Marble Chimney Pieces.
THE Subscriber invites the attention of the public to the above beautiful article. They are manufactured of Stone, by the Penryn Marble Company, in imitation of the most rare and desirable kinds of Marble.
In style and finish they are unequalled, are very highly polished, retain their beauty much longer than common Marble and are not injured by coal gas, smoke or acids.
They have been extensively introduced into public and private buildings in the United States, giving perfect satisfaction to those who have tried them. While superior in appearance they are sold cheaper than any kind of the kind in the market.
In fact, the confidence with which they have been thus far used gives the fairest evidence that the Penryn Marble, by its many advantages, will in a great measure supersede the use of any other.
Architects, Builders, and all others, are invited to examine them.

Parody.
"GOOD-BYE, PROUD WORLD."
Good-bye, proud world! I'm going home;
Thou art not my friend; I am not thine; Too long through weary cross 's I roam;
A river ark on the ocean brim;
Too long I am tossed like the driven foam,
But now, proud world, I'm going home.

Good-bye to Flattery's fawning face;
To Grandeur with his waning grace;
To upstart Wealth's avowed eye;
To supple-office, low and high;
To crowded halls, to court and street,
To frozen hearts, and hating feet,
To those who go, and those who come—
Good-bye, proud world, I'm going home.

I go to seek my own health's home; Boson'd in my green hills alone;
A secret lodge in a pleasant land, Whose groves the frolic fancies plan'd, Where arches green, the livelong day, Echo the blackbirds' roundelay, And evil men have never trod, A spot that is sacred to thought and God.

O, when I am safe in my sylvan home, I meek at the pride of Greece and Rome;
And when I am stretched beneath the pines Where the evening star so holy shines, I laugh at the love and pride of man,
At the sophist schools, and the learned clan;
For what are they in their high conceit, When man in the bush with God may meet?

THE BELLS.
The morning bell is ringing
All around the earth,
And gentle music they are ringing On glad hearts that love its mirth.
They tell the tale of childhood, dreaming Of its youthful, merry plays, While flit the fairy's ever teeming Felix of happy, bright days.

The noon-day bells of life are pealing Round the globe a busy song;
Their stirring, giant notes are stealing O'er a care worn, dusty throng.

They tell of sturdy manhood, tolling On the bustling stage of life, With thousand fears for ever foiling Him in all his toil and strife.

The evening bells of life are rolling Round the world their sad refrain, With slow and solemn measure tolling Human life's departing train.
They sadly tell us all are going To that silent, silent land, That common home of death's bestowing,
All the same, on price or slave.

THE BROWNS: —OR—
BOARDING IN THE COUNTRY.

CHAPTER I.
In a narrow street situated in that part of Boston which is commonly called the "North-End," there is a moderate sized brick building, the lower part of which is occupied as a store. Crossing the street, are read in large and prominent letters:

"JOHN BROWN, FAMILY GROCERIES." It is with this very John Brown that we have presently to do. We will therefore introduce him more particularly to the reader.
Mr. Brown commenced life with a pair of strong arms and a suit of very indifferent clothing. Added to these he had a full share of that spirit of active enterprise which is said to be the birth-right of every Yankee. Having been so far successful as to attain the responsible post of errand-boy in the head, he employed his spare moments in learning accounts and counting his master's daughter, so that before long he was able to set up a business which, as displayed on certain delicately turned cards, obtained expressly for the occasion, turned out to be Mr. and Mrs. John Brown.

In due course of time, Mr. Solomon Stubbs, the father-in-law of the happy man, stepped off the stage of existence, leaving the entire business, which had now become quite lucrative, in the hands of John Brown.
The Browns continued to increase in numbers and worldly prosperity. At the time of which I am writing, five boys had been born to the family, all of whom had fair promise of emulating the characteristics for which their parents had been distinguished, or, to use the expressive though scarcely elegant language employed by Mr. Brown to express the same idea, they all promised to be "chicks of the old block." Mr. Brown was not a Chesterfield. In all probability he had never heard of this mirror of polite society. Had you asked the question of him, he would have told you that he had never seen any any creature, to his recollection.

In short, Mr. Brown was a plain man, with not enough to carry on his business by his own satisfaction, reckoned on the scale of dollars and cents, and mathematical knowledge enough to keep his accounts straight. He was a plodding man of the world, whose daily thoughts were chiefly engaged by the price of coffee, cheese, and eggs, and whose chief subject of anxiety was to be found in a prospective increase in the price of butter.

Mrs. Brown differed in some respects from her husband. She was constantly striving to raise in the social position—a point upon which few female hearts are utterly indifferent. She aspired to be fashionable and to be esteemed so. Feeling that the wife's position depends in a great degree upon the husband's she endeavored to instill some of her fashionable notions into his mind, but without much apparent success. As one method of reminding her end, she induced him to dress more fashionably than he would have done, if left to himself.

