Due to an oversight, the footnote to the table in my statement was not amended when the original data, from an August, 1977 publication, were changed to reflect the latest information available.

That having been said, however, I can still come to no other conclusion than that I reached initially during the course of the argument by the hon. member for Calgary Centre, that is, that the matter is not one of privilege, but clearly and fundamentally a dispute as to facts and to the interpretation of those facts and statements and, therefore, ought not to be accepted as a matter of privilege.

DEPUTY MINISTERS AND ASSISTANTS

Question No. 128—Mr. Herbert:

Are there any persons who held positions as Deputy Ministers or Assistant Deputy Ministers in the past ten years presently working for Crown corporations and, if so (a) what are their names (b) what positions do they hold (c) on what date were they appointed?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): In so far as Atomic Energy Control Board is concerned: (a) Dr. A. T. Prince, (b) President (c) February 20, 1975.

In so far as the Canadian Wheat Board is concerned: (a) Mr. Esmond Gervais, (b) Chief commissioner, (c) October 1, 1977.

In so far as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is concerned: (a) Mr. A. W. Johnson, (b) President, (c) August 1, 1975. (a) Mr. Arthur C. Boughner, (b) Vice-president, finance, (c) April 1, 1977.

In so far as the Federal Business Development Bank is concerned: (a) Mr. G. A. Lavigueur, (b) Executive vice-president, (c) March 1, 1977.

In so far as Petro-Canada is concerned: (a) Mr. W. H. Hopper, (b) President and chief executive officer, (c) July 15, 1977.

In so far as Loto Canada is concerned: (a) Mr. Guy Cousineau, (b) President, (c) June 8, 1976.

In so far as the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority is concerned: (a) Mr. Paul D. Normandeau, (b) President, (c) October 25, 1973.

In so far as the Export Development Corporation is concerned: (a) John A. MacDonald, (b) Chairman and president, (c) May 1, 1975.

In so far as the other Proprietary Crown Corporations are concerned: None.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Question No. 707—Mr. Howie:

Since April 1, 1976, what amount was paid by the Department of Justice to outside lawyers practising in Fredericton, New Brunswick and to whom were such payments made?

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): In so far as the legal agents of the Minister of Justice are concerned for the period from April 1, 1976 to November 16, 1977: Name and Amount: Bryden, John, $220.00; Cochrane, Richard B. 1,308.75; Hoyt, W. L. 39,134.35; Hughes, David C. 1,072.00; Jackson, Leslie 1,764.88; Kenny, Robert 1,339.25; McKenna, Hubert 11,315.39; McNair, John C. 6,407.97; MacVoy, J. 409.80; Malone, Brian 62,088.54; Neil, J. Brain 1,410.00; Olmstead, David 2,455.46; Sargeant, Charles 1,409.00.

MR. ANTONIO GOUVEIA

Question No. 779—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What are the details of the case which the government brought against Mr. Antonio Gouveia, an employee of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in Toronto, and what are the results of any charges made?

2. Was the matter appealed to Mr. Edward B. Jolliffe, Q.C., Deputy Chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board and, if so, did (a) he state that "such a cavalier attitude is not impressive" in reference to the attitude of the Crown (b) he find that Mr. Gouveia was persecuted by his superiors (c) he report that the case represented a classic example of how a disciplinary problem should not be dealt with and did he refer to "the inappropriate formulation of five charges and the inevitable failure to prove four of them" (d) his report state that Mr. Gouveia's fiance was a victim of harassment and "what can only be described as a smear campaign"?

3. Does the case represent government policy insofar as treatment of UIC personnel is concerned and, if not, what steps will be taken to change the situation?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1 and 2. See Beauchesne's Rules and Forms of the House of Commons of Canada, citation 171(ff).

3. It was the policy of the UIC and continues to be the policy of the CEIC that its employees are responsible for administering the legislation, regulations and policies with probity, for serving the public without prejudice or preference, and for protecting public moneys. Employees who willfully contravene this policy are subject to disciplinary action and, in some cases, prosecution. Although adjudicator Jolliffe, in his decision of October 11, 1977, was critical of the handling of Mr. Gouveia's case, his imposition of a two-month suspension without pay indicates that he found Mr. Gouveia to have committed a very serious offence. Adjudicator Jolliffe's criticism, however, has prompted the CEIC to investigate the handling of the Gouveia case. The results of this investigation will determine the nature and extent of the corrective action to be taken.

LEGAL FEES

Question No. 992—Mr. MacKay:

What was the total amount paid for outside legal services for the prosecution of the Irving interests under the combines act and to whom was it paid?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The total amount paid for outside legal services for the prosecution of the Irving interests under the Combines Investigation Act is as follows: William L. Hoyt, Q.C. Hoyt, Mockler, Allen, Dixon & Godin, Fredericton, N.B. (Crown Counsel); Legal Fees $154,751.50; Disbursements 31,580.34; Total, $186,331.84.

Point of Order—Mr. Cossitt

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Question No. 998—Mr. Howie:

Since September 1, 1976, did the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs pay travel or other expenses to or for non-departmental persons or firms in New Brunswick?

Mr. Alan G. Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes: Hoyt Mockler Allen & Dixon, Fredericton, N.B. $3,981.75; Community Planning Association of Canada, Saint John, N.B. $822.20.

GRANTS FOR HOUSING

1. Has the government made any grants, loans or given any kind of assistance to the Ontario Union of Tenants, James House Crescent, Rexdale, Ontario and, if so (a) what was the purpose of the grant, loan or assistance (b) under which legislative authority or otherwise was any grant, loan or assistance issued (c) in the case of a loan, what is the amount outstanding, if any?

2. Has the government made any grants, loans or given any kind of assistance to the Council of Economic Development for Low Income, James House Crescent, Rexdale, Ontario and, if so (a) what was the purpose of the grant, loan or assistance (b) under which legislative authority or otherwise was any grant, loan or assistance issued (c) in the case of a loan, what is the amount outstanding, if any?

3. What are the names and addresses of the shareholders of the (a) Ontario Union of Tenants, James House Crescent, Rexdale, Ontario (b) Council of Economic Development for Low Income, James House Crescent, Rexdale, Ontario?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): 1. Nil.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. COSSITT—ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 347

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order connected with my order paper question No. 347 answered by the Prime Mnister (Mr. Trudeau) on June 15, 1978 page 6442 of Hansard. In order to state my point of order clearly, the House and yourself, sir, should be aware of the nature of question No. 347 and its answer and, therefore, I shall read both quickly, as follows:

1. Did the Prime Minister during a recent visit to London and the western Ontario area in the course of a speech state that Canadians were too concerned with summer homes in the country and two cars in the yard and, if so (a) what were the exact words he used (b) in what location did he make the statement and to what audience (c) is the Prime Minister aware that radio news broadcasts carried voice clips of such a statement?

2. Has the government adopted a policy to close the Prime Minister's summer residence at Harrington Lake as a restraint and economy measure and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

3. Has the government adopted a policy to sell one of the two $85,000 Cadillacs used by the Prime Minister as a restraint and economy measure and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

The answer by the Prime Minister was:

See Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fourth Edition, Citation No. 171 (a), (e), (h), (l) and (g).

It is undoubtely, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, axiomatic that any question accepted for appearance on the order paper has been approved, and therefore bears the same standing as if it were an oral question asked in this House. All hon. members, I am sure, have experienced representations from the officers at the table declining to accept a question for the order paper on the grounds that it is in some way out of order, or advising that the wording must be changed to make it acceptable. On all such occasions, I believe I am quite correct in stating that Your Honour, as would be expected, is the final judge, so to speak, as to acceptability or otherwise of the question, if a member disagrees with the ruling from the table officials.

First, therefore, I am contending that an accepted order paper question and an accepted oral question have the same status in so far as acceptability before the House is concerned, in that the ultimate authority of the Speaker has been applied to such acceptance.

Referring specifically again to question No. 347, it was obviously accepted for the order paper in the usual manner. I quite realize the Prime Minister, by the rules of the House, is not obliged to give any answer to a question. However, in this case he has not just given an answer but he has taken it upon himself, Mr. Speaker, to rule my question out of order by using Beauchesne's citations to do so.

In taking such a step the Prime Minister has therefore usurped the powers of the Speaker of the House of Commons. The Prime Minister may be, in his opinion, many things, but he is not the Speaker of the House of Commons, and his interpretation of a Beauchesne's citation therefore has absolutely no standing whatsoever unless Your Honour confirms it after hearing argument from any members who wish to present a case.

Certainly it cannot seriously be contended that the Table officers cannot possibly examine in detail all submitted written questions, because that is the actual procedure we presently follow. Nor can it be argued that the Prime Minister, whatever views he may hold, is permitted to decide arbitrarily that a question is out of order. Only the Speaker of the House of Commons has such authority, I would think.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, I would respectfully submit that question No. 347, and any other questions ruled out of order by the Prime Minister, a minister or a parliamentary secretary in this session of parliament, on the basis of a citation in Beauchesne should be restored to the order paper forthwith. If table officials accept a question which subsequently is ruled out of order by the Prime Minister or by a member of the government, as it now stands Table officials refuse to accept the question again for the order paper because they naturally claim it is a question which has already been asked. Thus we have the ridiculous situation in which Table officials are confirming a ruling by someone who is not entitled to make a ruling in the first place.

In no circumstances can I find any precedent for this unbelievable situation. I f it were to be accepted, then any member of the House would presumably have the same right as the Prime Minister; supposedly he would be able simply to rise and cite a quotation from Beauchesne and get it accepted as a ruling binding on all other members, on the officers of the Table, and even upon Your Honour.

In conclusion, I respectfully submit that the use of a Beauchesne citation by the government is not conclusive but is, rather, just one side of a procedural dispute. I submit that, as in any other procedural argument, both sides must be heard and a ruling then made by the Speaker. May I finally add that Beauchesne's citation 171 is archaic and cannot be used indiscriminately without reference to precedent and changes in rules and practices which have come into force since 1958?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member raises a matter which we will have to consider. He has described the practice correctly—we do examine a question for its acceptability and we do pass judgment on it. There are a great many questions on the order paper and we try to give each one a detailed examination. Possibly we may not have correctly interpreted the precedents in respect to the particular question referred to, though I do not recall it precisely. It would seem to me that in all likelihood the best way to make a test would be for the hon. member to refile the question, giving the table the opportunity to examine it and to see whether there are any procedural grounds upon which to reject it.

Even in the oral question period to which the hon. member has alluded, it is not uncommon that though the Chair may allow a question to go unchallenged, a minister may rise in his place and resort to a defence of some sort which the Chair has not called upon. This may occur particularly with respect to a matter which may be sub judice, or to areas of privileged information about which the Chair has not passed upon. In some cases—in fact this afternoon—the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made reference to a question being hypothetical in nature. Again, this might be based upon information which the Chair did not possess.

It may often happen that a minister will use this kind of answer, and since the Chair has not procedural grounds upon which to compel an answer, it is impossible for the Chair to say that an answer given on procedural grounds is not, in fact, an answer. However, if such a matter becomes an issue, as is the case now, then the right way to test it at the time, in the oral question period, would be to ask the Chair to rule whether it is hypothetical or not. In these circumstances equally, in the case of a written question, the way to test it would be to say, as the hon. member has said, I have received a reply which begs the question on procedural grounds. Are the procedural grounds correct or are they not?" Then we can make a determination and decide whether or not the question should be refiled.

DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION NO. 1,609

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As I advised the Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), my point of order deals with question No. 1,609 which appears on page 133 of the order paper for Monday, June 19, 1978, and which was put on it on May 5. Mr. Speaker, as this question should have been replied to as quickly as possible, in view of the existing dispute with regard to transport which opposes Quebec milk producers and the federal Department of Transport, which subsidizes part of transportation costs of the producers living east of Lévis in the province of Quebec; as this dispute does not seem to be close to a settlement, the producers met me again over the weekend and asked me the total amount of subsidies paid to the milk producers of that area with a view to finding an equitable solution with regard to the producers of other parts of the province of Quebec. Seeing that matter is extremely important, I should like to ask most sincerely and humbly if it might not be possible to get a reply as soon as possible to that question so that we can give an answer to those two categories of producers and so help them solve their problems as quickly as possible.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STEVENS—COMMENTS OF MINISTER OF STATE (SMALL BUSINESS)

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise concerning a question of privilege which I may be raising on Thursday or Friday afternoon. Your Honour will see from pages 6504 and 6505 of Hansard that the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) made several comments reflecting on my ability to function as a member of parliament, and I believe I have a legitimate question of privilege, one I would propose to raise. I will give Your Honour due notice in the usual way should I decide to raise it on Thursday when the Minister of State for Small Business will, I am informed, be back in the House.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Friday, June 16, consideration in committee of the whole of Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions—Mr. Chrétien—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Friday, June 16, 1978, clauses 6, 17 and 30 were allowed to stand, and clause 32 was before the committee.

On clause 32—"Qualifying taxable dividends paid."

The Chairman: Is clause 32 agreed to?

● (1522)

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Your Honour will recall that on Friday afternoon we moved to clause 31, which we passed, and we are presently on clause 32. However, I felt that it was at least implied that clause 30 would be returned to, pending a ruling on a procedural question regarding the amendment put by my colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton West. I was wondering if that is the understanding. If we deal now with clause 32, will we be returning to clause 30 to hear Your Honour's ruling and then, presumably, to deal with clause 30 as the committee sees fit?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, may I say a word on the point of order which has been raised by the hon. member for York-Simcoe? When we agreed to stand clause 30 on Friday, which was done by unanimous consent, there was a request that we go back to some of the earlier clauses which had been stood. However, Your Honour ruled that we could not go back except by unanimous consent. I assume that that ruling stands.

We have gone forward to clause 32, and I think we should now go on to some of the other clauses. I say that, quite frankly, because if we go back to clause 30 we may be on it all day and never get to some of the others. I for one—and I am sure other hon. members in the House feel the same—would like to get to clause 34, which deal with registered retirement savings plans. I say, by way of indicating why, that there are many representations to us from credit unions about taxation at death of registered retirement savings plan funds, and I would like to get to that. My fear, if we go back to clause 30, is that we will be there all day, so I hope we will continue clause 32 and move on to clauses 33 and 34. I will not insist that we go through all 59 clauses, but I certainly want to get to clause 34 before we go back to clause 30.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, today there is much sense in what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is saying. I agree that if we are to be consequent with the ruling you made on Friday to defer examination of certain clauses in the bill and to revert to it only with unanimous consent, unless we have examined the following clauses, if we are to be consequent with that ruling, I feel we should follow the route indicated by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, I think you will recall the circumstances under which this matter was put over. I do not think there is any question but that the matter was set aside for the benefit of Your Honour so that Your Honour could have an opportunity to consider the procedural aspect of the amendment and so that we could return to this matter, which is the most important provision in the bill, before the terms of closure take effect. I think the implication was clear that Your Honour would have an opportunity, as Your Honour indicated, to consider the matter over the weekend, to come back to this House at the first opportunity, and to give us the basis of your decision as to whether the amendment should be allowed to go forward. In any event, eventually we would then be able to revert to that particular clause so that we could have an opportunity to discuss it.

We are in a very peculiar situation, and any other interpretation of that understanding or inference on the basis of our discussions last Friday as to the basis upon which this government and this Minister of Finance operate would put us into a most unusual situation. We would be in a situation whereby, whenever Your Honour had any problem which had to be considered at length, we simply would not be in a position to co-operate with the Chair or to allow the Chair a reasonable opportunity to carry on because we would know that because the government imposes time allocation on almost every financial bill which comes before the House, that would effectively mean that we would not get back to a particular provision.

The only point I make is that I do not think on a Monday the Minister of Finance would want to be unreasonable, but he knows that this provision is crucial and important. I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I too have received many representations from credit unions and cooperative societies in my province with respect to this matter, but the minister and the parliamentary secretary should have some common sense and not preclude us from having a further discussion of this particular provision. It seems to me that the minister does a disservice to the performance of this parliament if he takes this inflexible and intransigent stand, which would deprive us of further discussion of this important and key provision. I know the minister feels terribly uneasy about this, but this matter should be faced by this parliament.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is accusing me of doing something I have not done. According to the rules we are on clause 32. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says he wants to discuss other things. It is not I who conducts the proceedings, and I am being criticized by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. The other day on television I heard his leader telling the nation that we do not want to discuss RRSPs and other provisions in this bill. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has just proposed that we do that in this House, but who do I see getting up? The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar! He says he does not want to talk about RRSPs and so forth, but his own leader was complaining on television last Saturday that we do not have the time to discuss those things. I would rather respect the judgment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre than the judgment of a person who does not even listen to his own boss.

I will abide by the rules of this House, as I always do. I have not said anything so far, and I do not even want to comment, but I think we should respect the wish of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who wants to discuss a very important item in this bill which needs some explanation. I would like to give that explanation to the House and, in so doing, meet the wishes of the Leader of the Opposition, which are not the wishes of his cronies in the House of Commons.

Mr. Railton: Mr. Chairman, I want to support the opinion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that we should discuss the provision regarding registered retirement savings plans before this bill is completed. That is very important to many of my constituents. I have one or two letters which I could show Your Honour right now, but the main thing is that this provision be discussed because I believe there is an injustice which might be corrected. I am sure the Minister of Finance will do so. The important thing is to discuss the bill clause by clause, and in particular clause 34.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I wonder why we have all that hullabaloo. It is very simple; my colleague from York-Simcoe asked you if you were ready to rule on my amendment. You did yourself ask the House to defer the debate on clause 30 in order to have time to consider my amendment. So let us come back to my amendment. That is what was deferred. Since your ruling is ready, why do you not make it known to us so we can carry on our discussion on clause 30?

The hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine is going on an adventure when he talks like that. So, Mr. Chairman, if possible I would like to hear your ruling on my amendment now so that we can consider it at this time.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I may make a suggestion which might be a bit of a compromise. I suggest that we consent to Your Honour's suggestion that you now give the ruling on the amendment to clause 30 so that we will know whether that amendment is before us, but that we then go back to clauses 32, 33, and 34. I am quite prepared, after clause 34 has been disposed of, to go back to the earlier clauses, but I remind hon. members on this side of the House that we are under closure, and if we go back to clause 30 now, the chances are we will be on it all day and never get to anything else. I do not think that is a responsible way to operate.

The Chairman: Order, please. This is not necessarily a question of being prisoner to my decision but a question of being prisoner to our rules and precedents. I refer the hon. member to citation 401 at page 283 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which reads as follows:

The consideration of a clause may, on motion made, be postponed, but the motion may not be made if the clause has been amended. A postponed clause is, in the absence of an order to the contrary, considered after the other clauses of the bill have been disposed of and before new clauses, if any, are brought up.

So this citation answers both points. If I were to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and if my ruling were to accept the amendment, clause 30 could not be postponed, if I interpret the situation correctly. I am at the disposal of the committee. If I were in the chair and acting as Mr. Speaker, the situation would be different; I could delay orders of the day. But we are now in committee of the whole and we have before us consideration of clause 32, so my only alternative is to obtain unanimous consent of the committee to allow me to give a ruling on clause 30.

Right now we are on clause 32. My suggestion to the committee is for representatives of the parties to get together and try to seek agreement as to the time at which I could give my ruling, but at the same time hon. members will have to take into consideration whatever effect this ruling might have after it is made.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, I want to say that there are 59 clauses in this bill, that we have studied only 31 of them, of which three are standing, so that only 28 clauses have been approved up to now. So I think the wisest way to proceed is the one suggested by Beauchesne himself, to study the following clauses, and if the opposition is really interested in going back to clause 30 which they have been discussing here for months, we will do it when the time comes, and the opposition will just have to go faster in passing the remaining clauses. We are now at clause 32 and we do want to study clauses 32, 33, 34 and so on.

The Chairman: Obviously, even if this has nothing to do with the Chair, I must say that there is a constraint of limitation of the debate in committee. I hope hon. members will also keep that in mind.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I was going to remind members of the committee of just what you have stated, that we are under a time allocation. I think there is a certain concern that we might not have sufficient time to consider other clauses, such as the ones dealing with registered retirement savings. I would suggest that we take up your suggestion of trying to have the parties work out some solution to this.

I can speak for my party when I say that we are not looking for further prolonged debate on clause 30. We feel basically that the amendment to it should be considered, and so should the clause itself, but probably from our standpoint not much more time than half an hour would be needed to dispose of both the amendment and clause 30, and we could then go on to clauses 31, 32, and so on. I say this because surely the committee will agree that the most controversial clause in this entire bill is clause 30, and if, because of closure, we are not even able to dispose of clause 30 in committee of the whole, it will be a most strange situation. I suggest that we not forget that when we were on clause 1 the Minister of Finance refused to answer questions on clause 30 beyond a certain point. Here we are in the ridiculous and ludicrous situation in which, on Friday, having finally reached clause 30 to which an amendment was proposed, on which a ruling is to be made as to whether or not it is admissible, the committee might well have to dispose of the bill because of closure without having at all considered clause 30.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member has said something that needs to be corrected. When we were on clause 1, I entertained and replied to many questions on clause 30. You might remember, Mr. Chairman, you rendered a decision that I should answer, if I wanted to, questions on any of the clauses even though we were on clause 1, and I answered many questions on clause 30. Some which were too specific and not confined to the ruling of the Chair I did not answer, but I took a lot of time replying to questions on clause 30, and we spent practically all day Friday considering clause 30.

If we had not come across an amendment on which the Chair was to give a ruling, we would still be on clause 30 today. Members of the opposition can only blame themselves for the situation in which they find themselves today. Today we should go on to consideration of clauses 32, 33, and 34, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre stated that he had some questions on clause 34, and so does the hon. member for Welland.

I am surprised that hon. members are at last willing to collaborate with us and come to some agreement, after 22 days of trying to come to an agreement on this. We have had to impose time allocation because opposition members have not agreed to anything, but now because they find themselves in a difficult procedural situation, they want us to bail them out. If they want to, we are willing to deal with them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: You bail us out?

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. First, let me say that if the hon. member for Welland wanted to make sure that he had an opportunity to speak on clause 34, the easiest thing he could have done was to ask his leader to revoke closure and thus allow ample time for discussion of the bill. One of the things I deeply resent, coming as I do from the province of Alberta, is the disregard by this government of the people of that province, because this point is of fundamental importance to the residents of Alberta, and for this bill to be passed not knowing whether or not the amendment is acceptable is abhorrent to people in Alberta. I hope, sir, that you will extend that courtesy to the residents of Alberta and at least rule on this amendment, thus affording us the opportunity of knowing exactly whether or not the amendment is acceptable.

The Chairman: I appreciate the invitation of the hon. member and I am ready to give my ruling, but according to the rules I would have to go back to consideration of clause 30, which can only be done by unanimous consent, and there does not seem to be consent. Is there consent to reverting to clause 30?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Chairman: There does not seem to be consent.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak on clause 32, but if there are more arguments, I will yield.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. May I suggest that we give unanimous consent to reverting to clause 30 at five o'clock? What is wrong with that?

Mr. Alexander: The Liberals are sure to find something wrong with it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, in keeping with the representation that was made a few moments ago by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, and applying it to what has now been said by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I think we should ensure that the balance of the clauses are dealt with and that there be ample time also, within the limited time created by the fact that we are now under closure, to have the matter dealt with. I hope you will put the question to see whether there is unanimous consent to deal with it in that way. I think it would solve most difficulties and allow the committee to proceed with other matters as well as deal with clause 30, and also give you sufficient time with respect to your ruling, which might be helpful.

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether opposition members could give us any indication of the time which we would be spending on debate of clause 30. Will we be stuck on clause 30 and have no opportunity to revert to the other clauses on which some of us wish to speak? We recognize the importance of clause 30, but there are other clauses on which some of us might want to speak, and if we revert to clause 30 at five o'clock is there any kind of agreement that we will complete consideration of that clause in time to allow us to proceed to other clauses?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I hope the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre agrees with what I am about to say. The suggestion of the hon. member for York-Simcoe was not an idle one. Consideration of that clause would not extend beyond 30 minutes. Perhaps we can deal with it commencing at five o'clock.

Mr. Chrétien: At this time the parliamentary secretary is talking with the opposition. There is a lot of time remaining between now and five o'clock. We can proceed with the consideration of clauses 32, 33, and 34. If an agreement can be reached, we will go along with it. I cannot change the rules of the House. Hon. members on this side would like an opportunity to ask questions on clauses other than clause 30. We have been already two days in committee on clause 30. Actually I do not mind. I am here, in any event. It is easier for me to return to clause 30, because I have dealt with it during the last two months and know it well.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, on clause 32, can the Minister of Finance indicate how long the $750,000 rollup provisions were in effect prior to the April 10 budget?

Mr. Chrétien: There have been changes from year to year. We started at $200,000 and moved up to $400,000. Now we are at $750,000. I can provide the hon. member with different dates, but I think $750,000 was introduced in the April, 1977, budget. In any event, I can provide the hon. member with an answer later.

Mr. Ellis: My understanding is that the actual implementation date for the $750,000 rollup was less than a year ago. I have read the details of the debate on Friday afternoon. I notice the rather incriminating comments of the Minister of State for Small Business. Does the Minister of Finance feel that anyone could actually plan a merger when the rules change so quickly? On Friday afternoon there were some rather sarcastic comments about slick operators. I am talking about bona fide companies and firms of chartered accountants which are in excellent standing throughout the country. Are they being accused of slickness because they used rules which were less than a year old when mergers were planned?

Mr. Chrétien: Dealing with this question, I should like to explain to the hon. member that the $750,000 maximum accumulated profit was granted in 1976, and not 1977. That rule is not being changed at all. In clause 32 we are attempting to block a possible loophole where people in holding companies can multiply the $750,000 by ten, and manage to get $7.5 million out of a corporation before being taxed at the higher rate. We want to prevent people from taking money out of holding companies at the small business rate, which makes no sense when the amount accumulated is up to $7.5 million. We are not changing the $750,000, which was included in the 1976 budget. It is being maintained at that level, but we are attempting to plug a possible loophole right away so that there will be no duplication of that privileged rate through holding companies.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, I suggest a change is being made. Obviously that is so. This clause is not included for no reason at all. To change the $750,000 rollup on the premise that some companies might take advantage of it seems unreasonable. Why in Heaven's name was it put there in the first place, if companies were not expected to take advantage of it? If the dividend rollup is allowed, there is no suggestion that those dividends can get into the hands of individuals without tax being paid. It merely rolls into the corporation. If the corporation puts those dividends in the hands of individual shareholders, of course they are required to pay taxes on them. If the department did not intend this provision to be used, then it should not have been put in there in the first place, because it misleads any competent company which is attempting to deal with this act.

Mr. Chrétien: On Friday afternoon I gave lengthy explanations, one in English and one in French. It was to ensure the $750,000 rule applies to small business. This clause is to prevent abuse by people who could form holding companies in order to get more profit at a lower rate than they are entitled to according to the act. Small businesses will have complete freedom to use this provision to the maximum. It was just an attempt to plug a possible loophole.

My explanation on Friday was rather technical. I suppose I could read it again, but I advise the hon. member to read it. Small businesses are entitled to have $150,000 of profit in a year at the low rate, up to an accumulated amount of $750,000. There is no problem with that. In theory, the people who invest up to 11 per cent of the shares of a corporation could get an accumulated amount up to $7.5 million at the low rate out of that company. We do not want people to use rules, established for the protection of small business, in order to pay lower rates than they should pay as big corporations.

Mr. Ellis: I read the explanations of the minister in both languages. I am sorry the minister does not understand the problem.

Mr. Chrétien: I do.

Mr. Ellis: I would not have used the word "technical" with regard to his explanation. I would have used the word "convoluted". It sounds to me as if the minister is attempting to ensure that small companies cannot get together and become big companies. It is tremendous to have various provisions for small businessmen, but I think this is an attempt to prevent small businesses from becoming big businesses. There is nothing wrong with big business.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, there is nothing wrong with big business, but it should not have the advantage of the same rate of taxes which small business has. That seems to be the only point of difference between the hon. member and myself. We have decided to give a preferential rate of tax to people in small business. When these people go from the small league into the big league, they are required to pay big league tax rather than small. Any company which has achieved major league status must abide by the rules and regulations affecting big companies and not small ones.

Mr. Ellis: I am at a loss to understand where a distinction between big and small companies was made in the original legislation. As I clearly recall, when this $750,000 roll-up to corporations was put into effect there was no restriction as to big or small business, it was for all business. Evidence to support that it was for all businesses lies in the fact that certain varying sized corporations have taken advantage of it. Now we are being told that if a business is too big it cannot take advantage of this. It seems to me that is clearly a discrimination against small businesses growing to be big. I cannot help but think that this particular clause is one that discriminates against and is prejudicial toward the growth of Canadian companies.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the rule in respect of $750,000 is a rule which makes a distinction between the small and the big. When you have accumulated more than $750,000 in profit you have changed leagues. You then go to the rate that applies to big business. You can make $150,000 profit per year, up to an accumulative amount of $750,000. When you reach that level in five or ten years, you are taxed at the rate that applies to big corporations.

I think what the hon. member wants is a rate of taxation for all corporations, big or small. We have made a distinction for years between small and big. At the time you have accumulated $750,000 in profit you are no longer in the small league. At that point you are beginning to be a big guy and you have to take the responsibilities of the big guys, and that means you have to pay your share of taxes.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, just to conclude very briefly, the minister made a point a moment ago about trying to save taxes because of the $750,000 limit which puts you into the big league. It seems to me there was a commission report just recently which agreed that perhaps some of those corporate taxes could have been reduced. I am not making a case for that right now. I want to ask the minister one final question. He makes the point that ten companies could in fact roll-up $7.5 million. If nine companies rolling up that much is something too big, and one is too small, is there an area in between of say, two, three or four companies with which the minister might agree?

Mr. Chrétien: The answer is no.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I have just a few questions on clause 32. I realize and understand the necessity of plugging a loophole with this clause, a loophole that would greatly extend abuses in respect of the $750,000 allowance. Is the minister aware that the amendment means that shareholders of connected corporations will have to reach an agreement in order that the 25 per cent allowance can apply on an on-going basis to the $750,000 limit? In other words, does he realize that if there is not a complete shareholder agreement that a small business, through the lack of ability to get that agreement, will start to lose the benefit of the $750,000 accumulative allowance? There is a definite problem here, and I hope I am explaining it properly.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I think that when the shareholders cannot agree, this represents a problem that they must work out among themselves. We cannot intervene at that level of their operations. There are rules and they know the rules. If there is a need for them to agree, then they have to agree. Of course, sometimes when there is a need for agreement like that, one shareholder can use that in order to bargain something for himself. That is always a possibility in what we call free enterprise.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, in his answer the minister has explained quite capably the point I was trying to make. This amendment adds an unbelievable depth of complication to an already complicated measure. For some reason or other the minister seems to think people in small business have unlimited resources of earnings and funds with which to hire the best accountants and lawyers in the land in order to understand this legislation. I suggest that further amendments are needed on this point, and that probably when the next budget is brought forward, no matter which party is in government, it will have to contain such amendments.

I also suggest that the Minister of Finance will have to contact his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, in order to conduct an extensive advertising campaign, because the people in the small business community will definitely not understand the rules being created by this amendment, in spite of the fact that the minister is plugging a loophole, and fully understand the necessity. I suggest it is for this reason that closure in respect of the previous budget measures and those of this budget does a great disservice to the people of Canada. Because of the limited time, we are leaving unsolved those things in respect of which some of us perhaps might have input and might help to resolve.

Right now the minister is closing the loophole, and I understand the need for that, but he is leaving open wide areas of confusion which require further explanation. These are areas which small businesses, particularly in terms of cost, are not going to be able to understand. This is one of the reasons I speak with some impatience about time allocation in respect of this debate.

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member is making a point with which I agree. I did not have to adopt a time allocation only for my own pleasure. If hon. members on the other side had agreed with this hon. member that there were some very important clauses to be dealt with in this bill they would not perhaps have taken fifteen, sixteen, or seventeen days at second reading, allowing only a few days for study in the committee. This is a problem we are now faced with, as a result. We do not have unlimited time in this House of Commons in which to pass legislation. Because it suited the political purposes of some hon. members to drag this bill out in time, we are now faced with this problem of proceeding on a time allocation. This is not a problem of my creation.

If opposition members had agreed to two or three days debate on second reading, as is normal, we might have used the rest of the time on a clause by clause study. What frustrates me in this regard is the fact that this hon. member is one of a number of members who look at problems with the idea of finding solutions, and some of the things that he has suggested make a lot of sense. I do not have time for prolonged consideration now because I spent all my time listening to speeches at the second reading stage.

I agree with the hon. member that this is a complicated clause and is difficult to understand, but I am quite satisfied it will not create the type of problem for small businesses to which the hon. member has referred. Most small businesses are not associated with holding companies and are not trying to take advantage of this measure. I think that applies to the great majority. What we are doing here is making sure there are not big buys with holding companies who are trying to get the favourable tax rate which applies to the small business. That is the only purpose of this amendment. If this creates the kind of difficulty the hon. member envisages, I will be the first one to recognize that he had a valid point.

We have to proceed with this bill, and now we have only three and a half hours left. It is not me who has created that difficult position in which we find ourselves. It was created by the opposition members who decided to forget all about the clauses of the bill and make general political speeches. Now they are a bit embarrassed in finding themselves trying to bail out the PQ who two weeks ago agreed with me and last week did not agree with me. I am just reporting the facts. The PQ have slandered themselves so badly they are just wishing I would bail them out, but I will not.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, that filibuster by the Minister of Finance is just about as disgusting a display as you can get in a committee that is under time allocation. I want to remind the Minister of Finance that in the debate on second reading of this bill the Liberal members have had all kinds of opportunity to give input to the government, opportunity that the members in the opposition, no matter in what party, do not have. This is our opportunity to question the minister's decisions and the advice the government is getting. I have never seen a tax bill in my short history in this House that has as many false statements. It still has loopholes and flaws that need to be corrected.

It is closure and not giving us the time to explain and explore the bill that causes the problem. We do not have unlimited resources, unlimited mandarins, and unlimited academics feeding us. We have to work and dig, and I lose my patience when I hear speeches like that of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member is being unfair to the members on this side of the House. The tax bill, according to the rules of this House, is not to be debated before it is tabled in this House of Commons. Some members on the other side have faulted me on that ground because I talked to the provincial ministers of finance before the budget. The members of my party do not have an opportunity to talk about the tax bill beforehand. The only occasion they have is when we are in committee of the whole. As in second reading, the time in committee of the whole has been taken up much more by the opposition. The members on this side of the House are very able and sometimes can make better contributions than the hon. members opposite.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, before I raise a couple of questions on clause 32 I hope the minister will not forget when he cites the number of days the various debates have taken with respect to this bill, that the hard truth is his own followers used up 35 per cent of the time at second reading when this bill was before the House. To say that we used up the time and that he had no alternative but to bring in closure, both at second reading and at committee of the whole, I would say is certainly not constructive, remembering that we now have only a few hours left due to the closure brought in by this minister.

Following my questions on clause 32 on Friday, I was wondering if over the weekend the Minister of Finance had any better luck in determining just how many small businesses may be caught with the new change. The thing my party is concerned about is that this provision was put in place presuming that many people would take advantage of it, and we initially felt that it was desirable. However, people have invested capital in small businesses only to find now that the ground rules are being changed and that the dividends they normally expected to get back from the small business still may flow, but if they do flow they will no longer be treated as a credit against the cumulative dividend account. In short, the small business may run over the $750,000 basic limit which they were given in the initial proposal. How many small business corporations are we likely talking about? Even a ball park figure would help.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I answered several times last Friday that we do not have an exact number. Moreover the intention underlying this clause is not to prevent small businesses from taking advantage of the preferential taxation level. This amendment will not prevent any small business from taking advantage of the preferential taxation level. This amendment will not prevent any small business from taking advantage of the tax rate it has to pay. What we want to do is prevent "holding companies"; there is no French equivalent, Mr. Chairman; I looked it up in the Larousse dictionary before coming into the House. This expression is an English creation, I imagine. We do not want large businesses which have larger tax responsibilities to benefit from the preferential tax rate for small businesses through holding companies. This is what we are seeking. We do not want to penalize any small business, and I think the impression created by the hon. member when he expresses himself in this manner does not reflect the truth.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, our concern, which I have already expressed, is that there are many small businesses in this country which are able to win new capital funds from corporations that felt they would like, first of all, to invest in a small business and, secondly, that that small business would be free to pay dividends upstream to the corporations as they saw fit without impairing the position that small business is in if they were, for example, to pay that dividend to an individual. What I am trying to determine, having now got various investors such as I have described locked into position, is if the government could indicate the parameters of what we are talking about. Is it simply a hypothetical theory we are speaking of, these situations as the minister has indicated where there may be ten holding companies and they are all taking dividends upstream and that, rather than have a $750,-000 limit, it could well be $750 million? Does the minister know of a concrete example and, if so, how many?

It is most unfortunate that venture capital has not been facilitated by this government to a much greater extent than has happened to date where small businesses are concerned. If this provision has been working well and if small businesses have been picking up capital in the way which I have described, I think it is most unfortunate that we now have the minister saying, "Oops, we made a mistake, there is a loophole there. We didn't really realize that corporations might take advantage of this type of investment and now we are going to plug the loophole." It is most unfortunate if, in plugging the loophole, they detract from the flow of capital which might ordinarily go into small businesses.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is asking me how many companies proceed that way. I do not know the exact number, but I know several companies have started using that tax evasion method. During the numerous consultations my officials have had with the community of fiscal advisers, expert counsel, accountants or consultants, they found out that tax evasion method was about to become abnormally prevalent and that is why they have decided to take immediate steps to put an end to that trend before it gives way to excessive abuses. Obviously, Mr. Chairman, we have no intention, as the hon. member for York-Simcoe would like to make believe, to prevent larger companies from investing in small businesses. They will have a right to do so and I will even say we hope they will do so increasingly. We just want to make sure they will not invest in small businesses to avoid paying the taxes they should normally pay.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I would like to give the minister an opportunity to correct what I think he unintentionally put forth, which is a terrible smear on people who have taken advantage of this section. The minister said that it was a tax evasion. Tax evasion is a criminal offence, and I would like to give the minister an opportunity to correct his words to tax avoidance, if that is really what he meant.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I am extremely embarrassed because I do not recall my exact words in French. I understand the difference between the English meanings of evasion and avoidance. I was referring to avoidance when I was speaking French, but I do not know what the translator may have done with my comments. The word is avoidance and not evasion.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for clearing up that particular point. I will approach my question in this way: bearing in mind that in order to preserve the special tax small businesses can enjoy under this provision, no shareholder—certainly, no public company and no corporate shareholder—can own over 49 per cent of a small business. For example, if a public corporation took 51 per cent of a corporation which no longer has small business characteristics—and bearing in mind that all of the investments we are talking about by definition must be minority investments in the sense that, even if they are corporate, they cannot hold over 49 per cent of the company that they are investing in, would the minister indicate why they have made this section operative only from April 10? I can see the effects if they feel there is a loophole and they have made an error.

I can see some excuse to say that after April 10, if a person makes an investment in a small corporation, the dividends that are paid by that small business corporation upstream will not be eligible as far as the credits on the $750,000 cumulative dividend account are concerned. I think that would be much fairer to those who have taken advantage of the income tax provision in good faith and who are now finding the dividends that they were anticipating no longer will be payable because of the retroactive effect of the amendment the minister is proposing.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I am informed that under the regulations this applies only after April 10. It is not retroactive in the sense that we will not be looking back at what happened in the past.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, obviously we can get into a definition of what is retroactive. But let us assume that somebody has invested $100,000 on April 7 in good faith. He put that money in, anticipating that if the company makes a profit and dividends are paid, he in turn will be able to enjoy those dividends, and the small business corporations will not lose the credit they otherwise would get with respect to their $750,000 dividend account.

My understanding of this section, and I hope the minister will correct me if I am wrong, is that as of April 10 what that person on April 7 thought he was getting into has now changed. If dividends are now paid to him at any time after April 10, the small business concern no longer will be able to treat it as a credit against the cumulative dividend account. If that is so, that is why I am saying this is retroactive. It is applying to investments made before April 10 and saying henceforth that all dividends on those investments flowing upstream to some corporate entity will not be treated the same as if the dividends were payable to individuals.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, in my judgment this is a loophole which we are plugging. The hon. member is saying in effect, "make the loophole operative for everyone up to today so advantages taken will be made legal". This is a loophole that we are plugging. The intention of the legislation is clear when we determine that small businesses could accumulate up to $750,000 in profit. I do not understand why the hon. member wants me to unplug it, or plug it only partially. I have no choice; either I plug it or I do not. You are either pregnant or you are not.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I only wish this minister was a little more pregnant with some suitable economic policies for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for York-Simcoe has no sense of humour.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, clearly the minister has no sense of humour because I meant my comment in the most humorous way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: To come back to the main point, I believe the government and certainly this minister underestimate the lack of confidence that they generate every time they change the rules in midstream. In their wisdom if they saw fit to change the Income Tax Act to facilitate what is covered in this section, if they thought a loophole had occurred, they should have been content to say that "after April 10 we are not going to allow this to continue any longer. But if people did make an investment in good faith as a result of our provision, the government will not somehow or other retroactively kill the effect of the investment that they have made."

The minister should recognize that if the government is trying to encourage people to go into small businesses, which is a very risky investment area, the government will minimize future forms of encouragement because when people start to move and take advantage of what is a good income tax position, they then remember that back on April 10, 1978, in a similar provision they were retroactively legislated against, and the dividend structure which they thought they were getting into was changed to a less desirable one, certainly for small business. My question to the minister is: does this not concern him with today's lack of confidence in business generally, and with the crying need for more money to be invested in small businesses? Does he not feel he is treating the various people who have invested in small businesses in a very shoddy way by retroactively catching them, the way he is now proposing?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we have a bill before this House on small business that is to be dealt with soon. What the hon. member wants me to do is to help the small businesses in perpetuating loopholes, not in favour of small business but in favour of big business. There is a proposition before this House to plug loopholes that could benefit big business. It is not affecting small business.

In another bill which will come before this House after we have finished with this one, we will be discussing small business and this bill will directly help small business, not by creating loopholes but by giving incentives. Here we are plugging a loophole that could benefit big business but will not affect small business negatively. The opposition have it completely wrong. If they want to discuss the positive things that we are doing with small business, let us pass this bloody bill as quickly as we can and we can then go on to the other one. We have been discussing this one a long, long time.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, while we are dealing with clause 32, and it is very much an income tax consideration, would the minister indicate why he has hesitated to facilitate venture investment corporations, such as are now in place in Ontario? The minister often takes guidance from the Treasurer of Ontario, and that provincial government has passed legislation permitting investment corporations to invest in small businesses. Why does the minister see fit not to pass the suitable amendments to the federal Income Tax Act in order to make funds going into venture investment corporations comparably attractive, from an income tax standpoint, as they are in Ontario?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that this clause has anything to do with venture investment corporations. At this time the Minister of State for Small Business is discussing this concept within the government and outside in the private sector. The government has not yet decided exactly in which form it will be moving in that regard.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, when the minister says that venture investment corporations have nothing to do with this section, this is the narrow interpretation which he likes to take. After all this section will put in place a new deterrent to those who would like to invest in small businesses. If he persists in going ahead with it, and if he feels there is some loophole that he has to plug, I think it is relevant that we know to what extent they will facilitate venture investment corporations, because something is needed in Canada to ensure that more capital is generated for investment in small businesses.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we are doing that just to make sure that those who invest in small business are not out to milk the small business, but to help small business. That is exactly why we designed these sections. I have replied in general to this question close to 50 times. I do not know what I can add at this time.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, when the minister says that he has replied to this question 50 times, that is just not true. I asked one question, plus a supplementary question, concerning venture investment corporations. That is all the questioning has amounted to at this point. I have asked all my questions. I am disappointed that the minister has not seen fit to accept at least partially some of our suggestions with regard to clause 32.

For good order, I wonder if the officials and the minister can give us the figures I requested earlier. It was on another clause. At that time they were just doing the calculations. I requested the comparative figures for research and development write-offs, comparing a 48 per cent tax corporation to a 20 per cent tax corporation. I asked that because it was my understanding that the write-offs for research and development as proposed by the minister were much more attractive for large corporations compared to small corporations.

I know the officials have the figures available. In fact I know they have completed their calculations. For the record, I think it would be a good time for us to get them into Hansard.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I will be very glad to provide an answer to that question when we get back to clause 6.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 32 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 33.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, dealing with clause 33 I wonder if the minister can first indicate where this clause is covered under the income tax motions?

Mr. Chrétien: In the first line of the ways and means motion where we talk about "other matters". This is one of the other matters. This is a technical amendment. Technical amendments are always handled in this way. A ruling of the Chair gave us some flexibility there. This is one of the other matters. Further, the hon. member should have wakened up a little bit earlier because this is consequential to clause 5 which has already been passed. I can read the technical explanation.

This technical amendment is consequential on the amendment adding subsection 20(12) to the act provided in subclause 5(3) of this bill, which has already been passed. It adds a subparagraph 126(7)(c)(iii) to the act effective for 1978 and subsequent taxation years. The amendment simply ensures that any foreign income tax which a taxpayer has deducted in determining the taxable income cannot also be claimed as a foreign tax credit.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether it is necessary to comment when the minister keeps making partisan remarks. However, when he says we should have wakened up at clause 5, I suggest that he perhaps tell his own draftsmen that they should have wakened up. He will note there is no mention in clause 33 that is consequential upon the passage of clause 5. Perhaps it is his own draftsmen, if he wants to fault somebody for being asleep at the switch.

In all seriousness, in future when we are dealing with income tax motions, if the minister is going place such reliance on quotes such as "or other matters", I wonder if he could at the time of bringing in that tax motion give us an addendum as to what he intends to include under "other matters". Frankly, it is a disgrace for an income tax motion to be brought in and the minister, under the grandfather clause of "other matters", to be able to make extensive, as he calls them, technical amendments to the Income Tax Act with really no notice to the Canadian public whatsoever.

It is well founded that the whole purpose of ways and means motions or income tax motions is to put the Canadian public on notice as to what the government has in mind with regard to legislation that will be coming down. Nobody would normally expect that clause after clause in an Income Tax Act bill would be tucked in under the guise of saying this is what we meant when we said "or other matters" in the income tax motion.

I ask the minister, in all seriousness, that if he should bring in another budget, and hopefully he will never bring in another one, to undertake to give an addendum to at least the income tax motion to make it clear that in fact they intend to cover such things as "or other matters".

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the hon. member is trying to achieve. This has been a common practice in this House for a long time. It has been done this way for years. I do not have to change the tradition of this House every time I bring in a new budget.

The hon. member is trying to create the impression that the public has been misled. This bill has been before the public for five weeks. We have discussed only that for five weeks. For the hon. member now to say there was no mention in the ways and means motion is ludicrous.

This bill has been before the House for five weeks. It is only after five weeks that he thinks of asking questions about this so-called procedural problem which has never existed. The draftsmen have acted in a most proper fashion. It is evident hon. members opposite want to present the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre from asking questions on clause 34. They are filibustering. I am sorry, Stanley, but there is nothing I can do about it.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, when is this minister going to grow up? If he thinks that being elected to this House, certainly to this side, means that we simply rubber stamp every daft piece of legislation that he brings into this House without even questioning him, I hope somebody will teach him a lesson.

We have many questions on clause 34. It is not just hon. members to the left who will have questions. Surely the whole purpose of committee of the whole is to do exactly what we have been doing. I find the more we get to the quick of this minister, the more he likes to become very indignant, trying to get the centre of attention off his own incompetence.

We are eager to get to clause 34 and many other clauses in this bill. If it had not been for closure, we certainly would have done that. To have the minister now stand up and imply that we are asking questions on clauses 32 and 33 simply to delay others asking questions on clause 34 simply is not true.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member speaks as though we are preventing them from doing their job while in committee of the whole. There are four members there, while we have 30 on this side. The people will know who has an interest in this legislation.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 34—"Annuitant".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I am glad we have reached clause 34. It and two or three other clauses include the changes the government is making with regard to Registered Retirement Savings Plans.

As I said earlier, and as my friend from Saskatoon-Biggar pointed out, we have had a good deal of correspondence from credit unions and co-operative trust companies across Canada about these changes. In fact I have in my hand a document which comes from my hon. friend's city, entitled "Trust Trends", published by the Co-operative Trust Company of Canada, 333 Fourth Avenue North, Saskatoon.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Part of my constituency.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I had hoped it was not in the other part of Saskatoon and that I would get support from our friends in the official opposition on this matter.

• (1632)

It is not my purpose to ask questions about the whole philosophy of RRSPs or about the philosophy of the changes the minister is making, but it seems to me that some of those who have studied the legislation since the budget speech and the introduction of the bill, have made a few points which are good, and I hope the minister will look at them. The one point on which all the correspondence I have received agrees had to do with the proposal for taxing funds which had been placed into an RRSP, at the time of the death of the planholder if he had not converted it into an annuity, or at the death of a planholder's spouse.

I propose to read a couple of paragraphs from a document I have in my hand because I think they make the point better than my own words:

> Under current rules, it is the recipient of the RRSP funds who is taxed when the planholder dies. It is now proposed to include the RRSP funds on the planholder's final income tax return.
> This means taxes could be even more severe than if the planholder had withdrawn the funds in a lump sum before he died, since such items as salary, capital gains and accrued investment income must be reported on the same return.

Two or three paragraphs in which examples are given follow. I do not propose to take up the time of the committee by reading the examples but I have checked them and they seem to be valid as I understand the legislation. They make it clear that the tax on a fund the planholder might leave, say, to two children, is much greater under the new arrangement than under the old.

The whole purpose of tax legislation in connection with RRSPs was to encourage people to put money away to add to their retirement income. Along with that goes the right of such a planholder to leave any funds he may have acquired to his spouse, his children or other heirs. Now the minister is changing the taxation rules to make the tax more severe than it would have been had the planholder taken his money out before he died, which seems unfair.

The document refers to a few other matters. One is under the heading of fixed term annuities; another is in connection with the fact that rules governing the registered retirement income fund have not yet been produced. Then there is a complaint about the age at which an annuity might begin; it has been the rule that an annuity must be taken out not later than just before the planholder was 71. Now the additional rule is that no annuity can commence before age 60. I should like to have the minister's comments on these points, but the one which appears most important to me is the provision which would tax on the death of a planholder any funds he left in such a way that the value of what he leaves to his heirs in that year is seriously reduced.

It seems to me the minister has done something without thinking it through. I am sure he has received more correspondence on the subject than we have, and I hope that today he is in a position to offer some correction or assurance that the matter will be looked into. I might add that this is why I was anxious to arrange our business in such a way as to enable the committee to deal with this clause, clause 34, which begins on page 37. The offending parts of the clause are between lines 20 and 30 on page 42. I hope the minister will tell us what he intends to do to meet these just complaints.

Mr. Chrétien: I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me occasion to say something about this clause. Earlier in this debate the hon. member for Assiniboia raised a question with regard to it, and I have received representations on the matter from many members of parliament, credit unions, and elsewhere.

There is a problem here and I do not think I am in a position to find the proper solution right now. This is an arrangement under which we are seeking to give more flexibility to a person who retires. Previously he had to transfer his RRSPs, either in cash or in the form of a life annuity, at age 71. We are now establishing a new system which will offer more flexibility. At the same time, there will be an accumulation of funds. We want to help the retired person and his spouse to benefit from accumulative savings through RRSPs for the rest of their lives, but we have to take into account the effect on beneficiaries.

The department has received a number of representations on this complex issue, but I have to say it is my intention to examine the subject further and, after discussion with the credit unions and others who have an interest in the matter, to find a solution. I do not believe I can correct this situation at this late stage in the bill. However, if other hon. members want to make representations to me I am willing to listen to them and answer their questions. But I am not in a position to provide the House with appropriate solutions in such a short time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I appreciate the minister's recognition of the fact that there may be a problem which ought to be considered. This being the case, I wish he would find some way of dealing with it before the bill is passed, because once the bill is passed it will be hard to change the situation by regulation.

I agree with him that the government has to be careful to see that this means of avoiding taxation is not abused. The purpose of the RRSP set-up is not in order to enable people to save money for other purposes than retirement—to give it away, for example. But where a person puts money into an RRSP and dies before he gets the chance to put it into an annuity, he should not be considered as committing some sort of abuse. He is not trying to filch money from the treasury by dying. In such a case, it seems to me, the money he leaves should not be treated any worse as far as taxation is concerned than it would have been had he taken it out and paid the tax on it. I hope the minister will find a way to meet the pleas of the credit unions on that point.

Mr. Chrétien: As I understand the situation, we are not making it more difficult for a planholder who dies to pay the taxes he would have been obliged to pay had he decided in the same year to withdraw his funds under his RRSP. The hon. member realizes that when a person dies he has to meet other tax liabilities associated with the winding up of his affairs. There is a question regarding capital gains which come to fruition and so forth. That is an added complication, and that is why I would like to study it very carefully. In fact, we have received the letters which have been circulated by credit unions, mainly in western Canada, but what the credit unions mean is not very clear.

This is a matter which needs some study and clarification, but we do not think that with the introduction of RRIFs we are compounding the problem of a person who has an RRSP and dies. Either you take it out or, when you die, you have to pay the tax in that year. We are not adding to the problem. If when a person dies he has other assets which are considered revenue that year, that is a different problem which could jack up a person's revenue and increase the amount of tax to be paid. However, the law has not changed. It was like that before.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister one other question, and then I shall be glad to let others carry on. Is the Co-operative Trust Company of Canada, which has its head office in Saskatoon, not correct when it says that under current rules it is the recipient of the RRSP funds who is taxed when the planholder dies, whereas under the new rules RRSP funds will be included as part of the planholder's final tax? Is it not that which makes the difference? Let us not mix this up with RRIF's. Let us stick to RRSPs. Is that not the change which is being made by the clause on the middle of page 42, and could that not be corrected?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I think that the interpretation of the hon. member, generally speaking, is correct. This is a very complex issue which has been raised by credit unions, and we want to get in touch with them to try to clarify the nature of the problem. We were made aware of this only in the last few days. The credit unions are aware of the difficulties there are with interpretation and with a modification of this situation. I want the hon. member to understand that I am willing and eager to undertake that this problem will be reviewed. By the time we have another piece of budget legislation, probably within a year, I think we will change this situation, but we need to have consultations, discussions, and analysis before we can come to a fair solution to the problem raised by the hon. member and others.

Mr. Railton: Mr. Chairman, I have nothing very new to add to the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but I would like to know if the change he wants, and the change which is being considered, is just for a person who has an RRSP fund and dies, but who has not converted it into an annuity because of early death. Is that the lump sum which would be taxed at death? It is my understanding that in most cases spouses share the same plans, and when one dies, the other takes on with the annuity. I do not understand how registered retirement savings plans could be made out properly in any other way. I would like to have that cleared up.

The other thing is that in a general discussion of such things as retirement savings plans, capital gains, and even in insurance investment question, which was causing so much consternation two or three months ago, it seems to me that the reason all these plans are taken out is to provide for individuals at retirement and also to provide for their immediate families who may suffer or who may not have had the good fortune of having retirement savings plans, insurance, or a chance to have capital gains. I think all those things should be looked at by the Minister of Finance because when it comes to a man's death, his immediate family should be provided for. That is really what any normal parent is concerned about, so this should also be looked at in the same way.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I will just take note of the remarks made by the hon. member. They will be very useful to us in the consideration of the problem.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I would like to question the minister on clause 34 as well. I agree with the representations made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, except possibly for one point. I detected that the hon. member felt that it would be quite in order literally to tax away a person's inheritance. I think that inheritances should not simply be taxed away. Inheritances are accumulated assets for families.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

However, before we get involved in this discussion, I point out that while other hon. members do not find tax laws complicated, I find them extremely complicated. The minister now says he wants to consult. There have now been representations from caisses populaires, credit unions, and insurance underwriters. They want to know now. This is the minister's legislation. It is not our legislation. The minister spends a lot of time telling us that we have spent a lot of time on this bill. Whether that argument is right or wrong, really is not the point. By the very fact that the minister comes into this House with legislation, he should know the answers. That is his job. He now tells us to pass this legislation, which could have far-reaching implications for people who have RRSPs and, frankly, that is not good enough because I cannot go back to caisses populaires, credit unions, and to other people who hold RRSPs and tell them that they will be taxed at a higher rate than they were before, that the minister has changed the rules of the game but that it is all right because the minister will make some changes after consultation. That is just not good enough.

If we go back to the March 31, 1977, budget, the minister will recall that his predecessor decided that the tax man would literally remove from widows the small annuities and the small RRSPs they were going to get. This minister is not reaching with a long arm into people's graves and taking this money out, but he is still going to get part of his death tax back. I ask the minister whether we are not going from fair taxation to confiscation of property and assets. I really believe we are moving more and more in that direction.

People purchase RRSPs to get tax breaks. That is tax avoidance. There is nothing wrong with that. That is good financial management of one's personal affairs. People also purchase RRSPs to make sure that their immediate families have a certain income. I suppose we could all say we should not save or prepare for the future. We could decide not to worry about our families, and let the government take over. That is not the way I want to live, and I do not believe that is the way the majority of Canadians want to live. If people want to save for the future, I believe they should be commended, and not penalized, but that is what is happening here.

RRSPs have been created. People pay into them. In other words, they defer their incomes, and now the minister is saying that he will tax them away at a higher rate than before April 10. I may be wrong, and that is why I am asking the minister about this. I intend to read this clause again. I want to ask if this interpretation is correct.

I will read again from the document of the Co-operative Trust Company of Canada which was used by the minister and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. It reads:

Under current rules, it is the recipient of RRSP funds who is taxed when the planholder dies. It is now proposed to include the RRSP funds on the planholder's final income tax return.

I want to ask the minister whether or not that statement is true?

Mr. Chrétien: I think the hon. member for Welland described very well what an RRSP is. It is not a scheme to avoid taxes but rather a scheme to ensure we have enough revenue when we retire. The creation of RRIF under this bill is to give greater flexibility to people. At present, when a person reaches the age of 71 he has two choices: he can either cash in his RRSP on which he has to pay the same level of tax as on his income that year, or he can buy a life annuity. Now we permit him to buy RRIF which will allow him to average out the money over a period of years and pay taxes accordingly.

