perhaps the most important of all in the long term. Of all industrial economic pursuits, the one which tends to favour the long-term preservation of Canada's environment is tourism. That industry has a vested interest in maintaining one of the cleanest, most attractive, unpolluted and pristine environments found anywhere in the world on this scale. You cannot say that about many other sectors of our economy which have had such a devastating impact on the state of the Canadian environment.

Considering the long-term benefits of tourism to Canada, its contribution to our balance of payments and to developing one of the few growth sectors in our economy, I encourage the Government to take to heart today this motion presented by the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass). It should recognize that adequate emphasis has not been placed on this industry and that to generate more and new employment and new economic growth and to improve our foreign exchange picture, the Government would be miles ahead if it provided a very clear and encouraging signal to many Canadians in the upcoming budget by including in it a major component to stimulate, encourage, nurture and recognize the value of the tourism sector of our economy.

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to be involved for a few minutes in this debate and say a few things on the Opposition motion presented today. I think when you look at the over-all tourism program which the Government sponsored, you would have to say that, quite to the contrary of what we heard this afternoon, albeit in a positive way, the Government does in fact support in various generous ways the entire tourism industry in Canada. In fact, I was just looking through some material which shows how the Canadian Government Office of Tourism is using its advertising budget to promote tourism in Canada. This campaign is being carried out in many countries such as the United Kingdom, Australia, France, Japan and Germany. I think we are seeing the benefits of that support because we know for a fact that people from foreign lands visit Canada on a far more regular basis than we have experienced in recent years.

Speaking for my own area in south-west Ontario, particularly the City of London, just last weekend the London Free Press, the major newspaper in the area, sponsored a three-day travel Canada seminar, which it has done now for a few years. I think they should be congratulated. Here again the Government of Canada co-operated by setting up a booth on the premises and distributing much worthwhile information. I think about 10,000 people went through this three-day seminar. Not all the Provinces were represented, but Ontario and, I believe, some of the Maritime Provinces were. I do not believe any of the western Provinces were there, and I think that is a shame because here was an opportunity for at least the residents of southwestern Ontario to find out more about what accommodations and tour attractions are available across this great country of ours. I just mention this, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of Hon. Members and to show that there is much going on across this country, certainly in southwestern Ontario and particularly in London, to promote tourism in Canada, all supported by the Government.

As I think has been alluded to this afternoon, we know that tourism in Canada is big business; $15 billion a year, one million jobs and something like 100,000 businesses. When Hon. Members opposite talk about the importance of this industry from the economic standpoint, they are right on target. There is no question about it and no one is denying that. Members on this side of the House equally support greater involvement by the Government and all interested parties in promoting tourism in Canada. We have a great country with a lot to offer and there are tremendous opportunities, not only for people to visit, but I think there are tremendous investment opportunities which perhaps private investors should become more interested in.

I think it has been stated that by the year 2000 tourism will be a $500 billion a year global industry. It is estimated that more than two billion people will travel every year. To maintain an increase in Canada's share of this market, our commitment goes beyond just the promotion of Canada as a world travel destination; it extends as well, as I am sure Hon. Members realize, to public awareness campaigns, staff training and hospitality workshops, really to make every visitor a VIP. But I do not think the Government can do it alone. It is up to individual operators to take advantage of some of these programs and, as I believe one Hon. Member mentioned earlier, to keep their facilities in good working order and make sure their staff maintains a pleasant and presentable front to the visitors who might be making use of their facilities.

I think the Canadian Government has shown it is committed to the development of Canada's tourist industry, and the public and private sectors together can increase investment. We can try to encourage greater facilities to meet tomorrow's demands. Already we see across Canada new hotels and convention centres being built. There are special attractions going up, special visitors' services are transforming every area of the country and creating an even more exciting atmosphere.

For example, if I may just illustrate some of the areas in which we see new growth, there is in St. John's the new Hotel Newfoundland, which is a joint venture by Canadian National and private enterprise. Hilton International is expanding across the country with properties in Winnipeg, Hamilton, Charlottetown and Windsor. Here in the nation's capital we see three new hotels. Montreal has a new 825-room Sheraton centre. New hotels are planned for Saskatoon, Regina, and in Banff National Park, Alberta, two hotels and a 200-bed hostel. Many major hotel chains are undergoing renovation of existing properties. For example, Delta's Chelsea Inn in Toronto is now undergoing a 600-room expansion. The King Edward Hotel, long a well-known landmark in Toronto, has just gone through a magnificent restoration in the finest European tradition. In all, over $500 million in renovation, expansion and development of new hotels has been created across the country. New restaurants are springing up, catering to every taste and budget, not only in the first-class hotels but on an individual basis as well.

Canada certainly has a reputation for fine foods. Our chefs have proven that by winning top awards at many international culinary competitions. Coupled with that, we cannot overlook the fact that our cities are safe. This is one of the main areas of attraction. When people come to our country, especially from the United States, they marvel at the fact that they can walk on our streets feeling that they are very safe and will not be set upon or attacked by anyone. That has helped our tourist industry to a great deal. We must continue to preserve that type of atmosphere. I think it will attract a larger share of the lucrative market that is out there.

As I mentioned, convention facilities are in the process of being built in something like 12 of Canada's major cities, with a price tag of over $450 million. In Ottawa we know that the Rideau Centre will change the face of the downtown core. The project includes a hotel, theatres and shops to complement the new convention facilities.

Canada, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, is on the threshold of change, not only in our cities, but in the wilderness areas as well. Our parks are among the most magnificent in the world. They are being developed year-round in various recreational programs. We know that we really have a wonderful land of recreational facilities in our natural resources of lakes, woods and forests of which many people from all over the world avail themselves. Wilderness retreats and resorts are expanding to meet the growing demands for the outdoors, both winter and summer. Time-sharing is becoming an increasingly popular leisure investment alternative, so that now vacationers can purchase time accommodation and lifestyle of their choice from a variety of prestige resorts across the country.

Let us go out to the West Coast for a moment. In British Columbia, Whistler and Blackcomb Mountains, two hours north of Vancouver, are being transformed into one of the largest resorts in North America, able to handle nearly 13,000 skiers a day. Combined with first-class convention facilities, accommodation and food outlets, Whistler will be a world-class resort.

More than $550 million is being spent on Panorama in B.C.'s Purcell Mountains and at Big White Ski Village in Kelowna. In Quebec, and here in Ontario, $120 million is budgeted to upgrade and expand the facilities of Mont Tremblant, Mont Ste. Marie and Blue Mountain. These are just some of the resorts already under development. I am sure that tomorrow we will see others created from coast to coast.

Then we have the multiple special attractions. At a cost of $100 million, private industry has just completed Canada's Wonderland just north of Toronto. In Niagara Falls, Ontario, Marineland is undergoing a $75 million expansion which will include a monorail and a midway. With an investment of $415 million, Calgary is now preparing for the 1988 Winter Olympics, while Edmonton will host the World University Games this year.

I suggest that the Canadian tourism industry is also keeping pace with the latest development in technology. Telidon, which has been developed by the federal Department of Communications, will give consumers access to travel information 24 hours a day. Travel Canada, a computerized booking service between world tour operators and Canadian tourist facilities, will handle bookings and all negotiations at no cost. This makes Canada accessible as well as shows a commitment on the part not only of the private investors, private operators, but certainly of the Provinces and of the federal Government as well.

More than $40 million is being spent to upgrade eight international airports in our country, and over $120 million on 11 national airports. Air Canada and CP Air are spending more than $800 million on Boeing 767s, the newest generation of fuel-efficient jet aircraft. VIA Rail is upgrading equipment and facilities to the tune of $100 million. The new ferry between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island will double the carrying capacity next summer.

Major developments are enhancing Canadian tourism from coast to coast and, I think we would have to agree, offering not only Canadian citizens, but also those from countries around the world, a multitude of great adventure vacation opportunities.

As I am sure Hon. Members opposite have suggested today, I think that much more can certainly be done and should be done. The Government of Canada, through support programs, in trying to help private investors through advertising, through promotion, through public awareness campaigns, and also providing free information facilities to tourist operators to let them know of Government programs of assistance which are available to them in various areas across the country, has shown a definite commitment to support and promote the Canadian tourist industry.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Burghardt) spoke of the upgrading which is going on with VIA Rail, would he tell us just what sort of upgrading, if any, is occurring on the route through Jasper, which just recently, about a year and a half ago, lost its rail service and therefore cut off many Japanese and other tourists from across North America from that market? Has he any information as to what has happened with the VIA Rail service there? Is that one of the areas which will be upgraded, and can rail service of Jasper be expected to return to its old state or to be upgraded?

Mr. Burghardt: Mr. Speaker, concerning the matter as to whether that service will be restored, it is perhaps a question which must be addressed to the Minister of Transport, (Mr. Pepin). However, when I referred to the upgrading of VIA Rail facilities, I was referring to the entire country, not only to this one particular area. I think we realize that VIA Rail, certainly in many parts of the country, is upgrading its service by way of new rolling stock, new equipment. We know of the new passenger trains which are running now in many parts of the country. This is certainly creating added facilities and will mean a greater attraction for tourists travelling across the country.

I have no information as to whether or not that particular service will be restored. I think that is something for the Department of Transport to consider.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—TOURIST INDUSTRY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gass:

That this House condemns the Government for its neglect of the Canadian tourist industry and calls upon the Government to recognize this industry as a major generator of employment, new economic growth, and foreign exchange, and that the Government accept its responsibility to increase the visibility of Canadian tourism, both at home and abroad.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure this afternoon to be able to take part in this debate on the motion put forth by the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) which, amongst other things, calls upon the Government to recognize the tourist industry as a major generator of employment, new economic growth, and foreign exchange and that the Government accept its responsibility to increase the visibility of Canadian tourism both at home and abroad.

There is little doubt in the minds of most people who are involved in the tourist industry, which is the second largest industry in this nation, that the Government could indeed be spending much more time planning and preparing for the implementation of a reasonable and respectable tourism industry policy across the country.

The Hon. Member for Malpeque has very ably pointed out, as have other speakers in the House today, many areas where the Government might produce a better climate under which we would see a greater number of tourist dollars coming into the country both from within and from abroad. I certainly encourage the Government to heed what has been said this afternoon and I hope that we will see some positive results from the motion that was introduced by the Hon. Member for Malpeque.

I was encouraged to hear the Minister responsible for tourism suggest to the House earlier today that he would open his Department's doors and have his officials contact the various Party caucuses in the House. He is prepared to listen to suggestions and take the opportunity to have discussions with various Members who have a distinct interest in tourism either because of the location of their constituencies or the vital fact that tourism is indeed the second most important industry in our nation.

Mr. Rompkey: The first.

Mr. Corbett: The Hon. Member states that it is the first. I can only take that as an indication that at the first opportunity he has to meet with his caucus colleagues he will advocate the Government's establishment of Tourism Canada as was mentioned earlier. Unless there is an election, hopefully we will see him in charge of the most deserving Department to be.

I intend to spend the short time that is available to me this afternoon discussing tourism in Canada's picture Province, the Province of New Brunswick. Indeed, tourism is the third largest industry in New Brunswick and it is extremely vital. It is probably a little known fact even to New Brunswickers that tourism is that important to the economy of that Province. In 1982 we saw some $350 million generated in revenue directly from the tourist industry. It is a major employer because in 1982 it created some 12,600 man-years directly and approximately 13,500 man-years in indirect employment. That is certainly not an insignificant amount. Since these people were drawing salaries and paying income tax, and the establishments that they were working for were receiving revenues from outside the Province and the country in many instances, a fair amount of money has been realized by the federal Government as well.

I want to refer to some of the remarks that were made by the former speaker, the Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Burghardt), particularly those which have already been addressed by my hon. friend from the NDP, that is, with respect to his comment that VIA Rail has been upgrading facilities. It is interesting to note that the majority of tourists, some 91 per cent, who have been travelling to the Province of New Brunswick during the past year, have come by automobile. Of course they must purchase gas in order to travel, and they are faced, as we all are, with the unrealistic cost of gasoline in this nation, which is a direct result of an unrealistic taxation policy that was certainly implemented by a Government which gave no intention of doing so when it was asking Canadians to place their confidence in it during the last election.

Be that as it may, the point I wanted to make is that the Hon. Member for London West made reference to VIA Rail's upgrading of facilities. I wonder if he is aware that as far as New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and parts of Quebec are concerned, the Government's apparent view of upgrading a railway facility is to remove it. For example, the Atlantic Limited has been removed. It was the most popular run in Atlantic Canada and had one of the highest user rates in the entire country. Indeed, it served the needs of the people of southern New Brunswick as no other public mode of transportation has or will in the foreseeable future, until such time as that train is restored to its proper place which I am confident will happen after the election of the Progressive Conservative Government, which I am looking forward to in the near future.

I would suggest that the trains that have been substituted locally for the Atlantic Limited are totally inadequate. Certainly no tourist or local resident can now be encouraged to travel through the southern part of New Brunswick, or indeed to and from the northern section of the Province, for recreational purposes because not only is the timing poor, the train often runs at capacity and, on other occasions, beyond standing room only. That is an indication of the importance of that rail service.

I would also be extremely remiss if I did not draw to the attention of the House the fact that 1983 will be the two hundredth anniversary of the Loyalist landing in New Brunswick at the port City of Saint John. It will be a marvellous occasion and celebration. We certainly look forward to an active participation by our fellow Canadians and hopefully from a great many visitors from the United States and abroad.

Many events will take place in the port City of Saint John. For instance, there will be a re-enactment of the Loyalist landing, various youth rallies, parades and blessings of the fleet. June 17 will be a very special and happy occasion at which time the Prince and Princess of Wales will be visiting the port City. I am pleased to say that during that time they will also be visiting my constituency of Fundy-Royal.

Another celebration will occur in 1984 in New Brunswick. It is the bicentennial anniversary. Many communities throughout the Province will be conducting their own bicentennial projects, and it should prove to be of a great deal of interest. Hopefully that will draw many tourists as well.

The year 1985 will be the two hundredth anniversary of the incorporation of the City of Saint John. I am sure you are aware, Mr. Speaker, that Saint John is Canada's oldest incorporated city, but for the benefit of the rest of those sitting in the House, I pass that information along. I know that you will want to convey to the residents of Saint John every good wish on their two hundredth anniversary in 1985. Of course, during that time we will be having the Summer Games in Saint John which will be a very exciting time for us.

I would like to speak briefly of the facilities available to tourists in southern New Brunswick. The St. John River system is one of the most beautiful river systems in the world, as well as its many tributaries, including the Belle Isle, the Kennebecasis, the Washadamock, the Grand Lake, the Jemseg and the Salmon River, and many other rivers which flow into the St. John River or through its system. It is rightfully known throughout the world as the Rhine of North America. We have over 460 miles of navigable water in the St. John River system. I invite anyone who is a boating enthusiast to take advantage of that river system.

We have a series of wharves. I know that wharves do not fall under the purview of the Minister. Wharves comes under the purview of the Small Craft Harbours Directorate in the Department of Fisheries. I am delighted to see the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry here in the House this afternoon. Perhaps I can depend upon her to put in a good word with her caucus colleagues for some upgrading of the wharf system. I have been after the federal Government now for the last several years to spend some money on the wharves so that boaters, particularly from the United States, who come up in large fleets from time to time are able to dock. A great number came last year. The cruising club of America was in the St. John River system. Their fleet was a beautiful sight to behold. Members of the club spent some time on the river. Unfortunately the wharves, about which I have been talking to the Department of Fisheries for some time, were not in the best condition. The system did receive some money last year, for which I was grateful. I know the visitors and boaters to our area were grateful to have some small repairs done, but a great deal more attention could be paid to this situation.

I want to talk now about my own constituency and in particular, about Fundy National Park. A year ago last June I brought to the Government's attention, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, the fact that Fundy National Park exists. It is located in New Brunswick. I see the Minister responsible for parks is here in the House. I welcome him to this debate in the House of Commons this afternoon. I bring to his attention now that Fundy National Park does exist in New Brunswick, in the constituency of Fundy-Royal. This fact had gone unnoticed for a number of years by the federal Government. An advertisement in 1978 placed in the Reader's Digest stated that Fundy National Park was located in Nova Scotia. Nova Scotia is our sister Province across the Bay of Fundy. I am sure that all Nova Scotians would be delighted to have Fundy National Park in their Province. But it is located in New Brunswick. I want to clarify that point.

It was brought to my attention a year ago last June that the Government had finally resolved the difficulties with Fundy National Park's location. At that time the Government inserted another advertisement in the Reader's Digest concerning our national parks, and Fundy National Park was deleted altogether. Despite the fact that Fundy National Park was first misplaced by this Government in Nova Scotia and subsequently deleted altogether from Government advertisements, the park remains in New Brunswick. I understand the Government will open the gates this summer, and I hope the Government will be a little more positive in the future about Fundy National Park.

I have a few suggestions for the federal Government which deal with Fundy National Park. I hope the Government will take Fundy National Park into consideration in its upcoming budget. I hope the Minister responsible for Tourism will take this subject under his wing and perhaps encourage his counterparts to allocate some more funding to encourage tourists to come to Canada, to New Brunswick, Fundy Royal and to Fundy National Park. I believe, and many other people believe, that this park is one of the most beautiful in Canada. Perhaps even the Minister would like to visit my constituency. I would be delighted to take them on a tour of the area.

Nevertheless, there are a good many things that bother us in New Brunswick about the Government's attitude toward Fundy National Park, not the least of which is an advertising program. Not very much has been done in the line of advertising over the past number of years for Fundy National Park. We would like to see the federal Government put some emphasis on the unique aspects of Fundy National Park. The highest tides in the world occur in the Bay of Fundy. Emphasis also should be placed on the flora and fauna of the area. The Government should be putting out brochures explaining the park and all of the things that are available and what a beautiful place it is.

I notice with some interest the budget of Fundy National Park seems to be falling behind in comparison to the moneys being allotted to Kouchibouguac Park which is in the constituency of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc), the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I would like the Government to address the inequity of an entrance fee. There is a charge for Fundy National Park but not for Kouchibouguac Park.

We would like the facilities in Fundy National Park to be upgraded. We would like to see facilities for trailers increased. We believe the number of senior citizens travelling with trailers now is increasing. We should be providing more facilities in addition to those already in existence in the park. I might add that the trailer sites are always filled and there would be no problem filling more. We would like to see the Government improve and upgrade the swimming pool facility. There are not many parks in Canada that have a swimming pool. Fundy National Park does. This swimming pool draws its water from the Bay of Fundy. That is a unique situation. The water is heated, but because of changeable weather conditions it has limited usage. If the pool were enclosed this would be a definite asset.

We have a beautiful golf course which was originally intended to be an 18-hole golf course. It was built in 1948 and has nine holes. Although the original intention was for an 18-hole golf course, there has been no move since then to extend it from 9 holes to 18 holes.

There was a craft school in Fundy National Park. We would like to see that revitalized. It was supported and financed by the provincial Government. We would like to see some federal participation in that area.

Children's programs are something that should be addressed. I have some suggestions for some new facilities which might include such things as a maple sugar operation, a sawmill, a museum, and an original homestead modelled on one of the old homes there at the time of the takeover. A fishway should be built at Pointe Wolfe to improve salmon fishing facilities.

There are many things we can do in the area of physical activities which promote health. I am thinking of trails for jogging, cross-country skiing and other activities which come to mind for Fundy National Park.

In closing I should like to say that the Province of New Brunswick should be commended for the work it has done in the past as far as promotion of salmon fishing, which is second to none anywhere in sports fishery, is concerned, and for the co-operation it has extended to the federal Department of Fisheries. It seems it has not been repaid in kind and now we are faced with some very ridiculous salmon fishing regulations which are not at all in the best interests of the sports salmon fishery in New Brunswick. I would like to see some attention paid to that industry as it is very important and very vital.

We have a great opportunity to exploit an area indigenous to New Brunswick in the Atlantic salmon sports fishery. We have some of the greatest salmon rivers in the world in the Province of New Brunswick. Certainly we would be unwise to continue on this course with reference to the sports salmon fishery in New Brunswick. I will have more to say about that at another time in another debate.

I support the motion of the Hon. Member for Malpeque. I look forward to a renewed and vigorous revitalization of the tourist industry, the tourist platform and the tourist Department by the federal Government under the auspices of an able and capable Minister who will give it every consideration. We look forward to grand and wonderful things in the department of the industry through the efforts of our tourism critic and his co-operation with the Minister who is now responsible for tourism in Canada and who should have a sole Ministry to administer under that portfolio.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, ours is a large country. It offers travellers, both Canadians and foreign, the widest choices in meeting their interests. Our cities have museums, art galleries, theatres and restaurants which are of world class. They offer those interested opportunities to watch the best in athletic competition, whether it be baseball, football or hockey, just to mention a few. Away from our cities we have scenery, mountains, rivers, lakes, forests, wilderness areas and wildlife the equal of any country or continent in the world.

People from all parts of the world should be flocking to Canada. Canadians should be visiting areas in Canada away from their homes. If we commissioned a study, I am sure we would find that very few people from Atlantic Canada have visited the Pacific Coast, that very few people from Winnipeg have been to Halifax or Saint John, and even fewer have been to Newfoundland. Most Canadians live in a belt 100 miles north of the American border. When they travel, they do not visit other parts of Canada. They go to Florida, Hawaii, Mexico, England, France and the Scandinavian countries. We ought to ask ourselves why they are doing this.

Canadians, especially those who do not live in British Columbia, know that the main reason for getting away from Canada is our winters. Canadians like to take winter holidays and get away to warmer climates, whether it be in the southern United States or in places like Hawaii. There is another important reason. It is the same reason that many non-Canadians do not come to Canada. It is because in Canada we have not worked out the kind of arrangements or package deals which are available in other countries. If Canadians want to take their holidays in Florida, Hawaii, England, France or any other country, they can usually work out a package deal which includes not only air fare but hotel accommodations.

Recently I had my office contact a travel agency here in Ottawa. We were told that we could obtain a package tour to fly from Montreal to Miami, Florida, and stay there for a week at a price of between $400 and $500 per person. This included the air face and hotel accommodation. Or we could take the same trip and stay for two weeks at a price of between $600 and $800 per person. We have nothing in Canada to match that.

In recent years our airlines finally realized that if they wanted to tap the big market, the people who were travelling but not in Canada, they would have to offer cheaper air fares. If one flies from Ottawa to Vancouver or from Halifax to Toronto, it is still necessary, even if one obtains cheap air fare, to pay $50 to $100 per day for a decent hotel. If we compare that with the deals one could make to travel to Florida, Hawaii or London, England, we see why Canadians and non-Canadians are not travelling in Canada and taking advantage of the facilities and the scenery available here. It is for this reason that many people flock to other countries.

Many countries in the world, both the industrialized and less developed ones, have recognized the benefits derived from promoting the tourist industry. The industry provides employment for large numbers of people. These jobs can and should be of a permanent nature. Unlike manufacturing industries which have gone into decline and the high technology industries we hope to encourage, both of which are highly capital-intensive, the tourist industry is labour-intensive. It should employ even more people. It will not become obsolete if it is modernized. It should be non-polluting. It should be promoted in ways it has not been promoted up to now.

Of course, the federal and provincial Governments have spent money on advertising to tell Canadians and other people about Canada's great scenery and events which take place such as concerts, ballets, folk festivals and multicultural events in various parts of Canada. Until the federal and provincial Governments get together with the transportation industry, with the hotel and motel groups and with restaurant groups in ways they have not already done, we will not succeed in convincing travellers, whether they be Canadians or foreigners, that they are as welcome in Canada and can obtain the kind of enjoyment when they travel here as they do in other countries.

To a large extent tourist industry facilities are operated by Canadians in small individually-owned operations. They have been very seriously and adversely affected by the recession. Business is down because people do not have money. When there are 1.5 million people unemployed, they will not travel to the same extent as they did in other years, nor do they have money even if they do travel to spend like they used to. Business is down and the high interest rates to which the tourist industry and other industries have been subjected in recent years have driven many people in that industry, particularly small independent operators, whether they own a motel, hotel, restaurant, fishing facility or campsite, into bankruptcy or close to bankruptcy. They need to upgrade their facilities. They need money to continue to operate until the economy improves. What do they find? They find that the banks, having overextended themselves in loans to some of Canada's largest corporations, now have over $4 billion in noncurrent loans. That means that companies are not even paying the interest, let alone the principal which they borrowed from the bank. They find that the banks, having been burned by their mistaken loans to many of Canada's largest corporations, have been getting more and more tough with the small businessmen. Most operators in the tourist industry can be included in that.

Over 80,000 Canadian small businesses closed their doors in 1982, according to the President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Businessmen. Among them were tourist operators. While this tragedy continues, the Canadian dollar is a bargain to foreign tourists, yet the Government is reluctant to advertise the tourist virtues of this great country in other but the most perfunctory way.

This same Government decries the fact that the national economy has been dragged into recession by the forces of the international market. We know that, along with everybody else, the small business sector has suffered. A large percentage of the 700,000 to 800,000 jobs that have been lost to the economy through lay-offs and shutdowns have been in the small business area. The coming summer period should provide an excellent opportunity for the tourist industry to attempt to recoup some of the jobs, but it needs a real program of support for its facilities. International tourism could be attracted to this country if the Government could work with the industry to provide support.

Earlier this week the Minister pointed with pride to the fact that 62 per cent of the applicants for the small business investment grants were farmers and fishermen. It is good to hear that, but it is strange that the same Minister who is responsible for tourism does not realize that his program missed the mark. These are the figures for small business loans. If the majority of the loans have been made to farmers and fishermen, it is obvious there has been very little assistance to the tourist industry.

If the small business sector in 1982-83 provided 700,000 to 800,000 fewer jobs than in 1981, it is time that this Minister rethought his strategy and started to provide Canadian small business with some access to working capital to improve and refurbish these facilities. He should begin today by participating with provincial Governments, municipal Governments, the tourist industry and the provincial industry in rethinking policies to develop ways of pursuading Canadians and others to travel in Canada rather then outside Canada as has been done so frequently in the past.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, representing as I do one of the outstanding tourist areas of Canada, I commend the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) on the motion he has presented to the House today. The motion reads:

That this House condemns the Government for its neglect of the Canadian tourist industry and calls upon the Government to recognize this industry as a major generator of employment, new economic growth, and foreign exchange and that the Government accept its responsibility to increase the visibility of Canadian tourism both at home and abroad.

I want to deal with some of the major thoughts in connection with tourism from the federal angle. Today most provincial Governments spend large sums of money on tourism. They have Tourist Departments. Along with the municipalities, they are doing the job, but they receive very little assistance or encouragement from the Canadian Government.

Tourism is not recognized by the federal Government as an industry, but more or less as a promotion. It employs a large number of people and should be recognized as an industry. Until it is, it will not get its proper share of attention. It is a small business.

All of the Bills dealing with small business should be applicable to our campgrounds, motels and to those who provide any tourism service which makes the visit of people to this country more enjoyable. Until that is done, those trying to build up the tourism industry in this country will not get their full share. The Bill passed the other day in connection with the 4 per cent interest assistance for loans could be of tremendous advantage to the owner of some of our campgrounds who are having to pay high rates of interest. Even though they operate and are taxed as a business, they are not recognized as an industry by the federal Government. I would like the Minister to ensure that tourism does become an industry in this country.

There are no tax incentives for the tourist industry, none at all. Those who help bring thousands of visitors to this country, resulting in the spending of millions of dollars, should receive some tax incentives the same as those who drill for oil and dig for coal, as well as the many other activities in this country which produce wealth.

Tourism produces wealth for this country and, for the most part, takes nothing away other than souvenirs on which millions of dollars are spent. This adds to our foreign exchange. Visitors look at our beautiful mountains, hills, badlands, dinosaurs and whatever else a Province has to offer, and they enjoy it. All they take away is a beautiful memory of a beautiful country. However, no tax incentives are provided for this industry. There should be tax incentives for businesses catering to the tourist industry as with any other business in this country.

How many times do we hear talk about the "Dirty Spoon Cafe"? If there are such places, it is because there are no incentives or encouragements for them.

There is an association in western Canada called the Yellowhead Route Association. The route runs from Winnipeg to Brandon, Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Lloydminister, Edmonton on to Vancouver or Prince Rupert, B.C., depending on which route you take. That organization has advanced the necessity for good tourist facilities. It has encouraged people to open good restaurants, serve good meals and maintain the beauty around campgrounds. All this is paying off. Many people now travel the Yellowhead route to Vancouver. This route has the lowest grade through the Rockies and the lowest snow fall. Tourist operators need tax incentives as an encouragement, particularly when they are contributing to the finances of the nation by attracting people back to this country.

Every time a tourist is disgruntled or frustrated and goes home angry, it is not likely he will return. Many of his friends will decide not to come either. Tourists must be kept happy if the industry is to grow, so more consideration must be given to public relations.

There are many restrictions on development, Mr. Speaker. In this country it is difficult to invest in a business. There are municipal inspections, environmental inspections, provincial inspections of utilities, planning board inspections, sewage disposal inspections—just one inspection after another. People become so frustrated that instead of investing in the industry they buy a Canada Savings Bond or put their money in the bank in order to avoid the hassle. Sometimes it is almost impossible to invest money because of Government restrictions. Some people claim that free enterprise does not work, but it is the shackles placed around it by the Government that make things difficult. It is very important to have proper facilities if people are to be encouraged to come to Canada, but at the present time too much red tape is involved.

I am glad that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) is in the House as I want to deal with a case that he knows very well involving the Fleishman Cup. In 1981 110 young people from eastern and western Canada attended a ski meet in eastern Canada and planned one for western Canada in 1982. Every room was booked for the event at beautiful Lake Louise. Suddenly the Park's superintendent announced that it was necessary to obtain the permission of the Minister because it was a national event. But it was not a national event, Mr. Speaker. There was no hassle when it was held in eastern Canada. Just two weeks before the event, when all the arrangements were made and thousands of dollars had been spent, this is what happened. The event was not going to be attended by thousands of people but just by the parents of the skiers. These young people were likely to become Olympic competitors at some time. The competition is for the Fleishman Cup, previously called the Pontiac Cup, and it is held for amateur Canadian athletes between the ages of 15 and 20.

I telephoned the Minister's office and the secretary said that the event would not be accepted. I do not know how she knew that and I asked her to let the Minister decide. She said that it would not be accepted, that is all. I asked her to let it go to the Minister at least. After several letters and two or three telephone conversations, the Minister said that in spite of all the inconvenience to people from eastern Canada, it could not be held. I asked him if it would do any harm to the snow, and he said, "It may". Mr. Speaker, it would not do any damage to the environment. The ski hills were there and the lifts were there. It was just a matter of red tape and letting some underling run the Department instead of the Minister.

This was not a national event but we could not persuade the Minister to change his mind, so 50 or 60 young people from eastern Canada will probably never go to Lake Louise again. They were so fed up after having made reservations and having a beautiful hill to ski on and then being told they could not go. It is not as if the resort was too busy either.

When I was teaching school there was a lad in grade four who was subnormal. Apparently there was a sheet of ice on his father's land and the other youngsters in the school yard were talking about going over there. He told them to go to another farm saying, "I don't want you to wear out our ice". I explained to him that you do not wear out ice, you enjoy it. Eventually the hockey game was held on that ice. That was the attitude of the Department of the Environment in this instance. It was as if these young people were going to wear out the snow.

We import chairs for ski lifts, Mr. Speaker, because they are not manufactured in Canada, but the importers do not receive a tax exemption. These ski lifts bring people to Canada and that helps our exchange and makes our community more buoyant, but no assistance is given for customs duties. There is assistance for many things but not for chairs for lifts. People are frustrated and discouraged. The red tape is worse in the national parks than anywhere else in Canada.

Every Province has its own unique beauty and attraction. I have been in all Provinces and the Territories and there is something for everyone in them all. I have enjoyed trips to the Arctic, the Maritimes, Newfoundland, Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba. I have enjoyed the wheat lands of Saskatchewan even though I live in a wheat land area. I have enjoyed the beautiful scenery of the oceans and mountains of British Columbia. When people come to Alberta, they have a chance to see the majestic Canadian Rockies which are more beautiful than anything on the continent. I go there often because they are in my constituency, and I never fail to be inspired by the majesty of those mountains and have a greater appreciation of the omnipotent God who created them.

A man and his wife in the Banff area own a cottage which they purchased from the CPR in the red earth district beside Shadow Lake. It is a beautiful spot and I hope the Minister will go there if he has a chance. This family arranged for a bus to take handicapped people who could not walk very well to a point two miles from Shadow Lake so that they could then walk to the lake. Parks Canada wanted to close the area off. When I asked why, I was told they thought we did not need it. I wrote to the then Minister responsible for Parks, Mr. John Fraser. He was from Vancouver and he was good enough to come out and look at it. He said there was no reason to close it. At the meeting Hon. John Fraser told the park superintendent that the road shall not be closed. It was not closed and it has not been closed since. It provides a wonderful holiday for people who cannot walk very well. It would not have bothered me as an individual if they had closed it. I walked the whole nine miles and enjoyed every step of the way. All around is one of the most beautiful scenes you could ever see, and the handicapped can enjoy it because a man is providing a chance to get there at reasonable cost. That is what we need to do with our tours. Let the handicapped come also. They do not take the mountains or the lakes away with them, but they do take away a tremendous memory and they want to come back again and again. I talked to a man in Calgary who was crippled and he told me he had gone to Shadow Lake every year for 15 years. He said, "Are you telling me I can't go anymore? That is cruelty." It was cruelty and, besides, we were killing an industry. However, it was not done, because that Minister used common sense in this matter and the Shadow Lake Route will remain open.

I am not going to say that the Province of Alberta is more beautiful than any other Province. I believe every Province has its own beauties. But I would like to outline some of the things we have in Alberta that you do not find elsewhere. My own home town, Drumheller, is nestled in the hills along the canyon of the Red Deer, as we call it, and the Red Deer River. People drive from Saskatchewan on Number 9 Highway through Drumheller, and almost every time I go by the Horseshoe Canyon I see 5 to 20 cars and trucks with Saskatchewan licence plates. They stop there to look at those badlands, that mass of little hills. They stop and the young people go up and down the hills and they enjoy it. And for those who have time to stay, there is a dinosaur trail. This is the place where the dinosaurs used to roam, and you can find their bones in the hills. As a boy I remember the Chamber of Commerce uncovering the bones of one of those huge monsters which weighed tons but had only a very small brain. When the vegetation changed through time they could not adjust their eating habits and so they died, and they are buried in the hills. The Chamber of Commerce uncovered the remains of one of these creatures, varnished the bones and left it in the hills. Tourists could see a dinosaur skeleton in the state in which it died. The trouble was, however, that everyone who came along wanted a souvenir, so they would take one of the bones, and it was not too long before our beautiful dinosaur had disappeared. Since that time, protection has been provided, and they are still there.

There is also the paleontology museum which is being established in that area by the provincial Government. It is going to bring scientists from all parts of the world into that beautiful Drumheller valley, the Canyon of the Red Deer. We have Lake Louise, one of the seven wonders of the world. We have Banff with all of its attractions. We have the foothills west of Longview and Kananaskis Park. All of these places draw people, and we should be encouraging people to build campgrounds, restaurants, motels. We should give them some tax incentives and some help because they can bring people back and back again, and all they will take away is memories. They will eat our food, which will help the farming industry. They will buy our goods which helps the people who produce souvenirs. This is a tremendous opportunity—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) knows, tourism is important to me and to the people I represent in the constituency of South West Nova, as it is probably important to his own constituency. It has been interesting, Mr. Speaker, to hear how beautiful Canada is from sea to sea. There are many Canadians who have not had the opportunity to speak about the beautiful places there are to see here in Canada.

I welcome the topic of this Opposition day because I think for once we should sit down and think about the importance of tourism in Canada. I have learned, from listening to Hon. Members who have spoken here in the House, that they all have their own special area they want to talk about. That is realistic. It is also very isolating when it comes to the whole total picture of the role of Canada and the federal Government in tourism. It is interesting to note, when one looks at the figures, that more and more Canadians are travelling across Canada, whether it be expensively or cheaply. They are taking advantage of this great country called Canada and what it has to offer, not only to Canadians but to Canada's many visitors. It is perhaps quite natural for Canadians to take these areas for granted. However, once Canadians began to realize the importance of tourism to Canada, both for employment and as a source of revenue, they began to question the roles of Government in this industry, federal, provincial and municipal governments which benefit from the tourist industry. The Minister mentioned this morning that there were 40 federal Departments and agencies which have programs which support and advance the Canadian tourism industry, from Parks Canada to Fisheries and Oceans, to the youth exchange programs of the Secretary of State. Perhaps I might be a little parochial, since I am speaking as the Member for South West Nova, and say there is one agency which has taken a very active part in promoting tourism in the southern end of Nova Scotia, and that is the Crown Corporation CN Marine. CN Marine operates two facilities in the area. I read with pleasure a recent press release which reads as follows:

> Cruise ship luxury and amenities will greet tourists travelling between Maine and Nova Scotia this spring when CN Marine introduces a new MV Bluenose to year-round service between Yarmouth and Bar Harbor.
> The 1,100-passenger ship which will provide the improved level of service is the newest addition to CN Marine's fleet, MV Jutlandica. She will be completely refitted for her new role and undergo a name change to maintain the tradition of "Bluenose" service.

I would add here, between Yarmouth and Bar Harbor, Maine. It goes on to say:

> The Bar Harbor gateway to Nova Scotia was established 26 years ago by the original Bluenose auto ferry. During that time almost 2.5 million passengers have enjoyed the crossing of the Bay of Fundy and come to regard it as an enjoyable part of their vacation.

• (1710)

Upgrading this service will bring many more tourists to Nova Scotia. We have in the southern end of the Province two ports of entry for tourists, the ferry services and Air Canada. This is federal Government involvement. We have Parks Canada, the Kejimkujik Lodge. We have historic sites, Fort Anne and Fort Royal. These are all tourist attractions maintained by, as the Minister said, one of 40 federal Departments and agencies.

I was pleased as well to hear the Minister say he was seeking incremental funds for federal marketing of tourism, as well as pressing forward with regional development initiatives for tourism. We also know there have been regional development tourism packages between the federal Government and many Provinces, in particular Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, which have been very effective in creating interest in advancing tourism in Canada.

We have heard today, Mr. Speaker, that there should be federal tax incentives. I would like to point out to all Members of the House that the Provinces and municipalities also receive revenue. Perhaps they should be asked to provide tax incentives. What type of tax incentives are the Opposition Members talking about? Perhaps they should go back and talk to the Provinces. I would think that tourism is a much more local matter, and tax incentives might be looked at from the provincial level. They might look at liquor and food taxes, for example.

I have already mentioned that tourism is an essential element of economic activity in South West Nova. Each year thousands of American and Canadians enter Nova Scotia through the Ports of Yarmouth or Digby, or via Air Canada which has a direct service from Boston to Yarmouth. Perhaps Nova Scotia is lucky in that we have had a long-time connection with the eastern United States seaboard. We have welcomed visitors and tried to keep them here. Tourism is an important economic activity in Nova Scotia. Expenditures in 1981 by a total of almost 4.5 million resident and non-resident visitors to and within the Province totalled approximately $460 million. Where did the visitors come from? On an international basis we saw 40,861 visitors from overseas, and 325,016 from the United States, for a total of 365,877 visitors to Nova Scotia from outside the country. How much money did they leave behind? Forty-nine million dollars. On the other hand, non-resident Canadian visitors numbered 723,000, with provincial resident visitors totalling 3,295,000, for a total of 4,018,000 visitors. They left a total of $410 million in the Province. The total of international and Canadian visitors comes to 4,383,877, with a total expenditure of $459 million in the Province.

We must have been doing something right in the Province because I know for a fact that although tourism decreased considerably in some areas, Nova Scotia did not feel the great impact some areas did. Perhaps it is the beauty of Nova Scotia. Perhaps it is its accessability for those visitors. Our own people of Nova Scotia were travelling around the Province, which says it is a good place to visit.

The expenditures I mentioned produced an income to the tourist industry of $600 million, or 8.4 per cent of the gross provincial product. This makes tourism the sixth largest revenue earner in the Province. The 8.4 per cent in turn generated $62 million in tax revenues, which is about 3 per cent of total provincial Government revenue and .3 per cent of total Canadian Government revenue. It produced $25 million induced investment and 25,000 person years of employment. This tourism-related employment represents about 7.3 per cent of the provincial labour force. That means that the economic activity generated by tourism is important to Nova Scotia, and it is important that all levels of Government recognize that.

We heard earlier a Member talk about the Loyalist Days and the ongoing celebrations. Well, there has been a hive of activity in the southern end of the Province which I represent, and in other areas across the Province, on Loyalist Days. Activities to date have been very successful, and we are looking forward to them as they occur throughout the summer in the various communities. I might mention this means that tourists will be attracted to the area, and I hope these activities are successful. I know that many groups in heritage programs in the southern end of the Province have put a lot of time and effort into them, and they look forward to the approval of their visitors.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to spend a few minutes on the federal Government's direct involvement in Nova Scotia, in particular the Canada-Nova Scotia tourism industry development subsidiary agreement which was concluded at the end of March. The federal Government has been most actively involved in planning and programming the tourism industry in Nova Scotia through this agreement. The agreement evolved from a tourism development policy and strategy for Nova Scotia prepared back in August, 1976. The original duration of the agreement was from April, 1977 to March, 1982.

I remember when it was being developed. I know the time and effort put into that agreement by both the Province and the federal Government. There was an extension from March, 1982 to March of 1983 for a completion of commitments, and the Minister approved that extension. Therefore, all money committed under that program was used in Nova Scotia. What were the objectives of that agreement, Mr. Speaker? They were to create employment opportunities and increase incomes by increasing the length of the tourist season, increasing the total number of visitors, extending the length of stay, increasing the expenditures per traveller per day, and distributing travel expenditures geographically.

As a result, that agreement provided destination areas which include Annapolis Basin, Lunenburg, the eastern shore, Pictou County, Bras d'Or and Louisbourg. In my constituency the destination area was the Annapolis Basin, the funding for which was to create a major attraction in the Annapolis basin which would have international significance.

Under that five year agreement, $2,198,160 was spent in the Annapolis basin. What did it achieve? The Annapolis Royal Community, through its development commission, fully supported and implemented the tourism plan. The botanical gardens, the restoration of the Adams-Ritchie House and Kings Theatre, streetscape improvement and the waterfront walkway project have all been undertaken in order to attract the tourists who are coming to Nova Scotia to stay longer and to visit and learn about the history of one of the oldest settlements in North America. I say that because we have the historic Habitation at Port Royal and the historic Fort Anne in Annapolis Royal, both being very old areas of the cradle of our history of the settlements which came to Canada.

The total funding under that agreement was budgeted at $13.75 million, based on an 80/20 cost-sharing formula. The federal Government, of course, picking up the 80 per cent, contributed $11 million and the provincial Government contributed $2.75 million.

I hope that in the future we will see a new agreement, a new program coming into play between the federal Government and the Province of Nova Scotia. No matter what shape or direction it takes, I am sure that having had the experience of the last six-year agreement, we have learned a lot. I will not presuppose what the Province is suggesting to the federal Government, but I do hope that the federal Government is listening and that there will be some destination and areas.

Before closing, I would again like to thank the Hon. Member for Malpeque who has allowed me to speak on tourism, such an important economic activity in the constituency of South West Nova. I would say to all Hon. Members opposite that anyone who would like to come and visit down in the southern end of Nova Scotia, the most southern area aside from the Niagara Peninsula, is most welcome to come.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to tell the Hon. Member who has just concluded his remarks that we are looking forward to visiting Nova Scotia, I hope. First of all, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) for enabling us today to debate a very interesting and very important subject, because it is widely acknowledged that the tourist industry ranks second in our economy. I also want to commend all Hon. Members who have spoken so far, because I have the impression today that the debate has been very constructive. Naturally, we have made some instances to the Government concerning the development of the tourist industry, which is very important in terms of investments and the number of jobs involved. I know for a fact that in the past three or four years inflation has hit that industry very hard, as it did so many others. Given its importance, we cannot miss the opportunity to urge the Government to review its legislation, to acknowledge the leading role of that sector, and to try to promote the industry in close co-operation with the provinces and various organizations. I believe it would be to our advantage to keep in close touch with the Tourism Industry Association of Canada which rightfully does not mince words now and again when it makes recommendations to the federal and provincial Governments.

As others have done, I want to take this opportunity to say that my province is interested indeed in promoting the tourist industry. And so does my riding, for even though all my colleagues may not come often to visit my riding, I could say that my friends opposite do visit my riding at certain times. Of course, they usually come at election time, Mr. Speaker, but I am sure they found some very interesting spots to visit. We also have some very good areas for hunting and fishing that could be developed. We have a wonderful museum in Joliette which is known nationally, and I think we have some pieces that compare very favourably with those in world famous museums. In Rawdon, near Joliette, more and more people are visiting Darwin Falls, which has been developed very satisfactorily for several years as a tourist attraction.

I would also like to draw the Government's attention to the fact that in Sainte-Marguerite, we have the Doncaster Indian Reserve. The reserve is under-utilized by the Indian Band. It covers six square miles and has beautiful lakes and hunting areas. I did make a number of recommendations a while ago, and I hope my comments will be considered with a view to making the reserve accessible to the general public and the surrounding municipalities, while of course respecting the rights of the Indians. Perhaps agreements could be concluded with the Indian Band, under which the general public could make use of the area and visitors from outside Quebec and outside the country could enjoy a few days of wonderful peace and quiet.

When we talk about the investment or funding required to build up the tourist industry, and we realize that $400 billion is spent directly or indirectly throughout the world, and that $15 or $17 billion in Canada creates one million jobs, and that $7 billion goes to National Revenue I think it is quite interesting to consider this question, especially in Quebec where we are talking about $900 million for the tourist industry which will create 100,000 jobs. I think we are entitled to ask the Government for this kind of help, especially in the present situation, where it is not easy to maintain a number of industries. However, there is no doubt in my mind that trade and industry deserve our special attention.

There are three basic principles we should remember. One is to try and keep Canadians inside Canada. I feel it is important to encourage Canadians to visit Canada and to visit other provinces, so that we can learn to know each other and again a better understanding of each other's needs and aspirations. We must also consider how we can attract larger numbers of visitors to Canada to enjoy the natural wonders this country has to offer. We should also concentrate on ways of getting people to prolong their stay in Canada.

These three concepts are very important, and I know that nothing will happen unless we do something about it, and I think, as others have said before me, that we should enter into agreements with the provinces. We should also know how to handle their priorities in a spirit of honest cooperation. I feel that we should work together with the Canadian Tourist Association and other associations that promote tourism. There are all kinds of activities that come to mind. Montreal has the Expos and the Canadiens, Quebec City has the Nordiques, and they attract people from outside the country. However, I think the Government should try to play a coordinating role with respect to this industry which is extremely important to our economy. As far as my own province is concerned, I am aware that agreements do exist, under which the Province of Quebec can get a financial contribution on a 60-40 basis—60 per cent from the Federal Government—for projects submitted by the Province to the Federal Government. This is being done elsewhere, there is no doubt about that, and I want to congratulate the Government on taking this approach. I think we should continue the good work, considering the importance of this industry, not only financially but also from the employment point of view. There is no doubt that our country is extremely interesting to visit; we could probably do even more to promote our tourist attractions and the dual character and diversity of Canada which millions of visitors to our country find interesting and of which we are aware ourselves, but even so, I believe that we should probably think about encouraging Canadians to travel throughout the country, for instance by providing certain tax cuts.

I believe that the possibility of offering certain benefits to Canadians who visit another province could be seriously considered. We could also think about implementing a policy to reduce transport costs between provinces. I am aware that the country is facing enormous deficits, but in view of the tax revenue produced by this industry, I believe that a serious evaluation would show that every dollar invested in the tourism industry could bring many more.

I would not want to omit to mention the efforts made by the Government to promote convention centres and the hotel industry. We all know that our Canadian cities have an increasing number of hotels sufficiently modern and well-organized to accommodate guests. However, it is one thing to have the hotels and convention centres required, but it is another to see that they are booked and used.

Mr. Speaker, I know that others will want to speak after me, but I would like to make a few comments about the importance of this industry. In view of the present situation, I believe that the Government, the Minister and the Members on the other side can count on a loyal and objective Opposition if the Government decides to suggest something in keeping with the point of view that we defended today. Of course, we want our various provincial Governments to examine this issue. However, we would like the Federal Government to become even more readily involved in this industry and to discuss this issue with the provinces.

As for the Canadian Tourism Association's interesting suggestions, I feel that we need everyone, and of course this also means businessmen, to use all our potential and have all the benefits of a well-organized and well-structured tourism industry. This is my wish, and I am pleased to see that everyone in this House can make such objective comments today and that so many Members can show their interest in this industry, all of which, of course, aims at putting back our economy on the right track by every means available, at creating a certain number of jobs and maintaining those which now exist, as well as improving the state of our economy.

This debate provides an excellent opportunity to make suggestions and assure the Government that we are willing to cooperate with any initiative which would improve this industry and urge Canadians to visit their own country so that they will know it, defend it and serve it better, and at the same time, there is no doubt that if our foreign visitors sense a greater unity in Canada and are more aware of the sites to visit, they will use their vacation in Canada more profitably. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the comments of all my colleagues and the Members opposite, who have shown a lot of interest in this matter, will catch the attention of the Minister and that we shall be able to work together for a good case, namely the development of the Canadian tourism industry.

Mr. René Cousineau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I join all the previous speakers to congratulate the Hon. Member of the riding of Malpeque (Mr. Gass) on introducing this motion. I congratulate as well all those who took part in the debate today with a non-partisan approach and, I must say, in a very positive and very objective way, because all Canadians agree that the tourist industry plays an extremely significant role in the Canadian economy. It has been said that 1.1 million jobs are related to tourism and that one out of ten Canadians works in the tourist sector. I should think that we all agree that tourism is very important in Canada and that we must do our very best to make people feel that they are welcomed in Canada.

This morning, Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) (Mr. Rompkey) mentioned only a few of the many initiatives taken by this Government to support the tourist industry in Canada. Unfortunately, perhaps some Members cannot appreciate or are unaware of the extent of that support.

I am grateful for this opportunity to enlighten the Hon. Member for Malpeque and his colleagues on the initiatives of the Government and our successful efforts to support Canada's tourist industry. I should like to emphasize particularly the close co-operation between federal Government, the Provinces, the Territories and the private sector to develop that very important industry.

Ever since 1946, Mr. Speaker, the federal and provincial ministers responsible for tourism have met every year to deal with major issues, to exchange ideas, to discuss matters of serious concern and to act in consultation with one another. The officials at both levels of government have frequent meetings by themselves and with industry representatives to develop marketing plans and to co-ordinate their implementation throughout the world. Hon. Members who have taken part in international tourist events either overseas or in the United States are aware that the federal government is responsible for co-ordinating the activities of the various provinces and the private sector under the Canadian flag. The federal officials in charge of tourism are co-operating with their counterparts in the public and private sectors and setting up advertising and marketing programs in all parts of the world. These initiatives not only obtain marketing awards in international competitions, they are also an economical way to invest our taxpayers' money.

Hon. Members are certainly aware that since 1974, thanks to ancillary agreements on the expansion of the tourist industry, the federal government has invested, together with the provinces and the territories, over $220 million to expand and up-date tourist equipment and facilities. Without this financial assistance, such tourist attractions as those of Whistler Village in British Columbia, or Acadian Village in New Brunswick, would not exist today.

One realizes just how serious this Government has been about tourism in Canada when one discovers that it set up as early as 1978 a Consultative Task Force on Tourism. Made up of representatives of both management and labour, it advises the Government on ways and means to improve the performance of the industry. It has submitted many recommendations, most of which have been accepted and implemented by the federal authorities. If the Government is doing nothing to develop the tourist industry in Canada, as the motion now before us would have it, why then did the Minister of State (External Relations) (Mr. Lapointe), while he was Minister of State (Small Business and Tourism) come to launch in co-operation with provincial and territorial tourism authorities a national tourism program that included a series of individual programs setting forth the strategies and priorities of each participating Government for industrial growth and development?

If the Government is doing nothing to improve our tourist industry's competitive situation, what is to be made of the national program we launched in 1980 to foster the construction and expansion across Canada of international trade centres and convention centres by providing a total of nearly $200 million worth of support to nine major facilities? Let us recall the Canada Marketing Support Program launched in 1982 to help organizers develop all-inclusive travel plans to and within Canada? It is estimated that the program, with a $1 million funding, will generate this year $37 million in all-inclusive travel plans within Canada.

Mr. Speaker, if the Government does not recognize or believe in the tourist industry, how is it that in September 1982 it did recognize and honour, on World Tourism Day, 20 Canadians from all across Canada who made significant contributions to the growth and expansion of the tourist industry? How is it that also in 1981, the Government allocated an additional $9 million over a three-year period to improve the marketing of Canada as a travel target?

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State (Small Business and Tourism) has already referred to some 40 federal Departments and agencies that have programs designed to influence and help the tourist industry. For example, the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs (Mr. Munro) has recently reached with the Northwest Territories an agreement with a major component for the development of small business and tourism. A similar agreement is under consideration with the Yukon. My colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, (Mr. De Bané), who is here this afternoon, is implementing a small craft harbour program supplying pleasure boating services that are used each year by thousands of Canadians and visitors. The Minister of Environment (Mr. Roberts), who was in the House earlier, is much too modest to say so, but as Minister responsible for Parks Canada he knows that many of our national parks and historic sites have been designated as world heritage sites by Unesco.

Mr. Speaker, if the Government does not acknowledge that the tourist industry plays a major role in job creation, why do tourism projects account for such a large share of this Government's employment programs? The summer employment program for students, the new NEED Program, is of great assistance to employers in the tourist industry. In addition to that, we also have training programs for specialized workers in fields related to tourism which come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy).

My colleague the Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) may have been too modest to refer to himself, so it is with pleasure that I mention the efforts he made on behalf of tourism when he was Minister of National Revenue. I am glad to point out to Hon. Members that it was he who launched a review of the customs program which will soon make it easier to hold international conventions in Canada. He is the one who undertook to set up duty-free shops at various ports of entry. He is the one who decided that Customs inspectors would provide visitors driving in from the United States with a tourist information booklet welcoming them into Canada. And since he became Minister responsible for Tourism, my colleague has decided to hold regular meetings with leaders of the Canadian Tourist Association, the national organization speaking for the industry, in order to obtain their views and advice on matters the Association feels are essential and advantageous to the growth and development of the industry.

This may be news to some Hon. Members, but seven years ago the Government of Canada put out the program "Rendezvous in Canada", which is now internationally recognized as one of the most significant travel scholarships plan in the world. Have Hon. Members heard of TOURCAN, the national market for Canadian buyers and sellers of tourist products? Do they realize that together those markets, operated by the Canadian Government Office of Tourism and supported by all the Provinces, Territories and the private sector, have generated will over $250 million in new tourist revenues for Canada since 1977?

Hon. Members certainly did not forget the support given by this Government to Expo '67 and the Summer Olympics in 1976, and they know the Government intends to support over the next five years important events, such as the 400th anniversary next summer of Sir Humfrey Gilbert's landing on the shores of what was later to be called Newfoundland, the 450th anniversary of Jacques Cartier's coming to Canada, which will be celebrated in 1984, the bicentennials of the Province of New Brunswick and of the Loyalists' settlement in Ontario, the international meeting of clans in Nova Scotia in 1985, Expo '86, the World Transportation Exhibition to be held in Vancouver three years from now, and, of course the Winter Olympics to be held in Calgary in 1988.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the House to the tourism industry in the National Capital region. I would like to point out how important it is for this region to recognize visitors to the Canadian capital, to have well-maintained roads and to insist on the participation and involvement of the provincial Governments.

I would also like to point out to the House that a recent study of the National Capital Commission stated that 2.5 million visitors came to Ottawa each year, 65 per cent of which were canadians, which means that 1.6 million Canadians visit their capital. Of these, 70 per cent came to Ottawa by car, and the rest came by plane, bus or bicycle; 30 per cent or nearly 330,000 came from Quebec, more specifically from Montreal, the Eastern Townships, Quebec City, the North Shore or the Gaspe Peninsula, and 15 per cent of these 330,000 Quebec visitors to the capital region crossed the Ottawa river to visit Gatineau, Buckingham, Thurso or Hull.

I mention that, Mr. Speaker, because here we have a number of people, very smart people for the most part, I believe, who took highway 417 near Rigaud on their way to Ottawa after having left Montreal through the Metropolitan Boulevard. When they needed gas, well, they simply bought some. I have nothing against people who sell gas along highway 417 but I would rather have seen them take highway 50 which is supposed to be completed in 4, 5, or ten years, and buy gas in my constituency, that is quite normal. Furthermore, it generates employment, and that is true also of restaurants. I mention that because we have forgotten lately about highway 50 and how important it is for Quebecers to travel and leave a few dollars here and there in the various constituencies around Montreal as they head westward. I am not the only one to raise that issue. Even the strongest advocates of independance in the Outaouais region refer quite often to highway 50 which is vital to the economic development of that area.

I wanted that to be put on the record, Mr. Speaker, because in the Outaouais region, this issue is of the highest importance. In conclusion, I would like to thank again the Hon. Member for Malpèque who has given us the opportunity to let all Members know that the Government of Canada is deeply concerned with the tourist industry in the best interest of Canada and of all Canadians. I am satisfied that all Members are looking forward in 1984 to the 50th anniversary of the continuous support directed at the tourism industry by the federal Government.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great honour to speak on the Private Member's motion put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass). This motion is timely. I want to talk about the tourist industry, not only in the east but also in northern Ontario and particularly in the riding from which I come, that of Timiskaming.

I would like to take this opportunity today to express the concerns of many areas of Canada. The tourist industry should be an umbrella comprised of provincial and municipal Governments and individuals with the federal Government being the top part, co-ordinating that industry, whether it be in Newfoundland, British Columbia or Northern Ontario. We should ensure that we all work together in what has to be one of the most important small-business industries in Canada. Approximately 1.3 million individuals are employed seasonally across Canada in the tourist industry. This takes in students who have just graduated from high school, university students returning home for summer employment, trappers and fishermen who work during the summer months. The people of northern Ontario and in other parts of the country are concerned about energy-related problems and their effects on the tourist industry.

I would like to make a few comments relating to the reliance of the tourist industry on the energy program. If we look back five years ago, we see that the costs of travelling, for example, from nothern Ontario to the Province of Alberta were relatively low, or if Albertans wanted to travel to northern Ontario or Prince Edward Island, the costs were likewise relatively low. When one went to fill up the gas tank it used to cost $15. Now we are looking at $30 or $35. That is one of the problems which is hurting the industry across Canada.

In my riding we rely upon people from the larger centres in southern Ontario to visit our small fishing camps that might have as many as four employees. I imagine there are Members on both sides of the House who certainly enjoy during the summer months (flying) into remote areas to fish for lake trout, speckled or whatever. At one time the cost of such a flying trip amounted to $75 to $100. Now we are looking at $500 to $1,000 for the same trip. This is causing grave problems for the tourist industry because tourists are no longer coming.

Energy is a key part of the tourist industry across Canada, and people have expressed their concerns to me, and the Hon. Member for Timiskaming, in terms of interest rates, a very crucial problem affecting the survival of the industry. Most operators in northern Ontario rely upon a five or six-month period of time in order to make sufficient funds to carry them over the year. In the last two or three years the staggering costs of money they have been required to borrow in order to start up in the spring and to get in their supplies have affected their ability to survive. In the last year numerous small industries across the country which have tried to refinance, have ended up closing or have been put into a financial bind trying to operate their camps and to find extra employment to help offset their operational costs.

Another concern of Hon. Members on both sides of the House is the issue of acid rain. Acid rain has become a crucial consideration of tourism. For years and years fishermen were able to go into various lakes and catch speckled trout, lake trout and pickerel. The camps on such lakes relied on the literature they sent out each year showing the size of lake trout and various other fish. Those lakes are now in trouble, in grave trouble. When this happens, the industry on the lake is also in severe trouble. This is happening not only in northern Ontario but across the country.

I am pleased the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) sits on the Committee on Acid Rain because he knows the concerns of the tourist industry. This Committee has to work closely with this industry in an attempt to resolve the problem of acid rain. If we do not work strong and lobby hard in the years to come, the industry in northeastern Ontario and all across the country will be jeopardized. If we look at the various ministries of natural resources and their restocking programs, we see that year in and year out they stock lakes with fingerlings. I must say that these fingerlings do not reproduce. We are taking dollars and investing them back into the lakes. Until we resolve the problem of acid rain, the lake stock will not multiply and reach the levels of the past.

Over the last few months Air Canada has offered special rates for trips out of the country. I would like to see special rates being given for people to travel to my riding of Timiskaming from St. John's, Newfoundland or from Vancouver, British Columbia. I would like to see them provided with an opportunity to travel to my riding at a reduced rate rather than being faced with the outrageous costs of travelling via Air Canada to the area. It is very important for us to look at that and do our utmost in years to come.

Also in the area of transportation, I remind the House that we have the huge and beautiful Trans-Canada Highway which passes through my constituency. In years gone by people enjoyed towing their trailers across the country, visiting various communities. How many trailer manufacturers have we lost over the years due to the rising cost of energy? I hope the budget which will be brought down next Tuesday will contain something to alleviate this problem. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) should do something for the tourist industry in terms of the cost of energy.

In closing I wish to say that I am very pleased to have had the opportunity to speak on a subject which I feel is important and has been often neglected. We must remember that at least 1.3 million people are employed in the tourist industry. Unless the federal Government, the provincial Governments, the municipalities and individual tourist operators start working together, we will be in trouble in years to come. We must provide the industry with some incentives, whether it be special bank interest rates for those who purchased resorts over the last five years or incentives in terms of the employment of students. In days of high unemployment we realize that people who would like to travel cannot do so because they are receiving Unemployment Insurance benefits or some social assistance.

It has been a great pleasure to participate in the last ten minutes of this important debate concerning tourism, and I thank my colleague for allowing me the opportunity to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. With the conclusion of this debate, proceedings on the motion before the House have expired pursuant to Standing Order 62(11).

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—REQUEST THAT MINISTER BE APPOINTED TO ENFORCE LEGISLATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on March 24 I put a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) regarding the continuing violations of the Official Languages Act and asked that he appoint a Minister with special responsibilities to enforce the legislation in all Departments, agencies and Crown corporations.

My question was prompted by the recent report of the Official Languages Commissioner wherein he cited a number of examples of the law being ignored or contravened.

During the past year I have personally brought several cases to the attention of this House, the Government, and the Official Languages Commissioner. First, there was the case of the Old Port of Montreal, a federal agency which advertised entirely in French, even in the English language Montreal Gazette. Second, there were cases of English-speaking citizens in Montreal visiting their families at the federal penitentiaries at Laval, Quebec who were unable to get service in English at the gate and in some cases were refused entry. Third, there have been many Montrealers who have been unable to get Manpower retraining courses in English, and often other Manpower services in their own language. Fourth, there have been several examples in the past year of federal Government Departments putting up billboards entirely in French in districts of Montreal which are predominantly English.

The Official Languages Act requires the federal Government and all agencies to provide services in both official languages to the citizens of this country, and obviously that they be well prepared to do so in bilingual areas such as Montreal where there are large numbers of the official language minority.

Unfortunately, this is not being done, and in many cases there does not seem to be an understanding among the Civil Servants of their obligation to do so. Time and again, even in Ministers' offices in this city, I run into Civil Servants and staff who think that everything in Quebec should be in French and outside Quebec, bilingual. Even among some Ministers and Deputy Ministers, there is no political will to enforce the official bilingualism policy.

What I have described so far has taken place at the federal level, but it has taken place at a time in Quebec when there has been a provincial Government situation that is much worse. As Hon. Members know, Quebec Bill 101 has been very hard on English-speaking, bilingual and immigrant Quebecers. In some cases they have been forced into French-speaking schools. They have been forced to take down their English and bilingual signs. There are many places where they cannot get service in English at Quebec Government offices. I have many examples of senior citizens who cannot get any kind of service in their own language. These measures have been extremely coercive and oppressive.

The most recent scandal was the St. Mary's Hospital case where the Office de la Langue Française condemned the hospital because not all of its employees were able to speak French to certain patients. This was despite the fact that the hospital had a very good bilingual capacity and was very capable of providing services in French. Historically, this hospital was built by the English-speaking community in Montreal. What is particularly grating in this case is that approximately 50 per cent of the moneys for hospitalization and medicare in Quebec, as in all Provinces, comes from the federal Government.

On several occasions I have recommended that the federal Official Languages Act should apply to provincial institutions where there is substantial federal funding under joint federal-provincial funding agreements. At the present time the responsibility for enforcing the Official Languages Act is under the Deputy Ministers. Obviously this is not adequate. The Official Languages Commissioner can report violations and work with Departments to correct short-comings, but he has no administrative responsibility. The Prime Minister must assign a Minister who will have the responsibility of enforcing the Official Languages Act in all areas of the federal Government.

If a good law is to have credibility, and I think the Official Languages Act is a good law, it must be enforced. In addition, the time has come for amendments to that Act. At the present time a Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons is discussing such amendments to improve the law, bring it up to date and make it more just for all Canadians, both English and French speaking.

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine-East (Mr. Allmand) for his concern regarding the application of the Official Languages Act. I would like to point out that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), who is the Minister responsible for the application of the Official Languages Act, meets annually with his officials to evaluate the annual report submitted by the Commissioner of Official Languages. The Act has been in existence for ten years, and although much progress has been made during the past decade, the Government realizes that much remains to be done, although we should be careful in our evaluation of the Official Languages policy. The important thing is to ensure that Crown corporations and federal agencies and departments observe not only the spirit but also the letter of the Act. This is very important. In his last report, the Commissioner of Official Languages pointed out, in referring to Air Canada, that a great deal of work had been accomplished during the past ten years, but it was also true that although Air Canada continued on its expedition to the Official Languages summit, a lack of qualified climbers was still impeding the final phase of the ascent.

Nevertheless, I would like to give the Hon. Member the assurance that the Government is following very closely what is happening to the practical application of the Official Languages Act, and that at the present time, considering the projects that have been realized, the Government entirely approves of the fact that the President of the Treasury Board should be responsible for the application of the Act. However, if other points were brought to the attention of the House, perhaps some other action would be taken. Before finishing my comments, I would like to point out that between the 1981 and the 1982 reports, the Commissioner of Official Languages noted a drop of 20 per cent in the number of complaints regarding the application of the Official Languages Act. This means that Canadians have learned to live with the Official Languages Act but that we must remain vigilant to ensure that the basic rights of both French and English Canadians are respected throughout the country.

INCOME TAX—TREATMENT OF INCOME DERIVED THROUGH SERVICE TIPS. (B) REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, on March 9 I rose in the House to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) concerning what seemed to me then, as it does now, to be a very unfair policy regarding the tips given to waiters and waitresses in the country. The problem arises from the dual standard that seems to have been set by the Government on these tips. They must be claimed as income by those who receive them and therefore are included in taxable income.

The other side of the dual standard is that the waiters and waitresses cannot claim benefits on that total income. They are taxed on the larger amount which includes the tips but the benefits are provided according to the lesser amount. They are not allowed to include the tips for unemployment insurance, Canada Pension Plan, Quebec Pension Plan, Workman's Compensation, and in fact holiday pay could be brought into this as well. If they are taxed on the income which includes tips or gratuities, they should also be entitled to the social benefits according to that income.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that this affects some 200,000 workers across Canada, I understand some 85,000 workers alone in the Province of Quebec. These are workers who are difficult to organize or unionize because of the high turnover in their occupations. I was asking the Minister to take some action to rectify this apparent inequity or dual standard which the Government has chosen to place upon waiters and waitresses.

I believe that employers should be obligated to contribute to these benefits just as it is the duty of the employees to contribute their fair share to these plans. The Minister stated in concluding his answer to the question I asked him back on March 9, 1983 that the matter is a complex one and that it also requires the co-operation of the taxpayers to state their entire income. That is not a very fair statement. It seems to me that it is not a complex question. It is a matter of an inequity that is created for one group of our society; a dual standard which is set up by the Government, so it has the best of both worlds. It collects income tax on the increased amount, but will not give the benefits which these employees should receive on the maximum amount. It uses the lesser amount to determine the benefits to these workers.

I ask the Government to take immediate action to overcome this inequity, and to deal with the respective departments. I understand this would include the Department of Revenue and would need to include the Ministers who are responsible for the Canada Pension Plan and for the Unemployment Insurance Commission as well. I believe it is a very simple matter to have rectified, by this Government, in light of the many people who are involved as waiters and waitresses across this country.

There are many single parents who are employees in this profession. There are certainly people on the lower end of the salary scale, and fluctuations in our economy certainly affect those people who work as waiters and waitresses. I ask the Government to take this action at the earliest possible opportunity. It is not complex, as the Minister stated in his answer to my question on March 9, and I would like to know today what action the Government is going to take, and how long it will take for this apparent inequity I have outlined to be rectified.

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): The Hon. Member, as his Party's critic for the Department of National Revenue, should understand the responsibilities of that Department, particularly as they relate to those of other departments. He will be aware, of course, that National Revenue administers the Income Tax Act. I would assume that he does not suggest that the income from tips and gratuities should not be income subject to tax. The Department is carrying out enforcement activity in many areas across the country regarding this type of income because it found that a great deal of it has not been reported. Incidentally, I am not talking here about trifling amounts, but about thousands of dollars of income received over a very few years in this form by certain individuals. I say this because certain media reports have conveyed the assumption that this was a project directed at low income workers.

The question that concerns the Hon. Member is the eligibility of this income under the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Canada Pension Plan. As I understand it, income from tips is regarded as self-employed income and is therefore not insurable earnings under the Unemployment Insurance Act. I also understand that if a person in receipt of tips chooses to do so, he or she could have the income treated as pensionable earnings under the Canada Pension Plan, but would have to pay the higher contribution associated with self-employed income.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) are responsible for the legislation governing the treatment of tips for UIC and CPP purposes. Any changes to the respective acts comes within their purview. The responsibility of the Minister of National Revenue does extend to determining what are insurable or pensionable earnings. These are subject to the provisions of the legislation administered by his colleagues.

SHIPBUILDING—REQUEST FOR ACCELERATION OF VESSEL REPLACEMENT ORDERS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I must say at once that I am honoured and flattered that the Minister is here. It shows usual care and attention to procedural matters, particularly where they concern the extended grievances of Members concerning responses they receive to questions they ask, having regard to the shortness of the time and the necessity for brevity, and the difficulty of getting at the heart of the matter in such a short time.

I am here this evening largely because the Minister was quite positive in his response to my question, Mr. Speaker. It had to do with what the Government felt might be desirable and perhaps possible with respect to bringing on Canadian Government account orders for Canadian shipyards.

As the Minister will be aware, Canadian shipyards provide some 14,000 to 16,000 or 17,000 direct jobs under normal circumstances. He will now be aware that we are down to something of the order of 6,000 or 7,000 jobs, direct and indirect jobs.

That is a little alarming. I hope the Minister can take a minute or two to elaborate, not just on the specific matter I put to him with respect to bringing on a Maritime command fleet replacement program, but also on the requirements of the Department of Oceans and Fisheries for new vessels.

Our Oceanographic Institute at Bedford, one of the most prominent in the world, is now serviced by obsolete ships with obsolete equipment. We have literally hundreds of field programs which must go to sea to be tested and we do not have the vehicles to take them. The potential loss of standing by the Bedford Institute in the world oceanography community disturbs me.

Will the Minister not recognize and address, or at least become an active advocate among his colleagues in the promotion of advancing shipyard orders for fleet replacement programs, first for the navy because we can bring that on now and it will mean thousands of jobs? This would not only mean bringing people back who have been let go, but, perhaps even more important under the circumstances, it will mean the retention of skills and capabilities already there. If we can reach out to the ferries, the coastguard, and the Bedford Institute, which needs a complete fleet replacement program—there is no doubt about that whatsoever—then we would in turn spill benefits back to at least our east coast yards, possibly out to the west coast, with a lot of jobs which will help stabilize one community in the job security area. I am sure this is of interest to the Minister.

I would invite him tonight, in the brief time available to him, to address himself philosophically to whether or not he has been an advocate of early advancement of possible programs, and an advocate of bringing on even earlier mid-term or short-term programs which we know in fact that we do need.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to do that, and I welcome this opportunity offered me by the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) to address this issue which I feel is of tremendous importance. I appreciate his having raised it in the House on two occasions to date.

Though my riding does not border on a coastline, it does border on an inland lake. Shipbuilding to me, therefore is not something which is pertinent to my area. However, I can tell the hon. gentleman that since I have accepted my present responsibilities, one thing which has come to my mind is that the shipbuilding industry is one of the most important to Canada historically, and also in terms of today's economic circumstances.

I feel very strongly that Canada has lost the position it once held in terms of shipbuilding importance. A mere 100 years ago we were third in importance; today we are down at the bottom of the pile, close to 20 per cent. However, I wish to indicate to the hon. gentleman that I am doing something about that in the sense that I have accelerated the procurement action of my Department. We are coordinating that procurement action in order to have the greatest impact possible on the situation faced by the shipyards in Canada today.

I will describe to the Hon. Member, of course, the program which is the nearest and dearest to my heart, namely, the frigate replacement program. That one is on schedule; we will have it decided in July of this year. It involves 1,700 person years in the first year.

Mr. Forrestall: Two years late.

Mr. Blais: I know, but the fact is that since I have been around, it has been going on schedule.

I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the Polar Icebreaker Program, and I would hope that he would use his good offices to put on pressure, in order for us to proceed with that particular program. The design stage is now completed. We ought to be proceeding with that program as rapidly as possible.

We have the reinforced 1050, the ice-strengthened ships, which hopefully will be the subject of a contract in July of this year. Again, 200 person years of work is involved. We also have the 1100 series, the Navaid tenders, which are going out to tender as well. I would again hope—

Mr. Forrestall: When?

Mr. Blais: —to be in a position to award this contract—

Mr. Forrestall: When?

Mr. Blais: —by July of this year.

There is the Delex Program, about which the Hon. Member knows very well, and there is the Trump Program which will provide for more than $1 billion worth of repair and overhaul activity.

I want to tell Your Honour that I am encouraging greater co-operation between the shipyards, the steel manufacturers, as well as all the ancillary support industries, because I feel very strongly that in terms of job creation it is not only in the shipyards, but also in the propulsion manufacturing capacity, in the radar shops, in the telecommunication and onboard communication programs that jobs will be created. That can only be done with the presence of a viable shipbuilding industry within this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m.

At 6.25 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

AIRPORTS

INCREASE IN PRIVATE AIRCRAFT PARKING FEES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, in May of 1982 the Department of Transport levied a 350 per cent increase on parking fees for private aircraft at DOT airports. Only six weeks later the six and five formula was introduced by the Government as a check on inflation. The imposition of a further 6 per cent as of May this year in these fees means in reality that a tax of an extra 21 per cent has been levied on the rate in existence just a year ago. This is not the true six and five approach, nor does it take into account the additional 6 per cent to be imposed on landing fees for private aircraft, fuel concession fees, and on international route fees.

Furthermore, the Department has yet to allow those paying an annual parking fee at one airport to park, without paying an extra fee, at a nearby airport when weather or other landing conditions prevent a pilot from reaching his home base.

Most private operators are businessmen selling Canadian products continent-wide and keeping Canadians at work. Why are they being asked to carry this additional heavy burden, along with a radio operator's fee that costs twice as much as a radio licence for sports boats and, indeed, for cargo carriers on the Great Lakes?

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS SOUGHT BY PART-TIME UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, there are approximately 250,000 part-time university students in Canada, many of whom attend McMaster University and Mohawk College in Hamilton. These part-time students form a rapidly growing sector of the post-secondary educational community. As such, they are concerned with amending the Income Tax Act in order to assist this movement to part-time studies in a more equitable way, and to permit part-time students to qualify in principle and on a pro-rata basis for some of the tax exemptions now available only to full-time students.

The amendments which the Canadian Organization of Part-time University Students is proposing to the Income Tax Act include pro-rating the $50 a month educational deduction; transferring the tuition deduction from a non-working spouse to a working spouse; and allowing part-time students to deduct incidental fees.

Since we live in an age of constant and rapid change, people must continually upgrade their education and most can do this only on a part-time basis. That being the case, I suggest that we at the federal level should do all we can to encourage Canadians to upgrade their educational level through part-time study in order that they may acquire the skills they will need for the jobs of the future.

AGRICULTURE

RATE OF FARM BANKRUPTCIES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, farm bankruptcy statistics were issued this week for the first quarter of 1983, and comparisons were made with the first quarter of 1982. On a national basis there was no great change. Bankruptcies in 1983 amounted to 115 compared to 113, but we see a great difference or shift, if you will, in the bankruptcies on a regional basis. We note that in western Canada bankruptcies increased from 17 a year ago to 39 this year, a dramatic increase of 130 per cent.

While in some regions of the country the bankruptcy rate has remained about the same, the Government has not paid any attention to the increase in bankruptcies in the areas hardest hit. Indeed, the response has been to ignore them. The initial prices for wheat have dropped in the area where bankruptcies are now the highest, and the Government is intending to increase freight rates in that area as well. Again, the result will be to reduce net incomes and further increase and aggravate the probability of bankruptcy in that region. We think the Government should be taking more positive action and attacking the problem by bringing in a—

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF REFINERY AT HOLYROOD, NFLD.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, on March 30, 1983, Ultramar Canada announced it was closing its refinery at Holyrood, Newfoundland, as of June 30. This will mean the loss of 105 man years of employment and an approximate loss of $91 million to the Newfoundland gross provincial product.

When this refinery was opened in 1960 it provided Ultramar with access to and a toe hold in the North American market. While this was only a small refinery with a 15,000 barrel a day capacity, production has been reduced to less than 50 per cent because of a falloff in the demand for heavy crude as a result of the change in the energy pattern with respect to home heating fuel consumption and so on.

My point is that the closing of the Holyrood refinery, Madam Speaker, is a direct result of the expansion of Ultramar's refinery in Quebec. I do not quarrel with that, but that expansion has been at the expense of Newfoundland's refinery, and I believe Ultramar has a responsibility to Newfoundland because it was through the people and Government of that Province that its owners got their introduction to the North American market in the first instance. However, they indicate their decision is final and irrevocable, so I want to suggest, through this procedure, that the Government of Canada, through the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), and the Minister of DREE, should get in touch with the Government of Newfoundland with a view to taking whatever steps are necessary to keep the Holyrood refinery open.

PARLIAMENTARY PRESS GALLERY—STIPULATIONS GOVERNING BUDGET COVERAGE

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, George Orwell's Big Brother 1984 has obviously arrived eight months early. I refer to the Minister of Finance's new rules governing the nation's news media on budget night next Tuesday. Madam Speaker, I spent some 20 years in the Parliamentary Press Gallery, one of them as that Association's President under the current Liberal Prime Minister. I can tell him and this House that I have never experienced such blatant news management by any Canadian Government.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and his Liberal advisers are telling the Parliamentary Press Gallery who can report the budget, when they can report the budget, and how they can report the budget. That constitutes "news management at best, censorship at worst", to quote commentator Bruce Phillips.

The Liberal Government is now decreeing who will be considered journalists, and who will be accredited as economic experts and analysts to be allowed into the traditional budget lock-up. In addition, the Liberal Government is now insisting that the media, under signed undertaking, will for the first time remain locked up in the Government Conference Centre for one full hour after the Minister begins his budget address at 8 p.m. EST. This will drastically affect national television and radio reporting and analysis of the budget.

Basically, this is being done to keep off the air those journalists and experts who might dare criticize the budget while the Minister intones his address.

I appeal to the Government of Canada to revert to the traditional practice of covering budgets, and to trust members of the media, along with Members of Parliament, to observe those traditional guidelines. Above all, I urge the Government to prevent this outrage to freedom of the press.

PROTEST AGAINST ARRANGEMENTS FOR MEDIA COVERAGE OF BUDGET

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, as Canadians await the 1983 budget, a budget coming at a time when the state of the Canadian economy is at its lowest ebb since the 1930s, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has been making a number of efforts in the last number of months to consult with various Canadians in various regions of Canada. However, already a dark pall is beginning to form over the budget process. We find that the Minister of Finance is now concerned about the critics who will be commenting on the budget, both in the media as well as in the Opposition Parties and, as a result, is taking steps to, in a sense, muzzle reaction on the eve of the budget.

Surely the budget itself should stand on its own merits. If the Government has confidence in the Minister of Finance and his budget, it ought to have no concern over Opposition Members or the media making positive criticisms of its budget statement. Therefore, I urge the Minister of Finance to reconsider the procedures on budget night in terms of keeping Opposition critics as well as media critics from responding as early as traditionally has been done on the night of a budget. I urge him to remember that this is the most important budget which the country will receive for the next number of years and it is imperative that fair and objective criticism be presented.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

LOSS OF JOBS AT SAINT JOHN, N.B.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, in the past 15 months some 32 full-time Canadian Pacific Railway clerical positions in the Customer Service Centre and the West Side wharf in Saint John, New Brunswick, have been lost. This has resulted in a general deterioration of rail service and now poses a threat to the welfare of the good citizens of Saint John.

Four of the workers who lost their jobs were inter-change clerks who would know the exact location of cars carrying dangerous goods passing through the city. With the elimination of the clerical jobs, the possibility of dangerous commodities travelling through the city unchecked, or their exact location unknown, greatly increases.

Additionally, there would be no personal contact between the fire officials and the railway regarding the passage of these goods and the event of disaster heightened by delayed response time.

As the Government appears to have some influence over the operations of the Canadian Pacific Railway by the fact it can bind CPR workers to the six and five wage program by law, I would urge the Government to discuss with CPR officials the possibility of rehiring the inter-change clerks to assure the exact locations of dangerous commodities are known and reported.

Rail operations in Saint John have been whittled down to mere bones resulting in extensive lay-offs in all areas of rail transportation, and poorer service. I would urge CPR to cease lay-offs that not only affect the quality of rail services in Saint John and New Brunswick but force workers into positions of unemployment, unknown futures, and despair.

CANADAIR—DEAL WITH ARGUS CORPORATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, it has been publically alleged that Canadair gave a private jet to the Argus Corporation, and the allegation has not yet been denied. It is also well known that the President of Argus is Conrad Black.

Furthermore, according to Peter Newman in his book "The Establishment Man", Conrad Black last year hired as his private consultant the former private secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), now on his second try as Liberal candidate for Spadina.

Considering the Prime Minister's often stated concern to discourage conflict of interest, it would be helpful if the Prime Minister would inquire, and make public, whether Jim Coutts helped to arrange the sweetheart deal between Canadair and Argus.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING IN SUPPORT OF CHANGES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport.

Would the Minister confirm whether it is the intention of the Government of Canada to insert a four-page supplement in Canada's daily newspapers next week to promote the Government's legislation to dismantle the Crow? If it is, could the Minister tell us why this is being done before the legislation has been introduced in the House of Commons, and under whose authority is the supplement being inserted? As well, can he give the House some indication of whether or not it will be included in all the dailies across Canada, and at what cost?

• (1115)

Are we also to assume that the Government is contemplating a corresponding television promotion as well, along the lines of the flying Canadian geese that we witnessed about a year ago, aptly substituted with a flock of crows departing from the Canadian agricultural scene?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, it is a long question. Yes indeed, we are contemplating that. I have a copy here which I could show the Hon. Member. It will appear this weekend.

The reason it appears before the Bill is something that I cannot control. There are deadlines over which I am not the master.

Its cost is approximately $350,000. It will appear in a number of papers, in English only, because we already have some in French. It will appear in a number of regions in Canada.

Mr. Nowlan: The same message?

Mr. Pepin: Yes, the same message.

The Government is sponsoring it, but presumably I take some responsibility for what is in there. I feel this is quite defensible. If standards are important in these matters, which I think they are. I have a collection here of advertisements by different Governments in the West from the different Parties. One ad says, "Saskatchewan Challenges the Pepin Plan", which ad is paid for by the Saskatchewan Department of Agriculture. Another states, "Saskatchewan Solution: Save the Crow", paid for by the NDP Government in Saskatchewan. An ad by the Conservative Government of Manitoba states, "Grain: The Network of Roads Designed, Built and Maintained by Your Manitoba Highway Department". One from a Conservative Government from the Department of Transport in Alberta states, "We have built and maintained a vast network of roads for you to carry your grain." So I am in very good company.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Unfortunately, the ad fails to recognize the impact that the Pepin proposals will have upon the producers of Canada in terms of grain production and the over-all economic hardships that it will impose upon the producers of Canada.

REQUEST THAT FARMERS BE PROVIDED WITH ADVERTISING FUNDS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, in the interest of fairness and maintaining a balance, would the Minister support the farmers of Canada in running a corresponding ad telling their side of the story and the disincentives that this will have on the producers and the economic impact it will have upon them? Will he support the farmers of western Canada by providing funds for a corresponding ad which would add some balance to the debate?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will not have to support them because they already do it. For example, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool has been running an ad throughout the country addressing itself to Members of Parliament from different areas, and pleading with them not to agree with the Bill when it is introduced.

At the end of the day, I think this is educational. The public is entitled to receive different points of view. In the final analysis it is the taxpayer, be he or she a member of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, a citizen of Saskatchewan or of the country as a whole, who pays for it. Presumably they do not mind being educated in this fashion.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, unfortunately it is very difficult for the pools, farm organizations and producer groups to compete with the treasury of the federal Government. I repeat that this is an advertising campaign being conducted for legislation that is yet to be introduced in the House of Commons.

Having looked at the ad, I note that the supplement emphasizes job creation, high technology, and economic stimulus, with very little mention of the impact on the producers of Canada. Are we to assume that this package represents the Government's new economic strategy? Is this the Government's megaproject for the 1980s? Can we expect the Minister of Finance, in the introduction of his budget, to emphasize correspondingly the dismantling of the Crow as the Government's megaproject for the 1980s?

• (1120)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, that is not a bad idea. It is indeed a megaproject, if ever there was one, at $16.5 billion over the next eight or nine years. That is not a bad contribution to the economy. It is certainly a very strong contribution, which the Minister of Finance has said a number of times, to the recovery that we are witnessing now. From that point of view, I thank the Hon. Member for making a contribution to the publicity we are trying to give it. It is not a description of the Bill. But there is in each ad a short enumeration of what will be the main parts of the Bill. I shall say more on that as soon as I can.

FARMERS' PRODUCTION COSTS

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In the advertising on the Crow rate there seems to be, as the Hon. Member for Vegreville pointed out, a definite absence of the benefit to the farmers. The advertisement clearly indicates the benefits to the rail system. The Minister will know, by the multitude of letters that have crossed his desk, that there is absolutely no consensus for the type of advertising that is taking place.

Will the Minister consider exactly what is happening to the producer? Will he look at the cost to the producer at a time when world grain prices have dropped $1 a bushel? Will the Minister consider the increased costs of production? The farmers cannot accept the increased costs that are being advertised in the Pepin proposal at this time.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, Hon. Members will have plenty of opportunity to debate each one of those points. The benefits that farmers will gain from this proposal are pretty easy to enumerate. For the first time farmers will have certainty about the transportation of grain. Farmers worry every year whether grain will get to the coast on time. Farmers will not have to worry any more because they will have the best freight transportation system in the world.

Farmers will be able to save on storage and demurrage. Farmers will be allowed to diversify their crops and will be allowed to process more than they are now. What farmers will pay in return, on the other side of the equation, will remain quite moderate, in my view.

What the Crow represents now is a cost of 2.5 per cent of the price of grain internationally. If this system that we will introduce goes through, in four or five years from now it will represent 5 per cent of the cost of grain internationally. At the end of the decade it will represent 8 per cent, 9 per cent or 10 per cent, depending upon a number of factors that I cannot predict entirely accurately. If that is so, 8 per cent to 10 per cent will be about the average of the last 30 years and this percentage will be substantially less than it has been at different times in the history of the country, because at different times the cost has represented 30 per cent or 40 per cent of the price of grain. I will have plenty of occasions on which to spoonfeed my friends on these facts of grain life, and I will be delighted to do so.

IMPACT OF PROPOSED CHANGES ON CENTRAL CANADA

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I have a further question for the Minister of Transport. The Minister knows that in this proposal there is a 500 per cent increase in cost to farmers. He also knows that by 1992 the average farmer will pay at least $8,000 more for freight transportation than he is paying now. Farmers are concerned about where they will raise the $8,000 at a time when the price of grain is failling. There seems to be a direct parallel to the national energy policy here with no consideration to the field, with no consideration to the producer, and with no consideration to production.

For the welfare of all of Canada, what is the Minister going to do if he has bankrupt farmers on his hands who will not be able to buy combines and tractors from central Canada, and who will not be able to buy rubber and steel from central Canada? Has the Minister considered the impact of such a loss to all Canada in the Pepin proposals?

• (1125)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there is much to be said on this subject. The Hon. Member used the figure of 500 per cent. Five hundred per cent of what? A better way to say it is that, under the proposal we will introduce, the farmer will pay two times Crow in four years, which is a change from 13 cents per bushel to 26 cents per bushel. At the end of the decade he might pay, because there are so many factors, 75 cents per bushel.

Mr. Epp: That is 500 per cent.

Mr. Nielsen: Even by your math that is 500 per cent.

Mr. Pepin: It is less than the cost of a stamp on an envelope that goes to Canada Post today.

Mr. Epp: That is going up too.

Mr. Pepin: It is going up, but I predict that it will never go up further than the price of a stamp on an envelope.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You will regret those words.

Mr. Pepin: There must be a comparison there which should impress my hon. friend.

Anyway, by way of comparison, during the Saskatchewan election a certain Minister of Agriculture was telling the people, "Beware of the Pepin plan—13 times Crow". Well, it is two times Crow in four years' time and will be five times Crow at the end of the decade. I forgot to mention, of course, all kinds of possibilities. There is no doubt the farmer will be able to produce, not only with the assurance that his grain will be transported, but will be able to produce a lot more than he produces now.

TIMING OF ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport as well. What right does the Government have to run a four-page tabloid like this one, in at least ten Ontario papers tomorrow? The Crow legislation has not even been introduced into the House of Commons. We have not even had first reading of the Bill. There was no reference to it in the Throne Speech. There was no reference to it whatsoever in the Estimates. There was no promise made of it whatsoever in the 1980 Liberal election platform. What right does the Government have to spend this amount of public money, without the consent of Parliament, on what is clearly a partisan ad on behalf of the Liberal Party of something which has not even come before the House?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have already answered that question in the first answer I gave. The rights are the same as the ones which the NDP Government of Saskatchewan was using some months ago.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: It is all in here. I think we have to admit that they are quite frank about it, "Paid by the Transportation Agency of the Government of Saskatchewan." It could not be any clearer. Not only is this proselytizing before the Bill was even announced, this is also indulging people in the wrong belief that it would be 13 times Crow. My hon. friend obviously has two standards—one for his Party and one for the rest of the world, or one for his Province and one for the rest of Canada.

Mr. Nystrom: As usual, the Minister of Transport is once again misleading the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: The advertising in Saskatchewan was based upon legislative authority in that Province. It was approved by the Legislature of Saskatchewan, and that has not happened in this case.

REQUEST THAT ADVERTISEMENTS BE WITHDRAWN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, Government Members have access to public funds which we in the Opposition do not have; we cannot spend money like that. I want to know whether or not the Minister of Transport will now withdraw these ads, or whether or not he will have the guts to have the Liberal Party of Canada reimburse the Government of Canada and the taxpayers of Canada for these partisan political ads.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): It was within the authority of the NDP Government of Saskatchewan to send the bill to the Transportation Agency, a Crown corporation of the Government of Saskatchewan. No, Madam Speaker, I think Governments must tell the country what they intend to do. That is the normal process. As my hon. friend knows, we have had a few Members for a while in the West now, explaining the Bill. I do my very best and my colleagues do their very best to do that. But the use of newspapers is one of the normal, natural, sensible and moral ways of taking information to the public.

REQUEST THAT TRANSPORT RATES BE TIED TO GRAIN EXPORT PRICES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport a couple of supplementary questions. He said that the cost of the movement of grain would not rise any more than the cost of a postage stamp. Is he also making other parallels that the kind of service will be analogous to that provided by the Post Office?

• (1130)

The minister makes reference to the increased cost projected to the year 2000 being somewhere in the eight per cent range of the export sale price for grain. Will the Minister undertake at least one measure which will give farm producers some security by tying transportation cost to a percentage of the export price for grain, rather than tying it to prices which reflect inflation as in the cost of transport, because farmers cannot cause or protect themselves from inflationary factors?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the service that the railways will give is the type that the Post Office would like to give, so both of them meet in their desire for excellence. On the subject, and it is a very popular one I may say, of tying the cost of transportation to the selling price of grain, this idea is growing in popularity in the West. I must say, and my Hon. friend knows because he is quite learned on this, that the subject was not brought forward with any degree of intensity in the Gilson exercise, and that it regrettable.

An Hon. Member: Exercise?

Mr. Pepin: I am sorry that I do not have the whole lexicon of my hon. friend at my command. The subject was not brought up at the Gilson group committee, or call it whatever you want. I was saying that it is an idea that has some importance. This Government, the Members of it and the Members of the Liberal Party are democratic. If there should be a great popular demand for it, if groups which have difficulty accepting this or that part of the program, come together in a very great movement of enthusiasm, I am quite sure the Government will not be indifferent to them.

PROTECTION FROM DEMURRAGE CHARGES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, on that narrow section of the whole Crow debate, I say to the Minister that if he searches widely across the Prairies he will find increasing support for the view of tying the cost of the shipment of grain to the export value. It need not be to any one specific year. It could be to a range of years, knowing what happened with the fixed rate in the 1930s when the cost of shipment went to 35 per cent of the price of the grain.

In several responses, once today and previously in the press, the Minister has said that the new Crow rate will save the farmers from demurrage charges. Can he expand on how they can save on demurrage charges from an improved transport system?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, very simply by getting there on time. If you get to port in a lower number of days, obviously you are in a much better position to serve the ships waiting there. That is a normal consideration. On the previous subject, I know that my hon. friend is campaigning in favour of the Bill which we will introduce. I know he is favourable toward it. I would be grateful if, sometime in a week or so from now, he tells me that on the tying idea he has the wholehearted support of the whole of the Conservative Party and would gladly commit himself to approve the Bill if there was a possibility of including that part.

PENITENTIARIES

DRUMHELLER INSTITUTION—IMPOSITION OF NEW DUTY ROSTER SYSTEM

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. He was here a minute ago. I believe he is behind the curtain.

Madam Speaker: Order. Will the Hon. Member ask his question, and perhaps a Parliamentary Secretary can answer it?

Mr. Taylor: The morale among the staff in many of our federal prisons is running very low. If nothing is done we could have a very serious situation on our hands. In the Drumheller penitentiary feelings have reached the explosive stage. One of the aggravations is the imposition by decree of a new duty roster. Why is the Government forcing a new duty roster on the prison staff when the present duty roster and squad system is working to the satisfaction of not only the prison staff but of the administration in the Drumheller Institution?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, there is a very easy answer to that question. I am doing it because the present duty roster system, in spite of what the Hon. Member says, does not serve the best interests of the prison. It produces a great deal of overtime costs. I hope that the Hon. Member, as a representative of the taxpayers, will be as concerned as I am about that. It also produces periods in which there are less than the proper number of people on regular duty in the institution.

The duty roster system which I have supported, and which is being put into effect this week in Drumheller, will be a much more efficient and effective one. I would urge the Hon. Member to support it. It has already been introduced in Quebec and Ontario. The institution in the Hon. Member's constituency will benefit from having this improved system, and the taxpayers have a great deal to gain from it as well.

Mr. Taylor: I suggest to the Minister that the new system will cost more and cause a great deal of disturbance among the staff. It will cost the taxpayer more money. This can be proved by past experience.

EFFECT ON STAFF AGREEMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Is the Minister aware that enacting this new roster unilaterally is contrary to the agreement the Government has with the staff? Is the Government going to continue to have these things done unilaterally by a few bureaucrats rather than negotiating with the prison staff? Will the Minister hold this up for two weeks so that the prison staff have some opportunity to negotiate? Apparently he is not prepared to do that. Why the rush to shove something down their throats, when the present system is working?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I am not willing to give another two weeks before implementing this system because we have already given three months in which there has been a lot of consultation and discussion. The union said it could come up with an equally effective and efficient system, and then was unable to do so. The Member speculates that this will cost the Government more. I can assure him that it will cost the Government less.

Insofar as unrest is concerned, the Hon. Member can have a role to play in that. If he looks at the positive effect that this is having in other institutions where it has been introduced without difficulty, and looks at other penitentiary systems of the Provinces, some of which have been using this system for years, the system that we are now introducing, he will see that it is an advantageous system. The only down side of it, if I can put it that way to the Member, is that some employees who have been getting a lot of overtime will get somewhat less overtime.

PRESERVATION OF BOOKS OF REMEMBRANCE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. At the meeting of the Standing Committee of Veterans Affairs yesterday, when asked if the Books of Remembrance would be altered, the Minister did not give a clear and precise answer. Will he now give a clear and unequivocal commitment to the people of Canada that there will be no desecration of the Books of Remembrance in the Peace Tower?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member alleges that I did not give a very clear answer to the Committee yesterday. I was asked by an Hon. Member whether or not the proposal to alter the Books of Remembrance, and the proposal to which the Legion objected very strenuously, would be proceeded with.

• (1140)

Madam Speaker: Order. The first part of the question, I think, was a reference to something that happened in the committee, but then the question was on a specific matter to which the Hon. Minister might give an answer. I would like him not to refer specifically to or to repeat argument or debate that has taken place in committee.

Mr. Campbell (Cardigan): Madam Speaker, the answer is simply that the proposal to alter the Books of Remembrance to which the Legion objected very vehemently will not be proceeded with.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—INQUIRY RESPECTING TASK FORCE REPORT ON FINANCIAL LIABILITIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the Challenger matter which, in the long run, might in many respects be just as important as his upcoming budget, considering we have Conservative leadership candidates talking about getting rid of Crown corporations and we have the CDIC coming up, which may be the beginning of Government economic planning in the country.

I would like to tell the Minister that the Government took over Canadair in 1975. I am informed that by 1981 its liabilities had gone up to between $900 million and $1 billion. The Government was appalled by this and set up a task force to regularize the letters of comfort which are Order in Council financing. Would the Minister of Finance confirm that that task force was set up then and that it reported to the Cabinet that the liabilities of Canadair in 1981 were $986 million, that the liabilities would go up to $1.2 billion, and that the task force recommended to the Government that it seek proper authority from Parliament for the $1.2 billion, which the Government never did?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of attention to the Hon. Member's question. He must be mindful of the fact that reports that are made to Cabinet, of course, are subject to the confidentiality under which the Cabinet system operates.

CHALLENGER AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION COSTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister said yesterday that, under the Freedom of Information Act, reports to even the Cabinet can be made public provided they do not give the recommendations. In countries like Sweden, they open the whole thing up. I do not know why this Government does not open it up.

Considering these facts, would the Minister confirm that there was a later addendum to the task force which indicated that the liability was higher than $1.2 billion because the Canadair management was not frank with the Government or with the task force? In fact, on November 13, 1981, Canadair management did not inform a committee of the House that the costs had gone up, and on November 20, 1981, they had in fact misinformed the Government task force that the Canadair management had reopened the General Electric contract which would cost an additional $100 million for engines and so on.

Would the Minister confirm then that the Government, by the addendum to its own task force, was being misled by the management of Canadair?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by an addendum to a task force. However, the same reply goes in terms of the question that he has asked. His allegations refer to matters that are internal to Cabinet discussions and therefore are subject to confidentiality.

MANAGEMENT OF CORPORATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I do not know how the Minister believes that Government and Crown corporations should work together, but we on this side of the House believe that Crown corporations should be open, they should have workers on the board, there should be public hearings, there should be regular reports to Parliament. In short, we believe we should have economic democracy in this country, unlike the way the Government is running things.

Considering the fact that the other day the Prime Minister admitted, and a new mini task force told the Government that the liabilities of Canadair would go presently from $1.8 billion to $2.3 billion, and considering the fact that the management of the company is still there—there are 100 people who are making over $95,000 a year, and there are 20 people who are making over $100,000 a year—why has no one been fired from that company? Why has no management been fired when it is quite clear, on the record, and admitted by the Prime Minister, that the Government and the people of Canada have been misled by the management of Canadair?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, from the replies that have been made in this House relating to Canadair in the past two or three days, there has been an indication that the CDIC was formed specifically in order to provide an overview in terms of the operations not only of Canadair but also of de Havilland, another corporation that has the Government as its sole shareholder.

In terms of economic democracy, the representations the Hon. Member has made relating to Crown corporations reporting to the Government and there being an availability for Members of Parliament to question the Crown corporation—all that is in place. Parliament was advised yesterday that there will be supplementary estimates coming before it relating to Canadair. There will be full opportunity for all Members on both sides of the House to question Canadair and its officials, and to question CDIC officials, relating to the whole of the allegations surrounding the Canadair issue. I am sure that full information will be forthcoming.

I would be one of the first to agree that that process is a necessary one because, as the Prime Minister has indicated in the past, we in Canada have benefited from a mixed economy whereby in the value-added sector there has been a large number of Crown corporations that have permitted us to participate in activities that the private sector did not want to undertake.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, how can the Minister say that the House of Commons will have full information when he has just denied a request by the Member who has last spoken for the results of the task force report? How can the Minister say that the Government has not changed its tune from yesterday to today, when yesterday the Prime Minister said we would have the information to make the evaluation of the business judgments of Canadair, and now my friend stands in the House and denies us a very important part of that evidence?

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, there has been no change in the Government's policy. We are operating according to procedures generally recognized within a Parliamentary democracy and the traditional Cabinet system. As soon as the question is put to Members on the Supplementary Estimates, they will have an opportunity to ask the Corporation and its Directors for further details. Nevertheless, there is always the matter of prerogatives, that is, when the information or documents requested are connected with matters of public administration as discussed by Cabinet, in other words, the confidentiality of Government matters in Cabinet must be maintained. That applies to all investigations made by Members of this House, the latter being always subject to the imperatives of Cabinet operations, according to British tradition.

[English]

REFUSAL TO SUPPLY TASK FORCE REPORT

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I was aware of the Cabinet system, as is the Hon. gentleman, and I was aware of the importance of confidentiality, as he is. The question is whether or not it is in the best interests of the Government, the best interests of the truth, the best interests of all of the facts to have a task force report on the very subject that the Prime Minister has said would be open for investigation by Parliament, which accepted his word yesterday. I would ask my friend not just to examine the text of the Freedom of Information Act but also to examine the ethics and morality in holding back what is an important report from Parliament's examination of this subject. I ask him to do that over the weekend and see if his answers might not be different on Monday.

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, my reply will be no different from the one I just gave, and the Government's position would be exactly the same. Yesterday, in answer to a question almost identical to the one the Hon. Member is asking today, the Prime Minister himself said clearly and in no uncertain terms that there would be ample opportunity to ask questions when the Supplementary Estimates were considered by Parliament. In fact, after discussions among Parliamentarians before the Committees, there is always time for making additional representations to obtain information the Members might require.

GARRISON DIVERSION

UNITED STATES PROTEST AGAINST FLAG BURNING INCIDENT

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister, due to the absence of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. There was a question asked by my Leader on March 29 regarding an incident in Manitoba where the Deputy Premier and another Member of the provincial Cabinet, as well as a number of Members of the New Democratic Party, participated in a rally in front of the U.S. Consulate, during which time a United States flag was burned. The question was asked of the Deputy Prime Minister whether the federal Government was going to take any action in view of the problem this incident would create for Canada-U.S. relations.

On March 30, 1983, the next day, the United States embassy sent a strong note to the Canadian Government, and I will just quote one line:

> The United States must protest strongly the participation of Ministers of the Government of Manitoba in this event, which clearly gave it an official character, and would appreciate assurances that such official support of hostile demonstrations will not be repeated.

Will the Acting Prime Minister tell the House whether the Canadian Government has responded with a note of very strong denunciation of this event? If so, could he tell us what was in that note?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, the Department of External Affairs did in fact respond to the note sent by the U.S. authorities. In our answer we explained to our American friends that provincial governments have no responsibility for conducting the country's external affairs, and that any action or participation in a demonstration by two provincial ministers could have no effect on relations between Canada and the United States. We have of course advised the Government of Manitoba of the contents of the U.S. note and of our reply.

[English]

REQUEST THAT TEXT OF CANADIAN RESPONSE BE TABLED

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he would be willing to table that response so that we would have the benefit of its exact words. And would the Minister also agree that this matter is not so easily taken care of, because one of the Ministers who participated is the leading spokesman for the Government of Manitoba in the United States on the Garrison Project?

It is one thing to say in diplomatic language that the provincial Governments have no effect or jurisdiction in external affairs—constitutionally, I recognize that—but, obviously, there is an effect. There is an impression created. Therefore I would like to ask the Minister, first, whether he would table that note; second, whether he would give us an evaluation of what effect he sees in terms of our representations in the United States on Garrison? What effect would it have now that the Manitoba Minister also heading the Manitoba delegation in opposition to Garrison?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, before I decide whether or not I can table this note in the House, I shall have to consult with the U.S. authorities.

REFUGEES

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF CHARGES AGAINST REFUGEE CLAIMANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the Government knows, 32 years ago Canada signed the Geneva Convention relating to the status of refugees, by which, under Article 31, Canada undertook not to punish refugees who entered Canada with false documents. The Minister also knows that for several months the Commission, in violation of this Convention, has been prosecuting refugee claimants before their status was examined, and only very recently discontinued this practice. Will the Government, therefore, now undertake to withdraw all outstanding false-document charges against Mr. Arunasalam of Sri Lanka, a refugee claimant, and against all refugee claimants until their claims are determined? Will the Government undertake to issue an apology to Mr. Adjekum, a Ghanaian refugee who was wrongly prosecuted by the Commission and wrongfully imprisoned for several months, but is now determined by the Refugee Status Advisory Committee to be a true refugee? Will the Government try in that way to make up for what it has admitted to be its wrong practice over the last several months?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, as Acting Minister of Employment and Immigration, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that if he had given notice of his question, I would have been able to give him an answer. Unfortunately, I do not have the information I need to give him a satisfactory reply, but I shall be able to give him my comments on the subject next week.

FISHERIES

CORPORATE SECTOR OF ATLANTIC FISHERY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. Can the Minister tell the House whether any decision has been made by Cabinet on the restructuring of the corporate section of the Atlantic fishery? If so, when will the announcement be made? Can the Minister also give us any indication of what form that restructuring is taking?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): That restructuring, Madam Speaker, has reached a very delicate stage, and it is done under the supervision of the Cabinet committee which is chaired by the Minister of State for Regional Economic Development. So would you put your question to my colleague?

EFFECT ON TRANSPORTATION INDUSTRY

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I think I will stay with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister will remember that during the Easter break I delivered a letter to his office in which I expressed the very serious concern among people in the transportation industry in Atlantic Canada, because almost all of them have advanced substantial credit to companies operating in the fishing industry. Their concern, of course, if this restructuring amounts to an extensive Government intervention, is whether those debts which are owing, and which are not secured, will be taken into account in any restructuring which does take place as a consequence of the deliberations of the Cabinet committee? It is a matter of some very grave concern to a number of corporations acting along the Atlantic seabord.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I cannot answer in detail the question put to me by the Hon. Member, but I would just remind him that the parameters which were set publicly months ago were that there will be no Government bailout of any company with taxpayers' money. On the other hand, I have given the assurance to all the participants in the fisheries, particularly the fishermen, that, of course, the Government will never let that sector go down if there is a failure of one particular company or another. This is why, in the last few months, we have been working very hard with all the players involved, whether they are the banks, the Governments or the different institutions, to find a solution whereby that sector which is so vital to the Atlantic economy will be recapitalized and kept on a healthy basis.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Spadina had not risen quickly enough. He is now asking for a supplementary question and I will give him the floor.

REFUGEES

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF IMMIGRATION ACT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Thank you, Madam Speaker. My supplementary question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Would the Minister tell us whether the Government, in view of its admitted mistake in practice in regard to refugee claimants entering with false documents, will now take steps to amend the Immigration Act to bring it into conformity with Canada's signed obligations to the United Nations in this matter?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, I have promised to look into the matter, and I may point out the Hon. Member is asking me to admit to something I did not do.

FISHERIES

PROPOSAL TO SEPARATE SECTORS OF EAST COAST INDUSTRY

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a question supplementary to that of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South. Would the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans tell the House if he favours the proposal put forward by the Government of Newfoundland for separating the deep sea fleet and operating it under a separate company with public sector involvement? Could he also tell the House why he has not appointed a president and chairman for the Canadian Saltfish Corporation?

• (1200)

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): On the Hon. Member's first question concerning the separation of the harvesting sector from the processing sector, it is certainly an idea worth considering. I can assure the Hon. Member that of the different options before our Cabinet Committee, none of them per se precludes that happening at a later stage. As he knows, Premier Peckford has said that he is not adamantly insisting that the separation, if it should ever happen, should happen simultaneously. As for the second question, my hon. friend is right and the Government will be moving on that question very quickly.

Madam Speaker: I have a question of privilege in the name of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

MR. NYSTROM—GOVERNMENT ADVERTISEMENTS ON CHANGES IN CROW RATE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege arises out of the advertisement concerning the Crow rate which is going to appear in tomorrow's newspapers in at least ten cities in Ontario. I understand there is also a western version. From my understanding the ad will cost many hundreds of thousands of dollars. I think this is a very serious matter which jeopardizes the rights of Members of Parliament. It is really very abusive and very much a contempt of Parliament itself.

First of all, Madam Speaker, this ad appears despite the fact there is no Bill on the Crow rate before Parliament. There is nothing in the Estimates now before Parliament or its committees concerning the Crow rate advertising. There was no reference at all in the Throne Speech about changes in the Crow or advertising the Crow rate.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The argument the Hon. Member is now putting forward in support of his question of privilege indicates to me even more clearly, if it had not been clear from the very beginning of his question of privilege, that he is obviously dealing with a grievance. It could be a very legitimate grievance, but the Hon. Member cannot seek priority in debate on that matter through a question of privilege. The Hon. Member has discussed this matter during Question Period, which makes it quite clear that he is not impeded in any way from performing his function as a Member of Parliament. Other Members have raised this question in the course of Question Period. That, I may suggest, is the right place and right time in which to deal with such matters.

I refer the Hon. Member to a very comprehensive ruling I made on this particular subject when other Members had raised the matter of the Government using public funds to advertise Government policy. That ruling, which is very comprehensive and which deals with the subject in a very exhaustive way, is dated October 7, 1980. When the Hon. Member reads that ruling he will understand that I have to interrupt him now to tell him that he obviously does not have the grounds for a question of privilege.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I wonder if you have had a chance to look at what I think are two precedents. One was a ruling by Mr. Speaker Jerome in December, 1979 when a question of privilege was raised about the Government of the day establishing task forces comprised of—

Madam Speaker: Yes, I looked at that precedent. If the Hon. Member looked at it, he will know what I said about it. That makes it even more clear. That particular ruling referred to Government funds used to pay expenses of Members of the House of Commons while doing work at the Government's request. It was expenses for a task force which travelled around the country and which was not constituted exactly in the way they usually are if they are to be funded through the House of Commons budget. That was a completely different issue. Although I looked at it because I alluded to it in my ruling, of course it does not apply.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I—

Madam Speaker: Well, no, the Hon. Member is not going to discuss the ruling indefinitely. I have ruled that he does not have a question of privilege, and I cannot allow him to comment further on a ruling I have just made. The Hon. Member understands those rules and he also understands that he cannot force a debate under the guise of a question of privilege. This discipline has been accepted quite universally in the House, and I think it is to the benefit of the House that debates take place in an orderly way. No one should be able to force debate unless, of course, there is a basis for a question of privilege, which there is not.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): I wish to join in the subject matter brought up by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) on the basis that this is a matter which concerns all Members on this side. It is not just a question of privilege involving the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville; it involves all Members on this side who feel very strongly about the Government spending taxpayers' money to advertise legislation before it is even printed in this House. It is one thing to advertise—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The fact that it concerns all Members does not give it the foundation for a question of privilege. If there is not a question of privilege for one particular Member, the fact that the concern is multiplied by a hundred does not make it a question of privilege. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville had no question of privilege, nor do other Hon. Members if they address the same question.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, this does not constitute the same question of privilege that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) raised, but my question of privilege relates to the variation of advertising across the country. Suppose that all Members of the House were consistent—

Madam Speaker: No. I am sure the Hon. Member realizes that he is arguing the question, trying to extrapolate and find other ways of determining that this matter is a question of privilege. But this is debate and I cannot allow it at this time.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, with respect, I wanted to mention just one other precedent to you which was in the 1960s when the Hon. Member for—

Mr. Smith: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order. The question has been decided. I cannot allow any further debate on it. Those are the rules.

Mr. Anguish: Madam Speaker, I would appreciate it if you would just allow me to come to whether or not there is a question of privilege here and I will put it very briefly to you. Is there not a question of privilege when the Government advertises in Ontario one way about a piece of legislation and then in a different way in the Prairie Provinces so that there is a conflicting—

Madam Speaker: No. Is it not obvious to the Hon. Member that those questions should be addressed to the persons who carry out that advertising? It is not a question of privilege; I have said that and I say it again. I ask him to read my ruling, which is very comprehensive, and then I think he will not have any further questions for the Chair about this matter.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) rises on a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. WADDELL—CLARIFICATION OF QUESTION PUT DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I may have inadvertently misled the House in that I referred to a letter of November 13, 1981 in Question Period. I said that the president of Canadair had misled a House of Commons Committee. I meant the Board of Directors of Canadair, and I hope to correct that in Hansard.

With respect to that matter I wonder if I might ask the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) whether he is in a position to tell the House whether a Bill dealing with the CDIC, the umbrella body for a number of Crown corporations including Canadair—

Madam Speaker: What is the Hon. Member doing, continuing Question Period? I took his point of order, which was legitimate, but apart from that the Hon. Member cannot proceed with a question to the Minister.

ILLEGAL ENTRY AT PLACE DU PORTAGE, HULL, P.Q.

Question No. 4,555—Mrs. Cossitt:

1. Is the RCMP investigating an illegal entry at Place du Portage in Hull, Quebec and, if so (a) on what date and at what time of day did the illegal entry occur (b) on what date were the RCMP notified of the entry (c) did the illegal entry occur on the 20th floor where the security and information branch of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is located and, if not, at what location (d) what were the names and job designations of all persons involved in the investigation?

2. (a) What documents or classified papers, if any, were tampered with as a result of the illegal entry (b) were documents or classified papers concerning the Petro-Canada takeover of BP Oil tampered with and, if so, will the Government confirm that no unauthorized individuals received prior knowledge of the proposed takeover of BP Oil?

3. Were the Hull Municipal Police notified immediately of the illegal entry and, if not, for what reason?

Does the hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) rise on a point of order?

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, I do not like to complain too frequently in the House about lack of answers to questions on the Order Paper. I usually wait for at least a year to go by. However, I want to raise a matter with the Parliamentary Secretary which will only take a moment.

I had asked a number of questions relating to Canadair which have become increasingly relevant, and of which the Government had ample notice. I am referring to Order Paper Question No. 3,461. It has been on the Order Paper for over a year.

Madam Speaker, may I just very briefly refer to two questions of the series. The first one is: "Was there a loss, or was a loss forecast, on the sale or projected sales of such aircraft produced by Canada to date and, is the extent of such loss in the range of $1 billion?" The second short question is: "Is Canadair experiencing performance difficulties with the aircraft and, if so, what corrective measures have been or are now being taken regarding any difficulties?"

There are a series of these questions. With respect, I do not see why the Parliamentary Secretary could not expedite the answers because of the length of time which has passed and because of the relevance of the questions.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member's point is well taken, and I will look into it and see if I can do something to facilitate early responses.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—THE ECONOMY ADVICE OF CANADIAN CONFERENCE OF CATHOLIC BISHOPS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its outright rejection of the sound economic advice given by the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, and the Government's refusal to adopt the specific recommendations for alternative industrial strategies and the increased community ownership and control of industries where desirable.

He said: Madam Speaker, I believe that it is worth noting that this particular motion comes essentially on the eve of the 1983 budget. What we are doing here today is debating a statement that the Catholic Bishops made a number of weeks ago which reflected on the state of the Canadian economy and presented, from their perspective, a number of solutions. I believe, as conscientious, responsible Members of Parliament, that we ought to give this statement some consideration. That is essentially the explanation of my motive for bringing forward this Opposition motion for debate today.

I believe we should congratulate the Conference of Catholic Bishops for its report entitled "Ethical Reflections on the Economic Crisis", for a crisis it certainly is, and ethical reflections are certainly in order. With two million people presently unemployed in Canada, and many more being threatened with the possibility of job loss and lay-offs due in large part to Government policies, I believe that the situation involves not only an economic problem but, indeed, a moral problem as well.

There has been a great deal to say about the world situation in terms of the economic challenges facing western industrialized nations. There has been a feeling articulated from many quarters of Canadian society that the present situation is something which we must indeed accept, that we must tolerate it, that this status quo situation is something with which Canadians must learn to live, and that therefore the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), when he brings in his budget, must stay the course, must not do anything of any radical nature, "radical" meaning a major stimulus to the economy in one sector or another, or taking some dramatic and major action in terms of kick-starting our economy back to life.

I think it must be said at the outset that the problems being faced by Canadians today, in terms of the unemployment albatross which we find around our necks, and which is retarding efforts at economic recovery, are not the same as the situations one finds in all countries. I believe that it is not unreasonable to compare a country such as our own with countries such as Japan and Sweden, not that their solutions are directly applicable here in Canada or that their problems are the same as ours, but because our economies have some similarities.

I note with interest that not many months ago virtually a state of emergency was declared on the island of Japan because the unemployment rate had soared to the unbelievable and unacceptable level of 2.7 per cent. The Japanese Government said that this could go no further, that action must be taken of an emergency nature to stop the search toward these high unemployment levels. The Japanese know that with high levels of unemployment, economic recovery is impossible. This is something that Canadians, by and large, have ignored in our discussions of economic recovery.

Presumably, we assume that economic recovery can occur when two million out of a work force of 12 million are presently unemployed. I, for one, do not believe that that is the case. The Members of my Party believe that economic recovery is virtually impossible with this burden and weight upon our economic shoulders. We feel that now is the time to address this situation head-on in terms of identifying unemployment as an area of virtual preoccupation around this budget.

While inflation is important, and our fight against inflation must never cease, to put all our energies, to focus all our attention on fighting inflation, would be attention and energy misdirected to a certain extent. Surely, stagflation is our challenge today as opposed to simply inflation. Again, I refer to the country of Sweden, a country not unlike Canada, other than its size. However, the strength of its economy is based by and large on natural resources, a talented population and available capital. Again, that country decided that it was reaching a state of crisis when its unemployment levels had surged to 3 per cent. The realization existed in that country that drastic measures had to be introduced to reverse this trend. Those are progressive steps and ideas. They are countries which put the welfare of their people as their highest priority.

• (1220)

That is essentially what the Catholic Bishops have said. Our Judeo-Christian traditions are based on the principles of respect for the human person, caring and compassion. These principles are practised not only by helping the victims of misfortune but also by attempting to eliminate the causes of this misfortune. The Bishops have essentially asked a fundamentally valid question that we should also be asking here. They asked: do we see society as a machine for the generation of wealth and individual Canadians as mere cogs in that machine, or should our economic activity and production of wealth have as their primary goal the well-being of Canadian citizens?

The Bishops see economic activity as the way to achieve social justice and they consider that economic development can be used to guarantee a level of well-being and dignity for every citizen. Alternatively, others see it quite differently. They view economic activity as a battlefield and an area where the survival of the fittest is the name of the game in which the strong survive and the weak fall.

Since the Bishops made their comment, I have listened to one corporate leader and business lobbyist after another either strongly or quietly condemn the Bishops' position and their involvement in this discussion. These businessmen see our economy as a battlefield where the strong survive and the rich deserve all they have, and that the poor and unemployed are in that position by and large as a result of their own fault. This is simply good nineteenth century laissez-faire economics. There is not anything particularly new about this philosophy but when applied to the 1980s, it is somewhat outmoded. The businessmen believe that, while certain measures must be taken to keep people from rioting in the streets, the status quo must be maintained at all costs and the ratio of rich to poor must not be altered.

What is the ratio? Let us recognize that the top 20 per cent in our country receive 42.5 per cent of total personal income while the bottom 20 per cent receive 4.1 per cent of income. As the Economic Council of Canada identified recently, the gap between the most and least affluent in Canada is growing. In other words, like the gap between the rich and poor nations, the gap between the rich and poor Canadian continues to increase in spite of the good intentions of various levels of Government.

Between 1970 and 1977, wealthy Canadians saw their wealth increased by 3.5 per cent and their debts decreased by 6 per cent. On the other hand, the neediest saw their wealth shrink by 13 per cent and their debt jump by 32 per cent. The Economic Council of Canada suggests that the combination of high interest rate policies and unemployment that has marked the 1980s threatens to accentuate this disparity even further in the years ahead.

I think the best analogy to describe how Canadians have traditionally approached our economy over the years is to consider a poor family in Canada today. This family consists of a father, mother and four children. Perhaps the father, being the sole income earner, has been laid off for a number of months and the family is now finding itself facing welfare as its UI benefits are exhausted. They decide that the way out of this malaise is to focus their attention on the eldest son and make family sacrifices so that he may perhaps obtain a further education which will enable him to succeed in society. He will then look after the rest of the family in later years. To accomplish this the family will have to make sacrifices, such as providing less food for some of the children and providing less funds to help them in their educational pursuits and general lifestyle. All the attention will be focused on the eldest son.

I believe that this is not an uncommon approach taken by Canadian families, and it is certainly an approach that we see taken with the Canadian economy whereby we tend to focus on a few members in society largely at the expense of the rest of society with the assumption that eventually there will be a trickling down of the good life. It is an assumption that after the wealthy few, or the catered to son, succeeds the rest of the family or society will be the beneficiaries.

We have seen this in recent legislation in the House. In recent weeks we passed legislation which will substantially reduce the marginal tax rates for upper income earners while the marginal tax rates for low income and middle income earners will remain about the same. In fact, they will pay slightly more because of the six and five program and the deindexing attached to it. Those upper income earners in society who earn over $100,000 will see a substantial drop in their tax rates. They will have more money to take home or to invest.

When one studies the Income Tax Act of Canada one has to agree that the loopholes—I will not argue about their positive or negative impact—are by and large designed to cater to the upper income earner. The average Canadian citizen has his or her tax deducted at source and there is very little opportunity to use the Canadian tax system to defer taxes or use it for investment purposes. Therefore, again our tax system caters to the upper income earner.

The Bishops have challenged some of the assumptions we have made about how we deal with our economy. Like many, they have recognized that the Canadian economy is going through a period of dynamic transition. Our economy went down a year and a half ago, and whenever it rebounds in the months ahead, if it does, it will emerge in a different form. The structural changes which have occurred in our economy have meant that the many jobs which have been lost will never return, and new and different jobs will emerge. The economy which we have come to know in Canada will be quite different in 10 years or 15 years from now. This process of rapid and dynamic change is like standing on the beach and being beaten by the surf while the sand is washing past and one is sinking down.

The world around us is changing, but I wonder if we are aware of that change? I still hear people from most sectors of the economy and most regions of Canada saying that the economy is recovering and that it has bottomed out. Yet most Canadians see no evidence of this. I therefore wonder if we are grasping at straws and if, as parliamentarians, we want to believe that the economy is recovering and conditions are improving when it may not be so and the pain and human tragedy that over two million Canadians are experiencing will continue in this country for many years.

