On 279 Special Trains. U. G. Railways

Up to March 1st 767,400 Troops have travelled over Government Railways.

Thousands arrive each week at Halifax and are sent forward to Dispersal Areas.

Since the war began in 1914, up to March 1st, when S.S. Belgic disembarked her returned soldier passengers at Halifax 757,400 troops have been carried on special trains over the Canadian Government Railways.

The first train which carried troops over the Government Railways the year the war was declared was numbered one and all special troop trains to and from Halifax since that time have been numbered consecutively. The last train from the Belgic was on Saturday No. 1279. Each train averages about twelve cars with an average of 50 men to a car, which figures up a total of 787,400 men carried. Of course in addition to this thousands of soldiers have journeyed between Montreal and Halifax by regular trains during the past four years.

The movement of troops back to Canada is now approaching its greatest activity. Last Sunday 5000 arrived at Halifax by the transports Lapland and Belgic and fifteen special trains were despatched westward inside of fourteen hours.

S. S. Megantic with soldiers and dependants arrived Wednesday and S. S. Adriatic due Sunday. The movement of returning men is to be kept up actively all summer.

The process of disembarkation at Halifax is being carried on without a hitch, and there is a fine system of co-operation between the Military and the Railway officials.

At The Federal Capital

The event which above all others distinguished the week ending May 15th, was the return to the House of Commons of the Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Sir Robert Borden. This was a most agreeable and satisfactory breaking in on the ordinary daily routine of the proceedings of the House. As in former weeks, the discussion in committee of the Federal Franchise Bill occupied a very large part of the time of the House for the first three days of the week at least. The progress made in considering the bill was not remarkable, but still advanced towards the end of the committee stage were affected. The opposition members of the House, with marvellous tenacity, held up every clause that would seem to them to conceal something in it that might be possible to their disadvantage when the election comes, and as is not unnatural, they persistently offered amendments and suggestions that might in some plausible way catch the promoters of the bill unawares. Concessions have been made from time to time on this clause or that which seemed like reasonable propositions coming from the opposition, but they are not satisfied with anything of this kind, but seek to engrain their ideas on the essentials of the bill, but in this they have not thus far made any great progress, and the probabilities are that when the bill emerges from the committee stage, so far as essentials are concerned, it will be practically the same as when the bill was introduced to the House, subject, of course, to certain amendments that the Solicitor General, who is piloting the bill through, considers here and there to be improvements on the original draft.

As already stated, the most pleasing event of the parliamentary week was the home-coming of the Prime Minister. It had been announced beforehand that he would arrive in Ottawa towards noon on Wednesday the 12th, and, as was fitting and altogether in the natural order of things, he was met at the railway station by a large concourse of his friends and supporters. As he and Lady Borden emerged from their car they were greeted with hearty continuous cheering. Those assembled embraced the members of the cabinet, almost all the Government supporters in the House of Commons and a number of Senators. The reception accorded the Prime Minister and his lady was of the warmest and most enthusiastic nature. After the cheering the Prime Minister and Lady Borden shook hands with every one of those who had come to greet them, which in itself was no indifferent performance. The Prime Minister looks exceedingly well and, on his first appearance, it was plain to be seen that he had devoted himself to outside exercise, and had availed himself of every possible opportunity of the advantages of strolling and open air. His face was quite tanned, and someone said he was as brown as a berry, but his eyes were bright, his step buoyant, and he seemed to have his old-time vigour. After these friendly greetings, the Prime Minister and Lady Borden motored to their home, and his friends and admirers moved away, so as to be ready to accord him a second greeting when he would enter the House of Commons. He came to the House about half past three on Wednesday afternoon. The business of the session was proceeding in the usual routine way, and the modesty of the Prime Minister was noticeable in the manner in which he entered the Commons Chamber. It will be remembered that up to that time he had never been in the new Parliament Building since it was opened for business. Instead of making an ostentatious entry at the front and marching up the floor of the House, which would be quite natural and in every way quite proper for him to do, he quietly made his entrance from a side door near the Speaker's chair, and the assembled commoners and the numerous spectators in the galleries were scarcely aware that the Prime Minister was in the chamber until he was just observed looking around the front row of desks to see if he could discover one which had on it the name of Borden. When his presence was realized there was the greatest possible cheering and applauding, and for a few minutes the House was in a mood of jubilation. Truth to tell, it must be said that the cheering and applause on the Prime Minister's first appearance in the new House of Commons was not strictly confined to the Government benches. From several desks on the opposition side generous applause was accorded. The Prime Minister's reception was of the most cordial and generous nature.