We are not changing anything when the RRSP is in the hands of the holder or when the money goes to his spouse. The change occurs only when it goes to a third party, such as children, at which time it is taxed at the same rate as the original holder was taxed prior to his death. We recognize that there are some problems here and we are willing to consider them. However, with the permission of the committee I should like to read the technical explanation which sometimes, although not always, clarifies the problem.

The new alternatives for RRSP funds, that is, the RRIF, and the term annuities, require the government to reconsider the alternatives available to heirs of a deceased annuitant under RRSP. These two new alternatives for retirement income, and the extension of the guaranteed period for life annuities, mean that much larger amounts will be passed on to heirs than under the existing system. Now the holder has to cash it or buy a life annuity. The existing system permits only life annuities with the guaranteed term being not in excess of 15 years. Under this system the passage of RRSP funds between generations of untaxed funds was minimal.

The RRSP mechanism is to permit our citizens to provide for their retirement and the retirement of their spouses. It is not intended to encourage the creation of estates. Therefore, the decision was taken that the tax benefit enjoyed by an RRSP annuity holder during his life should be accounted for on death, except to the extent that the benefits accrue to his spouse. This is in accord with the general scheme in the Income Tax Act which allows property to be transferred on a tax free basis to a spouse, but taxes transfers of property to others.

I want to explain again what I said before and what I read. The RRSP scheme is to permit a person to accumulate funds for the time when he retires. It is not, as the hon. member for Provencher led us to believe, a way of accumulating wealth to be passed on to children or to third persons. It is a tax break which a person receives during his life so that when he retires he can cash it in and pay tax on the money, and at 71 years of age again he can either cash it in and pay tax in one shot or buy a life annuity. Now there is flexibility, but we do not want a system to develop so that RRSP will become a way to avoid taxes. It is not designed for that. It is a way of accumulating assets, and the tax will be paid at the time of retirement. That is why we must make a distinction between an estate and money accumulated through RRSP.

Mr. Epp: Can the minister now answer my question?

Mr. Chrétien: I think that in the very good explanation I gave I must have given an answer to the hon. member's question.

Mr. Epp: My question was as follows: if a policyholder dies, is the amount of the policy calculated as income on the last year that that person filed income tax?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, if it is somebody other than the spouse.

Mr. Epp: That is what I wanted to know. The minister was not clear about the two terms. I am wondering whether we are not simply arguing about words. On one hand the minister says it is an asset, and on the other hand it is not accumulated wealth. He cannot have it both ways because an asset is accumulated wealth.

The point I want to bring to the minister is this: he says that so long as the fund is transferred to the spouse there is no additional tax. He also says that it cannot be transferred to a third party, which I take to mean children. However, in the case of a common accident in which both the policyholder and his or her spouse are killed, and there are two dependent children left, who is the beneficiary? The minister is now saying that under his plan the dependent children are the beneficiaries but that the government will now tax them at a higher rate than when his budget was passed? Is that correct?

Mr. Chrétien: In studying this problem we have come to realize that we are faced with a problem so far as dependent children are concerned. It is a problem which I would like to consider. The RRSP is so designed that it can be passed on to the spouse tax free, but if it is to go to grown, independent children, it is not an estate. If RRSP has been accumulated and there are still dependent, minor children in the family, this is an aspect which I should like to consider to see whether we should not make a distinction between dependent, minor children and independent children or third persons. This is a point that has not escaped us, but today we are not in a position to give an answer on it. Also, we have not received representations from people who are concerned about this and we would like to discuss with them some aspects of it before we come to a solution.

Mr. Epp: Perhaps we are making some progress now. At least we have an agreement in principle. We are on the same wavelength, and it is understood that, while the spouse can be the direct beneficiary, it is minor, dependent children who are penalized very heavily. I think that it is the role of any Minister of Finance and of all of us in the House to ensure that, if a father or mother had made provisions for their minor children, the state would not tax that benefit away and make those children dependent on the state. I keep stressing this point because it is such a fundamental issue in society that a father and mother should be responsible for their dependent children as long as they can. There are many parents who have made estate plans through the RRSP or through accumulated assets so that if their children are deprived of their parents they will have at least as many benefits to allow them to become as full contributors to society as is possible. That is why I say to the minister that I find it very difficult. I want to accept his assurances on good faith. I intend to do that, and I will.

With all respect, I find it difficult to accept the minister requesting us to leave it in his hands. Once a bill is passed, it is passed. Perhaps I sound like a doubting Thomas, but it comes from experience. Will the minister assure that his officials will re-examine the question of dependent children? Before I used the word "minor", and now I refer to "dependent". The term "minor" could create difficulties for the physically and mentally handicapped. So, I have changed it to dependent children. Will he charge his officials to come forward with a draft amendment before the bill is passed?

Mr. Chrétien: Already I have given an undertaking to look into that in reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I recognize perhaps there is a problem in terms of dependent children in a family. We have to study that. There are provisions in the act where property can pass tax free from a husband to his wife, but not necessarily to his dependants. Hon. members are asking that we study all of these implications. If it is done for RRSPs, it must be done for everything. In terms of equity and revenues for the government, the consequences are great. We must look into that carefully. I cannot guarantee that this problem will be solved before ten o'clock tonight. We will complete committee of the whole stage tonight and commence third reading tomorrow. I have indicated that we are prepared to review it. It can be given consideration on the first occasion when tax measures are before the House.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I regret to take up the time of the House and to be so obtuse, but that is just not good enough. The day after this legislation is passed, some Canadian family will be caught in this clause.

Mr. Chrétien: They are there now.

Mr. Epp: Well, that makes it doubly bad. We still have the time and the legislative procedures to make this correction. The minister has conceded the difficulty, yet he asks us to pass it and indicates something will be done about it at the next opportunity. When will be the next opportunity? Will it be at the end of this month, the middle of next month, or whenever? When this House rises, we do not know if this parliament will return. When will the next opportunity be? What happens in the interim to people who have bought RRSP's to provide for their families? Are the beneficiaries of people who die in the interim to say, "The government tried; some day it will come up with a change"? Meanwhile dependent children will have to pay a rate of tax which is much higher than they would be required to pay if the budget had never been passed.

I cannot speak for this side of the House, but I am sure most of the hon. members would like this matter clarified before it becomes law. With all due respect, once it becomes law, that is it. All of us have been here long enough to know, once something is enshrined in statute, that it is a long process to effect a change. The families of RRSP holders who have passed away during the interim, whether it is one day, one month or whatever, are caught. In fact they have been caught since April 10.

At the time of the previous budget, I remember the tremendous pressure we had to apply. Also I remember the number of letters we received. In fact I have my file with me today. I pulled my file out for Bill C-22, the previous one. In the representations words like "inequitable effects" were used. These were communications from small Canadians who had taken funds from their earnings to buy RRSPs. The underlying philosophy, which disturbs me deeply, is that revenue can be taken from wherever the government wants, regardless of the consequences, to pay for its profligate spending. Then the government comes before the House asking us to pass this piece of legislation, at the same time indicating that it will look into it further. I am disappointed in the Minister of Finance not being willing to go beyond indicating that he will look at it.

There are well-qualified people within the Department of Finance who can see the implications. I am not counted as a person who has the ability to break down a tax bill in order to understand its nuances and implications, but there are such people within his department. The caisse populaire of Ste. Anne, the caisse populaire of Lorette, the credit union of Niverville, Manitoba, and individuals all agree with this interpretation which the minister has confirmed.

RRSP holders, when they were looking at their estate planning, had in their minds what they were leaving to their spouses and dependent children.

Mr. Chrétien: What is the question?

Mr. Epp: Perhaps the minister thinks that I am speaking too long. I have the right to speak. I am a member, and I can speak as long as the House rules allow me. If I have a representation to make on behalf of my people, I intend to make it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I have indicated many times this afternoon that this is a problem. We are looking into it. The hon. member is attempting to dramatize the problem. It is existing now and has existed before. The same case can be made for a father who wants to pass his house or property on to his children. He can pass it to his wife, but if he dies and leaves it to his children or a third party, they are required to pay capital gains tax.

I have indicated that there is a problem and that we are willing to look into it. If the hon. member is about to cry, I will send him a handkerchief or a soother. We have been dealing with this bill for approximately five weeks, and because he has received some letters from the credit unions in his constituency, he raises this matter now. Perhaps he wants to look like the Chevalier du Saint-Sépulcre. We must keep the problem in perspective. I recognized it before he rose in the House. I had my explanation before any hon. member raised the issue.

I had to force hon. members opposite to deal with clause 34. Otherwise, we would never have discussed this. They wanted us to stay with clause 30. If we had they would never have had the occasion to raise this. Now we hear them complaining that they should discuss and solve the problem they see with it, when less than an hour ago they were trying to prevent us from considering clause 34 at all. They wanted to stay on clause 30 for the rest of the day, and now they come and cry like babies. I have said I will look into that and, if there is a need for an amendment, there will be an amendment put before this House when I come back with another bill on the subject. Now we have this hypocrisy being carried on when two hours ago they did not want to discuss clause 34 at all, but wanted to continue discussing clause 30. I see an hon. member over there from Alberta who was one of those who wanted to stick with clause 30. Now he wants to prevent us from discussing clause 34. This is a farce, Mr. Chairman.

• (1712)

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The minister is misleading the House in respect of what I had to say. I had no reservations whatsoever about considering clause 34. All I wanted was 30 minutes for the consideration of clause 30. Certainly he is misleading the House with that statement, and I hope he will correct it the next time he is on his feet.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, on the same point of order let me reiterate what the hon. member for Red Deer has just pointed out. To use the Prime Minister's term, this is just sheer bunkum.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, frankly I do not think there is any point in going back to the subject following the minister's last tirade. He has made up his mind.

An hon. Member: He has cheapened himself.

Mr. Epp: He has made up his mind that he wants to tax away the RRSPs of parents looking after their dependent children.

An hon. Member: Nonsense!

Mr. Epp: If it is nonsense or misleading, why did the minister confirm that these children would be taxed at a higher rate than was the case prior to the budget of April 10? That is what he has confirmed, and I think we better stick with that. I would suggest to the hon. member that he get up on his feet and ask questions, rather than shouting interjections. The best speeches he has ever made are those he has made while sitting down.

If the minister was so wise and knew the detrimental effects of clause 34, particularly in respect of dependent children, why did he bother to discuss it? Why did he put it in to begin with? The minister says he now recognizes the difficulty, but only became aware of it recently. I have said to the minister on a number of occasions that I do not begin to understand all tax laws, but one thing I do understand is that by this clause he is confiscating property from dependent children. That is what he is doing.

An hon. Member: You are all wet.

Mr. Epp: That is exactly what he is doing. Because of the minister's concession that in effect this is exactly what is going to happen, namely, that dependent children will have their property—

An hon. Member: You are repeating yourself.

Mr. Epp: Of course I am repeating myself. I have to repeat myself time after time with this government, and I will continue to repeat myself, asking the minister if he will withdraw this clause—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Chrétien: I would suggest to the hon. member if he wants me to reply he should sit down.

Mr. Epp: Will the minister withdraw the clause and reintroduce it at another time?

Mr. Chrétien: No, Mr. Chairman. I am introducing new flexibility to the system for people who are retired and wish to create an RRIF. If I were to withdraw that flexibility at this time I would be penalizing those people who would no longer have that flexibility and would have to buy either a life annuity or pay the entire tax the day they are 71 years of age. That is the situation in which they are now. What I am doing today for those people is providing more flexibility so that they can reinvest their revenue. If they live only two, three or four years after age 71 they can still leave something to their children, not having to pay all the money in one shot as they would have been called upon to do.

There is a problem in that it could have an effect on the dependent children, and I recognized this some days before I came to the House. This is a problem for those children who are recipients of the RRSP. I recognize that this problem needs to be studied further. I will give it further consideration but I will not withdraw my proposition for the creation of the RRIF at this time, simply because there is a problem. I suggest that this problem can be cured in due course, if we have to cure it. The proposition in relation to the RRIF at this time is consistent with provisions of the Income Tax Act. One can argue that we should do something for the dependent children having regard to the RRSPs. I have recognized that. The hon. member asks me if I was aware of the problem. I was made aware of it some days ago but I did not have time—

Mr. Epp: At the time you drafted the budget?

Mr. Chrétien: No, not at the time that we drafted the budget. There is nobody in this land who could draft a piece of legislation without the possibility of some difficulty or problem. No one can foresee all the possibilities. Those who are so perfect do not exist. I have said that we found a problem which I am willing to study. When we designed the proposition we wanted it to be consistent with provisions of the Income Tax Act.

One can always support an argument by specific circumstances. One can always dream up a hypothetical case that might make anyone cry. I am just saying that I have recognized the problem and have started to work on it. I have given the undertaking that I will look into it. With the information I now have I think there may be a problem. I will study the matter and propose an amendment on the next occasion. If I obtain additional facts that contradict my present view I will perhaps make a different judgment. However, the way I understand it today, I think it will make sense to bring forward such an amendment. It would be irresponsible for me to draft such an amendment between six and eight o'clock because we might in this way provide a loophole, creating further prejudices and additional problems.

An hon. Member: That is more time than you spent with the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: I think the smart aleck from Saskatoon-Biggar—

An hon. Member: Just leave off the "aleck".

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I will have something to say to you later.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I recognized that there was a problem and I am considering it. On the first occasion, if the information I have remains the same I will introduce an amendment.

There is no perfect situation and when we try to improve the lot of pensioners, to make conditions more flexible, they want us to remove everything because there is a problem. I do not intend to abolish the clauses and the risks to try to satisfy the hon. member. If necessary, we will present an amendment.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member for Provencher that his time has expired.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a few comments during this debate, and I do not apologize to the hon. minister for making representations on the basis of information and communications which I and other hon. members have received from our constituents.

Tax legislation is now so complicated that very few members of parliament can understand the implications of every provision. That is not surprising when we realize that the Minister of Finance, with all his senior bureaucrats backing him up, was not aware of the implications of the change being made.

Let me quote a couple of paragraphs from a letter I received from the Assiniboine Credit Union, one of the largest credit unions in the city of Winnipeg. This is just part of what is said in this letter of June 12 addressed to me:

> We strongly object to tax RRSP funds in a lump sum at the time of death (or spouse's death).
> We urge you to maintain the flexibility in tax options now available for members who become entitled to RRSP funds after a planholder's death. In particular the option to purchase an income averaging annuity and the right of the recipient to pay income tax on the amount received. This is of particular importance to recipients in the low income tax bracket.

These are precisely the people I am concerned about, Mr. Chairman. The minister says if we do not pass it today nothing has really been changed. If the case made in the document in which my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, quoted from is correct, then there is a pretty substantial change in what will happen as compared to what the law has provided up until now. I refer the minister and his officials to a document entitled "Trust Trends" which, I understand, was sent either to the minister or his parliamentary secretary. I would like to quote one small paragraph from this document:

> Under current rules, it is the recipient of the RRSP funds who is taxed when the planholder dies. It is now proposed to include the RRSP funds on the planholder's final income tax return.

In other words, it is going to be calulated on the planholder's final income tax instead of on the recipient's income tax. They give an illustration of a person who dies on December 31 in a year in which his salary amounts to $15,000 and who leaves an RRSP worth $25,000 to two children under 16 years of age and not working. The way the RRSP has worked up until now each child would have been left $10,100 after taxes. Under the new law as proposed in this bill each child would receive $6,873 instead of the $10,100 under the current rules. That illustration indicates the need for change.

I am happy that the minister has said he is prepared to study the situation. I am not happy with his suggestion that he will bring in an amendment at some time in the future, because I do not know when that time in the future will be. I am concerned about these people.

I was very interested in the minister's comments about how changes in this particular bill will affect the way in which we deal with income under other provisions of the Income Tax Act, and the minister's suggestion that we have to keep in mind equity in attempting to keep things fair. I would be much more prepared to listen to the minister's homilies about the need for equity if I did not know how poorly and how inequitable the present income tax system works.

I refer the minister to a publication issued by Revenue Canada, "Taxation Statistics, 1977 Edition", which deals with incomes for the year 1975, the most recent year for which figures are available. This publication tells us that there were 226 persons in the year 1975 who earned between $50,000 and $100,000 and who paid no income tax at all, 58 persons who earned between $100,000 and $200,000 who paid no income tax at all, and 21 persons who earned over $200,000 and who paid no income tax at all. We have devised an income tax system so complicated that over 300 people earning more than $50,000 in the year 1975 did not have to pay any income tax.

One day, not today, we in this House must discuss how that is possible, how we can have an income tax system, a system which is supposed to be equitable, that permits that kind of thing. Unfortunately, we do not know much about the inequities because information about an individual's income tax is secret in Canada, according to the rules of the Income Tax Act, as compared to the information available to Americans within their income tax system. A fine example is the fact that we had to go to the United States to learn that the president of the CPR had an income of over $300,000. I hope he was not one of the people who did not pay any income tax. The minister shakes his head.

Mr. Chrétien: I just want to make a point.

Mr. Orlikow: I will be finished in a moment, Mr. Chairman, and the minister can reply. What I am trying to say is we do not have an equitable income tax system. It does not treat all people the same. It does not treat every dollar of income as a dollar which should be taxed in the same way. There are hundreds of ways which people, particularly those with high incomes and who can afford accountants and lawyers familiar with income tax legislation, can avoid legally paying their income tax.

I have a good deal of sympathy for people in low and middle incomes who have put some money aside for an RRSP in the hope they can leave most of it to their children when they die. I have found this minister to be an honest man, and he has assured us that he will look into the problem and come up with a solution to the flaw which seems to have developed. I hope that he will come up with that solution before we give third reading to this bill.

Mr. Chrétien: In replying to the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, this is exactly why I would like to take my time. For example, if someone were to take an RRSP, contributing $5,500 for the rest of his life, with the accumulated interest he would avoid paying the taxes. People in higher income brackets can afford to buy RRSPs for $5,500 very easily and accumulate up to $300,000 over a period of time on which they will not have paid any taxes. This money should be passed on without any tax. I wish to make sure this does not become a loophole. While it is a problem to certain persons, if you apply the principle to the people in higher income brackets, it could become even a greater problem. This is why I wish to look at all its aspects before I make up my mind, and as soon as I have arrived at a decision I will clarify the situation in the House.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, there have been some discussions on dealing with the matter of clause 30 and the fact that your ruling is to come. I believe I am indicating the consent of the House to the agreement that we would revert to clause 30 at 5.30, you would give your ruling with respect to the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West, and the discussion would thereafter continue on clause 30, depending on how you rule. In any event, all the questions with respect to clause 30 would be put and dealt with by six o'clock, which would take up the 30 minutes we decided to allot in our discussions earlier. I understand that that is the agreement.

Mr. Chrétien: That is the agreement, Mr. Chairman, that if the amendment is agreed to we will vote on this amendment and dispose of clause 30 by six o'clock. At eight o'clock we will go back to clause 34 and finish up the bill before 9.45. If that is the agreement, I am ready to go ahead with it.

• (1732)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, on the understanding that there are parts (a) and (b) to that agreement, we are for it. Part (a) is that we revert now, and part (b) is that we only spend 30 minutes.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we have to dispose completely of clause 30 by six o'clock.

The Chairman: If I understand it correctly, the committee will be ready at this time to stand clause 34 and revert back, by unanimous consent, to the consideration of clause 30, at which time I will give my ruling on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West. Then the committee will complete consideration of clause 30 by six o'clock. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Order. When the committee was considering Bill C-56 last Friday, an amendment was moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West which reads as follows, and I quote:

> That Bill C-56 be amended at clause 30, at page 34, by striking out lines 14 to 35 and substituting therefor the following: (a) $100 for an individual residing in any province other than Quebec, $85 for an individual residing in Quebec, and (b) the amount that would, but for this subsection, be the tax payable by him under this Part for the year.

A point of order was then raised, and the Chair reserved its decision with respect to clause 30. The committee thus accepted to suspend consideration of that clause with the understanding that I would come back today after examining the precedents and all the rules to make an appropriate decision. The point of order rested basically on the argument that the amendment went against important provisions of the ways and means motion.

I want to make it clear, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out at that time, and as I pointed out myself, that the ways and means motion does not preclude the possibility of amendments to the bill being introduced. For that matter I would remind hon. members of the provisions of citation 265(1) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, and I quote:

Income Tax Act

No member other than a minister of the Crown may introduce a bill for the reduction of duties. The government must take full responsibility for the taxation levied to provide the revenue. But the House enjoys complete freedom to make every representation possible to the government with regard to the manner in which the ministers discharge this responsibility. This duty the members may perform by moving amendments to reduce the taxes proposed by the administration.

In this case, I even added the comment that in my own opinion the Chair's ruling did not rule out at all that possibility. Hon. members may therefore move such amendments provided, of course, they are in accordance with our rules, do not go against the provisions of the ways and means motion and are relevant to the clause to be amended. However, during the weekend, I have tried to examine and study this issue in depth, to look at the precedents and the authors at our disposal, and I am now convinced that the difficulty now facing us is not along those lines.

What concerns me especially is the fact that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West is in reality a substantive alternative, that is an alternative to the essential proposal contained in clause 30 of the bill.

I would like to note that the committee has every right to consider different proposals and different alternatives to a proposal contained in a clause of a bill, provided of course such proposals are otherwise acceptable. The Chair must therefore insist that before considering a substantive alternative or proposal, the committee must have had the opportunity to vote on the original proposal, that is the proposal contained in clause 30 of the bill as it was passed by the House on second reading. In this regard, I would like to refer hon. members to page 522 of the 19th edition of Erskine May, where we can see the following.

At the bottom of page 522 of "Erskine May" we find:

Furthermore, an amendment may not be moved to insert words at the beginning of a clause with a view to bringing forward an alternative scheme to that contained in the clause (s), or to leave out the whole substance of a clause in order to insert different provisions (t), or to substitute in effect a new draft for an existing clause (u). In all such cases the question that the clause stand part of the bill should be negatived and a new clause brought up at the proper time.

The logic of this procedure seems obvious. The committee must not be asked to vote on an alternative before having voted on the original proposal contained in the bill. More specifically, the committee must first vote on clause 30, and then, if this clause is rejected, an alternative such as that proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West can be considered, not as an amendment, but as a new clause.

I must therefore rule the amendment of the hon. member out of order on the grounds that it contains a proposal which should be submitted to the committee only if the committee has first of all rejected the original proposal contained in clause 30 of the bill.

[The Chairman.]

[English]

At this time I would add the comment that, in my opinion, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West is not at fault procedurally as to relevancy or as to its relationship to the ways and means motion. I submit that it is relevant to the clause so it could be moved in part but not globally. It is my interpretation that by globally it is meant to replace a complete proposition instead of amending it. Second, the intent of the proposition does not offend and would not offend the ways and means motion if proposed in a proper way. As I said before, it could be accepted as a new clause if clause 30 was defeated or it remains optional to hon. members through the normal procedure by amending parts of clause 30. To do so may be to attain the same objective.

My conclusion is based on the basic procedure and practice that in committee you do not vote on an alternative clause before making a decision on the clause itself. Therefore, I canot accept the amendment moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West in the present form.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, I gather that, on the basis of your decision, we can carry on with clause 30. I want to point out to the minister that in essence what the Chairman has said underlines and supports the proposition put forward to the minister on many occasions, namely that his suggested plan for the province of Quebec is a dramatic departure from what he is doing for all of the other provinces in this country. It underlines that very basic proposition, if the ruling of the Chairman is to be accepted on the basis that he puts forward.

The minister has repeated over and over again during the course of our deliberations the fact that he has gone through a process of consultation with the provinces on this most important provision of the bill. I want to ask him some very straightforward questions. I hope we can get through them in a short period of time. Not only will it be interesting, but it will give the minister an opportunity to give us some specifics as to what kind of consultation has taken place. We can then judge how we are to deal with this particular provision.

I want to ask the minister some questions with regard to each of the provinces. They will be essentially the same questions. I will start with the province of British Columbia. In connection with this provision contained in clause 30, how long did the minister spend in consultation with that province? With what minister did he consult? What is the name of that minister? Where did the minister meet with his provincial counterpart to discuss the provisions? Would the minister be good enough to answer those questions in so far as the province of British Columbia is concerned?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I do not know the orientation of the hon. member's questions. However, I had occasion to meet with Mr. Wolfe, the minister of finance. I met him in his office about two weeks before the budget. He was already aware through information received by his deputy minister and my deputy minister of the purpose of my visit. After that visit, I had been in touch with him on the telephone many times.

I recall that in this House the minister responsible for interprovincial relations gave the dates. I do not have them here. However, I called him many times. A week before the budget, he sent his deputy minister and other officials to Ottawa for a full day of discussion, as did every other minister of finance.

In fact, the British Columbia government decided to change the date of its budget in order to come up with its budget the same night as ours. The British Columbia minister of finance was happy to declare that he was cutting sales tax two hours before us. Of course, he did not mention the federal participation; that only came to light later. However, he was later reminded of that by the press. There was a lot of consultation. The best example of the consultation was that it was approved by his cabinet. He changed the date of his budget to be able to make the announcement a few hours before me. I have to be fair to him; he asked my permission to go on the air before me. I said that was all right with me, that I did not mind the political criticism that one receives.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I wonder if the minister can now turn his attention to the province of Alberta and tell us with whom he met there. How long did he spend with that minister? I want to get through all the provinces. How long did he spend and what arrangement was finally entered into with the minister and the province of Alberta?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I forgot to mention that the first time I spoke about the possibility of cutting sales tax was in October. That is the first time it was raised as a possibility. I again raised it in January when I met the ministers of finance. There was more interest then than the first time. The first time, only Ontario and myself were interested. Eventually I got more support.

In the case of Alberta, the same day I visited the British Columbia minister of finance I stopped in Calgary. I talked on the phone with the Alberta minister of finance on that day. I remember the way I approached him. I said "Merv, I would like to help you cut your sales tax." He laughed because in Alberta there is no sales tax. That was just mentioned briefly on the phone so that he would be aware. Because he was not in a position to talk very much, I called him the next morning or afternoon. I again talked to him before the budget. Of course, they were not concerned about that because there was no question of cutting tax in Alberta since they are in the very privileged position that no one in that province pays any sales tax.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am sure the minister and many people in Alberta are really laughing about that form of consultation. I now want to move on to Saskatchewan, my province. With whom did the minister discuss? He does not have to give us all the facts of his discussion. He has stated that he had a meeting with the finance ministers. I accept that as a matter of public record. I am more interested in knowing that specific consultations the minister had with each of the provincial ministers. With whom did he meet in the province of Saskatchwen? How long did he spend in consultation? What was the proposal ultimately agreed to between himself and his provincial counterpart?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member can drag this on for hours. I consulted with them. Later that afternoon, I stopped in Regina where I had a very pleasant discussion at the legislature. I remember well that when I arrived in Regina, the only person at the door of parliament was Premier Blakeney. He wished me well. We had a nice talk about many things. He had just returned from Banff. It was a pleasant sunny afternoon. When we met with the minister of finance, I had Mr. Neufeld with me. He was born in Saskatchewan. We spent some time discussing different matters. We did not only discuss sales tax; we also discussed monetary policies, the value of the Canadian dollar, the effect on the Canadian economy and how they reacted to it.

We discussed general policies in terms of sales tax. We spent a good deal of time on that. There was no great difficulty. One problem in Saskatchewan was that they had already passed their budget. That technical problem was eventually overcome. In Saskatchewan they consulted the cabinet. They even consulted their caucus on that.

I will now resume my seat and wait until the hon. member asks about Manitoba.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, we may go down in history as having the first buffoon as Minister of Finance, the way this fellow is operating now. He may want to talk out the time, but I have some very straightforward questions. If the Minister of Finance is going to act like a buffoon, that is one thing. We have a limited amount of time. I think it is reasonable to expect some simple answers from the minister. These are questions he can answer. I do not want a travelogue, I want specifics.

The minister spent a lot of time and effort in consulting. I am trying to determine what happened in each province. I now want to deal with Manitoba. I would like the minister to be concise. We are interested in knowing who was with him, but we can talk about that privately. I want specific details as to what happened in each province.

Mr. Chrétien: I would not ask the hon. member, who used some bad expressions, to use what we call the "cervelle d'oiseau". When I arrived in Manitoba I must say, Mr. Chairman, I had a very pleasant meeting. It was at the airport. The minister came to meet me at the airport. The name of the minister is Mr. Craik. We discussed the matter. It took him about five minutes to understand. It took the opposition here two months.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: After five minutes he had agreed. I recall very well because I had reserved a couple of hours for him and at the end of half an hour or 35 minutes we had finished our serious business; he was a very generous host and we took a more relaxed attitude for the rest of the time until I took my plane. I talked to Mr. Craik many times. He had some problems. He sent his bureaucrats to Ottawa, like the others, to discuss them for a full day.

There was a different situation in Manitoba. A week before the budget while I was talking on the phone with him he informed me that Premier Lyon was in town. In fact, he had come for the swearing in ceremony of the former premier, Mr. Duff Roblin, to the Senate that day. I suggested I should meet him and he said it was a good idea. He called his own first minister who then came to see me in the afternoon. He told me he had 20 minutes available. In fact, he stayed one hour and 45 minutes with me. We discussed this subject and many others in relation to fiscal and monetary topics which concern not the federal government alone but the provincial governments, too. So in the case of Manitoba I talked not only to the minister of finance but spent over an hour with Premier Lyon. I think it was a very good exchange. We did not agree on everything, of course, but it was a most pleasant occasion.

Some hon. Members: Get to Ontario.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The minister has got the idea. Perhaps he will carry on and let us know what happened in the case of the other provinces. I want to find out what happened in the case of each of the provinces.

Mr. Chrétien: I will carry on from west to east, because if I move around too much the hon. member will get confused. I will move to Ontario.

In the case of Ontario, at the first meeting with my colleagues as Minister of Finance in October I made this suggestion and discussed it privately with a number of people. Since I thought it was a good idea—it had been proposed by my bureaucrats—I discussed it with the Ontario minister of finance, Mr. McKeough. Does the hon. member know him? In fact, I asked him to submit the proposal to his colleagues himself. I knew he was interested in it and I did not want to be the one to make the suggestion—hon. members know that the provinces are always nervous when something is proposed by the federal government. Even though it was my idea I thought this was a good solution; I do not know whether he suggested it to me or I to him. I said to him: "You propose it to the other ministers so that no one will say it was a put-on by the federal government". We discussed the proposition many times after that during January, and Mr. McKeough was one of the first I called three weeks before the budget. The first I called was Parizeau, the second was McKeough. There was a meeting between Mr. McKeough, Mr. Parizeau and myself in Montreal on a certain date—it was in room 435, I guess, of the Bonaventure Hotel.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I will not go into the details of that meeting but we discussed for four hours not only the sales tax but a whole range of fiscal and monetary policy matters, the value of the Canadian dollar, all the preoccupations we had in mind as ministers of finance. They both said they were pleased that, for the first time in history, a federal minister of finance had sat down with provincial finance ministers to discuss his own budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Following that discussion I was in communication with Mr. McKeough on at least a dozen occasions because he was receiving telephone calls from other ministers of finance and he was keeping me informed of some of the problems involved, trying to work in collaboration with all the ministers of finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I have to pay credit to all the ministers of finance. They have acted in good faith and shown great form as gentlemen. Unfortunately, Quebec did not deliver a yes or no as had been agreed upon. But I want to make it clear I talked with Mr. McKeough at least a dozen times before budget night.

I turn now to Quebec.

[Translation]

In the case of the province of Quebec, as I said earlier, Mr. Jacques Parizeau, the Quebec minister of finance, was the first person I called when I decided to present a budget and to make my proposal concerning the sales tax cut. Then I called Mr. McKeough and we discussed it together. He was interested in that matter. He had problems, and then we met with Mr. McKeough. Some members do not seem interested because I am speaking in French. And then, we discussed several times by phone. I know he talked about it with other ministers, and he sent his officials to Ottawa like the others, on the Monday before the budget and we agreed that we were going to discuss it again and we did it during that week. I remember discussing with him on the Friday before the budget. The budget presentation was Monday night. I talked to him that Monday. Contrary to my expectations, that Monday Mr. Parizeau was to answer me yes or no like all other ministers of finance, but forty-eight hours only after the signing by all other ministers of finance of an agreement with the federal government on the sales tax cuts, Mr. Parizeau announced his unilateral cuts without any consultation with me or any other minister of finance. This is the way it happened. And if at least we had been aware of Mr. Parizeau's intentions during the negotiations, I might have been the—

The Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock!

The Chairman: The committee has already agreed that consideration of clause 30 should end at six o'clock. Shall the clause carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (1802)

Clause 30 agreed to: Yeas, 66; nays, 30.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6.03 p.m. the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Chairman, I guess it pays to be here on time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: This is an outfit which likes to sneak this by you in a hurry.

I should like to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance or his parliamentary secretary, whichever one is better, to section 146 (1)(j)(i) opposite page 38 of the bill, which reads as follows:

—a contract between an individual and a person licensed or otherwise authorized under the laws of Canada or a province to carry on in Canada an annuities business, under which, in consideration of payment by the individual of any periodic or other amount as consideration under the contract, that person agrees to pay to the individual, commencing at maturity, an annuity for life—

I brought this matter to the attention of the previous minister of finance. It is a subject about which I am very concerned. When an RRSP matures, the policyholder at the age of 60 buys a life annuity in one of the presently recognized financial institutions, whether it is a life insurance company, a credit union, a bank or other such organization. I would like to see the government take a more liberal, with a small "l", approach to this, open that whole reservoir of funds gathered together under the RRSP and make it available to other institutions which are not at present recognized by the government as accredited institutions. I am thinking of non-profit organizations such as, for example, a university, the YMCA, the Red Cross, World Vision, Food for the Hungry, church organizations, colleges, or bible institutes, all of which are always looking for a fresh pool of ready capital to help their organization and which have to go continually to recognized lending institutions for that reservoir of capital. It seems to me we are asking those non-profit organizations to work against themselves when they have to borrow at the highest rates possible.

Here there would be a whole new reservoir of money. We could license them through the Securities Exchange Commission or some such body, and have the government organize a licensing procedure so that these institutions would have the opportunity of tapping this new pool of capital to help them in their capital programs or operating expenses. That is my first point.

Second, it seems to me that the clientele who invest in annuities would have a new option in investing their RRSP. There is a whole clientele of taxpayers who would love to take part in an annuity program if they knew where that money was going. At present, when they go through a bank or an insurance company they know very well that the money will be reinvested but they have no control over the reinvestment program—that is the option of the credit union or bank. I am thinking of people with very strong religious convictions, for example, who do not necessarily want their money invested in liquor companies, distilleries or tobacco companies but would gladly invest their money in an RRSP if they knew that the annuity in the end could be turned over to a charitable organization, a church, a university, the YMCA, or mission programs.

If the government would liberalize this aspect of it, I think they would be doing a service to the taxpayer which has not been available up to the present time. I wonder if the minister, to whom I mentioned this a couple of years ago, would entertain this kind of flexibility for the taxpayer which would allow him to invest in this program with some knowledge of where his money is being invested, and let him live with his conscience this way.

Mr. Chrétien: I think we have to keep in mind the purpose of an RRSP. It is an investment, and we are giving an opportunity to a person to put aside some of his earnings for his retirement time. We propose here the addition of the RRIF which adds flexibility to the program by allowing a person, when he reaches the age of 71, to choose either to buy a life annuity or to cash in his RRSP. What the hon. member is suggesting is that we should permit people to invest in religious organizations, the YMCA, universities, and so on. What we are trying to achieve is to make sure that the money put aside by people making those savings is guaranteed so that when their time of retirement comes the money will be there. It is always possible to give money to charitable organizations, but I do not think it would be wise to invest it in this case because it might lead to all sorts of problems.

Suppose that someone decided that his RRSP should be invested in the YMCA, but it turns out that in 20 years' time the YMCA in Ottawa goes bankrupt. The poor man, who had decided to invest in this organization, would find that it could not deliver his money at the end of the process. That is why we are asking financial institutions with a sound financial backing to guarantee that the money invested with them will be available at the time of retirement of the annuity holder.

I share the hon. member's thought that church organizations and universities would be delighted to have that pool of money, but legislators have an obligation to ensure that savings exempt of tax will be available to annuity holders at the time of retirement. That is one worry we have with the proposition of the hon. member. Of course, it is always subject to review. An analysis will be made of any suggestion. I can assure the hon. member that it will be noted by my officials. I have just given off the top of my head what I think are valid reasons for being hesitant to take the road suggested by the hon. member.

Mr. Friesen: I agree with the minister when he indicates that the purpose of RRSPs is investment. That is just the point. I am looking for some additional options for investing money. The minister said it is necessary to secure the money to ensure, when people want to draw retirement benefits, that it is there and has not disappeared because of the crumbling of some organization. That concern is very valid.

A few years ago a financial institution named Commonwealth Trust existed in British Columbia. A good many taxpayers and investors put money into that company, and it is no more. I am sure that company was registered and recognized by the Securities Exchange Commission. Also a few years ago the Bank of Montreal lost something like $60 million in one shot in a matter of international currency exchange. The bank was far from crumbling, but the point is: highly recognized financial institutions are capable of losing money, making poor investments and even disappearing from the scene.

If the government wants to licence non-profit organizations, it can be done with the same kind of strictures, limitations and demands which are put on trust companies, insurance companies and so forth. Why should taxpayers not be given the additional opportunity of seeing where their investment dollars go? Then they would have at least the assurance and pleasure of seeing their money invested in what they think is the most positive and creative manner.

Mr. Chrétien: I take the representation of the hon. member, but I have nothing to add to it.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, my question concerns an area which was discussed earlier this afternoon. Has the minister been able to make any progress in solving the difficulty with regard to RRSPs? This afternoon the minister admitted that the problem exists. Has he given any consideration to the problems which will arise in terms of equity if he makes that change? I do not mean today, but can he give it consideration in the near future? Will the income tax system be made more equitable? Will the type of situation which I referred to this afternoon be eliminated? According to information released by Revenue Canada, in 1975 over 300 people had incomes of over $50,000 and paid no income tax. Those incomes are quite large by anyone's standard.

Mr. Chrétien: We always look at ways and means to improve the tax system. We are attempting to avoid as many loopholes as possible. The hon. member is referring to a scheme whereby a person who makes $50,000 takes advantage of all exemptions which exist in the law. It is not a case of this person paying no income tax. Usually it is postponed, and so on. We attempt to avoid that situation.

Everyone can make heartbreaking cases. The situation under RRSPs has been referred to where two minors can be cut and so on. We have to overcome the problem of very large accumulations of funds tax free which, at the end of the process, could be transferred with no tax. It could be a big pipeline of tax exemptions. I should like to examine all aspects rather than attempt to solve one specific problem which perhaps could create a large loophole for others to abuse.

Dealing with the situation concerning unmatured RRSPs and dependent children, I should like to look into that. I have a lot of sympathy for the situation, but at the same time it is a departure from the present tax system. In relation to assets being transferred to children within a family because of the death of an RRSP holder, if there is some capital gains and unpaid taxes on those assets, this is the occasion for the government to take its share of what has to be paid according to the law of the land.

Mr. Orlikow: I would not want someone reading Hansard to have the impression that I was referring to hypothetical cases of people using various loopholes in the rules and regulations of the Income Tax Act as a way of avoiding the payment of income tax. I was not talking about hypothetical cases. This afternoon I quoted precisely from the annual report of Revenue Canada. It indicated exactly how many people were involved. I am not talking about people avoiding taxes by not reporting income. The report concerned people who avoided the payment of income taxes, despite the fact that over 300 of them had reported incomes of $50,000, $100,000 or $200,000.

In all seriousness, it would be much easier to say no to the people in low and middle income levels who want a bit of a break in the disposition of their RRSPs. It would be difficult to say to them that they are being asked to pay a pretty heavy tax because everyone is doing so. It is very difficult to indicate that to them when one realizes that there are large numbers of people who find ways of not paying income tax.

I urge the minister to look at the United States legislation which set up the Securities Exchange Commission. One of its provisions requires corporations which operate and sell shares in the United States to make public information with regard to the remunerations paid to their directors, officers and underwriters, as well as their contracts with the corporations, their bonus and profit-sharing arrangements, stock options and so on. It is standard for that information to be made public in the United States. Therefore, Americans know more about what corporate exectives are doing and what their incomes are than Canadians do. The information we require is much less and it is not given to the public. It is time for Canada to have that type of legislation in order for Canadians to know how the free enterprise system operates.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I am willing to look into that. Some of those things require review once in a while. When I tabled the Bank Act amendments, I made provision to the effect that perhaps it would not be advisable for presidents of banks to be directors of corporations. Now I am receiving representations from corporations that do not like this provision. I am always open to suggestions and will look at new ways to open up society as much as we can and to make sure there is a minimum of conflict of interest in society, but it is not easy to achieve this.

● (2022)

Mr. Alexander: You are all heart.

Mr. Chrétien: I am doing my best and I will certainly look into the suggestion of the hon. member. I do not know if it will serve any very good purpose, as the hon. member thinks it will.

Mr. Neil: Before we recessed for supper, Mr. Chairman, the minister indicated that perhaps some of us on this side were panicking as a result of receiving correspondence from credit unions in our constituencies. I would like to associate myself with the comments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North and the hon. member for Provencher regarding the present amendments in respect of RRSPs. On June 12 the hon. member for Dauphin asked the Minister of Finance a question regarding the taxation of RRSPs and the minister said it was his understanding that, as far as RRSPs are concerned, there is no change at all.

In the course of the debate this afternoon the minister indicated that there had in fact been some changes in taxation of RRSPs. I find this very interesting because the credit unions and other organizations—

Mr. Chrétien: Just for clarification, Mr. Chairman, I agree with the hon. member that I said as far as I knew there were no changes. I said that in reply to his colleague, the hon. member for Dauphin, on June 12. That was on the basis of what I knew at that time. It came to my memory when I had to reply in the House that there was obviously a change, in relation to when the money is transferred to what I called a third party, but just in this case.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Chairman, it is interesting to note that the concern expressed in the letters we have received from credit unions is in regard to uncertainty as far as taxation is concerned. Let me read a paragraph of a letter from one of these credit unions. It is as follows:

> Also, the proposals make a basic change in the conditions under which people entered this savings program.

The problem as I see it is that people make investments and participate in plans on the basis of rules and regulations set out by the taxation department, and there must be some certainty as far as taxation is concerned. A short time ago I had occasion to speak with a tax expert who said that the most important thing as far as taxation is concerned is certainty. If you have a situation in which the tax laws are changed from year to year, you cannot plan your affairs. This is the concern of the credit unions; there is no certainty. People invest in plans on the basis of the future.

Today we have some proposed changes regarding taxation, and this is what concerns me. The minister has said there has been a difference in tax in relation to what happens at the death of a participant of the plan. I would like to ask the minister whether when a participant individual dies the present value of the plan is considered as "rights or things"? The minister is a lawyer and probably has handled numerous estates. For example, in respect of the Wheat Board there are rights and things for which you file a separate return because there are exemptions. Under these circumstances, is an individual entitled to claim the present value of a plan as "rights or things"?

Mr. Chrétien: No.

Mr. Neil: Am I correct in saying you have to add the present value to your income in the year of death?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister is a little more co-operative tonight after turning down my motion this afternoon calling for a little assistance with the terrible beer shortage we have in Manitoba. He would not relax his labelling practices or the excise tax and the people of Manitoba remember that sort of thing. There seems to be considerable concern on the part of quite a few credit unions across the country about this amendment. The credit unions pointed out the following in a letter I received:

> We urge you to maintain the flexibility in tax options now available to our members who become entitled to RRSP funds after a planholder's death. In particular the option to purchase an income averaging annuity and the right of the recipient to pay income tax on the amounts received. This is of particular importance to recipients in the low income tax bracket.

I was not here this afternoon so I did not hear whether the minister gave an explanation. Perhaps he has had second thoughts since this afternoon and can now indicate whether the government has any plans or amendments.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I gave an explanation of that point, and I suggest that the hon. member read Hansard tomorrow.

Mr. McKenzie: In view of the minister's answer, is he prepared to do anything in respect of the request? I am sure he has been receiving these letters from credit unions across the country. Does he have some response to their requests? This letter points out:

> Under current rules, it is the recipient of the RRSP funds who is taxed when the planholder dies. It is now proposed to include the RRSP funds on the planholder's final income tax return.
> This means taxes could be even more severe than if the planholder had withdrawn the funds in a lump sum before he died, since such items as salary, capital gains and accrued investment income must be reported on the same return.

The letter goes into some detail to point out that the taxes being levied are extremely high, and then states:

> Consider the case of a single parent (and tax law does not recognize common law marriages, so this may be a person who is separated or divorced but again living in a family situation) who dies on December 31 of a year in which salary amounted to $15,000. An RRSP worth $25,000 is left to two children under 16 years of age and not working.

At present, the RRSP would be divided equally and taxes of approximately $2,400 applied to each portion. This would leave each child $10,000.

If the proposed changes are accepted, the value of the RRSP would be added to the salary for the year, giving a taxable income of $40,000 on the planholder's final income tax return. At Saskatchewan rates, income tax on this amount is $13,022. From $13,022 must be deducted the income tax on the salary ($1,968) that would be collected anyway, leaving $11,054 of tax applicable to the RRSP.

So the value of a $25,000 RRSP is reduced to $13,046 by taxation.

Each child would receive $6,873 (instead of $10,100 under the current rules).

It should be noted that this example has been simplified. It does not take into account any capital gains that would be realized at death. If capital gains are realized and/or the salary and RRSP are larger, the loss to taxes would be greater.

I see the minister has walked out of the House in the middle of my representation and my asking a very, very important question. Perhaps we would get more satisfaction if the officials on the floor gave us some answers, instead of the minister walking out when we raise these issues.

Mr. Lumley: The hon. member would have received his answer if he had been here between four o'clock and 5.30 when this point was discussed. The representation he has just made has already been made by three or four members in the House.

Mr. McKenzie: Obviously the answers were not very satisfactory. I was not able to be here between four o'clock and five o'clock. Was this particular example read into the record at that time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, it was.

Mr. McKenzie: Did the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre get a letter from the Assiniboine Credit Union also?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, and so did the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. McKenzie: Obviously the answers were not satisfactory this afternoon. I do not know whether the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre received a satisfactory answer. It is unfortunate that I could not be here this afternoon; however, we are still discussing clause 34 tonight. I wish to make representations on behalf of this credit union and I would appreciate it if the parliamentary secretary would fill me in. Perhaps their thoughts have changed since this afternoon.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, representations from the Assiniboine Credit Union have already been made by the hon. member for Assiniboia, and the minister acknowledged him this afternoon.

An hon. Member: It is not the same letter.

Mr. Lumley: The letter the hon. member has been referring to is the same letter which has been received by many members from many credit unions across Canada, so the representation has been very similar. Rather than take up the valuable time remaining, because we have approximately 20 more clauses to address ourselves to tonight, I would suggest that the hon. member read Hansard tomorrow for the satisfactory answer which the minister gave.

Mr. McKenzie: I am afraid it cannot be sluffed off that easily, Mr. Chairman. We are talking about too many people. I do not know whether the whole letter was read into the record this afternoon.

Another concern the credit unions have is listed in this letter:

Co-operative Trust is also concerned about proposals that may mean lower interest rates and higher costs for the annuity funds that planholders buy with their RSP savings at retirement.

If the proposed changes are implemented, planholders between ages 60 and 71 could buy a term annuity providing payments to age 90. This represents a term of between 19 and 30 years.

But the planholder would have the option of basing the term on the age of his/her spouse, if that person is younger than the planholder, so the term could be much longer. For example, if the planholder is age 60 and the spouse is age 50, the term could be either 30 or 40 years. And the interest rate would have to be guaranteed for the entire term.

Interest rates on the annuities will be low because issuers will have to guarantee the rate over a long period of time without the assurance that the annuity will remain intact throughout the guarantee period.

This is because it is proposed to have all remaining funds paid out at the time of the planholder's death, whenever that may be.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, whether this whole letter was read into the record this afternoon, but it is one worth-while reading in a second time to get the point across to the minister and his officials. I would like the parliamentary secretary to give us some indication whether they are going to have a second look at these requests, or is the matter to remain just as it is?

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the hon. member for reading the whole answer into the record. As I recall, the second part was not read previously. As the hon. minister has indicated, this is a very complex and important issue, and we are grateful to the credit unions for bringing this to our attention. As was indicated this afternoon, we will be discussing this with the credit unions and other financial institutions to attempt to arrive at a reasonable solution.

Mr. McKenzie: I am glad the parliamentary secretary brought to my attention the fact that the whole letter had not been read into the record. I will read another section. It is entitled, "Age to be set":

It is also important to note that it is now proposed to legislate an age at which RRSP annuities could start.

Under current rules, the annuity can start at any age. But it has been proposed that the planholder would have to be at least age 60 to mature the RRSP. If the plan was collapsed before age 60, the entire amount would be included in taxable income for that year.

These long-term disadvantages to the proposed changes to RRSP legislation have been overlooked in some public comments by other business and consumer organizations. .

The whole letter has now been read into the record. I hope the minister and his officials will give this their full and complete consideration.

Mr. Benjamin: I will not read the letter again, Mr. Chairman. In fact, I will not read any of the letter again. The parliamentary secretary knows that all hon. members have received letters from dozens of credit unions as well as Co-op Trust, Co-op Insurance, et cetera.

The parliamentary secretary said a few minutes ago that the minister would be meeting with the credit unions, and I think I heard him aright when he said, "to reach some reasonable settlement". I do not know if those were the words he used, but I think they were. Once this clause is passed, Mr. Chairman, I cannot understand how the parliamentary secretary or the minister can reach some kind of settlement with the credit unions, Co-op Trust and the Registered Retirement Savings Plan holders once this becomes law, unless the Liberal government has some unique way of making changes in the way this clause reads without amending the law.

I would like to remind the parliamentary secretary that a predecessor of the present Minister of Finance, and I think even the first budget of this Minister of Finance, almost begged Canadians to save by registered retirement savings plans. There was great encouragement in earlier budgets of a few years ago, and a lot of Canadians did so. Many credit unions, Co-op Life, Co-op Trust, chartered banks and other financial institutions went to work with massive advertising campaigns to get everybody to buy a registered retirement savings plan.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that there is no conflict of interest here. I do not have one of those, and I have no intention of buying one. I will just stick with term deposits, draw my compound interest, pay my income tax on the interest and stay further ahead. I am further ahead than if I were to buy these annuities which you have to buy up as introduced by the Minister of Finance, after the government brought in earlier budgets to encourage people to buy registered retirement savings plans and gave them generous tax benefits.

Without reading the letter, Mr. Chairman, in the case of a single parent who dies leaving two children, the benefit drops from $10,100 to $6,800. Surely, that is like an umpire changing the rules in the fifth inning. I hope that the Minister of Finance and his parliamentary secretary have the authority to do one of two things: either phase this clause in over a period of four or five years so the holders of these plans can make their own assessment as to which is best for them—get out of the thing or stay in it—or, even better, withdraw clause 34 entirely from the legislation. The parliamentary secretary or the Minister of Finance could then meet with the credit unions and Co-op Trust and discuss with them what the government would like to do in terms of taxation with regard to registered retirement savings plans. But to change the rules about halfway through the ball game is not fair in terms of the tax penalty after the government has spent a few years and two budgets enticing Canadians to buy registered retirement savings plans.

Surely the minister and the parliamentary secretary must be having second thoughts about clause 34. I say they have to because mail that I am sure all hon. members have received indicates that people and organizations who have written cannot all be wrong. I would like to know whether the minister is prepared to withdraw clause 34. The parliamentary secretary should quit trying to kid this House that once this becomes law somehow the minister will meet with the credit unions and credit trusts and reach some reasonable settlement—I think those are the words he used. How the hell can a minister of finance agree to something different from what is in the law if he meets with these people after the clause has passed?

I doubt if the government and the minister will be out very much money if clause 34 were withdrawn. Later on, if he is still Minister of Finance, and after he has met with the credit unions and the Co-op Trust, if he wants to bring in another bill he is perfectly welcome to do so. But I want to remind him that it was his government that got tens of thousands of Canadians to buy these RRSPs and now the government wants to increase the tax on them by anywhere from one-third to a half, depending on the circumstances these individuals are in. Surely that is not fair.

Surely the Minister of Finance must know that. Surely he must realize that whatever his advisors told him was wrong. Surely the co-operative movement and the caisses populaires are speaking up for the tens of thousands of people who have bought these plans, on the advice of the government, with their tax incentives. And now within a matter of two or three years after these people have done that, the minister proposes to increase the tax on these plans. That is not fair ball.

Mr. Alexander: That is less than honest.

Mr. Benjamin: I think the minister should tell the House tonight that once we reach ten o'clock and the bill goes through, it goes through without clause 34.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I cannot give the guarantee to the hon. gentleman. I said earlier that this clause is very important because it is interrelated to the new flexibility that we are giving to the people who have bought registered retirement savings plans. We are adding via this bill a new flexibility. As I have said many times today, when one reaches the age of 71 only two options are available: either the individual cashed his RRSP and paid the tax in one shot at that date, using the money as he wanted, or he could buy a life annuity. With the RRIF, the program which we are introducing today, the individual will have much more flexibility. He will be able to buy another form of savings which will be called the RRIF. He will be able to spread his income over a period of years. The tax will be paid at each year's level. So this system is providing a lot of flexibility to those Canadians who bought an RRSP.

In the discussions I have had, from the letters I have received as well as from my own information, we can see some problems for holders of the unmatured RRSPs when these plans go to children or dependents. To the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and to the hon. member for Assiniboia who have made representations in that regard, I say that I am looking into that situation. I have a lot of sympathy with this problem but I want to take a look at the implications before coming to a decision. In protecting certain circumstances I do not want to create more problems.

I might add that I have been made aware of these problems only during the last few days. I hope I will be able to come up with a solution as quickly as possible. If I can, I will find ways and means to do so. If there is some precedent you want to correct in midstream we can always take steps to correct it subject to later legislation. I will undertake to go to work as quickly as possible and try to resolve the situation. I do not want to drop all the schemes under the RRIF which have been well received by the public and which give a lot of flexibility to the people who will reach 71 and want to plan their income but do not want to be forced just to buy an annuity. If they die a year after, there is nothing left for the survivors of the spouse. We must find a solution to cope with the problem of unmatured RRSPs and in the process not destroy the RRIF programs. That is an undertaking I have made public this afternoon in answer to the many points raised by both sides of the House.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, in order to ensure that there is no misunderstanding with respect to comments raised by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, I would like to say that the minister made a commitment to meet with the trust companies, credit unions and other financial institutions in trying to arrive at a reasonably satisfactory solution. At the present time no official representation has been made by the credit unions. All we have are letters sent by the individual credit unions or representations made by members from both sides of the House.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have the words of the parliamentary secretary. Once this clause becomes law, unless new legislation is brought in, no matter how much one agrees with the representations of credit unions, the only solution is to amend the law. It does not say much for the advisers to the Minister of Finance and the parliamentary secretary. Since the budget was brought down it has taken that time for the Co-op Trust and the credit-unions to realize what the ramifications of the legislation will be. If the minister's advisers did not follow through on what the ramifications are, he should fire those advisers.

The Minister of Finance talks about the RRIFs, the registered retirement income funds. He is a very optimistic minister. The change proposed by the minister would allow RRSP holders to establish a registered retirement income fund which would provide payments until the planholder reaches the age of 90. Now, really, Mr. Chairman, why did he not put down age 190? The RRIFs will provide continually increasing payments as long as the fund generates a return on its investment. That will tend to offset some price increases caused by inflation. Maybe that is what the minister's advisers had in mind. I do not know if there is anyone in this place who will live to age 190, except for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the right hon. member for Prince Albert, but I just do not accept it, and neither does the Co-op Trust and the credit unions, and I think they are probably somewhat more expert in this area than I am.

I do not think the alternative that the Minister of Finance suggests is adequate. I do not think it is sufficient to overcome or offset criticisms by the co-operative and credit union movement of what the government intends to do on this bill concerning the registered retirement savings plans. If the rules are to be changed on a long-term investment or long-term pension program, you cannot make the change and have it take effect immediately. If we are going to change the rules on something that is a long-term investment or long-term program, we cannot make the change to have effect immediately. We must not punish people who took the government's advice two or three years ago and bought these plans on the basis of long-term retirement, people who are investing for the long-term in their retirement, by three or four years later coming out with a substantially increased tax. We cannot do that once they have taken out the annuity, or if the recipient or the owner of a plan dies and the beneficiary loses as much as one third. Surely that is not fair.

I do not see how the minister or his parliamentary secretary can say that even though we pass this clause tonight, he will reach some settlement with the credit unions and the co-op trusts. The minister cannot kid me that he will meet with them one week and the next bring in a bill to amend this act. He is not kidding me or anyone else. It would save a hell of a lot of trouble if he withdrew those sections, met with those organizations and came up with some firm legislation to deal with those two matters in a way that is fair to the people who followed the advice of the government several years ago.

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member should know that very often with technical problems under the present system we make an announcement that such and such a change can be made and that it will be done in the next legislation, retroactive to a date chosen by the minister. We have to do that all the time when there are difficult problems.

If we have a problem, as I suspect we have, it would solve the problem. With regard to the comment as to why we choose age 90 as being optimistic, it is a way to spread the revenues. If you choose more years than that, the revenues will be less. Income will have to be spread over a longer period of time. We want to cover most of the people who retire and choose the plan after 71. That is why age 90 is a fair number.

If a man dies before that age, a certain amount would be received the first year and another amount the second year, according to inflation. In that way it is spread. If he dies between the ages of 71 and 91, his wife can carry on until she reaches 90. Of course, if he is alone when he dies, this is included in his estate and taxed accordingly.

This is to spread the revenue. Before that there was no option. If one did not take an annuity, one had to take the cash and pay the tax at 71. If there was a substantial amount of money, the tax was very high. In order to reduce that, we will permit them to spread the level of taxation over a period of years. That will reduce the level of tax a person has to pay.

A person also had the choice of taking a life annuity. The problem with a life annuity is that if he dies six months later, only the spouse qualifies. Other survivors do not get anything. The scheme we propose has a lot more flexibility for those who are retired and have saved money through RRSPs.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, I just want to consider momentarily what we have here now. It is a most unusual situation as far as clause 34 is concerned. I have followed with great interest the representations from this side. I sense from what has been said by such as the hon. member for Welland and others on the minister's side that there is some real apprehension about the effect of this provision. We have the minister stand in his place in a most unusual situation saying, in effect, that this clause is defective in some material respects. However, he is not prepared to do anything now except possibly give a vague undertaking to maybe consult with some of the people who have been making representations, such as the credit unions. He goes on to explain that we have an obligation and do not want to lose any tax money. That is the essence of what he is saying, that he does not want to lose any tax money.