The Bishops say we have to work to change that and we have to implement strategies that are different from those we have used in the past. When you look at our past performance, it has been dismal. We have not addressed the critical issues facing the country.

I want to mention briefly, to remind us all, just what the Bishops said. Let me quote from their statement as follows:

> In developing strategies for economic recovery, we firmly believe that first priority must be given to the real victims of the current recession, namely—the unemployed, the welfare poor, the working poor—pensioners, native peoples, women, young people—and small farmers, fishermen, some factory workers, and some small-businessmen and women. This option calls for economic policies which realize that the needs of the poor have priority over the wants of the rich; that the rights of workers are more important than the maximization of profits; that the participation of marginalized groups takes precedence over the preservation of a system which excludes them.

In other words, a totally new approach to economic recovery than we are presently launching in this country is needed.

The statement continues:

> First, unemployment rather than inflation, should be recognized as the number one problem to be tackled in overcoming the present crisis.

The Bishops do not say that inflation should be ignored or seriously combated. They say that inflation should not be our number one priority at the expense of two million plus unemployed.

The Bishops go on to say:

> Second, an industrial strategy should be developed to create permanent and meaningful jobs for people in local communities. To be effective, such a strategy should be designed at both national and regional levels.

In other words, obviously we should have a strategy of co-operation between the federal Government and the provincial Governments, and perhaps even the subregional Governments of Canada.

The Bishops' statement continues:

> It should include emphasis on increased production, creation of new labour intensive industries for basic needs, and measures to ensure job security for workers.

> Third, a more balanced and equitable program should be developed for reducing and stemming the rate of inflation.

The Bishops wrote that this requires shifting the burden for wage controls to others. In other words, let us not continue to fight inflation by and large on the backs of average working Canadians, but shift this burden to include upper income earners and introduce controls on prices and new forms of taxes on investment income, such as income from dividends and interest. The Bishops' report goes on:

> Fourth, greater emphasis should be given to the goal of social responsibility in the current recession.

After all, these are the people out in the trenches. These are the people who are talking to the hard pressed, and who have been working with those who have paid the greatest price.

I go on to quote:

> This means that every effort must be made to curtail cut-backs in social services, maintain adequate health care and social security benefits, and above all, guarantee special assistance for the unemployed, welfare recipients, the working poor and one-industry towns suffering from plant shut-downs.

> Fifth, labour unions should be asked to play a more decisive and responsible role in developing strategies for economic recovery and employment. This requires the restoration of collective bargaining rights where they have been suspended, collaboration between unions and the unemployed and unorganized workers, and assurances that labour unions will have an effective role in developing economic policies.

Earlier in my speech I referred to Japan and Sweden, two countries that I suggest Canada may take a look at in terms of how they have been working to resolve their economic difficulties.

Mr. Pepin: A few months ago you were talking about France.

Mr. Riis: Both Japan and Sweden recognize that organized labour and unorganized labour play a very critical part in recovery programs. They work to make commitments to meet that particular relationship and to encourage it.

In closing, let me say that we are in the midst of far reaching economic changes. I think we would all agree that new economic vision is needed as well as new tools, new approaches, new methods and new institutions at this time. Something has to be done. Many politicians seem to be tired and uncertain about the realities of our present situation. Business leaders have been prisoners of their own rhetoric, blaming workers for their excessive expectations and declines in the work ethic. Academic economists, secure in their tenure, play computer games and manipulate abstract numbers instead of facing the tragedies of the real world.

The Bishops have issued a challenge, to Canadians and Parliamentarians alike, Mr. Speaker. Let us hope that we can find it within ourselves in this year to face the reality of the unemployment situation and to do something about it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Are there any questions?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I was interested, listening to the Hon. Member's comments, about the different way in which he indicated Japan and Sweden have attacked problems similar to our own. Sweden's unemployment rate is somewhat higher than Japan's but Sweden has a very distinctly different way of dealing with these problems and its society is structured differently from Canada's. The situation in Sweden is to have very large, national labour organizations, but Sweden's approach has been to impose wage controls and to ensure, as a public policy, that inflation will exceed the increase in wage gains. It is a conscious policy to impose real wage losses on the citizens of Sweden.

On the other hand, Japan has company unions, not industrial unions. Japan's policy is that individual labourers and workers will set low compensation levels and then take profit sharing when times are good. They take real losses through a reduction in that profit sharing—loss sharing if you will—when times are bad.

Which of those alternatives is the Hon. Member suggesting is appropriate for Canada? Which one does he think that the Canadian Labour Congress and the Canadian labour movement in general would be willing to accept as an alternative to what we have now in this country?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I believe the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) missed the point that I was making with reference to those two countries. I was making the point that both Sweden and Japan have what we might call an economic recovery program in place. They have an industrial and an economic strategy in place so that everyone in those two countries understands clearly what it is the Government of their country is attempting to do. The Governments then ask the people to join in along with the banks, labour and corporations.

What we lack in our country is any idea what it is we are trying to achieve. We lack any direction. The Government simply says, "Let us pick on the Public Service sector and ask that sector to take a reduction in wages. That is our answer."

That was the point I was trying to make, Mr. Speaker. We have, if you will, a rather simplistic approach to economic recovery, and identify only a small, single sector of our society. We say to it, "You must carry the burden; you must carry the can". That is exactly what we should not be doing. If we had a very clear recovery program in place, then, I believe, we would be in a position to go to the various individuals and sectors of society to ask them to join in. But to ask people to join in a recovery program that no one understands or knows, I think, is asking a little bit too much.

Mr. Desmarais: Mr. Speaker, I understand what the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is saying with respect to social justice being achieved through economic development. I presume we all understand that we are all consumers in this country and that we have producers. We will not produce anything unless we can get goods consumed. There is no other way of accumulating production and creating employment unless the goods can be delivered to consumers.

I might say that I agree with the Bishops' statement in which they exposed the problem. That is why I suggested to the House at one point that we invite the Bishops. But my problem with them really is the solution. How do you achieve what is being talked about? One talks about co-operatives, increased production, job security, and at the same time about reduced inflation. We have been trying to achieve all of these industrial strategies. The Government has been doing that and we are doing our best to achieve those goals. I would like the Hon. Member to tell me of any other proper proposals. Also I would have liked the Bishops to tell us how we can achieve these ends in ways other than the ones we are employing now.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, let me say that subsequent speakers from the New Democratic Party will be laying out precise suggestions in terms of the problems I have indicated. With all due respect to the Hon. Member asking the question, I am suggesting that it is not a matter of simply coming up with a number of suggestions, solutions or alternatives. The Bishops are questioning the assumptions we make in the country.

Let me simply identify one of the assumptions. I believe that most people in this room would say that the overwhelming motive in our economy is the maximization of profits. That is why people are in business and we have corporations. The idea—and we see it played out on a daily basis—is to maximize profits. The question the Bishops are asking is whether or not that should be the ultimate goal rather than the dignity of the citizens of Canada and the people participating in those enterprises.

That is not a criticism about the profit motive or the concept of profits. It is a criticism of the concept of the maximization of profits at the expense of human beings. I am from central British Columbia where mining plays a very critical role in our economy. I have seen mining companies treat human beings as if they were pieces of machinery and have no concern at all about their welfare. If the maximization of profits is beginning to erode, then 200, 300 or 500 men are simply ignored and the welfare of the particular community is totally ignored.

The Bishops are saying that we have to approach this differently, that we have to say, when a mine gets into difficulty and its maximization of profits is not as high as it would like, that there are ultimate strategies which could be built in.

I will return to the country to which I referred earlier. Sweden says to its mining companies that it has a program according to which in good times when they are maximizing their profits they will put some of them into a special fund so that during a period when their profits start to erode they can draw upon the fund and stockpile with Government assistance. In other words, there are a number of things which could be done to enable the community to stay in place and to enable those workers to receive paycheques and provide for their families, not what we see time and time again, that is, simply brute and crass ignoring of the human factor in the economy.

That is the assumption about which we are talking. Any recovery or proposal must take that assumption into consideration. That is what the Bishops are talking about, that we should question some of the assumptions we make about the economy we have come to know in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson), I wish to remind the House that there is one minute remaining in the question period.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. I think there have not been any profits in the Canadian mining industry. I am not absolutely certain because I do not have the statistics here, but I believe there have not been any profits in the last 12 months. Taken as a whole, the Canadian mining industry has lost hundreds of millions of dollars. I am curious to know how we could pay people when there are no profits, and in fact there are losses. Who will pick up the tab? Is the Hon. Member suggesting that Canadian taxpayers should pick up the tab? Is that what he is driving at?

Most of us in the House would agree with profit sharing. The Hon. Member opposite and Members of my Party are fully supportive of profit sharing. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that Sweden may have an industrial strategy, but it has produced Government ownership of every major industry in that country. It has also produced the worst suicide rate in the world. In fact, when I was in Stockholm, it cost $50 to purchase a pair of galoshes. That is what the Swedish industrial strategy has produced.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt Hon. Members but the time provided for questions and comments has been exhausted. Is there a disposition in the House to allow the Hon. Member to comment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent, so the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I did not consent, Mr. Speaker, not out of any discourtesy or disrespect to the Hon. Member, but I know that other New Democratic Party Members will be speaking today and will have an opportunity to reply to that question.

Mr. Ouellet: Oh!

Mr. McGrath: I do not know what was the intervention of the Hon. Postmaster General, but I hope we will hear from him today before the debate concludes.

I for one welcome the Bishops' statement. I welcome it as a catalyst for focusing public opinion on what is, in my view, the most serious problem facing the country today since the Second World War, that is, an unprecedented unemployment rate since the great depression. If the Bishops have done nothing else but to focus attention and public debate on this, they have fulfilled a great need. Surely it must be obvious to everyone that debate in the House is certainly no longer relevant in terms of stimulating public opinion or public debate. Indeed, one only has to look around the House today in the midst of this debate to see a dramatic exemplification of that fact.

If the Bishops are to be faulted on anything, it is on the wording of their statement. For example, I do not believe it was their intention to take the side of labour over management. I do not believe it was their intention to come out in favour of the communist system over the capitalist system, although the wording of the statement has a dangerous tendency to point in that direction. I believe the Bishops were trying to focus attention on the social consequences of a very serious problem. I do not necessarily agree with everything they said, but I certainly agree with their right to say it. I respect their right to say it and I, for one, am glad that they have said it.

I think what the Bishops were concerned about was perhaps best expressed in the paragraph of their statement dealing with the social consequences of high and long-term unemployment. It read:

> At the same time, we have seen the social realities of abandoned one-industry towns, depleting unemployment insurance benefits, cut-backs in health and social services, and line-ups at local soup kitchens.

It continued:

> And, we have also witnessed, first hand, the results of a troubled economy: personal tragedies, emotional strain, loss of human dignity, family breakdown, and even suicide.

I believe this is what prompted the Bishops to make their unprecedented statement in the first instance. Nobody can quarrel with their right to express that concern. Indeed, it was a concern that was supported by virtually all the Christian churches in Canada. If I recall correctly, the Primate of the Anglican Church made a supportive statement. The moderator of the United Church came out in support of what the Catholic Bishops were trying to achieve. The Presbyterian Church of Canada was supportive of what the Catholic Bishops were tring to focus attention on. Virtually all, if I can say it without being disrespectful, the mainline Christian churches in Canada supported the statement of the Bishops.

This is interesting and significant. The reason they did so was that we have a social crisis in the country of unprecedented proportions. One only has to look at and analyse the unemployment figures—unemployed heads of families, an increase of almost 42 per cent from March of last year. In March, 1982, there were 388,000 unemployed heads of families. In March, 1983, there were 550,000. There was an increase of 31.7 per cent in the number of unemployed women over March of last year. We now have 622,000 unemployed women in this country.

We then come to the long-term unemployed, which goes to the very root and pith and substance of the Bishops' concern, the plight of the long-term unemployed. There was an increase of 80 per cent over March of last year when there were 505,000 Canadians listed as long-term unemployed. As of March of this year, that figure had jumped to 907,000 out of a total of 1.6 million unemployed. What is a person classed as long-term unemployed? Very simply, it is someone who has been unemployed for three and a half months or more. Generally speaking, we are talking about the exhaustee, the person unemployed so long that his or her Unemployment Insurance benefits have expired. I will return to that in a moment.

Let us continue with our analysis of the unemployment figures for March of this year. There was an increase of 26.2 per cent in the number of young people unemployed over March of last year. In March of last year, there were 492,000 young people unemployed. Young people, as defined by Stats Can, are those between the ages of 15 and 24. That figure jumped to 621,000 in March of this year. This is on the eve of another half million young people coming on the job market from our universities and post-secondary institutions with no hope in the world of obtaining jobs.

If I can be personal for a moment, yesterday there were two young people in my office, both having obtained their Master's degree with majors in Government Administration, both bilingual, indeed one with a working knowledge of Spanish and German. These people have no job prospects. They were excited as all get-out, proud as could be of their accomplishments, with every right to be proud and every expectation to be excited, but what are their prospects for a job? Virtually nil. Therein is the tragedy of our country. We cannot fulfil the expectations of these bright young Canadians coming on to the job market. Within a very short time we will have over one million young people without jobs or job prospects.

We then come to the bottom of the list, the discouraged worker. I can speak with a great deal of feeling about the discouraged worker. I come from a Province that now has an official unemployment rate of almost 21 per cent. Therefore, I have firsthand experience with the problems of the discouraged worker.

During the course of the Easter recess, every day I had these people come to my office, hopeless in their plight, no fuel to heat their homes. Many had no food to put on the table for their families because they could not qualify for welfare payments. The Province had to cut back because of the tremendous demand for welfare.

What do we have in this country in terms of discouraged workers, those who have given up, those with no job prospects? Statistics Canada does not even include them among the unemployed because they have given up. There has been an increase of 30.4 per cent from March of last year. In March, 1982 there were 92,000 discouraged workers. Today there are more that 120,000 discouraged workers with no job prospects.

What kind of country have we presented to our young people? What kind of prospects have we developed for young people coming on to the job market when we have so many discouraged people unemployed, so many who are classified as long-term unemployed?

What has been the Government's response? I believe the lack of a response by the Government prompted the Bishops to intervene in the first instance. Let us take one facet of the Government's response which deals with those in "dire straits". Who are these people in dire straits? We are told by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that nobody in dire straits in this country will suffer.

According to the Government, those in dire straits are persons who are classified as Unemployment Insurance exhaustees, those who have no Unemployment Insurance. They are coming on to the statistics rolls at anywhere from 60,000 to 100,000 a month in the way of response.

We have the NEED program, a program calling for the expenditure of $500 million. Let us look at what the NEED program has produced since it commenced in November of last year. To date it has produced 3,267 projects for a total of 32,273 jobs, at a total expenditure of $188 million. We spent $188 million to create 32,273 jobs to satisfy the Government's conscience in terms of dealing with those in dire straits, the Unemployment Insurance exhaustees, those coming on to the statistics rolls every month their Unemployment Insurance benefits having expired.

Is it any wonder that the Bishops of Canada found it necessary to make the statement they did at the beginning of this year? As leaders of a major Christian community in this country, in all conscience they had an obligation to speak out, and speak out they did.

When you look at the welfare rolls of the country, you see 1.8 million Canadians who are not even classified in terms of the unemployed because that is a separate statistical data altogether. There are 1.8 million Canadians who depend upon welfare at this time, a significant increase over last year. Where are these people who depend upon welfare? Many of them are in Provinces which had to cut back on welfare because of the 50 cent Canada Assistance Plan dollar. Because the Provinces had to cut back on welfare, they have had to be more discriminatory in terms of who gets welfare and who does not. The result has been genuine hardship in this country. That speaks to the obligation of the Government which created the situation in the first place by its monetarist policy. That was responsible for the loss of half a million jobs since the recession began. The Member can laugh, but the direct consequence of the Government's monetarist policy has been the loss of 550,000 jobs since the recession started.

We have to replace those jobs before we can even address the problems of the long-term unemployed, those coming on to the job market, the young people and native people. After two months, we finally succeeded in getting the Government to strike the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. It is not without coincidence that this Committee did not meet in the midst of the Bishops' statement, in the midst of the monthly unfolding of these unemployment figures. I propose, as one of the first acts of that Committee, to call the Bishops before the Committee so that they can further explain their position and directly address their concerns to the Parliament of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1:00 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

• (1410)

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, at the time of the luncheon adjournment I was reviewing the climate in which the Catholic Bishops of Canada made what could, I suppose, be described as their precedent-setting statement on the state of the Canadian economy. I was referring to the unemployment situation in Canada as it affects different groups, particularly the plight of the long-term unemployed. I was about to speak on the subject of the Government's response to the serious unemployment situation, especially to the plight of the long-term unemployed, those in dire straits, those who are now described as "exhaustees" and no longer qualify for unemployment insurance. The Government's response to the exhaustee situation—although I dislike that term—or those in dire straits, was the NEED Program which was introduced in November, 1982 and which has a budget of $500 million. This Program has created to date 32,273 jobs at an expenditure of $188 million. I believe that the best potential for job creation in this country lies with the private sector and with stimulation of the private sector. I understand that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) may be moving in that direction although we will have to wait and see, certainly until the budget is brought down on Tuesday next.

I would like to put forward a proposal which I believe will be less costly and far more productive in terms of job creation than the Government's NEED Program. It is not a new innovation. It is a program which has been tried and has not been found wanting. Indeed, it has been successful. I refer, Mr. Speaker, to employment tax credits.

It is interesting to look at the brief experience we have had with employment tax credits, and I refer to the Economic Council of Canada in its report entitled "In short supply, jobs and skills in the 80's". According to them, the program when it was in effect for a short time, created 50,000 jobs for an expenditure of $100 million. What we have to bear in mind, however, is that these were 50,000 permanent jobs, not 32,273 make-work temporary jobs at a cost of $188 million. These were 50,000 permanent jobs created at a cost of $100 million. The employment tax credit program is a simple, clean, straightforward proposition. Its great advantage is that it can be targeted to meet the needs of various sectors of the work force. For example, it can be used effectively to deal with the problem of the high rate of youth unemployment. It can be used effectively with the problem of long-term unemployment, and it can certainly be used and targeted to deal specifically with the problem of exhaustees or those in dire straits.

What we are talking about in Canada today, Mr. Speaker, is not an unemployment rate of 12.6 per cent. If you take into account the 1.6 million Canadians who are seasonally unemployed, the seasonally-adjusted unemployment, and if you add to that figure the 149,000 discouraged workers who are not counted as part of the unemployed, and if you add to that the 407,000 part-time workers or under-employed workers, those who are working under the various make work programs you come up with a real unemployment rate of 2,143,000, or a real rate of unemployment in this country of 18.3 per cent. That, Mr. Speaker, is a very, very serious problem.

I would like to conclude by quoting from the Bishop's report. I hope that it will be possible for them to come before the parliamentary committee. I can think of no better way of summing up than to quote from their report as follows:

> There is nothing "normal" or "natural" about present unemployment rates. Indeed, massive unemployment which deprives people of the dignity of human work and an adequate family income, constitutes a social evil.

It is that concern which prompted the Bishops to make their statement in the first instance. It is that concern which prompts this debate in the House today. Hopefully, it will be that same concern which will prompt the Minister of Finance to act when he brings down his budget on Tuesday next.

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to deal with this motion, especially because its subject-matter, I know, is a source of tremendous concern to a great many Canadian men and women. In a little while, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) also will deal with this issue, so that the House should have a clear and definite idea of what the government's official position is on the issues which the Canadian Bishops addressed in their pastoral letter made public in early 1983.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize the fact that the government sees eye to eye with the Canadian Conference of Canadian Bishops about the problems which are being faced by—

[English]

Mr. Waddell: Isn't this question period?

Mr. Maltais: No, it is not a question period; it is the time for debate, I believe.

Mr. Waddell: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Is this the question period now or—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is normally a question period. That is perfectly right. The Chair did not recognize the Hon. Member rising to ask questions.

Mr. Waddell: I stood up.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In that case, the Chair was in error and will recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) if he would like to ask a question.

Mr. Waddell: Perhaps there was a misunderstanding, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps it was my fault.

I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath)—perhaps two very short questions. I wonder if he could tell me if he agrees with the statements which have been made by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and the other leadership candidates for the Conservative Party that, really, Government should get off people's backs, Government should be restricted fairly drastically, and leave it pretty well to the private sector, as the Hon. Member seems to indicate in his speech? In other words, does he agree that job creation should be left to the private sector? Does the Hon. Member agree with what the Hon. Member for St. John's West has said?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with everything the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) says, but he does say some very sensible things and I often agree with him. I believe all the candidates for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada believe, as I believe now and the Minister of Finance believes, that the best opportunity we have to create jobs in this country is through the private sector. Certainly, our experience in terms of make-work projects and programs which have cost the taxpayers of Canada hundreds of millions of dollars, has been that it has been a dismal failure. If we take a look at the experience of the communist socialist Government of France, we can see what massive public interference in the economy can do to what was a fairly stable and healthy economy.

Certainly, I believe very strongly, Mr. Speaker, that the private sector is the best chance we have of creating jobs, bearing in mind, of course, that there will always be a need for the kinds of ongoing programs to provide for summer youth employment. Indeed, there is a need, as the Prime Minister himself indicated a year or so ago, for the Government to get on with a public works program in this country, to build public buildings, to provide infrastructure services, sewer services, water services and that kind of thing. There is a need for both, but certainly there is a dramatic need for some kind of incentive and stimulation to the private sector to provide jobs.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member not being a bit inconsistent in the sense that some leading private industry spokesmen have said they do not intend to create jobs in a big way in the next year or so? They were interviewed by The Toronto Star after the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) had spoken in Toronto. So is there not an inconsistency there?

Secondly, in his speech the Hon. Member talked about the two young people who had MAs in Government administration and he asked what are the prospects for their jobs? He said: nil. There lies the tragedy; we cannot deliver jobs to them. Now, was he just giving us bafflegab about these people, or how is he going to provide jobs for people with MA degrees in Government administration when he wants to turn just about everything over to a private sector which has not been and does not seem to be prepared to create jobs in the next year?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I leave the bafflegab to the Hon. Member who is so good at it. But, in response to the first part of his question, let me say that it is precisely for that reason that we in this Party are strongly advocating that the Government bring in a program of employment tax credits. There is no incentive out there now to create new jobs because of the consequences of high interest rates and the bankruptcies that this has caused.

In so far as the second part of the Hon. Member's question is concerned, I see no inconsistency at all. The Government has got us into this mess because it has grown so big as to deprive people coming into the work force of normal career opportunities in the Government because it is now in such a mess it has to put back. I see no inconsistency in that at all. I believe that is a tragic situation.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member considers that the reason private enterprise is not able to employ people is high interest rates, would he not agree that high interest rates themselves were determined by private enterprise without Government intervention? Many of us in this corner of the House asked the Government repeatedly to intervene, and it regularly refused. In effect it said, let them find their own level. Members of the Conservative Party expressed their agreement with the Government. The former Leader of the Conservative Party, when asked in public how he would react regarding an interest rate policy, said, "Well, we would do the same thing as the Government has done".

Since the Hon. Member's Party agrees with the high interest rate policy, since that policy was in fact determined by private enterprise, does he then agree that it was private enterprise through high interest rates that killed employment?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the hundreds of small businesses in this country which have gone under as a consequence of high interest rates will be intrigued with the Hon. Member's economic theory. They had aboslutely nothing to do with high interest rates. It seems to me that interest rates in this country are established by the Bank of Canada, and I would have thought the Hon. Member would know that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the—

Mr. Roche: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Am I to understand that the speech we are about to hear from the Parliamentary Secretary is the Government's response to this important motion brought forward? That the Government thinks so little of what the Catholic Bishops have to say that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is not making a point of order. I am sure that in the course of debate the positions of various Parties will be made clear.

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, my response will generally reflect the Government's position on the motion presented by the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

As I started to say earlier, Mr. Speaker, Parliamentarians on this side of the House agree with the comments made by the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops. However, to avoid any confusion in this debate, I think it is important to point out right away that all Members, on whatever side of the House they are sitting, in fact every one in general is aware of the very serious problems we are having with unemployment. I do not think anyone is going to downplay this problem. Everyone is aware that economically speaking, we in North America, as in all industrialized countries, are experiencing problems that are directly related to major economic changes, which in turn are the result of a host of internal and external factors. At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make myself quite clear, and I hope my message will be correctly understood on both sides of the House as it regards comments on the present situation as reported by the Bishops and by other groups as well. We share their anxiety and we are very sensitive to the problems described by the Bishops.

However, where we must make a distinction is on the procedure for helping people who are affected by the recession and for introducing the economic and social reforms that would bring about full employment. Here, we find a wide range of opinions being put forward and supported by various schools of thought. On both sides of the House, we have people with views on how the recession should be dealt with, either temporarily or permanently. Where these opinions vary most in connection with the Bishops' letter, is on how to deal with the post-recessionary period. How should the rules of the game be changed? Should we take a more Marxist reading of the facts or should our methods be more on the socialist side? Or should we apply more capitalist methods? Should we have a mixed economy with Government involvement or a strictly free enterprise economy? That is a very important point. We on this side of the House are certainly not rejecting out of hand certain proposals made by the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops. However, before deciding in favour of a given measure, we would like to have a meeting to allow the parties to explain, on the one hand, the Government policies that are now being introduced, and on the other hand, the proposals made by the Bishops in their report.

Even within the Conference, there are bishops who disagree on the best way to overcome the recession. I think that here there is a very clear distinction. We on this side of the House think that it is perfectly normal for the bishops to make statements on social and economic problems. It is their duty to do so. But as far as the means to deal with these problems are concerned, there are a number of different concepts, and I think this is amply demonstrated by the ideas being expressed on all sides of the House and supported by all kinds of people with degrees in economics. There are about as many proposals for dealing with the recession as there are PhDs!

We must find a compromise solution that will help us progress on an ongoing basis. That is the crux of the problem today. If we look at other countries, we see that when the French elected their new Government, they were counting on socialist measures to provide a solution to their financial problems. After two years, experience has shown that the hoped-for financial miracle did not come through.

We have seen the same phenomenon in the United States. When the present President was elected three years ago, voters were counting on measures that were directly based on a capitalist system and that would steer clear of social measures as much as possible. They are having problems as well, while here in Canada, the Government has tried to use a little of both. Should we therefore opt for a radical change in the rules of the game?

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the question should come from Members opposite, since, when Mr. Clark's Government was in office, it did extend Mr. Bouey's mandate for another seven years following discussions, I presume, with the Governor of the Bank of Canada. Presumably, Mr. Bouey at the time laid out his own guidelines and the information he gave to the then Government, which saw eye to eye with the thinking, the aims and the means advocated by the Governor of the central bank, prompted the Progressive Conservative administration to extend Mr. Bouey's mandate. Well, we too, enlightened by economists of every description led by Mr. Bouey himself, did check to see what could be done to change the system and to improve significantly the lot of Canadian men and women hard hit by the recession.

Mr. Speaker, unless one does not care whether one's partisan colours are showing, one is forced to admit that all countries of the industrialized world are looking for a way out of the doldrums, and we are not going to solve the problem by stating simply that we must accept or reject the proposals advocated by the Conference of Bishops. Of course there is an extremely simple way to solve the problem. All we need do is to reduce drastically our efforts to promote the personal freedoms of Canadians throughout the country, tag nearly every one of them and put them to work on so-called community projects. The result would be a fantastic drop in the unemployment statistics.

However, what makes the real value of a people or a nation? Two factors: first, their freedom within a well-defined economic, social and political structure, second, the work ethic. That is very important. Evidence of that can be seen when we introduce various programs such as NEED or CCDP, projects which are usually sponsored by organizations and people are free to accept or reject them since nothing is compulsory. Personal freedom is indeed one of the elements of our system.

The question then is: how do we achieve full employment? I think that the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) gave a good answer earlier today. It is a question of a consumer system which is based on profit, on reinvestment, on a wide ranging market. We are living in a market economy. Would the system be any better if our economy were based simply on a closed market, on a rather socializing market where the state would decide where we work? The state will decide where we go, but I am not sure that the answer lies there.

Among other things we heard from the Conference of Bishops, they stated that perhaps we would be well advised to go back to traditional forms of work. Perhaps I ought to define what that means. If we take fishermen as an example—and the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is quite familiar with that sector — theirs is a traditional form of work, except that if they want to market their products, they have to resort to extremely competitive and modern practices precisely to be able to open up new markets and create jobs. When it comes to farmers, I should think that very few of them would be prepared to revert to the so-called traditional methods. In that respect alone, we should call an important meeting with the Conference of Bishops to establish exactly just what would be the consequences of going back to rather outmoded practices and replace machinery by sheer human strength. I think that it could be the topic of an interesting debate.

A second fact was pointed out following the statement made by the Assembly of bishops, by Monsignor Cauley, Auxiliary Bishop of Montreal, who stated that either the husband or the wife in a married couple should withdraw from the labour market to enable someone with a greater need to take a job. But then you would be infringing on individual rights and freedoms, because both husband and wife are entitled to plan their career and to work. Should the Government legislate to compel one of them to resign for the benefit of the other? I think that those quite important facts of life should be considered before suggesting that any such option should be chosen.

Another factor should be considered. Is private entreprise still relevant, considering the Bishops' message? And if so, under what form? Nothing has been defined as such in the Bishops' message except that it would obviously be important to deal with this issue. On this side of the House, we are not turning down the message delivered by the Assembly of Bishops. On the contrary. We even find that this message is a challenge to the imagination and the spirit of creativity and should be taken up to provide real and continuous assistance to Canadians who want to work. This recession has made us realize that work which used to be considered by Canadians as being an ordeal or almost as some kind of a misfortune, is now a privilege. I come from a part of the country which has been dangerously plagued by unemployment in private and public companies both involved in the iron industry. In my area, we have Wabush Mine, Quebec Cartier Mining, Iron Ore, and Sidbec also which is a public company. And if they cannot sell their ore, the same decision has to be made whether it is a public or private company, namely workers have to be laid off. If the message of the Bishops were applied to the letter, would it solve this problem? I think that the question has been well put, but that the answer is more difficult to find.

On the other hand, some changes are certainly necessary within our political system. For instance, because of the way the labour market works at the present time, it is very difficult for a young person to get a job since the unions try to protect the workers already in place, which is normal since the basic role of the unions is to protect their members and give them the best income and the best working conditions possible. This is quite normal. However, could we not establish a system of apprenticeship which would allow young people to join the labour market without threatening the jobs of their seniors, of unionized heads of families? I believe that there are openings to consider in this regard. We are willing to do so in cooperation with the unions.

On the side of management, improvements could certainly be made. For instance, what are the five year development plans to private companies? It is very difficult at the present time for politicians and unions to work in good faith. We seem to be playing cat and mouse. Finally, all the cards are rarely put on the table, which means that it is very difficult for everyone to be honest with each other. A lot of strategy is involved and the good will and good faith of workers is often questioned, I believe.

Yet, people want to work. This is self-evident. People want to work, but perhaps there is a lack of imagination and creativity, and instead of each side accusing the other, it would perhaps be better to have labour, management, government and non-organized workers sit down together to determine whether certain aspects of the social contract should be changed because the way the situation is evolving at the present time is truly tragic. Suicide among young people was mentioned this morning. But what about heads of families who not only have no job, but no hope of getting one?

Young people should certainly not be expected to start a family or to acquire permanent assets at the present time! They have no permanent job. The government is extremely sensitive to this situation, but there is no consensus about a solution, not only in Canada, but also in the United States and Europe. Would it be a good thing to import the Swedish or the Japanese system as suggested by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (M. Riis) this morning? Some things may indeed be possible. But to come up with a motion blaming the government for refusing to accept the Bishops' message, this is unwarranted. We did accept the Bishops' message. And again we say that we would be ready and willing as indeed we said in a letter signed by Members on this side of the House, and perhaps we should have invited other members to sign that letter. That letter did not condemn the Bishops' statement. There is a distinction to be made namely that when the Bishops speak, we assume that as Christian leaders they are referring to matters of faith. But economic problems are not to be confused with ethical ones. There is a line to be drawn between worldly matters and spiritual matters. Nothing more was meant in that respect. And we hope that in the future, Mr. Speaker, the Bishops will again make their views known on various matters, except that when it comes to solutions, as much as we do not have a monopoly on economic truths, neither do the Bishops.

Of course, in both cases it is through an exchange of views that we can arrive at the best understanding possible with respect to the betterment of people of all denominations, and also of people unrelated to any religious group. And at this stage, it is truly important that the difference be clearly established in this House, because after the Bishops put out their message there was some sort of reluctance. But it was never intended that the Government should remain insensitive to that message, and I for one can say that to a large extent my constituency has been socially and economically developed by priests and members of various religious orders. When referring to Schefferville, let us never forget that Monsignor Scheffer came from Ottawa; he was an Oblate priest from Ottawa who went out as a missionary in that vast territory. The Oblate and Eudist priests were everywhere in the Fort Chimo area, the Ungava, the Middle North Shore and the Lower North Shore, and they did a tremendous job, as did the Protestant ministers. And if the North Shore enjoys such high standards socially, politically, culturally and economically, it is thanks to the various religious orders.

So there was never any question of blaming the Bishops for their message. However, Mr. Speaker, before concluding , since I know my time is rapidly coming to an end, I would like to stress the importance of the choices this Government had to make. I for one, in August 1981, wrote a letter to the Prime Minister condemning the high interest rates that were then hovering around 21 and 22 per cent. In addition, ten Members from the Montreal area signed the letter again asking the Prime Minister that more be done for job creation, but we had to operate in the face of those two simultaneous problems, inflation and unemployment. Several Members from this side of the House have said it repeatedly: With inflation, we can always live; with unemployment we cannot. I think that was also clear.

Now we find that thanks to the policies implemented by both the Canadian and American governments, inflation has abated in a dramatic way, and so much the better for this country. At the level of job creation, we must do everything we can to create permanent employment. The Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) was quite right in this regard. Programs such as the CDP's and NEED are useful in the short term, but we must do more in the long term. People in northern cities such as Sept-Îles and Port Cartier, just like people in other constituencies want to have permanent jobs for the young people to develop, because our most important shortage is not a shortage of money, but perhaps a shortage of ideas and creativity to make it through the crisis and guarantee that we shall never again be in the same situation. That is the most important, and I believe that we all share the same concern in this regard, namely . . . Mr. Speaker, I do not know if I still have five minutes left, but if I may have another five minutes, I could conclude my comments. Could I have the agreement of the House to go on for a maximum of five minutes?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do Hon. Members have questions for the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary?

[English]

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member making the speech for the Government referred to a statement that he and four of his colleagues on the Liberal benches signed on February 3 which was not supportive of the Bishops' statement at all, as he tried to say. It was a statement which was very critical of the Bishops's statement. As a matter of fact, that statement, from which I quote directly, accused the Bishops of formulating a Marxist theory on the current operation of the capitalist system.

I want to know whether the Parliamentary Secretary is still of the view that what the Bishops said was a Marxist statement and why the Government is being represented by an official spokesmen who holds such a view?

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking about how to interpret the bishops' statement. I believe that it is a matter of opinion. As Members of Parliament, those of us who read the statement thought that the authors actually showed Marxist tendencies in suggesting ways to promote economic recovery. I do not support the Marxist position about what we should do to put the Canadian economy back on the right track, and we simply explained at the time that certain points needed to be clarified. This is what I explained earlier in the House. It would perhaps be a good thing to meet with the bishops to clarify a few points. However, I would of course disagree with a Marxist policy to promote economic recovery.

[English]

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important point and I will give the Parliamentary Secretary another opportunity to clarify his position. Perhaps the translation of his opinion was not precise, but I heard him say a moment ago that he is still of the opinion that the Bishops's document contained a Marxist tint. I want to know if it is his view that the analysis as presented by the Bishops has a Marxist tint or Marxist flavour?

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, I did not say that the statement was a Marxist message. Not at all. I simply said that some elements showed Marxist tendencies. That is all I meant. What I should have said perhaps is that, on this side of the House, and for my part, we are in favour of free enterprise, public enterprise and joint ventures. It is not by giving the whole economic system back to the Government that we can promote economic recovery. This is what I myself and other Members believe and this is what we support.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Parliamentary Secretary. In their statement three or four months ago, the Bishops mentioned that there was no equality in Canada. They said that the poorest 20 per cent of the population receive only 4 per cent of Canadian income while the wealthiest 20 per cent receive about 42 per cent. The Leader of the Liberal Party, Mr. Trudeau, often promised a just society 15 years ago, a society more equitable than during the fifties and sixties, but as mentioned by the Bishops in their challenge to Canadians, our society is still not equitable. There is still a wide gap between the rich and the poor. Why did you not do something to correct the situation during your 15 years in power?

Second, Mr. Speaker, the standard of living in Canada has gone down a lot since the sixties. At that time, Canada had the second highest standard of living in the world. We now have the nineteenth highest. Why? Why did you allow such a situation—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am thinking of the time and I would like to suggest to the Hon. Member to ask short questions if possible.

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, my first answer concerns the fact that the standard of living may have gone down in Canada. I believe that this phenomenon is North American and that it affects every industrialized country. In other words, in terms of purchasing power, we notice in Canada as well as in the United States or still in many European countries the same phenomenon that appeared 15 years ago but if you now consider the value of our Canadian currency as compared with French or Belgian currency, you will find that conditions are still worse in those countries.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, concerning the just society, if you look at the Department of National Health and Welfare to which is earmarked almost half of the Canadian budget, you will realize the various steps taken to provide more opportunities to the needy. It would take too much time to list all such measures, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps it would be advisable to send such a list to the Members but once again a great number of measures have been taken to help the more needy during the last 15 years.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, I should like to ask a brief question, Mr. Speaker. The Parliamentary Secretary mentioned that the Government has done many things during the last 15 years but I would like to ask him: If the Government has done so many things, why has so little changed, why is there still such a large difference between the poor and the rich in Canada, as the Bishops mentioned in their statement?

Mr. Maltais: True enough, Mr. Speaker, there is still much to be done, and we should always strive to attain ideal conditions, except that it is unthinkable that we could attain them on a permanent basis so fast. However, if we consider the constant improvement in the Canadian standard of living over previous years, what is actually essential is to try and narrow the gap between the rich and the poor, and such is the challenge that we must now be ready to take up. This is what the Government wants to do. I think that next Tuesday night when the budget speech is delivered, parliamentarians and Canadians will realize that the Government has still shown much imagination in trying to narrow the gap between the rich and the poor.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the Hon. Member's speech and I found it interesting, particularly his analysis of the Bishops' statement having tinges of Marxism in it. I know the Hon. Member has studied political science and political philosophy but I would like him to identify the specific area of Marxism that he sees in the Bishops' statement. Can you give us a clear indication of the tinges of Marxism that he is identifying?

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, I have never said that what the Bishops said was a marxist statement. In my opinion, their statement was in two parts, the first being a straightforward description of the woes Canadians are faced with today and with which we have no quarrel, and the second an analysis of the means to achieve economic recovery, emphasizing the involvement of the Government as though it was solely responsible for the economic recovery. Yet, under our system, the responsibility of the Government is to provide the proper political and fiscal context for the mixed economy with Government involvement to operate. It is within this context that I expressed views which were not quite consistent with those of the Bishops'. I felt that there were socialistic undertones in their statement. But like other Hon. Members on the Government side, I am quite willing to hear what the Bishops have to say to come to an understanding. This was and continues to be my position. I suggest that it is of paramount importance to define our system as a mixed economy with Government involvement which favours free entreprise. They recommended to entrust the State with the control of the economy. I think that strictly speaking, a socialist system is one where the control of the means of production is vested in the state and not shared between public and private enterprise.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question period has almost expired. There is time for one more question. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

[Translation]

Mr. Waddell: I should like to direct another question to the Hon. Member. I should like to read a brief statement in English.

[English]

I wonder if the Hon. Member thinks this quote is tinged with Marxism. I quote—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member is about to put a long question, I must advise him that there is simply not enough time. Already the ten-minute question period has expired.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I will refer to it in my speech, but I want to ask the Hon. Member this question.

[Translation]

Why did the Hon. Member challenge the Bishops and tell them to forget politics and stick to religion? To me, that is what the Hon. Member said today in the House and it is also what the Hon. Member—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to have to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time allotted for questions has now expired. The Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to enter this debate today. The subject of this motion is very important. I am pleased the Bishops came forward with their statement. It causes us to stop for a moment and do some thinking. The title of the Bishops' statement is "Ethical Reflections on the Economic Crisis". It reflects on some of the concerns all of us face. The economic crisis is very important. My and my Party's particular concern relates to youth. By looking at the figures on the youth unemployment, I find today that over 600,000 young Canadians between the ages of 15 and 24 are presently unemployed. We have a very serious crisis on our hands. This crisis becomes even more serious when we look at the number of graduates who will be hitting the streets this summer. They will be looking for employment opportunities and they will be competing with the many unemployed who have been without a job for some time.

I want to take a look at the Bishops' statement and also discuss what I see is the role of the church. I think the Bishops allowed us that opportunity by releasing this statement. I want to look at the economic problems that we face in the country, and finally I want to talk about a few of the things I see as possible solutions.

As one looks at the Bishops' statement I find about five separate points that come forward. I will examine them one at a time. The first point in the statement reads:

> First, unemployment rather than inflation, should be recognized as the number one problem to be tackled in overcoming the present crisis.

At first blush I would have no problem agreeing with that, with one exception. People on fixed incomes are the ones most seriously affected by inflation. They are the ones whose income is eroded by inflation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. May I ask the Hon. Members at the back of the House to recognize the fact that the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) has the floor?

Mr. Cooper: The people on fixed incomes are the ones most seriously hurt by inflation. Right now they may be slightly above the poverty level, but if inflation continues, they will end up below the poverty level. That is my concern with the Bishops' first comment.

The second point made in the statement of the Bishops reads in part:

> It should include emphasis on increased production, creation of new labour intensive industries for basic needs, and measures to ensure job security for workers.

Essentially, what the Bishops were outlining is that there should be an industrial strategy. I have no difficulty with that. There has to be a consistent plan and a consistent direction that we as Canadians can work toward.

The third point in the statement of the Bishops reads:

> Third, a more balanced and equitable program should be developed for reducing and stemming the rate of inflation.

As is obvious from my comments on the first statement, I was glad to see the Bishops' third point because I think the Bishops' first point is significant and important.

The fourth point in the statement of the Bishops reads:

> Fourth, greater emphasis should be given to the goal of social responsibility in the current recession.

That sentence cuts right to the nub of the whole problem we face. Our social security systems are being severely taxed, for instance, the funds for Unemployment Insurance. A number of people are running out of those funds and are listed as exhaustees, and we can see that we have a very serious problem.

Maybe it is time to be looking at those of us who do not need some benefits who are still receiving them. For example, my wife and I are receiving a child benefit. In our particular salary bracket I do not think we need that benefit. Maybe it is time to stop and examine that question. Perhaps that money should be given to those who have a genuine and serious need. The Government could give that small cheque which comes to me to someone else and as a result we would provide for those desperately in need.

• (1500)

Returning to the Bishops' statement, it reads:

Fifth, labour unions should be asked to play a more decisive and responsible role in developing strategies for economic recovery and employment.

I found that particular statement very interesting. It sprung out of the page and created a great deal of interest because it concerned responsibility. What has been happening in unions and in other areas is that they have been prepared to fight for their own particular interests and concerns, but in fact there has been no sense of responsibility for other individuals for whom they should be working to create a responsible situation. In other words, a union which represents its employees must at the same time have a responsible concern for the corporation for which it works. Then and only then will there be co-operation and some kind of responsible approach to the problems we are facing.

At this point I want to talk a little about the role of the church in this entire area. I think the Bishops' statement brings that to the fore and provides me with an opportunity to look at it. If we look back at the first Christian church, there was a concern about looking after the needs of the poor and the oppressed. We remember that the first apostles were criticized because Armenian widows within the church were not receiving any kind of assistance or protection. They called a meeting and began to complain about it and indicate that they had a problem. The apostles sat down and said that they were right, that there was a very serious problem. They indicated that they would have to appoint a group of people to look after the basic social concerns of members of their society or their organization, the church. In fact, the person they chose was Stephen, the first martyr of the Christian church. It is from that point that we begin to see an emphasis placed upon the responsibility of the church to play a role on behalf of the poor, the needy and the oppressed.

I speak as a member of a church and as someone who was raised in the church. I feel very strongly that the church should play a very, very responsible role in society, a responsible role in relating to people and in meeting the concerns of individuals. I am afraid that what has begun to happen lately—and I speak for my own church as well—is that we have transferred that basic responsibility which was talked about in the first church back to the Government or the state. For example, in some cases when widows or needy persons come to us, we say that we will help. We call the nearest Government agency, say that we have a particular individual with a problem and ask for help. There is a real need for the church to get back into that responsibility and to assume that role. The state can provide a certain amount of economic assistance, but there is no emotion or encouragement. I think that is a very important part. It is the human element of meeting economic needs. Therefore we need to see the churches move back into that realm of concern or that particular area which I think is so important.

I have some problems with the capital expenditures of churches as institutions. At this particular time they should not be looking at large facilities which take away their capital. They should be looking at the needs of the people who are members of the churches and at the needs of society in general. To stand up at the podium and speak about the need to help the needy, the poor and the poverty stricken is not good enough. We have to meet with these people on a day to day basis, talk about their concerns and see what we can do to assist them.

Today we are looking at a number of economic problems. The Bishops referred to it as an economic crisis and indicated:

The present recession appears to be symptomatic of a much larger structural crisis in the international system of capitalism.

I read over that statement two or three times. I thought about it, and my conclusion was that that was probably not the problem. The problem facing us is the one about which Christ talked in the first church. Simply it seems to be going across the board, this business of greed and selfishness. That is the one problem that has been consistent throughout all the systems and processes through time.

Then we come to where we are at today. First there was big business. It exploited people. We have all heard the stories of children in the coal mines and of various other abuses. There was a need for co-operation between workers to protect their particular interests. Then we had big unions to give a balance to big business. I do not think that has worked. Now we look at another option, the third one being big Government or the socialist state. If we have big Government and the state distributes wealth, it will take care of big business and big unions. But I do not see it as being a solution at all because it does not address the basic, simple, responsible position of the individual having to be cautious of his relationships with other people and relating to these other people.

As demonstrated by the Bishops' statements and by things I have seen and heard for years now, on the one hand we have the Bishops making a clear and concise defence of their position and their concerns. On the other hand we have business making a clear and concise defence of its concerns and positions. In a sense we have theory on one side and practicality on the other, but there is no meshing of the two. The problem is that we just keep going on in a sort of blind, desperate fashion, achieving very little. In fact we need to sit down and look at some of the problems we are facing on an individual basis and at our responsibilities as individuals.

What do we see as some of the opportunities? One thing the Bishops mentioned was community ownership. This can mean a couple of things. One could be community ownership through public ownership or state ownership. In the other sense it could mean co-operatives. I like the idea of co-operatives. I think they can be a very valuable tool for allowing us as people and individuals to work together as employees and employers. We are all related because labour is of equal importance to management. I think the balance in a co-operative is very essential and very important, but there is another element through which I think we can achieve the same goals, and that is in the area of private ownership. Private ownership with responsible employers and employees can in fact develop a system which is of benefit to all concerned. If we have employers and employees working together co-operatively and in a way which demonstrates their genuine Christian concern for each other, at that point we begin to address the basic problem we in society are facing.

Essentially I believe that big business will not solve our problem. Big unions will not solve our problem. The option we weem to be exploring more and more of big state will not solve our problem. It is still big. It is still impersonal. It is still numbers. It is still statistics. But it is not a genuine personal concern for individual people.

We have to do a little more thinking about these matters and we have genuinely to relate to people. As Members of Parliament that is something on which we have to focus every day. As I said a few moments ago, there are 600,000 or more young Canadians in Canada who are unemployed. Each one of them is a genuine person with a genuine, serious problem. There is no end to the personal spin-off problems which relate to the fact that they cannot find employment. We must relate to the individual.

In conclusion, I want to refer back to something which Christ said. In Chapter 5 of the Book of Matthew, Christ used the demonstration of light and of salt. He said that Christians were to be the salt of the earth and were to be an example. They were to provide flavour, ideas and all sorts of excitement in society. That is what He meant, that we as individuals should provide an example. When we provide that example and relate it one-to-one, we collectively begin to work on and resolve some of these very serious problems.

In conclusion, I thank the Bishops for coming forward with this statement. It has given us a good chance to reflect and think. It has certainly given me that opportunity. We do have some serious problems in this country. We have to start working on them in a charitable and selfless fashion rather than a selfish fashion, which we have designed, worked in and worked so hard toward over the past few years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are Hon. Members rising to asking questions of the Hon. Member for Peace River? If not, the Chair will now recognize the Minister of Transport.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) was indeed speaking on behalf of the Goverment, because I do not have very much to add to his statements on principles and practice. However, I shall be making a few comments of my own. I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will agree with what I am about to say, because I want to point out that the Bishops' letter, as well as the statements made by the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) concern a subject on which it is difficult to have a consensus. I do not think the opinion of the Liberal Party is particularly homogeneous, or that there is only one way to consider these matters. I am saying that we have some leeway in these matters which the Lord's children are entitled to use.

The motion consists of three parts: first, it regrets that the Government rejected the economic policy set forth in the Bishops' letter. That is not the case at all. We do not reject it. We are sufficiently independent to be able to make nuances so that we certainly did not have to either accept or reject outright the contents of the Bishops' letter. So as far as that is concerned, the motion is entirely unacceptable.

The second part of the motion regrets the Government's refusal to adopt the Bishops' specific recommendations on industrial strategy. Once again, sometimes we agree and sometimes we disagree, and we certainly are not going to refuse or to agree to adopt outright the positions put forward in that letter.

Thirdly, the motion deplores our refusal to adopt a community production system, and I imagine that community production is to be seen here as the opposite of capitalist production or State production. As far as I am concerned, it is one production system among many. It may be morally superior to the rest, but I do not think it is so outstanding that we should not consider other systems, and even the Hon. Member himself says in his motion, in the English text: where desirable. In that case, there is no debate, if the production system is the best one "where desirable". There is no debate, because there may very well be situations where such a system would be very desirable and others where it would not be desirable at all, and in the latter case we would not have to adopt it.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is the problem!

Mr. Pepin: That is indeed the problem! I am saying this in a friendly way, because I notice that the Members of the New Democratic Party are becoming more realistic in their aspirations. I get the feeling that they are realizing they do not have a monopoly on truth and virtue, and I like that. It was bound to happen.

I am taking part in this debate for several reasons. First of all, it is my turn to mind the store, and I thought I could usefully take advantage of this opportunity to speak to the House. Second, I have a profound though far from servile, respect for the Church and its authorities, and I think they will appreciate that.

Thirdly, I have always taken a lively interest in economic and social development, and especially in what is referred to as industrial strategy, and it should come as no surprise that I have a few things to say about it. I confess to having drafted a few speeches on that subject, particularly around 1972, and quite a few since then. And if, after my political defeat in 1972, I launched a trading firm, it was precisely because I believed that the means of implementing an industrial strategy were important and that the trading firm seemed to me to be one of those important means which Canada did not have does not now have on a country-wide basis. There are many trading companies but, in my opinion, none has yet left his imprint throughout the country and the world.

As to the letter from the bishops, I regret to say in passing to my Liberal friends that it is regrettable that it sparked a small debate on the relations between the church and the state. I am very sorry because I do not think there is any justification at all for that. With respect to the relations between civilian power and religious power, the Gospel is not very categorical and says simply: Render unto Caesar what belongs to Caesar and unto God what belongs to God. But never does it say exactly what belongs to Ceasar; that complicates the problem somewhat and, indeed, leaves the question practically wide open. So much so that at different times and in different countries, there were different forms of relationship between the church and the state, ranging from theocracy to neutrality and separation; and all that was advocated by very honest followers, very honest young men and young women alike. The way I look at it, as do most Canadians I think, the bishops can say anything they want on any possible and appropriate subject, as long as they do not claim to be infallible. From that viewpoint, therefore, I regret, as does the Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais), that they do not speak out more often. I would like to hear them more often on social and economic subjects. Particularly from that point of view, for those of us who come from Quebec, they may be overreacting to offset an inordinately opposite trend in the past. Proper balance is required here as in many other things.

Of course, I will pay them more or less attention depending on the subjects they deal with. When it comes to ethical or moral issues, I take off my hat to them, they are outstanding experts. If they tell me to show respect for work, I quite agree. I applaud. However, if they tell me that intellectual or manual work is better than manual or intellectual work, then I put up an argument because it is not a moral issue. I do respect work, but I can respect various forms of work as well as various forms of work structure. If they proclaim that assistance to the needy is a priority, I bow in agreement and again take my hat off to them. I respect that, I am impressed, I cogitate, I meditate, I pray and I will act as well. But if they tell me that such and such form of assistance to the needy is better than such and such other form, if they tell me that the best way to fight against poverty is to create jobs rather than check inflation, I am prepared to argue. I will probably reach a compromise and say: why should we fight against only one evil? Would it not be better to fight against inflation and unemployment at the same time?

So I read the whole letter and I was duly impressed, and like previous speakers, I pay homage to them because their text is very easy to read, it is very impressive, and in my opinion, as the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) said, it was needed. Someone had to remind us of those things, particularly inasmuch as they relate to the moral issue.

An Hon. Member: St. John's East.

Mr. Pepin: St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I apologize for that lese-majesty.

In economic matters, the bishops are amateurs just like every one of us. For my part, I would have liked the letter to contain—

Mr. Waddell: A professional amateur!

Mr. Pepin: Yes, and you are also a professional amateur, my friend!

It would have been a good thing if the difference, the line to be drawn between morality and economic theory and practice were more clearly marked and better expressed in the letter. This is what I have to say and as I have already expressed my views to my favorite bishops, it is certainly not a secret.

I would now like to say a few words about the Bishops' industrial strategy and that of His Eminence Riis, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap. I am speaking not as an expert, but as someone who has some experience because, as I have already said, I have tried to write some statements which I reread at three in the morning and in which I made several extremely polished comments for instance about the difficulty to define what is an industrial strategy. Some will say that it is a comprehensive and specific plan which wraps up all sectors of the economy, including the social and cultural aspects, in the same package. Others will say that this is too pretentious and that an industrial strategy is simply an order of priority offered for consideration. Others still will say: No, an industrial strategy is a choice of means to achieve ends on which there is a consensus. In addition to all that, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap made a few wonderful comments earlier, such as:

• (1520)

[English]

"Now everything is changing rapidly."

[Translation]

And later on, he also said:

[English]

"We want a totally new approach."

[Translation]

We want an industrial strategy. How can we have an industrial strategy which will apply all the time to every country when things are always changing and change may be the only stable value remaining in the world? How can we develop such an industrial strategy? It is absolutely impossible and this is why Canada has had industrial strategies in the past, why it has one now which may not be quite what each one of us would like, and why there will be a different one in the future. These industrial strategies make me think of the prayer we have all said: As it was in the beginning, as it is now and as it will not be forever and ever.

Mr. Speaker, what I want to say is quite obvious. We all know that we can find as many definitions as we want according to the intellectual, moral and economic tendencies and interests of the person who is speaking. So, accordingly, strategy is all a matter of high technology, or growth sectors, on high productivity or labour intensive or resource intensive or capital intensive sectors. Each of those areas is important. What I am trying to stress is greater reliance on experience, flexibility and humility. There is one example that I always like to bring up. In my opinion, the greatest asset of the Japanese industrial strategy, which is the one most frequently referred to, is that it can change overnight. What gives the Japanese industrial strategy its strength is that they have powerful means and mechanisms which allow them to adopt rapidly and concentrate on a sector where changes are needed, while neglecting another which no longer has priority. In my opinion, that is the major aspect of the Japanese industrial strategy.

Now, what about the Bishops' industrial strategy? First of all it is based on an interpretation of the sources of today's global moral disorder. This has been mentioned by the Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais), but I disagree with the terms he used. Since I am almost twice his age, he will allow me the following remark. You do not have to be a Marxist to appreciate the role of the economy in the development of societies and in the surge of moral disorder in particular. The Bishops' analysis is precisely based on economic factors. They refer to the flow of capital, the development of technology, automation, computerization and so on. Following on that analysis, they say that in order to protect capital, the main concern of governments now is, to control wages, services, to maintain order and so on so as to keep capital in the country. And when all this is taken into account, according to the Bishops, the concern for capital takes precedence over the concern for labour. It is one way of looking at it. I found this interesting, but I wondered how much truth there was in it. A curious mind always puts this kind of question to himself. Is it true that today's governments are limiting salary raises and improvement in services? Well, let us say that it has been true for the last year. One cannot justify an economic theory on a single year. It would have to be analysed over a period of several years to be proven accurate. Yet, if we examine such a theory, going back several years, it is not true. Nowadays, the workers, the people have many more social services than they had ten years ago. So, a theory which is only valid over a one year period is not a very strong one. That is what is annoying me in this theory. The Bishops, for whom I have a great deal of respect, call this the crisis of capitalism. Yes, but what ideology is not in crisis today? There is a crisis of socialism as well, a crisis of marxism, a crisis of communism and a crisis of all ideologies one can think of. All this is very interesting, but it is questionable. However, it is food for thought, and from this point of view, it is welcome.

Then the Bishops present us with a series of principles they would like to see implemented: social responsibility, co-operation between groups and regions. They would also like us to give top priority to the fight against unemployment as against, I suppose, the fight against inflation. I am naturally curious. I looked at the document, which states that the number one problem right now is unemployment. This means that further along the line the number one problem might be one of capital, or the need for capital. However, if the concern is for the worker, if labour is to be the basic concern, the fight against unemployment should always have priority. Either this is an all-inclusive, an absolute principle, or it is not. If this it is not an absolute principle, then it is a relative one. But after having established the priority of labour principle, how then can they consider situations in which capital should have top priority! I am very ill at ease with that kind of reasoning.

Further on they advocate an anti-inflation policy which is more equitable. They seem to be pressing for some kind of a price control like the one we had with the Anti Inflation Board, which I had the pleasure or displeasure to chair. This also is highly questionable. It is quite possible both to attend mass and to believe that a six and five policy is a better approach to economic restraint than the one advocated by the Anti-Inflation Board. This is interesting, but questionable.

Further on, they say that we should tax investment incomes, refrain from slashing budgets and social services, maintain health services, help the unemployed. And then there is a phrase that I have not appreciated at all, one that I find fault with: "Counter to policies . . .advocated by governments." I did not like that. A distinction should have been made. They should have said: "Not enough" rather than "counter to". And looking at this ... I could recall three pages, five pages of measures taken by this Government in the areas of help for the unemployed, job creation, job maintenance, construction and so forth. It is somewhat boring to be told, "counter to policies advocated by governments". In my view, such a reproach is much too encompassing. And still further on, the Bishops are suggesting measures that are still more specific, some of which I would again like to argue from a viewpoint the opposite of that held by the Bishops. For instance, that kind of concern they have for labour-intensive industries. That also is questionable. And considering especially that the same Bishops, God bless them and me also, do not hesitate to state that external aid should take other forms than the mere supplying of wheat, or otherwise, that we should help developing nations create an industrial base, and so forth, and it is indeed in those so-called soft sectors that those developing nations have the best opportunity for industrial development.

There is a paragraph for instance where there seems to be not only contempt for, but to some extent, a fear of machines. That also was not to my liking. There are other places where they refer to self sufficiency, the need to control foreign investments, not to have—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired. He could only continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No. Are there any questions, then?

• (1530)

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister. Instead of publicly criticizing the Catholic Bishops who have leadership responsibility for half the population in this country, why did the Government, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), not deem it fitting and appropriate to meet with the Bishops to discuss their paper?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I do not keep track of the Prime Minister's agenda, but I remember vividly that he met some very few days before the Bishops' letter came out with the Catholic Bishops. My hon. friend must realize that this document was written by a committee of the Conference—I do not know the exact word—of the Bishops of Canada; it was not a document of the Conference. I recall, and I am sure my colleagues remember also, that the Prime Minister had met with them. However, this is not a document which is addressed to the Government of Canada. This is a document which is addressed to the population. I do not believe that Governments have to react to documents of this type, and answer them item by item. The Hon. Member was, I believe, wise enough and kind enough to put it on the agenda for today's debate, and I thought we had an opportunity to express some of our views on it.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is referring to a meeting which took place with the committee of the Catholic Bishops on the nuclear question before the statement was issued. I would like to put this proposition to the Minister. Is the Minister saying that if a Cabinet committee brings in a decision, that that is not a decision of the Cabinet but merely of the Cabinet committee? That is the thrust of what he is saying in terms of trying to discount what the committee on social policy of the Canadian Catholic Conference of Bishops said by claiming they did not in fact speak for the Bishops. But surely the document is important enough, and the source is important enough, for the Government to sit down and discuss it with the Bishops, and I regret that the Government has not seen fit to do that.

Mr. Pepin: Well, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend can regret that. That is all right. I would like to ask him if he has met with his Bishop on the subject. I have. A number of my colleagues have also. That was one way of reacting and expressing our views. I do not believe a formalized meeting was needed to discuss each item. Again, my information and knowledge is that the Prime Minister had met with a group of Bishops some very few days before this document was printed.

Mr. Waddell: I would like to be present, Mr. Speaker, when the two Hon. Members who last spoke go to confession in front of their priest or their Bishop. It would be interesting. I wonder if the Minister finds it ironic, perhaps deliciously ironic, if I could put it in his words, that in the past the Bishops in Quebec called the Liberals the "rouge Marxists". Now we have a situation where the Liberals are now calling the Bishops Marxists. It is rather deliciously ironic, it seems to me. The Minister did not seem to indicate that there was need of an industrial strategy at all. He spoke of pragmatism, flexibility and humility, all qualities of his Prime Minister who put him into the transport portfolio.

I would like to know if the Minister feels there is need of industrial strategy, or can we just continue to float in the country? Does he not feel that it was inevitable that someone like the Bishops would respond when you have a monetarist policy which tries to squeeze inflation out of the country by putting people, ordinary people who can least afford to fight back, out of work, and which provides pretty big profits for banks and other groups? Does he not think that it was inevitable that we would have the Bishops or church people calling it immoral? Does he not think that we must in fact have an industrial strategy for the future?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is a lawyer and he tends possibly to deform the thoughts of the criminals he happens to speak against. The Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) did not say that it was a Marxist document. He said there was a tinge. Perhaps someone can do that and get away with it in the sense that it invokes economic factors as the source and the cause of moral disorder in society. If I had been a Bishop I might have invoked the original sin as one of the causes. The preoccupation might have been slightly different. From that point of view, there is no doubt that the text has an economic philosophical preoccupation which reminds a person that he has already read that kind of preoccupation. All right? That is not being a Marxist. One can think without being stamped in that fashion. I said also that I was in favour of an industrial strategy which would be flexible, with all the words I have used to say it. I have said that I was in favour of an industrial strategy. I did say that, but I am reacting against the thought, the disposition, of some of those who see it as the nec plus ultra, the beginning and end of everything, and someone who thinks that some day some kind of genius, most probably from the New Democratic Party, will produce a document which will be called "The Industrial Strategy for Canada" and everyone will bow, and then the country will be happy forever and ever. That situation does not exist.

If I had the time I would read to my hon. friend some past documents of the NDP describing what an industrial strategy should be and I would show him very clearly that it has said everything on the subject in the past. At one point it was in favour of concentration on the development of natural resources. Today it is on the manufacturing kick. Tomorrow it may adopt a service kick. Your Party has changed all over the place and God be blessed for that. It proves that your intelligence is stronger than the prejudices you entertain.

• (1540)

Mr. Desmarais: If we have some time left, Mr. Speaker, could the Minister advise us briefly of his findings?

Mr. Pepin: It is simply this. An industrial strategy is a very contentious subject. I think that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley) is also involved, judging for instance from his recent statement that he had much more confidence in sectorial strategies than in one universal industrial strategy. That is a clever attitude, for surely the approach should vary when dealing with such diverse industries as the shoe, clothing or high-tech industries. I am sure he shares my views as to the importance of the approach. This should be emphasized. I repeat that an industrial strategy for Canada is a sort of ongoing process which never stops—it is not essential but existential—and it varies with the needs. In this context, to think as Members of the NDP and others do that an industrial strategy would cure all ills forever is a myth, and we should recognize it. To return to the Bishops' statement, I was very much impressed by some of the major and significant moral principles, views and recommendations which I found in it. But I also found views and concerns about various aspects of the industrial strategy which are highly questionable and which I just cannot buy. That is normal.

Mr. Prud'homme: Jolly good, jolly good show!

[English]

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, when the Bishops published their statement they sought a public debate on these issues. They have certainly got one going in the country. In the process, as we have seen this afternoon, they have traded their image of promoting a comfortable pew for making the Government benches rather uncomfortable.

To begin with, I want to pay tribute to the Bishops as I separate what they said in the first part of their statement as a critique from the second part, which goes into recommendations. I want to pay tribute to them particularly for the publication of their critique because they made a distinct contribution to understanding the value system in our society which has led to a situation where, as my friend the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) says, we now have 2,143,000 real unemployed, or 18.3 per cent. I wish to pay particular tribute to the chairman of the social committee of the Bishops who produced this statement, Bishop Remi De Roo of Victoria, who in his personal leadership has exemplified a commitment to the gospel values that the Church espouses. It is a commitment to enhancing social justice throughout Canada and the world.

As I was informed this morning by the offices of the Canadian Conference of Bishops, so far this statement has resulted in literally hundreds of forums and workshops being held across the country as people of diverse religions are examining what the Bishops are saying. I think that is good. One of those forums will be held soon in Toronto under the leadership of Cardinal Carter.

I also want to pay tribute to him for taking the lead in implementing what the Bishops are saying, not just criticizing the state of the economy and lamenting high unemployment, but actually taking concrete steps through the Archdiocese of Toronto where some $4.6 million of the Archdiocese's money will be combined with federal and provincial matching grants to produce a work program for some 700 unemployed people in Toronto. They will be put to work on a vast range of projects. I think that exemplifies the Church coming to grips in a real way with the problems the statement addresses.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are some weaknesses in the statement. In a moment I will come to what I see as a certain danger arising from the manner in which the statement was prepared. For the moment I will dwell on what the critique is all about and what the Bishops are really saying. The heart of their argument is that the present economic realities reveal a moral disorder in our society. We see that in the massive layoffs of workers and depleting Unemployment Insurance benefits, cutbacks in health and social services, all of which constitutes a social evil in the Bishops' eyes. I say Amen to that; they are absolutely right.

But their critique goes beyond the current economic turmoil and is really aimed at the value system in our society. For we have indeed, sir, produced a survival of the fittest society. Our way of life is geared to those who can keep up with the economic system, which demands relentless growth for success. Public policies, well intentioned though they may be, legislate for the healthy of the economic system and then hopes someone takes care of the casualties.

Who are these casualties? The chronically unemployed, the unskilled, the poorly educated, the minority groups of Indians, Metis and Inuit, the disadvantaged, infirm, aged, one-parent families and inhabitants of depressed areas. All of this, sir, has been labelled by the Senate report on poverty, headed by Senator Croll some years ago, as an ugly subculture within Canadian society.

So it is not only the Bishops who are questioning the morality of the theory in which the poor are supposed to be better off when the rich get richer. The Senate report declared that "there is a call to conscience in this land of ours. No matter how we redistribute income, whether by taxation, fiscal arrangements, capital gains, transfer payments or tariffs, in a very short time the same people end up with all the marbles".

That, sir, is but one illustration of serious critiques offered about our society by people who are serious social analysts. Now, I say to the Parliamentary Secretary that he played on dangerous ground this afternoon, and the Government allowed him to do so. I gave him the opportunity to say whether or not he believed the Bishops' critique was tinged with Marxism. I say clearly and emphatically that it is not a Marxist critique; it is one that many social analysts are offering about our society today.

The Parliamentary Secretary put his own Minister in a difficult position in trying to get him off the hook. I believe that to charge the Bishops with a Marxist analysis in what they have said is to reveal a bias for unfettered individualism. If we are going to have a society where the benefits can be applied to the common good, then we will have to put in place not just what the Bishops are saying but what it represents with regard to the church's teachings for at least 100 years.

What the Bishops said in their critique is not essentially new. They get headlines for the manner in which they said it, but the teachings go back to the first social encyclicals of the church, Rerum Novarum in 1890, Quadragesimo Anno some 40 years later, culminating in the most important encyclical of church teachings in modern times, Pacem in Terris, published by Pope John XXIII about 1958. This sets out, not in just a critique but in capsule form, the values which must be put into place and protected by public policy.

This afternoon I want to put on the record the values of Pacem in Terris, which is the antecedent of the Bishops' statement which we are debating this afternoon. It lists a series of human rights as follows:

> Every human being is a person, every person has the right to life, to bodily integrity, to food, clothing, shelter, rest, medical care and social services, to security in case of sickness, inability to work, widowhood, old age, unemployment or deprival otherwise of the means of subsistance through no fault of his own. Every one has the right to respect for his person, to his good reputation, the right to freedom in searching for truth and in expressing and communicating his opinions, the right to be informed truthfully about public events, the right to share in the benefits of culture. Everyone has the right to a basic education and to suitable technical and professional training, the right to free initiative in the economic field and the right to work under good working conditions with a proper, just and sufficient wage. Finally, everyone has a right to private property with its accompanying social duties, the rights of residence and freedom of movement, of membership in the human family and the world communities.

That is the end of that quotation from that encyclical, against which we must test public policies to see how good we are at fulfilling those rights and, of course, we can very clearly see, on the whole question of economic justice and benefits, that in putting so many people into unemployment, they have been deprived of basic rights.

This quotation, which is at the heart of Pacem in Terris, found its way into what I would describe as the centrepiece of the Church's teaching on social justice, which is found in the "Constitution of the Church in the Modern World", which was one of the final documents passed at the second Vatican Council in 1965. In there we find, not a manifesto of specific answers to each of the world's ills, but, rather, a pastoral message that the church should put its ideas and values at the service of the human family. It is that approach which has won a sizeable following in the number of international seminars and so on which have examined what the Church taught in terms of formulating a social teaching which is applicable to the modern world.

We see, in paragraphs 63 to 72 of the "Constitution of the Church in the Modern World", dealing with the socio-economic life, that the dignity of the human person is emphasized. It is stated: "For man is the source, the centre and the purpose of all economic and social life". The council declared that human labour must always be seen in its true dignity and that workers must never be treated as mere automata in the organization of a complex, productive process. What I would like the House to note is that the council stopped short of detailing what economic or political measures should be used to implement this teaching. Having kept the focus sharply on analysis and principles, the council did not impose specific measures which will always vary according to time and place.

We come to the second part of the Canadian Bishops' statement that we are debating here, for we see that they have plunged into specifics and, indeed, controversy. The Bishops wanted to be heard but, in so doing, they have diminished the acceptance of their valuable critique by risking the charge that they have entered into areas in which their competence as economists may provide some hindrance for them.

I just want to touch briefly on three of the areas. Indeed, the drafter of the NDP motion speaks specifically, not only in complimenting the Bishops for their sound economic advice, but also in speaking of the adoption of the specific recommendations which are contained within the Bishops' statement. I think that the authors of the Canadian Bishops' statement may be a little nervous at having realized that what they have put forth is being treated as being specific recommendations. However, I will leave that aside, for they did touch on three areas which are of some concern to me, which is why I am unable to give a full backing to the document, as much as I am in favour of the moral teaching, the critique and analysis of where we are as an inspiration for what we ought to be doing to repair the damage done to human beings.

The first area that I mentioned is the way in which they recommended the new forms of taxes on investment income. The Bishops have mentioned this and even advocated it. I feel, as I am sure many Hon. Members of the House do, that the creation of permanent jobs, which is at the heart of the Bishops' message, depends on massive investments which should not be impeded by more taxation. I believe that it is the taxation system of the country which has acted as an impediment to facilitating more and more investment which is at the heart of the creation of long-range, permanent jobs. That is a great debatable point.

I recognize that my friends in the NDP may not be in total agreement with what I have just said. Perhaps that is the point, that when we come into the House of Commons we are prepared to debate these various questions. However, I have some nervousness that the Bishops, putting out gospel values as they do in their critique, move immediately into a situation in which they are recommending higher forms of investment income.

Similarly, the Bishops' statement decries megaprojects, saying that they are not in favour of megaprojects. By that they mean large-scale nuclear plants, pipelines and hydro-electric projects. They say these are undesirable economic strategies. I am not so sure about that. I think the case can be made that what the country needs most at the moment is a huge massive project. I am thinking in terms of the CPR transcontinental railway, the Seaway or gas pipelines in the north. Those structures have a tremendous ripple effect throughout our whole economy, not just in the very areas where they are being built, for we know that the pipelines which have been contemplated and have gone down the drain, so to speak, would have produced enormous numbers of jobs right here in the heartland of Canada, in the industrial plants of Ontario. Therefore, I am not so sure that megaprojects are not an answer to the question of permanent jobs.

Similarly, the Bishops scorn the conversion to high-tech industries. I think that we are moving into a whole new modern era in which high-tech industries will be extremely important, and that if Canada fails to move ahead in micro-electronics and petrochemicals, we will forfeit trading gains to the fierce international competition which we face here in this country.

I do not want to be too critical of the Bishops for putting out their ideas. However, I am a little bit nervous about the NDP taking those recommendations and making them their own or, vice versa, that we are confronted with a motion which urges the adoption of the specific recommendations of the Bishops. I have just cited three to which many Hon. Members of the House and I would be unable to give assent.

It is precisely because I want the Bishops' critique and their moral teaching to be heard, and I want it to be unfettered by argumentation over their specifics, that I wish the Bishops would continue to put out their teaching and their stand, but that they would do it in such a way that they challenge Hon. Members of the House from all sides to respond to the moral imperatives which the Bishops have a perfect right to be teaching. I rather think that if future statements of the Bishops followed the lead given by the "Constitution of the Chuch in the Modern World" and the encyclicals going back over the past 100 years, giving us pastoral teaching and allowing the specifics to be debated, determining, by a judgment of the political process, what is best at a given time in a given place, the universality and the timeless nature of the teachings of the church would then be enhanced and protected.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I personally welcome the statement from the Bishops. In my opinion it was right and proper for them to make a comment to us in the Government. I thought they had that right as citizens and I believe they have that mandate as a church.

My personal tradition is in an activist Protestant Christian belief. I am from the United Church and at one time I thought seriously about becoming a clergyman in that church. I was drawn to the church, as I am to politics, by the opportunity to comment on my society and to work towards its improvement. I think that the same motives have clearly driven the Bishops in this instance. I suggest that it is the duty of the church to speak on the human condition. The Bishops have done so in this paper.

We clearly heard the statements from the Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) when I believe he quite properly quoted from documents setting out the fundamental ideas on social justice that have spurred the Bishops to go on and talk about our economy and our experiences in Canada.

Last week I personally met with one of the Bishops on a panel discussion, which turned out to be a debate although I did not see it as one. However, the audience saw it as so and their questions were posed as if it were a debate. The Bishop on that panel spoke about the moral values reflected in this statement. I talked about the specific steps followed by the Government in our recent activities. This led the chairman of the panel, Professor Gilles Paquette, to say that we had followed a classic behaviour in which the clergyman had taken the highroad and the politician had looked at the short run. I think he was right. I do not see those two avenues as contradictory paths to follow.

In fact, when I looked at the Bishops' statement I also recognized its two distinct parts. I heard the moral message in the beginning and, as I have just said, I appalauded it. I also saw the recipes, as Professor Paquette described them last week, behind their proposed cures. Today we have seen that those specific recipes arising from the concern are legitimate topics for debate and discussion. The recipes are areas where people differ. They in fact reflect different points of view, different experiences and different ideologies on the world.

As always, some people will suggest that the recipe writers should get their facts straight or be ready for an argument and debate once they have given their recipes. But that does not detract from the importance of making the statement in the first place. It also does not detract from the importance of the moral message contained in the earlier part of the Bishops' document.

Generally speaking, I have found that the Bishops and politicians have agreed in their moral concerns. Politicians are also here because of their social conscience. I have discovered from working 20 years as an activist and now in the last couple of years as a Member of Parliament that my colleagues from all Parties are spurred by the highest of motives. It is my judgment that this could not be reflected any better than it was recently in Toronto when the church got together with the Government through its NEED Program with $11 million to provide hundreds of jobs for needy people. We witnessed the church dedicate more than $4.5 million and be matched with funds from political sources, the Ontario and Canadian Governments. It was an example of everyone coming together to try to create an answer to a very pressing problem. I believe this is the common ground between Government action and the Bishops' concern as indicated in their statement. We have a common concern and we saw in that example a social program that attempted to cure a demonstrable social ill.

As I have said, I believe that my colleagues in the NDP and the Conservative Party as well as my colleagues in the Liberal Party are in the overwhelming majority spurred on by the same imperative to improve our country and follow our own conscience in serving our fellow citizens.

During this recession we have seen the Government act out of these concerns. We have seen four practical steps followed which reflect the moral concern about the recession felt by Members on this side. First, I think we have indicated quite rightly that there are fundamental illnesses in our economy which must be cured. We could not act without addressing those basic facts and saying to the people, for example, that inflation has weakened our country. We could either provide some rubber patches to a leaky tire and attempt to restore the economy in a haphazard fashion, or we could address the very illness itself. I think it is imperative that we address the illness and cure it. That is what we have said should be the first step.

Second, we have said that we all must bear the burden during difficult times. We have not attempted to hide the fact that there are no magic answers during tough times. There is only hard work to get out of it. We have said that those who have the capacity should help get all of society out of trouble. We have been very clear on that issue.

Third, we have said that we will take the limited resources which we do have and direct them to the people who are most in need. While the vast majority will be asked to use their own resources, those who are most in trouble will receive help where they most need it.

Finally, we have said that it is acceptable, especially during tough times, to use the communities' resources and the Government's spending power to pull the whole country and specific people out of trouble.

I think that these four principles recognize that our country is part of the world and cannot exist in isolation no matter how hard we may want to try. It is not reasonable to try to isolate ourselves from events happening around the world.

We have seen this in my own riding in which there is a company called McDonnell Douglas. I am told that they have one of the most sophisticated machine shops for making aircraft in the world. They make the wings for DC-9s and DC-10s. During the past couple of years airlines have not been purchasing DC-9s or DC-10s and the only choice for the company was to stockpile the wings, which would not be reasonable, or to seek out new orders and aggressively rebuild. The company chose the latter course and DC-9s and DC-10s are being built again today. It would not have been reasonable for the company to fill warehouses full of DC-9 wings out of some misguided principle that we are an isolated autonomy.

Some of our hon. friends from British Columbia are in the House. They have seen the same impact on the lumber industry as a result of the decline in the American housing market. Our colleagues in Ontario and Quebec know the same impact has hit the mining industry and they know of the experiences we have had in cities like Sudbury. We export and we trade abroad. We are open and subject to these forces that come in on us from the outside world. This is our greatest strength and it would be necessary for us to protect our trading openness, not to close it during times of economic difficulty. We do not want to close our borders. We do not want a magic solution that would tighten up our economy. We want to make sure that the whole world keeps trade as open as possible so that we can deal outward into that world for our own good.

I think the approach the Government is taking recognizes that our fundamental economic trouble can be solved by common effort. We can get our house in order and when the problems in the outside world are solved we will be ready to take advantage. That was the thrust of our six and five program.

Mr. Riis: And two million people out of work.

Mr. Fisher: The whole point in the six and five program was that the Government could provide an example, but that Government action alone would not be enough. We would need other Governments at the provincial level, businesses, labour and co-operatives to join in with us—

Mr. Riis: And the old and the sick and the young.

Mr. Fisher: —and they did. People across the country gave us support. That is why that effort has been a success. Just as we said to people that each person must try to make a contribution, in the same way we said that our economic woes could be solved to a great extent by pulling together. We did not leave the great majority of people abandoned. Instead we tried to provide a focus, a target, for some co-operative effort which the majority could undertake.

As I mentioned earlier, we did not walk away from the victims of the worst impact of the recession. We tried to zero in specific help for these people.

Mr. Riis: By reducing pensions.

Mr. Fisher: That is why this Government has never had an apology for short-term job creation. We have never apologized for that. In fact, we are proud of our record. People who have short-term difficulty need short-term help. We do not believe that is make-work. We believe that is legitimate economic assistance for people who need that help the most. I am proud of the record of short-term jobs for students in the summer time, a record reflected in the NEED Program—

Mr. Riis: What about full-time jobs?

Mr. Fisher: —and a record that is reflected in the Canada Community Development Program. All of these efforts are reaching out in a short-term way and extending financial assistance, and are a worthwhile effort for people who need both for a short while.

We can find other examples. We reached out to home owners in trouble through the mortgage renewal plan. We reached out to businesses in the worst circumstances—

Mr. Riis: How?

Mr. Fisher: —through the Small Business Development Bond.

Mr. Riis: That is not available.

Mr. Fisher: And we reached out to big businesses like Chrysler and Massey-Ferguson because their impact was so significant for the whole economy. We have no apologies for helping big or small business when the whole country prospers as a result. Not only do the workers prosper but so do small businesses, other businesses, individual operators and communities who rely on these large operations as well as small ones. We reached out to the farmers last June through the $400 million addition that we put into the Farm Credit Corporation.

We have seen this Government reach out to those most in need while we asked others to try to use their own resources to make do. This has been the area of the greatest dispute. Has the Government been able to do enough? Should the Government do more? Has the Government been spending too much? Should the Government spend less? These are the questions where the heart of the political debate on the recession has taken place. I welcome suggestions that would make us a more effective administrator of all of these programs.

Finally, as we have seen in this House, the Government has used communities' resources to stimulate the economy when no one else was prepared to do that. I am speaking about our spending. Can you imagine the situation, Mr. Speaker, if we had followed the advice from some quarters and cut back our spending?

Mr. Riis: What quarters?

Mr. Fisher: What quarters, our friend asks. I will keep the debate non-partisan.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fisher: I think if we had instead not increased our deficit, if we had not continued our spending and if we had not been concerned about our social programs, our economy would have been even flatter had we followed the advice of those who said our deficit was too high. Instead we used the deficit. The deficit, or Government spending, is a synonym for community resources and for Canada's resources. We used Canada's resources as a way to cushion those people about whom we have just spoken and who are most in need. We used those resources to spread out the hard times through time, to borrow against the time when the recovery comes and prosperity is returned. We borrowed from those more prosperous future times in order to give ourselves a bit of leeway and provide a bit of stimulus to our economy today.

Those are the actions the Government has taken in response to some pretty tough economic times. I think they arise out of the same sense of moral concern reflected in the early part of the Bishops' statement. I think we should welcome those statements. We need more of them, not only from the Bishops who have given us a moral imperative, but we also need lots of this kind of feedback from business people who can give us a very practical kind of recipe for our behaviour. We need to hear constantly and regularly from labour and co-operatives who can tell us very often, in as sophisticated a way as we can invent for ourselves, what we need to do to repair our economy.

Mr. Riis: But will you listen?

Mr. Fisher: I welcome these statements from the Bishops, Mr. Speaker. I hope the Bishops in turn will take the time to study what the Government has done. They will see that our focus has been, as they urge the creation of jobs and the opportunities for individuals, that we have tried to share our national wealth so as to create a safety net for those most in need. They will see if they look at what we have done over the past few years that we have tried to get to the basic motivators in our economy, to business and the private sector, and to give that part of our economy as much of a boost as we can.

Finally, they will see that we have tried constantly to bring our economy into our own hands and control so that it will indeed be our own national Canadian economy. Those are courses the Bishops urge us to follow. I think we have done much of that very, very proudly in very difficult times.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. Members rising to ask questions?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to put to the Hon. Member. I regret having to do it. He said that he was proud of the record in very difficult times. Is he telling the House that he is proud of the unemployment record in the country? Is he telling the country by his statement in the House today that he is proud of the fact that, notwithstanding the Government's efforts, there are still so many people unemployed and there is still such misery? Is he telling the House he is proud of the fact that a young person from my constituency who came to see me today said that she wanted her Member of Parliament to meet the most highly educated welfare recipient in the City of Nepean? Is he proud of that kind of situation? I would think the Hon. Member would regret saying that the Government has done its best. The Government has failed. Is that not a more honest face to put on the situation today?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, our good friend from Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said at the beginning of his statement he regretted having to ask the question. After hearing his question, I can understand why. Of course not. I do not think there is a politician alive who would undertake any action which would deliberately lead to the kinds of conditions the Hon. Member has described.

Indeed, it has been the motive on this side of the House to attack those conditions in two ways, as I tried to point out in my comments: first, to create jobs, long-term or short-term, but to create jobs needed to satisfy those conditions; second, when that has not been possible, to provide to people through the Unemployment Insurance Commission, the NEED Program, the Canada Assistance Program and all the other efforts which we undertake some short-term financial relief, in the form of social payments for which people have the right, and job opportunities in the form of short-term efforts such as Summer Canada for students, the NEED Program for people whose Unemployment Insurance benefits have ended, or community development projects for targeted groups. I do not think our record is one to back away from. Those have been our efforts to provide support for people in greatest need and to provide cures immediately and in the long term. Equally, we are spurred into that because of our dislike of and horror at the circumstances of people who are unemployed.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I just want to comment, as I may under the rules. The Member has really asked a question. I asked him whether or not he was proud of the results of the efforts and his answer was no. However, he said that he was proud of the efforts of the Government. I am not suggesting at all that the Government has made no effort. I am saying that the efforts have apparently been inadequate. I join with the Member in waiting until next Tuesday evening to see the adequacy of the measures brought forward by the Government in power to meet the very problems which he has outlined so eloquently. I believe there is a great responsibility on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to deal with those problems next week. I just wanted to ensure my hon. friend understood the thrust of my remarks.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, about three-quarters of the way through my speech I said that the practical details of any Government program will be the ones that provoke debate. We have just seen an example of that. Again I underline that I am pleased to see that 50 years of effort to build up a safety net by all kinds of Government, Tory and Liberal, has in fact provided at least a very high floor for people to rely on.

It is not a satisfactory position to be collecting Unemployment Insurance or to be receiving social assistance payments, but equally those are payments and support to which people are entitled. It is their right as Canadians to know that bad economic times will not destroy them personally. They are entitled to that. I am only saying now that I am proud of our record as a Government in creating a safety net for those unemployed people to whom the Hon. Member referred.

I am equally proud of our short-term job creation record and of our efforts to cure the long-term problem. Those cures are not there yet, I agree. The recovery is still coming, I agree. But at the same time the Government has provided some leadership and has tried to provide those cures.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of short questions for the Hon. Member. He outlined a variety of reasons for being proud of the efforts of the Government to reduce the unemployment rate. If one looks at the record, month after month one finds that the figures keep rising and there are more and more unemployed. We are now up to the officially adjusted limit of 1.6 million and climbing. There will be 900,000 young people coming on to the job market in the next ten weeks, seeking work in a very competitive environment. Those figures will rise even higher.

Other countries have virtually declared states of emergency because their figures have increased to around the 3 per cent range. They considered it a calamity or an emergency requiring extraordinary measures, not little job creation programs. Why has his Government not taken the same position when our figures are four times higher than the figures of these countries?

Mr. Fisher: Which country is less than 3 per cent?

Mr. Riis: Japan, for example, with 2.7 per cent. They declared virtually a state of emergency. Why did not Canada?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I believe the efforts undertaken by the Government indicate very clearly that we consider it an emergency and that in fact we have tried to cure the problem of these people. The Hon. Member keeps referring to little work programs and so on. I am sorry to say that I object to that. I believe that when unemployment around the world is at the 35 million figure, when our economy, which is an open trading economy, is limited by the weakness of our trading partners, and when our own internal economic forces are on the mend, then we take short-term measures to help people through the worst of the trouble. I do not object to that process. In fact, it seems better to offer people worth-while program such as NEED jobs, as the Catholic church in Toronto and the Government of Canada together have done. That is better than just giving people income because they can be proud of the efforts they contributed to society in the short term. I do not think there is anything wrong with short-term jobs. When people need help, they will take it one day at a time. They will not, as the Hon. Member does, call it short-term, little programs and so on.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, I have just a quick question concerning the pride of the Hon. Member in job creation. Could he explain how many jobs the National Energy Program created for Canadians and how many jobs were created by the acquisition by Petro-Canada of BP and Petrofina?

Mr. Fisher: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I do not have specific figures to give the Hon. Member. At the same time let me indicate that I would not think either the National Energy Program or those two acquisitions weakened our economy, unlike the dogmatic response we always get from that Hon. Member.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, do I have time to ask a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period provided for questions is within half a minute of expiring. The Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) is seeking the floor to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Thomson: I want to ask just a quick supplementary question. I did not ask in my question for the precise number of jobs created. I just thought the Hon. Member might have the courtesy to say that unfortunately the National Energy Program deprived 27,000 Canadians of jobs, which is the truth.

Mr. Fisher: Where did you get that figure?

Mr. Thomson: It is published information from the Independent Petroleum Association. It was independently arrived at. Surely to goodness the Hon. Member cannot stand in the House—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but the period of questions has expired. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) on debate.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Do I not have a chance to reply to that diatribe?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has recognized the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway for the purpose of making a speech.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I have enjoyed this debate today. I hesitate to say this because I will restrict some speakers, but I especially enjoyed the comments of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Maltais), the Liberal Member who last spoke, as well as those of Members on this side of the House, especially the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) and the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) who I understand wrote a book with Bishop De Roo. I think they all made very good contributions. It was clear to me, as it was probably clear to people watching this debate, that the Government feels very uneasy with this resolution and with the statement of the Bishops.

When we look at their statement, the Bishops are really saying that Liberalism can no longer deliver for the Canadian people. I can understand how the Government would be upset about that. We must find a whole new system both of distributing wealth in the country and occupying idle hands, the great tragedy at present in Canada.

That is what the Bishops said. It is what the Bishops were really talking about. It is the same message that we as Members of Parliament are getting from this country. I see the kind, scholarly and professorial Minister who tells me that there are no answers and that no consistent industrial strategy is possible.

I agreed to a certain extent. It is like when George Bernard Shaw said the golden rule is that there are no golden rules. Maybe there are no final answers. However, you can give people hope. There is the possibility of getting on the new wave and giving the country some direction. That is why the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) must go, and go soon. He is not prepared, nor is his Government, to give the country any solid direction. The country understands that and feels that way. We all get that message in our ridings.

The Government tell us to wait, the recovery is on the way, it is just around the corner. I ask the Government where that recovery is because there is no recovery in the life of this country. Maybe those playing the stock market, the bankers and the statisticians will barely notice it, but there is no recovery for the average man and woman in this country. I have just completed a tour of southern Ontario, the industrial heartland of this country. I asked the people whether the recovery was there. I kept getting the same answer: No, the recovery is not here. We have to pause and examine it.

What is the reaction of the Government to the Bishops? In one of my questions I stated that the Bishops' statement was inevitable. When you squeeze people out of work, including 25 per cent of our young people, you get some response. The Bishops' report is just the first response that this Government will get.

The first response of the Government was that the Bishops' report was tinged with Marxism. I believe that is what the Member said. You do not need to be a Marxist to have doubts about profits. Listen to this:

> Manufacturers complain much of the bad effects of high wages and raising the price and thereby lessening the sale of their goods both at home and abroad. They say nothing about the bad effects of high profits. They are silent with regard to the pernicious effects of their own games. They complain only of those of other people.

A Bishop? No. As a matter of fact, it was Adam Smith, the father of capitalist economics, who said that. You can be critical of a system and not necessarily be a Marxist. If the Government had any sense, it would understand that.

The second reaction from Government Members as reflected in one of their speeches was to tell the Bishops in essence to butt out, to leave politics to us and stick to religion. I sincerely hope, trust and believe the Bishops have had a lot more success with their religion than this Government has had with reference to its political economics.

The Bishops have struck a responsive chord in this country. They have told us that the Government is out of touch. The Minister spoke about not having a consistent industrial strategy. That is for sure. The Government has zigged and zagged all over the place. It told us it had an industrial strategy. It did not say it was a shifting one but a solid one, a job spin-off from megaprojects. That was the industrial strategy. When the megaprojects failed, the industrial strategy failed and there has been nothing to replace it.

Even future Liberal leaders are not giving us any hope. I refer to John Turner and Donald Macdonald. When John Turner left this Government, he quickly aligned himself with the people who control our economy. He is or was on the board of the Canadian Fund, the Canadian Investment Fund, Canadian Pacific, Credit Foncier, MacMillan Bloedel, Marathon Realties, Bechtel and so on. What is he offering the country? It seems there is nothing there in the new Liberalism.

Donald Macdonald, who is or was on the board of McDonnell Douglas, Shell and Dupont, is getting $800 a day to bribe the economy. The people in Vancouver-Kingsway are damn mad about that. They see this big shot getting all this money while they have to suffer and bear the burden of unemployment—and there is a lot of unemployment in British Columbia, especially in the forest industry.

What are we getting from the Government? We are not getting any policy. We do not seem to have any true direction. We are asked to wait and see and hope that we will get out of the recession. It is the Tinker Bell mentality. Like Tinker Bell, if you wish hard enough, you will fly and you can then fly out of the recession.

The Bishops raised another point that I want to touch upon, and that is distribution of income. The Economic Council of Canada said the gap between the most and least affluent is growing. Between 1970 and 1977 the wealthiest Canadians saw their wealth increase by 3.5 per cent and their debts go down by 6 per cent. The neediest, on the other hand, saw their wealth shrink by 13 per cent and their debt jump by 32 per cent. The combination of high interest rates and high unemployment that has marked the 1980s threatens to accentuate that disparity. In other words, the situation will get worse. There will be a further distribution of income. That is what the Bishops were talking about.

Other people in response to the Bishops, notably Canada's most powerful lobby, the Business Council on National Interest, simply avoided the fact that the Bishops pointed out that 20 per cent of Canadians are getting 42.5 per cent of the income. The Business Council and the Conservative Party have taken a rather simple world view, and it is this. They see the world as still a simple place where inflation is the main cause of unemployment. To cure the recession, inflation must fall. Then interest rates will follow and people will spend and business will invest. Growth will return and jobs will be created. In a nutshell, that is basically the Conservative policy.

It would be nice to have a world so easily manipulated, but there are real concerns that we are losing jobs that will never return. The Bishops spoke about the rapid movement of capital from one country to another. They said, and I quote:

> —the tendency to treat people as an impersonal force having little or no significance beyond their economic purpose in the system.

You may not want to accept what the Bishops say, Mr. Speaker, but it is clear that the Bishops are right on. Canada's economy is in a crisis. You see evidence of that crisis when you talk to people across this country.

I want to talk a bit about my trip to the industrial heartland of Ontario. I think it focuses some of the issues. I want to predict what we will see in the future as a result of some of the things I have learned. I met with a group of unemployed workers in Welland. With a little help from the union but not much help from anybody else, they formed their own group. This was the first of seven of those groups that I met. It was, if you like, organically formed. I want to tell what they said to me, and I will use their words. They said: "Mr. Waddell, at first we felt being unemployed was like a cancer. You do not want to say that you have the cancer. You do not want to say that you are a bum. We are not bums. We are well educated." I met people in unemployment groups who had finished high school, gone to community college and been retrained. I actually met a fellow who had been retrained twice.

When I attended university in the early sixties, I had Professor Marshall McLuhan, a notable professor. I remember him telling the class that people will have to be retrained three, four, five or six times in their life. I never believed that, but I saw it with my own eyes in Welland and St. Catharines. Can you believe that in modern Canada I saw a soup kitchen in a church in Welland? I met with the Welland Council and the Thorold Council and the Hamilton Council, the St. Catharines group, the Niagara group, the Windsor group, and I will tell you what they told me about the Government's economic program. They told me these NEED Programs do not work, that they are temporary programs, that they make no sense. In Windsor they were counting dogs: that was one of the programs. In another case they were cleaning brush in St. Catharines. They said that there are jobs to be done, there are bridges to be built, there are sewers to construct, there are traffic lights to be fixed, and so on. Forget this bureaucracy and give the money to the municipalities to hire contractors and pay decent wages to create proper jobs.

NEED has created 60,000 jobs. We are going to have a million people go off the Unemployment Insurance rolls in the next year. With 13 or 14 per cent unemployment I have my doubts whether our UIC and welfare systems can survive in the next year. It is that much of a crisis in the country.

I met with the municipal Councils of Welland and Thorold and I asked their civil servants and staff if they could provide me a list of the industries in their area. They provided a list of all the little manufacturing plants. I found that they all had dropped about 20 to 25 per cent in the last year, that many of them are foreign owned and the money is being drained out of the country. I will give an example of a company in Thorold, Ontario Paper, that had closed down and was re-tooling. When they finished re-tooling, getting into high-tech, they did not bring back their full shift, so people were laid off. Consistently in every company as you go through the list there is a 20 to 25 per cent reduction.

I met with some fruit growers there, a small business. They said: "We are no longer canning things here; we used to can fruits, ands so on, but we no longer do that". I had breakfast in the Holiday Inn and I had some apricot jam as I looked out at the apricot trees. The jam I had was canned in Salinas, California, and it was labelled in Spanish and Japanese. Industries are moving rapidly out of Canada. We have a crisis here.

I met with the Unemployed Action Alliance in Niagara Falls, and I predict that we are going to see a much more militant group. I will tell you how bad it is. I met with a minister in Windsor and he said that the teacher told his eldest son: "It's too bad, boy, that you were born when you were born". And the boy came home and said to his father: "My young brother, was he born at a better time?" I mean, that is a real tragedy. We have youths sitting at home because they cannot get a job. They cannot get Unemployment Insurance. They cannot get welfare. They are at the charity of their families. You know what it is like if you have a post-teenager, early twenties, sitting around home. He or she should not be sitting around home but should be out on their own.

I kept running into all those difficulties. I cannot go into the full details but maybe I can summarize a little. The Mayor's committee on unemployment in Hamilton has good people, Liberals, Conservatives, New Democrats, people of all stripes trying to face this thing. They are telling us that we have got to have co-operation, and I agree with some of the Members who said that. When I met with the Mayor's committee, we had delegations there. Again they told me there is no economic upturn. They told me they were losing jobs. They asked about "Buy Canadian" policies, and what can we do about that. They asked about dumping of foreign goods and so on, and that is only natural.

They talked about some other things, too. They talked about a shorter work week. We have got to face that. We faced it before when we went from a 60-hour week to a 40-hour week. We have to face it in terms of perhaps getting more money to the people if they are only going to work three days a week. They talked about early retirement and maybe we have to go into that in a much bigger way. After all, there are some people that have their houses paid for while there are young families who have a house and a mortgage and the breadwinner is unemployed.

Let me tell the Liberal Government that this is not just the bottom of society, what Marx would call the lumpen-proletariat; this is the middle class now that is unemployed. This is going to have serious political repercussions for the Government.

We talked about retraining. We have to look at our retraining system again. We have to look at our Government sourcing systems again. In short, we have a national work crisis in Canada. It is there and we have to deal with it. It is hurting labour.

In Windsor, after the settlement with the auto workers, Chrysler has literally been taking all the jobs out of Windsor and sending them back to the United States. They are going to devastate Windsor. They are taking away all the parts jobs and now all we do is construct cars in Canada. We have to face that.

We have to face technological change. It is going to affect women in the workplace, women in offices. We are going to have the new technological office. Instead of hiring another secretary, my former law partners are probably going to have a machine when they expand. What are we going to do with these people? This is the kind of thing that the Catholic Bishops were getting at.

The Catholic Bishops talked about a different society and perhaps I can conclude by saying something about that. I want to refer to some remarks the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) made, and I am speaking for myself here. I do not believe in big Government either. I think unions have their role in Government but we do not have to be totally subservient to the big unions either. We need economic democracy in this country. We need to focus, I might say with respect to the Hon. Member for Edmonton South, not on the megaprojects. We have $1 billion spent on northeast coal in British Columbia. It is costing about $1 million per job. We should be looking at a community model, at a local model which people can relate to. The Hon. Member can understand that.

For example, co-ops can be producing food locally. There are local energy producers; there are all kinds of things we have not thought of. We should be looking at the "small is beautiful" philosophy. We should be trying to give people power. Crown corporations are the reason I raised the question today in the House of Commons about the Challenger matter.

I started my political career by challenging B.C. Hydro in Vancouver to try to give people some power in running that vast corporation. We should be speaking about decentralizing the Government, not centralist economic issues. We should be getting into health issues. We should be dealing with co-ops and housing. We can do much more in housing. There is a position for unions. Unions should co-operate with Government and with business. These are all the things that we are saying.

What the Bishops are getting at, as I said, is that Liberalism in the sense of large Ottawa Liberalism—I do not use that for the riding or the area, I use it in terms of the kind of zigzagging economic planning that we have had—is dead. It is finished. Whether you are on the right or whether you are on the left, as I am, you have to look at a whole new society.

Let me conclude by saying that what the Bishops said is really not new. Canadian poets and writers have said it. F. R. Scott is a good example. We as a Party in the NDP have said this for years. Frank Scott wrote a poem entitled "Laurentide". He said that Canada is a large country, silent, awaiting the struggle. Well, the struggle has come. The new era in economics has come and if we do not grasp it with an industrial strategy, then we are going to have a permanent unemployment rate of 15 or 20 per cent. As the bishops have said that will be a human tragedy.

In conclusion, last December the Bishops called high unemployment in a country of Canada's wealth immoral. We in the NDP agree with that. That is why we brought this resolution forward. What the Bishops have said and what I think we should be thinking of putting into practice is that a right to labour and to economic well-being is just as much a right as the right to freedom in our Constitution and in our great Charter of Rights—the right to personal, civil, political and legal freedoms. We should also be talking about economic rights.

I want to end my speech on that note and urge Members and the public to look at what the Bishops have said to us as Canadians.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member. In the final section of his speech, I think he was really getting down to the issue of how to repair damage that has been done. Let us agree that the Bishops are quite right to deplore the immorality of unemployment. But the Hon. Member is advancing the "small is beautiful" thesis as the answer to this immorality.

I want to ask him if he will consider and then agree with me that the world today needs such a tremendous amount of production to meet human need all over the world, such as housing, water, food production, that Canada has a role to play in increasing our productive capacity through mega-systems, high-tech and all the modern industrial processes. Indeed, we have an opportunity to increase productive capacity, to increase the size of the economic pie, if you will, and then to apply more fairly the system of distributive justice. But without a huge increase in the world economic pie, there is not going to be the opportunity to put in distributive justice. There is the argument.

• (1650)

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I would caution the Hon. Member not to get carried away, with respect, by the notion of high-tech. He could sound like an Atari Liberal. The present Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) sometimes gets carried away with that. We have a lot of high-tech. Our auto industry is a pretty high-tech industry. I am not sure how we are going to face high-tech. We are facing robotics already. Certainly we should have high-tech. But it is not the full answer. It only employs a small group of people.

A study was done by the Canadian Labour Congress recently of one of the first high-tech communities near the Boston area. It used to be a traditional community and salaries were pretty close together. After the high-tech boom had begun there were a few people who made a lot of money and a heck of a lot of people in the service industries making not as much. And it was not the same community working together with these very different wage levels. So I do not believe that high-tech is the main answer.

I do not believe that megaprojects are the main answer, either. There is an industrial strategy which we put forward based on trying to manufacture some of the raw materials we send out of Canada, working with our strengths—for example, our forestry and mining industry. That is obviously an answer, but it is not the complete answer. I was trying to open up an economic position which would fall in with the Bishops' statement because, to me, their statement really focuses on people. What will make people feel good living in the 1980s and 1990s in Canada? It has to do with some sort of work, but it has to be creative work, and they must have control over their lives in much more of a way than they have now.

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I did not know for certain if I would have the opportunity to speak in this debate this afternoon but I am pleased to do so for a number of reasons, one of which is that one of the authors of the Bishops' statement happens to be my Bishop and I had the opportunity to meet with him for a very meaningful discussion on this subject.

One of the first points His Excellency made is, where did the idea come from in the first place to issue this kind of statement? He said that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has asked in these difficult times for more dialogue from all quarters, because from dialogue comes understanding and the opportunity for debate on the way one may proceed in these complicated times. These have been adverse times for many Canadians, but not all. I believe we must keep our perspective on that because, Mr. Speaker, I am sure we all recognize that there are many of us in this country who enjoy a lifestyle that would be the envy of anyone in any other country in the world. However, for some, and for far too many, these are difficult times.

The Bishops are saying, along with the Prime Minister and his Government, that there is now the opportunity not only to look at the short term and to ask how do we get out of current problems—which we all recognize are part of a worldwide dilemma—but how do we, in seeking solutions to the present miseries of the country and of the world, find fundamental changes which will affect the future?

In our conversation, His Excellency and I discussed first of all where some of the problems lie. We are in a very rapidly evolving society. Much has been said about the unemployment figures in Canada and they are deplorable at this point in time. We can explain why this is; it is because of worldwide conditions, lack of consumer confidence, and so on. We forget to remind ourselves that many more jobs have been produced, but at the same time our society has changed dramatically in the past few years. While we were producing more jobs, more people were going into the workplace, and this is part of the fundamental problem at the moment. In the past there was one member of a household earning a living. In that same family group now we have two, three and four members in the workplace. That is wonderful. I do not deny them their right to work, Mr. Speaker. It does mean, however, that these people are now in the work force where ten or 15 years ago they were not, and that produces another dilemma.

His Excellency and I also discussed the fact that we are living in an era where we must have a change of attitude in the business community. It must have a great social conscience. It must think not only in terms of profit, which is the fundamental reason for being in business, the theory being that the profits then serve the rest of society and create more jobs, but also goodwill should not be forgotten.

We also talked about the need for those of us who are earning salaries to be a little more understanding of current situations. We have the NEED Program and job sharing programs in place, Mr. Speaker, which is part of the short-term solution and part of the bridge to better economic times. They are working but, unfortunately, there are those in society who say: "Wait a minute; I want more money to go into this area to create more jobs. I do not want to share my job ten years from now." We have that kind of thinking to deal with.

I would like to sum up the afternoon's debate by saying it must make the Bishops, and all of us in the country, feel very good to know we can have this kind of dialogue and that it is successful, because the main point of the Bishops' statement was to place on the table for Canadians the opportunity to take a look through fresh eyes at the dilemma we find ourselves in today in this country and around the world. Hopefully, through dialogue, understanding and above all goodwill and honest effort by all of us in society, we will find not only solutions but will set a trend which will carry us into the future with confidence and perhaps help us to evolve into a new society which will serve Canada well.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 62—GOVERNMENT COMMITMENTS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to live up to the commitments made in the Speech from the Throne on April 14, 1980, and for its conscious disregard for the practices of Parliament and the Constitution of Canada, and urges the Government to prorogue the current, unconstitutional Session of Parliament, convene a new Session, and outline its policies before Parliament in a Speech from the Throne.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion was moved by myself on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party for the following reasons: first, to point out the Government's abject failure to carry out the program of policies enunciated in the Speech from the Throne; second, to bring before this House a serious question relating to the actions of the Government and its constitutional obligations; third, to point out the importance of the Speech from the Throne in the legislative process; and fourth, to sound a warning as to the dangerous precedents which are being set by this Government.

My colleagues following in the debate will examine the sorry record of the Liberal Government. I wish to begin the debate by examining the circumstances which have brought about our argument that this is an unconstitutional session of Parliament. I would also point out that this is the longest session of Parliament since Parliament began is 1867.

Mr. Smith: The most productive, too.

Mr. Lewis: I then wish to deal with the reasons we feel there should be a new session of Parliament and a new Speech from the Throne.

We have brought this matter to Parliament by way of debate rather than a point of order on the basis that the Speaker would refuse to deal with it because it is a point of law rather than procedure. My procedural argument relates specifically to Section 20 of the British North America Act, which states:

There shall be a session of the Parliament of Canada once at least in every year, so that twelve months shall not intervene between the last sitting of Parliament in one session and its first sitting in the next session.

If my interpretation of that Section is correct, it would appear that this sitting of the House was improperly convened and, indeed, all of the sittings which have been held since the end of 1981 have been unconstitutional. If the sittings of the House have been contrary to the provisions of the Constitution, it follows that the business dealt with by the House during this period is invalid. Section 20 is quite clear. It states that there shall be a session of Parliament at least once in every year.

• (1110)

The term "session" is defined at page 259 of the Nineteenth Edition of Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice as follows:

A session is a period of time between the meeting of a Parliament, whether after a prorogation or a dissolution, and its prorogation.

It is further stated at page 278 that the usual practice in the United Kingdom is for a session to run from October to October.

In Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 162, a session is defined as follows:

A session is a period of time between the meeting of a Parliament and its prorogation. There are a number of sessions within a Parliament, each lasting approximately one year.

In stipulating that there must be a session of the Parliament of Canada at least once in each year, Section 20 of the BNA Act requires that a new session be entered into each year. There is no stated upper limit on the number of sessions that can take place in a given year, but there is a provision that there must be at least one session of Parliament each year.

If there could be any doubt about the intent of Section 20, it is removed when one considers the second part of the Section which reads:

So that 12 months shall not intervene between the last sitting of Parliament in one session and its first sitting in the next session.

The effect of this portion is to ensure that Parliament will meet at least once every 12 months in a new session. Some may argue that that could be taken to mean that there must be a sitting of the House in each year and that there is no requirement for a new session. If one follows this line of reasoning, it would be argued that the requirements of Section 20 would be met, and that appears to be the line of reasoning that the Government is following in extending the first session of Parliament from April 14, 1980 to the present. We must ask ourselves if this is what was intended when the British North America Act was written.

We researched some of the precedents and writings about that period. We specifically looked at a book written by Joseph Pope entitled "A Series of Hitherto Unpublished Documents Bearing on the British North America Act (1885)". There is a reference in that book to a motion moved on Thursday, October 20, 1864, by the Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald to establish an annual session, and that motion was passed unanimously. There were certain changes made when it was translated into Section 20 of the British North America Act but there was no doubt, if one reviews the precedents, that the wording of Section 20 was intended to mean that there will be a new session of Parliament each year.

There is no confusion because Section 20 distinguishes between the words "session" and "sitting". By referring to the last sitting of one session and the first sitting of the next session, it is clear that Section 20 did not refer to continual sittings of the same session but that there should be a new session in each year.

If we proceed from there to Section 5 of the Canada Act of 1982, that Section reads as follows:

> There shall be a sitting of Parliament and of each legislature at least once in every 12 months.

I would point out to the House that the Provinces have and are following as closely as possible the practice of having a Speech from the Throne and new sessions on almost an annual basis. In fact, the Province of Ontario will begin a new session today under the Government that was elected in 1982.

Mr. McGrath: Some of them occur twice a year.

Mr. Lewis: As my colleague says, some Provinces have new sessions at least twice a year. Therefore the Provinces are following the intention of the Fathers of Confederation that there shall be annual sessions.

If Section 5 of the Canada Act had applied throughout the first session of this Parliament, there would be no question as to the constitutionality of the present sitting. But we argue that the Canada Act was proclaimed in 1982 and its effect began as at that time. Until the Canada Act was proclaimed Section 20 of the BNA Act was the precedent that should be looked to. Because the first session of the Thirty-Second Parliament lapsed at the end of 1981, this current session is unconstitutional.

• (1115)

Therefore Paliament should be properly summoned to begin a second session because the first session lapsed on December 31, 1981. We are not suggesting that all of that legislation be thrown out. We are suggesting the matter could be referred to a special or a standing joint committee for urgent study, that omnibus legislation giving retroactive effect to the proceedings of Parliament that have occurred since December 31, 1981, could be passed quickly in a new session.

I want now to shift to the reasons we believe it is important for the Government to lay out its policies in a Speech from the Throne. In part, the answer to that question is that it is the most fundamental right of Parliament to insist upon knowing how the public resources ought to be used before granting authority to the Government to tax, to borrow or to spend. It has been the practice of Parliament in the past to require the Government to come before Parliament on an annual basis to lay out its broad program in a Speech from the Throne and, following this, to lay a budget before Parliament as an outline of the Government's specific plans. It should then place legislation before Parliament requesting Parliament to grant its authority to carry out the plans which Parliament has approved.

This Government has continually attempted to erode the rights of Parliament, our rights as Members on behalf of our constituents. Its refusal to begin another session is one more example of that attitude. For the moment, the Government wishes to dispense with Speeches from the Throne and debates in reply to those Speeches.

The next logical step in this assault on Parliament's rights would be to abandon the traditional budget presentation and the debate on the budget. Just as with the Speech from the Throne, the Government could argue that there is no constitutional or legal necessity to have a budget presentation and debate. Indeed, the 1968 rules changes together with the increasing tendency of the Government to rely on what are called economic or financial statements, as it did on October 20, 1977, April 21, 1980 and October 27, 1982, rather than on full-fledged budgets, is an indication that the Government has considered this possibility. We suggest this is a dangerous precedent that should now be laid to rest.

It is important for the Government to lay its programs before Parliament because there is an effort required to compose and debate those policies as part of an overall program which bring consistency and direction to Government policy making. The lack of regular sessions and Speeches from the Throne coincide with an ad hoc system of decision making under which this Government has operated over the past few years. What about its mounting deficits? The Government has failed to come to terms with the broad social and economic problems facing us as a nation. We have to insist on our traditional rights so that those rights of the Canadian people are not lost as this Government totters along.

Last week the Premier of Ontario, Premier William Davis, stated there would be a Speech from the Throne to outline his Government's plans and directions for the next fiscal year. He said, as reported in the Toronto Star for April 17, 1983 in an article written by Robert Duffy:

> Preparing this document is something that we look forward to because it gives us an opportunity to step back from the hurly-burly of daily Government and take a longer view of how we can help make Ontario a better place to live.

Mr. Duffy makes the point that the simple truth is that all of the issues facing Queen's Park are immediate, that there is not much room left for long-term planning. We suggest that although that may be the case in Ontario, in Canada there are immediate problems which were not faced in the original three-year-old Speech from the Throne that quite frankly is out of date. The author goes on to say:

• (1120)

> —the ancient parliamentary tradition that lies behind the Speech from the Throne is something that ought to be preserved—if possible. In Britain, which is where our tradition comes from, it carries some weight as a Government statement by the sovereign.

If the Government were to take that concept and bring in a new Speech from the Throne addressing the problems of today, it would be welcomed by all Canadians.

On Tuesday, April 12, The Citizen of Ottawa made the point that Parliament has been sitting since April 14, 1980 without the benefit of a Throne Speech, a sense of Government direction or even a hint that the Government knows what it is doing. It went on to suggest that the nation was ill-served by the Government's unwillingness to clean things up and start with a more or less clean slate.

On Wednesday, April 13, The Toronto Sun made the following point again:

Traditionally, each session of Parliament begins with a Throne Speech outlining policies. Throne Speeches are usually made once a year because circumstances change and policies have to adapt them.

On April 14, 1980 the Liberal Government brought down a Speech from the Throne. On that day or in or about that time, unemployment was 7.5 per cent. Today it is running at 12.5 per cent and over two million Canadians are out of work or have simply given up looking for work because the Government has not addressed the problem. Back in 1980 the deficit was $12.7 billion. It is now at $27.2 billion with estimates changing daily. Personal bankruptcies have risen substantially, over 50 per cent in the first two months of 1983 as opposed to the first two months of 1980. Interest rates were at 13.5 per cent in 1980. They rose to an horrendous, crippling mortgage interest rate of 22 per cent. They are now down to 12 per cent and 13 per cent, but the Government has done nothing to ensure on a long-range basis that there will be mortgage interest deductibility or mortgage interest rate protection.

There is no protection at all for business people who suffered the same horrendous climbs in prime interest rates from 10 per cent in 1980 to as high as 21 per cent in 1981. It is down now but there should be a Speech from the Throne to address the current problems facing Canadians. We suggest that we should not be operating on a three-year-old Speech from the Throne.

In conclusion, I reiterate our position with respect to the legality of this session of Parliament. I reiterate our solutions, which are not designed to tie up time but to make everything legal. I urge the Government to reconsider its refusal to prorogue, and to bring in a new Speech from the Throne so that we can take time as representatives of the people to assess Canada's opportunities and problems and come up with new approaches. Also I urge the Government to give the country a new sense of direction and to indicate to the people that it is addressing the problems of the day, not running from hole to hole in the dike plugging a finger in here and a finger in there without any overall plan.

Mr. Nielsen: The Prime Minister has got the finger.

Mr. Lewis: The Government should be like a business reporting to its shareholders, or like an organization reporting to its Members. There should be annual reports and financial statements. The Government should review what happened in the past year. Then, as in every shareholders' meeting or every meeting of members of any organization, it should look forward and state new policies. I urge the Government to stop drifting on old policies and old theories which may have been applicable in 1980 but are certainly not applicable today, and to do that by proroguing and bringing in a new Speech from the Throne to give the country some sense of direction.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are Hon. Members rising to ask questions of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis)? If not, the Chair will recognize the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard).

• (1125)

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I first want to comment on the implicit misrepresentation of the constitutional requirement that a session of Parliament be called less than 12 months after the previous session is prorogued. That is included in the motion of my colleague, the spokesman for the Official Opposition on House business. He has quoted from the Constitution Act of 1867, I hope, and not from the British North America Act as he said. The quote is:

There shall be a session of the Parliament of Canada once at least in every year, so that twelve months shall not intervene between the last sitting day of the Parliament in one session and its first sitting day in the next session.

That is what is included in the Constitution Act of 1867 and not in the Canada Act, which was a British Bill. The Section states that there shall be a session in every year without 12 months lapsing in between. That is all it says. It does not say that there shall be a new session ever year without 12 months in between. That is the essence of the argument.

This is the point that has to be made. Nothing in our Constitution says that there must be a new session in every year. That is exactly the point. I submit very respectfully that my hon. friend failed in making the point that we have breached the Constitution of Canada. The fact is that there was a session in 1980, there was a session in 1981, there was a session in 1982 and there is a session in 1983. Even if it is the same session, the law has been fulfilled.

On the occasions when sessions have gone more than one year, there have been good reasons for the Government to prolong the session. Legislative catch-up was a factor in 1966-1967. It was also a factor in 1974, 1975, 1976 and in the present session. Massive legislative reform was a factor in 1970, 1971, 1972 and in the present session. Blind obstruction was a factor in 1964, 1965, 1966, 1967 and in the present session.

It is most interesting that in those previous sessions the Official Opposition had in its ranks such legal and parliamentary giants as John Diefenbaker and Ged Baldwin, and they did not object on constitutional grounds. The fact is that only once in recent years has a Government unnecessarily, albeit constitutionally, delayed meeting Parliament. The head of that Government was Joe Clark. The delay in 1979 was longer than any since Diefenbaker in 1962.

• (1130)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, when I heard about the motion moved by the Progressive Conservative Party's official spokesman for the Business of the House, I must admit I was very surprised to find it contained allegations that we not only disregarded the Constitution—which is not the case, as I indicated earlier—but also that we disregarded the practices of Parliament. Coming from a Party that literally laid siege to Parliament for sixteen days by preventing it from operating, this is surprising, to say the least, and I think it does not say much for that Party's credibility.

I would like to use the few moments I am allowed to mention and briefly explain the reasons why this particular session, as many others in the past, as I indicated earlier, has been going on for such a long time for three years, in fact. I think there are three main reasons for this situation. First of all, we must remember that this session followed a period during which we were faced with two elections in less than one year, and during that time, a backlog of legislation had accumulated. To deal with this backlog, it was necessary to use the first several months of this 32nd Parliament to pass the legislation. You will remember that as a result of the two elections in less than a year, a host of procedural problems had to be resolved by the present Government. The House will also remember that the estimates for two fiscal years, almost three, had not been adopted, that the rules regarding the business of supply were no longer being applied, that time allocation provided by the Standing Orders was no longer effective, and that as a result, as Leader of the Government, I had to negotiate with representatives of the Opposition in order to reach a substantial and major agreement by which we could approve the estimates for two fiscal years, straighten out the business of supply and dispose of our legislative backlog. All this has taken a great deal of time, and that is one of the reasons why this session has been unusually long.

A second reason is the nature of the Throne Speech of April 1980. This Throne Speech was so substantial, in that it contained such major reforms in various areas, that it is now quite understandable why it took so long to deal with certain parts of the Throne Speech, and why this has been such a long session. My colleagues will recall the debate on constitutional reform, patriation of the Constitution, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the new amending formula that will enable us to amend our own Constitution without asking another country's permission, and the fourth element of our constitutional reform, which enshrines the principle of sharing and equalization, of sharing wealth among the richest and the most deprived regions of our country. Constitutional reform has therefore made demands on the time of the House. It was an unusual proposal that no other Party had ever had the courage to make.

Following the constitutional reform, another major reform, also announced in the same Throne Speech and which concerned the energy problem, was on the agenda. We introduced a National Energy Policy, which also made demands on the time of the House, as Hon. Members will recall, although the Progressive Conservative Party showed a blatant lack of concern on this occasion, when instead of having a sensible debate on this Bill, they prevented Parliament from sitting by letting the bells ring for sixteen days, a childish and irresponsible act. Nevertheless, it was a major reform in the energy field and was also part of the list announced in April 1980.

Another major reform and other measures that were necessary in the circumstances were adopted with respect to the economy. Up to now, we have had three budgets, and all the measures arising from those budgets have of course put demands on the time of the House of Commons, and in view of the urgency of the situation and the specific characteristics of the recession we have been experiencing during the last few months, we are preparing to bring down a fourth budget tomorrow evening. My learned colleague is therefore unrealistic in moving that Parliament be prorogued in order to have a Throne Speech in which the Government would state its major priorities and to have eight days of debate on the Throne Speech, before allowing the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to bring down his budget and propose measures to deal with the economic situation, which, in my opinion, requires urgent action.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, during the last three years we have seen major reforms which were announced, with considerable courage, in the same Throne Speech, I am proud to say, which for once in the history of Canada, proposed a host of unprecedented measures which quite naturally met with opposition and placed considerable demands on the time of the House of Commons.

Throughout these major achievements which made history and of which we should all be extremely proud, we managed to have 162 Bills passed by this Parliament. This is above average, considering that in sessions lasting one year, Parliament normally produces about 48 or 50 legislative measures. So in three years, as I just pointed out, 162 Bills were passed, which is above average. When we complain that Parliament is not producing enough, the Opposition retorts: but having said that Parliament has produced more than usual how can you say that Parliament is not producing enough? My answer to that is that Parliament must evolve, and that in a modern society, the demands being made on Parliament are increasing, and that if Parliament is to respond to those demands, it must be flexible enough to adopt the measures that are necessary to cope with the demands on our times. What was an acceptable average ten years ago is no longer acceptable today, so that although compared to previous sessions, we are above average, much progress remains to be made, if this institution is to reflect the reality of our times, to respond to the demands of modern society, to take on its responsibilities and to govern a State as important and as vast as Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the third reason, after the first and the second—these were the backlog of legislation as a result of two elections in less than a year and the major reforms contained in the speech from the Throne in April 1980 and started and completed by this Government—the third reason, as I said, is the systematic obstruction by a Party that is in the Opposition and that constitutes the official Opposition, a Party that unfortunately has never been able to accept its defeat in the February 1980 election, a fact that, as I said before, has affected its conduct in the House, a Party that, unfortunately, has a shortage of ideas and has no specific, concrete policies to offer the Canadian public, contrary to those proposed by the Government.

I do not think I have to dwell on this aspect of my speech, since Hon. Members may wish to refer to a statement made by the former Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party when before Christmas, in Quebec, and this was quoted in a number of newspapers, he gave a very straightforward answer to a very straightforward question. He was asked: Considering the present recession, what would you do, as Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and if you were in power, to remedy the situation? What would you do that would be different from what the Liberal Government is doing now? The then leader of the Progressive Conservative Party answered as follows: We would not do anything different. We have no miracle solution. We would not do anything different from what the present Government is doing.