From almost every point of view the return of the Prime Minister is most satisfactory. In the first place, it gives to the House of Commons, some way or other, an air of greater stability and confidence than would seem to permeate it during his absence. From this it must not be inferred that the business of the House was not admirably conducted and that everything necessary for the successful carrying on of the affairs of the country was not admirably effected by the Acting Prime Minister and his cabinet associates, but there will always be a feeling of uncertainty when there is any doubt about the return of the master, and consequently the Prime Minister's very presence and the knowledge that he is once more at the head of the Government, and that his great abilities are again at the disposal of the people of Canada, necessarily incalculable a spirit of confidence and satisfaction. It is quite apparent that the Prime Minister's health has been almost if not completely restored, and that Canada is to have the benefit of his great statesmanship for some years to come. Of course, it is yet too early to advance any statement as to what the Prime Minister's course is to be regarding the future of the Government party and the policy by which it is to be guided in the immediate future. These will all be made known and published to the Canadian people in due time probably within a few days. The course the Government intend to pursue and the policy by which they shall be guided in their administration of Canadian affairs is already well advanced towards completion, and will undoubtedly appear in a platform which will be made public to the world.

Thursday, the 13th, was a day not so far as the business of the House of Commons is concerned, it was Ascension Day, and in addition to being an ecclesiastical holiday it is a public holiday in the calendar, and as a consequence there was no meeting of the House of Commons on that day. Adjournment took place on Wednesday evening until Friday afternoon. As there is no sitting on Saturday a number of those who live more or less adjacent to the Parliamentary city were very desirous of the adjournment being made until Monday, but the desire of the Government is to move along with the business with as little delay as possible, and as a consequence Parliament met on Friday as usual; but it must be said that the attendance was not very large, as a number of the members from Ontario and Quebec who went home for their holiday did not return, as a matter of fact, until the first of the following week.

Friday, May 14th, was a day of very considerable importance in the Commons. The business of that day, apart from the ordinary routine, was the presentation of Minard's Liniment to relieve Garget in Cows.

made by the Hon. the Minister of Agriculture of the operations of his department for the previous twelve months, when he moved the House into committee of supply to consider the necessary estimates for the coming year. Hon. Mr. Tolmie, the present Minister of Agriculture, presented to the House in his address on this occasion an admirable account of the operations of his department, and made a speech which was not only most useful and most informative but exceedingly interesting. The interest which the Hon. Minister aroused in his presentation of the operations of his department was far to show how important it is that the right man should be in the right place. It was admitted by nearly everybody in the House that the Minister of Agriculture on this occasion had presented to Parliament a budget more interesting and more important, and containing more information than any one remembered having come from any previous Minister of Agriculture. The extent of the operations of the Agricultural Department, in every phase of agricultural science, and the progress and improvement in making, from day to day and week to week, in carrying out and expanding the work of a great department of this nature. It was suggested, while his estimates were under consideration, that the great amount of information and practical lessons to be drawn from the Minister's exposition of his department should find a wider publicity than the mere embelishing them in the pages of Hansard. It is hoped and earnestly desired that this speech of the Minister of Agriculture shall be published in pamphlet form and distributed all over Canada, so that agriculturists in every section of the Dominion can learn therefrom what the department is doing, and also be able to draw from the great fund of information therein presented such practical lessons in improved agricultural methods as will redound to the success and financial advantage of the agricultural community generally. The Minister's presentation was very well received, and his practical common sense method of furnishing information, during the progress of the committee stage of his estimates, earned for him the good will of nearly all the members and he succeeded in having his estimates voted with very little adverse criticism. Certainly Hon. Mr. Tolmie has made a splendid beginning as Minister of Agriculture, and being a practical agriculturist, it is felt that he will, no doubt, make a grand success of his department.