If we made any changes, it might have the effect of not picking up some tax from that group of people who might derive benefits from some sensible and reasonable amendments brought forward at this time. We have a situation now where the Minister of Finance apparently admits openly and categorically that this clause causes some serious consequences to dependents.

Mr. Chrétien: I would never admit that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I do not know how else to interpret this. I do not know what to expect from this minister.

I want to bring another matter to the attention of the committee, a reference that neither I nor anyone who follows this debate would appreciate. The minister made a smart remark to the effect that, because he was speaking in French, I did not understand what he was talking about and therefore did not listen to him. This minister is the same as the Minister of Transport who goes across this country sowing the seeds of dissent. What kind of statement is that from the Minister of Finance? What kind of a man is that who, with a position within cabinet, continually pretends that he is wrapping himself in the flag, wanting to keep the country together, while raising great emotional debates about fighting for our country?

I do not hold any grudge against him because his English is not perfect. I consider him as good a Canadian as I am. However, I resent these cheap, uncalled for statements that somehow, because he is speaking the other official language, I do not follow or care to follow what he is saying. I was going to raise a question of privilege, but I now make the point. I do not think that anything he says or does is worthy of any sort of question of privilege.

Getting back to the point, I want to get some information from the minister. I am speaking in one of the official languages. I think he understands that. What kind of commitment do we have from the minister? Let us get down to the bare facts of this matter with regard to the question of dependents. If we are going to extend this great undertaking of the minister, and if he is going to consult with those who find a problem with this particular clause, what kind of a firm undertaking do we have?

Does he now undertake to make the appropriate changes so that dependent children will derive the benefit of not having the fund taxable in the same way as a spouse would not have it taxable in the event of death before an option is taken with regard to the RRIF or the annuity basis? Can he now undertake that those who involve themselves in RRSPs will not have to concern themselves, in the event of their death, that dependent children will find themselves with a tax situation different from that of a spouse under this provision? If he can give that undertaking, it would be something. Even if it does not have the basis of law, we would understand that the government's intention is clear, that those people who do not pay tax or withhold money for taxes would be acting upon the minister's statement in this House. How far does this undertaking go? I want to hear the minister's statement in this regard.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I do not have to repeat what I have said. The hon. member is creating the impression that when an RRSP under the old provision was transfered to dependents, there was no tax paid. There was some tax paid. In some cases it was higher; in others it was lower. However, it was paid. There could have been income averaging, but there was some tax to be paid.

Under that system, it could be there are some circumstances which I said I would like to look into and come up with a solution. I undertook that I would do that as quickly as possible. If there is something wrong with this clause after I have analysed it thoroughly, I will undertake, as I said earlier tonight, to give notice that I will make a change, as I have done in many other instances. I will make a public announcement at the next occasion that there will be a tax bill which will amend the act to achieve that goal, and it will be done retroactively. The lawyers in the Department of National Revenue will be under notice that there will be a change to meet the requirement retroactive to that date. As a result, nobody will be off base. We have done this before and will do it again if need be.

However, I have to make sure we are not creating a loophole here. We are not dealing only with people who can accumulate $20,000 or $50,000 in RRSPs. There are some who over a long period can accumulate $300,000 upon which income tax has not been paid. The system could become a loophole for people who are at the high end of the income bracket and our readiness to give tax benefits under certain conditions does not mean we want to give a hell of a break to people who may have accumulated $300,000.

I do not think it would be responsible for a minister of finance to act without taking such matters into consideration and receiving advice on the subject. I have received letters, as have many hon. members. But I have not received briefs from those who regularly send briefs to my department asking me to make changes. As soon as I reach the conclusion that something ought to be done it will be done in the fashion I have indicated. But I will not give undertakings on the lines suggested merely because I am under pressure in the House. It would be irresponsible to take such a course. I must ask my officials to look into the whole question and advise me what the result has been.

The truth is, the RRIF that we are creating at this moment is a hell of a new good system enabling people to exercise greater flexibility. Members opposite do not want to talk about the good aspects; they would like me to throw the baby out with the bathwater and I will not do that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is amusing to hear the minister talking about these great new ideas. The suggestion that there should be more flexibility with regard to RRSPs has been put forward to the minister and his predecessors ever since I have been in this House. It was swept aside time and again with the same excuse that it was necessary to maintain the integrity of the system no matter how stupid the rule. I am not suggesting for a moment the minister is not making an effort to introduce greater flexibility, though perhaps he is not proceeding as fast or as far as I would like to see.

The minister tries to discount the question I put to him by saying there is not tax payable. That was not the point raised in my question at all. My point is this: after a legitimate point had been raised this afternoon by my hon. friend from Provencher, the minister admitted dependent children were not in the same category as a spouse even under the existing clause. I thought he made a forceful presentation of the argument that a similar rule should apply in the case of dependents as in the case of spouses. The minister says no, so there is a fundamental difference.

Mr. Chrétien: There is a fundamental difference.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The minister admits there is something wrong with this clause. He says he is prepared to enter into consultations about it. I hope those consultations will be more meaningful than the consultations with the provinces he talked about just before six o'clock. To my mind, what he said was flim-flam. On the basis of what I read in press reports and of the communiqué issued by the four western premiers, I would say that the hon. gentleman is not very good at consultation.

I would like to find out precisely when he proposes to amend the legislation having regard to realities about the length of this session. Nothing will really suffer if we do not give third reading to this bill before the end of June when we get out of here. We on this side of the House are prepared, as ever, to expedite good legislation, but clause 5 is a travesty, an indication of the sloppy, unprepared, unthinking and inept provision which we should be prepared to amend in committee of the whole. But debate is prematurely cut off because the minister is afraid to defend the measure clause by clause.

There have been complaints with regard to this clause and the minister has admitted it is imperfect. In answer to criticism he says: "Oh, I will consult and we can deal with it". He takes the attitude that if the government has open to it the option to err when collecting taxes at the expense of dependent children, of those who cannot defend themselves and who need help at a time of rising prices in order to maintain themselves in the event of the death of a parent, it will err on the side of continuing to collect taxes. He would prefer to maintain the integrity of the tax collection system. No social compassion is being shown by the minister.

A good case has been made by hon. members on this side of the House and, indeed, by members of the New Democratic Party. But the minister merely gives an airy-fairy promise to engage in consultations and, later, gives notice of an intention to correct any shortcomings. He gives no specific undertaking. He says he will do the best he can. "Trust in me", he says. This is not the kind of statement one would expect from a Minister of Finance with any social compassion. Will the minister undertake to engage in consultation with the parties involved to make sure he has a clause which he can defend before third reading is over? I am sure we will give unanimous consent on this side in the event of any reasonable amendment being brought forward at any stage. It is not good enough to reply to the letters we have received saying only that the minister intends to consider the problem. Will the minister assure us that the clause will be amended so as to alleviate the concern expressed by the trust companies, the caisse populaires and others across Canada, and will he hold back third reading until this has been done?

Mr. Chrétien: I gave my response to that suggestion earlier in reply to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. There is a difference between a retirement savings plan and an estate. An RRSP is not an estate. It is an accumulation of savings so that people can have income when they retire. We have to treat it like that. It is not a means by which to avoid taxes or to accumulate wealth to transmit to children or dependents. It is a system by which money can be put aside for savings so that there can be income at the time of retirement.

I think hon. members are trying to take the legislation away from its original purpose, which is to allow for money to be put aside for retirement purposes. It is not a tax loophole so that wealth can be accumulated for children or dependents. It is something else. It is a registered retirement savings plan. The words are very clear. This afternoon the hon. member for Provencher and tonight the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar have been trying to divert attention from that, and I think it has to be made very clear. All kinds of cases could be made. Some suggest that if a planholder dies, the money should go to this family tax-free. That is not what the plan is for. It is for retirement.

I have explained ten times that previous to now when a participant in the plan reached 71, he had only two options. He could cash his RRSP in. If he had accumulated $100,000, he paid tax on $100,000 in the year he cashed it in. His other choice would have been to buy a life annuity. If he bought a life annuity and died a week later, there might be nothing left for anyone but his spouse. We considered the wife of a man who was retiring to be part of his responsibility during retirement, but if he had two children and no wife and died at 72, there might be no asset to go to the children. It was lost completely, and the profit stayed with the insurance company. We are now allowing more flexibility so that the accumulated $100,000 over a period 20 years can be withdrawn a little every year and the tax will be paid only on the amount of money taken out each year. The level of taxation will depend on the level of income each year.

Hon. members opposite are attempting to allow accumulation of wealth for estate purposes. This program does not allow for that because, let us realize, the money put into the program during a lifetime is tax-free.

Money paid into RRSPs is not subject to income tax. That money is put aside. Tax is paid when money is withdrawn from the scheme. We have decided to bring in new programs to add flexibility, but we always had in mind that the purpose of this program is to maintain income levels for retired people. The program is not meant to allow an accumulation of wealth. We should not mix the two. This afternoon the hon. member for Provencher and tonight the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar have been trying to develop it that way. They argue that the plan should be tax free. Everyone in this land would like to have to pay no taxes, but we have to maintain the important principle that RRSPs and RRIFs are schemes to maintain the incomes of people. They are not meant to build estates.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to carry on much longer because I know others have points to make.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I know hon. members on the government side must be embarrassed to think about supporting the Minister of Finance in this proposition. It is a very simple proposition. The minister says that the scheme applies to spouses, but he cannot bring himself to extend it to dependent children.

If every hon. member on the government side would canvass their own personal situation—and I am not now thinking of their constituents—those who have dependent children might ask themselves why the plan should not include them. If the plan now goes as far as including spouses, why not dependent children? Perhaps the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre is right. If this government stays in power much longer, the rate of taxation will be so high by the time we withdraw our RRSPs that it would be better to pay tax on our incomes and just let our money earn interest.

However, I ask hon. members opposite to consider the extension of this principle and to put pressure on the minister to make a firm declaration that he will bring in an appropriate amendment to extend this plan to dependent children. That is a social aim. That will not cause the government to lose all its income, even this government with its spending habits. We have received a good lecture from the minister, but the point I want to make and the point which was made by the hon. member for Provencher this afternoon is that this would not be an overwhelming concession on the part of the government. All I am asking is that the government accept this basic principle.

I will not stand here and waste the remainder of the evening talking to unyielding ears. There are important clauses here, but the minister does not seem to have the compassion or the interest to do anything about this important proposition. I want him to understand what considerations are moving people on this side to make this kind of representation. It is not in any partisan political sense but in the interests of all those dependent children who might be in this unfortunate situation. I hope the minister will give serious thought, before this bill is read the third time, to changing his mind on this.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Chairman, the minister was implying that we on this side were suggesting that we should have a tax-free situation as far as RRSPs are concerned. Up until now taxation with respect to the plan has been certain. Attempts are being made in this legislation to change the system of taxation for this plan in midstream. All we are asking is that the minister do what he said when he responded to the hon. member for Dauphin on June 12. He said there would be no changes in taxation for RRSPs because people have purchased plans over the years based on the certainty that there were certain rules and regulations.

Now, half-way through, the minister is changing the system of taxation. All we are asking is that he understand that when people entered into this plan they knew what the taxation liability would be. If at some future time we want to create a situation whereby tax liability will be different, that is fine; but let us tell people who have purchased these plans up until now that there will be no change in the law as it existed for them when they purchased their plans. If the minister wants to discuss this matter with credit unions, trust companies and other institutions with regard to the future, that is fine; but let there be some certainty with respect to the plans which exist at the present time so that there will be no misunderstandings.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, many times I have indicated to the committee that I have sympathy for the dependents of participants in registered retirement savings plans, but I doubt very much whether the dependents of participants over 71 have very much need. Quite a lot of money can be accumulated under RRSPs. If there is a need there, I doubt it is very frequent because when you reach the age at which you benefit from an RRIF, there can be a lot of money accumulated in the fund but there are very few people with dependent children in that category. So this is not a common occurrence we would be faced with, though there could be an exceptional situation. For instance, when I am 71, my youngest child will be 40 and I certainly hope he will not be dependent on me at that time. The way this is presented to the House, it is as if we were taking bread away from little kids. This is an RRSP, and advantage is taken of RRIF only at the age of 71, so I do not want people to get too excited about this. I see many members here of whose curriculum vitae I know something and I find that although they were good at the beginning of their lives they seem to be less good now!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I want to remind the minister that there are many virile people in this country. In fact, I have three constituents over 80 years old who draw old age pension and family allowance at the same time.

Mr. Chrétien: That is why I said I would like to help those valuable persons.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I think it must be obvious to members of the House that the Minister of Finance is absolutely inflexible with respect to the requests we have been putting forth concerning an RRSP should a person die with one of those plans in force. So I propose to ask the minister a few questions about another subclause under clause 34.

I refer the minister to clause 34(9) which appears at page 40 of the bill. This is the provision in which it is proposed to limit to age 60 the starting date for life annuity payments under the matured RRSP. I recommend that the minister consider withdrawing that proposal. I say this because, before putting my direct question to the minister, I think he would agree that under the present plan there is no minimum age limit, nor has there been any such limitation since the RRSP was introduced into the Income Tax Act back in 1957. So for some 20-odd years there has been no minimum age at which a person can rollover or in some other way deal with the funds which he has in an RRSP. Would the minister consider withdrawing his proposal for a new minimum age limit so far as the RRSP is concerned?

Mr. Chrétien: Perhaps, as usual, I will read the technical explanation first and following that I will deal with the points made by the hon. member.

In subparagraph 146(2)(b)(iii) the change introduced the new provision regarding the time at which payments of retirement income out of RRSP must start. Retirement income must commence at some time after the annuitant becomes 60 and before the end of the year in which he becomes 72 years of age. RRSPs were introduced as a tax assisted savings plan for the purpose of providing an income in retirement for those who did not have access to a pension plan. Too often only the short term tax saving aspects are emphasized. The age 60 provision emphasizes the essential nature of these plans without impeding their continued widespread use. Since retirement before the age of 60 is actually rare, although widely discussed, it enables the retirement nature to be emphasized with the minimum of inconvenience. For the rare case, where the money is needed, the plan can still be used to provide retirement income before the age of 60, but the technique is somewhat different.

To answer the hon. member as to why there should be a minimum age, let me say to him that it is to illustrate the point I was making earlier with regard to the confusion that is developing in the minds of some people at this time. People seem to forget that those are tax deductions or incentives we are giving to individuals to save money for their retirement. Now it seems to be drifting into something else. People seem to think it is a way of accumulating wealth without paying taxes.

To illustrate this clearly, we are designating the age of 60 as the starting age for RRSP. I do not know whether 60 is too late or too early. We used to talk about retirement at age 65 and then we wanted to reduce the age of retirement. Now there are people in this land who argue that we should depart from the practice of making people retire at a certain age. My point is that we want to make it clear—because I detected earlier in this debate and on other occasions the danger that people may think that RRSPs are a way to accumulate wealth—that it is a retirement savings plan. That is why we put the age of 60 there, but it is not an essential provision.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, in view of the minister's answer, in which he said we were confused concerning the taxability of these lump sum amounts which end up in RRSPs, I would like to put three examples to the minister and ask him how he distinguishes among the deferred income plans to which I will refer in that there is no minimum age in any of the three and yet, for reasons about which I am not clear, he hopes to introduce the minimum age in the case of RRSPs.

The first example I put to the minister is that the current requirement under the Income Tax Act is that the maturity date for an RRSP must be on or before attainment of age 71. We agree on that. There is no minimum age limitation, nor has there been any such limitation since 1957. I ask the minister how he distinguishes between the present position with respect to an RRSP and, for example, the deferred profit sharing plans? The Income Tax Act has followed the same pattern as RRSPs; that is, it provides that benefits be paid out not later than at the age of 71 but that there be no minimum age. Why is the RRSP, if amended as the minister suggests, different from the present Income Tax Act provision with respect to deferred profit sharing plans?

Mr. Chrétien: The purpose of the profit sharing plans is not necessarily retirement income. It could serve as a retirement instrument but this is not the main purpose of the plan. The philosophy of RRSP is quite different from that of deferred profit sharing plans. That is why there is no minimum age requirement in the case of deferred profit sharing plans.

Mr. Stevens: If that is the case, then I will be most curious to find out the minister's reason for the minimum age in my second example. The Income Tax Act does not provide any minimum age for commencement of a pension under an employee pension plan, but Revenue Canada has issued information circular 72-13R4 which stipulates that normal retirement age under a pension plan should not be earlier than age 60 but allows for payment of pensions at an earlier date under certain circumstances. These circumstances include retirement at age 55 after 25 years of service or retirement after 30 years of service regardless of age. Can the minister distinguish why, in the case of the information circular to which I have referred, it is permissible to have these plans with regard to people who wish to retire before age 60, but under the registered retirement savings plans arbitrarily the minimum age is 60?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier about the last proposal made by the hon. member, he is alluding to the age of 60. Of course, as concerns pension plans, we have provided more flexibility to allow those who have now reached 60 to benefit from the plans in certain circumstances for various reasons. But as regards the plans called RRSPs, we have set the minimum age at 60 for the reason that I have mentioned on several occasions in committee. More and more these plans are being considered not as savings plans which provide you with money for your retirement, but as plans which enable you to avoid paying normal taxes throughout the years. You have only to read the advertisements in the newspapers or the propaganda made by those who sell pension plans. They very rarely mention pensions, and very often they talk mostly of the pension plans as a means to avoid paying income tax. This is one of the problems that we want to avoid. We must not forget the purpose of this type of plan which is to save money for one's retirement. If we let people get too far away from this purpose, one day our program will finally be considered by the public as strictly a means to avoid paying normal income taxes. This is one of the problems which we must always face in such programs. We must ensure that the main purpose is not lost in the evolution of such plans because people could finally so much abuse what is good for other purposes that the whole program would have to be eliminated in the end because it would no longer meet the original objectives.

In the circumstances, we must be very cautious, and I believe that we have been wise to choose the age of 60 in the case of RRSPs. If we discover that this is too restrictive, we can always change the program, but I cannot see why it would not be important to come back to the purpose for which this program was created and set the minimum age at 60.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: I understand what the minister is saying, that presumably at some stage a plan should be subject to equitable tax. The minister is not consistent. In private pension plans, which have the advantage of tax deferral, Revenue Canada is willing to allow those plans to be operative, in the case of a person working for 30 years, at any age, and in the case of a person working for 25 years, at 55 years of age. Notwithstanding the fact that it is acceptable to allow those plans to be operative at ages lower than 60, why is the department arbitrarily harsh in respect of those who have participated in RRSPs?

Mr. Chrétien: There is no flexibility in pension plans as there is in RRSPs. A person can withdraw any portion of his RRSP before age 60, whenever he requires the money. It is not a question of the funds being locked in.

Mr. Stevens: At which point he is required to pay the tax.

Mr. Chrétien: For example, if a person has accumulated $100,000, in RRSPs, at any time when he needs money, he can arrange to take $5,000 out of the plan if he wants. He can pay tax any year he wants at that level, and he is taxed according to his income in that year. It is normal, for we must remember that he was not taxed in the first place.

As I explained earlier, the purpose of this scheme was to make funds available at the time of retirement. If a person withdraws any portion of it at age 50, he must pay taxes according to his income at that time. That is fair, because at the time his money was put into the RRSP he was not required to pay tax on it.

RRSPs are designed for retirement purposes. Before the age of 60, a person has a lot of flexibility in his plan. He can withdraw the money or any portion of it. But that is not the case under pension plans.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I should like to emphasize that pension plans can be discontinued. My third example is the case of employee profit-sharing plans. Revenue Canada issued Information Circular 71-1R. It requires simply that the normal retirement age for payment of benefits be defined in the plan, but that no minimum age is required. In these three very relevant examples, why is the department willing to be flexible as to the operative age, whereas under RRSPs arbitrarily the minimum age is 60?

I would like to mention a few very brief examples of genuine hardship which will result for people who are counting on the proceeds from registered retirement savings plans. They will not be able to participate because of the arbitrary 60-year figure which the minister has come up with.

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member must understand that between the ages of 60 and 71 a person can transfer his RRSP into an RRIF.

Mr. Stevens: I am dealing with under age 60.

Mr. Chrétien: Under 60 a person can withdraw any portion of his RRSP, but it cannot be transferred to an RRIF. He can use that money in order to pay his taxes or do whatever he wants. It was necessary to have a minimum age for a person wanting to transfer his RRSPs into RRIFs.

The purpose of RRIF is to ensure, when a person reaches retirement, that he is not forced to take all his RRSP savings and pay his taxes in one shot, and to ensure that he is not forced to buy a life annuity. We want to provide some flexibility for people who have RRSP savings.

Because RRSPs will be flowing now into RRIFs, it was necessary to establish a minimum age. Otherwise, there would have been a complete confusion. We should not make the program inoperative or more difficult. We want to help people with RRSPs to save money, in order for them to have cash to add to their retirement incomes.

Mr. Stevens: In the case of an individual who encounters a permanent impairment of health or other factors which force him to adjust to a limited work schedule and a reduced income, perhaps it would be logical for him to convert his RRSP into an immediate annuity payment in order to supplement his inadequate income. Such a person will not be able to do that, if this minimum 60-year requirement goes through, if in fact he is less than 60 years of age. Why cannot that flexibility be offered?

Mr. Chrétien: That person could achieve exactly the same purpose if he withdrew a portion of his RRSP every year. If he feels he requires $3,000 more, because he has lost his capacity of earning at age 55, he can decide to withdraw that amount from his RRSP. Also he will pay the tax on this amount according to his level of tax at age 55. That is quite simple. He can do that whenever he wants. He is not penalized by this scheme.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, let me put the situation to the minister in which there has been a premature death. Under the present RRSP the law is flexible, and, I would suggest, well suited to emergencies of this kind, because a surviving spouse can now roll-over the deceased's RRSP into his or her own RRSP. Will that flexibility not be lost if you put the 60-year limiting factor in, bearing in mind that on the death of a person there will be taxation on the lump sum amount?

Mr. Chrétien: The spouse can roll it over if desired into an RRSP of his or her own at any time. The law permits that at this moment. I do not see the problem about which the hon. member is talking.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, in the twilight minutes of the session on Friday I rose on a point of order and passed a series of amendments across the floor that we on this side had prepared in respect of clause 6. The minister was courteous enough to accept them at that time. There is some reason for questioning the figures given during the budget speech, and there is obviously reason to question the figures given in the announcements by the Minister of State for Science and Technology.

In the amendments I sent over is a call for a separation of current research expenditure from capital research expenditure. I made it known to the parliamentary secretary that we personally favoured the tax credit route in respect of R and D, but in light of a potential conflict with thoughts on the government side we also sent over an amendment that would carry on with the 50 per cent allowance but on a separated basis, separating those firms with research accounts of $1 million or less from those with accounts of $1 million or more. In other words, those large firms which make up 70 per cent of R and D expenditures in Canada would be subject to incrementality, and those firms with R and D expenditure accounts of less than $1 million would be subject to the full credit allowance.

I am wondering whether we might obtain unanimous consent to revert back to clause 6 for this consideration.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, with 30 seconds left I think it would be difficult to deal with an important amendment like that. I am sorry, but I am not the one who took up the time of the committee tonight. The time of the committee was taken up with repetition after repetition by members of the opposition. I would have liked to deal with the amendment of the hon. member who I think tomorrow or perhaps Wednesday at caucus should give hell to his colleagues for taking up the time.

Mr. Stevens: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I gave you notice of a matter I wished to raise at this time. It concerns remarks made during this committee on Friday afternoon, as they appear at pages 6504 and 6505 of Hansard.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Notice has been given to Mr. Speaker during the day. Perhaps I may be allowed to quote from Beauchesne's citation 138(2) as follows:

> If offensive words are spoken in committee, which are taken down, the House only, and not the committee, can take notice of them.

Therefore, being in committee, I cannot take notice of them. I might add that Mr. Speaker has been served notice of this matter and will deal with it.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, when I drew Beauchesne's citation 138(2) to your attention I did so to point out that normally the committee reports the offensive words to Mr. Speaker so he can act upon them. I hope there will be no technical imperfection when I attempt to raise the matter in the House.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker has been served notice. The remarks of the hon. member have been registered in Hansard and I am certain that Mr. Speaker will make a ruling tomorrow or at a later date.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Under Standing Order 75(14), it is provided that when a bill is reported without amendment, third reading of the bill may be moved immediately, and I so move.

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am more than surprised at the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) now asking, after his performance this afternoon with regard to this particular bill—

An hon. Member: Order. This is not third reading.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is third reading. We are into third reading at this time. There is no way that this bill is going to be read a third time tonight.

An hon. Member: We are not on third reading yet.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The Speaker has moved to third reading.

An hon. Member: No, he has not.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am speaking on third reading of this bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I recognized the hon. member on a point of order following the proposal by the hon. minister. If the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is not ready to raise the question he wanted to and which I believe was a point of order, I will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who indicated his intention to do so.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the proposal made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to proceed with third reading tonight. We had a closure motion under which the committee of the whole stage was to finish today. I suggest that it was passed on the understanding that that was all that would happen today.

An hon. Member: That's right.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Just a minute. Mr. Speaker, I have been here and I have seen the practice of regarding a sentence or two as debate, whereupon closure was moved. The reason I do not wish to see third reading called tonight is that I believe that if the Minister of Finance debates the matter for a moment or two he will then get up on Wednesday and say that on the resumption of the third reading debate he has the right that day to move closure.

If by this point of order I have talked long enough that it is now ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that what you ought now to do is to say that third reading will be posted for the next sitting of the House, but not tonight. Because we do not trust those ministers across the way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being ten o'clock I do not have to rule on the point of order.

Mr. Basford: You would think that the official opposition could have expressed it rather than having to rely on the NDP.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being ten o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 10.01 the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

SUMMARY NEWS SERVICE FOR PRIME MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in view of the disclosure of the establishment of a summary service for the Prime Minister at a stated annual cost of $43,000, and in view of the necessity of doing something to bring hard news of what is happening in our country to the Prime Minister's attention, I would move under the terms of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

That this House recommend to the Prime Minister that he save the taxpayers this $43,000 by occasionally attending debates in the House or, at least, reading Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

SPORTS

DRAFTING OF JUNIOR HOCKEY PLAYERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of importance under the terms of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the government underwrites, through CAHA, the development of junior hockey in Canada, and because foreign professional hockey teams have taken to raiding the junior ranks without in any way compensating for development fees which directly affect Canadian taxpayers, as witness last week, for example, in the signing of 17-year old Wayne Gretzky by the Indianapolis Racers of the WHA, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

That the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport introduce forthwith a program which would make it compulsory for all professional hockey teams and leagues drafting Canadian players to reimburse junior hockey in Canada to an amount equivalent to their over-all development and administrative costs.

Mr. Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REQUEST THAT CANADA LABOUR CODE BE AMENDED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the 30 employees of Quebec city radio station CJRP have been fighting since September 1974 to obtain a collective agreement and were certified as a union in July 1975; and in view of the fact that this union has no guarantee that it will be covered by the provisions of the Canada Labour Code, as amended by Bill C-8, providing for the settlement of first collective agreements and this, not because of the principle of the act, but because of its retroactive effect to December 31, 1975, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the House request the government to amend the first subsection of section 171.1 of the Canada Labour Code and replace "December 31, 1975" by "July 31, 1975".

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO STANDING ORDERS CONCERNING HOLIDAYS OF JUNE 24 AND JULY 1—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an urgent matter.

Considering that under Standing Order 2(3), June 24 and July 1 are legal holidays on which there is no sitting of the House; considering that this year, June 24 and July 1 fall on a Saturday when usually parliament does not sit, and to prevent the staff of the House of Commons as well as members of parliament from losing the holidays on June 24 and July 1, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the House authorize an amendment to Standing Order 2(3) by adding the following: When the holidays of June 24 and July 1 fall on a Saturday or a Sunday, the House will not sit on the Friday preceding June 24 and July 1.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

STORMS

DECLARATION OF SOUTHEASTERN MANITOBA AS DISASTER AREA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order No. 43. In view of the unfortunate loss of life and devastation of property caused by two tornadoes which struck southeastern Manitoba on June 19, 1978, namely, in the areas of Morris, Aubigny, St. Pierre, St. Elizabeth, Greenland and Ste. Anne, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

● (1412)

That the Government of Canada co-operate with the province of Manitoba in assessing the damage with the view of declaring the affected area a disaster area.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to the Standing Order, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

FILMS

REQUESTED BAN ON IMPORTATION OF SACRILEGIOUS FILM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I know that a similar motion was presented on this matter previously: I reintroduce it now in the hope of getting unanimous consent without debate.

A pornographic film made in Sweden depicting Jesus Christ, who many of us believe is the Son of God in human flesh—as we acknowledge in the prayers opening parliament—and who even humanists and agnostics acknowledge as one of the greatest, if not the greatest, man who ever lived, is allegedly to be allowed to come into Canada with the permission of the customs and excise branch of the Department of National Revenue. In view of the sacrilegious and extremely offensive nature of this film, which has already been banned in England, France and Israel, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That the minister in charge of customs and excise prevent the movie "The Many Faces of Christ" coming into Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL UNITY

REQUEST FOR EARLY REPORT OF TASK FORCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that members and staff of the task force on national unity are resigning from time to time to become Liberal candidates in federal and provincial elections, apparently having obtained whatever publicity value they could squeeze out of the task force itself, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

That the task force be requested to complete its report immediately so that members and staff are still available to complete the report, and that a grateful government arrange to provide automatic Liberal nominations in federal and provincial districts for the redundant members and staff or award the Order of Canada to former members and staff as they depart from their duties inspired by the realization that government constitutional proposals have not had to await their recommendations.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

CALL FOR MORATORIUM ON WHALING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the International Whaling Conference commences in London on June 26 of this year, in view of Canada's failure in the past to support a moratorium in spite of worldwide scientific support for such a moratorium, in view of the decimation of the North Pacific sperm whale by Russian and Japanese fisheries, and in view of Canada's role in allowing a massive increase in North Pacific sperm whale quotas, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That the Canadian delegation to the London conference be instructed to end its support for whaling and to support a ten-year moratorium so that this magnificent creature can have some chance of survival.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AIR CANADA

POSSIBLE STRIKE OF PILOTS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Labour is not in the House today, I would like to direct my questions to the Minister of Transport. My questions deal with the potential Air Canada strike, which is a very serious issue and will affect business, travel and tourism to quite an extent if it is allowed to go ahead. Will the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Transport personally intervene in the dispute to try to get both sides to the bargaining table once again?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour is offering various services to the parties in this dispute. He and I share the view, which I am sure is shared by all hon. members, that it would be very unfortunate for a disruption of travel plans to occur and to do damage to many Canadians, particularly in a year when so many more seem to be planning to travel in Canada. I presume that all hon. members share the view that the parties ought to be urged to bring this dispute to an early conclusion.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, the minister started off on the wrong foot: he did not answer my question. Does the government intend to intervene in this dispute, presumably through the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Transport?

Mr. Lang: I did answer that question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Labour is directly involved. I do not choose to use the hon. member's word "intervene", but I do not think I should.

Mr. Murta: As the minister knows, the dispute arose over the status of the letter of intent signed by Air Canada at the time of the last contract negotiations. Has the minister had any consultations with the president of Air Canada on whether he intends to honour the provisions of the document and, if so, would he indicate to the House what discussions he has had in the last 24 hours with the president of Air Canada and what Air Canada intends to do in this regard?

Mr. Lang: I have had discussions with the president, but I do not think it would be useful for me to attempt to take part in the negotiations. I think it is best if Air Canada's position and the pilots' position are put to the public by those parties to the extent necessary. I will content myself with the hope, with regard to both sides of the dispute, that a solution is found so that inconvenience is not caused to Canadians.

MINISTER'S MEETING WITH PARTIES IN DISPUTE

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Am I to take it from the response of the Minister of Transport that he does not intend to intervene? Does he not intend to meet with the officials of Air Canada, because the threat of a strike would be disastrous to the country? Last time Air Canada struck, they lost $22 million. Also, will the minister undertake to meet the president of Air Canada to discuss possible contingency plans in the event a strike is called? Will he also undertake to assure the many people who have arranged charter flights that other arrangements might be made or, at the minimum, that they will be refunded their fares?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not have any magic solutions in the event that a strike occurs. There is no doubt that such an event would cause a good deal of harm and inconvenience to many people. However, I do not think it would be helpful for me to attempt to get into the dispute in a public way. The Minister of Labour, through very senior officials, will be directly involved today in the matter and I think that is where the government's role should rest for the moment. In the meantime, there is a burden on both parties to attempt to find a solution in the next day or two, if possible, so that plans need not be in jeopardy even ahead of the time when they would be interfered with.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am advised that the president of Air Canada has formally requested that the Minister of Labour intervene in the dispute. I ask the Minister of Transport, as the spokesman for Canada's national airline, whether he will, in effect, offer his services in the negotiations and in the discussions that may take place so that this matter may be resolved. Using the clout of these two ministers, perhaps we will be able to avert the very serious misfortune of a strike which could occur as soon as next Sunday.

Mr. Lang: I think I gave the hon. member that assurance in my opening answer. Obviously, the Minister of Labour and I want to do anything we can to help. At the moment, I think that includes not trying to get into the dispute in this forum.

POST OFFICE

DELAYS IN MAIL DELIVERY—COMMITTEE STUDY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General: it concerns the report in the news last night about our troubled postal system. According to that report, the Post Office has installed $1 billion worth of new mail handling equipment, much of which is virtually inoperative. As a result, letters mailed in Toronto and destined for locations in Toronto are now routed all the way to Cornwall for sorting. I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether he will confirm the report of this deplorable situation from the point of view of both efficiency and cost.

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully last night to the CBC broadcast about the Post Office and to the information which was given in that broadcast, and I wondered where some of it came from. One item on which I can answer the hon. member is that the report of a $1 billion investment in mechanization is absolutely false. The $1 billion investment also went into the modernization of equipment, of our plants and our buildings. The project, in all, cost $1 billion; it did not all go into automation. Also it is very easy to take pictures of an idle mechanization plant. Sometimes it happens that the mechanization does not work temporarily or accidentally.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lamontagne: If hon. members want to listen, I would like to explain. I listened to the CBC broadcast and I am very apprehensive about what is coming in the next few nights on the same telecast. It was part of an interview given by the United States postmaster general, myself and some of the officials of the Post Office Department. The person interviewed yesterday was the regional vice-president of CUPW. I wonder if the hon. member would like to have all the details. We are taking note of all the newscasts and will make a full report at the end of the week.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister took an awfully long time but did not answer the question. I ask him to take another shot at answering a question about the same region. According to the same report, the reason for major delays at the Toronto terminal centres is failure of the principal computer in the Toronto postal system. Will he confirm that the cost of this computer has escalated from an originally estimated figure of $1.5 million to $8 million? Will he confirm that the cost has gone up in that range? Also, will he tell us when Canadians can expect that computer facility to be operating and providing efficient mail service to the people of this country?

[Translation]

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member of the opposition should understand in the end that a few years ago we planned a program of modernization for the Post Office. The technology we adopted then is about the best in the world. However I would like to point out to the hon. member that we are now going through an experience which is somewhat similar to that, for instance, of the Canadian National when they put the first turbo locomotive on the tracks. It did not work out the first time. It is true that the computer must be readjusted by technicians. Also, I would like to revert to the first question concerning the inverview on CBC yesterday. They should broadcast the whole interview given by the postmaster general of the United States, who was interviewed at the same time I was, and not take only five or ten seconds from a four or five-minute interview, which is taken out of context and which does not present facts as they are and does not reflect the opinion of the people interviewed. As regards costs, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the hon. member of the opposition that it is true that costs have gone up, but even there I think it is normal. When we use new technology, we must be ready for some experimentation and those costs are practically unpredictable.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, while the minister is gathering experience, the mail of Canada is being gathered in postal offices and is not being delivered to the people who want it. Since he has taken some time to express his concern about short clips providing information, which he thinks distort the picture, I should like to point out that television crews were denied access to the postal facilities and, presumably, to interview people on the spot. Thus, he cannot have it both ways. They were not providing information which was requested.

In all seriousness, and in the hope of improving mail service, will the minister agree to an all-party committee of this House making a quick, serious visit to the postal facility, investigating this particular problem and reporting back within a week to the House?

[Translation]

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I doubt that we have ever denied anyone a chance to visit our postal services. I believe hon. members of the opposition even sent a delegation to visit them. Last week the United States postmaster general visited them, and any citizen can do as much. I must add that we plan to open those postal services to the public in Toronto on Canada Day, July 1.

[English]

It will be open house then and every citizen will be able to visit our postal installations. They will then see there is nothing to hide.

FINANCE

SALES TAX—INQUIRY WHETHER $226 MILLION PAYABLE TO QUEBECKERS CORRESPONDS TO REFUND OF $85 PER TAXPAYER

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, because of the absence of the Minister of Finance, I should like to put my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

In view of the dispute between the federal Minister of Finance and his Quebec counterpart regarding a tax cut from which all Canadian taxpayers would benefit during fiscal year 1977-78, can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House whether the amount of $225 million corresponds exactly to reimbursement of $85 to each taxpayer who nows pays taxes and paid some in 1977?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of the hon. member's question is presently before the House. We came out of committee of the whole only last night and I am sure the hon. member is well aware of all the details of the bill. There is no change from the details which have been presented.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary.

I can understand the reply of the Deputy Prime Minister to the effect that the bill was passed last night by committee of the whole by virtue of an arbitrary rule, closure. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether the global amount, as well as the nature of the taxes which are the cause of the two-month dispute, corresponds exactly to the real reimbursement Bill C-56 proposes to make to the Quebec taxpayers?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the bill does contain all the information that would be of interest to the hon. member.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, on June 8, 1978, from my seat here, I promised the Minister of Finance that I would bring him suitable technical means to enable him to reduce or abolish the tax at the manufacturing level to give Canadian taxpayers a tax reduction which would increase their purchasing power in order to stimulate the consumption of Canadian products.

Mr. Speaker, I want to ask you for leave to hold my promise, and to give immediately to the Acting Prime Minister, according to the commitment I made at that time—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL BOARD

REPORTED DEFICIENCY IN SAFETY FEATURES OF NUCLEAR POWER PLANTS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for whichever minister of the Crown is responsible this afternoon for reporting to the House in relation to the affairs of the Atomic Energy Control Board. It relates to certain press reports this morning which are serious enough they are causing enough disquiet and concern throughout the country that I am sure at least one minister, if not more than one, has been briefed about the problem. These reports have never been made public. They indicate that our nuclear power plants are seriously deficient in some of their safety functions. My question, to whichever minister is responsible this afternoon, relates to public access and lack of knowledge of those reports and the complaint about conditions. For instance, in December a report was made—

• (1432)

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a question, would he put it forthwith.

Mr. Lawrence: My question is this. In view of one of those reports, a copy of which I have, recommending that the original licensing standard for nuclear plants be seriously reviewed or substantially altered, why have these scientific and technical concerns and the reports themselves never been made public?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will raise the question with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and he will report to the House.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, among those recommendations, one full report was considered by the Atomic Energy Control Board on March 28 and 29 of this year. My question to the minister, and I would have thought the situation was important enough for him to have been briefed on it, is this. What has been the result of this consideration by the Atomic Energy Control Board and, again, why has there been no public disclosure of the recommendations and scientific concerns?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, I think that on both questions the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will want to report to the House.

Oral Questions

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

EFFECT OF NEW LEGISLATION ON THE MONARCHY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. However, he is not here and I direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister. Approximately three years ago, the Prime Minister made the statement in a speech in Quebec city that this government intended to achieve the end of the monarchy by placing the Governor General of Canada in the position of being able to do all those things that Her Majesty the Queen could do.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister, why did the government, having this idea in mind all that time, wait three years before doing the proper, appropriate and constitutional thing of advising Her Majesty as to the changes to be made? I also ask why the government has decided to place before parliament such a bill, when section 91 of the BNA Act reads:

It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make laws for the peace, order, and good government of Canada—

The proposed bill would delete the name and expression "The Queen" and substitute the Governor General of Canada in her place, thereby placing an end, in effect, to the monarchy in this country.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman maybe aware that it is the intention of the government to give first reading to a constitutional bill this afternoon. I understand that copies have been made available on a confidential basis. It is not my intention to debate or comment upon the contents of that bill until it comes before the House in the normal way, except to say that the allegations made by the right hon. gentleman will be proved to be totally wrong when the words of the bill are made known to the public of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am using the Prime Minister's own expression in a speech in which he said three years ago, "We will put an end to the Queen of England having any authority over Canada." That, I am informed, is being effected by the simple means of repealing a portion of section 91, removing the expression "The Queen" and substituting the Governor General of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the Deputy Prime Minister thinks I am wrong in that regard, all I can say is that he had better reread it and explain to the House later today why we have this complete travesty of our constitutional system in order to get the support of individuals such as those who now interrupt and are not even fit to be parliamentary secretaries.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, it is very difficult to anticipate in the question period a bill which has not yet been presented to the House of Commons. But I believe that on policy grounds alone it ought to be stated to the right hon. gentleman, members of the House of Commons and the public of Canada, that under any proposal made or supported by this government the Queen will continue to be the Queen of Canada and the sovereign of this country.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. He seems to have vacated the premises, trying to solve the dilemma of the Post Office. I would ask that you keep me on your list until he returns.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

TAKEOVER OF HUSKY OIL—APPLICATION OF FIRA

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in his capacity as minister responsible for the administration of the Foreign Investment Review Act. My question is with respect to the apparent desire of those controlling Husky Oil to accept the offer to purchase their interest made by Occidental Oil.

I ask the minister if he will make a commitment now, on behalf of himself and the government, that if Occidental does not file an application for the approval of the Canadian aspects of this takeover by the government under the Foreign Investment Review Act, he will not condone any end runs by Occidental around the act but, instead, will formally demand the filing of such an application, thereafter taking every other step provided for in the act to ensure that this important transaction is fully reviewed by FIRA and the cabinet in terms of whether it would provide the necessary degree of significant benefit to Canada.

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as far as I am aware, there has been no expression in the papers, certainly not to me privately, of Occidental's desire to escape or to do an end run around FIRA. As I understand it, the application to purchase Husky shares by Occidental would definitely have to come before FIRA, and I would certainly think the board and the commissioner would view it as they have all other applications and look for significant advantage to Canada.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

FINAL PAYMENT FOR NEXT CROP YEAR

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the annual renewal of the Chinese wheat contract, can the minister tell the House and the western producers—I know he cannot give an exact price—whether the price will be high enough to give a final payment for the next crop year, because there will be little or no final payment for this year, as the minister himself has said?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to join with the hon. member in being pleased about the completion of another contract with China in our long-standing relationship of being prime suppliers to them. This three million tons is a very notable sale. I do not think I would want to even begin speculating about price. The hon. member knows that current card prices are well over the initial price paid to the producer and that, obviously, has a very positive impact upon income.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Speaker, as the Wheat Board has announced the loss of $81.5 million, sterling, in the years 1961 to 1976 in dealing with China—many producers feel it is even greater—can the minister tell the House why this was announced through the board's publication, "Grain Matters," rather than through the annual report of the Canadian Wheat Board?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Wheat Board, having put some information into the annual report, felt that farmers wanted a further explanation. Therefore, they published it in "Grain Matters." I would also inform the hon. member that the current contract with the Chinese is in Canadian dollars.

COMMUNICATIONS

ALLEGED POLITICALLY-ORIENTED MEDIA SUMMARY SERVICE FOR PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, may I ask the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council a question? In view of the publication of the Prime Minister's press office media summary and the official line of the press office, I ask if that document is just a time saver and is not the sinister tool for media manipulation that it might appear to be.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister if the government will provide this media summary each morning to at least the leaders of the other parties, to the House leaders or, for that matter, to all members of parliament if there is no desire to manipulate the press.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of providing the media summary is to monitor both the electronic and print media with a view to saving time. I have been receiving the summary for some time and find it very useful. I gather that the leaders of the other parties have staff at their disposal who undoubtedly are providing them with a relevant update of current events in one form or another as they are reported in the media. I would see no reason to duplicate that service by providing a service from the PMO.

Mr. Benjamin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the media summary is not only a summary of news but reports the names of reporters and various members of the media and quotes people such as Hargreaves for being dry, Henderson for being more enthusiastic, and Michel Guenard for being straightforward and rather enthusiastic—this sort of assessment—could the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House if the summaries are being computerized? Is this an effort to separate the good guys from the bad guys in the press gallery? Can he tell the House the justification for this expenditure in addition to the PMO press office? Is this work being contracted out, or is it being done in the Prime Minister's office?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it would be foolish of the hon. member to try to convince me that this practice is not followed in the office of the leader of every responsible party. There is a system by which news items are brought to the attention of the leader of the party. Many years ago, when I worked for a leader of the opposition, it was quite common to prepare a daily print summary. This is merely an update of a practice that has prevailed for a long time. The hon. member might be able to sell to someone else the idea that this is a new concept, but he should not try to sell it to me.

TRADE

REPORT ON GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to that consummate actor, the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council who is in charge of the GATT negotiations. Would he bring us up to date? There is a western economic summit beginning on July 16. Mr. Jake Warren is now in Washington, meeting with Mr. Strauss and representatives of the EEC and Japan. We understand that U.S. officials have said they are beginning to see a pattern of agreement emerge in the GATT negotiations.

In view of the importance of these negotiations to Canada, particularly to central Canada, could the minister tell us what pattern of agreement is starting to be seen? What is this pattern of agreement? Could he give the House some details? Would he even agree to speak on motions some time before the House adjourns on June 30 to bring us up to date on this most important matter?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday, along with a number of my colleagues, I had a meeting with Mr. Warren prior to his departure for Washington to meet with the United States and the community in Japan on multilateral negotiations. Certain views were conveyed to our chief negotiator as to how he ought to respond to prospective developments at that meeting. It is not possible to say that a pattern of settlement had emerged by last Wednesday. It may well have emerged, or will emerge at the meeting in Washington, and if it does I will be glad, either by question or some other method, to convey the information to members of the House.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. As the Deputy Prime Minister knows, this is also a very important subject with respect to Quebec, because Quebec industries are threatened by tariff cuts if we should just have the tariff cut. I should like to ask the President of Privy Council this question. The new tariff cuts sought were about 40 per cent for certain countries, the New York Times service reports, and exclude textiles, steel products, shoes and televisions from the general, over-all tariff cut.

Has Canada informed the other countries at GATT that we want to exclude textiles, shoes and televisions, or what items have we told the other countries that we want to except from the general decline in tariffs that is likely to come about?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we are in the preliminary stage of a negotiating session. Countries are providing offer lists and request lists. There is an exchange, obviously, on the part of each country to improve the response from other countries. For that reason, generally the request lists have remained confidential, except that there have been exchanges with provincial governments, members of private industry and trade unions, I understand, on a confidential basis. That is the general situation.

I have stated in the House already, with respect to shoes and textiles, that there is not likely to be any general desire on the part of GATT negotiators to undertake extensive cuts in either of these sectors which are facing difficulties in many of the countries at the GATT table.

POST OFFICE

ACTION TO IMPROVE MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. At present the minister is studying proposals which, as I understand it, will bring about improved labour-management relations and achieve faster, more reliable mail service, the two most serious problems. In the Ottawa Citizen of June 3, 1978, the minister is quoted as saying:

"In the old days, milk and bread and groceries were delivered to your door—now there's no milk at the door. We are living in 1978.

"You can't distribute six billion pieces of mail the same way as one billion."

I am sure the minister appreciates the fact that the letter carriers are concerned about that matter, as are the people of Canada. Is this one of the proposals the minister is presently studying? In other words, what is he doing about door-to-door mail delivery?

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell the hon. member for Hamilton West that as far as letter carriers are concerned, I have stated—and I repeat—there is no question of curtailing the existing service. On the contrary, I think we are improving it considerably. We give service to what we call fill-ins in certain areas. At the moment we are studying the possibility of enlarging again, if at all possible, taking into consideration the cost in man-years and within our financial capabilities.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister would not mind my saying that in future he should not make such stupid statements. It does not show concern for the people of Canada who want their mail. The Postmaster General is presently studying proposals which, as he says, will bring about an improvement in labour relations and achieve a faster and better mail service. At the same time, a press release of June 7 from the Post Office quotes the minister as saying:

Naturally, it would be premature at this stage to make public the measures being examined to bring about the desired changes, but I hope to be able to make some of them known at a later date.

Given the fact that CUPW says a strike is imminent, will the Postmaster General disclose these proposals to the Canadian people, or is he going to be secretive about them as he was about the 1975 Hays report? According to that report, there is a lot of mismanagement and mess in the Post Office. Are we going to be faced with the same secretive attitude?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I think I will not say anything about some of the adjectives used by the hon. member for Hamilton West. I am not used to them. However, I will get right to the point and tell him that at the moment we are negotiating with the Letter Carriers Union in a most progressive and understanding way. We hope to be able to get a settlement very soon. As far as CUPW is concerned, we are in conciliation at the moment. It would be very unwise for me at this time to take on the responsibility of the conciliation board. Let them take their responsibility, and we will take ours when the time comes.

FINANCE

FEDERAL FUNDING FOR INTERNATIONAL YEAR OF THE CHILD

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the government House leader. Can he advise whether any decision has been made by cabinet with regard to federal funding for the International Year of the Child?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have absolutely no responsibility for that program.

DUMPING DUTY ON WIDE-FLANGE STEEL BEAMS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. In his answer yesterday to the hon. member for Capilano regarding anti-dumping duties, the Prime Minister said:

Mr. Speaker, the producers in Canada expect to be able to produce for the entire Canadian market. If they are precluded from producing for a province—

Since Algoma produces only 13,000 tons, and Canadian consumption is 17,000 tons, obviously Algoma cannot produce for the entire Canadian market. Algoma has already put western fabricators on an allocation system, thereby permanently ensuring they cannot supply that market. Will the Prime Minister now recognize the reality of the regional market that exists in British Columbia and give assurance that the anti-dumping duty will not be reinstated at the end of this month?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Finance dealt with that part of the question yesterday. I can repeat to the hon. member that when we suspended the anti-dumping duties some months ago, it was a temporary measure made with the agreement of British Columbia and other provinces which expressed satisfaction with it in order to permit all parties to readjust to the current situation. I believe the answer I gave yesterday had to do with a question posed in economic terms. I indicated that surely it is the objective of producers in Canada, including Algoma, to try to produce for the entire Canadian market. Because they were not doing that some months ago, we did allow for a period of readjustment. Whether this period should be prolonged or not is something to which the Minister of Finance says he is giving consideration.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, it seems strange that if the province of British Columbia was in favour of it, they submitted a lengthy brief to the tribunal opposing it. How long will fabricators in British Columbia have to wait, or are they even going to be in existence by the time Algoma optimizes its production so they can be supplied? In the meantime, will the federal government do something to provide a supply for these fabricators so they will not be run out of business?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is repeating the kind of question which was put to the government as the result of a situation which developed more than six months ago. We acted, at that time, in a special or temporary way in order to permit the various parties to adjust to the current reality. Yesterday, the Minister of Finance again said in this House that he would examine the situation to see if there had been adjustments and whether further measures were needed.

SUGGESTION OF BELL CANADA FOR NATIONAL CONFERENCE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. In view of the many and different communications problems which are ending up in the courts, before the CRTC or before the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission—quite a few of them involving Bell Canada—has the minister considered, and does she think there is any merit in the suggestion of the president of Bell Canada, Mr. de Grandpre, that it is time for many of these problems to be brought together under one roof at a national communications conference? If she thinks it has any merit, what has she done about it?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, there is always merit in getting all people concerned in the same room in order to discuss pertinent problems. I have looked at Mr. de Grandpre's suggestion. The provincial ministers of communications have also asked me to meet on the particular problems which are currently preoccupying the industry. There is some chance that the interested parties, the telephone company and the other carriers, might be included in that meeting.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I was most interested in the minister's reply because there seems to be a problem of communication here in the chamber, mechanically anyway, judging by the noise we hear from outside. I wonder if it is sabotage by one of the communications people. Be that as it may, I was interested in the part of the minister's answer that I could hear.

Do I understand that she is giving serious consideration to a national communications conference so that the problems of interconnection, terminal connection, Telesat, earth station policy and many other diverse problems can be brought under one roof, so we can start to get a coherent policy in such a vital field rather than having decisions made on a piecemeal basis by regulatory bodies and/or the Supreme Court of Canada?

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, regardless of the problems we have had with communication in this chamber, I have always managed to have priority over any means of communication that we have. As to the question put by the hon. member, that agenda is quite an important one. It spans the complete range of activities of the whole of my department. If the hon. member is thinking specifically, because it is the first thing he mentioned, of interconnection, I remind him that this matter is presently before the CRTC for examination. It would, therefore, be quite improper for me to comment on it. However, the case which is presently being studied is very important. I shall look into it further to see whether there is any possibility of developing policies regarding this important question.

INDUSTRY

VISIT OF METRIC COMMISSION TO YUKON

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Why did the Metric Commission fly to Whitehorse, in the Yukon, last week for routine working meetings on the metric system in the meat packing industry of Canada? In particular, how can the minister justify the expenditure of some $20,000 for this two-day trip, particularly in view of the fact there is no meat packing industry in the Yukon?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice and try to find that out.

NATIONAL MUSEUMS

APPOINTMENT OF SECRETARY-GENERAL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? In view of the fact that in announcing a few days ago the appointment of a new Secretary General for the National Museums of Canada, the Prime Minister went out of his way to praise Miss Jennifer McQueen for the work she had done as acting secretary-general, stating that during that period Miss McQueen had demonstrated all the qualities necessary for a promising career in the public service, why was Miss McQueen not appointed to the post for which she was a natural?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Because somebody else was more qualified, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): How does the Prime Minister expect the people of Canada to believe that this government is committed to equality between men and women when so soon after passing up Dr. Marguerite Ritchie for another post, another qualified woman has been pushed aside?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member might remember that a very short while ago there was an acting head of the Economic Council of Canada who was replaced by a woman who was not on the Economic Council of Canada. It can happen on both sides, Mr. Speaker.

ELECTIONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DATE OF BY-ELECTIONS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Some time ago I asked what his intention was with regard to the seven by-elections which have not been called. He indicated that he would observe the law. I assume that is so. Can he tell us his intentions with regard to that matter, and when will he be making an announcement about the setting of the date for those by-elections?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): My intentions have not changed, Mr. Speaker. I still intend to abide by the provisions of the legislation.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Given that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections seems to be one jump ahead of the Prime Minister with regard to this matter and has come to some consensus as to how the Election Expenses Act might apply to candidates in by-elections, does the government House leader have any intention of bringing that legislation forward within the next few days?

● (1502)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): I understood that consensus existed among the parties, but I have been recently informed that no such consensus exists with respect to bringing in legislation, as I was prepared to do to clear up this matter.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—THE ALEXANDER PETER TREU CASE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I have given you notice. It has to do with the case of Dr. Alexander Peter Treu.

In the first place I want to make my own position clear. I am acting as one of the legal counsel to Dr. Treu. I am receiving no fee now, nor will I be receiving any fee, so I have no pecuniary interest at all. I think the House is entitled to know this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I was greatly disturbed to read in Hansard some of the statements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) yesterday in answer to questions asked by my hon. friend from Halifax and other members of this party. Either the right hon. gentleman was devious, or he was ignorant. Because of the rules of the House I will accept the latter explanation. As reported at page 6517, the Prime Minister said, in connection with the contracts Dr. Treu received after his persecution by the government had commenced:

> The simple answer, as the Minister of Justice indicated, is that the contracts received from NATO during the latter period were not classified as confidential.

This is a very natural thing. These are commercial contracts and no one suggests that commercial contracts are classified. But out of those contracts received by Dr. Treu, while he was being prosecuted, while his documents were taken away during the two years of his trial, some 2,000 products and/or documents of a classified nature were processed by Dr. Treu and forwarded by him to the NATO centres at which they were received. The contracts may not have been classified but the end products were, to the extent of some 2,000.

In the second place, as far as I am able to gather in a limited time, Dr. Treu did receive at least two classified documents, one in April, 1975, and a second document dated June 21, 1976, after his trial had commenced, which he received with an attached list of a classified nature on June 26, 1976, and of course he sent the classified material back. So much for the question of classified documents.

Dealing with a further aspect, the right hon. gentleman said with regard to the security classification:

When he left the company his security clearance ceased by the very fact of his leaving.

Later on, as reported on the right hand side of the same page and speaking about Dr. Treu, the Prime Minister said: "... he concluded he no longer had the clearance of that job..."

The facts are that in December of 1972 Northern Electric, with whom Dr. Treu had been working as one of the advisers in connection with a most complex and useful scheme in relation to the NATO countries, of which Canada is still a part, got out of the business. At the strong urging of both the government and Northern Electric a company was formed by Dr. Treu to take over in December of 1972.

In June of 1973 Dr. Treu was among those attending a security meeting of a classified nature where he was "badged" and security cleared, and during which he talked to Mr. Jenkyns, the security clearance officer acting as liaison with NATO. Mr. Jenkyns was the security officer for the Department of Supply and Services. In June of 1974, Dr. Treu, security cleared and wearing his badge, attended a similar meeting. Finally, a letter dated January 5, 1976, over the signature of Hugh Grant, director of the defence programs branch of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, invited Dr. Treu to attend a meeting of that branch which was to be held in Ottawa during the week of April 5, 1976.

I sincerely hope that the Prime Minister will set the record straight with respect to these issues, and I hope that, as he continues to play around with his constitutional tinkertoys, someone who has some knowledge of the law and human rights and natural justice will see that the proper kind of arrangements are written into the constitution in that regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman stated at the beginning of his question of privilege that he was acting on behalf of a person who is pleading his case before the appeal court. Obviously he is acting as a lawyer properly should before the courts. He is pleading the case of his client. The courts have already decided the client is guilty under the law. I take it that if the lawyer opposite us wants to continue pleading the case, he can go before the courts and do so.

The hon. member is now presenting a case not as a member of parliament but as a party to litigation in a criminal matter. He is apparently giving evidence which he got from his client. I have contrary evidence. I have evidence from the government that the contracts received from NATO during that period were not in classified areas. In some subtle way the hon. member admits this, but he says the results of the contracts, presumably work that Mr. Treu did, ended up being classified, I suppose by NATO. That is not surprising. A person who is not classified can do work for a government or for the private sector, or for an international organization, which can then decide to classify it. The person doing the work is not the one who is going to decide whether the receiver of the work will communicate it to the enemy or not.