That is one of the reasons why the Official Opposition has no alternative solutions, is not proposing policies and has no ideas. This is not new. It was the same during the debate on the Constitution and on energy legislation. I also recall that during the debate on the Constitution in the House, the Official Opposition was very active, and by active I mean it engaged in dilatory tactics and actions aimed at insulting the Chair and at quite simply delaying the passage of Government proposals. The changes that were made to the Constitution were not proposed by the Progressive Conservative Party. Those amendments were the result of negotiations with the Provincial Premiers and of a ruling made by the Supreme Court of Canada. The only thing Members opposite can say in reply to that argument is: yes, but it was thanks to us if you had discussions with the Premiers, and we kept the House at a standstill for a while to give the Supreme Court an opportunity to render its decision. Well, that is precisely the point I am making: the arguments of the Opposition were strictly technical and it was only by accident that the Progressive Conservatives did contribute quite involuntarily to improve the resolution we had introduced for debate. That is a fact, Mr. Speaker, a fact which proves that the Progressive Conservative Party is a party without new ideas, a party without any policy. The people of Canada know that, and it explains why they chose to filibuster our constructive proposals—they have no alternatives to bring forward.

In the energy policy debate, Mr. Speaker, we introduced a hefty Bill, I agree, but instead of coming up with solutions of their own—

An Hon. Member: It was the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm)—

Mr. Pinard: —no, that proposal did not come from the Hon. Member for Peterborough, it came from the Government. They asked that the Bill be split. We agreed to that, saying that we would sit down, debate the Bill and negotiate, but instead of proposing measures likely to improve our national energy policy, the Opposition was content with hijacking Parliament, assaulting the House and preventing its elected representatives from expressing their views. What a stupid way of voicing objections! In my opinion, an intelligent opposition means speaking, arguing, debating, advocating new ideas. But no, short of ideas the Opposition chose to keep the bells ringing for 16 days. It may be a coincidence, Mr. Speaker, but 16 days is the time it takes to have two throne speech debates. Unfortunately, Members opposite decided to ring the bells, bring Parliament to a standstill, prevent Members from speaking, and particularly free the Official Opposition from its responsibility to make constructive suggestions to improve the energy policy.

That is the second example of the kind of filibuster which the Official Opposition has resorted to so far in this session. This is why I said earlier that I had to smile at the motion by my colleague opposite alleging that we have no regard for the parliamentary institution. How ridiculous! I have just given two major examples of the Official Opposition's action to sabotage systematically the work of the Canadian Parliament and in spite of it, of the government's ability and responsibility in implementing the major reforms it had promised in its throne speech of April 1980, with due regards for Parliament and after intelligent debates.

In addition to what I have already mentioned and all we have accomplished during this historical and important session following the very substantial throne speech of 1980, with the cooperation of all Members of Parliament, admittedly including those on the other side, we have been able to try something new to improve our parliamentary procedure. This experiment is going well and I believe that it is a positive step and something which had to be mentioned during this debate because, in spite of the tense atmosphere in this House, of the controversial nature of the issues being debated, and of the conflicting attitudes and outlooks of the various parties, we have achieved a consensus and agreed to put to the test a long awaited reform which would be very beneficial to this institution. I believe that there is not a single Member who does not want Parliament to become more modern, more realistic and better adjusted to the Canadian reality, as well as more human and more productive. As we have seen in its most recent report, the committee itself is looking for more ways to enable Parliament to be more productive so that, as I mentioned earlier, we may pass the legislation required at a time when our society has been changing and expects more from us, and on the other hand, to allow a healthy opposition and comprehensive but not obstructive debates on the various measures submitted to Parliament. In addition, I hope that the present experiment will lead towards the improvement of our institution, and at the same time, I repeat that it is not contradictory—

• (1140)

[English]

—it is absolutely not contradictory to say that as Parliament becomes more efficient it would mean that we do not want any opposition to be able to debate fully but not in a dilatory fashion.

In conclusion, I want to say that I have great hopes for this experiment. I hope that in the future Parliament will be able to cope with reality through new measures and new attitudes that will make it possible for this institution to become more human, more modern and productive and at the same time preserve the right of the Opposition to debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do any Hon. Members rise to ask questions of the President of the Privy Council?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Government House Leader. The first refers to the quotation from the Constitution Act, 1867. He made reference to the term "next session". Would he not agree that the term "next session" infers a new session of Parliament?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, that is what I have argued. If we are talking law, I submit the burden would be on the one alleging that the next session should be a new session. The essence of the debate is whether there is a requirement for a new session or not. My hon. colleague referred to the Constitution Act, 1867 and seems to conclude that because there is an expression "next session" in the old Constitution, it would necessarily require a new session.

I do not want to repeat myself but I have given examples of occasions in the past when a session of Parliament lasted more than one year. Very good parliamentary minds like those of the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, Ged Baldwin and others never argued that those sessions were unconstitutional.

In the context of the old Constitution it is not said that there must be a new session. In taking into consideration those precedents and the letter of the Constitution, it does not speak of a new session; and the burden of demonstrating that there must be a new session every year is on those alleging that there must be a new session every year. That burden has not been met. It is my submission that it is absolutely unacceptable to conclude that this session is unconstitutional at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Simcoe North on a supplementary question.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, moving from the legal or technical interpretation of why we need a new session, I have another question for the Government House Leader. I suggest to him that, in words of Lester Pearson as he spoke to the Empire Club in 1959, there is no obligation on the Opposition to bring forward legislative programs while they are in Opposition; that could be done during an election campaign. I throw those words back at the Government House Leader because they come from the Right Hon. Lester Pearson, a leader of his Party.

Since we are dealing with a three-year-old Throne Speech, let us get away from the legal and technical interpretation. What is there in that Throne Speech that he has not brought forward, and which he wants to, which would do something about jobs? We on this side of the House are concerned that unemployment over the course of that three-year-old Throne Speech has gone from 7.5 per cent to 12.5 per cent, and I can tell the Hon. Member that for my purposes, not as Party policy, I would be very pleased if he would prorogue and bring in a Throne Speech which dealt only with that one issue, jobs. I say that not as policy, but for my purposes he could bring in a Throne Speech and just talk about jobs and how the Government is going to get this country back to work, and what it is going to do for the over two million Canadians out of work.

• (1150)

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, first the Hon. Member referred to the obligation or non-obligation of an Opposition Party to propose legislative changes or policies. I do not think anyone on our side ever said that debate, to be efficient or responsible, should always be negative. I believe there is room in an institution like ours for constructive debate, and sometimes constructive debate means alternatives and different proposals which are weighed against those proposals of the Government. That is exactly what I was deploring, that during the last three years I have not witnessed very often new proposals, ideas and policies proposed by the Official Opposition. On the contrary, because of the lack of ideas, the Official Opposition had to obstruct, and this is the kind of position I have denounced very often in the past and which I keep denouncing. I think it is childish, irresponsible and absolutely unacceptable from the Loyal Opposition of Her Majesty the Queen.

I see my good colleague for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) seems to be very happy I said that. I have a lot of respect for him. The sovereign of other countries and our country—

Miss MacDonald: She happens to be the sovereign of our country.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, I agree, and I would like to complete my sentence. I am sorry that the Hon. Member for—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Minister, but there are other Members seeking to ask questions and the ten-minute period is brief. I wonder if he would perhaps allow other Members to ask a question at this point.

Mr. Pinard: I do not intend to speak until Canada Day, Mr. Speaker; I will be more brief than that. I just mention to my hon. colleague that if he is concerned about jobs, he should not seek that the Government move into a Speech from the Throne and a lengthy debate before we have a budget. Everyone knows that the budget speech which will be made tomorrow night will deal with the economy and with jobs. Under the circumstances, for the Hon. Member to ask that at this time we prorogue, that we have a Speech from the Throne in order to say we want to create jobs, that we have a lengthy debate on the Speech from the Throne, and then must report a budget anyway in order to be able to take care of jobs, I believe would create undue delay. I do not understand why my hon. colleague is asking for that delay if he is sincere in wanting the Government to cope with the realities of the economy of this country and have this Parliament adopt measures which will make it possible for the recovery to take place in a very orderly fashion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) on a short question, bearing in mind that there are a number of Members seeking to ask questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I would like to come back to the question of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) about the words "session" and "sitting". Can the Hon. Minister explain why the notion of session has been completely eliminated from the Canada Act and replaced simply by the word "sitting" in English and "séance" in French? Can he explain this?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I understand the Hon. Member's question. He suggested, and I did not understand this very well, that the words had been changed in the Constitution. What I said earlier, and I would like to repeat it very briefly, is that the provision in the Constitutional Act of 1867, that is in our Canadian Constitution, provides that there must be a session each month and that a period of twelve months must not elapse between two sessions. The Constitution does not stipulate that this must be a new session. In my argument, I pointed out that sessions have lasted longer than one year in the past. Some former Progressive Conservative Members were procedural and constitutional experts. I have already mentioned the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker and Jed Baldwin. They never referred to the constitutional aspect of this question and it was not that long ago that they sat in this House. This is why I consider that there are precedents that show that sessions of over one year are not unconstitutional—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): There is a difference between the words "session" and "sitting"!

Mr. Pinard: —and second, I say that the text of the Constitution itself does not require that there be a new session each year, and if anyone disagrees, it is up to him to show that the provisions in the Constitution have a different meaning. On the contrary, it seems to me that the wording of the Constitution clearly shows that a new session is not required each year and that the only obligation is to guarantee that twelve months do not elapse between two sessions or two periods when the House is sitting. Moreover, it seems to me that the argument of the Hon. Member is not very serious in view of the precedents, the text of the Constitution and the attitude of the Members opposite themselves. Come on! We have been going on for three years and this is the first time this argument has been raised. I cannot believe that the Members opposite are being serious.

[English]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), of course, forgets two prime points. There have been a good number of protests about extensive sessions in so far as the opportunity of putting forward business on behalf of Private Members was seriously hampered prior to the introduction of the amendments. Even now they may be subject to pre-emption because the Minister proposes to have a budget debate start on a Private Members' day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member for Edmonton West but he will have the opportunity to speak. The ten-minute period of questions and answers has expired.

Mr. Pinard: May I answer that?

Mr. Lambert: My question, sir, if I might put it to him—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May we have the unanimous consent of the house for an extension of the question period?

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I normally would not object, but if you will recall, a week ago during Private Members' day I begged of the Hon. Member who asked for unanimous consent that he consider unanimous consent for one of my colleagues and he steadfastly refused. I want him to understand the problem. In any event, that is in the past.

I would like to spend a few moments dealing with the issue which is before us. I listened with interest to the position put forward by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis). I found it interesting. I thought his references deserve further consideration, although I wonder, if the matter were to be taken to a court of law on the basis of the evidence presented thus far, whether it would go any great distance. I suspect it would not.

I believe that his arguments from a political point of view were good arguments. I feel there is every reason to believe that it would be in the best interest of the country, in fact, in the best interest of Parliament, if there was a clear starting point for debate and a clear finishing point in which we have dealt with a series of proposals, cleared the decks and can go on to a second series of proposals. I believe that in the interest of Parliament that would be useful. However, I am not going to join the argument that there is in fact a legal requirement to do that. I would have to be persuaded with far more evidence than I have heard to this point that that is so.

I was interested in the reference to the later Lester B. Pearson and his comment that there is no obligation on the part of the Opposition to present alternatives by way of policy to what the Government is doing during sessions of Parliament. I do not happen to agree with it, but if it is true, then there is no doubt in my mind that the Official Opposition has certainly lived up to that. On balance, I think that Parliament would be better if we were to debate both proposals and alternate proposals rather than debating the sorrowful record of the Government on a regular basis.

Let us suppose that there had been Throne Speeches every year since 1980, that in 1981 the Government had come forward with its proposals for 1981, that in 1982 it had come forward with its proposals for 1982 and that this year it had brought forward its proposals for 1983. Is there anyone in the House who believes that it would have told us that it intended to bring forward measures which would have created two million people unemployed? Is there anyone who thinks that it would have told us that it was prepared to bring forward proposals, the result of which would be the highest record of bankruptcy in modern history?

Is there anyone who believes that the Government would have told us, in any of those Throne Speeches, that it was its intention to allow energy prices, oil prices in particular, to rise to a level above the world level? Is there anyone who thinks for a moment that the Government would have proposed in a Throne Speech that its policy objectives in 1980, 1981 or 1982 would have been to allow the process to develop which drove interest rates to usurious levels? Does anyone think for a moment that either this Government or any other Government would have brought forward in a Throne Speech its intention to allow the economy to deteriorate to such a level that we would have plant closings the likes of which we have not seen since the 1930s, probably the likes of which we have not seen in the history of the country?

Would it have told us that the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board would propose cutbacks in the growing of grain, of wheat in particular, at a time when it was about to impose upon the farmers of western Canada the additional burden of the Crow rate changes? Would it have come forward and said to us in a Throne Speech that in its plans for the future it would give Donald Macdonald a royal commission, Peter Stollery a seat in the Senate and Pitfield a seat beside Stollery?

What I am asking Your Honour is whether, considering all of the very relevant things which have happened to Canadians over the course of the last three years, you think that if the Government had had a Throne Speech every year it would have told us those things? Does Your Honour think it would have said: "This is what we have in mind for the country; we therefore want you to debate the merits of it".

Does anyone think the Government would have asked us to debate the merits of the Sydney coal liquefaction plant and the payments to Mr. Gillespie? Does anyone think it would have asked us for concurrence in the House of Commons to allow Canadair to act in the way in which it has in fact acted over the course of the last year? Let us face it, what would the Throne Speech have told us? There is no point in our crying for a Throne Speech on the basis that the Government's obligation to inform the public of its programs is one which we in the House of Commons believe it should live up to if, with the benefit of both hindsight and knowledge, we are convinced that the Government would never have told us what it would do anyway. We must consider all of the major events which have occurred in the course of the last three years which have been so devastating to large numbers of Canadians in every part of the country.

I ask the Government Whip, who is watching me with interest, does he think that if there had been Throne Speeches the Government would have told us that those were things it intended to do? I suspect not. I wonder if the Government would have been prepared to come into my community and say to the people who live there that one of its plans was to create a situation within the economy which would cause the Steel Company of Canada to lay workers off by the thousands, with Dofasco similarly laying workers off by the thousands, the International Harvester Company on the verge of closing, with any number of other plants faced with the same kind of non-future, with all of the people affected facing the same kinds of problems. I do not think so. Therefore, while I would argue that it would be nice to know what the Government intends for the country, it would also be nice to feel that what it would tell us would bear some semblance of truth and accuracy.

I suspect, looking back over many Throne Speeches, that we in the House of Commons and the Canadian public do not have much chance of being told, by way of a Throne Speech every year, of the disastrous policy which the Government proposes to thrust upon us. I think anyone who believes that that would happen is obviously not in tune with the political realities of Canada and certainly not in tune with the political realities of the House of Commons. I admit that there is merit in requesting that the Government tell us in advance what it will be doing, but I think that more important than that is to consider whether, when it does bring forward its proposals, they are of value, whether they work, and whether they address the real problems of Canada.

I suggest to the House, through Your Honour, that one need only consider the documents brought forward by the Government since I have been here. There have been three or perhaps four budgets, some of them couched in the term "financial statement", but nevertheless economic statements. These statements were supposed to indicate to Canadians, through the House of Commons, how the Government would meet the economic problems of the land, and in so doing meet the social problems which are naturally related to the downturn of the economy.

We had an opportunity to debate those matters but no one paid any attention. We had an opportunity to put forward our alternatives. No one paid any attention. In 1981 we were saying that the high interest policy of the Bank of Canada, together with the concurrence in that policy by the Government of Canada, was driving people off the land, was requiring those with small businesses to close up and move, was driving people out of their homes because they could not afford to pay the mortgage and that the Government should therefore adopt a new posture, a new direction. The Government ignored us. To have had yet another debate during a Throne Speech would not have made any difference, would not have made it any better. There is no point debating if one is talking to oneself or if the Government is not prepared to listen. I say, sadly, that it is my view that the Government failed to listen anyway. To say it one more time would not alter that fact.

I recall when unemployment was at 940,000. We were saying that with the direction the Government was taking, unemployment would no doubt be at 1.5 million within a year, and then over two million. It would continue to grow with a snowballing effect. We said that there had to be Government intervention and a change in direction but no one believed it, least of all the Government of Canada. Therefore it did not introduce the types of policies necessary to meet those crises.

A Throne Speech debate would not have altered that situation. The Government did not care and was not going to listen to us. I did not even listen to those who were supposedly their supporters throughout the country. The direction in which the country was headed would hardly have been altered if the Government had another chance to tell us. Did the Government ever attempt to ameliorate or respond to the problems which we spoke about that directly related to the upward spiral in the price of energy or to the fact that we had to come to grips with the difficulties facing not only families in meeting energy and transportation costs but the many businesses that were being adversely affected by ever-increasing energy prices in almost every community in the country? Not at all. The Government continued in its direction of ever-increasing energy cost notwithstanding the fact that this is Canadian energy that could and should be used for the development of this country.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, the discussions that took place in the House week after week about bankruptcy levels. It is no longer news to raise the issue that bankruptcy levels this year are considerably higher than last year and that those levels last year are higher than the year before. The news is that the Government has failed to bring forward policies, in spite of that fact, which would enable the recovery of businesses which were unable to manage in the marketplace as a result of the rise in the cost of money.

We said that this is the serious problem in the country which should be addressed. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), rose time after time in the House to point out the difficulties that high interest rates, given their effect on small businesses, were creating for the Brantford and Brant countries. Every other Member of the House on the opposition side raised similar concerns for their respective constituency.

Did the Government change its direction? Not at all. Day after day, the untold misery being heaped upon misery in every community was raised in the House. The academic argument about whether we should have a Throne Speech, interesting though it is, pales into insignificance when measured against the fact that the Government's policies, without the benefit of a Throne Speech, have been ruinous, unresponsive and have flown in the face of most, if not all, advice given to it not only from this side of the House but I suspect by its own backbenchers. There has even been evidence that during the course of the last three years a number of Government backbenchers were dissatisfied with how the Government was reacting to the problems.

As I study this question I suggest that if Hon. Members wish to argue for Throne Speeches, it is fair enough. If they believe that it is valuable to have the Government announce proposals that it does not intend to act upon, while it does not tell us what it intends to do, I suppose we can go through the exercise. If it is of any value to have the Governor General sit in the Senate and read a statement prepared by the Government about all the beneficial things it proposes to do but does not intend to proceed with, then let us do it.

However, the real measure of the worth of Parliament will be whether we are able to solicit some concrete action from the Government that will be of benefit to Canadians in every walk of life and primarily to those who are suffering the most. Will this institution meet the expectations of those who are unemployed and cannot find employment, those coming out of the schools system in the country unable to anticipate any degree of assurance of an opportunity to provide an economic well-being for themselves and their families, those who are disillusioned and disappointed and those who believed that Parliament was truly representative and that Government did, in fact, care about what happened to them? As a result of the Government's three years of total mismanagement and neglect, those Canadians have now reached the point of throwing up their hands in increasingly large numbers and asking "What is the use?".

I think that is what is most disturbing. I was in Prairie Canada recently speaking in Brandon, Manitoba about Canada's problems. More than half of those who spoke to me—they were not all New Democrats by any means—were very disappointed in the Conservatives' record. They thought that the Conservatives could have done more on behalf of their interests. I was fair, as I always am, in saying that they were doing their best.

In conclusion, while I agree Throne Speeches are good, I find the legal arguments somewhat lacking and would suggest that those arguments be enhanced for future discussion. More importantly, it is time that we demand that the Government begin addressing the real problems, because that is what the people of Canada care about.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions, comments and answers.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I listened with some interest to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). Before I pose my question I must say that I find the attitude taken by the Acting House Leader for the New Democratic Party quite incredible. He apparently talks on one hand about the necessity of having constructive proposals brought before Parliament so that Members of Parliament can truly represent their constituents and reflect their sensitivities, hopes and aspirations, while on the other hand not understanding the value, purpose and the necessity of requiring the Government to bring forward from time to time, preferably annually, a rethinking of its priorities with respect to the economy, social issues and the unemployed in our country.

Does the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain not understand that the major importance of having a Speech from the Throne on an annual basis is to force the Government to reflect upon its priorities and come forward with a new set of legislative proposals? Instead, we are faced with carrying on for an unlimited time, in excess of three years, endless debates about policies from a Speech from the Throne which has caused nothing but a sense of despair, as the Hon. Member referred to it, and has brought acrimony to this Chamber since there are no new items of debate or direction from the Government.

As the Acting House Leader of his Party, how can he condone and in fact endorse the concept of not having an annual Speech from the Throne?

Mr. Deans: I am glad the Hon. Member prefaced his question by saying that he listened to my comments at least in part. Quite obviously, the part he did not listen to was the part that would have answered his question.

I did not say that I did not see the necessity of a Throne Speech. I said that in effect it was an academic question which would not result in the kind of changes that are necessary to meet the economic problems of the day. I pointed out, for example, all of the things that have happened to this country. Does the Hon. Member think for one moment that the Government would have told us that it intended to do those things, to drive up interest rates, to drive people out of their homes or off their farms? Does the Hon. Member think that the Government would have come forward and told us that the Government was going to push up oil prices?

• (1220)

What I am saying is that you have to have a Government that will come forward in both an objective and an honest way with what it proposes to do. I am just not convinced that it be the case. We could have taken the time to debate whatever the Government brought forward, but I do not think it would have altered what happened one single bit. That is my worry.

Mark you, Mr. Speaker, and I must say this quickly to the Hon. Member, one of the things that could have helped would have been some degree of consistency on the part of the Hon. Member's colleagues. It was awfully difficult when we in this Party were arguing against high interest rates to have the then finance critic for the Government arguing that they were necessary and for the then labour critic arguing that they were not. It was awfully difficult when we were arguing about the impact of oil prices on the country as a whole to have their colleagues divided, some in favour and some against high oil prices.

Mr. Kaplan: You were divided too.

Mr. Deans: It was awfully difficult, I might say—

An Hon. Member: Tell us about the Constitution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect to the Hon. Member, he seems to be straying a little far from the resolution before the House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to hear those allegations of differences of opinion within one Party from the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. In the Hon. Member's opening remarks he quickly dismissed the argument that there should be a new session. Is the Hon. Member in disagreement with the following comments from Hansard:

> The idea of the Speech from the Throne is that once in a while the Government has to set down its program for the year.

In the same speech we find the following:

> If the British tradition is worth anything, it is a fact that we should get a new session of Parliament at least once every year. In our own case it is dealt with in an oblique way in the Constitution. Section 20 of the British North America Act provides:
> "There shall be a session of the Parliament of Canada once at least in every Year"—

I draw to the attention of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain that that quotation was from a speech made by his predecessor, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Is the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain in disagreement with his predecessor or does he agree with those remarks from Hansard for February 27, 1976?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, that is a relevant question. I do not disagree with that, neither have I suggested that I did. I said I thought that was desirable, that it would be useful. I also said, however, that I thought we would not be told the truth anyway. Therefore, to go through the exercise, I do not believe it is legally imperative, at least not on the basis of the argument I have heard so far. I said I believe it would be desirable if I thought the Government would tell the truth. I find from my view of politics it is not what you say you are going to do that matters, it is what you do.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to compliment my colleague the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) for bringing forth a very timely motion. I endorse the content of the motion and the Hon. Member's comments condemning the Government for prolonging the session beyond all reason and challenging it to bring on a new session of Parliament, a new Speech from the Throne, to provide, hopefully, for some new direction and responsible leadership.

I must say that the rather hollow defence of the Government House Leader leads one to conclude that the Government has not only lost control of the economic affairs of this country, but it has clearly lost control of the orderly conduct of parliamentary business as well.

I intend to comment briefly on the remarks of my friend the Acting House Leader for the New Democratic Party because I was rather surprised at his rather frivolous and superficial approach to the thrust of the motion.

Mr. Deans: Tell the unemployed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Clearly I think it is a responsibility of the Government from time to time to come forth with its policies, its new directions and its thrust in dealing with the day to day issues of the country. The Government should be held accountable for its action or inaction. We are now dealing with a set of thrusts and programs that go back to 1980, many of which are now out of date. I think it is incumbent upon the Government from time to time to set out its priorities and programs and to indicate to Parliament and the Canadian people how it intends to deal with the issues at hand. Parliament can then be the judge. Parliament can judge the record of the Government's performance, both its action and its inaction. Today we are really floundering because the Speech from the Throne introduced back in 1980 is largely outdated.

I want to deal with the section of the motion which states as follows:

> That this House condemns the Government for its failure to live up to the commitments made in the Speech from the Throne on April 14, 1980—

One would need more than 20 minutes to enunciate all the failures of this Government to live up to its promises. When one examines this Government's record of performance, one can only conclude that Canada and Canadians have been cheated. They have been cleated by a Liberal Party that has misled and tricked the Canadian electorate. This is reflected not only in its dismal record of managing the economy but also in unfulfilled promises. There are many and I can certainly highlight one, the promise of cheap gasoline. Today we find our gasoline is worth about 30 cents or 40 cents a gallon more than gasoline sold in the United States. We have a 69-cent series of federal taxes. It is a far cry from the 18-cent tax we proposed and the expectation of cheap gasoline on which the Liberals compaigned.

There is a feeling of mistrust among the people created by the Government. The Government was deviously silent on a number of issues, such as the dismantling of the Crow and the 20 per cent dismantling of the rail passenger service in this country. Most people would call that sleazy politics or refer to it as intellectual dishonesty.

Let us look at the Speech from the Throne last April 14, 1980, Mr. Speaker, and at the Government's undertaking to achieve energy self-security at a fair price for all Canadians. Instead of that what we got was the infamous ad which cost $1 million suggesting that energy security was that far away. No progress has been made in the direction of energy security. Clearly as far as prices are concerned, we have not taken the opportunity our energy advantage gives us in this country to turn it to our economic advantage, neither to that of the industry nor that of the consumer.

The Speech from the Throne set out to promote a national development policy that would provide jobs, stimulate growth, build upon regional strengths and increase Canadian ownership and control of the economy. Those promises in the Speech from the Throne have been total failures. We have 1.8 million people unemployed and numerous business going under. The Government's policy has not provided a business climate in any one region of Canada let alone where regional disparities still exist.

The Government set out to strengthen national institutions. The political imbalance that existed before 1980 still exists today. The Government also undertook to ensure that Canada plays a vigorous part in the world beyond its borders. We are almost the laughing stock of the industrialized world, given our record and the fact that our relationships with the United States have never been at a lower ebb.

• (1230)

Let us look at the rhetoric with respect to national unity. The Speech from the Throne went on at great length about the difficulties in each region and the fact that there was bitterness and concern about the economic welfare of various regions. In part the Speech from the Throne stated:

> To all these forces of discontent my Government has one clear response. Canada will endure, grow and prosper.

It went on:

> The renewed federalism, to which my Government makes a fundamental and all-embracing commitment, will not only strengthen individual and collective rights and freedoms, it will also ensure that Canada remains:
>
> —a strong country ...
>
> —a country that regards diversity as an asset ...
>
> —a country whose people share their wealth first with those who need it most;
> —a country that encourages initiative, welcomes daring, and promotes enterprise; —

When we look at what the Government has done in terms of its approach to the constitutional changes and to the National Energy Program, we all know the dismal record of disharmony, discord and bitterness which has penetrated the country from coast to coast. In many cases it has resulted in outright anger. What bothers Canadians most is that during the course of this bitter debate they were throwing away a golden opportunity. In so far as the enterprise spirit is concerned, we all know that that spirit has been crushed and buried as a result of the burden of the state. The result has been fear, despair and lack of confidence.

My hon. friend who spoke previously talked about bankruptcy. It is interesting to put those statistics on the record because since 1980 there has been an assortment of foreclosures, bankruptcies, liquidation sales, sheriff and judicial sales. As a result we have seen homes and businesses lost, dreams shattered and a lifetime of work go down the drain. Undoubtedly the statistical evidence is the worst we have ever experienced in Canadian history.

For example, personal bankruptcies in 1980 amounted to 21,025. In 1981 there were 23,036 and in 1982 there were 30,643, for a total of 75,000 personal bankruptcies since the Government returned to office. Farm bankruptcies in 1980 totalled 222. In 1981 there were 261 and in 1982 there were 410, for a total of 900 farm bankruptcies since 1980. That tells only part of the story because it does not refer to those people who liquidated voluntarily. If we look at total business bankruptcies in Canada, we see that in 1980 there were 6,595. In 1981 there were 8,055 and in 1982 10,765, for a total of 25,000-plus business bankruptcies occurring since the Government returned to office in 1980. These statistics merely represent the hollowness of the words in the April 14, 1980 Speech from the Throne. In part it continued:

> In particular, my Government recognizes the need to protect those Canadians most affected by unacceptably high interest rates. My Government will act to assist those unable to bear the burden of renegotiating their home mortgages in the present abnormal situation so that the spectre of foreclosure will be avoided.

It continued:

> Farmers and small-businessmen are also hit especially hard by rising costs, and my Government is sensitive to their plight.

Sensitive my foot. The record clearly speaks for itself. It has been a dismal failure and clearly an example of where the Government has again tricked the Canadian people into believing that it would look after their welfare; but they were left to shoulder the burden alone.

Now I would like to turn to the national energy policy which perhaps could be more appropriately named the national extinguisher plan. When we look at the grim record, we find that in the period following the introduction of the National Energy Program, geophysical activity was reduced by 45 per cent, exploration and development budgets were cut by 40 per cent and 20,000 jobs were lost, primarily in the drilling and service sector. Many of the businesses which failed and are part of the statistics I just outlined were businesses involved in the energy sector. For every job created in the oil industry in western Canada, two jobs are generated elsewhere in the country.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mainly in Ontario and central Canada.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is true. As for the drilling sector, we saw an exodus of drilling rigs south to the United States of something in the order of 250 and valued at $1 billion. Today our oil drilling fleet has been reduced from 650 to something just over 400. As of today, in February, March and April there are less than 200 rigs working in western Canada.

This is what the National Energy Program has done for Canada. It has driven away investment and an opportunity to cash in on an industry which could create jobs and be a very important and integral part of the Canadian economy. The Government failed to turn Canada's energy advantage into an economic advantage.

Petro-Canada is the only one that escaped the scalpel. With its 3,000 plus string of service stations, it is the only component of the oil industry that has experienced any growth, largely due to the generosity of taxpayers. It accumulated its assets at inflated prices. The money which has been plowed into Petro-Canada now exceeds $5 billion.

Let us look at the grandiose scheme of economic development which was a spin-off from the Speech from the Throne, the document entitled, "Economic Development for Canada in the 1980s". It has pretty well been scrapped and replaced with a $10 million Macdonald Royal Commission. What has happened in the course of all this? The megaprojects have been killed, such as Alsands, Cold Lake, the Alaska Highway pipeline, Judy Creek and the Syncrude expansion. During the period of time immediately following the introduction of the National Energy Program, we have witnessed something in the order of $10.5 billion of investment capital fleeing the country—$5.9 billion in Canadian investment capital and $4.6 billion in foreign capital.

The big issue today is jobs. If Alsands had gone ahead, it would have created some 4,800 permanent jobs, 7,000 in the construction end of it and indirectly—here again we get into the very important component of the energy industry—it would have created some 14,000 jobs in central Canada. Of every dollar spent in the oil industry in western Canada, 42 cents is spent in Ontario, roughly 15 cents in the Province of Quebec, some 25 cents or 27 cents in the Province of Alberta, and the other Provinces pick up the balance. Surely these projects are still needed or some scaled-down version is needed if we are to achieve the kind of oil self-sufficiency we all hope to achieve.

Now the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) on his trips to Alberta suggests that the scaled-down oil plans could become a reality in 1983. I encourage the Government to get on with the job. We cannot live any longer on the basis of a policy based upon imagery and rhetoric. We could have a heavy oil plant in Lloydminster. It should be in place today and it would have been had it not been for the actions of the Government. In 1975 Husky Oil was ready to move on an upgrader. In a speech the Executive Vice-President of Husky Oil outlined the kind of climate that would be necessary to allow an upgrader in the Lloydminster area to become a reality. He pointed out that many of the undesirable characteristics of heavy oil in the current economic climate are now desirable characteristics. When we look at the short and medium-term outlook, we all know that we need jobs in both the primary and manufacturing sectors, and this venture would provide a tremendous boom to the manufacturing sector and alleviate some of the problems of unemployment.

• (1240)

The $3.5 billion plan would generate $36 billion worth of economic activity, an estimated 93,000 man-years of work, and the ongoing production and operation manpower requirements from 1988 to 2011 would be an additional 330,000 man-years of work. Of these, 205,000 would be regionally based, direct on-site employment, and economists' estimates of the indirect and induced employment required to manufacture the goods consumed by the project are included in these figures.

Another spin-off benefit would be that 1,700 new wells would be required. These wells would require servicing and infrastructure to maintain their operation.

I do not know why this Government refuses to act and create the positive climate necessary to allow these projects to go ahead. It has certainly failed to exercise economic leadership and to turn a natural advantage in this country into an economic advantage.

I turn now to the petrochemical industry. Two years ago it was recognized that by 1990 Canada would be a world leader in the petrochemical industry. What do we have today? In western Canada we have between $6 billion and $8 billion worth of petrochemical projects on hold. In central Canada the petrochemical industry is floundering. It has had to have a Government bail-out. The reason is primarily because of the heavy upfront taxes. This is a product of the National Energy Program. This has forced up the feedstock prices, which in the case of western Canada is natural gas and in central Canada is oil. The heavy upfront taxes as a result of the National Energy Program has put Canada's petrochemical industry into an uncompetitive position. We have the potential of 50,000 jobs and $3 billion in trade, and it is all out the window. In the meantime, this Government flounders around, trying to create make-work projects to meet the needs of the unemployed. These are two examples where meaningful, long-term jobs could be created which would bring new wealth and new opportunity to this country.

In my opening comments I said that there were promises unfulfilled and things that were done that were not mentioned. I am sorry my time has run out.

In conclusion, I want to say that the Government's action in dismantling the Crow rate and the reduction by 20 per cent of the VIA passenger service are clear examples of the contempt which this Government has for Parliament and the Canadian people. It has generated further a mood of mistrust, disharmony and discord.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are Hon. Members rising to ask questions? If not, the Chair will recognize the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this Tory motion implies Government inactivity, Government inaction and Government delay. In this motion, methinks the Opposition doth protest too much. Let us take a look at the actions. Let us take a look at Opposition intransigence. Let us take a look at the Government's sensitivity to needs.

First let us look at this session of Parliament. This session has been one of the longest in Canadian history. In fact, it has been the longest. It has also been the most productive. Over 160 Bills have been introduced into Parliament and, of those, 129 have been passed. These Bills range from patriation of the Constitution and freedom of information to a new National Training Act and National Energy Program legislation. The Opposition may disagree with some or even most of this legislation. The Opposition may have opposed many of these 129 Bills that have passed. But surely it cannot accuse this Government during this session of being inactive, not when we have put through 129 Bills.

It is a little hard to take when this accusation comes from the Party that gave us 15 days of bell ringing, countless lost days because of questions of privilege, all of which were spurious, during the Constitution debate and over 70 speakers on each of the Income Tax Act and borrowing authority Bill at second reading alone.

Let us get back to reality and talk about Government action on some of the commitments in the Throne Speech. In the Throne Speech it was stated that this Government would assist "those unable to bear the burden of renegotiating their home mortgages in the present abnormal situation". That was the commitment. Let us look at the action.

In the November, 1981 budget, this Government announced a relief program whereby the Government would pay up to $3,000 per year to home owners paying more than 30 per cent of their income on a mortgage. I admit this was not the same as the much touted mortgage deductibility scheme of the Tories. It benefited those in need, not those with big incomes and big houses. It moderately increased Government spending instead of increasing the deficit by billions of dollars, as the Tory promise would have done.

We went even further on our commitment. We realized that the current recession and high interest rates led to less construction and fewer units to live in. Therefore the November budget announced an incentive program, the Canadian rental supply plan, which provides interest-free loans for up to 30,000 units. We also allocated $60 million to the Canadian home renovation plan to encourage Canadians to renovate and use existing housing. This $60 million will likely result in almost $200 million additional renovation work when the private sector contribution is added in.

Lastly, in the June, 1982 budget we introduced a $3,000 cash grant for new purchasers or new home owners. The idea was to get home construction moving to provide for Canadians' shelter needs. The other idea was to provide jobs, between 75,000 and 100,000 of them in the construction industry from our various programs. Let us ask if we have met our commitments. I think we did. The record is clear and the record is favourable. Let us look at another commitment in the Throne Speech. The Government stated:

> Farmers and small businessmen are also hit especially hard by rising costs and my Government is sensitive to their plight. To assist the individual entrepreneur, the ceiling for loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Farm Improvement Loans Act will be raised to $100,000. Other measures of assistance will also be introduced.

Is this an area where we have done nothing? Obviously not. On June 27, 1980 we obtained Royal Assent for amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the Small Businesses Loans Act to increase the loan maximum to $100,000. I saw some figures today which indicate that loans totalling $208,605,679, over $208 million, were made in 1980 under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. This action took us a little over two months from the reading of the Throne Speech. Is that inaction? Obviously not.

Some Members opposite may try to say that we have not done anything and may try to convince the public that we took no other action in support of the small businessman, even when the severe recession struck, but let us look at the facts. In the November, 1981 budget we redirected funds to the Small Business Development Bond to enable small businesses in severe financial difficulty to reduce their interest expenses by up to 50 per cent. I have frequently heard Members opposite say: "Yes, but nobody ever uses that program, it's not available to them". Well, as of January, 1983 nearly 16,000 "nobodies"—if nobody ever uses this program—with nearly $2.4 billion in loans were using this program. Anyone who is suggesting that that program is not effective does not know the facts and is not telling it like it is.

In the June, 1982 budget we went a step further and introduced the small business investment grant. This program provides an interest grant equal to 4 per cent for small business borrowing for new machinery. This program has not been used either. To the end of March, 1983 about 2,800 business persons have applied for grants of nearly $150 million. Well, I think that explodes that myth. Again, people who claim that that program is not effective simply do not have the facts.

Is that all? Hang on, folks, there is even more. Let us look at a tax initiative designed to assist the small business person, lower corporate tax rates. The recently passed Income Tax Amendment Act increased the small business deduction limits from $150,000 to $200,000 and the cumulative limit from $750,000 to $1 million. At present the tax rate on the first $200,000 of income of a Canadian controlled private corporation is some 20 to 21 percentage points less than that of larger businesses.

This type of measure is in addition to ones already brought forward, measures which include: preferential tax treatment of certain stock options issued to employees of private corporations; full offset of capital losses on private company shares and debt obligations; special investment tax credit on research and development expenditures; sales tax exemption on up to $50,000; guaranteed capital gains for venture capital companies; spousal deduction for owners of unincorporated businesses; deferral of up to $200,000 on capital gains on intergenerational transfers. In the last year these kinds of measures, measures put forward or maintained by a Liberal Government, add up to close to $2 billion in tax breaks for small business people.

Well, it seems pretty clear to me that this Government has kept its commitment to the small-businessman as stated in that Throne Speech.

Let us look at another area dealt with by the Throne Speech, and I am again quoting:

> Young people, women and the handicapped face special problems in finding jobs. To meet the needs of these groups, my Government will expand its employment program while using its resources more efficiently.
> There will be an increased effort to develop critical trade skills so as to better prepare today's labour force for tomorrow's jobs.

Were we slow in our actions towards this commitment? Well, two months after the Throne Speech a special parliamentary task force on employment opportunities was commissioned. In addition, two ministerial task forces were organized, one to review the operation of the Unemployment Insurance program and one to examine the infuence of federal policies on the labour market.

What about action? Well, in addition to that, of course, there was the Special Committee on the Disabled and Handicapped which I had the pleasure of chairing. I think the work of that Committee is well known. That was not a partisan Committee; all Parties co-operated. I think that to suggest that this House, under this Government, is not sensitive to those needs as spelled out in the Throne Speech is not being fair and not telling it like it is.

Starting in the summer of 1980, the Government first launched the Canada Community Services Project and later the Canada Community Development Programs. These programs were to minimize the impact of lay-offs and to help workers find alternate private sector employment.

In the same year the Government began its work sharing program. Under this program the Government, the private sector and labour are able to work together to maintain thousands of jobs during temporary economic downturns.

In January, 1981 the Government introduced the Industry and Labour Assistance Program. This program provides coordinated assistance to communities affected by declines in key industries. To date, $450 million has been committed under this program. This program is designed to help communities with serious industrial dislocations and is a very important component in increasing national productivity.

In March, 1982 this House passed the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act to provide special assistance to older workers laid off in designated industries. This program was in addition to the Portable Wage Subsidy Program organized under ILAP which provided wage subsidies for older workers.

Last, this House passed the National Training Program Act. This program was designed to provide Canada with the skilled work force required for the 1990s by strengthening, expanding and modernizing existing training programs, facilitating worker adjustment to technical change and expanding apprenticeship training.

In addition to the National Training Program, there have been efforts to handle disadvantaged groups. Time prohibits me from discussing each and every one of these initiatives but I would like to mention the name of a few: the Affirmative Action Program; special training incentives for Natives; women in non-traditional occupations; women's employment program; and a program for the employment disadvantaged.

As the motion reads, it is absolutely clear that we did not keep our commitment in the Throne Speech in regard to employment. I think it is absolute nonsense, Mr. Speaker.

Let us take the bull by the tail and examine one commitment that we have certainly been unable to keep. I would like to talk about the deficit. The Throne Speech stated:

> It is the intention of my Ministers to continue the policies of expenditure restraint and improved Government administration . . .
> My Government will reduce the federal deficit in a planned and orderly manner, but not to the exclusion of other objectives—

Now, Mr. Speaker, you may wonder why I raise the question of the deficit. I raise it because I want to deal with this motion and this issue in a fair and objective way.

What has the Government done to restrain spending and improve administration? Restraint and administrative reform are not new buzz words to this Government. To begin with, the Government has implemented and expanded the policy and expenditure management system. Under this system, expenditures are broken down by envelopes. The envelope system helps to ensure that Ministers will trade off one priority over another and will be continually re-evaluating existing programs to find funds for new initiatives.

Second, it was a Liberal Government that established a Comptroller General's Office to act as the Government's internal watchdog on spending. In 1975 the Government announced that it would hold Government expenditures to the growth in the GNP. Over the period between 1975 and 1980, the Government was successful in meeting this goal and federal expenditures as a percentage of GNP actually fell.

Let us examine more recent history. In 1982 the Government was faced with the most serious recession since the great Depression. At this time we are forced to look into our hearts and ask what are fundamental Liberal goals and beliefs. Were we to use the approach used in so many other nations—withstand the recession on the backs of the poor? Would we allow our newspapers to have headlines of increasing infant mortality due to maternal malnutrition? There were stories to that effect in the United States. No, we would not do that. This may be a philosophically Conservative option, this may be supply side politics, but this is not a Liberal approach. So in 1982 we broke our commitment to lower the deficit.

Does this mean we forgot about the deficit? No. The Government recognized that there was a lack of funds. In a recession, people lack funds to pay taxes; people need help to survive. Therefore we developed a policy of helping those most in need and maintaining the social net of medicare, social assistance and Unemployment Insurance. More money was needed for social assistance and more money was needed for job creation. A greater effort was needed to get industry back on track in the international marketplace. How was Government to respond? We believe that Government should respond by leading, so we introduced the six and five program.

Mr. Speaker, if you now call it one o'clock, I will talk about the six and five program at two o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

AIR CANADA

RESERVATION OF SMOKING AND NON-SMOKING SECTIONS IN AIRPLANES

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Madam Speaker, we ought to rejoice and take great pride in the considerable progress we have made recently in the fields of science and technology. Having invested time and money, Air Canada has just made a discovery which will cause a great stir or which, at least, should ensure the unrivalled comfort of its non-smoking passengers.

As a result of that discovery, Madam Speaker, non-smokers are assigned seats in two groups in the front and rear of the aircraft, the middle section being reserved for smokers, namely those who have maintained their inalienable right to asphyxiate their neighbours with impunity. This is done by placing a small sign at each end of the section assigned to that unscrupulous group. As if by magic, the smoke stops right there and people in the next row can breathe fresh air. It is an inspired idea, as if smoke should be more intelligent than human beings.

In primitive times, cannibalism was a way of life and many people, quite unwillingly, turned out to be the main course during festivities and social dos. Contemporary cannibalism has nothing to do with the fear of being eaten, but rather—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

PENITENTIARIES

DRUMHELLER INSTITUTION—IMPOSITION OF DUTY ROSTER SYSTEM

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the duty roster system imposed on the staff in the Drumheller Institution breaks the agreement with the staff, and the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) stated on Friday last that the new system would decrease the overtime and that it would save money for the taxpayers. The Solicitor General did not mention why he had unilaterally broken the agreement, nor did he indicate why, at meetings between the staff and regional officers, the Drumheller Institution was not once named for too much overtime—other institutions were, but not Drumheller. Why is the Minister now bringing up overtime as a red herring when it was not a factor at all until now? Under the new system it may well be that overtime will become an issue.

The Minister's statement about wanting to save money for the taxpayer is a laugh; that is, unless this extravagant Government has adopted a new policy. If it now has a policy to save the taxpayers' money, why not eliminate or at least drastically reduce the regional office? Last year this duplicating unnecessary office cost the taxpayers $5,902,485. A warden worth his salt should be capable, and able to manage his institution, and one headquarter, the one in Ottawa, should be enough.

The truth of the matter is that the squad system and the old rotation were working to the satisfaction of the Drumheller Institution. The Minister can make all the excuses he likes, but each excuse he gives is reducing his credibility among his own staff, not only in Drumheller but throughout Canada.

FISHERIES

PROPOSED JOINT COMPENSATION PROGRAM FOR EEL FISHERMEN

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, eel fishermen in Quebec are now faced with bankruptcy. Hon. Members are certainly aware that in early 1982, our eel exports to Germany were banned because they contained Mirex, an insecticide dumped in Lake Ontario and which is now spreading into the St. Lawrence River. The Hooker Chemicals Company, from Niagara Falls, has been reportedly identified as the source of contamination. The Federal Republic of Germany, which until then had been our best customer, will no longer accept our eel. The best officials of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans could do under these circumstances was to suggest suing the American firm. Any settlement, however, which would come only after years and years of legal proceedings would be meaningless to fishermen long gone bankrupt.

We believe that the Government of Canada has some responsibility with regard to catches prior February 4, 1982. We believe also there is a joint responsibility of the Government of Canada and the Government of Quebec with regard to catches after that date. As a matter of fact, in spite of the current ban imposed on these exports, the Quebec Department of Agriculture, Fisheries and Foodstuffs still continues to issue licences to eel fishermen. An adequate joint compensation program, therefore, should be set up immediately to compensate all fishermen and all exporters, especially Les Pêcheries Gingras, in Saint-Nicolas.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

EFFECT ON OIL PRODUCTION

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, the wreckage caused by Canada's National Energy Program has been well documented and is well known to Canadians from coast to coast. This ill conceived program caused damage not just to oil and gas companies or those areas most dependent upon the activity of these companies for employment, but to virtually every other sector and area of Canada.

At present the oil and gas industry is operating at a small fraction of its previous level and of its potential. Thousands of people have been laid off. Billions of dollars of spending has been postponed and cancelled. Companies from coast to coast which traditionally supplied this industry are suffering similar problems.

Perhaps one could partially forgive the injury inflicted on the oil and gas industry by the federal Government if there were some people or some sectors of Canadian society that benefited. But nobody has, not the consumer, whose potential benefits were taxed away, not employees in the energy sector or sectors which supply the energy industry whose jobs have disappeared, and not even governments, since the revenues they sought to gain have diminished significantly because money losing enterprises do not pay taxes, nor do the unemployed.

There are many problems caused by the National Energy Program that need to be rectified, but perhaps the one which is most aggravating and frustrating is the problem of Canada's shut-in oil capacity. In April there are over 200,000 barrels a day of production shut in and, while that will go down in May, for the first six months of 1984 it is expected that the average will be well over 100,000 barrels a day. That means that well over $3 million a day of revenue which would be available for the federal Government, provincial Governments and the industry, will not be there.

Madam Speaker: Order.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

PROVISIONS RESPECTING EQUALITY OF WOMEN

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, with only two years remaining before the equality sections of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms come into force, we are concerned with lack of action on the part of the Government in introducing amendments to bring statutes into line with equality provisions. There should be no further delay in repealing the infamous Section 12(I)(b) of the Indian Act, and reinstating the women who lost their status with their children.

The increased importance of the judiciary in our national life makes reform of the judicial appointment process ever more necessary. Qualifications apart from political connections should be the criteria, so that the bench would include members of all political Parties, and none.

The flagrant inability of Canadian courts to understand discrimination cases when the victims are women is unlikely to change while women are still passed over for judicial appointments. In the year since the Charter was signed, only 3.7 per cent of federal judicial appointments were of women, despite the very adequate numbers of qualified women available. With the increased power of the judiciary, greater public criticism and scrutiny are called for. Contempt of court legislation is needed that will ensure full public criticism.

This is the time also for Parliament to consider the reform or repeal of such reactionary, anachronistic statutes as the Official Secrets Act and the War Measures Act, in light of the principles of the Charter.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—FUNDS FOR RESEARCH—GOVERNMENT SUPPORT

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of this House the situation of Canadair. There is a tendency to speak out against Crown Corporations when they have financial or other problems. However, since the situation of Canadair has implications in both fundamental and applied research, I would like the government and the House to support any action that will be taken in order to give some aid to Canadair, because this corporation operates in a field which involves very advanced technology and because there is still a good future in this high technology sector.

I would greatly appreciate, Madam Speaker, if this House could show full responsibility in this matter, given that it involves numerous jobs in the Montreal area and that the aircraft industry must stay in the area and must continue to be a leading industry in Canada. Even the Department of Employment and Immigration has put enormous emphasis on training in the high technology sector. I ask that this House, when a request for additional funding or other measures are put forward, give its fullest support to these initiatives.

CALL FOR NEW INDUSTRIAL TAX CREDIT

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, in preparation for the budget I would urge the Government to consider a 150 per cent tax credit for firms establishing new production facilities and employing people in areas suffering from regional disparities. This would not be a grant. It would, rather, allow deferral of taxes until the investment in facilities and labour for the first three years of operation, plus 50 per cent, is recovered.

• (1410)

I urge the Government to establish a series of duty-free ports in Saint John, Halifax, and Vancouver, where Canadian export firms can import components and, with Canadian workers using Canadian technology and materials, can assemble products for export to world markets. This has been done successfully in Singapore, Amsterdam, and 18 ports in the United States, among other areas.

I urge the Government to abolish the capital gains tax and encourage investment in the development of Canadian resources in order to create more jobs and taxpayers. I urge the Government to beef up the internship program, examine the 300 applications in New Brunswick now awaiting action, and extend to all Canadian universities the student employment assistance program which is operating successfully, but only at the universities of Winnipeg and Manitoba, in the Minister's riding.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—DEPICTION OF NARROW GAUGE LOCOMOTIVE IN ADVERTISEMENTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, on Saturday last, a four-page tabloid appeared in most of the daily newspapers advertising the Government's position to abolish the Crow rate. This four-page tabloid was a waste of the taxpayers' money and took a position against the Prairie farmers' interests. Not only was it a waste of the taxpayers' money and not only was it against the interests of the Prairie farmers, but I believe the advertisement itself showed how out of touch is this federal Government across the way.

For example, the locomotive shown on the front page of this tabloid is a locomotive from the White Pass and Yukon Railway, and it is one which has never hauled grain. It is a locomotive from a narrow gauge railway which could not even fit on a Prairie railway if they wanted to haul grain. Also, Madam Speaker, this railway was closed down last fall. It was the first time this railway has been closed down since the great gold rush of the 1890s.

The Government has for this advertisement chosen a locomotive which cannot haul grain, and has chosen a railway which has already been closed down. I believe that shows the Government across the way is out of touch and should resign.

PETRO-CANADA
RESULTS OF POLL ON GASOLINE PURCHASES

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, media coverage of a Gallup poll on the weekend stressed that "only 8 per cent" of Canadians go out of their way to buy gasoline from a Petro-Canada station. This type of reporting may be technically accurate but is nonetheless misleading. The "only 8 per cent" who make a special effort are persons who make the positive and more difficult decision not to buy from the most convenient foreign owned outlet.

The figure of only 8 per cent is also negatively distorted because 23 per cent of those polled do not buy gasoline, and amongst those who do buy gasoline are many persons who buy from Petro-Canada without making some special effort. The "only 8 per cent" is, therefore, a significant percentage in light of our general lethargy to inconvenience ourselves.

This should remind us that the interpretation of figures is of considerably greater importance than the numbers themselves.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, I would like to make a statement today concerning the advertising the Government has just done concerning the Crow rate. I believe this advertising is an abuse of the power and position of the Government. I believe it has a number of implications which pose a serious threat in a free and democratic state.

The first threat is that the federal Government has by far the greatest source of funds to draw on for this type of advocacy advertising. Advocacy advertising by Government is nothing less than propaganda. The result is the tyranny of the misinformed opinion, which isolates those affected directly by the programs promoted by Government. The second threat is that Parliament ceases to have a free opportunity to debate the issue as we are not yet in possession of the draft legislation, thus reducing the effectiveness and opportunity of legitimately elected representatives of the people. Because the Government has not finalized its proposals, it can claim to be all things to all those concerned which, in effect, robs Canadians of objective debate about the issue.

Finally, Madam Speaker, people who do not support the Government's ideas on this particular issue are forced to pay for this ad out of their own pockets, and are forced into a position of having to do their own advertising to inform the general public properly. It is unfair, it is arrogant, and it is an embarrassment to all concerned Canadians.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

ANNIVERSARY OF PROCLAMATION—AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION CONTRAVENING PROVISIONS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Yesterday marked the first anniversary of the proclamation of the new Constitution Act and the Charter of Rights.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That proclamation took place after some very considerable expenditure of funds on the part of the Government by way of advocacy advertising. Expectations were heightened that, following the proclamation, the rights and freedoms of Canadian citizens would be substantially enhanced and looked after by the federal Government. Since the time of the proclamation, however, the record has shown quite the contrary. Time has stood still as far as the people of Canada are concerned, as well as this Government, with respect to the promotion of the individual rights and freedoms which are apparently protected under the Charter.

Specifically with respect to legislation and federal laws, would the Prime Minister tell the House when we might expect legislation to be introduced in this House which will in effect change the laws which are clearly in contravention of the provisions of the Charter of Rights—by way of example, writs of assistance which give arbitrary powers of search and seizure contrary to the provisions of the Charter of Rights, and many other pieces of legislation? When is the federal Government going to accept its responsibility and give effect to the Charter of Rights as it affects its own legislation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would take the judgment of the Hon. Member in the examples such as he gives, that the Charter is contravened. It is a recognized fact, however, that the Charter of Rights as we proposed it and what was imbedded in the new Constitution, does render certain provisions of our existing law unconstitutional. That is why a section of the Constitution, particularly as regards equality rights, was introduced with a delay as to their taking effect. That delay is being used by the federal Government, as the Minister of Justice has reported at least twice in this House, so that we can find ways to amend all these bits of legislation through an omnibus piece of legislation. It is our intention—well within the delays provided for in the Constitution—to bring in an omnibus law which will erase those aspects of the current laws which are contravening the Bill of Rights.

APPLICATION OF CHARTER TO STATUS OF WOMEN

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, it is quite one thing to talk about equality rights, and I want to ask the Prime Minister about that because I believe the record of the Government is abysmal in that respect as well. But I am talking about acts on the statute books right now which are in clear contravention of the Charter of Rights. I want to know when the Prime Minister and the Government are going to bring forward legislation to rectify that situation.

With respect to equality rights, is the Prime Minister saying to the People of Canada that the Government is going to stand by the letter of the law and wait until 1985 before bringing in amendments to the Indian Act, to the unemployment insurance provisions, and to other pieces of federal legislation under the control of the Government and this Parliament? Is he saying to the women of Canada that the Charter of Rights has no application in terms of equality rights until 1985?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Of course I am not saying that, Madam Speaker. I do not understand the meaning of the Hon. Member's preamble. I am talking about legislation which is on the statute books now and which has to be changed, either in the equality sections or in other sections. I said that the Minister of Justice is bringing in an omnibus piece of legislation in order to set as many things as possible right in that legislation. I can only hope that we do not have, from the Opposition, as we did with the Bill of Rights itself, the kind of systematic and mindless opposition which we had when this legislation was before the House, and when that Party over there prevented us from making it into law for a period of many months.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, if it was not for the Opposition, the Constitution Act and the Charter of Rights would have been a far more inferior product than that which was finally passed by the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSITION OF LITIGANTS SEEKING PROTECTION OF CHARTER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister is saying to the people of Canada that the Government is playing no role, it is going to sit back and, some day in the future, it is going to bring in some omnibus Bill which might change the offending provisions of the current law so they will not offend the Charter of Rights. What he is saying to the people of Canada is that they must go to the courts at their own expense. The little man has to fight in the courts in order to protect his own rights. In only one instance is there any assistance by the federal Government to litigants and that is in the case of language rights.

Will the Prime Minister not consider making provision within the bureaucracy to assist legitimate Charter cases? In the alternative, possibly by way of supplemental assistance, will the Government create an independent institution which would fund legitimate Charter cases and support individual litigants who might not otherwise be able to afford their defence in court?

• (1420)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member seems determined to set up strawmen and then knock them down. He says that we are leaving it to the litigants to set their record, to fight for their rights under the Charter. I have just finished telling him in two answers that, no, we will change the laws so that the litigants do not have to go through that process of fighting.

An Hon. Member: When?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I find it difficult that the Opposition asks, "When?", when we have constant reports from our House Leader trying to get legislation which is obsolete now, almost, and the Opposition does not want to pass it. Perhaps Hon. Members opposite can give us some kind of a meaningful timetable to pass the urgent legislation, the legislation that was put before them at the beginning of the Fall, and they were unable to give us a timetable. I find it a bit hilarious that they are suggesting new legislation, new expenditures, and new advertising campaigns, if I understood the Hon. Member's first suggestion.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Truth in advertising is all we want.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: As to the statement that the product is flawed, I am prepared to agree. For instance, the product is flawed with respect to the constitutional amending formula. Had it not been for the filibuster of that Party, we would have had a constitutional amending formula which would have given a right of veto to the four Canadian regions, the Province of Quebec included. It is rather paradoxical to hear the former Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party advocate more power for that Province, when it was his own Party which prevented us from implementing a constitutional reform which indeed would have had such a result.

[English]

REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF PROPERTY RIGHTS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I want to make a suggestion to the Prime Minister as to how he can perfect the Charter in a very fundamental way. The Prime Minister will know that Section 7 of the Charter contains only three of the four fundamental democratic rights, notwithstanding the fact that on January 22, 1981, before the Special Committee on the Constitution, the Solicitor General made a commitment on behalf of the Government that he would include property rights in Section 7 of the Charter, a commitment which was subsequently reneged upon because of opposition from the then NDP Government of Saskatchewan, a Government which has changed since that time.

Is the Government now prepared to recognize the heritage of those Canadians who carved homes and farms out of the wilderness, and put property rights in the Charter of Rights?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The historic recollection of the Hon. Member is partially correct, Madam Speaker. It is true that we did not include property rights in Section 3—

Mr. Epp: You reneged.

Mr. Trudeau: —although they are included in the Canadian Bill of Rights, which applies to all federal areas of jurisdiction. We did not impose it on the Provinces, partly because of the opposition of the Government of Saskatchewan, but only partly, because there were at least five other Conservative Provinces which did not want that provision to be in the Bill of Rights.

However, to show that I am not always in disagreement with the Hon. Member, I will make an offer now which I hope that the Acting Leader of the Opposition will accept on behalf of his Party. If we can have all-Party agreement—I would not even say "all Party agreement"—I would say that if we can have agreement of the Conservative Party to introduce an amendment on property rights and to pass it in 24 hours, I will undertake to do that, to convince the Minister of Justice that it would be done. We have not been doing it, not so much for fear of the ex-Government of Saskatchewan but, rather, because we were afraid it might so discord with the Tory leaders of Tory Governments in the Provinces.

I make my offer on behalf of this Party. If the Conservative Party wants to undertake to pass it in all stages in one day, we will pass it before the end of June.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSITION OF PROVINCES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister should follow his own advice and not attempt to negotiate on the floor of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: However, I will say this to him, that he will find that there will be a very reasonable disposition on the part of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition to do anything which would protect the right of Canadians to hold property under the Charter of Rights.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister will know that the legislature of British Columbia, by unanimous resolution on September 21, passed just such a resolution. There are also such indications from the Province of Ontario. Indeed, if such a resolution is passed by the Parliament of Canada, I think the Prime Minister will find the necessary seven Provinces in agreement so that the heritage and the right of Canadians to hold property can be protected, because, as the Prime Minister knows, this protection in the Diefenbaker Bill of Rights does not apply to the provincial jurisdiction.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has reinforced my point. It applies to the federal jurisdiction. Therefore, insofar as this Government and this Parliament are concerned, Canadians are completely protected as to their property rights. The reason they are not protected in the Provinces is because there has been provincial opposition. The Hon. Member predicts that we will have seven Provinces joining. Let us put them to the test. Let us get agreement from that Party to support this Party, to do it all in one day and to pass a House order, and then it will be done. Madam Speaker, we are waiting for confirmation of that from the House Leader on the other side.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: So much for provincial rights, Mr. Prime Minister.

Miss MacDonald: You're just a year late, as usual.

MINISTER'S APPROACH TO PREPARATION OF BUDGET

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): On this budget eve, I suspect that many Canadians are feeling very edgy, wondering what the Minister of Finance has in store for them or what he plans to do to them. The last budget blamed the people of Canada for a large part of our problem by saying they were too hopeful, too optimistic, that they were spending too much, that their expectations were too high. More recently, we have seen a complete flip-flop, saying that it is time to get confidence going up once again, that our expectations are not too high, that the Government wants people to be spending more of their money on goods and services.

Will the Minister of Finance agree to stop this flip-flopping, this dancing around, and assure the House that the budget shoes he purchased are not dancing slippers—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They're Gucci boots.

Mr. Riis: —but in fact are good, sound, strong, Canadian made work boots, so that he can stand in his place and start providing some direction for the people of Canada, as opposed to this contradictory advice?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They're Hush Puppies.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not think that the Hon. Member needs to go back to November of 1981 to find flip-flops. There was a much more recent one, as a matter of fact, and that was the one by Hon. Members of the NDP who, last Fall, were advocating reducing the deficit and, in the last few weeks, have been advocating a larger deficit. Therefore one does not have to go that far and must only look at one's own conscience. I would invite Hon. Members of the NDP, as a matter of fact, not even to look at their consciences, but simply to look at press clippings of what they were saying as recently as six months ago.

As far as the question of the Hon. Member is concerned, I want to assure him that the budget which I will be introducing tomorrow will be good for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REPORTED REALLOCATION OF DEPARTMENTS' FUNDS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, we learned in the last number of hours that Treasury Board has been asking each Department to cut spending to provide money for a slickly designed budget package and for funding the promotion of a publicity blitz by the Minister of Finance and his cabinet colleagues.

Could the Minister tell us whether it would not be more appropriate to use some of these reallocated funds for much needed job creation rather than another promotional campaign like the six and five program or, more recently, like the Crow campaign?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will only tell my hon. friend that, if the Treasury Board has been issuing such instructions recently, it is probably too late for my budget, because my budget is now decided, and I do not think that such reallocation would be of any help at this particular time. Therefore, I suspect that my hon. friend is referring to another speculative story, which probably does not have foundation.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—EXPENDITURE ON ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance and arises out of the Government's four-page supplement with regard to the Pepin proposal which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press and the Brandon Sun on the weekend and, today, in the Winnipeg Sun.

• (1430)

Does the Minister consider it appropriate for Ministers such as the Minister of Transport to waste money on advertisements which, like Dracula, suck money from the western farmers? Will he be issuing some sort of guidelines to prevent the Government's waste of taxpayers' dollars when there is not even legislation before the House? If the Pepin proposals are so beneficial to western farmers, surely they can stand on their own merits?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport answered this question quite appropriately and adequately last Friday. I totally support what the Minister of Transport has said. I think it is an excellent initiative and should be applauded.

THE CHARTER OF RIGHTS

REQUEST FOR TEXT OF PROPOSED PROPERTY RIGHTS AMENDMENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question for the Prime Minister follows the exchange between himself and the Hon. Member for St. John's East with respect to property rights in the Charter of Rights. He will know that, historically, this Party moved a property rights amendment in the committee, which was defeated by the combined forces of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party at that time. He will know that that same amendment was moved by this Party in the House of Commons during the debate on the measure, and again defeated by the Government. We still have that draft ready.

Will the Prime Minister consider providing us with a copy of his proposed draft by tomorrow, so that we might consider it in our usual regular caucus on Wednesday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member goes a little back into history. This is recent history. If he has forgotten, I will report to him that in the summer of the constitutional meetings with the Provinces we had a Section in the Charter of Rights entrenching the rights of property.

Mr. Epp: You never moved it.

Mr. Trudeau: It was removed at the request of the Provinces. I am prepared to reintroduce that. I am certainly prepared to make sure that the Hon. Leader of the Opposition has a copy of our draft. It is ready and it can be moved at any time.

I would have wished that the Leader of the Opposition had been a little less conditional when he says if we do that he will examine it and discuss it through the usual channels. Why does he not say now that, if we can get a draft on which we both agree, he will answer my challenge to get it done and to ask for a House order of one day?

Mr. Nielsen: That is a new version of the twist. I think if the Prime Minister examines the report of my question, he will see that I never used the word "if". All I did was draw his attention to the fact that we twice introduced a property rights amendment, once in the committee and once again in the House. On both these occasions the Prime Minister's Party and the NDP rejected that amendment.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY AMENDMENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, if the Prime Minister is not prepared to provide us with a draft tomorrow—that is an "if"—for discussion at our regular caucus, will he accept the amendment that we introduced both in committee and in the House of Commons?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I will provide the Hon. Member with a draft by tomorrow. I will try to make sure that he gets it by tonight. I wish I would also hear the Leader of the Opposition say that if that draft is in the spirit of the 1960 Charter of Rights he will undertake, on behalf of his Party, to join us to seek a House order to have that resolution passed in one day.

That is what is always lacking in the question of the Hon. Member—any undertaking by his party to do anything except try to push the Government, but it never sticks its own commitment out. I would like to see it.

DRAFT OF TEXT PRESENTED TO PREMIERS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): This smacks a little like the Minister of Justice wanting us to pass a Human Rights Act without even reading it and then, once having read it, without debating it.

The Prime Minister has undertaken to provide us with that draft. For that I thank him. Once we have looked at that draft and confirmed that it is indeed the same as the one that was presented to the Premiers, we will then bring him our decision.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, we will expect to hear that decision tomorrow during Question Period.

PETRO-CANADA

ACQUISITION OF BRITISH PETROLEUM COMPANY—INVESTIGATION OF TAKEOVER

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I will direct my question to the Acting Minister who, I presume, is the Minister of State for Mines. Last fall, prior to Petro-Canada's takeover of BP Canada Limited, there was evidence of prior knowledge by a person or persons because of the exceptional interest in BP Canada's stock which moved from $26 to $36 in the few weeks prior to the takeover by Petro-Canada.

In response, the Ontario Securities Commission froze the funds and accounts of brokers who had traded in BP stock. As of April 7 of this year, some six months after the fact, approximately $1 million has not been claimed even though all that is required for people to do so is to come forward and identify that the money belongs to them. This seems to indicate that somebody has something to hide.

Considering the fact that Petro-Canada, a Crown corporation with a federal charter, is involved in this, and that the possibility exists that someone associated with Petro-Canada, or their friends or relatives, may have leaked information or benefited from it, has the federal Government instituted an investigation of its own into this situation?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I must confess that I know nothing of the matter, but I shall take the question under advisement and get back to the Hon. Member.

OTTAWA BROKERAGE HOUSE ORDERS FOR CALL OPTIONS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources might also bear in mind and investigate the situation where one of the largest trades was in the form of call options through a brokerage house here in Ottawa. In advance of the BP takeover, someone here in Ottawa placed an exceptionally large order for call options which have the largest leverage for the potential investor. That would indicate that someone was very lucky or had prior knowledge. Would the Minister commit that that specific situation will be investigated by the Government?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that I shall bring the matter to the attention of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF TASK FORCE REPORT

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It follows a question that I asked the Minister of Supply and Services last week concerning the Canadair matter and the Task Force Report. I had asked the Minister of Supply and Services whether he would make a copy of the Task Force Report available so that the committee could deal with the matter. He indicated that he would not. I asked him if he would not mind thinking about that over the weekend, and in his answer he seemed to say that he did not believe he should think on the weekend since he did not think at all during the week anyway.

Would the Government release that Task Force Report that was referred to in those questions so that, when the matter comes before the committee of the House, as the Prime Minister indicated it would, all the information would be available for the parliamentary examination which even independent observers of this institution are saying should take place with respect to Canadair?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I did look fully into the question asked by the Hon. Member last Friday as well as the excellent answer given by the Minister of Supply and Services. I should like to confirm to the Hon. Member that the practice concerning Cabinet documents remains unchanged and the answer given law last Friday was excellent.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RECONSIDER POSITION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I know that the Government is fully aware that it has removed from the ambit of the Freedom of Information Act the ability of the special commissioner, whenever he is appointed, or of the courts, to examine the question of the release of Cabinet documents. I am aware of that. That seems to be the substance of the answer. But there is no reason, no law, that prohibits the Government when it wishes to do so, and when it is proper and right that it do so from the point of view of Parliament getting to the truth of the issue, from releasing those documents. I ask the Prime Minister once more whether, in the true spirit of The Freedom of Information Act, through which all the information would be open, the Government would once again reconsider that answer?

• (1440)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member casts his mind to the Freedom of Information Act, he will recall there are certain exceptions, exceptions that are practised in all democratic countries. They have to do with documents that might be deleterious to foreign relations, to personal privacy, or to the cabinet system of Government. That is the exception I ask the Hon. Member to reflect upon when he is asking for the tabling and the making public of cabinet documents.

DELAY IN ISSUANCE OF CHIP PROGRAM CHEQUES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that most of the CHIP grant cheques are being delayed inordinately and, because of this, insulation companies are having to lay off literally hundreds, if not a few thousand employees across Canada, what is the Minister prepared to do to make sure that these CHIP grant cheques get out to the applicants so these lay-offs do not have to take place? We are suffering from a situation in the country today with over two million unemployed and, through Government incompetence, we do not need even a few hundred more.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I already have had a similar inquiry. I would be delighted to look into the reasons for the delay in consultation with the Ministers responsible, to see what might be done to speed up delivery of the cheques.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

FUNDS FOR CANADIAN HOME OWNERSHIP STIMULATION PROGRAM

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, in the absence of yet another Minister, the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Finance. It has become apparent that the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Program has run out of money in many regions. As a meeting was held this morning in the CMHC offices to discuss this appalling situation, I would like the Minister to inform Canadians whether there will be moneys to cover the applications now being held by CMHC offices across Canada. As well, I would like to know whether there will be moneys to cover the applications that will continue to come in until the end of the program deadline of April 30, 1983, and whether the Minister knows that this housing stimulation program is a first rate way of stimulating the over-all economy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am very happy to learn about the support, although belated support, from the NDP for this Program because I remember Members of the New Democratic Party voted against this program when we put it forward. I must say to my friend, however, that unfortunately I did not attend that CMHC meeting this morning. The Hon. Member may have had friends there or he may have been present himself, but I was not there, and I cannot therefore, comment on that particular meeting.

As far as the budget is concerned, the Hon. Member will have to show patience for another 36 hours.

EMPLOYMENT

WITHDRAWAL OF QUEBEC FROM NEED PROGRAM—STATUS OF MUNICIPAL PROJECTS

M. René Gingras (Abitibi): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and concerns the NEED Program. We know that the PQ Government has withdrawn from the Canada-Québec Agreement on the NEED Program. I should like to know whether there have been any new developments regarding projects by municipalities, and whether those projects have been considered by the PQ Government. We know that some excellent projects were submitted by the municipalities and I would therefore like to know what is happening to these projects.

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would like to inform the Member for Abitibi that since March 23, when the Quebec Government sent an ultimatum to the Federal Government on the NEED Program, indicating that it did not intend to meet its December 23 commitment regarding this program—since then, the Minister of Employment and Immigration has approved 683 projects that will create 6,722 jobs, which represents $36.6 million.

As far as the municipal level is concerned, the Quebec Minister indicated at the time that the $50 million that were available for job creation would be spent on municipal projects. Madam Speaker, by the time the agreement was broken by the Quebec Government, we had received 400 projects from various Quebec municipalities, and as far as I know, none of the projects have been approved by the Quebec Government, and we, and especially Quebec municipalities, are still waiting for approval of these projects.

Finally, Madam Speaker, I may point out that in the private sector, we have approved 56 projects that will create 485 jobs, which demonstrates the effectiveness of this program, and especially, the interest shown by private companies in a program aimed at creating often permanent jobs.

GRAINS

STATEMENTS BY TWO MINISTERS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Could he clarify two conflicting statements of policy, emanating on the one hand from the Minister of Agriculture and from the Minister of State in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board on the other hand. The Minister of State in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board called upon the grain producers of Canada to reduce their acreage by 5 per cent in the case of wheat and 15 per cent in the case of barley, while at the same time the Minister of Agriculture has been quoted as saying that it would be unprincipled and unchristian for the federal Government to tell farmers to cut grain production. Could the Prime Minister advise the House which Minister is accurately reflecting Government policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have not had occasion to see either of those statements, but I will undertake to look into them and give the Hon. Member an answer.

Miss MacDonald: A house divided.

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, if in the event the Minister of Agriculture seems to conflict with the stated policy of the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, and if in fact the Minister of Agriculture is in violent disagreement with the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, would the Prime Minister be asking the Minister of Agriculture to do the honourable thing and resign?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Farmers are on and off their tractors. They do not know what to do.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That is clearly hypothetical, Madam Speaker, including the suggestion.

RAILWAYS

OILSEED FREIGHT RATE POLICY—EXCLUSION OF SUNFLOWER SEED

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Minister knows that the oilseed crushing industry is a very important industry, not only to Canada as a whole but specifically to western Canada. It is important in terms of being an economic generator and also interns of jobs. In the Western Transportation Initiatives that have now been brought down and are called the Pepin proposal, included is the long sought after freight rate parity for Canola, which is rapeseed, and for linseed oil, which is flax. However, the proposal leaves out totally the question of sunflower seed. The sunflower seed industry is about a $35 million a year industry to Manitoba. It is a substantial industry also for Saskatchewan and Alberta. Is the Government looking at including sunflower into the total package so that we do have a true national oilseed crushing policy in this area? If so, in what manner, and what form will it take?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, that would require a long explanation. We have looked at this question and for three reasons we have not accepted the inclusion of other crops and other products, as suggested by Professor Gilson for Canola and linseed oil and meal. The first reason is the limitation of money. The second is, where do we stop, because there would be a great number of other products that people would want included. The third reason may be a bit philosophical, that it may not be the best way to start by making too many exceptions when you want to establish a new system.

PLEA FOR SUNFLOWER INDUSTRY

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport will know that the first crop to be crushed on the Prairies in the 1940s was the sunflower crop. A brief presented to the Minister by the industry in Manitoba reports:

> If in the final resolution to this transportation issue sunflower seed and its products are excluded, there is no question the sunflower crop is in danger of extinction.

Excluding a crop such as this means a substantial loss to the Prairie economy in all three Prairie Provinces. Surely the Minister of Transport can give the industry a more satisfactory answer, especially in view of the fact that the industry has given him figures to indicate that about $750,000 is what it would take to bring the industry basically up to parity with the rapeseed or the Canola industry and the linseed oil industry on the Prairies? The sunflower industry cannot be allowed to die. It is as simple as that.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have had a similar representation from another group. The alfalfa people, for example, presented the same case to me. Needless to say, my hon. friend is aware that if payments were made to producers, there would be a correction of that over a period of time.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—INVESTIGATION OF MARKETING PRACTICES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Has the Cabinet, any Committee of Cabinet, any group directed by Cabinet, or any Minister of the Crown, investigated the marketing practices of Canadair? In particular, have they investigated its marketing practices in relationship to the Challenger and in relationship to Canadair's firefighting aircraft?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I expect it would be the business of the board of CDIC, which now holds the shares the Government had in Canadair, to look at past and present practices to see if they can be improved in any way. Therefore I assume they will know what has been going on and what is going on. I do not know if the Hon. Member would call that an investigation in the parliamentary sense, but it is certain that when they appear before Parliament to ask for greater funds the Hon. Member will be in a position to ask them what they have found out about those practices.

BRIBERY CONVICTION OF UNITED STATES SENATOR

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware of a conviction registered against United States Senator Hohman of Alaska in which he was convicted on December 24, 1981, of accepting a bribe and offering to share a $20,000 bribe from a Canadian Government-owned firm, Canadair Services Limited? If so, has he had that matter and other related matters investigated? If not, why not?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker. That is the first time I heard of this matter. Certainly, if it were a verifiable allegation practised by a Government Department or a Crown corporation, it would be falling under guidelines that we issued some years ago against bribes. Indeed it might even come, depending on the circumstances, abreast of the Criminal Code. I have not heard of this. I suppose it would depend on the veracity of the facts, and I will have it looked into.

FINANCE

INQUIRY RESPECTING POSSIBLE INCLUSION OF MORTGAGE INTEREST INSURANCE PLAN IN BUDGET

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that we have had some very erratic fluctuations in the interest rate in the last year or so, has the Minister responsible for CMHC discussed with him at any time, and laid before him, a plan which might be included in any budget?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in the last year there has not been what the Hon. Member calls fluctuations. Fundamentally in the last year there has been a steady decline in interest rates. Today all major banks have announced that they are cutting down their prime rate again by half a point to about 11 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: Tell that to people with 19 per cent mortgages.

Mr. Lalonde: In effect, the rate today at 11 per cent is the lowest it has been since November, 1978. Frankly I hope this downward trend will be maintained in the months to come because it is a very encouraging sign for home owners, businesses, and everyone in the economy.

ROLE OF PRIVATE SECTOR

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact the Minister cannot guarantee anybody that we will not be playing renewable roulette within the next ten months or so, would he reconsider his answer and, at the same time, at least go to private lenders and discuss with them whether they can come up with a plan if the Government cannot?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the suggestion of a plan which would provide some insurance is one that has been made by the Minister responsible for CMHC. As a matter of fact, he has worked on the subject with people in the private sector and examined the implications of such a proposal. We have been informed both from the private sector and experts in the field that there are a number of difficulties and that more studies are required. This is what the Minister has said outside the House quite frequently.

The private sector has been extensively involved, but I want to remind my hon. friend again that, if he is not satisfied with an 11 per cent prime rate, he can get today from one bank a 10.75 per cent mortgage for one year, and if he wants to have it a little longer he can go to a five-year rate at 13.25 per cent. Five-year mortgage rates are back on the market.

Again I hope, through the continuation of the monetary policy we have in Canada at the present time, and with the measures which will be contained in the budget, we will see a continuation of the decline in interest rates. Already our measures have been very successful in the last year in bringing down interest rates very significantly; as a matter of fact, cutting them from 19 per cent and 20 per cent down to 11 per cent and 10.75 per cent. It is pretty good in the space of nine months.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REPORTED TRANSFER OF IMMIGRATION DETAINEES IN LEG-IRONS AND HANDCUFFS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration may I direct my question to the Acting Minister and also to the Solicitor General, if part of it should apply to him. Would the Hon. Minister confirm whether on April 10 or 11 there was a transfer from Toronto to the Ottawa-Carleton Detention Centre of 11 detainees under the Immigration Act, most of whom, if not all were of East Indian origin? What was the purpose of the move from Toronto to Ottawa? If there was to be a hearing in Ottawa, why was it not ascertained that such a hearing would not be held and then decided that the said detainees were to be returned to Toronto for a hearing on April 25? It this applies to the Solicitor General, but in any event to the Minister, would he explain to the House why those detainees were moved in leg-irons and handcuffs since they were only guilty of statutory law transgressions, if at all? If they were refugees coming up for hearings in Ottawa, why were they transferred in leg-irons and handcuffs?

Mr. Pinard: Order Paper.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We know how long it takes to answer questions on the Order Paper.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I have had no notice of this question. I have no knowledge of the alleged transfer of refugees, or alleged transfer of detainees. I will look into it immediately. If the Hon. Member has any more information about it, I would be glad to have it from him.

COST OF TRANSFER

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, might I ask either of the Ministers also to supply the approximate cost of this exercise in futility?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I will look into that as well.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—FINANCIAL BENEFITS ACCRUING TO UNITED STATES

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, speaking of Order Paper questions, and since I cannot get any information there about Canadair, I would like to elicit, if I could, just one answer from either the Prime Minister, the Minister of Supply and Services, or the Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, concerning the proportion of financial benefits from this massively funded Crown corporation that have gone to the United States. I am thinking of Bill Lear's company, also Federal Express, and so on. Can someone over there tell me just what percentage of the industrial, monetary or other benefits have gone to the United States—

Mr. Pinard: Order Paper.

Mr. MacKay: —rather than to Quebec and Canada, which was the whole purpose of setting up this company and subsidizing it so massively?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I believe this question could usefully be considered by a Standing Committee of the House, if additional funds were to be granted to Canadair.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF $3,000 GRANT PROGRAM

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Is he giving serious consideration to extending the $3,000 grant for first-time home buyers to stimulate the very important housing industry which is just beginning to roll now, in order to keep that momentum going?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, that is another interesting suggestion from a Party that throughout the debate on this subject had claimed that this was a program it did not believe in, a program which according to the Party, would never work and which was contested as soon as it was presented in the House. I am very happy that on his deathbed, as it were, my Hon. colleague is now supporting this program. I am also very happy to receive his suggestion.

MR. FULTON—NORTH SLOPE DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I have the honour today to present a petition prepared by the Mackenzie Delta Dene Regional Council. It has over 500 signatures, primarily from Aklavik, Arctic Red River and Fort McPherson. The petition opposes development on the north slope, in particular Gulf's application for a port at Stokes Point. It supports the Berger recommendations and the National Energy Board decision for withdrawal of the area for a national park and conservation.

I am sure the Members of the House will be interested to know that in Aklavik, with about 360 voters, over 183 people signed, in Arctic Red River, with only 52 voters, over 50 people signed, and in Fort McPherson, with 432 voters, 293 people signed the petition.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 4,624.

[Text]

SALES TAX ON PUBLICATIONS OF CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Question No. 4,624—Mr. Hawkes:

1. Is the Minister of National Revenue aware that charitable organizations must pay sales tax on their own publications and (a) if so, is he planning to rescind this sales tax (b) if not, what measures is he planning to help the approximately 57,000 charities affected by this tax?

2. How much revenue does the Minister expect to raise by taxing public education material?

3. Was the Minister contacted by the Canadian Cancer Society regarding this matter and, if so, what was the Minister's response to their concerns?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Yes, since January 1, 1981, the sales tax exemption formerly provided in the Excise Tax Act for goods enumerated under tariff item 69605-1 has been repealed. A study is being conducted by the Department of Finance.

2. Revenue figures are not maintained on a product by product basis. It is therefore impracticable to reasonably estimate the amount of revenue raised by taxing public education material.

3. Yes, and the Minister informed the Society that the sales tax exemption formerly provided in the Excise Tax Act for the goods enumerated in Customs Tariff item 69605-1 was repealed effective January 1, 1981. Prior to that date several social service organizations including the Canadian Cancer Society were extended the duty and tax free benefits relating to this tariff item. The replacement provisions, i.e., Sections 12 and 13 of Part III of Schedule III to the Excise Tax Act, for many of the goods previously allowed sales tax exemption under tariff item 69605-1 are not available to social service organizations because such organizations are not among the institutions specifically named in the new exempting provisions as being entitled to the benefits. As a result, the Canadian Cancer Society was informed it was required to purchase or import such taxable printed matter tax paid.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—GOVERNMENT COMMITMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to live up to the commitments made in the Speech from the Throne on April 14, 1980, and for its conscious disregard for the practices of Parliament and the Constitution of Canada, and urges the government to prorogue the current, unconstitutional Session of Parliament, convene a new Session, and outline its policies before Parliament in a Speech from the Throne.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, before the House recessed for the luncheon break I was talking about the leadership that this Government has shown in fulfilling its commitments under the Throne Speech. I was, quite frankly, addressing one area where we have not been able to live up to our promise. That has to do with reducing the deficit and I was explaining why.

I was explaining that during tough times more money is needed for social assistance, more money is needed for job creation, and we were trying to make the effort to get industry back on track in the international marketplace. I was putting in perspective the reasons for the six and five program. I want to spend a few minutes talking about that program.

The first move under the six and five program was to limit federal employees—and this was done as an example—to wage increases of 6 per cent and 5 per cent over the next two years. When we brought this program in, it was not a popular move. When it was first introduced we heard howls of indignation from Members opposite.

Then we limited pension and Family Allowance increases to 6 and 5 per cent, although we did take care of the increase in the supplementary pension payments and the child tax credit so that those with the greatest need would not be subject to these constraints.

What we did basically was to call on all Canadians to help those most in need. What happened? We had many hoots and howls of indignation. We went one step further. The Government said that increased funding for new job creating programs would have to come from cutbacks in other Government programs. Therefore, we find increased job creation expenditures in the June, 1982 budget and the October statement which were funded by cutbacks in defence, foreign aid and energy programs. We heard even more howls from Members opposite when those events occurred.

Now the Opposition appears to have changed its tune to some extent. The Provinces apparently believe in the six and five program because virtually every Province has put in place a similar form of restraint program. The private sector obviously believes in the six and five program because over 200 companies and 40 national associations have expressed support and introduced some form of restraint in their respective industries. It is well known that the public believes in the six and five program, as recent public opinion polls have shown. It goes without saying that now that the Opposition claims it has always believed in the six and five program, its statements have a bit of a hollow ring.

So much for the deficit issue. I would like to close by saying a few words about why this session has gone on for so long. I say this quite apart from the reasons I referred to this morning, namely the bells, the constitutional stalemate and the 70 to 80 speakers at second reading stage of a couple of Bills.

The answer is pretty simple when you consider that the equivalent of 25 days were spent in discussion of the income tax amendments, a debate that stretched from November, 1981 to March, 1983. The answer is pretty simple when you consider that we spent weeks and weeks discussing changes to the National Housing Act, changes that included the mortgage assistance program for home owners in need.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Smith: You can tell I am getting close to the bone, Mr. Speaker, when they start to howl on the other side. The answer is pretty simple when you realize that time and again we had to introduce time allocation motions to limit debate on the Small Business Investments Grants Act, the supplementary borrowing authority and a host of other Bills, yet we frequently hear the question asked about what we are doing for small business.

The answer becomes pretty serious when you consider the consequences. Home owners who were at the point of being evicted had assistance delayed because Members opposite wanted debate, headlines and political points rather than action, getting this legislation into place, legislation that was needed. Preferential loans to small businesses and social and Unemployment Insurance payments were put at risk because those opposite wanted to play politics. Pensioners with life savings were denied interest income because Members opposite were too busy playing games.

The answers for delays, the answers for long sessions are pretty simple and pretty serious. I hope when Members opposite meet someone in the situations I just referred to—distressed home owners, Unemployment Insurance recipients, small-businessmen who needed those programs to be put in place—they are prepared to explain their obstruction and insensitivity.

I think it is fair to say that this Government has been hit, unfortunately, with the worst recession since the great Depression. Notwithstanding that, we have shown leadership, stability and sensitivity. If that means a long session because of this obstruction, then that is what it means; but that is what strong leadership is all about.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member rising to ask a question?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary read very diligently from a prepared statement. I know he was somewhat forced into reading it, but I am sure he has some opinions of his own. He made a fairly great issue over the fact that the Government had provided assistance to farmers, small-businessmen and so on. How can he commend the action of the Government in the face of a very dramatic rash of bankruptcies in the farm community and business community as well as the personal bankruptcies that have occurred in this country? The Hon. Member was in the House this morning when I spoke and I read the statistics.

What are we to tell these people who have faced the severity of bankruptcy? Over 400 farmers declared bankruptcy in 1982. There is a suggestion to the effect that for every one who declares bankruptcy, there are probably ten others who go out of business voluntarily. Since the Parliamentary Secretary so vigorously defended the policies of his Government, can he give us some idea what we on this side should tell those who have faced such a disastrous calamity?

• (1510)

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I am always glad to hear from the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). I, like many on this side of the House, regret that he is not a candidate for the leadership of his Party. I know he would be a strong candidate and one whose candidacy we would all welcome.

I come from Toronto. I am not an expert on farming, but I do note by looking at—

Miss MacDonald: You are not an expert on much.

Mr. Smith: Well, my father came from the Ottawa Valley and his family were farmers. I do note that in 1982 there was over $208 million loaned out under the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

There is no easy answer to the question of bankruptcy. The answer obviously is that when you believe in a free market society, and we in this House do, the simple fact is that business goes in cycles. The entire Western world has been hit with a recession. Regrettably, bankruptcies accompany every recession. I suppose those Members on the other side of the House who do not particularly have the commitment to the private sector that we on this side of the House have would feel that Government should intervene more in society and bail everybody out all the time. We do not happen to believe in that kind of intervention. We have tried to provide programs that are available to some people who will, by virtue of them, perhaps be able to keep their heads above water during tough times. That is a fact of life you are faced with when you have a free market society, and it is regrettable. But we have tried to create programs that will in fact provide some reasonable amount of relief, though it is not possible to bail everybody out all the time.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, since the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council is such a proponent of the free market economy, and I to take it that he is in opposition to the Canagrex Bill which his colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is proposing, which is really a massive intervention in the free market economy? Is the Parliamentary Secretary in opposition to that particular proposal?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have always felt that Liberals are people who believe in social justice within a free enterprise fabric. What we try to do is strike a balance. I think that a program such as Canagrex, which is a combination of having Government help sell abroad the products that the private sector in Canada's agricultural community can produce, is an ideal combination that puts big Government to work on behalf of little guys who have initiative, who believe in the work ethic, and who want to have their products sold abroad, but because they are not big enough they are not really able to do so. I think that type of program is quite consistent with belief in the free enterprise system.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary if he can define for us what in his estimation is a session and what in his estimation is a sitting, since this debate is all about the length of the session and the failure of the Government to bring in a new Speech from the Throne. There is a bit of confusion in my mind about that. As Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council, how would he define a session or a sitting?

Mr. Smith: Well, I think historically a sitting basically means a day. As I understand it, the reason for "sitting" becoming "session" from John Macdonald's motion in the Colonial Assembly in 1865 to the Act of Parliament in 1867 was that the Act was drafted by a professional draftsman who used the same words as used in the Bill of Rights in 1688 and 1699. I know my Hon. friend is quite familiar with that Act. I think if he traces the history of those two words, he will find that in fact there is a bit of inconsistency there.

A sitting as we now use it means a single day. A session more often than not has been equated to mean on a yearly basis. But I do not believe there is any hide-bound convention that suggests that it has to be that way.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, following up on my colleague for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), I put it to my colleague across the aisle that surely he is not prepared to dismiss lightly, as indeed the Government Leader in the Senate was not prepared to dismiss lightly, the very strong objection that Senate McIlraith, a former Liberal Cabinet Minister, raised to the unprecedented length of this session. I want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary now if in all honesty he can justify the failure to bring in a Speech from the Throne in view of the unprecedented changes that have taken place since the last one in 1980, changes that have changed fundamentally the conditions with which the Government has to grapple. I would like to hear him justify very concisely, if he can, what appears to Senator McIlraith to be an unforgivable breach of parliamentary custom and tradition going back to Confederation.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, if my Hon. friend is suggesting that it is not desirable that three-year sessions become the norm, I fully agree with him. I think that that would not be a good practice were it to be turned into convention.

I think there are in fact very extenuating and unusual circumstances as to why this session has gone on for so long. These circumstances include the Constitution deadlock, the ringing of the bells incident, and a lengthy debate with 70 or 80 speakers from the Official Opposition alone on the borrowing authority Bill and the Income Tax Act, Acts which, to keep our financial House in order, simply had to be passed. We could not afford to prorogue and then start a new session and be obliged under the orders to have a lengthy debate on the Throne Speech when we had to get those financial Bills through.

So yes, it should not become a practice, but yes, there were extenuating circumstances in this particular instance.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith) made much this morning and this afternoon of the Liberal Government keeping its promises and its commitments. I would like to deal with two such items.

First, I heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during the election campaign say very clearly that the increase in the price of gasoline at the pumps would not be as high as he said the Tories would charge, namely, less than 18 cents a gallon. Well, the increase in the price of gasoline is not 18 cents a gallon. Most people in Canada would have welcomed an 18 cents a gallon increase today. It has increased well over 90 cents a gallon and more than that in federal taxes.

Second, I heard both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) during the election campaign say with reference to capital gains that V-day would be moved from December 31, 1971 to December 31, 1973 at least. The Minister has made similar statements since. That promise has not been kept either. The Speech from the Throne said—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must call to the Hon. Member's attention the limit on question period. If he hopes to get a response, the time period has now expired for questions.

Mr. Taylor: I was just finishing off my question. That is why I was asking both questions at once. This is what it says: "All of these commitments will be kept, these pledges redeemed. the mandate fulfilled".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for questions and answers has expired. May we continue with unanimous consent? Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appears to be.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, very briefly on the question of the price of gasoline, we can trot out figures and the other side can trot out figures and you can usually prove whatever you want to prove with statistics. I think in the final analysis whose figures you are going to believe really depends on trust. I happen to think that this side can point quite clearly to having negotiated the best possible deal with the Premier of Alberta. We heard so much about the Tories having a deal with the Premier of Alberta but we never heard the terms of it. If those terms existed, I would like to know what they were.

Mr. Taylor: Answer the question. What did Trudeau say?

Mr. Smith: Read the Halifax speech.

Mr. Taylor: I heard him myself. Pretty hollow.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the reply to my question by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith). I was not surprised that he defined a sitting of the House as a day's sitting. The period in which the House would sit for one day would be defined in terms of parliamentary jargon or parliamentary language as a sitting. A session of the House would mean that period during which the House would sit for a year, commencing with a Speech from the Throne and closing with a short Speech from the Throne and prorogation or closing with dissolution resulting in a new election. That is traditional. It is basic to our concept of the Constitution as it applies to Parliament and I submit that it is rather important.

• (1520)

Mr. Philip Laundy, the distinguished parliamentary author who sits at our Table, defined the words "sittings of the House" in his book "Encyclopedia of Parliament", and he defined a session of the House in that same treatise. I commend it to all Hon. Members. However, notwithstanding the assurances of the Parliamentary Secretary, I have some problem because Section 20 of the British North America Act states as follows:

> There shall be a Session of the Parliament of Canada once at least in every Year, so that Twelve Months shall not intervene between the last Sitting of the Parliament in one Session and its first sitting in the next Session.

That is the Constitution as it was. Now we have the Constitution as it is, the Canadian Constitution Act of 1981. We see that there has been a change in Section 5, one which was flagged in Committee by several Members on this side of the House including the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty). He expressed concern on behalf of this Party at that time and that concern was pushed aside by the then Minister of Justice, now the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien). Section 5 of the Canadian Constitution Act, 1981 states as follows:

There shall be a sitting of Parliament and of each legislature at least once every twelve months.

If that means that under the Constitution the House has to sit only one day a year, we are in deep trouble, Mr. Speaker. As the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) suggested, that would virtually destroy our concept of parliamentary democracy and responsible government. We would virtually be relegated to the status of a Supreme Soviet.

This speaks to our concern over omnibus Bills, Mr. Speaker. The Parliamentary Secretary referred to the ringing of the bells as one of the reasons for the unprecedented length of this session. He forgot to add the reason the bells rang for so long was that it was the only way this Party had to protect the right of Parliament to deal with specific items of legislation and not in an omnibus fashion. If that practice were not arrested the result could be that Parliament would be convened for one day to deal with a "welfare of Canada act" which would cover everything. We would pass that great omnibus Bill and ajourn to the next year. I believe that that is the way some so-called Parliaments function in totalitarian states. I do not believe that is the interpretation placed on this by the Government of Canada which framed the wording of the present Constitution. I believe that the wording, the thrust and the spirit of Section 20 of the old British North America Act is as valid today as it was when introduced.

We now have a session of unprecedented length, a session that is going into its fourth year. That has never happened before. If you examine the record of Parliament over the last 100 years or so, Mr. Speaker, you will find it has only been in times of minority Government that a session would extend a short time beyond a year. The situation we find ourselves in today is virtually without precedent.

It is interesting that this Parliament and this unprecedented session has had to sit by while the Government acted in an extra-legal fashion, in my humble opinion, in bringing in the VIA Rail integration of major rail passenger services in this country without an Act of Parliament. There still has been no legislation establishing VIA Rail. I suppose the Government will get around to dealing with that when it gets around to proroguing the session and bringing in a new Speech from the Throne.

It is not without interest either that, even though we find ourselves with the highest unemployment rate since the great Depression, there has been no legislation dealing with unemployment. We have the NEED Program, we have the Canada Community Development Program, we have the Student Employment Program, but it is interesting to note that even though the nomenclature of these programs changes every year, they all stem from the same program that was started without legislation at the commencement of the session. I refer to the Local Initiatives Program. The rules change every year because there is no statute law governing these make-work programs.

I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, but the fact is the arguments we have heard today from the Government House Leader and his Parliamentary Secretary are spurious, self-serving and cannot in any way justify the situation that exists.

I am a Member of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure which was set up to try to do something about our rules which have not been changed in any way since 1969 when the provisional rules that we are operating under became permanent with the invocation of closure. There is a substantial amount of goodwill within this Committee, Mr. Speaker. There is a degree of collegiality and non-partisanship that I have never witnessed in my 22 years in the House. Notwithstanding the work of the Committee—and we are now operating under recommendations from that Committee on a provisional, temporary basis and we have two or three reports before the House setting out further changes in the rules which have not been acted upon—it is my view that one of the reasons this Parliament has become the most angry, raucous Parliament in our history is that the Government has failed to bring in a new program to prorogue the session which, in fact, is Parliament's way of renewing itself. In other words, we start off the session with the Speech from the Throne. Some of the things in its are dropped along the way, somethings merge in legislative form which were not in the Speech from the Throne, but the Speech itself and the accompanying ceremony is Parliament's wway of getting its act together. It is an ongoing process of Parliament renewing itself with a new sense of priorities, because priorities change. Obviously the priorities of the country change, the priorities of the economy change and naturally the priorities of the Government have to change. The manifestation of this change in priorities is the Speech from the Throne opening a new session.

I think it is a valid theory that one of the reasons we find ourselves in the mess we are in today is the failure of the Government to prorogue Parliament, to bring in a new Speech with a new program outlining the Government's priorities, to deal with unemployment, with the housing crisis and the things we have had to deal with, many of them in an ad hoc way. I hope, and I say this in all sincerity, that the Government will take this argument seriously, because I do not believe we are going to accomplish very much in this session.

I do not believe there is a great deal more to be said for this session unless the Government is prepared to make a new start and, indeed, I believe it is too late for that, because a Government which has lost the confidence of the people of Canada, as this Government has, cannot really expect to regain the confidence of the House. Even though it may hold numerical strength, in terms of confidence votes, the fact of the matter is it does not enjoy the goodwill of the House, if you can express confidence in that way. Of course, that speaks to its inability to get its legislative program through.

Be that as it may, however, I still believe that the Government has a clear responsibility to prorogue this session, start a new session and outline its priorities, the budget coming tomorrow notwithstanding. It should then outline its legislative program with respect to inflation, and with respect to some of the things relating to unemployment which have been dealt with in an ad hoc way.

I would like to go back, Mr. Speaker, to the one Throne Speech we have had during this session of Parliament. I go back, incidentally, to April 14, 1980, over three years ago. That speech dealt with a number of issues. It dealt with housing and, peripherally, problems with the fishing industry. We know of course what is happening in the fishing industry today. The Atlantic fishing industry is in a state of collapse, virtual bankrupt, waiting for the Government to act on the recommendation of the Kirby task force which was established over a year ago, and waiting for the Government to get on with the business of trying to restructure the industry to make it viable.

One of the issues dealt with in the Speech from the Throne three years ago was the issue of unemployment. I would like to read briefly from page 5 of Hansard for April 14, 1980, as follows:

> One of the essential objectives of this Government is to put more people to work.

Halleluia!

> Young people, women, natives, and the handicapped face special problems in finding jobs. To meet the needs of these groups, my Government will expand its employment program while using its resources more efficiently. There will be an increased effort to develop critical trade skills so as to better prepare today's labour force for tomorrow's jobs.

What is the record; what does it show? We had the promise, let us look at the performance. In a word, the performance is "dismal".

Since this recession started a year and a half or two years ago we have seen a direct loss of 550,000 jobs in this country. During the recession before that, back in the 1970s, we lost 500,000 jobs. It took us three or four years to regain those lost jobs. Regardless of what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) promises tomorrow night, we can anticipate that the rate of recovery will be such that it will take at least that amount of time, if not longer, to recover these lost jobs. That does not say much for the prospects of the 1.6 million Canadians who are officially unemployed.

In addition to the 1.6 million people unemployed, of course, we have the discouraged workers, those who have given up looking for jobs and are not longer counted as unemployed. They are the so-called hidden unemployed. There is also the under-employed, those who are satisfied to get over the present crisis with part-time jobs. If you add all these numbers you have an unemployment rate of approximately 18.3 per cent, or over two million people. That is the performance following the promise made in the Speech from the Throne three years ago.

Surely, the failure of the Government to discharge that commitment it made three years ago would have at least been manifested in a new Speech from the Throne, a new beginning, a new sense of commitment. Even if the Government continues to fail in discharging that commitment, we would at least have the feeling here in the House and in the country that the Government was trying. We have not and do not have that feeling during this session. We have the uneasy feeling that the Government is not trying.

In the year 1982 the level of employment in Canada was 359,000 below that of 1981. That was the first such year-over-year decline in a quarter of a century. In the previous six years, growth in employment averaged 275,000 jobs per year. On a sectoral basis, the one area which really offends and disturbs me as a Canadian is youth unemployment. I suppose it offends and disturbs all of us, especially at this particular time of year when young people are graduating from our universities and post-secondary institutions, coming onto the job market looking for summer in order to continue their education, with no prospects. Since the beginning of this session the level of employment among young people has dropped 401,000 or 14.8 per cent. We are now looking at a current unemployment rate among young people in the age group of 15 to 24 of 21.3 per cent.

In March of 1982 there were 492,000 unemployed young people. In March of this year the number of unemployed young people had risen to 621,000. All we have to do is look at the calendar, when we talk about 621,000 young people being unemployed, to know that that 600,000 will be joined by another half a million within a very short time, many of them coming into the permanent job market. Equally as important, many will be coming into the job market looking for work to help finance and sustain them as they continue their education.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is a situation which should be addressed by this Government, not in terms of ad hoc programs—and they have their place—but in terms of programs which have some validity in law and which are above suspicion in terms of their application with no suggestion of pork-barrelling. We could all have faith, therefore, in the ability of such programs to attack the problem; specifically in this case to address the problem of helping young people find jobs to finance their education, to build careers, and to do all the things which are a part of the growth and lifestyle of this country.

I come from a Province which now has an official unemployment rate of 21 per cent. If you take into account the hidden unemployed, the discouraged workers, we are looking at a situation in which only three out of every four persons has a job. It could be even worse than that, but certainly one in four in my province today is unemployed. The situation in the Atlantic region is not much better. In Quebec, the number of discouraged workers, those who have given up looking for jobs because they believe no work is available, rose 93 per cent between 1981 and 1982. Last month, for example, Statistics Canada reported that there were 120,000 discouraged workers. For the same month one year ago Statistics Canada reported 92,000 discouraged workers. We see an increase in those who have given up of 34 per cent. What prospect do they have? What hope do they have?

If the Government were to prorogue this session after it brings in its budget, and the budget is criticially important, we would at least be offering some hope. Today we offer them nothing but the dismal monthly unveiling of statistics which reflect gloom and doom in this country, and there is gloom and doom in the land, Mr. Speaker.

I could go on and speak about the long-term unemployed. That used to be an aberration in this country. It was something that used to be identified with the Atlantic Provinces, with the "have-not" Provinces. Long-term unemployment is today a national phenomenon. Let us take a look at what has happened. By "long-term unemployed", of course, we mean those people who have been unemployed for four months or more. Let us start with March of 1980. Of a total unemployment figure of 969,000, there were 375,000 long-term unemployed. That has grown consistently from March of 1980 to March of 1981, with 374,000 of 983,000, to March of 1982, with 505,000 of 1,200,000, to what it is today, with 907,000 people in this country who are long-term unemployed of an official unemployment figure of 1.6 million.

• (1540)

I say to the Government: End this session. Get on with the obligations to the people of this country. Bring in a new speech outlining the new priorities. Surely the Government has at least an obligation to the unemployed of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. Members wishing to ask questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken? If not, the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons).

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, the motion of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) would have this House condemn the Government for its failure to live up to commitments made in the Throne speech. I refer to that part of the resolution particularly, because it must be literally mind-boggling for that Hon. Member or any Hon. Member representing the Conservative Party to make that kind of an allegation. They have gone around the country taking great credit for what they were allegedly able to do in so far as the consitutional initiative was concerned. I say to the Hon. Member for Simcoe North and others that at some point they ought to make up their minds. If they want to take credit for the constitutional initiative, they ought to realize that any success which that initiative had was achieved in this Chamber.

Miss MacDonald: On this side.

Mr. Simmons: Therefore, either there has been a success or there has not been a success. One cannot argue out of both sides of one's mouth. That is what they are doing in this particular case.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We think we'll hear you being proven wrong by you right now.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, my good friend from Saskatoon is in a lively mood today. He has much reason to be. I will come back to that.

I also find it to be a little inconsistent that the Hon. Member for Simcoe North would rise in his place today and make this particular resolution just three or four days after he had written a letter, with which we are all familiar now, in which he undertook on behalf of his colleagues in the Opposition to facilitate the passage of some legislation.

Once again I ask him, which is it that he wants? Does he want the legislation to die on the Order Paper or does he want to facilitate the passage of the legislation? With his knowledge of parliamentary reform and procedure, I am sure he is aware that if the session were to end today, for example, then all these pieces of legislation would die on the Order Paper and we would have to go back to square one, as it were, from a procedural standpoint. Therefore, does he want to facilitate passage of legislation or are these just words which are convenient for the moment? I suggest the words of this resolution are convenient for the present moment?

An Hon. Member: Just words.

Mr. Simmons: How does the Hon. Member square his advocacy that we ought to end this session forthwith, with the publicly known fact that tomorrow the Government proposes bringing in a budget? Does he not realize that implicit in his—

Miss MacDonald: That is what frightens the country.

Mr. Simmons: The Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald) has been frightened by reality before.

Miss MacDonald: I have been frightened by Mr. MacEachen many times.

Mr. Simmons: She will be frightened again in June, at the leadership convention, by some more reality.

Miss MacDonald: Oh, really? Tell me more.

Mr. Simmons: Oh, I see that the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is awake, he who has the ability to say nonsense in the most compassionate terms. Nonsense, nevertheless, but he says it in the most compassionate way.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You don't even know what compassion is.

Mr. Simmons: In the most appealing way, he is able to convince people, as he convinced me during my days in Newfoundland, that he is a strong advocate of certain matters.

I can now see, Your Honour. I have been stalling all this while, waiting for my glasses to come back from the optometrist's.

Miss MacDonald: That is indicative of the Government.

Mr. Simmons: Let me read those notes again.

Mr. Taylor: Read it again. You've probably read it all wrong.

Mr. Simmons: What I have said thus far, of course, has been straight from the heart. I did not need any glasses to see the inconsistency on the part of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North, because that is obvious to many people. I did not really need glasses to be reminded of what I heard from the Hon. Member for St. John's East during my period in the Newfoundland House. I heard him here in Ottawa as a very strong advocate, for example, of consumer matters, that kind of thing which is shown on television. He and I share exactly the same concern. What disullisioned me was that when his Party formed the Government, albeit briefly, there was no initiative from him or his Government to address the matter which he so much decried during his period in Opposition.

Mr. McGrath: You didn't give us a chance, Roger.

Mr. Simmons: The argument is always that they never had a chance. They will not say it in this House, but they say privately when speaking of their good friend, Mrs. Pigott that they never had a chance to do many other things. She had the patronage list all ready.

Miss MacDonald: That didn't stop Arthur Erickson or Donald Macdonald or—

Mr. Simmons: However, it did not proceed as far as they had hoped. Therefore, they must now officially be against patronage, because they were a little slow in getting on with the job at hand.

The record is clear that they are fairly slow at most things. I agree with the Hon. Member for St. John's East that they never had a chance, not the kind of chance they would need, because they would need years and years to do some of those things.

Mr. McGrath: How do you explain 30 per cent in the polls, Roger?

Mr. Simmons: With regard to the particular issue of consumer matters upon which I touched in relation to the Hon. Member for St. John's East, I would have hoped that they might have seen as being the kind of priority that which he had seen in Opposition.

It is a well known game, an easy thing to say what could be done, what should be done or what would be done. However, it is a far different matter to put one's money where one's mouth is. That requires a bit of courage. In that particular respect, the courage was lacking or the priority was not there, because we still have the same kind of thing which the Hon. Member for St. John's East so long decried in Opposition. It could have been changed had he followed through with his stated convictions on the matter.

It is really mind-boggling to hear the Hon. Member for Simcoe North speaking of our failures, as he puts them, to live up to commitments. Has he not done the very simple exercise that I have done or have had done on my behalf? Has he not done the very simple exercise of taking, statement by statement, the commitments and the undertakings in the Throne Speech of 1980, and comparing or relating them to Government actions since then?

I hold in my hand a document comprising about 28 or 30 pages. Very concisely and without a lot of verbage, it says, "Here was the promise, the commitment. Here is the action which flows from it". I could take the House, were there the time, through literally dozens of quotations from the Throne Speech of 1980, quotations relating to home mortgages and housing. I could remind the House of the program whereby the Government undertook to guarantee repayment of the amount of interest deferred in the case of homeowners whose gross debt service ratio exceeded 30 per cent. I could do likewise for commitments related to additional rental units. I could do likewise for other initiatives in the housing area, the home renovation plan, for example, the new initiative which flowed from our commitment in 1980. I could do likewise concerning initiatives in farming and small business and, particularly, the amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act which renews that program for another three years and increases the loan maximums available to farmers from $75,000 to $100,000.

However, by doing so I would make a very elementary mistake, the mistake of assuming that Tories would ever be confused by the facts, the simple mistake of believing that they would want to hear anything that would rebut the charge. They want to carry on in their own merry way stating the big lie over and over again to Canadians.

I invite them instead, to get their facts straight before making those charges, and realize for example that the commitment this Government made in the Throne Speech to raise the Guaranteed Income Supplement to the Old Age Security Pension by $35 a month as of July 1, 1980 was met on June 5, 1980 when we put legislation through the House to keep that commitment.

Have we heard in today's speeches any acknowledgement that perhaps some commitments have been kept? Are they so naive as to think that the public, from whatever segment, believes what they say about this Government?

Miss MacDonald: Thirty per cent of them.

Mr. Simmons: Are they so naive as to think that everybody out there believes everything they say?

Miss MacDonald: Only 50 per cent.

Mr. Simmons: She talks, Mr. Speaker, and she talks. She does not say anything but she talks. I say to my good friend from Kingston and the Islands that we have a system—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You should have.

Mr. Simmons: —for electing governments in this country. It is not a government by polls. Her own erstwhile leader said the equivalent to that when he was the Prime Minister and the polls were not showing him in a very kind light at that particular time. How selective they are in the use of polls from time to time. I say to her to stop revelling in yesterday's realities or fantacies, as the case may be. One of these days when the Government's mandate is exhausted we will put it to the test.

Mr. MacKay: Reluctantly.

Mr. Simmons: With enthusiasm. We are waiting for the Tories to get their house in order.

Mr. Smith: It will be a long wait.

Mr. Simmons: We will wait until they get the number of factions in that Party reduced from 30 to the usual four or five. There is one faction that believes it should privatize Petro-Canada, another faction that believes perhaps it should not, and a faction that says perhaps it should study it some more. There is the faction that says "On to Jerusalem" and the faction that says "no, perhaps we should not go to Jerusalem". That Party went to Waterloo instead.

Mr. Taylor: We did not go to Watergate anyway.

Mr. Simmons: The Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) rises from the ashes again.

Mr. Taylor: Tell us about Buchanan?

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I have no adverse comments to make about the Tory Premier of Nova Scotia, Mr. Buchanan. The Hon. Member may have some adverse comments. He invites me to talk about John Buchanan but I have nothing adverse whatsoever to say about him.

Miss MacDonald: It is Judd.

Mr. Simmons: He saw in the Cape Breton affair the opportunity to provide jobs for the people in Nova Scotia using Government of Canada money. Does the Hon. Member now attack that man, one of his fellow Tories? The Member for Bow River may want me to become disparaging about a good Tory who serves one part of the country fairly well, but I will not do that. I will tell him, if he can stand to hear it, some of the facts of the legislation that we have been able to move through the House.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Tell us about Judd.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has some difficulty relating the most recent remarks of the Hon. Member to the subject matter of the resolution.

Mr. Taylor: I cannot relate anything he has said to the motion.

Miss MacDonald: Anything he says at any time.

Mr. Simmons: Still they mumble, Mr. Speaker.

In the last few days even the Toronto "Mop and Pail", officially known as The Globe and Mail, found some nice things to say about the Government. It identified in print, no less, some of the promises that have been kept. It said in passing, "the Tories have tried to block". The word is out about the Tories. Even the Toronto "Mop and Pail" has seen through what those Members over there are up to.

Our nation has been through a very trying economic time. It is not surprising that the Government in power has drawn a fair amount of the flack and tends to get a fair amount of the blame for the economic woes of the country. An intriguing thought to consider is, would things have been different if the Tories had been in power during that period?

Mr. Smith: Yes. They would have been worse.

Mr. Simmons: I say they would have been decidedly different had the Tories been in power.

Mr. Taylor: We would not have sent all the rigs to the U.S.A., I can assure you.

Mr. Simmons: We have seen a Government floundering and going in both directions at the same time. I mentioned their position on Petro-Canada as one example of the kind of decisiveness that that Government would have exercised. They are always on both sides of every issue.

There obviously would have been a disregard for the well-being of those on fixed incomes. I say that in view of the statements of the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), and others who want to cut back on the social expenditures of the Government. Their views are publicly on the record. However, they would not come so close as to outline details of what those cut-backs would be because that would put the lie to their argument. In order to make massive cut-backs in public expenditures they would have to effect those on fixed incomes. We have categorically said that we are not prepared to do that.

Mr. Taylor: You did it.

Mr. Simmons: The Hon. Member for Bow River wants to spread the lie that we did it.

Mr. Taylor: You are the one who is lying.

Mr. Simmons: We did not. Those who need assistance receive it from the Government. We saw to it that the income supplement of those people who depend on it was adequately protected.

Mr. Taylor: You cut the supplement on the OAS.

Mr. Simmons: I ask the Hon. Member to contradict that with a straight face.

Mr. Taylor: You cut the superannuates. Wake up.

Mr. Simmons: In what other ways would things be different if the Tories were in power? I can say once again categorically that there would be far less compassion for the people of Canada. Again, I base that on the evidence of what the Tories did to their own in broad daylight on national television in Winnipeg. I shudder to think what they would do to the taxpayers behind closed doors. I shudder to think what they would do to the unprotected Canadians behind the secrecy of a closed Cabinet door, if they will skiffer fellow Tories in broad daylight.

Mr. Taylor: Keep pulling red herrings across the path.

Mr. Simmons: The Hon. Member for Bow River is talking about red herrings. He would neither recognize the specie nor the colour.

The motion also discusses "this Government's alleged disregard for the practice of Parliament". Is that not touching? Do not make me laugh. Of all the people who should be talking about disregard for Parliament! I have heard of the pot calling the kettle black. That saying applies here. Are we to forget so soon the parliamentary terrorism that took place in the House when the constitutional Bill was before the Chamber? Do we so soon forget that the parliamentary rules were the last things in the minds of Members of the Opposition at that time when they used physical force, threat and intimidation? Those were the instruments they used to hijack this Parliament in the full view of the nation.

● (1600)

Mr. Taylor: We made you refer to the Supreme Court. You wanted to keep it out of the court.

Mr. Simmons: If there is one thing about which Tories are religiously consistent, it is their hyprocrisy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: Tories are firm believers that if you repeat a lie often enough it becomes the truth.

Mr. Taylor: That is exactly what you are doing now.

Mr. Simmons: Take the lie they repeat about the 18-cent tax on gasoline.

Mr. Taylor: You put on 90 cents.

Mr. Simmons: They conveniently forget that what the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) talked about in that budget was not an 18-cent increase. He said that no matter what the price was they would put an 18-cent tax on top of that. If the Tories want to talk about the amount of taxes on gasoline, why do they not point to what their Tory friends in Ontario are doing for example? They have a 20 per cent ad valorum tax on gasoline.

Mr. Taylor: You put on 90 cents.

Mr. Simmons: Yes, I am sure we put on Bill Davis' tax in Ontario. Come down to earth.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Taylor: You put on 90 cents.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Never.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent. The Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is rising to ask a question.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, for a minute I was worried that the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) had re-emerged with a new manifestation, had been born again. Gradually I was reassured as he emerged as the old reliable Member we have come to expect in this House in terms of his ability to get down to the facts. I do not say that to suggest that I have no respect for him as a person. I do. I am talking about him as a parliamentarian. I must say he stretches my imagination sometimes. Could the Hon. Member explain to the House why if the situation is as bad as he suggests it is with respect to the performance of this Party and its public image, his Party has been down consistently in the polls, to the point that today it enjoys only 30 per cent of the electorate, whereas the Tory Party has grown consistently in the polls, to the point today that it enjoys the support of 50 per cent of the electorate?

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for St. John's East, for whom I have respect. I thank him for calling me reliable. He is right; but old, no.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: The Hon. Member asks how I explain. It is very simple. More people elected to show their preference for the Tories than the Liberals in their response is the polls.

Mr. McGrath: You are right. I cannot quarrel with that.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 62—GOVERNMENT COMMITMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to live up to the commitments made in the Speech from the Throne on April 14, 1980, and for its conscious disregard for the practices of Parliament and the Constitution of Canada, and urges the Government to prorogue the current, unconstitutional Session of Parliament, convene a new Session, and outline its policies before Parliament in a Speech from the Throne.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested as I listened to the words of the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons). I listened with real feeling because of the reaction they evoked. He used such words as "we, the Government, will deal with people with compassion"—

Mr. Simmons: True.

Miss MacDonald: —and "we will look after those in need." Then at one point he said "the Government is not slow at handling patronage." He seems somehow to have combined those two thoughts, that is looking after people in need and the Government's decisiveness with regard to patronage. What we come up with is a list on the compassionate side of the Government dealing with people like Arthur Erikson; Donald Macdonald; Alastair Gillespie; Joel Bell; Maurice Strong; Don Jamieson; Michael Pitfield; Jim Coutts; Martin O'Connell; Peter Stollery; Jack Austin; Judd Buchanan; the list could go on and on and on.

Mr. McGrath: And the saints come marching in.

Miss MacDonald: That is the way in which this Member and the Liberal Government deal with compassion for those in need.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Line up at the trough, boys.

Miss MacDonald: I must say that is a shameful performance when one looks at the real need in this country, when one considers the hundreds of thousands, the millions of people out there who are desperately in need.

What does an Hon. Member on the Government side do? He justifies the fact that the Government never has to produce a Throne Speech in this House of Commons. It has been three years since the Government produced a Speech from the Throne, three years since it brought forward what had traditionally been an annual document in the parliamentary process. There was a time when even a Liberal Government would have felt it necessary to outline to the House and to the nation the nature of its legislative proposals for the current year. The Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) does not seem to think that is necessary. I have to tell him that has been traditional in parliamentary democracies. Other parliamentary democracies and jurisdictions follow that procedure. They still think that is the normal thing to do. Governments in such countries feel it is incumbent upon them to inform the people of their intentions. They feel it is right and proper. It is part of the process, for the edification of the Hon. Members opposite, of being accountable. Accountable is a word that has been removed from the lexicon of this Government.

I stress, Sir, that the practice of yearly presentations of governmental intentions is normal procedure for a responsible Government. But this Government in whatever it does is neither normal nor responsible. Abnormality and irresponsibility are the hallmarks that most characterize those who sit on the Government benches today. Along with that abnormality and irresponsibility there goes a degree of arrogance that is absolutey unmatched in its scope.

Can't you just hear these denizens of power, Sir, scornfully saying to the masses, "What do you mean, give you a Throne Speech every year? We gave you one three years ago. Be satisfied with that." The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his cronies can carelessly dismiss the Canadian public, parliamentary tradition and governmental responsibility in a single breath or with a single gesture.

As in the long Parliament of Oliver Cromwell, this Prime Minister feels that a Throne Speech once a decade is sufficient. But having produced only one such document in three years, surely the least we can expect from this Government is that it make every effort to carry it out, to live up to the expectations it created.

That Throne Speech of April, 1980, makes for interesting reading. But I am not urging all Canadians to rush off and get a copy for tonight's bedtime reading, not unless they want to cry themselves to sleep. But when you read it, Mr. Speaker, you have to wonder at the ponderous and resonant phrases that echo through it. With what rapture and excitement it predicted Canada's entry into the decade of the 1980s. The Throne Speech of April, 1980, outlined a program of action designed to provide for greater security for the elderly and expanded opportunity for youth; equality for women and a national development policy that would provide jobs and stimulate growth. Then going on to extoll the Parliament's virtue the Throne Speech contained this sentence:

All these commitments will be kept, these pledges redeemed, the mandate fulfilled.

Nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker.

• (1610)

Canadians have been deceived and misled by the Government and its spurious pledges. Here is the reality of that so-called program for action. The first part of it was greater security for the elderly. Today in Canada there are 650,000 elderly Canadians, people over the age of 65, who are living below the poverty line. That number will drastically increase, as we have a rapidly aging population. Those people are the forgotten generation by the Government.

The next part of this so-called program of action was expanded opportunities for youth. The Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) referred to the desperate plight of young people today. Approximately 660,000 young people between the ages of 15 and 24 are out of work. They are the lost generation, lost from any care of concern that the Government would direct toward them.

The third part of the so-called program of action was equality for women. It is there in words. Although the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's did not recognize it, Clause 28 was inserted in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms by the combined efforts of the Opposition Parties, not by anything the Government did. It is there in words but it is not carried out in action. Today women in the country earn only half of what the average male earns—$7,600 per year compared with $14,981. Until there is economic equality, there is no such thing as real equality for women.

There was the fourth part of that program for action, a national development policy that would provide jobs and stimulate growth. Three years ago there were a million Canadians out of work. Today there are two million, and of that two million, as the Hon. Member for St. John's East said, a million are long-term unemployed having been without jobs for more than three and a half months. In the last year alone over half a million jobs have been lost from the labour force and our growth rate has dropped immeasurably.

Back in 1980 the Government intoned the following words, "all these commitments will be kept, these pledges redeemed, the mandate fulfilled". What a sick, cruel joke the Government of the day perpetrated on the Canadian public, just as the Government itself is a sick, cruel joke, particularly to the two million Canadians who are out of work and to whom the Prime Minister had the gall to say last week, the economy was performing very well. Who does he think he is kidding?

However, there is one statement in this Throne Speech which was prescient. It read:

> —Canadians will accept sacrifice to meet the economic challenges of the 1980s, but they will not accept injustice.