The weather, which has all along been quite cold, has taken a turn for the better, and the great lawn in front of the Parliament Buildings furnishes evidence that vegetation has been moving along with fairly rapid strides, as some days ago the first crop of grass was clipped from the lawn. It is true that possibly it would not be of any great use for feeding purposes, but it is wonderful how long it had grown in the very short time since the snow had disappeared therefrom. The lawn looks nice and velvety now, but no doubt the mower shall have to be used on it quite frequently from time to time, so as to maintain its beautiful appearance for the summer months.

Half the ills of life are caused by allowing the bowels to become constipated.

Nine Years Writing "Paradise Lost."

Milton began to write the poem in 1658, and it was ready for the press in 1665. It was published in 1667. Counting that Milton did more or less on the poem up to the time of its publication, it would make nine years consumed in the writing. Milton sold the copyright to a London bookseller for £5 ($25) and $25 more when 1,300 copies of the first edition had been sold, and he received an additional $25 for the second and third editions, each of 1,300 copies. The first edition was published in 1667, the second and third edition in 1668, and the fourth and fifth in 1669. Milton died in 1674, and in 1678 his widow transferred all the rights in the work for $10, so that £28 ($140) paid at different times in the course of thirteen years, was the whole pecuniary reward which this great performance produced to the poet and his widow.

Burdock Blood Bitters goes direct to the root of the disease and restores healthy, normal action to the different organs, and cleanses the blood of all its impurities.
Mr. E. C. Goodwin, Cambridge, N.B., writes—"For nearly two years I suffered from boils and pimples on my face and neck, and nearly all of my body was covered with the pimples. I tried about everything, but got no relief. At The Federal Capital

The all-important Parliamentary event of the week ending May 22nd was the presentation of the budget speech in the House of Commons by Sir Henry Drayton, Minister of Finance. The presentation of the financial statement of the country is, of course, the most important matter of public policy that comes before Parliament, from year to year. While this is absolutely true, generally speaking, special importance and interest have been attached to the budget speeches of our Parliament during the last five or six years, in consequence of the extraordinary conditions existing during, and arising from, the war. Another element that heightened the interest and expectation of members of the House of Commons this session, is the fact that the Finance Minister, Sir Henry Drayton, is new to his office and to Parliament, and has occupied a seat in the House of Commons only a few months. It is fair to say that expectation, and anxiety, if you will, were manifested more or less from day to day as the session had arrived at that stage when the budget might most naturally be expected. It judged by their numerous questions, asked from time to time, as to the probable date of the delivery of the budget, the members of the opposition side were very much more anxious and curious regarding the anticipated financial statement than those supporting the Government.

When Sir Henry Drayton rose to deliver his budget speech on Tuesday, May 18th, there was almost a full attendance of the members of the House of Commons, and a very large audience in all the galleries. During the two hours delivery of his speech, he had the unflinching attention not only of the members in the chamber, but of the greater part, at least, of the ladies and gentlemen occupying the galleries. Much speculation, of course, was indulged in as to what form the first budget speech of the new Finance Minister would take, but the annual financial statement is one of the things, probably one of the few things, concerning which no definite advance knowledge can be secured. Speculation may be rife and all manner of guessing may be indulged in, but the secret of what the financial statement of the country and the ways and means of furnishing the money for the current fiscal year are most carefully guarded. It is most proper that this should be so, for should any advance information leak out it would have an extremely demoralizing and unsettling effect upon the business of the country. It would be impossible within the scope of this correspondence to describe even to the smallest extent, all the important phases of the budget speech. All that is intended is to lay before our readers a brief summary on the most salient features of the financial statement, and the means intended to be employed for raising the money necessary for the public business of the country for the year ending March 31st, 1921.