I think it is interesting that the hon. gentleman should be using the House of Commons to plead a case which is before the appeal court, but I suggest he be properly qualified before the bar and get along with pleading his case in the proper place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. It may be that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) as drawn attention to what is essentially a disagreement with respect to the Prime Minister's statement of an earlier day. In the final analysis, from a procedural point of view, I note he has attached no motion to his remarks, obviating the need for action by the Chair.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 1,465, 1,710, 1,711 and 1,837.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

BUILDING PROJECTS

Question No. 1,465—Mr. Alexander:

What building projects are in the five years capital works budget for the southern Ontario region (Niagara Falls to Woodstock) by (a) the Department of Public Works (b) the Department of Transport (c) the Department of External Affairs (d) the Department of National Defence (e) the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce (f) Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (g) other Crown corporations?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): (a) Information dealing with proposed expenditures beyond the current fiscal year are not publicly available until estimates are tabled in parliament. The estimates list, in the case of Public Works Canada, all capital projects estimated to cost $250,000 or more and on which work is estimated to start in 1978-79. The 1978-79 estimates list one Public Works Canada-funded building project for southern Ontario (Niagara Falls to Woodstock) on page 21-28: Niagara-on-the-Lake post office. In addition, two minor building projects are under construction: Virgil post office, Winona post office. (b) None. (c) None. (d) There are two capital building projects in the DND program for the southern Ontario region in London, an extension to a military garage—estimated at $450,000 and a new training building estimated at $560,000. (e) None. (f) CMHC does not plan any construction on its own account in the southern Ontario region in the next five years. Its capital investment budget is dependent upon provincial agencies, municipalities, and private organizations in the housing field. (g) In so far as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is concerned: Windsor—replace French and English television transmitters. London and Sarnia—new English FM stereo radio transmitters. Other projects are planned for the area under the CBC's accelerated coverage plan. The ACP is a large, complex and highly integrated undertaking which now involves some 300 locations and 650 engineering projects. Names of the locations and the nature of the service to be provided are made public, step by step, as applications for licences are made to the CRTC. In so far as the Canadian National Railways is concerned: Building projects included in its five-year plans of capital requirements for the southern Ontario region between Niagara Falls and Woodstock are: 1. Additions or revisions to trackage at Brantford, Caledonia, and Jarvis as required to meet traffic from the new Stelco plant at Nanticoke. 2. Additional tracks in Parkdale yard. In so far as Export Development Corporation is concerned: By tradition and as a matter of commercial principle Crown corporations have not been required by parliament to answer detailed questions on their administration and operation, and in the case of Export Development Corporation, the Export Development Act places the responsibility for such matters on its board of directors. In so far as the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority is concerned: Bridge over Welland Canal at Port Colborne, channel improvements, bridge No. 10 to Port Robinson, Welland Canal. In so far as the other proprietary Crown corporations are concerned: None.

PROVIDENT HOUSE—TORONTO

Question No. 1,710—Mr. Brisco:

1. Who owns Provident House in Toronto?

2. Are any experiments being conducted at Provident House and, if so, who monitors the experiments and what is the nature of the experiments?

3. Who, and in which department, monitors Provident House?

4. What was the cost of Provident House?

5. What are the ongoing annual costs?

[Mr. Alexander.]

6. (a) How much is paid in salary to Provident House staff and to whom (b) what is the nationality of the occupants?

7. How many technical papers have been written by the occupants of Provident House?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned the answer is as follows: 1. The Provident House is owned by: McClintock Homes, 3251 Sheppard Avenue E., Agincourt, Ontario.

2. The thermal performance of the solar space and service water heating systems, as well as the performance of the collectors and annual heat storage unit, are being scientifically monitored with instrumentation installed by the National Research Council in 1976. The project is being monitored by the firm of: Hooper and Angus Assoc. Ltd., 980 Yonge Street, Toronto, Ontario.

3. The division of building research of the National Research Council is responsible for the monitoring contract on the Provident House.

4. The design of the Provident House experiment was initiated under the Canadian Urban Demonstration Program of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs in 1975. Financial support for the concept and working design was $90,430. Cost of solar hardware purchase and installation, as well as cost of modifying house design for solar system, totalled approximately $55,000, and was supported by the Ontario government ministry of energy.

5. Annual operating costs has been absorbed by the owner of Provident House, and is therefore unknown.

6. The owner, McClintock Homes, has a field man at the housing development containing Provident House. Part of his duties is to care for the Provident House. His salary is unknown. The house is currently rented by a Canadian couple with no children.

7. The occupants and owners of the Provident House have not written any technical papers on the project. The designers, Mr. John Hix and Mr. F. C. Hooper, have prepared a number of articles on facets of the project. Mr. Hooper is currently preparing an assessment paper on the project for the annual meeting of the Solar Energy Society of Canada Inc. in London, Ontario, August 20-24, 1978.

SOLAR ENERGY EXPERIMENTS—B.C.

Question No. 1,711—Mr. Brisco:

1. Has a condominium building recently been funded for solar energy experiments in Kitsilano, British Columbia?

2. Who owns the building?

3. (a) How much funding has been provided and was it in the nature of a grant or loan (b) what conditions are attached to the provision of this funding?

4. (a) Who applied for the funding and to whom was it paid (b) who approved it?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned the answer is as follows: 1. Yes. A solar heating system trial has been funded in Kitsilano, B.C.

2. The eight-unit row housing project is owned by: Kitsilano Housing Society, Broadway and Vine, Vancouver, B.C.

3 and 4. The project is one of 15 initiated in FY 1977-78, under the National Research Council Solar Energy Research and Development Program. Part of this program is for trials of solar heating systems in multi-unit residential buildings. Over 80 groups responded to an announcement of the system trial program. These were screened by members of the division of building research. Thirty-five of the respondents were invited to submit detailed proposals, and 15 were finally awarded contracts. Final selection was by building research staff. The contracts cover the cost of designing the solar system; purchasing the solar heating components, and installing the solar system in the building. The contractor is reimbursed costs as they are incurred. At the end of the contract, the solar system must be demonstrated as being operational, and the building owner must reimburse the government a percentage of the solar component cost. The building owner is then the owner of the solar heating system. A condition of the contract is that the NRC or its agent have access to the building and system, for five years, to monitor the thermal performance of the solar heating components and system. The contract with Kitsilano housing authority is for $71,298.

MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Question No. 1,837—Mr. Epp:

Is the present Minister of National Revenue collecting both a ministerial and a senatorial salary and (a) if so, in what amount in each case (b) if not, what salary is he receiving and what is the amount?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): See Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms citation No. 171 (m) and (ff).

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NATURAL RESOURCES—CANADIAN CONTROL OF DEVELOPMENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House

Natural Resources

(a) all major new resource developments should be majority Canadian controlled as promised by the government during the 1974 federal election campaign; and

(b) in order to avoid further domination and ownership of Canada's oil resources by foreign multi-national oil companies, and a continuing financial rip-off of the Canadian consumer, the development of Husky Oil Company's heavy oil resources should be undertaken by Petro-Canada in co-operation with the provinces directly affected.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is debatable, and hon. members will want to be reminded that proceedings on this motion shall expire in accordance with Standing Order 58(11) at the ordinary hour of adjournment later this day.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the House has just given first reading to a bill designed to patriate the Canadian constitution. That ought to remind us that one of the factors which motivated the Fathers of Confederation in bringing together the various provinces which now make up Canada was the fear that Canada would be overwhelmed and absorbed by the emerging giant to the south of us. I submit that this is still one of our major concerns. In the years which have transpired since 1867 we have gone a long way toward economic absorption, social assimilation, and political domination by the United States.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), in the policy paper which he presented to the New Democratic Party council—about which he has spoken in this House—called "An Industrial Strategy for Canada", contended that economic growth in Canada depends upon retaining our valuable resources under Canadian ownership and control.

The Liberal party in Canada has always paid lip service to the idea of maintaining economic independence for this country. Many members who have sat in the House in the Liberal ranks over the last 15 years have been members of the committee for an independent Canada, but the fact is that the record of their performance with respect to maintaining Canada as an independent economic entity has been a dismal one.

The present government has been in office for 15 years. In 1963, headed by Walter Gordon, Donald Macdonald, and Judy LaMarsh, a group came marching into the House of Commons to the tune of "Oh Canada, we stand on guard for thee". However, in the years which followed there was no change with respect to the steady encroachment upon our economic independence by large United States controlled multinational corporations. Then in the election campaign of 1974 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made a commitment to the people of this country. This is what he said:

The Liberal Party of Canada sets as an objective that major new projects in the natural resource field should have at least 50 per cent, and preferably 60 per cent, Canadian equity ownership.

I asked the Prime Minister yesterday if that commitment still stood, and the Prime Minister answered in the affirmative. All the facts prove him to be wrong and, if he were on to his job, he would know that he was wrong. For instance, if he takes a look at the long list of oil and gas companies which have been taken over by foreign corporations since June, 1974, he will realize that the 50 per cent to 60 per cent Canadian ownership clause has not been applied. If he takes the trouble to look at the figures which were put out by corporations under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, he will find that in the last year for which figures are available, which was 1975, of foreign companies in the petroleum and coal products field foreign ownership is 95 per cent in equity, 95 per cent in sales, and 95 per cent in profits.

However, I think probably the most damning indictment of the Prime Minister's failure to uphold his commitment to maintain 50 per cent to 60 per cent Canadian ownership is to be found in the document I hold in my hand, which is a copy of a document over the signature of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner). It is a review of the matter of Canadian ownership compared with foreign ownership in this country. It shows, in the first place, that consistently there have been takeovers by foreign corporations which have not involved 50 per cent Canadian ownership. The document says that in most instances so far it has not proven feasible to secure full compliance with the objective of Canadian ownership of resource-based companies. The Prime Minister put forward this policy in June, 1974. He said yesterday that it still stands, but the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce says that it has not been found feasible to put it into effect. Who is telling the truth, the Prime Minister or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

In this document the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce admits that most investors know very little about this policy. He says, and I quote:

—at present many, perhaps most, foreign investors are not aware of this policy objective. There has been very little publicity and the last statement on the subject is three years old.

In this same document the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce suggests the advisability of dropping this provision, but he adds that the public should not be told about it because, and again I quote:

—it would be preferable that there be no public statement to that effect so as to minimize the danger that the change of practice would be seen as a fall-back by the government.

The government's commitment to maintain 50 per cent to 60 per cent Canadian ownership has proved to be a farce. The government has proved that it has not seriously attempted to carry out its policy or to maintain the level to which the Prime Minister committed his government in 1974. I know of no better illustration of this than the oil industry, which is the best example of creeping economic continentalism and the growing U.S. domination of our resource industries.

● (1522)

In the last 50 years the control of light oil in this country has been taken over almost entirely by U.S. majors. Virtually 100 per cent of the light crude oil in this country is now under the control of U.S. petroleum companies. The result is that they have raped this resource to the point where we have only about ten years' supply left. Sixty per cent of our production of oil and natural gas for years went to the U.S., even though it was well known that the amount of reserves, we had on hand was perilously low.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Now that we have only ten years' supply left, the industry began to look at other sources. The next area it looked at was the tar sands. One might have thought that we would have learned from the light oil experience, and that there would have been some public participation or Canadian ownership in the development of the tar sands. But no, we allowed the three large U.S. companies which form Syncrude not only to take over the development of a large area of the tar sands but to do so with the financial assistance of the Government of Canada and of the governments of Ontario and Alberta. As a matter of fact the Canadian people are putting up a major part of the money in return for a minor interest in that development, and it is interesting that the next company in line is the Shell Oil Company, another U.S. company which is going to develop the tar sands.

That brings us to the present situation when we find that the only remaining oil acreage we have in this country which is not completely under foreign domination is the heavy oil deposits on the Saskatchewan-Alberta border. These oil deposits may be very important for the future industrial development of Canada, because at present we see from the 1977 figures that Canada has a net deficit in oil production of approximately 100,000 barrels a day. The result is that in 1977 we had a deficit, as a result of imported oil, of $1.5 billion, and with our exports being phased out because of our diminishing reserves it is estimated that by 1985 our deficit could reach $5 billion. In light of that fact, the heavy oil acreage in western Canada becomes of tremendous importance. That area is largely controlled by the Husky Oil Company which has over 1.5 million acres under lease or under option. It is estimated that with the new technology now available, it has 16 billion barrels of recoverable oil.

Joseph Baird, the president of Occidental Oil, is reported in this morning's paper as having said, "This is a real carrot". Yes, 16 billion barrels of recoverable oil in a good area, reasonably accessible, not like oil in the Arctic or in the ocean, but a supply of oil which would meet Canada's needs and save us from being importers of oil and from becoming increasingly dependent upon the oil producing countries which at present have such tremendous power around the world, is a real carrot.

For over a year Petro-Canada has been endeavouring to persuade Husky to begin a large scale development of this heavy oil, but no action has taken place. I am told that it even offered a partnership to help them raise the necessary capital, but that was not acceptable. As a matter of fact I suspect that the oil industry is not averse to having Canada find it necessary to import some of its oil, particularly if they buy that oil from sources which the multinational oil companies control. Finally, Petro-Canada did what seemed to me was the logical thing to do. It made an offer to purchase the Husky Oil Company and to develop that field, either alone or in partnership with the Saskatchewan and Alberta governments, and I want to point out that they did so with the approval of the cabinet, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) has stated in the House.

This was a logical step to take, but what do we find? We find that whereas on Monday, June 20, as reported at page 6268 of Hansard, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that this development by Petro-Canada of the heavy oil deposits was "in the national interest", by the end of the week the picture began to change. We see it, first of all, in the words of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who criticized the decision made by Petro-Canada, and when Occidental made counter offers to Petro-Canada's offer to buy Husky, he said, "I'm not shedding many tears over Petro-Canada", and Alberta's energy minister, Don Getty, said on television the other night that they "don't want a publicly owned company" in the field.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Nor does Canada, if it is based on your Saskatchewan government's policies!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I see this is endorsed by some of the Progressive Conservative members who share that view.

I want to remind the House that the U.S. and Canada are probably the only two industrialized nations in the world that do not have a publicly owned oil company which controls the major part of the oil industry in their countries.

The gentlemen to my right might hold back the forces of progress for a while, but the fact is that eventually the Canadian people will insist on having a voice in determining the development of their own resources.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) may make all the speeches he wants when I am through. He does not need to bust his gut shouting from his corner of the House. As a matter of fact, he cannot spare any of that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Last Thursday, as reported at page 6432 of Hansard, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had changed his mind and said that it was no longer "in the public interest" for Petro-Canada to develop the Husky Oil acreage. He then took the position that it was in the national interest that the oil deposits be developed, irrespective of who develops them. That is quite a switch. He went on to say further that if it were guaranteed that Occidental would develop the field, then the Canadian objective would have been achieved. That change of pace in two days is difficult to understand. First of all, it was a clear signal to FIRA that there would be no objection from the cabinet if FIRA decided to allow the transfer of the Husky Oil assets to Occidental which is bidding against Petro-Canada. But I ask, what kind of sellout are we witnessing?

Why was Petro-Canada bidding for Husky Oil in the first place if it is not important that Petro-Canada develop this oilfield, and if Occidental is now interested in developing that field, what has Occidental been doing until now when Petro-Canada and the government were trying to find some person or persons to develop that field? The result is that Petro-Canada has become the birdie in sort of a badminton game between two American companies, which are bouncing it back and forth. Every time Petro-Canada makes a bid, Occidental tops it. I ask the House to consider what this does to the status of Petro-Canada in this country and the international petroleum business. The government's treatment of Petro-Canada, in saying that it does not matter who develops the field so long as it is developed, demeans Petro-Canada. The cabinet is demeaning itself by making it appear to all the world that it is manipulated by the oil cartel, which has been calling the tune up until now, and apparently is still doing so.

This topic is very important because a great deposit of oil either will be developed by Canadians for Canadians, or it will pass into the control of a foreign corporation over which we will have little control. If the government was not able to persuade Husky to develop the field with sufficient urgency, we have no guarantee that Occidental will develop the field with sufficient urgency to meet the oil needs of Canada.

The first line of defence is FIRA. It has the power to recommend that there be no transfer from Husky to Occidental, or to recommend that the transfer be permitted. Up until now, in my opinion, FIRA has been a comparatively toothless tiger. It has allowed transfer after transfer, although the memo of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce showed that there was not 50 per cent Canadian ownership. This time FIRA has a chance to redeem itself. My hope is that it will be seized of the importance to Canada of applying the 50 per cent to 60 per cent Canadian ownership commitment and insist that no transfer be permitted.

Our second line of defence is the cabinet. They are the body who must make the final decision on the basis of a recommendation from FIRA. I am not overly optimistic. Certainly the cabinet has not been very diligent in applying the 50 per cent to 60 per cent rule which was set forth by the Prime Minister in June, 1974. I hope public opinion in this country will be so aroused that pressure will be brought upon cabinet to apply the 50 per cent to 60 per cent ownership provision, and to say that the development of heavy oil deposits on the Alberta-Saskatchewan border will not be transferred to the Occidental Oil Company, but that they will be developed by the people's own company, Petro-Canada.

Mr. Bawden: At what price?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The offer is $52 a share. That is the offer which is going out to them right now. As far as Occidental is concerned, it is not an outright purchase; it is a trade. I think many people would rather take the cash than the trade.

According to this morning's paper, the president of Occidental said that if they go ahead they want concessions on taxes and royalties, and also they would be quite willing to let the two provincial governments and Petro-Can put up the major part of the money to build a tertiary recovery plant, but of course they insist on retaining the acreage and control of the feed stock. Anyone silly enough to put up extraction facilities and leave the oil supplies in the hands of a company over which he has no control, certainly would be buying a pig in a poke.

Mr. Bawden: What about Saskatchewan?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I cannot answer all the hon. member's questions because my time is limited.

Mr. Bawden: Well, you were the premier.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Today first reading was given to a bill dealing with our Constitution. The House, and particularly the government, must realize that people are not made great by a constitution. It is the people who make a constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): It is the people who make a nation great.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) did not start until 3.13, and he has until 3.43.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In closing, what makes a nation great is not just its constitution. A constitution is an attempt to put into legal form the hopes, aspirations, and objectives of free people. A nation only becomes great when that nation has a sense of pride and purpose. It cannot have that if its resources are to be owned outside its own borders, and if it is to have no voice whatsoever in the determination of its own economic destiny.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Canadian historian, Frank Underhill, whom many of us remember with admiration and affection, once said that a nation is a collection of people who have done great things together in the past and who are determined to do great things together in the future. Canadians have done great things in the past. There is a long litany of accomplishments in peace and in war of which we can be proud. Nothing would do more to galvanize Canadians and make us a great nation than to have a sense of purpose in respect of developing our own resources, to do it with our own money and our own effort, and to be the arbiters of our own destiny. In order to do those things we need courageous leadership, and an opportunity to develop our resources. Neither the leadership nor the opportunity has been given to us by the government. If the government and the House fail to deal courageously with this problem, then we and those who come after us will have to pay the price of our inertia and apathy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, hon. members present will be glad to know that I do not intend to take up my full allotment of time in respect of this matter, simply because we do not think there is enough merit in the concept indicated by the New Democratic motion today to take up too much of the time of the House. This is not to say that we disagree with everything in the motion by any means, nor do we disagree with all the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas).

In this House, in the political field of this country, and as far as public opinion is concerned, nationalistic sentiment is not solely the prerogative of the New Democratic Party, the Liberal party or the Progressive Conservative party by any means. Certainly, for one, I agree it is long past due when Canada's national resources should be developed by and for the Canadian national interest. But in many respects we certainly do not agree with the nationalistic sentiments expressed by the hon. member who was the mover of the motion and who has just sat down.

Contrary, however, to the merits of his argument, and contrary to the main thrust of the socialistic dogma to which he adheres, and from which, unfortunately, there is no difference in concept, principle or policy on the part of the federal Liberal government of the day, we emphatically do not believe, as the hon. member just indicated, that there are only two choices or two alternatives.

That hon. member said there are only two alternatives. One of those alternatives, in his mind, obviously is the continued domination of the Canadian oil industry by foreigners, and perhaps even a consolidation through the offer or the bid by the Occidental Oil Company of California to take over Husky Oil of Canada. That is the one choice the hon. member graphically describes for us. That is not his choice, that is not my choice, and it is not our party's choice.

The other alternative he presented to the House and the public, however, as the only way Canadian resources can be preserved for Canadian use and, in the long term, for the Canadian national interest, is to have a Canadian federal governmental agency take it over.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: Obviously the applause from the NDP benches for that type of program comes as no surprise. What was surprising, however, was that from the federal Liberal benches during the course of the remarks by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, there was equal applause for some of those sentiments respecting a governmental Crown agency. The minister of the day nodded his head and grinned, indicating that is perfectly correct.

Those two are not the only alternatives; they are not the only choices, no matter how much the socialists and near socialists believe those are the choices to be presented to the Canadian people.

There is another choice, and that other choice is obviously far preferable, not only in the short run but in the long-term interests of the development of Canadian resources by and for Canadians, and that other choice has to be, and it should be our position, that Husky Oil and the development of the heavy oil fields be undertaken by Canadian interests, by Canadians through the Canadian private sector, not the Canadian public sector.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: I suggest that is completely distinct from the position taken by the hon. member who has just sat down, for the NDP socialists, and completely distinct from the position which I know the minister has taken, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) undoubtedly has taken through this whole sorry mess which has led us to this situation today. That position has been that the only answer has to be Petro-Can or a Canadian government agency bidding for the shares of Husky. I say we disagree profoundly with the principle that a federal governmental agency is the only answer to Canadian control of Canadian resources. Specifically in relation to this matter, we believe that Petro-Can should not control the Canadian development of heavy oil in this country.

Our position is that Canadian private interests can and should be encouraged to develop Canadian resources, and the very obvious and determined present national federal government policy and concept, directed right out of the Prime Minister's office, has been and still is to discourage any other development but that of Petro-Can. We think this is wrong, that it is folly, that it is unfair and highly discriminatory, and it certainly can never serve the Canadian long-term interests either in heavy oil, energy generally or, for that matter, in the Canadian resources field generally.

Heavy oil development has not proceeded as it should have, and there are many reasons for this. We just heard the argument presented to us, and the socialists and the Liberals of this country both claim this, that it is the fault of foreign, specifically American, management and control of the present land—the present land owners, in particular, Husky Oil of Canada. Husky Oil of Canada at the moment is obviously controlled by foreign interests—by American interests. We believe it takes at least two to tango.

Our enquiries, and I have reason to believe they have a very great modicum of authority, have led us to believe there certainly has been a concept and plan, emanating from the very top of our present federal government, which have brought home to Husky over a period of the last three months, in no uncertain terms, that come hell or high water this present federal government is going to permit only Petro-Can to develop the heavy oil potential. We say this is wrong, heavy handed, and discriminatory. It is against our concept of what Petro-Can was set up for in the first place, and it is against the long-term interests of Canada.

How many more federal government agencies will be required to bail out, take over, or buy back some of these fields when they come on market? Are we forever going to be required to rely on the half knowledge of federal governmental people, in particular of persons in the federal government at the political level, in taking over these fields as they may become available in the future?

I agree completely that control should not have passed from Canada in the first place, and perhaps that is a damning indictment not only of this government but of all past governments. In any event, it has happened, and it has happened by a number of ways and means which can be directly related to the policies and principles of successive federal governments, not only in the energy field and not only in the resources field, but also in the tax field. There is no question about that. Nevertheless, it has happened, and the facts speak for themselves.

The Canadian resources industry generally is dominated by foreigners. The Canadian energy field industries are dominated by foreigners, and the Canadian petroleum industry is dominated by foreigners. However, do you really think it is the government of the day that we should continually be looking to in order to bail us out of the situation we are in as a result of these past errors and failures? God forbid! I do not care what the political complexion is of the government of the day. This is a wrong, heavy-handed move. If I had my "druthers", for instance, not only would I move specifically to make sure that that the Occidental bid was never countenanced by the government of the day, but I would also move to make very sure that the Petro-Canada bid was withdrawn as well. It is a wrong move to encourage, and it is wrong to use a heavy hand, as this government has been using over the last few months, to discourage and to drag its feet in respect of that heavy oil development.

The heavy oil development should have been well on its way by now, but it is not. It is not the fault of foreigners but of the footdragging of this government and its numerous agencies in the field. Husky Oil has known for some time, and let us make no bones about it, that they were not going to be permitted under this government to develop that heavy oil field. There is no question about that whatsoever.

The hon. member spoke the other day of collusion between Occidental Oil and Husky Oil, and that may well be the case.

I simply ask you, Mr. Speaker, would you not do exactly the same if you knew that the people who wanted to take you over cared less about efficiency or where they were getting their money? These companies knew that behind the agency which would eventually take over, there was the unlimited resources of the poor Canadian taxpayer. Of course the present moves are a giant poker game designed to up the ante. The only problem is that the poor sucker who is going to pay in the long run will be the Canadian taxpayer, and this is very wrong.

I suggest to you, sir, that that was not the purpose of Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada, surely, was set up by this House, and I will not go back and read the speeches, as a governmental move for a Crown agency to create something new in this country, not to follow the jaded policies of the CDC and attempt to buy back some of those endeavours. It is a wrong, false move at the moment for Petro-Canada to do just exactly that. If we had our way we would say, "A pox on all of them and their alternatives." The alternative is not the government versus the Americans.

There is another alternative, but it has been almost completely destroyed by the inepteness of the government of the day and the Petro-Canada management coming forward on at least two occasions; and I am sure that it will happen more and more as the crunch finally comes. It has been destroyed by successive counter offers made by companies which may not really be in the game on the one hand, and a governmental agency on the other hand which feels it has no restriction or limitation whatsoever on the amount of money it can pay. As I say, the people who will pay in the end will be the taxpayers of this country.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what new oil resources are going to be available to the people of Canada that we do not know about now? What new development, what real initiative and leadership are taking place that will bring new wealth and new industry to Canada as a whole? What is going to happen to that $500 million to $800 million that will be spent under this scheme, which was devised in the Prime Minister's office and encouraged by the socialists on our left, those socialists who like to wrap themselves in the flag and indicate what great patriots and nationalists they are? I will tell you what is going to happen, Mr. Speaker. Under this scheme that $800 million of Canadian taxpayers' funds are going to travel south of the border. What good, Mr. Speaker, is that money going to do Canada when it crosses the border? What new development is that going to foster in this country? Absolutely none!

The minister is about to speak when I sit down, and I hope he will give us a lot more detail than has been provided so far. This is not the sole and exclusive policy of a governmental Crown agency that we are talking about when we talk of Petro-Canada and its two offers so far; we are talking about a policy that has been devised and initiated not even, I suspect, in the offices of the hon. ministers but in the office of the Prime Minister of this country. There are many, many close connections between what has happened over the last four months and individuals who deal with and have connections with the Prime Minister's office itself.

We on this side of the House suspect that a concerted, intentional, and prejudicial series of moves have been put into play on Husky in order to get it out of the picture and to make sure that everyone else is scared off due to some of the unreal statements and offers that have been made. If the Petro-Canada offer is so closely connected with the policies and principles of this government, I hope that the minister of the day will tell us what the basis of the Petro-Can offer is. How do they arrive at the figure which they have just come along with, because this is not his money or Petro-Can's money; this is the money of the people of this country? It is a very high trust, and burden, placed on the minister of the Crown responsible for this agency to the people of this country.

I would like a very detailed explanation. Why is it $58; why is it not $78; why is it not $38? How are these things devised. The second figure that has now come along is different from the first, and I would like to know how they arrived at the first figure. I hope we are going to get an explanation, because it is owed to us in view of the fact this government is spending the taxpayers' money. I am also looking for an explanation of the great volume of share selling and buying and the activity that occurred prior to the public announcement of Petro-Canada's offer. It is great for the minister to come along, as I am sure—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gillespie: You have had only 20 minutes.

Mr. Lawrence: I shall sum up, Mr. Speaker. There are a great many facets of this whole transaction which are wrapped in mystery. In the long term interest of investment in Canada's resources by Canadians with Canadian capital, to have the heavy hand of the government intrude in a way such as this one has will not encourage that investment. There will be no investment in Canadian resources, energy, or in particular the Canadian petroleum field from either side of the border. We need that type of investment, and we need changes in our tax laws to encourage it. It must be as profitable for Canadians to invest in Canada as it is for the Americans. This situation simply does not apply today.

We must not let the socialists or the near socialists in the government today pull the wool over our eyes, or permit them to pull the wool over the eyes of the Canadian public when they say there are only two alternatives, those two alternatives being the continued domination by the United States in this important field, or for a Canadian governmental agency to act as "Big Brother" and take over.

The third alternative and the only answer in the long run is for the Canadian private sector to be given some breaks by the government such as investors in other countries receive. That is where the change has to come, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate this afternoon which addresses itself to two very important issues. The first issue is that of Canadian ownership and control of resource developments in Canada, and the second issue, the current one, is whether development of Husky's heavy oil resources should be undertaken by Petro-Canada in co-operation with the provinces directly affected.

I listened to the speech of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) with great interest and care. This is an area with which I was associated in my previous portfolio and with which I am very much involved in my present porfolio. I should like to tell the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands that I thought he made a very good speech but, of course, that does not mean I agree with everything he said. Many of us on this side of the House could agree with the sentiments he uttered today and the degree to which he put Canada first in his remarks.

By contrast, I was appalled when the official spokesman for the Conservative party, the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence), said he was not going to take all the time allotted to him today—although he was able to, with our encouragement. I think it is appalling when the official spokesman for the official party—the party that would like to become the government of this country—

Mr. Paproski: Will become.

Mr. Gillespie: —says that he is not going to take all his time to address himself to this issue because in some way this issue is not important to him or his party. That is a shocking situation. Clearly the Conservative party is retreating once again in a major policy area. They are running away from responsibility; they are hiding their heads because they do not want to state their position. I have heard comments to the effect that they may not have one. That is probably the kindest thing we could say. There is so much contention within the party that they cannot make up their minds.

I could not but reflect upon a phrase the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham used. I think his words were to the effect that we should bail ourselves out of past errors. I could not think of a better description of the mandate he was given by his own party in this House—"to bail us out of our past errors." Quite clearly their past error is that they are still living with it and do not know what to do with it. That error was that they voted against the creation of Petro-Canada.

I was appalled that the energy spokesman of the official opposition was not prepared to address himself to the question of energy policy. We on this side of the House would have liked to hear what the Conservatives have to say. I think a lot of people in the country have been wondering for a long time what the position of the Tory party is on energy.

In my opening remarks, Mr. Speaker, I referred to the two parts of this resolution. I should like to deal briefly with a review of the policy initiatives, the legislative action, regulatory action, and legislative proposals of this government in the last four years.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands referred to FIRA. This legislation was originally passed by the House in 1973. Part I was proclaimed in the early part of 1974, but part II was not proclaimed until this parliament. The Foreign Investment Review Agency was a very significant piece of legislation in the development of Canadian policy for the development and protection of Canadian resources. Hon. members are aware of the one test contained in the Foreign Investment Review Agency Act, the phrase "significant benefit to Canada". The act was not set up to block foreign investment unless that investment does not provide significant benefit to Canada.

The second significant event I should like to refer to was also referred by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, and that is the election promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the Sault in the late spring of 1974. When I was minister of industry, trade and commerce I referred to that promise as reported in the Commons Debates for October 10, 1974, when I said:

> The Prime Minister said that the Liberal Party of Canada sets as its objective that new, major projects in the natural resources field should have at least 50 per cent, and preferably 60 per cent, Canadian equity ownership. As there are overlapping responsibilities for the development of Canada's natural resources shared by both the federal government and the provinces, he said we would hope to pursue this objective jointly with the provinces.

I will return later in my remarks to the part the provinces might and should play in this area of ownership and the question of the percentage of Canadian equity participation.

Yesterday the Prime Minister was asked whether he stood by that statement, and he replied very quickly that he does. That was an important statement in 1974, and that was an important statement yesterday.

Perhaps I might refer in passing, Mr. Speaker, to that statement about 50 per cent and preferably 60 per cent Canadian equity ownership, which today is seen as part of that policy in respect of resources. One can think back to the government of the day and the policy with respect to uranium in this country—that Canadians should hold 67 per cent of all new projects. In a few moments I will refer to the oil and gas bill now before the House which takes the same kinds of proposals a step further in that industry. The result of that uranium policy was to ensure that a project at Key Lake, Saskatchewan, will be Canadian controlled. More than that, a Canadian Crown corporation, Eldorado, will participate in that project because Inexco, the American corporation which was a one third partner in the deal, decided it would sell its ownership. It provided an option to Eldorado, which in turn has set up one half of that development to the Saskatchewan government. As a result of that, there will be greater Canadian participation in the uranium industry.

● (1612)

The next significant event in this parliament was the passage of the Petro-Canada Act in July, 1975. It is worth quoting for the record and for the edification of members of the official opposition the purposes of the act:

The purpose of this Act is to establish within the energy industries in Canada a Crown owned company with authority to explore for hydrocarbon deposits, to negotiate for and acquire petroleum and petroleum products from abroad to assure a continuity of supply for the needs of Canada, to develop and exploit deposits of hydrocarbons within and without Canada in the interests of Canada, to carry out research and development projects in relation to hydrocarbons and other fuels, and to engage in exploration for, and the production, distribution, refining and marketing of, fuels.

About a week ago another member of the official opposition, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), raised a question during question period which suggested that the Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, did not have a mandate for the acquisition of other companies. I draw his attention to the objectives, powers and duties set forth in the Petro-Canada Act. I quote paragraph 6:

The objects of the Corporation are

(a) to engage in exploration for and the development of hydrocarbons and other types of fuel or energy;

(b) to engage in research and development projects relating to fuel and energy resources;

(c) to import, produce, transport, distribute, refine and market hydrocarbons of all descriptions;

(d) to produce, distribute, transport and market other fuels and energy; and

(e) to engage or invest in ventures or enterprises related to the exploration, production, importation, distribution, refining and marketing of fuel, energy and related resources.

The mandate of Petro-Canada is very clear in this area, although the official opposition may not be very clear about it.

On July 18, 1975, the government promulgated a new set of principles for international business conduct. It might be worth referring to those principles because they have not received the attention they deserve. These principles in July, 1975, served notice on companies doing business in Canada that there were certain expectations which the government had with regard to their conduct. I quote the preamble:

Foreign-controlled businesses in Canada are expected to operate in ways that will bring significant benefit to Canada. To this end they should pursue policies that will foster their independence in decision-making, their innovative and other entrepreneurial capabilities, their efficiency, and their identification with Canada and the aspirations of the Canadian people.

There are 14 separate principles set out. I wish to refer to Nos. 1 and 9. The first one reads:

Pursue a high degree of autonomy in the exercise of decision-making and risk-taking functions, including innovative activity and the marketing of any resulting new products.

Number 9 reads:

Create a financial structure that provides opportunity for substantial equity participation in the Canadian enterprise by the Canadian public.

The next move that was taken was a year ago in August. This is a significant one. Again there has been very little reference to it by the official opposition. I refer to the new regulations that were established for the exploration and development of oil and gas on federal lands. There were three particular principles which were set out at that time and which are now operative.

The first one provides a preference for Petro-Canada with regard to Crown lands. We gave Petro-Canada an option to look over the then existing Crown lands which were not out to permit or to lease, and to choose from those lands 25 per cent.

The second preference was that Petro-Canada could select up to 25 per cent of any lands surrendered back to the Crown by other oil companies. This is over a period of seven years following promulgation of the regulations. In those two ways regulations have been made to give Petro-Canada a preference in the development of Crown land under federal control.

The third regulation promulgated at that time had to do with the back-in provision for Petro-Canada when a permit came up for special renewal. This special renewal is not an automatic decision on the part of the administrative authority. It is a discretionary one.

The government at that time introduced a back-in provision which in effect stated that if there is no more than 10 per cent Canadian ownership in a particular project, Petro-Canada would have a 25 per cent right to back in and then pay its way from then on in. If there is 35 per cent Canadian participation in a project, Petro-Canada would not have any right to back in.

There was a heavy emphasis on getting Canadian ownership into that particular phase of the exploration cycle. If Canadian ownership was already there, Petro-Canada had no right up to 35 per cent. However, between 10 and 35 per cent the Crown corporation would have special rights.

In January, 1976, Petro-Canada started up. In August, 1976, it acquired the assets of ARCAN, which was the Atlantic Richfield subsidiary operating in Canada. As hon. members will recall, that corporation was not able to hack it with the Syncrude project. It was the withdrawal of ARCAN which created the condition of near disaster for that project, and the governments of Alberta and Ontario, as well as the federal government, had to move in to salvage this project for the benefit of Canada.

The assets were acquired in August, 1976, by Petro-Canada. I do not recall the official opposition raising any objection at that time. If they did, I am surprised that they did not remind us today. It is another clear example of the inconsistencies and inability of the official opposition really to decide how they are going to treat the Crown corporation.

Mr. Mazankowski: When did you discover heavy oil?

Mr. Gillespie: I would like to carry on. I am sure the hon. member opposite will have an opportunity to make his remarks.

Early this year we gave first reading to the Canada Oil and Gas Act. That act provides further Canadian ownership opportunities in the sense that it will require 25 per cent Canadian participation in producing facilities under the new oil and gas regulations. This is not 50 per cent, but it is an important step toward that objective of increasing Canadian participation in the oil and gas industry under federal jurisdiction.

In conclusion, with regard to the foreign investment side, I believe that any fair minded person will have to say that the record shows a very strong commitment on the part of the government to increasing Canadian participation and control in Canadian resource development. These measures have been taken during the life of this parliament, over the past four years. We have seen no comparable commitment to these issues by the official opposition.

The official position of the official opposition is that they would dismantle Petro-Canada if they were to form the next government. They would rely more on the national oil companies of other countries than they would on the national oil company of Canada. They seem to have forgotten that a national oil company, British Petroleum, operates in Canada. They seem to have forgotten that the French government has a national oil company investing in Canada. The official opposition seem to have forgotten that the Italian government has a national oil company operating in Canada. They have forgotten that the German government has an investment in the oil and gas industry in this country. They have forgotten that the Japanese government has an investment in this country. What they are saying to the Canadian people is that they are quite prepared to accept the national oil companies of other countries, but they are not prepared to accept our own national oil company. I think it is about time members of the Conservative party moved into the twentieth century because the position they have taken on this issue is to return to the colonization approach, the colonial attitude of their heyday.

I should like to turn, now, to the subject of the development of heavy oil in Saskatchewan in the context of our policy of self-reliance for Canada. It is important that hon. members should recognize that this policy of reducing our dependence on foreign oil was endorsed by the provincial premiers at the first ministers' conference in February. Moreover, the heavy oil of Saskatchewan was singled out for special treatment by the premiers, including the premier of Saskatchewan, presumably.

Hon. members will realize how important the heavy oil resources of Canada are if they have referred recently to a booklet put out by my department "Oil Sands and Heavy Oils—the Prospects." I would refer them to page three which sets out the proportion of oil sands which are available commercially, the economic possibilities, and attraction to investors. In the Lloydminster area alone these deposits are the equivalent of about half the recoverable reserves in the conventional fields of Alberta. That is how important they are.

The corporate sector, more particularly Husky, has its own time frame from the point of view of the development of company assets. We are dealing here with a classic situation in which the legitimate time frame of the private sector does not conform with the time frame which the government has determined to be in the national interest. Petro-Canada, along with the government of Saskatchewan, the federal government and Husky, held a number of discussions about the development of these sands. It was the view of Petro-Canada that it would not be possible, given the sense of urgency attached to the matter by the Government of Canada, to reach a solution without making a take-over bid. This bid, together with the counter bid by Occidental and the further bid by Petro-Canada, is now history, and time alone will tell what the result will be. But I believe Canadians can feel reassured by the presence of the Foreign Investment Review Act. Occidental has already noted the importance of that legislation and made its offer conditional not just upon the basis of 80 per cent acceptance but on the basis of its approval under the act. The corporation has also stated it wants Petro-Canada along with it. Petro-Canada, for its part, has announced that it is preparing its own offer.

The other main conclusion we might draw at this time reflecting on both issues, this project and the Canadian development of resources, particularly the ownership criteria which might apply, is that the provinces have remained silent for too long. It is up to the provinces, now, to accept the Prime Minister's invitation to discuss this question of 50 per cent, preferably 60 per cent, Canadian equity ownership of resource projects. Too much time has gone by. There seems to be too much emphasis on the part of the provinces on questions having to do with their jurisdiction and ownership of the resources. It is time to let Canadians know what share of the equity participation Canadians should enjoy in major new projects.

The time has come for the Tories to address themselves to this question, too. We know how they stand with regard to Petro-Canada. They would dismantle it. This may be a very uneasy policy position for them to live with. I would welcome a change of mind on their part; it is long overdue. But I would welcome it if they would address their attention to this question of Canadian participation. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham talked about straw men. He never once dealt with the question of what his party believed to be a reasonable degree of participation of Canadians in the resource development of our country.

The people know where the Liberals stand; our record in this parliament is clear. I think the time has come to hear from the official opposition. Canadians would also welcome a statement from the provincial premiers.

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate my colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) for having moved this motion.

Last week, the hon. member proved his awareness of the problem by raising this issue several times in questions put to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie). Though he did not obtain all the explanations he sought, he still made the House more aware than before of this serious problem.

Mr. Speaker, the Husky Oil affair underlines once more the need for Canadians to control their natural resources. At the federal-provincial conference of the ministers of energy last year, one of the items on the agenda was the problem of heavy oil development. The final paper stated that it would cost from $3 to $5 a barrel to convert this heavy oil into useful resources on a large scale. The development of heavy oil therefore requires large investments. According to the Saskatchewan premier, Husky Oil alone cannot support the cost of building a plant for this purpose. Last Wednesday, he estimated the cost of developing the Husky Oil supplies and of building a heavy oil extraction plant at about $2 billion. Heavy oil reserves on the Saskatchewan-Alberta boundary are evaluated at five billion barrels. This may not seem a lot if we think about the estimated supplies of 900 billion barrels in the Alberta tar sands. But extracting oil from the tar sands also involves certain problems. In the case of Husky Oil, you would simply have to inject hot water, in other words use a thermal process, to help the flow of the oil which is too heavy. This development therefore involves only a technological problem since the capital is virtually assured following the offers of Petro-Canada and Occidental. Last June 15, I was listening to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who replied to my colleague for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands that whoever the final owner of the Husky Company may be, what counts is that these resources be developed and that they be developed in the national interest.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that when we have a Canadian company, publicly owned to boot, which wants to purchase an oil company which on its own cannot develop oil deposits for the benefit of Canadians, we cannot sit quietly by and let an American company take the development of our energy resources which are vital for the progress of our economy. National interest does not call only for the resources to be developed for Canadians, but also for these resources to be developed by Canadians. The interference of a foreign company in this shameful bargaining has inflated the market value of Husky Oil shares to such a point that Petro-Canada had to raise its offer to $52 a share last week. Frankly I wonder if the Occidental company from California, which indulges in such a financial scheme, deserves our confidence since that increase in value of the stock will result in higher costs and eventually all Canadians will have to pay for it through government subsidies or a price increase. The rich will get even richer at the expense of others.

Mr. Speaker, let us not forget that the large majority of our resource companies are under foreign control. In certain circumstances a Canadian company can be taken over by an American company because there is no Canadian company to buy it. But in the present circumstances, a bid has been filed by a Canadian corporation—Petro-Canada which is owned by all Canadians—to purchase another Canadian corporation.

Then, Mr. Speaker, in light of the financial bargaining that forced Petro-Canada to increase its initial offer of $45 a share to $52 to control Husky Oil, only to see Occidental offer $55 a share, I simply believe that our interests are far from being protected. Petro-Canada will have no control over the development of those important resources. I know that Occidental propose that Petro-Canada participate in a consortium to develop heavy oils in Lloydminster and acquire a third of the shares in the development of those deposits. But who will get control over those deposits? Foreign interests.

Then, Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) told us during the last election that all major new resource developments should be Canadian controlled, was he joking or did he only try to fool Canadians? The fact is that Petro-Canada has been had by a foreign company. The Foreign Investment Review Agency might accept the proposals of Occidental and authorize it to take over Husky Oil. Where are we going? When will Canadians have a word to say about the control and development of our resources?

Mr. Speaker, our natural resources are not the only things under foreign control, there is also our economy where at least 90 per cent of business is controlled by foreigners, who are often our nearest neighbours, our neighbours to the south. The commitments made by the Prime Minister during the 1974 election have been forgotten to the extent that the government itself is prepared to surrender our birthrights to foreigners against a mess of pottage. Mr. Speaker, this is the work of a government which has had the majority for almost four years.

[English]

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, as I start off in this debate I must correct the minister, who again has misinformed the House. I cannot say whether it was intentional or through ignorance, but following the earlier example of my friend and colleague, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) with regard to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) I will concede that it was probably the latter.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) claimed that we were inaccurate in describing the mandate of Petro-Canada. I refer the minister to a document put out by his predecessor called "An Energy Policy for Canada", published in early July of 1973, in which is contained an analysis of the worth of a national oil company. The analysis contained arguments for a national oil company and arguments against. Anyone reading these arguments without any built-in bias would come to the conclusion that there was not a good argument for a national oil company. The argument against was not strongly against, but on the basis of the analysis done by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources of the Liberal government under the hon. Donald Macdonald, who was then the minister, one would come to that conclusion.

However, in the fall of 1973 and in 1974, because of the Middle East war the OPEC nations gained strength, and there were fears about shortages of oil in Canada. It was largely on the strength of the newfound realization that, as a country, we could not count on cheap foreign oil to supply our needs, that the government came to the conclusion that one of the vehicles to be used to improve Canada's security of supply would be a national oil company. That was the main reason for the establishment of Petro-Canada, in the face of the government's own analysis which indicated that such a national oil company would probably not be a good idea.

That was not very long ago, and the minister can check the record. If he wants to check the March 12, 1975, issue of Hansard, he will see a speech by his predecessor indicating that in order to promote more security of energy supply for Canada the government was establishing a national oil company to be called Petro-Canada. The original mandate of Petro-Canada when the act was written—and it was written like all acts are written by this government, with a huge, broad brush—was to make sure Petro-Canada could do anything, including pumping gas and changing tires, if that was deemed to be in the national interest. So the act indeed empowers Petro-Canada to do anything. No one ever claimed that what Petro-Canada was doing in trying to take over Husky is in contravention of the act. But it is certainly not in keeping with the original reason given by this government for the establishment of Petro-Canada.

Then, to bolster his argument, the minister brought in the question of the northern regulations establishing the rules which will prevail for exploration of federal lands in the high Arctic. I am appalled that he could use that argument. He said what a great thing it was that Petro-Canada had this favoured position. As the minister should be aware, since the promulgation of those regulations the private sector has abandoned federal lands in the high Arctic and there is virtually no exploration occurring up there, other than that which is captive, namely, PanArctic, with Petro-Canada being the owner of 45 per cent of it.

Mr. Baldwin: The minister thinks that the north is everything north of Toronto.

Mr. Andre: The net result of the minister's regulations, for which he takes credit, is the cessation of exploration in Canada's Arctic. How that will help us achieve self-sufficiency or self-reliance is beyond me. Apparently what the government has done, without admitting it to the Canadian people, is to abandon the notion of self-sufficiency, the idea of Canada producing as much energy as it needs. The government is prepared to see Canadians rely on insecure offshore sources of oil and gas. If, heaven forbid, the day comes when those supplies are cut off and Canadians start freezing in the dark, the credit for that can go right to this minister and his government.

Questions are raised as to why we should dismantle Petro-Canada. There are lots of reasons, and I could debate this for a long time, but I will give just a few arguments based on the annual report of Petro-Canada for 1977. Some people may have seen press releases on Petro-Canada stating, for example, that Petro-Canada had $88 million in revenue in 1977, which is pure flimflam. It is true that their total revenues were $88 million, but you have to pay salaries and things like that, and when you take off expenses for salaries and rent, you get a revenue of $30 million, that is on assets of $878 million or equity of $551 million—$538 million at the start of the year.

In other words, the profit of that company before tax was 5.5 per cent on equity. The taxpayers put in $538 million, and the company did such a marvellous job of investing it that we got 5.5 per cent return on it, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) is not in New York borrowing money at 9 per cent. It is a hell of a deal. We borrow at 9 per cent, give it to Petro-Canada, and then get 5.5 per cent on that. Then you wonder why we want to dismantle the company. By the way, the after tax return, which is what is really important, is 1.7 per cent on equity. In comparison, the average for the industry is in the vicinity of 17 per cent or 18 per cent, so Petro-Canada is doing one tenth as well as the average oil company in Canada. Small wonder! Who can expect any better?

We are talking about the same people who run the Post Office, for goodness sake. If they cannot deliver a letter, how the heck are they going to find oil and gas? Have they contributed to Canada's long term security supply? Let us look at the figures. They found 21 billion cubic feet of gas, but they sold 32 billion cubic feet, meaning they suffered a net depletion of 11 billion cubic feet of gas. They found 2.9 million barrels of oil, but they sold 10.2 million barrels of oil, meaning there was a net depletion of 7.3 million barrels of oil. So if you put a gas value on that in company terms, it comes out to $27 million of inventory that was sold. If you subtract that from the $30 million of net profit, you wind up with the large figure of $3 million on an investment of $538 million by the people of Canada. If that is not reason enough to dismantle the company, there are plenty of others.

Mr. Gillespie: What are some of them?

Mr. Andre: The minister would like more reasons. Let him read the document produced by his own department back in 1973 and he will get lots of reasons there.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), who introduced the motion, ended his speech with the rhetorical question, what makes a nation great? He went on to state that it was a sense of purpose, a sense of pride, having goals and objectives, none of which I disagree with. It was well stated and nobody in this party would disagree with that. But then somehow, by some magic, he associated that directly with state ownership, with socialism. He said that the only way a nation can be great is if the state runs everything. That misses the fundamental elements of a nation, namely, the people.

It is the people, not bureaucracy, not government, that make a nation great. It is the releasing of the creative drive in people, the energy in individual Canadians who operate in a free economy where there are opportunities and where government is an assistance, not a hindrance by encouraging the growth of a huge, oppressive bureaucracy which the hon.

member is advocating. The effect of that can only be to stifle the individual and to prevent Canadians from taking on those activities which lead to greatness on an individual basis and as a nation.

Like my friend and colleague, the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence), I object most strenuously to the notion that only socialists are nationalists and patriots. I was a founding member of the committee for an independent Canada, and I believe that far too much of our economy is owned by foreigners. I know why that is so. It is because the oil industry is owned primarily by foreigners and it is because of the stupid tax laws in this country which have existed for too many years.

I do not know how many members in the House realize that until the budget of 1975 an American could invest in Canadian energy development on free tax dollars but a Canadian could not, so that we had the ludicrous situation where it was cheaper for an American to invest in Canada than for a Canadian to do so. That was the kind of tax law that existed in this country? Why? Because the Liberals, with the encouragement of the CCF and the NDP, wanted a tax system that gouged Canadians. They did not want incentive in the system so that Canadians could invest on an equal basis with foreigners in our own country.

When the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands was the premier of Saskatchewan, he was not in Ottawa saying that he wanted to change the law so that Canadians could develop the oil reserves of Saskatchewan; he was inviting Husky to participate. He is more responsible than anybody for Husky having the position it has in Saskatchewan, if you want to assess how Husky got to that position.

Today the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands stood and sanctimoniously said that a true Canadian stands for more and more government and a state owned company to take over everything. Of all the sanctimonious—

An hon. Member: Hogwash?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Flim-flam?

Mr. Andre: I think the word I was about to use was unparliamentary.

I hope the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will listen to what I am saying. The tax provision has a built-in sunset clause. It will change on July 1, 1979. If we want to return to the situation where Americans can invest in Canadian energy supplies tax free, then all we have to do is allow that provision to lapse. It will lapse on July 1, 1979, unless some changes are made. If the New Democratic Party is serious about wanting Canadians to develop our resources, they should join with us in pressuring the government to extend that date, or eliminate it altogether. The tax law could be left as it is now so that we are on a par with foreigners when it comes to investing in our own country.

Also I should like to comment on the apparent ability of the New Democratic Party to be on both sides of the fence at the same time without hurting itself. During oral questions today, the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) stood and condemned the government's handling of the Post Office. He indicated how outrageous it was that letters were not being delivered, were being shipped all over the country, and that the management of that government-run operation was horrendous. Then the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands said that we should turn over the entire oil industry to the same people who are running the Post Office. He did not even display a shred of embarrassment about the obvious contradiction. It baffles me.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Those are the last people I would want to run anything.

Mr. Andre: At one time I heard an interesting comment by a Mr. Schumiatcher, whom the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands knows well. This gentleman went to Saskatchewan to work for the socialist government of that province. Eventually he became quite a staunch, small "c" right winger. He was asked why he changed fom an avid socialist to a small conservative at the other extreme. In reply, he said that any person who is 20 and not a socialist has no heart, and when he is 40 and not a conservative, he has no brains.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He borrowed that from 100 years ago.

Mr. Andre: I do not know if that is his theory or that of someone else. Given the quality of the argument today, despite the actual age, immaturity certainly is evident. The apparent unwillingness of the NDP to see the obvious contradiction is unbelievable. On the one hand the NDP say that the government messes up everything it touches, and on the other hand it says that we need more government.

Why did Petro-Can become involved in the first place? It was negotiating with Husky and Gulf Oil to develop heavy oils. Husky was awaiting a response to a suggested arrangement, when Petro-Can came along with its raid. Then Husky was in contact with Occidental. Occidental came up with a higher offer, and we know the story from then on. Why did Petro-Can do that? Why did it operate that way? There were at least two Canadian consortiums which were ready to make offers for Husky. They were upstaged by Petro-Can.

Mr. Benjamin: Why did they not make the offers?

Mr. Andre: Because of the treacherous behaviour of Petro-Can. Petro-Can was supposed to be negotiating, and instead it pulled out its raid. Petro-Can cannot outbid Occidental. It will be an impossibility because of American tax law. If Petro-Can pays cash, it is a taxable capital gain in the hands of the present owners. Thus, they get to keep half, and the American government will get the other half. That will put Canadian tax dollars into the American treasury. However, Occidental's paper value is not taxable, even though it is a second rate issue of a preferred share. Given that it does not involve a cash outlay by Occidental, the paper value does not really matter. There is a 10 per cent interest rate, but that is not a big deal. The cash outlay in that regard is minor. Occidental can outbid Petro-Can no matter where it goes. For the sake of the poor Canadian taxpayer, the minister should tell Petro-Can to get out of the action quickly. Also he should tell Occidental to quit as well, and tell Husky to get busy developing the heavy reserves. If Husky cannot do it—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): How can Husky do this?

Mr. Andre: I hear the question I am being asked. Over 50 licences and permits are required to undertake any significant energy project in this country. Every one of those licences and permits is given by the government. If that is not control, what is?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): It is not done by the federal government. It is done by provincial governments.

Mr. Andre: Petro-Can will spend approximately $600 million of our tax moneys if it is successful. On top of that, to upgrade the physical plant, approximately $1 billion is needed. As well, unknown hundreds of millions are required for the development of the field itself. We are looking at an approximate $2 billion expenditure, which will not add one single barrel of proven recoverable reserves to Canada. It will not contribute one single iota to improving our position.

Last week the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) stood in the House and gave us a half hour lecture on how responsive the government has been in terms of spending, and how it is cutting back in government expenditures. It realizes that government expenditure is creating havoc in the economy and is causing taxpayers to be upset. He blamed the previous high level of government spending on a minority government. At the same time as we were receiving this sanctimonious lecture, another government agency committed Canadian taxpayers to over $2 billion of expenditure. There is not even a hint of embarrassment anywhere along the line.

Mr. Gillespie: That is false.

Mr. Beatty: The minister is embarrassed.

Mr. Andre: Yes, the minister is embarrassed. Where will that money come from, if not from the taxpayers?

Mr. Mazankowski: Petro-Can will borrow the money.

Mr. Andre: Yes, Petro-Can will borrow the money. The minister thinks the situation is different if the money is borrowed by Petro-Can rather than the Minister of Finance. What is the difference? They are both agents of Her Majesty and of the federal government. If the Minister of Finance borrows $11 billion and Petro-Can borrows another $2 billion, the total government borrowing is $13 billion.

Mr. Mazankowski: Then the government writes it off, as it did for the CNR.

Mr. Andre: That is right, it will be written off. It will be disguised and will never show up in the estimates. The public will not know that the money is coming out of their jeans. The economy will remain sick, as will the country. It is time for the government to be more honest. It is time for the government to display more willingness to be truthful and open with Canadians. The government should stand behind the statements made by the Prime Minister recently. He claimed that he believed in the private sector, as we approached an election. That faith should be demonstrated.

We should let the private sector get on with developing the heavy oil reserves. Let us allow Canadians as individuals and as entrepreneurs to use their creativity and energy to satisfy these national goals. Let us not fool ourselves by believing that big government—"Big Brother"—here in Ottawa is somehow more capable, efficient, and effective in fulfilling these national goals than is the private sector, because the facts just do not bear that out, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before recognizing the hon. parliamentary secretary, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Simcoe-North (Mr. Rynard)—Health and Welfare—Emigration of doctors from Canada; the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers)—Post Office—Unfilled orders for Olympic coins; the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith)—Grain—Shortage of boxcars at Churchill, Manitoba.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NATURAL RESOURCES—CANADIAN CONTROL OF DEVELOPMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands):

Natural Resources

That, in the opinion of this House

(a) all major new resources developments should be majority Canadian controlled as promised by the Government during the 1974 federal election campaign; and

(b) in order to avoid further domination and ownership of Canada's oil resources by foreign multi-national oil companies, and a continuing financial rip-off of the Canadian consumer, the development of Husky Oil Company's heavy oil resources should be undertaken by Petro-Canada in co-operation with the provinces directly affected.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my remarks by trying to reply to the last question of my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), who asked where the funds to finance such an undertaking would be coming from. For the information of my colleague, I would like to tell him that Canadians are indeed the most thrifty people in the world since they have the highest savings. In spite of a denigration campaign about everything that is Canadian, I am still confident that Canadians will recognize a good bargain when they see one and that they wil take the opportunity to make investments, not in a credit union or in a bank but in a Canadian business to develop the Canadian economy.