Indeed, Canadians have had to accept sacrifices, the like of which they have never been called upon to accept before. In the past few years they have had to accept the sacrifice of losing jobs, of losing homes and of seeing families break up, all because of the inability of the Government to carry out the economic pledges it made to Canadians three years ago. Indeed, these two million Canadians who are out of work and these hundreds of thousands who have lost their homes, who have become the sacrificial lambs which the Government has seen fit to offer up on its altar of high interest rates and nationalization. Indeed, they have had to sacrifice.

What the Government said in the Throne Speech about calling upon Canadians to sacrifice has indeed been carried out, but not in the way the Government intended, and certainly not in the way the people of the country anticipated when they heard the Throne Speech three years ago.

There is a certain sick, black humour to all this because the section to which I refer in the Throne Speech was headed up with the title the Government chose to give it, "Putting People First". It has put them first all right. The elderly were commandeered as the front-line troops in the fight against inflation. Young people were marched out by the hundreds of thousands to join the ranks of the unemployed. The concept of family was attacked by the Minister responsible for the status of women who made such unbelievable statements as: "What contribution is she" —a homemaker— "making to society if they are childless", or "Do you, a working woman, want to pay so that someone else can stay at home", and she called staying at home "a luxury". These are the things that have emanated from putting people first according to the Government, putting them first in a very different way than Members on this side of the House would regard putting people first.

There are a couple of specific commitments the Government made in those heady days of April 1980 when it was lusting for power. The Government promised—and the Prime Minister and his colleagues made a big thing of it during the election campaign—to carry out pension reform. The Throne Speech played up that theme with these words:

> Work must begin immediately to design better methods of providing flexible, portable, and secure pensions both in the private and public sectors. To start this process, my Government will soon release a major study on the Canadian pension system.

That was in April 1980. We now know what the Government meant by soon. It took them two and a half years to release a study on pension reform, a paper which I might add was rewritten a number of times and downgraded in its urgency.

According to the Throne Speech the Government promised to start work immediately on improving the income retirement system in the country. Today, three years later, a parliamentary Committee has finally been set up to start that job, once again to study the process of pension reform, a process which many of us consider to be the greatest and most urgent social need of the 1980s. The Committee has begun its work. It is scheduled to present its recommendations at the end of 1983. When those recommendations are presented to the Government, I presume they will be subject to a thorough and intensive period of review by Cabinet. Subsequently there will have to be a series of federal-provincial meetings about them because pension reform is a shared jurisdiction. Then legislation will have to be drafted and debated, all of which takes time. The way the Government moves, it will take weeks and months of time. It would seem that in speaking of the urgency and the immediacy of pension reform in the last election campaign the Government was really looking to the next election campaign.

I assure the House that its lack of process in this vital human need will indeed become an election issue, not in the way the Government thinks and not in the way it predicted. Its procrastination on this vital issue, its delay and lack of interest—these things which have characterized the Government's approach to pension reform—will be major issues in the next election campaign.

What has happened in the interim, during these three years, is that thousands of Canadians have moved toward retirement, toward that period when they are unable to provide for their own needs. They do not have an adequate income because in the years when they might have been able to do that the opportunity was not there.

That is what happened during the three year period in relation to this very definite promise the Government made to work on pension reform immediately. Three years later, we see nothing but procrastination and delay. Only now is a parliamentary committee beginning to study this issue. This is an absolute disgrace for those people who will be locked into their retirement years without adequate income and without self-dignity. They have been robbed of it because of the inactivity of this Government.

Another pledge was made to Canadians in that great Throne Speech. Is it any wonder the Government is so hesitant to bring in another Throne Speech when it sees so much that is still in abeyance, not yet acted upon. In its role as a major employer in Canada, it said:

—my Government will play a leadership role by implementing affirmative action measures in the Public Service.

I do not need to tell you, Mr. Speaker, how lacking in progressing with affirmative actions this Government has been. We have had three years of delay, three years of not implementing any kind of analysis in the great majority of Government departments with regard to affirmative action. Only in three Departments has there been any analysis or plan of action drawn up. At the present time, there are no guidelines for the Government to implement affirmative action programs throughout the various Departments. What has been the result? Unfortunately, the statistics bear out the Government's lack of action in providing any kind of leadership in the way of affirmative action.

There was some slight improvement in the lot of women in the Public Service between 1975 and 1980, but it was minimal at the executive, senior, intermediate and junior levels of employment. Only at the lowest level, the administrative support level, did women increase in number. The number of women in the low paid job ghettoes increased. That is exactly what should not have occurred. Any kind of leadership role would have reversed that to bring women into the higher categories of the Public Service. That has not happened.

I said that one of the reasons the Government has been loath to bring in another Throne Speech is that it has been so inadequate in carrying out the pledges it made in the Throne Speech of April 1980. It is not enough that the Government think only about Throne Speeches. It ought to be thinking about how to take itself out of this House and away from making a further mishmash of governing this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are Hon. Members rising to ask questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken?

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I must admit my surprise that the Official Opposition could do no better than the motion it has placed before the House today. We hear a lot of discussion about allowing Opposition Parties to bring important matters forward. This is respected within our parliamentary rules and procedures. However, to have a convoluted motion brought forward by the Official Opposition on the first day of this week is more than I can appreciate. It does give us an opportunity, however, to correct the record with regard to many of the points the Opposition has attempted to make in the debate thus far.

Canadians across this country will recall the tactics employed by the Official Opposition in these last years. Points were made in the press and by Members on all sides of the House regarding the tactics employed during the bell ringing episode.

We are participating in a session which has included 492 sitting days, an average of 164 per annum, 16 fewer than the 180 provided for in the calendar year 1983 by the recommendation of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure.

Accomplishments heading the list include the patriation of the Constitution and the enshrinement of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedom. We have passed 162 Bills, including 129 Government Bills, 19 Private Members' Public Bills and 14 private Bills. The subjects include the Bank Act revision, Old Age Security improvements, the Canada Post Corporation, the National Energy Program and the Young Offenders' Act. The Canada Ports Corporation was debated for over 12 years. We finally have the Bill.

The public sector spending restraints legislation which was passed affects virtually every identifiable group. All of these measures have had a positive effect on every identifiable group in Canadian society. There was the development of the parliamentary task force to investigate alternative energy. There is legislation dealing with the handicapped, employment opportunities, North-South relations, regulatory reform, Indian self-government and pension reform. This is in addition to the work of the special and standing committees. There was the Sub-Committee on Defence which studied the status of the reserves, and other important matters were dealt with with despatch. This has demonstrated leadership, about which the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) was so preoccupied and concerned.

I am really surprised not only at the lack of imagination of the Official Opposition in bringing before the House nothing more substantive than the motion before us, but by the Hon. Member's gall in bringing the subject of leadership to the floor of the House at this time. Considering the headlines in the last month or so, I thought that would be the last topic she would like to talk about during the course of the debate today.

Obviously the Official Opposition laboured considerably in trying to come up with something to be debated in the House.

This subject shows a lack of initiative, lack of creativity, lack of innovation, lack of imagination and lack of will. This convinces me that they are not only tired, but exhausted of all possible energies needed to bring forward something that would be of substantive contribution to the operation of Parliament.

• (1630)

The other day they had an Opposition motion, which could have contained a very important topic. The Opposition took up the whole day talking about what it would like to see done about tourism. I support tourism. There is no question but that it is a very important subject. In the Atlantic Provinces alone, tourism is among the top three revenue earners of that area. There is no question in anybody's mind—

An Hon. Member: We are all for tourism.

Mr. Harquail: Yes, all for tourism, and always have been. I think Canada has an excellent reputation for providing hospitality to all who come to this great country. With the problems the country is facing today, if the best the Opposition can do on an Opposition Day is bring in the subject of tourism to give a few Members an opportunity to talk about special projects in their own particular ridings, that to me shows a complete lack of understanding of the role and responsibilities of the Opposition.

An Hon. Member: They are desperate.

Mr. Harquail: Yes. That has been said before and I think it proves the point. It is a desperate Party. Last week it was tourism, this week they want to talk about the Speech from the Throne. All winter the Opposition did not cease calling for a budget. Now Hon. Members contradict themselves by proposing a delay of the budget so they can get on with a Speech from the Throne. It has been said many times that they cannot have it both ways. At some point they must have a discussion with their Acting Leader, and a meeting with their House Leader, to try at least to get their act together and decide what they want to proceed with first.

First, they hounded for months about the need for a budget. With present conditions of the country and the economy, no one could disagree that we must have a budget. Everybody knows that the Government is now prepared. Tomorrow evening we will have the budget.

The 16 days of bell-ringing—16 days of tying up, hijacking, hostage-taking, call it what you will—delaying in fact the business of this House, flies in the face of democracy and in the face of the very principles of this House. These people who hold up so highly the importance of protecting the rights of the people and the importance of this institution by delaying the proceedings of the House for 16 days, were denying the Canadian people legislation. We could have had two Speeches from the Throne during that 16-day period and really tried to accomplish something.

I am convinced Mr. Speaker, as are all Canadians who follow the political scene, and are concerned with the future of the country of the total confusion that exists within the Official Opposition. We know the pains its Members are now going through to provide the country with a leader for that Party. They have totally turned away from the responsibilities and the duties they have to the day-to-day workings of this House, by not producing substantive motions on Opposition Days. That, I think, has to be of concern to everyone.

Another element to be considered is that perhaps there are hidden tactics within their motion today. They have asked for a budget. We are to have a budget delivered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) tomorrow night. They are asking for a Speech from the Throne at the same time. Perhaps it is to give some of their hopeful leadership candidates that eight extra days to roam the country looking for delegates. One does not really know. One cannot see any logic so one cannot conclude what exactly it is they want or what they are attempting to do.

Tomorrow evening the Minister of Finance will present his budget. This will be the fourth budget in this session, coupled with two economic statements. This means the Government has reported to the House on the state of the economy on a semi-annual basis.

Similarly, at the beginning of each trimester, the Government House Leader outlined in writing the legislative intentions of the Government. He has also adopted the practice of making this outline public. This has not produced much co-operation from the Official Opposition. The response every time has not been to express their opposition in an effective manner by voting, but by talking on and on when they really do not have any idea what they want to say. Rather, as I mentioned earlier, they ring the bells and assault and insult the Chair. That has to be the most unacceptable act in the proceedings of this House. No Hon. Member should tolerate that, and yet that is what we had to suffer through.

On the Bank Act revisions, for instance they took 14 hours and 22 minutes on Second Reading, 50 hours and 15 minutes in committee, 18 hours and 12 minutes at Report Stage and 6 hours and 10 minutes at Third Reading. They then used more than 90 hours on a Bill that had been before the House and the public for over five years. Is that an indication of their spirit of co-operation?

There are many other examples of this type of needless delay by a Party whose Members talk of getting on with the job of getting things done, of doing things for Canadians and trying to help them, yet march into the House and deliberately filibuster and delay effective legislation.

There have been many examples of this kind. The Opposition has been so unco-operative it has been necessary to use other rules, not because we like to have to use them, but because this has been forced upon Members of Parliament. By its actions, the Opposition has held the Canadian people as hostages, people who have vested in them a certain trust. That has to be a sad commentary on what the Opposition is trying to do.

All Canadians are currently very much aware of the action that was taken as a result of the Speech from the Throne, the legislation that has been accomplished over these many history-making days. These accomplishments include responding to the individual needs by promoting greater security for the elderly, expanding opportunities for the young, equality for women, the achievement of a secure energy supply at a fair price for all Canadians, the promotion of a national development policy that would provide jobs, stimulate growth, build on regional strength, increase Canadian ownership and control of our economy, strengthen national institutions while at the same time making them more responsive to provincial and regional goals, and ensure that Canada plays a vigorous part in the world beyond our borders. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has repeatedly made the point that we cannot operate as an island unto ourselves. We are a very important part of the world scene in all respects.

While this session has been the longest in Canadian history, it has been the most productive. There have been 137 Government Bills introduced in Parliament and, as I mentioned earlier, over 100 have received Royal Assent. The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) mentioned earlier the decisive action the Government has taken with respect to housing. We are all witnessing and enjoying the results of increased housing starts. That is playing a very major role in turning things around.

• (1640)

The inflation rate is down to the area of 6 per cent. We know that the Minister of Commerce and Development in the Ontario legislature made that statement a few weeks ago when he joined with the Canadian Government in telling Canadians how pleased he was that we were able to achieve this through co-operative measures. The federal Government's transfers to provinces and regions of the country are quite substantial.

This afternoon the Minister of Finance did not miss the opportunity to bring good news, in answer to a question during Question Period, about the low interest rates, now around 10 per cent, the prime rate at banks, the reduced interest on one-year mortgages and an attractive figure for five-year mortgages.

Definite action was taken on the commitment to small businessmen and farmers by amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the Small Businesses Loans Act which received Royal Assent, and by the extention of the termination date for loans to be guaranteed by nine months, from June 30, 1982 to March 31, 1983. We saw action taken with respect to raising the deposit insurance limit from $20,000 to $60,000. Action has also been taken on the Special Farm Financial Assistance Program.

The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's spoke about action to protect the elderly citizens with respect to the Guaranteed Income Supplement. A special committee will study our pension system in a very detailed way, and a green paper is expected to be released early in 1983. The Special Parliamentary Task Force on Employment Opportunities for the 80s was appointed in May 1980 and reported in October 1981. Imaginative action was taken with respect to the Canada Community Services Projects and Canada Community Development Programs in the summer of 1980, and in January of 1982 there was an additional allocation of funds. As well there is the summer employment program for youth which will be announced in the very near future.

These are all important programs to assist during the winter months, Mr. Speaker. University students will soon be in the market looking for employment and these programs will play a major role in assisting them in a difficult situation.

We have also seen an increase in the ILAP, announced jointly by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley) in January 1981.

There is a range of other programs I could touch on with respect to women in non-traditional occupations, women's employment programs, affirmative action programs, a program for employment disadvantaged, for our native people, for our youth—every sector of society has been remembered and has benefited from the direct results that accrue to them from action taken by the Government arising out of the Speech from the Throne.

I began my remarks this afternoon by taking exception to the lack of creativity and imagination on the part of the Official Opposition in what has been brought forward for consideration today. They touched upon a subject of great importance to all Canadians. Once they find their way back after choosing a leader there may be some direction over there, but for the moment it leaves us in a very bad position in the House of Commons to have to consider a motion such as the one before us this afternoon.

While they talk about doom and gloom and preach the negative side of all of this, I can witness this afternoon the benefits that have been accruing to Canadians in every region of the country, certainly in the Atlantic region. I know from experience in my own Province, in the northern part of New Brunswick, that because of transfer payments from the federal Government we have been able to achieve much in terms of the general development agreement and various sub-agreements for agriculture, tourism and so on.

I would conclude by attempting something I know you will not allow, Mr. Speaker, in my remarks this afternoon. This brochure—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. In addition to the rule against displays, which the Hon. Member knew was going to be applied, unfortunately his time has expired. The Chair will now have to recognize Hon. Members for questions, answers and comments.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Hon. Member if he can try his hand at distinguishing between sittings and sessions of this House. It is a matter of some concern that the term session has been dropped from the Constitution and has been replaced by the word sitting. This suggests, as the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) mentioned in his question to the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's, that this could lead us into the unfortunate situation of having a sitting one day and having a global bill presented to us and then sending us home for another year. I wonder whether the Hon. Member is prepared to comment on the difference between a sitting and a session, and whether the House has not perhaps gone beyond the normal parliamentary session within the terms of the previous Constitution.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I would be among the first to yield to the Hon. Member. He has been here several years and is experienced in Government. He appreciates the rules of the House and what is contained in the Constitution which we have made law in this country. I believe he is familiar with the Act and the rules as they apply to the very question he has placed before us this afternoon. I do not think it is necessary for me to add anything to that. He is a senior Member of the Opposition, so far be it from me to lecture him on the interpretation of sittings and sessions.

It is of no benefit to the country and of no benefit to this institution to be wasting the time of Parliament bringing in silly motions such as the one we are debating this afternoon. It is a delaying tactic. We witnessed that filibuster with respect to the bell ringing incident and the assault on the Chair. If this is all that occupies the minds of Hon. Members opposite, I will not delay the House any further.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Hon. Member, if he finds the motion so silly, why he wasted the time of the House for 20 minutes speaking on it?

Mr. Harquail: This is the very essence of this important place, that we are here to do a job. I was elected to represent a very important part of this country. I am proud to be here representing the riding of Restigouche which I was referring to as my time expired. The Hon. Member knows that there is a certain onus of responsibility on the Opposition as well as on the Government in any democratic system. That is true in Canada. We accept our role and I would only hope that Hon. Members opposite would make our work a little more interesting by appointing Hon. Members to put sufficient time and effort into coming up with some thought-provoking motions which we could really deal with in the time which is allotted to us in the House.

• (1650)

The Acting Speaker: Questions and answers.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member's comments and I appreciate very much his concern over the leadership of this Party. I wonder if he has given any thought whatsoever to the total lack of leadership on his side of the House?

Mr. Harquail: Fifteen years ago last Friday we applauded one of the best leaders, one of the most dynamic and competent Prime Ministers the country will see for many years to come. The Hon. Member has given me an excellent opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to say something I wanted to say during the course of my remarks, but which I refrained from doing. The very fact things we have been able to achieve, arising out of the Speech from the Throne, have been achieved as a result of the dynamic leadership of the Prime Minister. We are very proud of this fact. I am very pleased, and must thank my hon. friend from British Columbia, for giving me this excellent opportunity to make the statement that there is no doubt in anyone's mind that the Prime Minister has made the case for himself through his intelligence and his ability to achieve these things.

What I would like to put to the Hon. Member on the other side of the House, though, with respect to comments which have been made this afternoon, is the fact that his party, which plays the role of Official Opposition, and of which he seems to be proud to be a Member, has held three conventions in the last two years and has yet to produce a policy to indicate to the Canadian people where it stands on any issue. Despite the fact that his party has not been able to hold on to a leader, despite the fact that it, after nine months had to give up the Government, and despite the fact that it was not able to govern when given the opportunity, the Hon. Member has the audacity to rise this afternoon to put a question to me about leadership. I believe he should go back and do his homework, pick a leader and come back and try to put straight to the Canadian people what his Party would be able to do, before he puts a question to us with respect to our leader. I find it not only passing strange but a sad moment in Canadian history, that that Party, which is the Official Opposition of the Parliament of Canada in this House of Commons, has had in recent years three major policy conventions, and not one Canadian is able to identify what policies within the Party or what it stands for.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to hear that the Hon. Member opposite has not given any concern to the matter of leadership of his own Party. His Government has had some three years to demonstrate some ability to solve problems rather than to create them. I would like to ask the Hon. Member from New Brunswick if he is happy with the fact, if it should come to pass, of his leader leading his Party into the next election, whenever it might be?

Mr. Harquail: That is something, Mr. Speaker, with which we are not faced at the moment. The Official Opposition seems to hold down a pretty good corner on posing hypothetical questions. There is no doubt in my mind that we will be ready for an election at any time it may be called by the Prime Minister, as it is his sole prerogative to do. That is the system. That is the time-honoured historical, respected position, there for us all to live by, and I accept it. I must say, however, Mr. Speaker, with respect to unity in Canada, there is one thing on which we are united. On that night in Winnipeg when their leader was removed from office in such a despicable way it was sad to watch, and it is sad to bring to mind this afternoon that a group of men and women doing such a thing in public. Yet now, a few short days since that activity, one member of that party poses questions as to what we on this side think of what another person might do. Let me tell him one thing in concluding my answer to the question. As we have been able to demonstrate in the past, when we are faced with a decision we will make that decision with despatch. We will rise to the occasion with despatch, with action similar to that which we have been demonstrating on all of the issues we have been faced with, in a true democratic manner.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Debate. The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to watch representatives of the two old line parties in the House of Commons talk about the leadership crisis which faces the country. Unfortunately, Hon. Members of both Parties talked about individuals, whether the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was more hated or whether the combination of leadership hopefuls in the Tory Party represent any particular direction, and so on. What they missed out on was something much more important. It is not a matter of personality or Gallup polls. It is not a matter of how a Party deposes or imposes a leader what is really important is that this country does not have any economic leadership at all. When a motion is put before us by the Conservative Party I believe that is what the debate should be about. A Throne Speech is supposed to set the direction of the legislation, the budget, and other matters which will come before the House of Commons for debate, for discussion and in some cases for passage into legislation. What has happened in the three years and three or four days since we have had a Throne Speech is that this Liberal Government has wandered through our economic and political history.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Staggering is the word.

Mr. Murphy: Yes, perhaps the Hon. Member to my right is correct. Perhaps "staggered" is a much better word for describing the way this Government has led this country. Canadians, regardless of where they live in this country, do not have any trust or faith in the ability of this Government. They have no knowledge or idea of where this Government intends to take Canada.

The Throne Speech to which the Member referred, the speech which was made over three years ago, talked about strengthening the foreign Investment Review Agency. It talked about decreasing the deficit. It talked about decreasing unemployment. It talked about affirmative action programs. It talked about pension reform. It talked about a number of things, Mr. Speaker, and yet Government has not acted. It has had three years to fulfil its own self-imposed mandate. It has had three years to deliver the legislation, to deliver budgets, to deliver action in this House of Commons which would put forth the programs it promised. This Throne Speech was not something which was imposed upon the Government. This Throne Speech of April 14, 1980, was a speech written by the Prime Minister, his Cabinet and his aides. It was a direction which this Government promised the country, a promise which it broke, Mr. Speaker. Pensioners were promised pension reform, they did not get it. Women, the handicapped and the natives were promised affirmative action. They did not get it. Those who were unemployed were promised jobs. Those who were concerned about the deficit were promised that it would be reduced. Member after member of the Liberal Party has risen this afternoon to defend the Government's record on these issues, saying that it was the Opposition that filibustered or that the economic times have changed. They had a number of excuses, a litany of excuses as to why the Government has failed. Those charges by Government Members are simply not substantiated.

In many of the areas of the Throne Speech, the Government has not even introduced legislation or put forward any proposals. It has come back and said "the Opposition would not let us do it". To say that the Opposition somehow prevented the Government from passing legislation is simply not true. The Government did not even have the legislation to present to us or any plans with regard to affirmative action to keep the promises it had made.

Therefore, I would argue that since the Government cannot bring forward actions on the Throne Speech which it promised three year's ago, that Throne Speech is somehow invalid. It is up to the Government to come forward with a new program, a new platform as to what it wishes to present to the House of Commons. Right now we know that the Throne Speech which started this session is really not in play. It does not contain the proposals which the Government will work on.

We know, for example, concerning the Foreign Investment Review Agency, that it has gone in the exact opposite direction. During Question Period the Liberals have admitted that with regard to unemployment they really will not do very much. Therefore, they will not keep the promises they made in the Throne Speech.

Canadians inside and outside the House of Commons are really suffering from that lack of leadership by the Government. I would join others in the House in saying that it is time for a Throne Speech. It is time for the Government to give us an indication as to what direction it wishes to follow. It is time for Canadians to know whether the Government has a plan, any goals for the country, or any objectives so that Canadians in Atlantic Canada, Quebec, Ontario, the Prairies, B.C. or the Northwest and Yukon Territories can know whether there are any regional development plans or whether the Government is concerned about their issues. Canadians deserve that.

However, what Canadians do not deserve is another Throne Speech which is as false as the Throne Speech we heard three years ago. We need a Throne Speech, we need the legislation which results from a Throne Speech, and we need Government action through budgets and through other economic measures which will meet the needs of Canadians. We want a Throne Speech which will be followed by the Government. We want one which will clearly establish where the Government wants to take the country, and we want ensuing legislation to follow the same direction.

I attended a conference in Flin Flon, Manitoba, held by the Flin Flon Crisis Group. It was basically for women and others concerned about the plight of women in our society. I spoke of Government programs and the Government's failure to take affirmative action.

I also spoke of another trend in our modern society. The fact that the Throne Speech is so full of empty promises reminds me of the story I recited to that group. I said that what we must beware of today is the modern equivalent of the false prophets, because there are a number of them in this country. The federal Liberal Government certainly has a number of false prophets.

I would like to refer to some of the techniques used by these false prophets. One technique, of course, is to announce that there will be a new Government program or a change in Government programs. The literature is distributed across the country, with Cabinet Ministers making speeches here and there. However, the Government never actually introduces the changes or new programs. In other words, it simply takes the publicity and runs. There is no action.

Another technique of these false prophets is to advertise a program throughout the country, again distributing fancy brochures, such as those which have been distributed concerning the Crow rate. The Government does everything to make people feel that there are programs for small business, for women, for pensioners and others in the country. However, the Government never explains to small businessmen, fishermen and farmers that they do not qualify for the programs. In other words, the Government does not come clean as to what its programs are about.

A third technique is for the Government to announce a program, advertise a program and actually introduce it. It is passed, and people do qualify for it. However, when they apply for it, they find that there are only limited funds available.

Those are three of the techniques used by the Government's false prophets. However, like many false prophets, all they do is turn off those who are listening to those words almost in a worshipful sense.

We need a new Throne Speech. Canadians need new legislation. They need leadership in the country. We are in very serious economic times. It is hurting the social fabric of our families. It is hurting women, children and those people who wish to be working. It is hurting those who wish to keep their farms away from the Royal Bank, those who wish to be able to keep their businesses going. They need a new Throne Speech. After three years, Canadians deserve a Throne Speech and leadership. What they do not want and what they would absolutely reject is another series of pronouncements by false prophets, promising and promising but never delivering, never providing the services, and never giving any leadership or showing any concern over the plight of Canadians. We want such a Throne Speech, but we want to ensure that it is not simply a bunch of political propaganda financed by taxpayers and with no follow-up. Give us the leadership, but ensure that it is not simply political crap.

Mr. Clarke: Was the Hon. Member for Churchill telling the House that the Government had failed miserably in its attempts to carry out the commitments made in the Speech from the Throne given in the other place? Is he saying that the present Government has shown a singular lack of leadership in resolving the problems of ordinary Canadians? Is he asking the Liberal Party to resign its position in Government and to face the electorate, or is he at least calling for the resignation of the Prime Minister so that the rank and file of the Liberal Party of Canada, those who are so embarrassed by their Party can be given an opportunity to elect a new House Leader so that there may be some new direction for the country?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, of course I agree with the concerns raised by the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra. In terms of what I was asking, I was of course following the wording of the Conservative Opposition motion which, unfortunately, does not call for the resignation of the Government. I wish it did. However, if the Hon. Member has asked me whether or not the Government has provided leadership, I must of course say no. If he has asked me whether it has kept its promises, I must say no. If the Hon. Member has asked me whether it is providing leadership, I must say no. If he has asked me whether it should resign, I must say yes.

• (1710)

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) could not have foreseen this in 1979 when he and his colleagues so easily supported the Members opposite?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, we have spent most of this debate talking about the fact that the Throne Speech is three years old. The Tories' grudge is much older than that. On February 18, 1980, the people of Canada turned the Conservative Government out.

Mr. Clarke: They were misled.

Mr. Murphy: The Hon. Member says that they were misled. Let me explain again what happened for those who have a kind of revisionist sense of history.

The former Minister of Finance introduced a budget. After the Liberals moved a non-confidence motion, we in this part of the House of Commons proposed our own amendment explaining why we could not support the budget. The Conservative Government of that day decided that it would not amend its budget and would not discuss and work with its allies in the House of Commons, the Social Credit Party, and let the vote take place. It was defeated in that vote. Two months later it was defeated, not by the Liberals or the NDP but by the people of Canada. The people of Canada rejected that budget, they rejected the Government and they rejected the leader of that Party.

That Party is in the process of ejecting that same leader now. I see no reason for us to be condemned for doing three years earlier what they are now doing.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Churchill needs a lesson in numbers, I am afraid. He talks about the lack of the Government in 1979 to collect the votes of a Party which had five seats in the House when the Government lost by six votes.

The people of Canada rejected the Conservative Party in the 1980 election because they were taken in by the very type of statements made during the election campaign that the group opposite, which is a very small group today, made in its Throne Speech of 1980. After all, that is the issue with which we are concerned today, the failure of the Government to act on the promises it made in the Throne Speech, as well as the ones it made in the election campaign that resulted in the unfortunate resignation of the Government that we on this side formed at that time.

I might also remind the Hon. Member for Churchill that he has the wrong perspective on the process that is going on now in this Party. This Party is in the process of reaffirming the leader of this Party whom we have enjoyed for the last seven years.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I suppose we will all find out sometime in mid June whether the Conservative Party is reaffirming its previous leader, since the new leader is the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), of course. However, we have noticed that there seems to be a fair number of other Conservatives travelling throughout the country at this time saying that perhaps the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) is not the person to lead their Party. Many Canadians feel that he is not the person to lead the Party. They certainly had the opinion in February, 1980 that he was not the person to lead the country.

It is up to the Conservatives to pick their leader, but I, and I am sure our Party, will not give a blank cheque to whomever the Conservative leader is, just as we would never give a blank cheque to whomever leads the Liberal Party. We have our policies and we are proud of them. We wish to work in the House and throughout the country to promote our policies. The debate which is occurring in the House of Commons right now concerns the very fact that when the Liberals make a throne speech and announce their policies they do not follow through with them. They do not keep their promises. The most noticeable result has been that they have lost the faith of ordinary Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is rather surprising to see the Official Opposition presenting a motion of this kind today, the same Opposition that complains and gets upset about the hardship Canadians are suffering because of this Government. They are asking for action, but today, they are wasting the time of the House by trying to put the Government on the defensive.

Here is part of the motion that was moved today by the Official Opposition, and I quote:

> That this House condemns the Government for its failure to live up to the commitments made in the Speech from the Throne on April 14, 1980.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues opposite and the representatives of the New Democratic Party have just said that they agree that this Government has not lived up to a single commitment, and Members on the Government side, like myself, we say that we have fully lived up to our commitments. So it depends a little on what side of the House one happens to be. In any case, Mr. Speaker, it cannot be denied, and I could name fifty or so commitments the Government has made and met, namely, various programs the Government has introduced and implemented. Therefore, I would be tempted to . . . A lot has been said about leadership, and the Progressive Conservatives are very busy preparing their next convention. They are terribly excited at the thought that the candidates for the leadership are going to bring about miraculous changes. They are still the same people—

Mr. Jarvis: Very quiet!

Mr. Tousignant: Very quiet indeed! They are still the same people, Mr. Speaker. I could give a brief analysis of the leadership candidates. However, I think I shall refrain, since that is not the subject of this debate. Nevertheless, speaking of leadership, I feel that demanding the resignation of a man like the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and providing as an alternative people who are not very experienced and who do not seem to have the desired ability, I think these are very rash statements on the part of the Official Opposition, and perhaps I should also include the New Democratic Party, which is always defending widows and orphans. The New Democratic Party is for and against almost everything. Sometimes they express their shock at the deficit, and the next day, they demand all kinds of costly measures which will necessarily increase the deficit. These people know they will never be in power, so it is easy for them to say just about anything.

• (1720)

Some of the Government's commitments, and I shall name only a few, were included in the words of the Right Hon. Prime Minister, in the Speech from the Throne, and I quote:

> My Government will act to assist those unable to bear the burden of renegotiating their home mortgages in the present abnormal situation so that the spectre of foreclosure will be avoided.

What did we do, Mr. Speaker?

In his November 1981 budget, the Minister of Finance announced the creation of a guarantee plan under which the Government will guarantee, subject to a maximum of $3,000 and other prescribed limits, the repayment of deferred interest to owners whose gross debt service ratios exceed 30 per cent. That was a commitment on the part of the Government and it has been fulfilled.

The Government also undertook to introduce improvements under the mortgage renewal program. The plan was extended from November 12, 1982 to December 31, 1983, and homeowners who spend more than 30 per cent of their gross income to meet new mortgage payments are eligible, after June 28, to a maximum $3,000 non-taxable cash grant. That is another commitment. In the November budget, the Minister also announced a new rental housing construction incentive program offering interest-free loans of up to $7,500 per unit for 15,000 units allocated to those regions of the country where the housing market was tight. What did we do? We kept our promises, Mr. Speaker. In the end, that program was available to 15,000 owners in areas with a high unemployment rate so as to enable people to renovate their home. This program has a leverage effect on personal expenditures and was aimed at creating 10,000 jobs; in addition, it did cost $30 million, we supported that program and met our commitments. The budget provided also that this measure would be implemented immediately and that any buyer of a new house whose construction would begin before December 31, 1982 would be entitled to a $3,000 cash grant. What did we do? That is what we are doing, Mr. Speaker, and this program has been extended until March 31, 1983. It has been estimated that 100,000 buyers will be eligible for that grant and that the Government will spend about $300 million. The annual grant for non-profit rental housing has been extended from 25,000 to 27,500 units in 1982, a measure which will cost $10 million.

There is yet another commitment. Farmers and small businesses are particularly hard hit by soaring prices and this Government is aware of their problems. To lend them a helping hand, the maximum amount available under the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Farm Improvement Loans Act will be raised to $100,000. The Government is considering the possibility of introducing other similar measures. That was one of the commitments in the Speech from the Throne. What did we do, Mr. Speaker?

Pursuant to Bill C-27 to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act which was given Royal Assent on June 27, 1980, the program was extended for three more years and the $75,000 limit on loans has been raised to $100,000.

Bill C-17 to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act was also given Royal Assent on June 27, 1980 so that this piece of legislation would remain in force until June 30, 1982. The $75,000 maximum loan limit was raised as well to $100,000, which brings up to $850 million the total guaranteed loans available during that period.

Under Bill C-122 to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act, passed on July 23, 1982, the termination date for loans to be guaranteed was extended from June 30, 1982 to March 31, 1983, an additional nine months.

In the June 82 budget $400 million were earmarked for investment grants to allow small businesses to reduce interest payments on their loans. Eligibility extended also to farmers and fishermen. The rebate, which amounted to a maximum of 4 per cent and was applicable over a period of two years was aimed at financing new investments and industrial research. In addition to the special program of assistance to farmers in financial difficulty announced in the June 82 budget speech, $200 million have been allocated to the Farm Credit Corporation for loans. Under that program too, for a period of two years following the authorization of the loan, the borrower will be granted an interest rate 4 per cent lower than the current rate of the Farm Credit Corporation, as is the case for loans granted under the Small Business Development Bond Program.

Here is another commitment by the Government. The Government will ask Parliament «to give urgent consideration to legislation raising the Guaranteed Income Supplement to the Old Age Security pension by $35 a month per household by July of this year.» What have we done in that regard, Mr. Speaker? Bill C-16, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act which received royal assent on June 5, 1980, provides for a $35 monthly increase of the Guaranteed Income Supplement for each household and of the spouse allowance effective July 1, 1980.

Furthermore, you will note that the legislation aimed at limiting the indexation of Old Age Security payments announced in the budget speech of June 1980 did not affect the recipients of the GIS who get a supplement to the GIS payment equivalent to the full indexation.

Yet another commitment: The "Government intends to convene a National Pension Conference in the fall . . . To start this process, [the] Government will soon release a major study on the Canadian pension system." What have we done in that regard, Mr. Speaker? The National Pension Conference was held in Ottawa in March and April of 1981. A thorough study on the Canadian pension system is in the works. It should be released fairly soon in the form of a Green Book.

Here is another commitment I would like to mention: "One of the essential objectives of [the] Government is to put more people to work . . . There will be an increased effort to develop critical trade skills so as to better prepare today's labour force for tomorrow's jobs. Expanding native opportunities and training women for new occupations will receive strong emphasis." What have we done, Mr. Speaker?

The Government has also undertaken to improve the operation of the unemployment insurance program and has suggested amendments which will make it more workable in the eighties. The Government has launched all kinds of programs, the Canada Community Services Projects for instance, and the Canada Community Development Projects. The Canadian Government announced on January 22, 1982, a supplementary apportionment of $33.7 million to be added to the $113.4 million previously announced.

The Industry and Labour Adjustment Program is another scheme which has been put forward by the Department of Employment and Immigration for a three-year period and to which have been earmarked $350 million. This program was jointly announced in January 1981 by four federal Departments. The Portable Wage Subsidy Program which is part of the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program enables the unemployed over 46 years of age and living in designated areas to find another job, because the Government is paying a wage subsidy to employers who are willing to hire those people.

• (1730)

I would also like to discuss another program, namely the Community Employment Program which enables workers who have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits to obtain another productive job on a temporary basis. The Bill to provide for the payment of benefits to laid-off employees and to amend the Canada Labour Code which was given Royal assent on March 31, 1982, made available in last resort in designated industries some benefits to workers aged 54 to 65, who were laid off as a result of too fierce a competition from abroad, of an industrial reorganization or because of certain problems related to a non-cyclical market.

The National Training Act which controls the present training programs and has them focused on skills particularly in demand on the national level, promotes the adjustment of businesses and workers to technological development, and then intensifies training courses available to those who are getting ready to enter the labour market.

The following programs are aimed at some special manpower groups. The Affirmative Action Program, for example, stimulates the private sector into developing a practical attitude towards women, native people and the disabled. Special provisions for native training are making financial aid available to enable native men and women to get some additional training.

There is also another program aimed at women getting involved in non-traditional occupations. The purpose of this program is to help women who want to hold non-traditional occupations which were previously reserved for men by paying wage subsidies to employers who are willing to give them the required training.

I would like to point out the Women's Employment Program designed to extend the professional scope of the working women by encouraging them to attend skill training courses or to hold occupations which were generally denied to them in the past.

I will now refer to the Program for the Employment-Disadvantaged, the purpose of which is to find permanent jobs in the private sector for the physically and mentally handicapped and for the chronically unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, we could give a lengthy list of all programs launched by this Government.

I could mention others. The Government intends to work more closely with voluntary and local organizations towards the implementation of a community service program. What has the government been doing? It is looking into its dealings with voluntary organizations, as well as into the subsidies it is paying to them.

I see that I am running out of time, Mr. Speaker; I could mention a great many other programs. In the Speech from the Throne, the government indicated that as major employer in this country, it would lead the way in its approach to the Public Service. It suggested that all discrimination based on sex should be eliminated. What have we done, Mr. Speaker? In 1981, within the Personnel Policy Branch of the Treasury Board, a Developmental Personnel Policies and Activities Division was created to make sure that the government fulfilled its promises of implementing within the Civil Service affirmative action and equality-of-opportunity policies. The Division must ensure that women, natives and handicapped people have equal opportunities. It is also responsible for the quality of worklife within the Civil Service. It tends to support the efforts of its own Affirmative Action section, the Public Service Commission, and the Affirmative Action sections of other departments.

The Government had other commitments: it said it would amend the Criminal Code to solve for instance the problem of violent crimes against women, and together with provincial and territorial governments, it would try to improve the social services and care provided to women who are the victims of violent acts.

What have we done, Mr. Speaker? Bill C-127, to amend the Criminal Code, was adopted by the House on August 4, 1982. We have replaced rape with sexual assaults of various degrees. We have done away with the need to have a plaintiff's claim substantiated. We have done away with the spouse's immunity. The Criminal Code has been amended so that its provisions apply to people of both sexes.

Here is a good one that concerns energy, Mr. Speaker. Since the Progressive Conservative Government was defeated by the Liberals, the Official Opposition has been complaining that we misled the population because we promised not to increase oil prices. That is a good one! Let's be clear about what happened at the time, Mr. Speaker. The Progressive Conservatives promised that they would implement an 18 cents a gallon excise tax on oil and increase prices gradually up to 85 per cent of oil prices. The Liberals promised not to impose this 18 cents a gallon tax and to maintain prices at 75 per cent of world prices. This is exactly what happened. The price of oil must go up just like the price of bread and butter. Moreover, it would obviously have increased much more if the Progressive Conservatives had remained in power. They clearly said that they wanted domestic prices to 85 per cent of world prices in addition to imposing an excise tax of 18 cents a gallon. And now they spread the rumour that the Liberals did not keep their promise. I can assure the House that oil prices would be much higher if the Progressive Conservative Government was still in power.

I can see that the time is going fast, Mr. Speaker. I would like to say this in closing. If there is one thing this Government can be blamed for, it can only be for having given too much and for keeping its promises too well. At a given time, everyone waits anxiously for a Speech from the Throne. Throughout Canada, people are waiting impatiently for a Speech from the Throne as though no one will have to work any longer afterwards. The throne speech will be a miracle and no one in Canada will have to work in the future. Well, Mr. Speaker, if this Government can be blamed for something, it is for having given too much. We now ask all Canadians to do their share and if they do, we shall put our economy back on track.

[English]

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the various Members who spoke in the House this afternoon, particularly to the previous speaker who I know is most interested in seeing that Canada, which we both serve with pleasure, moves on and takes its rightful place within the community of great industrialized nations with which we have previously shared company. As the Hon. Member is aware, that is fast disappearing and slipping through our fingers, primarily due to the inaction and lack of motivation on the part of his Government.

I want to address myself to the comments of two Members in particular. The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) tried to indicate to the House and to the nation that we in the Conservative Party were the masters of our own doing. As much as Members of the New Democratic Party may try to abdicate their responsibilities, they cannot erase from the history books and annals of Canadian Parliament that indeed they supported the Liberal Party when they brought on the defeat of the Conservative Government. They contributed to and in fact were the cause of the election held on February 18, 1980.

It little matters what has transpired since with reference to NDP support of the Liberal Party. Members of that Party continue to trade their votes for support of Liberal programs with which they can identify, such as the National Energy Program, that is such a disaster. There is talk of nationalization of Canada's economy with higher Government deficits, more regulation and increased inflation. I draw that to the attention of the Hon. Member, this House and the nation. They cannot get away with that.

I listened to the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail), who is from my Province of New Brunswick. I am sorry he has found it necessary to step out for a few minutes to take a well deserved break from his exhausting duties in this House. He made several comments with which I cannot help but take issue. One was that the best the Opposition seems to be able to do is dwell on items that are really not pertinent to our society, to our system and to our nation. He referred to a motion put by the Opposition a few days ago. His words were something to the effect that the best they can do is talk about tourism.

I am sure the Hon. Member is not aware of this or he would not have talked about it in such demeaning terms, but tourism happens to be the second largest industry in Canada. It is the second largest employer in this country. Coming from a part of a Province that is experiencing unduly high unemployment, I would think that the Hon. Member for Restigouche would be vitally concerned with any industry that created as much employment as the tourist industry. I wonder just how interested he is in what the Government does or the lack of what it does in the area of creating employment.

The Hon. Member for Restigouche referred to the need for a budget and the fact that we will have a new budget tomorrow evening. He indicated that the Government has had four budgets as well as two economic statements over the past three years. He referred to the fact that we on this side have had three policy conferences or some other general meetings over the past number of years, which indicates to him that we have had one every six months. I do not know where he gets his arithmetic from, but it is probably indicative of the arithmetic used on that side of the House when preparing budget statements. If we have had three policy conferences, it is interesting that the Government found it necessary to come in with six budget statements during a period of time when this country moved from the state of being bad to absolutely despicable, absolutely terrible.

The Hon. Member for Restigouche talked about inflation being down to 6 per cent. I know he would not have wanted to mislead this nation and that he would thank me for bringing to his attention and that of the country the fact that the inflation rate is not 6 per cent. I am sure that all Hon. Members of this House share with him the wish that it was 6 per cent. However, the rate of inflation is now 7.5 per cent. That is much more respectable than the 12 or 13 per cent of a few short months ago, but it is still not 6 per cent. Interestingly enough, the fact that inflation is now down to 7.5 per cent has not increased the confidence of investors in this nation. In fact, it seems to have had a non-effect. Investors in this country are not at all encouraged.

The Hon. Member for Restigouche referred to assistance acts. What have these assistance acts done to small businesses? Last year 80,000 businesses in this country closed their doors and laid off their employees. Small businesses are the greatest employers in Canada in terms of job creation. Not only have 80,000 businesses closed their doors, the rate of small businesses that went bankrupt last year exceeds or is of the order of 1,000 per month. That is a deplorable condition. The Hon. Member for Restigouche should be aware of these facts before standing up in this House and indicating to his constituents and others what his Government is doing. He said he was elected to do a job and that he is accepting his role.

The Hon. Member for Restigouche put forth an interesting position. He comes from a region of New Brunswick where unemployment is rampant, running away, due primarily to the mismanagement of the economy by this Government. During the time that he spoke, not once did he refer to the closure of Canadian Forces Base Chatham, which is in an adjoining riding. Not once did he refer to the loss of hundreds, indeed thousands of jobs in that region due to this Government's inaction on the closure of CFB Chatham. That is a complete dereliction of duty on the part of the Hon. Member for Restigouche. I take him to task, as I know the people in his region and Province will, over that.

He referred to his leader. I notice he did not waver when the question was put to him as to whether he intends to support his leader in the upcoming election. He acted like a bulldog, took the issue to heart, wrestled with it and left no doubt in the minds of Members opposite and his constituents. He will stay with his leader, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), whom he described as the best leader this country has had in the last number of years, certainly the most dynamic. I will be interested in seeing how he goes into the next election, supporting in such vocal and endearing terms a man for whom he has expressed to the nation he has such great admiration. I look forward to watching that gentleman's participation and his support as time goes on.

I want to address myself to another item that is pertinent to the debate today. In reply to a question, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) suggested to the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), who had made a query about the National Energy Program, that he should look at the speech made by the Prime Minister in Halifax in 1980. I have a copy of the speech which the Prime Minister, then Leader of the Opposition, made to the Halifax Board of Trade in Halifax, Nova Scotia on January 25, 1980. I brought this matter to the attention of the House before, and I will do so again. He said at that time and I quote:

> I am announcing today, as part of our program, that a Liberal Government will take immediate action to ensure the full cooperation of all parties in the construction of a natural gas pipeline to Quebec City and the Maritimes. The pipeline will have reversible capacity so that Maritimers will have the opportunity, both to use western natural gas now and to send off-shore gas to central Canada later. Like the railroad in the 1880s, energy pipelines in the 1980s have the potential to be a steel link uniting the nation.

● (1750)

In the Speech from the Throne, it was stated:

> My Government equally favours the earliest possible construction of a natural gas pipeline to Quebec City and the Maritime Provinces and awaits with interest the report of the National Energy Board on this project.

The Speech from the Throne was delivered on April 14, 1980. The speech the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) delivered to the Halifax Board of Trade was on January 25, 1980, just some three months earlier.

We are all aware of what the National Energy Board has said in its subsequent report on the construction and status of the pipeline. Here, for the Parliamentary Secretary's reference should he care to take a look at it, is the speech that he suggested the Hon. Member for Bow River have a look at. I invite him to look at this.

Let us look at what happened to the natural gas pipeline project for the Maritime Provinces. Let us see what took place concerning that pipeline and how the Prime Minister's promises were fulfilled.

I asked a question of the then Minister of Energy, now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who is going to deliver this great document tomorrow, about that promise. This was on May 25, 1982, a short time ago. I asked the Minister what he intended to do about the Prime Minister's promise that the natural gas pipeline would be like a railroad into the 1980s, an energy pipeline that would have the potential to be a steel link uniting the nation.

At that time the Minister of Energy responded by saying that they originally anticipated and expected to have natural gas flowing into the Maritimes by 1982 or 1983. Now there is only a bleak possibility that that will happen, though the Minister indicated that much would depend on the findings off the East Coast. I said at that time that it is a great tragedy for Atlantic Canadians who are facing the bleak prospect of at least another two years before there is the opportunity to deliver natural gas to this region.

In a further response on the Late Show, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister told me that "the natural gas transmission system to the east coast is one of the top priorities of the federal Government". He went on to say that TQ & M, the pipeline contractors, began work on the gas pipeline extension to Quebec City some time ago. However, the company has encountered some difficulties which have resulted in construction delays. The delays have been phenomenal.

A report was released on May 21, 1982, just a day or two before, which indicated that the federal Government and business officials admit that the plan to bring western Canadian natural gas to the Maritimes is near collapse because of skyrocketing cost estimates, labour slowdowns and other factors. Yet the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary continued to state that indeed it is a priority of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I have in my possession a release made by the then Minister of Energy on June 2, 1982, just a few weeks after I made that speech in the House. That release states that the Minister's update of the National Energy Program on Monday night would provide subsidies to the prime contractor of the natural gas pipeline. He said that the Government would meet the full cost of engineering and survey work to be carried out in the next two and a half years and that a $45 million interest-free loan would be repaid when the Maritime portion is completed.

As of April 18, 1983, TQ & M has not yet signed an agreement to receive this loan. We now find ourselves at a time when the delivery of natural gas into the Maritime region has been promised by 1984 or 1985 at the latest. The agreements have not been signed. That is another example of a reneged promise. It is obvious that the National Energy Program as released in 1980 and the National Energy Program update of 1982 are miserable failures. It all ties in to the Speech from the Throne of April 14, 1980, when these and many other promises were made.

There is no question that this Government should recognize its responsibilities to the people of this nation. It should recognize that it has contributed nothing but defeat by default to this country and to the people who elected it to serve them in their best interests. We should as a responsible Parliament insist that this House indeed do prorogue. We should insist upon a new session. We should insist that this Government outline a renewed program of policies for the people of Canada to ensure that we get back on the track and on with the job of making Canada once again great. Under this administration, the reverse has taken place. It is indeed a terrible shame for the people that this Government purports to represent, and purports to make policies on behalf of, that the Government allows this session to exist and run on when indeed it has such a dismal record of failures behind it.

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, I will ask my question in French to the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett). In view of the turmoil or, if you prefer, the excitement resulting from the preparations for their convention, and on the basis that in the very near future, they might form the Government, does it not simply confirm a lack of imagination on their part? Fully aware of the fact that they are bankrupt of ideas necessary for a Speech from the Throne, they are now asking this Government to come up with one with a view to developing their suggestions from it should they be elected at the next election, which tends to confirm their total lack of imagination; their only intention for asking this Government to present a new Speech from the Throne is their desire to use it for their next platform.

[English]

Mr. Corbett: Mr. Speaker, in looking at the clock it is quite obvious that the Hon. Member does not expect a response. Indeed, all I can tell him is that his expectations will prove to be correct and indeed we will be forming the next Government when the next election is called.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. It being six o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Section (11) of Standing Order 62, proceedings on the motion have expired.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—NUMBER OF YOUNG PEOPLE EMIGRATING. (B) YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS. (C) NUMBER OF JOBS CREATED

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the matter I want to address tonight is that of youth unemployment which is fast becoming a very serious crisis in the country. It is a crisis not only in the sense of what is happening today but in terms of the impact it will have on our future, our potential and where the whole country will be going in the near future.

Last week I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) what the Government was going to do about unemployment in the area of engineering. Looking at what was happening in the field of engineering since 1981, we find that unemployment has risen by about 500 per cent in this select group of people. Our concern was that on top of the 500 per cent unemployed, there is an additional 7,000 university graduates in the field of engineering who will be coming on the job market in 1983, within the next 60 to 90 days.

The Prime Minister's response was that we should sit back and wait for the budget which was going to solve our problems. I can only assume it is going to change things like the National Energy Program, which will in turn help create jobs for engineers.

Our young Canadian people are facing a very serious problem. Unemployment among the young today is running around 21 per cent. The unadjusted figures show it as 23 per cent, or a total of 650,000 young people between the ages of 15 and 24 who do not have jobs.

There is another group called the underemployed. At the moment 727,000 young Canadians are employed part time. Our information indicates that roughly half of those young Canadians would like full-time employment. Essentially, what that amounts to is that one-half of that 700,000-odd students are underemployed. That gives a total of about 350,000 young Canadians who are under-employed, part-time employed, looking for full-time jobs.

There is another problem which is creating a very serious situation. Very soon about 600,000 young Canadians will be looking for summer or part-time employment. In addition, 500,000 young Canadians will be looking for their first full-time jobs. That is half a million young Canadians looking for their first jobs.

I should like to break down those figures based on information obtained from Statistics Canada. The universities will graduate over 80,000 B.As, 10,000 to 13,000 M.As and just under 2,000 Ph.Ds. Add to that the undergraduates and those with diplomas and it means about 114,000 young Canadians coming out of universities will be looking for full-time employment this season. Another 70,000 from the community colleges will be looking for jobs.

The latest information I can obtain is from a study done in 1978 by Statistics Canada on people coming out of school into the labour force. It showed that 113,000 young people would graduate from high school. I think the same would be true today. Those coming out of high school who have not graduated but who will be looking for full-time employment will be about 200,000. The total number of young people leaving university, college and high school will be about half a million, and they will be looking for their first full-time job in 1983.

When the figures are totalled, we find that about 1.5 million young Canadians will be seeking their first full-time jobs. Of course, as the Prime Minister suggested, all of them will be waiting for the famous budget tomorrow night that is going to solve their problems. They are not going to be fooled by adjusting unemployment figures. They know that they are looking for jobs and if they do not find them, they will be numbered among the unemployed.

• (1805)

This Government will have to allow the private sector to move and to work, because it will have to create a great deal of those jobs and potential opportunities for our young Canadians. I presume that is what the Prime Minister was talking about, and that was his intention when he referred to waiting for the budget for this last week. I presume that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is going to undo the damage which has been caused by the budget he inherited and the budgets which have come before. They have caused no end of problems, in fact have created a situation in which the number of unemployed young people in Canada is now approaching in the neighbourhood of 1.5 million. All of these people who are looking for jobs represent the future potential for Canada. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I believe that is the situation that exists. It is a serious problem, one which this Government must address very quickly.

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, with the Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), I believe that the Government is necessarily concerned about youth unemployment, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) have indicated this quite clearly. That is why this year, the Government has decided to inject $50 million more in the Summer Canada Program. We would like about 72,000 young people to have jobs within this Program during the summer season, but it will of course be impossible to meet all requests, and that is why we are appealing to the private sector to do its share.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration opened a Student Employment Center today in Toronto, and he said that with the co-operation of the private sector, we would probably be able to find jobs for 329,000 students during the summer. It is vital to have the private sector co-operate with the Federal Government in providing summer jobs for students that will enable them to continue their studies in the fall.

This year we have added another section to the Summer Canada Program to provide a training program for students over a period of three years, during which they would be able to work in a company to improve their skills, so that when they finish their schooling, they will be able to enter the labour market more readily. Very briefly, I would like to point out that the Government is concerned about youth unemployment in general. As far as training is concerned, in 1982-1983, 19,232 young people will have benefited from this Program which is helping them to improve their skills and subsequently enter the labour market and be able to take jobs which normally would not have been available to them.

Perhaps I may also mention the NEED Program, Mr. Speaker. We have been able to provide employment for large numbers of young people who normally would have been unable to find employment. Mr. Speaker, I think this indicates the Government is entirely aware of the unemployment problem among young people, and as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, we obviously hope, with all Members on the other side of the House, that tomorrow evening's budget will contain measures that will also be beneficial to the young people of Canada.

AIR TRANSPORT—MIRABEL FILE

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I think I will have all the patience needed to wait for the day the notorious Mirabel affair is brought to a successful issue. On October 15, 1979, when as an Opposition Member I made my maiden speech, I asked the then Minister of Transport about the status of Mirabel. On November 5, 1979, for a second time, I put forward to the same minister some proposals concerning Mirabel. Unfortunately for them, fortunately for us, they were sent back to the Opposition benches. On April 21, 1980, I brought up the subject again. I asked for information on the transfer of flights from Dorval to Mirabel, having in mind the economic well-being of the residents of Argenteuil-Papineau and especially the profitability of Mirabel Airport. On December 2, 1980, I made further representations to the Minister of Transport with a view to ensuring Mirabel's economic viability. On February 18, 1981, I again turned to the Minister for information on the matter. On March 23, I was speaking once more for Mirabel's viability. On April 23, 1981, I appealed for a new policy on fuel costs. On October 26, 1981, I again asked the Minister for details on his flight transfer policy. On February 16, 1982, I asked the Minister if he indeed had the political will to make Mirabel viable. On May 14, 1982, I asked him once more whether we would have a decision soon. On May 20, 1982, I asked the same question. On July 16, 1982, I asked what the Government's intentions were concerning Mirabel's viability. On August 2, 1982, I touched once more on the subject, this time successfully, Mr. Speaker, for on August 6, 1982, at a press conference held in Montreal, the Minister of Transport made a few announcements. He said among other things that the Flying Tiger Corporation, the biggest cargo airline in the world, would be licensed to operate a cargo service between Mirabel and Chicago, along with certain other measures I shall not mention here. But there was a very important one concerning aviation fuel which will be available duty free for international and transborder flights on August 6th.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I have to ask the same question. People in Argenteuil-Papineau are fed up with this but, Mr. Speaker, I am just as stubborn as certain officials who have recommended all sorts of far fetched solutions for the development of Canada's largest airport. In the meantime, the provincial Government is making fun of us. The PQ Government is happy that Mirabel is a fiasco, because they are helping with public funds certain groups that are committed to Mirabel's failure.

Mr. Speaker, once more I raise this issue, and I am convinced that my colleague from Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis), the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister, is also fed up with answering my questions. He certainly would be if in his own constituency he were to face the same tragedy as my constituents around Mirabel, the people north of Montreal who were promised something like the equivalent of the James Bay project as far as airports go. Federal officials, like former Minister de Belleval who was all for Mirabel, have now disappeared in the landscape. I am sure my colleague from Parkdale-High Park will agree with me that it is time for a decision to be made. People have been patient, they have believed and now, instead of fighting for the development of Mirabel, local Members of Parliament are forced as I am to fight for the status quo. Mr. Speaker, I am asking for an answer, and I hope that this time it will be a positive one.

[English]

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for the aggressive manner in which he represents his constituents. I want to assure him that while the provincial Government may be making fun of his problem, the federal Government is not.

As he knows, last August when the Minister announced the roles for the airports in the Montreal area he also announced a series of specific measures to stimulate traffic at Mirabel. All the measures which were within the power of the Department of Transport to implement have been implemented. These include the open cargo transit rights for foreign non-U.S. carriers and the reduction of landing fees for international and transborder cargo for all cargo planes. They include the right to carriers serving both Mirabel and Toronto to carry connecting passengers between Mirabel and Toronto and the elimination of landing fees for positioning movements between Mirabel and Dorval. As well, there is the creation of a private sector task force called the Levasseur Committee to take a fresh look at Mirabel. Its report will be released soon. Discussions with the Quebec Government to improve bus services have been implemented and they are expected to result in improvements in the near future.

One measure not implemented so far, regrettably, is the one dealing with bonded fuel. This measure has turned out to be more difficult to implement than anticipated and involves the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Departments of Finance and Revenue. Each of these departments has to determine the impact of this measure on its existing programs.

I want to reassure the Hon. Member that this is being done. In fact, as indicated by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) in his answer, a meeting between Ministers was recently held and a resolution of this question is expected very soon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 6.18 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—REPORTED LEAK OF PROPOSED BUDGETARY MEASURES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise to raise a question of privilege involving a most serious budget leak which occurred yesterday. This being the first opportunity to raise that question, I take the opportunity. After hearing my submissions, no doubt you will want to seek the advice of other Hon. Members on the matter I raise. I would be prepared to move the appropriation motion should you find that there is a prima facie case of privilege.

Budget secrecy is a basic principle of our traditions of parliamentary Government. It means that the Minister responsible for bringing down a budget is also held responsible to see to it that the provisions of that budget are not prematurely released. The reasons for this are many. Foreknowledge of budgetary measures has led to the acquisition of private gain and to sharp market fluctuations. My information is current that those fluctuations are taking place and that the Canadian dollar is indeed now falling on the markets.

It is not a principle that it is necessary to defend; it has been accepted in the parliamentary system ever since budgets existed. A breach of budget secrecy has always and invariably led to the resignation of the Minister. It must also be regarded as a breach of the oath which the Minister takes as a member of the Privy Council.

A well known case in the United Kingdom was that involving the then Chancellor of the Exchequer, Hugh Dalton, who, in a casual conversation with reporters, hinted at a rise in the tax on tobacco. I will be coming back to that precedent. His resignation as a result of his imprudence took place immediately.

Showing the seriousness with which the British House regards such matters, even though Mr. Dalton resigned the matter was referred to a special committee for a full investigation. Referring to the Dalton case among others, Professor S. R. Finer in public administration says that it was a case which raised "such doubts about his personal prudence and integrity as to cause him to resign".

That is exactly the present case. This is not the first time the Minister has found himself in difficulties. He signed approval of the Gillespie contract and forgot that he had signed or seen it. It must be recalled that Mr. Gillespie was in a position to profit as a result of a measure included in the first budget presented by this Minister.

While the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was satisfied that there was nothing in the guidelines to concern him in that episode, this is not a mere matter of guidelines. This is a matter reaching into the very heart of parliamentary integrity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: What of the Minister's integrity? It would seem even redundant now to discuss it. It is a thing of rags and tatters. Prudence is a word that cannot be uttered in the same breath as the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

There is extant a video tape showing the previous Minister of Finance at a photo opportunity and deliberately holding the page of his budget address close because, as he explains, "The cameramen are equipped with farseeing lenses". I am referring now to the previous Minister who, when caught in the same circumstances, held his budget close. He would not open the pages because he was aware of the telephoto lenses. That was his attitude at that time.

This Minister is entirely different. He clowned, he joked, and he talked in his interview of zoom lenses. I have a copy of that tape. He joked and said: "I hope you fellows do not have zoom lenses". He joked about the secrecy of that document and closed it up at one stage during that photo opportunity session so that it could not be seen. But he later opened it up to the exposure of the telephoto lenses. The question might be asked: Did he know that they were shooting the pages of the budget as he turned them? He certainly was aware of the availability of zoom lenses because he himself mentioned that fact. All the time that this was going on and he was basking in the sunshine of self-indulgent publicity, his budget was being transferred to video tape. The great video leak was in full swing.

This is one of the great TV bloopers of all time and should certainly get an award for inanity. The Prime Minister was handing out ACTRA awards the other night. He should have reserved one for the Minister of Finance.

As a result of this Minister's culpable indiscretion and lack of prudence, he has created a fatal flaw in the confidence of the House and the country. What was opened as a crack in the Gillespie affair is now a virtual chasm. It is a chasm that the Minister cannot cross. As a result of his clowning and desire for personal publicity, he made available across this country, to the money markets and financial circles, an advance knowledge of the budget which could be used for personal gain.

Anyone with a knowledge of finance, being aware of the amount of the deficit revealed by the Minister and the amount of incentives to be raised for job creation, would be able to draw certain conclusions which might be of great interest in financial circles and make available that gain.

It is not incumbent upon us at this time to show that great profits have been made, or even that it was possible for such to have taken place. Nor was this a case in the episode of Mr. Dalton or Mr. Thomas. Their resignation took place before the investigations by a special committee were made. It was merely necessary to show that a budget leak had taken place in those precedents. The resignations followed immediately and automatically.

• (1110)

In this country in 1963 Mr. Walter Gordon's resignation went to the Prime Minister when he admitted bringing in outside economic advisers. No leak was shown. All that was shown in that case was that Mr. Gordon had consulted four economists in the preparation of his budget. When that was disclosed, he immediately tendered his resignation to the then Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, who chose not to accept it. But nonetheless, the proper thing was done and the resignation was tendered. That does not alter the fact, Madam Speaker, that the resignation was tendered.

What we are talking about here is not in the book of rules. We are talking about the absolute necessity that the integrity and the probity of the Minister of Finance with regard to the budget be maintained. The Minister of Finance in his heart of hearts knows this. The Prime Minister knows it. It is more than a matter of tradition and precedent, although they weigh very heavily on this issue; it is a matter of practical necessity.

The public must be satisfied at all times that no person is in a position to profit from budgetary transactions through advance disclosure. The Minister of Finance showed his awareness of this by insisting that the media remain locked up until after he had finished speaking. Such was this solicitude about premature leaking that he went to lengths never dreamed of by other Ministers of Finance. He would have been well advised to show the same care in his own actions. The fact remains that the Minister's capacity—and that is what is at stake here—to continue to function as Minister of Finance has been irreparably damaged by his own lack of prudence and his own fault. The credibility of his budget has been placed in question along with his own credibility. This leaves the Minister the only option of resignation and the production and presentation of a new budget by a new Minister to be appointed to replace him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: You would want, Madam Speaker, to have exposed for your consideration some evidence. That is all that is necessary for you to find that there exists a prime facie case of privilege so that you might put the question to the House as to whether or not a reference should be made to a special committee to consider the circumstances, as was done in the Hugh Dalton case. I stress "some" evidence; it is not incumbent upon any Member of the House to satisfy the Chair that that evidence beyond any reasonable shadow of a doubt convinces you that there was a leak. All the Chair requires is some evidence to warrant the matter being put to the House.

What is that evidence? As I say, Madam Speaker, I have a copy of the videotape. That videotape has been shown across the country on television networks since yesterday afternoon. It continues to play this morning. The extent of the leaks go far beyond "some" evidence.

First, the budget is called a budget of recovery.

Second, it will be highlighted by a $4.6 billion job creation program which will push the 1982-83 deficit to $31.2 billion. Nothing can be more specific than those figures.

Third, the Minister tonight will announce a number of incentives to private enterprise, through which he admits the most jobs can be created and be of a more permanent nature than Government can do. Here we have the third piece of evidence.

Fourth, the Minister will state in his budget that his $4.6 billion job creation program is designed to get the country out of the mood of depression and restore its confidence in the future.

Fifth, the Minister of Finance will say the Government can help give that confidence back to Canadians, but the real action will have to come from the private sector.

Sixth, the Minister will call upon Canadians to mobilize their resources and make the economy more productive and competitive.

Seventh, there will be a two-fold purpose in the budget. The Minister wants to start the recovery process and do so in such a way that it lasts for a long time.

• (1115)

Eighth, the Minister of Finance says his employment measures will have an immediate effect and will have long-term benefits.

Ninth, the budget will state that if the Government did not spend the $4.6 billion on job programs, investments in both the private and public sectors would be delayed and thus stall early economic recovery.

Tenth, the Finance Minister will say that if he did not inject such a large sum into the economy, the $31.2 billion projected deficit would have been much higher.

Those are translations from the French text that were lifted verbatim from the pages telephotoed by the CHCH Hamilton TV cameraman in the Minister's office yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Clark: At the Minister's invitation.

Mr. Nielsen: At the Minister's invitation, I might add. Those ten specific verbatim references to the budget go far beyond meeting the standard test of presenting to the Chair some evidence. Those ten leaks provide the Chair with enough evidence, if it were your job, which it is not, to convict the Minister, resting only on those ten points. But the Chair need not go that far. The Chair need find only that there is some evidence that there has been a breach of the privileges of the House and then put the question to the House.

The presentation of an annual budget is the fundamental link between the Crown and the Parliament of Canada. It is the time-honoured and hard-won right of Parliament to scrutinize the financial requirements and plans of the Government. It is only Parliament that can authorize major Government appropriations, and it is only Parliament that can authorize taxation measures.

In anticipation of a possible submission to the Chair on this question from the other side that, because these leaks did not concern tax measures, what has been leaked will be found entirely appropriate, I say to you, Madam Speaker, that taking refuge in that kind of defense of hyperbole should not affect one iota the decision of the Chair with respect to finding a prima facie case of privilege. Any leak which is likely to cause fluctuations on the market, which is likely to result in gains and profits being made in the marketplace, is the very reason for the principle of secrecy surrounding the preparation and presentation of any budget. For information about the detailed plans contained in the budget which is to be delivered to Parliament to be released prior to the delivery of the budget in Parliament is, in essence, a contempt of Parliament itself. That was the matter which was at issue in the Hugh Dalton case and that brought about his immediate resignation.

There can be no doubt whatsoever that the excerpts yesterday from the text of the budget which I have read for the benefit of the Chair and the videotape which is now in existence show that the Minister of Finance permitted details of his budget speech to become known to the media. In so doing, the Minister not only breached his own oath of office but committed a very serious breach of the privileges of the House.

The notion of budget secrecy is not new. I have a precedent to cite here. It is not unknown to Members of the House. On December 12, 1979 your predecessor, Mr. Speaker Jerome, made reference, as reported at page 2287 of Hansard, to budget secrecy. He said on that occasion that to constitute a question of privilege the Minister must be accused of specifically failing in his responsibility to safeguard budget secrecy.

I make that specific charge now. A videotape exists of the Minister of Finance at the traditional pre-budget photo opportunity, taken by a cameraman, as I said, for CHCH Television in Hamilton, Ontario, clearly showing a script of portions of the French language edition of what the Finance Minister himself purported to be the budget to be presented in the House later today. The Minister of Finance has therefore breached the privileges of the House and should resign immediately. I have cited some of the precedents for such resignation.

It might be advanced by a spokesman for the Government, who I presume will be rising to participate in the discussion of this question and to advise the Chair, that what we saw and what was being discussed was a draft budget, a dummy budget. After viewing the videotape, which I have done several times, that assertion cannot be made. Indeed, when one views that tape, the Minister is clearly shown as having a concern initially about the secrecy to be maintained over that document, whether it was upside down or right side up, as he clowned in saying during that session.

Indeed, at one stage the Minister closed the cover so that it could not be photographed. Later on he opened it up and leafed through the pages, thus permitting a cameraman to zoom in with his telephoto lens and lift out $4.6 billion in job creation and a $31.2 billion deficit. That information went the length and breadth of this country that same afternoon. There is no grosser breach of the rules surrounding the secrecy of budgets than that which has been committed by the Minister.

I should cite to you, Madam Speaker, before citing the Dalton case, Walter Gordon's memoirs to substantiate what I have said with respect to the action he took. Walter Gordon at page 149 of those memoirs writes:

> I remember telling Pearson that I would resign if he would like me to do so. I was taking quite a beating and, understandably, he asked me how I was feeling and if I had enough confidence to carry on. I assured him that I had, and later when he was asked if I had offered to resign he replied in the negative. I mentioned this to him subsequently and said that, in view of his statement, I also would say, if asked, that I had not offered to resign as I had not done so in a formal way or in writing. He agreed with this. My difficulties were not lessened when Richard O'Hagan, the Prime Minister's Press Secretary, decided to poll the members of the Press Gallery on whether Pearson should call for my resignation. Naturally word of this was relayed to me very quickly.

He goes on to say what happened when the House met again on Wednesday afternoon, June 19.

With respect to the Dalton precedent, that can be found in the Hansard for Westminster of November 17, 1947, at page 1467. What had occurred was that Hugh Dalton, who was then Chancellor of the Exchequer, on the day that he was to deliver his budget walked into the lobby of the House. As he was walking in, a journalist asked him whether there was likely to be a further tax imposed on cigarettes. His response was that people should buy their cigarettes early. I am paraphrasing.

He delivered his budget later that same afternoon, and there indeed was the imposition of a further tax on cigarettes. It hit the evening newspapers in London, and Hugh Dalton resigned immediately. Notwithstanding that resignation, the British House considered a motion that was moved by the Opposition at the time, a debate in which Mr. Churchill engaged, and asked for a reference to a special committee of the House to consider all of the circumstances surrounding the premature disclosures in that budget.

• (1125)

Madam Speaker, I cannot emphasize too strongly the foundation upon which the business of this place rests. This is the first time that I have raised a question as serious as this. It is the first time, to my knowledge, that there has ever been a budget leak of such gross magnitude that has had the opportunity of pervading the financial markets of this country a full 24 hours-plus before the budget is even delivered in the House.

We cannot, Madam Speaker, carry on business as usual. The Minister's lack of prudence and his own conduct in this self-seeking drive for publicity has caused this leak of such huge proportions that the House must deal with it and must deal with it in a traditional way, in the same way that the leak was dealt with in the case of Hugh Dalton.

Therefore, if you find that there is a prima facie case of privilege affecting Members of this House, I would propose to move:

That a special committee be appointed to inquire into all the circumstances relating to or associated with the disclosure of budget information by the Minister of Finance on Monday, April 18, 1983, that the committee consist of 11 Members of the House, and that the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records.

That would be the motion that I suggest you should put to the House, Madam Speaker, upon reaching the conclusion that there has been a prima facie breach of the privileges of the House.

I want to emphasize once again that if there ever was, if you have ever considered in your three-year-plus term now as Speaker of this Chamber, a breach of the privileges of the Members of this House, this is it. I urge, Madam Speaker, that you can come to no other conclusion than the very compelling one that that breach exists prima facie, that it must be dealt with by the House, and that the House certainly cannot proceed as though nothing has happened.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I would just like to know, for the enlightenment of the Chair, whether the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) could answer a question for me. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition quite rightly said that it is not up to the Chair to determine whether there was a leak or to chastise the Minister in case there would be ample proof that there was a leak, but that the only question before us, of course, is to decide whether in appearance, prima facie, there is a breach of the privileges of the House.

The Hon. Member referred to several resignations of Ministers in the United Kingdom and of one Minister in the Government of Canada. Could the Hon. Member tell me whether these Ministers resigned as a consequence of the matter of a budget leak being referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections? I do not believe it is so.

Now, he referred to the Dalton case where a motion was considered by the British House. Could he make it clear to the House whether that motion was a motion to submit the case to the Committee on Privileges and Elections or if it was a motion of another nature?

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I can read from the transcript of Hansard from Westminster, but at the outset let me follow the sequence of the Hugh Dalton case. I have described how he was walking into the lobby when a question was put to him by a journalist and he answered it in such a fashion as to enable the London evening papers to print what later was discovered to have been in the budget that he delivered. He resigned before the striking of a special committee to consider the circumstances simply because he realized upon the publication of his answer in response that the imposition of that cigarette tax was a premature leak of budget information. That did not stop the House, notwithstanding his resignation—which is the proper thing for the Minister of Finance to do now—indeed, in that case with the consent of the Government, from striking that committee to examine all the circumstances that brought about that premature leak.

• (1130)

With respect to Canadian precedents, the closest I have discovered—there may be others—is the case of Walter Gordon, who felt that his resignation was in order because he had offended the rules in having discussions, not of the completed budget but in the preparation of his budget, with outside economists. That is a "no-no" under our practices. That compelled him to consider his resignation. I read to you the extract from his memoirs with respect to his consultation with the Prime Minister.

The actual motion that was moved in the British House of Commons, as reported at page 1467 of the British Hansard, is as follows:

That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into all the circumstances relating to or associated with the disclosure of Budget information by Mr. Dalton, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, on Wednesday 12th November:—

The motion goes on to name the members of the committee. You will find, Madam Speaker, that the wording of the motion I would move, should a prima facie question be found, is almost exactly the same as in the British precedent.

I am in total accord that you do not sit there in judgment over the rectitude or otherwise of the Minister's conduct; you sit there only to determine whether there is sufficient evidence to constitute a prima facie case, which the House then considers and decides whether or not it should go to committee.

I might say that committee would have the power to call for persons, papers and things, including videotapes—the original that was made as well as my own copy—which, once viewed, would convince beyond any doubt of the magnitude of the leak.

Madam Speaker: Order. I do not think the two motions are exactly the same but they need not be, although some similarities would have to occur. The motion the Hon. Member is referring to was on striking a select committee to investigate all the circumstances surrounding that particular case. I believe the Hon. Member's motion deals with privilege and requests that the matter be sent to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I just take note of that because I should like to examine—whether or not a Minister resigns on his own volition—whether the House would want to examine the matter of breach of privilege, regardless of the fact that even if a Minister had resigned, perhaps the House would find it still has the responsibility to determine whether privilege had been breached. The two things do not necessarily follow but they might.

Mr. Nielsen: I have a point of clarification, Madam Speaker. I doubt if it would have been proper for me to provide you with a copy of an intended motion prior to raising the question. I want to point out that I would not propose the matter be referred to a standing committee of the House. The British have no standing committees and that is the reason a select committee was struck for this purpose.

If a prima facie case is found, I suggest that a special committee be appointed to inquire into all the circumstances, and then the wording would follow that I read into the record before. I do not suggest that it go to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections but that a special committee be struck for that purpose.

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I want to say to you at the very outset that I rise most sincerely with a feeling of sorrow that a matter such as this has to come before the House of Commons on a day such as this. I must say to you also that my indignation—and I think it is a righteous indignation—is such that I know very well, as we proceed this morning in a discussion and debate about this matter, that, as you always do, you will step in and attempt to restrain those of us who feel—and I must say this as strongly as I can—a very real sense of outrage in respect of the procedures and what has happened.

Quite frankly, I found your first question to my colleague the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) rather curious in respect to the whole question of the resignation of the Minister involved. I say that I found it rather curious because in your mind, I submit to you, and in the independence and impartial position you hold as the first Commoner in this country, the whole question of the resignation and the timing of the resignation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde)—no matter how much we demand it here and how heated the debate may become today and this evening—is really irrelevant as far as the question you have to answer is concerned.

I submit to you with the utmost respect that the question you have to answer, regardless of the Minister and his resignation, is whether there has been a prima facie case of a leak of budget secrets, in which case it is a prima facie case in accordance with precedents in this country, in Great Britain and other Commonwealth countries, which go to prove that there is a breach of the privileges of the House.

The resignation of the Minister—even though I intend to demand it here and now, and later today perhaps by another means before the House—and the delay of the budget presentation tonight, which I submit personally and not on behalf of my colleagues, is now required as a result of what happened yesterday afternoon in the Minister's office, is quite irrelevant to the matter that you have to focus on.

I suggest to you that the Dalton case alone in Great Britain is such that the Speaker there found there was a prima facie case just by virtue of the leak of budget information. That was enough. In actual fact, by the time that occurred the Minister had already resigned. I would hope that the Minister here has already resigned. That may or may not be the case, but it is quite irrelevant to the point you have to focus on.

Why is this a breach of the privileges of this House? I ask you, Madam Speaker, why do we have extraordinary provisions in regard to our procedures for the presentation of a budget—quite extraordinary procedures? We have a set time which is set apart completely from the normal hours of the House for a budget presentation. Why is that? It is so that the budget presentation may not be known to anyone or acted upon by anyone during the normal course of business hours as far as the North American and European markets are concerned.

We feel, the House of Commons collectively, that we have upset our normal and traditional hours of dealing with ministerial statements so that that can be done at a time quite apart from our normal hours of business. It can be done only in a manner in which the first public pronouncement that is made in respect of those budget provisions is made here in the House, at a time at which normal, ordinary commercial transactions cannot be affected.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member is now pursuing an argument which it is hard for me to conceive as being related to the question of privilege. I made the point that he made before, and that is that there might be a relationship between the resignation of the Minister of Finance and the question of privilege. There might be but there is not necessarily a relationship. I think the Hon. Member has just now made that same point.

I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member would remain on the element that constitutes privilege so that the Chair would be in a better position to rule on this particular matter. The Chair feels that it must rule before the end of this sitting. If it is at all possible I will try to do that. In light of other events that should occur today, I think it is important that the matter be resolved one way or the other.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, I am very pleased that the Chair is taking the attitude that this is a matter that cannot be delayed and that there has to be the fullest discussion before Your Honour today, and that in the normal course of events Your Honour will rule on this matter before eight o'clock tonight or perhaps even a little after if the House continues with the discussion. I hope the House will have the fullest opportunity of discussing the matter before there is an intimation from the Chair on the matter on which the Chair is ruling.

The point is that regardless of the Minister's resignation, surely a discussion is going to be allowed on the circumstances of the actual budget leak. That is the point on which the question of privilege is based. I suggest to the Chair that that certainly is the nub and root of the matter—whether or not the leak is important enough that it should be discussed and considered by a committee of the House.

I only have to emphasize that in the economic debate that is swirling around this place and other governments in the western world in the last six months, the big question has been whether Government policy will be a restrictive one in order to cut back swollen deficits or whether it will be an expansive one which will add to those deficits. In any treasury or ministerial decision that obviously was one of the first things that had to be decided. Yesterday afternoon—and the evidence is absolutely irrefutable—the Minister, through his own action—not some hireling, not any process, not through anyone else but the Minister himself through his own very foolish, if not stupid, action—released the nub of that budget philosophy and concept of governmental policy at a time when it could be acted upon by others. I suggest that before 24 hours is out there will be irrefutable evidence before you that others have acted on that evidence in a way in which they can only enrich their own wallets and bank accounts.

This was a breach of the privileges of the House because it has been a set concept from time immemorial that the budget provisions, the main budget provision especially, should be kept secret until announced in the House. There is no question that that privilege was broken yesterday afternoon. The Minister may have done so in a way that was unintentional, although there are those who even doubt that, but it happened in any event. That is enough, surely, to indicate that there is a prima facie case of breach of the privileges of the House.

It did not matter in the Dalton case whether the Minister resigned or not. That was irrelevant. The question was whether or not a leak of a very minor budget secret under those circumstances was enough to present to the Chair of the British House of Commons evidence that a breach of privilege had taken place.

It is my submission, Madam Speaker, that that precedent is on all fours with the matter before you, with one grave, gross change. That is the fact that what was released for the knowledge of everyone who watched the television newscasts last night or this morning, or listened to the radio or read the national newspapers of this country, was the basic concept of what the policy of this Government is with respect to its budget and financial policy over the next year. Surely this is a more serious and gross case than the Dalton case in Britain.

Another matter which I think the Chair should very seriously consider is the whole question of the oath of secrecy of the Minister. It does not entail how secrets are released or why they are released. It only involves a breach of an oath of secrecy when secrets themselves are released. Is there any question in anyone's mind today that a budget secret was released yesterday or even that there was an intention to at least give an indication that a budget secret was released? To my mind, that would be even a more serious question to be resolved as far as the integrity and public morality of an elected official of this House is concerned.

It is not the credibility of the Minister that is at stake in this matter. I suggest that he has no credibility now, but that is irrelevant. What is essentially at stake here is the credibility of the House of Commons, the credibility of an oath of secrecy and the credibility of a Government which will permit the release of information such as this so that those who are already wealthy and powerful in this country and in the international money markets of the western world can make a fat profit at the expense of the ordinary person. That is really the basis of the credibility that is before us.

I think it is almost inescapable that your decision, which I am glad to hear you will make today, will be that there was a breach of the fundamental privileges of the House. Only a prima facie case has to be demonstrated before you, Madam Speaker. No matter what arguments may come from the other side, there will be no disguising the fact that through carelessness, intent, or any other motive which we may or may not ascribe to this Minister, a serious breach of a fundamental concept of fiscal policy in the budget was released yesterday afternoon. That in itself is enough to demonstrate, to my mind, a fundamental breach of the privileges of this House as well.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise with some regret to add my support to the motion made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) and to suggest that there can be no doubt that information which was intended to be secret was revealed to the press yesterday.

I do not believe there is any question in anyone's mind that the press reports of last evening and today clearly indicate that certain members of the press, if not all, had access to some, if not all, of the contents of the budget to be presented here this evening at eight o'clock. That is quite clearly a violation of the principles that everyone believes are the principles of secrecy pertaining to the presentation of a budget.

I would suggest that this is even more serious than the Dalton affair. It is more serious since, in the case of Hugh Dalton, he inadvertently allowed a hint of what might be in the budget to pass between himself and a friend who was a member of the media immediately prior to the presentation of his budget. With the benefit of hindsight and having read the Hugh Dalton memoirs, it is quite clear that it would have been difficult to have taken advantage of the situation even with that information.

• (1150)

However, what every single Minister of Finance and every Chancellor of the Exchequer has realized is that budget secrecy is an absolute must. There can be no deviation from the principle that a budget must remain secret until it is presented to the House of Commons.

I want to refer Hon. Members to what Walter Gordon, a former Minister of Finance, said in a book about his life. Perhaps it may not legitimately be described as his memoirs. However, at page 155 of his book, which is entitled "A Political Memoir", he said:

> There is also the question of "budget secrecy" and the absolute responsibility of the Minister of Finance for any leaks that might occur, intentionally or by misadventure, through the action of any member of his department (or any other department, including the printing bureau). For example, Wynne Plumptre told me long afterwards that he took his draft of the 1963 budget speech home with him the night before he presented it to me. He had planned to read it through again before delivering it the next morning. But it was his birthday and his wife had arranged for them to go out to visit friends. So Wynne locked the draft speech in his briefcase which he hid in a cupboard. On his return later in the evening, he found his house had been broken into. The burglars had found his briefcase and broken the lock. The draft budget speech was strewn about the floor but still intact.

More sophisticated thieves might have realized that some enterprising reporter could have been a good market for this prize.

This is the important part:

If that had happened and inspired stories had been published about what might be expected to be included in the budget to be presented in the following week, as the responsible minister I would have had to resign from the government immediately.

That is what Walter Gordon said and that is the view held by every person in politics in Canada today.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Integrity.

Mr. Deans: That is the view which has been handed down from one Minister of Finance to the next, through every Government which has been in existence in this country. I believe that it is also the view that the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) would claim to be his view, that budget secrecy is an absolute must.

What happened in the case of Hugh Dalton, to which reference was given by the Leader of the Opposition and, obliquely, by the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence), although quite different from the situation now, is an interesting example of how a responsible Minister and his responsible Parliament deal with such an indiscretion.

What happened, in fact, was that at the Cabinet meeting it was brought to the Minister's attention that a story intended to be a projection of what might be contained in the budget had been printed in a local newspaper. Hugh Dalton immediately recognized that that story had come from his own lips, that he had given out that information, albeit not intentionally. He knew immediately, and on page 276 of his memoirs of the years 1945 to 1960, he said that he had informed his colleagues that he had spoken to Carvel, who was the reporter, and went on to say:

We all agreed that I must make full and frank admission of my responsibility and express my deep regrets and apologies to the House.

He then said to his colleagues:

This means that I must resign my office.

I make that point because, in the Hugh Dalton case, it was such a slip. He had taken precautions to ensure that the budget would not be known to anyone.

In the case of Mr. Plumptre, acting on behalf of Walter Gordon, the Minister of the time, he, too, had taken every precaution. However, in each instance they came to the conclusion that budget secrecy was an absolute must.

Now, I suggest—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I would like the Hon. Member to realize that he must indicate the relationship of that to the Chair. We all agree that the principle of budget secrecy is accepted by all Parliaments and by all Governments. We all accept the fact that Ministers take an oath and that they must be loyal to their oath. However, what is necessary is for Hon. Members to prove to the Chair and to indicate to the Chair—

Mr. Nielsen: Not prove.

Madam Speaker: Not prove, that is right. They must indicate to the Chair in what way the breach of that oath or of that secrecy interferes with the privileges of the House. That is the very important and, I might say, narrower point.

The arguments which are being presented to the Chair now would have to relate to the debate which would ensue on the Chair finding a prima facie of privilege. The substance of the matter should not be debated now. The only thing that is important now is to demonstrate to the Chair the relationship of what has taken place or allegedly taken place to the matter of privilege.

I just want to caution Hon. Members that I would like to rule on this matter before the Question Period. I think it is obvious to Hon. Members why I would like to rule. Otherwise, the Question Period would pose some difficulties for Hon. Members who might want to ask questions related to the actuality. After all, that is what the Question Period is all about.

I am in the hands of the House. If many Hon. Members want to intervene, I will listen to them. However, I would plead with them not to repeat the arguments which some Hon. Members have already put forward. There has already been much repetition, and that is not very useful. The only thing that that will achieve is to pose some very grave difficulties in Question Period. I am warning the House now that I will have to apply the rules—

Mr. Lawrence: This is more important. Privilege certainly takes priority.

Madam Speaker: —that if a ruling is in suspense, no questions may be asked relating to that particular matter.

Mr. Lawrence: Surely privilege takes priority.

Madam Speaker: Therefore, I will now listen to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain with this warning.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I appreciate being informed of that. I want to suggest that the reason I laid it out in the way I did is because I wanted to point out that in the case now before us, recognizing that budget secrecy is an accepted requirement of the Minister of Finance, recognizing that this is historically true, and that other Ministers of Finance and Chancellors of the Exchequer have recognized that they must report to the House of Commons in advance of anyone else, the privilege centres around the privileges of Hon. Members to be informed according to the practices which have been followed since the beginning of time in the parliamentary system, the requirement to provide Members of Parliament with that which is accepted by everyone as the practice both here and in Westminster.

As I said, this situation is worse than the Dalton case because this Minister of Finance established a situation which allowed such a breach to arise. He was not prudent in the way in which he protected the secrecy of the budget. He acted in a most imprudent way in inviting members of the press to come into his office, suggesting to them that the budget document which was to be presented tonight was there on his desk, asking them if they had their zoom lenses with them, making it possible for them to take photographs and making it possible for them, with that advance knowledge, to personally gain from the information which he had indiscreetly made available to them.

I think that goes to the heart of the matter. Not only were the journalists who were there and had access to the information able, if they had wanted to—and no one knows what they did—to go out and take advantage of that information for their own gain, but they could have gone out and taken advantage of that information for the gain of others. That is the breach of confidence that has occurred. That is the privilege that I claim on behalf of my constituents. There is a requirement on the Minister of Finance, as has been set out over years of practice, to do everything in his power to make sure that no opportunity can arise which will enable any individual to take advantage of prior knowledge of what will be contained in the budget.

I believe the question of this Minister's mishandling of this particular and extremely important matter must be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I believe the Committee on Privileges and Elections, looking at the evidence, will find that the Minister acted inappropriately. The Minister did not do what he was required to do both under oath and by precedent.

I suggest that if one has any doubts about the effects of the leak, one need only look at the Canadian dollar, which is falling on the international markets today, and at the Toronto Stock Exchange index, which is also falling, to see the devastating effects of the mismanagement and carelessness of the Minister of Finance.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, since you have indicated that you are anxious to make a ruling or make a decision as soon as possible, I shall now, if I may, express the Government's point of view regarding this matter. From the outset, I would like to make it quite clear to the Chair that the question seems entirely hypothetical and premature, and that in any case it has absolutely no basis either in fact or in law.

The Hon. Member for Yukon said earlier, and I quote,

[English]

"I want to deal in this case in a traditional way, as in the Dalton case".

It will be very easy in a few moments to demonstrate that, in fact, the Hon. Member is not dealing with this case in a traditional way as was done in the Dalton case. On the contrary. But let me say this before I come to that comparison on which the Hon. Member for the Yukon has based his case.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, basically, the question is this: At the procedural level, the Chair must decide whether—as everyone has said—there is a prima facie case of privilege, and from what is said on the floor of the House, the Chair must be reasonably satisfied that prima facie, at first glance, there are facts from which the chair can conclude that the freedom of speech of the Members of this House may have been affected. In fact, privilege, as clearly defined in Beauchesne, 5th Edition, is basically the freedom of speech of the Members of the House of Commons. That and nothing else. I see the Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) is smiling. I challenge him to disprove this. The practice is well known and the principle is clear—a question of privilege must relate directly to the freedom of speech of the Members of the House. Madam Speaker, one of the basic factors for a prima facie case of privilege is lacking. Anyone can see that. It is not a matter of twisting facts and events. It is too easy to get paranoid whenever the Official Opposition sees a chance of obstructing the proceedings of the House. However, if we look at parliamentary procedure and parliamentary practice and precedents, it is immediately obvious in the case put to the Chair that a basic element is lacking. There is no budget, and there must be a budget if the Chair is to decide, to conclude, to find out whether or not there was an actual leak. Without the budget, how can the Chair determine whether the photograph published in the press is one of a document used in preparing the budget or the budget itself—and that we will not know until eight o'clock this evening—how can the Chair determine that information was leaked from a budget that does not exist either in fact or in law?

Madam Speaker, the Standing Orders are quite clear. Standing Order 64(2) provides, and I quote:

An Order of the Day for the consideraction of a Ways and Means motion or motions shall be designated at the request of a Minister rising in his or her place in the House.

That is what the Standing Order says, and that is as far as the proceedings for bringing down a possible budget have progressed. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has asked that an order of the day be designated for this evening at eight o'clock, pursuant to an Order of the House allowing us to sit at eight o'clock, and he will rise in his place to announce what, at eight o'clock and thereafter and not before, will be the budget, that is, the fiscal, financial and economic measures which together constitute what, in our parliamentary practice is commonly called the budget. There is nothing graven in stone, nothing is official, nothing is enshrined, there are no new budgetary measures until the Minister of Finance rises in his place and pronounces the budget speech. Everything prior to that, whether it is in writing or consists of consultations with major groups representing the world of finance, small and medium size businesses, farmers, labour, whether it consists of consultations with parliamentarians in general, whether the information is verbal, in writing or photographed or otherwise—it is not official, has no legal status and is not a factor that should be considered, because the question put to the Chair is the following: Was there or was there not a budget leak? However, there is no budget, so there is no leak. It is as simple as that, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Cousineau: As simple as that!

Mr. Pinard: That being said, perhaps I may go back to some of the points that were raised by the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). When he compares the present case with previous cases—even assuming that the question is not hypothetical, is not premature and even assuming that there is a budget—if we look at the arguments used by my colleagues opposite, there is no comparison at all with the three items of jurisprudence or the three pseudo-precedents to which they referred.

● (1210)

First of all, it is a fact that in Canada, a Federal Minister of Finance has never resigned because of a budget leak. Earlier, some quotes were made, out of context, from the memoirs of the Hon. Walter Gordon, but there was nothing to show—and actual events and official documents will prove this—there was nothing to show and it is not true that Mr. Gordon resigned because of a budget leak. That is not true! The quotes made earlier by the Member for Yukon were taken out of context and given an erroneous and subjective interpretation, which ignored the actual facts. Anyone who knows political history is aware, and the facts are there to prove it, that Mr. Gordon resigned between two budgets, because measures contained in his first budget were changed as a result of the budget debate. The measures were nationalistic in character, and since he had been forced to change the very substance of his budget, he tendered his resignation to the Prime Minister at the time, but there is no information indicating, and that is a fact, that the Minister of Finance at the time resigned because of an alleged budget leak.

So those are the facts, and this precedent does not apply at all to the present case.

With the exception of the case I just mentioned, which is not applicable, a Minister of Finance has never been obliged to resign from the Canadian Government because of a budget leak. The only two precedents mentioned by the Opposition took place in the United Kingdom. The first occurred in 1936 or thereabouts, and the second in 1947, and that was the Dalton case on which the Member for Yukon decided to base his arguments. However, Madam Speaker, the difference between the British precedents which took place in England and the present situation is that in the former cases there was a budget. The basic element was there. A budget existed before the two Ministers resigned. That is not the case here. In the two cases that occurred in 1936 and 1947, the Ministers resigned after a budget was brought down because information had been leaked. Here, nothing has been leaked since there is no budget. Second, in the first two cases, the leak was about fiscal measures, which is not the case here, because the information in the photographs mentioned by the Member for Yukon concerned only figures relating to the deficit, which was discussed on the floor of the House during the last few days, and the people of Canada know it will be high. It does not come as a surprise to anyone. But the big difference between the two British cases and the present situation is that fiscal measures were leaked from an existing budget before the Ministers resigned in 1936 and 1947. That is not the case here. No fiscal measure is being alleged to have been disclosed or to be coming from a given document.

Neither is there a case of privileged information at this point, Madam Speaker. Furthermore, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), unlike Mr. Dalton and the other Minister in 1936, did not tell someone: I am proposing such and such a measure in my budget. I feel it is unconscionable that Hon. Members, considering the circumstances which are generally known, should say that the Minister of Finance of Canada deliberately set out to allow a reporter to photograph one or two pages of a document that may have been his Budget. I think that the camera's indiscretion does not at this time warrant, before there even is a budget, demanding the resignation of the Minister of Finance and preventing the Government this evening from creating the jobs Canada needs. Today, all the Opposition is doing is indulging in some more systematic obstruction, because the Bill on the Order Paper, which provides for funding for the Calgary Olympics, has always been opposed by these people, and now they have a golden opportunity to kill time and set up a smoke screen to distract our attention. The public, however, is not easily fooled, Madam Speaker. The public is certainly not about to be fooled. It is all very well to object formally, but when it is a matter of proving its point, the Opposition shows its true colours, and the points it is trying to make simply do not apply in the present context, where we do not even have a budget, since it must first be brought down this evening at eight o'clock. Everyone knows that it will create jobs, and if the Opposition is so irresponsible as to demand the resignation of the Minister of Finance because the camera's indiscretion, without the Minister's knowing, revealed a measure that is not a fiscal measure, before a budget was finalized, I call that absolutely irresponsible, a show of petty politics and a further waste of the time of the House.

Madam Speaker, in addition to my principal line of reasoning which is that there is no budget, that a basic element is lacking, that up to now, nothing has happened to restrain the freedom of speech of the Members of this House, and there is therefore no prima facie evidence for a question of privilege in addition to this, I have just shown that even assuming there were a budget, this particular case differs from the only two precedents that could have some relevance to the situation and which are, however, entirely different, because in those two cases, the resignations took place after the budget was brought down, so that there was one basic element in the picture. A budget speech had been pronounced, and it was possible to compare what the Minister said with what his budget contained, and that we cannot do here. Second, the Ministers resigned after they brought down their budgets. They revealed fiscal measures verbally to someone, and the effect was to enable certain people to profit by this privileged information, which has yet to be proved here.

Therefore, Madam Speaker—

[English]

Madam Speaker, we are not at all dealing with this in the traditional way when we compare this case with the Dalton case since, as I have just indicated, in the Dalton case there was an essential element that we do not find here at this time in the discussion. They had a budget. We do not have a budget yet, and the Opposition knows that very well. All they are doing is trying once again to prevent the Government from dealing with the important substance, to create jobs, just because of their paranoia when they realize they have an opportunity to create systematic obstruction in this place.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is the stupidity of the Minister.

Mr. Pinard: That is why they are still trying to do it today, and I can assure you that they will not succeed because the people of this country will not let them prevent this Government from creating jobs in Canada.

[Translation]

Finally, Madam Speaker, it is clear that there is not a single factor that would justify the Chair's determining that there is a prima facie question of privilege. Once again, the only two precedents, which go back to the 30's and the 40's and which took place in another country, are not at all comparable to the present situation, and besides, the present case is about a leak from something that does not officially exist and cannot be checked because we do not have this budget before us. It is one of the recognized principles of parliamentary procedure and of the rules and practice of Parliament, that we are absolutely free, the Minister of Finance is absolutely free, whatever the consultations he may have held before his budget speech, whatever their form or the circumstances that might indicate that he intends to act in such and such a way, there is nothing in our parliamentary procedure to prevent the Minister of Finance from making a speech that differs from the consultations that may have taken place or indiscretions that were committed inadvertenly.

The Minister of Finance is free to seek advice, and pursuant to our parliamentary practice and rules, the budget is not a budget until such time as the Minister makes his budget speech in the House, and that is the crux of the whole debate, Madam Speaker. It is a fact, it is there, plain for all to see—in latin we say: patet.

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, I have only been Member of this House for ten years but I cannot recall an occasion on which there has been a matter of this gravity, touching not only the roots of the ability of individual Members of Parliament to accept the word and support the behaviour of Ministers of the Crown, but also dealing with fundamental traditions of the House of Commons and our parliamentary democracy as they relate to budget secrecy.

Let me deal first of all with remarks that I was quite surprised to hear come from the mouth of the Government House Leader. First of all, he was suggesting, Madam Speaker, that in order for you to find a prima facie case of privilege, in order for you to accede to the request made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen), you would have to judge the proof of the contents publicized last night as a direct result of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) inviting television cameras into his room. That was the argument of the Government House Leader. He said it was your job to judge that the reports published last night are true.

With all respect, Madam Speaker, that is not your job at all. You are not here as a judge of the contents of what was published last night. You are a judge only as to whether there is a prima facie case of a breach of the privileges of the House of Commons. I regret that the Government House Leader did not seem to seize on or understand that difference in function. You are not here to judge the contents of the budget; you are here to decide if there is a prima facie case that would allow a committee to be established to look into this matter.

Secondly, and very quickly, the Minister suggested that no one in Canadian history has resigned as a result of a budget leak. Well, he misquoted Walter Gordon. Walter Gordon, in his own memoirs, made it clear that Walter Gordon believed that he was obliged to resign as a result of the budget leak. He did not consummate that resignation, but it was his view of his duty as a Liberal of that era that he, having breached budget secrecy, was obliged to resign. That is clear on the record in Mr. Gordon's own words.

● (1220)

In regard to the standards of this Government, we saw its standards when it comes to resignation not long ago in relation to its own conflict of interest guidelines. In that case the conflict of interest guidelines were in effect until they were breached; but once the rules are broken, the rules no longer apply to the Government of Canada when it is within the exclusive decision of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). This is not within the exclusive decision of the Prime Minister. This is within the power of decision of the Speaker of the House of Commons, who has to judge whether or not there has been a prima facie breach of longstanding traditions, not simply respecting budgetary secrecy, but also respecting the oath which was taken by a Minister of the Crown. I will come to the question of the oath in a moment.

Let me deal with two other matters raised by the Government House Leader before he left the House, presumably to join the Minister of Finance who is also not here while the propriety of his actions is being discussed in the House of Commons of Canada. First, he said that in the Dalton case the resignation occurred after the budget had been presented; the resignation occurred as soon as it became known that a breach had occurred. We knew last night that a breach had occurred. That was raised by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition immediately and the House of Commons met after that knowledge became known in the country. That is on all fours with the Dalton case. In the Dalton case, when it was clear that a breach had occurred, the request was made for a committee to be struck and a committee was so struck. The timing of the budget was irrelevant in the Dalton matter.

What happened in the Dalton case we are suggesting should happen here, because it is within the traditions of parliamentary democracy that once it becomes clear there has been a breach of budget secrecy, there is a prima facie case that requires consideration by a committee of the House. That was the Dalton precedent; it is on all fours with the precedent here.

Finally, he made the rather curious argument that what was reported last night, what was leaked last night after the Minister of Finance invited reporters into his boudoir, was not the budget. He is now pretending that it was something else, that it was not the budget, that we will not know if it was the budget. There are two things to be said about that. First, if the Minister of Finance of Canada was luring reporters into his room, holding up a document which purported to be a budget, letting it be photographed knowing there were zoom lenses there and allowing the public of Canada to believe that there would be something in the budget tonight which will not be in the budget tonight, that is even a more flagrant breach of public trust than it would be for him simply to have been careless and stupid.

We thought that the Minister was guilty only of stupidity. If we believe the Government House Leader that it may well be that what was revealed last night is not what will be presented tonight, then he is not just guilty of stupidity. He is guilty of a fraud upon the people of Canada, a fraud from which the wealthy could profit and a fraud from which the less wealthy in the country could suffer. If we are to believe the Government House Leader in his argument that what was leaked last night did not relate to the contents of the budget, then he is himself calling the Minister of Finance a fraud.

The other way to deal with that argument is from the mouth of the Minister of Finance himself. Those of us who have watched these proceedings know that when the Minister of Finance held up the document last night before the television cameras, which he invited into his office, he waved it around and said these words: "This is the budget".

What the Government House Leader is saying is that the document which the Minister of Finance called the budget last night is no longer the budget. That stretches credibility far too far. We have to accept the word of the Minister of Finance when he invited journalists in and opened the budget to be photographed by zoom lenses. We have to accept that he knew what he was talking about when he said: "This document is the budget; this that I am holding up for you to photograph is the budget". We have to assume, further, that he did that deliberately and that he knew it was the budget.

We understand from a press report that his press secretary warned the Minister to "watch those papers". He was so careless that his own staff told him to watch those papers. I watched on television when he said to the cameras: "Are there any zoom lenses here?", in effect inviting cameras with zoom lenses to focus in on the budget papers which he then held open.

Let me come to the question of the oath, because it is one of the bases of a question of privilege. You have sworn an oath, Madam Speaker, as a Privy Councillor, as have I. We are both familiar with its contents. I will not tire or bore the House by reading the entire convoluted oath, but let me read the relevant portions. I am referring to the oath sworn to by every Minister of the Crown. The relevant portions in English are:

> —you will keep close and secret all such matters as shall be treated, debated and resolved on in Privy Council, without publishing or disclosing the same or any part thereof, by Word, Writing, or any otherwise to any Person out of the same Council, but to such only as be of the Council.

That is the relevant portion of the oath which you signed as a Privy Councillor and to which you swore as a Privy Councillor. The swearing of that oath gives a Privy Councillor a special standing in the House of Commons. It is the basis of the authority that a Privy Councillor who is also a Minister of the Crown enjoys in the House of Commons. It is the whole basis of that authority.

If that oath is breached, the ability of each of us as Private Members in the House of Commons to accept the word or to accept the authority of the Minister who breached his oath is undermined and lost. Consequently, the privilege of each Member of the House of Commons is lost when a Minister breaches his oath, as this Minister breached his oath last night on public television.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Reading from Beauchesne, the definition of "privilege" is:

> The distinctive mark of a privilege is its ancillary character. The privileges of Parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers". They are enjoyed by individual Members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its Members; and by each House for the protection of its Members and the vindication of its own authority and dignity.

What is important here is that these rights and privileges are enjoyed by individual Members "because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its Members". Members of the House of Commons cannot perform their services and functions unless they can accept the basis of authority which allows a Minister of the Crown to have a special role in the House. In other words, we cannot do our job unless Ministers honour their oath. When a Minister breaks his oath, as the Minister of Finance broke his oath last night, the ability of individual Members of Parliament to do their jobs is limited. We have suffered a loss of our privilege. This is the prima facie case which we put before you today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, you will know that while the question of secrecy is important to any matter, it is of particular importance in relation to the budget. You yourself said earlier today that you need no further elaboration on that point. I forget your exact words. I do not want to misquote you, but I think the intent of your remarks was that everyone accepts that there is a requirement of secrecy in relation to the budget.

I have the words of your predecessor in writing, Mr. Speaker Jerome, on July 24, 1975 in relation to a case having to do with the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), the then Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council, who was involved in a dispute with The Gazette of Montreal. The Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) was in the course of making an argument, as reported at page 7888 of Hansard of that date. Mr. Speaker Jerome interrupted, and I will quote the relevant portion:

> Order. I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but I do not think he need argue the sanctity of budget secrecy. That seems to me a matter that is generally agreed to by all Members of the House; there is no disagreement there.

That was the view, those were the words and that was the expression used by Mr. Speaker Jerome of the well understood tradition of budget secrecy. Madam Speaker, you used similar language, as I recall, to make it clear that budget secrecy enjoys a special place in the House.

● (1230)

What is important here is that the Minister of Finance invited journalists to come in to a situation where the contents of the budget would be known to them. Indeed, he invited them thrice. I do not know if there were cocks crowing or not, but he invited them thrice. He first invited them into his office. Second, he held open the budget documents. He held them open to a point where his own staff urged him to be careful with the papers. That was the second invitation, holding open the documents to be seen.

Third, just in case any of them might have forgotten they had a zoom lens that could focus on the language, he reminded them they had a zoom lens. He reminded them that they had within their power in the room to which he had invited them a mechanism which would allow them to focus, photograph, magnify and later to broadcast to the country, and indeed to the world, the contents of the budget. He did it by invitation three times: "Come to my room." "Here is the budget." "Focus your zoom lens." That was the invitation offered three times by the Minister of Finance.

I think the Minister was a buffoon to do that, an absolute buffoon. Buffoonery is no defence. It is a breach of the practices of this House. A breach by buffoonery is as serious, bad and wrong as a breach by malicious intent. What has to be judged here is whether there is prima facie evidence in the arguments that have been put forward, in the documents that exist and in the information that all of us have seen conveyed across the land, of a breach of the practices in respect to budget secrecy.

Coming again to our rights as Private Members of Parliament, we have a right to know that the traditions respecting budget secrecy will be honoured. Indeed, those traditions are imposed on us. One of the arrangements that has grown up over the years is that only five of our number are allowed into a budget lock-up. We are allowed into a budget lock-up under very serious limitations. Five of our number are given extraordinary privileges, larger than the normal privilege of ordinary Members to know the budget in advance on the condition that we do not broadcast what we know. That privilege is given to us because we are Members of the House of Commons. It is part of the privilege of Members of the House of Commons in this Party to delegate to five of our own the opportunity to go in and see those documents in advance.

What happened is that the Minister of Finance invited the journalists last night to come in and not only see, but photograph and circulate, material that would not be available to any Member of the House of Commons until today in the normal course of things. That clearly is to put Members of Parliament, who are supposed to be in a superior position with regard to Government information and announcements, in an inferior position. That is very clearly a breach and a limitation of the privileges of individual ordinary Members of the House of Commons. That was carried out and was done deliberately by the Minister of Finance yesterday.

I will summarize very quickly because I know you want to deal particularly with the question of privilege here, with whether the privilege of individual Members has been breached. I am glad the Government House Leader is back because he was under the mistaken impression that the Speaker would have to judge the contents of the matter leaked. The Speaker is not called upon to be a judge but is called upon to decide whether there is prima facie evidence of a breach of the privileges of individual Members of this House.

There is prima facie evidence, in my submission, on at least two counts. One has to do with the breach of the oath of office of the Minister of Finance, who broke his word, broke that oath which is the basis on which he enjoys special standing in this House. When he breaks his word, which is the author of the source of his special authority in this House, then those of us who are required still to treat him with special authority have our privileges limited.

Second, in relation to the specific case of the budget leak itself, the traditions are well established that there is not to be a release, deliberate or inadvertent, of the contents of budget material, nor the appearance of the release of the contents of budget material, prior to the presentation in the House. There is no doubt that anyone with eyes to see the television of the land knows that the Minister of Finance broke that practice and custom. In so breaking it, he made available to the larger public information that was to have been presented first here and, by so doing, breached the privileges of individual Members of the House of Commons of Canada.

Madam Speaker: I hope Members will allow me a brief intervention because I do want this debate to advance. I think we all agree, as the Right Hon. Member just indicated, about secrecy and the oaths which are quite sacred matters; there is no discussion on that. What the Chair needs to have demonstrated is that the secrecy of the budget and these oaths are related to the privileges of the House. It is very important that Members focus on that particular point. It is not enough to say that some Ministers of Finance or Chancellors of the Exchequer have resigned because a secret in the budget had been divulged. That is not sufficient. It needs to be demonstrated that they resigned in relation to a matter having to do with the privileges of the House.

These Ministers of Finance having resigned, I remind Hon. Members, they remained Members of the House of Commons without the House having imposed on them any kind of sanction. Members should be reminded that the privileges of the House are applied not to Ministers but to Members exclusively, not to Members in their capacity as Ministers but to Members of the House of Commons. In this respect they are all equal. It is very important that Members should focus on this in their interventions.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, this is a sad day for Canada and a sad day for Parliament. It is sad for the country because if ever there was a time when economic leadership was required to deal with the real problems of our land, it is today. It is sad for Parliament because we have a Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) who has violated his oath as a Member of the Privy Council. In so doing, he has also violated our privileges as Members of the House and so undermined completely, I regret to say, in the context of what is going on in the country today, his capacity to provide the economic leadership that is so much required.

I want to deal with the essence of the question that Your Honour just raised. You have correctly said that what is at the root of the motion is the question of the privileges of the Members of the House. What has to be done at this stage is for the House, those of us who are expressing concern about this matter, to establish a prima facie case that our privileges have been violated.

It has been demonstrated beyond question that the Minister has violated his oath as a Minister of the Crown. That is clearly the case. The question of that matter's relationship to our privileges as Members of the House is what I want to underline in a very brief but accurate fashion.

Surely one of the basic privileges of a Member of the House, whether on this or the other side, as long as they are not Ministers of the Crown—I am talking about every Member in his or her capacity as a Member of Parliament—which we have over other Canadians is the privilege of hearing first from the Minister of Finance what is in his budget. That is an ancient privilege of the House, existing in Great Britain and in Canada. It is a privilege that I submit the Minister of Finance violated last night.

• (1240)

In a back-handed way I tell the Government House Leader, through you, Madam Speaker—I am addressing my argument to you in this context—that the Minister gave one of the most specious arguments I have ever heard in this House—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: —when he tried to suggest that the case that has been made by Opposition Members about the budget leak can not really be judged at this point because we do not have a budget. That is just complete and utter hogwash.

As has already been indicated, the Minister of Finance last night on television said: "Here is the budget; here it is". He has not denied that since. He did not come to the House, nor did the Government House Leader whose words I listened to with care. The Government House Leader did not say that what the Minister of Finance revealed was not the budget. Even if we have not had a formal budget presented before us, all the evidence indicates that what the Minister of Finance said last night clearly illustrated to the whole of this nation what the budget will be. Whatever specious argument the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) offers to the contrary, no one, except perhaps some of his own backbenchers, will agree with his argument.

The Minister of Finance went on television last night and said: "Here is the budget." He revealed to the television cameras, and therefore to the nation, before revealing to Members of the House the contents of the budget. The case, I think, is as simple as that. That is the privilege that has been violated. We have the right and the privilege as Members of the House to hear that budget first. The Minister of Finance, whatever the motive for his indiscretion may have been, made a grievous error for which he should be paying at this point.

I conclude by observing that I believe beyond question that the evidence of a prima facie case of the violation of our privileges is there. I will not repeat that evidence. I do want to say that before this day is out and before much time passes, the Minister of Finance should do the honourable thing and submit his resignation, because the evidence and the tradition is overwhelmingly against what he has done.

I conclude by saying what I began with. It is a sad day for this country when we do not get the economic leadership that we require. It is a sad day for Parliament when a Minister has bungled so obviously and has not, up to this moment, submitted his resignation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, persistence has its own merit, and I appreciate being recognized.

I have listened with interest to the very compelling arguments put forward by my colleagues from the Opposition Party. I simply address myself to the very narrow point that you have raised, Madam Speaker, in terms of the question of privilege raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen), and as to whether or not, within our precedents and tradition, you can on the basis of the prima facie evidence which is clearly and irrefutably before you present the motion which has been suggested by the Leader of the Opposition.

I do not think there is any question that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) should resign. On February 18, 1983 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself, when dealing with the so-called "Coalgate" or Gillespie matter, left no question in the minds of Canadians and Members of the House of Commons when he said as reported at page 22978 of Hansard:

> Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member makes a parallel with former Chancellor of the Exchequer, Dalton, who inadvertently let out a budget secret. That secret hit the newspaper headlines before the Minister had read his budget. This, according to the tradition, is something that you should not do, and therefore the Minister chose to resign.

The Prime Minister himself acknowledges that. So I expect that there will be a resignation. But the question before us is not whether or not the Minister should resign, but indeed whether or not the privileges of this House have in fact been impinged upon, to the degree that the ability of Members of Parliament to deal with the business before the House has been compromised. I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, on very compelling evidence, that that is precisely what we face here today.

We do have precedents in our own House. I would like to refer to the case of privilege that arose in 1975 concerning the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) which was alluded to by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark). You will recall the circumstances were that the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River, as a Parliamentary Secretary, was alleged to have, prior to the presentation of the budget, revealed certain contents of that budget as it related to customs and excise—

Mr. McGrath: Pleasure craft.

Mr. Crombie: Outboard motors.

Mr. McGrath: To an operator in his constituency.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Pleasure craft and outboard motor duties. I appreciate the assistance I am getting from my hon. friends here who have given details in a way that I could not of that particular case. I simply say, Madam Speaker, that in that particular instance your predecessor, Mr. Speaker Jerome, indicated there was no question that that in itself constituted a prima facie breach of privilege, though it was a mere allegation of a breach of budget confidentiality and secrecy.

I start with that premise because I would like to translate that now to the present circumstances. We now have the Minister of Finance who, it is alleged on very compelling evidence, has partially revealed the contents of the budget.

These are not incidental matters and I do not for a moment accept the proposition of the Government House Leader that because it did not deal with matters relating precisely to taxation, somehow that has any effect on us at all. I agree with the Government House Leader when he says these circumstances are not the same as in the Dalton case. This is far more serious.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There is the potential for a far greater profit to be made by those people who are involved in the bond market of this country. People in the bond market operate on the basis of buying and investing and, indeed, on selling on a margin basis. They do not put up the full amount of money. It is quite possible, on the basis of a 5 per cent investment for people who can see whether the budget is going to be a bullish or bearish budget, to take a signal from that information and make enormous amounts of money. That is one of the reasons it is important to this House that information of that type not be released prior to the budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Minister of Finance has disclosed willy-nilly the contents of the budget. The Government House Leader asks how we can decide this now since we have not yet heard the budget. The very simple reason, Madam Speaker, is this. It is a tradition of this House that if the content of the budget was not disclosed on television last night and today, the Minister of Finance could, by standing in his place in this House, tell us that that was not part of the budget. That would end the whole debate because we would be obliged by the traditions of this House to accept his word.

Second, he has not denied it outside the House, which brings me to the question of whether or not we are being compromised in terms of our ability to carry on the business of this House.

The budget is a document that must be presented on the floor of the House of Commons, not by virtue of some crazy tradition or because it is a convenient way to deal with things, but because that is the only way in which there can be order in the economic law-making process of this country. If, for example—and this is very important—we are to accept the proposition that the Minister either inadvertently or consciously is able outside the House of Commons to present the budget, that acknowledgement alone would render the House of Commons impotent. It would mean there would be no need for us to come here at all. If the Minister could make his budget presentation outside the House, there would be no need for him to present it to Members of the House of Commons. There would be no opportunity for Members to debate the matter. If you say he can do this in circumstances which are inadvertent, then it is logical to conclude that it is quite possible for the Minister deliberately to make a statement outside the House.

I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that whether or not the privileges of this House have been affected is a very crucial question. If we are not able to deal with budgetary matters in this House, then I say that that is fundamentally wrong.

Madam Speaker, I refer to a definition of privilege of which you are aware. To refresh the memories of Members of the House of Commons, the publications to which I refer is entitled "Encyclopaedia of Parliament" by Norman Wilding and Philip Laundy. At page 582, the authors say this:

• (1250)

Disrespect to the House collectively is described by Lord Campion as "the original and fundamental form of breach of privilege"—

That is precisely the point I make with respect to what has transpired here. On the basis of whether there is a prima facie question of privilege, there is precedent in the House that the mere allegation against a Member of Parliament that there has been a breach of budget secrecy has been held by your predecessor to be a prima facie question of privilege. In that instance the question was referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The second question upon which Your Honour can base your conclusion is that in this particular instance the ability of the House to deal with the budget will be severely prejudiced and, indeed, compromised by the premature revelation of the contents of the budget. That affects my privilege, Madam Speaker, and that is why I support the motion of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen).

I am now in the position of having to deal with a matter that has been broached outside the House which has enormous economic consequences for the people of Canada. As a Member of Parliament I am not able to deal with the matter on the floor of the House of Commons except by a motion such as brought forth by the Leader of the Opposition to have the matter referred to a committee.

Whether the Minister resigns or not is incidental. Clearly, he should resign. He must resign. The question we must address is the effect of the action of the Minister on our ability to deal with budgetary matters.

Thank you for the indulgence and for recognizing me, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I was very tempted to fill in for the Hon. Member, as his colleagues did, when he referred to that particular precedent concerning the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). I think that he knows that the Speaker then did not find a prima facie case of privilege, as in the case argued now. The matter did go to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections but it was at the request of the Hon. Member. He might have jumped the gun or something of that nature, but there was no ruling by the Speaker to the effect that that was a prima facie case.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I just—

Madam Speaker: No. The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). I would just tell the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre that, as I said, I should like to rule at two o'clock if at all possible. If the Hon. Member wants to be very brief in his remarks I will be able to rule before the Question Period, but if he chooses to go into a very lengthy elaboration of his points, then the House will know exactly what my conduct will be in Question Period.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We consider this matter to be so serious and of such gravity that we are prepared to discuss it for as long as is necessary to satisfy ourselves that the Chair is in possession of all the arguments. Some of these have not yet been made, particularly those having to do with markets and the effect of the breach by the Minister of Finance, the predisclosure of budget information, on those markets. We are prepared to continue the discussion at two o'clock even though we realize the consequences of adopting that course.

I do not suggest for a moment that it is even the intention of the Chair, but I would urge the Chair not to cut off discussion at this stage. If we do not finish in six minutes I urge the Chair to allow discussion to continue at the time when Question Period would normally take place.

Because of the gravity of the issue there must be sufficient evidence put before the Chair. There is still much to come by way of the effect of the predisclosure on the markets of the country. I urge the Chair not to make any attempt rapidly to conclude this discussion.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, very respectfully, I think the Leader of the Opposition is not in a position to urge anybody to do anything, especially the Speaker of the House. We know that you have total discretion to decide after a certain time if you have heard enough or not to make your ruling.

I submit that we on this side will respect your freedom or discretion. As far as we are concerned we find that a lot of time has been wasted so far, and certainly you are in a position to interrupt debate.

Madam Speaker: In reply to the remarks of the Hon. Leader of the Opposition, I just want to say that I would not allow matters dealing with the effects of these alleged revelations on the stock market to be advanced as arguments to determine the question of privilege. These are the types of arguments which, I must say, have been invoked in the course of some of the presentations but I have let them go by. The matter of determining what effects this would have on the stock market or any other sector of the economy would be the kind of argument that could be advanced once a prima facie case of privilege has been found.

I have reminded Hon. Members constantly that one of the reasons that would bring me to cut off debate would be if Members enter into debate of the question of privilege as if the Chair had found a prima facie case of privilege. The debate does not take place before, it takes place after that. To this point Members have not elaborated, as I have urged them, on the relationship between this particular matter and the question of privilege. Therefore I will not allow argument on the matter of the stock market. That is not relevant to this particular phase of the debate. It could be relevant afterwards but not now.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I will keep my remarks relevant to the question of whether there was a prima facie case of privilege of all Members of the House.

Mention was made of the case of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) who, as a Parliamentary Secretary, was alleged to have had budget information, which would have been a breach of privilege, and to have passed on that information to the benefit of one of his constituents.

On July 25, 1975, as reported at page 7941, speaking of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River, Mr. Speaker Jerome said:

> Therefore, I have no hesitation, under the circumstances, to say that in my opinion the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River does, in fact, have a prima facie case of privilege and the House ought now to decide on the disposition of that prima facie case of privilege in the terms of the motion he has put forward, which is as follows:—

So Speaker Jerome acknowledged that the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River, being accused of having budget information prior to the budget being released, had a prima facie case of privilege. To that extent the arguments put forward by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) are relevant because the Speaker indeed acknowledged it was a prima facie case of privilege.

I should like to quote from Beauchesne's Citation 20(2) on page 12 as follows:

> Parliament, in 1868, laid claim to all of the privileges of the United Kingdom House of Commons without specifying their exact extent.

Subsection (1) points out that privilege in the United Kingdom is based on common law practices. Subsection (4) reads as follows:

> As Parliament has never delimited the extent of privilege, considerable confusion surrounds the area. Recourse must therefore be taken, not only to the practice of the Canadian House, but also to the vast tradition of the United Kingdom House of Commons.

That means that all of the decisions in regard to the Dalton affair are binding on this House in terms of precedents, as are the quotations given by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West. He very compellingly and convincingly pointed out the impact of suggesting to Members of the House that it matters not to our privileges if a budget is leaked or if budget information is provided to the public prior to our knowing—

Madam Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but it now being one o'clock, I must adjourn until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—CALL FOR PEACE

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Madam Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Madam Speaker—

Mrs. Appolloni: —the brutal, barbaric bombing of the American Embassy in Beirut has provoked reactions of—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. At this particular time the Speaker is not prepared to entertain points of order. The Standing Orders are quite clear. At two o'clock we must go to the statements by Members, and to Question Period at 2.15. Any time after that the Chair will be delighted to entertain points of order.

Mr. Lewis: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I have just said that I will not entertain a point of order at this time—

Mr. Nielsen: It is a point of order on that point.

Madam Speaker: —because the Standing Orders are quite clear—

Mr. Lewis: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: —that I should go to statements by Members.

Mr. Lewis: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Well, there is no point of order. After Question Period I will be delighted to entertain points of order by Hon. Members. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni).

Mr. Nielsen: There is a point of order on the question as to whether we should be proceeding with Question Period, a question of privilege now being before the House.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nielsen: Privilege takes precedence.

Madam Speaker: Well, it was a point of order and it was on a point of order that I determined there would not be points of order, because the Standing Orders are quite clear. At two o'clock the Chair must proceed to statements by Members, and at 2.15 to Question Period. Points of order may be entertained after that. As for a question of privilege, we are already on a question of privilege—

Mr. Nielsen: And that should go.

Madam Speaker: —which will resume after we have followed the provisions of the Standing Orders as to the statements by Members and Question Period.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, Standing Orders do not take precedence because you have recognized a question of privilege.

Mr. Cousineau: Sit down!

Mr. Nielsen: Surely you are going to hear the question of privilege, because it takes precedence over all other business of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I submit that the Chair should hear submissions on a question of privilege taking precedence over all other orders.