Before disclosing the actual financial position of Canada in our fiscal operations for the year ending March 31, 1920, the Finance Minister, in a general way, laid before Parliament, in a retrospect, an account of Canada's track and her progress in the development of her natural resources, as well as her manufacturing industries, for several decades past. Under these different headings, it is certain the unfolding of the various operations were gratifying in the highest degree, and absolutely prove that Canada was quite equal in her resources and her energies and her progressive business methods to meet even the heavy obligations imposed upon her as a consequence of the war. The same patriotism, the same energy and the same self-sacrifice aroused during the war, if practised even to a moderate degree, are all that is necessary to overcome what may at first blush seem most formidable and intricate public problems. Without undertaking to present any figures regarding the progress that our country has made in trade and commerce during recent years, a summary of our national debt and our annual revenue and expenditures will now be presented. The Finance Minister showed that the gross debt of the country on the 31st day of March, 1920, amounted to $3,014,483,772. This gross amount, of course, is to be reduced by various assets, so numerous that it is impossible to mention them here in detail, and the difference between the gross and the various assets constitutes, as everyone will readily understand, the actual net debt of the country. According to the books of the Finance Department, properly audited and everything being accounted for, the net debt is shown to be $1,935,946,312. At this point, the Finance Minister did a very courageous thing. He enumerated several assets, charged against the gross debt, which he considered were not realizable at least in the immediate future, and he considered it more prudent and more business-like to set them aside, to place them in a suspense account, at least, rather than that they should be calculated as living assets against our gross debts. These various items, of at least doubtful realizability, amount to $337,359,124. These, subtracted from the total asset for reducing the gross debt increases the net debt by that amount, thus placing our actual net debt at $2,273,305,436. This, it will be admitted, is a very considerable debt, but it must be remembered that all of it, with the exception of about $336,000,000, has been incurred by the country in consequence of the war.

Turning now from the country's debt account to the fiscal operations of the year 1920, we find, according to the figures presented by the Finance Minister, that the ordinary revenue of Canada for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1920, was the largest in her history, amounting to $388,000,000. The ordinary expenditure, on the other hand, reached $340,000,000. In all these statements, round figures are given; the detailed amounts of hundreds and units are not set down, as it is altogether unnecessary to overburden with figures and tax the patience of the reader. According to the language used in describing the fiscal operations of Canada, this leaves a balance on the right side of the ledger amounting to $48,000,000 or thereabouts, which is applied on the reduction of capital expenditures. As is well known, apart from ordinary revenues and expenditures, there are always expenditures of an extraordinary character, investments and capital outlays annually requiring large amounts, and generally speaking, these are far in excess of the moneys received in the ordinary revenue, and are provided for by direct taxation, loans, or some other extraordinary means of securing money. For the fiscal year which we are considering, ending March 31, 1920, the capital expenditure amounted to $187,856,991. These two amounts, that is to say, that for the ordinary expenditure and the capital expenditure raised the total expenditure for the past fiscal year to $536,741,110. This constitutes the total financial outlay of Canada for the year ending March 31, 1920, for all purposes apart from war. Let this last statement be carefully understood. War expenditures are certainly of an extraordinary nature, and they are in a class by themselves, and considered separately from other outlays. The figures presented for the fiscal year ending March 31, each year dispose of those financial transactions, and leave with us the actual balances created, for or against the country, for that period.