If Canadians do so, Mr. Speaker, they will be doing exactly like some twenty countries throughout the world. For example, allow me to point out that there are at least 25 French public agencies involved in mining operations in Canada. I will spare you, Mr. Speaker, the enumeration of the 25 organizations or agencies of the French government involved in Canada. There are also six German public agencies, five from the United Kingdom, five from Italy, two from the Netherlands, four from Japan and finally two from Spain, for a total of 45 government agencies of all those countries which have confidence in the Canadian economy and find it is excellent to invest and be involved in mining operations in Canada.

And it is that kind of astuteness, Mr. Speaker, to find such economic potential in Canada, which lacks in the provinces and which the provincial governments of Canada lack. The provinces' lack of enthusiasm is something scandalous, Mr. Speaker, because they do not contribute to the development of natural resources, especially of strategic resources like energy. It is this part of the excellent motion of my friend and distinguished colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) that I find the most important, that is the end of the second paragraph, paragraph (b), where he says, and I quote:

. . . the development of Husky Oil Company's heavy oil resources should be undertaken by Petro-Canada in co-operation with the provinces directly affected.

It is precisely, Mr. Speaker, because of this practically complete absence of contribution from the provinces in such undertakings, that so many foreign companies participate in them.

It is not surprising, Mr. Speaker, because it seems that anything coming from the Canadian government is depreciated, not only by persons whose interest is to depreciate our country, but also by several members of the opposition as well. And once again, one can see that Petro-Canada, which was established in spite of the opposition of the Progressive Conservative party, is a corporation which will guarantee all Canadians reliable energy resources, energy resources we can control. I do not understand the position of my colleague from Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) when he objects to the establishment or the development of Petro-Canada. Yet I did not hear any objection from him when his provincial government in Alberta nationalized Pacific Western Airlines. I wonder if the provincial government has made a mistake in launching such an undertaking. In his next speech, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member might let us know how he sees this action of the provincial government in the operation of an airline.

That is precisely the problem, Mr. Speaker. They are not consistent, they are not consistent with themselves. One day they have one policy, one way of doing things, and the next they have an entirely different way. But with this Liberal government, Mr. Speaker, it is always the same way. During a speech on the government's policy concerning the expansion of the industry and the development of natural resources which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) delivered in Sault Ste. Marie on June 28, 1974, he stated, and I quote:

The Liberal Party of Canada has set as its objective that new, major projects in the natural resources field should have at least 50 per cent, and preferably 60 per cent, Canadian equity ownership. As there are overlapping responsibilities for the development of Canada's natural resources shared by both the federal government and the provinces, the federal government hopes to pursue this objective jointly with the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, we know the provinces have always lagged behind; we have seen it happen in two easily identifiable undertakings, namely Petro-Canada and Syncrude. It was quite a job convincing the provinces to become involved and join the federal government. Later on during that same campaign, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) reaffirmed and dealt in depth with that policy objective in a statement to the House of Commons.

The Prime Minister stated in the House yesterday that that policy objective of the government had not changed. Contrary to what we often see our friends do across the way.

Everyone knows that foreign investments have played an extremely important part in the development of our natural resources in Canada and will continue to do so in the future. This influx of foreign capital in the past has resulted, among other things, in a large number of our resource industry in Canada belonging and being controlled today by foreign interests. Those industries are found predominantly in the sector of combustible minerals; they also assume a relatively important role in mining and forestry operations, and a comparatively small though not negligible one in the Canadian fishing sector.

However, there has been very little change in the level of foreign ownership in natural resources development industries.

The changes which actually took place over the last five years were aimed mainly at reducing the level of foreign ownership and raising the level of Canadian participation in these industries. The government has committed itself to promote higher Canadian participation and has passed a certain number of measures to that effect.

In 1970, the government adopted a policy limiting to 33 per cent the level of foreign ownership in uranium mining. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has stated that he will table a bill designed to implement this policy as soon as possible. Canadian participation in the development of petroleum and gas resources in the Arctic regions of Canada has been ensured by the direct involvement of the government in the PanArctic consortium.

Petro-Canada is a mechanism which we have created in spite of the Conservative opposition, as I indicated earlier, so that the federal government and Canadians generally could participate in the exploitation and the development of petroleum and gas resources of Canada.

Last year we amended the regulations governing petroleum and gas deposits in Canada in order to apply the policy which the government had already announced and whereby the authorization to produce crude oil from federal lands would be granted only if the enterprise had a Canadian financial involvement of at least 25 per cent. The government's commitment towards the increase of the Canadian content and participation in the development of resources has been reiterated in the document regarding the energy policy of the government entitled "An Energy Strategy for Canada". In keeping with the implementation of the Foreign Investments Review Act, we have paid particular attention to the government's objective concerning wider Canadian participation in natural resources development projects. Mr. Speaker, the results are quite eloquent.

Tremendous capital funds will be required for the expansion of natural resources industries in Canada in the next 10 or 12 years. In the area of energy alone, expenditures during the period from 1978 to 1990 should reach $188 billion. On the short run, capital expenditures in the field of energy should soar from $9.4 billion in 1977 to over $19 billion by 1982.

Foreign capital will obviously be required to support the Canadian economies if we are to reach the objective of self-sufficiency in energy and fully develop the important resources that exist in other sectors. Consequently, by pursuing its objective of boosting Canadian ownership in natural resources industries in Canada the government must take into consideration not only what is desirable but also what is achievable. Those claiming that Canadian resources should be exclusively developed by Canadians would unfortunately be postponing indefinitely a number of important projects which are now on the drafting board and which would create thousands and thousands of jobs for Canadians, contribute substantially to the correction of our balance of payments and stimulate considerably the Canadian economy as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, those are all reasons which prompt the government of Canada not to delay its involvement in the development of natural resources, more particularly energy resources. By doing that, Mr. Speaker, we are only showing as much managerial astuteness and skillfulness as those I named earlier, those seven or eight industrialized countries which chose to come and settle in Canada and contribute with Canadians to our economic development.

[English]

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): This is a very important debate, Mr. Speaker, as has been pointed out by the other members who have preceded me. I think it is fair to say that it is fundamental to our continuing desire to achieve self-sufficiency in the supply of gas and oil for Canada's domestic needs. It brings up once again the important subject of ownership and control of our gas and oil resources in this country.

We in Canada may not have the luxury of ownership in this very important sector, but it is fair to say that we do have the opportunity to exercise control, and it is very important that we exercise that control, as we must and as we should. The important thing in this ongoing debate about the control and ownership of our natural resources is not so much a matter of whether we own them but, more important, a matter of whether we have the capability of controlling the manner in which these resources will be developed, that we have that capability at the federal and provincial levels and, to some extent, at the local levels.

It is also important that we put the whole question of the creation of Petro-Canada into its proper context. The minister took a great deal of his time today in his speech defending Petro-Canada, as he must, but we should be cognizant of the fact that the creation of Petro-Canada was not the result of de facto Liberal policy or philosophy; it was part and parcel of the Liberal survival package which was so important during those very difficult years they experienced between 1972 and 1974 when they had to call upon the support of the NDP to maintain power. When the NDP presented its so-called shopping list to the government as a condition of their support, the national oil company, which later became Petro-Canada, was an item on that list, and to be assured of their continuing support the government had to act upon that item. The Liberals buckled under the pressure of the NDP, and now this minister and this government are doing everything in their power to ensure that Petro-Canada becomes a viable participant in the oil industry in this country.

As I see it, the most important part of this debate is simply that the heavy oil reserves in the Lloydminster area must be developed. Indeed, it is important in the ongoing process of our attempt to achieve self-sufficiency and security of supply that this resource be developed. It is important too from a technological point of view because we are entering into an area in the development of the petrochemical industry where there is a great deal of technical expertise yet to be developed. We are relatively elementary in that particular area because the heavy oil industry per se has not been looked upon over the years as a viable means by which we could achieve that goal of self-sufficiency, simply because heavy oil was used for other than traditional petroleum requirements. Essentially, heavy oil was used for asphalt paving, manufacturing of building materials, et cetera.

Development of the heavy oil reserves is important from an over-all economic point of view to Canada in terms of stimulating economic activity and of our desire to engage further in the processing and developing of our natural resources in secondary and tertiary ways. It is important furthermore that this resource be developed from the standpoint of Canada's endeavour to achieve an acceptable level in its balance of payments problem.

The prospect of Canada having to import a million barrels of oil a year has a very detrimental impact on the economic welfare of this nation. I would like to quote Jack Gallagher, the president of Dome Petroleum, when he spoke to the Canadian Institute of Strategic Studies last October. I have used these figures before, but I think they are important and they should be reiterated because they demonstrate and, indeed, highlight the impact of depending to any extent upon foreign oil to meet our domestic demands. He stated:

> The economic impact of importing one million barrels per day of foreign oil at $15 per barrel has a negative effect on the economy of $5.5 billion per year. In contrast, using one million barrels per day of domestically produced oil at the same cost delivered in Toronto creates a positive annual economic benefit of $15.6 billion which includes payments to the various levels of government of $6.2 billion . . . In addition to the economic benefit of $15.6 billion from domestic oil . . . (Canada would realize) a saving in foreign exchange of $5.2 billion per year.

From a national economic point of view as well as in the area of security of supply, and our attempts to achieve the degree of self sufficiency we want in this country, it is important that these resources be developed.

It is worth mentioning that, according to the National Energy Board statistics, by 1985 we could be importing 52 per cent of our oil. If we take a figure of $20 per barrel that would work out to $8.5 billion per year, a huge drain that would be devastating to our balance of payments.

It has been suggested that if we proceed to establish a heavy oil upgrading facility, one that would produce 100,000 barrels of oil per day, our imports could be reduced by $730 million per year. The economic benefits to governments should be considered.

In the package put together by Pacific Petroleums Ltd., the company that is spearheading the heavy oil upgrading facility in Alberta, it is indicated that over a 20-year period taxes and royalties accruing to the federal government would amount to $2 billion, and to the provincial government, $2.6 billion. If the facility is not developed the oil will stay in the ground or be used to pave roads and parking lots and as a component in the manufacturing of building materials.

As one who resides in and represents the constituency where the city of Lloydminster is located, I think it is important to note the impact that this resource has and will have on the area. The Lloydminster type heavy crude oil pool affects in an economic way an area approximately 100 miles in radius. It has been estimated that some 75,000 people are affected by this industry, directly or indirectly.

It should be noted too that the heavy oil industry is very labour intensive, much more so than the conventional type of oil industry. It has been stated that approximately 34 per cent of the direct and secondary employment in Lloydminster is related to the heavy crude industry. It has been estimated that it takes the labour of one man for each producing well. Currently, in the immediate area, there are more than 3,000 producing wells which, using that formula, directly account for some 3,000 jobs.

Construction of a heavy oil upgrading plant costing $500 million to $700 million, and producing in the range of 100,000 barrels per day, would involve the employment of some 1,500 people. It is estimated that after completion 150 to 200 permanent staff would be required to operate it. There are, of course, the spin-off advantages of the development of the resource that would add to the already significant number of jobs created by the facility.

It has been pointed out by the members who have spoken earlier that current estimates suggest there are 16 billion barrels of heavy oil in the Lloydminster district. Using existing methods of extraction and even those methods in the process of being established, it is considered that only 5 to 10 per cent of the oil can be recovered. Methods being developed are so promising that it is hoped that it will be feasible to recover as much as 25 per cent to 30 per cent of the resource.

I think it is important that we get on with the job of building one upgrading facility at least in order to stimulate research into technology and the expertise that will be required if we are to recover a greater percentage of the available reserves.

I think it is wise to recap some of the history when we analyse the development of this important industry, Mr. Speaker. Heavy oil has been around for a long time. Husky Oil Ltd. has been involved in the Lloydminster area for many years. It is not something that has just been discovered, although I think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) may just have found out about it recently.

In the days of cheap oil, there was no call on the resource. It was used to make asphalt for paving roads and for making other related items. The price increase by the OPEC cartel in 1973 changed this. Before the thought of establishing a heavy oil upgrading facility became popular, the industry was put in very serious jeopardy in 1974-75 through the export tax and the establishment of export quotas which affected this oil reserve as well as conventional reserves and put the heavy oil industry in a very serious position.

The bulk of this resource was exported to the United States because we did not have the capability in this country of upgrading it in our conventional refineries. Because of export cutbacks and the export tax, that marketing opportunity was lost. When the markets dried up in the winter of 1975-76, hundreds of wells were closed. This had a very serious impact upon the industry because it costs so much to start up production again after closure, and some wells never regained their productive potential. This was a very serious set-back.

We brought this matter to the attention of the minister of this House. The hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) and I made representations to the minister, and I must commend him for his response to them. He visited the area and Lloydminster, and saw first hand the impact that government policies were having upon this very important industry. As a result he set out to make some changes in the regulations, which in effect caused Husky Oil Ltd. and the other companies involved in the extraction of the resource to get back into the business.

At that time the minister realized the importance the heavy oil industry would have upon our over-all efforts to achieve self-reliance or self-sufficiency. I think the experience he gained there was part and parcel of the government's over-all policy to bring about the further development of this resource.

I should also say that Husky was at that time embarking upon an expansion program, a program to bring in a new refining facility. It was not as elaborate as the one talked about in recent days. However, they were initiating action on their own; it was not at the cajoling of the government or Petro-Canada.

When the minister expressed government policy, that it would encourage the further development of this resource and come up with some government programs and incentives to make it attractive, they immediately became interested in the establishment of an upgrading facility. They set out immediately to engage in discussions, consultations and negotiations with both the federal government and the provincial government of Saskatchewan, and later with Petro-Canada.

What looked like a very promising situation back in 1977 has been clouded by the foot-dragging of this minister, his inability to get the province of Saskatchewan and other interested parties together to provide the kind of leadership to back up this statement of producing a million barrels of synthetic oil a day by the year 1985 or 1990.

Having given that background, we now have to look at the best route and best method to develop this resource. We must ensure that the heavy oil which is extracted can be brought up to a specification suitable for our existing conventional refineries.

To be absolutely frank and honest, whether this resource is developed by the private sector or by a Crown corporation, it will only happen if we have a favourable climate in terms of a federal tax policy and in terms of what the provincial government and its royalty and tax structure will bring. We must bear in mind that we have to call upon the company that has proven expertise and experience and is prepared and willing to put its head on the line, so to speak, to develop this resource. In my view, Husky have pioneered the heavy oil industry. They are well prepared and have indicated a willingness to work with Occidental. Occidental expressed a willingness and, I am sure, are prepared to meet the deadlines and challenges in the development of this resource.

I urge the minister to forget his pet project, Petro-Canada, and to get on with the job of developing this resource. We need this resource. It can be used to the best advantage of all Canadians. It can be a very important element in our over-all objective of achieving that degree of self-sufficiency which we need in this country. Let Petro-Canada go into the boondocks to find some extra oil. As the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) stated, they have yet to prove that they are able to discover one barrel of oil.

Mr. Alan G. Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in this debate on a most important and interesting topic. I commend the distinguished member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), whom all members of this House will be most sad to see take his retirement at the end of this parliament. He came here originally as a younger member of parliament, I believe as long ago as 1935. That was at a time when a Liberal government was returned once again by the majority of the Canadian people after five years of rather disastrous results. After nine years here, the hon. member went on to an illustrious career as premier of his native province of Saskatchewan for a further 17 years.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Native? He was born in Scotland.

Mr. Martin: I presumed it was his native province. He returned to Ottawa as a leader of a newly labelled party and continued in that position for ten years. He spent another seven illustrious years in what I consider to be, with a little bit of bias, a most important role in this House, and that is simply a member of parliament.

I wish to deal with the second part of the hon. member's motion, which reads:

> —in order to avoid further domination and ownership of Canada's oil resources by foreign multi-national oil companies, and a continuing financial rip-off of the Canadian consumer, the development of Husky Oil Company's heavy oil resources should be undertaken by Petro-Canada in co-operation with the provinces directly affected.

We are looking at this Husky-Petro-Canada-Occidental issue of redevelopment of heavy oil when the total proven reserves of conventional oil in Canada stand at somewhere between six billion and seven billion barrels. As I understand it, that is enough to meet total Canadian needs for ten years at our present rate of consumption. That is really not very much oil.

This situation has received very critical and close attention by this government since the double whammy in 1973 when we experienced a quadrupling of world prices. There was an acknowledgement by our National Energy Board that our proven reserves were far less than what most Canadians had assumed prior to that time. Suddenly Canadians were faced with the fact that we were no longer a country with boundless reserves of oil and gas. That is the first point that has to be made, and it is an important one.

The next point is that there are still some Canadians who are understandably confused about this over-all picture. They do not really believe that there is a worldwide crisis developing in the near to immediate future in this area.

It is important to put a few figures on the record. My understanding of the world picture is that at the present time there are 646 billion barrels in place. That is being used up at the rate of 22 billion barrels a year. At most, this gives us about a 30 year supply at current consumption. That does not allow for any expansion in future.

By the turn of the century it is clear that we will have a worldwide problem on our hands. There is no point in our looking to the United States for potential support. Even at this time that country is importing 45 per cent of its needs.

What are we to do to counteract the problem? What have we done and what are we doing? First, we are moving to eliminate completely our exports of conventional crude to the United States. We are quickly moving to a point in the future where there will be no further exports. At the same time, this government has shown considerable leadership across the country in conservation measures. Canadians are subscribing to those measures more and more. They are doing everything they can both individually and collectively to keep down the further increasing demand which has been a normal factor in this country up to this time. On the one hand we are closing down exports, and on the other we are reducing demand. Both these actions have the combined effect of making a significant dent in the over-all demand for oil that ultimately becomes available to Canadians.

The next step I suggest is to look beyond the normal conventional sources to some of the more remote sources of potential oil supply. I think of the tar sands, the Beaufort Sea, the high Arctic and, of course, the heavy oils in the Lloydminster area. In the meantime, until such resources are proven we must get along as net importers to the tune of some 250,000 barrels a day. We will probably continue in a net import position for many years into the future. The question we face is how to keep imports to the minimum.

What are we talking about when we refer to heavy oils? As a layman in this subject, I understand we are talking of a very thick, tacky substance which differs as much in texture from conventional western crude as day differs from night. We are speaking of a resource which, in order to be used in a conventional way, as we wish to use it, has to undergo an incredibly expensive upgrading process after extraction from the ground, the achievement of which is in itself extremely complicated and fantastically expensive. In essence, we are dealing with a quality of oil which modern scientific development enables to be extracted and ultimately used at a price which is far out of line with any cost we have heretofore experienced in obtaining like quantities of oil from conventional sources.

The potential quantity of this oil is, indeed, impressive, so impressive that we cannot afford to ignore it in the face of the situation in which Canadians find themselves. I mentioned earlier that conventional reserves stand at between six and seven billion barrels. Heavy oils are conservatively estimated to contain 16 billion barrels and possibly as much as 20 or 25 billion barrels if we go all the way to tertiary recovery methods. At present we foresee ultimate production of anywhere up to 100,000 or 200,000 barrels per day from these various production methods. The figures I have used may be a little on the high side and be realized only in the distant future, but that is the potential.

Stated another way, the rate of production of heavy oils could ultimately cover up to 50 per cent of our current rate of imports. We are today producing in Canada some 1.4 million barrels of oil per day. Steadily decreasing resources of conventional supplies will reduce this figure to 400,000 barrels a day by 1995. By that time our over-all needs are estimated to reach two million barrels per day. Thus one can see a clear shortfall of 1.6 million barrels a day or, stated another way, we shall only be producing from conventional sources some 20 per cent at most of our over-all needs.

Therefore, unless in the next 15 years we can proceed with developments such as the tar sands, heavy oils, as well as continuing our exploration in the Beaufort Sea and the high Arctic, we shall be in a very vulnerable position at a time when world oil supplies will be shrinking in a very drastic way. There is certainly no guarantee that the problem will have been resolved by the discovery of great globs of oil from offshore.

Alternative resources are not only in themselves extremely expensive but will require dramatic lead-in periods of anywhere up to 30 or 40 years before they can be called upon to make a significant improvement in the over-all energy supply picture. What I am really saying, then, is that Canadians and the government which has duly been elected by them must show leadership in these nonconventional oil resource areas. We shall be facing very significant problems indeed if we fail to do so.

It is estimated that by 1995 some 800,000 to one million barrels per day of the then anticipated shortfall of 1.6 million barrels could be met from these new sources. In other words, if we get on with the job we could be curing some 50 per cent of the shortfall which will exist some 15 years hence. This is without giving any credit to potential discoveries in the Beaufort Sea or in the high Arctic. The reason no figures are projected in these areas is because the potential is still looked upon as simply that, and we do not have any significant proven figures available at this point.

As I have already said, we have to take action soon. The question is: how should we proceed? It is important that we waste no time in developing our heavy oil deposits. What mechanism should be utilized for this purpose? The technology is there. The heavy oil is there. How should this important new Canadian oil resource be developed and by whom? Do we really care, Mr. Speaker? These questions have to be answered.

Allow me at the outset to state my bias in this regard. I consider myself to be as good a Canadian as any other member in this House. I believe in the strength of our country now, in its strength in the future, in its ability eventually to resolve issues relating to differing regional viewpoints across our vast land mass, in our ability to resolve difficulties arising from the adoption at the national level of two official languages, and in our ability to absorb and appreciate the benefits of a multicultural make-up.

I am sure I share with other members of this House pride at being a Canadian. I am proud of my country. But this does not mean that all developments in this country must be wrapped in Canadian ownership. Had this view been adopted in 1867, we would today in all likelihood be without a transcontinental railway, perhaps even an oil and gas industry. We are a trading nation and we must never forget it. Even Venezuela, from which we get a great deal of our imported oil, is an important buyer of Canadian goods at present. The Venezuelans want to continue to trade with Canadians in the years ahead and surely will do so. It is not necessary, in order to have social value, that everything must be Canadian.

What about the following situation—a situation where already over 80 per cent of our industry is controlled by persons outside Canada, by non-Canadians? Suppose that, in addition, we are facing a crisis of grave proportions. Husky Oil Limited has, I think, proved itself to be a good corporate citizen from the time of its inception some 40 years ago when it had 19 employees. What do we do, given these other parameters I have mentioned, when the Canadian corporation or its U.S. parent wants out? Should we be hiding our heads in the sand? Should we be saying: "Oh well, important resource or not, this company wants out; it is owned by non-Canadian interests so why not let non-Canadian interests replace it as new owners? Who cares about the 80 per cent non-Canadian ownership of the industry? After all, it has been there for years, so why bother?"

Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe the people of Canada do care and have cared for some time. The difficulty, as always, is how best to overcome an ownership imbalance of the present extent. My conclusion is this: an opportunity has been provided in the present instance and, in my view, it should be pursued—not at all costs but in a reasonable and rational way that is capable of being supported by the vast majority of Canadians.

This, I suggest, is what indeed is happening. The government—not with much encouragement or help from the official opposition, I must say—has created a Crown corporation to be an arm of the people in this great industry at a critical period. We were one of the last industrial nations to do so. This Crown corporation has, most properly in my view, made a bid to take over the Husky Oil Company. The company virtually controls most of the acreage in the Lloydminster area where the heavy oil play is taking place. People in my constituency and Canadians at large would not want to see Petro-Can buy out Husky at an unreasonable price, unsupportable by the assets and potential on hand. However, I suggest most Canadians would indeed like to see Petro-Can actively involved in the takeover battle—as it seems to be developing—and not prepared to bow out at the first yelp from a giant non-Canadian counterbidder. That is what is taking place.

Personally, I hope Petro-Canada wins fairly and at a price supportable by the facts at hand. Alternatively, should the other bidder win—a non-Canadian corporation—it is my firm request to this government that before ever approving such a takeover it ensure through the mechanisms available to it and with approval from this parliament that beyond a shadow of a doubt the real interests of, and benefits to, Canadians are proved, perhaps in the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works of this House. This should be the assurance prior to any such approval being given.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to participate in this debate on the development of heavy oil reserves. I happen to share with my friend, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), representation of the city of the Lloydminster, Alberta-Saskatchewan, which is the centre, geographically at least, of the Lloydminster heavy oil fields, as they have become known.

The hon. member for Vegreville spoke earlier this afternoon in this debate. He stressed, among other things, the importance of heavy oil development to that city and to that region of Alberta and Saskatchewan which will be directly affected. In that respect, as is indeed quite often the case, I share that concern with my hon. friend. We should welcome that economic development not only for what it will do in the way of reserves of oil for the nation as a whole but also for the people and businesses in our constituencies who will be involved directly and will benefit from this development.

Today's opposition motion involves a resource which has become a great deal more newsworthy and of much more concern to all Canadians, particularly those of us who represent areas where there are oil resources. The heavy oil reserves of Canada are centred around the Lloydminster area, as has been pointed out by other speakers. I am happy to say that the governments of Saskatchewan and Alberta and the federal government, despite their different interests, responsibilities and roles, have been involved in encouraging the development of these reserves as well as the exploration which is so important to learning more about this great resource.

Various figures and statistics have been put on the record here this afternoon to indicate the scope of these reserves, and it is interesting to note how in recent years the scope and importance of those reserves have changed almost from year to year. I have here a clipping from the Edmonton Journal dated October 16, 1976. The headline reads: "Husky Oil sets Lloydminster heavy oil at 12 billion barrels". Part of the article reads as follows:

Husky Oil Ltd. says the Lloydminster heavy oil deposit . . . contains 12 billion barrels of oil or three times the amount given in earlier estimates.

I think that is noteworthy. The article goes on to discuss additional reserves and says the following:

Additional reserves can undoubtedly be found in other sands . . . Husky has interests in 1.6 million acres of the three million acre area involved in the study.

Mr. Nielson—

Mr. Nielson is the president of Husky Oil.

—said it is difficult to estimate how much of the 12 billion barrels of oil in place can be recovered because of difficulties involved in producing heavy oil.

This question was discussed by my friend, the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) who just resumed his seat. The article goes on:

The company has operated for 30 years in the Lloydminster area and has achieved 4 per cent recovery of the oil in place by conventional or primary production methods.

I think the last statement relative to the very low rate of recovery is another important aspect of this whole debate on heavy oil, whether that recovery is accomplished by Husky or any other company, privately owned, Crown owned or whatever. We need two things. We need upgrader facilities, but above all we need better and improved technology to get a greater and better recovery rate. Those two factors are very much involved in any discussion of heavy oil development.

I think it was the hon. member for Vegreville who mentioned earlier that the heavy crude reserves in the Lloydminster area were associated, up until the last four, five or six years, primarily with the construction industry. They were associated with the asphalt industry, whether for highways, parking lots or shingles. As a result it was largely a seasonal operation and production was geared to market demands which were pretty well localized. If we check the figures for production by Husky and other producers of heavy oil in the Lloydminster area over the years, we find that production gradually climbed to accommodate that market until 1973 when the importance of any reserve of oil became much more pronounced. The picture had changed dramatically. I suppose it also changed with the development of sour crude or heavy crude refineries to handle that kind of crude oil. Incidentally, these refineries were not located in Canada and still are not located in Canada. They have been in existence to date only in the United States of America.

That is some of the background which forms the basis for the current importance we place on these reserves and on our search to become more energy self-sufficient. As we look down the road and as we listen to the figures in this debate it becomes obvious to anyone that it is important that this country get on with developing the heavy oil reserves located in the Alberta-Saskatchewan border area.

The politics of oil in recent years have certainly been well known to all of us. I suggest that has been in a direct way because of the dramatic price increases with which we as individuals and industries have been faced in this country and in others which have been directly affected by the dramatic increase following the formation of the OPEC cartel. Mr. Speaker, I see that you are ready to call it six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. McIsaac: Mr. Speaker, just before we adjourned for supper at six o'clock I spent a moment or two emphasizing the importance, not only to all of Canada but to my part of Saskatchewan and that part of the province represented by my hon. friend who participated in the debate this afternoon, the hon. member for Vegreville, of the development of heavy oil. I commented on the size of the reserves and on other factors affecting their development. In that respect, a pamphlet referred to by the minister in his remarks earlier this afternoon entitled "Oil Sands and Heavy Oils: The Prospects", contains a paragraph on page 14 which, I think, sums up very well the whole picture of the heavy oil reserves in the Lloydminster area. It reads:

The range of estimates of recoverable oil could therefore give rise to ultimate total production from Lloydminster-type heavy-oil tertiary recovery projects ranging from 100,000 barrels per day to as much as 300,000 barrels per day or more. As mentioned, such development may take a decade or longer to achieve—

So we are not speaking about something that is likely to happen tomorrow or next week. It reads that that development——will depend heavily upon the continued successful development and application of tertiary recovery methods and will require the establishment of an economic environment receptive to enhanced recovery projects . . . an essential part of such an environment.

That, more or less, sums up the potential and the possibilities for Canada of that reserve.

Going back to the time of the OPEC crisis which brought all of us in Canada to take a second look, and indeed more than a second look, at the energy picture in this country, I think it was about that time when those of us not directly involved in the oil industry suddenly came to realize that we in Canada were not floating on a sea of oil, a conviction which was generally and widely held by Canadians. I am not sure it is fair to say this but perhaps this was encouraged by governments and by the oil companies themselves. That conviction was certainly shattered for us as we became more aware of the real facts and figures with respect to our oil reserves.

I say "real facts" with full knowledge that real facts are somewhat difficult to come by and to translate in that sense. It is one thing to speak about potential reserves, recoverable reserves, proven reserves, and so on, and these terms in themselves were not that familiar, I am sure, to many of us. Perhaps they lulled us into believing that we thought we had ample reserves here in the country, that we did not need to import oil, and therefore we were sitting pretty, happy with a good and cheap source of oil. But we suddenly realized at about that time that we were not self-sufficient as a nation. We also came to realize that some of the great reserves we have here in Canada are still unproven, particularly in the case of the northern and the Arctic reserves, and that they are very costly to develop, and we have had Syncrude and the tar sands efforts to prove it. In this motion we are discussing the possibility and the potentiality of heavy oil development.

Again at that time we had it brought home to us that these energy reserves were almost entirely foreign owned by the same companies which were active in the Middle East and the North Sea and other areas around the world. As has been pointed out in the debate this afternoon, governments are in the oil business in almost every oil-producing country, and they are in it today more so than ever before.

To listen this afternoon to some of my friends from the Conservative party taking part in the debate one would think that Canada had the monopoly on a new or innovative idea or project to legislate into existence a Crown-owned resource company now known as Petro-Canada. In this particular case we were not leading the pack. Instead, as a nation we are trailing the pack in so far as the oil-producing countries of the world are concerned.

The concept of Petro-Canada is not new. Certainly it has my support. I do not share the concern of some hon. members opposite that this agency must be in conflict with the private sector in oil. The private sector must be maintained and encouraged. There is ample room for both. At this time Canada requires both the publicly owned Petro-Canada on the one hand and the private sector on the other. Much of the conflict is in the minds of some members opposite.

In 1973, 1974 and 1975 the Canadian oil industry faced some adjustments which were unique to Canada because of its federal nature. The oil industry spokesmen were quite vocal in their criticism, much of which was justified.

As a result of the dramatic rise in the world price, a see-saw developed between the federal and provincial governments over the windfall margins. One can sympathize with the oil companies which operated during the period when governments at both levels re-examined their interests in oil development, whether it be in the form of royalties, income taxes or other regulations pertaining to oil policies. One's sympathies must be tempered to some degree by the healthy balance sheets which continued to appear in the year-end reports of oil companies. The oil companies came out of that tug-of-war fairly well. Exploration activities in Alberta and Saskatchewan have increased dramatically. The results have been good. Over the last number of months the stock market has been good evidence of that recovery as well.

The motion before the House is in two parts. The first part asks for new resource developments in Canada to be majority Canadian controlled. I am sure that principle is supported by all parties in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McIsaac: I have enough respect for Canadian oil companies to believe that they can do the job. We have no guarantee that development will occur otherwise. It will occur only, outside of Canadian ownership and involvement, if such development in Canada fits within the over-all, worldwide scheme of things. I am sure the plans of large oil companies are changed quite often on the basis of good businesslike decisions, rather than anything the government or the country does. That does not serve the interests of Canada in becoming self-sufficient, nor does it keep our priorities in order.

Some members of the Conservative party indicated that Petro-Can should not develop Canadian heavy oil. Others in the past have indicated that they would scrap and abolish that company. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) implied that Husky, which has a very large stake in Canadian heavy oil, has been prevented by the government from developing those great stocks and reserves. Husky has not done badly by the federal government or the two provinces involved. The management of Husky Oil has not made such charges against the government. Husky has been in Saskatchewan and Alberta for many years. It has had discussions with Petro-Can and others over recent months regarding the possibility of sale or partnerships. It is not necessary to recount the recent offers and activities in that sense; the papers have performed an adequate job in that regard. The business section of today's Globe and Mail carried several articles containing a good deal of background elaboration on these proposals.

Hon. members of the Conservative party asked how much oil Petro-Can has discovered. The question is a good one but it is not relevant to this debate. In so far as heavy oil is concerned, it is not a question of discovery; it is a question of recovery.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIsaac: Heavy oil reserves exist. It is a question of getting a greater percentage of those reserves to the surface. It has been estimated that approximately 16 billion barrels of oil are under the 1.6 million acres which Husky Oil controls. Primary recovery of heavy oil is very low; it is 4 per cent to 6 per cent, and perhaps up to 10 per cent. Improved recovery technology is an important factor in this debate. It must proceed and go hand in hand with building an upgrader.

For Canadians to utilize the energy reserves of heavy oil, two things must happen. We need an upgrader plant or facility to handle the heavy oil, and we need improved technology for tertiary recovery of the raw resource so that we can feed oil stock into it. The federal government and the provincial government of Saskatchewan signed a $16 million agreement to stimulate research in this area. As I understand it, Husky Oil submitted an application which was later withdrawn for unknown reasons. Other small oil companies in the area have initiated programs to move in this direction.

The federal government must do all it can to ensure that heavy oil development takes place as soon as possible in the interests of this country. As a beginning step, the government can deal very quickly with the purchase bid by Occidental. FIRA should be able to determine, without any great lengthy study, that Occidental may have a pretty hefty cheque book but has no expertise in the heavy oil development field. Husky Oil has such expertise. According to telephone calls which I received, Petro-Can has some expertise and is acquiring more. So that expertise is available in the country.

The second part of the hon. member's motion indicates that Petro-Canada should develop Husky Oil's heavy oil reserves together with Alberta and Saskatchewan. In principle I support that, if Husky Oil does not show more determination to put forth the required initiative and drive to bring about that development than it has. I have no objection to private Canadian oil interests being involved as partners. In fact, I welcome that. When the private sector cannot or does not, for whatever reason—and there may be good reason from their point of view—develop Canadian resources in accord with the expressed national interests of this country, the question is, what is our next step?

I suggest that Husky has, indeed, had ample time to make its intentions known. I agree Husky has been negotiating, but it is my view that the company has not been sufficiently forthright in telling any level of government what its firm intention is. That is my view as an observer; I am not thoroughly acquainted with the oil industry. I just suggest that we should not wait years or even months, but perhaps a few weeks, before asking Petro-Can to continue to get on with the job, hopefully in co-operation with the private sector and provincial governments.

In that regard I want to commend the minister for his interest and the efforts he has made to bring about heavy oil development. The minister announced a $16.4 million program a year or two ago. Every budget in the last three or four years has contained steps and measures devised to encourage and bring about oil exploration and development. The most recent budget that came down, the one we are continuing to debate in the House, contains special measures for the development of heavy oil reserves in western Canada. I welcome these changes, but would ask how much more we have to do before that development takes place, or how much longer we have to wait for Husky Oil to announce its intention to proceed with the development—because, indeed, Husky Oil is a key player in this particular field.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my colleagues for allowing the additional time.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to take part in the debate on the motion of my colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). This motion relates to an issue that directly affects the province of Saskatchewan and the province of Alberta, as well as the entire country.

I listened this afternoon to my friends and colleagues in the Conservative caucus making statements to the effect that Petro-Can should be disbanded and that the whole development of heavy crude oil in the Lloydminster area of Saskatchewan and Alberta should be left in the hands of private Canadian investors and companies. The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) made reference to two Canadian consortiums which were prepared to make offers to Husky. I have a question that I hope some members in the official opposition will answer. Where the hell were those private Canadian investors and companies in the past when we needed them and where are they now that we need them again?

In fact, who are those two alleged Canadian consortiums? I am satisfied that a Liberal private enterprise government would not go to the length of having Petro-Can bid for Husky unless all other opportunities and sources had been exhausted. It would be the last, along with the official opposition, to get into some kind of public ownership in the petroleum industry. Surely it is obvious that the so-called Canadian entrepreneurs, private investors and companies in the petroleum industry have let us and Canada as a whole down.

The official opposition condemns Crown corporations because of the "incompetence" of Crown corporations. I notice members of that party go to great lengths in condemning Crown corporations that have usually been established and operated under the Liberals and Conservatives. The question is not so much one of whether the operation is private or public, but rather how well the operation is run and who are the people running it.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre complains about our tax laws. As a result of talking to relatives, friends and other people in the petroleum industry on the telephone in the last day or two, as well as over the years since 1947, I am convinced that since the Leduc discovery Canadian companies and Canadian investors, no matter what the ills associated with our tax laws, have done very well thank you. But that is not a sufficient excuse for an alleged Canadian consortium or company letting us down.

When it gets to the point where a private enterprise Liberal government is encouraging and assisting a Crown corporation such as Petro-Can in making bids for shares of the Husky Oil Company, this tells us something about the private sector in Canada, the petroleum industry. What is even more important is a consideration of the outfit that is bidding for Husky shares in competition with Petro-Can. I talked with a knowledgeable person today from the oil industry in Western Canada whose opinion of Occidental can be given as follows: It does not have a lot to offer; it is primarily a gas company; it does not have any particular skills in heavy crude production or refining and will rely on Husky for that expertise; and it has done no research and development in respect of upgrading or refining of heavy crude oil.

What is also interesting is that in the deal Occidental is offering Husky it is not putting up much, if any, money. It is offering a straight trade-off of shares. I am sure the management or board of directors of Occidental are not stupid. They are offering to buy Husky through a trade-off of shares with no expenditure of money. They are doing this because they think there are some bucks to be made out of it, and for no other reason. I do not want anybody in this House to suggest to me that Occidental is making this offer in competition with a Canadian Crown corporation because management of that company has some particular worry or fear about the welfare and good order of Canadian energy supplies or the development of Canadian crude oil.

I wish the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), or his government, had made it plain some two or three weeks ago that, no matter what Occidental bids, it will not be allowed in here. I wish the minister had said: "We neither need them nor want them, and certainly in view of what that company is offering, we certainly do not need them".

There are some 2.1 million acres in the heavy crude area of Lloydminster presently held by various companies. Husky Oil holds about 1.6 million acres, 70 per cent being on the Saskatchewan side of the border and 30 per cent on the Alberta side. A few other companies hold a small number of acres each, including Murphy Oil, Mobil Oil, Imperial Oil and Petro-Can. Petro-Can bought a few acres not long ago, and Saskoil holds a few acres as well. They do not count for much separately. Husky holds the major portion of the area.

At the present time about 50,000 barrels of heavy crude are being produced for which there is a market. The hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) and the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) mentioned this. It is used for asphalt and asphalt shingles. It is actually an assured market. Even when Husky proposed late last year an upgrading and refining capacity of up to 100,000 barrels a day, during discussion with the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan and the federal authorities the idea all of a sudden dried up. Husky chickened out; cut and ran.

There is good reason for that. What is commonly not known is that Husky Oil does not have the needed cash flow. They do not have the muscle or the borrowing capacity to move in; otherwise they would not be considering offers from Petro-Canada, Occidental or anyone else. Husky Oil is not noted in the industry for research and development, expansion or further development of heavy crude production. They have simply been sitting on it. This may be good for the Nielson boys and the present shareholders of Husky, but I submit it is not very good for the people of Canada, or the self-sufficiency of this country which members on all sides of the House have been talking about.

From the Saskatchewan point of view, where most of this acreage is, the Husky holdings should remain in Canadian hands. From a developmental point of view, if it remains in Canadian hands the pace of development will be in the hands of the federal government and the two provinces concerned. If it is in American hands, however, how much incentive will those two provinces and the national government have to give them to get a good pace of development? The pace of production and development must be set at a rate which we think is best for Canada. If the ownership and control of that acreage and that production remains in American hands, we will have to pay more in order to get a pace of development in production which will suit our needs and our requirements.

For Canada to have that development, whether it is in production of heavy crude or the construction of pilot projects, and upgrading capacities of heavy crude, we must have the control to set a pace which we think is best for us and best to further Canadian self-sufficiency. Husky has refused to move. Of course, they were pioneers in the heavy crude business, and they were in it at the beginning. I gave them credit for that and for being smart in amassing a large acreage of land. But they do not have a large cash flow and they have had small growth because they have been more interested in truck stops and service stations than in research and development in the production of heavy crude. They have made no breakthrough in the area of development and their research has been minimal.

Mr. Bawden: Who has?

Mr. Benjamin: None of the private sector has, Mr. Speaker. It is only now that a so-called free enterprise Liberal government has realized that the private sector, both Canadian and American, have let the country down. There have been no breakthroughs on development. There has been insufficient money from Husky to do it, and everybody in the oil industry, the two provincial governments and the national government darn well know that. The final criticism of Husky, while they were sitting on their fat acreage, is that they themselves have not developed much expertise in the upgrading of heavy crude oil. They have been sitting waiting for windfalls since 1973, and they landed one when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the government allowed their own creature, Petro-Canada, to be bounced back and forth between Husky and Occidental in a crap game which has increased the value of Husky shares far out of proportion to their real worth on the open market.

My hon. friend the member for Calgary Centre was talking before supper about the Canadian taxpayer paying for Petro-Canada. He failed to mention that Canadian consumers have paid for all the profits and the expenses, including operational and development costs. The Canadian consumers by buying heating oil or by buying gas at the pumps have paid the entire bill, so I do not want to hear any more nonsense about the private enterprise entrepreneur who took all the so-called risks. Any of them who lost money recovered it one way or another, whether it was through tax losses or profits made in some other operation. The Canadian consumer, not the Canadian taxpayer, whether or not they paid income taxes or corporation taxes, paid for and continue to pay for all the developmental costs.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has allowed a company owned by the people of Canada to be put into a position of having to fork over $200 million or $250 million because Occidental has got in the game. They would not know a barrel of heavy crude if it hit them in the face. This is not leadership, Mr. Speaker. This is not exercising sovereignty or nationhood. We neither earn nor deserve respect from other governments or, more particularly, from foreign-owned corporations that know they can play games with weak-kneed, lily-livered, nervous-Nelly governments. This government wants to be a little public and a little private, and they cannot make up their minds which one.

I can say for the Tories that at least you know where they stand, Mr. Speaker. As far as they are concerned, Occidental Oil is welcome to come up here; Occidental Oil can have a deal which would make you and I look brilliant, if we could have an operation like that. Occidental has proposed a scheme which says that the Saskatchewan and Alberta governments can put up $200 million or $300 million apiece on the one hand, and Petro-Canada can put up $400 million to $600 million. It works out to approximately one-third each, one-third for the two provinces, one-third for Petro-Canada and the other third for Occidental.

Let us look at what Occidental wants back for their investments. This, Mr. Speaker, is what you would call real private enterprise. Occidental would continue to retain all the rights for the primary and secondary production in heavy crude in the acreage which they have developed, which is only approximately 280,000 acres. They have about one million other acres yet to drill in. Occidental would also retain all the conventional rights. Occidental is not interested in keeping the rights of the highly expensive tertiary recovery system but they would retain everything else.

I do not know if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is high-handed or easily taken, but with a deal such as that it is no wonder Occidental is offering to trade shares with Husky at $2 or $3 a share more than what Petro-Canada is bidding. In fact, if the minister rose in his place, or preferably the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and made it known publicly that no matter what Occidental does they will not be approved to operate in this country, they would save the investors of Canada.

An hon. Member: They are already here.

Mr. Benjamin: They are not here in heavy crude, and the government could put a stop to them tomorrow. In fact, they could turn Husky into a whimpering poodle overnight, if you will pardon the expression.

Mr. Bawden: Like you did during the minority government.

Mr. Benjamin: Petro-Canada's original purpose was to give the public a right to share in the oil industry growth in Canada. The governments of Canada, both Conservative and Liberal, since 1947 have provided all kinds of opportunities for the Canadian private sector, the so-called Canadian entrepreneur, the so-called Canadian company or consortium. It is no wonder the Americans are laughing at us all the way to the bank. Those same Canadian entrepreneurs have let us down. If they are not prepared to do the job they should get out of the way and let the people of Canada do it.

This whole business between Husky Oil Ltd. and Occidental is another CPR wreck. There is nothing new about this kind of profit-taking—not honest profit-making, but profit-taking. Yet the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources sits there on his fat acreage and fails to ask the government to give some leadership.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that the government of Saskatchewan and Saskoil are prepared to co-operate and to help. But we are not going to be party to a crap game in which a United States corporation can hold a Canadian corporation to ransom. The government have neglected to carry out their promise; they have neglected to carry out a part of the mandate on which they were elected in 1974.

I hope this government will remember why they created Petro-Canada in the first place. Both Petro-Can and the cabinet have agreed that rapid development of the heavy oil deposits around Lloydminster is a national priority, yet they sit around and let an outfit like Occidental mess it up, a company that has no expertise in heavy oil and which is not putting up any money for Husky Oil Ltd.

The minister has allowed Petro-Can to be put in the position where to outbid Occidental will cost another $200 million or $250 million. The Petro-Can bid for control of Husky was made about a year after Husky had made proposals to develop heavy oil deposits on its own or in a joint venture of private and public capital. Husky could not possibly succeed because it had such a small cash flow and did not have financial muscle. What alternatives did the government have? No matter what party was in power—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House today gives us an opportunity to discuss a matter which divides and shows up the difference between political parties in this House. This motion is an example of the doctrinaire policy of the NDP. Socialism in the development of this country's resources of this country, whether it be at the start through a Crown company or later on through the provincial government stepping in or interfering in the potash industry, as it now exists in Saskatchewan, constitutes, as we have always claimed on the side of the opposition, interference in terms of the constitution on the part of the federal government in the development and control of the resources of the provinces.

An hon. Member: What about Pacific Western Air Lines?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): When I am discussing natural resources, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) comes up with a question dealing with the province of Alberta which has proved, once and for all, that we acquired control of an airline out west for the people of the west; but he knows nothing about the west. He is totally ignorant about conditions out there.

But I want to say that in today's debate we have a motion which is composed of two parts, and this implies not only what happened in the past, but also any new development of natural resources, because the first paragraph of the motion reads, and I quote:

(a) all major new resource developments should be majority Canadian controlled as promised by the government during the 1974 federal election campaign;

How can this be achieved? It is very simple. First of all, the federal government does not have the right to step into natural resource development, which belongs to the provinces. The NDP does not recognize this at all. For the New Democrats, whether socialism is federal or provincial does not matter. It is socialism anyway.

[English]

I have listened to these people on the political left talk about resources. It is just pitiful. Even before the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) was into short pants the Alberta oil industry was developing. He is a newcomer to this particular subject because of his age. I do not care where he comes from but he is a short pants individual.

When it came to the development of the oil industry in the province of Alberta, if we Canadians lost control of the freeholds it was because of our tax system. We have nobody to blame but ourselves. Amendments have now been made to the Income Tax Act but there is no freehold any more. The government made a great show of locking the door after the horse was stolen.

How are we to guarantee that Canadians will be in charge or have financial control of all new major developments of natural resources? Not through the doctrinaire remedy of public ownership. Public ownership has proved that it cannot get itself out of a paper bag in the development of natural resources such as oil and gas.

The proposer of today's motion is a former premier of the province of Saskatchewan. If any government was responsible for driving the explorers and developers of oil and gas resources out of the province of Saskatchewan, it was that of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what happened? The population flowed out of Saskatchewan into Alberta. We inherited valuable people from Saskatchewan. That is the way the tide turned. I recall going to high school in the late thirties before World War II. Alberta had 775,000 people, Saskatchewan had 1,250,000. What is it now? Saskatchewan can barely scrape up 900,000 people. Who drove them out? NDP administrations during the fifties drove them out. Those people came from Saskatchewan into British Columbia, and they are still coming.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They are missionaries.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We talk about the development of heavy oil on the Saskatchewan side and the Alberta side. Where do those individuals who want to invest in this development want to go? On the Alberta side of the boundary. Where is the big development in Lloydminster? It is on the Alberta side of the boundary, not under the NDP government in Saskatchewan.

We talked about Petro-Can being able to develop this oil because of expertise. Where does Petro-Can get its expertise? It is from those people who are left over from the rest of the industry. That is what they have been able to recruit. We have indicated that Petro-Can will be the first expendable Crown corporation.

Mr. Gillespie: The first to go.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It will be the first to go. I know the minister very well and I know how much he knows about the oil and gas industry. It is zilch.

Mr. Béchard: What do you know?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I was raised in the oil and gas industry. I invite the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) to come to Alberta and learn how to put it together.

[Translation]

—but I will say to the hon. member that the development of sands and oil in the Cold Lake and Lloydminster region will not survive the project considered by the government with Petro-Canada. That is infringement.

[English]

My colleague from Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) put on record this afternoon that Husky Oil has been under the greatest pressure from Petro-Can to yield the resources. Why? Because Petro-Can wants to get its foot in the door of resource development.

The power to spend by Petro-Can is backed by the government of Canada. There is an unlimited purse. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has called for a public inquiry into why the shares of Husky advanced $200 million in this bidding between Petro-Can and Occidental. Petro-Can is being taken to the top. It could be taken to $1 billion and the government would still pay. It does not have to be accountable to any shareholders. Its investment will be there.

If the federal government wants to move into the heavy oil development in the Lloydminster-Alberta-Saskatchewan boundary area, there is nothing to prevent it from a financial point of view because it has an unlimited purse, unless controlled by this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The trained seals do not know anything about the practicalities of the oil business. I have known the minister for some 30 odd years.

Mr. Béchard: They must have been odd.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I can write on the back of a dime that I have in my pocket all that he knows about the oil business.

Mr. Gillespie: Arrogance.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If we want Canadian investment to be in charge of our development, there is a very simple formula for it: amend the Income Tax Act in order to induce Canadian residents and Canadian corporations to invest. There I am being very definite—that they shall be Canadians. I will exercise all prejudice and favouritism on behalf of Canadian residents and bona fide companies. I repeeat the proposal I put forward with regard to the Alaska pipeline. We would utilize a measure within the Income Tax Act right now, the capital gains tax. It is greatly favoured. I would use it as a favourable weapon.

If there is to be an alternative to this Occidental-Petro-Can proposition, then we can organize as we did with the Alberta gas pipeline company and develop these heavy oils financed by Canadians. This can be done through the sale of shares, first of all uniquely to Canadians. This can be done on the basis that they keep expenditure within ball park—and I use the word perimeters, not parameters—on resource research and development. If the individual or company keeps the investment within the ball park for five years, there shall be a forgiveness entirely of the capital gains tax.

Mr. Rodriguez: No way. Sell out!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That includes the hon. member for Nickel Belt. If he had two nickels to rub together, he could buy into it. He might have something in his shoe.

Mr. Rodriguez: Sell out! You would sell out tomorrow if the price was right.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): After four years it would be 80 per cent, after three years 60 per cent, and so on as long as they stayed within the ball park. That would be an incentive and it is what Canadians need, not the big stick of the socialists. I hope that the financing of the Alaska pipeline, or a portion of it, will be reserved for Canadians entirely, on the basis of those in the provinces through which the pipeline passes having first crack at it and then Canadians as a whole. The people of Alberta and Saskatchewan should have this opportunity. The resources are theirs. I have not heard of the resources of Ontario or Quebec being open to the people of Alberta.

• (2102)

Mr. Rodriguez: That does not mean they should not be.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There could be ownership on a secondary basis. There are provincial governments which consider Canadians outside their provinces to be some kind of foreigners, and that is an attitude we must get rid of. God knows, we need to develop some of these resources.

However, I am not concerned about wailing Willies who say that by 1985 we shall be out of conventional oil. No way. Hon. members need only look at the last issue of "Oilweek". Let them read the figures of Canadian well completions. In 1977 there were 2,022 total completions of which 1,266 were gas wells, 224 were oil wells and 532 were dry. That is in Alberta. There were a bare 300 wells in the rest of Canada. Saskatchewan had 118 wells in 1977 to this date. Now look at the figure for the current year. In Alberta 243 oil wells have been completed besides 1,037 gas wells, for a total of 1,804. There were 524 dry wells which, incidentally, have to be paid for—they do not come off any money tree notwithstanding the New Democratic Party. In Saskatchewan 153 wells were completed, 104 of these being oil wells.

I invite hon. members to turn their attention to the rig activity. On June 7 there were 158 rigs working, 15 in Saskatchewan and 213 in the rest of Canada. Incidentally, Ontario had 20 drill rigs working; maybe that is something the hon. member does not know.

What we must do today is encourage Canadians to invest in these drilling companies, in exploration companies, in development companies and to do so by offering incentives. After all, control of the industry was assumed by the Americans by reason of incentives incorporated into the U.S. tax system—incentives which we did not enjoy. It was pitiful to see American land men moving against Canadian land men on freehold. They could always outbid them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. He may, however, continue with unanimous consent.

An hon. Member: No!

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, as usual, the opposition day dedicated to Petro-Canada, Husky Oil and the heavy oil deposits in Alberta and Saskatchewan focuses on a few features which I would like to name. First is the role of Petro-Canada in the Canadian energy picture and the socialistic imputations of the NDP demand for government take-overs. Second is the ability of FIRA to determine a foreign take-over bid in terms of being likely to help Canada, and third is the suggestion in the motion that we should make sure

50 per cent or 60 per cent of the capital in all the take-overs or branch plants here is Canadian. Finally, there is the whole question of a branch plant economy in Canada.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) gave an excellent speech today. He fears the eventual economic absorption of Canada by the United States of America. Like many of us on both sides of the House, he wants to see this country's natural resources completely under Canadian control. Everybody would like to see that if possible. But to underline, as he did, that the oil companies get 95 per cent of equity, sales and profits is to tell only half the story. Mr. Speaker, the provincial and federal governments get a great deal more out of a barrel of oil produced in Canada than do the oil companies.

This, of course, is due to taxes and royalties. After all, income tax is charged against Canadian-owned and United States-owned branch plants alike. Then, of course, the branch plant pays income tax again to its own government. There is an implied criticism of the government for not ensuring that the 50 per cent or 60 per cent investment clause is enforced. Mr. Speaker, investments made by Canadians are free to go anywhere. There is no mandatory requirement for investment to be made only in Canadian securities and companies. In fact, to recall all our foreign investment and to force all Canadian capital into Canadian enterprises could only be done by an authoritarian or Marxist government. What is more, it would limit and cramp the flow of capital and affect international interdependence and our foreign trade balance. In a short time we would be financially worse off.

As the minister said in his speech today, Canada has 14 principles for the guidance of foreign companies operating in Canada. Two of them require the companies to operate in Canada's interests, and to enable Canadians to buy into such companies because private capital was not in great enough supply to ensure sufficient Canadian representation. For that reason Petro-Canada was given certain exploration rights and opportunities to buy into firms where only a minimum amount of Canadian money had been subscribed.

Despite the charge by many nationalists that Canada is only a branch plant economy, we still do very well in our foreign trade balance. It was said recently by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) in this House:

> Canada has shown a positive trade balance for the last 17 consecutive months whereas in the U.S.A., which invests heavily in Canada, the foreign trade balance has been adverse for 32 months.

That is almost twice as long as Canada's favourable balance has lasted. So I suppose if we were a socialist state—and I hope to goodness we never are—we would take over or nationalize foreign companies in Canada just as is done in Venezuela or Saudi Arabia. Those are not socialistic states, of course; they are authoritarian. We could even demand that branch plants, after a period of time, be given the right by their foreign parent to compete for domestic, United States and foreign markets and, equally, initiate their own research and development. I believe that eventually this would be a good policy to adopt.

I would very much like to see all branch plants doing their own research and development eventually, but that would be Utopia. It is, though, a possible target to bear in mind. The fear that Occidental would not operate in Canada's best interests seems to me to be unfounded because the American capital and profits would have brought much revenue to provincial and federal governments.

The concept of Petro-Canada must be much better understood than it is. The corporation was created for more than one reason. At the time of its inception exploration for oil and gas, which is almost completely in private hands, had begun to wind down. Drilling rigs were moving to Venezuela, the Gulf of Mexico or to the North Sea. Canada was importing several hundred thousand barrels of oil daily at an almost quadrupled world price. The prospect of serious energy shortages in the 1980s emphasized the need for energetic exploration and development of our oil and gas resources on the prairies, in the Arctic and offshore on our eastern continental shelf. In other words, Canada needed to become self-reliant, if not self-sufficient, in energy. It goes without saying that our oil, gas and coal, which are present in large quantity, must all be developed before renewable energy resources come on stream because of the time lag in their technical application.

I would like to refer to a speech made by the Hon. Donald Macdonald on March 12, 1975. In that speech he said:

> The best way to secure a Canadian presence, a rate of development consistent with our national interest, a proper share of the income generated by such activity and full access to new technology, is by a direct government involvement in key ventures through a corporation which can develop the necessary expertise. Our national petroleum company would then be in a position to act as a catalyst for succeeding projects, assisting in their planning and financing as well as participating ultimately in their revenues.

Part of our national energy policy is to keep costs to the consumer fairly equal from east to west and also to keep the Canadian price below the world price. It cannot be too far below or our income from taxes, royalties and duties will not allow the revenue from our own resources to ensure continued exploration and development in our costly Canadian geographical position.

The "rip-off" argument, which is that we are determined to raise Canadian oil prices on July 1 in spite of the freeze by OPEC, is not substantiated. Our Canadian crude oil price will still be $2.50 below the world price, even with the increase of $1 a barrel. We will still be well below Washington, London and Paris in our cost of heating oil. Even if the price of our gas is not lower than the U.S. price, it is about the same, and at least our supply will continue for a much longer time, while the future for American gas consumers is rather uncertain.