"Mr. Brown," said she one day, "you must really get a new coat; this is getting a little threadbare, besides, it hasn't a fashionable look. I saw Mrs. Smith's evening dress last Sunday, and indeed it did look a little out of place with your old coat."
"What do I care for Mrs. Smith?"
"It may be remarked, by the way, that Mrs. Smith is a butcher's wife with whom Mrs. Brown kept a close rivalry, so far as regarded matters of dress, each attempting to outvie the other."
"Of course," pursued Mrs. Brown, "we don't either of us care anything about Mrs. Smith, but I don't want to have her reporting that my husband can afford to be better dressed than mine."
"That doesn't matter so."
"Certainly not, but as long as you need a new suit, John, just be guided by me this time."
"Well, what shall I get?"
"I would recommend by all means a new coat of invariable green (more fashionable than black by far) with a velvet collar, to set it off. Then for pants, large striped cloths are quite fashionable."

these with a white Marseilles vest would make quite a different man of you, John."
"I doubt that."
"Of course, I mean in appearance. I don't want to have it said that Mr. Smith, who doesn't do any better business than you, dresses better than you. If you dress shabbily people will begin to think you are not doing a very good business."
"Too long I am tossed like the driven foam,
But now, proud world, I'm going home."

Mr. Brown was struck by this last suggestion, and so, in accordance with his wife's taste, he appeared two or three Sundays afterward at church in an invisible green coat with velvet collar, white vest, etc. To these he had been formerly accustomed to add a white felt hat, by Mrs. Brown, who had learned through an acquaintance that this was quite the style of hat worn by all fashionable people.

I have introduced this incident merely to illustrate the character of Mrs. Brown. Of the rest of the family, consisting of two girls and three boys, I may say that Selma, the eldest daughter, was a perfect reflex of her mother, with the addition of a little more affection, and a smattering of French, for which she was indebted to one Mrs. residence at a boarding-school. She was a young lady of very questionable beauty. A face with very little expression, overlaid by carrotty cheeks, which, by means of eye-powders and ear-rings, had been twisted into indistinguishable curls, curved, which, by great exertion of courtesy, might be styled curls.

Of the remainder of the children—George, Mary, Frederick, and Arthur—I may have something to say by and by. Mean while we will draw a veil over the history of the family, and proceed with the more legitimate subject of our story.

CHAPTER II.
"Oh, far a ledge in some vast wilderness, So boundless expanse of woods."
"Why, my dear Mrs. Smith, how do you do?
What a stranger you have been for the last few weeks! And you know how much I enjoy your calls."
Such was the affectionate greeting which Mrs.
Brown extended to her rival.

The ladies are licensed to indulge in a little amiable hypocrisy. Evidently Mrs. Brown thought so; for a stranger, judging from her actions upon this occasion, would have fallen into the very great error of supposing that these ladies were most intimate and dear friends.

"You must excuse me, Mrs. Brown," was the reply of the lady addressed, "but I have really been so much engaged in preparing for my journey that I have been unable to visit any of my friends."
"Preparing for your journey? May I ask where you are going?"
"Certainly, though I supposed you knew," said Mrs. Smith, who, so far from supposing any such thing, had come over expressly to inform her neighbor; "we intend to pass a few weeks in the country. Nobody stays in the city in the summer.
It has become quite the fashion to visit the country, and you know you might as well be out of the world as out of the fashion."
"Where do you intend going?"
"At first we were quite undecided whether to visit the seaside or to go into some pleasant country of a country life. We thought of Hampton Beach or Nahant, but finally fixed upon I—, a pleasant town, where I learn Governor M. passed a few weeks one summer; so of course it's quite fashionable and all that sort of thing." Mrs. Brown was privately of opinion that Mrs.
Smith was prevented from going to the sea-side by the consideration of expense, but she didn't say so.

"We start Wednesday, I presume, continued that lady; "it is only about twenty-four miles distant; I mean, so that we shall have a very agreeable journey. I shall often think of you, if you proceed, in a lamentable tone," he mused by himself, with the noise of carriages breaking constantly in upon your moments of quiet." Mrs. Brown was not inclined to permit her rival to enjoy her triumph unopposed.

"I am not sure that we shall remain in the city, Mr. Brown, and I'll start tomorrow, exclusively of the occasion," he was talking about going to the seaside. "We consider it more fashionable and agreeable to go to the country."
"Reverberate," suggested Selma, who noticed the tone of her father's conversation.