Now the Finance Minister turns his attention to the current fiscal year, that is to say, the year ending March 31, 1921, and presents to Parliament the estimates of expenditure and then of the possible revenues to meet these expenditures for the same period. He estimates for the current year a total ordinary expenditure of $574,000,000, to which must be added an amount of probably $25,000,000 or more for railway purposes, besides floating debts and obligations maturing during the twelve months, amounting to $74,058,400, making a grand total of about $673,000,000, in round figures. Against this revenues are estimated as follows: From ordinary sources of revenue $381,000,000, cash in hand and outstanding accounts, including balances due from Great Britain, about $199,000,000, making a total of $580,000,000. This, subtracted from the total estimated expenditure will leave a balance of about $100,000,000 to be raised by some extraordinary means. It may be here mentioned that the Finance Minister has eliminated the extra war tax of 7 1/2 per cent. This tax produced revenues of about $30,000,000 a year. This will be lost in the operations of the current year. How, then, is the deficit of $100,000,000 to be made up? The Finance Minister announces that there will be no loans, and that the necessary money to bridge over the difference between ordinary revenue as above outlined and the total expenditure will be made up by means of direct taxation. This tax is of various kinds. There is the excise tax, luxury tax, business profit tax, and increase in the income tax. No attempt will be made here to describe these various taxes, as it will take the people a little while to understand them thoroughly. They will require to be instructed more or less, and it is altogether likely that they will not be attractive. It is needless to say that taxation of any kind is, as a rule, not regarded as a very agreeable subject, and in whatever form it may be presented it is certain there will always be a number of people who will object. When it comes, as the greater part of our taxation has been for many years, as a tariff, paid through the customs, and thus in a sense unknown to the customer and consumer, it is perhaps least disagreeable. A great many have hailed against it, however, and have, from time to time, expressed the desire that we should have direct taxation, so that every one would know what he was actually paying. Under the new arrangement, then, there should be sufficient variety for all, as we shall have direct and indirect taxation. Now it remains to be seen whether or not those who may not have considered the indirect taxation quite palatable will take kindly to the direct variety. These are subjects, of course, that will take considerable time to work out. In any event, the intention of the Finance Minister was and is that the direct taxation, considered necessary to meet the balance of expenditure over ordinary revenue, should be paid by those best able to afford it. That is to say, it is regarded and stated to be a luxury tax generally. Whether or not the line between luxury and necessity has been sufficiently advanced remains to be seen. It is possible that whether or not the various forms of direct taxation presented by the Finance Minister will have the effect of producing as much revenue as he hopes, they have the effect of lowering prices and thus reducing, to some extent at least, the high cost of living. Should that come about, at least one good effect shall have been achieved by the new fiscal proposition of the Finance Minister.

Bank Robberies in New England States

Boston, May 30.—Several bank robberies and thefts in various parts of the New England States have been reported during the past few days. There was also an attempt to loot a national bank in this state. The city of Vergennes (Vt.) was startled yesterday when it was announced that Charles Strong, cashier of the First National Bank, had shot and killed himself with an automatic pistol. National bank examiners are at work on the books to see if there is a shortage in the accounts, as feared. Strong was widely known in Vermont. Some years ago, Vergennes was the scene of a notable bank wreck, when the Farmers National Bank closed its doors, and the cashier and vice-president, the latter the lieutenant governor of the state, were arrested charged with extensive embezzlements. As a peculiar coincidence the same state auditor elected on the same ticket, and who afterwards became senator, was arrested and convicted on a charge of embezzling funds from the state of Vermont.

For the information of our many patrons, in both town and country, we deem it necessary to announce that the Coal Business, successfully carried on in the past by the late Mr. Charles Lyons, will be continued by the Estate under the old firm name of C. Lyons & Co.

As we possess almost unlimited facilities for supplying the coal trade, and as we are desirous of extending our already large business, we respectfully invite the patronage of new customers; and if we succeed in thus increasing our present connection, we guarantee that we shall be indefatigable in our endeavor to justify the confidence of our new friends.

We again thank our patrons for their past generous patronage, and respectfully solicit a renewal of their esteemed custom.

Fainting, Dizzy Spells

Weakness and Shortness of Breath.

These feelings of faintness, those dizzy spells and "falling sensations" which come on from time to time indicate a weakened condition of the heart and disordered state of the nerves.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have no equal for strengthening the heart and invigorating the nerves.

Mrs. C. A. S. Drake, Paris, Ont., writes: "I have used on towards the second box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and find they have done me good. I had those fainting, dizzy spells once in a while, and also weakness and shortness of breath, and would become so choked up at times I could hardly sleep without sitting up in bed. When walking too fast I would have to stop and try to catch my breath. I feel a lot better since I have used your pills and know that they have helped me wonderfully as I have improved very much."