Some Hon. Members: Be quiet.

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Chair is following the Standing Orders and I shall read them out to Hon. Members. Standing Order 20(1), which the Hon. Member probably wants to invoke, says:

> Whenever any matter of privilege arises, it shall be taken into consideration immediately.

That is what we did this morning at eleven o'clock. There was a question of privilege and the Chair took that question of privilege immediately because it did not stand in the way of Standing Order 18(3) which says:

> At 2:00 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, and at 11:00 o'clock a.m. on Fridays, Members, other than Ministers of the Crown, may make statements pursuant to Standing Order 21. Not later than 2:15 o'clock p.m., or 11:15 o'clock a.m., as the case may be, oral questions shall be taken up.

Therefore the Chair is obliged to proceed to Statements by Members at this time, and to Question Period at 2.15.

Mr. Lewis: A point of order.

Madam Speaker: I cannot allow a point—

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, surely when you recognize it at eleven o'clock, you must continue the argument through Question Period.

Madam Speaker: I cannot allow a point of order. The Hon. Member might raise a point of order at three o'clock.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, there is precedent for hearing a question of privilege before embarking on Question Period.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cousineau: Three o'clock.

Mr. Nielsen: Hear our submission.

Madam Speaker: I am interpreting the Standing Orders as they should be interpreted. The question of privilege does take precedence, but at two o'clock, the Standing Orders are quite clear; we must proceed to statements by Members and then to Question Period.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, you have to give us a chance to argue it. It has not been argued in the past because it has never come up.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Lawrence: What right do they have to turn the mikes off?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. This, of course, does not preclude the fact that after Question Period we will resume consideration of the question of privilege—

Some Hon. Members: Now!

Madam Speaker: —as we have done this morning. We have always had Question Period at two o'clock.

Mr. Nielsen: No, no.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nielsen: There is a precedent.

Mr. Lawrence: Surely you should hear argument, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Blais: Wait until three o'clock, Allan.

Madam Speaker: Hon. Members surely recall that during the constitutional debate, when we had questions of privilege raised for a whole week's time, Question Period took place regardless of the fact that we were considering questions of privilege. It might be difficult to resolve logically because of Standing Order 20(1) which I quoted, which says that questions of privilege must be taken up immediately.

Some Hon. Members: Right.

Madam Speaker: Right, but what we do in this House is not always logical because some Standing Orders—

An Hon. Member: They are not logical.

Madam Speaker: Exactly, they are not always logical, and Members have to recognize that. We have rules to satisfy our particular needs, and Members have always preferred to have their Question Period take place regardless of that fact that we might be on questions of privilege. I am basing my decision, which is final, on the precedent which occurred during the constitutional debate when we were on questions of privilege for an entire week.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

S.O. 21

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South-Weston.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, there is precedent to hear a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mrs. Appolloni: Thank you for defending my—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Why do Members act like the end of the world has happened? We will resume the question of privilege that we were discussing before, as we have in all other cases. What we are doing now is no different from what we have done before.

Mr. Nielsen: It is! There is precedent, if you will hear submissions, on a question of privilege which was heard before Question Period.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South-Weston.

Mr. Nielsen: That precedent existed in the case of Mr. Speaker Jerome, when he considered a question raised by the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Appolloni: Madam Speaker, thank you as I said, for defending my privilege which I shall now exercise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cousineau: Nielsen democracy.

Madam Speaker: I am sure Members want this to take place in as much order as possible.

Mr. Clark: According to the rules.

Madam Speaker: Hon. Members must agree that the practice we have followed up until now is the one I am practising today.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not so. Hear our arguments.

Mr. Lewis: The House started at two o'clock before; today it started at eleven o'clock.

Madam Speaker: Well, let us put it this way: Members will have ample time to raise that after Question Period.

Mr. Nielsen: We want it heard now.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: The Speaker now determines that there is no reason whatsoever to vary from what has been done up until now. If Hon. Members want to submit arguments, so that we may change that practice, the Speaker is in the hands of the House. But for the present time I must hear the Hon. Member for York South-Weston.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, surely you are going to hear submissions on a question of privilege which has been heard before Question Period? What you are doing is cutting us off from making any submissions whatsoever.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston.

Mr. Nielsen: Surely, Madam Speaker, you cannot come to a ruling without hearing us out.

• (1410)

Mrs. Appolloni: The brutal, barbaric bombing of the American embassy in Beirut has provoked reactions of horror and revulsion on the part of the international community in general, and particularly in those countries which have committed peacekeeping troops to Lebanon in an effort to restore peace and stability to that unhappy country. Acts of violence such as the one witnessed yesterday cannot but undermine all initiatives aimed at finding a just and equitable solution of the complex problems of the Middle East. Furthermore, they place in great jeopardy the vital need of the Lebanese people to live in peace and harmony in their own independent and unoccupied state.

I believe that it is imperative for the international community to voice, in the firmest possible terms, its total repugnance for any and all acts of wanton human destruction by whomsoever perpetrated, and that it pursue, with increasing vigour, dedication, urgency and commitment, all diplomatic pressures with a view to achieving equitable and lasting peace in the Middle East.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRECEDENCE OF QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I would like to use this brief period, and I have never used one of these before, to protest, as strongly as I can, what I believe to be some unwarranted interference in the normal procedures of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: Never before have we faced such a situation under these new rules where the House started sitting at eleven o'clock in the morning. We reached a question of privilege, as we should, because the rules indicate that the matter of privilege should be started immediately and carried on. Certainly priority must be given to any question of privilege when it arises in this House, priority over everything, even over, I would suggest, some unwarranted activity from the Chair in respect to a matter such as this.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: I mean that as strongly as I can. In the past, when the House began sitting each day at two o'clock, the situation was completely different. Obviously, the rules then called for the Question Period and the routine procedures before the Question Period. However, today the House started at eleven o'clock in the morning and a question of privilege came before the House. I most strongly suggest that it should have been carried on, and it should be carried on right now. I think it is an unwarranted intrusion by the occupant of the Chair, who is the servant of the House, or should be the servant of the House—

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Lawrence: —not to hear argument when a matter such as this comes along.

Madam Speaker: Order. The time allotted to the Hon. Member has expired.

The Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HOUSE OF COMMONS

FAREWELL ADDRESS BY MEMBER FOR MISSION-PORT MOODY

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): I trust, Madam Speaker, that you will not subtract the time of the applause from my 90 seconds. I am under no illusions that what I have to say here today will blast the Lalonde budget controversy off the front pages of every major newspaper in the country. But what I have to say today is a matter of tremendous importance, at least to me.

I would like to say that I will soon be leaving this place, I guess forever, because I intend, as many Hon. Members know, to stand as a candidate for the legislature in British Columbia. Therefore, it means that pretty soon I will have to quit. I think that perhaps my action might be well emulated by others.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Lalonde.

Mr. Rose: One Mark deserves another, perhaps.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rose: I know that all Hon. Members, even in their most rancorous moods, never forget that, despite our noises here, we are pretty fond of one another. I will miss all the people with whom I have become friends, both colleagues and staff, over the last 15 years, especially my Leader and my own colleagues.

An Hon. Member: And the IPU.

Mr. Rose: And the IPU. Members of my Caucus have a unique place in my heart and I will certainly miss them. What I will not miss are the tedious plane rides, and mushing through a snowstorm on April 19.

Some men struggle all their lives to get here, and never make it. I have been honoured to be returned here four times, and I think it is in order that I thank my constituents for their loyalty and faith, if not patience. I trust I have deserved it.

In any case, the federal Government did Mr. Stuart Leggatt, a former Hon. Member, the honour of appointing him to the bench. Therefore the reason I am leaving is the Government's fault. We in the West blame everything on the Liberal Government, even the snow. But mostly we blame it for its lack of economic leadership, and we are serious about that because we desperately need leadership.

Seriously, however, I leave because I am genuinely concerned about some disturbing trends in the Province of British Columbia, and if I have any future political career I would like to make that contribution, and I am determined to make that contribution, to the political life of British Columbia, in British Columbia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

ALLEGED BUDGET LEAK—REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, in view of the story with which we are well acquainted, for example, The Citizen indicating that a budget leak occurred yesterday evening, in which a deficit of $31.2 billion is anticipated for the forthcoming year, and in view of the fact that this is an example of gross negligence on the part of a Minister, a breach of a Minister's oath of secrecy, something totally unacceptable in our parliamentary system, would the Prime Minister indicate whether he has received the resignation of the Minister of Finance and, if so, whether he has accepted it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not see any need to deal with this question. There is no question of resignation, in my mind. The Hon. Member speaks of a budget leak. How can he know that until he has seen the budget and seen whether there has been any leak from that budget, Madam Speaker?

REQUEST FOR DENIAL OF LEAK

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, in view of the Prime Minister's reply to my first question, I simply ask would the Prime Minister assure the House that what appeared in The Citizen today, including the picture of what purports to be a page in the budget document and speech itself, is, in fact, not accurate, that there has in fact been no leak, and that at eight o'clock tonight, when the Minister of Finance does table his budget for the record, we will find that what has already been leaked is in truth not an accurate reflection of the forthcoming budget?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I assume that if the Hon. Member discovers that at eight o'clock, then this will lay the whole matter to rest. In that case, I invite him to wait until eight o'clock and we will draw the same conclusions as he appears to be drawing.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF BOND TRADING

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is again directed to the Prime Minister. Would he indicate to the House what steps he has taken to determine if in fact a leak has occurred? Are there other pages of the budget document which have possibly been leaked? Finally, has he taken steps to ensure that securities commissions in every Province in Canada will be immediately asked to investigate what trading has taken place, particularly in the very volatile bond field, to determine if insider profits have indeed been made?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it would seem to me that any of these questions, if justified, would be better asked after the budget, if, in fact, it appears that there has been outside knowledge of what was in the budget. However, for the time being, once again, we do not know what will be in the budget for certain.

Mr. Stevens: But you don't deny it.

• (1420)

Mr. Trudeau: Anybody who is speculating on figures that he thinks might be in the budget might be mistaken as to the basis on which he is speculating. Therefore I do not see any way in which you could ask the securities commission to investigate something which is still hypothetical.

EFFECT OF POSSIBLE DISCLOSURE ON FINANCIAL MARKETS

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In his opinion did the Minister of Finance's disclosure of privileged information relating to the budget have any influence on the financial or money markets in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in my opinion they have not because I do not think anyone is going to risk any heavy sums of money on some news which might or might not be true. In fact the Hon. Member can look at the market figures himself. I am told that there has been no move in the bond figures which would be the relevant ones, I suppose, which apply now. Any move in the stock market was comparable in New York and Toronto. I doubt whether yesterday's going on would have influenced the American dollar that much, or the American stock market.

VALUE OF DOLLAR—INTERVENTION BY BANK OF CANADA

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, let me quote to the Prime Minister from the Canadian Dow Jones as of 10 a.m. this morning:

> The Canadian dollar continued its downward slide of yesterday.
> Dealers said reports of a leak of Finance Minister Marc Lalonde's budget presentation tonight, which allegedly will show an estimated deficit of $31.2 billion for the current fiscal year, have added to the Canadian fund's weakness. Dealers said the Canadian fund has slipped as low as 80.66 U.S. this morning before the Bank of Canada intervened.

Does the Prime Minister believe that the Bank of Canada's position has been jeopardized by virtue of the leak, as reported?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I suppose there are any number of factors which influence the state of the bond and stock markets. One of them could be that the American dollar has strengthened in Europe and therefore other currencies, including the Canadian currency, would weaken against it. But the Hon. Member would be clever indeed, and perhaps many times a millionaire—

Some Hon. Members: He is.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He earned it, too.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, let us ask the Hon. Member then, if he has made much money, and if he thinks he could on the basis of the journals he read last night?

Mr. Thomson: Indeed I could if I had been aware of it in time before the financial markets closed here in eastern Canada. However, financial markets were still open on the West Coast when the leak was made known. I was not in possession of that information but I certainly could have made money had I known—a substantial amount of money.

Madam Speaker: Order.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, this is a very sad day for Canada. Canadians were waiting to hear tonight's budget in the hope that it would bear news that would encourage an economic recovery in the country. Because of the apparent bungling of the Minister of Finance, a number of specific references to the budget have now been released.

Members of Parliament were given to understand that selected journalists were in receipt of privileged information yesterday afternoon that could have been used for their's and others' personal gain. Would this fact not encourage the Prime Minister to ask for the resignation of the Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I did not realize that the question was addressed to me until the end. Will the Hon. Member repeat it?

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, as a result of an apparent leak yesterday afternoon, selected journalists and friends were in receipt of privileged information that they could have or may have used for personal gain for themselves and for others. Would this not justify the Prime Minister asking for the resignation of the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I do not know what the Hon. Member is referring to when he says "selected journalists and friends". Is the Hon. Member inferring that the Minister of Finance gave information to friends and to journalists in a way that they might profit?

MINISTER'S DESCRIPTION OF DOCUMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, yesterday afternoon, after inviting a number of journalists into his office, the Minister of Finance held up a document and was televised saying, "This is the budget." Is the Prime Minister saying that that was not the budget?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would be revealing budget secrecy if I told what was going to be in the budget tonight.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: That is what Lalonde did last night.

Mr. Trudeau: It seems to be a very crude trap to ask me if something is in the budget or not. Then I will be accused by the Hon. Member of saying that something is in the budget or it is not. Why does he not wait until tonight to see what is in the budget?

POSSIBILITY OF DOCUMENT BEING CHANGED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, will the Prime Minister assure Members of the House, as a result of what appears to be some fiasco in the last number of hours, that the document that was televised in the office of the Minister of Finance yesterday will not be changed and has not been changed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, what is the Hon. Member saying? For many months they have been suggesting things that should be in the budget. Now they are suggesting things that should not be in the budget.

Mr. Riis: Just say you will not change it.

Mr. Trudeau: I wish they would wait until the budget and make up their minds whether it is good or not.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister will know that the Minister of Finance held up the document yesterday which was subsequently photographed, and said, "This is the budget." When the Minister of Finance said that, was he telling the truth or was he lying?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not think that the Right Hon. Member can ask an either/or in that question. At that point maybe the Minister intended that be the budget. Until the budget is—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Darling: The old shell game.

An Hon. Member: Thanks for word processors.

Mr. Trudeau: I do not quite understand the hilarity over there.

An Hon. Member: You are the one who is laughing.

Mr. Trudeau: Surely a budget becomes a budget when it is delivered as a budget speech. Otherwise, with any number of previous drafts, one could ask if they were the budget or not. In that sense the Minister of Finance would be locked into some earlier decision at any point in time that suits the convenience and argumentation of the former Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister has not been prepared to say that the Minister was telling the truth when he said, "This is the budget." He has suggested that the budget might have been changed.

MINISTER'S INTENTION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, let me put another question to the Prime Minister. When the Minister of Finance held up the document which was photographed and said, "This is the budget," did he intend that the document that he held up would be the budget?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I am reminded that this is the gang that laughed when they threw out guidelines governing the conduct of Ministers which should have caused the resignation of three of them. I am not surprised that they are laughing now at parliamentary practice.

Let me put the question very clearly. The Minister of Finance was shown on television holding a document and saying, "This is the budget." At the time he held that document of which he said "This is the budget," did he intend that document to be the budget?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Right Hon. Member talks about parliamentary practice. Any knowledge that I have of parliamentary practice is that when a budget is delivered in the House of Commons it becomes the budget. Until then it is not a budget. I cannot see by what contortions of mind the former Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition wants to know about a budget leak and some malpractice until he knows what the budget is. Maybe tomorrow he can tear himself away from the campaign trail again, and ask his questions. If there has been a leak, then we will answer that question.

• (1430)

INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT'S PURPOSE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, my experience with parliamentary practice has been that Ministers of Finance try to tell the truth. We have apparently had a dramatic departure from that with regard to the absent Minister of Finance today. Presumably the Prime Minister would have known what his Minister was doing. Presumably the Minister of Finance was expressing Government policy. If, when the Minister of Finance held up that document, it was not the truth, what was the purpose of the Government of Canada—to mislead Canadians deliberately as to the contents of the budget, because that was the consequence? Was that the plan of the Government to mislead Canadians deliberately as to the contents of the budget, or did the Minister of Finance breach rules of budget secrecy which, in any self respecting Government, would cause him to submit his resignation?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, how can the former Leader of the Opposition suspect that the Minister deliberately, to use his words, "tried to mislead the Canadian public"? There was a photo opportunity in his room—

Mr. Dick: An ego trip.

Mr. Trudeau: —which is something that I understand is long standing practice.

Miss MacDonald: To give it to the press.

Mr. Trudeau: It was the practice when the Minister of Finance sat on the other side. It was practised under earlier Ministers of Finance. It is something that is meant to permit the press to prepare themselves for budget night and to have advance pictures and so on.

Mr. Dick: An ego trip.

Mr. Trudeau: If the Hon. Member opposite who is saying "ego trip" is suggesting that there should be less communication with the press, I would support that point of view.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: The Minister was seen buying shoes in Saturday's papers. He does not need three or four photo opportunities.

Mr. Trudeau: Obviously not everybody can be expected to have as small an ego as I have.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: But Ministers of Finance have followed that practice. They have judged there would be a certain code of honour that would be respected when there is a photo opportunity. Hon. Members can reach their conclusions as to what happened. But to say, as the Leader of the Opposition hypothesizes, that the Minister of Finance was trying to mislead the public, is really only the result of a twisted mind. Obviously the Minister of Finance did not have the press in his room in order to tell the Canadian public some information from which they could then go out and profit.

Mr. Taylor: Your nose is getting bigger all the time.

USE OF CAMERA ZOOM LENSES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, if it was not the purpose of the Minister of Finance to have communicated the contents of the document, which he described as the budget, why did he call journalists into his room? Why did he open the budget? Why did he ask them if they had their zoom lenses ready, if he did not want the contents of that document to be broadcast across the country and to be taken as an indication of what was going to be in the budget?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member asks why he did that. I suppose he trusts all members of the press more than I would. I do not know if the Hon. Member would do it, but I would not have done that.

RESPONSIBILITY OF MINISTER

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, perhaps we can leave the comedy hour now and show some concern for the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilchrist: I would like to address my question to the Prime Minister. If in spite of the smoke and mirrors of whether the document is or is not a budget, does the Prime Minister understand that stock markets deal a great deal with perception, and does the Prime Minister understand that for every one cent the Canadian dollar declines, our debt to foreign nations goes up about $120 million? Whether the document was or was not the budget, does the Prime Minister consider the action of the Minister of Finance to be a responsible act and one that is worthy of the person supposedly leading the country through these difficult economic times?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer is yes, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Minister was doing what other Ministers of Finance have done, and that is to have a photo opportunity.

Mr. Epp: Never.

Mr. Trudeau: I hear them say never over there, Madam Speaker. They are obviously grossly misinformed.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Only Liberals are.

Mr. Trudeau: I inquired precisely on that point. They can inquire of members of the press themselves. It has been done before. It was done by this Minister of Finance. Therefore there is no reason why one should suppose that the hypotheses made by the Hon. Member are correct.

POSSIBLE EFFECT ON MORTGAGE RATES

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, perhaps then we will get down to a more personal level, to people who are trying to get mortgages these days, and the same perception as seen by managers of mortgage funds in the various trust companies which issue them. Would the Prime Minister suppose that a manager of mortgages would consider issuing a mortgage today, perhaps for $10,000, to someone who is looking for one at the lowest possible interest rate, or do you suppose, because if the upward pressure on the dollar seen by this huge deficit of $31.2 billion, that the manager might hold off for a day or two and perhaps issue the mortgage at a 1 per cent higher rate, which would cost the average $10,000 mortgage buyer another $700? Is that responsible financial control by the Minister of Finance to give those kinds of signals?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can only repeat my earlier answers, that if money managers out there are taking signals from something that might or might not happen, then they are taking a chance, and the people they advise are also taking a chance. It may be that some people will want to embark on certain financial decisions and operations as a result of what they have read in the paper this morning. If they do, they have it on their own head if the figures they read tonight are different from those they read last night. It is a decision they have to make. But it is not one on which I will give them any guidance.

BRITISH PRECEDENT IN DALTON CASE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On February 18, 1983, as reported at page 22978 of Hansard, the Prime Minister made the following statement:

> Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member makes a parallel with former Chancellor of the Exchequer, Dalton, who inadvertently let out a budget secret. That secret hit the newspaper headlines before the Minister had read his budget. This, according to the tradition, is something that you should not do, and therefore the Minister chose to resign.

If the material published and shown in the media turns out to be part of the budget, will the Prime Minister ask for the resignation of the Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it sounds kind of hypothetical when you ask a question beginning with the word "if". But if the Hon. Member refers to the Dalton precedent of 1947, what happened there was that there was something which was in the newspapers before it appeared in the budget. But the whole point is it then appeared in the budget.

If what was in the newspapers last night does not appear in the budget, of course the Hon. Member's case falls. If Mr. Dalton, when standing on his feet in the House of Commons, had said that the tax was not on cigarettes but on chocolates, for instance, then a lot of people might have had chocolate on their faces—

Mr. Lawrence: He would not have said it.

Mr. Trudeau: —if they had used information which was changed between the time when the document went to print and when he made his speech. Obviously it is the speech that he made in the House of Commons which was the budget speech, not something on which the press, or on which the Opposition had speculated before.

PARLIAMENTARY TRADITION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister may suggest that the question is hypothetical today, but if that material does appear in the budget tonight—

Mr. Clark: Or any of it.

Mr. Lewis: —will my case, which the Prime Minister claims fails today because it is hypothetical then stand, and will the Prime Minister stand by tradition and his word?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I ask the Hon. Member and his Party if it does not, will they drop this whole matter?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: Certainly not. Nothing should have been done yesterday.

FINANCE

MINISTER'S STATEMENTS ON BUDGET

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister and is related to the questions which were asked previously. Yesterday in the House of Commons the Minister of Finance said, in response to a question by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, "... my budget is now decided". Yesterday, outside the House of Commons, the Minister of Finance said, holding up a document, "This is my budget." Yesterday the press who were present on the second occasion photographed portions of that document and relayed to the public the content of the document. Is it not reasonable to conclude that, if in fact those things which were contained in that document are not part of the budget, the Minister of Finance either misled the House or misled the public?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, let us try to understand the logic of the Members of the two Opposition Parties. They are expressing shock and dismay that there has been a budget leak, but they are saying that, if by any chance the Minister should change his budget so that there will not be a leak, they will also be shocked and dismayed. Let them make up their minds.

Mr. Deans: That is not what I am saying. I am saying that when a Minister of Finance has a budget already made up and then, by negligence, allows that budget to go to the public ahead of the normal practice of first bringing it to the House of Commons, the Minister of Finance is showing a degree of incompetence, the likes of which should result in him having to leave that portfolio.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSSIBLE REWRITING OF BUDGET

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, if the Minister of Finance is now in the process of rewriting his budget because of his inadvertence or stupidity, is it not reasonable to assume that the budget we will see will not be the budget which was intended to meet the problems of the country, and therefore will not be adequate to meet the difficulties which many people in the country have been facing? He can rewrite it in half an hour.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can only repeat my previous point. If Opposition Members think that there was a serious leak, a leak which is contrary to practice and contrary to the proper conduct of a Minister of Finance—

Mr. Stevens: Now you have got it.

Mr. Trudeau: —why would they object to the Minister of Finance changing his budget in some way?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: What the Opposition is arguing is that a budget becomes a budget, and unchangeable, at any point in time. That is not our view. A budget becomes a budget, and every precedent that has been quoted has had to do with a budget, when that has been delivered in the House of Commons. There has been no budget delivered in the House of Commons. There has been a peek at a document which might or might not—

Mr. Clark: Which Marc Lalonde called a budget.

Mr. Trudeau: —have been brought into the House of Commons, but we will only know tonight if that so-called peek was at the document and at the pages which were going to be part of the budget. Why does the Opposition not wait to see in fact if that peek was justified by what has been written, or whether it was a peek at something that did not make its way into the final budget. We will see.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Get him to write you a letter like he did in the Gillespie affair.

EXISTENCE OF VIDEOTAPE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It is the practice, as he knows, for Finance Ministers to show the Prime Minister their budgets. Was he shown the budget prior to the photo opportunity yesterday? Is the budget that he was likely shown prior to that opportunity the same one which will be presented tonight? I do not want him to say anything about what is going to be in it.

In addition to that, he has accused the media, the television networks and the radio networks, of speculation. How does he explain away—

An Hon. Member: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: His supporters in the back benches say, "agreed", that it is all speculation. How does the Prime Minister explain away the existence of a videotape, a copy of which I have and a copy of which I am sure he has seen by now, that provides living proof in living colour of the actual text of the French version of two pages of that budget which, translated, have resulted in ten separate leaks that I put on the record this morning in the discussion in the House? How does he explain away the existence of that tape?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, there are several questions there. Dealing with the last one first, how do I explain it? I explain it by the fact that the Minister of Finance, following previous practice, invited the media, the cameras, for a photo opportunity into his room. It has been done before. He did it again. He did it in the same way. Wisely or unwisely he trusted the cameramen to take pictures of the situation, but not to try to find out what was in the budget, much as when there is a lockup before the budget, a lockup which has been made for many, many years with the written press, a lockup of several hours, during which they are privileged to the content of the budget before it is delivered in the House. There is an amount of trust there that some member of the press will not use the fact that he has had this privileged access, to cause a leak of that document. The whole thing is built on trust.

An Hon. Member: You don't let them out.

Mr. Trudeau: I have heard some members of the press say that they should storm out of the lockup and spill the beans. I think the Opposition and the media generally have to make up their minds. If they do not want any advance knowledge of the budget, even under a privileged situation, I suppose we can achieve that too. But I do not think it would be in the interests of the country or of Parliament because even Members of the Opposition Parties, as the Hon. Member knows, are invited to that lockup so that, when they stand to comment on the budget that night, they will have had some advance knowledge of the budget. It is founded on trust by the Minister of practices which generally have been respected. If in some cases they are not respected, I think the judgment should be on whether the question of respect should be continued or whether the practice should be changed. Once again, I do not think that, on the basis of the incident which happened yesterday, Parliament will be inclined to recommend changes.

Mr. Nielsen: I am glad to hear from that answer that the Prime Minister is backing away from his general accusation that the media, all of them, were acting on mere speculation. The fact of the matter is that if he has viewed that tape, which I am sure he has, he will have seen that a telephoto zoom lense zeroed in on two pages of the budget, one dealing with the deficit and one dealing with conclusions. From a blow-up and freeze of those frames was extracted the fact that there was to be a deficit of $31.2 billion and a job-creation program costing $4.6 billion, together with eight other, translated into English, leaks which I put on the record this morning.

BUDGET SPEECH—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, if the Prime Minister does not concede the fact that that was clearly the budget speech so labelled on the videotape, and so admitted by the Minister, does he not at least concede that those leaks were in that document, however they might want to change it between now and eight o'clock tonight? I think it would be a rather despicable action on the part of the Government should that attempt be made.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think I answered earlier the twisted logic about what is despicable and not. The Hon. Member asked me earlier if I had seen a copy of the budget speech. Yes, I saw a copy. I think it was the third draft. I saw it just before the weekend. As far as I know, it embodied all decisions taken until then by Cabinet. It was final then. If it had leaked in that form, I suppose Hon. Members opposite would be complaining about a budget leak, but it so happened that since I read it and talked to the Minister of Finance, he got back to me and he made more changes. He said I have—

● (1450)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Contrary to the Opposition, this is a living Party. We are thinking all the time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: We all know that on that side it is the Party of the living dead, and we have known that for some time. The Prime Minister seems to be gasping his last. He is treating this as one huge joke. We treat it with a good degree more gravity than he and his braying donkeys behind him.

TIMING OF POSSIBLE CHANGES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Prime Minister whether the additional changes which we are obviously going to see at eight o'clock tonight were made between the recording of that videotape and now in the House of Commons, and certainly by eight o'clock? We all know that there was a Cabinet meeting this afternoon. No doubt they will try to brazen this out by bringing in changes, altering a decimal point or altering a few pertinent phrases in that budget. Does the Prime Minister really believe that he can get away with that and that that will cure this gross breach of the normal secrecy that surrounds budgets? Does he not agree that he should ask for the resignation of the Minister of Finance who, if he were self-respecting at all, would have submitted that resignation after he discovered his error yesterday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is now assuming and presuming that those pages that he proports to have seen will be changed by tonight. I have not said that. They may be changed and they may not be, but it would be interesting to know if we were damned in both cases. If there is a leak and we change them, there is no more leak. Therefore, perhaps we should change them. On the other hand, if we change them, it is a despicable practice because, having permitted the press a peek, we should be bound forever to that text as though it were the laws of the Medes and the Persians.

POSITION OF FINANCE MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister concerning a basic matter of trust that ought to be involved in terms of the Government's relationship to the people, and particularly in terms of the relationship of the Minister of Finance to the people of Canada.

Out of the report last night there was a factual assertion, namely, the claim that the deficit for the coming fiscal year would be $31.2 billion. The news of that has caused speculation, as has already been referred to, in terms of the Canadian dollar. Does the Prime Minister not realize, that, on the one hand, if the budget appears with that figure in it tonight, the Minister of Finance must resign or, as he seems to be implying, does he not understand in terms of the integrity of the Government, that that figure already having come out and been used, if the Minister of Finance gets to his feet tonight and changes or omits that figure, he has violated a very basic question of trust and, as Minister of Finance, will no longer bear the kind of personal integrity that he needs if a Government is to maintain its respect?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not agree with the first leg of that two-legged stool, but on the second leg, the Hon. Member talks about violating a basic question of trust. Is he saying that the Minister of Finance, once having thought of an economic policy and putting it on paper in a first draft, must hereafter never change it like the laws—

Mr. Stevens: First draft?

Mr. Trudeau: First, second, third or tenth—that he is not allowed to change it lest he offend the Opposition and those speculators?

Just a few months ago the Leader of the New Democratic Party was suggesting that we should reduce the deficit. A few days later he was suggesting that we should increase it. That may be wishy-washy economic policy, but it is certainly not a matter of a breach of any trust. It is a matter of him having changed his mind.

In the case of the Minister of Finance, it is well known that he has been working on this budget for the past several months. He has met with groups all across the country. He has had discussions with Members of his own Party, members of the labour unions, industrial leaders and so on. He has been improving his budget all the time. He may have decided to continue improving it between Friday and Monday, and between Monday and Tuesday. We shall see, Madam Speaker.

NORMAL PROCESS OF BUDGET PREPARATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, is the Prime Minister telling the House that the Minister of Finance, who is absent, is busy in his office making some last minute changes to the budget? Is he telling the House that is the normal way of functioning? The lockup that has normally been provided for journalists has been postponed and delayed, maybe for the rest of the day. Will he really admit that what he is trying to do as Prime Minister, instead of living up to his constitutional obligations in such a serious situation, is to get away once again with trying to escape an issue by a mere technicality, redefining what a budget is and insisting on some absurd legalism that, by definition, we only have a budget when it is presented tonight and that what was presented yesterday to the press and the country, and claimed to be the budget by the Minister of Finance, should be defined out of existence? What he is doing is defining out of existence the very integrity of the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is talking of some absurd legalism, as he puts it. Let us look at this legalism to which he refers. He quoted to me before the case of the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Dalton. I put it to him that if between the time when Mr. Dalton had told the reporter that there was going to be a tax on cigarettes and the time when he stood in the House of Commons in Westminster and delivered his budget—if he had changed that and put a tax on chocolates instead—

Mr. Broadbent: He did not change it.

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. Member tells me he did not change it. I want to know about this legalism. Is he telling me that Dalton, having realized that perhaps he had made an indiscretion, would not be entitled to go into the House of Commons and deliver a budget which did not have that tax on cigarettes? Is that what he is telling me? If so, he is really—

An Hon. Member: He had honour.

Mr. Trudeau: Hon. Members opposite talk about honour. I wish they would think a little bit with their intelligence rather than with their mouths.

FINAL BUDGET FORM

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I assume the Prime Minister has now seen and approved, in final form, the budget which will be presented to the people of Canada tonight. If he has not seen and approved it in final form, I hope he will tell the House that. If he has, can he tell the House whether it was from that approved final document that information was obtained by a TV cameraman?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member should be asking me to tell him what is going to be in the budget tonight and what is not going to be in the budget tonight. I told the House that I have seen some drafts of the budget. I was discussing it again today with the Minister of Finance. I may be meeting him again later in the afternoon to discuss it more.

It would be too bad if the Opposition thought they had a leak and they do not have one, but they cannot have it both ways. They cannot claim to have seen a leak before they have seen the budget. They must see the budget first and then decide (a) if there was a leak, (b) if there was a peek, (c) if it is relevant to the tradition of this Parliament, and they have many questions that they can perhaps ask themselves after they have seen the budget.

• (1500)

What they should not be doing is preventing the budget process from proceeding as it should, the budget from being read tonight, and I would hope that at least some of the debate would be on the substance of the budget and not on the process of the budget, because what the people of Canada want is economic results.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN DOCUMENT

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, what the people of Canada want is a little less sophistry and a little more honesty from the Prime Minister. Obviously the Prime Minister did not answer my question.

Mr. Clark: You personify corruption.

Mr. MacKay: Is is apparent that he refuses to answer my question. I will ask him again. Has he already seen and approved in final form the budget that the people of Canada and this House will be receiving tonight, or is it one of these chameleon-like budgets that will be changed up until the last possible moment? What about the copies of the budget that have been sent across the country? What about the press lockup? Does the Prime Minister still hold that this budget that has been so carefully guarded with this unprecedented secrecy is the same budget that the Minister of Finance held up to the TV cameramen, or has it been changed? Surely he can be honest enough to tell us.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if I were to answer that question it would not be a matter of honesty, it would be a matter of indiscretion, and the Hon. Member wants me to commit that indiscretion. He wants me to tell this House that something that has been purportedly from the budget will in fact be in the budget and be leaked. I will not tell him. But when he accuses me of sophistry, I wish he would explain what sophistry I just committed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—REPORTED LEAK OF PROPOSED BUDGETARY MEASURES

The House resumed consideration of the question of privilege of Mr. Nielsen.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, at one o'clock I was addressing the point of privilege raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) respecting the matter of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) having leaked portions of the budget that is to be revealed later this evening.

It has been established very clearly that there has been important information leaked to the public, information that dramatically affects public financial markets, from a document identified by the Minister of Finance as the budget. It has also been clearly established that that leak is in violation of the Minister of Finance's oath of secrecy and his responsibilities. You have indicated to us, Madam Speaker, that it is necessary to show how those two actions, first the material being leaked, second the violation of the Minister's responsibilities, affect the privilege of the House and that is what I would like to do.

Section 16 of Beauchesne defines very clearly the privileges of Parliament. This was quoted earlier by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) and I quote again:

> The privileges of Parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers".

The privileges of Parliament are absolutely necessary for the execution of its powers. As well, reading from Section 21 of Beauschesne:

> The most fundamental privilege—

Which is absolutely necessary for the execution of the powers.

> —of the House as a whole is to establish rules of procedure for itself and to enforce them.

To reinforce that, Madam Speaker, Section 20(3) of Beauchesne states that at the beginning of each session the Chair claims from the Governor General on behalf of the House, and I quote:

> —all their undoubted rights and privileges, especially that they may have freedom of speech in their debates, access to Your Excellency's person at all seasonable times, and that their proceedings may receive from Your Excellency the most favourable construction.

This House has the absolute right to establish procedures, rules and requirements. One of the absolute rights of the House, established over hundreds of years, is the right to hear the Government's budgetary proposal before anybody else, or simultaneously with anybody else.

Madam Speaker shakes her head. Madam Speaker has made up her mind in advance of any argument.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, it is argued that we have no right to demand from the Crown knowledge of the Crown's taxation plan prior to anybody else except those under an oath of secrecy. If that is true, think what follows. The laws of Canada result from legislation passed by this House, by the Senate, given Royal Assent and then proclaimed.

Throughout the history of our legal system, courts have ruled that retroactive legislation is, generally speaking, not enforceable simply because you cannot require people to obey a law that they do not know about and will not be passed until some time in the future.

The exception to that rule is laws emerging from a budget, because at the time of the budget, aside from the speech which is a political event, the substance of the budget is tabling notices of Ways and Means which say to this House and the rest of the country: "These are the Government's plans for alterations in existing tax law or new tax law", and so on. The law then becomes effective. It has been our practice that once the notices are tabled in this House, the taxman can start collecting, people can be required to fill out forms based on that notice of Ways and Means, and it is anticipated that there will be legislation passed to bring it back retroactively.

Madam Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I would like him to keep to the point. We have discussed this question of privilege now for over two hours and it is absolutely essential, if Members want to contribute to the enlightenment of the Chair, that they stick to indicating to the Chair how the privilege was breached.

The Hon. Member is now discussing the process of the presentation of the budget. I think all Members of this House are aware of that process and it is not necessary to describe the process so as to be able to adjudicate this question of privilege.

I would urge Hon. Members, because I will not be able to hear them indefinitely, to bring forward arguments that are of a nature that will help me to rule on this question. I would ask the Hon. Member to stick to the specific point of privilege.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, I was endeavouring to do precisely that. Because of that fundamental method by which we impose taxes in this country, and if there is any purpose for an elected Parliament, it surely has to be to oversee the Crown's taxing plans and in fact to authorize them. The Crown cannot tax without authority.

• (1510)

If the Chair is suggesting that the Crown need not inform the House of its plans, that in fact the Minister of Finance, if he chooses, could give his budget and notice of change in income tax to his Chamber of Commerce, or to his friendly television reporter, or his tax adviser or somebody else, before giving it to the House, and that that is not an offence against the privileges of Parliament, then I humbly suggest there is no reason whatsoever for us to be here. If in fact the Chair is suggesting that the Minister does not have to give us the first public indication of his intention, and without violating the privileges of the House can give it to whomever he pleases, then frankly we might as well adjourn this House forever. If we have any purpose it surely has to be that. That is why the action concerning King John was taken at Runnymede, where Parliament came from—to prevent the Crown from going off and doing what it wanted. For the Chair to suggest that those centuries of tradition are immaterial and that the Minister of Finance can do whatever he blooming well wants is an absolute absurdity.

Nothing could be more fundamental to the privileges of every Member elected by Canadian citizens than that we be told of the budget by the Minister of Finance in this House and not learn about it from television reports or speeches that he makes to the Chamber of Commerce or by some other method. Nothing is more fundamental than that, Madam Speaker. Any self-respecting Minister of Finance would resign.

That is not your job. Your job is to protect the rights of this House. If you are not going to protect that fundamental right, you are not protecting any of our rights and there is no reason for us to be here.

I repeat, the most fundamental privilege of this House according to Beauchesne is to establish the procedures and rules, to establish processes, and not just the written ones. Citation 20 quite clearly sets out the common law practices. The centuries of tradition of the way budgets are presented is equally binding, equally part of our traditions.

One of the privileges that we as elected representatives of the people of Canada demand is that we be the first to be given public evidence of the declaration of the Crown's taxing plans. That is at the root of this institution and any failure to recognize that as a breach of our privilege is, in essense, a slap in the face to every Canadian who elected us and sent us here.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I wish to address a few brief remarks to this question of privilege and perhaps to wrap up the argument for this side.

I would say at the start that it was our hope that the argument could continue on the basis of the precedent set in the case of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). Immediately after the motions under Standing Order 43 were dealt with, on the orders of the day on July 24, 1975 at pages 7886-9, he made his argument on a question of privilege. It was on the basis of that precedent that we were attempting to argue at the start of Question Period that the question of privilege should have flowed through. In those days the House commenced proceedings at two o'clock. Under the new Standing Orders, these days the House begins at eleven o'clock. You quite properly recognized the question of privilege at eleven o'clock and gave it the importance it deserved under Standing Order 20(1), which reads as follows:

Whenever any matter of privilege arises, it shall be taken into consideration immediately.

We were a little upset that the precedent set in 1975 was not followed. We felt that the argument should have been allowed to carry through with continuity.

Be that as it may, I support the argument of my colleague the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) that the privileges of all Members of the House have been breached in that we read about and saw on television matters which were obviously in the budget which will be presented tonight. It is a breach of our privileges as Members that this material was disseminated through the media before it was presented to the House. The effect on the market, the effect on what action private citizens will take, has yet to be seen. The question of whether or not the Prime Minister will stand on tradition has yet to be known.

I would argue from a different point of view that every Member of Parliament has confidentiality, has privilege as set forth in Citation 16 of Beauchesne, which reads as follows:

Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals.

I would submit to you that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has a privilege and a right; that privilege and that right is to have matters which he considers to be confidential kept confidential.

The question is whether the Minister of Finance let slip information which is in the budget deliberately or accidentally. If it was deliberate, it is a breach of the Minister's oath of office; if it was accidental, the disclosure of that in the media is a breach of the Minister's confidentiality, his privilege.

We would argue that in either case, whether you take the argument of the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre or my argument, the privileges of a Member or Members of the House have been breached. It is a matter of sufficient importance that we, as her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, and that Members of the New Democratic Party, concentrated the entire Question Period on it. You will know that does not always happen. I suggest to you that the fact that Members from all across the country representing the Opposition saw this as being of sufficient importance to devote the entire Question Period to it, lends weight to the argument that there has been a breach of the privileges of Members of the House.

If you find there has been a breach of privilege, we would move:

That a Special Committee be appointed to inquire into all the circumstances relating to or associated with the disclosure of budget information by the Minister of Finance on Monday, April 18, 1983, that the Committee consist of eleven Members of the House, and that the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records.

Madam Speaker: I think I have heard a sufficient number of interventions on this particular matter. Hon. Members will understand that I obviously want to take some time to examine all the arguments that have been put forward.

I want to tell the House that I will rule on this question a little before the adjournment of the House. May I add that I will rule whether the Minister of Finance is present or not. Obviously it will be necessary to rule on the question today.

I am sorry, my English has played tricks on me. I did not mean adjournment. We are going to be back in the House at eight o'clock. I meant that I would rule just before we rise at six o'clock.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the importance of this matter, would it be possible that I, as House Leader of the Official Opposition, and the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, have notice of your ruling so that we will be sure to be in the House?

Madam Speaker: Yes, I can do that. I will give notice to Leaders of the different Parties.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, there are circumstances which you may or may not be aware of which may very well tend to compromise the Chair in the decision it is about to make. I do not know whether you are aware that the arrangements for a lockup were made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to occur at 4:30 o'clock today. As a result of a question of privilege we raised this morning, the word now from the Minister of Finance to the media and ourselves is that the lockup will not occur until such time as the Speaker rules on the question of privilege.

● (1520)

Now, there are two points. I am speaking of compromising the Chair, Madam Speaker. There are two points, before you shake your head in the negative, finally ruling out the possibility that the two points I have to make might be valid. There are two points that have to be made here. We have had a clear indication from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) today in a Question Period which might be taken as having let them off the hook, as it were, by explanations that were allowed by the Chair over my objections of the moment—

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Get on with it.

Mr. Nielsen: If "Disco Duck" would stop interjecting and listen to what I am saying—

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Why don't you stop and get on with the business of the House?

Mr. Nielsen: We are very much on the business of the House. One of the points, Madam Speaker, is that obviously, as indicated by the Prime Minister, changes are being made to the documented budget speech that was telephotoed yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Pinard: How do you know that?

Mr. Nielsen: Because the Prime Minister said so.

Mr. Pinard: No way.

Mr. Nielsen: He said so when he was answering questions today. He admitted that the—

Mr. Pinard: He said he did not know.

Mr. Nielsen: —documents photographed yesterday were going to be altered. That is clear.

Mr. Pinard: That is your conclusion.

Mr. Nielsen: The Chair, by delaying its decision, will be I suggest aiding and abetting the Government, which will have the luxury of the time between now and whatever time it takes to print those changes to set about giving effect to those changes that will be printed. That is precisely what is happening. The longer the Chair takes to make its ruling, the more opportunity the Government will have to make those changes.

The second point, Madam Speaker, is that the Chair should make its ruling on the basis of submissions made. The evidence before the Chair is all that is needed to make a decision. The Chair should not wait for any budget presentation. The Chair has indicated that the ruling is going to come down some time before six o'clock and that gives me some comfort with respect to that second point. But the first point is one which could very well compromise the decision of the Chair and place some doubt upon its impartiality—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —if the view is taken that the longer it takes to make that decision gives the Government the opportunity to make those changes so clearly indicated by the Prime Minister today.

I urge the Chair to make the decision early. Indeed, as is often done in the practices of this place, the Chair might give some indication as to its predisposition at this point before preparing the final written ruling which will be coming down, as the Chair has indicated, before six o'clock. If we could have some idea now as to the Chair's reception of the submissions made with respect to there being a breach of the privileges of the House and a breach of the Minister's oath, that would make us rest a good deal easier on this side.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the Acting Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) is acting like a schoolteacher, and I find his attempt to tell the Chair how to direct the proceedings of the House entirely unacceptable. His habit of giving the Chair advice on how to act is truly obnoxious to any self-respecting parliamentarian. We have taken note of your intention to examine the arguments submitted and announce your decision in due time and you indicated that this would preferably, and at the latest, be a little before six o'clock this evening. We are of course agreeable to this very sensible decision, out of respect for this institution and for the Chair.

The Acting Leader of the Official Opposition also brought up the lock-up of media people and Members of the House. I submit, with due respect, that this is not the concern of the Chair, and that the Chair should ignore these considerations because these arrangements are made directly by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) with the Parties concerned. There is no connection at all with parliamentary procedure or the Standing Orders of the House, and, with due respect, I again submit that the Hon. Member's urging the Chair to make a quick decision—to which we have no objection, I must admit—because of the delay this would otherwise involve in connection with the lock-up, that the Hon. Member's argument is not a concern of the House, and that it should not be given any consideration at all.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, it would set my mind at rest, and certainly those of all of us over here; and my remarks can be discounted entirely if the Government House leader would give us his assurance now that the lockup will proceed as planned at 4:30.

Miss MacDonald: Well?

Mr. Nielsen: Is he prepared to give that assurance, Madam Speaker, that the lockup will be proceeding at 4:30?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is being very stubborn. I just said that the lock-up is no concern of the House, and now he expects me to answer one of his questions on the subject. The matter is totally irrelevant here. The lock-up is a matter to be decided by the Minister of Finance with Hon. Members, Party representatives and the media. That should be clear, it seems to me. I do not intend to argue about the lock-up. It is irrelevant, and I would appreciate no further questions being asked about the subject because I think it is a waste of time.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the fact is that the lockup is not going ahead because that budget speech and its changes have not yet been completed and will not be completed; and the longer they have to delay until six o'clock, the better it is going to be for the Government to hide its tracks.

Mr. Rossi: That is your opinion.

Madam Speaker: Well, if ever I was in doubt as to the isolation in which a Speaker is held, I have the proof today. I had no knowledge whatsoever of the lockup taking place at 4:30 o'clock, six o'clock or any other hour. I was, rather, under the impression that the lockup was taking place at the time at which the budget was being delivered. So that my decision to rule later this afternoon before six o'clock, of course, has nothing to do with that.

Hon. Members have discussed at length the question of privilege. I hope they do understand, without implying that the Chair is compromised in any way, that if arguments are made over a period of over two hours, nearly three hours, obviously the Chair has to reflect upon those arguments and it does take some time.

However, I can tell Hon. Members that, having sat through all of those arguments, I have heard them, but I hope Hon. Members realize that before ruling the Chair does try to look at the blues to see whether all of the impressions the Chair has gathered from the arguments which the Chair has heard are in fact corroborated by what I can see in writing. Therefore I hope Hon. Members will give me the time to look at those arguments.

I repeat, I will try to rule as quickly as possible, as was my desire, before six o'clock, and I will give notice to the Party House Leaders of the time at which I intend to make my ruling.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,502 and 3,543.

[Text]

CANADIAN MEDIA CORPORATION

Question No. 3,502—Mr. Beatty:

1. What is the total cost to the taxpayer of Canadian Media Corporation's services as an agency of record?

2. On what date did the Corporation start to perform services for the Government?

3. Since the Corporation first started performing services, which agencies or departments had other advertising agencies reserve time and space for them and, in each case (a) which agency performed the function (b) what amount was paid either directly or indirectly for the services?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Advertising Management Group and the Department of Supply and Services as follows:

1. From October 1, 1980 to and including November 30, 1981, the total cost as an agency of record is $1,780,471.

2. October 1, 1980.

3. The only government agency which had other advertising agencies reserve time and space was the Canadian Government Office of Tourism. This was necessary because the Canadian Government Office of Tourism requires the services of foreign country agencies. (a) This activity is co-ordinated by the Richmond Advertising Agency of Toronto. (b) In 1982-83, the expenditure budgeted for foreign advertising was $2,027,000, with Richmond Advertising receiving $150,000 for co-ordination services.

Question No. 3,543—Mr. Beatty:

1. Are there guidelines that determine whether Canadian Media Corporation reserves media space or time for the Government and, if so, what are they?

2. Which organizations are exempt from having to use CMC's services?

3. What is the Government's estimate of any savings to date resulting from the employment of CMC?

4. Does the Government have confidence in CMC's ability to perform its duties competently and in a non-partisan fashion?

5. Does CMC serve as agency of record for the Chief Electoral Officer?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Supply and Services and the Office of the Chief Electoral Officer as follows:

1. Yes. In accordance with Treasury Board Policy on the Management of Government Advertising (Chapter 485, Treasury Board Administrative Policy Manual), the agency of record reserves media space and time for the Government. DSS is currently maintaining CMC, Canadian Media Corporation under contract as the agency of record.

2. CMC's services are used by departments and agencies listed in Schedules A and B of the Financial Administration Act and branches designated as departments for purposes of the Financial Administration Act. All other Government organizations are exempt.

3. After fees have been deducted from gross savings, the net savings to the Government amount to $1,221,000 from October 1, 1980 to December 31, 1981.

4. Yes.

5. No, CMC has never served as agency of record for the Chief Electoral Officer.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I believe that Your Honour will have received a motion under Standing Order 30 from me this morning. Under the circumstances, I would request that that matter be disregarded at this time.

Madam Speaker: Is the Hon. Member asking me to withdraw that notice for an urgent debate under Standing Order 30?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, the circumstances of the debate this morning and this afternoon have made that unnecessary now.

Madam Speaker: Very well.

ATHLETIC CONTESTS AND EVENTS POOLS ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE GOVERNMENT OPERATED POOL SYSTEMS

The House proceeded with consideration of report stage of Bill C-95, An Act to provide for government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Before proceeding with the report stage of Bill C-95, it is my duty to inform the House that we have examined the motions relating to the report stage of Bill C-95, an Act to provide for government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act.

I shall now inform the House how the motions are to be considered. Motion No. 1 in the name of the Minister of State (International Trade) (Mr. Regan) and motion No. 3 in the name of the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) concerning the groups of recipients listed in Clause 18, Subclause 3, of the Bill, are to be grouped for the purposes of debate and be voted on separately. Motions No. 2, 4 and 5 will be considered and voted on separately.

[English]

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-95, to provide for government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act, be amended in Clause 4 by striking out lines 29 to 32 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"(4) The directors appointed pursuant to subsection (1) shall include at least one person from each of the following three fields, namely,

(a) arts and culture;

(b) fitness and amateur sport; and

(c) medical and health research."

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines) moved:

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-95, to provide for government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act, be amended in Clause 18 by striking out lines 11 to 20 at page 8 and substituting the following therefor:

"of the XV Winter Olympic games to be held at Calgary, Alberta,"

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Mr. Speaker, in relation to Motion No. 1, it is the position of the Government that this amendment should be supported. However, we are unable to support the second amendment to which reference has been given. At this stage, I might just give the reasons for the particular amendment which outlines, in detail, classifications from which directors will be represented.

The Government is moving this motion to amend Clause 4(4) because it was felt that a problem arises out of the vague expression, "beneficiary groups", which is not defined anywhere in Bill C-95 but which is in the present or what will be the former subsection. The term "beneficiary groups" is used in relation to the whole Section 18(3), making it impossible to say who would be entitled under the new subsection 4 to representation on the Board of Directors.

This amendment was initiated by the Opposition to ensure that the directors will have representation from the groups which will eventually benefit from the operation of the sports pool. The Government is simply ensuring that the intention of the Opposition in that regard is secured by this amendment. The proposed Government motion sets out clearly that representation on the Board of Directors will include at least one person from the fields of arts and culture, fitness and amateur sport and medical and health research.

Hon. Members will be aware of the aims of Bill C-95, to establish a mechanism to manage and operate a sports pool, to supply supplementary and non-tax revenues for the deserving areas of arts and culture, fitness and amateur sport and health and medical research. In addition, the sports pool will provide non-tax revenues for the fifteenth Winter Olympics Games to be held in Calgary in 1988. It is the responsibility of the federal Government to support worthy projects of that type, and as these games will benefit Canada and Canadians in many ways this source of funds becomes extremely important to the staging of the games in this country. In any event, I will restrict myself for now to the remarks I have made on the first amendment.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, the joining of Motion No. 1 with Motion No. 3 makes it somewhat difficult from our point of view. As the Minister points out, Motion No. 1 arises out of an amendment which we proposed in committee and adopted in a certain language, now reduced to the language of the amended Bill C-95 and the Bill which is now before Hon. Members.

Motion No. 1 is a refinement of that committee amendment which provided for representation on the Board of Directors by the beneficiary groups. However, Motion No. 1 before us, and to which I have no objection, simply makes it very clear that representation on the Board of Directors would only be by the more or less permanent beneficiaries of Bill C-95, and not by the Calgary Games or any special project or event which might be the recipient of funds.

However, if I might now address myself to Motion No. 3, we have consistently been opposed to the sports pool, and for very good reasons, the first being that we want to be consistent with our position throughout 1979. Accordingly, I would like to say once again on behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition that we have been and are in opposition to the Bill, so as to be consistent with the position of 1979.

Second, we recognize that gambling can become as compulsive as any other addiction. Accordingly, we are in opposition because lotteries have become Canada's major social disease. We are also in opposition because it is a form of taxation on the poor. Surveys have clearly shown that those least able to pay are those most likely to buy.

Finally, we submit that this is simply a poor Bill.

In relation to Motion No. 3, if this Bill should pass we take the position that if there is to be a sports pool it must relate to the Calgary Olympics, just as Parliament was prepared to accept a gambling game operated by the federal Government in support of the Montreal Olympics. We have taken the position that while we are opposed to a sports pool and the implementation of such a game operated by the federal Government, a Crown corporation or agency of the federal Government might logically be required to support the Calgary Olympics. This follows precedents of Parliament with respect to the Montreal Olympics.

However, we are very much concerned with the history of Loto Canada leading up to the 1979 agreement. Loto Canada was scandal ridden and was brought before this House on many occasions by reason of one abuse or another of those games.

We have been told that the Bill provides for three substantially permanent beneficiaries; arts and culture, fitness and amateur sports, research in health and medicare. The Bill goes on to provide for funding of the Calgary games and any other major event. The indication is that the funds available will not fully support any one of these.

Nevertheless, if the game must proceed, then let Calgary be the beneficiary so that Calgary, and indeed all of Canada, can take pride in a successful games that are properly and financial secure.

We indicate, therefore, through Motion No. 3 that Calgary be the sole and only beneficiary of the proceeds of any sports pool game operated by the federal Government.

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to make a few comments on Bill C-95. In all of its promotion of this sports pool Bill, the Government has relied on its $200 million commitment to the 1988 Calgary Winter Olympics. The upshot of that, of course, is to suggest that anyone with the gall to oppose the Government's plans to get back into the gambling business must have some kind of perverted desire to see the Calgary Olympics fall flat on its face. Let me deal with that briefly before I get into the heart of the Bill.

For the record, I and my Party support the Calgary Olympics. Like all Canadians, we are proud that Canada will play host to the games. We wish the organizers every success. We think it is imperative, however, that the Government meet its $200 million commitment to financing those winter olympics. It can be done without resorting to the kind of schemes embodied in this Bill.

For the benefit of Members opposite and some of my Tory friends, I want to tell the House what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said in 1976 when the Government tabled a document in the House which established Loto Canada. He said:

> It is because we believe that physical fitness, amateur sports and recreation are important aspects of Canadian life that we think they should be financed out of general taxation and, therefore, paid for on the basis of the ability to pay—

He continued:

> —if the Government gets into trouble with something else—health costs, veterans pensions, or what have you—which it cannot afford, it will say 'we can go in for gambling again,' and the whole business of taxation and redistribution of wealth would be completely shot.

That is what we have in this Bill. Hiding behind the skirts of the Olympic Games, the Government is asking us to approve a new slush fund for itself generated from the profits of Government-run gambling.

The federal Governments' last two forays into legalized Government sanctioned gambling were to be on a temporary basis. The Olympic lottery was established in 1973 as part of a fund-raising package for the 1976 Summer Olympics in Montreal. The last draw was to be in December of 1976. But then, through order in council, the Government extended its tenure in the gambling business until 1979. When the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) tabled the document on Loto Canada in 1976, he argued again the need for Government-run gambling to ease the burden of the deficits incurred by the 76 Olympics and the 78 Commonwealth Games in Edmonton. Loto Canada was expected to be in business from January, 1977 until 1979.

With this Bill, however, there is not even the slightest hint that there might be a termination date. Bill C-95 reveals the Government's intention to get into the gambling business on a permanent basis. As my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre predicted, the Government is going in for gambling on a permanent basis and the whole business of taxation and the redistribution of wealth is being undermined.

That is not the only prediction he has made which history has proven accurate. In 1976, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre said that the day would come when health costs, veterans' pensions or other programs considered by the Government vital enough to be funded from the consolidated revenues of Canada would have to depend on the profits from gambling for funding.

What will this betting scheme support? Revenues from the sports pool are targeted not only for the Calgary Olympics but also to support arts and culture, fitness and amateur sports, worthy capital projects of national interest and medical and health research. Where will it end? It is a sad day when the future of Canadian health care depends on raffles and gambling schemes for funding.

Let us look at the facts. In the last ten years the federal Government has reduced substantially the proportion of funding it provides for medical research. In 1971 the federal Government provided 72 per cent of Government support for medical research. By 1979-80 that proportion had dropped to 59 per cent. With that trend in mind I think good questions to pose to the Government are: how much more will federal funding for medical research deteriorate? Will Canadians see the proportion of medical research support derived from federal tax revenues decline further when and if money is allocated from sports pool profits to medical and health research?

What we really have here is not funding for the Olympics. That is not the salient point of this Bill at all. What we have in Bill C-95 is an attempt by the Government to get back into the business of gambling on a permanent basis. It is an attempt to get back into the business of gambling, not only to finance the Olympic games but medical and health research, arts and culture and fitness and amateur sports as well. The scope of Bill C-95 is not limited to the Government's current desire to start a sports pool. A fact which should be remembered is that through clause (2)(b) of this Bill, the Government may embark on whatever gambling enterprise it deems lawful and desirable through order in council.

When the then Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sports, the present Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) who is introducing the Bill in the House today, was flogging this Bill to the media he argued that both the federal and provincial Governments need a non-tax source of revenue for certain undertakings. Lotteries and his proposed sports pools are his idea of a voluntary form of taxation. He has certainly put a pretty face on what amounts to abandoning fair taxation in favour of Government-run gambling. We should expect no less from a Government that has given us a Liberal advertising body called the Canada Unity Information Office.

What is the nature of the Minister's voluntary taxation—his non-tax source of revenue? For one thing, it is a form of taxation that takes proportionately more from the poor than it does from the rich. When one thinks about it, it is not really surprising that it is the poor and not the rich who fall for other Government betting schemes. Lotteries, this sports pool and other Government-run gambling are turning millions of Canadians into gamblers. The rags to riches, easy money outlook bred by lottery advertising is naturally appealing to poorer Canadians.

A 1977 profile commissioned by Loto Canada found that 54 per cent of the buyers of lottery tickets earned less than $20,000 a year. A similar study conducted by Gallup found that 73 per cent of people who earned less than $6,000 a year took part in Wintario. This is the clientele government betting schemes appeal to.

The Government Members will say, "What about bingo? Does the NDP want to get rid of bingo because it is a game of chance and appeals to the poor too?" No, we do not want to purge the country of bingo. We have nothing against bingo because bingo is totally unlike the lottery system. Bingos bring people together to participate in a social event, but buying a lottery ticket is an act consummated alone.

• (1550)

The main motivation behind buying a lottery ticket is to find a magic solution to all of one's economic problems. That is the pitch the Governments of this country have been selling in their aggressive marketing of lotteries in the past. The manager of one provincial lottery admitted as much. He said:

> We base all our marketing strategy on greed. It is our big selling point. People do not buy tickets because they want to help a cause. They buy a ticket because they want to win.

There we have it. Thousands of Canadians are living in poverty or so close to poverty it amounts to basically the same thing, and the Government is giving them a crack at bettering their lot. Of course, no one is told what the incredible odds are of winning the big prize. In the Western Express, for example, the odds are one in 500,000. You have a more of a chance of being struck by lightning than you do of winning the grand prize in a Canadian lottery; and that will be no different with this sports pool.

The Government is trying to hoodwink people by claiming that this sports pool is really a game of skill. Simply predict correctly the final score of 12 to 16 hockey or baseball games and you can take home the big prize. Who do they think they are kidding? Instead of having the winning number selected by a computer, the winning ticket will be determined by chance, by the outcome of a dozen or more sporting contests. I do not know how that can be considered a game of skill. The chances of guessing correctly the outcome of a dozen or more hockey games could be as high as one in one trillion. With that many games involved in each pool, even the most knowledgeable sports fans would have stumbled across an incredible piece of luck if they picked the correct final score in every game.

Are you signalling that I have only a moment left, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Yes.

Mr. Sargeant: I will sum up by saying I think it has become obvious that we are opposed to this form of voluntary taxation. We are opposed to this piece of legislation and we will vote against it in the House when it comes to a vote.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, right now we are dealing with two amendments. I have a bit of a problem in following the Chair's ruling with respect to the grouping of Motions Nos. 1 and 3. First, Motion No. 1, and I want to speak to it first because, with respect, Sir, it is quite a bit different from Motion No. 3, which deals with who shall be directors.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I appreciate the Hon. Member's remarks. The Chair, as Hon. Members understand, is sometimes given a grouping of Motions with the assumption there is similarity between them. However, upon second examination of the grouping which the Chair made earlier, I have asked that the matter be re-examined to ascertain whether there is similarity. The remarks of previous speakers that there is no similarity might be quite valid. In any event, that matter is being reviewed at this time, and if need be we will reverse that arrangement. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Blenkarn: With your permission, Sir, I will devote my remarks entirely to Motion No. 1.

I think this Motion tends to mislead the House. Motion No. 1 refers to the appointment at some time of directors, one of whom must presumably come from arts and culture, one from fitness and amateur sport and one from the medical and health research field. The Motion does nothing about the quantum of directors.

This new sports pool corporation is really "gamble on the cook's sports pool or we will organize the game in a way that will result in someone winning." Aside from the problem that could well arise with interference in the results of professional and amateur sporting events with this whole sports pools concept, what we have is a motion produced by the Minister which is really a motion to paint a better picture on a Bill. It is pretty to paint a good picture on this Bill. The Minister says of my 15 directors we might as well give one directorship to somebody representing arts and culture, we might as well give one to somebody representing fitness and amateur sport, and one to somebody representing medical and health research; the rest can go to my favourite Liberal hacks.

One result of sports pools and betting is the accumulation of some free slush money for Governments. This is unaccountable money. If the Government wants to do a good deal for a favourite cultural group it is able to dip into a free pot and pay out. It may want to do something or provide a new building, stadium, or even a domed stadium. It is good politics to have a building built in somebody's riding. Therefore, the Government can dip into the pool and do something in the way of a grant for one person as opposed to another. After all, they are all represented on the board, are they not?

Out of a board of 15 directors there will be one for arts and culture, one for fitness and amateur sport and one for medical and health research, plus 12 hacks from the Liberal Party to make sure the Government in power has control over this wonderful free pot. The Government will be able to dip into it, honey dip it and do what it wants with the money.

Where does the money come from? It is supposed to come free. It is taken from those least able to pay and given to those the Government wants to look after.

The money does not come from the highly mobile or big wage earners, it comes from pensioners, pensioners in many cases who are at or below the poverty line. They are the ones who buy the $5 tickets, the $10 tickets, the $1 tickets, or whatever, because they hope somehow that lightning will strike them and they will be relieved of their misery.

That this Parliament with this phoney director-system set out in Clauses 3 and 4 of this Bill, made more phoney by the amendment produced by the Minister, should approve the kinds of things that happen in a gambling operation designed to fool the poor, fool the least competent in our society, bring in the suckers and rip them off, is unconscionable. We would be better to allow the setting up of Las Vegas casinos. At least they have a tendency to attract jetsetters. At least that is what they do. At least Las Vegas casinos bring in the highflyers who can afford to lose a buck or two. What do these sports pools bring in? Do they bring in the highflyers? Not on your life. Do they bring in the people who are worried about amateur sport? Not on your life. They bring in the little people who desperately want to improve their position and somehow want to get out of the box of poverty and hardship. The sports pools rip them off.

What are the rip-off figures? The last time we had Loto Canada 28 cents out of every dollar want to discounts, wholesalers or advertising. I suppose it went back into the economy. Only 27 cents was profit. That is all there was in it for amateur sports, culture, medical research, athletes or perhaps an olympic game or two; and 45 cents was used for prizes to the lucky. Those are not good odds.

• (1600)

Why do we not tell people to gamble on the stockmarket? Maybe they would make something, maybe we would build the country. But what do we do? We organize the system, approve it as a moral position of our country, rubberstamp it and make it look good because, after all, we will put on the board of directors one person from arts and culture, one from fitness and amateur sport, and one who will represent medical health and research. Of course the rest of the group will represent the Government in power and the Government's right to dip into the pot and look after whoever it wants to look after.

The Bill, the amendment and the concept that we can somehow slide over the sleaziness of the Bill by appointing people, only three out of 15, to represent the supposed beneficiaries of this supposed benefit to society, are wrong, and the House should tell the Minister that they are wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Earlier the Chair advised Hon. Members that it would have the arrangement of motions for debate and subsequent voting re-examined in light of the statement read earlier today by the Chair, taking into account the well-founded comments made by Hon. Members previously in the course of debate. The Chair finds that all motions should be debated separately and voted on separately in due course. Therefore the House is now debating Motion No. 1 which the Chair has already read. In due course I propose to again read Motion No. 3 in its proper numerical order.

However, having informed Hon. Members earlier at the beginning of debate that Motions Nos. 1 and 3 should be debated together but subsequently voted on separately, it would be incumbent upon the Chair at this time to see if Hon. Members who have already spoken wish to speak again. Presumably it would have to be on Motion No. 1. The Chair is extremely conscious of the fact that it should not deprive any Member of his or her privilege to speak on any motion before the House.

If there are no Members having already spoken who wish to speak again specifically on Motion No. 1, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski).

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that we should even be discussing this Bill in the House at a time when there are so many people unemployed with so many serious things happening in the country. This Bill must be part of the $4.6 billion job-creation program which we will probably see this evening. It is sort of a pork-barrel creation for Liberals at $35,000 annually. Lotto Canada was supposed to have been exterminated, but it is still hanging in there somewhere with $16.5 million in the kitty collecting interest. The fitness and amateur sports people and the cultural people just do not know what the Minister will do with it.

I would like to give a bit of history in this regard. It surprises me that we have Bill C-95 to establish another lottery or sports pool without the Government having contacted its provincial colleagues in lotteries to say it intends to go ahead with something like this. The Government has not contacted any of the Ministers who had anything to do with lotteries since the agreement of 1980. I checked this out today to make sure that I was right. The only agreement they have is the one between the Government of Canada and the different Provinces regarding the $24 million connected with the CPI, which now amounts to $34 million annually being received from the Provinces.

The Minister said that they would be able to make more money out of this new pool. What will happen to the $34 million? Will they cancel out this particular agreement? The Provinces will say no, that if the federal Government wants to get into the lottery business and the sports pool business, that is fine, but it has lost itself $34 million annually. The federal Government is duplicating services as far as lotteries are concerned. What has happened to the $94 million or $98 million which is now in the kitty as of this quarter? Approximately $47 million goes to fitness and amateur sport. Why have the sporting fraternities not complained a little to the Minister? They always say that they do not have enough money. What has happened to them over there at 33 River Road? Why have they not complained to the Minister, saying that they have not received any of the $47 million? They are supposed to receive a piece of the action. Where is all this money?

Mr. Regan: What a lot of baloney.

Mr. Paproski: I know the Minister of State (Multiculturalism) (Mr. Fleming) went ahead and spent a little money on a few things for a cultural event. I think he might have received some funds from that particular kitty, but the poor fitness and amateur sport people, what did they receive? In my short tenure of office, they were on my doorstep every day saying that they did not have enough funds. Now, after three years of obtaining money from the provincial Government without any effort or any work whatsoever and with all this money in the kitty, I do not hear them complaining. Privately they do. Privately they say that the feds are real rats and will not give them any money.

I have heard this Bill many times called the Calgary Olympics Bill. What a bunch of baloney. Who is the Minister trying to kid? How can he even say things like that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the House is now debating Motion No. 1. The Chair has been following the remarks of the Hon. Member attentively. Perhaps he could tell us in what way his remarks are directed to the contents of motion No. 1.

Mr. Paproski: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, but I thought the House should have a little history of what is happening in order to be well aware of what the Minister is trying to do by establishing this lottery Bill or this gambling Bill. I know he will set up a board of directors. He will get its members from arts and culture, fitness and amateur sport, and medical and health research.

First we had an agreement with the Provinces which was related to just fitness and amateur sport and culture. Look what they have done with the fitness and amateur sport portfolio. They have given it to some poor little man in the other place who can hardly walk. That is where the fitness and amateur sport people have a Minister to look after them, in the other place.

Let me get to the back to the creation of directors. These will be order in council Liberal appointees at around $35,000 to $40,000 a year. Many of them are waiting for the jobs because when we got rid of Loto Canada there were about 6,000 Liberal hacks who were relieved of their kiosks which paid $35,000 annually. When we used to ask whether they were making any money, they would say no, but they received $35,000 annually to sit in a little booth and rip off the people of Canada.

I cannot believe this Minister, a really fine gentleman, going into something like this. He is familiar with amateur sport. I am told that he used to be a broadcaster. He has all kinds of other talents.

I cannot believe this job creation program that the Government is trying to establish today with this sports pool. Is there not something much better to get into without hurting the Provinces? This will not only be duplicating a service, the federal Government will be shafted by their provincial counterparts because it will be deprived of $34,000 million. It will not receive that money.

Since January 1, 1980 the kitty has built up to $94. Half of that is $47 million. The Calgary Olympics will be in 1988. I do not think we have to worry about that because this Government will no longer be in power. Those individuals opposite will be sitting on your left, Mr. Speaker. They will not have to worry about lotteries, the olympic games, or anything else.

The university games were supposed to receive money from the agreement now in existence. They have not received any. The Calgary Olympics was supposed to get money from this agreement. It has not received a cent. This was put in as part of the agreement. I think there must be a few Liberals in Calgary. I cannot understand it, they are not complaining enough. They should get after this Minister. I am surprised that some people in Edmonton do not give the Minister a block from the blind side when he comes to Edmonton because he sure has not done a job for them. No wonder the Liberals are dead in the Province of Alberta. It is unbelievable what this Goverment had done to them.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) and my friend from Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant) have all expressed their feelings. They know exactly what is happening. It is funny that we on this side know what kind of ding-a-lings the people of Canada will get, yet over there all they do is smile. Let me tell them, whether it be two months from now, six months from now or whenever the next election comes along, we will show you who the ding-a-lings are, and who is going to get ding-a-linged.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if I can be as amusing as the speaker who just completed his remarks. I will try and stick a little more closely to the motion before us. I might offer a few comments on what was said by the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski). If it had not been for the action of that Member when he was Minister, we would not have the proposed Bill before us at this time. We would have Loto Canada receipts to do that which this Bill proposes to do.

The Hon. Member talked about ripping off the public by those who were selling the Loto Canada tickets. I believe the people involved in that operation will take some resentment from that remark, particularly since he was so anxious to pass it off to his kindred folk in the Provinces. Is he now suggesting that they are continuing to rip off Canadians?

He then accused the Government of turning over responsibility for this Bill to a poor little guy in the other place who can hardly walk. I find that they resemble each other physically. That little guy in the other place may not be a great walker, but he has considerable ability to run.

It is appropriate that Motion No. 1 to amend Bill C-95 be adopted by this House because it ensures that the arts and culture, fitness and amateur sport and medical and health research will be represented on the board of directors. That is entirely worthwhile and probably should have been in the original Bill.

It was strange to hear the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) condemn that proposal as being an opportunity for the Government to get its friends on the board of directors. Exactly the opposite is true. What makes his condemnation even more strange is that it was his Party which proposed this motion in Committee. The Government accepted it because it thought it was a good idea. When it accepted that proposal, it did not expect the Opposition to change its position. I therefore urge the Members of the opposition to at least be consistent when debating Bill C-95.

I was surprised to hear the remarks of the Hon. Member for Edmonton North regarding the Calgary Olympics. I am surprised he does not want the proceeds from the lotteries that will be established under Bill C-95 to go to the Fifteenth Olympic Games in Calgary.

Mr. Paproski: That is not true.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): The Hon. Member says that is not true. I suggest he make his position clear because he has not done that to date. He cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to straighten out the Hon. Member. I know he really does not mean to say what he is saying at this time because that is not what I said. I said that there are moneys available now amounting to $47 million which the federal and provincial Governments have that could go to fitness and amateur sport with the other $47 million for culture. Between now and 1988 there will be sufficient funds if the federal Government keeps on getting $34 million under that particular agreement. Forget about this Bill at this time. I was referring to the agreement that we now have. At $34 million annually between now and 1988 there will be sufficient funds to look after the piece of the action which the federal Government is supposed to provide for, I believe in the area of $200 million. That includes coins, stamps and all the other little things. If it puts aside the moneys it is now getting from the lotteries, there would be sufficient money not only for the university games in Edmonton this year, but for the Olympics in 1988.

• (1620)

Mr. Regan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) estimates the money coming from the Province because of Canada moving out of Loto Canada at $34 million a year and if put aside, it would provide the money necessary for this cause. In fact, it has not been $98 million that has been received, but to date the total amount received has been $78 million.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order.

Mr. Regan: That money has been spent and it has been fully accounted in the House. If the Hon. Member looks at page 22588 of Hansard he will see that outline of where the money went.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. May we have some order, please. The Chair recognized the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) on what I understand to be a valid point of order under Standing Order 41 which reads:

No Member, unless otherwise provided by Standing or Special Order, may speak twice to a question except in explanation of a material part of his or her speech which may have been misquoted or misunderstood, and the Member is not to introduce any new matter, but then no debate shall be allowed upon such explanation.

Therefore, it is not in order at this point to allow the Hon. Minister to continue his remarks as they are more in the nature of a statement than a misquote or a misunderstanding.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I am speaking to Motion No. 1 and not to the point or order of the Hon. Member for Edmonton North, except to say that if I have misrepresented his point of view I will certainly have no hesitation in apologizing to him. I do not find any relief from the so-called explanation he gave in his so-called point of order.

Let us look then at the revenues expected by the Calgary Olympic Committee from the Government of Canada for the XV Olympiad. The Committee is anticipating income of $200 million from the Government of Canada. It was in 1980 that Loto Canada was turned over to the provinces for their plunder, and I use that word because the Hon. Member for Edmonton North said it was a rip-off. Since that time, the Government of Canada has received $78 million, and the Hon. Member for Edmonton North says that between now and 1985 there will be no trouble getting $200 million from that source to give to the XV Olympiad Committee. One would have to stretch mathematical probability a bit to get that amount.

More important, if that were the course the Government took, then there would be absolutely nothing left for any other activity, whether it be in culture and art, fitness and amateur sport, or in assistance to medical and health research. His proposal would see all revenue of the federal Government coming from the former Loto Canada going to the XV Olympiad. I contend that that would not come anywhere close to the $200 million the Olympiad Committee anticipates. Therefore, I think this is another attempt by the Official Opposition to have it both ways.

I support Motion No. 1 and hope it will be incorporated in the Bill so that the appointment of a board of directors will indeed require representatives from arts and culture, fitness and amateur sport and medical and health research. In that way we will be certain the interests of those groups are represented first-hand at the meetings of the board of directors.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to speak on Bill C-95 I return to that with which I am familiar. There are social organizations in everyone's constituency; service clubs, bingos, church groups that want to organize and sell tickets in some form to raise money to entertain children, or to participate in whatever sport may be their choice. I wonder how much the general public can support in the way of donations? Here we are begging again. As I said, we are giving our local communities opposition.

How far should we go in our support? How far should we go in asking people to support this and support that? This sports pool will probably be just another method of taking money away from families that should be spending it on some of the more essential things in life rather than on a dream of some far-off place in the future, a dream of pie from the sky dropping down to them.

I have said before that I think our society is over-organized. We have so much competition. How far can we go with this competition? Who are we going to hurt? As was stated here earlier, the people who probably can least afford to buy these tickets are the ones who buy the most. Their money should be spent on food, clothing, on other more tangible goods rather than on the hope of winning the lottery.

I was very convinced of this not too long ago when I saw the number of people lined up to buy Wintario lottery tickets. There were long lines of people; but there is only one winner. There is only one person who gets the pie in the sky. One individual from Montreal won a lot of money.

Lotteries like that collect a great deal of money, and in this way take money away from families that should have it for every day needs.

When visiting my riding, I witnessed a chap I happen to know buying tickets. He was gambling with these tickets that he was going to win. He had tickets from different organizations. I realize that there are some restrictions put on these lotteries by the provincial Governments, but this chap, as I said, was going for the pie in the sky. He was spending money that he would never get a return on in any way, shape or form. He spent $25 that he will never see again on that long-shot chance.

I am concerned by the moral side of the issue as well. I think that we are probably disturbing a lot of people in our church groups with so many lotteries. We are going to spend money here and we are going to spend money there. That money is spent without any assurance of return. This certainly gives me, as I am sure it gives many Members in the House today, reason for concern.

Think of our farmers who have on several occassions marched on Parliament Hill and other places; they are all in this fierce world of competition for the dollar. What do we do with our dollars? In so many instances, we waste our dollars.

Tonight we will have a budget. I cannot help but think of it. What is the Government going to do for many of these people? Are we taking the wrong approach by collecting some of this money? We are not giving our people any guidance, and I think this is something we should consider. We have the racetrack and a great many other places where we spend money. I do not call this money frivolous, I call it hard-earned money for many of these people. As I said, these people need a little guidance on how to spend this money. I think this would be a much better society if the Government provided that guidance. Sure, we all like to get something for nothing; that is human nature. The Government is supposed to give guidance, but what has this Government done? It would be hard to count what the Government has done. There is nothing to count as far as I am concerned.

I have been involved with sports all my life. I know what it means to build an arena, I know what it means to build a community centre. We have to assess the success of these projects after they are built. Did we build too many of them, did we build some of them too big, can the community afford to operate this complex? These are all questions that come up.

With those few remarks at this stage of Bill C-95, I ask of the Hon. Members to think about the measure. Think about the less fortunate people in life, those who look to us for guidance. Do we make things too easy for them? Do we give them too much encouragement to throw their money away because the state will look after them? This is what concerns me. Some people become too dependent on the state. They are asking the state for everything. This takes away the initiative to get out and fend for themselves and their families. These are some of the things we are probably encouraging with these pie-in-the-sky deals. With these few remarks I will yield the floor to someone else, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I was about to call the Hon. Member to order. Perhaps as a general admonition I should call the attention of Members to the fact that we are debating Motion No. 1 which concerns the appointment of directors from various endeavours such as art, fitness, medical health and research. I trust that Hon. Members will make an effort to stick with the subject matter of the motion.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): I rise on a point of order for clarification of a ruling the Chair made earlier, and to emphasize that each Member may speak for his allotted time of ten minutes on each of the four motions following Motion No. 1 which is before us at this time. I gather that the ruling of the Chair was that Motion No. 1 would be separated from Motion No. 3. This would permit a Member to speak again on Motion No. 3 when it reached its turn. When we conclude any discussion on Motion No. 1 which has to do with appointments to the board of directors, we might then move to Motion No. 2 and continue the debate with respect to that motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): So there is a clear understanding of the process, the five motions will be debated in their numerical order. They have now been totally dissociated where they were previously associated. Each individual motion will be debated separately and, if need be, voted on or disposed of separately.

Is the House ready for the question on Motion No. 1?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Regan) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): We will now proceed to consideration of Motion No. 2 (Mr. Reid (St. Catharines)).

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines) moved:

Motion No. 2.

That Bill C-95, An Act to provide for government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out lines 11 to 22 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"14.(1) The objects of the Corporation are to organize, operate and manage, alone or jointly with the governments of any one or more provinces with which the Corporation has entered into an agreement or agreements for such purpose, pool systems in accordance with regulations made pursuant to section 16."

He said: Mr. Speaker, Clause 14(1) of the Bill provides for the operation of a sports pool and goes on, in paragraph (b), what we call the Mack truck clause, to allow the Crown corporation to be established under the act to operate any other lawful game which the Governor in Council might direct or decide upon. That is a Mack truck clause.

In my opening remarks I said that this was a poor Bill, and I specifically referred to this provision as an example of an open-ended item for any kind of game which the Crown corporation might wish to become involved in. We know that the Bill contains an amendment to the Criminal Code, so that whatever amendments are required can be made to the Criminal Code to allow any Crown corporation to operate the game referred to.

This Party is on record as being in favour of the 1988 Calgary Winter Olympic Games being properly funded, so that Calgary and Canada will be the hosts of the 1988 games. This could be a milestone in Olympic history.

The offer made by the Provinces was to share and if the Minister was prepared to negotiate further, to assume the commitment made by the Government of Canada to Calgary in the amount of $200 million so that it would not have to become involved in a lottery at all. The Minister continues to say that he must have passage of this Bill so that he might bargain or argue from strength to meet the demands of the Provinces. Who is the Minister trying to kid? If the Government is interested in sport or in the success of the Calgary games, let the Minister separate the funding of the Calgary games from the sports pool.

There has been enough indication that the sports pool is doomed to failure before it gets off the ground. The Government knows full well that even with passage of this Bill today it will still be a matter of many months or years before Calgary will see revenue from the sports pool to assist it in its promotion of the games.

We as a Party know that support is needed for arts and culture, medical and health research and is badly needed for fitness and amateur sport. How can any of the beneficiaries named in the Bill plan, develop or organize without any commitment on funding? It is a poor Bill indeed when not one of those beneficiaries can count on any percentage of funds if as and when a division of funds takes place. It is our position that the responsibilities of Government cannot be met by games of chance, lotteries or sports pools.

In Committee we were primarily concerned with two things. The first was whether it would be reasonable to expect the sports pool to generate the sufficient funds to finance the Calgary games or to meet the $200 million commitment of the federal Government. The second was the assurances that any of the beneficiaries might have that they would receive any funding at all.

On the first matter, the Minister responsible reduced his exaggerated original estimate of $100 million net per annum by a Committee announcement that it might only be some $80 million net.

The Hon. Reuben Baetz, the Ontario Minister of Tourism and Recreation and Chairman of the Provincial Lottery Corporation appeared before the Committee. He was the only person who appeared before the Committee who had any experience in a lottery or in funding. He pointed out that at best the federal Crown corporation to be established under the Bill would receive no more than $30 million to $40 million per year gross. That is a far cry from the $80 million the Minister said they would receive under a sports pool game.

● (1640)

I want Members of this House to consider an additional fact, Mr. Speaker. The Minister responsible could not offer a single scrap of evidence to support his claim, while the Province of Ontario had data, information and documents to support its presentation before committee.

Let us look at these facts as well. On November 30, 1982, the Province of Quebec launched its Hockey Select sports pool concept game, based on Canada's most popular game, hockey. The gross from the second weekly draw, the most lucrative during the whole of the season, was $136,000. It has been steadily going downhill from that time to the end of the hockey season. By January, 1983, the weekly gross was down to $70,000; in February it fell to $40,000. Indeed, Quebec is considering the discontinuation of Hockey Select or the sports pool game. I would ask the Minister, if he cannot sell pool tickets in the Province of Quebec on the Montreal Canadiens and the Quebec Nordiques, where does he expect to sell his sports pool tickets?

Mr. Paproski: In Nova Scotia.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Government Members like to talk about the success of pools in Europe. They talk about the great success of Lotto or whatever game they refer to. But the results they quote are far more fiction than fact. Let us look at some of these lotteries. In Belgium the sports pool receives 1 per cent of the lottery games; in the Netherlands, 10 per cent; in Poland, 7 per cent; Switzerland, 5 per cent, and so it goes.

If those percentages were transposed to the Canadian lottery market, it is easy enough to see that the provincial estimate of sports pool revenues is much more readily justified, and that the federal Department's projections are simply a figment of someone's imagination still not supported by facts or figures. Any honest, realistic assessment of sports pool revenues will lead to the conclusion that such a game will not produce the funds necessary to meet the expectations of the beneficiaries described and referred to in Bill C-95. What that means, simply and clearly, and what the Provinces point out, is that the federal Government will get into the lottery business and run the risk of losing that new-found $30 million per year. The Government will put us back into pre-1979 years of competition with the Provinces when Loto Canada was the biggest media spender in the country.

The Provinces view the inclusion of Clause 14(1)(b) as a deliberate indication of an intent by the federal Government to get back into the lottery business, and deliberate contempt for an agreement which the Provinces entered into in good faith. They have paid $94.5 million to this federal Government since 1980 and have assumed an additional sum of $29.8 million, which was a commitment by the federal Government to the building of certain arenas across this country. Over $120 million have come from the provinces to federal coffers under that agreement.

It was stated in committee by some Government Members that it is not the intention of the federal Government to get back into lotteries. It is incumbent upon the Minister to say clearly whether or not it is the intention of the federal Government to become involved in lotteries.

If it is alleged that Clause 14(1)(b) is needed as a back-up measure to guarantee the success of the sports pool, and if it is intended that such a back-up is not going to be a lottery, then I challenge the Minister to spell it out and tell us just what is the nature of the game the federal Government proposes to use as a back-up to a failure or a doomed sports pool. Why should Government Members over there be so anxious to vote for a provision which puts them in a position where they will be voting for a gaming operation about which they know nothing? There is no indication of any kind about the nature or type of game the Government proposes to use. Are we as a Parliament, or is the Government of Canada to be involved in an operation of a Las Vegas-type of video electronic gambling parlour-casino? What, Mr. Minister, do you propose to use as any other lawful game as referred to in this Act? Withdraw Clause 14(1)(b); better still, withdraw the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—REPORTED LEAK OF PROPOSED BUDGETARY MEASURES—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

The House resumed consideration of the Question of Privilege of Mr. Nielsen.

Madam Speaker: I am now prepared to rule on the question of privilege raised previously by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen).

I listened, of course, to a wide range of arguments in relation to this question of privilege and have since read the arguments presented by a number of Hon. Members. The responsibility of the Minister to safeguard the secrecy of the budget until it is presented in the House was underlined in those presentations. Many references were made by Hon. Members to a Minister's oath of secrecy and the implications of a budget leak in constituting a violation of that oath. The main thrust of the arguments, as I understood them, concerned the propriety of ministerial conduct, the economic effects of the premature release of budget information, and the right of the House to be informed of the contents of the budget before it becomes a matter of public record.

All these matters of course are of a very crucial political importance, and there are very good reasons for preserving budget secrecy. Those reasons have been enumerated by Hon. Members. But budget secrecy is a political convention. So also is the practice whereby the Minister presents his budget in the House before declaring it in any other public forum.

In the present case the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is charged with responsibility for a budget leak. There is a procedure, namely a substantive motion, which is provided under our practice, for the purpose of making direct accusations against holders of certain offices, including Ministers. We have ample precedents for this principle and I would refer Hon. Members to the decision of Speaker Michener on June 19, 1959, in relation to the Pallett case. In the course of his ruling he said:

> In my view, simple justice requires that no Hon. Member should have to submit to investigation of his conduct by the House or a committee until he has been charged with an offence.

This kind of allegation is not a matter for the decision of the Chair. It is not a matter which should be pursued by way of a question of privilege either. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) himself acknowledged that it was not for the Chair to decide whether or not there has been a budget leak or to pass judgment on the Minister.

In neither of the British cases referred to was the matter raised by way of a question of privilege. The J. H. Thomas case, which arose in 1936, involved impropriety. The matter was investigated by a tribunal of inquiry, an extra-parliamentary body, and the Minister subsequently resigned. The Dalton case involved an indiscretion. It was raised by way of a private notice question on November 13, 1947, and the Minister resigned shortly afterwards. The matter was then investigated by a select Committee of the House. I would point out that the House is free to pursue this course in the present case should it choose to do so. The point I would emphasize is that it is not a matter for the Chair and the Chair should not be involved in any decision which the House may take in this respect.

Reference was also made to a case which arose on July 24, 1975, when a Member raised a question of privilege as the result of an article which claimed that he had leaked budget information and passed it on to businessmen. In this case, the Speaker found that a prima facie case had been established and the matter was referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. This case is not, however, relevant to the present one as the Hon. Member in question was complaining of a libel which reflected upon his integrity and thus hampered him in the fulfilment of his duty as a Member. The case was based on a newspaper report and the Hon. Member was not the subject of a charge by his fellow Members. The complaint was his own.

Finally, I would refer to my ruling of November 18, 1981 which is consistent with the precedents I have quoted. In the course of the ruling I stated:

● (1650)

> Certainly the matter of budget secrecy is not dealt with through questions of privilege and there are very important precedents which I will recall to Hon. Members. There were cases in Great Britain, the ones concerning Mr. Thomas and Mr. Dalton where there was an allegation of breach of secrecy . . . Nor were they dealt with under privilege. A committee was set up in one case, and a tribunal was set up in the other. Neither case was brought before the committee which normally deals with matters respecting the privileges of members. In one case there was a special committee which dealt with a particular matter; in another case there was a tribunal. This was necessary because of the special powers which are needed to investigate such cases.
> Those two important precedents which I took from records of the United Kingdom convince me—and, I hope, the House—and give me the authority to say that a breach of budget secrecy cannot be dealt with as a matter of privilege. It might constitute a very important grievance for members. Such action might have a very negative impact on business or on the stock market. It might cause some people to receive revenues which they would not otherwise have been able to obtain. All of these are possible consequences of breaches of budget secrecy, but they have no impact on the privileges of a member. They might do harm—irrevocable in some cases—to persons or institutions, but this has nothing to do with privilege. It has to do with the conduct with a minister in the exercise of his administrative responsibility . . . it is in that respect that a formal charge must be made. That charge must allege that a minister has been derelict in his administrative responsibility, has breached his oath or whatever hon. members might want to allege.

I must therefore find that I am unable to deal with this matter as a question of privilege.

ATHLETIC CONTESTS AND EVENTS POOLS ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE GOVERNMENT OPERATED POOL SYSTEMS

The House resumed consideration of report stage of Bill C-95, to Provide for Government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and events and to amend the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I rise today to speak on the sports lottery Bill. I do so with a sense of confusion as to why we are here on this particular occasion debating this particular piece of legislation. I also do so as a Member of Parliament for the City of Calgary, which will be the site of the XV Olympiad. I also clearly recall the sense of elation which most Calgarians and certainly the Olympic Development Committee felt when, after petitioning the world community for the right and privilege of hosting the XV Olympiad, that Olympiad was granted to the city of Calgary.

It was granted in part because different levels of Government, federal, provincial and municipal, provided the world community with guarantees relative to their portion of the funding. The guarantee provided by the federal Government was on the order of $200 million.

I stand here, recognizing the fact that the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Perrault) introduced a Bill to establish a sports betting pool approximately a year and a half ago. This is only the second day the House of Commons has been able to debate that Bill. Because of earlier proceedings, it is a short debate today. However, in the meantime, Ministers of the Crown have been running around the country saying that the Conservative Party is filibustering and blocking this particular piece of legislation.

We have also been told by Ministers of the Crown that there is no other way for the federal Government to provide the money to the XV Olympiad other than through the passage of this Bill. I suggest to the House that both statements, no matter which Minister made them or where they were made, have no basis in fact.

I said on a radio program that I felt it was an example of one of the least honest statements I had ever heard a Minister make. To imply that the Conservative Party is responsible for filibustering the Bill when it has been around for a year and a half, and today being only the second day on which the Government has brought it forward for debate, is simply to stretch the truth to the point at which it is unrecognizeable.

Also, to suggest to the Canadian people that the federal Government's funding commitment in relation to those Olympics is dependent on passage of the Bill is also pure nonsense.

Hon. Members who were listening to the debate earlier this day heard our spokesperson indicate, in a statistical sense, the difficulty which such a sports pool Bill is facing. If one lays aside the moral arguments and all the others relative to it, it is less than clear that the passage of the Bill will produce anything but expenses for the federal Government. It is less than clear that one thin dime of revenue will ever be produced to go to those olympics. On that basis alone, the world community and the Olympic development authority in Calgary should feel alarmed.

The Province of Quebec, as has been mentioned earlier in the House, put in place a betting pool. That is the Province in which interest and attendance at hockey games and so on is presumed to be the greatest in the country. This is a sports betting pool based on hockey and the revenue from it is going down, down, down.

One must consider the wisdom of this piece of legislation. The first thought one should have in relation to a Bill of this kind relates to the size of the market. Is the market for lotteries in Canada a growing market? Is our population exploding? Do we have more and more people who want more and more lottery tickets, or do we have a saturated market? It is a well known fact that as the economy goes down, the poorer segments of a society buy more lottery tickets. The thought of instant riches has more appeal the more difficult our lives become. In these tragic times in Canada, with 1,600,000 unemployed Canadians and more people on welfare than there have ever been before, if one looks at the statistics one finds that on a per capita basis Canadians are buying more lottery tickets than they have ever bought before. In what one might call a perfect market condition for lotteries, a sports betting pool is losing its share of the betting market.

Where is the wisdom in Hon. Members of this Chamber approving a piece of legislation to establish something which will cost several millions of dollars to set up during what will surely be a downturn on the market side, when in fact it has already been proven in one major Province that the idea will not work and will not produce revenue?

What I am suggesting to the House is that Hon. Members opposite, acting on direction of the Minister, are likely to force passage of this legislation which will then take money out of the pockets of the Government, will increase the deficit, and will not likely produce any revenue. Where is the wisdom in that? That is the first thing wrong with it. The moral arguments have also been raised. Do we, as responsible Members of Parliament acting on behalf of the Canadian people really want to put out there in the marketplace another tax on the poor? Where is the wisdom in Members of this House of Commons, acting collectively, putting another tax on the poor? Surely Government Members know that it is a tax on the poor, that it is the poor segment of the society which contributes to that tax. Why do Hon. Members opposite want to impose an additional tax on the poor?

This morning, in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), said "I despise lotteries". Every Member of every Party sitting around that table this morning felt the same. If that is any kind of representation of the feelings of Members of the House about the wisdom of this Bill, then surely it must be possible to predict that it will be defeated when it comes time to vote.

If the Bill is not defeated, what conclusion can we draw? Will we look at Liberal Members opposite and see that they have a different understanding of the purpose of this Bill and really applaud an extra tax on the poor, or will they put Party discipline ahead of what is good for the country? I will look very carefully at what the Minister of National Health and Welfare does when this Bill comes before the House for a vote, because she said of the record this morning with great clarity and feeling, "I despise lotteries". As a free thinking Member of Parliament, if she despises lotteries and does not believe in extra taxation on the poor, it seems to me logical that she would have no choice but to stand in the Chamber and vote against the creation of that lottery and that tax. To do otherwise is to admit to Canadians that Party discipline comes ahead of conscience and commonsense.

I hope this Bill will quietly disappear and that Cabinet will reconsider its action. There is already $34 million a year in rent coming to the federal Government because it got out of the lottery business under our Government. We produced revenue without expense to the federal Government. That is sufficient money to fund the Olympics, if that is the fund the Government wants to take it from.

More importantly, if this Bill were to proceed there certainly would not be any money available for at least a year. We are in an economic downturn with some small signs of recovery. Our economic prescription on this side of the House would be to accelerate public works projects and to stimulate the economy through the production of goods and services which last. May I suggest that the money that is to be spent on the Olympics in Calgary is for those kinds of facilities. It should be spent now. The projects should not have to wait. The Government should kill the Bill, sign a cheque and give the money to Calgary now so it can get on with the work and create some jobs, instead of hopes and dreams.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Mr. Speaker, in relation to this motion by the Opposition, we must oppose the deletion of the portion of the clause they wish to delete because it provides the power to the Government, if necessary, to undertake other activities of this type. Let me give one example in that regard.

It has been stated by a number of Members who have spoken today that in return for the federal Government getting out of the field of Loto Canada, which was yielding $80 million a year, we are now receiving something in excess of $28 million a year from the Provinces. That money is divided evenly between culture and sport and all of it is being expended as it is received by the programs.

Since the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) had misinformed himself on this subject and thought it was sitting in some mythical pot and not being used, I would suggest that any Hon. Members who wish to know what the actual situation is in this matter might refer to page 22588 of Hansard of February 7, where the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith), in answer to a written question, outlined exactly what had happened to all of those funds.

Be that as it may, those moneys are used as the money from Loto Canada would have been used for programs that exist in fitness and amateur sports and in culture and would not have been available and are not available for the purposes of a new program. They are committed, needed and are part of the ongoing expenditures of those departments. Indeed, if there is to be support for the Calgary Olympics, there must be a new source of support.

I wish to say that the reason we cannot agree to the deletion of this clause is that if, as has been suggested by the Hon. Member opposite, the Provinces stop sending that money as part of their agreement when we establish a sports pool, then there is no question that we would want the right immediately to go back into lotteries. Therefore we need that power.

I want it quite clearly understood that sports pools are different from lotteries. The establishment of sports pools does not break any agreement that may exist, and we question whether any agreement exists. If the Provinces do not send the money it would suit me fine, because Loto Canada or its equivalent would be re-established.

I would like to comment on the remarks of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) on this motion. I hope that what has been said by the Hon. Member for Calgary West and how he said it has been noted by the people of Calgary. If we have ever seen anyone put up every kind of faulty argument against a project that is aimed at assisting his particular area, we have seen an example of it from the Member for Calgary West this afternoon. First, he says that the federal Government guaranteed $200 million for the Olympics. The record clearly shows that we said we would provide money out of non-tax revenue. If the Hon. Member is suggesting, as one or two backbenchers over there suggested previously, that in the unlikely proposition that they came into power they would pay it out of general revenue, then let them say that publicly. I do not think that they will find public support for the use of tax dollars to that extent. The use of a sports pool is quite a different matter.

The Member for Calgary West complained that we said the Conservative Party was filibustering. We have said quite clearly that there was debate in the House on second reading of this Bill after it was introduced for first reading. It then went to committee where there were a number of long sessions involving much debate and many questions over a substantial period of time. When the Bill came back to the House, the Conservative Party would not agree to a time limitation, as is customary with most Bills of this type, in order to get it through and allow them to either vote for or against it, but at least permit democracy to operate and let a decision be made. If the Bill passes, this would also allow Calgary to begin to receive some benefit, as well as other organizations which would benefit from this cause.

The Hon. Member says they want to go ahead with this but it has failed in Quebec. It is strange that they and Reuben Baetz from Ontario who has the benefit of countless of millions of dollars for programs in Ontario because they have the lotteries that were given up by the previous Government, come before the committee and say that this will not be a success and should not be entered into. I have to question his reasoning when he says he actually feels that there may be an element of competition. The research we have undertaken has shown that sports pools appeal to a very different clientele than lotteries. Indeed, all the research in other countries indicate that as well. We chose this method, rather than returning to lotteries, to try to minimize the conflict with the Provinces.

I would have thought that a Member whose area was as interested or involved as that of the Hon. Member for Calgary West would have taken the trouble to do his homework before coming here to speak. He said that the Province of Quebec tried the sports pool and it failed. So would any lottery that a Province undertook if it tried it on the same basis that the Province of Quebec tried its sports pool. It did not put up any particular prize. It did not advertise that there was a prize of $100,000; $500,000 or $1 million. It merely said that a portion of the amount from the number of tickets sold would be available for first prize. If not many tickets were sold, perhaps the prize would be $10. Try a lottery on that basis and see how much money you make out of it. They did not want to succeed with their sports pool. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) should have known that. He should have taken the trouble to have found that out before coming in here and saying what he did. He mentioned the size of the market. We talked about the different clientele.

• (1710)

I am not terribly in favour of lotteries myself. I do like sports pools a little better than lotteries, I think, because they involve the skill of a person who follows the sport—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Regan: The Hon. Member laughs. I bet I can decide the scores of the Stanley Cup better than he—

Mr. Fennell: I would not want to boast about that.

Mr. Regan: —because I have a little skill.

Mr. Fennell: That is not skill.

Mr. Regan: The Hon. Member would not want to boast. He can take that sort of sophisticated attitude that sport is nonsense.

An Hon. Member: That is a crap game.

Mr. Regan: The Hon. Member says it is a crap game. He might be good at marbles, but I doubt it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Regan: Several Members on the other side, and I am speaking particularly of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and the Hon. Member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott), talked with that superior attitude that we as legislators should decide whether or not people are allowed to spend their money in a certain way, and that we should regulate, it. Probably we should say that no working man is allowed to buy more than 12 pints of beer a month. Probably we should say that a person is not allowed to go to bingo more than twice a month. That is the attitude they show in their words when they say quite clearly, it is very bad for working people, and this is a tax on the poor. All of the statistics show it is not a tax on the poor. People who buy sports pool tickets where they exist and, indeed, those who buy lottery tickets come equally from all income segments. Just to say automatically it is a tax on the poor without having done homework again is something about which I complain.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Surveys prove it.

Mr. Regan: The surveys prove exactly what I just said. The statistics are quite clear on the subject. All income groups spend approximately one-third of 1 per cent of their annual income on this subject.

I want to say there are two or three things which the likeable rogue from Edmonton North mentioned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) but the ten-minute period allotted to him has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent. Therefore I recognize the Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges).

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to take part in this debate on Bill C-95, to provide for Government operated pool systems on combinations of athletic contests and to amend certain sections of the Criminal Code and the Income Tax Act. The extent of the Bill is to establish the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation.

Once this corporation is in full swing, its net earnings will be paid to the Receiver General of Canada, another name for the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The Consolidated Revenue Fund will pay out funds in support of one or more of the activities such as art and culture, fitness and amateur sport, medical research, the 1988 Calgary Olympics and other worthy capital projects of national interest in those fields.

Bill C-95 will also amend Section 188 of the Criminal Code to allow the Government of Canada to operate and manage a pool system of betting, either alone or together with one or more of the Provinces. This Bill, Mr. Speaker, will also amend Section 40(2)(f) of the Income Tax Act so that neither gains nor losses from betting will affect taxation.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) has stated that $200 million has been pledged to the 1988 Calgary Olympics, and he stated as well I believe that all this money would be coming from this proposed sports pool and from no other Government source.

However, the Secretary of State has failed to acknowledge that under the 1979 federal-provincial lotteries agreement there are funds available as well for the federal Government to assist not only the 1988 Calgary Olympics but international amateur sports events that take place in Canada. The Calgary Olympics is also assured funds from the sales of stamps and coins. So I say again that the Secretary of State should acknowledge such additional funds for Calgary in any further statements on this matter.

During the committee hearings, Mr. Speaker, there was considerable testimony given by interested groups on the pros and cons of this Bill. The race tracks of Canada were alarmed about the detrimental effect this Bill would have on track racing all across Canada. Evidence was presented to demonstrate the negative effect lotteries have had on horse racing bets, not only in Canada but in the United States as well. I was happy to see that positive consideration was given to their request to exclude horse racing as a sports pool category for the placing of bets.

I believe representations were also made by the Inter-Church Committee on Lotteries; the Council of Executive Directors of the National Sport and Recreation Centre; the Province of Ontario; the Canadian Conference of the Arts and others. All in all some eight amendments were passed in committee in an effort to accommodate representations and to improve and make Bill C-95 a better Bill.

It has been estimated by the Secretary of State that the net annual return from this pool would be about $80 million. This figure has been contested by others who estimate that the gross annual return would not exceed $30 million and the net return to the federal Government would be in the neighbourhood of $15 million. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it is pretty difficult to estimate any figure with any degree of accuracy. Hopefully for those who stand to benefit from this pool it will be around the $80 million mark.

Although the committee in its deliberations was not prepared to move an amendment committing the funds to a fixed distribution formula, it has been suggested that the funds be allocated on the basis of 40 per cent for major amateur sport or cultural projects and 20 per cent each for fitness and amateur sports, arts and culture and medical and health research. However, because of the commitment of up to $200 million for the Calgary Olympics, it is evident that far more than 40 per cent of the net proceeds would have to be paid to Calgary over the short term. Therefore it is quite evident that the percentages may not be strictly adhered to.

I do not doubt, Mr. Speaker, that there could be a lot of unforeseen difficulties that may arise once the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation is in operation. I hope any difficulties that may arise will be dealt with in an efficient and business-like manner so that the worthy organizations the sports pool will be supporting will receive the necessary assistance and financial backing that they so well deserve.

However, having said all this, there is no question, as the Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) has already stated, that this legislation poses some serious questions. Bill C-95 not only seeks to establish a new Crown Corporation to conduct and manage a sports pool, but to establish as well any other lawful gaming activities as the Government may direct. It could operate a bingo, a video slot machine game or whatever. Therefore it should have the courage to come to Parliament for that authorization because this particular clause in the Bill is nothing but a blank cheque. It is mind boggling to realize that Bill C-95 will allow the Government to try its hand at any game going. The Government says it may not do this but who can say what may take place in the future?

This legislation as well does not stipulate the designation of the Auditor General as the Corporation's auditor, especially in view of the ill-fated problem experienced with Loto Canada a few years ago. Loto Canada was one of a number of Crown Corporations singled out by the Auditor General as operating far too independently of Parliament. To add insult to injury, the Government's insistence that it choose the auditor for the Sport Pool Corporation can only leave us with the thought that the Government has no intention of letting Parliament scrutinize the Corporation's books or dealings. To me this is certainly a positive indication that the Government must have something to hide, must have something it does not want scrutinized, such as a possible way to cover up any sign of favouritism, political or otherwise, as to who gets the grants. If the Government denies this, then it should have no objection to having the Auditor General do the auditing. Since the Government does object to the Auditor General, then one can only draw the obvious conclusion. This only confirms, Mr. Speaker, what many Canadians are already aware of, that this Government has lost the trust and confidence of all the people of Canada.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in opposition to Bill C-95.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) is seeking the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I realize it is difficult for the Chair to see this part of the Chamber from this particular angle, but I have been standing up ever since the debate on this amendment began and I have not yet been recognized.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair does its best to recognize everyone concerned. At the moment the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) has the floor.

Mr. Young: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in opposition to Bill C-95 for many of the reasons which have been mentioned by previous speakers in this debate. My opposition has absolutely nothing to do with a perceived or conceived lack of support for Canada's position on the winter Olympics. My opposition stems from my belief that the Government's further intrusion into the gambling industry, whether or not it likes to recognize it as such, is in fact just that and gives its stamp of approval to gambling.

Based upon figures I have seen in the past, contrary to what the Minister said in his remarks a few moments ago, there is clear indication that the individuals who are more likely to take part in lotteries or sports pools are those at the low end of the income scale. In fact, the Minister's argument that this is not a form of gambling as much as it may be a form of voluntary taxation is of great concern to me.

In my view the Government's entrance into this field over the last several years is nothing more than an additional tax on the poor. The available statistics which have been gathered by the Government and by Government agencies certainly give a clear indication of that. A 1977 profile commissioned by Lotto Canada found that 54 per cent of the buyers of lottery tickets earned less than $20,000 per year. A similar study conducted by Gallup found that 73 per cent of people earning less than $6,000 per year took part in Wintario. This is the clientele to whom the Government's betting schemes are really appealing.

The matter of grave concern to myself and to other Members, particularly those in my own Party, is found in the Clause before us at this time. It talks about a voluntary taxation through a sports pool to fund an addition to the games, to support arts and culture, worthy capital projects of national interest and medical and health research. I always considered support for arts and culture and support for medical and health research to be a responsibility in the best interest of Canadians as a whole and certainly Canada as a society. I considered this to be a responsibility of all Canadians not just those people at the low end of the income scale who may be tempted because of the economic conditions in which they find themselves as a result of Government policy to try to find a way out of those difficulties by buying dreams through the kinds of programs about which the Government is talking. That is what the Government is doing. It is selling dreams. The chances or the odds of an individual who participates in that kind of activity, these lotteries or sports pools, actually coming out a winner are decidedly low.

When we consider what the Government has done recently in terms of its support for medical and health research, post-secondary education and other policy areas which come under the Established Programs Financing Act, we should be extremely concerned. We see the Government beginning to talk about supporting necessary Government services through voluntary taxation by legalized Government-supported gambling. That is a matter of extreme concern to me. It is not a question, as the Minister mentioned earlier, of Governments, politicians or elected officials telling people on what they can or cannot gamble. That is not the question. The question is whether the Government is actively promoting the raising of taxation for very necessary services through gambling under the programs it is introducing. That is the point which must be addressed in this debate. Throughout his remarks I did not hear the Minister address that issue.

The Minister dragged into the debate a whole number of red herrings, but I did not once hear him give an argument which would justify me or Members of my caucus giving any semblance of support or speaking in favour of this kind of activity or this kind of Government initiative.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) had the same speech writer as the previous speaker from his Party. I want to make a few brief remarks on Motion No. 3. The Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) said it was brought in because of the Clause of the Bill it was amending, as they referred to it, the Mack truck clause. If it is a Mack truck Clause; certainly it is a "get the Tories off the hook" amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I believe the House is currently debating Motion No. 2. Is the Hon. Member directing his remarks to that motion?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I will take over then.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Just a moment. Does the Hon. Member want to direct his remarks to motion No. 2?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry, I just used the wrong number. Rather than Motion No. 2 I said, "motion No. 3".

We have witnessed a fair amount of Tory sleight of hand in the speeches we have heard on this particular Clause. I support this Bill with somewhat mixed emotions. The garbage we have heard from the other side of the House helped me decide to support it. Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party want all these activities supported from general Government revenue. It seems that they do not take cognizance of the fact that Canada economically, socially and developmentally is still very much a developing country, and that there is not the necessary revenue for the Government of Canada to support everything.

• (1730)

We had the opportunity to support cultural, recreational and research activities through non-governmental revenue until the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) gave it away. We no longer have it. They have made much of the fact that the Calgary games—

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to straighten out the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne). It is wrong for a Member to say things like that. I have a lot of admiration for that Member, however he should realize that this Minister never sat down and talked with his provincial counterparts in order to see if any of these moneys—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. With all due respect to the Hon. Member for Edmonton North, the rules permit only ten minutes per speaker. The Chair has recognized the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi. I am sure there will be another opportunity to intervene.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, that was a very fine ruling. The Hon. Member was not rising on a point of order, but to debate a different issue altogether.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) will have to answer to the people of Calgary for the position he took when he rushed in, made a few remarks and rushed out. He will have to answer for his opposition to this Bill.

I support the Bill because of the commitment made by the Government of Canada to the XV Olympiad. Whether it is in Calgary, Vancouver or wherever, I as a Canadian am proud that we will have the Olympiad in Canada. I believe that we should have top-notch facilities. I do not agree with the NDP that some of the poorest communities in this country should be taxed for general revenues to pay for sports facilities they will probably never see. This is a fair and equitable way of providing non-tax revenue to the Government to fulfil its commitment to the City of Calgary in the provision of these facilities.

I am also here to support this Bill because of the gobbledegook we have heard from the Tories and NDP about how this is a tax on the poor, how we are forcing the poor to support activities in which the wealthy will participate. I have never taken the view that because you are poor you are ipso facto stupid. I resent the argument that if you are poor, you are too stupied to know whether you should buy lottery tickets or participate in a sports pool. I want it on record that I do not believe that poverty is synonomous with stupidity.

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, I will not take too much time as I know others want to speak and we may be able to get this Bill through. As Conservatives, we like to co-operate. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is in the Chamber. Are you now in charge of lotteries? Am I to understand that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is in charge of lotteries? I hear you really want lotteries in Health and Welfare. Do you really think that lotteries are the greatest thing in the world for research?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Will the Hon. Member please direct his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Paproski: I want to expand a little on what was said by my hon. friend from Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne). It will cost the Government $55 million up front money to get into this so-called sports pool. Nothing like that has been mentioned here.

The Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan), who is in charge of lotteries, had the greatest opportunity in the world in the last three years to sit down with his provincial counterparts in charge of lotteries. He could have told him that we would be bidding for the Winter Olympics, and whether Calgary, Vancouver or somewhere else got it, we will need one or two lotteries that go directly to funding the olympics. Do you know what the provincial people would have said if the Minister had had the courtesy to call them together or visit them? They would have said that they wanted to support the Olympics. They would have been delighted to give him three or four draws annually from their lotteries in order to help the various sporting events and the games in Calgary.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): On a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi will know that there is a ten-minute period allowed. His point of order should be a point of order.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): My point of order is that I believe the Hon. Member is inadvertently misleading the House. I am sure he would not do it deliberately. He is suggesting that if the Minister had negotiated, he could have reversed the give-away that this Minister made when he was Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Paproski: I am really surprised at the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi. He should stick to transport. He is a great Chairman of the Transport Committee, but he should forget about lotteries. He is so far behind that he thinks he is first.

I will repeat only one more time that I do not know who made the studies for this Minister. I am sure they are sitting in the gallery and gloating. They spent a whole year and close to a million dollars studying the different games to see whether they could do something about getting into Loto Select, the loto pool, gambling or whatever it is.

The Minister hopes this will not go through because it will cost $55 million. Will he go to Cabinet and ask for $55 million or will he take the money that the poor people from Fitness and Amateur Sport were supposed to get? The Minister now has $47 million in the kitty and $16.5 million of that lottery fund is supposed to go for scholarships for our athletes. It is in there, but it will not go to the athletes.

The Minister should have had the courtesy to talk to his provincial counterparts. Before we began this debate today I had the opportunity to talk with three or four of the Ministers concerned. They told me they would have been delighted to hear from him, but they have not heard from him in three years. This guy is going out on his own and doing these things by himself. He will have to go to his Cabinet colleagues and tell them it will cost $55 million up front money to start this game of chance, this betting game, this double tax. He will ask them to help him out because the cannot start this poker game until he has $55 million on the table. We will have to watch this Minister because he is a cagey one. He left Fitness and Amateur Sport and now he is in International Trade. God only knows where he will be after the next election.

• (1740)

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather interesting that the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) is talking about the Minister, the former Secretary of State, presenting this Bill to the House. Where is the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal)? What relationship has the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) to the lotteries? He has better things to do so that this country can sell its products. I think the truth of the matter is, he happens to be from Halifax and the current Secretary of State happens to be from Quebec, and probably does not agree with this Bill because he knows it is unpopular in his Province. That is a good point that we should keep in mind.

I have finally found out what are the skills of the Minister of State for International Trade. His skills are picking out who is going to win the hockey game. Thank God, he has some skills!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With respect to the Hon. Member, there is a rule of relevance in debate in relation to the subject matter before us. The Chair suggests to the Hon. Member that possibly the subject matter of the motion might be spoken to.

Mr. Fennell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think you will acknowledge that I am usually relevant. I was just getting warmed up so that I could explain why I disagree with this Bill. I was trying to put the players in place.

Our motion is basically very discreet. It is to do one job, finish it and get on with the show.

I have had substantial background in amateur sport. I happened to be the president of one of the senior sport federations at the time they were all dragged to Ottawa. The former Minister of National Health and Welfare who then was responsible for this was the man that blackmailed us into coming to the city.

I do not like this lottery because I look back at the past and I see Nancy Greene a great Canadian hero. We did not have lotteries then. We had private citizens who helped finance her to become the world champion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fennell: What happened when we moved sports and brought the lottery into Ottawa? We built up a tremendous administration.

The point I make is that I do not believe in lotteries. Lotteries are immoral. The Minister tries to justify them on the basis of skill. That is like saying that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) justifies his ability on the basis of throwing dice. It is ridiculous to have this Government debate a crap game. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but that is exactly what it is.

This Bill is only talking about raising enough money to build a palace in which to hold a sports event. If you want to do something worthwhile for sport in this country, we must talk to the grassroots of the sports people in this country we must help them so we can be proud of them when they go overseas. Those are the people I am talking about. That help could be provided by removing the $100 present tax deduction on our tax form and allowing 150 per cent write-off against income for any donations to charitable organizations. We do not go to the lower income people to get our tax money. We go to the middle and upper income people to provide the basis of what is wanted by the people.

Our decisions about the lottery are all being made for us here in Ottawa. I think that is the wrong way to do it. Let the people decide. We should not decide here in Ottawa how the money to support these projects should be raised. Let the people decide what sports they want to support.

If you are going to build a coliseum or whatever you need in Calgary, then work out a deal with Calgarians. Obtain a third from the federal Government, a third from the Province, and a third through private donations. The people will come up with the money if you give them a reasonable tax break. We are trying to impose the wishes of bureaucrats in Ottawa upon Canadians across the country. That is not fair.

I have seen people in my own riding who have won lotteries. There have been tragedies. My wife is a professional in the social field and she has seen damage done to families who have won money from the lotteries. It is an indirect taxation and it affects those people who can least afford it.

The Hon. Minister tells me that there is a skill involved. Well, it is a million-to-one shot kind of a skill. If that is a skill, I would prefer to put my efforts into something with more favorable odds. I notice they took horse racing out of this Bill. That is interesting. If you are going to throw in hockey teams, why not throw in horses?

Mr. Paproski: Eugene Whelan says no.

Mr. Fennell: Was it Eugene Whelan? Whether it be hockey players or horses running around a track, it is all flesh and blood.

The major point made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton North was that the Minister had never gone to the Provinces to try and work out a reasonable proposition. He has never tried to work it out. Consider Wintario and the Provincial lottery. Look at the cost involved in administering those funds compared to Loto Canada which took in something like $750 million and netted $211 million out of that. The cost of administration was immense. When the Conservatives were in power, we disassembled that monstrosity. Bringing them back is a way of patronage to Liberal supporters.

I feel that in a country where every incentive to the private sector and to the citizens to get a job is removed by the Government economic policy the ultimate in socialism is to give one chance in a million to win a million bucks. One of the ambassadors to Canada brought up this point. He said, "You know, if they put the incentive to those people to invest in common stock and equity in this country, the country would be working again". Instead we are putting it into a crap game. An example of the Government's involvement in sports this year is the Canadian ski team which, at the last race of the year, was told to cough up $2,000. That is shameful. That is the kind of administration we have in Ottawa. The Minister makes fun of this but he does not know these people as I do. They were juniors when I was in that organization.

I maintain that this Bill should be defeated. I do not think this motion is strong enough. I would plead with the Members on the other side not to vote for this. It is immoral. If you have any sense of moral being, do not vote for this Bill. The churches do not want you to support it. Why should we give sports a greater advantage than we give churches which are having a hard time covering their parish costs? This is wrong.

An Hon. Member: Why do they hold lotteries all the time?

Mr. Fennell: They do not hold this type of lottery. They have bingo games at which they work hard to bring the people together, to create a community resource and a community adventure. This is strictly gambling, Mr. Speaker. This is the same thing as going to the State of New York to the lottery shops or the horse-betting shops and betting on a horse race. This is totally wrong. The funds are going to the wrong place. It is not helping the amateur sports enthusiast. It is hurting the amateur sports enthusiast because it is only looking after the cream of the crop. We must start building a base in this country just as we should be building a base in our armed forces at the grassroots. We have nothing but generals and colonels. I am sorry I am using that as an analogy, but we must start building a base of sports that is for all people across this country and not just the select few.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this pig-in-a-poke sort of operation that we have before us today and I call it a pig-in-a-poke for good reason. I do not know how many Members on the other side have read the Bill, aside from the Minister who presented it and spoke on it. I found his comments rather amusing. The Minister responsible for the Bill is not in the House so I do not think it is of any great interest to the Government.

• (1750)

On page 6 of the Bill, Clause 14 sets out the objects of the corporation as being to "organize, operate and manage pool systems" in accordance with regulations made pursuant to Section 16. That is enough to make the Bill into a real pig in a very real poke because we do not know what those regulations are.

Clause 16 provides that the Governor in Council may make regulations which regulate "the organization, operation and management of pool systems" and describes the terms and the portion of moneys to be paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund. These are the regulations that the Governor in Council may make with respect to the operation of the corporation.

Clause 17 provides that the Minister shall cause a copy of the regulations made under the previous section to be laid before Parliament. We do not know what those regulations are, yet under the provisions of the Bill we are being asked to agree to the existence of a corporation which will organize pool systems which are to be regulated according to regulations we have not seen. If that is not a pig in a poke I do not think I have ever seen one. It is preposterous that the Government should ask us to agree to the creation of an institution to be run in accordance with regulations we have not seen.

The amendment before us proposes that the second portion of Clause 14 should be eliminated. I am at a loss to understand how any self-respecting Government could come forward with the objects of the corporation as set out in paragraph (b), to conduct and manage in accordance with the regulations such lawful gaming activities etcetera.

On page 14 of the Bill the Government has proposed a change in the law to make this lawful. The Criminal Code is to be amended to make the activities under this Bill lawful. If there is anything that stretches the credibility of a Government more than that I do not know of it. I hope any action of any Government would be lawful, but this Government wants to make special provision in the Bill to amend the Criminal Code so that the corporation it is to create will act in a lawful fashion. I think the House should be ashamed of itself, Mr. Speaker. Surely lawfulness should exist; laws should not have to be amended to fit corporations, yet that is what we are being asked to do.

The other element of the Bill which has me worried is that it creates another Crown corporation in complete disregard of the comments of the 1982 Report of the Auditor General on page 45, paragraph 2.6 which reads as follows:

> Increasingly, the corporate form is being chosen by Government to achieve public policy objectives . . . With assets of approximately $67 billion, liabilities of over $57 billion, annual expenditures of over $30 billion, and more employees than government departments, Crown-owned corporations require an improved framework for accountability to both Parliament and Government.

I have already spoken about accountability. We are being asked to see the creation of something which will subscribe to regulations we have not seen. I do not know what got into the Government, that it should propose this on the floor of this House. It is as outrageous as what happened yesterday.

In addition to that, we are asked to amend the Criminal Code in certain respects so that it will fit in with the activities of this particular corporation. In other words, it is suggested that what we are doing is creating a corporation which will be involved in unlawful operations, until we agree to make them lawful. I become speechless when I think of that sort of conduct by a Government.

Clause 14 would permit the corporation to engage in unlawful activities to be made lawful in Clause 33.

Mr. Paproski: What is the Government going to legalize next?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It has legalized many things since 1968. I find it beyond belief that any Government should present a Bill of this sort enabling a corporation to perform functions which are obviously not legal, but have to be made legal with this particular law.

In his 1982 Report the Auditor General said that the agent status for Crown corporations occupied a twilight area in Canadian jurisprudence. In other words, this Crown corporation will be able to plead, before the courts that it is immune from the law in many respects as have other Crown corporations. I have for example the quotation from representations made before the Supreme Court of Canada in January this year.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, it being six o'clock p.m., pursuant to Order made Wednesday, March 30, 1983, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

May I remind Hon. Members that at that time the House will consider a Ways and Means Motion of the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

He said: Madam Speaker, my dominant concern in preparing this budget has been to help the more than one and a half million Canadians who want to work but cannot find jobs.

Economic recovery is under way in Canada. The recession that has crippled us for over a year has bottomed out. Industrial production is up. Housing starts are up. Inflation is down and so are interest rates. Even more importantly, business and consumer confidence is on the upswing. When I started my pre-budget consultations, last November, few expected recovery to begin in 1983 without massive fiscal stimulus. By late March, a significant shift in opinion had occurred. The prevailing view was that the economy was already on the mend.