So it has been Petro-Canada's strategy to become interested in diverse fossil fuels. There are huge deposits of coal present in Nova Scotia, B.C., Alberta, Saskatchewan and also in the Arctic, for instance, on Baffin Island. A major intention is to develop coal as a substitute for imported oil—many oil companies are diversifying like that—or as a supplement or to assist as a fuel in extracting more oil from both the heavy oil deposits and the tar sands themselves. Eventually coal will offer great potential for electricity generation. Many new technologies are becoming practical, and combinations of coal powder and oil may soon be in use. Eventually coal may be liquefied and produce methanol and low Btu gasification.

Right now Petro-Canada is taking a leading role in evaluating our northern oil and gas reserve potential. By far the largest proportion of the country's oil and gas resources is in the far north. This becomes one of the most important tasks now laid on the shoulders of this national oil company. By 1990, 45 billion 1975 dollars will have to be spent on exploration and development in our frontier region. The role of Petro-Canada is very important. It is easy for many of us on both sides of the House to understand this frontier exploration and its importance because the Standing Committee of National Resources and Public Works toured the tar sands, the Mackenzie Delta, the high Arctic and Alaska. It was a very memorable trip which contributed greatly to our understanding. There is now increased interest on the part of the Canadian people in our frontier resources.

Recently Petro-Canada became interested in coal as well as oil and gas because of significant discoveries. There is now the promise of significant fossil fuels offshore in the Greenland-Labrador-Newfoundland triangle as well as on the Grand Banks, the Scotia Shelf and in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Without the leadership and intense effort exhibited by Petro-Canada, these resources might lie dormant and unexplored for many years.

This agency is not entirely profit-motivated. Although it is happy to increase its earned income, it is principally a government corporation bent on finding fuel reserves of many kinds which will insulate us from future early disappearance of our national energy self-reliance, and it will provide catalytic action in technology for refining and supply.

Finally, we on the government side are intensely interested in the orderly development of our fossil fuel reserves. We intend to use Petro-Canada to fulfil its function in petroleum supply, in exploration of our frontiers and in development of the very unique technology required so that we can use our gas, oil and coal properly. These fuels are in abundant supply. All that is needed is leadership. This, I can truly say, is being provided by this government and its energy agent, Petro-Canada.

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, we have heard many statements tonight, including statements from hon. members to my left, and one of the things about the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) which struck me, was his statement that Canada has done many great things in the past. There is no doubt that Canadians have done much in the past of which they can be proud, but I think it goes almost without question that the things which have been done by Canadians in the past have been done by the private sector. They have been done by free enterprise. It was the private sector which built this country.

I do not think any of us can point with pride to anything which the Government of Canada has been involved in, created or is presently involved in. We only have to look at Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. What a sorry example! If the government would concentrate on delivering the mail, it probably would be taxing its abilities, and that has been proved.

We are discussing the question of foreign ownership of petroleum reserves in Canada. Surely it is better to have reserves in Canada which are foreign owned, if necessary, than to import foreign owned crude from other lands where supply is not secure. Surely it would be better to have crude oil produced by Occidental Petroleum, Exxon, or any other company, for that matter, coming from Alberta wells than crude oil coming from those same companies in Libya or the Middle East. Heavy capital needs are a fact of life in the petroleum industry, and in my view it is immaterial who owns the reserves. The vital question is not whether a company is French, Canadian or American. The vital question is whether we have supplies of oil for Canada's future. Because I do not think for one minute that even a member of the NDP would turn down a barrel of oil, if that is what is required to heat his home, or a cubic foot of gas just because it carried the label of an American company. When it gets right down to supply, even members of the NDP would be just as anxious to have a foreign label as a Canadian label. I do not give a damn, and I do not think Canadians should, about who owns the oil. I think the crux of the matter is whether we have it.

In spite of that, I do not think there is any question, and Canadians have always said they want to own as much of their own oil as they can. That was well stated by my hon. colleague who spoke last. However, the tax laws of Canada have prevented Canadians from owning this important resource. Only recently and at the urging of this party did the government finally cave in and make rules to encourage Canadian capital. That was a little late, and that is the reason we now face the fact that a large percentage of our crude oil is owned by foreign companies.

We also heard from the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands that we have only a ten-year supply. If the matter of future supply is so critical, it seems to me that if Canadians were given incentives and had the good sense to go out and explore for oil, they could provide supplies for beyond 10 or 15 years at a time when present supplies are dwindling seriously.

Another statement made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands was that Canada's oil reserves are not in the control of Canadians. There is no other industry in Canada that is more controlled than the oil and gas industry. The producing rate is controlled by the provincial governments; the price is controlled by the federal government; there is presently an export tax—the federal government takes the difference between the world price and the fixed Canadian price; the royalties are set and collected by provincial governments; income tax, through depletion allowances and tax rates, is collected by the federal government. Also transportation tariffs are set by the federal government; pipeline construction routes and approvals are dictated by the federal government; companies under the new petroleum monitoring act, which this minister is trying to have passed, will have to report to the government on what they did with their income and they will have to prove that it was spent on finding new reserves; the sales tax on gasoline is payable to the federal government and to the provincial governments on gasoline that is sold, and this amounts to something in the order of $5 a barrel; and finally, it is the right of this government to determine through the Foreign Investment Review Board whether the reserves or shares of a company may be sold to those outside of Canada. So there is no question that Canada controls its oil and gas. It always has and there is no reason to think this is going to change.

When it comes to the rewards for oil and gas that is produced—and this was stated in a report put out by the Canada West Foundation Study—taxes and payments to all levels of government now represent approximately 70 per cent of the mineral resource industry's pretax profits, compared to 53 per cent five years ago. Any oil man with good sense who owns all the land and has all the royalty rights would much prefer to farm out his land to someone who would put up the risk dollars and give to that owner 30 per cent. I can tell the House that that is a very good deal for investors, and it is on the basis of the government not putting up risk moneys but just sitting back and collecting what is its due under our terms. Incidentally, this is comparable with or perhaps better for Canada than the situation in most countries where foreign oil companies go to search for oil and gas.

Let us look at the specifics of the motion, which states that the development of Husky Oil Company's heavy oil resources should be undertaken by Petro-Canada in co-operation with the provinces directly affected. In the past—and I guess it will be the same in the future—when socialists have seen something big which worked, they wanted to nationalize it. I have heard a lot said about Husky Oil tonight. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) made many serious allegations about a company which would be regarded by most as a good company and a good corporate Canadian citizen. When I arrived in the city of Edmonton from the Peace River country in 1952, Husky was one of the big names in heavy oil development at that time. They were drilling wells, they were building rigs, they were getting their refinery going, and that was 25 years ago. Since then others have come into the picture, but this company has pioneered in heavy oil development. They just happened to have the foresight or the luck to be today in the right place at the right time.

The minister is blaming energy shortfalls on all kinds of things, but the fact of the matter is that it is his responsibility. This government has done more to inhibit oil and gas exploration in recent years than any other factor in the realities of the Canadian oil and gas industry. More momentum has been lost and more rigs have been moved out.

The setbacks caused by the two or three years of confrontation which was provoked by this government have been a big factor in lost reserves. The momentum has now returned, but I can tell hon. members that the losses experienced in those three or four years will never be regained. The Husky poker game is just another factor that has caused loss of confidence among investors in the Canadian oil and gas industry. Maybe it is the government's policy not to want Americans to invest in our oil and gas industry. Or that may be the policy of the NDP. But if Canadians do not have enough capital or resources to develop our reserves, I say we should invite foreign capital to assist and participate in this with us.

However, the government is trying to solve through its instrument, Petro-Canada, a problem that it has created itself. The government seems to go around creating problems so it will have something to solve. If we look at the problem which faces the Husky Oil Company, we find that it is a pretty serious one. The government is concerned because Husky Oil is not moving fast enough; but in every business plan and in every equation you must have all the squares and all the lines filled in, and there is a big X in the equation of anyone who wants to build an oil plant and extract heavy oil or, as in the case of Husky, build an upgrading plant.

This big X results from a number of considerations. The first is uncertainty of market. There is no guarantee of market. This is something for which these companies have been asking for some time. There is no certainty of price. These companies have sought the world price because everything is founded on that price so the capital investment can be made and the return on the investment realized. There is no royalty regime in the provinces of Saskatchewan or Alberta. How could anybody build a plant and plan to produce oil at very great cost and with heavy capital investment if they do not even know what the royalty will be? Presumably the federal initiatives in one of the Turner budgets which made royalties paid to the provinces non-deductible as an expense—in other words, companies paid tax on something they did not get—is still a matter that has never been resolved. When it comes down to financing a plant, it is not simply a question of whether the company wants to puts its money into the project but rather whether the bankers want to put their money into it. This is not dictated simply by oil company executives or by boards of directors, but by bankers. Nevertheless, governments are the problem—no royalties, no rules, no price.

I suggest that no other company could have put this together. Husky Oil Company is probably the most prominent in making frequent visits to this city and in dialoguing with members of the House in its attempts to keep us abreast of what is going on and what their problems are. I suggest, quite differently from my colleagues in the NDP, that Husky has been a good citizen, and I am very surprised to hear the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre say that they are too small a company to carry out this project. Certainly it is a big project and I suppose that what the NDP expects is bigness; but I think it is important in our country that small Canadian companies carry out and finance these projects. We are not all for bigness. Our small companies must also be able to do this.

Now we come right down to the question of solutions. I say that it is the minister who has failed to give us the solutions, and it is the minister who should have brought the parties to the table to sort these problems out. He should have brought the companies, the provinces, the federal government and, if necessary, Petro-Canada to the table to solve this problem, not have a confrontation.

A purchase by Petro-Canada achieves nothing except the fact that some $300 million to $500 million will go out of Canada at a time when our exchange rate is low. When the former minister of energy, mines and resources introduced his bill, he said, as reported in Hansard for March 12, 1975:

> This bill is a most important element in the government's long term planning to secure adequate supplies of energy to meet our national needs. It is firmly rooted in the basic objectives of our energy and resource policies which are, to ensure for Canadians adequate and reliable supplies at reasonable prices—

Most people knowledgeable in the industry say that the way to achieve reasonable prices is to have some experts, some keen minds, figuring out where to drill and how to get this oil out of the ground, not to buy oil. Purchasing oil from others results in high cost oil. Those who took the risk and found oil obviously want more money. This does not seem to be included in what Petro-Can was originally asked to do. However, the emphasis by the minister and the government at that time was on future supply of oil and gas. This transaction, which involves a very large amount of money, does not find or produce for Canadians one single barrel of oil.

Perhaps an additional offer will be made by a Canadian company for the shares of Husky. We will have to wait and see. In the meantime, I propose that the government should urge the partnership of Occidental and Husky to come before the Foreign Investment Review Board so they can put forward their proposal. We must see what it is. Presently it is cited as a plan of significant benefit to Canada. If it is of significant benefit to Canada, and if their proposal contains any realism, surely their plan will provide the upgrading plant, the well drilling and the facilities in order for this project to go ahead.

The oil and gas industry is founded on partnerships. Very seldom does any company go it alone. The reason for partnerships is that the capital amounts required are too large. Even Petro-Canada cannot go these things alone. Since billions of dollars are needed, the solution is partnership. Perhaps Petro-Canada has a role to play. It has an interest, and it has capital. As has been said, this company, Husky, is a small one. One of the objectives of Petro-Canada was to assist smaller companies in participating in these things. Here is their chance.

The minister should come forward, take the lead and take the initiative to bring the provinces to the bargaining table. The royalties must be sorted out. Petro-Canada cannot sort out the royalty problems of the provinces any better than Husky can. Petro-Canada is the catalyst to make all this happen. I hope we hear from the minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) soon. The time is now. The lead time is long and our time is short. We will run out of oil in the 1980's. The absence of leadership and horrendous internal battles accomplish nothing. These battles direct the energies of people toward infighting in Canada, rather than getting on with the job of finding and producing the oil we need.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this debate tonight. I am glad my chance has come after listening to the oil lobby.

I was somewhat confused today when I heard the contributions of hon. members of the Conservative party. The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) said that there are two Canadian consortiums waiting to develop the Husky project. Where are they? Where have they been? I suspect they are like Moses, hiding in the bulrushes.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) said that when the Tories come to power they will disband Petro-Canada. The same thing was said by the hon. member for Calgary Centre. The hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden) said that Petro-Canada should be put into the picture. These stories have more positions than the Happy Hooker. I cannot keep up with them.

An hon. Member: Did you read the book?

Mr. Rodriguez: My book was autographed. Earlier this afternoon the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) indicated that past governments have created the problem. He ought to know. He was the minister of mines and resources for Ontario over a long period of time. In his run for the Tory leadership he was defeated, and now he participates at the federal level. We know what he did for the nickel industry. We know the kind of deals he allowed Falconbridge to participate in. That company continued to ship raw materials to Norway for processing. We know the kinds of deals he was into. I am not surprised we are faced with this mess.

The hon. member for Edmonton West blamed Saskatchewan socialists for not being able to develop the resources of that province. Well, the socialists are still in power in Saskatchewan. It was the government of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) which said to the gas companies, "Move over, boys". It was his government which effected the delivery of gas to hundreds of rural communities. His government supplied electricity to hundreds of farms in Saskatchewan, while the private sector was indicating that it could not be done because it was unprofitable. We keep on hearing that same argument.

I was amazed when I saw the Latin inscription on the emblem for Ontario Hydro. The other day when I was at the provincial legislature, I noticed that emblem. It read as follows: "Dona Naturae Pro Populo Sunt". The translation of that is: "To the people belong the resources". I have never heard truer words spoken. Ontario Hydro is an efficient operation. It came into being because of a Tory government.

The hon. member for Edmonton West said that the Petro-Canada intervention into the Husky Oil deal is a government intervention into the private sector. When Peter the Red intervened in the airline business of Alberta and bought the controlling interest of Pacific Western Airlines, no one said that he was a socialist. We all know him as Peter the Red. He recognized a good deal when he saw one. He recognized that the interests of Albertans had to be placed over and above the narrow interest of profit.

The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham indicated that three options were available. One option was that Occidental should take over the company, which he was against. Of course, we are opposed to that idea as well. Then we proposed Petro-Canada ownership of this operation, and he did not agree with that. I am glad the Tories are on the side of the capitalistic oil companies. I am glad they are putting themselves in that spot. The hon. member indicated that there was a third alternative, that is, to get private Canadian entrepreneurs into the operation. Where have they been? Why have they not come forward and made an offer in order to become involved?

That brings me to the gutless wonder who is in the portfolio of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: If it is in the interests of Canadians, as far as Petro-Canada is concerned, for it to become involved in the heavy oil processing operation, why do they not expropriate the company at $45 a share? Somewhere down the road it will become essential for Canadians to have this oil. An investigation ought to be conducted into the mismanagement of Petro-Canada. If it was so essential for Petro-Canada to become involved, why are little handsy-pansy games being played? Why are Canadian taxpayers being taken to the cleaners? The price of a share has now escalated to $52.

• (2142)

There is a principle involved here, and I think it is that principle described in that latin inscription on the coat of arms of Ontario Hydro: Dona Naturae Pro Populo Sunt. That is the crux of the matter. The question is how we view the non-renewable resources of the country. This involves an important concept. The minister can do all the grinning and smiling he wants. We saw him smile right through the crisis of the Inco and Falconbridge layoffs.

There is a principle involved in respect of non-renewable resources and how we as Canadians view those resources. We on this side of the House happen to recognize that these non-renewable resources represent the key to sources of wealth for future generations of Canadians. In fact, how those resources are used not will determine to a large extent the way in which we are going to conduct our lives in the future.

An hon. Member: Our national heritage.

Mr. Rodriguez: There is one thing I have never failed to observe, having lived in the Sudbury basin for some 16 years, and it has followed a regular cycle. The wealth generated by those non-renewable resources in Canada is not used for the benefit of Canadians but to extend the wealth of the corporations which have exploited those resources.

It was not surprising, for example, that in 1973 when Inco made some $300 million profit after taxes it used its profit to diversify its operations. Inco bought itself a battery company in the United States, ESB. That is the nature of the capitalist system. That company could not give a damn about laying off 2,000 Canadians in the Sudbury basin. That was not the important matter. The important matter was the extension of the corporation's diversification to increase the size of its empire. That company plans with the interests of Inco and its shareholders in mind.

Let me put the same question to this government. Does it do any planning, and whose interests does it have in mind if it has any plans? This brings us back to the question surrounding non-renewable resources. It seems to me there is only one way to guarantee that the revenues derived from non-renewable resources in this country are put into developing the way of life of Canadians and providing the services for which Canadians have a need, and to which they aspire, and that is through public ownership of those non-renewable resources. There is no question in my mind whatsoever about that, Mr. Speaker.

We have also heard that the private operators, Occidental and Husky, are proposing to put up some money in partnership or in tandem. That is not their main proposal. They are prepared to put up some money and then invite the governments of Saskatchewan and Alberta to come into the operation. It seems to me that in the final analysis it is clearly the taxes of the people of Canada which are somehow drained off and used by the private sector for its risk operations.

We all heard the hon. member for Calgary Centre say he has no use at all for public investment. It seems to me I recall that when we were in that great crisis of 1973 and the private sector discovered it could get into the Syncrude operation it came to the federal government for $300 million. Did the federal government obtain any ownership in this regard? The private sector then went to the provinces of Ontario and Alberta and asked them to put up some of the money. It then turned around and said this was too big an operation for little companies and that governments should give financial support.

This is all rather strange because at that time we were being told we had to let the private sector carry out these operations because that sector has the required capital resources. At the same time I find that this government is lending through the Export Development Corporation billions of dollars to multinational corporations in order that they can extend their tentacles into places with such exotic names as Guatemala, The Philippines, Indonesia, Chile and Namibia. Surely there is ample opportunity to invest Canadian taxes in resource development to the benefit of the Canadian public.

We know that the Prime Minister went on record during the 1974 election campaign as promising that we would work toward 50 per cent, preferably 60 per cent, ownership of any new resource development in Canada. That started out as a promise in 1974. We all remember the other promises—for example, that we would have no wage controls. You remember that, Mr. Speaker, as well as the other promise that he would put public funds into the development of public transportation. He promised Toronto would get $160 million or $200 million. That election is over and it looks like we are into the fifth year of that five-year mandate, and these election promises are now forgotten. Of course, things are different now. The former Conservative member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) has crossed the floor. I think he is a Conservative Trojan stocking horse. I think the Tories have planted him on the government side, because we now see all that Tory philosophy emptying out of the belly of this Trojan horse.

An hon. Member: You have the wrong part of that horse.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: That hon. member is now sending memos to his cabinet colleagues. He is saying: "The Prime Minister promised us 50 per cent, preferably 60 per cent, public ownership. Fellows, let us forget about that. This is a hot potato and it is better forgotten. Let the dead bury the dead". He suggests that if they do not talk too much about this the public will not remember the Prime Minister's promise.

We are telling the nation now, because we are on television—

An hon. Member: No you aren't. The lights are off.

Mr. Rodriguez: The lights are not off until 10:30, brother. The lights in Nickel Belt are on right now. They haven't put the lights out there yet because we have Ontario Hydro. Thanks to the example set by the CCF government of Saskatchewan, Ontario Hydro decided to electrify the rural areas of Ontario. Maybe we are even doing it with potash.

We know hon. members over there would like to forget about that promise. We are saying right now that the Prime Minister has forgotten that promise, and he has backed away from another promise. He has backed away from the promise to develop, from here on in, all Canadian resources with 50 per cent, preferably 60 per cent, Canadian public participation.

An hon. Member: Horner says we won't weep tears for the passing of Petro-Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: He is still a Tory, the hon. member for Crowfoot, and he sent that memo to his fellow cabinet members, that we should not weep tears for the passing of Petro-Can. I guess he can again shake hands with the hon. member for Edmonton West, the hon. member for Calgary Centre and the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham.

One thing we in this party felt we had obtained during the tenure of the minority government was the promise to establish a Canadian petroleum corporation owned by the Canadian public; a corporation that would get itself involved in the ownership of the petroleum industry from the wellhead to the gas pump. We in this party figure that that was one of the positive results of the minority government. The other one was getting Thomas Berger appointed as commissioner of the Berger inquiry.

The next thing would be for Canada to get itself involved in the heavy oil development which is going to be needed very much down the road, especially since we can see the cost rising to $25 a barrel. Obviously Husky has sat on these resources and has not had the capital to develop them. Canada now has an opportunity through collective taxes to develop this non-renewable resource for the benefit of Canadians—not for the benefit of the boys in Texas, not for those privateers that sit to the right, those so-called minions of the corporate oil sector.

I have had occasion to be in committee with the hon. member for Edmonton West when he huffs and puffs and blows himself into a great big ball to defend the corporate sector.

Mr. Benjamin: Oil maggots.

Mr. Rodriguez: The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre calls them oil maggots. I would not be so unkind as to call them oil maggots, because what they have is a very pliant government that takes the attitude that if rape is inevitable, lie back and enjoy it. If the government had any courage at all—and I would hope that they have some courage—they would say, "Here is an opportunity for the people of Canada to get involved in the ownership of a non-renewable resource". Since the minister considers that a desirable objective, I suggest to him that he quit pussyfooting around and expropriate the resources of Husky at what was the first offer, $43 a share.

Mr. Bawden: What about the Canadian shareholders? You are not worried about the little holders of shares.

Mr. Rodriguez: I just heard, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Calgary South mention the little shareholders in Husky. That is a perfect example—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order.

An hon. Member: There is the loss to the little old ladies in there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Frank Maine (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we are very lucky to have this motion which was brought forward by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). I doubt that he realizes the favour he has done the House and the country in exposing the Tory party for where they stand and what they really are. The official critic for the official opposition has said they do not want Petro-Canada, they do not want Occidental Petroleum, they do not want anything. He merely stands there with his face hanging out and says, "We want nothing". That is their policy—do nothing.

His colleague, however, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) says, "We do not want Petro-Canada, but Occidental Petroleum, we could get along with them." In true Tory fashion they cannot agree among themselves what they do or do not want. To do nothing or not to do nothing; that is their question.

Mr. Paproski: That is a great remark.

Mr. Maine: The most important matter was not raised by the Tories at all, the question of research and development. It had to be raised by the NDP, one of the truly good contributions the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) has ever made in this House. But what is the Tory stand on this situation? Once again, they cannot agree among themselves. Their leader says they want 2.5 per cent of the gross national product to be devoted to research and development. The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) an ex-university professor in chemical engineering at the University of Calgary says, "We don't want research and development in Calgary, we want research and development in California where Occidental Petroleum is." Petro-Canada intends to put its research and development centre in Calgary.

Mr. Bawden: Who said that?

Mr. Maine: Now I hear the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden), who has been often called "the hon. member from Houston." The constituents of Calgary South have sent him here to Ottawa, but how does he represent his constituents? He does not want to see a research and development centre in Calgary, he does not want to see jobs created there for the university graduates that the whole innovation spectrum creates. He does not want to see that happen in Canada, he wants to see it happen in Texas or California.

The oil companies which are over 90 per cent foreign owner-controlled say they are quite happy doing their research and development in Houston and they do not intend to do it anywhere else. In other words, to hell with Canada. That is the Tory position if they support that policy. The two members from Calgary, Calgary South and Calgary Centre, are following a policy which is not representative of their constituents nor supportive of their leader when he says they would like to have 2.5 per cent of the gross national product devoted to research and development. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how can you increase research and development in this country when you support having it done in Houston or California?

This has occurred before in the oil sands in Alberta. The Great Canadian Oil Sands Company has done all of its research and development, not in Fort McMurray, Edmonton or Calgary, but in Philadelphia. This is the policy the official opposition supports.

An hon. Member: They don't even have any sand down there.

Mr. Maine: The National Research Council developed a spherical agglomeration process which is able to separate the oil from the tar sands in a more economical way which is now being scaled up in Calgary. This government is responsible for creating these jobs in Calgary, but the official opposition does not support this job creation which is so essential to the future of our country, to our industrial economic climate and to our competitive capability in the international marketplace. They would rather see these jobs go to California, Texas or New Jersey.

An hon. Member: That's bunk.

Mr. Maine: That is the Tory policy—"bunk", in capital letters.

Mr. Gillespie: They can agree on nothing.

Mr. Maine: I just did not think the Tories could be so stupid as they have been tonight. I just cannot believe that a matter so crucial and so important to this country, research and development, which is needed to increase our industrial capability and to help the free enterprise system work, would prompt the response from the hon. member for Calgary South of: "Let free enterprise do it." How much money has free enterprise devoted to research and development in this country? This government is constantly having to stimulate and goad them and write letters to their parent companies in the United States. Still, they ignore the question. It is true that the automotive industry is carried on in Detroit, and it is true the Tory party would like that trend to carry on in the oil industry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being ten o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 58, proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—EMIGRATION OF DOCTORS FROM CANADA

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, on June 8 I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), in view of the loss of almost 4,000 doctors from Canada during the years 1967 to 1977 and with increasing losses possible for the future, what plans she had to rectify the situation so that she could assure the Canadian people there will be a sufficient number of doctors graduated to meet, not only the present medical care level, but also the increasing care level of an aging population which requires more geriatricians all the time. Those 60 years of age and older require three times as much health care as they did at 35 years. Added to that is the earlier increase in cardiovascular disease, cancer, diabetes and other medical problems. Thus more physicians are required.

I would also like to ask the minister how she expects to keep up the quality of medical care when among those leaving are well-trained professional men, such as teachers and scientists in whom millions of Canadian dollars have been invested in training. Now this knowledge and experience is going south of the border to be an asset there. Many leave with at least two or three decades of earning power before them. That is a prospective $3 million or $5 million, depending on their training. Taking the middle figure of $4 million and taking the minister's figure of 650 doctors emigrating—instead of my own which is much higher—it means that we are giving about $2.6 billion to the United States every year.

Canada simply cannot afford to present those billions of dollars to the United States even though that country is our friend. We do not have the money to enable us to play Santa Claus. Each one of those doctors has cost us between a quarter of a million dollars and half a million dollars, depending upon whether they are trained as general practitioners, have received special training or have gone into scientific research.

There will be a need in Canada for more physicians. According to my information and also that of the minister, there will be no increase in the numbers of doctors graduating even though more will be required. We have now passed the two million mark of those 60 years and over, according to the last figures available in 1976.

The minister has made a statement to the effect that Canada might have too many physicians. That is not correct as the figures include specialist physicians, doctors working in public service, working privately as administrators or for insurance companies, et cetera. Some work part-time. The general practitioner would not average 50 per cent of those, and in actual practice the GP should account for 60 per cent to 70 per cent of physicians. Ruling out part-time physicians, we have one general practitioner for roughly every 2,000 people.

The minister has also stated that the majority of those doctors emigrating were not Canadians. Surely she knows that in January 1977 the United States was asking for and admitting Canadian born doctors and that in the last three years there has been an increase of 300 per cent in those emigrating.

The problem is frightening in that our health care system may break down. It was a Liberal government that brought in the national health program, but over the years it has been using its child like an illegitimate or orphan child. It starves it of research, driving thousands of our young scientists outside the country.

The minister knew the tax position of the doctors. She was well aware that a doctor could not deduct the interest on a bank loan on this tax return. He could not deduct the cost of mechanical equipment he needed to increase his knowledge, even though it increased his earning power, and as a result of that the government took increased taxes. The minister knew all this because of her previous portfolio as minister of national revenue.

No Canadian born doctor wants to pull up his roots and leave his home and friends. But because of the bureaucracy—the forms that take a quarter of his time to fill in, the wrangling with the bureaucrats of medicine and, finally, the high taxes and frustration, he leaves.

The minister must face those facts. There is a deterioration in the quality of medical service due to the loss of professors and researchers who trained the doctors. There is attrition and the increased service demands of an aging population. There is a breakdown of medical service because of the shortage of doctors, and this is compounded by the increasing number of people over 60 years of age who require service. These days people aged 50 are regarded as being in the geriatric class, and I would remind hon. members of this.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has once again brought before this House a matter of continuing importance and concern to all members. The hon. member is considered a specialist in the area of geriatrics and is appreciated for the work he has done in the House and the contribution he has made in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson: The hon. member referred to the emigration of doctors. I am sure he will agree this is a provincial matter and a provincial concern as well. He also referred to the harassment of doctors as a result of the multiplicity of forms they are required to prepare. I am sure he understands from the recent statement by the minister when her estimates were before the committee that this would be reduced to a considerable extent.

With regard to the emigration of doctors, let me say this to the hon. member. If emigration of physicians from Canada during the years 1967 to 1977 is almost 4,000, the loss of manpower in this field has been more than compensated for by immigration which was 10,704. The total number of active civilian physicians in 1968, excluding interns and residents, was 22,969, giving a physician-population ratio of one to 909. In the year 1977 the total figure was 34,860, with a ratio of one to 673.

This ratio of physician supply compares very favourably with most other developed countries, and the attrition arising from emigration and from other reasons has not prevented the steady increase of the ratio. Our medical schools are producing over 1,700 new physicians each year and immigration, which was around 1,000 four years ago, had to be controlled but was still around 300 in 1977. Therefore, there is no indication of shortage of physicians in Canada for the foreseeable future.

Concerning the treatment of older people, we see an increased interest amongst the medical profession, nurses and social workers in gerontology. A bureau on aging is being established in the welfare section of the department and a national conference is planned on the subject for the fall. As for geriatrics, a recent survey in March 1977 by the Association of Canadian Medical Colleges shows that medical schools are introducing more and more education of geriatric medicine as an identifiable component of their under-graduate curriculum. The Canadian Association of Gerontology is devoting time and effort, together with other medical associations, to increasing the number of specialists in geriatrics.

On the other hand, the treatment of older people has been carried out in this country for a long time by competent people in every specialty of medicine, except pediatrics and obstetric-gynecology, and by general and family practitioners. It is clear that ophthalmologists and optometrists will continue to treat aging people for their vision problems; that specialists in orthopedic surgery, in urology and in cardiovascular disease and other areas as well will continue to provide good care, together with general and family physicians, in the primary care area; and that a certain number of medicogerontologists and geriatricians will evolve with the increasing demand to look at special problems related to old age. We are certain that the total number of physicians is fully satisfying the demand for candidates in a new specialty which is developing as a support for existing medical care.

POST OFFICE—UNFILLED ORDERS FOR OLYMPIC COINS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) remaining to answer my dissatisfaction with the way the government has handled the Olympic coin program. The Olympic coin program was established by legislation of the federal government. Dealers who purchased and sold Olympic coins were agents of the federal government, and this government is responsible for fulfilling agreements of dealers who received payment and did not supply the coins ordered. What would happen to any corporation in Canada which carried on that kind of business?

● (2212)

The customer relations group, supposedly set up to intercede for purchasers who were cheated out of their coins or could not obtain delivery, admits it cannot now do anything to ensure the orders will be filled. Has the cabinet never heard of bonding companies or of legislation to force dealers to take out a bond? Some of the coin dealers have gone bankrupt. Since the federal government minted and furnished the coins and presumably was paid for them, I maintain that, in addition to being responsible for its agents, the coin dealers, the government should stand behind those who paid for Olympic coins in good faith but were left without coins or compensation.

What action would the government have taken had it not received full payment for the coins purchased by the coin dealers? Would the government be satisfied to be left without coins or payment?

The Olympic coin report listed a reserve fund of over $18 million for the winding down of the program by the end of this year. The Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) stated he would seek money from the cabinet to refund the purchase price to those who had been cheated. Why place an additional burden on Canadian taxpayers? Is there any reason compensation for the $300,000 worth of unfilled orders cannot be made out of the reserve fund?

A further point arises. Some orders for Olympic coins have been outstanding for over two years. Many purchasers have sent in photostat copies of confirmed orders and their deposited or cashed cheques three or four times, to no avail. Are they not entitled to interest on their money? In some cases the orders amounted to $400 or $500. The government is apparently prepared to set up bureaucracies but is unwilling to stand behind taxpayers who have lost money on a government-initiated program.

Canadians are asking many questions about the whole Olympic coin operation. Many MPs were concerned at the time the relevant legislation was passed. Our cause for concern has now been substantiated. Were any of the unsold Olympic coins eventually sold to a financial institution at face value or at least at a lower rate than the coin dealers or the general public were charged? My information is that a coin dealer offered to purchase unsold coins at a reasonable price, higher than that alleged to have been paid by the financial institution, but did not receive even an acknowledgement of his bid.

There are many questions, so far unanswered, to which I hope the parliamentary secretary will be in a position to reply this evening. I am not the only member who has been approached by constituents in an attempt to get this unacceptable transaction sorted out. Although I welcome the minister's assurance that refunds will be made to those who placed orders, I cannot agree with the suggestion that additional funds be spent out of the public purse. Surely the balance held in reserve in the Olympic coin fund could be used for that very purpose.

This debate affords the Postmaster General an opportunity to clear the air with regard to what the government intends to do in this scandalous situation. Time is running out. We have only until December 31, 1978, to clear up this intolerable mess.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) has made a very strong representation this evening, as he did on June 5, 1978. He will appreciate that when he raised this subject previously the minister indicated, as the hon. member acknowledged in the course of his remarks, that he was very sympathetic toward those who do not seem to have been dealt with fairly. He also pointed out that the Olympic coins corporation has no legal responsibility whatever in respect of these distributors. It is, however, a most unfortunate situation which has developed.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Speaker, the Olympic (1976) Act was passed by this House on July 27, 1973. Minting and sale of Olympic coins followed during the next five years. Almost $400 million worth of coins were sold to an estimated two million customers in 63 countries. The result to this point is a profit of $105.5 million which has gone to help cover the cost of the games in Montreal, plus $8.4 million to assist amateur sport.

As hon. members will understand, any sales effort as large as the Olympic coin program, involving several million customers, is very slow to wind down due to illness or death of many of the customers and the complexity of the marketing effort. However, the wind-down program is now at its final stages, and all individual customer complaints have been acted upon, except for approximately 100 cases still to be resolved within the next couple of months. This does not, however, include the special circumstances involving two distributors, Fred Samuels Limited of Montreal and Western Coin Distributors of Regina, Saskatchewan, who experienced financial difficulties and were unable to fill their orders.

The minister has said before that we are sympathetic toward the people who ordered and paid for their coins through these distributors, but the question of finding a way to help them get their coins is complex because of the legalities involved in coins which are legal tender in Canada. Section 5(2) of the Olympic (1976) Act states, and I quote:

An Olympic coin shall not be issued or sold by the Government of Canada at less than the face value of the coin and under any arrangement whereby the net consideration received by the Government of Canada for the coin is less than its face value.

As the distributors in question have no money to pay for at least the face value of the coins as referred to in section 5(2), a move by the government to supply coins on an ex gratia basis to the customers might be regarded as violating this section. We do not at this stage have the legal authority to make ex gratia payments to the people whose orders were not filled by the distributors in question.

The officials of the department have been advised to contact Treasury Board to see if anything further can be done to resolve these customers' difficulties.

GRAIN—SHORTAGE OF BOXCARS AT CHURCHILL, MAN.

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) for remaining to answer my questions regarding the port of Churchill. He has been a busy man tonight. He is the only one on the benches opposite to answer all our queries.

On June 12 I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) what guarantees he could give to ensure the delivery of 30 million bushels of grain from Churchill. I asked that question because of the track record of this government in getting grain to Vancouver, Prince Rupert and other locations, and I thought it was very important to find out if some thought was being given to the port of Churchill. There are less than 100 days in the shipping season at Churchill. The season runs from July 24 to October 20. The minister takes a very partisan approach to anything I say about the port of Churchill. If I took the approach this government takes to Churchill, we would be lucky if 10 million bushels of grain went through.

The minister said that a record 30 million bushels will reach Churchill this year. I want to put the record straight. That record has never been reached. Last year we came very close to it. We shipped 27.4 million bushels through Churchill, but unfortunately the last two ships which came to the port were diverted to Montreal.

Much work has been done by various groups. Good work is being done by the Hudson Bay Route Association and by the Churchill Development Board in trying to increase grain shipments.

The Hall commission suggests that 55 million bushels of grain could go out through the port of Churchill annually without too much additional expense for the upgrading of that facility. I understand that now the CNR is upgrading two passing tracks between Gillam and Churchill. It will be possible to despatch more trains, and they will not have to have a long waiting time for meeting. What we really need is a firm commitment from this government that when those passing tracks are completed there will be a percentage increase in the amount of grain which goes through the Port of Churchill. Just last week 51 ships were waiting for grain at eastern and western Canadian ports. Twenty-one ocean ships were waiting in Vancouver, ten in Montreal and 20 at St. Lawrence ports. Our ports are experiencing a bottleneck which is worse than that which occurred at the end of World War II. This is costing taxpayers an estimated $2 million a week. Of course, it is mostly the farmers who are paying that. Some ships have been waiting in Vancouver and the St. Lawrence ports for as long as six weeks, and some of them are costing $5,400 a day in demurrage charges.

The cause of the shortage of boxcars to transport grains to these ports has been that many of them are down in the United States, and have been there for some time. Many of the hopper cars are being used for storage of potash instead of for moving grain. The Canadian government is now in the position of not being able to deliver the record 850 million bushels of grain, or $2.5 billion worth, which it sold abroad last year to the Soviet Union, Japan and China. We notice also that another big sale of grain has been made to China. I think the government must understand that we will have to use every port we have in Canada to its full capacity if we want to reach the $1 billion mark in grain shipments out of Canada.

As I have said many times in the House, the port of Churchill is the most efficient grain handling port in Canada. That comment was made by the Board of Grain Commissioners. I cannot for the life of me see why the government could not have made arrangements to extend the season each year. The season was established some 20 years ago when we did not have the technology we now have in the port of Churchill. We now have an ice patrol and every ship is equipped with radar. We could extend the season by one month and thus increase the amount of grain going out of the port by at least 10 per cent per annum over the next five years in order to reach the 50 million bushel mark.

The minister has now decided to have another study carried out with regard to grain movement, called the grain transportation study. I wonder if it is not just a way of slowing things down and taking the pressure off the minister. I would also like to know why we really need this report. I would also like to know to whom the terms of reference are extended and who was invited to bid on this study. It is my understanding that some of the people who were invited to bid are in the international world of transportation. Also I notice that the Rod Bryden report on grain handling in the prairies went beyond its terms of reference and included the port of Churchill. Bryden wrote a devastating report against the port of Churchill and its transportation facilities, and it would now appear that he is getting all the creamy jobs from the Department of Transport.

I should like to see the facilities at Churchill used to their maximum capacity and at least 50 million bushels of grain shipped out of there annually.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith) has once again brought before the House a matter which is of continuing concern, particularly with reference to the openness of the port. There are some 100 days or less when port facilities are open for grain movement purposes. I hope that this year the port will be used to its maximum potential and I am assured that we can expect a third record year.

The hon. member also brought forth a number of other questions which were not contained in his original question. I hope these questions can be answered at a later date.

I would like to assure the House that every effort will be made to again use the port of Churchill to the maximum extent for the third year in a row. There is currently pressure on all parts of the transportation system to move the grain that has been sold this crop year. However, Churchill will most likely find itself again in the advantageous position of experiencing its greatest demand on the transportation system late in the crop year after the tight situation elsewhere has eased. The Churchill season from July to October normally requires boxcars after the system has had time to recover from the delays which often occur during the winter. This situation can be expected to occur again this year.

The government is committed to maximizing the use of the port of Churchill. In our current rehabilitation program for prairie rail lines, $1,610,000 has been allotted by the federal government to improve the rail line into Churchill. The work to be undertaken involves bank widening and drainage, rail relay and extending the sidings along the line. These improvements are expected to double the capacity of the port.

The grain transportation situation is under constant review by the government. Continually we are searching for ways to improve efficiency in the utilization of present facilities. Examples of the benefits of this study abound. The most obvious example of the improvements which have been made is the fact that car turnaround time for grains moving to export position has been reduced to 17 or 18 days from the 22.9 days determined by the Hall commission report one year ago. The government will continue to analyse the system looking for new ways of improving its operation, with a view to providing adequate facilities to moving to market the increasing production which is expected in the next few years.

Recently the government has announced an intensive investigation of the operating procedures used by the railroads, grain handling companies and the Canadian Wheat Board, as they work together moving Canada's grain production to market. This project is expected to provide additional recommendations which will further improve the utilization of the railroad facilities currently available.

Through its purchase of 8,000 hopper cars and its commitment to a $700 million rehabilitation program, the government has shown a willingness to step in and provide the necessary transportation facilities when warranted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 10.28 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

DEVASTATION CAUSED BY EARTHQUAKE IN SALONIKA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to present a motion which I am sure will be approved and accepted by all hon. members. In view of the fact that yesterday a devastating earthquake in Salonika and northeastern Greece left in its wake a trail of destruction and death, the tragedy and magnitude of which has not yet been fully realized, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That the Government of Canada, on behalf of all Canadians, express its heartfelt sympathy to the government of Greece and its citizens; and, further, that the government respond to any requests for aid, as has been similarly done in other areas and countries which have suffered similar natural disasters.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE SENATE

SUGGESTED COMPOSITION OF THE OTHER PLACE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have an important motion concerning the possibility of a veritable glut of senators in the country. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instructs the government to appoint a public committee to investigate and make recommendations as to what should be done with existing senators in the future should the present Senate be abolished; that this committee not be blue ribbon in nature, as proposed yesterday by the Prime Minister, but that it consist of one corporation lawyer to act in the interests of existing senators, two fishermen, two farmers, two miners and two factory workers, equally divided between men and women, and that the average income of members of this committee not exceed the national income average.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUESTED EXTENSION OF LANDING STRIP AT SAINT-LÉONARD AND IMPROVED FACILITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an urgent matter.

Considering that the Air Transport Board of the Canadian Transport Commission ruled on June 2, 1978 that Eastern Provincial Airways (1963) Limited would be authorized to serve northwest New Brunswick under permit A.T.C. 2482/75(S) and considering that in its wisdom the commission recognizes that northwest New Brunswick has more than enough residents to make a commercial air service profitable, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia):

That the Minister of Transport authorize the extension of the landing strip at Saint-Léonard to the required length to accommodate EPA's Boeing 737 aircraft and that the required navigation facilities be installed to provide class I commercial service.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE MINISTRY

AIR TRAVEL OF MINISTER OF TRANSPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. My motion concerns the well-publicized jaunts of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) on MOT JetStar aircraft. These trips and tours by the minister have cost taxpayers over $1 million, including $8,000 to fly himself and friends to a Grey Cup game.

The minister has justified these political meanderings by saying that insistent demands for his presence by Canadians in all regions necessitated his abusing his ministerial privileges and that his flights were vital to the government in a partisan sense. In view of the fact that the minister now travels on Air Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That the Minister of Transport be instructed to inform the House of these facts: first, does his recent decision to fly Air Canada reflect a reduction in the number of requests for his presence in the various regions of the country; second, since, according to the minister, one of his reasons for flying JetStar was supposedly because of his hectic schedule, does the decision to fly Air Canada not suggest that he has reduced his workload and, if so, could he advise members what ministerial duties he is now neglecting?

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR TRIDENT AIRCRAFT LIMITED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the undertaking given over a year ago by the former minister of finance to extend start-up financing for the Trident Aircraft Limited of Vancouver, in Sidney, British Columbia, and in view of the unemployment situation in this country generally, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce be required, now, to live up to the commitment he made in the House last December 15 to provide assistance to Trident Aircraft which will permit it to supply the 25 aircraft now on its order books.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADE

CANADIAN PROPOSALS AT GATT—POSITION IF NOT ACCEPTED

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It has to do with what I think is the most important problem facing Canada's economic future at the moment—even more important than the constitution—that is, the GATT negotiations which will settle our economic future for perhaps 10 or 15 years. I know the minister will answer with majestic solemnity, but I wonder if he can give us some information today.

The situation report that the minister's office has just issued on multilateral negotiations points out that the Canadian offer on industrial tariffs was made conditional upon satisfactory progress being achieved in three areas. One of those areas was the liberalization of tariff and non-tariff barriers to trade in the key resource-based sectors of forest products and non-ferrous metals. It also points out that the Canadian suggestion to have sector negotiations was not accepted.

My question is: Will the Canadian offer on industrial tariffs be withdrawn if there is no greater liberalization of tariff and non-tariff barriers in the resource-based sectors of forest products and non-ferrous metals and if there is not considerable liberalization of tariff barriers with respect to the export of Canadian fishery products?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Certainly, if the conditions we have laid down for good negotiations from the Canadian point of view are not met, then our offers will be reconsidered. At the end of the day we will have to examine, as a country, how much we are getting and what we have to give and if there is a balance, then we will settle. But we will not settle unless our offer is reached as it might have been if these conditions had been met.

Mr. Crosbie: The problem is that of the Canadian people and Canadian industry. The minister's answer is very general. There are only 22 days to go before the July 15 deadline to settle general principles, which the United States insists must be done. I ask the minister the following question: The EEC delegation, according to the report from the minister's office, has taken the view that the Canadian offer, of which the Canadian people and the Canadian industry know nothing, includes too many exceptions and conditions, and they want specific improvements.

Can the minister tell the House what exceptions to the lowering of tariff barriers we have set in our offer, to what conditions EEC countries are objecting, and what industries are we going to protect by the exceptions we put forward? This has tremendous consequences for our industrial sectors in Ontario and Quebec. Can the minister tell the House, or arrange to give us information on this most vital matter?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in acknowledging the opinion expressed by the European Community and the United States that the Canadian offer is not satisfactory at the present stage, I should add that Canada has expressed its opinion to other partners that their offers are not satisfactory. For example, the hon. member has referred to the question of increasing markets for fish products of Canada. Up to the present time we do not feel we have received from the major markets we have in mind the kind of response we will need in order to have a successful negotiation.

With regard to the specifics of the hon. member's question, the exceptions, and so on, the offer made by the various countries generally is confidential. I will examine the situation to see whether I can provide the hon. member with more detailed information within that general concept.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, in a speech of November 29, 1977, which was ignored by the government—as usual—the Minister of Agriculture made several good points. This is not usual, I will admit. He said there should be more involvement from the non-government sector in the trade negotiations at GATT and that representatives of commodity organizations and industrial associations should sit in at the GATT negotiations. Has the government taken that advice? Will it now take that advice of the Minister of Agriculture, or will it continue to ignore the Minister of Agriculture, as is usually the case?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I do not acknowledge the premise of the hon. member's question, or his conclusion. The Minister of Agriculture has made a very remarkable contribution to the preparation of the Canadian position at GATT.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: It has not been our intention, from the beginning, to include sector representatives in the negotiations themselves; we believe a small team conducting the negotiations is the most effective way. But we have been prepared to provide confidential briefings to the representatives of the various sectors which are affected. For example, we have made it possible for representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress to go to Geneva and to be briefed by our delegation on the spot. That offer would apply to industry and agriculture, as I explained in reply to a question which was asked last week.

INDUSTRY

SITUATION OF CERTAIN QUEBEC INDUSTRIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It deals with tariff matters and with 150,000 jobs and workers in the province of Quebec, particularly workers in the textile, clothing, footwear and furniture industries.

In view of the fact that 34,000 jobs have been lost in the Canadian industry between October 1976 and October 1977, including 30,000 in the province of Quebec, particularly in the industries I have just mentioned, why is it, according to government guidelines contained in a document I have here, that the minister states that the textile, clothing, furniture and footwear industries, as a result of tariff negotiations, will disappear?

[English]

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what document the hon. member has at hand, but I can assure him and the House that we will do our utmost to see the textile, furniture and footwear industries have ample opportunity for expansion within Canada. In saying that, I should like to inform the hon. member that while manufacturing jobs decreased from 1976 to perhaps the middle of 1977, statistics now suggest that in the first quarter of 1978 manufacturing jobs in Canada increased by 9,000.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. But first I should like to read this government documentation which states in part that the government's main purpose must be above all to achieve progressive reduction through increased rationalization of the corporations involved and a minimum of assistance during the transition period.

Mr. Speaker, how will the Minister of Finance explain to Quebeckers this long term policy which calls for the disappearance of these industries? As far as jobs are concerned, what alternatives does the minister propose for Quebec workers?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I suggest the hon. member disregards very important facts, namely that when I was acting as minister of industry, trade and commerce in 1976, we introduced a quota system in Canada, to ensure a more equitable sharing between imports and Canadian goods. This policy served as an excellent stabilizing factor on the textile and footwear industries in Canada.

The hon. member would be well advised to consult his colleagues on his side of the House who never stop complaining that we impose too many quotas, with the result, they claim, that importers in a number of Canadian cities are compelled to limit their turnover.

NATURAL RESOURCES

CANADIAN OWNERSHIP THEREOF

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister arising from an answer he gave in the House on Monday. In 1974, the Prime Minister promised that "new major projects in the natural resource field should have at least 50 per cent and preferably 60 per cent Canadian equity ownership". In the House on Monday, when asked about this the Prime Minister did not withdraw that commitment but reasserted it when he said:

—the commitment as it was made still stands.

Can he tell the House why he said that on Monday, when his government has continued to approve virtually all takeover bids in the resource sector since 1974 and, in particular, when he has approved offers in eight major cases which have completely violated the commitment he made in 1974 and repeated here in the House on Monday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the commitment made in 1974, which was repeated on Monday and I repeat again today, was that we would move in that direction; that we did not expect to reach it overnight, but we were looking at a span of perhaps five years. Perhaps it would be of interest to inform the hon. member that, indeed, when FIRA negotiates with foreign companies which are investing in the resource area, it generally gets an undertaking from them to ensure that over a period of time they will be moving toward majority Canadian ownership.

I cannot say this is done in every case, Mr. Speaker, but I do know this is one of the conditions which is discussed in respect of many FIRA cases in order to determine whether the investment or the takeover is in the interest of Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister says it is a FIRA consideration which envisages a move toward 50 per cent to 60 per cent Canadian ownership. I point out to him that in a document I have here that is not what was said by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce: he said that in most instances so far it has not proven feasible to secure full compliance with that objective. The Prime Minister is saying one thing and his minister is saying another.

Since all the hard evidence in terms of the major decisions that have been made—I have a list of them here—would indicate that the 50 per cent to 60 per cent equity ownership has not been achieved at all, I would ask the Prime Minister whether he is saying that we can look forward to this at some distant point down the road; or is he going to start now, at long last, acting on what he promised in 1974?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am saying that FIRA, since the beginning and since the announcement of that policy, has been discussing with those who want to invest or take over in Canada this particular policy and the assurance that some guarantees can be obtained, when possible, to move in this direction. I do not know what particular cases the hon. member has in mind: perhaps he could send them over and we could provide detailed answers. I do know that very frequently, when FIRA cases are reported to cabinet, it is determined that there is an undertaking on the part of foreign investors that there will be a move toward a greater percentage of Canadian ownership.

There are, and there must be, cases where exceptions are made to that rule and that is perhaps what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was saying. Often the provinces themselves make very strong representations that they must have a particular investment in a particular area, especially where there is less development than in other parts of Canada, and sometimes we have to choose between federal objectives and provincial desires. Generally, there is a great attempt made by FIRA to put everybody on side, but sometimes we have to go in the direction of the provinces.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary. The document that comes from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce states, with reference to the provinces:

No province raised any outright objection though some reserved their positions.

That is as to the general proposition that we should move toward Canadian control in the resource sector. So the general position of the provinces, at least as indicated in this document, is that they support the proposition. The Prime Minister, however, has indicated a general moving toward the policy. Either we have 50 per cent to 60 per cent, or we do not. Is the Prime Minister saying that 30 per cent is moving toward the implementation of his policy?

Finally, because I, for one, have genuine scepticism about the government's commitment, if the government is committed, will it—at least in the Husky Oil case—make its position clear today as to whether there will be Canadian control and ownership of that particular enterprise?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has asked if 30 per cent is moving toward my policy. Obviously, if in year one they had 10 and in year two they had 30, yes, that is moving toward 50, because 30 is on the way to 50 from 10. When we say we want to reach that—

An hon. Member: He thinks he is in caucus.

Mr. Trudeau: I am very happy to see that even some of the backbenchers understand this. I made it quite clear in my answer that we did not expect this to happen in one year; I said a period of five years.

An hon. Member: You are ready for the Senate.

Mr. Trudeau: I tell the hon. member—who may not be interested in the answer and more interested in making speeches—that if he is interested in Canadian ownership, the answer is in what we are doing. For example, when we get a commitment from a company that it will move toward a position of majority ownership over the next three or four years, we are satisfied with that. Also, as the hon. member said in quoting from the document, the provinces are satisfied as well. Only the hon. member, perhaps, would want to expropriate and make it Canadian overnight, but that is not the policy of this government.

URBAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED SHORTAGE OF FUNDS FOR RRAP—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for Urban Affairs and concerns the RRAP projects. Is it true that funds earmarked for his department for RRAP projects are barely enough to finance one project per municipality, to a maximum of $6,000 yet?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since we have made all small rural communities in Quebec eligible for the RRAP program, there has been a race for available funds. We will certainly not be able to grant all requests this year. But we are trying as much as possible to plan expenditures so as to help first of all the low income residents of the oldest houses. As for distribution of funds among municipalities, no final decision has been made. Everything will depend on the requests from the different municipalities. First we will grant requests from those municipalities which are best equipped to benefit from the RRAP program.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary. Assuming that those basic proposals are applied, does that mean that in the large municipalities in need of a RRAP, there might be one or two projects, depending on the population?

Mr. Ouellet: The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

STATUS QUO OF 1978 INTERIM RECIPROCAL FISHERIES AGREEMENT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. In view of the need to secure a satisfactory framework for the future, long-term development of the fisheries resources presently shared by Canada and the United States, I should like to ask the minister if it is the intention of the government to continue the suspension of the 1978 Interim Reciprocal Fisheries Agreement as implemented on June 2 until the boundary problems are resolved on a permanent basis.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the discussions which took place on Monday and Tuesday continued late last night, and this morning, at a more junior level than the special negotiators. Considerable progress has been made on problems affecting the west coast. We did not feel that progress was adequate on the east coast discussions: these will be continuing, but I am expecting a fuller report from the special negotiators. For the moment, the agreement remains suspended.

Mr. Crouse: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the government obtained United States guarantees of a permanent stay of countervailing duties on fish? In order to get these guarantees, has the government been required to agree to give up any other assistance to the fishing industry besides the subsidy of two cents per pound on groundfish, by October 1, such as management and control over Swiftsure bank on the west coast?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, there is no link between the two problems. The countervailing action which was in response to a complaint by United States fishing interests is many months old, before the suspension of the agreement. It was acted upon as a separate issue and is certainly not linked to present difficulties.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has notice of our concern about certain emergency safety design systems and also requirements regarding safety of the public as a result of certain reports leaked to us and others from the agencies under his control in the atomic energy field.

I ask the minister why he has permitted public statements to be made by these agencies under his control that all is well with regard to emergency safety designs, when their own reports and, I suspect, reports which have reached the minister indicate that the agencies are very seriously questioning the design and efficiency of these emergency safety systems.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the reports the hon. member mentioned are, I presume, those which appeared in the press yesterday and the day before, some of them in the Globe and Mail. Information I have received indicates that these reports are based either on misinformation or misinterpretation of data and that, in fact, much of the concern reflected in them was dealt with in considerable detail in answer to written questions of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and the hon. member for St. John's East.

At that time a considerable amount of information was made public about these particular concerns. There were further discussions before the Porter commission, and cross-examination by Dr. Edwards, for example, of senior officers of the Atomic Energy Control Board and the same sort of allegation was made. I believe the answers at that time dealt with this particular concern quite satisfactorily.

Mr. Lawrence: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As a result of the information that has been placed in our hands and in the hands of others, obviously the Atomic Energy Control Board has itself been very seriously questioning not only these design standards but also safety standards in relation to the public at large: they have been questioning them very seriously, and apparently some changes have been made.

As a result of these reports and as a result of this highly complex and technical information, are the design faults themselves now being rectified in secret, or are the safety standards being lowered, again with no public disclosure of these facts?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes the perfectly legitimate point that the Atomic Energy Control Board has been seriously questioning procedures, which is the phrase he used. I think he would agree that that is the proper course for the Atomic Energy Control Board to take. I am very pleased that he has noted they have been acting in this area.

They have made it clear to me that they have these matters under continuing review, and if they see an opportunity with respect to a particular system which has not previously come to their attention and requires improvement, they will initiate the necessary measures.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCENTIVES TO INCREASE PRODUCTIVITY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As Canadian productivity remains 20 per cent below that of the United States—by far our most important industrial competitor—and our wage rates are generally higher than theirs for comparable jobs, would the Prime Minister advise the House why he and his government persists in refusing to introduce productivity incentives to be paid in direct proportion to increases in productivity, as greatly increased productivity is the only way we can continue to pay higher wage rates than those paid by our chief industrial competitor and stay competitive in the marketplace?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this seems like a re-issue of the speech I made in this House last October when I quoted those very figures. The difference is that I indicated the 80 per cent figure had narrowed the gap from a much larger productivity gap and that, indeed, in some areas the productivity of Canadian workers was very close to the 100 per cent mark of productivity in the United States. If the hon. member wants to review the figures in detail, I can give him more information.

In so far as wage costs are concerned, I made the point that in the past few years our wage costs in manufacturing have been notably higher than in the United States. I indicated that with the devaluation of the Canadian dollar, this gap had also narrowed to practically zero.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary. If the Prime Minister will take the time to read the latest reports put out by his government and the government of the United States on this question, he will see that what I have said is completely correct; that our productivity today is still 20 per cent lower than it is in the United States. This is a very serious situation.

In view of the fact that this country has a trade deficit of more than $11 billion per year in fully manufactured products—and they are the ones which produce the jobs—and as the Canadian Manufacturers' Association recently stated that if we can overcome this deficit we can provide 800,000 additional jobs for Canadians, would the Prime Minister, in the interest of this country, give very serious and worth-while consideration to introducing the kind of incentives that I have discussed with him on many occasions and with which I think he agrees, so that we can take the first important step to provide those 800,000 additional jobs for Canadians?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member has been following the multilateral trade negotiations, as I am sure he has, he will know that in the Canadian negotiations with Japan on one hand, and with the European Community on the other, we have been attempting to make sure that the totality of our exports to those countries includes a much higher percentage of manufactured goods.

One of the approaches we are using, which I am sure has the support of the hon. member, is to take part in the multilateral trade negotiations with sector approaches, indicating that if a country wants to import some of our raw materials at a certain tariff, it should also be importing the manufactured goods made from those raw materials at the same time. This has been explained to the House many times by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who initiated them when he was with Industry, Trade and Commerce, and by the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I will make sure that the hon. member is brought up to date on their speeches.