"Yes," continued Mrs. Brown, with renewed confidence, "we consider the seaside more fashionable and recherche than the country. The only objection is that Mr. Brown is exceedingly conservative in his business engagements. It was not so extensive, he would be the better able to spare time. I have often envied you on that point, Mrs. Smith. Your husband, not being so much occupied, can spend more of his time with you."
"You are very quite thrown away, I can assure you," said the lady addressed, who did not fail to see the covert insinuation which this speech was intended to convey. "Mr. Smith is perfectly sensible, in common sense, and I scarcely see him at all recalcitrant; he will be able to go up to the city in the morning, and return late at night."

Mrs. Smith soon took leave, having produced the desired effect, viz. that of making Mrs. Brown heartily envious of that lady.
"It is quite right in one respect," said Mrs.
Brown, musingly; "nobody that is anybody, stays in the city in the summer. If she can go to the country I should like to know why we can't. I should like to have her come back and trumpet about it, by inquiring how I could possibly be sensible in the city all summer. And indeed, if I were so minded, it's just like her. At any rate, if I can help it, she won't have a chance. I will tell Mr. Brown to get his horse and carriage ready, and save our credit, and my wife's peace."
"Well, Mr. Brown, have you heard about the Smiths' party in the town? Why, is there anything new in the wind?"
"The family are going to board in the country this summer."
"Are they?" asked Mr. Brown, indifferently.
"Well, I'm sure I have no objection."
"What a lovely party we can give, then. As Mrs. Smith said to-day, 'nobody that is anybody stays in the city in the summer.' Besides, it's a great deal healthier in the country, and the carriage, poor thing, I know, will be glad to get out of the city."
"What nonsense is this? Haven't you always been in the city, and are not the children healthy in all consequences? If they want to see green grass and trees, and so forth, they can see them in the Common way, say." "But, father," interrupted the young lady, who had been so much interested in the subject, "I can't go to the country, and a gorgeous time, pumping up the rate. Boy Merrill went into the country summer and autumn, and climbed trees, driving cows and such like."
"If that's what you want to go for, I think you had better stay at home," said Mr. Brown, not at all affected by the glowing description.
"Mr. Brown," said the better half, "if we don't go we might as well give up our social position at once. We can never maintain it after that. And Mrs. Smith, too! what a triumph she will have over us. She will say that we couldn't afford to go to the country, and that it isn't any more agreeable than staying at home."
"Are you sure of that?"
"Certainly. You know we can get boarded in a farmhouse, cheap, for a few weeks, and the house can be let up at home."

"But in nature, your arrangements, what disposal have you made of me?"
"Oh! you would go with us, of course. That's the way Mr. Smith will do. It will go up and down on the railroad every day."
"But it seems to me, there will be some expense about that," said her husband.

"Oh, you'll get a season ticket, you know."
"And then, father," said Selma, "even if we did have to submit to a little additional trouble and expense, there's such a comfort in being able to do as the bon-ton do. You know we shouldn't like to be ranked with the canaille."
"I don't know anything about your bon-ton, and as for the canaille, being ranked, I don't see what we have to do with that."
"Paradise, no!" said Selma, affectedly. "I mean excuse me. I didn't mean to speak French, knowing that you didn't understand it."
"Well, John," said his wife, anxiously, "then you can't walk with us?"
"I'll see."

What can a man do against two women who are resolved to have their own way? He may as well give up at last. As a matter of fact, however, Mrs. Brown was finally brought to admission, on the ground that the ladies would take in charge all the preliminaries—such as selecting the place, engaging horses, and so on.

To this they consented with the greatest pleasure. The really important point had been gained.
They were to go into the country, and Mrs. Smith would not triumph over them, after all.

CHAPTER III.
"The sun pours down
With a scorching heat,
On the dusty town."
How we way

Mrs. Brown and Selma began to institute inquiries forthwith, as to what would prove a desirable place for a few weeks' residence. Mrs. Brown was not an enthusiast now, if she ever had been.
The noise of a waterfall, the babbling of a rill, the sight of a beautiful landscape, suggested no particular idea to her. I am afraid her library did not contain the Book of Nature, or, at all events, that it had been some time lent.

However, Mrs. Brown was to go into the country; that was settled. After a diligent examination of the daily papers she at length met with the following advertisement, which seemed to be "quite the thing for her," as she expressed it.
It was headed, "Country Boarding," and read as follows:

"Those who are leaving behind them the noise and dust of the city, and wish to refresh themselves by a communion with Nature, will find a desirable summer retreat at the residence of the subscriber, in the beautiful town of I—, within five miles of the city. The place is a singularly beautiful eye of a beautiful Providence. A beautiful lake, at the distance of a quarter of a mile, presents a strong attraction for the angler, while a boat, strongly attracted to be placed upon it, will enable the visitor to enjoy the luxury of a sail. No pains will be spared to render this a delightful retreat for the delectation of the metropolitan.
Those who wish to avail themselves of its advantages, are requested to make early application by letter to the subscriber.