Yet the pace, scope, stability and duration of the recovery remain highly uncertain. Employment has started to grow again, but unemployment remains very high and will decline only gradually. Unemployment is particularly high among young people. We must do all we can to relieve the anguish and hardship that unemployment is inflicting on Canadian workers and their families. More importantly, we must shorten as much as possible the time it will take for the private sector to expand and provide jobs for the unemployed.

Much will depend on developments abroad that are largely beyond our control, such as the strength of the recovery in the United States, Europe, Japan and the Third World. Much will also depend on the collective behaviour of Canadians and on the response of the private sector to the measures I am proposing in this budget. Sustained recovery will depend on our ability to take full advantage of growth opportunities as they arise this year and next, and through the rest of the eighties. It will depend on the self-discipline, solidarity and sense of national purpose we will be able to muster to that end—all Canadians, labour as well as business, federal and provincial governments alike.

BUDGET STRATEGY

This recovery budget, therefore, has two central and inseparable goals. The first is to make sure that recent stirrings of growth pervade the whole economy as quickly as possible. The second is to make the recovery a durable one by beginning immediately to create the conditions required for sustained growth and development during the rest of the eighties. Underlying these goals is the government's determination to ensure that Canadians are provided with the jobs they need—good jobs, permanent jobs, satisfying and well paid jobs.

The pursuit of these twin goals calls for actions that take hold immediately but that are also geared to the medium term. The first goal demands additional stimulus this year. But the second goal would be unattainable without decisive action now to reduce the deficit in future years. Expenditure restraint will therefore continue, and measures will be introduced to raise more revenue as the recovery buoys up income and employment.

• (2010)

Strong, lasting recovery and the significant reduction of unemployment we need will come primarily through the private sector: the economy's main engine of growth. I shall accordingly introduce measures to strengthen the financial position of Canadian businesses, farmers and fishermen, improve their capacity to undertake productive investment, and assist them in obtaining more equity capital. Measures in support of resource industries, agriculture and human resources development will be announced. Other initiatives will seek to enhance our technological base, research and development effort, export performance, productivity and competitiveness.

A significant increase in private investment can certainly not be expected before next year. In view of the personal hardship and social costs resulting from high unemployment, I have concluded that the recovery must be given an additional boost in its early stages. Federal capital projects planned for later in this decade will therefore be speeded up. More funds will be allocated now to direct support for employment. Some tax relief will be given to low-income workers. More support will be provided to lower income groups through the child benefit system. Housing programs will be expanded.

Canadians have supported the 6 and 5 program introduced in last June's budget. The government remains committed to this program. We have come a long way together in reducing inflation. It is essential that this progress continue as we recover. This will require the continued cooperation of all Canadians. But it also demands responsibility in the exercise of monetary and fiscal policies. Our monetary policy seeks to achieve the lowest interest rates consistent with continuing resistance to inflation and with international circumstances. The actions I will announce tonight will ensure that the government's financial requirements will not compromise the continuing implementation of responsible monetary policy.

These considerations have shaped the broad policy framework of this recovery budget. It builds on the spirit of the 6 and 5 program and establishes an effective framework for national recovery. I have been guided in its preparation by the basic principles of economic management set out in my Economic Statement of October 27, 1982. This is a fiscally responsible budget. I have maintained and improved the social security system we have built over past decades and that has helped millions of Canadians weather the recession. I am relying primarily on the dynamism and creativity of the private sector to bring about durable recovery. My budget is outward-looking and avoids protectionist measures, in recognition of the fact that recovery in one country at the expense of others is neither feasible nor desirable.

[English]

The budget also reflects extensive consultations with the private sector as well as provincial governments. I thank the many groups and the thousands of individual Canadians, including the Members of this House, who have advised me over the past five months, at the many meetings I have held in all parts of the country or through written submissions. Their suggestions and recommendations have been considered seriously and many are being implemented. I likewise express my appreciation to provincial ministers of finance and treasurers, with whom I met in December and March to review our respective economic and fiscal policies and consider how best we could cooperate to bring about recovery.

SPECIAL RECOVERY PROGRAM

The Government is introducing tonight a $4.8 billion Special Recovery Program to spur recovery and restore as quickly as possible the economy's capacity to generate the new jobs Canadians need.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: As most Canadians are now aware, I received a group of photographers in my office yesterday as part of a pre-budget "photo opportunity" session. A copy of the proposed budget speech was on my desk. I held it up and rapidly turned the pages. A cameraman was standing behind me and, unknown to me, photographed several pages of the proposed speech. The cameraman was thereby able to obtain some information about the contents of the proposed budget. This was clearly contrary to the spirit of this "photo opportunity" session, but the fact remains that the event occurred.

Traditionally, a budget leak involves premature disclosure of a tax matter. Fortunately this is not the case. However, in some quarters any matter or fact connected with the budget might be considered to be of this character. To remove any doubt, I have decided to change the portion of the budget which would otherwise have been prematurely in the public domain.

I have decided to increase the Special Recovery Program to $4.8 billion. This additional $200 million will be added to the Special Recovery Capital Projects, details of which I will give in a moment. The monies will be set aside as a special fund to be spent on projects akin to those already contemplated in the Special Recovery Capital Projects.

As a result of this action, the deficit and financial requirements of the Government for 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 will be increased $100 million, $50 million and $50 million, respectively. Other appropriate adjustments should be made in reading the printed material distributed tonight. This will no doubt cause some confusion, since the printed material distributed across the country and in the House is no longer accurate. For this, I apologize.

There is some irony in all of this. During the past week, I have debated with myself and with my advisors about the precise nature the budget measures should take. My concern has been that in my desire to be fiscally responsible, I would not provide enough stimulus for the economy to secure the recovery and generate employment. Obviously, this is a matter of delicate judgement and there is no absolutely correct answer. Be that as it may, the events of the past 24 hours have led me to follow what my instincts have been urging me to do all along. If I err in this budget, I want to do it on the side of more jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: This national investment program will strengthen the structure of the Canadian economy and raise its growth potential. Its operating principle is to undertake now, in the early stages of recovery, investment that would have been required in any event during the eighties. The program will provide equal support for private and public investment, but all initiatives are designed ultimately to improve the financial position, growth prospects and job creation capacity of the private sector. Over half of planned expenditures and tax incentives will be incurred this year and next, to give the economy the early boost it needs.

The Government's overriding priority is to ensure that Canada has the capital equipment, productive facilities, skills and knowledge we need to meet the competitive challenges that will arise from world-wide recovery. The Special Recovery Program will also provide new and immediate job and business opportunities for Canadians throughout the country—not only those living in the communities where new facilities will be built, but workers and suppliers in all sectors and all regions.

● (2020)

My Cabinet colleagues will provide further information in the days ahead on the projects to be launched immediately in areas under their responsibility. But I want to outline briefly tonight the key features of the program's two main components, Special Recovery Capital Projects and Special Recovery Incentives for Private Investment.

SPECIAL RECOVERY CAPITAL PROJECTS

The Government of Canada is committing $2.4 billion for Special Recovery Capital Projects selected and designed to build, expand or improve public facilities that directly support private sector expansion and the steady improvement of our economic performance essential for recovery.

More than a hundred projects have been selected. They are in the advanced planning stage. All have a lead time to start-up of less than six months. Work on most of them will start this spring or early summer. Canadians will be working on Special Recovery Capital Projects sites in all parts of the country. Earth will be moved, steel will be rigged and concrete will be poured in the coming months to implement those projects. Canadian firms will start getting orders for the wide range of goods and services required to complete them—construction materials and engineering services, planes and ships, advanced electronic and laboratory equipment, to mention just a few.

There will be no red tape and no delays. All projects are being put on a "fast track" to ensure that they start on time, progress as planned, and are completed as quickly as possible. All applicable government planning, approval, tendering and other procedures are being streamlined to facilitate fast-tracking. All departments and agencies are being instructed to give priority attention to the swift implementation of the projects for which they are responsible, within the cost estimates that have been established. The government will also seek the active cooperation of the private sector and of provincial authorities to make sure that projects stay on track and within cost. The co-operation of management and labour organizations in the construction industry will be critical to ensure effective implementation of these projects.

My colleague, the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), will assume overall responsibility for Special Recovery Capital Projects. He will be assisted by a special committee of Cabinet. A Special Recovery Capital Projects Board has been established to co-ordinate the management and execution of projects on time and on budget.

Almost 30 per cent of outlays on construction, materials and procurement for Special Recovery Capital Projects will take place in the current fiscal year. Seventy per cent of the funds committed for these projects will have been spent by March 31, 1984, and the rest over the two succeeding years. As a result, the projects will give the economy a boost when it is most needed. They will be phasing out as private investment accelerates and begins to make heavier demands on the capacity of the construction and other industries.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, Special Recovery Capital Projects form an integral part of a broad action plan designed to generate more growth and more jobs. They will not only provide employment in the near term, but also increase permanently the capacity of the economy to create employment. Most selected projects had already been included in the capital plans of federal departments and agencies for the latter part of the decade, because of the contribution they would make to national development. The amounts spent on accelerated projects over the next four years will result in lower government spending in later years.

The projects will focus on six key areas: transportation, research and training facilities, resource development, vessel procurement, land and tourism development and high-technology procurement. The projects are future-oriented, aiming to build and upgrade research and high technology centres, transportation infrastructure and other facilities and services that will enhance the long-term growth potential of Canadian industry. They will provide much-needed support for several currently weak sectors of the economy, such as construction, shipbuilding, fisheries and forestry.

The impact of Special Recovery Capital Projects will be felt throughout Canada and increase economic activity in most major urban centres and many smaller communities. Some provinces have already introduced their own capital projects programs. These provincial initiatives will also help strengthen the recovery. I hope other provinces will take similar action in their forthcoming budgets. The overall result will be a more modern and efficient stock of public capital, to assist Canadian firms in their drive for improved productivity and competitiveness and to create more jobs for Canadians.

[English]

SPECIAL RECOVERY INCENTIVES FOR PRIVATE INVESTMENT

The second component of the Special Recovery Program is directly aimed at accelerating productive investment and job creation in the private sector. I am proposing tonight important changes in the federal investment tax credit. These changes will not increase the level of existing incentives, but will make them more readily usable by firms undertaking new investments after today. Firms will also be eligible for support from a Special Recovery Investment Fund and a Special Recovery Export Financing Fund. The cost of these measures will be $2.4 billion over the next four fiscal years.

Businesses in Canada can now earn a credit against federal income taxes on eligible investment. The credit is at least 7 per cent of investment costs. In designated areas of the country, the credit can be as much as 50 per cent of the cost of investment. Until now, there have been limits on the extent to which this credit could be used to reduce income taxes, and unused credits could be carried forward for no more than five years.

For eligible investment undertaken after today, I am proposing to remove the limits on the ability to claim the investment tax credit. I am also proposing that credits earned in a year may be used to reduce taxes in any of three previous years or seven subsequent years. In addition, the investment tax credit will be extended to heavy equipment used in the construction industry.

These changes in the federal investment tax credit will be permanent. They will increase the ability of firms to use the existing credit, and thus enhance its effectiveness. They will provide about $1.3 billion of support for private investment over the next four fiscal years.

However, all too many Canadian businesses are not presently in a position to pay taxes because of their weak profit position or the losses that the recession has inflicted on them. This applies particularly to small businesses in all parts of the country. For firms that are not now in a taxable position, the investment tax credit is not a strong incentive to invest. Yet they, too, must be encouraged to do so as early as possible if the recovery is to take hold and to last. They must also be assisted in securing the equity capital required to finance investment. I am, therefore, proposing two further but temporary changes to the federal investment tax credit.

First, I propose that a portion of investment tax credits earned between today and April 30, 1986 be designated as a Special Recovery Refundable Investment Tax Credit and refunded directly to business. For small business corporations and unincorporated businesses, that portion will be 40 per cent of credits that cannot be used to offset taxes in the year they are earned. For other businesses the refundable portion will be 20 per cent.

● (2030)

Second, I propose that a Special Recovery Share-Purchase Tax Credit be established. Firms that invest and issue new equity will be able to flow-out their investment tax credits to the purchasers of new equity issued by them. Purchasers of new common shares issued by such firms after June 30 of this year and before December 31, 1986 will be able to use these credits to the extent of 25 per cent of the value of the shares. The credits that can be passed on to new investors will be limited to investment tax credit earned after today. Provisions will be made to ensure that institutional investors, such as pension plans, that purchase qualifying new equity can claim the share-purchase tax credit as a cash rebate from the federal government. The measure will allow companies to attract new equity faster and at lower cost, to finance investment now and over the medium term.

I estimate that these two measures will provide over the next four years an additional $640 million in federal tax benefits to support investment and new equity issues. They will be particularly beneficial to small- and medium-size businesses, and to all firms that need to improve their balance sheets and financial position by issuing new equity in order to resume investing. They will help speed up investment and increase production and employment in Canada.

SPECIAL RECOVERY INVESTMENT FUND

I am also announcing tonight the creation of a Special Recovery Investment Fund to strengthen private investment in the early stages of the recovery. The fund will have a budget of $300 million made available to it.

The fund will be managed by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley). It will enable the minister to deploy financial resources across the full range of his departments' programs with the speed and flexibility needed to bring onstream major private investment projects with special national, regional or sectoral importance. Further information on the operation of the fund will soon be provided by the responsible minister.

SPECIAL RECOVERY EXPORT FINANCING FUND

A Special Recovery Export Financing Fund of $180 million will also be established. This fund will enable the Export Development Corporation to seek out export opportunities more aggressively than it would otherwise be able to do because of funding constraints. The fund will be drawn upon when the corporation requires funding beyond its regular programs to support the efforts of Canadian exporters to win large contracts. The corporation will have the financial capacity to enter into financing arrangements in 1983 totalling about $2.8 billion, a 15 per cent increase over the financing arrangements it concluded in 1982.

The effectiveness of the Special Recovery Fund and the Special Recovery Program will depend critically on the response and cooperation of the private sector. The government is committing $4.8 billion and is taking decisive action to revitalize Canadian industry and increase the capacity of the economy to generate new jobs. But decisive action is also required in the private sector.

I urge Canadian firms to take the fullest advantage, as soon as they can, of the investment recovery incentives I have just announced. I ask them to focus not only on outlays that increase plant capacity, which in many cases may be justified only at later stages of the recovery, but also on outlays that raise plant productivity and cut production costs. Such investment need not and should not cause workers to be laid off. I invite Canadian workers and the unions that represent them to consider what they themselves can do to facilitate an early resumption of industrial investment.

[Translation]

I said earlier, Madam Speaker, that I am prepared to accept now, while the economy is in the initial stages of recovery, an increase in the government's financial requirements to fund the Special Recovery Program. Private credit demands will remain relatively weak this year and next. It cannot be argued that support for private investment under this program will "crowd out" such investment. But we must look ahead. I am concerned about the impact of continuing high federal deficits on confidence and investment over the medium term. I have therefore concluded that this program should not cause a permanent increase in the national debt.

Accordingly, I am proposing that all incremental costs of the Special Recovery Program, both direct outlays and revenue forgone, be funded over time by a Special Recovery Tax. Specifically, I propose a one percentage point increase in the general rate of manufacturer's sales tax, from 9 per cent to 10 per cent, and similar one percentage point increases in the sales tax rates levied on construction materials, alcoholic beverages and tobacco. The imposition of this tax will be delayed so as not to impede the recovery in its early stages. The Special Recovery Tax will not become effective until October 1, 1984. It will remain in effect until December 31, 1988.

THE FINANCIAL STRENGTH OF THE PRIVATE SECTOR

Canadian businesses have been battered by the recession. In the 15-year period preceding 1981, the average share of business profits in our gross national product was 11.2 per cent. It fell to 10 per cent in 1981 and plunged to 6.2 per cent in 1982, a post-war low. Profits must return to more normal levels if the recovery is to endure. Businesses must reduce their debt loads before they can borrow to finance new investment.

Otherwise, they will not be able to invest and the recovery will fizzle out.

In our overriding concern for the hardship and anguish that unemployment has inflicted on Canadian workers and their families, we may sometimes lose sight of the fact that most Canadians are employed by the private sector. The combination of high inflation, high interest rates, falling demand and dwindling profits that marked the recession, severely strained the private sector. Short-term borrowings and credit lines were stretched to the limit. Balance sheets were thrown out of kilter and debt burdens rose dramatically.

As a result, jobs disappeared. No employer likes to lay off skilled and experienced workers or turn away promising and well-trained job seekers. They have done so, and massively over the past year and a half, because the most severe recession since the Great Depression left them no other choice. Some people lost their jobs because the firms they worked for went bankrupt. Others were laid off when their employers, faced with mounting costs and falling demand for their products, no longer had any other option.

● (2040)

[English]

The worst is now over, but it will take time for firms to reduce their debt load and resume investing at the level required to create the new jobs Canadians need. I am determined to speed up this process. The Special Recovery Program I have just outlined will encourage and enable Canadian firms to undertake new investment more quickly. But I have concluded that more needs to be done to strengthen the capacity of the private sector to create jobs. To that end, I am proposing the following changes in the tax system.

INDEXED SECURITIES INVESTMENT PLAN

I will be tabling a paper containing draft legislation to implement a new Indexed Securities Investment Plan (ISIP) as of October 1, 1983. This innovation is an important element of the Government's recovery program. The plan will encourage Canadians to invest a greater proportion of their savings in listed common shares of Canadian companies. Together with the Special Recovery Share-Purchase Tax Credit, it will help Canadian corporations raise additional equity capital and reduce their reliance on debt financing. The Indexed Securities Investment Plan is also a significant step in our systematic search for ways to remove the distorting effects of inflation from our tax system. Extensive consultations with the financial community have taken place in past months on all aspects of the plan.

TAX TREATMENT OF BUSINESS LOSSES

Business losses can now be carried back one year and forward five years to reduce income subject to tax. I am proposing that these provisions be broadened to allow business losses to be carried back for three years and forward for seven years. The full three-year carryback will take effect immediately for small corporations, farmers, fishermen and unincorporated businesses. For farmers and fishermen, the carryforward provisions will be extended to ten years rather than seven. For other businesses, the increased carryback will be phased in over two years. Taxpayers will also be allowed an increased three-year carryback of capital losses against capital gains. This will also be phased in. These measures will make it possible for firms to take better advantage of existing tax provisions. The resulting reduction in federal taxes will improve the cash flow position of the private sector by $270 million this year. Additional benefits of about $95 million will also flow to Canadian firms if all Provinces harmonize their tax systems with these measures, as they have generally done in the past.

ENERGY TAXES

I have had to contend in recent months, like my provincial counterparts and Finance Ministers the world over, with a volatile international oil market that continues to inject considerable uncertainty into economic and fiscal forecasts. Lower oil prices will assist the recovery in Canada and bolster the economies of our trading partners. Businesses and consumers will get some relief, and our progress in bringing down inflation will be reinforced. However, revenue losses to the federal treasury will be substantial, and activity in the oil and gas sector will be lower than anticipated. I am proposing tonight the following measures to address these issues.

First, I am deferring reintroduction of the Incremental Oil Revenue Tax on conventional oil for one year, from June 1, 1983 to June 1, 1984. This measure will reduce federal revenue by about $225 million and add to the industry's cash flow. The main beneficiaries will be Canadian companies that are typically the most aggressive in searching for new supplies of oil and gas.

Second, I am proposing modifications to the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax for enhanced oil recovery projects, to encourage the commercial application of techniques designed to increase the amount of oil recovered from reservoirs. These modifications will have the effect of eliminating liabilities under this tax until such time as these projects pay back their capital costs. Both of these measures will encourage activity and employment in western Canada.

Third, recent developments in international oil prices have eliminated the need for a two-price régime for aviation fuel and marine bunker fuel. Together with my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), I will be taking the necessary steps to terminate this régime, effective May 1, 1983.

The Canadian Ownership Special Charge has already made a sizeable contribution to increasing public ownership in the oil and gas industry. The Government remains strongly committed to the objective of oil self-sufficiency through raising Canadian ownership of oil and gas resources by increasing exploration and development of new reserves. It is the Government's intention to maintain the Canadian Ownership Special Charge at its current level and use the revenues in support of this objective.

MINING DEPLETION ALLOWANCES

The mining industry in Canada has been hit hard by the world recession. The tax measures I have already announced will provide substantial relief to this important Canadian industry. I am proposing tonight a further measure to increase incentives to investors who finance mining ventures. The 33⅓ per cent depletion allowances for mining exploration will be made deductible against the non-resource income of these investors. This change should attract needed capital to the sector and should particularly benefit junior mining companies.

SMALL BUSINESS

I have been particularly concerned in preparing this budget with the financial difficulties that Canada's small businesses must overcome to contribute to national economic recovery. Small firms are one of the most dynamic and innovative elements of the private sector. That so many have managed to pull through the recession is a tribute to the dedication and entrepreneurial spirit of Canadians.

Small businesses have been significantly assisted by federal programs during this period. They will benefit from all budget measures announced tonight. But I want them to recover as soon as possible. This is why I have set the Special Recovery Refundable Investment Tax Credit available to small businesses at 40 per cent, double that for other firms. This is why I have made immediately applicable to them the new three-year carryback provisions for losses.

To further assist Canadian small businesses over the recovery period, the Government will make substantial changes in the operating mandate of the Federal Business Development Bank. These changes will enable the Bank to play a more dynamic and supportive role in advising small businesses on their total financial needs and assisting them in meeting these needs. My colleague, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Rompkey), will provide further information on the expanded role of the FBDB in the next few days.

Small-business organizations as well as others have urged me to simplify the tax system and thereby reduce the paper burden and compliance costs it imposes on taxpayers. I have kept their representations in mind throughout my budget preparations and avoided complex changes wherever possible. I have concentrated on making existing tax incentives more effective, rather than introducing new ones. The proposed draft legislation for the Indexed Securities Investment Plan is quite technical, but I have been assured that financial institutions will be able to administer it effectively for investors.

Simplification of the tax system cannot be approached in a simplistic way if we are to meet effectively and equitably the varied circumstances of Canadian businesses. To pursue this effort, the co-operation of the private sector is needed. I am, therefore, pleased that the Canada Tax Foundation has accepted my suggestion to hold a national symposium on the subject this summer. I want to assure the Foundation that my Department will participate in this symposium and in follow-up activities.

FARMING

Canadian farmers will derive benefits from Special Recovery Projects and from the tax measures I am introducing to facilitate investment and strengthen the financial position of the private sector. Of particular advantage to them will be the special provision allowing farming losses to be carried forward ten years, rather than the seven years applicable to other business losses, in addition to the three-year carryback also available to them.

In recognition of the exceptional financial difficulties being faced by many farmers, the Government is also extending tonight the Special Farm Financial Assistance Program administered by the Farm Credit Corporation. An additional $100 million will be made available this year for these special FCC loans to farmers in financial distress, bringing the total available in 1983-84 to $150 million. Eligible recipients will be entitled to interest rebates of four percentage points for the first two years. As in the past, I expect that these loans will enable the recipients to remain in agriculture and to become commercially viable contributors to Canada's agricultural economy.

I would be remiss if I did not emphasize in this budget the critical importance of the Government's Western Transportation Initiative for national recovery. The program, proposed by my colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), calls for federal expenditures of $3.7 billion over the next four years. I point out that even though many of the Special Recovery Capital Projects will enhance agricultural and transportation development, they do not include any of the capital outlays arising from or associated with the Western Transportation Initiative. These two major national programs have been designed to reinforce each other.

HOUSING

The housing industry has made great strides towards recovery in recent months. Home buyers and builders have benefited quickly from the steady decline in interest rates. Mortgage rates are now in the 11 to 13 per cent range, down from last year's highs of 19 to 20 per cent. This drop has made homes much more affordable for Canadians. The reappearance of five-year mortgages has reduced uncertainty for potential home buyers and homeowners alike. Housing starts, which reached a low of 96,000 in the third quarter of 1982, recovered strongly in the fourth quarter and reached a level of 177,000 in March. This strength is expected to continue through 1983 as a result of lower mortgage rates, higher personal incomes and the additional stimulus I am announcing tonight.

The Government is committing an additional $355 million to spur recovery in the housing industry. Five existing programs are being extended or expanded. These programs have all proven successful and support an industry that employs a large number of people and uses materials primarily made in Canada. Their expansion will create jobs in all parts of the country through the construction and renovation of housing units. I am also proposing a new housing tax incentive.

[Translation]

First, I am making available an additional $120 million for the Canadian Home Renovation Plan. This program provides grants of up to $3,000 to low- and middle-income Canadians wishing to renovate their homes.

Second, an additional $40 million is being allocated over two years for the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. This program is directed to the improvement and repair of substandard housing in designated areas.

Third, the annual allocation of social housing units is being increased by 2,500 units in 1983, which will maintain the total allocation at 25,000 units. This will provide additional support to the housing needs of low-income Canadians.

Fourth, an additional $40 million is being committed for Indian on-reserve housing in 1983-84. This is supplementary to a special increase of $22 million per year approved recently by the government, starting this year.

Fifth, I am allocating $30 million more to the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan, which should be sufficient to extend this program until about the end of May. This program, introduced last June by my predecessor, has been highly successful. Over the past nine months, about 200,000 Canadians have benefited from the $3,000 home ownership grants it provides.

The Minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will shortly provide more detailed information on these measures.

[English]

I am also announcing tonight important changes to the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan to assist eligible individuals purchasing newly constructed homes. It is expected that this new tax incentive will provide about $125 million to new homeowners.

RHOSPs were introduced as a tax-exempt savings vehicle designed to encourage Canadians to save towards a down payment on a home. Currently, tax deductible contributions up to a total of $10,000 can be made to a RHOSP at the rate of up to $1,000 per year. There are now more than half a million Canadians with RHOSPs. Individuals eligible to contribute to a RHOSP who buy newly constructed homes and associated furnishings before the end of 1984 will be able to deduct from taxable income in one lump sum the amount needed to bring their total deductions up to the $10,000 limit.

Home buyers and others will need new furnishings in 1983. Canadians have delayed purchases of furnishings and appliances as a result of the uncertainty caused by the recession. I am therefore proposing a special, short-term incentive for RHOSP holders to spur consumption of these items. Rules governing the use of RHOSPs will be changed to allow once-and-for-all tax-free withdrawals in 1983 of any amount currently in a RHOSP for purchase of designated home furnishings or appliances, even where the holder does not take advantage of the above measure to buy a newly constructed home.

DIRECT SUPPORT FOR EMPLOYMENT

The measures I have just announced will create jobs in the private sector. But I am realistic. Unemployment is very high. It will take time for the employment effects of the Special Recovery Program and of the other measures I have just announced to be fully felt. We cannot turn our backs on those who are bearing the economic, social and human burdens of unemployment. That is why the Government has not only maintained social programs during the recession but acted to strengthen them and make them more effective.

• (2100)

I am proud to be associated with a Government that has not, despite intense fiscal pressures, forsaken its compassion or its obligation to support those Canadians who most need help. The Government has taken significant actions in the past ten months to contain the rise in unemployment. To reinforce these actions, I am announcing tonight a seven point package of new or expanded employment initiatives, requiring additional funding of $710 million over the next two years. This new allocation will raise to $1.5 billion the funds committed this year to support directly the creation of jobs for those Canadians most seriously affected by the recession. This is almost $900 million more than last year. The Government will have in place in this fiscal year the largest program of direct support for job creation ever undertaken in Canada.

An additional $280 million, of which $180 million are new funds, will be provided for the expansion of the NEED program. Support will continue to be channelled through the private sector, federal departments, municipalities, voluntary organizations, labour unions and provincial Governments participating in the program. I am pleased to report that the private sector, and small businesses in particular, are making increasing use of the NEED program.

I invite the private sector to expand this use of the NEED program in the months to come.

Authorized spending on community employment under Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act will be increased by $100 million over the next two years. Under this program, workers who have been laid off may continue to receive benefits while voluntarily participating in productive activities of value to their community. A further $150 million will be provided for increased spending on local employment-intensive projects under existing Government construction and other programs.

Employment opportunities are improving for Canadian workers, but youth unemployment rates are expected to remain high for some time. Young people with little or no job experience will have difficulty finding work until skilled and experienced workers laid off during the recession have been recalled. The Government has acted to address this problem. Over 270,000 young people are now benefiting from federal training and employment programs.

[Translation]

But more needs to be done to provide young people with employment opportunities in this critical phase of the recovery, Madam Speaker. A cooperative strategy for youth employment is essential. It must involve business, unions, all Governments and young people themselves. It must focus not just on job creation and training but also on work experience. To help ease the difficult transition from school to work, I am announcing tonight that an additional $280 million is being committed in this budget to meet the needs of young Canadians who have not been able to find jobs.

Ninety-five million dollars will be allocated to establish, in consultation with the private sector, a Youth Wage Subsidy and Internship Program. Work experience, coupled with training programs ... No children allowed—let them go to meetings of candidates for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Work experience, coupled with training programs, will ensure that young people gain from the kind of on-the-job skills that are demanded in the permanent job market. These funds will also be used to expand the Youth Job Corps Program, which offers young Canadians vocational training courses, education, counselling and work experience.

I am also providing an additional $40 million for Katimavik over the next two years. This youth program was established in 1977 to serve Canadian communities, assist the personal development of participants, and provide young Canadians with opportunities to acquire a greater understanding of their country. It is expected that an additional 4,000 participants will be added to the existing 1,700 over the next two years.

In addition, I am committing $75 million to fund an Extended Youth Training and Employment Program to be run by the Department of National Defence. This program is designed to provide employment in a military context that includes general as well as basic trades or vocational training for approximately 5,000 young people. The program will provide job experience for a period of about a year and will help those involved make the transition from school to work.

I have made available $70 million to increase funding for student employment this summer. This increase raises the Government's total commitment to this program to $170 million this year, as recently announced by my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). The Government is also providing additional support, as I will indicate later, to young Canadians who wish to continue their studies on a full or part-time basis.

Over and above these special youth employment initiatives, the massive effort the Government will pursue to improve the skills and training of Canadian workers will be largely directed at young people. Total federal support for human resource development will be increased to $1.2 billion this year. I expect that about half of the beneficiaries of these programs this year will be young people.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) will provide further details on these initiatives shortly.

EMPLOYMENT DEDUCTION

Working Canadians with modest incomes are having a difficult time making ends meet, even though they are now benefitting from lower inflation. I am therefore introducing a significant change in the employment expense deduction allowed under the Income Tax Act. Effective this year, this employment deduction will increase from 3 to 20 per cent of employment income, subject to the current maximum amount of $500. This measure will return this year about $130 million of federal revenues to Canadians with employment income below $16,700. About four million low income Canadians will benefit from this measure this year.

CHILD BENEFITS

I am proposing tonight four changes in the tax components of the federal child benefit system to provide additional income support for lower income families, working parents and others in need. I am not making any changes to family allowances.

First, I propose to double, starting this year, the Child Care Expense Deduction from $1,000 to $2,000 per child and $4,000 to $8,000 per family. These increases will ease the burden of child care expenses for families in which both parents work outside the home, as well as for single-parent families for whom the deduction is critical. I am also making changes to ensure that the deduction does not discriminate between men and women.

Second, I propose to maintain the enriched child tax credit introduced in the last budget. Under existing legislation, the credit would otherwise have dropped from $343 to $326 in 1983. I propose to extend the credit at $343 for the 1983 taxation year. I also propose to continue full indexation of this higher credit in subsequent years to protect its value for low and moderate income families, and for single parent families for whom the credit is of vital importance. Over the last five years the credit has gone up from $200 to $343 per child, evidence of the Government's continuing commitment to families with children, in this country.

Third, I propose to hold at its present level the family income threshold above which the Child Tax Credit begins to be phased out. For the current and subsequent taxation years, the threshold will remain at its 1982 value of $26,330. Below this threshold, the maximum credit will be paid. Above the threshold, the credit will decline as family income rises. It will only cease to be paid for families with two children having a family income of about $40,000 or more.

Finally, starting next year, I propose to keep at its current level of $710 the tax exemption for children and other dependants under 18 years of age. This measure will complement the child tax credit changes by helping to ensure that limited Government funds are directed to the families that need them the most.

[Translation]

The net effect of these changes will be to increase federal support for lower income Canadians with children and for Canadians who have to incur child care expenses in order to work. In the current fiscal year, the changes will be roughly self-balancing. Over the following three fiscal years, they will result in increased Government revenues. However, I am not removing these monies from the social security system that provides important social benefits to Canadians. I am designating them as a special Social Policy Fund that will be used to reinforce social programs available to Canadians in need.

[English]

For recovery to be sustained in Canada, and for real growth of our incomes and our living standards to resume, we must raise our sights beyond the period immediately ahead of us. A broad national effort is required over the remaining years of the decade to make sure that Canada remains one of the most productive, competitive and prosperous economies in the industrialized world. Our major trading partners will continue to move forward. To remain competitive, Canada therefore has no choice but to move forward too. We must put our businesses and our workers in a position to meet and beat the competition.

Many people are under the impression that productivity gains cause unemployment. Nothing could be more wrong. In fact, strong and steady productivity gains sustain the growth of employment.

Our collective search for the means to improve Canada's productivity performance will be complex and difficult. Success will not come overnight. Neither business nor labour will get very far if either tries to move forward without the cooperation of the other. We will have to do it together. A national cooperative effort is required. And for such a national effort to have any chance of success, Canadians will have to set rhetoric aside and stop "scapegoating" each other.

We will not get ahead if we continue to blame each other for the problems we face. We should recognize, for example, that the concerns of the labour movement for working conditions, the quality and safety of the work place, the involvement of workers in what they are doing, and the possibilities for self-development offered to them, are entirely legitimate and can, if properly addressed, improve our productivity performance. By the same token, we should acknowledge that businesses do not invest in more efficient and cost-cutting equipment just to throw people out of work. We should recognize that productive investment sustains employment and that too little of it causes unemployment.

There will always be tensions between labour, business and Government. But that should not prevent labour, business and Government from cooperating to improve the productivity and competitiveness of the Canadian economy. This is the key to higher wages and better profits. More importantly, it is the best way, in the long run, to provide Canadians with the jobs they need.

NATIONAL CENTRE FOR PRODUCTIVITY AND EMPLOYMENT GROWTH

The Government, therefore, intends to consult with labour unions and business organizations over the next few weeks to launch a national drive towards higher productivity and employment growth. These consultations will focus in the short term on the establishment of a national centre for productivity and employment growth.

What we have in mind is not a research institute. Rather, it is a place where labour and business can meet, away from the bargaining table, to talk and to take a hardnosed and practical look at issues of mutual concern that cannot be addressed adequately in the course of collective bargaining. Experience has shown that it is not enough to study or talk about these issues. Nor can progress be mandated, legislated or bought.

To make progress, ways must be found of bringing action where action is needed—the plants, offices and boardrooms of the nation. This can only be done by practical people who know what they are talking about, workers and managers. It is that kind of practical experience that, we hope, a national centre for productivity and employment growth will bring together.

The Government will shortly consult with labour and business representatives to appoint a founding committee for the proposed centre. This committee will be asked to recommend within three months an appropriate designation, mandate, structure and mode of operation for the centre.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, the Government's broad policy framework for recovery places a high priority on technology policy and support for research and development. It is of critical importance for our economic future that we increase our R&D effort and that we support the development of "sunrise" industries. We must also promote more actively the dissemination and application of technological advances in all sectors of the economy.

The federal Government already provides massive support for science and technology. Expenditures on the natural sciences will amount this year to $2.6 billion. This includes over $450 million in direct federal funding of research and development undertaken by the private sector. Federal and provincial revenue forgone under tax incentives for private research and development is expected to be in excess of $200 million in 1983, even before the changes I will be proposing tonight.

I have already announced, under Special Recovery Capital Projects, two initiatives to enhance federal support for science and technology. First, over $290 million will be spent on research facilities critical to mastering new technologies. Fifteen new facilities will be built in all parts of Canada. Second, about $180 million will be allocated for high technology procurement. I am allocating tonight a further $100 million over the next two years for other new technology policy initiatives. My colleague, the Minister of State for Economic Development and for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston), will provide detailed information on these initiatives shortly.

• (2120)

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

One of the most critical factors in meeting the challenge of technological change is the adequacy of research and development in the private sector. In line with the Government's commitment to consult on major issues of tax policy, I will be tabling tonight a paper entitled "Tax Policies for Research and Development" that reviews existing federal tax incentives for R&D and sets out proposals for change.

This paper shows that Canadian tax incentives compare very favourably with those of other countries. It identifies areas where they could be made simpler, more accessible and more effective. It proposes new provisions that will be of great benefit to small businesses who need help in financing R&D ventures. The overall impact of these new provisions, combined with the general tax measures already proposed as they apply to R&D, would be to increase the value of federal and provincial R&D tax incentives by some $185 million in the first full year in which they will apply. This is a clear demonstration of the Government's support for research and development in the private sector.

HUMAN RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT

To take full advantage of technological advances, Canada will increasingly need well-educated and well-trained workers. Moreover, workers will have to acquire new skills and knowledge throughout their working lives. With this in mind, I am allocating tonight an additional $155 million for human resource development programs. This will bring to $1.2 billion this year the funds allocated for skills development in occupations that are significant for economic growth. Over 250,000 Canadians, half of them young people, will benefit this year from federal support for human resource development.

With the National Training Act of 1982, the Government took steps to make the training system more responsive to our human resource development objectives. It was recognized that, in order to identify occupations in demand and ensure that training funds are allocated accordingly, a cooperative effort involving labour, business and Governments was required. This cooperation has already produced substantial dividends.

[Translation]

Young people are very much aware today of the importance of education for their career prospects. Because of weak employment opportunities, however, students face increasing difficulty in financing their education. The Secretary of State has proposed changes to the Canada Student Loans Act that will expand loan availability to include part-time students, increase the size of available loans and ease repayment conditions for those having difficulty obtaining employment upon graduation. I am providing an additional $60 million over the next two years to fund these changes. This will raise total funding for the Canada Student Loans Program to $141 million this year. Over 185,000 Canadian students will benefit from the program this year.

TRADE AND TARIFFS

The structure of the world economy is changing to reflect the emergence of new economic powers. The countries of the world have become more interdependent and more vulnerable to each other's actions. With almost 30 per cent of our GNP generated by exports, Canada shares this interdependence and vulnerability with other major industrialized countries. But international competition also provides Canada with the opportunity to exploit world markets, increase our productivity, rationalize our production and capitalize on our comparative advantage. We must recognize, however, that if we do not import from other countries they will not have the means to buy our exports and to repay our loans to them.

There are strong pressures for protectionism in the world today. I have felt them here in Canada. While I understand the concerns underlying these pressures, I believe they are shortsighted and counterproductive. I acknowledge that there may occasionally be overwhelming reasons for protection in particular cases, but these must be the exception rather than the rule. It is in Canada's abiding interest, as a major exporting nation, to maintain an open trading system subject to the rule of international law. This remains the Government's first priority in the area of trade policy.

[English]

I have announced earlier the creation of a Special Recovery Export Financing Fund of $180 million to improve Canada's export performance. I would now like to refer briefly to three other initiatives I am taking to improve the competitiveness of the economy. First, I am increasing the funds available to the Program for Export Market Development in each of the next four years. Second, I am proposing a change in the tax treatment of Canadians working abroad. This will enhance the ability of Canadian firms to undertake projects in other countries. Third, I am commissioning a study, in cooperation with the Export Trade Development Board, of the impact of tax systems in Canada and other countries on the competitiveness of resource-based and manufactured exports.

I am proposing tonight a number of reductions in the rates of duty on goods from developing countries. These reductions are part of a series of adjustments being made to meet Canada's commitment to assist developing countries in their efforts to increase their exports and to improve their balance of payments. Most other proposed tariff changes provide for lower rates of duty or free entry for products not produced in Canada.

I also propose to double the limits on the value of goods that can be brought back to Canada free of duty and tax by returning Canadians under the tourist exemptions. Effective April 20, 1983, the quarterly exemption is being increased to $100 from $50. The annual exemption is being increased to $300 from $150.

OTHER TAX CHANGES

I would now like to propose two other tax changes.

The Minister of Communications recently announced a Broadcasting Strategy for Canada, designed to enable the nation's broadcasting system to respond to the technological and programming challenges of the 1980s and 1990s. A critical part of this strategy is the establishment of a fund to assist private production companies and independent producers. To help finance the expenditures associated with this new broadcasting strategy, I am proposing a tax of 6 per cent on the amount charged to subscribers for basic cable rental, pay TV and other programming services provided by means of telecommunications.

All individual taxpayers are currently allowed to claim a standard deduction of $100 in lieu of itemized deductions for charitable donations and medical expenses. Representatives of voluntary organizations have expressed concern that this deduction reduces the tax incentive for charitable giving since the deduction is not directly related to actual amounts given. I propose that all deductions for charitable and medical expenses be receipted, starting in the 1984 taxation year, to replace the standard deduction.

THE ECONOMIC OUTLOOK

I will be tabling with this budget a background paper on "The Economic Outlook for Canada", which sets out projections of economic performance.

Most forecasters expect that recovery will proceed at a moderate pace in 1983. The housing sector will be strong, along with inventory rebuilding, and these sources of growth will be supported by higher consumption and continued strength in our trade balance. But private investment will remain weak this year and will recover only as markets improve, excess capacity is run down, and the overall financial position of the business sector is strengthened.

The average level of our real gross national product is forecast to be 2.3 per cent higher this year than it was last year. Growth through the year will be fairly strong, and real GNP at the end of 1983 should be about 6.5 per cent higher than it was at the end of 1982. I expect strong growth to continue through 1984, at an average rate of 5.2 per cent. It will also become more broadly based as investment gathers strength.

• (2130)

Inflation should continue to decline, averaging 6.3 per cent this year and 5 per cent in 1984. Employment should grow fairly strongly in the course of this year and even more strongly in 1984. Over 600,000 more Canadians are expected to be working at the end of 1984 than at the end of 1982. But the job losses we have suffered in this recession have been severe and, as employment begins to grow again, many workers who withdrew temporarily from the labour force will once again seek work. This will maintain upward pressure on the unemployment rate. The unemployment rate is forecast to average 12.4 per cent this year and to fall to 11.4 per cent in 1984. Although the average level may only fall to 11.4 per cent in 1984, I expect unemployment to be on a clear downward trend through the coming years.

There are still many uncertainties about the strength and durability of the recovery. Growth in our trading partners is reviving, but questions remain about the likely course of interest rates in the United States and growth prospects in the Third World. Protectionism could damage our international trade and export opportunities. The impact of volatile world oil markets on economic growth and the international financial system is still unclear.

The indebtedness problems of developing countries will remain serious, but I am encouraged by the prompt and effective way in which Governments, international financial institutions and the commercial banks have responded to meet the threats that emerged late last year. As a result of recent decisions to augment the resources of the International Monetary Fund, the world is now better equipped to manage similar situations should they arise in the future. The Government, particularly through the Bank of Canada, as well as the major Canadian banks, have participated in these efforts in a way commensurate with Canada's international responsibilities and long-term interests.

Early next month, I will be meeting with my counterparts in other OECD countries. Following that meeting, the Prime Minister will join the heads of Government of the other major industrial countries at the Economic Summit in Williamsburg. On both these occasions Canada will continue to press our major trading partners to do all they can to ensure that world recovery strengthens and endures.

Within the current international environment, the framework for economic recovery set out in this budget will enable us to improve our economic prospects in the near term and lay the basis for healthy growth in the medium term. The measures I have announced will help create more jobs for Canadians this year and in years to come. They will do so primarily by supporting growth in the private sector. Our unemployed relatives, neighbours and friends want to work, but they also want secure, productive and satisfying jobs. These jobs will have to come from a strong and dynamic private sector.

Ten months ago, the Government proposed the 6&5 program. Canadians were asked to join in a national effort to bring down inflation. That effort has brought results more quickly than most people expected. Millions of Canadians shared in this national effort by having their salary increase, or their family allowance indexing, or their pension increase, limited to 6 per cent in 1983. They will find that their real purchasing power has not decreased much, if at all, in these two years. Indeed, they will have fared better than many other Canadians who have seen their incomes grow by much less than 6 per cent in the aftermath of the recession. In the spirit of the 6&5 program, I am asking Canadians tonight to join in a collective effort to build a stronger economy.

[Translation]

THE DEFICIT

I have said many times tonight that the Government alone cannot bring about lasting recovery. But there is one area where it must, by its own actions, take the responsibility for ensuring satisfactory growth in the medium term. This is the management of the federal deficit and of the Government's financial requirements.

When I reported to the House in February, I gave estimates for the deficit and financial requirements for 1982-83. Since February, it has become apparent that expenditures have been about $300 million lower than anticipated and revenues almost $1.7 billion higher. This development provides a further indication that recovery has begun. Final figures for last year will not be available for some time, but I now estimate that the 1982-83 deficit will be about $2 billion lower than expected two months ago, or about $25.3 billion. Cash requirements will be about $23.5 billion.

The causes of last year's high deficit are well understood. The depth of the recession forced a substantial increase in Government expenditures, most of it to help those Canadians most seriously affected by the recession. At the same time, federal revenues grew by only 1.5 per cent. The deficit increased sharply, but its financing did not put upward pressure on interest rates. Indeed, interest rates moved down dramatically in 1982.

The fact that the deficit has reached such a high level means that it will inevitably take time to bring it down. Indeed, as I have indicated previously, because recovery will be moderate, because unemployment will remain high, and because oil prices have fallen abroad and will fall in Canada, the deficit would have been higher this year than last year even without the actions I have announced in this budget. The direct impact of all the measures I have announced tonight will increase the deficit by $1.9 billion and bring it to $31.3 billion for the current year.

Financial requirements, which are a better measure of the pressure that the federal Government will put on financial markets, will increase by less than the deficit. They are projected to reach a level of $26.7 billion, about $3 billion higher than last year. I have no doubt that these requirements can be financed this year without putting pressure on interest rates and without threatening economic recovery. Private investment will continue to be weak and savings rates to be high in 1983.

Over the medium term, however, the deficit problem is more difficult. In the absence of further action, the deficit would have declined after this year, but it would do so only very slowly. Government borrowing requirements would decline more quickly but would still be high in 1986-87.

[English]

It is important that Canadians understand how the deficit arose, how it ought to be interpreted and what its implications are for economic performance. I have found in my consultations with Canadians that there is a great deal of legitimate concern, which I share, about the level of future deficits. But I have also been struck by the complexity of the issues involved and the need for a balanced understanding of them. I will therefore be tabling tonight with this budget a background paper entitled "The Federal Deficit in Perspective". I hope that this paper will make a useful contribution to the continuing debate on this important subject.

This background document makes four important points, and I invite the Opposition to read it.

First, the federal deficit over the second half of the 1970s was not due to runaway expenditures. It was due in large part to a succession of tax cuts introduced in response to weak economic activity.

Second, the impact of the federal deficit on financial markets and interest rates cannot be looked at in isolation. From 1975 to last year, other Governments in Canada ran a consolidated surplus on a national accounts basis and this surplus helped to offset federal borrowing requirements.

Third, the so-called structural deficit, after allowing for the impact of economic cycles on federal revenues and expenditures, fell steadily from 4.3 per cent of GNP in 1978 to only 1.8 per cent of GNP in 1981. It rose in 1982, but will decline again through the medium term.

Fourth, because accounting procedures for Governments are distorted by inflation just as they are for companies in the private sector, the growth of the real value of the national debt is less than implied by the deficit numbers. This has important implications for the ability of the Government to finance its deficit without putting pressure on interest rates.

If we are to address the issue of deficits over the medium term in a realistic way, we must put rhetoric aside and look at the facts. We cannot eliminate the deficit quickly. To do so would require us to slash Government programs or to accept massive tax increases. Either course of action would jeopardize our prospects for economic recovery. But we must manage the deficit now to ensure that it will come down as quickly as possible. Simply put, as private demand for savings grows, Government borrowing requirements must shrink.

The first area we must look to is Government expenditures. In 1975, this Government made the commitment that, over the medium term, expenditures would grow no more quickly than the trend growth in GNP, so that the share of the federal Government in the economy would not increase.

This commitment was met until the recession last year. I am reaffirming this commitment tonight. "The Fiscal Plan" I will be tabling with this budget shows that total outlays as a share of GNP will fall steadily from this year to 1986-87. By that year, federal spending will be virtually the same size relative to the economy as it was in 1981-82, before the worst of the recession. To achieve this outcome will demand continuing diligence in restraining expenditure growth.

The second area is revenues. As I pointed out earlier, a succession of tax cuts in the second half of the 1970s caused federal revenues to grow much less rapidly than the economy. In 1974-75, federal revenues were almost 19 per cent of gross national product. This share fell to less than 15 per cent in the late 1970s. I am therefore proposing tonight changes in the personal income tax that will take effect only in future years, when the recovery is secured, to help reduce the federal deficit more quickly over the next four years.

Individual taxpayers are now eligible for a federal tax reduction of $200. This tax reduction was originally introduced in 1973 at a rate of 5 per cent of tax otherwise payable with a minimum of $100 and a maximum of $500. It is not an integral part of the basic structure of the personal income tax system and has been modified from time to time in response to changing economic circumstances.

I am proposing further modifications to this tax reduction applicable to 1984 and subsequent years. The federal tax reduction will become income-tested as of January 1, 1984. The $200 credit will be phased out in that year for taxpayers paying more than $6,000 in basic federal tax. Those paying less than $6,000 in basic federal tax, which is equivalent to income levels in the $35,000 to $40,000 range, will not be affected in 1984. The base amount of the credit will be reduced to $100 in 1985 and to $50 in 1986 and subsequent years.

These changes will take effect gradually and only when the recovery has firmed up. No taxpayer will be affected in 1983, and only those with high incomes in 1984.

[Translation]

The direct impact of all the measures I have announced tonight will be to increase the deficit by $1.9 billion in the current fiscal year and by $650 million next year. In the following two fiscal years, as the economy improves, these measures will reduce the deficit by $1.8 billion and $2.6 billion, respectively.

I believe that the nature and timing of these measures are both appropriate to our short-term economic situation and necessary to safeguard the ability of the private sector to provide jobs for Canadians over the medium term. I will continue to monitor the medium-term deficit and take appropriate action as necessary to bring it down as quickly as possible without compromising the performance of our economy.

Madam Speaker, I am tabling with this budget Ways and Means Motions to give effect to the tax and tariff changes I have proposed, and I also ask the consent of the House for tabling the budget papers to which I have referred.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CONCLUSION

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the most critical and also the most difficult step towards recovery is to break out of the recession mentality. It is to cure ourselves of the collective trauma engendered by present difficulties and to look once again squarely and confidently into the future.

This can be achieved only by an act of national will. The Government by itself cannot will the economy onto the path of lasting recovery.

But the Government has the capacity to act decisively to restore confidence in the ability of Canadians to mobilize brain and brawn, to muster our energies, and to make our economy more productive and more competitive. It has the capacity to strengthen our private sector and to enable it to provide once again the jobs Canadians need.

This is what this recovery budget seeks to achieve for Canada.

I set out with two goals: to ensure that recovery firmly take hold and that it be durable. To create the jobs Canadians need, I proposed actions that will go into effect immediately but that will also be geared to the medium term.

The budget provides targeted stimulus to boost the recovery. It introduces a $4.8 billion Special Recovery Program. This program will create jobs and make possible new private and public investment that would otherwise have been undertaken only later in the decade.

The budget provides more direct support for employment, more buying power for lower income Canadians and more stimulus for housing. It proposes actions to improve our growth prospects by strengthening the financial position of our businesses, and by supporting the technological advances necessary for Canadians to compete successfully in the world.

[Translation]

The budget does not provide excessive stimulus for the economy. To have done so would have been irresponsible. Indeed, it would have jeopardized the recovery by increasing the deficit to levels that would have pushed interest rates up.

The budget proposes a national drive for higher productivity and employment growth. This is the high goal that the Government is urging all Canadians to strive for, individually and collectively, during the rest of the eighties.

We Canadians can reach this goal if we are prepared to work hard at it, to make tough and bold decisions, to resolve or set aside our differences, and to act as the national community we are.

[English]

The pain and the hardship of recent years have clearly shown that a new national partnership amongst labour, business and Governments is urgently needed in Canada. This new partnership for recovery is essential if we are to meet the tough competitive challenge of the eighties and provide the jobs Canadians need.

[Translation]

I want to repeat what I said earlier, Madam Speaker, because I think it is extremely important: A new national partnership among labour, business and Governments is urgently needed in Canada. This new partnership for recovery is essential if we are to meet the challenge of the eighties.

[English]

This budget has laid a firm basis on which to build this partnership. In the coming weeks, the Government will seek out its labour, business and provincial partners to get on with the job of speeding recovery.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (2150)

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, we now know what it costs to save the Minister's face. It costs $200 million over three years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: And he is not worth it.

Miss Carney: That is the amount by which the Minister has increased his spending and his borrowings this year for his $200 million photo opportunity. In comparison he is planning to spend only $95 million on a youth job program aimed at getting young people their first jobs. He obviously considers that saving his face is worth twice that of saving jobs for our Canadian youth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: The Minister calls this a recovery budget. What he is trying to recover is his lost prestige. He says his budget contains a job creation program. The only job that is being protected is his own.

In terms of the additional interest that it will cost for the $200 million photo opportunity, at 12 per cent interest it will amount to $1 million a month. That is the cost of the Minister's carelessness. That is the cost of his showboating. That is what Canadians will pay for this Minister's ego.

He does not tell us how he was going to spend the money. We know only that it will be added to the Special Recovery Program. But in addition to the budget which we received only a few minutes before he gave his speech in the House, he indicated that he does not know how he is actually going to spend the money. It will be added to a program which will spend $2.2 billion in the next few years in the country on 100 projects. Never before has it cost us so much to save something of so little value, the Finance Minister's reputation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: And never before has the Canadian taxpayer been asked to finance a potential pork barrel of such grandiose proportions. Many of the budget measures will be administered by the Minister's colleagues. For instance, the Special Recovery Capital Project Program at $2.2 billion will be administered by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley) assisted by a Special Committee of Cabinet. The line up will form on the right-hand side of the Chamber.

The Special Recovery Investment Fund of $300 million will be administered by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. There are no details given. Another $100 million for new technology will be administered by the Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston). No details are given.

Further, the Canadian ownership charge levied on all products made from crude oil will be extended, probably to bail out Dome Petroleum and its banks. This is the tax, Hon. Members will remember, that was brought in to pay for Petrofina. If Dome is not available, other companies will be standing in line to be bailed out at inflated prices.

Further, the Liberals will be spending, but the Tories will be paying the bills since most of the major tax increases come into effect in the 1984 tax year. The spending is now, but the bills come later. As they said in the Department of Finance "It is Tory money we are spending."

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: This, of course, includes an increase in the federal sales tax on manufactured goods and a large personal tax increase which will hit hardest on married Canadians with children under 18 years of age since in effect the Minister is de-indexing the dependant child exemption.

We commend the Minister's efforts to increase the child tax credit, but he is collecting more than his share. Canadians face a personal income tax increase of $1.9 billion by the year 1986-1987. That is when we will be in power. Not only do Canadians face increased taxes in the future, Canadians face permanently higher deficits of at least $25 billion each year for the next four years. These deficits will total $112 billion. This will make a mockery of the Minister's statement that he wants a durable recovery. You cannot finance deficits of this magnitude without keeping interest rates high and possibly forcing them higher, and that will abort the recovery we so badly need.

The Minister also says in the opening line of his budget speech that his dominant concern is to help the more than 1.5 million Canadians who want to work but cannot find jobs. Yet his own economic projections show that 100,000 fewer Canadians will be working in 1984 than in 1981 when the Government introduced the disastrous MacEachen budget.

The unemployment rate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is forecasting will stay above 10 per cent right through to 1986. For young people whose current unemployment rate is 21.3 per cent, he proposes to add less than 30,000 new jobs over the next few years. If you add up the jobs in his budget proposal, they total 30,000.

Furthermore, in the October statement the Minister said that allocations for employment creation would be $1.4 billion. In his current statement, direct support for employment creation is shown as $1.484 billion. That is an increase of only $74 million. According to the figures we were given just before the Minister made his speech in the House, he has allocated $74 million for unemployed Canadians in new programs versus $200 million for his own reputation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: The Minister said in his speech that he is looking to the private sector to help lead the way to recovery. The great intervenors have become the great entrepreneurs. The team that blew away $20 billion in investment, both domestic and foreign investment when it introduced the National Energy Program has now rediscovered the need for equity capital. This is the Government that hands $150 million to Canadair to produce jets that cannot be sold. These are the same people who poured $125 million into Consolidated Computer and sold that company for $100,000 to private interests which put it back in business.

The master minds of the previous budgets which turned a business downturn into the worst recession in 50 years have now discovered that they must rely on the private sector to lead us toward recovery. Yet there is very little in the budget for small business. There are many good proposals which we know the Minister had which would have increased the healthy cash or equity position of small business but although there are some investment tax credits there are a whole series of companies which cannot participate; small business companies in the service sector, for instance. It should be very clear to farmers and fishermen that this Government has written them off completely one more time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, because of the time I move:

That the debate be now adjourned.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, under the Standing Orders I move:

That this House do now adjourn.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Madam Speaker: Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE BUDGET

OBJECTION TO CONDUCT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, I want to object in the strongest terms possible to the outrageous conduct of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in deliberately altering his budget in order to cover up his leak of vital contents to a photographer.

First, the Minister broke his ministerial oath of secrecy. Honour, if not the law, would demand his resignation. Then by a calculated act of manipulation he changed the figures, justifying his action of adding $200 million by the claim of increasing job creation. This is both cynical and immoral. It is political trickery that will offend every decent person in Canada. What the Minister of Finance has done is to demonstrate conclusively that the Government is morally bankrupt.

THE BUDGET

FUNDS FOR CANADIAN HOME RENOVATION PLAN AND FOR JOB CREATION

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, as far as the budget is concerned, there have been some comments just now on the formal aspects, but I think it is more important to emphasize the jobs that will be created. One area that has been the subject of many representations is the Canadian Home Renovation Plan. I believe that the Goverment's decision to earmark $120 million in additional funds for this program and to extend the program until March 31, 1984, was a very important one for the Department of Finance and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who thereby responded to requests from the people of Quebec and the Members from Quebec for additional funds for the program that would help create jobs in the construction industry. I think that in the circumstances, Canadians and Quebecers can be proud of their Members of Parliament, because their representations were effective and received a positive response from the Department of Finance.

[English]

WESTERN DEVELOPMENT FUND

ELIMINATION FROM BUDGET

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, in the 1980 Throne Speech the Liberal Government across the way said it would listen to Members of Parliament from western Canada. In the 1980 budget the Liberal Government introduced a Western Development Fund, which was a $4 billion fund to develop western Canada. In the 1981 budget the Liberal Government reduced the Western Development Fund to some $1.8 billion. Last night, as if by some stroke of magic, a puff of smoke or something, this fund was reduced to zero. There is no longer a Western Canada Development Fund. The rest of the country gets six and five while we in western Canada get zero and zero. That is the magic of the Minister of Finance.

There is no western plan, there is no western R & D, and there is no western manufacturing. About the only thing in the budget was hundreds of millions of dollars for big business. In many ways it is a Conservative budget, and the Government across the way should be charged with theft, theft of the Conservative Party's clothes and colours, for the kind of budget that it brought in last night. No wonder the Liberal Party is an endangered species in western Canada. It is about time the Liberal Government reinstated that money for the Western Development Fund.

ISSUE OF SECRECY—CALL FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, parliamentary government is now over 700 years old. Its development is the result of a long and laborious struggle by ordinary people to elect the representatives who will make laws on their behalf, and to set the rules of accountability to be followed by those elected officials. The office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is the highest office of trust and fiduciary responsibility. The incumbent must act in that spirit.

The office of Minister of Finance is especially one of trust. The present incumbent, as a lawyer, understands that concept better than anyone else. He swore an oath of secrecy on the Bible and on his honour. The Minister of Finance set up tight rules of security for the press and for Members of Parliament. Yet, for personal glory and publicity, he called the media into his office and then broke his oath of secrecy by opening the budget documents. As a result, the financial markets and the value of the dollar have been affected, and unfair advantage has accrued to a privileged few.

Democracy is a high and difficult enterprise requiring the highest of political standards in the conduct of the public trust. Our very way of parliamentary life is at stake. The Minister of Finance must resign.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RECOMMENDATION TO ESTABLISH NORTH-SOUTH STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, on November 30, 1982, a sub-committee of the House of Commons tabled a report on Canada's relations with Latin America and the Caribbean. Until now there has been no response to that report from the Government. In the report the sub-committee spoke about the stability necessary in that part of the world; it spoke for the promotion of human rights; for trade and investment initiatives by Canada in the region, and for aid and development.

I request the Government of Canada at this time to respond to this report. It is important for the Government to do so because the situation is changing so rapidly in South and Central America that, unless the recommendations are looked at now, they will become historic recommendations.

Two weeks ago there were food riots in Brazil, the economic miracle country of Latin America. Mexico has had an economic collapse. Nicaragua has been invaded by foreign forces. El Salvador is still fighting a civil war and it has one million refugees.

I recommend that the Government of this country set up a continuing north-south standing committee so that this House and the Government become aware of the realities that are taking place in our part of the world. I would also recommend that the Government renew the mandate of the sub-committee similar to the Latin-American committee so that information to the House and to the Government will continue to be provided in a steady way.

AVIATION INDUSTRY

ECONOMIC ROLE AND IMPORTANCE OF CANADAIR

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Madam Speaker, I am rising in the House today on behalf of 1,200 workers who are in danger of losing their jobs, and on behalf of an industry that represents 23,000 workers in Quebec and has a business turnover or over one billion dollars. I want my fellow Members to understand the major role Canadair and its sub-contractors play in our economy and the Canadian aviation industry. I also want to point out that those who are anxious to tarnish the reputation of Canadair are contributing or will contribute to a loss of jobs in the Greater Montreal area which cannot afford to be a victim of that kind of negativism. Madam Speaker, I beg the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Members of his Cabinet to intervene in this matter, because Canada must continue to develop the aviation industry, where Canadair is one of the major components, if we are to play a part in this very specialized high technology sector. Obviously, corrective action is needed at Canadair, but not by killing the patient who is just starting to walk again, in this case the Challenger which is just getting off the ground. This is an industry that is generating jobs for today, tomorrow and for the future. For heaven's sake, let us not repeat the tragedy of the Arrow which had a very promising future but was literally scrapped by the Progressive Conservative Government at the time.

THE BUDGET

ALLEGED GOVERNMENT IRRESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to remind Canadians that this Government does not know the meaning of the word honour. Yesterday, for the second time in less than two months, the Right Hon. Prime Minister decided to cover for the Minister of Finance and his incredible blunder before the press. The public is not about to forget the disgraceful conduct of the Minister and the Right Hon. Prime Minister in the notorious Gillespie affair. Monday, after the consummate irresponsibility demonstrated by the Minister of Finance, the Right Hon. Prime Minister owed it to common decency and to his own credibility to ask his Minister to resign. As we all know, that did not happen. The Right Hon. Prime Minister, after a quick assessment of the facts, judged in his great wisdom that his Minister of Finance was worth an extra $200 million. Some people will say that is pretty cheap and others that the end justifies the means. However, it gets a little embarrassing when the taxpayers' money is involved, Madam Speaker.

HEALTH

SEXUALLY TRANSMITTED DISEASES

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, sexually transmitted diseases are seriously affecting the health of many Canadians.

The Canadian Public Health Association estimated recently that approximately 600,000 Canadians are affected with sexually transmitted diseases.

This increasing rate of infection is linked by some authorities to the dramatic and concomitant increase in the level of prostitution. Indeed, it is often cited as a major contributor to sexually transmitted diseases. Consequently, one approach to reduce the rate has been the consideration of the legalization of prostitution. The rationale behind this proposal is that persons in legalized prostitution would be subjected to medical examinations. However, the experience of infectious disease control medical officers is that routine forced medical examination of prostitutes in the general population is not practical, feasible, or effective.

Each of these diseases has its own specific incubation period during which the disease cannot be detected clinically or may be in a symptomless carrier state that infects but defies medical diagnosis.

In some countries minimal benefits have been reported in strictly isolated "red light" districts when medical examinations are conducted under military supervision and discipline.

It is accurate to say that compulsory, periodic medical examinations of prostitutes in a general population have proven valueless in controlling venereal disease. Indeed, such examinations may be considered harmful in that they create a false sense of security by providing spuriously favourable diagnoses.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

OFFER TO INCLUDE PROPERTY RIGHTS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, at page 3 of issue 46 of the minutes of the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution, this Party put forward the following amendment to the Constitution:

> Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with principles of natural justice.

Last Monday the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), having seen the light like Saul on the road to Damascus, agreed to introduce that proposal if he could get agreement from this Party in the House of Commons. He has been good enough to provide me with the following amendment:

> Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

The House will see that there has been only one change to our original proposal, that is, substituting the word "fundamental" for "natural". That resolution the Government voted against in Committee, along with its NDP allies. That resolution the Government voted against in the House of Commons, along with its NDP allies.

I hope the Prime Minister will be successful in persuading the NDP to do as we do now, to accept the Prime Minister's conversion and ask him to bring that motion into the House as soon as he possibly can on our undertaking to pass it in the 24 hours that he suggests, through all stages.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

ALLOCATION OF EMPLOYMENT FUNDS FOR YOUNG CANADIANS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the 200 million dollar Minister of Finance a question about his spending priorities. He told us yesterday that Canadians must borrow an additional $200 million to pay for his photo opportunity which leaked the budget. Although there are 621,000 young people out of work, he has allocated only $280 million in additional funds over the next two years to help young Canadians find jobs. Why is the Minister prepared to spend $200 million to save his own skin, and only $280 million for young Canadians?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I indicated yesterday that the additional $200 million will be provided for special recovery capital projects. This will be spent on projects that will be of benefit to the Canadian economy. This represents projects taking place all across the country that are on the books of the Departments for future years. We are advancing those projects. These projects will mean more employment for Canadians. This will mean fewer people unemployed. The money will be used to employ Canadians who are unemployed at the present time in various regions of the country.

The use of that money will be announced in the next few days and weeks. I invite my hon. friend to wait for the statements to be made by various Ministers in that regard. She will find that there are very worth-while projects to be undertaken that will significantly help those Canadians who are unemployed. Among them I hope there will be quite a number of young people.

As I indicated in my statement yesterday, this Government is spending hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars for the young people of the country. Over half of the $1.2 billion in training allowances is being spent on young people. That is the extent of the commitment of this Government to the young people of the country in whom we have faith.

DISCREPANCIES IN BUDGET PAPERS TABLED AND CIRCULATED

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is also addressed to the Minister of Finance who knows very well that that additional money which he had to find to protect his reputation has not been allocated. It was added within a 24 hour period.

Yesterday we were told that the Minister was increasing the deficit by $100 million to save the integrity of his budget, through a supplementary budget speech which we were given moments before he spoke in the House. Today we find that the budget papers which we were given and which were circulated to Canadians across the country are not the same as the budget papers that were tabled in the House last night. On page 6 of his fiscal plan as tabled, there are no less than 21 changes in the documents he tabled; $100 million here and $100 million there. How many sets of books is the Minister keeping? Why can he not give Members of the House of Commons the same figures that he is tabling in the House?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member speaks about the supplementary budget speech. There is only one budget speech. It is the one I delivered in this House. That is elementary. The budget statement is the one which the Minister of Finance reads in the House when he delivers his budget speech. I also indicated yesterday that I was tabling on the Table of this House the official documents, and those documents have the necessary corrections, as the Hon. Member knows.

I finally stated that indeed there were thousands of copies across the country that would be made available at the time that I would be speaking and that corrections would be required, bearing in mind the changes I decided to make in the budget. That is all in the record. I delivered that in the House yesterday. The Hon. Member must have been outside the House when I made that particular statement.

• (1420)

UNEMPLOYMENT FORECASTS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of Finance who might then be able to explain why the additional material he distributed to us is called "Budget Speech Addendum, insert after paragraph 1, page 3".

Again in terms of fudging the figures, the Minister in his budget suggests that more Canadians will be working in the future as a result of his budget measures. The bottom line will be 55,000 fewer Canadians working at the end of 1984 than were working in 1981 when his predecessor introduced the most disastrous budget in Canadian history. Why is the Minister so blatantly manipulating the employment forecasts and thus raising hopes among unemployed Canadians that he knows he cannot fulfil?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think the answer to the Hon. Member's question is quite simple and quite obvious. In my speech last night I said that by the end of 1984, 600,000 more Canadians would be employed than at the end of 1982, and that employment was expected to grow at a steady pace during the months and years to come. I brought down an economic recovery budget, whose basic objective is to provide for a strong and lasting recovery of the Canadian economy. I hope the Hon. Member and her colleagues opposite will take the trouble to make a thorough analysis and to study carefully the substance of the proposals contained in this budget and that they will realize that, basically, the purpose of the budget is aimed at creating as many jobs as possible in our economy. However, it must be done in a responsible way, and that is what we are trying to do with this budget.

[English]

LARGER WAGE SUBSIDY PROGRAM SOUGHT FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that young people will be the last to be hired in an economic recovery, why did the Minister not bring in a much larger wage subsidy program for young people than the $95 million he targeted over a period of two years? Why did he not bring in something like a refundable tax credit program, not only for the 621,000 unemployed young people but for the chronically unemployed, the hidden unemployed, and the discouraged workers, of which there are 120,000 in this country? Why can he find $200 million to prop up what is left of his own shattered reputation when he can only find $95 million over two years to help unemployed young people?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Opposition is in a situation where it is repeating itself again. I am afraid I will have to repeat the answer. The $200 million added to the special recovery capital projects is going to take the form of expenditures across the country. My hon. friend has been complaining about Search and Rescue, for instance. Does he not admit and recognize that we could use some money for refurbishing our Search and Rescue helicopters? Does he not admit that we could spend more money on equipping our Coast Guard in a more efficient way? These are projects that we have not been able to proceed with as far as we would like because the funds were not available.

I have now made funds available that will allow projects like this to proceed faster and earlier than had been anticipated. That will mean work in the shipyards of eastern Canada and western Canada, and it will mean better protection for the fishermen and the people who work at sea about whom I am sure the Hon. Member is concerned.

That is what the availability of these funds will mean. It will mean more Canadians at work, it will mean more and better services for Canadians at work, whether they are fishing or working on offshore platforms. These are some examples of many of the things that this country needs, the capital investment this country needs, things that we have not been able to accomplish in the last while.

I hope that these funds indeed will lead to the employment of young people as well as adult Canadians all across the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FORECAST OF JOBS TO BE CREATED

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, God knows we need better Search and Rescue in this country. But we need jobs, and we are not going to get them this year according to the Minister of Finance.

I want to ask a question of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who has to share the responsibility for this cruel hoax that has been perpetrated on the unemployed. That is what the budget is, a cruel hoax. I want to put a question to that Minister who has to bear responsibility for advice given to the Minister of Finance. Given the fact that at the end of 1985 we will have more people unemployed, three years on into recovery, than at the end of 1982 when there were more people unemployed than at any time since 1933—given that disgraceful fact which I take from the forecast of the Minister of Finance—will he tell the House how many jobs we can expect from the program brought in by his colleague, the Minister of Finance, last night? When can we expect these jobs? There are two million Canadians out there who are waiting.

• (1425)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, before the Hon. Member gets himself worked into a frenzy, it might be useful if he went back and read the budget documents that were tabled last night.

Mr. Jarvis: Which ones?

Mr. Axworthy: The Minister of Finance indicated that over the next two years 600,000 jobs will be created in Canada. That will be an average labour growth of between 3 and 5 per cent over the next two years to provide major stimulus in the economy. Those 600,000 jobs will come from a combination of jobs provided in the private sector and direct employment jobs.

The Hon. Member seems to be suffering from a major learning disability in not being able to read properly. I would point out to him that the fact of the matter is that the $1.6 billion that is being put into direct employment jobs will create something like 300,000 jobs directly by the Government, through this Department, over the next two years. Before he goes into his wild, frantic outburst, it would be well for him to go back and read those facts so that he can provide proper, straight information to the Canadian public.

1983 UNEMPLOYMENT FORECAST

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, first of all I would say to the Minister who has just spoken that I have read the documents. Now I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

Given the fact that there are two million Canadian men and women who would like to get a job, how can the Minister of Finance describe his budget as a recovery budget when he notes in his budget documents that there are going to be fewer jobs in the Canadian economy in 1983 than in 1982?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, at the end of 1984 I said there would be 600,000 more Canadians employed than there were at the end of 1982.

Some Hon. Members: 1983.

Mr. Lalonde: At the end of 1983 we will have an improvement in the job situation. We have a very high level of unemployment at the present time. I have never indicated that we would get out of the unemployment level that we are facing at the present time just by the wish of the Leader of the NDP Opposition. I have indicated that the situation would improve gradually. This is what we are working on as fast and as urgently as is possible.

It is true that we have a high level of unemployment at the present time and that it will stay with us for a while. The question is whether we should get together and try to improve the situation, as was proposed in the budget, or just go on raving and ranting like the Leader of the NDP. I do not follow that line.

REASONS FOR UNEMPLOYMENT FORECAST

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I want to give the Minister a chance to correct the record before the House. I listened with care, and he just said that there is going to be an improvement in the job situation in 1983. Is he changing the budget once again, or will he admit that what he just said contradicts what appears on page 16 of "The Economic Outlook for Canada" document, which clearly indicates that there are going to be fewer jobs in the Canadian economy on average this year than there were last year? Will the Minister clarify that situation?

If he agrees that what I have said is true, then I come back to my first question. How, in heaven's name, does he have the nerve to call this a recovery budget when he knows that we are going to have about two million unemployed at the end of this year just as we have now?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the record shows that there will be more jobs at the end of this year in the Canadian economy than there were at the beginning of the year. That is what is going to take place. The average for this year is forecast to be about 12.4 per cent. We start from a high level and it will go down gradually. At the end of this year we will be in a better position in terms of numbers of jobs in this country than we are at the present time or than we were in January. That is what is happening. That is what will continue to happen gradually over the next two years.

It seems to me pretty obvious and pretty clear that this is indeed a recovery budget. It is not the kind of magic potion which the New Democratic Party would like to sell the Canadian public. It is a responsible budget which will depend upon the co-operation of all economic agents in the country—trade unions, management, Provinces, and the federal Government. I would love to be able to say that co-operation would also be forthcoming from the Opposition Parties, but I am afraid that would be too naive on my part.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the Minister's crocodile tears are very moving, indeed. I wish he would show the same concern for the unemployed.

REQUEST FOR INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, considering that the Minister's own documents show that the number of jobs in 1983 on average will be fewer than in 1982, and that the number of unemployed will be 200,000 higher in 1983 on average than in 1982, can the Minister tell us why he did not produce for the long run, having failed for the short run, the kind of strategy which he sometimes talks about, instead of throwing money helter skelter around out there hoping that something might happen in terms of job creation? Why did the Minister not bring before the House of Commons and before the people of Canada a long-range integrated industrial strategy which would give the people in our land some real reason to hope for the future?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the budget we have put forward is indeed a budget which is looking at both the short term and the medium term. It does indeed put forward a number of initiatives which will strengthen the Canadian economy, make it more competitive, and allow Canadian workers and management to beat the competition. That is what we want to ensure. If we can put business back into business, we will be able to put workers back to work and find jobs for Canadians. That is what we want to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT FORECAST FOR 1983

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. Perhaps the Minister could clarify the part about 1983. Not long ago, the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced the creation of 29,000 temporary jobs, but the effect was nil since 47,000 permanent jobs were lost. The Minister of Finance said that he will invest $1.5 billion this year, but it seems quite clear from his budget speech that there will be fewer jobs available in 1983. Will the Minister acknowledge that in 1983, there will still be nearly two million Canadians out of work, notwithstanding this injection of $1.5 billion?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the figures I announced yesterday were very specific. I indicated that for 1983, the unemployment rate would be approximately 12.4 per cent. If my hon. friend would care to check, I think 12.4 per cent equals about one million and a half of people out of work, which is indeed a very large number. I can also inform the Hon. Member, for instance, that thanks to the measures we announced last night, we shall be able to reduce unemployment gradually across Canada in 1983 and 1984. There will be fewer Canadians out of work in December 1983 than there are now or than there were in January 1983 and there will be fewer Canadians out of work by the end of 1984 than was the case at the end of 1983 or at the end of 1982. We shall continue to make progress in our fight against unemployment. However, I think it would be irresponsible to claim that we could rid our country altogether the tragedy of unemployment that is being experienced by both young people and adults. The aim of the budget is to take a comprehensive approach to this problem by trying to encourage the private sector to play its part in economic recovery, and that is what we intend to do. In addition, we have allocated half of the funds provided in this budget to direct aid to the unemployed through direct job creation by government programs. I feel this is a fairly balanced approach, and most of the comments I have heard since last night seem to indicate that the Canadian public is supporting the measures proposed in the budget.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary. I would like to take the Minister of Finance at his word when he says he is going to reduce unemployment, but the Minister knows perfectly well that we have been hearing this particular refrain for four or five years, and that the same promises have been made by at least three budgets, and we all know with what results. Is the Minister prepared to confirm, for the information of all Canadians, that his budget estimates for 1984-85, in addition to maintaining a high level of unemployment, according to the document just tabled, will oblige taxpayers to pay an additional $2 billion in taxes or income tax, and that corporations will be paying $815 million? In his forecast, does the Minister think it is fair to make the individual Canadian, who already has trouble paying his taxes, pay twice as much as the corporations?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the Government's tax measures were announced last night, and as of October 1984, there will be a one-percent increase in the manufacturers' sales tax, and we shall be maintaining the Canadian Ownership Special Charge which is now in effect. I said, however, that we shall be maintaining it at its current level. It will not be increased, and maintaining this tax will mean nearly one billion dollars of additional revenue for the Government. However, it is not being increased and it is not an additional tax. The main additional tax is the one resulting from the additional one per cent added to the manufacturers' sales tax for six months in 1984-85. The other additional tax reduces exemptions for the wealthiest people in Canada in 1984-85, and that is in line with our objective to ask Canadians who are well off to help those who are in need and people who are less fortunate than they are, and that is what this budget is trying to do.

IMPACT OF BUDGET ON ENERGY PROJECTS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development who is responsible for over-all economic development strategy. The Minister will know that over the past three years several energy oriented projects worth $30 billion to $40 billion were shelved as a result of the Government's destructive economic and energy policy. Would the Minister identify what specific measures are included in the budget which would facilitate the development of these energy projects, even on a smaller scale? For example, could the Minister indicate to the House what there might be in the budget to facilitate the development of a heavy oil upgrader in Lloydminster which would provide some 93,000 man-years of work over the next five years?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, first of all I cannot accept at all the premise upon which the question is based. I understand projects of a similar kind have been cancelled in the United States and elsewhere. There are provisions with respect to the PGRT contained in the budget which may indeed have an impact on some of the energy projects.

PETROCHEMICAL PROJECTS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, will the Minister not agree that the heavy oil upgrader is currently on the shelf as a result of federal Government policies? It could be spearheaded onward if the Government modified its policies in some respects. The same applies to the petrochemical industry. Some $6 billion to $8 billion worth of petrochemical projects are on hold which, again, would provide some 8,000 to 10,000 jobs. They are on hold because of the heavy up-front taxes arising out of the National Energy Program which makes Canada's feedstock uncompetitive in world markets. I would ask the Minister again to identify what positive action there is in the budget to ensure the facilitation of these petrochemical projects so that we can provide long-term meaningful, productive employment, rather than the kind of fluff which we have been hearing from the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, last night I was delighted to hear in this House, as I am sure all other Hon. Members were, about a $2.4 billion special recovery capital program which, of course, affects 100 projects all over the country, not concentrated specifically in one sector. This is going to make an on-going and permanent contribution to productivity through research and development and improved technology affecting all regions. That is what the Hon. Member should be talking about. I hope that in the succeeding weeks we will hear some compliments coming from him and other Hon. Members of the House with respect to the judicious selection of those projects which, as the Minister of Finance indicated during his speech, total over 100.

PROPOSAL TO INCREASE FEDERAL SALES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, while Canadians are recovering from the Minister's recovery budget, I must say I was a bit surprised that the Minister of Finance, who had been saying for many, many weeks that it was going to be a consumer led recovery, last night announced that perhaps one of the ways to assist this is to slap on an additional federal sales tax in October, 1984. If the Minister is serious about a consumer led recovery, would he explain how adding to the federal sales tax will help that recovery? Why did he not instead reduce the federal sales tax this year if he wanted to encourage Canadians to consume goods and services?

• (1440)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, first of all the Hon. Member has partially given the answer to his own question by pointing out that this increase in sales tax will not take place until October, 1984. By then we hope that the recovery in Canada will not only have taken hold, but that it will be very strong indeed. Secondly, the budget contains measures, such as those with regard to RHOSPs, whereby those who want to buy new homes, furnishings and appliances, will be encouraged to do so and will benefit from significant tax reductions if they make those expenditures by the end of 1984 for houses, and before the end of 1983 for appliances. These are, I believe, significant short-term measures which should help to increase consumption.

I might also mention that the measures I announced yesterday for 1983 are geared to put more money in the hands of low income groups, like low income workers who are going to benefit from the 3 per cent to 20 per cent increase in the $500 allowance for what is known as the employment expense deduction or tool allowance. That is going to mean something like $135 million more in the hands of low income workers that they will spend during the next few months. I think this, plus the $6 billion of tax refunds we are processing at the present time, should be a strong spur to consumption over the next few months.

Mr. Riis: In other words, Madam Speaker, what the Minister is saying is that if recovery begins this year he will slap an extra sales tax on it to make it more difficult for 1984. A puzzling method of economic stimulus.

Oral Questions

FUNDING OF MEASURES TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Along the lines of economic stimulus, Madam Speaker, my question to the Minister is this. Since we are paying out virtually $1 billion a month in UI benefits to Canadians from federal coffers, and since he surprised Canadians last night by saying that the $4.8 billion job-creation program was going to be spread over a four-year period, would it not be a better investment for the federal Government, rather than simply to invest $1.2 billion each year in job creation, to invest more money in job creation, which would result in serious economic development and economic return to Government coffers and thereby begin the process of reducing the deficit and the debt as well?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, last night I said that 70 per cent of the funds committed for capital projects under the $2.4 billion program I announced will be spent this year and next year. We have done everything possible to accelerate capital investment and to ensure that this money is spent as soon as possible on useful projects throughout Canada. By introducing various tax measures for the corporate sector, and especially for small- and medium-sized businesses in Canada, we have tried to encourage these businesses to start spending on capital projects as soon as possible to upgrade their operations. I believe these measures will have a beneficial effect on Canadian workers in general, and especially on those who are now unemployed, because if we can start business on the road to recovery in Canada, this will create jobs for Canadian workers and that has been our primary concern from the outset in preparing this budget.

[English]

GOVERNMENT REVENUE FROM TAXATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance will know that last night in his financial tables he increased his net take from the economy by $5.72 billion in taxes. Can the Minister explain how this tax grab will encourage job creation and economic recovery?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member might take the trouble of pointing out the number of years he is talking about. For this year and next year, when the economy will need stimulus, the Government is not increasing taxes on a global basis as the Hon. Member has indicated. As a matter of fact this year, 1983-84, we have a quite significant reduction in total taxes, and the Hon. Member should put that on the record. However, as the economy is going to recover and get stronger, obviously, as I indicated yesterday, we would make sure that the fruits of that growth are going to be shared, and the Government is going to get its share in taxes in order to pay for the expenditures we are incurring at the present time to support growth in the economy. So I would invite my friend to show exactly the number of years he is referring to, and he would have to point out that the taxes he is referring to are not taking place in 1983-84 at all.

FORECAST OF ANNUAL DEFICIT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Minister knows that even next year there is an increase in taxes of over $800 million. He knows that he is forecasting unemployment in excess of 10 per cent into the indefinite future. He is going to increase taxes and guarantee, almost in perpetuity, that the Canadian Government will have a deficit in excess of $25 billion a year. Therefore, I ask him how, in the name of recovery, that will create confidence, how it will stimulate the economy, create jobs and build this country?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would say that probably the best answer to the Hon. Member would be to ask him to take the trouble to read the statements made since last night by dozens and dozens of spokesmen for the private sector who have endorsed this budget. If he does not believe this budget is well received by the people who are going to invest and create jobs, he should explain to me why the Toronto Stock Exchange index went up 28 points since this morning.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: So did New York.

REJECTION OF AGRI-BOND CONCEPT

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, who made it very clear last night that this was a budget of recovery. I only wish, speaking for the agricultural industry, that it was a budget of discovery of the fact that we do have an agricultural industry in this country which is suffering very severely. I want to acknowledge, though, four items in that budget relating to the agricultural industry. One is a very small and insignificant measure to farmers in distress, and of course three other measures affecting a very few farmers. However, to take advantage of those three measures they would have to be in a profit position.

I want to ask the Minister of Finance why he ignored a golden opportunity to implement a very significant and meaningful program for farmers at this particular time, and of course he knows, as does the Minister of Agriculture, that I am referring to the implementation of the agri-bond concept. Why did he not utilize the opportunity last night to implement this program?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have indeed studied that proposal very, very carefully. I spent a lot of time reviewing it because I was trying to find out whether it could be implemented in a responsible way. As a matter of fact, as the Hon. Member knows, we asked an outside task force, the Lortie Commission as it was called, composed of experts in the field, to examine this matter. They came up with a recommendation against such a step. I think there are indeed very solid and valid reasons why that proposal has many difficulties. What I have done instead has been to add $100 million to a particular program for the farming community which is going to help farmers in difficulty. This will allow the Farm Credit Corporation under the Farm Financial Assistance Act to provide help and support to the farming community.

I might remind my hon. friend that in addition, as far as the farmers are concerned, the Minister of Agriculture has numerous programs which he has put forward and which he had support for, at least on this side of the House, when they came before the House. As a matter of fact there is one called Canagrex which we would very much like to see the Opposition support very soon. That proposal would be of great benefit to Canadian farmers too. There are plenty of opportunities to help the farmers if the Opposition want to do their share.

• (1450)

INQUIRY RESPECTING PROGRAMS TO ASSIST AGRICULTURE

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, the minister talks about the complications and difficulty in implementing the agri-bond concept. Naturally, we cannot accept that.

The other fact that we want to make clear, and I am sure the Minister would agree, is that of the $100 million going to the Farm Credit Corporation there would only be about $8 million in the form of a direct subsidy to farmers in distess. Why did the Minister again ignore three other measures that would be in the interest of agriculture and which would indeed fulfil, or partially fulfil, some longstanding election campaign promises on behalf of his Party? Why did he miss the opportunity to eliminate the federal tax on farm fuels, to make appropriate amendments to Section 31 of the Income Tax Act, and again make some significant and meaningful changes in the capital gains legislative area. Why did he not utilize the opportunity to implement those more simple programs last night in his budget?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that I have received hundreds of recommendations and proposals, and that many of them were very attractive. I certainly was very interested in considering whether they could be implemented. However, we cannot do everything at once. I have tried to propose a set of measures that will be most likely to give the economy a chance to create as many jobs as possible, as quickly as possible. The Hon. Member is referring to suggestions and proposals that I would have liked to implement, and there are hundreds of others, but unfortunately, or perhaps fortunately, I have saved a few for the next budget. I hope he will be luckier next time.

MINES AND MINING

CYPRUS ANVIL MINE PROPOSAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last week I asked the Prime Minister in the House if Cabinet would be meeting to discuss the proposal to reactivate the Cyprus Anvil Mine in the Yukon. I now ask the Prime Minister if Cabinet has reached a decision on that proposal which would see at least some proportion of the 30 per cent unemployed workers in the Yukon back to work immediately? Will the Prime Minister confirm that such a decision has been reached and, if so, would he give us the details of that decision?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, indeed Cabinet has met repeatedly on this subject. The present situation is that we have authorized the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to visit the Yukon and presumably try out some propositions. He has the authority to negotiate some possible arrangements. He has the authority of Cabinet to do that, but I am not in a position to make any announcement because I do not know the state of those negotiations between the Minister and the administrators of the Yukon and of the mine itself.

REPORT OF ANNOUNCEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): It is passing strange that the Prime Minister could not be more specific, because I understand from media reports that at this moment the Minister is in Whitehorse announcing a $50 million package for the recovery of the Cyprus Anvil Mine, with 210 workers being recalled, $25 million in a loan fully repayable to the federal Government, and with the Yukon Government helping out. I think it is regrettable that the Prime Minister would not have chosen to have made that announcement in the House when asked the question. I ask the Prime Minister again if he will confirm that such an announcement is being made in Whitehorse at this very moment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it seems to me that the Hon. Member will understand that if we can have an announcement in the House by the Hon. Member, and one up North from the Minister, we get double coverage for it. I am very happy that happened.

I am only sorry that the Member for Yukon has shown such great disinterest in this whole subject, to the point where he is not even in the House of Commons when his colleague is making this announcement.

Oral Questions

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF BENEFITS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance with regard to his budget. His budget last night acknowledged that there will be a loss of some 60,000 jobs in the Canadian economy this year, that unemployment will remain at 12.4 per cent and all the efforts of the Government with regard to job creation can only affect this by about one-half of a percentage point.

Many of the unemployed today are the heads of households who have children. They must pay for mortgages and grocery bills. Having robbed these people of the dignity of work, will he now seriously consider extending unemployment insurance benefits in order not to force upon them the indignity of having to go on welfare?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think the best way to restore dignity to those people whom the Member says have lost their dignity is not by extending benefits but by doing everything possible to provide them with work in jobs that they want and need. I think this is what the budget is trying to do.

Mr. Keeper: The Minister clearly indicated in his budget last night that he could not create jobs for Canadians.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER LISTEN TO UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, the Minister must be aware that unemployed Canadians all across the country are organizing. In Winnipeg on Monday night they formed a union of the unemployed. They are angry, frustrated, and fed up with the economic policies of the Government. One of the steps that they have called for is the extension of unemployment insurance benefits. Will the Minister, having listened to business, now listen to the unemployed?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, the central concern of the budget is indeed about the unemployed. All the steps we have taken in the budget are meant to come to the rescue of the unemployed by creating the environment in which the unemployed of the country will again have good, stable, well paid and satisfying jobs. That is what we want to do.

THE BUDGET

FIGURES GIVEN IN TABLED DOCUMENTS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who, in answer to a question put by my colleague from Vancouver Centre, stated in terms of his changing arithmetic in the budget that he had filed the necessary corrections and documents with the table last night. Is the Minister of Finance aware that the arithmetic in those documents does not conform to what he said in his budget speech? For example, on page 16 of the Fiscal Plan, it shows a special recovery capital increase for the year 1984-85 of $40 million, but in his speech he said it was $50 million. One page 41 of the Fiscal Plan we find that for the fiscal years 1984, 1985, and 1986, the deficits do not add up to the same figures, if you subtract revenues from expenditures. If he is aware of these corrections, how does he explain the discrepancies between his budget and what he filed last night?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if there is a particular mistake in a particular document that had been filed last night I will be very happy to correct it. I hope that my hon. friend will provide me with a photocopy of that document. I will be happy to make that correction.

Again, what is important is what I said in the House, and the figures I used in the House in my speech.

EXPENDITURE FIGURES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, when the Minister is looking for the many, many discrepancies, would he note on page 41 of the Fiscal Plan the expenditure figures in the aggregate are $200 million higher than on page 45 of the same Fiscal Plan? In the Budget Financial Requirements there is the figure of $26.7 billion for the year 1983-84, yet on page 46 of the Fiscal Plan they are shown at a mere $26.6 billion. If the Minister knew what he was doing, why were there so many errors last night?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member shows that he is indeed an excellent bookkeeper and must have been an excellent banker. Again, if there are particular errors in the document I would be very happy to ensure that corrections will be made. I will check with my officials and file the necessary corrections if corrections are required.

TABLING OF THE TWELFTH ANNUAL REPORT, 1982

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Justice, I have the honour of tabling in both official languages the Twelfth Annual Report of the Tax Review Board for 1982. I ask that the Report be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

MR. SKELLY—RIGHT OF ASSEMBLY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition of this House in which a group of individuals feel their right of assembly, which is guaranteed under the Constitution, is being denied. It is their concern that individuals involved with the Government of Canada have failed to provide them with a permit to carry through an assembly in which they wish to protest Canada's involvment with the Cruise missile. It would be the wish of the petitioners to have a permit in order that they be allowed to assemble and demonstrate against Government policy concerning the testing of the American cruise missile in Canada.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STEVENS—NOTICE OF POSSIBLE QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I would like to give immediate notice of a question of privilege that I hope to raise later this afternoon.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If the Hon. Member wants to raise a question of privilege, notice must not be given in the House but given in writing to the Speaker.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, the reason I rise now, as I understand the procedure, is that if the question of privilege arises during Question Period it is in order to give you notice from the floor of the House. That is what I was attempting to do.

My question of privilege arises from the answer given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) which confirms our suspicions that the House is now faced with inconsistent figures with respect to the Minister's expenditures and deficits. Various assumptions are wrongly presented in the documents that have been tabled. In short, I find it very difficult to see how Members of this House can proceed to have a meaningful budget debate when, in fact, we do not know what are the exact figures which the Minister of Finance in due course is going to be putting before us.

What I was suggesting, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Very well. That kind of question of privilege does not require any notice. The Hon. Member just rises from his seat and raises the question of privilege by saying that it follows from the deliberations and proceedings of the day. If the Hon. Member has a question of privilege later on, or now, that type of question of privilege will be heard.

Mr. Stevens: If I may continue, Madam Speaker, my question of privilege, as I said, arises from the response given by the Minister of Finance in that while we felt there were inconsistencies, I put my question to the Minister feeling that he may have some ready explanation. In due course we may be getting an explanation from the Minister of Finance. I felt that in order to preserve the question of privilege, if I gave you notice now I could in turn suggest that we hear the two formal replies to the budget, one from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), and one from the representative of the New Democratic Party. Thus we give the Minister of Finance an opportunity to check where the inconsistencies are and in due course I will proceed formally with my question of privilege.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, under the Standing Orders it would appear to me that my colleague, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), has given you the required notice and is suggesting a course of action which will not interfere with the normal budget debate yet give the Minister of Finance an opportunity to check his figures. I would suggest the proposal made by my colleague is most sensible, and suits the orderly procession of the business of the House.

Madam Speaker: Nobody thinks it is not sensible. There was no question of changing the normal course of events. We are all prepared to listen to the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) and those who want to follow in the debate on the budget. At any point at which the Hon. Member for York-Peel feels that he must raise a question of privilege, he can rise and do so. If it is pursuant to the deliberations of the day, he can just rise from his seat and present his question of privilege. It does not require notice. However, I think events will follow their course this afternoon.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, as you have said before, the Standing Orders provide that a question of privilege shall be raised as soon as possible after the incident from which it arose. However, if a question of privilege or an alleged question of privilege arises from oral question period, the first opportunity is not after two speeches or even later in the afternoon, but immediately following oral question period. If the Hon. Member wishes to raise at some other time a question of privilege arising from oral question period, he will have to give proper notice and raise his question after oral question period on the following day, and not after two or three speeches or later today, unless the question of privilege arises from those speeches. However, if he wishes to raise a question of privilege arising from a reply to a question during oral question period, he should not raise it two hours later but right now. Otherwise, he should give proper notice and raise the question tomorrow. I have no objection to the Hon. Member giving the House notice that he will probably be raising a question of privilege later on, but certainly not right in the middle of debate.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 30

[English]

THE BUDGET

ALLEGED PREMATURE DISCLOSURE OF BUDGETARY MEASURES

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I ask for leave to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 30 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring consideration, namely all matters relating to the prior disclosure by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) of detailed information about the contents of the budget delivered last evening, April 19, 1983, the confusion caused by the changes, the breach of the Minister of his oath of office, and the question of the propriety of the Minister continuing to act in his present capacity.

I gave you the required three hours' notice of this motion. We submit this is a serious matter that should be addressed immediately. The capacity of the Minister of Finance to continue to act in the best interests of the country and the breach of his oath of office through premature disclosure of the budget material, in our opinion, requires the immediate attention of the House.

Madam Speaker: I have received notice from the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) of his intention to move a motion under Standing Order 30. I want to remind Hon. Members that the Standing Order lays down very specific criteria, as they know, governing emergency adjournment motions. Section (5) of Standing Order 30 states:

In determining whether a matter should have urgent consideration, the Speaker shall have regard to the extent to which it concerns the administrative reponsibilities of the government or could come within the scope of ministerial action—

The motion certainly meets this criterion. The matter clearly falls within the responsibility of the Minister of Finance.

However, Section (5) of the Standing Order also goes on to state:

—and the Speaker also shall have regard to the probability of the matter being brought before the House within reasonable time by other means.

Thus, the fact that a matter is urgent is not sufficient to qualify it under this particular Standing Order. To be acceptable there must be no probability of an early opportunity occurring for its consideration.

We are about to embark on a six-day debate on the budget, today being the first day of that debate. The terms of the budget motion are very broad and discussion can range widely. It is a matter of parliamentary tradition that the debate on the budget can cover the whole gamut of Government financial policy and administration. There is therefore an immediate opportunity to consider the matters envisioned in the Hon. Member's motion. There could be no earlier opportunity possible.

• (1510)

The notice given to me by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North also implies an accusation against the Minister in that it refers to:

—the possibility that the Minister has breached his oath of office as a Minister and the question of the Minister's ability to function in his present capacity.

I remind Hon. Members again that this is not a matter for an emergency adjournment motion. It is one which calls for a decision of the House, and a motion under Standing Order 30 results in no decision because the decision which the House reaches is that the House must adjourn. Therefore, on the substance of such a motion that problem is not really resolved.

Erskine May is quite clear in stating that such matters may be debated only on substantive motion which admits of a distinct vote of the House. On page 368 of Erskine May's Nineteenth Edition, it is indicated:

These matters cannot, therefore, be questioned by way of amendment, or upon any motion for adjournment or in debate on a Consolidated Fund Bill.

I must therefore refuse to accept this motion as it does not fall within the criteria required by Standing Order 30, and also because its subject matter is better suited to a substantive motion than to an adjournment motion.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) tabled his last chance budget—the last chance this Government has of restoring its fiscal credibility after years of fiscal irresponsibility, economic mismanagement and a string of disastrous budgets which crippled an economy already in recession.

In attempting his last chance he has adopted a basic Conservative principle that our country's best chance of regaining economic growth and creating new jobs is in encouraging the private sector. He has introduced a series of measures which are aimed at encouraging investment opportunities, thus reversing the anti-investment policies of his predecessor.

It should be noted that the Finance Minister started his political career as an aide to Conservative Justice Minister Davie Fulton, and if he had truly returned to the fold, we would commend him. However, a scrutiny of his complex and confusing budget documents shows that he has made no serious attempt to reduce Government expenditures and in fact plans to expand them in order to find the funds to finance his recovery program. He is adding $5 billion to an enormous deficit at a time he claims the economy is in recovery.

Normally Finance Ministers have the wit to spend during recession and save during the recovery phase in order to balance the country's books over the long term. But one dominant theme of his budget is that the country will be permanently in debt for the foreseeable future, a debt which threatens our ability to pay for the social programs we have gained over the years. I will return to that point in a moment.

A further scrutiny of his budget shows that the instigator of the National Energy Program which in effect expanded federal control over the energy sector is at heart still the great intervenor. He has announced literally hundreds of changes to Government programs, and it will take time to absorb their implications.

He has extended the Canadian Ownership Charge to finance unnamed purchases at a cost to the taxpayer of between $700 million and $1 billion annually. In his "buy now pay later" budget where he expects to raise his revenues through tax increases after he spends them, he has set up the business sector as the fall guys if in fact his policies fail—he can blame them for failing to respond to his incentives. But some businesses will not be able to respond because their markets are depressed. The Minister has done little for consumers whose real incomes are falling and not much at all for the unemployed who need to get back to work to earn pay cheques needed to encourage consumer spending.

In essence, what the Minister has done is attempt to bridge the gap between the present time and 1984-85 when the economy may return to the levels of growth it achieved in the pre-recession economy. That is okay, but he has failed to address the basic structural problems which we face in the country today. That is where he has failed to show the leadership we require at this time.

Surely what must be most striking to Canadians is that the budget promises recovery at the same time as it predicts that unemployment will remain at 10 per cent or higher until 1986. The reality is that Canadians face at least three more years of double-digit unemployment. Even in 1984 there will be 55,000 fewer people with jobs than in 1981. How can those grim projections square with the Minister's promise of recovery? Partly because only part of the special recovery capital projects represents new spending. We are told these projects are funded at a cost of about $2.2 billion, of which $1.5 billion is new spending. Of that $1.5 billion, only $460 million is expected to be spent in the current fiscal year. That does not do much to provide hope to unemployed Canadians today.

Moreover, no project under the program will be physically under way until at least October, 1983 when the recovery is expected to be almost a year old. But these are the projects which are supposed to bring about recovery, providing in the Minister's words "immediate economic and employment opportunities throughout Canada".

Canadians will be excused if they ask whether these projects are intended to provide immediate relief for the unemployed or political relief for the Liberal Party. They might also ask if the projects are simply a way of putting people to work only in order to go back on Unemployment Insurance. The alternative to that prospect is a rate of growth sufficiently high to reduce unemployment and absorb the increases in the labour force. It is interesting in that regard that a wire story came out today indicating that the economic firm, Chase Econometrics, in running the Minister's figures through its model, forecasts that his proposals would add only one-half of 1 per cent to our economic growth this year. According to the Minister's figures, he will not have that kind of growth under his stewardship as Finance Minister.

The growth we need can come about in the long term through productive investment. In the short term recovery and growth must be encouraged by encouraging consumption. The unemployed are not consuming. The Minister could have extended Unemployment Insurance benefits to ensure that some of those Canadians out of work could continue to support their families and make consumer purchases. At least those benefits could have been extended until the jobs in the recovery program began to come on stream. He chose not to do that. On the contrary, Canadians face an eventual tax burden of $5.7 billion over the next four years. With the twin prospects of few jobs now and higher taxes later, how can consumers be expected to create the demand necessary for real recovery?

The Minister claims that his budget has been motivated by two goals: achievement of fast growth, and guaranteeing a durable recovery. In our view, the budget fails to generate growth in the short term and may in fact threaten recovery in the long term. The reasons are as follows.

The best guarantee of sustained recovery in the years ahead is the steady creation of jobs through the development of the small-business sector, which creates something like 32 per cent of new jobs in the country. By applying the benefits that come from research and development, we could hope for higher productivity, new product development and new markets, resulting in new jobs. One key to long-term recovery is research and development through the small-business sector. We have in the budget only a study of research and development. As for small business, the Minister has seriously misread the needs of many small businesses in the short term.

On the face of it the budget is a pro-business budget, and we support some of the measures that recognize what we have been saying since the Government's first budget in 1981, that investment means growth. But the recession that those earlier budgets aggravated has resulted in many small businesses in Canada being on the verge of financial collapse or, at best, with acute cash flow problems. The investment incentives announced last night do not accomplish the immediate stimulus and inject the activity into the economy that the Minister recognizes we need now. I do not understand, for instance, why he did not adopt the suggestion of a small-business corporation which would help the cash flow problems of small businesses by allowing them to take in partners who could write off any losses against their income. There are other measures like that which he could have proposed at limited cost.

I will be pointing out in a few minutes the specific impact of the tax measures on individual Canadians in different economic circumstances. The principle need of small business has been, and will continue to be, increased spending by consumers. Last year the Government removed $2 billion from the economy through an increase in Unemployment Insurance premiums. The partial deindexation of personal income tax removed a further $1 billion, for a total reduction in the pruchasing power of the economy of $3 billion. Nothing in this budget makes up for that and much in the measures of last night add to the reduction in consumer spending. This is important because, I repeat, growing spending by consumers is the most immediate need of the small business sector. We would be supporting measures that served to put dollars in the hands of consumers, especially those out of work or that eased the cash flow problems of small business. Unfortunately, the Minister has given us nothing to support.

I said earlier that the durability of the recovery is in doubt because of the net effect of the budget. We lament the fact that there is no possibility of reducing the deficit below $25 billion anywhere in the foreseeable future on the basis of the budget. I am not raising the question here about how high in the short term the deficit should go or how much stimulus the Minister should have provided. We can deal with that in Question Period and later in the debate. However, I have argued that more of that stimulus should be geared to consumers who are in financial straits and businesses whose financial problems render them incapable of taking advantage of the investment incentives offered. That includes, of course, members of the agricultural community.

My concern is with the fact that with 26.1 per cent of the Gross National Product accounted for by Government expenditures, much of it in the form of permanent national debt, those effects will be felt in the form of choking off the recovery just as soon as it begins to bloom.

Sustained recovery in the long term and a more vigorous growth rate in the short term are both based on perceived and real lower interest rates. That recovery is threatened by a Government reaching deep into the pockets of Canadians through massive tax increases just when the benefits of business investment should begin to be felt.

In short, we face the real possibility of a deficit crowding out the very private sector incentives the budget creates, resulting in higher interest rates and increasing inflation, coming at precisely the time that massive tax increases will either wipe out Canadians' purchasing power further or create new cash flow pressures for business.

The House can only conclude that the Minister of Finance has ignored future consequences of his fiscal plan in the interest of his short term political survival. There is no apparent link between his fiscal policy and a monetary policy that will be of major significance in maintaining confidence throughout the rebuilding phase of the recovery.

We cannot hope to prevent a rise in interest rates and inflation on the basis of last night's deficit projections, and even that deficit is predicated on a real growth rate of 4½ per cent in four consecutive years, which is unbelievably unrealistic given the circumstances he describes in his budget.

There is another casualty of the Government's preoccupation with political survival. The country is beginning to lose count of the number of times the 1981 MacEachen budget has been wheeled to the operating room for surgery. That budget proposed to raise $1.7 billion in revenue through additional taxes from business. This budget is giving back about one-third of that revenue in new tax incentives. In the interim, corporate profits and finances have been in far too many cases wiped out.

We in our Party agree with some of the incentives. We applaud those because we recommended them. However, at best the Minister is only partially restoring the damage of 1981. For example, instead of bringing back the full capital cost allowance and repealing the 12½ per cent tax on dividends—in effect restoring a known and effective tax system—he adds new, complex tax incentives that will have about one-third the value of those his predecessor did away with. That is the cost of another round of surgery on the universally discredited 1981 budget.

An additional cost of the deficit is the potential and real impact eventually on the social programs that Canadians have built up over the years. We simply may not be able to afford them in years to come or to make the adjustments to them free of cost pressures with this kind of pressure constraining every fiscal decision we make in the years ahead.

That prospect is not just a textbook theory. The very size of a $32 billion deficit is frightening. For instance, a $30 billion deficit is more than the total Government spending on health and education in the last fiscal year by all levels of Government. It is higher than total Government spending as recently as 1974-1975, which is nine years ago. Old age pensioners could be getting four times the monthly payments they are currently receiving. It is $3,120 per taxpayer. That $32 billion is enough to triple unemployment payments for one year. It is equal to the equalization payments to the have-not Provinces for five years.

Instead of real job creation and deficit control, the budget provides for net future tax increases totalling $5.7 billion over the next four years and deficits totalling more than $102 billion between now and 1986-87. That is why we question the Minister's ability to deliver a recovery under those terms. In 1984 alone, taxes which primarily affect individuals will rise by about $380 million. Let me give some examples. These are the kinds of taxes that affect most Canadians in average circumstances.

While the child care deduction has been doubled to $2,000 per child with an $8,000 maximum, the claim from now on will have to be made by the spouse with the lower income. This may then create problems for working wives who have unemployed husbands or husbands who are still in school. That does not seem to us to be fair.

Furthermore, the Child Tax Credit will be maintained at $343 for 1983 instead of decreasing to $326 as would have happened had the six and five restraint program been applied. The cost to the taxpayer comes because there will be no indexing of the threshold amount over which the credit is eroded. This will remain at the 1982 level of $26,330. Therefore, as people's income rises, the Child Tax Credit will decrease.

Even more obvious is the elimination of the $100 standard deduction. Unfortunately, this has not been replaced by the "give and take" proposals of the voluntary sector and may cost charities a substantial amount in lost donations. Almost certainly it could lead to an increase of the Revenue Canada bureaucracy in order to deal with receipts that Canadians will have to file in order to claim a deduction from a charitable donation. In fact, one budget analyst predicts that the additional manpower cost of this budget change will be approximately equal to the $80 million in revenue the Government expects to gain from it.

In addition, the federal tax cut credit has been restructured. In 1984 it will be reduced by 10 per cent of the amount by which the federal tax payable exceeds $6,000. In 1985 the maximum figure drops to $100 and then to $50 in the following year. In terms of equity, tax credits favour the lower income groups. When a tax credit is reduced, that is who suffers the most. While lower income Canadians are losing under this measure, the Government stands to gain $265 million in 1984 alone.

Similarly, the children's exemption has been frozen. That means that taxpayers with children under the age of 18 will find that the exemption will not rise with inflation. It will not even rise by 6 or 5 per cent. Added to the other tax increases, it means that Canadian families are going to be paying higher taxes in coming years.

Unlike the MacEachen budget, these latest tax measures make no mention of equity. Canadians, particularly those with children and those in the lower income groups, are just told to pay up. There are two other taxes that all Canadians will be paying. I am referring to the continuation of the Canadian ownership charge and the increase in the manufacturers' sales tax.

As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian ownership charge was introduced to pay for the Government's takeover of Petrofina. The cost of the takeover has been almost entirely paid off, but we learned last night that this tax is to continue indefinitely. With Petrofina paid off, the Government can use this enormous revenue generator to bail out Dome and the banks. Others grabs by PetroCanada can be financed in this way at a cost to the average energy consumer of about $60 per year.

On top of that, Canadians will be facing a 1 per cent increase in the manufacturers' sales tax next year. Consumers will not begin to feel this until about the time they start their Christmas shopping. All of a sudden they will note increased prices on most of the goods they wish to purchase. The Government is postponing the pain of this tax increase. In the meantime, in all likelihood we will have an election. Our Party will have to implement this tax grab and explain to Canadians why they are feeling the pinch.

• (1530)

The Minister has presented his last chance budget. We will be evaluating his proposals during this budget debate as we pursue the fine print and his background papers to find out how his proposals will be implemented and what their effect will be.

We are very aware in our Party that Canada is on the threshold of our best chance in years to become the kind of country we can become, a country which is productive and competitive and eager for challenge, a country where every Canadian can find useful and interesting work.

We have been through the economic wringer, and in the process we have squeezed out some excesses. Our manufacturing is operating at only 63 per cent of capacity. But some of that capacity is obsolete and must be replaced with new plant and equipment, some of it in new industries. Our hard hit corporations are slowly paying down their strangling debt load. Managers who had become insulated and slow to adapt to change found themselves redundant as their companies struggled to survive. The men and women who replace them will be less complacent.

Some workers who have lost their jobs may never go back to their old tasks. They must face the often painful task of looking for new jobs in different fields and retraining themselves in the process.

As our markets dried up at home, we became more export conscious, aware of the global marketplace where we must be among the best in the world to succeed and where in many fields, such as communications, our success rate shows we are the best in the world.

We have moved into a weak, fragile recovery following the worst recession in 50 years. As our inflation rate has slowed, our wage pressures have moderated. Last year Canada and France shared the reputation for having the worst inflation record of 22 countries.

If we are to sustain that recovery and nurture it into a rolling expansion, we must avoid our past mistakes and change some of our attitudes. For instance, I would like to quote from a survey done by the European Management Forum that ranks 22 countries around the world on such factors as their ability to produce and the way they manage their economic affairs. Canada ranked sixth out of the 22 countries. It is interesting that three of the countries, Japan, Switzerland and The Netherlands, do not have anything like the resource base that we have.

In our ability to compete, we ranked 13 out of 22. That is due to our low productivity where we are in 22nd or last place. In human resources we ranked third due to a well-educated mobile labour force, but that is partly offset by a managerial talent rating of only 10.

In terms of outward orientation or our ability to look to the world for markets, we rank well down the list. One of the problems is the inability or unwillingness of managers to seek overseas postings and to learn another language.

One of the most telling observations of this survey was that in innovative orientation, we are 16 out of 22 countries. We have fallen from 13 to 16 in that ranking. Those are some of the measures we have to address and those are some of the attitudes we have to change.

For the reasons I have outlined, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That all the words after the word "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"This House condemns the Government and rejects the budget for its failure to adequately address the human tragedy of unemployment and increasing an already unmanageable deficit while, at the same time, imposing an even greater tax burden on Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I must say that today Canadians are recovering from the recovery budget. I believe that one thing is perfectly clear. While the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) listened to very many people as he prepared his budget, he heard very, very few people. He heard a very selected few. He certainly heard from the investment community. They had something to tell him and he listened very carefully. We see a budget that reflects that viewpoint. But he also heard from the Progressive Conservatives and accepted many of their recommendations, suggestions and advice.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that what we have today is a budget brought down by a Liberal Minister of Finance that is essentially a Conservative budget. What is a Conservative budget? It is a budget which means that while two million Canadians are out of work today and two million Canadians will be out of work tomorrow and two million Canadians will be out of work this summer and next winter and two million Canadians will be out of work next year, there will be a handful of Canadians that will be doing very, very well, thanks to this Conservative budget.

This is a budget that Canadians did not want at this particular time. This is not the kind of budget that Canadians were watching their television sets and listening to their radios to see and to hear. They did not want to see and hear a Conservative budget introduced in the House of Commons last night. They wanted a budget that would provide some very clear, strong, bold economic leadership for this country.

The people of Canada were hoping finally to see some direction given to economic development and progress in this country. They were hoping to see a very clear economic statement made that would show the way for Canadians so that Canadians in every region of the country and from every walk of life would have a clear idea of where this country is going.

But the people of Canada got nothing, Mr. Speaker. They got a "do not take action" budget. They got a "do not stimulate the economy in any significant way" budget. They got a "do not provide economic leadership" budget. What the people of Canada received was a Conservative budget. The budget simply takes the status quo, makes a few simplistic manipulations, moves it up for the next year or two, and then waits to see.

A number of people in the New Democratic Party have described this budget as a wait and see budget: wait for the economy to turn around in the United States and then see if Canada can move into economic recovery on the coattails of Mr. Reagan's policies.

Mr. Waddell: Same old story.

Mr. Riis: That is right. As my colleague for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has said, it is the same old story. It is a wait and see budget. We are to stand back and not take any action ourselves. We are to wait for others to solve our problems. We have been doing that for decades. For decades we have been expecting others to solve our economic problems. We have been waiting for the Americans, the Japanese, the Germans and the Swiss to solve our problems.

Canadians want to solve their own problems. They want to take action now. They were expecting a Government that would provide them with that kind of action and leadership.

The Minister of Finance came before us and presented a budget that ignored Canada's number one overwhelming problem, the fact that so many Canadians cannot find work. Too many Canadians are relying on UIC today. Too many Canadians are relying on welfare. Too many young people will be unable to find jobs this summer. That is a tragedy in a country as rich as Canada. Hundreds of thousands of young Canadians have been studying in vocational schools, upgrading their education in colleges, universities and specialty schools. To get to the job market and not be able to take those new skills and knowledge and put them to work for the country is a tragedy. That destroys a young person; dashes morale. They lose heart and become disappointed. It is not the kind of thing on which countries are built.

What is the Government's response to two million people being out of work and 900,000 young Canadians coming on to the job market in the next couple of weeks? It claimed to have a stimulative budget which would provide $4.8 billion for the private and public sector over a four-year period. Why was that not spread over a 20-year period or a seven-year period, Mr. Speaker? It was a sham. To spend $4.8 billion over a four-year period means $1.2 billion per year. That is the amount we spend every single month on UIC. Could we not do a little better than that for a job creation program? It is a pitiful gesture, Mr. Speaker.

Why were UI benefit periods not extended or assistance provided for people who are losing their homes because they have been laid off or are just getting back to work? There was no assistance in the budget for those people. We are told that we have to accept these high levels of unemployment and that we have to accept the fact that we are going to have the number of employed in the country actually decrease this year.

If a country as rich as Canada has to accept 12.6 per cent unemployment, Mr. Speaker, that is a tragedy.

Some people have called this a pro-business budget, but if we examine it very closely we see that is only half true. It is a pro-business budget for a very select portion of the business community. If you are a healthy corporation making healthy profits you will be able to use the provisions of the budget; if you are producing to capacity there are provisions you can use. But if you are like most small and medium-sized businesses which are struggling to survive as they wait out the recession or depression, experiencing shortages in cash flow and perhaps laying off staff that have been with them for many, many years, if you are simply hanging in there anticipating that the Minister will bring in a stimulative budget to get the economy moving, can you imagine how such people feel today, Mr. Speaker? They have been sabotaged by the Minister of Finance. He has turned his back on the small and medium-sized businesses that have been pressed to the wall as a result of Government induced recession policies. There is very little for them in the budget.

This morning I was going to an early morning television show and so I took a cab. The driver told me that fourteen years ago he left Europe to come to Canada. This was his dream—a country where the unemployment level was 4.5 per cent; it was a "just society"; the "land was strong"; the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was saying he was interested in "full employment for Canada"; inflation was 4 per cent; the Gross National Product was increasing 5 per cent per year and 25-year mortgages were available at 6.5 per cent. This man built a small business while his wife worked in a small factory. They raised three children. Then the Government decided that it needed a recession and introduced policies to induce that recession or depression. It tightened the money supply, increased interest rates, reduced the Gross National Product and increased unemployment. These were the conscious policies of this Government, similar to the policies of Mr. Reagan to the south of us.

This man lost his business, he lost his home, he lost his family. He is now driving a cab in Ottawa. He told me that he is going to go back to Europe because his dream of Canada had been dashed, to a large extent because of the policies of the Government.

In the last few hours we have seen the people of Canada rejected. The Government turned its back on the people. But more than that, the people have been used as pawns in this political game of chess between the Liberals and the Conservatives where employees are not viewed as people any longer but as commodities. People are bought, sold, exchanged, exploited, used and thrown on the garbage heap to become the unemployed.

This economic carnage is the result of a Government policy reflected in its Conservative budget where capital takes priority over people, where maximization of profit takes priority over human dignity. In this Party we regard that as an immoral position for a Government, and as reflected in this Conservative budget it is anything but what is required during these difficult times.

Earlier I said that a select few in Canada will benefit from the tax provisions in the budget. This is a tax increase budget. It is a budget that will increase taxes for most Canadians in the years ahead. As a matter of fact, over the next four-year period the provisions of the budget will increase the personal income tax revenue to the Government by $3.5 billion.

What about the corporate sector, Mr. Speaker? Is it going to increase its contribution? In this Conservative budget its contributions are going to go down by $2.6 billion over the same four-year period.

There will be a 1 per cent increase in federal sales tax and the charges for pay television and cable television will be taxed. This is a desperate tax grab from that group which the Minister claims will be the leader in the recovery program, the consumer. If he is serious about consumers leading or participating in the recovery program, he should have reduced the federal sales tax instead of increasing it.

I believe that the Minister of Finance missed a golden opportunity. Not only did he bungle the process of the budget, he bungled the content. In these difficult times why did the Minister not bring in a full employment option as the goal for the budget? That goal could have put many more Canadians back to work in the short term and in the long term. He should have brought in strategies to accomplish that goal.

Mr. Lalonde: You are the one who laughed at short-term jobs.

Mr. Riis: Canadians were looking for direction, for strong leadership, for strategies to move people off the welfare and UIC rolls.

We needed short-term action to begin to create jobs immediately and to show that we are serious about getting Canadians back to work. We needed short-term strategies to provide money for human capital. We need to invest in our most important resource in the country that, by and large, has been ignored in the budget—the people of the country, our human resource. We should have been providing money for health, education, and developing skills in the workforce, based on the assumption that healthy, well educated, skilled workers would have a high rate of productivity and would therefore contribute to the growth of the country.

There should have been money for reforestation; for affordable, co-operative and non-profit housing; for development of municipal infrastructure; for improved transportation facilities and for environmental protection. In other words, we do not need leaf-raking schemes or people to dig holes and fill them up again. We need short-term jobs that will result in economic development in the country in the years ahead, that will bring revenues into the federal coffers and thus begin to reduce the deficit.

Most important, Mr. Speaker, we needed a long-term job creation strategy as well. The Government should provide an opportunity for Canadians to plan as an economic family, to do what every decent family does—look ahead and identify where they can develop. But we are renters; renters in our own homes with people outside our country making decisions for us.

• (1550)

Our friends in the Conservative Party say leave it to the private sector. That assumes that the private sector is all Canadian. But so many of the critical economic decisions are not even made in Canada, Mr. Speaker; they are made elsewhere.

We in this Party say that it is time to develop a long-term economic recovery program, a long-term strategy in order to develop those sectors of our economy which ought to be developed in the best interests of Canadians. In a country like ours it is a shame that we import manufactured commodities and manufactured equipment for something like our mining sector. We are the third major mining company in the entire world, Mr. Speaker, yet most of our mining equipment is imported. We should be exporting mining equipment. We should be developing a mining equipment manufacturing sector for our domestic needs as well as for international markets. We should do the same in forestry, agriculture, and fishing.

What we need in this country is a strategy so that Canadians can understand what it is we are attempting to accomplish. We do not need a strategy which is dreamed up by mandarins in Ottawa who are protected from the realities of the real world. We should develop a strategy in a proper way with the co-operation of our colleagues across the country as a Canadian economic family. Once we have that strategy in place, then we in the federal House and the provincial Houses across Canada as well as the private sector of this country will know what it is we are attempting to accomplish and can join in a recovery program.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to propose the following amendment:

That the amendment standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) be further amended by adding after the word "Canadians" the following "and in particular for its failure to undertake programs to:

(1) stimulate consumer demand;

(2) undertake immediate job-creation programs aimed at reducing significantly the levels of unemployment in 1983, and

(3) produce an economic strategy aimed at integrating private and public sector investment to ensure long-term economic growth".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): While awaiting the text of the amendment, the Chair would like to inquire as to the name of the seconder of the motion.

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Fisher: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Can you tell us whether questions are permitted of the previous speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Yes, brief questions and comments for a period not beyond ten minutes are allowed at this time.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I suppose there is no one on this side who feels more strongly about job creation than do I.

Mr. Waddell: Cross the floor, then, come over, because they don't care.

Mr. McRae: To go over there would make me ineffective. I would have no effect. I would just make noise.

My question has to do with the latter part of the Hon. Member's statement. For years I have heard this word "planning"—we need planning, we need a strategy and so on. It is an incredibly easy thing to say but I would like someone to define the word in terms of how you develop a strategy for one set of industries and leave the regional nature of this country out. It seems to me that we should start to define what this is and stop talking about planning as some kind of an abstract. I do not hear anything but abstractions. There might be one industry you would want to do something about, but I have the feeling that this word has been over-used and not explained. It seems to me that it is a nice, convenient way of criticizing a Government but it does not give us anything positive.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond in three ways. I would be pleased to send the Hon. Member some material on the process of economic planning. He makes it seem as though this is some unique phenomenon in which other countries have not been involved. I would like to remind him of two examples of countries which have participated in very serious, comprehensive and sophisticated economic planning with considerable success. Both countries are diverse in regions and have similar topography as Canada, although perhaps are different in size. Those are the countries of Japan and Sweden. As a result of the economic planning which those two countries have successfully attempted, their unemployment level—which they find very difficult to accept today—is less than 3 per cent.

Obviously, the Hon. Member did not listen very carefully to what I said. What I said was that any economic strategy for the future of this country, in recognition of the diverse regional aspects of a country as vast as Canada, needs to be accomplished by a Canadian economic family. The economic strategy for the future would incorporate, as I said, the federal House, the provincial Houses across this country which reflect the regions and the subregions of Canada, as well as the private sector. I cannot imagine what more input would be required from the sectors of the economy, from the regions of the economy, in terms of developing both short and long-term economic strategies than by using that method.