MANPOWER

EMPLOYMENT OF IMMIGRANTS

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. There seems to be a serious paradox where Canadian jobs are held open for Canadian workers by Canada Manpower, and potential immigrants who could fill those jobs are turned away, yet in practice employers are not able to fill those jobs with Canadian workers. Does the minister have any plan either to make immigration more flexible again, in this sense, or to fill Canadian jobs with Canadian workers?

● (1442)

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): My department certainly remains committed to seeing that Canadians have the first opportunity of jobs that are available in Canada, whether they are local people or not. In some cases we have to go across Canada to find them. However, where Canadians are unwilling to move or are unwilling to accept a particular job and will not fill the vacancy, we have to look to others in order to maintain a work force that quite often, in large measure, is Canadian.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION SUPPLIED TO RCMP

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I want to ask him about the recently revealed refusal to supply unemployment insurance information to the RCMP. In view of the fact that this information has been supplied for many years, in spite of the regulation regarding the confidentiality of unemployment insurance information, I ask what type of confidential information was supplied to the RCMP and under what authority was that information given?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the legal opinion I received recently indicated that in the past the information given to the RCMP went beyond that which was allowed under section 126. This was a legal interpretation of that section. It seems to me that it is open to interpretation. Because we wanted to get the matter clarified, it seemed the wisest policy was to issue instructions that information other than that for the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act or the administration of social insurance numbers should not be released until we had clarification of section 126.

I am happy that the McDonald commission is looking into this particular area to give us advice either that we do have authority to give additional information as the minister shall determine, or that we should amend legislation to do what I think is appropriate, that is, to give this information to the RCMP to help their investigations.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister what recent developments caused the ruling to be investigated and forced the government to stop giving that information.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, until the carping of opposition members, we used what we thought was common sense and tried to help the RCMP in their fight against organized crime—

An hon. Member: Organized crime?

Mr. Cullen: I might say that with the passage of Bill C-27, the hon. member's colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton West, quite correctly thought that the minister should have the responsibility for giving information under the Unemployment Insurance Act to other people, and insisted that the wording be changed from "the commission" to "the minister" so that the minister had to accept responsibility. I sought a legal opinion to determine whether we were acting within the provisions of section 126. The advice I have from legal counsel is to the effect that more information is being provided than was authorized by that section. Because of that, I have ordered it stopped.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

OVERCHARGING BY BELL CANADA—REFERRAL TO AIB

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. A recent report by Robert Babe to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission indicated that Bell Canada has overcharged its subscribers, who live mostly in Ontario and Quebec, by more than $1 billion. In light of this report, will the minister demand that Bell rebate to its subscribers their individual overpayments which went to Northern Telecom, a Bell subsidiary?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that report had been commissioned by the director of research and investigation under the Combines Investigation Act. As you know, he operates independently under the statute. He has now received the report. I have not yet read it, but it will be presented as evidence to the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, which is the usual practice, and they will make a judgment.

Mr. Peters: I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Has this gouging of the public by Bell Canada been referred to the AIB for rebate action, in light of the advantageous rates charged to subscribers of publicly-owned telephone systems who purchased their equipment on the open market rather than the principle used by Bell of buying from their own subsidiary?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): I think the legislation governing the AIB applies to Bell Canada. I will make sure the AIB look into that matter and report to me.

INDUSTRY

FINANCING OF CERTAIN AIR CARRIERS

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, in view of the announcement made last week by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce while he was in Kelowna, B.C., that he was going to give $6 million in financing to Triphibian Helicopters, and in view of the confusion this has caused in Kelowna because the Regional Economic Development Commission know that Triphibian Helicopter's first choice was to locate in Kelowna, not in Victoria, I ask the minister whether it was the Triphibian aircraft that he was announcing, or the Trident aircraft, and the source of the $6 million.

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there does seem to be a great deal of confusion. I announced in Vancouver on Monday that the Enterprise Development Board, under my department, is prepared to guarantee loans at the bank of up to $2 million for Trident Aircraft Industries, which is to manufacture the Trigull, an amphibian, four to six-passenger paraplane, on the west coast, to be assembled in Sidney. With the $2 million that my department, through the Enterprise Development Board, is prepared to guarantee, Treasury Board has approved a $4 million repayable loan to the company.

That loan is to be given as production proceeds and repaid as sales on the plane are made. In total, it is $6 million for the establishment of an aircraft industry on the west coast, hoping that the spin-off from that industry will enable offset programs to be taken from the huge aircraft industry to the south into Canada, thereby creating a large number of jobs in the air industry of the west coast.

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact the minister clearly announced in Kelowna that it was for Triphibian Helicopters, I would ask him if the same arrangement, or project, is available for Triphibian Helicopters who want to locate in Kelowna, where he was making the announcement?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of addressing a roomful of about 500 people, or more, at a nominating convention in Kelowna. It was a great meeting. At no time did I mention helicopters in my speech. And I can say to the House and to the country that I was very pleased with the calibre of candidate who came forward and offered himself to serve that area.

LOTO CANADA

POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF LOTTERY

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, who I am sure is pleased, having regard to the calibre of his Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, that there are some good candidates presenting themselves to the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: Jealousy will get you nowhere.

Mr. Clark: My question relates to lotteries and to a potentially serious federal-provincial controversy. The Prime Minister will remember that the then minister of industry, trade and commerce, in a standing committee in mid-June, 1976, in relation to the federal lottery said, "We could decide to carry on or withdraw completely if there is an understanding between the provincial governments and the federal government". In other words, it was very clear that there would be a carrying on of the federal lottery only with understanding of the provinces.

Mr. Basford: That was not the understanding.

Mr. Clark: It was certainly the understanding of the provinces, as nine of them made clear when they sent a telex to the Prime Minister about a week ago expressing "shock and disapproval that the Government of Canada seems determined to bulldoze ahead in this field in contradiction to understandings."

Has the Prime Minister responded to this telex, and has he agreed to hold back any federal lottery plan until there has been more consultation and collaboration with the provincial governments concerned?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the undertaking was not to prolong the lotteries without coming before parliament, and we intend to discharge this commitment. As far as the provinces are concerned, both the minister presently responsible in this field and the former minister have sought to find a formula with which the premiers would agree. From the telegram—and I have not yet seen it—presumably they do not agree. That is, perhaps, natural. This is a field which is open to both levels of government. It is a revenue-producing field. I see no reason, in theory or in practice, why the federal government should abandon it to the provinces exclusively.

I should like to know whether it is the position of the Conservative party that the federal government should not operate lotteries under any circumstances. That is not our position, neither does the constitution nor any other law indicate that it should be.

Mr. Clark: Our position is that the Government of Canada should honour its undertakings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister is being coached by his colleague. He will find that reading the record is a more reliable means of understanding the undertaking which was given. I suggest he read the record. Will he confirm that it is the intention of the Government of Canada to move into a lottery program whereby lottery tickets will be dispensed in slot-machine fashion—using, incidentally, machines imported from the United States—on a 24-hour basis in shopping centres across the country, to bring revenues to governments in competition with existing provincial programs which provide funds for hundreds of thousands of people involved in voluntary organizations across the country?

Will the right hon. gentleman confirm that this slot-machine approach is the one the government is contemplating in competition with voluntary agencies across the country?

Mr. Trudeau: The approach is certainly not one of desiring competition. I note that both the minister responsible for lotteries and his predecessor have offered to the provinces some form of agreement whereby there would be one lottery for all Canadians involving federal and provincial governments and the proceeds would be shared. I believe sharing was offered on a 50-50 basis. As to the details, whether it is to be operated by using slot-machines or not, I will take notice of the question and ask the minister, who is perfectly able to explain our policies, to answer the question.

On the matter of principle, I find it strange that the Leader of the Opposition, when considering any scheme which would bring revenue to governments, always seems to be on the side of the provinces. He obviously does not want to be the leader of a national government; he wants to stick up for the provinces on every issue. We take the position that this field is open to both levels of government. Actually, it was made open by a law of parliament presented by this government. Until we presented it, the provinces could not engage in lotteries. But we presented the law and it was passed. We have tried to find a common scheme upon which everyone would agree. The provinces, naturally, want the whole field for themselves and, naturally, the Leader of the Opposition thinks that is what the position should be.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: One of the changes I intend to introduce is to be the head of a truthful government which keeps its word.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Also, the head of a government of a nation that stays together, rather than being driven apart by intransigence and stubbornness at the centre. Not surprisingly, the Prime Minister has not read the telex from the provinces, though it should have been received in his office some days ago. I would ask him to read it and to pay particular attention to the request over the signature of the chairman of the conference, Mr. Shillington, of Saskatchewan, that the Prime Minister himself become involved in this matter and assure the provinces that the federal government will not proceed until an attempt has been made by the right hon. gentleman himself to reach consensus with the premiers. Will the Prime Minister give us that undertaking?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not think I have to give such an undertaking.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Trudeau: It has been my constant practice to receive telegrams from the premiers and to respond to them in order to each the best possible agreement between both levels of government. However, since this is a federal system, it is obvious there will be some points of disagreement, and the difference between this party and the party opposite is that we do not intend to try to keep the country together by giving all the powers of the federal government to the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HEALTH AND WELFARE

RECOGNITION OF INTERNATIONAL YEAR OF THE CHILD

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the hon. lady made any response to recommendations from the recent federal-provincial conference on child abuse, or the United Nations call for action on this question by 1979, the Year of the Child? In particular, has she considered a suggestion to host an international symposium in Canada in 1979 to develop a greater awareness of this problem and better approaches to resolving it?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I have read the recommendations released from the federal-provincial conference on child abuse and the department has studied them. I have expressed my own reaction in a letter to Keith Norton, the Ontario minister who co-hosted the conference with the federal government. As for the suggestion about an international symposium, I think it would be more appropriate if we were to consider a Canadian approach. My role is only to be supportive of any group in Canada which might wish to do something during the Year of the Child in the field of child abuse or family violence. Any national conference would be welcome, or any project which could help deal with these issues.

ATOMIC ENERGY

POTENTIAL PROBLEMS WITH CANDU REACTORS

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Speaker. Have international Candu purchasers been informed of potential problems with the Candu emergency cooling system and the possible need to operate at well below the rated full power level?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): If the hon. member is asking whether potential customers read the Globe and Mail, I cannot answer him. If he is trying to give credence to false stories, perhaps he is succeeding.

Mr. Wenman: The hon. member on this side is attempting to ensure that Canada does not become a nuclear prostitute. Since safety standards are being examined, may I ask whether technical information leading to any reduction in standards will be made public, thereby ensuring the credibility or acceptability of any new or revised standards?

Mr. Gillespie: As I indicated in an earlier answer to the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, the Atomic Energy Control Board has already placed a great deal of information upon the public record. I have placed further information before the House in answer to questions on this subject. There will undoubtedly be further licensing requirements on the part of the Atomic Energy Control Board. I have indicated that the review is a continuing one and that these further requirements will be made public when they become effective.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

PROCLAMATION OF CANADA DAY

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. Has the Secretary of State, his department or any department of the federal government, made any proclamation proclaiming July 1 as Canada Day, so-called? Legally, July 1 is Dominion Day. Would the minister also inform the House whether the government and, in particular, his department intend to continue to disregard the law of this House in this connection, or does the government intend to introduce legislation to change Dominion Day to Canada Day?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, there were several questions contained in the hon. member's question. As to the first part of it, I believe the Governor General may very well issue a proclamation. I am not yet sure on what date that will occur. As to the other question, as I think I replied to the right hon. member for Prince Albert last year, we intend, again this year, to celebrate Canada Day on Dominion Day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My point of order relates to the business of the House. I would like to inform the House of the motion for the allotted day tomorrow. It is an allotted day for the Progressive Conservative party. The motion is not framed as—nor is it intended to be—a non-confidence motion. Hopefully, backbenchers on the government side will prod their government, and the government itself will see fit, to support the motion. However, I want to indicate to the House that there will be a vote on this motion, which reads as follows:

> That this House reaffirms its support for the principle of freedom of information as a prerequisite to open and responsible government, as endorsed unanimously by the House on February 12, 1976, and urges the early introduction of appropriate legislation providing for certain precise and limited exceptions subject to a review process with ultimate appeal to the courts.

That motion will stand in the name of the Leader of the Opposition for debate tomorrow.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as I heard the terms of the motion read by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, it appeared that there would be no objection on our side to the acceptance of such a principle. But as the hon. member knows, under the Standing Orders the very motion which is put is described as a motion of non-confidence, and if hon. members are agreeable to waiving the effect of the standing order, then we would consider whether we could vote on the matter.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Sure; fine.

TRADE

TEXTILES AND TEXTILE PRODUCTS

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table, under Standing Order 41(2), a memorandum of understanding in relation to the export of certain textiles and textile products between the Government of Canada, the government of the Socialist Republic of Romania, the republic of the Philippines, the government of Hong Kong, the government of Poland, the republic of Korea, and the People's Republic of China. I also wish to table a statement of intent relating to exports from Taiwan to Canada.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ADDITIONAL SEATS FOR PRIME MINISTER AND LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-464, respecting the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition and the House of Commons of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, this bill would provide two additional seats in the House of Commons, one for the Prime Minister and one for the Leader of the Opposition, without being defined by constituency. Since both leaders represent all Canada and conduct electoral campaigns in all parts of Canada, it is appropriate that their representation in this House not be limited to a single constituency.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING DURATION OF PARLIAMENTS

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-45, respecting the duration of every House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, several bills have been introduced with respect to fixed dates for elections. The advantages regarding stability and intelligent planning have been expressed time and time again in this House. This bill would differ inasmuch as it would specify that a general election would take place on the first Monday of June every four years. It also provides that new administrations take over on July 1, Canada's national day, by means of a special ceremonial sitting of both Houses on the lawns of parliament with the participation of Canadians from various aspects of Canadian life, both spiritual and temporal. Governments would be assured of remaining in office for four years without the chance of defeat as at present.

Mr. Alexander: I don't know about that.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO ESTABLISH ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-466, to establish the electoral district of Parliament Hill.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, this bill is similar in principle to the bill introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), but it differs in some respects. First, it would provide for a proper election of the Speaker by his peers which would be handled by the clerk in this chamber. Second, the election would take place during the final session of a parliament for the following parliament. This would permit an easy transition during the general election period, and it would permit the choice of a Speaker to be made by members who know the candidates, which would not be the case if done after a general election. Third, the Speaker would not run in general elections. Fourth—and this would be of some interest—each unsuccessful candidate for the office of Speaker could still submit himself to the general electorate in a constituency.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In relation to the bills with which we have just been dealing I believe the record should be clear that the motions were seconded by the hon. member for St. Jean (Mr. Smith) and not Mr. Smith (Churchill).

DND FLIGHT 712

Question No. 1,162—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names of all persons, including crew members, late additions to the passenger manifests, etc. on Department of National Defence Flight 712, that left Ottawa on December 18, 1977 for Vancouver?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): DND flight 712 is a scheduled flight from Shearwater to Vancouver with scheduled stops at Ottawa, Trenton, Winnipeg and Edmonton. The names of the passengers who boarded this flight in Ottawa were as follows: WO P. Davies; Capt A. McKay; Capt B. Campbell; Pte B. Davis: LCol J. Holt; Maj D. Johnston; WO M. Keddy; M/Cpl D. J. Dolinski; WO and Mrs. H. Vieweg; Cpl Kruger; Mr. Morewood; Dr. J. Reesor; Mr. and Mrs. S. Schumacher, M.P. and 2 children; M/Cpl C. Silver; Mr. B. Telford; Cpl D. Wells; Lt J. R. Vallée; Mr. B. Clarke; Sgt R. R. Germain; Capt D. Lascelle; Miss B. McDonald; WO C. M. Pallard; Sgt J. Whelan; Capt A. Burton. In regard to crew members see question No. 2,881 of the second session of the 30th Parliament, Hansard No. 175 page 8266 dated October 17, 1977.

MULTICULTURALISM

Question No. 1,359—Mr. Haidasz:

What was the total budget for the federal multiculturalism program for each year since October, 1971?

Hon. Norman A. Cafik (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): In so far as the Department is concerned, its total budget for the multiculturalism program since 1971-1972 has been: Fiscal Year, 000's: 1971-72, Operating, 585; Grants, 1,594; Total, 2,179. 1972-73, Operating, 947; Grants, 2,309; Total, 3,256. 1973-74, Operating, 2,528; Grants, 3,131; Total, 5,659. 1974-75, Operating, 2,592; Grants, 2,921; Total, 5,513. 1975-76, Operating, 2,559; Grants, 2,735; Total, 5,294. 1976-77, Operating, 2,259; Grants, 2,916; Total, 5,175. 1977-78, Operating, 2,291; Grants, 3,716; Total, 6,007.

Question No. 1,439—Mr. Mitges:

For the fiscal year ended March 31 (a) 1976 (b) 1977, what were the expenditures of the multiculturalism directorate under the heading of (i) operating (ii) capital (iii) grants and contributions?

TRANSPORTATION OF MILK

Question No. 1,609—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

During the fiscal year (a) 1976-77 (b) 1977-78, did the government grant money for the transportation of milk in the area located east of Lévis, Quebec and, if so (i) in what amount (ii) to whom or to which companies?

Hon. Eugene F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The transportation of milk is a provincial responsibility and, therefore, any assistance provided would come under a provincial program.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure to the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I must say that the trouble we have had with this bill to which closure was applied during second reading, was an example of the abuse of power by the government, with the government matching the opposition speaker for speaker, but closure on committee of the whole stage of this bill, on some real issues affecting Canadians, was not just an arrogant abuse and exercise of power but was another blow of the hammer that is chipping away at the foundation of parliamentary democracy and our liberty.

The confusion that we just saw when third reading of Bill C-56 was introduced is a forerunner of the confusion for which the Canadian people will have to pay and which they will have to face as this bill takes effect. I am very surprised that at third reading there was no statement from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), let alone a statement from his parliamentary secretary.

Like other hon. members, I have worked hard at one or two aspects of Bill C-56, particularly the research and development matters in clause 6. Clause 14 affecting the transfer of farm property is of serious concern, and that aspect needs more debate and understanding, as I believe does clause 6. I am also aware of the weaknesses in clause 32 which will create serious complications for the small business sector in Canada. I would have liked to see more clarity and understanding developed within that area of the bill during committee of the whole. Clause 34 also is of serious concern to Canadians, as is evidenced by the mail load which members of parliament have on that subject, and the Minister of Finance himself admitted that this clause of the bill could stand more work.

This is a last minute bill, of a slapdash nature. The Minister of Finance denied the people of Canada through the parliamentary system the right to explore, improve, and even develop a greater understanding of these and many other issues within this tax bill.

Others will probably comment on these clauses, but I was one of several members who did considerable work on the research and development issues which were debated in the budget debate and in clause 6 of the bill. With background help, very substantive amendments were prepared which would have improved all industrial aspects of research and development in Canada and would have put in place very real incentives which would have worked to smooth out this area of need in the Canadian economy. These amendments were passed on to the Minister of Finance during committee of the whole last Friday, but no, all this effort died with the "tough guy" use of closure during committee of the whole.

The announcements of both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Buchanan) are misleading and overstated, not only in the budget speech of the minister but in the statements released by the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Both these ministers have received bad advice, and the record should be corrected.

Basic to the amendments given to the Minister of Finance last Friday was the separation of research and development expenditure into current and capital expenditures. Second to that premise, we suggested that full credit be given to both capital and current research and development expenditures for companies which have an aggregate research and development expenditure of less than $1 million. Companies in this category make up approximately 25 per cent of the industrial research and development expenditure in Canada.

For companies with aggregate research and development expenditures of over $1 million, we suggested that the tax credit or allowance be based on incremental increases in current and capital expenditures. Seventy-five per cent of industrial research and development expenditures are in this category of companies, that is, companies which have already aggregated an expenditure in research and development greater than $1 million.

We also proposed in the amendments given to the minister in committee of the whole that small firms without profit upon which to claim a credit or an allowance be given a grant, of course under rigid and stringent conditions.

What would these amendments cost, particularly in terms of the statements issued by both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Science and Technology? In our study of that part of the presentation we looked at the May 10, 1978, issue of StatsCan under "Projections for Research and Development" and we found that in 1978, for current research and development expenditures there would be $933 million, and the increment over 1977 would be $72.3 million netted out after the government component has been subtracted. On capital research and development for 1978, we find in these statistics that the capital would be $93.9 million, with the increment equalling $1.1 million, for a total R and D expenditure in 1978 of $1026.9 million, and an increment of $73.4 million.

I would like to point out that the over-all growth rate for 1978 is expected to be only $75.5 million gross, or 8.4 per cent, versus the $175 million which was announced by the Minister of State for Science and Technology.

We believe that the best way—and we were not given the courtesy of discussing this in committee of the whole as a result of the minister's closure of that process—is to go the tax credit route rather than allowing the 50 per cent additional allowance which the government is proposing in Bill C-56. The reason for that is that if you look at the 25 per cent credit on capital, plus the 25 per cent credit on the first $1 million of capital expenditure, you get a total of $81.74 million. This is within the $85 million announced by the Minister of State for Science and Technology. So we are not asking that more be allowed in the form of expenditure than was announced in the official statement of the government. According to the studies we have done on this subject, the tax credit route is the most sensible route to take, putting in place the incentives which would work best in the private sector and in the industrial component of Canada.

I might also say that it was recommended at the first ministers' conference, particularly by the first minister of the province of Ontario, the Hon. William J. Davis, in the "Economic Development Policy for Canada" published by Ontario, on February 13-15, 1978, that the government should replace existing research, design and development assistance programs with federal and provincial tax credits, and I emphasize tax credits, which would provide direct incentives for expanded levels of R and D activity in Canada.

In light of all this, and in light of the arithmetic which was available to the government, why has it resisted the tax credits? I have not been able to understand that fully. Also I do not understand why it insists on proceeding with its 50 per cent additional allowance which does not match the figures which the two ministers have announced to the House and to the people of Canada.

With respect to the 50 per cent research allowance amendment, if the government had accepted the principle I have outlined in my short address today and applied the 50 per cent research allowance, the cost to the government on the first $1 million, all capital, plus the first $1 million current, fully eligible, would be $65.39 million, again well within the figures stated by the minister and well below the amounts which would be available as an incentive to industry if we took the tax credit route. That is why I have been debating with the Minister of Finance during committee of the whole stage in the short time I was allowed, and pleading with him, to take the tax credit route versus the route proposed in Bill C-56. If we compare these two cases to the existing proposals in the bill, the government will allow $38.15 million of incentive. The Minister of Finance has announced $50 million. If one combines that with the other $35 million which was announced by the Minister of State for Science and Technology, the total is $85 million. In actual fact the bill before us, in terms of the opening statements of both ministers, is nothing but flimflam. There is nothing close to $85 million of incentive available to the industrial sector on research and development. The figure is $38.15 million, on the basis of the bill as it stands at third reading.

The Minister of State for Science and Technology indicated that the government is sincere and is prepared to provide an incentive worth $85 million in order to realize the growth target for industrial research and development which has been announced. The only way to get there is with the tax credit. I attempted to get that across to the minister during committee of the whole proceedings. There is no other way to get there. The 50 per cent allowance will just not do the job. I challenge both ministers to withdraw their inaccurate statements which indicated that $85 million was available through this legislation.

If the minister is unwilling to go the tax route and attempts to pass off some of the costs of industrial research and development to the provinces, then he should accept some of the principles which were submitted across the floor in these amendments. He should allow the 50 per cent allowance to apply on the basis of the amendment I attempted to present during committee of the whole stage. If the government went that route, instead of $85 million being the incentive component to the industrial community, the incentive component would be $65.9 million, which is 20 per cent less than the benefits advertised by the Minister of State for Science and Technology.

The amendment on allowance is still $27.24 million better or 71 per cent higher than the existing budget proposal. The minister and the government cannot see their way to the tax credit proposal, which is the correct way to go if incentive is to be put into the industrial sector. They insist on staying with the 50 per cent additional allowance. They would be 71 per cent better off in terms of incentive to the industrial sector than they are under the bill as it stands now.

During committee of the whole stage we were attempting to get at some fundamental aspects of the bill. I am so concerned about this, and the closure which was imposed on committee of the whole stage, that I wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That Bill C-56, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of reconsidering clauses 6 and 14 thereof.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity of making a few comments with regard to Bill C-56. The minister purports that this bill will perform a certain function for people involved in family farm corporations. I contend it will not.

Perhaps the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) does not understand or particularly care. Possibly the same holds true for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner). He should know better, but perhaps he does not have the time to give this aspect of the bill the respect it should have. He could have shown a little more consideration for the people who are caught in this rollover of family farm capital gains tax. Of course the Minister of National Revenue has interpreted the bill in the manner that he understands it. The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) said that the bill is complete in itself. This shows how little he knows about it. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is the one man who should be up on his feet protecting the rights of people involved in Canadian agriculture. To my knowledge, he has not made a speech. Undoubtedly he is not aware of the critical situation in which quite a large number of people are caught.

I noticed the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) was in the House a few moments ago. He stated that he was in favour of the minister bringing in an amendment to protect the people caught in this act. When the time comes to vote on this matter, I trust he and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) will give us support. If anything is worth doing, it is worth doing well.

On April 10 during the budget speech, as reported at page 4318 of Hansard, the Minister of Finance said the following:

The ways and means motion contains several other important changes. First, the current provisions which permit the transfer of farm land and buildings by a farmer to his children without payment of capital gains tax will be extended to incorporated family farms.

We took the minister's word at face value and thought that he meant what he was saying. Later we found out that either he was playing loose with words or did not know what he was talking about. We brought this to the minister's attention on April 25 in committee. As reported at page 23:22 of the committee report, the minister replied as follows:

I have been made aware of that complaint . . . I have received some correspondence on that and I have looked into it. We have discussed it thoroughly with the ministry of revenue, who made the interpretation, and I am planning to clarify those clauses in the bill which will be in front of the House following my budget. It is one of the amendments that I would like to put forward in order to clarify the interpretation.

The people who are caught in this are those who have set up family farm corporations but did not include all the farm property in that corporation. In turn, the corporation leased, rented, or entered into some form of agreement with the owner whereby the farm operation continued. With the interpretation given by officials of the Department of National Revenue, there is no means whereby this property can be rolled over to that corporation, or from the owner to a member of the corporation who is a descendant. There is only one thing that can happen in such a case, and that is that capital gains tax will have to be paid on the property when there is a transfer or exchange.

On April 25 the minister went on to state:

I do not want to put the blame—I just think it is an interpretation. I do not want to say that it is my shop or their shop. I just think, as Minister of Finance, that my responsibility is to change it. I do not want to know who made the interpretation. That is a fact of life that I want to correct. I think I would like to see the face of the man who made that decision. It was not me but I will correct the guy.

That is what this amendment is all about. We are asking the minister to take this legislation back to the committee of the whole and make this correction so that these people are not going to be caught in this horrible situation.

In the event of a death in a family there will be a sizable amount of money transferred from either the corporation or the individual to Revenue Canada. This is one of the reasons this deferral of capital gains tax is so important. In a great many cases if the tax has to be paid, the property will not be retained by the corporation of the family, but will have to be sold in order to pay the tax to the federal government.

On June 6 the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, who should also know what the situation is, had this to say:

In the case of this budget, the extension of this rollover provision to the small corporate farm is simply the completion—

Let me underline that word "completion". He is saying that this is a finalization. He does not realize that a great many people out in the field accept minister's words at their face value. I suggest they will find out too late that they are caught by this situation. That minister went on to say:

—is simply the completion of a piece of work which was started in a previous budget when the direct transfer of a farm from parent to child was already made a matter of special consideration so that the capital gains tax need not be paid at that time.

On June 12 I put a question to the Minister of Finance asking him to clarify his position, and this is what he said, as reported at page 6302 of Hansard:

The hon. member is talking about leasing land. If the owner wishes to do that, he can transfer the land to the corporation tax free before the rollover. That is the way in which the provision is understood by my officials, and there is no need for any change in the law.

Later on, as reported on the same page, I asked the following question:

—I should like to make this matter clear. Can a farmer who owns land that is being leased to a corporation which is the operator transfer that land without being subject to capital gains tax? Can it be sold or transferred to the corporation?

The minister stated in reply:

The questions asked by the hon. member are covered by the rollover provisions in the act.

The minister also said, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

If a farmer is making a transfer to another entity a third person, and not a corporation which he owns, he is required to pay capital gains. I was speaking about the transfer of lands to his own corporation. The transfer of farm lands has not been exempted completely from any capital gain. That is not what is meant.

The following morning before the committee of finance Senator Guay made the following statement as it appears at page 43:7 of the committee hearings of June 13:

I understand that it is quite common for farmland to be owned by a taxpayer who leases it to his farm corporation. In these circumstances it is the corporation and not a member of the taxpayer's family that carries on the farming business. Consequently, neither the current law nor the proposal in Bill C-56 would permit a deferral of the capital gains tax where the land is transferred directly from the taxpayer to his child. If you would like I can repeat that. I will give you a copy of it, if you like, to look at.

That is a pretty emphatic statement by the minister in charge of national revenue. It emphasizes the confusion in the minds of the several ministers involved with this legislation. Certainly those people who think they are home free in respect of capital gains tax and the rollover, not only corporations but private individuals, are really going to be caught. They will suffer because the value of land has increased to such an extent the tax will also be a considerable amount. It is not as though the money were available. I have no quarrel where the land is sold to an outsider and there is money available, but in many cases when the land is transferred from an individual to a descendant, either by way of a corporation or a direct transfer between individuals, these people who presume they are clear because of this legislation are going to be caught.

This whole thing is a mess, and it was my hope that the Minister of Finance would have seen fit to clear it up when he had the opportunity to do so at the time the legislation was before the committee of the whole. That is why I would hope that even at this late date he might reconsider and accept the amendment before the House.

It would not take long to clear up the problem that has been referred to by the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), myself, and several others. I know I speak on behalf of all hon. members who represent farming areas in western Canada, including the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger). He has been vitally concerned with this from the beginning. In fact we had a discussion recently as to how one could establish the definition of a corporate family farm that would qualify.

I hope the minister will take this legislation back to the committee of the whole for a few hours in order that this confusion can be cleared up. These people would then not be caught in what could be a horrendous mess.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the budget is one of the major tools of government in achieving full employment, providing jobs for all those who want to work. One of the major goals of a tax system, of which income tax is one of the most important facets, is the moving of a country to a more equitable situation for all people. In both these objectives, full employment and a more equitable society, this government has failed miserably. Whether one looks at unemployment in terms of the number of people out of work or the percentage of the labour force unemployed, we have the greatest number and the highest percentage since the great depression years of the 1930s. We have one of, if not the highest, rates of unemployment in any of the industrialized countries of the western world.

In May of this year, the last period for which we have figures, there were, according to Statistics Canada, 933,000 unemployed. This amounts to an increase of more than 100,000 over the same month in 1977, and it means that 8.4 per cent of the labour force is without work. In our two largest provinces, Quebec and Ontario, more than 300,000 people were unemployed, and if one looks at the rate of unemployment in the Atlantic provinces one can only characterize it as a disastrous situation. The official figures of Statistics Canada indicate that 18.5 per cent of the labour force in Newfoundland is unemployed; 10.8 per cent in Nova Scotia, 13.6 per cent in New Brunswick. Those are the official figures, Mr. Speaker, and, as every member of parliament knows, there are several hundred thousand people who are unemployed but who are not being classified in this category by Statistics Canada because they are not now actively looking for work. They are not looking for work because in their areas, for example, New Brunswick, Cape Breton Island, or Quebec, there is no work to be found.

However, instead of dealing with this very serious problem which is so important to some people in this country, we will in the next year be spending a major part of our time and effort in debating the questions of a new constitution and a new House of Federation, which, I submit, will be of little real importance to most Canadians in any part of the country, including Quebec.

Instead of dealing with the problem of unemployment, and instead of an expansionary budget which would get the economy moving, as recommended by organizations as diverse as the Economic Council and the C.D. Howe Institute, we get a minor tuning of the economy through the minister's present budget, which has already proven that it is unable to achieve the 5 per cent increase in the gross national product that was predicted by the minister when it was brought down.

Instead of an income tax system which is fair and which treats income from wherever it is derived as taxable income, we get a system so full of loopholes that the other night the minister had to urge members of the House to pass the section dealing with the registered retirement savings plans on the promise he would fix the loopholes which had been brought to his attention, at some later date.

In terms of using the income tax system as a means of moving toward a more equitable society in which Canadians who live in a state of poverty would see some improvement in their situation relative to other groups in Canada, virtually nothing has been accomplished by the government in the past 25 years. Professor Gillespie of Carleton University's economic department, in a study for the C.D. Howe Institute published this year, said:

> —the federal government has not improved the economic position of the poor relative to the highest-income families during the 1970s. The social legislation of the early 1970s failed to improve the relative economic position of the poorest families. Tax reform provided modest benefits for lower-middle-income families relative to the poor and to the highest-income families, but it did not substantially alter the distribution of income.

He went on to say:

> Federal budgetary policies during the 1970's have not redistributed income from the highest-income families to the poor . . . Thus it was not the poor and needy who were protected from the "ravages of inflation", during Mr. Turner's tenure as minister of finance.

I would add, Mr. Speaker, nor under the guidance of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien).

Some members of parliament, particularly Liberal members, may not believe Professor Gillespie. To those members who may have doubts about what Professor Gillespie indicated, I suggest they read a speech made by the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to a conference of YMCA's less than a month ago. I would like to quote a couple a sentences from this speech where she said that little has been done for the:

—nearly 2 million children who live in families with incomes inadequate for their needs and for the 600,000 working families who spend two thirds or more of their incomes to provide the basic necessities of food, clothing and shelter.

To demonstrate the truth of my claim, later in her speech she went on to say:

In 1977, the poorest 20 per cent of Canadian families received less than 6 per cent of total Canadian family income while the richest 20 per cent of Canadian families received 40 per cent of all the income. These figures are, unfortunately, very stable. The share of income going to our poor families has scarcely changed since the end of the second world war.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare agrees with Professor Gillespie, that our tax policies and our social programs have not helped the poor improve their lot.

Just how effective have our tax policies been? Again, let us look at the speech of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, where she said:

The average taxpayer in the $5—10,000 category benefited from various special personal income tax exemptions in 1976 to the tune of about $237 per year. The average taxpayer in the over $50,000 category benefited to the tune of $5,592. And of course if you were too poor to pay taxes you would not have benefited at all. That may well be good fiscal policy and in some respects it is good social policy too—but still, it does seem odd that those who need the benefits most are least likely to get them.

I do not think it is odd, I think it is criminal.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what about all the special provisions of our tax system, the exemptions from payment of income tax on the first $1,000 of income received from investments and savings, the RRSP plan, the RRIP plan, all of which will long live to destroy the Carter commission principles? They are still with us. What we have is an income tax system which bites pretty hard on those who derive their income from salaries or wages, particularly those at the lower levels. Somehow, it lets many who derive their incomes from sources other than salaries or wages, such as from the ownership of stocks, bonds, real estate, investments in oil, natural gas, etc., get off pretty lightly.

I used an illustration several days ago from a Revenue Canada publication called "Taxation Statistics, 1977 Edition" which said that in 1975, the most recent year for which figures are available, there were 226 persons earning $50,000 to $100,000 who paid no tax; 58 persons earning $100,000 to $200,000 who paid no tax, and 21 persons earning $200,000 and over who paid no tax. I suggest to the minister that this is the kind of problem he ought to direct his attention to, the kind of problem he ought to take in hand so that Canadians will get an income tax system that treats all people fairly and tax those who have the larger incomes proportionate to their income, rather than the reverse, as it is now.

Our tax laws are either deliberately designed or so carelessly designed that we do not know what happens. We do not know who the people are with the high incomes. We do not know who the people are who do not pay taxes because they find legal ways to avoid paying. We do not know which corporations are able to avoid payment of taxes, or at least pay very low taxes. Canada is one of the few countries that does not have provision in its tax or other laws to guarantee that such information is made available.

I would suggest to the minister that he examine the system in the United States where free enterprise is alive and well, despite the fact that for over 40 years their laws have required the public reporting of information about individual incomes and corporation profits. I suggest that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue examine the Securities and Exchange Act in the United States, particularly the section which requires that corporations which sell shares must disclose and publicize information concerning the remuneration of directors and officers of those corporations. Those corporations whose shares are to be traded must file an application with the Securities and Exchange Commission which, according to the act, must contain such information as the rules and regulations of the commission require. This may cover information pertaining to directors, officers, underwriters; their remuneration and material contracts with the corporations; bonus and profit-sharing arrangements, and options existing or to be created in respect of their securities.

The May 15, 1978, issue of Business Week, which is read mainly by businessmen in the United States, carried an article which listed the 20 highest paid U.S. executives last year. Amongst them were Archie R. McCardell, president of International Harvester, whose income was $1.496 million; James E. Lee of Gulf Oil, $1.099 million; Henry Ford II, chairman of Ford Motor Company, $992,000. It is ironic and sad that when some people wanted to find out what the earnings of the president of CPR were, the information was only available because CPR shares were trading in the United States and it was required to make that information public in the United States. In that way we learned that the president of CPR earned in excess of $300,000 in the last year for which he reported.

We all know that Canadian corporations in this country have benefited by deferred corporation taxes to the extent of almost $10 billion, which means, in effect, that they have been given interest-free loans to $10 billion. I wonder how many Canadian citizens who want to buy a house or a car, or want to remodel their home, would like the opportunity to get an interest-free loan from the government? There is no such thing for them. We cannot afford to give interest-free loans to the ordinary citizen, but we can afford to give $10 billion worth of interest-free loans to Canadian corporations. Because of the secrecy imposed by our tax laws we do not know which corporations have benefited from these deferred taxes or how much any of them received.

In the United States the people at least know how many and which of their major corporations did not pay federal taxes despite the fact that they made substantial profits. Many of those which had some taxes only paid at a rate of 10 per cent or less. In the United States they know that in 1975 the Ford Motor Company had profits of $148 million and paid no federal tax at all; they know that Bethlehem Steel had profits of $225 million and paid no federal taxes, that Western Electric had profits of $185 million and paid no federal taxes, and that Lockheed Aircraft—a company about which we know something in Canada—paid no taxes despite its $84 million profit.

Our income tax system does not begin to meet any of the standards of equity in a modern society. What this country needs is a budget to help us move to full employment, rather than the extraordinarily severe unemployment we have at the present. This country needs an income tax system to move it toward more equity, a system which would begin to improve the condition of the poor and ensure that those in the upper income brackets would be required to pay their fair share of taxes. Our income tax system meets none of these goals, and it is for that reason that we simply cannot and will not vote for this bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, now that we are at the third reading stage of a bill which has been discussed lengthily and seriously, I would like to make a few comments, and indeed I could not do otherwise in view of the background of this proposal which already dates back two months and a half. Of course, we have talked about basic principles and I would like to say immediately that we have defended rather well, I believe, one basic principle concerning the refusal to involve ourselves in provincial matters.

We are very much aware that the federal government must work in close co-operation with the provinces to help them improve the economy on the regional as well as the national levels, but from the start we have shown our indignation about the way in which the proposals were made, since they were conditional proposals, and we have always believed that it is not enough to talk about consultations, but that there must also be co-operation, and I believe that consultation must start from a spirit of co-operation, that is that they must involve two, ten or eleven interested parties, which was not the case in this instance and as we have evidence that there was not enough consultation. Of course, there has been a lot of talk about this new initiative on the part of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). He boasted of having brought about discussions with his provincial counterparts for the first time, but we also know that this consultation did not last long and that the provincial ministers of finance had only one choice: to take it or leave it.

From the very beginning, there was also the position taken by the Quebec government and unanimously supported—this can not be repeated too often—by the National Assembly. Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to underline that we defended the position taken by the National Assembly which represented the entire population of Quebec, except, of course, my friend opposite who did not want to be part of those people that were being protected by the National Assembly, whether we want to admit it or not. The Minister of Finance first of all hastily rejected the formula suggested by Quebec for selective reductions. I shall not of course repeat all his comments that I quoted in the House in second reading, but he already said that this position was aimed at destroying federalism and dividing our country and so on.

The Quebec proposal was absolutely impossible to accept for the Minister of Finance although sometime later the province of Quebec applied its proposal in some selected industries and it was demonstrated that the allegations of the Minister of Finance were false as the federal Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce recognized that the industries that benefited from the provincial tax cut were also in other provinces than Quebec and that the incentive proposed by the Minister of Finance was not limited only to the province of Quebec. Then I think that the remarks made since the beginning by the Minister of Finance are an indication of his malevolence.

In the circumstances I think we had no other choice but to support a province that wanted not only to protect but help those sectors that needed it most, and still today there has been an announcement concerning textile, furniture, and importations, that demonstrates that those industries have been weak for a long time and that the Minister of Finance, even if he has been minister of industry, trade and commerce has made his decision much too late to be in the least helpful. But the consensus of the National Assembly on that issue has been neglected. So, I think that the Minister of Finance has been disrespectful to the province of Quebec, his own province which he represents.

So there was malevolent pig-headedness and stubbornness in solving the dispute over the remote possibility of the federal government ever reaching an agreement with the provincial government or the government of Quebec. The Minister of Finance reminded us that the letter of his provincial counterpart implied agreement on the proposal contained in this bill, that is clause 30. But that is not true, Mr. Speaker.

You have to read the letter. There is no way anyone reading the letter can even suggest that the minister of finance of Quebec agrees with the federal Minister of Finance. And if you read the letter carefully it is obvious that the government of Quebec would have preferred the second option mentioned in that letter. Then, what is unreal is that the Minister of Finance himself proposed a tax abatement, an arrangement between governments. Because the government of Quebec rejected it outright he never wanted to come back on his proposal. So I say again that this is partisan stubbornness or partisan pig-headedness. Those are about the only two reasons.

Indeed the Minister of Finance knew full well that there would have been support on our side if he had been willing to correct what we call an injustice or an interference in provincial affairs. The Minister of Finance meant to stimulate the economy and increase the purchasing power. The Quebec government's proposal met those two objectives in sectors which are vital to Quebec, and to the tune of 8 per cent on those selected products rather than 3 per cent.

So I must say I am most disappointed with members opposite representing Quebec. I am sorry and disappointed with their attitude vis-à-vis that proposal coming from Quebec which was supported unanimously by the National Assembly. To that you can add all the manipulation that went on during two and a half months and all kinds of accusations that we on this side were in bed with the Parti Québécois. My friends opposite never wanted to admit that Mr. Ryan, Mr. Biron and others at the National Assembly were in perfect agreement with Quebec's proposal.

This manipulation and these allegations were not grounded but I think I have to refute them at the third reading stage because I am sorry to have to say that, when the proposal from Quebec came in, we had an opportunity to demonstrate our type of federalism was flexible. We had a golden opportunity to give evidence that it was possible to make this federal system work, but the government has allowed those who want to split this country to fatten their file with outstanding evidence of the fact that it is impossible to deal with this federal government. Consequently those who wish to separate from Canada will have an additional argument at their disposal.

This is nothing new, Mr. Speaker. This confrontation has been going on for ten years and with governments other than this one. Is it necessary to recall the conflicts and confrontations which took place with Mr. Bourassa and Mr. Johnson? Of course they serve us as a rationale that this time this Quebec government has a particular purpose for acting that way, a purpose which incidentally we have never shared on this side of this House. We are being accused of sharing the objectives of the government of Quebec on a very political issue. This is false. Yet we thought and still do that we had the responsibility of defending a basic principle, mainly that the federal government must not interfere in the preparation of provincial budgets. If the finance minister wants to urge the provinces to improve the state of our national economy or the regional economies, there is nothing to prevent him from doing so but he must do it in close co-operation and with a real involvement of the provinces in the decision-making process, not on a conditional basis. And that is the basic principle which we on this side of the House have wanted to uphold, respectful as we are for the provinces and because it is the duty of every member who believes in true federalism.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that because of the obstinate attitude of my Quebec friends opposite, an attitude which I have sometimes found shameful as a Quebecker, I shall certainly not be able to vote in favour of this bill. I am not saying that there are no desirable provisions in it but that the strategy of the federal government is to propose a number of measures which are desirable together with one which is unacceptable. Yet, it wants to shove it down our throats, something which is not new for it has already tried it. There are precedents, but we are saying no, while acknowledging that a number of the provisions in this bill are good. I suggest that because of the basic proposal, no member with a minimum of respect for the provinces would support this bill.

Before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I should like to add that under these circumstances, I have been pleased, as an elected representative of Quebec, to defend the position taken by the Quebec government, which aimed only at preserving the vital interests of the province without jeopardizing the national economy.

[English]

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my contribution to the debate will be very brief. I would like to speak in support of the amendment proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), and to say that I would like to refer clause 6 back in view of some of the excellent remarks made in this debate by my colleagues and all members of parliament on both sides of the House.

I feel the concept of the tax credit is far preferable to the concept of the special allowance. The one feature of the special allowance which disturbs me is the lumping of operational and capital expenditures together in arriving at the 50 per cent special allowance. Perhaps the detrimental aspect of this feature could be explained by a brief example. If a firm were to spend a lot of money on capital research facilities, a large building, for instance, in one year, and if in the following year it incurred expenditures of an operational nature, the shadow of the huge expenditure in one year would fall against expenditures of future years. Thus, the increases in operation and development expenditures would not meet the 50 per cent allowance provisions, so the incentive would not be present and the government's purpose would be defeated.

Provision of a general research credit in the form of a tax credit was recommended by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in a brief submitted on February 15 of this year. It was recommended by the Science Council, by the Senate committee, by the President of Northern Telecom, and by the scientific community generally. Almost everyone favoured the 25 per cent tax credit proposal. There were variations, of course, with regard to threshold clauses and increments in years to come.

I favour the tax credit of 25 per cent because I feel it provides a much stronger incentive than the 50 per cent research allowance, while eliminating the unfair discrimination against small firms by means of differential rates. I refer to the fact that a large firm paying a 46 per cent tax rate would—applying this to a dollar—derive a 46 cent benefit. A small firm paying tax at the rate of 15 per cent only gets credit for 15 cents on the dollar. This is the discriminatory aspect to which I have referred. Under the tax credit proposal it would not occur. I would favour a tax credit of 25 per cent in relation to capital expenditures and, separately, for current or operational expenditures bearing in mind the lumping feature I mentioned a few moments ago.

As far as current expenditures are concerned, the provision of a base level of research and development expenditure qualifying for the full 25 per cent tax credit favours small entrepreneurial firms which play the most important role in technological innovations, and whose needs for financial assistance are greatest. Most of the firms which fall into this category are Canadian-owned; they are native industries which I believe we should support to a much greater extent than at present. Larger firms with research and development expenditures in excess of the base level—and I think in terms of a million dollars being the base level—should receive the incentive, but only with respect to increased research and development effort above that of the previous year or above the threshold level, thereby preventing windfall benefits and short term profits.

Capital expenditures should be treated separately from current expenditures and receive the full 25 per cent tax credit on the grounds that new research facilities represent a prima facie expansion of the capability of a firm to perform in this area. A feature of this kind was included in the former IRDIA program which succeeded the 1962 special allowance feature which was discarded in that year. I think it was about 1975 that the IRDIA program was discontinued. I feel that capital expenditures should not be subject to the incremental feature, in other words, that the full expenditure should be subject to benefit.

In the case of newly established or small firms, I see an anomaly. If often happens that such firms have insufficient tax liability to take advantage of the proposed incentive. I would therefore suggest we consider giving them the option of a cash grant in lieu of any unused tax credit arising from their research and development expenditures. This was recommended in the brief of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association which I mentioned earlier. In order to prevent abuse of the incentive, I think there should be safeguards to ensure that R and D qualifying for the incentive is carried out in Canada and that the results are exploited in Canada for the benefit of the Canadian economy. I believe the tax credit route would permit us to give the program a strong Canadian orientation and, to my mind, this is essential, particularly where small firms are concerned.

In a branch plant economy, the branch plant can obtain long term financial assistance from the parent, whereas a small, new Canadian firm has no such opportunity. As I say, I believe we should give serious thought to helping such firms and this is one measure which could be used, though, of course, there are others. This would at least be one small step in the right direction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in joining this debate as the last spokesman for my party before the House divides on the motion put by my hon. friend from Capilano, and also on the main motion with respect to the third reading of the bill, I think it might be useful to summarize some of the most important aspects of what has occurred in relation, first of all, to the budget of April 10 and then, subsequently, to Bill C-56.

I shall not reiterate the very valid points made by my hon. friends with regard to clause 6 underlining our belief that the research and development proposals contained in that clause could be improved upon. It is most unfortunate that we were not given the opportunity in the committee of the whole to have a better discussion of our proposals in connection with the research and development provisions.

In the second place, clause 14 deals with the corporate family farm rollover provisions, and many of our members have serious questions to raise concerning the proposals the minister has put forward. We feel they could be improved upon, but again, unfortunately, because of closure we were not given ample opportunity to debate and discuss the question with the minister. Then again, I would remind the House that there is tremendous concern across the country among credit unions and others in connection with the minister's proposals regarding RRSPs. He is proposing a tax on lump sums a person might have in an RRSP at the time of death. We believe the effect of this could have been softer; there are other methods which are available.

These are three separate areas of concern which many members wished to advance and deal with, but unfortunately we were cut off by closure. The motion placed before us by my hon. friend from Capilano gives the House an opportunity to refer clauses 6 and 14 back to committee so they can be dealt with as they should have been in the first place.

The other matter to which I wish to refer was discussed briefly. Unfortunately, we could not discuss RRSPs fully because closure took hold, and there was no longer any time left for further debate.

The fourth thing I would like to mention is the fact that we never did get a clause in this bill which really is a reneging of the minister's earlier position with respect to the taxation of cash surrender values in life insurance policies. The minister is now saying that the interest which might have been paid on a loan, for example, with respect to cash surrender value in a life insurance policy is no longer an amount which can be credited against capital cost with respect to cash surrender value. The net result is that the taxation of cash surrender values which the minister assured us would not occur because of the new provisions in this bill, will in fact occur. If I had been given an opportunity to discuss that with the minister in the committee of the whole, I think we could have made some very valid arguments showing why the present provision is most unfortunate. If the government does not realize the consequences of that clause now, it certainly will as we go down the road if this bill is passed in its present form.

Many hon. members will recall that I also raised a point about how harsh the government has been with small businesses. It has put a new provision in this bill which in effect will restrict the number of people small businesses can turn to if they need venture capital to shore up their equity positions. This again is very unfortunate.

Basically what I am saying is that since this minister has taken office he has failed to recognize the worth-while function this House can perform in trying to adjust whatever budgetary provisions the minister suggests. The essence of a working parliament is that the government proposes and the House generally disposes of whatever legislation the government sees fit. However, we seem to be at the point where this minister, presumably backed up by his Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), now takes the view that when the government proposes, that is it, we accept, and that there should be little discussion from that point on. In fact, the government seems to be completely intolerant regarding any questioning such as is usual in committee of the whole proceedings. That is not the way to make parliament work. Not only is that the attitude of the government within parliament but, unfortunately, we find that it is also spilling out in its general approach to federal-provincial relations.

The government is now taking the attitude that cooperation means briefly telling the provinces what it proposes, and expecting the provinces to agree quickly. However, in the event that one or more of the provinces say no, there is an attempt to blackmail them into a position which the federal government feels is in accordance with its wish. We cannot have more unity or happier relations between the various parts of this country if that attitude prevails in the government of the day in Ottawa. That was the fundamental question we dealt with regarding clause 30 and, unfortunately, we were not able to deal with it at clause 59 of this bill because, of course, we did not reach clause 59.

The fundamental question is whether the government was fair in introducing a provision on April 10 affecting provincial sales taxes in nine of our provinces knowing, as the government did, that there was no agreement forthcoming from one of the nine provinces which would be affected. In this connection the minister has claimed that somehow he thought he was close to an agreement, that he thought there was some kind of understanding with the minister of finance of Quebec, and that that minister flip-flopped and changed his mind. I challenge that.

I do not think that the minister of finance of Quebec at any time gave the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) an assurance which would be sufficient for him to go ahead and bring in the budget in the form it was brought in on April 10. In support of that I refer hon. members to an article written by W. A. Wilson, a well known columnist in the Montreal area. The article is entitled "Endless Chrétien-Parizeau Dispute, A High Tax On Canadian Patience". In the body of the article Mr. Wilson states the following:

There is no doubt that Mr. Chrétien's budget has produced an unholy political mess, with Quebec's federalist parties lined up with the Péquistes against him. The underlying politics with which the issue was approached in the first place remain mystifying.

[Mr. Stevens.]

One of Mr. Chrétien's aides asked to see this correspondent a short time ago and subsequently argued that a couple of articles I had written were too harsh and somewhat unfair. But, placing no restrictions whatever on the use I could make of the information, he told me of two aspects of the affair which I had not known and which seem to me to be significant.

Mr. Wilson then set out the two aspects of the affair which a personal aide to the Minister of Finance related to him. This is what Mr. Wilson relates:

—About a week before the Chrétien budget was delivered, Mr. Parizeau told the federal minister by telephone that he was having difficulty with the proposal with his Quebec cabinet colleagues and did not know whether he could go along with it;

According to the minister's aide, Mr. Parizeau was telling the Minister of Finance that he was having difficulty with cabinet ministers in Quebec regarding the federal minister's proposal.

—Subsequently more than one provincial treasurer got in touch with Mr. Chrétien to alert him to the fact that Mr. Parizeau had approached them seeking to persuade other provinces to reject the federal sales tax proposal.

That was the second aspect. Mr. Wilson then went on to state the following:

It seems to me from this that the federal cabinet knew very well, before the Chrétien budget was presented, that serious trouble with Quebec lay ahead. Nonetheless, they proceeded and the row blew up to major proportions. It can be presented as a federalist-separatist fight, as Mr. Trudeau has done, but it is clear that if every party in the Ontario legislature were to combine in opposition to a major federal finance proposal the matter would be seen everywhere as serious.

Nor can the dispute be doing the country any good economically. There is very widespread agreement that part of our difficulty these days is the weakness of confidence at almost every level—industrial, commercial and consumer. The economy has been for at least the last three quarters in a recovery phase but it is a slow, uncertain recovery, which the budget was intended to stimulate.

I have read that into the record because I know that often in the heat of partisan debate in this House hon. members feel that when allegations are made they are made without the proper substantiation one would normally expect. However, in this case there can be no doubt. The fact is that the government went ahead with the proposal contained in clause 30, knowing that there would likely be opposition in the province of Quebec. That was just foolhardy. It was foolhardy when there was talk of separation and when national unity was of concern to many people. To go ahead and persist in pushing this type of thing, knowing that there was hostility not just from the government in Quebec but also from every party in the national assembly in the province of Quebec, was just foolhardy and irresponsible.

Let there be no doubt that we on this side of the House are as opposed to separatism as anybody else in this House. We hope that separation will never come about, but the government in Quebec is the government of the day in that province, and the federal government should not be exciting confrontation. It should not be giving the Quebec government an issue which allows it the opprotunity to take a provincial versus federal stand, such as the one it has been able to take.

Let me go further to show how foolhardy the government has been in its approach. Having been turned down, as it knew it would be turned down, by Mr. Parizeau, it then hit upon a new scheme. Its new scheme was to give, in view of the sales tax reduction such as it gave the other eight provinces, a special $85 cheque to every individual resident in the province of Quebec as of December 31, 1977. Is that not beautiful! Just think how clever this is politically! We can just see how the Jim Coutt's and the Keith Davey's worked that out. They knew how it would project politically in Quebec, that it would be the coup of the century if $85 cheques were sent to every resident of Quebec as of December 31, 1977. The government is not giving that to the other eight provinces. There is a deductibility based approximately on the residents in those provinces during the current year, 1978. This is cute, because who can really say no to an $85 cheque? Presumably Keith Davey would say that all kinds of warm feelings will flow from those individuals to the federal government, their great benefactor.

Of course, the government then put the provincial government in the awkward position of having to tax back the $85. Of course, this is not politically what most people would like to do. So from the great strategy standpoint—and if it is not Keith Davey, then presumably it is some adviser to the Minister of Finance who worked out this scheme—you can see how cute it all was. But, frankly, what the government did not anticipate was that there are many people in Quebec who put their honour first and said that they will not accept that kind of bribe, they do not feel that it is right for the federal government to walk around the constitutional reality in order somehow or other to embarrass the provincial jurisdiction. That is where the fight began.

Unfortunately, the minister did not back down. I understand that he did not back down because he took great heart from the Gallup poll which, to his great surprise, did not show a drop for the Liberals but showed the Liberals going up marginally, so he felt it was an endorsement of his approach in Quebec, and he put his gloves back on and said, "Fine, full speed ahead". In fact, he even now shows me the results of that Gallup poll which are on his desk.

Mr. Paproski: The Shawinigan kid!

Mr. Stevens: What a way to run the economy of the country, to keep one eye on the current Gallup poll and the other eye on how you can win personal favour with individuals in Quebec by giving them $85 cheques as hand-outs.

I should like to read into the record something which the minister said earlier during the main debate on this bill. It appears on page 6366 of Hansard, and this is what he said:

> There is, of course, another element, though people forget about it. Because we are dealing directly with Quebec taxpayers and not collecting the taxes for Quebec, there are some 200,000 Quebeckers who will not receive a rebate if I take the list of 1978, for the reason that since we have deducted for them $100 so far this year, in January or February or later, they will not qualify at all. It is only those who pay between $100 and $185 in taxes who will qualify. So we would have eliminated 200,000 Quebec citizens from being entitled to that credit.

Let us just analyse what the minister is saying. I do not know whether he realizes how blatant that statement is. He is saying in effect that the reason he wanted to use the 1977 figures for his tax rebates in the form of the $85 cheque is that if he used the 1978 figures there would be 200,000 people in Quebec who would not get his $85 cheques because they would not have anything coming to them because they had already received the $100 in January and February. So unless they had something coming to them greater than $100, there would be nothing to give them back.

The minister is saying that those 200,000 Quebeckers can only be given their cheques if he uses the figures for the previous year. What that really means is that the minister has victimized every other person in Canada who also received the $100 deduction but now will not be able to claim his $85 deduction because it is already used up.

An hon. Member: Cosy deal!