JEREMIAH GREEN.
"P. S.—Visitors regaled with all the luxuries of the season, at the house of the subscriber. J. G."

"There," said Mrs. Brown, triumphantly, "that will be just the thing. We need not look any farther. For I am quite sure that we shall be delighted with this place."
"It must be quite a paradise, I think, from the description," murmured Selma.

"The terms were the first I saw in the railroad," said Mrs. Brown. "That will be very convenient for your father. In fact, it will be rather pleasant for him, after a hard day's work, to throw himself into the arms and be carried home with the speed of a locomotive."
"A locomotive," suggested George, seeing his mother at fault.

ther. For I am quite sure that we shall be delighted WORMS! WORMS! A great many learned treatises have been written, explaining the origin of, and classifying the worms generated in the human system. Scarcely any topic of medical science has elicited more acute observation and profound research; and yet physicians are very much divided in opinion on the subject.

Saint John Grammar School.

The duties of this Seminary will be resumed on Monday the 1st of August. Several new Pupils can be admitted. The branches taught are Latin, Greek, Mathematics theoretical and practical, History, Geography, and all the branches that constitute a good ENGLISH EDUCATION. JAMES PATERSON, PRINCIPAL. July 19, 1853.

SAINT JOHN SEMINARY, Princess Street.

THIS Seminary will be opened on Monday the 1st of August, in Princess Street, (South side, a few doors East from Germain Street) by Messrs. MALCOLMSON & HUTCHINSON, who design to give instruction in the following branches: Latin, Greek, Mathematics, Mental and Practical, and expressed by many intelligent and respectable parents anxious to obtain for their daughters, an appropriate education, and to supply a want long felt and generally acknowledged. For Young Ladies who may find it inconvenient to attend in the forenoon, or may not wish to mix with the junior scholars, private Classes will be formed, in the School Rooms, between the hours of 1 and 6 p. m. Mr. M. would acquiesce in friends, that a young gentleman of considerable literary acquirements, and an experience in teaching, and that he has during the last year been employed as a Teacher in two Academies of the highest grade in Scotland.

The usual arrangements of the institution are adapted to the Improved Modern System of both Male and Female Education. The following Branches form the standard course of instruction—Greek, Latin, French and English; Algebra, Geometry, Trigonometry, Mensuration, and Arithmetic, Theoretical, Mental, and Practical; Book-keeping, by Double and by Single entry; Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Political and Physical Geography, Composition; and the Composition, Origin, and Primary of Words; Spelling, Reading, and the Signification of Words; the usual elementary and subsidiary branches. Mr. M. will be at attendance at the School Room, on Monday the 27th instant, from half-past 4 to 6 o'clock, to answer inquiries and enrol pupils for the different classes to be formed. St. John, June 24, 1853.

Select Boarding & Day School FOR YOUNG LADIES, CONDUCTED BY MISS THOMPSON, Assisted by her Father, Elder Thomson, A. M., St. John, N. B. The entire routine of a thorough ENGLISH EDUCATION—the Continental Languages and, if required, the Greek and Latin,—Drawing, Painting, Music, and Singing, together with Natural and Moral Philosophy, and the general range of Polite Literature. The limited number received secures to the Pupils all the domestic comforts and supervision of home; and all efforts are spared to render the duties of the pupil spontaneous rather than compulsory. The Domestic Department is under the superintendence of Mrs. Thompson. Two Classes of DAY PUPILS, consisting of 12 only. N. B.—ELDER THOMPSON, A. M., devotes the whole of his time during Class hours to his Daughter's Pupils. Aug. 10.

THE Graduate of the Toronto Board of Medicine, and of the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. TAKES this method of informing the inhabitants of St. John and the surrounding country, that he has established himself on the North side of King's Square, two doors west of Gables' Corner, for the purpose of practicing his profession, in those most delicate and dangerous cases, in their treatment, in a number of the largest Hospitals in America—as well as in his own private practice for several years. He likewise feels prepared to give the Ear and Eye, those most delicate and necessary organs, that care and attention which they may require—very many cases of deafness that have been considered as hopeless can be entirely cured by a proper and judicious treatment. Diseases of the Ear, such as Inflammation—Catarrh, Strabismus, or Cross Eyes, &c. &c. are a few of the cases that will receive particular attention—and in all cases of disease of those organs, if any parties are not satisfied, the money will be returned. Subacute and Chronic diseases of the respiratory organs will in most cases be treated by the inhalation of medicated vapours. Nervous diseases will be treated principally with Electricity, which is applied in the most judicious and most efficient manner. In his office from 9 till 12 a. m. on Mondays, where he will be happy to consult, gratuitously, as many as can make it convenient to call. N. B.—Office hours from 9 till 11 a. m., and from 3 till 5 p. m., on the week. St. John, July 26, 1853.