Mr. McRae: I wonder how the Hon. Member can use those two examples of quite homogeneous countries as opposed to a country which is so diverse as this one. It seems to me it is a totally different pattern and we must be realistic about that pattern. Bringing these regions together is a very, very difficult task and it cannot be done by just using the word "planning".

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, if I may respond, I happen to know, as a result of my heritage, Sweden and Scandinavia very well. For the Hon. Member to stand in his place and call Sweden a homogeneous country obviously means that he has never been there. I suggest it would do him well to visit some of these countries which do have progressive economic policies in place and do plan for the future of their country and, more importantly, for their citizens.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we could cut through some of the slogans and get down to some practical details. I would like to know how the Hon. Member intends to accomplish some of these lofty ideas. He said in Question Period, for example, that the Government should have reduced federal sales tax as a key device to create a consumer-led recovery. I believe that is a fair representation of what he said. He obviously cannot square that with his subsequent platitudes about being a nationalist because such a tax reduction, in the opinion of people like John Bulloch of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, would stimulate people to buy foreign watches, foreign cameras, foreign appliances and foreign cars. How does the Hon. Member intend to prevent people from transferring our tax benefits to foreign manufacturers in the name of his beloved consumer-led recovery?

Mr. Riis: To begin with, Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would listen carefully to what I have to say, I did emphasize that the regions of Canada were very important in any economic recovery program, as are the provincial Governments. If we are going to identify the federal sales tax reduction as a way to put money into the hands of consumers, we would ask our provincial colleagues across the country to participate in this program. We would ask them to identify the appropriate sectors and so on where this would more realistically apply.

• (1600)

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I have heard for the last several months now Hon. Members opposite, including the Leader of that Party, indicate what a great system the Swedish have and how the Japanese are making such progress. I have asked him this before and his Party has refused to answer. Are they prepared to follow the Swedish model, that is wage control and included inflation to ensure real wage losses to workers? That is how they keep unemployment down. In Japan workers take a low fixed wage and profit sharing, and when things get bad they are guaranteed a decline in real wages. They do not have large industrial unions in Japan, they have company unions. Now, are the Hon. Member's supporters, financial and otherwise, prepared to go along with that kind of a model of economic development? I doubt very much they are.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I believe the response needs to take two tacks. One, no one would be as simplistic as the Hon. Member has indicated to suggest that whatever occurs in one single country can be applied in another cultural context. However, I say there are many lessons to be learned, and here is one of them. The Hon. Member talks about wage controls, wage restrictions. One thing that Sweden has and this country has not, and is not likely to have in the immediate future, is a compact between labour, industry and Government where there is fairness in how programs are applied. The fact that virtually the entire Swedish labour force is organized makes it possible for organized labour to sit down with the social democratic Government and industry and together agree on recovery programs. But here this Government attemps to force wage controls and restrictions on a select group. It is that kind of economic arrogance which puts us in the difficult situation we find ourselves in. So when Members opposite stand up and call for co-operation, as the Minister of Finance has done in his budget, it is a hollow cry because they have betrayed not only ordinary Canadians but the trade union movement in this country so very, very often.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. finance critic for the NDP a question. We heard a lot of pious platitudes from him but no specific concrete proposals.

Mr. Waddell: You did not listen.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I wonder if he would accept the method Sweden has used on several occasions now, particularly when there are problems in the forestry industry, of buying up and stockpiling products from the mills and then dumping them below cost, or devaluating their currency which is, in effect, dumping below cost, and disrupting the entire world market for pulp and paper products.

Mr. Riis: I cannot believe what the Hon. Member is saying. I think what was attempting to levy as a criticism is that it has actually worked relatively successfully in Sweden. If that is the kind of criticism he is able to levy, he obviously does not understand what is going on in that particular country.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to be able to speak on behalf of the Government in presenting to the Canadian public and this House the recovery program presented last night by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). I am particularly pleased because it gives me the opportunity of listening to the contributions made by our friends in opposition and therefore of being able to digest their suggestions and recommendations and hopefully to incorporate them as part of our over-all assessment of what might be done to aid this economy at a critical time.

At least, Mr. Speaker, that was my intention. But I have to confess, having spent some considerable time listening carefully to the statements made by the leading financial critics and spokespeople for the Opposition, that I come away sadly disappointed at what they have been able thus far to offer. I am afraid that what I heard from the Conservative critic was "Wait until the next election and all will be solved". Those under-aged 14 year-old delegates they are electing will be able to choose an effective economic policy during their leadership convention. Somehow that will provide us with wisdom, direction and force. But when it came to anything that would give us a framework by which the Conservative Party of Canada would offer a recovery program, one ends up chasing after vapours which are whisked away into the atmosphere before anyone can catch hold.

The only thing we heard in Question Period from the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) was the old hackneyed rabbit out of the hat "give a tax credit to business to employ people". It is unfortunate that the Hon. Member has not gone back to read the evaluations of the program in place when his Government was in power, which indicated that something like 80 per cent of the jobs created were not incremental at all, and that such programs give no control or ability to target where the jobs should be. It is a little bit of a free gift but it does not create any additional jobs. That is the freshness of their thinking. That is the new innovation they are offering the Canadian people, a program devised several years which did not work. We are supposed to accept that as being the gospel of job creation according to the Hon. Member for St. John's East, who is probably as misguided as some of the other sort of preachers of gospel who have come along the way.

In listening to my hon. friend from the NDP, we now finally discover what their secret formula is. I have been sitting in this House for three years, waiting for the moment when they would reveal for the world to see their secret strategy. Now we know what it is. It is a made-in-Stockholm strategy. If we can only sort of adopt full-blown the Swedish way of doing things, then all things in Canada will be well. I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not believe Canadians are prepared to adopt a foreign-made economic policy. They want a policy made by Canadians, one which reflects the desires, outlooks, attitudes and values of our own country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: I want to say that is the particular and important element presented in the budget last night. Our Minister of Finance has spent the last several months talking to Canadians from all walks of live—labour, business and Government. He has talked to people from one region to the other. That has provided a comprehensive reflection of the basic desires of Canadians and the kind of direction and thrust they want to see in the economic platform and blueprint for this country. The particular genius of this budget is that it really is reflective of the Canadian context. It is a made-in-Canada budget, based on the full scale contributions of Canadians from all walks of life. I want to point out that it is not, as the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) was saying, a Conservative budget. Certainly we would not adopt the kind of callous disregard of social programs that the Conservatives have, where they totally and completely disregard any willingness to support job creation programs, where they have adopted Reaganomics which simply cut back various forms of medicare. They only have to follow the leadership of their Conservative brethren in Alberta who are adding on user-fees and additional restraints on medicare budgets. That is not the Liberal way of doing things. But neither, Mr. Speaker, are we prepared to follow what seems to be the made-in-Sweden philosophy supported by the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Waddell: You are not any different from Reagan.

Mr. Axworthy: —which seems to have a totally controlled society, organized by big power blocs, where they get together and made those arrangements between themselves.

I think this budget was based upon a very open consultation with Canadians and the answer was very clear. It was given in the very first statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde): We want to create jobs. We do not want people living on welfare benefits. We want them to go back to work, and at a time when we are facing a terrible economic period. We have all seen its ravages and we all know the personal tragedy that Canadians have experienced.

• (1610)

We are all aware of how important work has become to Canadians. It is not simply a matter of a means of income; it is a way of establishing one's identity, sense of purpose and position in the family and community. Therefore the job is important both in how it gives a useful and meaningful existence to a person and in what it represents in terms of the use of a person's talents and skills.

That is why I have been disappointed not to have received the co-operation from the Members of the Opposition for the number of initiatives we have taken to try to get people back to work. Those initiatives includes such programs as work sharing, which is now in effect in approximately 13,000 factories and industries across Canada. But all we hear from the NDP and others is that it is taking income away from people. It is true that some incomes are reduced by some 10 per cent, but there are over 100,000 workers who have kept jobs that otherwise would have disappeared had it not been for that program.

I would ask the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper), who is sitting there in his corner and was so critical of the program, to go to Thompson, Manitoba, in our Province and talk to the United Steel Workers local in that City where 2,700 people are back to work at Inco because of the work sharing program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Let him go back there and tell them that they did not benefit from it. I would like to see if he has the courage to tell them that this is a make-nothing program. They are back to work and their families are happy and satisfied because that company is back in business again.

I would like to say at the same time that the thrust of this budget is not to latch on to one single panacea. Canadians have recognized, and it is reflected in the budget, that there is no one magical solution. It is necessary to work on a variety of economic fronts and it is particularly important to be careful to examine the economic reality which exists. There is no point trying to paint a fantasy picture. We must face the reality. What the Minister of Finance has proposed is a budget that will provide a major lift to recovery in the private sector. Not only does this budget provide a number of incentives, tax credits and write-offs for industrial investment and provide for an extension of loans for small business, farmers and fishermen; it also addresses what I think is a very clear message to Canadians, which is the necessity to change the mood and atmosphere of the country and begin to say that we can be on the road to recovery. That is why it was so important to inject through the capital budget program a very clear and strong signal that things will happen in this country and there will be economic movement and activity.

Those types of projects have the double purpose of bringing an economic enzyme into the system to begin a resurgence of activity while at the same time providing direct work for professional architects, engineers and construction workers and ultimately to place in the economy a new capital infrastructure. There will be research centres, transportation centres and new facilities and structures in mines and forestry.

Would Hon. Members in the Opposition deny that this is not an investment in the future? Would they deny that we need new bridges and airports and roads? I know the Members in the New Democratic Party deny the necessity for good transportation because they oppose the $16 billion new capital investment in the western railway system and the 300,000 jobs that will go along with it. I realize that they are stuck with the old alliances that they cannot break away from, but that is their political problem and one which we understand and sympathize with.

Mr. Waddell: That is why your Party did so well in Manitoba.

Mr. Axworthy: The fact of the matter is that we hope the Conservatives, who have some more sense, will recognize that coupled with that investment is the chance over the next three years to introduce new facilities, factories and an infrastructure in this country which would allow goods to move to the market and allow manufacturers to draw upon new research opportunities. That is the signal that had to be relayed to the private sector, and not only in terms of direct assistance to them since it is the engine that must move the economy.

We cannot socialize everything as the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap would have us do. We cannot nationalize all the economies as he would recommend. We must rely upon the private sector and use it as an engine of recovery. Therefore we recognize the need to work in partnership with the private sector. At the same time we also recognize that it takes time to get the engine moving toward that destination.

Therefore to complement investment in the private sector through both the special recovery programs and the various tax incentives, the Minister has also tried to provide a major investment in directing employment programs. He was quite correct when he said last night that we will be investing more money in direct employment programs than at any time in the history of this country.

Let me cite some figures so that Canadians will recognize their significance. I address this particularly to the Member for St. John's East who is new to his job and will be able to use some of this information to good purpose. In my department alone, aside from what is happening in the housing department and other areas, we will be providing over 300,000 direct employment places for Canadians as a result of this budget. The Minister of Finance has given us the resources to add an additional 126,000 jobs for Canadians.

When the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap says they are not interested in that, I would ask him why he is not interested in our providing something like an additional 400 or 500 jobs in his riding alone. Is he telling those 400 or 500 workers in his riding who are now working on NEED programs and summer youth programs that he is against them and does not want them working? Is he saying that he does not pay attention to them? Is that what he is telling those 400 or 500 people in his riding who are now working as a result of federal Government job-creation programs?

I would suggest to him that considering the number of letters he has sent me asking for more money under our programs, it would seem that he is talking from both sides of his mouth and not giving us credit for what we are doing. I do not think that this shows honesty. If we are to see an economic recovery we have to be honest with the Canadian people.

Those Members have an easy answer. They say it is to extend Unemployment Insurance benefits. What a wonderful solution! We carefully considered that but what the Hon. Member may not recognize is that the Unemployment Insurance Fund is a contributory fund of workers, business as well as Government. We consulted those other partners to the fund last fall and showed them that if we were to provide an extension of benefits of some 26 weeks it would cost an extra $5 billion to the UI fund. There is the Member, indeed Members from both Parties, saying that we cannot afford to take more money from the consumers' pockets, but he is advocating an extension that would take $5 billion out of their program. It is like dancing on one foot, then the other, and then ending up with both feet in mid-air on no solid ground at all.

Let us get rid of that fallacy and return to what we are doing under the NEED Program where we now have $800 million invested to help people who are exhausting their Unemployment Insurance benefits. Incidentally, I am pleased to report that as a result of those progams the rate of exhaustion is far less than what we initially forecast in our own study. Whereas we forecast a rate of 60,000 or 70,000 over the past several months, it has really been closer to 45,000 or 50,000. While we are putting those people back to work the Hon. Member says that he does not like the make-work projects and does not want people raking grass or painting gravestones. I would point out that in his own Province of British Columbia over 60 per cent of the applications under the NEED Program are from private sector firms. They are modernizing their factories and expanding their facilities.

Mr. Waddell: That is nonsense.

Mr. Axworthy: As a result, they are not only creating short-term jobs but long-term jobs for the future. I suggest it is the responsibility of Members of Parliament from British Columbia to return there, see what is happening and discover the realities, instead of coming to the House and going through a great deal of puffery without having the facts.

We also felt it was particularly important to address the job needs of young people. Therefore we have introduced in the budget a new youth employment strategy that will combine a number of elements dealing directly with the particular employment requirements of first-time workers coming into the job market who will need assistance to get their first job and establish a track record.

As we have pointed out in the past, in the training program under the National Training Act over 125,000 people under the age of 24 are presently enrolled. The figure is 125,000. I want to repeat that number so we can register the figure in the minds of Members of the Opposition.

In addition to that, we recognize there were special needs in the youth employment market. The most important was to give young people the opportunity to be on the job and get training at the same time. Therefore, we have introduced a new program called the intern program. This will provide a combination of wage subsidies to small business people in particular that will encourage them to hire young people on the job, give them a period of training and allow them to get the combination of work experience and training. This will give them a solid foundation in the job market. We will be introducing this program after consulting with business people and with young people themselves. I am pleased to say that we will be holding a major national conference on employment for young people, inviting young people from across the country this summer to discuss the matter with them. If this program is successful, we will be able to utilize it in a much broader variety of ways. It will provide in its initial phase over 35,000 jobs for young people on the job with on-the-job training.

In addition to that, we have provided major inserts for the Department of National Defence to enable it to bring people into that department's bases and give them training and also to provide opportunities in Katimavik in those areas.

We now have in place the ability to combine training, jobs and job core experience that will bring together counselling and guidance in a residential framework. We think we can honestly go forward to Canadian young people and say to them that we have put in place a strategy. If they would work with us we will be able to tackle not just the immediate crisis, not just the problem of the here and now, but the long-term problem facing young people. We recognize it is not simply a product of the recession; it is something that is endemic in the way the labour market works. What we are doing now is working with the Provinces and other partners in the economy to try to provide a much broader based youth program across Canada to give young people that kind of assistance.

In light of those new reforms we also felt it would be very helpful to consolidate many of the existing job programs which my department runs into three or four basic programs and to provide new funding for them. This will give us one program that will direct itself at counter-cyclical programs to provide for a response to areas of the country where there is high unemployment when there is a sudden recession, and so provide some backstop to that.

Second, it will enable us to invest in the longer term in regions where there is chronic unemployment. This is a country of great diversity. We must, in particular, help small communities in rural areas that face difficulties and do not have the same opportunities for new technology, new expansion and new business. I am speaking of areas like my friend's region of New Brunswick about which he has talked so much, parts of Quebec, northern Ontario and the northern parts of western Canada. We will provide long-term development employment funds in those areas to give people and communities a chance to plan proper employment programs. That is another part of the employment strategy.

Finally, I want to say that in addressing those issues we are tabling for the interest and response for Members of Parliament and the public a major document which is a perspective on employment for the 1980s. It will outline the framework of an employment strategy that we think will meet both the immediate problems of employment as well as the long-term structural employment problems. It will be our hope that this particular document will provide the basis for an honest debate in the country. We set out job figures where we see the job market going. We put forward how we see the Government, the private sector and labour working in partnership to solve these problems.

Therefore I request the unanimous consent of the House to table a document entitled "Perspective on Employment: A Labour Market Policy Framework for the 1980s". I also request unanimous consent that this document be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration without debate. If the House agrees, I will be prepared at an opportunity next week to start debating this important document with my colleagues so that we continue to create jobs for Canadians in the time ahead.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The House has heard a request from the Minister of Employment and Immigration to table a document and for its reference to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Is there unanimous consent for the Minister's proposal?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Agreed and so ordered. Questions?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, according to the projections of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) last night, the level of employment in Canada will drop from 10,574,000 jobs in 1982 to 10,511,000 in 1983, for a loss of 63,000 jobs. Yet the level of unemployment will rise from 1,305,000 in 1982 to 1,487,000 in 1983, for an increase of 182,000. The Minister failed to address this question today.

Given the fact—and the Minister talked about this in his speech—that the budget calls for an expenditure of $1.484 billion in terms of direct job creation, surely the Minister must be able to tell the House how many jobs we can expect these new job creation funds will create this year. I tell him not to talk about the 600,000 projection over two years, which is really talking about restoring jobs in the economy. We are talking here about direct job creation.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to answer that question. It is a very straightforward one and deserves a straightforward answer. The actual expenditures of our Department as a result of the budget last night which added an additional $375 million in expenditures will take the total employment development expenditures to approximately $1.6 billion and will provide employment opportunities for over 300,000 Canadians. That is the simple result of the kind of expenditure pattern that we are now offering through the auspices of my Department.

I would caution the Hon. Member to recognize that that is not the exclusive initiative being taken by the Government. In the budget itself there are a number of initiatives in the housing area that will provide immediate stimulus. There is the commitment to provide a number of new jobs through the capital recovery program. There are also a number of new jobs being provided by the private sector itself and the improved environment that we will be able to provide to bring those jobs on stream.

It is our commitment to provide over 300,000 employment opportunities and places through the expenditures of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. I suggest this has provided a major source of stability, a major source of help and a major source of bridging for people in this country this year and next.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, could the Minister be more specific? For example, let us take the NEED Program. According to the budget, we are talking about $180 million in new money going into the NEED Program on top of the $500 million allocated last year. The Minister himself will tell us that the NEED Program, with a target of 50,000 jobs for half a billion dollars, has thus far created, according to the latest figures, and I stand to be corrected, only 27,000 jobs. We have 27,000 jobs in the NEED Program, notwithstanding the fact that this is a half billion dollar program. This program started last November and it was targeted to those in dire straits. In other words, it was supposed to help those Unemployment Insurance exhaustees right away, yet it has taken this while to create 27,000 jobs.

Where are the 300,000 jobs the Minister is talking about? Are these 300,000 jobs to be created this year as a result of the direct job creation expenditures for which the Minister is responsible?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to try to clarify the situation for the Hon. Member.

First, let us examine the NEED Program itself. When the Minister of Finance announced the $500 million expenditure last October, he expressed the hope that we would be able to take those sums and multiply them by having matching funds from the Province, municipalities and other sponsors. I was engaged to go forward and develop that program. As a result of negotiations we were able to sign agreements with the Provinces which have added an additional $200 million to the program. Further to that, we have also discovered that under the NEED Program additional funds are coming in from individual sponsors. The municipalities, on average, are adding another 25 per cent. The private sector, and this is perhaps the most exciting part, is matching the funds by almost 50 per cent.

• (1630)

This is why we are putting a particular emphasis on accepting proposals by smaller firms, because where we are spending $1 they will spend $1. Thus we are getting money back into the economy again.

The Hon. Member has an example in his own riding with the Erco Industries which I believe is spending something like $6 million. We are putting in $.5 million, and the result is that we will create over 100 additional jobs. Not only that, but that company will have a basic modernization of its facilities. There is a living example in his own riding which he could utilize. That has been the whole purpose of the NEED Program. It is our estimate that under NEED we will create closer to 80,000 jobs.

Also the Hon. Member has to recognize that there are other job programs as well. The Canada Community Development Program created 50,000 employment places this year. Summer Youth Employment will create over 75,000 jobs. The Program for the Employment-Disadvantaged has 20,000 enrolled in it. The list goes on. There are a number of those kinds of programs. By the way, that is one of the reasons I will be consolidating those programs over the next couple of months so that perhaps we will not have quite the same confusion the next time the Hon. Member and I have this kind of exchange.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister. In the budget the Government has allowed for $100 million so that laid-off workers will continue to receive Unemployment Insurance benefits while doing voluntary work on community projects. I can see the reason behind that, and personally I support it.

There is a situation occurring in ridings all across the country where Canadians are laid off and they apply at the Manpower office. The Manpower office does not have jobs for them, so in turn they enrol in a course of their own choice and pay tuition at community colleges to be either retrained or receive additional training. When they do that, they find that the same office which cannot find them jobs cuts them off benefits because they are not available for work.

Is this not the same type of example? We have Canadians who want to be retrained or want to learn something, yet they need their Unemployment Insurance benefits while they are going to school. Is there really a difference between going to school and learning something and working on a community project?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I think that is an important question. Let me first clarify one statement made by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis). Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act has proven to be a very helpful support for many workers. It is not putting people back on voluntary work. In fact, if the Hon. Member looks at the program, he will find there are some 15,000 people over the past year who have been employed under Section 38. Most of that employment has been in resource-based industries such as mining, forestry and fishing. In Ontario the program has been largely taken up. There are people in Ontario, British Columbia and in other areas who are investing their labour and efforts in developing new productive uses of facilities. They are doing a lot of seed work, environmental clean-ups and so on. The work is not purely voluntary. It is designed for resource-based industries.

On the question of training, the fact is that a large number of people enrolled in training programs indeed receive Unemployment Insurance benefits. I forget the exact figures. I do not have them here, but I believe that some 25,000 people have received about $200 million of Unemployment Insurance benefits as income when enrolled in programs. The difference between them and the person in the circumstances the Hon. Member described is that the courses are assigned through the employment centre. The reason for doing that is that we have to maintain some control. Under the Act we have to confirm that a person is eligible for work or is enrolled in a legitimate training program. If someone simply on his or her own cognizance signs up for a training program and does not let us know or does not do it through our system, we do not know whether or not they are eligible for work. There really has to be a control mechanism to ensure that the Unemployment Insurance Program is not abused. That is the reason for doing it. I undertake to provide a more detailed answer to the Hon. Member. I will send him a letter as soon as I can to explain the procedure.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Minister singled out the NEED Program as an example of job creation. I just returned from a visit to southwestern Ontario, the industrial heartland of Canada. I met with local councils, officials and businessmen. I was told that the NEED Program was totally inadequate and bureaucratic. I was told that they were short-term jobs and were limited to people who were exhaustees of Unemployment Insurance—about 27,000 or 28,000 jobs and about 600,000 exhaustees, and they were low paid to boot. Does the Minister agree with some of the jobs under the NEED Program, such as the counting of dogs in Windsor? Does he think that that is a good short-term job? What about university graduates who have been retrained, incidentally, and are gathering brush in St. Catharines? Is that the kind of job in which he believes?

The Minister mentioned the private sector as being the engine of economic growth. I was told in southwestern Ontario that the private sector is mainly controlled by American businesses and that they were sucking out all the jobs from southwestern Ontario. If the Minister really believes in full employment, does he not agree that we must make some fundamental changes to the Canadian economy to bring it about?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Minister has 30 seconds in which to answer.

Mr. Axworthy: I would just say that, unlike the comments of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), we have a number of Members of Parliament from southwestern Ontario with whom I spoke who are coming in with proposals for new community centres, new industrial parks and new water and sewage systems for their communities. They are producing good, solid projects, not the fuzzy-wuzzy ones he mentioned. I do not think he has been travelling in southwestern Ontario. He is off on another trip somewhere.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry our time ran out so quickly as far as questions for the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) are concerned. I certainly had a few questions I wanted to put to him. I noticed that in his speech he said it was time to be honest with the Canadian public. I would have liked to ask him whether he really feels his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), was honest last night when he stated in his budget speech:

> Over 600,000 more Canadians are expected to be working at the end of 1984 than at the end of 1982.

He did not make clear to the public that, as is reflected in The Economic Outlook for Canada tabled last night at page 16, in 1983 the amount of employment will actually fall over half of 1 per cent. In short, what they have disguised in the budget is that this year, on average there will be fewer people working than were working even last year, and last year the number of employed fell 3.5 per cent.

I would have simply asked the Minister whether he felt it was being honest with the Canadian public to gloss over the fact that the Government is not increasing employment this year as the budget would imply with the word "recovery". They anticipate that employment will fall this year, not go up. I notice the Minister is walking out of the House. I only hope that he is unemployed in the not too distant future as so many other Canadians are at present.

Perhaps we lose sight sometimes in these debates of how grossly inaccurate the Government has been with respect to what future it holds out to the Canadian public. It was not that long ago, in November 1981, that we in the House heard the budget of the then Minister of Finance, commonly referred to as the November 18, 1981 budget of the Minister of Finance. It may be wise for the record to remember what we were told at that time about the current period. The 1974 to 1980 figures, averages and those types of things, were revealed. Incidentally, in last night's overview, The Economic Outlook for Canada, they have carefully set the past aside. We do not have those figures. All they are doing is playing with certain projections for the future.

What I would point out is that in November, 1981, we were told that in 1982 employment in this country would grow 1.8 per cent. In reality, it fell 3.2 per cent. We were told that in 1983 employment would grow 1.7 per cent. In reality, if we believe the statement of the Minister of Finance last night, it is going to fall 0.6 per cent, over one half of 1 per cent.

There is something I would have loved to have been able to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I see the Minister of Finance is in the Chamber. Perhaps he could ask for unanimous consent to answer my second question. It is simply this: Why were we told in November, 1981 that the labour force would grow 2.8 per cent last year when in reality it fell 0.5 per cent? Why is there that 3 point discrepancy? Did those people simply get lost? Did they all suddenly die? Did they disappear? Did they emmigrate? What happened?

We know what happened. There were no jobs for them. We anticipated the labour force was going to grow 2.5 per cent. It was no surprise for the Government of the day. The fact is it failed the people of Canada. They failed those who ended up on the unemployment list or, worse still, gave up looking for a job.

Most important, why were we told in 1981 that this year the labour force would grow 2.2 per cent when last night we were told it will actually fall by 1 per cent? What happened to those people? We are talking about hundreds of thousands of Canadians who, it was anticipated in November, 1981, would be joining the labour force. Now we are being told that they have suddeny disappeared.

What I am suspicious of, having lived so long with this Government and knowing its deceptions, sophistry and lack of honesty, and what is happening is it is massaging the figures, as economists like to say. It is assuming that the labour force growth will be smaller and, of course, arithmetically that means unemployment may look better.

If you want to go on to this question of unemployment, we were told in November of 1981 that unemployment in the country in 1982 would be 7.8 per cent of the work force. In fact, it turned out to be 11.1 per cent. In 1981 we were told that this year we would see 8.3 per cent of the work force unemployed, roughly what the United States is experiencing. In fact, we find it is an astounding 12.4 per cent due to the gross incompetence of this Government.

If we believe the Minister, and I do not recommend that Canadians believe him, but if they choose to believe what the Minister said last night, the unemployment rate will be 11.4 per cent next year. In November, 1981, the Minister's predecessor told us it would only be 8.3 per cent. Who can you believe? I believe that the figures presented last night were deceptive. They are not an accurate reflection of what the Government honestly believes. Likely, some Members of this House will rise on another day simply to ask questions such as I am asking this afternoon. One is: why can a Government with all the mandarins it has around, the thousands and thousands of calculator pushers, not get more accurate information as to where we are heading?

I could give many more examples of what appears to have been the most unbelievable, almost optimistic projections in earlier budgets that in reality have gone to ashes because, as time has demonstrated, this Government does not know what it is doing.

Let me touch on one other matter, that is, productivity. I was rather surprised to find that that is not even commented on as far as estimates of increases in productivity are concerned. The Government has just buried them. In earlier budgets at least it took a guess at what productivity would do in the sense of going up or down. This time it makes no comment.

I found something most startling in reviewing the budgetary papers yesterday. We in this country have lived with the difficulties of Crown corporations, including the $125 million write-off with respect to Consolidated Computer Corporation. Not only have we sustained that write-off, but we have never had an explanation given to the House as to what went wrong. The internal investigation that took place has never been openly tabled or revealed in this House. Notwithstanding the growing scandalous nature of what is happening in Canadair, this House has never had a meaningful debate on Canadair.

Other than $1 items, letters of comfort, one thing and another, we have never been consulted with regard to whether the public would like us to support that company. We now find that our exposure may reach somewhere between $1.8 billion and $2.3 billion. Notwithstanding all the other fundings that the Government may be anticipating in the current year and subsequent years with respect to de Havilland, CDC, Canadian National Railways, Air Canada and all these other entities, there is not one word mentioned in the budget brought in last night by the Minister of Finance as to what in fact will be the financial requirements for all of those companies.

As the Auditor General has pointed out, those companies collectively employ hundreds of thousands of people. They are virtually like a Government underneath the Government. Can you believe this? The Government that has the nerve through the Minister of Employment and Immigration to suggest that it is time to be honest with the Canadian people is the same Government that brought in a budget without giving any information concerning the estimated financial needs of hundreds and hundreds of Crown corporations that we now live with.

Since I have been in the House of Commons, I have found it interesting to see how that has evolved. I remember the good old days—it looks that way now—in the early seventies when it was taken for granted that whatever a Crown corporation had to raise was part of the financial requirements of the budget and was reflected as such in the budgetary papers. I remember a budget in which, much to my surprise, it was not reflected in the normal line; it became a footnote. The Government said the financial requirements would be, let us say, $10 billion, and there was a little footnote which said that in addition there would be another $2 billion for various Crown corporations.

Last night they went all the way. They just forgot it. It is no place to be seen. When the Minister indicates that the deficit is going to be $31.2 billion, as he did in his budget, he is omitting to take into account how that might be increased by deficits of various Crown corporations. Some Members may feel I made a mistake when I said $31.2 billion because, as we know, there was an addendum last night. There was an addendum. Quite negligently, if you like, the Minister of Finance waved his budget around prior to its being delivered yesterday evening. He waved it around in the midst of many press people, including those with TV cameras. As a result, there was a very substantial leak with respect to the budget to be delivered yesterday.

• (1650)

What was the response of this Minister of Finance? Mr. Speaker, I could cite precedents on this type of thing. As an example, a comparable Minister of Finance simply walked into the lobby at Westminster, mentioned to a press man that he should buy a package of cigarettes, and then delivered a budget in which he increased the tax on those cigarettes. A news story ran indicating that there was to be a tax on cigarettes. The following day that Minister felt sufficiently embarrassed to resign, and his Prime Minister accepted that resignation.

Mr. Speaker, that occurred at a time when honour meant something, at a time when a Minister would feel that there are traditions and conventions that a parliamentary democracy must abide by and that must be observed. But what happened last evening? I will ask all Members to note that the Minister, in his budget speech, admitted that he leaked information. It is true that he said in an offhand way that the press should not have done it. But he admits that several pages of his budget speech were filmed.

The Minister's reply is not, "I have made a mistake and must resign". His reply is, "I am going to fudge it. I will within a 24-hour period, pretend that I had always thought that there was another $100 million and maybe another $50 million and then another $50 million that I should be spending, and I am just going to change everything to ensure that that happens." This is where he got caught out, though. He was caught out because he felt that the inclusion of his little addendum was presumably all he had to do.

I can see somebody in the Department of Finance saying, "Yes, but what about all the budgetary papers that you have to table?" So they got some fellow who apparently had a pen to try desperately to make all ink changes in the various tables and pages that had to be filed in order to back up the Minister's cover-up of his leak of the budget to the press.

For those who have not taken the trouble to go to the Table and look at those papers, let me tell you about them. For example, this is page six of the fiscal plan. Look at those ink changes. Does it look as if it came from a Government that has matters under control? Does it look as if it came from a Government which, through its Minister of Finance, can say, "We know exactly what this economy needs. These are the measures I am putting in place. Have confidence in me and my Prime Minister and the Government. I know where I am going"? That looks more as if one of the chickens of my farm had walked all over it. You can hardly read the inked-in portions that are found written over the typed portion, the same portion, incidentally, that the press had an opportunity to see. It has been inked over in order to make it appear as though what the press thought was the budget and what in reality was the budget was in fact not the budget.

That is not where it stops. We find that there are gross errors in what that poor person who was asked to ink in the changes ended up doing. I ask you to look at page 16 of the fiscal plan. You will find there that while the Minister said with a straight face, "Under a thing called the special recovery capital project, I am going to add $100 million this year, $50 million next year and $50 million the year after", in table 2.3 something went wrong, only $40 million was added for next year. Who is right? Was the Minister simply caught off guard? Is the error going to be rectified?

In response to a question put by myself to the Minister today, the Minister said, "If there are corrections to be made, I would be pleased if the Member would send me over a photostat of his changes, and if things are wrong, I will surely correct them".

Mr. Speaker, I do not mind helping this Minister out. God knows he needs the help. Would it not be much better, though, if the whole bunch of them were swept out of power and somebody took over who knows how to run the financial affairs of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: The Minister negligently leaked a substantial part of his budget, in fact, as far as bond markets are concerned, almost a crucial part of his budget. That was the question of how big the deficit is going to be. A Minister who has erred so grossly that he must now be corrected almost page by page because of his errors in tabling a document in the House is surely not someone on whom Canada's world confidence will be built upon.

Just let me take you a little further, Mr. Speaker. Leaf over to page 41. You will find that the deficit is recorded at $28.2 billion for fiscal 1984, $24.7 billion in 1985, and $20.6 billion in 1986. Every one of those figures is wrong. If they are not right, then I must say that the budget is also wrong.

In short, the Minister, between his left-handed budget and his right-handed delivery of these documents to the Table, does not know what each hand has done.

As an example, I direct you to page 42. There are more errors—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I must inform him that the time provided for his speech has expired.

Mr. Stevens: May I just take one minute to sum up?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to continue?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the Hon. Members for giving me a little more time. Hopefully it is the truth that they like to hear, and they would like to hear a little more of it.

I would refer Hon. Members to page 45 of the same fiscal plan. There it is said that the total expenditures contemplated for this year are $100,100,000,000. Can you believe it? That is almost $2 billion a week that the Minister has us spending. When he took over, the expenditures were $10 billion for a full year. Now they are up to ten times that amount in fiscal 1984. But he says that the amount of total expenditures in 1984 will be $100,100,000,000. Next year they will be $105,900,000,000, and the next year he says they will be $112,700,000,000. Oddly enough, if we are to believe the Minister's budget speech, every one of those figures is wrong. Who is right?

Finally, Mr. Speaker, if you wish more knowledge of the errors made by this Minister, I would recommend that you read page 46. It contains quite a few errors. In short, we have found dozens of errors in the statistical information that has been offered as backup to this budget.

It is not only that the Minister does not know what he is doing, it is not only that $200 million has been added, but he does not know where he will spend it. The hard fact is on that side of the House no one knows where they are going in an economic sense. Unfortunately it is the Canadian public, through the loss of jobs, the high taxation, the almost unbearable interest rates we have had to live with since they took over, who has to pay the sad penalty.

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise today in order to comment on the Budget speech that was given yesterday. Indeed, I believe Canadians have been waiting for a long time for a budget that would be really structured and which would focus on job creation. Moreover, I come from an area which is severely distressed today, namely the North Shore, where we have to deal daily not with statistics but with people. A minute ago, I was listening to the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) who pointed out so-called statistical errors in some of the papers that have been introduced. It is all very well to engage in rhetoric or academic work, but it is much more important to work directly with people in order to ascertain whether action taken actually brings about a solution to a given problem, that is, unemployment.

I especially want to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), Mr. Speaker, for acting on what people have been telling him for the past six or seven months. The Minister met and consulted with every group in our society, with the organized and non-organized, to ensure that the budget would truly respond to the expectations of Canadians. Of course it was impossible to respond to everyone's expectations to the same extent, but if we listen to what people are saying in Canada today, it seems the Minister has put his finger on the problem and taken the right approach to solving it.

What did the Minister of Finance actually propose, Mr. Speaker? He proposed, first of all, a series of measures that will provide $2.4 billion for direct job creation, and he also provided for $2.4 billion for the private sector, to stimulate the economy. That is what the Minister of Finance did last night. Of course people can talk about the deficit and say they would have acted differently, but when the Minister of Finance identified the two main aspects of his budget, he said with respect to direct job creation and public spending that the purpose was to create infrastructures and public facilities that would be used by future generations. That is what I call productive investment, and the Opposition should understand this. It is easy to say: they are going to spend for the sake of spending, but the Minister of Finance clearly said, and it is there in his budget, that these were projects planned for the next ten, fifteen or twenty years, and instead, they will be started this year in order to provide jobs.

An Hon. Member: And the debt!

Mr. Maltais: I heard the Member opposite tell the House: And the debt! Remember the New Deal in the United States! What did they do after the Great Depression in the United States? They introduced a very similar policy, that is, they spend public funds on public facilities that would be used for many years. That is a very important point.

I feel I am on very familiar ground here, Mr. Speaker, because as I said before, I live in an area that has been severely affected by the economic situation, not because of the President of the Iron Ore Company, not because of the present Government, but because of the depressed state of the world market for iron ore. However, we are eagerly awaiting a capital project that will help develop and diversify industry in the region, and I am referring to a National Harbours Board project. I hope it is included in the 100 projects the Minister is expected to announce within the next few weeks. However, without the clear thinking of the Government and the Minister of Finance and without the Government's help, would our people be prepared to accept proposals from an Opposition that is saying that this is not the right approach? During the past year I have been travelling throughout my riding since the various lay-offs have taken place, to find out what people want. That was drawn repeatedly to the attention of the Minister of Finance. Last night, I must say that I recognized myself in the budget speech. Today, I received numerous phone calls in my constituency office as well as in my office in Ottawa from people in my region saying: "For some time, we have had unemployment problems and no hope. Last night, the Minister of Finance not only gave us hope, but he said that he would take action. Right now, the top priority is to take action, not to keep talking and repeating that one is going to try."

The Minister was quite specific when he said that more than 100 projects had been selected and were ready to be implemented. What does that mean, 100 projects selected and ready to be implemented? We have to translate that statement into real terms. Surely, from a theoretical point of view, this does not mean much. But if we decide in my region to build airports, harbours, shipways, it makes a lot of sense in fishing areas. It means orders for concrete, nails, wood and stone. It means new found pride for the workers, hope for their families and first and foremost, security. That is what it means in real terms. If such projects are implemented all over the country, it will mean in Toronto, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Quebec City, Sherbrooke, everywhere, in the Lac-Saint-Jean area new initiatives taking shape, which will in turn allow those communities to organize in order to improve public infrastructures that the Minister has set himself to priorize in his budget. That is what it means in actual terms. It means that businessmen and contractors can already hope to see their machinery in operation and that workers will be rehired. That is what it means. It also means that young Canadians will be able to carry on their studies, knowing that their parents will work and be able to pay part of the expenses. It means creating a psychological environment favourable to work and security. That is what the country needed and what Canadians were asking the Minister of Finance to do in a budget. Those are not expenditures selected at random in the country. Those expenditures were planned. It is important to point out that those were planned expenditures, either by federal ministers or by various Crown corporations. Therefore, no improvisation there. Moreover, the Minister was perfectly clear about these projects last night, when he stated, as reported on page 3:

> More than a hundred subjects have been selected. They are in the advanced planning stage.

So, Hon. Members opposite are wrong when they suggest that these projects were hastily put together. As a matter of fact, they had been submitted to Treasury Board a year or a year and a half ago, and if they had not been approved, it is not because they were not good enough, but merely because of lack of funds.

This means that in my own area of Sept-Iles-Port-Cartier, the local Chamber of Commerce, town councils and industrial planners will be able to suggest ways for private industries to set up shop on these public structures. In this context, it was wonderful of the Minister of Finance to announce that he was offering up to $2.4 billion in tax credit to small and medium size corporations to help them expand, streamline their operation or recoup their losses of the past two years due to recession. That is what these corporations in our area had been asking for. Having run too many bills and with the high level of interest rates they lacked the necessary cash flow to grow and to keep up with their daily operations. Thanks to the measures which the Minister of Finance has just announced, business people are getting exactly what they wanted. This was evidenced in the comments made by business people to the news media; they all said this budget is one of the finest of the past decade as far as the private sector and the business community are concerned. Members opposite have constantly asked the Government to take steps which would not only help the private sector but would also stimulate the economy. We find that more specifically in the budget which is aimed at young people. It is meant for young people who assuredly could not be ignored. Whenever we talk with parents, we realize what it means to young people. Not more than 15 minutes ago, I was talking with the Mayor of Gagnon, Mr. Coicou. He was quite pleased to hear that the projects announced in the budget could also be implemented in this area and you cannot imagine what he asked me. How strange that real life should be so different from what goes on in this House of Commons. He asked me whether it would be possible to add a small amount of $15,000 to $21,000 to create jobs for students because the Sidbec-Normines company is not hiring anyone this year in Gagnon and he explained how this would relieve his municipal council and heads of families to know that their young people could have summer jobs that would allow them to go out at Gagnon to attend the community college in Sept-Iles or various Canadian universities. That is what he asked me and this is no begging. He was asking that on behalf of his community. This is something positive and this is what people want, they want to work. We have to give them the means to do so. The budget contains novel proposals for putting people to work and that is no improvisation nor wasting of public funds. It is an investment in the future, in public infrastructures and in young people who will be allowed to find some work there.

We should consider the various measures, Mr. Speaker, and referring to the Katimavik program I remember quite well when the Government formed by the party opposite wanted to scrap that program. I would have liked to refer to the testimonies of young people who are enjoying a special experience thanks to the Katimavik program and the Minister of Finance has earmarked $40 million for that program. In the first place it is a personality development program for Canadians and I think that Members from all sides of the House do agree with such a principle. Second, this program will enable our young people to know their country and to find out about its opportunities. The main asset of a country is to make sure that the young are aware of the environment in which they will have to work, because Canada is not only the province of Quebec, the North coast, or Vancouver, it is the sum of all these regions, and the Katimavik program makes it possible.

On the subject of the Armed Forces, Mr. Speaker, how many young people or their parents have contacted their members as well as whether in the opposition or on the government side to find out what are their chances to get in the Armed Forces? For many of them, it is not only a last resort decision, but a choice, be they boys or girls. There are 17,000 of them who have already passed all the tests required by the Armed Forces and who are on a waiting list. The budget speech provides for 5,000 young people to be enrolled in the Armed Forces at a cost of $75 million. I think it can be said that this is a budget for the young. In addition, more than $300 million have been added to a training program for them. A team of experts is working together with the industry in order to help ease the difficult transition from school to the work place. It is a very interesting strategy which involves unions, business and non-organized labour. Young people must often be given at least an opportunity to enter the labour market. However when applying for a job with a company, and even a Crown Corporation, Mr. Speaker they are told that experience is a requirement, but they are never given the opportunity to acquire it.

The program introduced by the Minister of Finance will help ease this transition and will provide young people with job experience, the lack of which is often an impediment. This budget, I suggest, under the present circumstances is not only practical but down-to-earth and that is what was needed. Of course, it could have been based on all kinds of theories. This budget could be drafted in a completely different way, but would the results be any better? This is what I would like to hear from the other side. How could we put people back to work tomorrow morning? It would be interesting to hear something about this later on. For my part, I remember very well what happened when the Iron Ore company announced its lay-offs, Mr. Speaker. The first thing that the man who was then president of the company asked me ... He came to Ottawa to meet the ministers concerned—and this shows, in my opinion, the gentlemanly attitude of Mr. Mulroney—and asked: What could the government do to help those who are laid off? He did not say that the company would pay. He came to ask for government assistance. In this regard, the budget provides assistance for the communities affected by all types of lay-offs.

Instead of taking a partisan attitude, Mr. Speaker, it would be interesting if the Hon. Members suggested additional solutions or better ones than those offered in the budget rather than being negative about every aspect of our proposals. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that more could have been done, and I would have been tempted myself to draw a caricature of several reporters or cameramen taking pictures of the budget because one picture is worth $200 million, and this means more jobs. If we need such photos to create more jobs, let us take some, by all means, let us make a feature film! What people want is work. We should therefore be thankful to the cameraman who did what has been called an addition to the budget. I find it marvelous.

However, I do not want to belabour the point and I shall simply say that the budget truly reflects the needs of the people. It is what we need at this time. It is exactly the level-headed formula that Canadian expected. I am convinced that within two months, there will be an extraordinary change of attitude in this country. Already today, we had phone calls from people who wanted to know if they were entitled to the homeownership grants. It is wonderful that the Minister of Finance thought of including this proposal because a home is often the most important security factor of a family, and most important, it represents equity for one's old age and the largest investment in the lifetime of an individual. And the Minister of Finance thought of it. He was sensitive to that need. In fact, the major characteristic of this budget is perhaps that it is sensitive to the needs of people. If we had to give a name to the budget, we would call it the action budget. That is what it is.

I am really looking forward to hearing the various Ministers begin to announce the programs which were proposed in the budget, Mr. Speaker. People will then be able to judge the budget by its results. They will realize that the budget offers something concrete. In this House, we often seem to be simply stating facts and developing frameworks, but for the people, it means hearing the noise of plants and seeing their smoke. In the past, there were many ecological complaints about the smell of manufactures. Nowadays, the smoke from a manufacture is like perfume, it is what people want to see, and the noise which bothered us in the past will now become a pleasant music to our ears. I believe that this is what people expect as a concrete result of this budget.

There would be a lot more to say, Mr. Speaker, because all kinds of measures could be set forth. But what I wanted to stress on this first day following the budget presentation is the expectations of people in my area. I wish Hon. Members could have a look at what is going on in my area, the change in attitudes between yesterday and today. People are beaming with hope, and a breeze of optimism is blowing over my constituency because the Minister has been so very sensitive to our people's expectations. Had the budget been of a different nature, I would not have hesitated to voice my feelings, and these would have been quite different had the budget not really reflected my constituents' expectations. And because I find in that budget almost exactly what my colleagues and I have been telling the Minister, we do commend him for his proposals. All I ask, because I see my time is up is that from the other side of the House co-operation be forthcoming for the adoption of ways that are of a creative and durable nature.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I followed the speech of the Hon. Member with great interest. Undoubtedly he has been following the financial affairs of his Government. I wonder if I could perhaps refer him to page 4. Perhaps he can explain to the constituencies to whom he is speaking why the employment growth in Canada was the worst of that in seven major industrial countries in 1982. In Canada it actually fell 3.3 per cent compared to a seven country average of less than 1 per cent. For example, Italy had no employment fall-off; the United Kingdom was the next worst at 3 per cent; France fell off less than 1 per cent; Germany, 1.8 per cent. Japan actually went up, and the U.S. went down slightly.

If we should be enthusiastic about our economy, and we all want to be enthusiastic, can he explain why this Government let us down so badly in 1982?

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is very simple. It is a matter of changing the economy. If on the North Shore, companies operating there had initially started the processing of raw materials, I think structurally our economy would be much stronger and would provide much better-paid and more durable employment. We would have a much stronger economy, an economy that would allow us much more easily to find solutions to those recession problems we have been facing. If industrialized nations like the United States and others have been able to get out of this more easily, Mr. Speaker, it was for reasons of structure and nothing else. In other terms, what this country still needs is further processing of raw materials. As I have often said to the presidents of Iron Ore and other companies, if our economic structures were more involved in processing operations we would have had still stronger results. This is an invitation to the Minister of Finance to add incentives for companies to process more raw materials in Canada, rather than having it done abroad.

[English]

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary mentioned that he had just had a conversation with, I believe, the mayor of his town, or at least a town in a district in his riding. Can he tell us if he is experiencing the same trouble we are having with the NEED Program out on the west coast where the unions serving the municipalities are not allowing the unemployed to be hired under that Program at less than union wages? This means that municipalities have to match dollar for dollar the NEED grants, which is an impossible thing for them to do under the present expenditure restraint programs in place. Are they experiencing the same thing in his part of the country?

• (1720)

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: I welcome this question, Mr. Speaker, because currently on the North Shore there is a tremendous amount of co-operation between management, labour and governments. As I said earlier about my meeting or discussions with the Mayor of Gagnon, Mr. Coicou, concerning the Summer Canada Program, and already the Minister of Finance has announced $70 million for that program, that part concerns students. As regards the other part which concerns laid-off employees, people that are out of work, what we are seeing now in Schefferville, where Iron Ore employees are currently being laid-off, and have been since the fall of 1982, is that the federal Government is keeping in operation Schefferville's recreation centre and ski centre. The people working on those projects are laid-off employees and they are paid by the Government. They preferred that to drawing unemployment insurance benefits and doing nothing. The union managers agreed with that formula, and I thank them for their co-operation. But I must point out, Mr. Speaker, that I went to Schefferville first to reach an agreement with them, to ensure that everything would be done according to standards, and actually, were it not for the federal presence in those areas, people would be facing real tragedy. In conclusion, I would stress that the Canadian government also will pay $4,500 to each family moving anywhere in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my second question of course is prompted by the answer given by the Parliamentary Secretary to my first question as to why we have the worst employment growth or creation record of any of seven major countries. He said it was something to do with the North shore not processing enough material. Now, that may be so, I am not well acquainted with what happens on the North shore, but I was wondering if the Parliamentary Secretary, who has been a very supportive force behind this Government, could tell us why in November, 1981 his Government told the people of Canada that there would be an actual growth in employment in 1982 of 1.8 per cent. If all those factors he referred to were true, did they not foresee it? In short, why did we have a 5 per cent turnaround from a 1.8 per cent growth rate to a fall-off of 3.3 per cent?

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, the question has something to do with the answer I gave earlier. The North shore is not the only issue here. When industrialization is highly advanced and the leading sectors very active, it is easier to create a lot more direct jobs than when the Canadian industry is based mostly on exports with very little processing of raw materials. That goes for regions other than the North shore. Let us take fisheries on the Pacific or the Atlantic. We would stand to benefit if we were to do more product processing, which in turn would boost the labour force growth rate, but we have a structural problem in this country. Our preference seems to be to export unprocessed raw materials so that our labour force is not highly skilled. As a result, countries such as the United States, France and even Japan process the products which create skilled jobs and enable them to have a higher growth rate than Canada can achieve. It is as simple as that.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, in view of the sharp criticism the Parliamentary Secretary is making, is it not fair for this House and the Canadian public generally to take it as being critical of his Government, because after all it has been in power for 15 years and if we are not processing materials as much as we should be, surely the Government has to accept the responsibility for this sad performance? Is it fair to interpret his remarks as being most critical of his Government?

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Without seeking to be formally critical, Mr. Speaker, I fully endorse what has been done by the Liberal Party for many years. There is much to do to change all that.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I was just wondering, though, in saying "there is much to do to change all that", could the Hon. Member indicate whether he has any slight reservation concerning his Government when we find that not only did employment fall but Canada had the worst growth of any of the 24 member states of OECD last year? Does he not feel that is a pretty bad reflection on the Government he has chosen to support?

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, may I say simply that the Government is doing an outstanding job and will have to keep up its good work. I am thinking about Canadair which will need our assistance very soon if we are to make sure that we keep those highly skilled jobs in high technology. Our Government has done a lot for Bombardier to help that company find new markets in New York, and yet the Opposition spoke up against that formula. But we went ahead anyway. de Havilland on the outskirts of Toronto has been a leader in the field of aviation. What I am trying to say, Mr. Speaker, is that there are lots of things to do. What has been accomplished in the past was done in the context of those years, and I think that the private sector also has an important role to play. It will have to take the lead in certain sectors rather than forever expecting Government support.

[English]

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) referred to how bad the job creation rate was in 1980. Would the Parliamentary Secretary not agree that, if you look at the entire decade of the 1970s, Canada created jobs at twice the rate of any of the nations described by the Hon. Member for York-Peel? He has pointed out one year as being such a disaster when for the decade prior Canada had created jobs at twice the rate of any of those countries he has described. Would the Parliamentary Secretary not agree with that point?

● (1730)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am pleased to give the Hon. Member the figures. For 1980 our employment record was up by 2.8 per cent. In 1979 it went up by 4 per cent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That is hardly a point of order.

[Translation]

The question was put to the Parliamentary Secretary, but I must inform Hon. Members that the time allocated for the question period has ended.

[English]

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, let me begin my remarks on the budget presented to the House of Commons by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on April 19, 1983, by reviewing a very basic economic principle. The purpose of a budget is to relate expenditures to revenue, but the object of the exercise is to bring the estimate of expenditures and the estimate of revenue into balance.

Due to the financial policies of the federal Government over the past decade or more, we have virtually abandoned the concept of a balanced budget and substituted instead the notion that a manageable deficit is acceptable. For this reason, the first question that we should ask in any examination of a national budget must be: do the proposed expenditures exceed the anticipated revenue beyond the level that can be described as a manageable deficit?

The Minister of Finance, like his predecessor, has clearly endorsed the abandonment of any attempt to balance the budget because he has projected a deficit of $31.3 billion with expenditures of approximately $90 billion and revenues just under $60 billion. We must ask this question: is $31.3 billion a manageable deficit? Can such an enormous amount be justified in terms of the current and future economic trends?

Let me try to explain what this means. In terms of the immediate cost to working Canadians, if they are required to meet that budgetary deficit in this fiscal year, it would be $3,100. If you ask, can the taxpayers of Canada individually afford to spend and contribute $3,100 or more in addition to the money they are already paying in taxes of all kinds, I am sure the answer would be, very quickly, no.

We are placing a burden on the taxpayers that they cannot live with on a current basis. We must also consider that the deficit we will incur must be added to the accumulated national debt, which will now rise to approximately $168 billion. If that debt load is spread among working Canadians, those who pay taxes, it burdens them as individuals with a debt of approximately $16,000. That would be in addition to all their other debts which include that part of the provincial debt load that they share in respect of the Province in which they reside. In the case of Nova Scotia, it is approximately $5,000 per person.

We have these enormous figures. The result is that over one out of every four revenue dollars received by the Government of Canada is immediately expended on interest charges with respect to the accumulated debt. It is becoming virtually impossible to break out of this cycle of enormous expenditures and limited revenues leading to an immense budgetary deficit that is increasing the accumulated national debt to gigantic proportions. The only other alternative, if one is to attempt to establish the principle of a balanced budget in our economy, would be to raise taxes. The Government has raised taxes in this new budget, and I will talk about that in my subsequent remarks.

I want to remind Members of Parliament and all Canadians that the ability of Canadians to pay taxes has reached the limit. The tables that I have before me, which relate to past years but I think are valid, indicate that Canadians pay an average of 43 per cent of their income in taxes, that is, taxes of all kinds. An average Canadian family with an income of $24,000 would pay approximately $10,000 in taxes. The exact percentage would be 45.8 per cent. So the Canadian family is paying almost 50 per cent of its cash income in taxes. I recognize that this is taxes of all kinds, including provincial and municipal taxes. We realize that taxation has reached the limit, yet taxes go up and up. The unfortunate result is that we have to live with this concept of a budget deficit whether it is manageable or not.

There is not much that the Government can or is able to do about that fact. Unfortunately, it must bear the responsibility for the existing situation because it is the fiscal policies of the Government over the past decade or more that have led to this situation. It is in the context of this horrendous financial burden on the Government and taxpayers of Canada, and indeed all Canadians, that we have to review the budget.

Let me say immediately that if, as some Members have suggested, there is a broad feeling of optimism among Canadians that the budget in itself contributes to the economy in a real way, to the extent there are provisions in it that encourage the private sector and would prompt business persons and those in industry to invest and increase activity that would create jobs in business and stimulate industrial activity, I would applaud such a measure in the budget. I want to add very quickly that those measures which would lead to increased confidence in the business and industrial community, and indeed across the private sector in Canada, are of a very sophisticated nature. They are complicated and technical. Only time will tell if they will have the effect that the Minister of Finance has claimed in the course of his budget speech. Only time will tell whether business and industrial activity will increase across the country and produce the jobs that everyone recognizes are required in every Province and territory of Canada.

The Minister of Finance indicated that that was his priority in his budget—to deal with the massive unemployment problem in Canada and take cognizance of the fact that 1.5 million people are out on the streets looking for work. He did not mention the million who have given up looking for work or the million Canadians who are working at jobs which are below their qualifications or working part time. However, he does finally admit that that is the major problem in Canada, and he says that job creation was a major concern in the formulation of his budget.

I want to examine some of the measures that the Minister claims will increase jobs in Canada and some of the programs for which provisions were allegedly made in the budget. First, I want to recognize the contribution made by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and other representatives of small and medium businesses across Canada. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business has recognized the role played by small and medium businesses in job creation in Canada. In fact, they point to the loss of 700,000 jobs in Canada between January of 1982 and January of 1983 in that sector of the economy. We can only have real job creation if we restore those 700,000 jobs that are lost.

On a positive note, the Minister of Finance mentioned the creation of 600,000 jobs through the measures that are included in the budget. But I can give the Minister a simple way to create that number of jobs in Canada. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business pointed out that in 1982, a bad economic year, there were 150,000 start-ups of small business enterprises across Canada. These are known as formulations. There were 150,000 people in Canada who started some form of business enterprise in 1982. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business says that with a little encouragement those formulations might increase to 200,000 in 1983, that is to say, entrepreneurs who are willing to start some sort of business on their own, possibly with some financial assistance or encouragement. If each one of those small business formulations which the Canadian Federation of Independent Business indicates could be started were, in fact, started with the encouragement of the Government and each one of those enterprises created just three jobs, which they could easily do with financial assistance from the Government, you would have right there in that one concept 600,00 jobs.

That is not an impossible goal. But what does the Government do? It spreads its job creation through a very complex and complicated mechanism which I can guarantee you, Mr. Speaker, will have every bit of red tape we have seen in every program introduced by the Government of Canada over the last ten years. I will give you one example, Mr. Speaker.

In March, 1983, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) announced an allocation through the New Employment Expansion and Development Program, the so-called NEED Program, of some $25 million through the Department of National Defence through the creation of jobs. He said that this allocation of funds would create 3,000 jobs. But what he did not say was that the Department of National Defence would immediately embark upon the process of terminating the employment of 1,027 workers, some of whom had been employed by the Department for three years or more. This was in order to provide spaces for the new employees. That is the kind of hokum which the Government serves up in terms of job creation programs. That is fact. I can take you to the Canadian Forces Base in Halifax, Mr. Speaker, and show you exactly where the Department of National Defence has terminated the employment of one person who was a term employee and hired others in place of that person. That is the kind of job creation for which the Government takes credit. I think that is a travesty. I think it is the worst kind of deception and fraud to claim that 3,000 jobs are being created when, in fact, term employees, persons who have worked for the Government in the Department of National Defence for long periods of time, lose their employment in the name of job creation. The purpose of the Government is clear. It is to get as many people employed for as little dollar cost as possible whatever the expense to the human beings involved. That kind of injustice cannot go unpunished in our society.

Let me comment on some other measures in the budget, bearing in mind and underlining the fact that job creation and relief of unemployment is the major task of the Government of Canada today. The Government has talked about a Special Recovery Program. I cannot deal with that part of the program which involves special recovery incentives to business. Those are the sophisticated tax measures I was talking about and only time will tell whether or not they are worthwhile.

Let us look at the other aspects of the Special Recovery Program. I am speaking of the capital projects which were mysteriously increased from $2.2 billion from $2.4 billion. I have the page from the budget that was amended, brought in at the last minute, with the $200 million increase. I look down the list of special projects and I see for one the item "vessel procurement." The amount opposite is $630 million, which is almost one-third, we will say one-quarter, of the total allocation. I wonder what vessel procurement is. We are going to create jobs in vessel procurement? Is that the $200 million ferry that is going to be built in the Province of Quebec in order to aid the bail-out of Dome Petroleum? Is that the Gulf span ferry boat the construction of which the Government turned down and said it would be ridiculous to construct this vessel, and about which, very dramatically a few months later, it changed its mind because Davie Shipbuilding Limited in the Province of Quebec was in financial difficulty and that, in turn, created the problem for Dome Petroleum? Is that the same vessel? I suspect it is, Mr. Speaker. We will find out in due course.

On the same page, under special recovery capital projects, we have an item of $650 million for transportation facilities. Is that the famous double-tracking in western Canada? The Minister talked about $2.4 billion in projects that were to get under way immediately with employment to start as early as May. Yet the Minister cannot name the projects, or will not name the projects, because if he names the projects we will find out they are the same old projects that have been placed on the table many times in the past, for instance, double-tracking, the bail-out of Dome and help to the Davie Shipbuilding Company. It goes on and on. But what can we do about it, Mr. Speaker? Only time will tell. But it will be on the record here for anybody to read.

Mr. McCain: Regan likes all that.

Mr. Crosby: We know what the Liberals are up to, Mr. Speaker. They are not fooling us.

Let us look at the budgetary measures with respect to housing. Anything that helps the housing industry in Canada will meet with my approval. I do not want to put that too broadly, but I want to say that I am not going to deal specifically with the housing measures except to say that I agree the housing industry is one of the most important industries in Canada and provides a basic necessity for Canadians, one of the real needs of life. But I have a question for the Minister responsible for housing. Not many months ago in this House we were faced with the problem of a gigantic rise in interest costs on mortgages for home owners. We talked about all kinds of programs we would use and implement to bring interest rates on mortgages down. Now interest rates are down. Now is the time to act. Now is the time for the Minister of Finance to say, "Here is a program to keep mortgage interest rates where they are now. Here is a program that will guarantee to Canadians that if they buy a home now they will have some guarantee that current interest rates will stay at those levels." Now is the time to do that. If you do that, Mr. Speaker, Canadians will build and buy homes. Canadians will look after themselves. But what Canadians need is some assurance that there will be some stability in the system on which they can rely. They do not want to buy a home now at 12 per cent or 13 per cent and face a 19 per cent or 20 per cent mortgage in two, three or five years. But what does the Minister do? He just goes back to the same old rehabilitation programs, the things we have heard, the old chestnuts. Although they have value, they will not solve the problem of Canadians owning their homes. They will not solve the continuing problem of having in Canada a viable housing industry. Now is the time to look at interest rates for mortgages, and the Minister has failed to do that.

I have already talked about the book juggling that is done with respect to the employment program in the Department of National Defence. But what about the book juggling with respect to other programs? We want to keep a close eye on that because this is not the first time this Government and this Minister of Finance have described the same program with different words, but the same dollars were involved. I do not need to tell anybody from western Canada, about the Western Development Fund. Whatever happened to that and the billions of dollars in that? Whatever happened to the gas pipeline that we were supposed to have? That has gone.

I want to point out and record very clearly in the presence of the Minister of Finance that it is fine for him to come in with pieces of paper, but development programs are pipelines, are railway tracks and are highways. Dollar bills have pictures of the Queen on them. They are not what is written in the budget speech. I suspect that many of the dollar bills in this budget for employment programs, for development programs, will disappear in the same way that they have disappeared in the past with respect to the Western Development Fund, the gas pipeline and a whole variety of other projects.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is phony money.

Mr. Crosby: As my colleague says, phony money.

There is one thing I would like to ask the Minister, I was not here when he spoke. I am not a very sophisticated person and I do not know that much about the economy, but I do not quite understand how raising the exemption on goods brought into Canada from $100 to $300 will help Canadians and Canadian businesses. That is interesting. I know Canadians will need a truck to bring their goods back from the United States and from other parts when they return to this country.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): They will use Maislin.

Mr. Crosby: Maybe that is it, Mr. Speaker. Maislin Transport will drive them back from the United States to Montreal. It will carry the goods and earn the money involved.

In the short time I have left I want to mention one thing that is very dear to everybody from Atlantic Canada, and that is the problem of regional disparity. In April of last year we passed the Constitution. It provided that the Government would work toward reducing regional disparity and creating equalization across Canada. In the budget there is absolutely no reference to the problem of regional disparity or to regional economic development.

• (1750)

In the Atlantic Provinces today everyone knows that the problem is in the fishing industry. There is a report before the Government which recommends a program for the fishing industry, a program which is absolutely essential to save that industry. It involves the infusion of funds in the area of $280 million. There is no mention of that in the budget. That is a blow to Atlantic Canada and a blow to the people involved in the fishing industry. It means that that recovery will be delayed for another year.

For those of us who observed the Government, we knew it was in trouble in June 1982 when it brought in its budget. The inflation, unemployment and interest rates were up, but the Government said that the problem was inflation and interest rates and that we had to get them down. The Government introduced the six and five program. It knew that inflation and interest rates would come down because there was no business activity in Canada. It knew that the problem could be cured.

It brought in the six and five program which had nothing to do with inflation or interest rates. It just robbed a few public servants of some dollar bills. The interest rate and the inflation rate went down. Now the Government is claiming victory and indicating how it will expand the economy. It will put on taxes in October 1984. I can tell the House what Government Members will do. They will call an election in September 1984 and claim that they solved all the problems of Canada. I am saying that today because they are not solving any problems. They failed to do that in the last three years, and they will fail to do that in the next year or year and a half because they are totally incapable of dealing with the realities of economic life. They hide behind rhetoric and empty budgets.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, it was enlightening to listen to the Hon. Member's speech. The proof of the pudding is always in the eating. The fact that he could find nothing of substance to criticize in the budget indicated, as has been indicated all afternoon by the Opposition, that they are having a difficult time sustaining criticism on their side. The Hon. Member spent most of his time dealing with small business and the need for small business assistance. Could he tell us what was the reaction to the budget of Mr. John Bulloch, head of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and of Mr. Geoffrey Hale, head of the Canadian Organization of Small Business this morning after the budget was tabled last night?

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the Hon. Member in specific terms the exact reaction, but I can tell him about the attitude of Mr. Bulloch and other business people across Canada. For the last three years they have felt that in the last numerous budgets and financial statements the Government was suppressing their activities and providing no incentive or encouragement to them to get out and work, expand and contribute to the economy. This weighed heavily on them as they have indicated in innumerable reports, some of which I have before me.

In the case of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, it brought forward all kinds of suggestions. As I indicated in my speech, they want Government to assist them in their need and desire to expand their enterprises and to create new enterprises. With that attitude they look fondly on any change of heart on the part of the Government. I think they see this as a change of heart, not a National Energy Program which virtually destroyed the Canadian petroleum industry, nor the promises of gigantic projects such as the ones which the Minister of Finance when he was Minister of Energy told the House in 1980 he would have constructed across Canada—on the East Coast, in Alberta and so on. It is not the pie in the sky we have heard before. It is a recognition that the economy has to recover through the private sector. That, for the Minister of Finance and his colleagues in the Liberal Government, is a real admission.

We have been telling the Minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for years now that they have to look to the private sector for real economic growth and recovery. Finally, after trying everything else and failing, the Minister of Finance has seen the light. I think Mr. Bulloch and his associates in business and industry across Canada now see it on a piece of paper and applaud it, naturally so.

What I want to say to Mr. Bulloch is, "Do not trust pieces of paper. Dollar bills have pictures of the Queen. Get the dollar bills". Let us see the dollar bills.

I have been waiting for a gas pipeline from the Minister of Finance for three years now. I cannot get gas in my furnace at home. I still pay for imported oil, even though that Minister promised in his National Energy Program, which was part of the budget, that we would have a gas pipeline.

Mr. Bulloch wants to ensure that that same person, now the Minister of Finance, is not trying to fool him with respect to these business incentives like he fooled me when he said that I would have a gas pipeline. My answer to the question is, sure they are pleased because they believe it. I ask my hon. friend to bear with me. We both know that only time will tell, but we must remember the gas pipeline.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby). Would the Hon. Member not agree, having said that he was fooled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) when he was Minister of Energy with regard to the gas pipeline, that perhaps he is easily fooled? He was not only fooled on the gas pipeline to the Maritimes; he was fooled on the prebuild of the southern portion of the Alaska gas pipeline. He was fooled when the Conservatives voted with the Liberals. He was fooled on the six and five program when the Conservatives voted with the Liberals. He was fooled on the Bank Act when they voted with the Liberals on a number of amendments. We then found a year later Conservatives screaming, "Why are we not able to do those kinds of things, after having voted against NDP amendments which would have made those kinds of things possible?"

Could the Hon. Member enlighten us as to why he and his colleagues continue to fall for the promises of the Liberal Party when it comes to these kinds of issues? When will they smarten up and either stop falling for the promises or admit that when it comes to these issues they are one and the same and that is why the Hon. Member could not find anything to criticize in the budget?

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, if you will give me another 20 minutes and there is any mistake about my attitude on features of the budget, I could mention some points which I did not make as yet. One relates to the $100 charitable donation which is a tax measure that raises $80 million. They put it in because they said that voluntary organizations and charities in Canada wanted them to do it. But they put it in to get $80 million. That is the kind of fraud to which I am referring.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) asked a difficult question. I can only answer it for myself. I come to the Parliament of Canada loaded with good faith. I like to believe that the officers or the people who form the Government of Canada, when they rise in the House and present documents and papers, are entitled to some credibility or they would not be the Government of Canada. We have to face the fact that the people of Canada elected the Government of Canada. However unwisely, that was the result of the democratic process. I for one have to respect that democratic process. I realize that does not come easy to some Members of Parliament. There are those who want to throw out the democratic process and deny the majority the right to govern. I embrace the democratic process. I come here with good faith. I am prepared to listen to Government proposals and I am prepared to accord a measure of credibility. But as they say, once bitten twice shy. We have been bitten 16, 18 or maybe 116 times.

I just want to make one point. I was not fooled by the six and five. They did not fool me on the six and five. I knew what they were up to, and I have already covered that in my speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being six o'clock, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Wednesday, April 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Miss Carney (p. 24689); and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Riis (p. 24691).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. As the House may be aware, there are two minutes remaining in the question and comment period following the speech of the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby).

Mr. Blenkarn: He is not here.

Mr. Deans: To whom would you like us to direct our questions, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have here two documents, one in French and one in English, entitled, "Revised Budget Tables", which were circulated with the budget speech on budget night. Apparently due to a mix-up, the Table did not consider these documents tabled on budget evening. I would like the consent of the House to clear up that matter and have these documents tabled officially now.

• (1110)

Mr. Lewis: I do not want to delay matters, Mr. Speaker, but will we receive copies of these immediately? I appreciate that this is another effort by the Government to correct the budget which seems to be unravelling. Will we be able to get a copy immediately?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, that is a reasonable request. I want to assure the House Leader for the Official Opposition that he already has these documents. They were circulated with the budget on budget night. When they were given to the Table, there was confusion. The Table did not realize that these were to be tabled with the budget documents, so they were not officially accepted. I am trying to clean that up now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is there unanimous consent to the proposal made by the Parliamentary Secretary to table the addenda?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Agreed by unanimous consent and so ordered.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to rise to speak in this budget debate because I am of the very strong opinion that this is the appropriate budget for the times that we face. The Minister has brought down the kinds of measures that are necessary to restore and build new confidence in the Canadian economy, to build upon our success in fighting inflation, to renew investment growth in this country which will stimulate the growth of wealth, which will stimulate our ability to maintain the valued social security system that we have in this country. In other words, this is a budget that will build upon the already existing recovery of the economy and will spur that recovery on at a much accelerated rate.

I have some background in economics. I have had disagreements with forecasters in the past. I have to admit at this time that I have disagreements with the forecasters who are making projections with regard to the effects of this budget as well. I was somewhat successful in the past in my forecasting with regard to inflation and interest rates. I suggest that the success of this budget will be much greater than is indicated in the forecasts that we see in the budget documents.

I think our rate of economic growth will be higher than that shown. Our success in fighting unemployment will be better than that shown because we have put forward in this budget the kinds of incentives and measures that are required to get small business and large business alike back on track with investment. Job creation in the private sector is going to be much greater than that anticipated out of the standard econometric model. I think we are going to see a much better, longer lasting and stronger recovery than is forecast in these measures by econometricians at this point in time.

I will stand on that six months or a year from now, as I did with my projections on inflation and thereby interest rates of a year ago. I made projections of a similar nature—that inflation would come down faster, and so would interest rates, than what was being projected at that time. I won a dinner at Winston's as a result of the projections I made in public. In other words, I was right. I think I am right this time. This budget will reinforce and make the recovery come that much more quickly than we had anticipated.

This budget is a very realistic assessment of our economic situation and what is needed. The Minister has brought down a budget which puts forward short-term job creation measures and builds upon the employment creation measures that we have in place, work sharing, the NEED Program, the skills training program. Basically it builds for the short term on these job-creation measures that are in place. It builds for the medium term by accelerating public works at both the federal and the provincial levels. It accelerates those public works which will create jobs, and it puts in place a very comprehensive and, to my mind, a very effective array of incentives for the private sector for the medium to the longer term so that private sector growth and development will come onstream as we begin to phase out some of the direct job-creation programs at the federal level.

Knowing that Governments cannot create long-term jobs, it is a very realistic assessment that only the private sector can create long-term, lasting jobs. How do we move from the transition period that we are in now? We are in a deep recession. We are starting to come out of it, but how do we accelerate that? How do we create the confidence, how do we create the conditions within which short-term jobs can be created by the Government and permanent longer-term jobs can be created by the private sector, and how do we bridge that gap between now and when the private sector will be back onstream in full force? In this budget, the Government has created a number of measures and programs which will, I believe, do just that.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, the budget is a multi-phased attack on unemployment and economic stagnation. It does not go overboard by greatly increasing the budgetary deficit. The deficit is something that is of concern, I am sure, to all of us. Some of us are less concerned than others, but certainly the deficit problem is of concern.

The public sector cannot continue to expand at the expense of the private sector because the private sector is where the wealth and the growth is and where long-term jobs will be created. We realize that and the Minister realizes that. The Minister has tried to put a plan in place which will use the Government spending that is required during this transition period and then phase down the level of Government expenditure as the private sector moves on. This plan will certainly reduce and perhaps eliminate pressures on interest rates that might result if the Government and the private sector were competing for those same investment dollars. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that we will be successful in doing that. The Minister has put forward the kind of measures that are necessary for this to happen.

The budget brings forward policy measures that stimulate investment for growth. It brings forward measures that stimulate areas that many of us have been saying for years now need to be dealt with, such as the stimulation of equity investment by Canadians and the ownership of Canadian industry by Canadians. To my mind there are very effective measures in the budget to encourage Canadians to buy shares in Canadian companies. There are very effective measures to encourage Canadians to invest in research and development, to take a share in their own country.

Those measures will create additional spin-offs not mentioned in the budget that I think will prove to be very useful in the area of compensation strategies for the future. If Canadians are more prepared to take an ownership share in Canadian industry, then we might be able to expand that notion and talk about profit-sharing plans and share ownership by workers so that there could be a much more effective, useful and productivity-oriented compensation system in this country.

This would follow the example of the compensation system that now exists in Japan. We have heard the New Democratic Party say it would be very interested in considering and examining this system very closely. I have also heard this from Members of the Conservative Party. They have indicated that the Japanese system of productivity based compensation is one that we should be looking at.

The New Democrats tell us that the Japanese have only 3 per cent unemployment, much higher growth rates and lower inflation. One of the main reasons for that is that compensation to Japanese workers is tied to productivity. That includes not just the workers in the classic definition, as the New Democrats would put it, but includes everyone who contributes to the output of the economy. Workers includes managers in a system where all their compensation should be tied to their contribution to the output. In that kind of situation, economic downturns produce less unemployment than in a system of fixed and rigid wage structures such as there is in this country at the present time.

Members opposite talk about the budget deficit and say that the Government cannot throw money at the problem without creating very serious long-term difficulties. But the Government cannot simply slash its way out of the deficit, Mr. Speaker. We are in a very tender circumstance at this time. If the Government were to become obsessed with the deficit—and a great many economists agree with this—and try to reduce the deficit at this time, it could plunge the economy back into recession.

A very fine balance has to be struck. I believe the Minister has done precisely the correct thing and has found the fine line and the balance that needed to be struck. He has increased the deficit above what would have been the case without the budget, that is true, and I believe it is also appropriate. He has not increased it dramatically; he has increased it in a way that will effectively deal with some of the more pressing problems that all of us have identified for him over the months we have been talking about economic issues. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that while the deficit is of concern, the Minister has taken the approach that is appropriate for these times and has put forward a plan which indicates a reduction in the deficit in a phased, gradual manner. I suggest that it will not disrupt the economic growth and development that will come out of this period of great difficulty that we are now experiencing.

I also suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that my assessment of the budget and the effects of the budget is not significantly different from that of the vast majority of the Members of this House. I base that assessment on my reading of the speeches given by Members of both Parties opposite. That reading indicates that they are grasping at straws to find areas of great criticism, except for certain Members of one Party who believe that if the Government did not increase the deficit by an additional $10 billion it was doing nothing and was showing no care. I disagree violently with that position because I do not think it is a rational criticism of the position of the Government.

Others have been very reluctant to come forward with hard criticisms of the policies. Yesterday afternoon I listened to speeches criticizing Government policies that have been in place for six months or a year. There was very little discussion on the new innovative, creative and effective policies put forward in the budget.

This is a budget debate, Mr. Speaker. If the motion put forward by the Minister is to the effect that the House confirm its confidence in the economic policy put forward by the Government in its budget, then why is it that the Opposition, which is trying to criticize Government policy, refuses to deal in any serious way with the measures put forward in that budget? The answer to that question is obviously because they have a difficult time finding anything with which to take issue and very few things to criticize.

That reaction in the House is simply an honest reflection of the reaction the Government is getting from other parts of the Canadian community. I refer to such organizations as the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the Canadian Organization of Small Business, and the United Way with regard to the charitable donation changes.

• (1125)

The wide range of opinion in this country outside of this Chamber is that the budget is appropriate. It is a good budget. It is going to help us make progress in our fight towards economic recovery. That is the fact, Mr. Speaker. Outside of this Chamber of criticism the public is saying that this budget is a good budget, the policy is a sound policy and economic recovery will be promoted by this budget, that job creation will be far ahead of what it would have been without this budget, that we are going to see progress in overcoming unemployment, that we are going to maintain our fight against inflation, that interest rates will be such that will stimulate economic growth, that we will be moving into renewed prosperity as a result of this budget.

The Opposition cannot find specific criticisms of this budget. They have to argue in generalities about policies which have been in place for a year or more. This indicates to me that not only do the Opposition honestly, in their heart of hearts, believe what I am saying today to be the case, but they are also smart enough to understand that the public is going to give them very little credence if they stand in the House and say something that is diametrically opposed to what is being said outside of this Chamber. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I believe we will see over the next week that this is one of the meekest budget debates by the Opposition we have seen for many years.

The Minister has brought forward a budget which brings forward necessary public works. It stimulates investment, which means growth will be stimulated. It has provided measures to expand the equity base of this economy, measures which are dramatically needed to remove businesses from their dependence on debt, which in turn will make them less susceptible to interest rate changes. The budget adds to the stimulus in the housing sector. It addresses direct job creation as well as improves on the training programs to provide jobs in the future for our young people. It provides many new incentives for research and development which, in my particular area of the country, is terribly important. I am enthused and excited, and the people in my area in the high technology industry and in research and development are enthused and excited also, about what the Government did the other night in the budget. All of these things are going to mean economic growth, increased job creation and a reduction in unemployment, which is precisely what the people as well as the Opposition have been calling for for some time.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I commend the Government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) for bringing down a very good budget, one appropriate for the times, one which is going to do the job. In the last few minutes I have heard Hon. Members opposite commenting across the floor. There is a ten-minute question period and I welcome their questions at this time.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. I do not often engage in the question period but I could not help but feel, as I listened to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), that he displayed a remarkable ignorance about what is happening across the country.

I readily admit that there are features in the budget which will benefit Ottawa. But Ottawa is not necessarily a reflection of what is happening across the country. I say to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre that there is a desperate need for some of the people behind the scenes who are promoting this kind of budget to get their backsides out of Ottawa for awhile and find out what is happening in western Canada, in eastern Canada and in the rest of central Canada.

• (1130)

However, let me be specific. The Hon. Member recognizes that one of the problems this country does not face is a lack of productive capacity. Therefore, what possible purpose is there in providing incentives to create additional productive capacity?

The second question is, given that there was a clear lack of consumer confidence and therefore lack of consumer purchasing, what measure in the budget addressed that question other than for the select few individuals who happen to have RHOSPs and who are now to be enticed to purchase furniture rather than houses?

The final question concerns a very narrow area.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Hon. Member recognizes that several other Hon. Members stood to be recognized. I ask him if he would wait for a second turn for other questions.

Mr. Deans: One final question. Recognizing that the major problem now confronting the majority of people in Canada is the threat of unemployment or unemployment itself, and that this budget speaks about increasing—certainly holding the line if not increasing—the numbers of unemployed while recognizing there will be fewer jobs between now and 1986, how in heaven's name does this budget begin to meet employment, overcapacity and lack of stimulus for the consuming part of the economy?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, there is so much misunderstanding in those three questions and in the previous statements that it almost boggles one's mind to respond. There is excess capacity, Mr. Speaker. Much of it is redundant, much of it is not productive capacity in the sense it is world productivity. As a result, some of that capacity will never come back onstream but will be replaced with new, innovative, creative types of productive capacity.

Mr. Deans: Permanent unemployment, right?

Mr. Evans: That is why we put investment incentives in place, to encourage industry to bring on that new creative capacity which makes us competitive in world markets and enables us to create jobs.

With regard to the other point about there being less jobs by 1986 than there are now, if the Hon. Member would read the statement the forecast indicates that there are going to be 600,000 more jobs in 1984 than there were in 1982. The numbers the Hon. Member is using are typical of what we have had in the past from him and the NDP; they come right out of thin air. There will be job creation, Mr. Speaker, as a result of investment in new, effective plant and equipment, research and development, and new technology.

If we are not world competitive, then we are going back to the cave, which I think is precisely where Members of the NDP would like to see us go. We could all be out there with our stone hoes, digging our row to plant corn and grinding it by hand. In that way we would be employed full-time, doing things which are the next best thing to useless. This country has too much potential to fall for that kind of claptrap from the NDP.

Mr. Blenkarn: A year ago the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) was running around the country telling us how tremendous the budget of November 12, 1981 was. He is now telling us how tremendous this budget is. He will recall that the growth rates shown in the 1981 budget were in the 2 per cent to 2.5 per cent range for the 1980s. The current forecast, now that we are well into a depression, is at 4.4 per cent, 5 per cent and so on. The Hon. Member says that is not even optimistic enough. Where in the budget is the thrust that will push this country in the 1980s to growth of 4 per cent or 5 per cent in real terms? Where are his grounds for optimism?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting that the Hon. Member has again done what the Conservative Party tends to do in this debate, going back two years and looking at a budget back there and saying: "See what happened back there? Look at those figures back there." I know the Hon. Member agrees with me because I know him well; we are on the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs together. I have heard him speak and we have talked about these matters. The investment incentives are there, Mr. Speaker. Investment means growth, new jobs, competitive industry in world markets, higher profits for industry and higher wages for workers. That is where the growth is going to come from and if the Hon. Member was on this side of the House and he was able to talk honestly about this budget, he would be saying much the same as I am today. It is a darn good budget and the Minister should be commended for bringing it down.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to my friend from Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) and I cannot believe some of the things he is saying. I want to ask him a question because he seems to have what he thinks is a grasp of the economy of Canada. I would encourage him and some of his colleagues to go out and have a look at other parts of Canada in the weeks ahead and see how people are reacting to the budget. I had a phone call last night from a miner who has been laid off work for 14 months. That means he has been on welfare for the past two months. The company he worked for feels it is not in their interest to participate in the NEED Program or the bringing program under Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, for a variety of reasons. This individual had noticed that the newspaper headlines were that this is a good budget for business. He said he is not a business person, he is a steel worker, and was there anything in the budget which should make him optimistic that he will be able to save his home in the next few weeks? Is there anything that he can be hopeful about in terms of a job? I want to remind the Hon. Member: fourteen months out of work.

Mr. Evans: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker, because I think the problem the Hon. Member has raised is precisely the one this budget was designed to deal with. If it is not profitable for that business to continue to employ people, it will not do so. To be profitable there has to be new investment, and it has to be world competitive. It seems to me that it is time we stopped pointing fingers at one another and saying "if it is good for business, it is bad for labour; if it is good for labour, it is bad for business". Let us start asking the question: What is good for Canada? What is good for Canada is something which will generate growth, because growth is shared between owners and workers. Let us stop condemning one side or the other; it is time we sat down together and said that if we can make it better for industry, it is going to be better for workers. That is how jobs are created. That is how wages go up.

Mr. Riis: In other words, there is no hope for this man.

Mr. Evans: When businesses are in place which are competitive throughout the world, they can sell their product and generate profits—which is not a dirty word, by the way—which leads to new investment and new jobs. That is how we respond and that is how I would respond to that individual.

Mr. Riis: He will be happy with that response. He will lose his house as a result of that response.

Mr. Evans: I will guarantee that the specific measures in this budget are going to put that man back to work in a stable, long-term, and productive job which will allow him not only to keep his house but obtain the things he wants for himself and his family.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat alarmed at the statement by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) that people in Canada have a different view about the budget than Members of the Opposition. In other words, we are diametrically opposed, to use his exact words, to people across Canada. I would suggest the Hon. Member read some of today's papers and what some leading economists have to say about our short-term pain for perhaps long-term pain. Not gain, but pain.

How does the Hon. Member explain the fact that the consumer will receive tax benefits this year of $75 million but over the next four years there will be annual increases in consumer tax payments; that in one year alone there will be an increase in income tax payments of $1.91 billion?

• (1140)

The same thing applies to the corporate sector, where both consumers and business will be paying over $5.7 billion for this $4.8 billion which the Government is handing out in year one. How does the Hon. Member explain the parallel that he drew in his speech concerning Japan, which gives incentives to consumers to buy and more purchasing power and gives businesses more tax advantage over a long period of time?

This Government, with all due respect, has given consumers a bouquet in year one of $75 million in income tax savings, but is adding in up to just short of $2 billion in income tax taken from the backs of consumers. In other words, the cost of the programs is being paid by less disposable income on the part of the consumers.

Concerning the fiscal report presented in the House, I refer the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre to page 27, personal income tax taken by Government at source from the consumers.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I really have a difficult time seeing where the Hon. Member is going with his questions and what his problem is. Does he really believe that if the Government is to put into place those kinds of incentives for people to save, to put their money productively into industry, to make the country more competitive, to create those jobs, that the Government will be able to do that out of thin air? That money must come from somewhere. Would the Hon. Member like us to increase the deficit? If there are to be additional taxes, where would they be placed? Would the Hon. Member place them on tax investment? When the Government is trying to put incentives into place to encourage investment, it does not tax it at the same time.

Hon. Members opposite and on this side have been saying that we must have more equity investment. We must have more incentives for that kind of thing. If the Government is to give incentives—in other words, reduce taxation on investment—then there is only one place it can increase the taxation, and that is on consumption.

A great many Hon. Members have been saying that we should be taxing consumption more heavily and investment less heavily. Perhaps that was one of the problems we ran into during the 1970s, that by taxing investment more and more heavily we had progressively less job creation during the latter part of the 1970s and a progressively increasing unemployment rate.

I am suggesting to the Hon. Member that the Minister has taken the right tack. He said that we will take some of that burden off the investment side. We will encourage Canadians to save and invest and we will pay for it by placing slightly higher taxation on consumption, for instance, of cigarettes and alcohol, the 1 per cent; but that does not come into effect until next year. However, there are also other measures, such as freezing indexation of certain kinds of measures within the Income Tax Act. Certainly I agree with every one of those and I will stand up and defend them on any forum with the Hon. Member, any day of the week.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, in the speech of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) we heard evidence of the great shell game concerning the budget. The Hon. Member knows perfectly well that the budget, which originally claimed to direct $4.6 billion into "job creation", which we then found out became $4.8 billion in job creation—$200 million for the job of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde)—is a great shell game. The fact is that the budget takes $5.72 billion out of the economy and puts $4.8 billion back into the economy, and the difference is the cost of administration by the Government of Canada.

The philosophy of Government Members is that they really know better than the ordinary consumer, the ordinary Canadian, how to spend his money, how to create employment and the rest. What they believe is that money should be taken from the country and come into this great bowl of Ottawa, that it should be spent by Ottawa, and that they should somehow direct where employment is to go, and how the money is spent.

Mr. Evans: That's not true.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is a socialist philosophy, a bureaucratic philosophy, the philosophy supported by Hon. Members like the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Evans: That is not true and you know it.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Government does not believe in the enterprise system. The Government believes in the direction of tax money, where it can put it. In the total term, there is no advantage in this budget to employment, to job creation or anything else. The Government has decided that it can best direct the economy and that it can do it better than the ordinary citizen who works, saves and creates. It has decided that it will take $5.72 billion out of the economy, maybe put $4.8 into the economy, keep the rest in its pocket and then wonder about the pocket.

When one considers what it forecast in deficits, it becomes unbelievable. When the Government took office, the statement for March 31, 1980 indicated a net Government debt of $68.5 billion. By March 31, at the end of this current fiscal year, the net debt of the Government is forecast to be $146.8 billion. In other words, during the life of this Parliament so far, the Government has come very close to doubling the net national debt. I say "net national debt" because it has nothing to do with the monstrous expenditures, the massive losses, which have taken place in Crown corporations. It has nothing to do with the guarantees which the Government has so freely given to the Export Development Corporation, to Canadair, to de Havilland, to people in other countries around the world, guarantees which the Auditor General himself has said should be treated as liabilities of the Government of Canada and part of our net debt.

The fact is that when the Government of Canada spends $3, it borrows or creates $1 in deficit. Indeed, this year it is forecast that for every $3 spent by the Government, more than $1 will be either borrowed or put on the cuff against future pension obligations or something of that nature. The Government cannot go on in this way. We all know that there is really no free lunch. However, the concept presented by our $200 million Minister of Finance is that there must somehow be a free lunch, that the Government can somehow spend $3 for every $2 it takes in taxes. That philosophy cannot continue to exist.

At the present time the Government is spending nearly one-third of the tax dollars it takes in just to cover interest on the debt. That situation does not improve despite massively overoptimistic projections for growth for the country. Let me refer to those massive overestimates of growth for a moment. The Government has suggested that this year there will be a growth of 2.3 per cent in real GNP improvement. I hope it is right, but where is the evidence to show such growth in GNP in real terms? Then it somehow goes on to say that in the year 1984 there will be a 5.2 per cent increase in real GNP. This country has not had 5 per cent growth since the 1950s, yet the Liberals say that somehow we are going to have this kind of growth in 1984.

The Government goes on to 1985, 1986 and 1987 forecasting growth of 4.4 per cent. I hope the Government is right. But these growth projections are so unrealistically high as to cause one to doubt every single figure in the budget presentation made the other night. They are growth projection figures beyond what we accomplished in any group of years during the 1960s or 1970s. To suggest that we are going to have, coming out of this depression almost like a rocket being shot from a missile launcher, the growth projections which the Liberals have suggested is, in my view, overly optimistic. I hope very much that the Liberals are right. But I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the country that these projections are not realistic. They are likely to create, and have created to people looking at the budget at first glance, some optimistic feelings, unfortunately overoptimistic.

If you compare that growth projection to what the Government says are its projections in terms of deficit, you find not only are we going to have, in accordance with the Government's projections, massive growth in economic activity, but also that that growth is not going to be reflected in a reduction of the deficit. The Liberals say that even with this massive, and I say unrealistic, growth projection, our deficit will not come below $25 billion in the foreseeable future. In other words, as far as the eye can see this Government will continue to go to the country to borrow and borrow and borrow, notwithstanding the fact that if the Government's projections of growth are correct we should be in boom times.

There is something radically wrong with a Government that on the one hand says we are going to have boom times, tremendous growth, 5 per cent, 4.4 per cent year after year after year, yet our borrowing will remain in the range of twenty billions of dollars. Our deficit will always be over $25 billion. There is something wrong, something structurally wrong, with what we are doing in the management of this country.

If there is any criticism, the greatest criticism of this budget is that it does nothing to attack the basic structural problems facing the country. We cannot go on forever thinking that somehow there is a free lunch out there, that no matter how good things are or how bad things are, all we need to do is borrow some more against the future. We know in running our households that that does not work. We know from our own personal experience that that does not work. There is nothing magic about it. Somewhere along the line you go broke because you cannot for ever continue to have financial requirements, even on this Government's projections of 6.9 per cent, 5.9 per cent, 4.9 per cent and so on of the GNP, borrowed against the future.

If we have the growth which the Government forecasts, we are going to have to expect that a great deal of the savings of Canadians will be poured into the business sector. Yet where are the savings to finance business growth and Government deficit growth? There are not those savings available, Mr. Speaker. You cannot have it both ways. You cannot have tax credits and so on for investment in equity—and we need it—and at the same time expect there to be money around to finance massive Government deficits, without creating a horrible crowding out in the marketplace.

I do not think that crowding out will take place this year. The business sector is so down and so depressed that the Government probably can borrow the money to carry it this year. But if there is the kind of growth which the Government anticipates, the kind of revival in employment which the Government thinks it would like to see, I say to you, sir, that you cannot have these kinds of deficits and expect that to take place without forcing interest rates to the moon again and squeezing out any possibility of new employment.

The budget projections, the budget statements, the budget provisions, are provisions that make very little sense on close examination. They are provisions made by a Minister of Finance for a Government desperate to hang on to power. They are provisions made by a Minister of Finance who is a buffoon, a Minister of Finance who cares little about what he says. His projections are invariably wrong, in many cases incompetently wrong. But more than that the Minister is an actor. He likes to be before the television cameras flipping pages. He is a show off. He likes to talk about his mistakes, somehow doing something for Canadians by increasing the debt of the country by $200 million.

I see that my time is moving along so I will get to some of the things that we would have done. First, we commend the Government for taking a look at the investment plan that will somehow, as suggested by the Lortie Commission, eliminate or index capital gains on listed stocks. The problem with the plan, however, is that it does not really get at what we need to get at. All Members will know that the vast majority of job creation takes place in the private sector by small business, closely held family businesses and that type of thing. The Lortie Commission provisions are great for the stock brokers, great for the guys with the big companies, but that is not where job creation and employment exists. Those provisions for eliminating or indexing capital gains with respect to investment in business ought to extend to small business, to those who will create the real jobs in the 1980s.

I say to the Government that this is a first step, but it has to be a bigger step than what the Government is prepared to take. We have to go all the way. We have to eliminate, or at least index, capital gains on business investment so that we can get small business, medium business and businesses that are not listed on the stock exchanges—most business are not—back building, getting capital and getting people working again.

Second, had we had the opportunity to present a budget, we would have presented a budget which would have directed tax credits not to losses that took place some time ago or may take place in the future, but to employment tax credits. We would have paid people a tax credit on the basis of hiring more people this year than they hired last year. The real problem is getting people back to work again. We would have directed what little money is available there—and we do not think there is enough—toward getting people back to work again.

• (1200)

Third, we would have expected the Minister of Finance, knowing the horrendous complications under the Income Tax Act, the Customs Tariff Act and the rest, to say that he would immediately start work on a method of simplifying them. If the insurance industry can simplify its insurance policies, surely to goodness the Government of Canada can simplify its taxation statutes. It is not a difficult problem but it would save all sorts of overhead in Canada. People ought to be able to figure out easily what are their taxes themselves. The present tax Acts are so complicated that another industry in the country has been created, that is, the tax avoidance and tax consulting industry, which is not very productive. I am sure the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre agrees with me on that.

Fourth, with respect to charities, we would not have been the type of Government that this Government is. It takes away the $100 charitable deduction without receipts, but it does not do anything for the voluntary sector which creates employment. Later in this debate my colleagues will be speaking about that. We would have accepted the recommendation of charitable organizations across Canada of a 50/50 tax plan which would have given tax credits for charitable donations. While it would have eliminated the automatic deduction, it would have given charities the proper kind of financing they deserve. The voluntary sector creates enormous numbers of jobs. To penalize that sector as this budget really does is totally improper.

Fifth, we would have done something with respect to the absolutely stupid measures contained in Bill C-139. Those measures did great damage to Canada. I am speaking of the way insurance and annuity investments and savings were attacked, the concept of taxing income on an accrual basis rather than on a received basis. The present capital cost allowance measure allows only half capital costs in the first year. We think that is anti-productive. We are pleased that the Government accepted our suggestion of a productivity council. If it really wanted to do something, it would ensure that those who invest take advantage of tax credits and have capital cost allowances which make it possible to pay for the investments.

Sixth, we would have done something with respect to the national energy policy. We are not at all impressed with falling oil prices at the continuance of payments of PIP grants. We think the Government could have eliminated those types of grants and at the same time eliminated the taxes used to support them so that the industry would have its own money to do its own development without the interference of the bureaucracy at Dow's Lake. Let us free that industry. Let us take off the ties and the restrictions. Let us remove the bureaucrats and take away the forms. Let us get at it and make the oil and gas industry produce again. My colleagues will also speak on that later in the debate.

Seventh, there are a number of things I could say, but most important is that the Government's expenditure plan shows no element of restraint at all. It is spend more, spend more and spend more. I point out that this is the first time in Canadian history that we have finally broken the $100 billion mark.

Perhaps that puts us among the big nations of the world, but on a national accounts basis spending this year by the Government will be in excess of $100 billion. Somewhere along the line there is room for paring down, priorizing and reducing Government expenditures, overlapping and waste.

If there is anything the Government must do, it must come to grips with its spending, with its bureaucracy, with its size and with its total control of the country. It must be reduced. It must take a slimming lesson.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in hearing the remarks of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) concerning what his Party would do if it were in office. From a rough calculation of what he said, I totalled up somewhere in the range of $4 billion to $5 billion of either revenue loss or expenditures. Given his parting comments, which were a plea for a reduction in the size of Government and its expenditures, could the Hon. Member tell us how he would reduce Government expenditures and at the same time increase the revenue loss or expenditure outlay by $5 billion? If he would not increase the deficit, how precisely would he pay for these suggestions?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, all of us are around the City of Ottawa, we see the size of Government offices and Government activity. All of us know by taking a look at various Government departments that indeed the only federal Government department this year which keeps within the six and five guidelines is Parliament Hill. The expenditures of the rest of the Government departments are increasing at 9 per cent, 10 per cent and 12 per cent. Indeed, on average expenditures of Government have increased by 12 per cent this year.

If the Government kept within its own six and five guidelines, it would have on a national accounts basis $6 billion. Does the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre really believe that the Government should be paying for insulation programs? Does he really believe that the Government should be paying for the conversion of oil furnaces to gas furnaces when energy prices and energy supply situations have dramatically changed in Canada? He could go through one program after another. Does he really think that we need CBC-2? Does he really think that we need all the foreign aid expenditures we have had? Does he really think all these are absolutely necessary? Does he put those ahead of making jobs available for Canadians? I ask him those questions.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, it is unbelievable. Is the Hon. Member saying that, by staying within the six and five program, the Government would suddenly generate $6 billion? Can he tell me how he would cut back on transfers to people, which comprise 50 per cent of total federal expenditures? He talked about cutting the Public Service and that by doing so somehow we would generate $6 billion. That is absolute nonsense. That would mean that the wages and salaries of the entire federal Government make up its entire budget. If we cut the entire Public Service to zero, we would save about $10 billion out of the entire budget. In that event there would be no Public Service.

Mr. Gauthier: There would be nothing.

Mr. Evans: That is right, there would be nothing. From where will this mythical $6 billion as a result of staying within the six and five come? Would he cut back on Old Age Security? Would he cut back on pensions? Would he cut back on transfers to the Provinces for medicare, education and other items?

Let us get down to brass tacks. Given that we have a deficit and debt, that there is interest on that debt and that we have to pay that interest, how would he suggest we hold the interest payments on the debt to 6 per cent?

Mr. Blenkarn: It is not very difficult when we are required to keep expenditures down to the six and five level—and the Government is great at boasting about this—to eliminate or reduce expenses by taking away from programs sufficient amounts to keep within the six and five. There is no reason the Government cannot do that.

If we take a look at employment increases and salary increases by the Government where it moves people from one grade to another, the Hon. Member knows that the expenditures of the Department of Finance for people are up 20 per cent. There is no evidence of any control over the massive growth of Government. It continues to take and grow and grow. By its own figures in the budget, according to the Government, it grew last year at the rate of only 16.8 per cent. It says that this year six and five means 12.5 per cent and that somehow it can be kept down to 5.8 per cent next year. If the Government can do it next year at 5.8 per cent, why cannot the Government do it this year?

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague from Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn). Not long ago, following a speech by the Hon. Member, I spoke in the House about the state of the Government's deficit, and I said there was no reason to be overanxious about what is referred to as the national debt, since most of the money borrowed by the Canadian Government is borrowed from Canadians. This is not a national debt contracted abroad but within the country, a reallocation or redistribution, as it were, of funds among the people of this country, to prevent serious social problems, and so forth. The Hon. Member sent me a letter in which he stated very clearly: there is a point here I would like to clarify, namely that the provincial debt is mostly contracted abroad. I agree, but I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that in my speech, I was not referring to loans contracted by the provinces but to the federal deficit and to loans contracted by the Canadian Government.

The second point which seemed rather interesting—I have been unable to get the exact figures and I wonder whether the Hon. Member has them—could he tell me what percentage of loans for the year 1982-83 were contracted by the Government abroad as compared to the loans contracted by the Canadian Government here in Canada with Canadian banks or through Canada Savings Bonds.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I do not have that figure at hand for the Hon. Member. I believe I have it in the office. I will send it to him. It is my perception that the Government of Canada this year was generally able to borrow about 95 per cent of its money in Canadian funds. It did not have to rely on foreign fund borrowing.

I want to point to the Hon. Member that a good part of the Government's borrowing is in Treasury bills and bonds. Two things happen. These bonds are borrowed in Canadian-paid denominations. That does not mean they are held by Canadians living in Canada, or for that matter held by Canadians at all. A great many of those investments are held offshore. While the investments are denominated in Canadian dollars so that when the Government pays the debt off it pays it in Canadian dollars, it does not necessarily pay those Canadian dollars to Canadians in Canada. It pays them to holders of the bonds.

If the Hon. Member will recall the debate with respect to the Income Tax Act, we brought forward to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) evidence of companies incorporated in the Bahamas and in the Cayman Islands. The whole purpose is to buy Canadian securities offshore. The reason is that under our Income Tax Act those who hold our securities pay no income tax on the interest. They get the interest in their pocket tax-free because there is no withholding tax on Canadian Government securities held offshore.

The consequence is that it is very difficult to say how much of our debt is held offshore and how much is held domestically. It is quite true that Canada Savings Bonds are largely held domestically, but when you get into the traded bonds and Treasury bills, you find that a great deal of those are held offshore. Second, you find that a great deal of those Treasury bills are held by banks and others who in our Canadian banking system have been bringing offshore money into Canada as opposed to taking Canadian savings out of Canada. The consequence is that they are borrowing foreign savings to buy Canadian securities in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has more or less confirmed what has always been my impression, and that is that most of the money borrowed by the Canadian Government is borrowed from Canadians. Although the banks may have assets offshore or bring offshore money into the country, the Bank Act regulates this area very well. In fact, this is what I was saying the other day, Mr. Speaker, that first of all, the debt being incurred and funded by the country is for long-term investment, in other words, when a house is built, it is not just for one generation but for two or three generations. Even if the Government gives $3,000 to build a house, it is an investment. Even if it has to borrow to be able to give those $3,000, the investment is subsequently paid back. The same applies to all infrastructures. This is a young country and a vast one, and I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that by borrowing $31 billion this year from the Canadian people, we are, as it were, taking the money out of the pockets of Canadians and investing it in long-term projects including construction of harbour or railway facilities and industrial development, all of which are assets that will last for generations and will also generate considerable social benefits, by keeping people employed who would normally have trouble working in our economic system and by preventing very serious social problems from developing. Through the principle of sharing and equalization, we, as a society, are able to acquire the facilities we need and that would cost even more if they were built later on. I am glad that the Hon. Member pointed this out, because it shows how well the monetary structure of this country was put together in years gone by, and how impregnable it is to any control from offshore by a handful of individuals, whether they are Canadians or not. Which proves that our banking and financial structure is such that the Canadian Government is able to meet the needs of Canadians from its own Canadian resources, and I would say that this is similar to what the Americans had in mind with the New Deal and what they themselves want to do today, and we are now busy reaching the same goal. We have some difficult years behind us, but we made sure that Canadians had a roof over their heads, medical care and enough to eat, and that they can get help from the Government if they are in need. My point is, Mr. Speaker, that we should stop being defeatist and stop scaring Canadians. I hope that in future speeches, the Hon. Member will stop making Canadians think Canada is getting into debt when it borrows from Canadians. That is not the case at all. When Canada borrows from Canadians it is using its borrowing authority to allocate the money to Canadian projects and Canadian construction and to the development of Canadian capital projects.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I have never believed that you can borrow yourself rich. I do not believe you can print yourself rich. If the Hon. Member would look at the total collections for personal income tax, he would find that the total is very close to the anticipated total borrowing. If he thinks that is just a redistribution, perhaps we should be redistributing by doubling income tax in this country. Perhaps that is how the redistribution should take place. If he somehow thinks you can borrow and borrow, have free lunch after free lunch, and that it does not matter because you owe it to yourself, he should think again about his own family savings and see whether he honestly believes that that is possible.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, this budget debate is taking place against a background of increasingly promising elements in our economy, indeed against a background of gratifying economic recovery. One need only consider some of the leading economic indicators to realize the truth of that welcome trend.

Inflation, for example, has been significantly reduced during the past year. The general economic upturn in the United States and in other countries has contributed substantially, but a major factor here at home has been the significant reduction in our own rate of inflation. The Government's successful "six and five" program has contributed in a major way to bring our inflation under control. I have been particularly encouraged by the magnitude and speed of the decline in our inflation rate. It is expected by some expert observers to drop to 5 per cent by the middle of this year. In short, Canadian consumers can now put aside some of their concerns over the constantly rising prices of the past years and spend with more confidence in support of the economic recovery now under way.

• (1220)

Additionally, Canada's inflation rate is coming into line with those of other industrialized countries, particularly our major trading partner, the United States. That will allow our industry to be more competitive internationally. Reducing the rate of inflation will also help to ensure that the Canadian dollar will not be under pressure on foreign exchange markets and will afford the Bank of Canada a greater opportunity for matching whatever declines take place in short-term interest rates in the United States.

Interest rates in Canada are down significantly. The commercial bank prime rate is currently 11 per cent, the lowest level in more than four years. The current stabilization of international oil prices will also contribute to the reduction in inflationary pressures. One might also note, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) did in his statement on Tuesday evening that, both industrial production and housing starts in Canada are up markedly over the past year.

All this indicates that business and consumer confidence is on the upswing. As we have already seen from business and stock market reaction, the budget will strengthen that confidence.

It would be naive, however, to assume that our economic recovery is now guaranteed. Employment has started to grow again, but unemployment remains high, especially among young people, and will decline but slowly over the years immediately ahead.

As the Minister pointed out in his statement, the creation of jobs is the first priority for this Government. In recognition of the fact that although inflation and interest rates have sharply declined, unemployment remains high, the Government has designed both private and public sector programs that will create thousands of additional jobs for Canadians, a topic to which I shall return in a moment.

In his budget speech the Minister of Finance stated that his budget had two central objectives:

> The first is to make sure that recent stirrings of growth pervade the whole economy as quickly as possible. The second is to make the recovery a durable one by beginning immediately to create the conditions required for sustained growth and development during the rest of the eighties. Underlying these goals is the Government's determination to ensure that Canadians are provided with the jobs they need—good jobs, permanent jobs, satisfying and well-paid jobs.

To achieve our broad goal or making economic recovery permanent, the balance sheets of Canadian companies must be improved so as to enable them to make the significant investment in the new capital equipment necessary to improve our lagging productive performance. There is no other way to ensure our international competitiveness.

With one-third of our prosperity—one-third of our Gross National Product—dependent on our export trade, we must put ourselves now in the position of being able to compete effectively around the world. There is no other long-term answer to the high level of unemployment. Without measures to ensure our medium and long-term competitiveness, there will not be enough jobs for all Canadians. Unquestionably, increased productivity is the only real answer both to inflation and to unemployment.

Accordingly, a wide range of initiatives—capital projects, tax incentives, research and development measures, support for industrial training programs—have been included in the budget. They will not only create jobs but will also help to ensure our permanent recovery and economic growth through a greater ability to compete internationally.

Needless to say, our major trading competitors will at the same time seek to increase their ability to compete internationally. Most of our trade competitors have already recognized that it is a mistake to believe that productivity gains mean unemployment, that in fact, as they know, it is only steady productivity gains which can sustain the growth of employment.

The budget provides a basis for sound future growth based on urgently needed improved productivity. The projects initiated by the Government to help directly in the promotion of greater productivity and international competitiveness will for example, be enhanced by the tax incentives that encourage more investment in new plant and new equipment. Equally, productivity will improve as a result of the additional measures to assist in the training of better management and a more skilled work force. Generally, these and other factors making for greater productivity are best identified on an industry-by-industry basis. They will, however, be possible to realize only if all three major players in our economy, governments, labour and business, agree on what has to be done.

Accordingly, I join many Canadians in their gratification at the degree to which the Minister of Finance in the pre-budget period consulted with business, provincial Governments and labour on the measures that could be included in the budget to increase our productivity and international competitiveness.

In this connection, the Minister of Finance, in his statement, said:

> Our collective search for the means to improve Canada's productivity performance will be complex and difficult. Success will not come overnight. Neither business nor labour will get very far without the co-operation of the other.

The Minister added:

—we should acknowledge that businesses do not invest in more efficient and cost-cutting equipment just to throw people out of work ... Labour, business and Government must co-operate to improve the productivity and competitiveness of the Canadian economy. This is the key to higher wages and better profits. More importantly, it is the best way, in the long run, to provide Canadians with the jobs they need.

To that end, Mr. Speaker, the Government's proposal in the budget to create a national centre for productivity is an important step in providing one major place where business, governments and labour can sit down together, distant from the immediate concerns of collective bargaining, and review and agree upon the fundamental or structural issues that confront us when we evaluate our future ability to compete internationally. Much more needs to be done to improve our productivity, but a promising start can be made not only by the budget's fiscal initiatives to improve productivity, but by the creation of the new business-labour centre for productivity.

The Government's plans for economic recovery place a high priority on technology, including yet more support for research and development. As we move farther into the era of high technology, it is imperative that we in Canada increase our research and development. That is why the Government in its budget announced a number of important additional measures to supplement those that already exist for the support of science and technology, measures that represent a public expense all the more necessary in a country with such massive foreign investment.

The Capital Projects Program contains major new technology-related investments. For example, research and training facilities critical for the mastering of new technologies will receive more funding and there will be accelerated procurement by Government of high technology products.

Over the next two years, the Government will undertake other new technology policy initiatives. The Minister responsible for economic development will soon provide additional information about those proposals intended to enhance the effectiveness of current research and development tax incentives, especially the ability of Canadian companies to benefit from them by making them simpler, more accessible and more effective. The paper on research and development policy which accompanies the budget suggests that while current tax incentives compare favourably with those of other countries, new measures remain necessary to increase the ability of firms to use them and to provide avenues for technology companies to attract more outside financing.

To take full advantage of technological advances and to help improve our international competitiveness, Canada increasingly needs well trained workers. Workers in the high technology era will from time to time have to acquire new skills. The Government recognizes that important and fundamental fact in the future health of Canadian industry. With the comprehensive National Training Act of last year, the Government had already acted to make available training initiatives more responsive to our future requirements. The budget adds to those initiatives by making them yet more effective. More funds are being provided this year and next for programs to ensure that Canadians have the skills needed to take advantage of employment opportunities that will contribute to economic growth during the current decade. This will bring to a total of some $1.2 billion the funds allocated for skills development. Over 250,000 Canadians, half of them young people, will benefit this year alone from federal support for training and retraining programs.

Since incentives for more private investment and job creation in the private sector hold the key to our economic future, another major aspect of this realistic budget which will contribute to our greater productivity and international competitiveness is support for an improved industrial infrastructure. Financing of new capital projects is intended to improve necessary public facilities which directly support improved private sector performance. Firms will soon receive orders for a wide range of goods and services necessary to ensure that improved infrastructure.

Other incentives in the budget which will be available to the private sector include the refundable investment tax credit. This will accelerate private investment by enabling corporations to obtain more immediate benefits from the investment tax credits now available and earned on new investment, thus making the investment tax credit program yet more effective. The measure will be of particular importance to those small Canadian firms which will not generate sufficient profit in the early years of operation to be able to claim their investment tax credit fully. Now the tax credit will provide them with extra support during the critical early years of development, those fragile years before they cross the threshold to self-sustaining growth. By refunding a portion of the credit in a cash grant in the same year in which the investment is made the measure will improve the cash flow to small Canadian corporations and lower the cost of their investment.

The share purchase tax credit, the plan originally set forth in the Lortie Commission report, will assist corporations to raise badly needed equity to help finance new investment. The measure will facilitate the financing of investment during the immediate recovery period and will assist corporations to undertake new investments and attracting capital needed to strengthen balance sheets and ultimately to contribute to the circumstances necessary to bring more Canadians back to work. This measure will permit corporations to use tax credits earned on new investment to attract purchasers of new common equity, a fundamental difficulty in the business community in recent years.

Reference has been made to measures in the immediate period of recovery. I want to emphasize the importance of strengthening private investment during the times immediately ahead. To that end, the Government is committing some $300 million in the next two years to the Special Recovery Fund. That fund alone will help the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) to use additional financial resources with a speed and flexibility that has been unavailable before.

Provisions in the budget provide for improvements in the ways that business can benefit from tax carry forwards and tax loss carry backs. At the present time, we have a system where business losses can be carried back for one year and forward for five years to reduce the impact of income tax. Under the new provisions, those periods will be extended backwards for three years and forward for seven years. This measure alone will enable firms to benefit more from existing tax revisions contributing an estimated improvement of some $270 million this year to their cash flow.

These factors which I have noted are illustrative of the degree to which the Govenrment is committed to ensuring that the private sector can play its full part in the economic recovery now under way. The private sector, especially the small business sector is the principal generator of jobs. The measures that I have touched upon and a large number of other budget measures are intended to ensure that the private sector can play its full and essential role.

The budget has demonstrated the Government's commitment to ensure that the recovery takes hold permanently, that jobs are created quickly and that Canada increases its producitivity and international competitiveness as the sure means of providing full employment and prosperity in the future. Accordingly, the budget contains a variety of measures to improve our growth prospects by strengthening the current difficult financial position of companies and by supporting the technological advances necessary for Canadians to compete successfully in the world. The budget embodies the national drive for higher productivity, the only sure way as I have said to provide a lasting answer to the problems of both inflation and unemployment. The co-operation which business, labour and government achieved during the preparation of the budget must continue. That is essential if we are to meet the tough, competitive challenge of the 1980s and for the economy to provide the jobs that Canadians need.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, answers or comments.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talked about the purpose of the budget being for recovery to take hold and unemployment to be reduced quickly. As I look at the unemployment forecast contained in the budget, I see nothing there to reconcile that statement. For example, according to the Minister's forecast contained in the budget we will have more people unemployed at the end of 1985, which is supposedly well into recovery, than were unemployed at the end of 1982, which was the highest unemployment rate since the Great Depression. The figures at the end of 1982 are 1.317 million unemployed, and according to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) at the end of 1985 we will have 1.347 million unemployed.

• (1240)

Therefore, where can the Hon. Member draw from the budget the fact that it is designed to reduce unemployment quickly and to make sure that recovery takes hold permanently?

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, as you noted, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is not the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). And equally, I did not say that the purpose of the budget is merely to reduce unemployment in the short run. There can of course be palliative measures. There are in fact measures intended to reduce unemployment in the short run. I can tell the Hon. Member where he will find in the budget these measures set out in greater detail. Equally in the budget, however, there are measures of the longer-term character, some of which I touched on this morning, intended to render Canada more internationally competitive and to ensure that permanent employment is thereby created and to a degree which will meet the increasing number of workers who are coming on to the job market. In the short run—during the period over the next two years—the estimated number of additional new jobs is some 600,000. They will in part result from the measures which the Government has designated special recovery measures; but increasingly, as the budget incentives for the private sector take hold, we shall find that the jobs are created by the private sector. This, I am sure the Hon. Member opposite will agree, is the only permanent answer to the unemployment problems facing Canada today.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I was quite concerned when I saw the extension in the budget of the Canadian Ownership Special Charge which is put on gasoline in order to acquire these great assets such as British Petroleum and Petro-Canada. I was even more alarmed to discover that the charge extended over the next three years in the budget will total over $3.3 billion, which will be taken from the pockets of consumers at the gas pumps.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren), who has been a former Parliamentary Secretary to a Minister of Energy, if it is possible that the Government is considering using some of this $3.3 billion to get into Canagrex should such a Bill be passed?

Mr. MacLaren: No, Mr. Speaker, that is not, as I understand it, in any way the intention. It is a suggestion which perhaps does not do justice to the intelligence of the Hon. Member opposite. However, be that as it may, the ownership charge which is to be continued will be recalled by the Hon. Member opposite as financing a greater degree of Canadianization of our petroleum industry. That charge assisted in the acquisition by Petro-Canada of the total assets of Petrofina and more recently the downstream assets of BP in Canada.

I cannot speak for the Government, not being a Minister as the Hon. Member opposite described me, but I speak rather as a Private Member who assumes that the intention to continue that charge should be seen within the broad purpose of increasing Canadian investment in our petroleum industry, whether through the vehicle of Petro-Canada or through additional measures to promote private Canadian investment.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, given the fact that 40 per cent of the 1.5 million people who are unemployed are the unemployed youth, given the fact that 300,000 or 400,000 young people in the next few weeks will have completed their university or high school year and will be looking for work, and given the fact that last summer a very high percentage of the students did not get work, which had a very adverse effect on their continuing education, would the Hon. Member indicate to me if he has any figures on the percentage of university and high school students who will be looking for work and will not find work this summer; and will he indicate why the Government has not taken steps to put them to work rather than forcing them to be unemployed for the rest of the summer?

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, the Summer Canada Program has in fact been greatly expanded. The announcements made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) the other day would, I believe, answer in part the question put by the Hon. Member opposite, who evidently is unaware of those initiatives. In addition, with regard to the inability of students to earn the necessary funds by summer employment to assist them in their further education, there is provision in the budget for improvements in the Students Loans Program of the federal Government as well as the continuing grants to universities. There is also provision for increased support for unemployed youth.

Finally, as I mentioned during my statement, there is additional support for training and retraining to supplement that which is already available. As I mentioned, over 250,000 people, half of them young people, will benefit from that program alone during the course of this year.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I was impressed with a point in the statement of the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North that we really have to rely on investment in the private sector if we are going to turn our economy around. Does the Hon. Member not feel it might be more advantageous to consider doing away with that $3.5 billion tax at the gas pumps which is there so that the Government can intervene more in the marketplace by the acquisition of private companies? Would it not be better if that $3.5 billion tax which is now in the budget was not there so that the money could be left in the hands of consumers rather than turning it over to the Government? Does the Hon. Member not agree, Mr. Speaker, that that is the way to turn the economy around? We should not give more money to the Government to spend, but rather we should rely on the private sector to turn the economy around.

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, I suppose that theoretically, if one had the assurance that equivalent funds would in fact be invested by the private sector in such a way as to enhance Canadian participation in the petroleum industry, one could forgo that tax. The problem in the past, however, has been that in an industry dominated by foreign multinational corporations, there has been a limited opportunity to do this. The opportunity for investment by Canadians has gradually grown but not at a sufficient rate for junior Canadian companies to expand substantially and more generally for the Canadian people, whether through private or public sector vehicles, to take a greater part in their own petroleum industry. I am satisfied that the charge is indeed necessary to do just that, to assist the private Canadian investor, and indeed the Canadian people generally, through the national oil corporation, Petro-Canada, financed in part by the charge, to have a greater opportunity to participate.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question which relates to the issue of youth unemployment. The Hon. Member just a few moments ago referred to the Youth Internship Program, or the training program, and the Wage Subsidy Program which totals some $95 millon over the next two years. The fact of the matter is that we have some 500,000 young Canadians who will be leaving school this year, within the next couple of months, looking for their first full-time job. If you spread that $95 million over just those 500,000, it works out to something like $190 apiece. How can the Hon. Member say we can really expect much improvement in youth unemployment with that kind of figure?

Mr. MacLaren: I do not recall saying that, Mr. Speaker. If the Hon. Member opposite wants to come to my constituency office on a Saturday morning, he, too, would realize the degree to which youth unemployment is a major problem. I do not belittle that problem. What I do say is that the Government is acting to address that profoundly disturbing social and economic problem partly through short-term and partly through long-term measures.

The Hon. Member refers to one of several short-term initiatives which the Government has taken to reduce youth unemployment. There will be youth unemployment this summer. It will continue at a high level. The Government does not have the capability—how could we—of guaranteeing every youth a job this summer. What we are attempting to do is alleviate some of the worst difficulties involved, to help channel young people into the more promising areas of the economy, to assist with training in both the short and longer term.

There are specific measures into which I could go in some detail, but I believe that the Hon. Member opposite recognizes at least some. He has mentioned one. They can bring real relief to youth unemployment; but over the longer run the only real answer is the restoration of a dynamic private sector economy, both in Canada and abroad, so as to provide jobs for all those who seek them.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to stand up and speak on this budget. When I hear the speech of the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren) I was reminded of Little Red Ridinghood. If the wolf were at the door I think the Liberals would give Little Red Ridinghood a grant if she cried out, or a tax credit over four years. Worse still, after much consultation with the wolf community, the Government would give the wolf a grant so it could be more efficient.

We are in a terrible work crisis in Canada. We have a budget which literally does nothing. It certainly does not keep the wolf from the door. It is a Conservative budget.

Mr. Cooper: Shame.

Mr. Waddell: I should tell the Hon. Member before he leaves that it is a Conservative budget because it is a stand-pat budget. It does not really do anything. It basically favours big business and that is it. Forget small business, the consumer, youth, women, the poor and students. Forget them. It helps only a certain group in society.

My friends to my right say that it is not a Conservative budget. A few minutes ago the Premier of Ontario, Bill Davis, said how much he thought this was a good budget. He liked it. He is a Liberal, I am told by one of my colleagues. We do not know that, but we do know that 1983 opened with a plea from the Catholic Bishops that the Government give priority to the real victims of the recession, the unemployed, the welfare poor, the working poor and so on. The Bishops called for primary emphasis to be given to fighting unemployment, which then stood at 1.5 million. Instead, this budget we have today predicts—this is not socialist rhetoric or made-up figures, the figures are from the budget papers themselves—an unemployment rate of 1,495,000 Canadians unemployed this year with no real hope of finding a job and no alternative income except welfare. That is what this budget is about, Mr. Speaker.

I want to deal with some myths of this budget. One of them is that this is a recovery budget. We have heard the Government side say this is a recovery budget. Some recovery budget! The budget says—not my rhetoric or what we say, but the budget itself—that fewer people will be working than in 1982. In other words, fewer people will be working in 1983 than were working in 1982. There will be .6 per cent decline. The budget also says that 12.4 per cent will be unemployed. Then there will be a slight decline after that to 11.4 per cent.

Now, what disturbs me about this is not only the high level of unemployment—some recovery when you are going to have 12 per cent unemployment—but we are beginning to accept, if you notice, a high level of unemployment as a permanent level, something we are going to live with. Well, we cannot live with that. Not only will it kill our young people, it will literally create a generation of zombies out there. Not only that, it will bankrupt the Treasury, the UIC and our welfare system. The UI program cannot live with that, it was not created for that. The Provinces will go bankrupt because of welfare. We cannot live with this high level of unemployment and we should not accept it.

What does the budget say? We are on the way to recovery. I just did a tour of southwestern Ontario; Niagara Falls, St. Catharines, Welland, Thorold, Hamilton, Windsor and so on. I have looked for this recovery. I went back to my riding at Easter, my colleagues went to their ridings. Have you seen this recovery, Mr. Speaker? Can you find it? I have looked for it everywhere, and I am looking under chairs now for this recovery. Where is it? It is supposed to be around the corner, say the Liberals. There is a recovery for a few bankers and a few people who play the stock market. Old so-called economists like the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) find a recovery, but let me tell the Member who is yelling at me that for the average person in this country there is no recovery now.

Mr. Evans: Nonsense.

Mr. Waddell: The major premise of this budget is that we will just wait and see and we will go on with the American recovery. That is what the budget papers say; we are going to wait for Ronald Reagan. We have not seen any recovery yet.

The budget's second myth is that we are going to have job creation. If you look at it, the budget gives $4.8 billion for job creation, but that is over four years. The Minister neglected to emphasize that in his speech. It will be over four years. New job creation money for next year will amount only to $440 million. We are paying out something over $12 billion a year in Unemployment Insurance and we have no real job creation measures in this budget.

There is a third myth in this budget. In fact, the Minister has very little room to manoeuvre because he has this large deficit to deal with. Well, Mr. Speaker, if we could put people back to work through federal and provincial programs, we could generate more revenue and get people off Unemployment Insurance and welfare. That would cause the deficit to go down. There is no danger of interest rates going up because there is lots of money out there. Businesses are not borrowing money to expand. That is the fact of the matter. It has been said by the Governor of the Bank of Canada and by Dominion Securities in Toronto that businesses are not going out to borrow. So I am saying there is nothing to stop the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) from bringing in a massive stimulative budget, and he could have done that had he accepted that unemployment was the major problem in the country.

There is a fourth myth, which I want to deal with after one o'clock, about how ordinary people are not going to pay as much in taxes. In fact they are going to pay a lot more in taxes, but I will deal with that after lunch.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RESIGNATION OF MR. MARK ROSE

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received a communication notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely, Mark Rose, Esquire, Member for the electoral district of Mission-Port Moody, by resignation. Accordingly, I have addressed my warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer for the issue of a writ of election for the said electoral district.

NATIONAL PHYSICAL ACTIVITY WEEK

TRIBUTE TO CO-OPERATIVE EFFORT

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the week of May 15 to 23, 1983, is National Physical Activity Week.

Over 15,000 schools and more than 1,000 communities have decided to take part. In total, close to ten million Canadians are expected to run, swim, walk, cycle, or generally participate in this celebration of physical fitness.

It gives me particular pleasure to state that National Physical Activity Week stands as a shining example of a monumental co-operative effort. As the lead organization, Fitness Canada has worked diligently over the past two years with both provincial and municipal Governments, with leaders of Canada's prominent health and fitness organizations and our national voluntary organizations to create what is to be an annual event.

National Physical Activity Week will allow Canadians time to express our pride as Canadians in the nation's growing awareness of the benefits of physical activity.

THE BUDGET

CONDEMNATION OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the budget announced on Tuesday night was a cruel hoax on the unemployed. With two million Canadians out of work, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) promised jobs to 600,000 over two years, with nothing for the other 1.5 million. A few of the thousands of young people looking for jobs are promised consultation and training, not jobs, with the Minister destroying their hopes by saying "youth unemployment rates are expected to remain high".

The budget stated nothing about extending UIC payments to the thousands of unemployed whose UIC benefits have run out. The Government is content to let the unemployed suffer on welfare because welfare is cheaper, but there is one exception. The Minister of Finance looks after his own job. Yes, $200 million is provided to ensure that the Minister of Finance keeps his job in spite of the leak of information which benefited the wealthy, and for which any responsible Minister would resign. It is treated as a joke by the Minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The Minister blunders, and then the people of Canada are punished and must pay interest on $200 million for years to come.

Yes, the Minister looks after himself. He has no credibility, no accountability, no integrity, no honour. He charges his blunder to the people, and the Minister laughingly, and the Prime Minister arrogantly, continue to live high on the hog while the rank and file of the people just pay and pay.

How much longer can Canadians stand this Government which thrives on trickery and lies?

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

THREATENED REMOVAL OF LIBRARY FROM SASKATOON TO REGINA

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, today I have good news and bad news. The good news is that the St. Louis Blues will be moving to Saskatoon. The bad news is that there is a threat that the National Film Library in Saskatoon will be moving out to Regina. At this particular time I would like to protest to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox), in the loudest form possible, that this should not take place. The National Film Board has an office in Saskatoon, as in many other cities, Hamilton being an example where the same threat is being made.

In Saskatoon the two school districts, the University of Saskatchewan, the public libraries, and, in particular, the senior citizens, have been using this facility over the years. A senior citizens' home which I know has just bought a new 16-millimetre projector to use the films.

People in Saskatoon are mad about this. People in northern Saskatchewan are mad about this. Regina cannot handle this kind of a job. The Province is too big to have films distributed from that place alone.

Therefore, I would suggest that the savings which would seem to result because of this facility being moved would not compensate for the loss, and I ask that the facility stay in Saskatoon. The harm done would be too great to make up for the small amount of money which would be saved. I again ask the Minister of Communications to reconsider the whole problem and allow the National Film Board to keep its office in Saskatoon.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

TRAINING OF PAKISTANI NURSES

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, CIDA, the Canadian International Development Agency, is currently negotiating joint ventures with international groups in order to promote economic development and social welfare in underdeveloped countries. One such venture focuses on the need for upgrading training for nurses in Pakistan. This project by CIDA is being carried out in conjunction with the Aga Khan Foundation. The project is an extremely useful one and is a departure from what has been the general practice in Canada's development assistance.

Instead of having the teaching staff from Canada sent to developing nations, the University of Karachi is planning to send some 50 nurse-tutors to Canada to upgrade their qualifications and teaching skills, utilizing the excellent facilities at McMaster University in Hamilton. The details of this trend-setting program are in the process of being worked out, and a contract will soon be signed.

My concern is based on past experience involving medical personnel who have come to this country for training. Quite often these skilled people decide to remain in industrialized, developed countries instead of returning to their homelands where their skills are desperately needed. I hope that an understanding will be reached and enforced for such programs for foreign graduates, to ensure that these skilled professionals return to their countries of origin so that they will be able to help their fellow countrymen, rather than remain in the more developed nations.

NATIONAL PARKS

HIRING OF LIFEGUARDS IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, I would like to address a serious problem concerning the hiring practices for lifeguards in Prince Edward Island's National Park by Parks Canada Officials.

The 1983 competition for surfguards at the National Park resulted in a situation where many previously employed, trained and qualified surfguards from P.E.I. scored poorly in a ratings interview by two Parks Canada employees. Eight qualified, experienced applicants from P.E.I. were not offered positions. These applicants were previously employed with the P.E.I. Parks System and had from two to seven years' experience.

In the past, at the end of the season, each lifeguard would be appraised and, on the appraisal, the supervisor would add comments whether or not this person would be recommended for employment again. In the past, these appraisals have been used as a factor in rehiring.

A number of questions require answers. Why were these appraisal sheets, used in previous years, not used this year? Why would these qualified people, with their past experience, suddenly receive such a poor rating, in an interview? Why would people from outside the Province be hired when qualified people are available on the Island?

The P.E.I. National Park Surfguard Service has the best reputation in Canada and a perfect record of never having had a drowning within a supervised area since its inception in 1949. This record is thanks to our qualified, experienced lifeguards.

Why has the method of hiring changed at the P.E.I. National Park when the system has proven to work so well?

I would suggest that the Minister take a serious interest in this matter and take immediate steps to rectify this situation.

THE BUDGET

ALLEGED LEAK OF VOLUNTARY SECTOR PROVISIONS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, today the local CBC morning radio show, "CBO Morning", contained an interview with a Mr. Mac McDonald of the Canadian Heart Foundation. Mr. McDonald ended the interview with the casual comment, "And by the way, I was told about these changes in the budget (that affect the voluntary sector, and charitable donations) before the budget was brought down." To this, the interviewer replied, "Oh, another budget leak, eh?" Mr. McDonald answered, "Yes."

Granted that the concept of honour means something different to the upper echelons of the Liberal Party than to the rest of the western world, and granted, even, the Minister's feelings about budget secrecy being unnecessary, which would have carried much more weight if he had revealed them before being caught with his hand in the cookie jar, it seems to me that this revelation seriously changes the nature of the budget leak issue. No longer is it possible to consider the leak as being an accident. Now it can only be seen as one of two things, either a deliberate attempt to flout parliamentary traditions, or the exhausted stumblings of a Party and a Government weary unto death. Neither explanation brings much credit to the Government.

THE BUDGET

INTRODUCTORY DATE OF SPECIAL RECOVERY TAX

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, far be it from me to complain on partisan grounds, but I cannot help but observe that in his recent budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has sunk to a new low, even for the Liberal Party.

In order to gloss over the past mistakes of his Government he now proposes to undertake major new expenditures, but in order to pay for this largesse he proposes a $2 billion special recovery tax that will not come into effect until October 1, 1984.

The new principle is presumably, "Spend now and let the next Government pay for our mistakes." Or, in other words,

"Let the Liberal Party go out in a blaze of spending and let the Conservatives, who will form the next Government, pick up the pieces." I am sure that the Canadian public will recognize this subterfuge for the dastardly trick it is and, at the first available opportunity, make known its displeasure at the polls.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CONDITIONS ATTACHED TO FUNDS FOR NEWFOUNDLAND CONNE RIVER INDIANS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, by his indifference to the needs of the Conne River Indian people, has forced them to take the drastic action of occupying the office of the Newfoundland Minister of Rural Development. Last spring the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said he would ensure that funds voted for the Indian people of Newfoundland would reach the Conne River people without unacceptable conditions being imposed by the Newfoundland Government. This spring the Minister has completely caved in to the Newfoundland Government and reneged on his earlier commitments. The conditions set by the Newfoundland Government for the receipt of funds would prejudice the Conne River court case against the federal Government. I now hear that a representative of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development helped the Newfoundland Government to draft those unacceptable preconditions.

This backroom dealing, which ignores the urgent needs of the Conne River people, must stop. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development must meet immediately with the Conne River people and the Government of Newfoundland to ensure that the funds voted by Parliament reach the people they were intended to help.

The Cabinet must act immediately to register the Conne River people so that they can get the rights that are due to them as to other Indian people of Canada, as is only fair.

THE BUDGET

ADVANTAGES OF CANADIAN HOME OWNERSHIP STIMULATION PROGRAM

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Some time ago, Madam Speaker, I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) a question about the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan. I had received many representations from builders in my riding, from people directly or indirectly involved in that field who wanted the Canadian Government to know that this plan, under which $3,000 grants are made available to people who want to buy a new house or have a new one built, had gained wide acceptance and made it possible to boost appreciably the number of housing starts and to provide additional work for construction workers. Here is a typical example: on my own street, Madam Speaker, four new houses were under construction not so long ago. I am pleased to be able to say to my constituents today that the Minister of Finance did listen to my representations. An additional amount of $30 million has been earmarked for that plan, which will spur construction until the month of May. I also believe that this plan offers great opportunities in all ridings, yours included, Madam Speaker, I am sure of that. I even see that my friend from Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) fully agrees with me and is certainly proud of the plan. The Minister of Finance listened and paid attention to our representations about this plan, and I am quite pleased about that.

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

PLEA FOR PRESERVATION OF EXISTING NATIONAL DEFENCE JOBS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, let me bring to the attention of the House of Commons the plight of a resident of Halifax West who was robbed of his job because of an employment fraud being perpetrated by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne).

This person was employed at a National Defence installation and was laid off March 25, 1983, after being given one week's notice. The purpose of the lay-off was to allow the Department of National Defence to hire additional employees pursuant to the NEED Program. This employment fraud is being perpetrated so that the Government can pretend to be hiring 3,000 employees while, in fact, it is dismissing over 1,000 employees from their jobs that have existed over a three-year period.

If we allow this sort of fraud to be perpetrated in the name of job creation, we will be destroying the faith of thousands of Canadians not only in the Government of Canada but in the Parliament of Canada. I urge the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of National Defence to stop this Program right now and preserve the jobs of the people who have been faithful employees for the Government over a three-year period.

THE BUDGET

SPECIAL RECOVERY PROGRAM—SELECTION OF PROJECTS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. He has said that more than 100 projects have been selected for the Special Recovery Capital Projects Program and that "earth will be moved, steel will be rigged and concrete will be poured" this spring or early summer. Would the Minister tell Canadians what projects have been selected and where they will be built? Can he please tell unemployed Canadians when and where they might look for work?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Yes, Madam Speaker. We will be very happy to proceed with the announcement of these various projects in the next very short while. The Minister responsible for economic development is in charge of that particular program. He is in the process of proceeding to the ultimate consultations and discussions with the Departments concerned. As soon as the announcements are ready to be made, I am sure the Minister will be very happy to announce those projects as they are being processed.

Mr. Nielsen: Why wait for spring? Do it now.

TIMING OF APPROVAL FOR PROJECTS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also addressed to the Minister of Finance. I asked him the question because we cannot find much evidence that such a list is actually in existence. There has certainly been no consultation with the Provinces about projects of this magnitude. We would like the Minister to produce this list of projects that he says have been selected and are in the advanced planning stage. We want him to announce now where they are, so that we can put Canadians back to work.

The Minister also said in his budget that there would be no red tape and no delays in initiating the capital projects because they are being put on a "fast track". Yet the Minister's own budget papers state that projects will be physically under way within six months of approval, that is, as late as October, and will be only 60 per cent completed in two years.

How many of those projects have actually been approved and we can expect to be in place in six months, and what does the Minister plan on doing with the 110,000 unemployed Canadians who could be working on those projects between now and October?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have said that 70 per cent, not 60 per cent, of the money provided for those projects would be expended in the next two years. Again, the Minister responsible for economic development is going to be in a position to speak on this subject, I hope in the course of next week, to give more details as to how the program will be implemented and proceed to the announcement of projects that can be started in very shortly. As I said, as soon as he can do it, having finished his consultations he will be able to announce those programs and will be able to ensure they are begun on time, on schedule, and are proceeded with very expeditiously. I can assure the Hon. Member that I have personally seen the list that is being considered. I hope that the Minister will be able to proceed with the official announcements very, very shortly.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Table it.

NEED PROGRAM—DELAY IN CREATION OF JOBS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. We are having an awful lot of trouble, as we have explained in this House, trying to cope with the changing numbers the Minister keeps giving us. I would refer him to page 7 of his own budget papers for the 60 per cent figure that I used.

This Government's track record in fast tracking is not impressive if you look at programs like the NEED Program. Last October the NEED Program was announced as an urgent plan to spend $500 million to create 60,000 jobs. Yet the budget papers show that, by the end of the fiscal year, NEED has spent only $30 million, that is only 6 per cent of the total, to create about 6,000 jobs. With that kind of record, what faith can unemployed Canadians have that the Government can deliver all these promised jobs? Again, I submit that the Minister has not told us when he is going to put those 110,000 people to work in the next few months.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member complained in her question that we had not consulted the provinces. One of the reasons why the implementation of the NEED Program was delayed for some time was the need to consult the provinces, and I am thinking especially of my own province, Quebec. We had to wait many weeks before getting some answers from the provincial Government, and even afterwards the Quebec Government changed its mind concerning the eligibility of municipalities to this most worthwhile program. This caused certain delays in the implementation of the NEED Program.

As for the programs announced in my budget, in general, they come exclusively under the jurisdiction of the Canadian government. In certain cases, the programs call for the involvement of some provinces, but on the whole, the amounts to be spent come under the jurisdiction of the Canadian government and will not be affected by delays such as those feared by the Hon. Member.

In addition, my budget speech underlined the fact that the Government has created a task force of public servants and a special committee responsible for ensuring that there is no undue delay in carrying out these projects. We intend to see to it that these projects are implemented as quickly as possible to reduce unemployment in every Canadian province.

USE OF CANADIAN OWNERSHIP CHARGE—INQUIRY RESPECTING RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The budget papers indicated as well that some $170 million will be allocated under the Capital Projects Fund for resource development. Can the Minister of Finance identify in more detail what kinds of projects will be eligible under the particular section of the Capital Projects Recovery Program?

Also the Minister will be aware, having regard to the fact that he saw fit to exend the Canadian Ownership Charge, that some $3.4 billion will be generated in that fund over the course of the next three years or so. Will the Minister indicate how he plans to use that money? Will it be used to assist in Canadianizing the energy sector from a private sector point of view, or will it be used as a slush fund to nationalize further the energy industry of Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if I may begin by answering the last part of the question, I can tell the Hon. Member that the Government of Canada is not considering any further acquisitions in the oil and gas sector. Indeed, the funds will be used to improve and expand the Canadianization of the oil and gas industry in the private sector, we hope.

The first part of his question concerned projects having to do with the resource industries. The Minister of State for Economic Development is in charge of that program and intends to make announcements in the next few weeks in that regard. I urge my hon. friend to show a little patience. The Minister is finalizing consideration of these projects and should be in a position to make announcements over the course of the next month as they are processed through the system which has been established to speed up consideration of the projects.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am surprised the Minister has not yet decided what sort of guidelines will apply. In reply to a question to his colleague, the Minister of State for Economic Development was not able to enlighten us with respect to that matter yesterday either.

REQUEST FOR REVITALIZATION OF ENERGY MEGAPROJECTS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, having regard to the fact that the Minister found some $200 million Monday evening to add to his budget and that this $200 million is being allocated to the Capital Projects Recovery Program, have those funds been allocated as yet? If not, when will they be? I suggest to the Minister that he might consider using those funds to revitalize some of the energy projects which were shelved as a result of the National Energy Program and his Government's disastrous economic policies. These megaprojects could be undertaken immediately to provide long-term meaningful jobs in the immediate term.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that I have already had discussions with representatives of the oil and gas industry since my budget. I can report to him that those representatives have spoken in extremely positive terms about the measures contained in the budget, in particular the measure which will allow companies not to pay the PGRT, the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax payout, until they have recovered the cost of their investment. It will be a very significant element in the launching of a number of projects during the course of next year.

I have had discussions as recently as this morning with a representative of a major company who said that he was once again taking into active consideration a number of projects which he had in mind. They may not be necessarily of the style of huge megaprojects about which they were talking a few years ago, but I remind my hon. friend that all over the world the oil and gas industry has been reconsidering huge megaprojects and is now addressing the issue by trying to stage its expenditures in a more gradual and less concentrated way. This reaction is quite encouraging and quite positive. I am confident that we will see renewed activity and announcements—as a matter of fact very shortly—in this particular regard concerning at least one or two projects.

My friend has the habit of asking two questions at the same time.

Mr. Mazankowski: The $200 million.

Mr. Lalonde: As far as the $200 million is concerned, I suggest that that sum will be allocated to capital expenditures coming under the authority of the federal Government, projects which Departments had been planning for later this decade that can be advanced. As a matter of fact there are several hundreds of millions of dollars of proposed expenditures by Departments which I had to postpone because we came to the conclusion that we should be spending about $4.6 billion under the recovery program. Our plan was to spend between $4.5 billion and $5 billion under the recovery program. Having added $200 million to the program, this will allow us to speed up a number of expenditures which are quite worth-while and useful in terms of national interest. Again it will mean more Canadians are being put to work in the course of the next two years.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PLIGHT OF UNEMPLOYED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister acknowledged in the House yesterday that the money included in the budget with reference to direct job-creation programs will create employment for fewer than one-sixteenth of the approximate two million men and women who are out of work in Canada right now. Outside the House he admitted that he included among these jobs the raking of leaves for one week. When the Government is so willing to do so little for the one out of sixteen people who will get a job, what is the Minister saying to the more than one million Canadians who will not benefit at all from any of these programs?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party for the opportunity to correct what was a very blatant misrepresentation in a story which has appeared. At no time did I ever say that. In fact that was a question posed by the particular reporter, which I rejected out of hand. I pointed out that in fact the job-creation programs which we put into place were designed to work in particular with communities and municipalities which wanted to start major projects of sewage or community services. A large proportion of the uptake in the NEED Program is by private sector firms which are modernizing their plant, extending their facilities, and therefore creating the foundation for long-term permanent jobs.

We are saying that the direct employment program over the next two years will provide over 300,000 jobs with the money provided by the Minister of Finance. The funds are to be used for bridging and transition programs to help those people most severely in need, while the private economy, being stimulated through the budget, will provide the longer-term work.

We have always said that the job problem is not subject to one simple solution, although the New Democratic Party seems to believe that. It must be attacked in a comprehensive manner with a wide variety of strategies, each trying to pinpoint and target a different set of needs. That is the kind of strategy we are adopting. It is a realistic one, not a rhetorical one.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: The realistic one does include, in the Minister's own words, creating jobs. On the average these jobs, as a result of these programs, last only two months. Including what he said today, the average percentage affected, the number affected, still comes to about one-sixteenth of the total in terms of aid.

THE BUDGET

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO CREATE JOBS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance a related question on the matter of the need for more short term jobs. We learned recently that the Government is prepared to consider using taxpayers' money to bail out the Canadair Corporation to the extent of $2.3 billion. In the budget, in the two programs that involve direct job creation, the Government is prepared to allocate less than one half of that, namely $1 billion. Does the Minister really think that allocating $1 billion, less than one half of the Canadair total, to all of the other companies in all of the other parts of Canada for job creation, really meets the human and economic need of the country at this time?

Hon. Marc lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to a figure for Canadair that I have not seen. That is not being considered by me at the present time.

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN FUNDS TO CREATE JOBS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister, who is just five or six seats to the left of the Minister, referred to the serious situation faced by Canadair recently and acknowledged that the Government had before it a comprehensive set of figures that we would love to see publicly released. I know the Minister is always a little late with his figures. The rest of us have seen the figure of over $2 billion. That aside, I will ask the Minister this question.

Last fall, speaking at his Party's convention, the Prime Minister said that all across this land of ours there are roads to be built, sewers to be constructed, and municipal facilities of kinds which are needed, and rather than people collecting welfare or Unemployment Insurance, they should be put to work doing these things. I ask the Minister of Finance why, in heaven's name, given the human need for people to get satisfaction from working, the Government is not allocating more money to put more Canadians back to work on the kinds of projects his own Prime Minister suggested a few months ago.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party alleged that the Government was ready to pour $2.3 billion into Canadair. I told him I had never seen that figure or seen such a recommendation. This is what I told him. I remind him that thousands of Canadian workers are involved. This is not some place on another planet. It is in Canada. They are members of unions which, I am sure, my hon. friend would like to see kept at work. We are talking about actual jobs and actual Canadians in an industry that is important for Canada. I am surprised that my hon. friend seems to be so indifferent to that.

Leaving that aside, as far as the Government is concerned, we are indeed supportive of all of this. The fact is, under the NEED program, as the Minister of Employment and Immigration indicated, we are putting in additional funds. We are spending in the course of this current fiscal year $900 million more in direct job creation over last year. Canada will have the largest direct employment program in its history in 1983-84. Third, a number of Provinces are going ahead with their own programs of stimulation in terms of capital investment similar to what the federal Government announced on Tuesday. Some have already announced programs. I said I was hopeful that more Provinces would do the same. We indeed will have Canadians working in this country, building all the types of projects to which the Hon. Member has referred.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS' REFUSAL TO ASSIST SMALL MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Madam Speaker, I have a question, surprisingly enough, for the Minister of Finance. In Tuesday night's budget the Minister quite correctly put great emphasis on job creation by both Government and private enterprise. At the same time, it is a known fact that many chartered banks in Canada have been refusing to provide project financing for small and medium-sized manufacturers. This has meant that these manufacturers could not pay for labour and material to fill a contract or order. Will the Minister of Finance take up this issue with the chartered banks? Second, what solution does the Minister have to overcome this serious difficulty which, if resolved, would go a long way to help provide more jobs and, indeed, more job security in the private sector?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would indeed by very pleased to raise the question of my hon. friend with the Canadian Bankers' Association. I will ask the Superintendent of Banks to pursue this matter as well.

I can tell my hon. friend that I had a conversation this morning with a representative of the Canadian Bankers' Association in which we discussed the general implications of the budget.

As far as the Canadian economy is concerned, I indicated that I expect the banking system in Canada to be very supportive of the thrust of the budget. I am quite encouraged by developments which have taken place recently, particularly the fact that the banks reduced their prime rate by half a point in the last few days. I hope that in the weeks to come, thanks to the greater confidence as a result of the recovery that is taking place, we will see further progress in terms of interest rates. The developments that have taken place recently have been very encouraging. It is up to all Canadians to ensure that this happens even more in the future.

THE BUDGET

RESTORATION OF CONSUMER CONFIDENCE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In the budget the Minister predicts that record high unemployment will continue through 1983 and 1984. Many of the 2 million unemployed will exhaust their Unemployment Insurance benefits in the near future. However, at the same time the Minister is predicting an increase in consumer spending. Will the Finance Minister agree that consumer confidence will only return to Canada when Canadians see fewer and fewer of their friends and relatives unemployed?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Yes, Madam Speaker, and that is exactly what is going to happen in the next two years. More and more Canadians will have jobs. I said that by the end of next year, 600,000 more Canadians will be working, compared to what the situation was at the end of 1982. I also pointed out that between now and 1984, there will be a gradual drop in the number of unemployed Canadians. There will be a net increase of 600,000 workers in Canada over the next two years, which is nearly the total number of workers in a city such as Toronto. This is a very substantial increase in employment, and I think that the general reaction of the market since yesterday is a clear indication that Canadians have more confidence in the future then the Hon. Member seems to have.

[English]

EFFECT OF INCREASED CONSUMER TAXES

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, it is difficult for Canadians to square those figures of high unemployment with the figures that the Minister is now predicting. The Minister is increasing taxes on consumers to the tune of $5.7 billion over the next four years. With so many Canadians concerned about surviving and about high unemployment, with these increased consumer taxes how does the Minister expect Canadians to run out and buy a new fridge or stove and thus fulfil his pipedream of increased consumer spending?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will answer the Hon. Member quite simply that Canadians will indeed do well to incur those expenses now or at least between now and October 1984, since the manufacturer's tax does not become effective until October 1984. I have also pointed out that as far as, for instance, household appliances or furnishings are concerned, Canadians who have a Registered Homeownership Savings Plan may use the funds in such plans for the purchase of many appliances and furnishings they need. I hope this will encourage them to make use of this program and that they will purchase products made in Canada. I hope that Canadian workers will take advantage of this extremely attractive measure provided in the budget, which is, in fact, a very substantial tax benefit for Canadians.

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON VOLUNTARY SECTOR

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. Would he explain to the House why his budget ignored the contribution of Canada's voluntary sector to his projected recovery of the Canadian economy? More specifically, would the Minister indicate why he has rejected the representations of his colleague, the Secretary of State, and the face to face recommendations of the national voluntary organizations, by specifically ignoring the "give and take" tax proposals, the charitable activity definition, and the cost effectiveness which has been shown in job creation in the voluntary sector?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Canadian Government has a great deal of confidence in the voluntary sector and recognizes and acknowledges its major role in our society.

Like hundreds of organizations, the voluntary sector made a number of representations and recommendations. There were two major recommendations made by the voluntary sector. One was to do away with the $100 automatic exemption without receipts; the other was the one to which the Hon. Member refers. I have accepted the first recommendation made by the voluntary organizations. That is a .500 batting average which I would submit, is pretty good and compares very favourably with the recommendations made by any other sector.

When I met with representatives from the voluntary sector, I indicated to them that there would be difficulty in implementing all their recommendations. They said, "We will accept a first step if we cannot get everything." They are very happy about the steps that I have taken, very happy indeed.

Mr. McLean: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance is not speaking to the same representatives from the voluntary agencies of Canada with whom I speak—they feel very let down. Their proposals to the Minister included only one side. Their proposals specifically indicated that only if there was an incentive would they agree to the deduction.

INQUIRY RESPECTING TASK FORCE

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Secretary of State. Would the Secretary of State in this National Volunteer Week tell the voluntary sector of Canada, over three million Canadians, why his long-planned and awaited task force on the fiscal and legal situation of Canada's voluntary sector has not been included in the budget? We had all expected that it would be. Will he tell the House if he did recommend to the Minister of Finance that the removal of the $100 deduction should be done without the "give-and-take" tax credit proposal?

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I heard the Finance Minister's reply to the question and I should point out to the Hon. Member's attention that his proposal has not met as much objection as is suggested. Indeed one of the campaign officials of one of the most important organizations in the sector, that is the United Way, stated yesterday and I quote:

[English]

Next year, without the automatic deduction, maybe they will be giving the hundred bucks to charity to get the deduction that way.

[Translation]

There is no doubt that national organizations will have every opportunity to conduct their regular canvassing to increase their share of income from that source. Our surveys show that 43 per cent of charitable or voluntary organizations' funds come from Canadian taxpayers' moneys and that approximately 22 per cent are provided for by the Government. Consequently, in the assessment of additional sources of financing, we wish to take into consideration the impact of the positive statement made this week by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech and I think that it is a step in the right direction with a view to revaluating how we may contribute additional funds to the financing of the voluntary sector in Canada.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—VARIABLE RATES ISSUE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Many Members attended a luncheon today sponsored by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. The delegates are upset with the Minister of Transport's draft Bill to end the Crow rate but they are almost as greatly upset with his stated intention to use closure to ram the Bill through the House. Will the Minister take seriously the overwhelming representations against changing the Crow freight rate, and will he particularly consider eliminating the clause which permits railways to discriminate against certain farmers because of where they live? In other words, will he consider making sure that variable rates are not possible?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I also met with the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and other representatives from Saskatchewan this morning. I can assure you that any worry they may have about the second statement, about using closure, is totally unjustified and totally unfounded.

With respect to the other issues, we had a discussion and I asked them a number of questions, but there is nothing in particular on which to report. By the way, it was a private meeting and I do not think I should be asked to report on what took place in a private meeting.

VOLUME LIMITATION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, this Government and this Minister have the power to end many things. We just saw the end of the Western Development Fund in Tuesday's budget. Let us hope that the $4.8 million Special Recovery Program does not end the same way.

My supplementary question is for the Minister. That particular draft legislation includes a proposed cap of 31.1 million tonnes on the amount of grain that can be shipped at lower rates. This proposal is unfair, illogical and not in the best interests of Canada as a whole. Has the Minister considered throwing this clause away.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the volume limitation of 31.1 million tonnes is not one of my inventions. It was a recommendation made to Gilson during their meetings and was incorporated in the Gilson report. The reason for it is very simple. There is an amount of money that the federal Government is willing to put into this plan, and the shippers, the representatives of all the producers at the Gilson exercise, said to themselves, "Let us distribute that amount of money over a certain quantity of grain." That was recommended in the Gilson report, the implication being that production over and beyond that amount would be more profitable to farmers who already were receiving a contribution from the federal Government for the basic 31.1 million tonnes. This reasoning, I thought, was quite acceptable and quite plausible.

THE BUDGET

REPORTED LIST OF SPECIAL RECOVERY PROJECTS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I have, this very moment, been handed information that confirms that Canadian Press has just transmitted through its national wire service a specific list of Special Recovery Projects to receive funding under the Minister's budget. That list apparently includes major funding for the Atlantic Regional Veterinary College to be located in my riding, a project that I have been pushing for many months, as well as references to certain other detailed projects concerning wharfs, Search and Rescue initiatives, et cetera.

My question to the Minister is this. Why a few moments ago in the House did he tell my colleague from Vancouver Centre that she and the House in general could not have such a list when evidently the media of Canada already have that list and presumably have been given it by the Minister himself? Or is this another $200 million budget leak?

Some Hon. Members: Another leak.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have not seen the CP story but I have indicated to the House that indeed I have examined a list of projects. I have indicated that the Minister of State responsible for economic development was in the process of finalizing the consultations in this regard, and obviously many, many people in the Government of Canada are reviewing that particular list at the present time, but until announcements and decisions are made by the Minister of State for Economic Development, we are not in a position to make a formal announcement.

The Minister himself will make the announcement concerning related projects once he has finalized discussions with his officials. That is when the projects will be made public. I am not surprised that there may be a Canadian Press report, but as I have said, the Minister responsible for economic development will be the one to make the announcement in due time.

• (1450)

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER POSSESSES LIST

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, this is the second time in a week that the Minister has made a major announcement about budgetary provisions through leaks. Would the Minister tell the House if he has such a detailed list of special projects which are to receive funding under the budget? If so, would he make that list available to the House rather than leaking it through the media, or being sloppy enough to have the media leak it for him?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I cannot help it if any particular journalist gets any particular information at any particular time from any particular source. I have demonstrated that quite clearly in the last few days. I can add nothing to the answer I have given to the Hon. Member than what I have said before. The Minister who is responsible will made an announcement in due time.

Take your time, my friend, you will get all the good news, including that which might affect your riding.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ANNOUNCED ENROLLMENT OF YOUNG CANADIANS IN ARMED FORCES

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Yesterday the Minister confirmed that the Government intends to enroll 5,000 young Canadians into the Armed Forces for ten to 12 months as a measure to alleviate unemployment. The Opposition has been recommending for the past year an intake of 25,000 to 50,000. Can the Minister tell the House if this trivialization of our initiative satisfies the 108 Liberal backbenchers who petitioned him a couple of months ago to accept a plan similar to ours?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the caucus on this side of the House is very satisfied with the fact that DND has managed to get 5,000 extra men for the next year, and $75 million. I have to add what I said to the press yesterday, that is, that in addition to this $75 million, we have $25 million for civilian temporary employment; we have $16 million for cadets which will allow us to enroll this summer 8,215 more cadets. We also have the Extended Youth Training and Employment Program which is the one mentioned by the Hon. Member. There are in addition to the employment which will be provided through several projects which will be announced later by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State (Economic Development), as moneys are made available.

LAYING OFF OF TERM EMPLOYEES

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): During the Minister's boasting yesterday he said that the forces would be hiring 15,000 to 16,000 people in a variety of jobs. At the same time the Department is laying off hundreds of term employees. Can the Minister deny that these recently laid-off term employees will be drawing unemployment insurance while their jobs will be taken by the new short-term employees, the whole exercise representing a gigantic scam on the unemployment insurance fund?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I have to deny very strongly the connection that the Hon. Member suggests between the employees that we have hired through the NEED program and the term employees referred to. The Hon. Member should know that every year on March 31 we have to end the contracts of some of our employees who are in fact term employees. That is normal practice and this does not affect any other employees who might be hired through the NEED program. I have the figures here, Madam Speaker. In March we had 4,232 term employees. The employees hired by the NEED program will be over and above the normal term employees that we have.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

NOTIFICATION OF BENEFITS FOR WIDOWS

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I am grateful to you for permitting me to put a question or two this afternoon to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I suppose one could say that the discussion on the budget this week has not included very many references to veterans and their problems.

I welcome this opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Veterans Affairs for some of the things he has done since he took on that job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: I am happy to say that in the past ten or 12 years we have made considerable improvements in legislation with respect to veterans and others, but this is a problem on which we must continue to work.

A few days ago the Minister of National Health and Welfare sent to all pensioners a printed document signed both by herself and by the Minister of Veterans Affairs, telling the pensioners that there are many people who, in the last two or three years, have not received their benefits, and if they would send their notices they might be able to get some of the benefits that are now available to them.

We regard it as very important to extend this effort, although we are glad about what has been done. I hope the Minister of Veterans Affairs will be able to indicate that he and others are prepared to do further things by newspapers, radio broadcasts and all the rest, to advise the thousands of widows, widowers, and dependent children of the things that are coming to them under veterans legislation.

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, may I thank the Hon. Member for his question and preface my comments by saying, on behalf of all Members, how pleased we are to see the tremendous recovery in health of the Hon. Member and his active participation in the proceedings of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Campbell (Cardigan): The particular item to which the Hon. Member refers is the cheque stuffer which the Minister of National Health and Welfare agreed to include with the March cheques for Old Age Security and Guaranteed Income Supplement. This is a further attempt to contact widows who are entitled to receive proportionate pensions as a result of amendments to the Pension Act.

When the legislation was passed we anticipated that some 23,000 widows would become eligible for pension benefits. To date we have received and processed in excess of 17,000 applications. We have used every avenue available to us, through the Legion Magazine, veterans' publications, periodicals and the assistance of Members of Parliament. I can only suggest that if Hon. Members know of anyone who is a widow who may be entitled to benefits under the Proportionate Pension Program they urge that person to get in touch with the Department.

AGING VETERANS PROGRAM

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, may I ask the Minister if he is aware of the fact that in many sections these days there are efforts to do something to improve the position of aging veterans by establishing a program. This is very important to those concerned—the older people, the younger people, veterans' organizations, and Members of Parliament.

May I ask the Minister if he is making other efforts to improve on what has been done and to improve the position for all aging veterans?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, about 2 years ago we introduced the Aging Veterans Program which was deliberately geared to provide the necessary support services to enable veterans to continue living in their own homes and own communities as long as possible. This Program has gone through the pilot stages and it was provided to approximately 200 veterans who are disability pension recipients. The Program is to be further expanded this year. I am pleased to report that over 1,000 veterans are now participating in the Aging Veterans Program. I intend to continue to expand that Program to other disability pensioners. We are in the process of examining ways and means whereby the Program could be extended to War Veterans Allowance recipients as well.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REMOVAL OF WOOD CARVINGS FROM OFFICE OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Public Works whether he can shed any light on an unauthorized intrusion into the Office of the Leader of the Opposition in this building—my office lately—apparently by members of his Department. This has resulted in the removal of the wood carvings over the west and east entrances to the boardroom in my office, the one over the west door containing the words "Fear God", and the one over the east door "Honour the King". These wood carvings were apparently done during the time of the Liberal Prime Minister, the late Mackenzie King.

In view of the harmless and even commendable nature of those two sentiments, I wonder if the Minister can ascribe any reason, legitimate or otherwise, that the Office of the Leader of the Opposition should be subjected to such intrusion, surreptitiously, after dark, without any authority from me, without any knowledge by me or my staff, and without any request from me or my staff. Can he give us an explanation?

• (1500)

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I have listened to the Hon. Member. Although I cannot join him in the melodrama of his question, I will ascertain the facts, which is what he must expect me to do. If the facts are accurate, I will try to find an explanation and I will report back to the House.

Mr. Nielsen: I am not rising to make any attempt to be melodramatic. I must say that I am concerned about—

Miss Bégin: He should be concerning himself with unemployment and the economy.

Mr. Nielsen: I did not hear the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Miss Bégin: We are concerned about unemployment and the economy.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, it is about time they got themselves concerned about the economy of this country. They have been sitting on their backsides for three years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Privilege—Mr. Nielsen

REQUEST FOR PRESERVATION OF MUNIMENTS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): I am concerned, Madam Speaker, about the retention of the heritage features of these buildings. The Minister knows that millions of dollars were spent in doing just that, on the East Block. Will he have his workmen restore those carvings to their original state so that the heritage features of this building are not mutilated and debased any further? And will he give me assurance at the same time that the other murals and carvings in those offices will not be tampered with in any way whatsoever?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I take a back seat to no one in my efforts to preserve the heritage of these buildings. I only hope that the removal of objects was not done in search of some pseudo bugging equipment from some years ago.

PETITION

MR. NIELSEN—ALLEGED UNAUTHORIZED INTRUSION INTO OFFICES OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question of privilege, Madam Speaker, arising out of the Question Period. It has to do with the answers given to me by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) in connection with—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Hon. Members across the way make light of the fact that offices of Members of Parliament can be broken into without authority, without request, without knowledge, at any time by servants of the—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order. If that is not a continuation of Question Period, I do not know what is. We are on a question of privilege.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My question of privilege involves the unauthorized intrusion into my offices in this building by the employees of the Minister of Public Works. The offices of a Member of Parliament, Madam

Speaker—even if those Members over there do not know it—must be regarded as private and personal in light of the customs and traditions of this place. As far as I am concerned they are sacred as long as they are occupied by the Hon. Member occupying them at the moment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The offices of the Leader of the Opposition fall within that category just as the offices of any Hon. Members of this House. The offices which are currently occupied by me as Leader of the Opposition were formerly occupied by a number of very distinguished Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Member might have a grievance, but he must demonstrate to me very quickly how this affects his privilege. "Privilege" has a definition which the Hon. Member knows just as well as I do, and he cannot use a question of privilege in order to pursue a debate. Therefore, I warn him—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: When will you find one?

Madam Speaker: I do not know what this House has come to. I am only trying to be a Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, like you, I do not know what this House has come to when Hon. Members cannot rest secure in the thought that their offices are not going to be broken into.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the breaking and entering of an Hon. Member's office without his knowledge or the knowledge of any of his staff, and without any request to enter those offices from that Hon. Member or the members of his staff, surely must constitute a question of privilege, just as it did a while back in the case of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) when the Chair listened to that question of privilege when it was raised. If the Chair finds that I have a prima facie case of privilege, I will be moving an appropriate motion to refer the circumstances to the appropriate committee of the House.

The memorabilia in this place are part and parcel of the history of this country.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I do not know what the Hon. Member is coming to, but I can see from the first sentence of his intervention that he wants to complain about the fact that his office has been broken into. This does not fall under the purview of a question of privilege. I can assure—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: —the Hon. Member that the whole matter will be investigated and I am sure that the Hon. Member will find satisfaction in the investigation which we run. We will investigate the matter fully. However, that is not a question of privilege.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Absolutely not.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, since when—

Mr. Pinard: Order. No questions of the Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: The Government House Leader is now the Speaker of this place. Since when, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Cosgrove: Let's have some respect for the House.

Mr. Nielsen: Since when, Madam Speaker, is the offence of break and enter, which is an offence under the Criminal Code of Canada, not a question of privilege? My offices have been broken into. There has been a trespass by the employees of the Minister of Public Works. That office has been defaced without my request, my permission, my authority and without my knowledge. Surely, in keeping with the precedent established by the Chair in the case of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) when her office was broken into, this must constitute a question of privilege. If the Speaker is telling me no, it does not, then no one in this place can rest secure that the premises which constitute their offices are not subject to the same kind of violation at any time by anyone.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: What I was advancing to the Chair is proof of the fact that they were broken into. They were broken into because those carvings above the doors in my boardroom were mutilated, defaced, removed. That, Madam Speaker, must surely constitute a question of privilege. If you find it does not, if you were to tell me, Madam Speaker, that it was done by your authority, that might constitute a different matter. I would have, of course, expected to have been consulted before any such authorization was made by the Chair, if in fact it was, but that would at least provide me with an explanation, which has not been advanced by the Minister of Public Works.

The sanctity of an Hon. Member's office must be regarded as just that, and I submit, as in the case of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, that an intrusion must constitute a question of privilege. If you so find, Madam Speaker, I would intend to move that the circumstances surrounding the trespassing, the break and entry, the invasion of my offices as a Member of Parliament, now the Leader of the Opposition, be referred to the appropriate standing committee of this House so that all of the circumstances can be investigated and a report made to you and to other Hon. Members of this House, who then might feel secure that their offices will not be invaded in a similar fashion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Obviously this has taken place without my knowledge as, it seems, without the knowledge of the Hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc).

Mr. Nielsen: All the more privilege.

Madam Speaker: Well, the Hon. Member has been able to function in this House, as far as I can see, and therefore I do not see at this point where there is a privilege.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Be reasonable!

Madam Speaker: Oh, I am terribly reasonable.

An Hon. Member: What about the security in my office?

Madam Speaker: Order, order. However, I will investigate all the facts, even the ones concerning the possible mutilation of some precious sculpture.

• (1510)

I have notice of a question of privilege in the name of the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens).

MR. STEVENS—REVISED BUDGET TABLES ALLEGED MISLEADING

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, if I may, I would like to refer you to two rulings or at least comments, one by yourself and one by your predecessor. I refer first to December 12, 1979, when at page 2287 of Hansard the then Speaker said:

> There is a very clear rule which was enunciated by one of my most distinguished predecessors, former Speaker Michener, that to accuse a Member of this House of misconduct in any way, and to expect that that accusation can be sent to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for investigation and examination, the allegation of misconduct by a Member will have to be clear.

In the course of my remarks, Madam Speaker, I hope I will meet that requirement. Secondly, I would direct your attention to page 12898 of Hansard for November 18, 1981. When dealing with a question of privilege you stated:

> —it is in that respect that a formal charge must be made.

Madam Speaker: Order. Would the Hon. Member tell me, before he quotes all of these precedents, what his question of privilege is all about?

Mr. Stevens: Yes, Madam Speaker. I will be showing you that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on budget night misled Members of this House. He was, I suggest, in contempt of Parliament as a result of what he tabled. I will be suggesting that he breached his oath of secrecy, that he limited my ability and that of other MPs to join in the budget debate itself, and as such I will suggest that there has indeed been a breach of the privileges of this House.

If you find that I have at least a prima facie case, Madam Speaker, I propose to move that the tabling in the House of Commons on Tuesday, April 19, of a fiscal plan by the Minister of Finance in a significantly altered version of the printed version of that fiscal plan be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for scrutiny and report back to this House.

Madam Speaker: I just want to warn the Hon. Member that this question of privilege resembles very much one that was dealt with previously in the House. The Hon. Member quoted part of my ruling where I made it quite clear that if the Hon. Member wanted to charge the Minister with the things he is now mentioning, it is not the right procedure to use a question of privilege to do it. There are other procedures which can be used in order to give the Hon. Member satisfaction on his grievance or desire to lay charges against the Minister, and he must use that route. I think I must remind Hon. Members that no Member of this House can be charged in a like way in his duties as a Member unless the Hon. Member who is making the charge is prepared to do it on a substantive motion. This is quite understandable because we cannot be throwing accusations at each other without using the proper procedure which will allow the House to investigate completely.

So I urge the Hon. Member in his presentation to stay very much within the line of what might be his question of privilege. If it is something else, I will have to interrupt him and not allow him to pursue it.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, you will recall that yesterday I gave notice at the conclusion of Question Period that I would likely be raising a question of privilege. In the meantime we have researched, both from a procedural standpoint and from an actual standpoint, what the documentation in fact represented. I think if you will be patient with me I will be able to outline clearly to you that I have indeed a question of privilege, that I am only trying, if you like, to anticipate the arguments you might otherwise raise against me in my anxiety to have you hear me out on something that I think is one of the most fundamental questions of privilege which has ever been raised in this House.

As a precedent, I refer you to a question of privilege raised in this House on February 28, 1979, which was subsequently debated that day and through to March 1, 1979. There you will find that the changing of a tabled document was very much the focal point of the question. My question of privilege is, however, significantly different in the sense that not only do we have a changing of the fiscal plan I have referred to, but we also have a document circulated—presumably at the request of the Minister and described as "Revised Budget Tables April 19, 1983"—in the lobbies of this House and I understand distributed across the country.

The significant point is that both I and other Members of this House were misled by the revised budget tables into thinking that what was filed at the Table was also revised to conform to the mimeographed pages being circulated in our lobby. The truth is that that did not happen. What happened was that there were various inked copies delivered by the Minister of Finance at the point of tabling to the Table, and on our examination of those copies which had been inked and in various ways altered, we found that they differed in the way that they were tabled; first, of course, from the basic fiscal plan circulated across the nation, but most importantly, they differed from the revised budget tables circulated to individual Members and represented at that time as being the final version of the fiscal plan that the Table was receiving.

Now, Madam Speaker, the reason I suggest this is clearly a question of privilege is that it means that those who entered into the debate on budget night, those who joined in debate yesterday, including myself, and those who have taken part in this debate today, have been misled as to what in fact was the fiscal plan the Goverment tabled on budget night. As I indicated, I believe the Minister misled the House into feeling that he was filing something that was in conformity to his fiscal plan as amended by these revised budget tables.

Secondly, I suggest that he was in contempt of Parliament to represent that what he was filing was what in fact he intended the nation to accept as his final version of the fiscal plan.

I would suggest that he was also in breach of his oath of secrecy because tabled documents are an integral part of any budget, and how can we even today know what the Minister was attempting to deliver on Tuesday night? The fact is that we have three versions of it. Two of them must involve a breach of his oath of secrecy, because two of them are either leaks or certainly incorrect. Yet the Minister, first by his unfortunate leaking to the press, second by what he distributed in the lobbies of the House, and third by what he in fact tabled, represented three versions of what his budget entailed.

• (1520)

With all due respect, how can Members of this House properly cope when they are left in such a dilemma? Most importantly, this does not only concern what has been brought to our attention. When we checked with research houses, with those who are attempting to come up with an analysis of the budget, we found that they themselves do not know what the final version is. On two occasions I have consulted with those with whom we generally consult as to what they feel about the budget, only to be told that they are not certain what figures to feed into their computer econometric models and this type of thing in order to determine what is in fact the import of the budget.

To give Your Honour only one example of how these discrepancies are so relevant, we were told, certainly on budget night during the oral presentation of his budget speech, that the Minister intended to raise the amount in the printed version with respect to the Special Recovery Capital Projects by $100 million this year, $50 million next year and $50 million the year following. If Your Honour checks with the inked version which the Minister actually tabled with respect to those figures, you will find that this year he did raise it, by the inked change, $100 million. Next year it will be raised only $40 million, in the ink change. In the final year it will in truth be raised $50 million. What, in fact, is the truth? Did he intend to go up $50 million or $40 million?

I would suggest that in our handling of the various budgetary matters it is essential that we as Members of the House know what, in fact, is the final version of the tabling of the Minister of Finance. In short, I could take Your Honour through something like 12 different discrepancies which appear between the tabled version of what the Minister felt was final, what was distributed in the lobbies in the form of the revised budget tables, and what the Minister told us in his oral presentation. To weigh the import of 12 variations surely involves a question of privilege which affects every Hon. Member of this House when attempting to respond to the Budget.

If, as I said earlier, Your Honour finds that I have a prima facie case with respect to my question of privilege, I am prepared to move the motion which I indicated at the beginning. I believe that until the matter is referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections we cannot, in a meaningful way, find out why there was such confusion on budget night. Was it a misrepresentation on the part of the Minister of Finance, deliberately done to throw off the track those who received those revised tables out in the lobbies when, in fact, he knew he was tabling something different? Do we have a Minister of Finance who has in fact broken his oath of secrecy? As I say, there are three stages involved.

Finally, I would suggest that the Committee on Privileges and Elections could perhaps determine the proper solution, to somehow or another put, in a more orderly way, what the Minister so ineptly did on Tuesday night; that is, in the presentation of his budget he did not file the proper papers, if Your Honour believes what he represented to us orally or at least through his handout in the lobbies in the form of revised budget tables.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think this is a regrettable incident, and I hope that my comments now will indicate to you that the issue can be settled very quickly. Although I am sure that the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) is deeply concerned, I hope my comments now will show you that he is also wrong.

I believe that if Your Honour checks with the Clerk of the House and with his staff, you will find that a document entitled "Revised Budget Tables" and a similar version in French were submitted to him at the time the budget papers were tabled by the Minister. There was a considerable degree of confusion in the House at that time, and apparently the confusion extended, on someone's part, to these documents. Therefore, if Your Honour now goes to the Journals Branch, you will find that it has the very documents; but they were not accepted by the Clerk as tabled.

In order to clarify this confusion, this morning I rose and asked for unanimous consent to table these same documents. At that time I clarified that these documents had been submitted to the House on April 19 for tabling with the budget. These are the same documents which were intended to be tabled at that time. There was unanimous consent that I do this, and I am happy to say that I appreciate it. The House Leader for the Opposition was one of the people who extended his consent, after receiving this same explanation.

I also believe that Your Honour will find that the documents in the possession of the Journal Branch, the documents which I tabled this morning and the documents to which reference was made by the Hon. Member for York-Peel, are all the same. Those are the documents entitled "Revised Budget Tables, April 19, 1983".

I regret the confusion which appears to have occurred. Near the end of the Hon. Minister's speech, just before the beginning of the reply from the Opposition, someone decided that these documents were not part of the Minister's submission. I am sure that in the confusion it is understandable, but I am also sure that research with Your Honour's own staff will indicate that these documents were given to the Table at precisely that time, and they were circulated to Members of Parliament prior to that time, as the Hon. Member for York-Peel has indicated.

Mr. Stevens: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. May I attempt to help clarify what the Parliamentary Secretary has just indicated? He has referred to the revised budget tables. Yesterday I inquired from the Table as to whether such a revised budget table, a mimeographed publication, had been received on budget night. I was assured, on checking with the staff, that no such document had been received. This morning, I once again checked the Votes and Proceedings of April 19 to see whether there was in fact evidence that the revised budget tables had been filed. If Your Honour checks page 5,807, you will find that all of the other budget documents were tabled and recorded, but that the revised budget tables to which I referred were, in fact, not tabled.

If what the Parliamentary Secretary is saying is true, that by unanimous consent he filed such a revised table today, I would suggest to Your Honour that he has made my case for me, because that essentially means that the Minister of Finance did mislead the House on budget night. He did table the wrong documents to conform to what he was representing to the House to be his final version as far as the budget and supporting documents were concerned.

If that is true, I can only presume that Your Honour will find that I have a prima facie case of privilege and that this matter should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections because, in truth, his own Parliamentary Secretary admitted what I suggest happened on budget night.

• (1530)

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member has had a chance to speak on the question of privilege. Unless he rises on another point of procedure I cannot listen to him. I do not accept two interventions in the course of a question of privilege.

Mr. Fisher: Madam Speaker, I believe—

Madam Speaker: I am not giving the Hon. Member the floor, unless he is rising on some other procedure.

Mr. Fisher: It is the same point of order, Madam Speaker. I appreciated the opportunity to speak the first time.

Madam Speaker: At this point in the debate I just want to tell the House that I am aware of some of the facts which have been brought forward by the Parliamentary Secretary, namely, that some documents were refused by the Table at one point, I will not venture to say exactly when, because it was not felt that they had been formally tabled. What happened subsequently I will have to check because I think the sequence of events is very important in this particular case. I will investigate all of the facts and the arguments put forward by the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) and will come back to the House on this matter later.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, this being Thursday, could I inquire of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council as to the projected order of business for next week? While I am doing that, I would point out to the Parliamentary Secretary that on April 18 of this week, on Monday, the Prime Minister made the following statement, as reported on page 24576 of Hansard:

—I will make an offer now which I hope that the Acting Leader of the Opposition will accept on behalf of his Party. If we can have all-Party agreement—I would not even say "all-Party agreement"—I would say that if we can have agreement of the Conservative Party to introduce an amendment on property rights and to pass it in 24 hours, I will undertake to do that—

Yesterday during statements made under the provisions of Standing Order 21, the Leader of the Opposition indicated the agreement of our Party after consultation with caucus. I see the Government House Leader has now returned to the House. I am sure he has caught the gist of my request. May I ask him, will the Government now give consideration to introducing the agreed upon amendment to the Constitution with respect to property rights immediately since the Government House Leader does have the agreement of our Party and the agreement of the New Democratic Party is not needed under the terms of the Prime Minister's remarks? Could he tell us when we might proceed with that resolution?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as far as the business of the House for next week is concerned, I can inform the House that Monday will be the third day of debate on the budget of the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). I would like to confirm that next Tuesday will be an Opposition day. In accordance with the Standing Orders, next Wednesday we shall be considering Private Members' Business, and Thursday will be the fourth day of the budget debate. If there is an amendment, there will be a vote at 5:45 p.m. next Thursday.

This was the business of the House for next week.

[English]

In so far as the request made by the Hon. Member is concerned relating to the resolution and the amendment to the Constitution, I wrote to the Leader of the Opposition on Monday and sent a copy of my letter to the Leader of the New Democratic Party. We have offered to introduce that resolution in the House with proper notice when we have a House order to limit debate to one day. I met with my colleagues, the House Leaders and sought consent for a House order. That must come first. I am waiting for an answer from the Acting House Leader of the New Democratic Party who must consult his caucus. The question of the Hon. Member is whether, if the New Demcoratic Party refuses to give the House order, I will nevertheless give notice. I will take the Hon. Member's suggestion under advisement.

Mr. Lewis: Once again, Madam Speaker, with respect to the Prime Ministers' comments, I would point out to the Government House Leader—perhaps he was just entering the Chamber when I made this comment—that the Prime Minister on Monday did not insist upon all-Party agreement. In fact, he said:

—I would not even say "all-Party agreement"—

It is very clear the Prime Minister wants to go ahead with this resolution, as does our Party. I submit to the Government House Leader that we do not need all-Party agreement. Perhaps for the House order we do.

Mr. Deans: I think you might.

Mr. Lewis: But I want to reiterate once again our Party's agreement to proceed with this item expeditiously. I would ask the Government House Leader to take it up with the Prime Minister so that we can proceed as soon as possible.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, we want to deal with this matter expeditiously. But the Prime Minister was very clear. He said he needed a House order. I would like my Hon. colleague to explain to me how he can get that House order without the support of the New Democratic Party. I see my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, is seeking the floor. Maybe he wants to give that consent or express other views on the subject. But certainly a House order requires unanimous consent. What I said subsequently, in answer to the question whether, if the request fails and we do not get the House order, I will place a notice of the resolution on the Order Paper? That I would consider doing that. I am not sure this will guarantee getting the required House order before we deal with the matter.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, once again I would point out that the words of the Prime Minister are:

—I would say that if we can have agreement of the Conservative Party to introduce an amendment on property rights and to pass it in 24 hours, I will undertake to do that—

I submit, Madam Speaker, in reply to my hon. friend that it is not a House order that is required, it is the agreement of the Conservative Party, which was given yesterday in good faith after discussing the matter in caucus. We wish to proceed as a Party with that amendment to the Constitution as soon as possible. I do not think we need to wait around for a House order. The Prime Minister has made it very clear, he even rejected the words "all-Party agreement." That was rejected by the Prime Minister. He said:

—I would say that if we can have agreement of the Conservative Party—

I would reiterate to the Government House Leader that he has the agreement of the Conservative Party. We wish the matter to proceed. It is something in our opinion that should have been in the Constitution from the start. We want to see property rights included in the Constitution as soon as possible. I would hope that the Government Party, having reconsidered its position, wants that, too. When can we proceed?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member read the important part of the Prime Minister's statement rather fast. The Hon. Member read "—if we can have agreement of the Conservative Party—". Then he read very fast, but I listened very carefully the following: "—if we can have agreement of the Conservative Party to introduce this resolution and pass it in 24 hours—" right or wrong?

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Mr. Pinard: Then I would do it. Fine. There are two things to be done. The first one is to introduce the amendment and, second, to pass it within 24 hours. My question is: how do we pass the amendment within 24 hours with the consent of only the Conservative Party?

Some Hon. Members: That is your problem.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain might help us.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, the one way that might be achieved is, of course, through the process of negotiation, which we always enter into. It is interesting how the Conservatives want to cut everyone else out of everything. I just want to say that this matter raised by the Conservative House Leader was not on the House Leaders' agenda up until Wednesday last. The first time it was brought to my attention by the Government House Leader was on Wednesday last between the hours of 1.30 p.m. and 1.50 p.m. On Wednesday last our caucus had already completed its meeting by 1.30 p.m. of that day. It was therefore not possible for us to deliberate on, consult about or have any discussion of the question which the Government House Leader and the Official Opposition House Leader are now debating. I have assured both of them privately, and I now assure both of them publicly, that this matter will be given careful consideration by this caucus at an early date, and we will report, as I said we would, on the decision this caucus will take with regard to a matter that we consider to be of crucial importance.

We have made it clear for years that we think people in Canada should have the right to own their own homes. I wish we had received support from the Tories for lower interest rates in order that the people of Canada could have exercised that right. However, the commitments I made privately, over which we do not normally have to engage in discussion, I make publicly now. Sometime between now and the next time we meet as House Leaders, assuming that it does not occur before the caucus meeting of the New Democratic Party which will take place on next Wednesday, I will be able to enter into further discussions. Then at that time the resolution of this matter will undoubtedly be clear.

• (1540)

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, in direct reply to the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, I would say that we did not have that difficulty in our caucus because our Members follow the proceedings of the House and are ready for it on Wednesday. In direct reply to the Government House Leader concerning his request as to how we might pass it, I would be pleased to meet with him and give him some suggestions at any time.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member could give me suggestions as well on other legislation. We would be willing to consider passing other legislation very quickly too. I would welcome his advice, and especially his consent.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PRESENTATION OF FIFTH REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, I have the honour of tabling the Fifth Report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Official Languages, to which a comprehensive response is requested, pursuant to Standing Order 69(13).

SOCIAL SECURITY

TABLING OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENTS OF CANADA AND JAMAICA

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 46(2), I am very pleased to table in the House in both official languages an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Jamaica with respect to social security.

PETITIONS

MR. McKNIGHT—CROWSNEST PASS FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition signed by 110,000 men and women in the Province of Saskatchewan where 40 per cent of the arable land of Canada is located. These petitioners reject the federal Government's transportation proposal because it fails to guarantee the following key elements: statutory non-variable freight rate protection on all prairie grains and their processed products with adequate recognition of producers' ability to pay, payment of Government transportation subsidies directly to the railways on all grain volumes shipped, assurance of adequate railway performance guarantees, and assurance that the ability of the Canadian Wheat Board to perform its function as a central marketing agency is protected.

This is in recognition of the regional needs of western Canada and the vital importance that the grain sector plays in the Canadian economy. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact legislation that would address the key elements identified by the petitioners.

MR. TAYLOR—CONSIDERATION OF BILL C-671

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I am herewith presenting a petition signed by another 563 Canadian citizens, asking for the consideration of Bill C-671 and the passing of same in order that Clifford Robert Olson may secure his just due and be executed.

When we had capital punishment in the country there was provision made for exceptions by the Cabinet not to execute a person. Now that we do not have capital punishment in Canada, there should also be a provision made for the execution of persons who have deliberately planned and murdered a number of people, as in the case of Clifford Robert Olson.

This petition will bring the number of persons who have asked that Bill C-671 be brought forward for debate and that Clifford Robert Olson be executed to over 2,400 persons.

MR. MURPHY—CROWSNEST PASS FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I wish you good luck in finding God and convincing him or her to return to the Conservative Party. My petition also relates to a religious matter, that is, the destruction of the holy Crow. Farmers in the Cartwright, Manitoba area, in the riding of Lisgar, have studied the proposal of the New Democratic Party to preserve the Crow rate and to upgrade and approve rail services in all parts of Canada. I wish to present a petition which is signed and supported by the people of the Cartwright area.

Senate Reform

PUBLIC SERVICE

MEASURE RESPECTING STANDARDIZATION OF THE METHOD OF APPOINTMENT OF SENIOR OFFICERS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-681, an Act respecting the appointment of deputy, associate deputy and assistant deputy ministers.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Schellenberger: Madam Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to standardize the method of appointment and tenure of senior officers of the Public Service and to tie their appointments to the duration of a Parliament. The Public Service would thereby be more accountable to the Government of the day and to the electorate.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ASSISTANCE TO VICTIMS OF CRIME

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-682, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (victims of crime).

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, this is a Bill based upon the premise that victims are far too often the forgotten people in our criminal justice system. It has two parts. The first part would authorize criminal courts to award damages to victims who suffer physical or mental injuries as a result of crimes. The second part would require the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kaplan) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) to undertake a study with their provincial counterparts within a stated period of time to bring in a whole set of rules which would improve the rights of victims in our criminal justice system.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

SENATE REFORM

COMPOSITION OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, there have been discussions among Parties, and I have a motion which I believe will receive the unanimous consent of the House to be put without debate. Therefore I move:

That the Members to act on the part of this House on the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform be Mr. Andre, Miss Campbell (South West Nova), Messrs. Comtois, Dubois, Epp, Harquail, Hopkins, Jarvis, MacLaren and Murphy; and that a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,279 and 4,467.

[Text]

POLITICAL FUND RAISING

Question No. 2,279—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Are there Cabinet Ministers who have agreed to or will be agreeing to meet with persons willing to pay a certain amount of money and, if so (a) what are the names of the Cabinet Ministers (b) are such Ministers or others acting on their behalf actively promoting the meetings (c) is the amount of money $150 and, if not, what is it?

2. Is it government policy to permit only those who can afford a certain amount of money to meet with Cabinet Ministers, and, if so, how do those who cannot afford that sum make appointments with Cabinet Ministers?

3. (a) What is the purpose of these activities (b) are the Ministers involved turning over the funds to the Liberal Party of Canada and, if so, are the persons who paid the sum able to deduct that amount from their income tax?

4. Are cocktails, food or other favours extended by the Ministers, at such meetings, to those involved and, if so, does any of the money used to buy such favours come out of taxpayers' funds?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. No. 2 to 4. Not applicable.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Question No. 4,467—Mr. Neil:

1. Since the inception of the Export Development Corporation, what is the total value of the financing agreements entered into on behalf of Bombardier Inc. of Montreal?

2. What rates of interest does the EDC charge for such financing?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Export Development Corporation states that:

1. The total value of the financing agreements entered into by EDC or its predecessor, Export Credits Insurance Corporation, and foreign borrowers where Bombardier Inc. was the exporter of record, is Cdn. $153.925 million and U.S. $995.843 million as of January 31, 1983.

2. As a matter of general policy the Corporation does not disclose details of transactions such as that which is of the subject of the present request. As to the rate of interest, in view of the intense competition that prevails among countries in foreign trade, it is not in the public interest for the Export Development Corporation to discuss its participation in export transactions or proposed export transactions. Such information would assist an exporter's competitors both foreign and domestic. Since information on bids, participation or negotiations, is given by companies to EDC in confidence, the Corporation, to respect that confidence, refrains until the sale arrangements are final, from discussing a deal or even from indicating that it has been approached in a transaction. EDC makes public its participation in direct lending transactions when the financing agreement therefor is signed and, on request, in credits and foreign investment insurance cases where the exporter or investor consents to publication. If the exporter or investor has not given its consent the reply will so state. When EDC makes public its participation in direct lending transactions it does not because of the intense competition above-mentioned, publish the rate of interest, for the reasons mentioned above.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government, and the amendment of Miss Carney (p. 24689) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Riis (p. 24691).

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to continue the speech I was making before the luncheon break. At that time I said that in fact this was not a recovery budget; it is really a stockbroker's budget. It is a Conservative budget, a standpat budget, a budget which is awaiting the recovery of the American economy and puts all its eggs in that basket. It is a budget which lets down the Canadian people at a time of massive unemployment and massive insecurity. One wonders where the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has been. One wonders where Members of the Liberal Party have been in the last six months. Probably just here in Ottawa. If they had travelled around the country they would have seen that people are suffering, especially young people who are having trouble obtaining jobs. It is not only our young people. Many people are being laid off, taken back for a short period and laid off again. Premier Davis of Ontario said this morning that he thought it was a good budget. This is why I call it a Conservative budget. Stockbrokers and bankers like it but everyone else dislikes it, such as seniors, working people, consumers, people who are struggling to get by, the working poor, the unemployed and so on.

I said this morning that this budget reminded me of the story of Little Red Riding Hood. If she were crying for help from the Big Bad Wolf, the Liberal Government would give her a tax credit based over four years or, worse still, give a grant to the wolf to make him more efficient. It does nothing immediately to stop the wolf at the door and help Little Red Riding Hood, or indeed the Canadian people.

I said this morning that the Government had completely ignored the exhortation of the Catholic Bishops of Canada who said that unemployment was the number one problem and that it should be tackled. The Government in the budget papers says that unemployment will continue at 12.4 per cent and in 1984 at 11.4 per cent. We will have continued, permanent unemployment. I said this morning that we are in real danger of accepting permanent unemployment as a fact.

I said this morning that there are some myths. One is that this is a recovery budget. It is not, and I will show that later in my speech. I said there was a myth that there was very little that the Minister of Finance could do, that he had very little room to manoeuvre.

I say he had a lot of room to manoeuvre. He did not have any trouble finding an extra $200 million at the last moment. If he could find that at the last moment, he could have found a heck of a lot more money for immediate job creation programs. The municipalities in this country are screaming for job creation grants in order to construct bridges, sewers, traffic lights, community arenas and so on. There are things to be done in this country and we have to put our people to work. This budget does not do that.

I want to deal with job creation in a little more detail. What the Government does in its budget is to expand short term programs like the NEED program. The NEED program is not working. I have talked to municipal councils and their staffs in the Niagara Peninsula, Welland, Thorold and areas like that. They told me that it was bureaucratic, short term and only applies to UIC exhaustees, the jobs are low-paying and some are absurd. In Windsor there was a program whereby people are hired to count dogs. In St. Catharines there was a program to clear brush. I am not saying these programs are all bad, but they are no substitute for long term solid job programs that people want. There is nothing in the NEED program. The $4.8 billion for job creation is over four years. In fact, in the next year the Government will give in total job creation what it spends in one month for Unemployment Insurance.

There is another myth in this budget, the myth that private business is the engine of economic growth. I have nothing against private business and I wish it were so, but if you really look at the matter, you see it is not so. We have much more fundamental problems. We are in the midst of a work crisis. That is much more severe. This budget gives money to business. It gives a $1.7 billion tax break to business over the next four years. It takes $3.5 billion out of the consumers' pockets over the next four years. I found in my tours of the country that many businesses are foreign owned. Give them money, and it goes outside of the country. We have to tackle that problem.

There is something I cannot understand about the Liberal Party and the Minister of Finance. The Minister and the Deputy Minister, Mickey Cohen, are the same people who gave us the National Energy Program. In one instance they moved toward tackling the problem of foreign control. A year later they bring in a budget that does nothing about tackling the problem of foreign control. Indeed, it gives money to foreign controlled businesses.

This is a zig-zagging Liberal Party. If you look down beneath their message, the Bishops are telling us that Liberalism is finished in this country, that you cannot zigzag like that, you have to choose one way or the other. Are you going to choose the Conservative way of giving money to business, hoping that it will be the engine of economic recovery, or will you choose the New Democratic way which says there has to be a combination of business and Government with a long-term plan to figure out what are the best industries to help and how we as a family can plan to get control of our economy again? That would enable us to have made-in-Canada interest rates and control over our industry in Canada.

This budget gives money to business. It should be giving money to consumers. It does nothing for the people in my riding. It takes money out of their pockets.

I said there would be an increase in tax over the next four years. This budget is so cheap it even takes away the $100 deduction for charity and medical expense. It is only a little matter, but people notice it. The budget increases rather than decreases the sales tax, which is what it should have done.

We should not be looking at giving money to businesses, because they are running at about 70 per cent of their capacity. There is no demand out there. You have to create consumer demand. You have to reduce the tax on consumers. Instead of increasing the federal sales tax, you should be reducing it. You have to work with the Provinces to get them to reduce their sales tax. That would create a huge job stimulus which would give the economy a jolt. This is a Conservative, wait and see, stock broker budget.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this is a very conservative budget. It is going to help the private sector, not the average Canadian. The budget is taking money out of the pockets of taxpayers and is doing nothing for the unemployed. The budget even refers to an unemployment rate of 12.4 per cent. This is incredible. And at the same time the Minister says it is an economic recovery budget. What recovery? I did not see any recovery. Has anyone seen any signs of recovery? Not I. The New Democratic Party says we need many more short-term jobs, but not what the Liberals' programs are producing, as in Windsor, where people are hired to count dogs or clean up the bushes. There are bridges in need of repair, municipal projects to be carried out, and so on.

The Liberal Government has promised $4.8 billion, spread over a period of four years. That is all. In one month, the Government is going to spend more on unemployment insurance benefits than it will spend on job creation in a year.

The bishops said that unemployment was immoral and that it was the greatest problem in Canada. This budget is doing nothing to solve it.

[English]

This budget will not help ordinary people. The final question remains: what can be done? I would follow the Bishops. I would say that unemployment is the number one problem in Canada and that we have to stimulate now. I have outlined some of the ways of doing this. We have to work with the Provinces in reducing taxes. I would say, as was said by the President of the Canadian Labour Congress in expressing his dislike for this budget: put money in people's pockets, consult with labour and working people, not just with big business. That is what we have to do.

It is about time we gave the ordinary person in Canada a break. As the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said yesterday, we have to plan as a family for the future. Like all other successful industrialized countries, we have to look at what they did in Sweden, Japan and Austria. Finally, we must free the Canadian economy from the American economy. We must have our own interest rates. We must have our own industrial strategies. We must have a vision for this country. Where is the vision in this budget? There is no vision there. Where is the plan in this budget? There is no plan there. All they offer us is hope.

• (1600)

As our former finance critic once said, the budget is like Tinker Bell. Just put your hands over your eyes and hope and wish that you will fly. This budget is a wish for recovery. In spite of all the words that the Minister of Finance uses, the budget is just more short-term job-creation programs that are not of much use. The people of the country understand that there is no vision in the long term.

In spite of what the Members from the Liberal side may say, more unemployment is right in the budget papers, not significant growth. Mr. Speaker, that is why we in the New Democratic Party have introduced an amendment.

I will conclude by saying that we should stimulate consumer demand. Do not look to big businesses but look to the consumer. Look to the little guy, he will pull this country out. Second, we should undertake job-creation programs immediately to reduce unemployment significantly. Let us not talk about 11.5 per cent unemployment. Let us get it down to 10 per cent, then to 8 per cent, and then to 6 per cent. That is what we should be shooting for.

Finally, we should have an industrial strategy, a family plan for Canada, where we can integrate private and public sector investment and finally take over control of our own country. This has been suggested to the Liberal Party by many of its own Members who have not been listened to in the past. That is the prescription for a recovery budget.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), I am provided with an excellent example of the kind of criticism which I find particularly pernicious and sterile; in other words, a view of the mind instead of a view of reality.

For good reasons, most newspapers in the country have labelled this budget a "business" budget. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway concludes that that is a kind of sin, that there is something deeply wrong with that. He tries to conclude that there is a deep, intrinsic opposition between a business budget and a budget for the people. I do not quite know where the Member's conclusion comes from. I do not know what kind of extraordinary thesis he is propounding. He opposes the private sector and concludes that only a mix of Government and private sector—for some reason it must be the small private sector because they are better—would save the country. He does not elaborate at all on what that mix would be. That is his thesis.

If I may say, I am a social Minister. I have been the Minister of social affairs in this country for more than five years. I have been in politics for more than ten years for that very reason. Like many others, I have often tried to fight against Ministers of Finance because that is the name of the game. At times I have tried to obtain from the Minister more money for benefits in the field of which I am the special voice in Cabinet. Although this budget is labelled a "business" budget, I am very pleased with it.

Let me explain. It is a business budget, but it is for the people. That is what interests me. I do not see any sancrosanct rule that says anything that comes from the private sector is automatically covered with sin. In a country like Canada, that concept totally escapes me. I respect the private sector each time they create a good job in my riding.

When this Member concludes emphatically that there is nothing in the budget for the people of his riding, I disagree. I happen to know Vancouver-Kingsway. I have been in that riding to visit and to campaign. I know people who live in Vancouver. What he said is not fact.

Some young people in his riding will find jobs because of this budget. Some mothers will get better deductions for child care expenses because of this budget. All the low-income workers in his corner of the country will get a much better tax break under expenses against their jobs, and many others will find jobs because of the budget. I do not understand why he says municipalities do not benefit from this budget.

In my own municipality in a corner of Montreal, we have just announced an excellent project through the NEED program that includes physical fitness equipment. This is in the northern part of Ville d'Anjou. This equipment will be there forever because of the NEED program.

I could name project after project that will provide municipalities in the country with things they did not have before the NEED program, and this budget expands the NEED program. I do not understand why the NDP has no respect for a good business budget that does not harm the small people, that does not bring inflation up, that does not bring interest rates up. To me, that business budget has a social dimension. It is the best of both worlds. I am very pleased with it.

I do not like to be the Minister of welfare. I do not like to have to pay more welfare to the people through the Provinces day after day, month after month. I would like to see every person in Canada working. If the private sector is a good provider of jobs, I am in favour of the private sector. What is wrong with that? Where is the sin in that? Can you tell me? What is wrong in labelling that budget a "business" budget when it is for the people? A people's budget is my budget. I want it and I like it.

I do not see what is conservative about the budget. Why oppose conservatism in a budget that uses the private sector, the key part of society, to create jobs and to make the motor of the economy turn and run?

As the biggest spender in the Government, let me put to my colleagues in this House why I not only accept but fully support a budget like this. I am the one who spends the most because of my statutory program and other programs of transfers of income to people and provincial Governments. It is immoral that these programs have to increase because of tough times in the economy. Mind you, it is good that these programs exist to help people in these difficult times. But I know very well that a highly productive economy is not necessarily the enemy of the population. On the contrary, it is with high productivity that I am assured of more funding for better social programs.

[Translation]

In other words, I feel we must have a highly productive economy if Governments are to improve the social programs they use to deal with problems that must, in fact, be dealt with by Governments, because the private sector does not operate according to the same rules. It is also my earnest wish that this highly desirable goal of increased productivity should be achieved in a manner that is both civilized and humane. We must keep our social perspective and always maintain, as the bishops requested in their letter, a scale of human values, with emphasis on the individual and not on corporate and technological considerations.

I think this is very important.

[English]

Another dimension of the budget has not been discussed very much because it is not spelled out in words in the budget. That is because at a time when social programs are under attack in other western countries, as is well known to the media, this Government has been able to maintain and even strengthen the social contract with Canadians. That is also part of the budget. There is an explicit budget which we can all read, and there is an implicit budget which we must decode. That is part of the budget just the same.

Canada, like all western democracies, is in a period of financial restraint. This budget will help us move toward recovery. However, we have kept our social commitment to Canadians. The American Government is seeking drastic reduction in social security spending. The Dutch Government has proposed a 12-month freeze on social service benefits, the closure of some hospitals and an increase in social security premiums. In France, which has a socialist Government, hospital patients will be required to pay daily for food and other non-medical services. The West German Government will require pensioners to pay health insurance contributions. Surely all these restraint measures will hurt those who can afford them least.

• (1610)

In Canada we have taken decades to build our social programs. Now we find ourselves in the most serious period of restraint since the thirties. We feel the pressure to ease the burden of these expensive Government services but we are determined to make this leaner time as equitable as possible. It is not just good enough to maintain the social policies that we have developed. It is not because times are tough that we cannot, here and there, keep budgetary restraint in mind and make sure our tax dollars are well spent. It is like a test. The social programs are being challenged to prove that they are useful, well run and necessary to the well-being of the country. In other words, we must use this time to make sure that we are serving Canadians well. That is the way I envisage the crisis that hit all of us and in particular, the most fragile sector of social security.

Recently there has been increasing discussion in this country on the issue of universality of our social programs. We have heard from many individuals and organizations on these important issues. Canadians have told us that they have a strong preference for the maintenance of universality as a basic element of social programs. Canadians do recognize, however, that a greater proportion of available funds must be aimed at helping families that need help most.

One of the areas that has brought forth a great deal of discussion is the child care expense deduction. The growing consensus—I have to use the word "growing" because it is not yet done throughout the country—is that the current child care expense deduction is totally inadequate. Daycare costs have risen tremendously since 1976 when the limit of $1,000 per child or $4,000 per family was set. Consequently, the past budget practice was unfair and especially onerous for single-parent families, mostly headed by mothers who must combine work and child rearing, a difficult task at best. It is much harder when you realize that women usually make only 58 per cent of men's salaries. The inadequacy of the child care expense deduction places a burden not only on the single-parent families but on families where both parents work. The Government has responded through the budget, and I am pleased about that.

[Translation]

The budget proposes changes in the child benefit system that will maintain the principle of universality in programs aimed at low- and middle-income families. In recognition of the real costs being incurred by families, we have increased the Child Care Expense Deduction from $1,000 to $2,000 per child and $4,000 to $8,000 per family, thus doubling the present deduction. This will certainly help those 750,000 children in families where the mother works outside the home, and I am referring to children under six years of age. This measure is an excellent one. I realize it does not cover the entire cost of child care, but it has never been the policy of this Government to subsidize the total cost of child care. Our objective is to support the family in its role of bringing up children in a society where all family partners are working. Of course, we take this opportunity to do away with the indirect sexual discrimination which did exist, since that assistance was provided only for mothers, and in response to the tribunal of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, the other family partner will henceforth be able to claim the deduction, according to the circumstances, and the spouse with the higher income of the two partners will be able to claim the deduction.

We have also taken a very significant step which will affect a great many people—precisely two thirds of all Canadian mothers. It has to do with the child tax credit, which has been increased by $50 this year to help families live through difficult times. Of course, that extra allowance was to be removed in the coming years. However, it will be maintained and, in addition, when mothers claim their child tax credit next spring they will still be entitled to a non-taxable amount of $343 for each child. Those extra $50 will cost us $85 million this year and $90 million next year. Obviously, although all that money is lost to the Government because it goes directly into the pockets of mothers, in this instance, they will not hang on to it very long and they will inject it right back into the economy through household expenses or purchases for the children. So that amounts to an investment in low income families and young couples who are still not earning very much in life. I fully endorse that measure and, as Minister of Social Affairs, I am delighted.

We have also advocated two other changes which in the future will enable us to channel our social expenditures where they are needed. If I may, I should like to comment briefly on them. The $26,330 ceiling with respect to the child tax credit will remain unchanged. That is a sizeable increase, and my colleagues will recall that when Parliament voted for that program in 1978 the limit was only $18,000. It has now been raised to $26,330 and our intention is that it should stay there. We will save some money, of course, for instance by maintaining the full indexation of the amount itself without raising the ceiling. It should be noted that this will not be done at the expense of people who need the money because, for a family with two children, the child tax credit in 1983 will still be paid in part to people whose income does not exceed $40,000. I, for one, am therefore fully satisfied that most low and middle income Canadians will be protected. And what is to be done with all that money? This can be found in what is called the Fiscal Plan.

Money will be saved there, and I am glad because this measure is regressive in nature, it is not fair to those low income people who are paying no income tax. The exemption for dependent children, which I think amounts to $710 now, will remain the same, something I can live with for the following reason. All families, mothers and children whose parents are earning less than $11,000—you cannot go far with that nowadays—have never seen any of that money because they are not even earning enough to pay income tax, unlike all those who have more than an adequate income, such as all Hon. Members in the House of Commons.

[English]

All Members and Ministers fall into that category. Most people on the Hill, most people in Ottawa who earn good salaries, have never realized that they get quite good value out of that special exemption for each child—not the Child Tax Credit but the exemption of $710 which they deduct from their income on which they have to pay tax. That is worth a cash contribution of $400. I am very pleased that the ceiling of that has been frozen and that it will not increase.

I am very pleased that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has stated that these two future savings go into the social policy fund, a special fund that is mentioned on page 16 of the Fiscal Plan which in four years will become $585 million. It starts at the end of this year with $20 million and is piling up in a special bank account to become $585 million in four years. That will go to our most urgent needs for future funding in the social policy envelope.

I am extremely pleased about these measures, Mr. Speaker, and I could go on and on but I do not think I have time. But "social" also means all the low income housing which has been announced. It means—and this I want to stress as the Minister of Health directly responsible for the health status of the Indians in our country—that the good money put aside for Indian housing may not look as if it were directly connected, but if people knew how much decent housing is a factor in good health they would understand. We have had it so good for so long in the southern part of the country that we forget what it is like on Indian Reserves and in isolated parts of the country. Good housing, decent housing, means good health. Therefore, I am very pleased that an additional $14 million is put aside in the budget for on-Reserve housing, which will really be of tremendous help to improve the health standards and the socio-economic conditions of Indian communities. I believe all my colleagues agree with that.

• (1620)

I believe I should add one more element which is a social concern as well as a business one. That is the fact that le petit monde, the small people—and that may not be the exact expression in English—the workers, people with small incomes, will see great savings because of the fact they can now claim much higher expenses for their tools or other expenses related to their employment. That provision is excellent. There are a great many things I would like to say about the fact that our country has not embarked on Reaganomics. The budget, after a long suspense of several months, is the very proof, if I dare say, by what is not in it as well as by the measures I have just outlined, that Canada is not in the Reaganomics business or on a Reaganomics trip. I say that meaning no insult to our friends south of the border but simply to say that we have managed, and I am so very pleased about it, to save all the social programs and have maintained them.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister. For a number of years now voluntary organizations have been banded together in one Canada-wide organization representing over 150 voluntary organizations many of which are involved in health and welfare fields, including the Cancer Society, the Canadian Mental Health Association, the YMCA and the YWCA, to mention a few. All of these organizations do important work. They also employ about 175,000 people. Since 1977 they have been urging the Government to eliminate the $100 automatic deduction which people are permitted to claim on their income tax returns for charitable and medical expenses, whether they made the contribution or not. These organizations wanted the Government to get rid of that $100 automatic deduction and give a tax credit of 50 per cent to people who actually make contributions to charitable organizations involved in various fields. They felt very strongly that that kind of system would enable them to raise a great deal more money to fund their projects which, if they were not funded by these organizations, would have to be funded by the Government. What the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) did the other night was to remove the $100 automatic deduction which gives the Government about $80 million more in taxes, but he did not do what the voluntary organizations had been urging him to do and which in 1978 he said was a good idea. Could the Minister tell the House why the Government did not do what the voluntary organizations urged it to do which to a good many people seems to be a very sensible step to take?

Miss Bégin: I could give an explanation even though I am not the Minister of Finance. I am very aware, of course, of the problem raised by the Hon. Member. I was very pleased to announce three weeks ago an additional $3.2 million in sustaining grants to voluntary organizations in the health and welfare fields. The answer is that in this budget we have taken the first step toward what they have asked. We believe it will help the associations to raise more real revenue. That was the thesis which was put to us. I was the Minister who attended several of the symposiums of the Coalition of Voluntary Associations. It is true that they wanted the deduction replaced by a tax credit. I do not have the figures from the Department of Finance. We could obtain them easily. I just do not have them with me this afternoon. The tax credit of 50 per cent is, of course, far more expensive to the Treasury than the actual measure which existed in the budget. We will do it, I suppose, at a future time, but that could not be entertained right now for obvious reasons. However, the most urgent matter is to help the voluntary associations to get more funds from the public. They do not receive real funds when people hide behind the automatic $100 deduction without receipt. Now people will have a receipt.

There is one more thing which we need to correct in the future, and that is, to switch from the concept of an exemption to the concept of a tax credit. I acknowledge that. But to raise such a credit to 50 per cent of the donation is extremely expensive. We have not reached that level yet in the country from public funds. It is impossible this year, for obvious reasons, to consider that. We have taken the first step, however, and we have put the only resources available on job creation.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister knows that the voluntary organizations do provide services and do things for the Canadian people which, if they did not, would have to be done by Governments and would cost a great deal more money than they do at the present time. In the Winnipeg Free Press on Tuesday there was a front page story quoting Captain John Moore, the Director of the Salvation Army's Suicide and Crisis Intervention Bureau as saying that because of the fact that we have 1,658,000 unemployed and because Government programs are not making provision for more jobs, there are going to be more suicides. The Salvation Army's Suicide and Crisis Intervention Bureau is just one of many organization which operates to a large extent from the voluntary contributions of Canadian citizens. If they were not there, the federal and provincial Governments would have to provide the services. Surely the Minister knows, and anyone who has been involved in trying to raise money for voluntary organizations knows, that one of the best ways of getting people to contribute is to be able to assure them that they are going to get a refund, they are going to get a credit toward the payment of their income tax. Surely the request of the voluntary organizations made repeatedly since 1977 makes so much sense that even this Government should have paid attention. When they accepted the least important suggestion of the two made by the voluntary organizations, surely they could have gone the whole hog and adopted both suggestions.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I would say no, we could not go the complete way. The Hon. Member has also made a mistake in the way he put his case across, and I would like to refer him to the Fiscal Plan, page 27, for the detailed figures. The truth is that in the past, dozens of millions of dollars were lost to the voluntary organizations by Canadian taxpayers who never donated a penny and got away with $100 deductions. Well, that is wrong. That is dozens of millions of dollars that did not go to voluntary organizations. We have not abolished the tax deduction; you are making a mistake on that. There is a tax deduction but with receipts. So that is an excellent step in the right direction. The next step, which is to give a bigger refund via a tax credit, will be for the future when the country is able to afford it.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister with regard to the reassessment of the social welfare program in New Brunswick where the new provincial Minister is hiring some 35 new inspectors to make sure that there is no cheating in the system. I do not think anyone can argue that there should not be cheating, but I point out that that devious Government was very careful not to talk about that during the recent election campaign. Has the Minister satisfied herself that that inquiry, or inquisition, is being carried out fairly and properly with regard to welfare recipients in New Brunswick?

Miss Bégin: To my knowledge no complaints have been received in my office. Of course, each time we see provincial initiatives like that which may threaten the rights of social service clients, or welfare payments, we make sure the basic rules of the game are respected. Knowing that tough times would make Governments take tough measures, I sent, particularly through the Family Allowance cheques, last August or September a little pamphlet explaining to people who need welfare and are refused welfare the appeal mechanism in each of the Provinces and the way they can make sure their rights are respected.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the answer of the Minister but I point out to her that the election campaign in New Brunswick did not start before August or September. While the Leader of the Liberal Party publicly stated that he would take a careful look at the welfare system to make sure there were no cheaters, the present Government heaped scorn on him for suggesting such a thing, but after the election it immediately implemented the program he had suggested. Therefore, I would ask if the Minister would make sure she monitors the situation on a continuing basis because it is not possible to trust the motives of that Government.

Miss Bégin: We always do. We always do monitor that, and we are very sensitive to tough times in order that no accident takes place anywhere.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great attention to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). I was glad to hear her finally say that she was conscious of the plight of the unemployed in this country. As she enunciated her social responsibility in defining them, she made one serious omission; she forgot to mention her responsibility with respect to the unprecedented unemployment situation we have in this country today. It was alluded to during the course of the question and answer period by virtue of the point being made that the scope and length of the unemployment problem was putting undue stress on the voluntary sector, the voluntary organizations in this country. I could go on to tell her that not only is it doing that—all you have to do is read about the soup kitchens and the problems resulting from the unemployment situation—but it is also placing a very great burden on the Provinces which administer welfare directly and on the municipalities which administer welfare in other parts of the country. I know that in my own Province of Newfoundland, where we have an official unemployment rate of 21 per cent and a real unemployment rate more like 25 per cent, one in four is unemployed, the Government has had to tighten up on the administration of welfare and, as a consequence, people have had to go without. I have seen evidence of that; they have been in to see me. Now, I would have liked the Minister, who has left the House—that is the problem with this Government; it does not listen.

Mr. Evans: That is a cheap shot.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, that is not a cheap shot. I listened to the Minister. I was in the process of replying to some of the things she said, and she got up and left the House. Now there is the cheap shot, not my drawing attention to it. I would have expected that she would have made some reference during the course of her speech to the necessity of dealing with this unemployment situation from a social point of view. It was supposed to have been addressed in the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). I would have expected the Minister responsible for social welfare in this country to have convened a meeting with her provincial counterparts to see how they can cope with the burden placed on the Canada Assistance Plan, the burden placed on the Provinces and municipalities administering welfare, and the burden placed on the voluntary sector, to see how the federal Government can assist these groups. But no, the Minister sits there complacently, saying that she is very pleased to say we have not cut back on social payments because of the recession. But she failed to admit that because of the depth of the recession, because of the size and length of the unemployment problem, undue and unexpected problems have been created. These are problems, Mr. Speaker, referred to by the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops in their unprecedented statement made immediately after the commencement of the new year. I quote from their statement:

> We have seen the social realities of abandoned one-industry towns, depleting unemployment insurance benefits, cutbacks in health and social services and line-ups at soup kitchens. And we have also witnessed first-hand the results of a troubled economy: personal tragedies, emotional strain, loss of human dignity, family breakdown and even suicide.

That is the social dimension of the problem, dramatically highlighted by the Bishops in their statement which we had hoped would be addressed this afternoon by the Minister of National Health and Welfare during the course of her speech. The Bishops went on to say, and the Minister obviously does not appreciate this fact, that there is nothing normal or natural about present unemployment rates. Indeed, massive unemployment, which deprives people of the dignity of human work, and inadequate family income, constitute a social evil. That, Mr. Speaker, is the kind of sentiment we would have liked to have seen addressed by the Minister today during the course of her speech in the House. She does have a responsibility to the people of Canada.

But let us see what the Minister of Finance has to say. He certainly identified the problem during the course of his budget address, or he pretended to address the problem. He attempted to deceive the people of Canada. I have described the budget as a terrible hoax on the unemployed, which is precisely what it is. Listen to what the Minister of Finance had to say. He said, "My dominant concern in preparing this budget has been to help the more than 1.5 million Canadians who want work but cannot find jobs." I intend to examine what the Minister proposes to do in the context of that statement.

• (1640)

Then, in the course of his budget speech he went on to say, as reported at page 24668 of Hansard:

> But the job losses we have suffered in this recession have been severe and, as employment begins to grow again, many workers who withdrew temporarily from the labour force will once again seek work. This will maintain upward pressure on the unemployment rate.

The unemployment rate is forecast to average 12.4 per cent this year, according to the Minister, and will only fall to 11.4 per cent in 1984. This means that we must reconcile ourselves to the prospect of over 1.5 million of our fellow citizens in this country unemployed and unable to find work. Of course, if we consider it in realistic terms, one is speaking more in terms of two million people this year. Given the growth in the labour force, according to these forecasts there will be something approaching two million people out of work in 1984.

Where does the Minister address the concern which he expressed in his budget? In March of this year, the official rate of unemployment stood at 12.6 per cent, representing 1.658 million Canadians out of work.

Let us consider youth unemployment, with 21.3 per cent represented, or 621,000 young people. We are speaking of young people between the ages of 15 and 24. If one takes that into account in terms of the total labour force, one finds that they account for 25 per cent of the labour force. Therefore, young people represent 40 per cent of the unemployed.

Of course, I could go on and speak of the long-term unemployed. Almost 1 million Canadians, well over 900,000 people in this country, have been unemployed for three and one half months or more. Since August of 1981, we have seen the loss of 523,000 jobs in this country. Let us go back and see how that compares to other years. Between 1973 and 1980, there was an average of 271,000 new jobs per year created in the economy in Canada. Here we are speaking of a loss of 523,000 jobs since August of 1981. In 1982 alone, 359,000 jobs were lost. We look at the unemployment rate, and what do we see? In terms of unemployment, there is no hope, in spite of the fact that the budget is supposed to hold out hope for the unemployed. This was supposed to be the answer.

Prior to the bringing down of the budget, we were told, "Wait until the Budget is brought down". We were told that the Minister of Finance would address the problem of unemployment in the budget. What did he do? Consider his own forecast. We will consider the expectations before we even consider the money which has been targeted for job creation and stimulation of the private sector. At the end of 1982, 1.317 million Canadians were unemployed. That was the highest rate since 1933, during the height of the Great Depression. What do we expect between 1982 and 1985? In 1985, 1.347 million people will be unemployed. In other words, more people will be unemployed at the end of 1985, when we are supposed to be well into recovery, than at the end of 1982, when there was the highest rate of unemployment since the Great Depression.

Where is the budget going in terms of addressing the unemployment problem? We should consider the level of employment since 1981, in other words, the jobs in the labour force. In 1981, there were 10.933 million jobs in Canada, and that dropped in 1983 to 10.511 million jobs, for a decline of 422,000 jobs. Yet the growth in the labour force will more than offset any job creation which we can expect from the initiatives taken by the Minister during the course of his budget debate.

Concerning 1983-84, let us consider what the Minister of Finance, through the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), expects to do with the over $440 million designated for direct employment. In 1983-84, we can expect 36,000 new jobs as a result of the new expenditures under the NEED Program, as well as 27,000 jobs from special youth initiatives, 5,000 jobs from the special employment initiatives, and so on it goes. However, this new money will only create jobs for 6 per cent of the total unemployed this year, or a total of 101,000 jobs.

Where is the promise that was held out by the Minister of Finance? Where is the initiative which was to have been taken? I would have liked to have seen the Minister move in terms of providing incentives to the private sector by way of refundable employment tax credits. What do we receive instead? A slight expenditures of $90 million over two years is supposed to provide wage subsidies for young people. Over 600,000 young people are unemployed, and they are soon to be joined by another 300,000 graduates from our post-secondary institutions and high schools. Therefore, we can see how insignificant the direct wage subsidies will be in terms of addressing youth unemployment. Yet we were told by the Minister of Employment and Immigration during the course of his speech that the Government has discounted out of hand refundable employment tax credits, notwithstanding the fact that this would have an immediate impact on job creation and would create permanent jobs as opposed to the short-term jobs which would be created by the NEED Program and various make-work projects which the Minister announced during the course of the budget.

I suppose one could say that if one went the route of refundable employment tax credits, then there would be no direct way for the Government to intervene in terms of porkbarreling or being able to use the patronage apparatus which supports the Government. However, the fact remains that even within the Minister's own Department, even with the short experience we have had with employment tax credits, this is a much more inexpensive, efficient, direct and immediate way to create jobs. Yet the Government fails to act and tries to justify it by dismissing out of hand this means of creating employment.

I could go on, and I note that the Minister has brought in a special program analysis of a job strategy for the eighties which he tabled in the House yesterday and which, by unanimous consent, has been referred to the Special Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. It is very interesting that that is the one Standing Committee involved with line Departments of the House. It was only struck this week, two months after the other committees were established, and then only after pressure was brought to bear on the floor of the House. We had our first meeting last Tuesday and we elected a Chairman, yet there is no meeting of that Committee today. Why? It is because the Ministers were not prepared to go to that Committee and meet with it. The Unemployment Insurance Commission, which is laying out billions and billions of dollars, was not prepared to meet with that Committee. The Committee could not meet today to deal with the incentives or the initiatives, whatever initiatives could be identified, in the Minister's budget. They will not be meeting until next Tuesday. Hopefully, we will be meeting with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) who is accountable to Parliament through that Committee. More important, I hope we will have an opportunity next Tuesday to meet and hear from the Minister of Employment and Immigration so we can examine the paper that was tabled in the House yesterday and so we can examine just exactly what the Government proposes to do in terms of job creation in real terms. I hope he will not try to play a shell game with Parliament by playing with statistics and figures. We want answers in terms of what the Government is getting for the money it is spending on direct employment. As I indicated, it can be demonstrated that the new money the Government is spending on direct employment, if I can use the metaphor, is a drop in the bucket. It is less than 6 per cent in terms of the total impact on the unemployment situation.

• (1650)

I have already indicated to you, Mr. Speaker, that what disturbs me and disturbs Canadians everywhere is the recognition implicit in the budget, indeed explicit in the budget, that unemployment will be here for a long while. We will have double-digit unemployment for at least three, four or five years. We can take that as gospel because the Minister has indicated that in his own budgetary forecasts. Yet all we get from the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who has the responsibility of advising the Minister of Finance on his budget, is ongoing—more of the same—in terms of the NEED Program which now has over $600 million in funds for a total to date of 27,000 jobs. That program has been in operation since last October and it was supposed to meet the needs of those in dire straits.

Of course, we have the student employment programs. How many jobs will we get? Will it be 50,000 or 100,000 for the 600,000 to 900,000 young people who will be on the unemployment rolls of this country next month? It is not only shameful but it is tantamount to being criminal the way this Government approaches and addresses itself to the unemployment problem.

I am hoping that we will hear from other Ministers during the course of this debate because we have heard nothing so far from which we can draw any encouragement. We have not heard anything from the Minister responsible for social policy as to her responsibility in terms of addressing the ongoing nature of the unemployment problem and the social consequences that derive from long-term unemployment. Certainly I am not alone in this House in having direct experience with it. I suppose everyone of us when we go back to our constituencies is directly confronted with the problems of the unemployment situation. If there is a problem in the economy, if the economy has a cold in terms of a recession, then in certain parts of the country it amounts to a case of pneumonia. In my own Province, if the national economy has a cold it gets chronic pneumonia. We have twice the official rate of the national unemployment in my Province of Newfoundland and no prospects, because of continuing Government deficits, to cope with that situation. We have no chance whatsoever to deal with our unemployment in terms of the social need attendant on it in terms of additional welfare benefits. I believe this is a serious problem, Mr. Speaker, and I do not believe the Government is addressing it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions?

Mr. Schroder: Mr. Speaker, I did not want to interrupt the Hon. Member when he referred to the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) because I felt I did not want to impinge upon his time. But I think it is only fair for the House to know that the Minister is a witness before the Special Committee on Pension Reform this afternoon. She was 20 minutes late going before the Committee and therefore she could not stay to listen to the Hon. Member's address. I listened to it with care, and I will talk to the Minister about some of the matters that were brought up.

I think we would all agree that pension reform is one of the basic factors in the social welfare and the social well-being of Canadians. I hope the House will not think the Minister is not interested in social reform, social programs or social activities because she was not here. As I said, she went to the Special Committee on Pension Reform as a witness.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I accept the Hon. Member's intervention. It was not my intention to take a "cheap shot" at the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). I did think and I do feel that this debate is important enough that the ordinary rules of parliamentary etiquette be followed. Certainly when a Member in his place finishes his speech, he or she should have the courtesy, if I can put it that way, of staying in his or her place to hear whatever rebuttal there is to what was contained in the speech. That is common parliamentary etiquette. I am sorry it was not followed in this case because I believe it is essential that the Minister responsible for social policy in this Government hear the concerns expressed in this House with respect to the social consequences of unemployment. I believe, and I say this more in sorrow than in anger, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is living in a sheltered world having isolated herself from that aspect of her responsibilities.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Any further questions or comments?

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be taking part in a debate that is so important in view of the current economic situation. I was very glad to see that on Tuesday, the 19th, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) brought down what is probably the most expansionist budget ever, a budget that in both the short and long term will prove to be the best answer to dealing with the unemployment situation.

Looking at this budget which comes after several months in which we have seen signs of economic recovery and a drop in inflation, we will find incentives for the private sector that will enable many Canadian businesses to continue this recovery and to provide even more productive and long-term jobs across the country. The 2.2 billion, to be injected into the economy over the next four years through special recovery programs, will certainly help to spur and accelerate economic recovery. I agree that this will not remedy all our problems in this country, but we shall certainly see a renewed confidence among all Canadians, and especially among those in the private sector.

When the Minister of Finance brought down this budget, he had to bear in mind the extremely difficult situation of many Canadians who are having to cope with unemployment. That is why the Minister decided to inject $710 million more into direct job creation programs. I know the Opposition said this is not enough and that we should have injected more funds, but I believe the Minister of Finance preferred to bring down a balanced budget that would respond to present and future needs and would therefore respond to the pressing problem of unemployment.

I was listening earlier to my colleague, the Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) who referred to the letter published by the Catholic bishops. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) is indeed anxious to consider proposals and recommendations from all levels of society. He has been able to meet with some of the bishops from the Conference and discuss with them ways of improving the employment situation and finding solutions to very pressing problems.

• (1700)

I notice that my colleague referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. We shall certainly have an opportunity, in committee, to consider in detail the entire employment situation in Canada and how we could, realistically, find jobs for the unemployed. Papers were tabled in the House yesterday, with the unanimous consent of the House, and I would like to take advantage of this opportunity to thank our two Opposition critics for agreeing to let the Minister table the document in question and refer it to committee, where we shall be able to have some frank and straightforward discussions about finding realistic solutions to the unemployment problem in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, in line with the new budget, and within our own Department of Employment and Immigration, the Minister has decided to restructure all our job creation programs and to follow up what the Minister of Finance said the other evening, namely, that the Government would try to eliminate as much as possible all the administrative red tape from these programs.

Across the country, the NEED Program has shown that it is possible to streamline administrative procedures in order to create jobs as quickly as possible, and I believe that by amalgamating various programs in our Department, we can substantially reduce the administrative workload for many programs and enable a large number of Canadian workers to get the jobs as soon as possible.

Of course, employment opportunities for the eighties had to be a major concern when amalgamating programs and restructuring the Department of Employment and Immigration. As I pointed out before, many Canadians in industries and regions across the country have been severely affected by the profound changes that have taken place in our society in the past five or six years, and especially this past year.

The manpower requirements of our industry have changed dramatically, Mr. Speaker. That is the reason why over the past year the Minister has had, and intends to continue to have, consultations with Canadians everywhere in this country, and I am sure that the committee meetings we will hold over the next few weeks will be beneficial in terms of our planned improvements under these programs.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the Minister has decided to gather into four different groups the previous 12 programs administered by the Department of Employment and Immigration with a view, as I said before, to reducing the red tape involved in the implementation of these programs, meeting job requirements, and supporting the job creation effort and the economic growth in all parts of Canada as a whole, but especially in slow growth areas.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to spend a little time explaining just how these four programs will be established and to what target group they will be directed.

The first program, and important one to be known as the ACCESS program will deal of necessity with human resources. I think it will greatly help channel the measures aimed at developing human resources by unifying them under a single program. Mr. Speaker, this program will therefore combine those formerly known as DPEP, namely the Portable Wage Subsidy Program, the New Technology Employment Program, the Summer Canada Program stages which began this year, as well as the Canada community development projects. The new ACCESS Program is therefore aimed directly at those who are disadvantaged on the labour market. Through this program, we can go to the regions with a very low rate of economic growth and few job opportunities and return to the labour market those individuals who have failed repeatedly to find a job.

Mr. Speaker, a second program is also very important, in my opinion, the Youth Job Corps Program. As I said earlier, the drastic changes we have seen on the labour market these last few years have brought home to us the fact that many Canadian workers had neither the skills nor the work habits needed to find a paying job. This new program will therefore combine part of the Local Employment Assistance Program, or LEAP, and the Youth Job Corps element of our community development projects aimed at students or young workers to provide young people that are disadvantaged on the labour market with opportunities they did not have before.

Mr. Speaker, a third program is aimed directly at employment development. As I indicated earlier, this is the NEED Program which was implemented last fall, and in this regard, I would like to correct something that my colleague for St. John's East said. This program came into effect last October 27. We have to remember that it was announced last October 27 and that the Minister of Finance then announced that projects would first be approved early in February 1983. The data then available and later collected by the Department prompted the Minister of Employment and Immigration to ask the Minister of Finance to implement this program without delay and put it into effect in early January to meet the needs of jobless workers at that time. The program therefore started early in 1983 and has resulted to date in the creation of 35,000 jobs throughout the country.

Obviously, neither this program nor our other job-creation initiatives will enable the Government to hire all the unemployed in Canada. The question that we must ask ourselves is this: Are the Federal and Provincial Governments solely responsible for hiring all the workers in the country? Mr. Speaker, I believe that the private sector must share some responsibility for hiring workers, and that is why part of the budget is aimed at this sector of the Canadian economy to restore the climate of confidence of which Canada has always been so proud, so that the private sector can do its share in hiring the unemployed.

Even to this date, Mr. Speaker, under the NEED Program, many excellent projects were developed in certain communities because people believed in them and were willing to give their time to set them up, and in many cases, by providing temporary employment, these projects have made it possible to protect long term jobs and create others.

• (1710)

That is why $280 million will be injected into this program over the next two years, which will necessarily have beneficial effects on the Canadian economy as a whole, and most important, a direct effect on unemployment. The NEED Program is the result of merging the program in existence since October with all the job-creation programs established under Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, which were also very successful throughout the country, especially in my own region, the Gaspé Peninsula, where we were able last year to hire people then on unemployment insurance and put them to work in the forest fighting the spruce budworm epidemic. All these workers were then able to work for 20 to 30 weeks during the fall, so that they were once more eligible for unemployment insurance.

Of course, an additional amount of $100 million dollars allocated to this program will benefit the people of my region and of many others across the country. Mr. Speaker, the new NEED Program will also include the community employment and Summer-Canada programs, that is the community project stream of the Summer-Canada program. Finally, the community development program which we have known for three years now, namely the new NEED Program, will enable us to help especially the highly underprivileged regions. When I look at my colleague from St. John's East, it is obvious that Newfoundland, which is in an underprivileged region of Canada, will have its share of the projects and be in a position to benefit from those programs.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the fourth stream of those job-creation programs will be the community employment expansion program. It will contribute to the long term development of employment, particularly in those regions where the unemployment rate remains high and where the economic recovery will probably be slower than in other regions. That is why such a program will obviously be very important in areas like Eastern Quebec and the Maritime Provinces.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are the four streams within which the Department of Employment and Immigration has attempted to regroup a wide variety of programs to make it easier for all Canadians, and particularly workers who want to benefit from those programs, to understand what they are all about.

There is also another subject which I would like to comment on and which is of great interest to me and to many of my colleagues on this side of the House. I am convinced that our friends opposite are concerned as well about that problem, namely youth unemployment. Last Tuesday's budget has shown that the Federal Government wants to tackle head on the thorny issue of jobs for young Canadians. Hon. Members may recall that, in early January, the Minister of Employment and Immigration attended a federal-provincial conference in Edmonton and urged his provincial colleagues to work closely with him in an attempt to find quick solutions to the problem of unemployment among young people.

The Summer Canada Program announced recently will enable us next summer to create 70,000 jobs. As a result of the budget of last Tuesday, we will certainly be in a position to create more jobs, in view of the fact that $95 million have been allocated to the Youth Wage Subsidy and Internship Program throughout the country. As a result of that measure, businesses will be able to hire young people and give them the opportunity to acquire the necessary experience to enter into the job market. I believe this is a major step and in the coming weeks, we will have the opportunity discuss further the measures the federal government intends to take with a view to helping the youth of our country.

In closing, I should like to point out that the Gaspé area and the Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine constituency that I have the honour to represent in this House will derive some advantages from the budget. When looking at the unemployment figures for the month of March, we realized that Eastern Quebec held the record as far as the unemployment rate is concerned. I am convinced that because of this budget and the various job creation programs and other programs as well, we will be in a position to solve the difficult unemployment problem and to provide jobs to the largest possible number of people.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Hon. Member. We now have almost two million people unemployed. According to the Government's figures, we will have 12.5 per cent unemployment this year and 11.5 per cent next year. It costs the Canadian taxpayers $1 billion a month to subsidize the unemployment insurance system. This means we are paying people $1 billion a month to stay home and not work.

The Hon. Member indicated that his area, the Gaspé, has the highest rate of unemployment in this country. If we can afford to pay $1 billion for people not to work, why is the Government so satisfied when the Government says all we can afford to pay out on job creation programs is less than $2 billion a year? Why can we not find at least half the amount of money we pay out in Unemployment Insurance so that Canadians can do the useful work which this country needs so badly?

[Translation]

Mr. Bujold: I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member is not suggesting that we should drop the unemployment insurance system in Canada. It must be recognized that many Canadian workers are seasonal workers and that unemployment insurance enables them to live for the rest of the year. The Hon. Member referred to my own region. Obviously, in an area like eastern Quebec and Gaspésie, where the economy is based on tourism, farming and fishing, seasonal workers are employed, and the unemployment insurance program enables them to draw a decent income on which they can live all year long. Also, within the framework of this unemployment insurance scheme, the Canadian government and the Minister of Employment and Immigration have been able this year to put forward programs like the one under Clause 38, where we have carried out everywhere in this country countless projects which were extremely valuable for the collectivities concerned. We have also established this year the work sharing program, thus helping to maintain thousands of jobs. For these reasons, the unemployment insurance program is of utmost importance and must be maintained. The moneys that have been announced in the Budget for job creation programs will contribute to lower the unemployment rate throughout the country and will provide jobs for people who are experiencing difficulties, and also, in many cases, long term jobs.

• (1720)

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, surely the Member knows that nobody in our Party would suggest reducing the extent of the unemployment insurance system. We have repeatedly called for the Government to change the system to provide for extended benefits for the tens of thousands who are coming to the end of their Unemployment Insurance benefits. I ask the Member why we can find the money to pay people to do nothing. Surely there is reforestation in the Gaspe Bay, there is improvement of sewer and water systems, there is the rebuilding of schools, there are dozens of projects that could provide employment. The local people could tell the Government this. They could tell the Member this if he cannot take the time to look and see for himself what needs to be done so that people can be put to work doing something productive rather than being paid to sit at home while they draw Unemployment Insurance benefits or welfare benefits. These benefits are so harmful to the well-being of the people. I ask the Member to consider this.

[Translation]

Mr. Bujold: Mr. Speaker, I have just pointed out that the Department of Employment and Immigration has introduced in the course of last year two programs designed for that specific purpose, that is to hire people instead of keeping them idle on unemployment insurance. Those measures have allowed us to put them to work pursuant to Section 38 of the Act and to the Shared Work Program. They have allowed us to reach people who otherwise would have remained at home and return them to a productive activity within the community and make them work. That was the reason why we wanted to revitalize our employment programs and as the Minister of Employment and Immigration has pointed out on several occasions, he is open to any such suggestion. I am sure that the Hon. Member who will be sitting on the committee will make suggestions along that line, but I want to tell him that we already have within the Department and under our legislation the services and facilities needed to hire that kind of people.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question from the Hon. Member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Bujold). He referred to the Shared Work Program and his Minister described it as being quite a success. He knows that the program had a low record in Quebec, the Province most affected by unemployment. How can he maintain that the program is a success when it has a rather uneven impact on the entire country and a very small one in Quebec?

Mr. Bujold: Mr. Speaker, let me congratulate my colleague for his tremendous progress in learning the language of Molière. Surely, within a few months he will be speaking French as fluently as most French Canadians.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, work sharing has been immensely popular throughout the land. Again, I say that the program will be as successful as expected if we can rely on the co-operation of each and every sector in this country, and I would especially urge my friend from the New Democratic Party to pressure all unions so they will also co-operate in implementing work sharing arrangements. I could give him examples in the Province of Quebec of unions that have refused to do so for a variety of reasons. But although the program had slower beginnings in Quebec, it has caught up with other Provinces. The results so far are extremely favourable, and so are the comments heard from those in Quebec who have benefited from the program.

Mr. Keeper: Yes, I want to be very clear, Mr. Speaker. Did I hear the Hon. Member say that unions in Quebec are responsible for the poor performance of the program in that Province? Can he realize that in order to be a good program it must have a goal? Why then should labour unions be blamed?

Mr. Bujold: Mr. Speaker, I referred earlier to my colleague's progress in learning the language of Molière, but let us not be carried away. I pointed out that one of the reasons why the program had slow beginnings in Quebec was that certain labour unions refused to accept it. Of course there were a variety of other reasons, but I concluded with the remark that the program was also tremendously successful in Quebec and has preserved thousands of jobs. The comments we have heard throughout the Province currently show the program has been very well accepted and is wanted mainly by the people at large.

[English]

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary did not answer the question of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) in any way at all. I would like to put the question to him again in perhaps a different form. Could he tell the House why it is that the Liberal Government will not spend the money which it is now spending on Unemployment Insurance to put those same people who are receiving unemployment and welfare back to work? What would be wrong with that? What is it in the makeup of the Liberal Party that makes it unable to imagine that it would be better to have people working, that it would be better to spend that incredible amount of money on creating meaningful work than to spend it paying people to do nothing? Why is not that an option to consider? I can only imagine that it must have something to do with the commitment the Liberal Party has to the economic status quo in this country, that their corporate bagmen would not want that amount of interference in the economy because it would change it fundamentally.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I am afraid that question will have to be taken as a comment because the time provided for questions and comments has now expired.

An Hon. Member: That is not fair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I am afraid it is fair under the rules. Ten minutes are provided for questions and comments, and that ten minutes has expired. The only way we could proceed further is by unanimous consent to allow the Parliamentary Secretary to answer. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Bujold: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleagues for giving me this opportunity to answer my friend from the New Democratic Party. This is exactly what we are doing. We are using unemployment insurance funds to create productive jobs, under Section 38 and the Work Sharing program. This is what we are now doing. But I would point out to my honourable colleague that we can create jobs in so far as it is possible. Clearly, in a small Magdalen Islands community with 2,000 fishermen, we cannot have them all roaming the seas all winter long merely because we say we are creating jobs. We took steps in that direction within our own Department, and we intend to go on using unemployment insurance funds to go and get people out of their homes and bring them back on the labour market. This is what we have been and will be doing, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, in this debate we are discussing a budget which offers Canadians absolutely nothing in the short term. Those nearly two million Canadians out of work will remain out of work. The budget addresses in no way at all the dilemma, the harm, the tragedy of that unemployment situation. Indeed, the Minister's projections for this year indicate employment will decrease. Not only will unemployment go up, but employment will decrease. There will be fewer jobs at the end of this fiscal year than there were at the beginning of this fiscal year. The only reason the unemployment rate will be as low as he is predicting is that, as he is predicting, more and more Canadians are going to give up and quit and leave the labour force and therefore not be counted among the unemployed. A budget at this time, with this crisis, that the Minister predicts will result in less employment in Canada, has to be considered an utter failure in terms of that number one social problem.

• (1730)

In the long term this budget has to fill every sensible Canadian with terror. We are following the road that has been followed by such great economic examples as Brazil, Argentina and Mexico. We have the absolute refusal of this Liberal Government to recognize the fundamental reality that you cannot spend more than you earn—not over any reasonable period of time.

Looking at the deficit figures and the debt that is projected, any sensible person must be terribly worried about the future of the country. A deficit of $31.2 billion is forecast for this year. That is a colossal deficit, Mr. Speaker. One might say that in a time of terrible recession we should not expect a reduction of the deficit, but the Minister predicts that in a year or so, with a relative growth rate of 5 per cent—a growth rate that we have not seen since the fifties, a growth rate which for Canada would be extraordinary—the deficit in 1984-85 will be $28.7 billion, in 1985-86, $26.6 billion and in 1986-87, $25.6 billion. That falls in exactly the same category as Mexico, Argentina, Brazil, Poland and Romania, these other wonderful examples of astute economic management.

Perhaps you saw on the CBC television program "The Journal" last hight, the Dean of Management Studies at the University of Toronto. He said that as a result of those predictions he forecasts that for a couple of years things will be bad and that next year we may think things are good, but after that we should prepare for the economic holocaust. He said that interest rates will be well in excess of those of a year and a half ago, well over 20 per cent, and he spoke of runaway inflation as the only possible development from these projected deficits.

If we are to have the 5 per cent growth rate that the Minister talked about, that means business is going to invest. It means growth in the economy, and that requires money. They are going to be out in the capital markets lending money, trying to get access to Canadian savings. But the Government is going to be there too, to fund these monstrous deficits plus refund the accumulated deficits. That competition for funds can only have the consequence of higher interest rates. If the Bank of Canada does not print any more money, the supply and demand equation will give high interest rates; if the Bank of Canada does print money, it will be inflation that is caused by that excess money that will ultimately give high interest rates. No matter what the standards, that is the inevitable result.

Only one thing would prevent that from happening—a return to a recession, for business to get out of the marketplace from borrowing money, for a return to what we have had for the last year. That will prevent high interest rates—a depression. Because of the cycle we are in, brought about by the mismanagement of this Government, that is the prediction of the Dean of Management Studies of the largest university in the country.

How Hon. Members opposite and members of the business community who pronounce themselves satisfied with the budget can remain satisfied in view of that kind of future is beyond my comprehension. They either do not agree or cannot see that far in advance. Perhaps they have not stopped to think beyond this year and next year about the consequences that kind of spending or that kind of deficit will have on the future of the country.

By the end of this year or next year this budget may help; that has to be acknowledged. The changes that affect business may help, and perhaps we can anticipate that next year things may not be bad. I guess it is pretty safe to say that is likely to be the time of an election. We have an election budget that says, "To hell with the unemployed this year, we are not going to do anything about them. The heck with the future two years or more ahead which fills any sensible Canadian with terror. What we have to worry about is next year because that is when we are going to the polls. The country's future is not nearly as important as the election of the Liberal Party. That has to be the first priority of any Liberal Minister of Finance—to turn things around to get the Party re-elected. If that means putting the economic future of the country in jeopardy, so be it; if that means keeping two million people unemployed this year, so be it. It is cheap at the price to sacrifice those Canadians and to sacrifice the future of the country if you can put together a budget that will make things look nice about the time we have to go to the public to ask for their vote." That is what we have here, Mr. Speaker. That is what we have been getting and that is why the country is in such a mess today.

One of the major reasons we got into this mess is attributable to the skills the Liberal Party has shown in public relations and flim-flam. Let me give an example. Once upon a time in this country and today in most decently run countries, companies or families, a budget consisted of a revenue and expenditure plan. A family or business assessed their revenues, and on that basis put together an anticipated expenditure plan. A family would look after groceries, housing, education, and if anything was left over, it would be saved or perhaps spent on a vacation. Things are a little more complicated for companies. They think about investing for the future and perhaps having to borrow for that. They think about cash flows, whether they will have to borrow for that and what would be needed to pay that debt off in future. Most countries run things that way. Certainly that is how things are done in the United States. In January each year the Government presents a plan to Congress containing a revenues side and an expenditures side. The elected representatives of the people in Congress study it, amend it, change it for six months and then, at the end of October it becomes law.

In this country we separated these two functions as if expenditures and revenue saving had nothing to do with each other—as if they were totally separate considerations and you did not have to worry about expenditures when talking about revenue, and vice versa. We have come to the current absurdity today where there is no relationship between the Government's spending plans and its ability to raise the revenue to finance those plans. So we look at each part of the equation as an exercise in public relations, as a political exercise, as a flim-flam exercise.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, on February 27, 1983, as required by the Standing Orders, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) tabled before this House the Estimates of Government expenditures for this year. He stood up and formally declared to this House that the Government remained committed to restraint. It had done a careful job of assessing how much money will be spent this year and it was holding it down to a mere 9.6 per cent increase, $85.62 billion, but only a 9.6 per cent increase, showing its concern for restraint. We asked the Minister, what about Supplementary Estimates which might come on during the rest of the year, and we were told, "Don't worry. We have a reserve to take care of that. We are confident that the 9.6 per cent increase is accurate. We are confident in our numbers. We are restraining expenditures. Don't worry." We accused the Minister of flim-flamming the House. He said, "That is not true. Those are our spending plans, not one penny more. We are being very careful." Well, Mr. Speaker, what happened on Tuesday evening not quite two months later? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) stands and in essence says the President of the Treasury Board misled us two months earlier. In essence he said that the President of the Treasury Board did not know what he was talking about when he told us that he was presenting the Government's spending plans, because the Government's spending plans were not $85.6 billion, as the President of the Treasury Board solemnly assured us they would be. They had gone up to $90 billion. Actually, on Monday night it was only $89.8 billion, but because the Minister of Finance was caught misbehaving, violating his oath of secrecy, we suddenly had another $200 million. Suddenly, just out of the blue, there is another $200 million. The President of the Treasury Board said, "We are careful with your money. We look at every penny. We don't spend what we don't have. We are committed to restraint." The Minister of Finance then stands and says, "Oh, well, we are throwing in another $200 million because I don't want to be made out as having leaked the budget, which I did, I know, because of the oath of secrecy which I technically have not violated because I changed things which I have a right to do right up to the last minute."

Mr. Fisher: Which he does. He has the right.

Mr. Andre: The Parliamentary Secretary will soon have a nose as long as his Minister if he has as much respect for truth and integrity as his Minister.

Mr. Fisher: You don't think he has the right to change his own budget?

Mr. Andre: I do not think any Minister of the Crown has the right to flim-flam the Canadian public, to leak budgets, to violate conflict of interest guidelines and to deceive this House at any time, and any self-respecting Minister would resign.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: That is the tragedy of this country, Mr. Speaker, that flim-flam passes for policy.

Mr. Fisher: Nonsense. Come on!

Mr. Andre: It is a tragedy that solemn commitments of this Government as to their policy can be violated like that, without any consideration, because they know they can count on a silent, obedient, non-thinking backbench, who will say, "Aye, sir, Aye" to the most outrageous behaviour because they are not going to jeopardize their opportunity to get appointed as Chairman of Air Canada or Chairman of the CNR or to be appointed to the Senate. They are not going to jeopardize that possibility by thinking, by being concerned about Canada, by suggesting that Ministers should be honest and should obey guidelines and should not leak budgets, and if they do, however accidentally, they must take the consequences of their action. Never would one of those Hon. Members be expected to require that standard of behaviour. Not on your nellie. Oh, no, no, no! Let us get our priorities straight. Looking after Liberals is what this place is all about. Canada comes second, and a damned poor second.

We know, Mr. Speaker, that the Estimates tabled by the President of the Treasury Board just two months ago were flim-flam. They were inaccurate. They were wrong.