Mr. Stevens: Just think of the ramifications of this. In their eagerness to give the $85 individual payoff in Quebec, they said that they had to shift the base back to 1977 because they have already given those people a $100 deduction in 1978, which was received in January and February, so unless they shift back there will be 200,000 people who will not get any benefit. But when they deal with the other eight provinces, they ignore totally the fact that the same argument can be made for them. The residents of those other provinces received their $100 deductibility in January and February, and presumably there are approximately four times as many Canadians in those provinces who will literally not get the $85 or $100 deduction to credit against their provincial tax position. The net result is a very interesting transfer of income. There is roughly $186 million which will be going in the aggregate to Quebec residents, presumably to filter somehow back to the provincial government. The corresponding amount will not be going to residents of the other provinces of Canada because of the gimmick pulled by the Minister of Finance as he described it in the part of Hansard which I just read.

Secondly, one of the reasons given by the minister for wanting to get this money flushed through Quebec early—he did not mention the upcoming election, presumably he never even thought about it—was that you cannot inject a stimulant into Quebec unless this is done first. But where is the stimulant being injected into the other provinces? It is occurring only because the other provinces have reduced their provincial sales taxes. In Quebec the provincial sales tax is also reduced.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stevens: Some hon. members opposite say no. In fact, it has been reduced on five separate items.

Some hon. Members: On four.

Mr. Stevens: All right, on four items. If hon. members want to call it only four items, that is fine. The fact is that, to the extent of $186 million, the provincial government has already reduced the provincial sales tax in Quebec, so the stimulant there is in place. What the minister is actually doing is applying a double stimulant in Quebec. He knows that the $186 million is already having its effect in Quebec. The only question now is how it will be paid for. Will it be paid for by the Quebec provincial government raising taxes? Will they put it on the cuff by raising more debt, or will they get a handout from Ottawa? That is the only question.

For the minister to say that giving the $85 cheques to Quebec residents is for the purpose of injecting a stimulant into the economy is not in accordance with the facts. The fact is that the stimulant is there, and what he wants to do is to give a double stimulant, not just for its economic effect but for the political effect. There is no way in which this government is more crafty than when it works out schemes to get more votes into the ballot box, and that is what we have before us in clause 30 of Bill C-56.

We have indicated that we would like to have an early division on my colleague's amendment which, if passed, will result in some clauses being referred back to committee of the whole. So, with a view to having an early division, I will now conclude my remarks, being the final speaker for the official opposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The question is on the amendment to the main motion. All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Huntington), which was negatived on the following division:

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier in the day I made an announcement in the name of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) with respect to what the business of the House would be tomorrow, being an allotted day, involving the principle of freedom of information. I said at that time I hoped that the government would accept the terms of that motion. For our part we did not intend it to be a matter of non-confidence; we know how little confidence the people of Canada have in this government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —I meant that in the parliamentary sense, and I advanced the theory that that be so. The reply of my friend, the government House leader, in part was "it appeared that there would be no objection on our side to the acceptance of such a principle, but as the hon. member knows, under the Standing Orders the very motion which is put is described as a motion of non-confidence, and if hon. members are agreeable to waiving the effect of the standing order, then we would consider whether we could vote on the matter."

I have two things to say with respect to that. First, upon a reading of subsection (9) of Standing Order 58 I do not see the word "confidence" appearing there, but there may be a parliamentary precedent to the contrary. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), who was the House leader before me, indicates that there was a change made to that standing order which may very well have made some changes with respect to it. However that may be, that is a nice parliamentary argument.

We feel very strongly that this House, having supported the principle of freedom of information in a motion on February 12, 1976, ought not to be fettered in any procedural way with moving in that direction today or tomorrow during the course of the allotted day. On behalf of the official opposition I am saying that regardless of what the determination is of that subsection of Standing Order 58, we are prepared to waive the provisions of that standing order if the matter should be a matter of non-confidence in the mind of the Chair, or in the mind of the government, so that members on all sides of the House can express their own personal feelings with respect to the whole question of freedom of information in the terms of that motion.

If the government House leader would want to prepare an appropriate amendment to the standing order for the purposes of the allotted day on June 22, 1978, he will find us most accommodating, because we think that principle should be underscored and underlined in the Parliament of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) that he was reading from the provisional standing order which expired in October, 1977.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That could be; that is why I put the alternative.

Mr. MacEachen: However, I stand by what I said earlier, that we would consider whether we could support this motion if we can overcome the procedural difficulties.

I should advise the hon. member that when he read the motion I agreed with it as I heard it. I did not hear the final phrase "subject to review process with ultimate appeal to the courts." I think that is a very important principle which will be part of our consideration in fulfilment of the commitment which I made earlier today.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if the House leader recognized that I would be able to vote for a motion allowing for a final appeal to the judges, the government should be able to follow along.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The matter having been referred to earlier today, and raised again now for this brief discussion, does relate to the manner in which the House can conduct business tomorrow, and is therefore a proper point of order to be taken up at this time. In any case it remains open for further consideration and discussion. Perhaps resolution of some sort can be made by the time the debate begins as an order of the day tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Shall I call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock p.m. this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 o'clock p.m.

At 5.28 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

AIR TRANSPORT

FINANCIAL COMPENSATION FOR DEPENDANTS OF CRANBROOK, B.C., AIR CRASH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity regarding the refusal of the Government of Canada to demonstrate compassion for the victims and families of the victims of the Cranbrook air crash. The Minister of Transport has refused to participate in a shared pool compensation fund proposal, arguing that there is no legal authority for such an arrangement at present. That refusal prevents others from participating and denies aid to the injured and bereaved. In the interests of equity, the official opposition is prepared to encourage the passage of any necessary legislation for this purpose within one hour of its introduction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I, therefore, move the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That this House urges the minister to bring forward legislation before the end of next week to enable the federal government to participate in the proposed pool fund.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LOTO CANADA

POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF LOTTERY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity arising out of news reports today that Loto Canada, a federal Crown corporation, has entered into a contract with the General Instrument Company of Canada for the supply of computer terminals for its new lottery to be introduced in November of this year.

In light of the fact that this contract was entered into without any tendering procedure, in light of the fact that the price paid for leasing and servicing of the required terminals appears to be substantially higher than necessary, and in light of the high probability that the terminals will be imported from the United States although there are at least two companies available which are willing to guarantee that their terminals would be made in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan):

That the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport be ordered to examine this situation and to direct that in this case and in all future cases no contracts will be awarded without proper tendering procedures being adhered to, with preference given to Canadian production.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AGRICULTURE

SPRUCE BUDWORM SPRAY PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. It concerns the 13 million acre spruce budworm spray program of the provincial government of Newfoundland and the fact that federal law under the Fisheries Act is consistently being broken by the spray companies, doing irreparable damage to the environment. On the basis of observations and evidence collected in central Newfoundland by a group headed by a medical doctor, the spray program is being improperly managed in that massive amounts of the insecticide matacil is being sprayed on lakes, ponds, streams, as well as on water supplies of some communities. Since the spray is resulting in the killing of harmless and necessary insects, birds and fish, it contravenes section 33(2) of the Fisheries Act. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin):

• (1412)

That the federal government immediately investigate the enforcement of the law under section 33(2) of the Fisheries Act as it applies to the spray program in Newfoundland and immediately prosecute those responsible for the breaking of that law and inform the provincial government concerned that such actions must stop this weekend.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT PLANS FOR ECONOMIC RECOVERY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a motion under Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that figures released this morning by Statistics Canada show that the Canadian economy increased in the first quarter of this year at an annual rate of only 2.3 per cent, compared with the 5 per cent growth rate which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) stated was necessary to bring about a modest decline in unemployment, and in view of the current 9 per cent inflation rate compared with the 6 per cent rate predicted by the Minister of Finance, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House call upon the Minister of Finance to lay before the House, before the summer recess, detailed plans for the economic recovery which he predicted in his budget speech, or that failing to do so, the House give the minister time to show cause why he should continue to be Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUESTED WITHDRAWAL OF INVESTMENTS FROM SOUTH AFRICA AND NAMIBIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Rodriguez: In view of the fact that Canadian money is assisting South African security forces to torture and kill in Namibia and that Canada has denied publicly foreign armed intervention in Africa, while winking at Canadian investment in Namibia and South Africa, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan):

[Mr. Baker (Gander-Twillingate).]

That this House entrust the government that, in line with its stated policy toward South Africa, it forces Canadian-based companies to withdraw their investments from South Africa and Namibia in particular.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

RATE OF REAL GROWTH

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, perhaps I can put my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. As the disappointing real growth figures published by Statistics Canada this morning indicate that real growth in the first quarter of this year was only 0.7 per cent or, on an annualized basis, 2.8 per cent, would he indicate if it is still the government's view, as the Minister of Finance stated in the House last Monday, that real growth for the entire year will be close to 5 per cent? If it is still the government's view, it will mean we will have to reach a 7.6 per cent annualized real growth in the balance of this year, the nine months remaining.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance will be here in a few minutes. Cabinet finished just before two o'clock and he will be in the House shortly.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to reserve the question?

Mr. Stevens: If I may, Mr. Speaker, yes.

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In reply to a question put by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra yesterday, the minister indicated that as a result of legal interpretation of section 126 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, confidential information, at the direction of the department, was now being withheld from criminal investigation officers.

Does that ministerial or departmental order include information that traditionally has been available to the criminal investigation branch in the process of investigating unemployment insurance frauds, normally at the request of the department? In other words, is that blanket on information all-inclusive, or is there an exclusion where a criminal investigation officer may still get that information in order to build up a case for prosecution of a fraud charge?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question and the opportunity to clear up that point. I thought I had done that in press reports and in the House. No, it is not a blanket closing off. The information will be made available for the administration of the UI Act, whether it is to catch those who perpetrate fraud or having to do with social insurance numbers. Having regard to anybody who might be doing something wrong in that particular region of the administration of social insurance numbers, the information will, of course, be made available to the RCMP which, incidentally, has been doing an excellent job on our behalf.

LEGALITY OF RCMP RECEIVING CONFIDENTIAL UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE INFORMATION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General. Press reports indicate quite clearly that at least one assistant commissioner has indicated they will not receive that type of information in the process of investigating UI frauds, on the basis that if information supplied for the investigation of other alleged crimes would be a breach of confidentiality, then the supplying of information in respect of UI fraud would equally be a breach. I now understand that the order of the Minister of Employment and Immigration does not extend to UI fraud cases. Was that assistant commissioner quoted incorrectly, and is it the situation that the criminal investigation branch now will not receive that information in respect of UI fraud?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the latter part of the hon. gentleman's question, I can assure him it is not the policy of the RCMP not to discharge its responsibilities in exactly those terms identified by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The RCMP is charged with enforcement of the UI Act and takes this responsibility very seriously. It obtains from the Department of Employment and Immigration such information as is required for the prosecution of these offences and the continuation of investigations.

With reference to the press reports, Mr. Speaker, I have not had the advantage of seeing the transcript of the evidence given before the McDonald inquiry and, therefore, cannot comment on the initial question of the hon. gentleman.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DISPUTES IN MEAT PACKING INDUSTRY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have questions for two ministers respecting the strike at Swift and the lockout by Canada Packers. My first question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that the lockout by Canada Packers seems to be a case of acting in concert with a competitor, which could have a serious effect on the price of meat products, will the minister have his officials investigate this whole situation?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I have no information on that as yet, Mr. Speaker, but I will be pleased to follow up the suggestion made by the hon. member.

RECEIPT OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS BY EMPLOYEES INVOLVED IN DISPUTES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the assurance that this matter will be investigated. I hope the appearance of collusion will impress itself upon the minister.

My second question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and also has to do with this situation. In view of reports that employees of Canada Packers are to be denied unemployment insurance even though their being out of work is not a result of their initiative but, rather, because of a lockout, will the minister look into this matter in the hope that justice will prevail and that the employees who are out of work, not through their own fault, will receive unemployment insurance?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the role of the commission in cases like this is to endeavour to remain as neutral as possible. When there is a lockout or a strike, unemployment insurance benefits are not paid. We probably abuse that neutrality to some extent by indicating that we will not pay mobility grants to individuals to move into those particular jobs. If a person takes a job at a plant that is on strike, or refuses to go into a plant that is on strike, he will not lose his unemployment insurance benefits. So to some extent we lean in favour of employees. But, of course, we have been criticized for this by the other side.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the last amendments respecting unemployment insurance put the control of the administration directly in the hands of the department rather than in the hands of an independent commission, will the minister, as the head of that department, take a personal interest in this matter to see that these employees who are locked out are not denied the benefits to which they are entitled?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, as the minister of the department, I have to take my responsibilities recognizing that contributions are made by both employers and employees in this particular program. It is a matter of some concern to me and it is a matter that would probably best be studied by the advisory council which I propose to appoint under the legislation. However, I do not want to raise any false hopes by suggesting I am contemplating making that change now, because I am not.

RATE OF REAL GROWTH

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can put to the Minister of Finance, now that he has joined us, the question I originally put to the Prime Minister. My question is based on the Statistics Canada figures which show that in the first quarter of this year, real growth in the economy was only 0.7 per cent or, on an annualized basis, 2.8 per cent. Does the minister still hold the view that he expressed no later than last Monday, that real growth for the entire year will be close to 5 per cent? If he does, how does he explain the fact that we will need real growth of 7.6 per cent for the balance of this year, the nine months which remain?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have to change my prediction, because if we compare the Canadian figures with the American figures, Canada for the first quarter had a growth of 0.7 per cent while the Americans, who were predicting approximately the same figure, had a negative growth. They, however, were affected by the coal strike and it is understandable that this would have an effect on our performance. The United States prediction for the second quarter is very strong growth, and I think Canada has a good chance to perform just as well.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I know the minister is going to the United States to sign a contract; but we are talking about g.n.p. real growth figures in Canada. If the annualized rate of 2.8 per cent persists this year, it will mean 60,000 more people will be out of work in this country. My question to him is, when will he come to the point of accepting the reality that real growth is not developing in the country as he claims it is, and do something to help the unemployed?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I said that even if we do not have a better performance in the next three quarters than in the last quarter, we will do relatively well compared to other nations because it is an increase over last year. I am not, however, abandoning the prediction I made of close to 5 per cent because, despite the difficulties of the first quarter, Canada had a growth of 0.7 per cent while the Americans, as I explained, had a negative growth. We did better than they did. The prediction for the United States is a growth rate, in 1978, of 4.5 per cent. I do not see why, if we performed better than they did in the first quarter, we will not do as well in the rest of the year.

[Mr. Cullen.]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, a final supplementary to the minister. I would remind him that the 0.7 per cent real growth in the first quarter of this year is just half the real growth in the fourth quarter of last year; in other words, we are on a downward trend again. In view of that, would the minister indicate, as we are losing real growth, whether he anticipates that inflation will take up the slack and, over-all, whether the economy, as far as increase is concerned, will be roughly that which he initially anticipated?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we are talking about an increase over the last quarter of 1977 and I have not yet had time to analyse the figures. I understand, for example, that one of the problems is a very sharp decline in inventory, which means that when consumer expenditures increase, producers have not increased their line of production and there is a limit to inventories. According to the figures published on employment, there is more growth in employment than in the g.n.p., which means that later they will have to start increasing their production to replace the inventories being depleted at this time.

DECLINE IN BUSINESS INVESTMENT

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. The same Statistics Canada figures released today show that in gross fixed capital formation investment in our economy there was a 2 per cent fall in volume, in real terms, and a further 1.9 per cent slide in business investment compared to the last quarter. That brings it 1.7 per cent below the level in the fourth quarter—not an increase but a decrease. This is the lowest level of capital formation for business in three years and the second consecutive quarterly decline. As the minister knows, without increased capital investment we cannot have increased growth and increased jobs. The minister and his predecessors, Mr. Macdonald and Mr. Turner, brought down many budgets.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member have a question?

Mr. Crosbie: In fact, they are the Three Stooges of Canadian finance. What is the minister going to do to reverse this decline in business investment in Canada over the last two quarters? What steps is he going to take? His budget has not been effective. What is he going to do now?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we introduced a budget only two months ago and we think that when stimulating demand as we did in the budget as well as in other economic sectors such as the development of tar sands or the incentives given to small businessmen, all the programs launched during the past two months will give some impetus to the Canadian economy which should reach the objectives expected for 1978, that is a growth of 4.5 and 5 per cent.

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance is the Donald Duck of finance ministers. When he is asked a question, all he does is squawk. We want more than squawks; we want some action. If we look at the capacity utilization rate for the first quarter, it is 82.7 per cent, which is the lowest rate of use of Canadian industry since 1961 when the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce kept statistics. It is the lowest rate in mining, the lowest rate in manufacturing, and reflects the weak demand in the Canadian economy. The minister has brought down two budgets—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I know you do not like this. My question is, what is the honourable Donald Duck going to do to reverse this trend?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Rimouski.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I know why—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Rimouski.

URBAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR DETAILS ON CONSTRUCTION OF SINGLE DWELLINGS IN GASPÉ PENINSULA, QUEBEC

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of State for Urban Affairs confirm to the House whether there is any truth in the article published in last Tuesday's edition of La Presse according to which the minister has just authorized the construction of four single dwellings in four Gaspé peninsula villages for which the federal government supplies free building materials and the manpower would be provided benevolently by local residents? If so, does he intend to promote that program across the country?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a pilot project which has been proposed by the hon. member for Matane. He has worked along with some officials of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation on that program and when I visited his riding I was pleased to announce that CMHC would provide the funds necessary to see that pilot project through.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL GRANT LOANS AT INTEREST RATE CORRESPONDING TO COST OF ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): I would like to ask a supplementary question. With a view to encouraging the private sector, would the minister consider as an alternative building single family dwellings? That would reduce current excessive costs. Builders could also receive loans at an interest rate equal to administrative costs. Would not the minister agree that this is a more logical solution than to ask the population to do voluntary work? Nobody works for nothing these days, and I think it is pretty difficult to find anybody who will work for nothing.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I gather that the hon. member does not approve of the pilot project. It is too early yet to see whether or not it will be useful. I would ask him to wait until the end of the summer, and we can talk about it then.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister another supplementary question.

The minister has answered only part of my question. The House would like to know if he intends to duplicate that experience in the other provinces in general, or to restrict it to Quebec.

Mr. Ouellet: I thought I had answered the hon. member by saying that this is a pilot project. We have to see, first of all, whether or not this project will be useful before extending it throughout the country. I think it is too early yet to draw any conclusions. This is a small project concerning four houses in four different villages, and we are waiting to see the results before doing anything else. If it is successful, we will of course draw the obvious conclusions at that time.

AIR TRANSPORT

FINANCIAL COMPENSATION FOR DEPENDANTS OF CRANBROOK, B.C., AIR CRASH

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It now has an added aspect of urgency due to the harrowing coverage given last week by the CBC to the aftermath of the Cranbrook air crash and from further news reports in the Ottawa press this week.

Is the ministry engaged in negotiations with regard to the pooling of insurance claims for the victims of the Cranbrook air crash? If so, can the minister report progress on those negotiations and has he learned, in response to the question put by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, whether any legal difficulties are in the way of pooling those claims at the present time?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the legal difficulty existed only in relation to the ability to actually pay money into a pool, not in relation to entering into an arrangement. Progress is being made. I am confident that soon we shall have an arrangement which will allow an effective pool to operate and specific negotiations to take place. Those discussions are going forward and I am now in a position to enter into such an arrangement.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, is the minister suggesting the pooling arrangement will be made prior to the release of the report by the Ministry of Transport on its investigation into the crash, or is he waiting for that report? I would be curious to know if there is a connection there. If not, why cannot the pooling arrangement be made immediately?

Mr. Lang: There is no connection at all between those two things, since the investigation which we are carrying on has no direct bearing on any question of liability, which is determined in another forum. There are significant legal issues which have to be dealt with in creating a pooling arrangement. As well, there are complicated questions arising out of the British Columbia joint tort feasors law and the like which have to be considered. The various parties have to consider any effect on their position caused by the arrangement they would enter into. That has been the source of the problem. I do not think there has been any problem on our part other than to simply get together on these difficulties so far as the various parties are concerned, and I think that is almost over.

FUNDING OF COMPENSATION POOL

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. The minister has reconfirmed today in the House, as well as last night on the CBC program "As it Happens", that the government will continue its refusal to participate in the funding of this pool. In this connection he stated:

—we as a government cannot turn money over except according to some law.

Since that will have a direct bearing upon other parties participating, because it appears they are not prepared to participate in the fund unless the government, through the Ministry of Transport, is prepared to do so, has he again met with his legal counsel and considered a legislative solution to this problem? In addition, is he prepared to bring in an amendment to existing legislation to allow the federal government to participate in this pooling arrangement? I ask this question in the name of sympathy, compassion and humanity—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the people affected, I wish the hon. member would not ignore the answers I have given and come back to the suggestion that there may be a problem in the way of our participating in a settlement of claims. There is no such problem. The only problem is in relation to doing so in a particular financial manner in advance of certain stages having been reached in the negotiations. I do not see that as a difficulty. We are participating. We are proposing to participate in the negotiations and we are proposing to enter into the necessary arrangements with the other parties so that settlements can be achieved and payments made at an early date. Let the hon. member recognize that there is no difficulty in that regard. If there were one requiring a legal change, obviously I would consider putting one forward.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious the minister is unable to clarify the government's position to the House. He was unable to clarify its position on the show "As it Happens" last night. I ask the minister if he will undertake to make a full and detailed statement on motions to explain the government's position in this whole affair and put on the record, once and for all, the position of the government and the manner in which it intends to proceed toward expediting a settlement of this issue.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how it can be made simpler than by saying we are prepared to participate in the necessary steps to allow a pooling arrangement to go forward and these claims settled.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Lang: An hon. member shouts "When?" The point is that there is a complex, legal consideration which enters into this kind of matter. It may be very well for one of the participants in the proposed pool to throw darts and rocks at this government, and for hon. members opposite to share in that in their partisan way, but the fact is that we are in a position to enter into the necessary arrangement. The legal questions are being dealt with and I am optimistic about the early achievement of a pool. I cannot say that beyond any doubt, because it depends on the participation of other parties. I hope hon. members recognize that. It is simple, and the hon. member should understand.

HEALTH

HAZARDOUS CHEMICAL SPRAYS

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare: it relates to the increasing number of chemical substances sprayed in Canada these days. In view of the fact that some of these sprays affect people's health and in some cases even proving to be fatal, could the minister please inform this House whether it will be the policy of her department to ensure that it is the responsibility of manufacturers to prove and guarantee the harmlessness of these sprays to human beings, so that the onus of responsibility for any ill-effects is placed on the producer and not paid by society as a whole?

Miss Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm, without any doubt, that the burden of proof that there is no harm done to humans through chemical substances in spray or other forms remains entirely with the manufacturers. This has always been the position of my department and it will continue to be the position.

TRANSPORT

GRAIN TRANSPORTATION DELAYS—COST TO WESTERN FARMERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport: it has to do with the latest revelations connected with the cost to the western farmer in lost sales to the extent of $150 million in consequence of grain transportation delays and, as well the damage to Canada's international reputation. The figures are unchallengeable.

What is the government and the minister doing to bring about something in the nature of responsibility in connection with this matter, so that the western farmer is not subjected to terrific losses in consequence of the failure of this government to act?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is really astonishing that the right hon. gentleman should refer to an export of over 800 million bushels of grain as being some kind of a disaster for the western farmer. When he was prime minister, 440 million bushels used to be awfully good. Eight hundred million or perhaps even close to a record is what we shall be achieving this year. There have been shipping difficulties, certainly: not, however, peculiar to Canada.

As I indicated to the House—the right hon. member may have been absent—in the middle of May, 39 ships were waiting in the American gulf. The right hon. gentleman would like to suggest that we are losing markets: the announcement the other day of 110 million bushels sold to China certainly gives the lie to that argument.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that answer is in accordance with the departure from the truth which is not uncommon on the part of the minister. I am quoting from the advisory committee of the Canadian Wheat Board which today, at 2.02 p.m., made the following declaration: it referred to the cost to farmers of more than $150 million in lost sales, the damage to Canada's reputation as a reliable supplier, and said that some action must be taken. Therefore, I have good company, in the advisory committee of the Wheat Board, to question the minister who is so far removed from the facts that it is impossible for him to tell the truth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I put it down as intentional. It may be negligence. Was the advisory committee wrong today when it said the railways should be directed to take immediate action to build up their grain car fleet and speed up grain shipments? That was not in May, but on June 22. The advisory committee of the Wheat Board says there is a serious failure and that the western farmer is being subjected to losses that should not take place. Who is now deceiving the country as a whole: the minister or the advisory committee?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, it may be recognized by some, if not by the right hon. gentleman, that notwithstanding that, we are setting or nearly setting a record because of the standards we are setting. It is possible for the advisory board to speak of the further opportunity which we may have had—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: The fact is that in moving 820 million or 830 million bushels into export: we are moving the whole of the equivalent of a record crop, plus some more. The right hon. gentleman asks what we are doing to become more effective in this regard. Part of the answer is 8,000 hopper cars, repairing a couple of thousand boxcars a couple of years ago, $700 million for rail rebuilding, co-ordinators at the terminals, an exchange of cars between Calgary and Edmonton, and the block shipping system. These are all elements which have made it possible for us to achieve 800 million bushels of export.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman answers everything but the allegations made today by the advisory committee of the Wheat Board which states how serious the situation is. Has the minister not been given that information? Do I have to pass it on to him? Are they afraid to let him know the facts?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the right hon. gentleman that I am aware of the facts and have been following the situation very closely.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then why don't you act?

Mr. Lang: It is not a simple matter of accusing the railways. At this point in time, perhaps unknown to the right hon. member, we have a problem of damp grain moved into the Saskatchewan wheat pool elevator: it is not capable of operating effectively. It was not the fault of the railways but of some other part of the system. Because of those sorts of difficulties, difficulties of ships being delayed in October and November, last week I indicated the intention to appoint a systems expert analyst to further improve the turn-around time of our railway equipment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Systems expert analyst?

Mr. Lang: The right hon. member might like us to buy an additional "X" number of cars. In his day he never thought of hopper cars. We have hopper cars now. We have a system that can handle 800 million to 850 million bushels of grain. When we continue to thrust for a new record, of course we will find the system is being tested to its fullest extent. I predict, for his benefit, that in about four years' time we will be going after a record of one billion bushels of export. We may have had some difficulties, but we are accomplishing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

LOTO CANADA

LEASING OF COMPUTER TERMINALS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport who is also responsible for Loto Canada. Can the minister indicate why Loto Canada has awarded a substantial contract, amounting to approximately $23 million, for lease of computer terminals, plus perhaps $5 million a year for servicing and support? This contract was let without a tendering process of any sort, in the face of substantial evidence that at least two other Canadian companies could have filled this contract at a price substantially below the price Loto Canada has agreed to pay.

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, while it is true there are certain Canadian companies which could have fulfilled the computer functions required, our investigations showed that General Instrument company was the only one which could supply us with the retail machines we required for this particular type of game.

In this connection, I should like to urge, for the hon. member's attention, that in excess of 50 per cent of the components are Canadian-made. It is our intention, before four years are up, to have it as close as possible to 100 per cent Canadian content. In addition, we have had enlightening consultation with existing Canadian companies which could participate in this deal and could make full use of the R and D grants which the Minister of State for Science and Technology recently announced. I believe that through all these various means we will soon, within four years, have as close to 100 per cent Canadian content in these machines as possible.

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the minister whether the rapidity with which this contract was let has any relationship to competing against provincial lotteries across the country. The two other computer companies which might have filled this contract have indicated that terminals supplied by them would have been between 50 per cent and 75 per cent Canadian content, thus producing Canadian jobs, whereas the terminals supplied by General Instrument of Canada will most likely be imported from the United States.

I ask the minister whether she will rescind the current contract which is squandering perhaps millions of dollars of public money and resulting in the loss of an undetermined number of potential jobs in Canada at a period of high unemployment. Also, can the minister relate—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. member listened to my answer to his question. I said that at this time we have between 51 per cent and 53 per cent Canadian content. He also asked in his last question, which I did not answer, why we did not put this to tender. It is because it is a Crown corporation. I believe we should note that the current Loto Canada contract was negotiated under constraints of time and confidentiality. They chose the company that could best fulfil their needs. I am prepared to have the corporation go to full tender for the additional components that are required. We have at this time purchased 2,000 terminals. There will be aproximately 4,000 in due course and all Canadian companies, of course, will be able to make available their changes in technology if they have any at that time.

POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF LOTTERY

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the minister responsible for gambling.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: Yesterday, when questioned by my leader, the Prime Minister said:

> —the undertaking was not to prolong the lotteries without coming before parliament, and we intend to discharge this commitment.

In her last answer, the minister stated her proposal is that it last for a four-year period. Will the minister tell the House how she can justify spending even one cent on the extension of a program that has not been approved by this House, let alone the provinces, nine of which have already rejected the program, as the minister knows?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for fancy figures has given me an excellent opportunity to remove from the record of this House that which his leader put on yesterday. Contrary to the hon. member's assertion yesterday, Loto Canada is not planning to introduce a slot-machine operation. It is not an instant-win game. Rather, winners will be selected through a regular draw process, just as they are now through Loto Canada's established lottery.

Mr. Clark: I suppose you will answer today's question tomorrow.

● (1452)

Mrs. Campagnolo: The principal difference is that with the new game, players can select their own numbers through an operative. They will not operate the terminal machines. I will not, therefore, in any sense be running a jackpot, and I will be requesting—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Loto Canada prizes are assured prizes, not like those—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON GAMBLING

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that this minister is falling into line with the rest of the cabinet in not answering the questions she is asked. Therefore, I would like to put my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Because of the fact that the government has apparently gone ahead with plans not only to expand but also to extend the federal lottery beyond the end of 1979 and because, on the other hand, the Minister of Agriculture has on a number of occasions made it very clear that he is opposed to off-track betting because it would expand federal gambling operations in Canada, could the Prime Minister explain to the House the obvious inconsistency in the government's policy regarding gambling in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with regard to gambling, I explained to the House yesterday that several years ago this government moved an amendment to the Criminal Code making lotteries possible.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That was a mistake.

Mr. Trudeau: Some hon. members still oppose it, but it seems to me unbecoming of the Tory party to talk of inconsistencies. Just yesterday the hon. member's leader was arguing that gambling should continue, to use his words, but he thinks it should be done by the provinces rather than by the federal government. I wish they would make up their minds.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR ISSUANCE OF HERRING FISHING PERMITS TO "NADINE" AND "RALLI II"

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment.

Considering that the fish processing plant of the Pêcheries du Golfe Saint-Laurent Inc. at Paspébiac in my riding had to close its doors about three days ago because of insufficient supplies, which contributes to an unacceptable lay-off in an area where the unemployment level is always higher than elsewhere, and considering that it is impossible so late in the fishing season for the company to obtain the French fishing boat Victoria, as was the case last year, is the minister prepared to entertain favourably the request of the Pêcheries du Golfe Saint-Laurent Inc. for two general herring fishing permits for two of their boats, namely the Nadine and the Ralli II, and if not, why not?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I regret I did not receive notice of the question, because I could have checked what was, in fact, the state of those supplies.

I shall consider this question and answer the hon. member later.

REPORTED DEFICIENCY IN SAFETY FEATURES OF NUCLEAR POWER PLANTS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the belated announcement this morning by the Atomic Energy Control Board, for which the minister is still responsible, that on April 21, 1977, it issued secret orders and secret directives which grossly inhibit and restrict the potential power capacity in most of Ontario's nuclear power plants due to defects in emergency safety procedures, perhaps even design defects, and in spite of the continuing contradictory statements of the minister and the agencies under his control, when did the minister first find out about these secret orders?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have been in touch with the Atomic Energy Control Board. The board has been reviewing the information which has been made public. I referred yesterday in an answer to the extensive information I made public in the House last fall and the further information which was placed on the public record, through cross-examination, by Dr.

Edwards and a senior officer of the Atomic Energy Control Board before the Porter commission.

The Atomic Energy Control Board has assured me that all reactors which are operating are operating safely. The board has also stated that it will be issuing tomorrow an updated review of the current licensing situation in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question relates to whether what the public has learned up until now from the minister and his agencies is credible. That is the question which really goes to the heart of the matter. In spite of the minister's statements to the contrary, and in spite of public utterances on behalf of the agencies under his control, some of them continuing up until yesterday, it now appears there have been gross defects in the design and procedures in relation to the safety of our citizens regarding power plants in Ontario.

When did the minister first find out about these orders which were issued in secret and with no public disclosure, but which obviously have a great deal to do with public concern about safety? When did the minister first find out about these orders?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned a moment ago, in answer to the first question, that a statement will be issued tomorrow. In a matter which is as technical as this and which covers so many different aspects, I think it is important that there be a full statement, and that is what I have been assured will be issued tomorrow.

QUEBEC REGULATION RESTRICTING ONTARIO RESIDENTS FROM WORKING IN QUEBEC

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister: it concerns his response to a letter he will have received from the Premier of Ontario asking the federal government to challenge the constitutionality of a Quebec regulation regarding restricting Ontario residents from working in the province of Quebec as of July 1. I would like to ask the Prime Minister what his response has been to that letter from the Premier of Ontario.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have just read that telex, but I did talk about the matter with the premier a couple of weeks ago. He raised it with me in a telephone conversation. At that time the ministers of labour of Quebec and Ontario were meeting. I told the premier that if those meetings were unsuccessful, and if he was unable to settle this very important matter with the premier of Quebec, I would gladly hear from them further. I think this telex is pursuant to that. He is suggesting a reference to the Supreme Court of the regulation of the province of Quebec and I will refer his telex to the Department of Justice for advice.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

I can indicate quite openly what I told the premier the other day on the telephone. I thought it was quite inconsistent for the province of Quebec to argue some kind of common market in a future Canada and to begin even now to prevent freedom of mobility of labour between the provinces. I have no hesitation in saying that we oppose that kind of legislation or regulation. As to whether a reference can be made and what the basis of the reference would be, I would expect the Minister of Justice to advise me very soon.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, when that advice is proffered by the Minister of Justice, will the Prime Minister, observing protocol with regard to advising the premier of Ontario, advise the House of Commons as to the outcome of that decision because of the interest of many thousands of people in the province of Ontario in this very important matter?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that decision will of course be made known if there is a reference to the court. It will be stated publicly. It is also apparent to me from the premier's telex that he thinks other provinces might be interested in such a reference. That is why, beyond having advice from the Minister of Justice, we will have to learn the views of other provinces, including Quebec, because it would be our preference, if we do go the reference route, to make sure that the provinces concerned contribute to drafting the terms of reference for the supreme court.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STEVENS—COMMENTS OF MINISTER OF STATE (SMALL BUSINESS)

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I have given you notice, first in a preliminary manner on Monday last, and earlier today in the usual, more formal manner. I point out to Your Honour that the right to raise this question of privilege was reserved by the Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole (Mr. Turner) when he said last Friday that the blues would be examined on Monday and that a decision would be rendered at that time.

My question of privilege arises out of very serious allegations made in this House last Friday by the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott). Those allegations clearly imply that I have taken advantage of the banking system in Canada to make a fast dollar, that I "lured a great many innocent shareholders" into a banking enterprise over 12 years ago, and that I subsequently made a "very comfortable profit out of it and left a lot of other people holding the bag".

The minister in making these statements did so in support of his reflections on my character and on my ability to function as a member of parliament.

As reported at page 6504 of Hansard the minister stated:

> For the hon. member for York-Simcoe to speak as though we have betrayed the small business community just because some slick player that he may be acquainted with is unable to take advantage, is, I would suggest, an outbreak of hypocrisy that we are all too familiar with around here.

The minister then added:

> The fact is that when one speaks of things that are pretty shabby unfortunately in many communities, and in the business community, there are people who can look with sharp-eyed interest at provisions that were not designed for them, take advantage of them and make a big dollar. We have even known, Mr. Chairman, of people who have taken advantage of the banking system to make a fast dollar.

Asked to clarify to whom he referred, the minister stated:

> —the hon. member for York-Simcoe and his friends put a bank together under the banking system, made a very comfortable profit out of it and left a lot of other people holding the bag.

The minister's charges are totally unfounded. They reflect on my character, my code of ethics, and ultimately on my posture as a member of parliament. They ought to be withdrawn in their entirety.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, when we review the remarks, it is clear the minister began by very deliberately equating me to a general class of hypocrites and "slick players" out to take advantage of the banking system.

Not content, Mr. Speaker, to merely leave me in the company of "slick players" and "shabby" operators out to "make a fast dollar", the minister went further and stated categorically:

> —the hon. member for York-Simcoe and his friends put a bank together under the banking system, made a very comfortable profit out of it and left a lot of other people holding the bag.

In making this statement the minister reflected not only on me but on present members of his own Liberal caucus who were associated with me in the Bank of Western Canada.

Mr. Paproski: Shame on you, Abbott.

Mr. Stevens: Incidentally, I would invite the hon. member to check with colleagues in his own caucus and find out their story of what happened with respect to the Bank of Western Canada.

When the minister was asked to retract his statement—I told the House then, and I repeat now, that I did not make a nickel from the promotion of the Bank of Western Canada—the minister hedged by repeating other unfounded allegations, allegations calculated to smear my reputation in the House and my character in general. He said, as reported at page 6504 of Hansard:

> What we do know without any question is that a great many innocent shareholders lured into the enterprise by him and his associates lost a great deal of money.

The imputation is very clear, Mr. Speaker. The minister is saying that I may not have made any profit out of the Bank of Western Canada, but that it was still my intention to make a fast buck and leave others holding the bag.

I know Your Honour is very knowledgeable on procedural matters in this House so I will not dwell at length on the ample precedents for my question of privilege. In passing, I would like to remind Your Honour that Beauchesne's citation 155(1) at page 130 very clearly considers "the imputation of false or unavowed motives" to a member of parliament as "unparliamentary" conduct. It also makes specific reference to the word "hypocrites" as being unparliamentary. Citations 140(1) and 149(f) also support this question of privilege in that the minister's words reflect on my character in general and my work and reputation in this House.

In closing, may I very briefly put the facts before the House concerning the minister's charges. Fact one, I never at any time made any money from promoting the Bank of Western Canada. In fact I spent $250,000 of my own money in legal fees and other expenses trying to save it, in trying to reactivate it.

Fact two, there were no "innocent shareholders" who got stuck "holding the bag" as the minister claims. Clarkson and Corporation—who distributed the bank's funds—paid $14.80 per share to each shareholder on an investment of $15. That was after they took out $150,000 in expense money and for the various legal fees. In short, on a $15 issue investment, all the original shareholders received $14.80 back. There were 5,200 shareholders. A loss of 20 cents on a $15 investment is a long way from the manipulated and ripped-off innocents the minister implies were taken in by this venture. On average, the most any shareholder lost from his original investment was $16. The original shareholders are still shareholders in the bank.

Fact three, I resisted the wind-up of the bank—I did not, as the minister implies, take the money and run. I had sold control of the bank prior to its wind-up but came back in, in an effort to prevent its termination. Subsequently, as the wind-up continued, I attempted to get, first, a Vancouver group, second, a Regina group, and thirdly, a Winnipeg group to take over the bank with a view to reactivating it. All three groups were willing, and in fact in most cases signed agreements, to take over the bank and reactivate it, but they were defeated in each instance by the then minister of finance in Ottawa, who squelched the reactivation of the bank. I would also point out that the Regina group included the Liberal government of the day, headed by Ross Thatcher who was very enthusiastic about the opening of the bank in Regina, but his plans were vetoed by the then minister of finance in Ottawa. If any of those groups had succeeded in reactivating the bank, they agreed to pay a minimum of 50 cents a share to the outstanding shareholders of the bank, which would have meant that on top of $14.80 which they received in cash they would have actually made a profit of 30 cents a share on the bank in which they had invested. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the shareholders would have received a net profit but for the fact that in each instance the minister of finance of the day refused to co-operate.

If hon. members care, they can look at the present Bank Act and they can see that the Bank of Western Canada is still a scheduled bank. If the Minister of State for Small Business is concerned about the bank's 5,200 shareholders, let him approach the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and ask him to relicense the bank, and I can assure him the bank will be open by the fall, if the licence is granted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, I am sure this matter can be settled amicably.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Abbott: What the hon. member failed to mention, as he frequently does, is that when he rose on Friday and told the House and myself that he had not made a personal profit out of the bank, I withdrew that comment, and I did so immediately. I said that clearly he was the person who knew best if he had made no personal profit, and I withdrew that comment. I will quote my words.

Mr. Clark: You should quote his words correctly.

Mr. Abbott: I said:

> If he is also saying that I must withdraw the comments that shareholders were encouraged to purchase stock and subsequently lost money, my information would be to the contrary and that that indeed did happen.

The hon. member has attempted, in his recitation of the facts, to create the impression that because the original shareholders including himself, the issuers of treasury stock, lost only 20 cents—and he vigorously brushed over the fact that the subsequent purchasers, mainly as a result of reading the prospectus, which was presumably published by the hon. member as one of the promoters of the bank, lost no more than an average of $16—I should withdraw my remarks that the other shareholders who were subsequently lured, if that is the word, or encouraged to purchase stock by the publicity and the prospectus issued—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Abbott: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) might just listen. He might learn something, because he does not know much about this. The prospectus that was issued by the bank presumably encouraged a good number of people in western Canada and elsewhere to purchase shares. All I said was that they lost money. I do not think the hon. member would deny this, indeed he has confirmed it in his statement.

● (1512)

I share the desire of most hon. members that the tone of debates here does not cast aspersions.

Mr. Clark: You and Otto Lang!

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps I created in my remarks the impression that he had acted unethically and improperly, by referring to people losing money while he made a profit and people being left holding the bag. I withdrew the point that he had made a profit unduly, but it would be impossible for me to withdraw the very legitimate point, which he confirmed today, that shareholders were encouraged, the purchase of shares was advertised, and subsequently they lost money.

Mr. Clark: Otto Lang must have written that.

Mr. Abbott: If I have created the impression in the mind of the hon. member, and the minds of all hon. members and the public, that he acted unethically and improperly, then certainly I withdraw that inference. Indeed I would apologize if I created that impression. I cannot withdraw the point that many people in this country purchased the stock based on what they perceived to be the integrity and reputation of the promoters. They lost a considerable amount of money. As the hon. member confirmed, the holders of treasury stock lost 20 cents.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That was a 20-cent apology.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the matter has been resolved by the last remark of the hon. minister. The intervention of the minister on this occasion, as objected to by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), points out two very important things about debates here. First, in attempting to maintain a certain calm and dignity to the debates in the House, the rules and precedents prescribe not what can be said but obviously the manner in which statements can be made.

The minister has pointed out that initially he used the words "lured into investment" and "investors left holding the bag". Subsequently he said "investors were encouraged and lost money". Both of those comments may say very similar things, but one of them has a connotation of impropriety. The luring of people in and the leaving of people holding the bag has a connotation of impropriety. To encourage people to invest, and investors losing money is an occurrence which happens on a daily basis. Perhaps that is serious, but it has no connotation of impropriety. It is important to recognize that perhaps the two comments say the same thing. One is in a parliamentary manner and one is not.

Before I had an opportunity to intervene and make a ruling to this effect, the minister recognized this. It seems to me that he has stated unequivocally any notion of impropriety contained in his original statements not only has been withdrawn but he has apologized for it. From a procedural point of view, that seems to complete the matter.

However, there is a second aspect which ought to be borne in mind by all members. Occasionally in the heat of debate there is a temptation, in a context which relates to the progress of a bill, or in the context of criticism being advanced, to open up personal references to other members, such as to begin by saying, "Who is the minister to say this about such a problem when in fact he . . ." or, "Who is this member to criticize a certain position by the government when in fact he in the past . . ." and so on. In itself that temptation is always very, very dangerous. If hon. members of the House depart from the subject matter at hand and enter into personal reflections, there is very, very seriously present the danger of improprieties and that unparliamentary references are going to be used.

Frankly, a better tone of debate is always maintained when personal references are avoided and debate is on the subject of the merits of the legislation before the House.

In any case, those are two gratuitous observations. Again I refer to the fact that the minister took his responsibility seriously, apologized, and withdrew those remarks which I felt were similar to others he made in a parliamentary way. Those which indicated any aspect of impropriety were withdrawn, and he apologized. Therefore, from a procedural point of view, the matter is finalized.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to ask the usual House business question. In so doing, I assume the order of business given by the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) last week stands. I should like to draw the minister's attention to the fact that there has been some reference in respect of the establishment of a special joint committee of both Houses to deal with the constitutional matters introduced in the House a few days ago. When does the government House leader intend to put down that motion? When will it be called?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member's question, the business as indicated last week is still before us. It is my intention to place on the order paper, possibly today but certainly before the end of the week, a motion referring the proposals made by the government to a special joint committee of both Houses of parliament. It will be my intention to call that motion on Tuesday. I hope to secure an agreement by which the debate will be confined to spokesmen for each party in the House. The reason for that restraint is that also I am proposing to put down a motion to adjourn the House on Friday next, June 30.

If that objective is to be achieved, I believe I will require a certain amount of co-operation from all members in the House. That applies to an effort to confine the debate on the constitution to a possible four speakers, or at least to an agreed period.

For the information of the House, when I put down the adjournment motion to take effect on June 30, 1978, it is my intention to have the House adjourned until October 10, 1978.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, before I turn this over to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I ask the government House leader if he would be prepared to deal with that for a few moments. I am prepared to say now that the debate be limited to one speaker from each party in the House of Commons. If it would be appropriate to do that now, I am prepared to do so.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of comments to make on this point. It is true that negotiations have been under way regarding this possible debate and the length of it. Perhaps it would be better if those negotiations were to continue among the four of us in the usual manner, rather than trying to settle it on the floor.

Both the government House leader and the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) know that we are prepared to have a debate upon and to arrange for the setting up of a committee to consider the constitutional proposals of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). But we do not concur in the proposition that it be a joint committee. It seems to us to be a bit inconsistent, regardless of our long-time position on the Senate, for the government to propose the abolition of their Honours in the other place and then to ask them to sit in on a committee to discuss what is to happen when they have gone.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Participatory democracy.

• (1522)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hope that even yet the negotiations might lead to the appointment of a committee of the elected representatives of the people to discuss this very important document regarding the future of Canada.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, there is one other matter of House business that I should like to raise. It is a point which has been raised already today, once by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and once by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). Some of our members have been in on the issue in other respects. I should like the government House leader to know that if it is felt that legislation is necessary so that the government can enter into a pooling arrangement regarding the victims of the Cranbrook air disaster, we are prepared to agree to the hour the Leader of the Opposition has suggested. In fact, we will do him one better and agree to do it in half an hour.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I share the opinion of the hon. member who spoke before me. We are prepared to accept a time limit for this debate on the proposals made by the right hon. Prime Minister in Bill C-60. But I also share the opinion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that the Prime Minister or the leader of the government should introduce an amendment calling for this committee to be made up of members of the House of Commons only. I suggest it would be improper to appoint senators to this committee, travel with them from coast to coast, sit with them on panels and see them commit hara-kiri, so to speak, in front of all Canadians. I feel it would be going a little too far and place these senators in an embarrassing situation. This would be a source of embarrassment for the members of the committee. I suggest we ought to change this right away, and we are prepared to speak only half an hour on this, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, of course, I do not agree with the suggestion that the committee be confined to elected representatives only. Obviously, any bill, including the constitutional bill, has to be dealt with by the other place, and it would be even more unseemly to exclude hon. members of the other place in the consideration of proposals which they must deal with and which affects the institution of which they are members. However, hon. members might wish to move an amendment and let the House decide the action or the composition of the committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We intend to.

Mr. MacEachen: I had that in mind. I was not counselling the hon. member; I was anticipating. But I do think it would be a good idea if we could get an order of the House confirming that when the motion setting up the joint committee is called, the debate will be limited to spokesmen for each party.

There will be opportunity for members to participate on the committee, and there will be opportunity when the bill itself is called for very wide participation in consideration of the proposals and in consideration of the report that would come from the joint committee. It is extremely important that the joint committee be established, that it begin its work while the House is adjourned so that it will be in a position to report as soon as possible. Certainly, it could work effectively in the course of the summer.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, the government House leader did not respond to the other matter raised by my colleague, the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). If there is any legal prohibition, either real or imaginary, on the part of the Ministry of Transport to participate immediately with cash in a pool for the heirs and victims of the Cranbrook disaster, can the government House leader advise whether the government will bring in legislation? He already has the assurance from all sides that it will not need more than an hour or half an hour, and that it will pass in all stages.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in reply to that question, I am not certain as to whether legislation will be recommended by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). I appreciate and welcome the restraint shown by hon. members opposite, and I ask them to broaden that approach to include a large number of other items presently on the order paper.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, the government House leader made a very interesting point when he talked about proceeding with the question of the period of time and the number of speakers in reference to the motion which he intends to put down, which would have absolutely nothing to do with the composition of the committee itself. I would hope that we will be able to proceed with that matter by way of an order now, and leave to debate and perhaps division that part which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre talked about, how the committee would be formed.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I think I understand the debate going on now on the procedure to follow concerning Bill C-60. If we have to bring an amendment dealing with the composition of the committee, we cannot pass it in half an hour. This will require at least a couple of days, and I think it would be the same as saying no now, because either we are logical or we are not. In my opinion, if we discuss an amendment and it is not agreed to by the government leader, we will have to limit ourselves. This can be done, but not in half an hour or by one spokesman of each party. I believe many members will want to speak on that subject.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Discussions have obviously taken place and will continue to take place. At the moment I have no application for any specific order with which I could deal. Perhaps it will be forthcoming.

EXPENDITURES—NICKEL BELT

Question No. 1,123—Mr. Rodriguez:

For each fiscal year since 1970, what amount was spent in the constituency of Nickel Belt by the Department of Agriculture and those agencies that report to it?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Departmental accounting systems are not designed to provide expenditures by constituency. However, operational expenditures for offices located within the constituency are estimated as follows:

	(Estimated)
1973-74	58,106
1974-75	57,002
1975-76	57,312
1977-78	72,579

The following estimated expenditures were made by the Canadian Livestock Feed Board and represent payments made under the Feed Freight Assistance Program for movements of feed grains.

1970-71	$22,008
1972-73	33,216
1973-74	35,580
1974-75	60,396
1975-76	48,168
1977-78	4,151

The Agricultural Stabilization Board and the Canadian Dairy Commission advise that their accounting systems are not designed to provide expenditures by constituency and this information could only be obtained by conducting a manual search of an excessive number of producer files.

DEFENCE CONSTRUCTION (1951) LIMITED

Question No. 1,179—Mr. Andre:

1. What is the Crown's precise financial interest in Defence Construction (1951) Limited as administered by the Department of National Defence and on what date was such interest acquired, at what cost and for what reason?

2. What was the book value of the Crown's equity on the date of acquisition and what is its latest estimated book value?

3. To date, what is the Crown's total investment, including equity costs, contributions to operating funds, debt forgiveness and what is the Crown's total realized profit from such investment?

4. In what manner is the Crown's interest represented (a) on the board of directors (b) in its senior management?

5. Did the government make a policy decision in regard to the future disposition of its interest?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5. Not applicable. Defence Construction (1951) Ltd. is a Crown corporation as defined in part VIII of the Financial Administration Act. The company is listed in schedule "C" to this act. Defence Construction Limited, the predecessor to the present company, was established in 1950 to contract for major military construction and maintenance projects required by the Department of National Defence. Defence Construction (1951) Limited was incorporated in 1951 under the authority of the Defence Production Act to assume this function. In 1965 the control and supervision of Defence Construction (1951) Limited (DCL) was transferred from the Minister of Industry to the Minister of National Defence. Defence Construction (1951) Limited is an agent of Her Majesty and the shares of the company, with the exception of the qualifying shares of the company's six directors, are held by the Minister of National Defence in trust for Her Majesty. The directors, with the exception of the president of the company, are all officials of federal government departments. For further detail see Public Accounts and Annual reports of Defence Construction (1951) Ltd.—R.S., c.F-10, s.75(3) submitted to parliament on June 30, each year.

ETHNIC NEWSPAPERS

Question No. 1,449—Mr. Mitges:

1. How does the Department of Finance define "ethnic newspaper"?

2. In which ethnic newspapers did the department advertise (a) in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1977 (b) since March 31, 1977 and, in each case, what was the total amount of advertisement placed?

3. What criteria does the department use to determine which ethnic newspapers will receive government advertising?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): In so far as the Department of Finance is concerned: 1. The Department of Finance does not itself define the term "ethnic newspaper".

2. (a) (see list below)—$32,500.00, (b) (see list below)—$57,929.75.

CONFERENCE ON IMMIGRATION AND MULTICULTURALISM

Question No. 1,475—Mr. Mitges:

1. (a) What criteria were used to determine who would be invited to the Ottawa Conference on Immigration and Multiculturalism sponsored jointly by the Multiculturalism Directorate and the Department of Employment and Immigration on March 21 and 22, 1978 (b) how many invitations were (i) extended (ii) accepted?

2. Will the government pay the hospitality costs (i.e. travel, food and accommodation) incurred by those attending the conference and, if so, what is the estimated total expenditure involved and how much of this cost will come out of the budget of the (a) Multiculturalism Directorate (b) Department of Employment and Immigration?

3. What aspects of the multiculturalism policy and programmes are to be examined at the conference?

Hon. Norman A. Cafik (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): 1. (a) The criteria used for inviting ethnic newspaper editors and radio and t.v. producers and broadcasters to attend the Ethnic Press Conference held in Ottawa March 21, 22, 1978 were: circulation of the newspapers in question and the frequency of publication; regional representation and a cross-section of ethno-cultural groups. (b) The number of invitations issued to sponsored representatives from the above ethnic media totalled 184. Of these, 151 accepted.

2. The government agreed to pay the cost of accommodation and transportation of the sponsored ethnic media representatives. The total cost came to $53,459. Of this sum, the commission of the Department of Employment and Immigration assumed responsibility for $29,603 and the Multiculturalism Directorate paid the balance of $23,856.

3. The following items pertaining to multiculturalism were on the agenda: (a) The role of the ethnic press; (b) Panel discussion on the ethnic press; (c) Report from Belgrade; (d) Ministerial questions; (e) The role of the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism (CCCM); (f) Panel discussion on the CCCM and its committees; (g) Closing remarks.

REGIONAL GRAIN ELEVATORS

Question No. 1,536—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Since the announcement of its new policy of granting financial aid towards the extension and construction of regional grain elevators, has the government received requests for such aid and, if so (a) how many were (i) approved (ii) rejected, by province (b) what was the amount requested in each case?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Yes. (a) (i) and (ii) As of April 13, 1978, of the 63 requests or inquiries received, no approvals or rejections have been made. Newfoundland, 1; New Brunswick, 2; Quebec, 24; Ontario, 26; Manitoba, 1; Alberta, 1; British Columbia, 8. (b) The amounts requested cannot be divulged prior to approval.

DUTY-FREE SHOPS

Question No. 1,712—Mr. MacKay:

1. What amount of revenue was derived from the duty-free shop at Dorval Airport in (a) 1972 (b) 1973 (c) 1974 (d) 1975 (e) 1976 (f) 1977?

2. What amount of revenue was derived from the duty-free shop at Mirabel Airport for each year since its inception until the end of 1977?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. (a) 1972-73, $297,100; (b) 1973-74, $388,500; (c) 1974-75, $428,980; (d) 1975-76, $487,224; (e) 1976-77, $363,264; (f) 1977-78, $466,100.

2. (a) November 1, 1975—March 31, 1976, $116,311; (b) 1976-77, $964,800; (c) 1977-78, $1,029,000.

CANADIAN INTERGOVERNMENTAL CONFERENCE SECRETARIAT

Question No. 1,823—Mr. Orlikow:

1. For the fiscal year 1976-77, what contracts for professional services were let for studies, surveys and analysis into (a) present or future policies, programmes or information analysis and their efficiency and effectiveness (b) the examination of the administration or internal operation of the Canadian Intergovernmental Conference Secretariat?

2. How much was committed on each contract and to whom?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): 1. None.

2. Not applicable.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding with orders of the day, I would remind hon. members that, since this is the final allotted day in this period, the House will go through the usual supply procedures this evening. In the past we have established a practice which, I think, has been welcomed by members on all sides of the House, and that is the practice of introducing the supply bill early in the day in order to give members an opportunity to read it, and to take away some of the grievance that exists when there is a last minute introduction of such an important bill, even though its contents are well known in advance.

May I assume that the House is disposed to proceed in the same way as in the past with respect to this supply bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

That this House re-affirms its support for the principle of freedom of information as a prerequisite to open and responsible government, as endorsed unanimously by the House on February 12, 1976, and urges the early introduction of appropriate legislation providing for certain precise and limited exceptions subject to a review process with ultimate appeal to the courts.

Mr. Speaker: Members are reminded that at 9.45 o'clock this evening every question necessary to dispose of the proceedings on this motion shall be put pursuant to Standing Order 58(10).

● (1532)

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I must say at the outset that the in-depth changes you suggested before have not been made.

[English]

There are many purposes to allotted days in this chamber. Certainly they are frequently occasions for active partisan debate. I hope there will not be that tone of partisanship to this debate today, because we have introduced this motion with the explicit intention of allowing members of parliament on all sides of this House of Commons to advance a principle which has already been debated extensively by members of parliament, and indeed a principle which many of us believe to be essential to restoring the reality of democracy in this country.

Before beginning the substance of my remarks I want to pay particular tribute to some members of this House and of the other place, and to former members of this House, who have taken an interest in the question of freedom of information for a long time. I think the House will agree that the primary tribute in this regard must go to my colleague, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), who has carried out and adopted this issue personally in the House of Commons and in committee for a long time. In addition, there are members such as the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) and his former associate in that party, Mr. Mather, as well as on the government side the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal), and Senator Godfrey of the other place, who have demonstrated a sincere and determined commitment to the principles of freedom of information.

Because we want to ensure that there would not be a partisan tone to this debate we made it very clear in introducing the subject matter that, as far as we are concerned in the official opposition—and I think in this matter I speak for the other opposition parties as well—we want to waive any connotation of lack of confidence associated with the vote that will come tonight. We want members of parliament to feel free to vote with their conscience on the principle of this question without any fear at all for the life of the government. We want to have applied to this debate the freedom to vote that was suggested by the parliamentary committee for the resolution of the matter in its substance. We hope that determination to deal with a principle and not with partisanship will inform this whole debate and the contributions of members from all sides.

There are, naturally, a number of matters on which members of the House will disagree, that is in the nature of democracy. One matter on which we all should agree, and most of us do agree, is the importance of ensuring that any government is kept accountable to the people of Canada through parliament. That accountability cannot occur if the Canadian people and the Canadian parliament do not know what the government is doing. Unfortunately, and for reasons that I for the moment I am prepared to attribute more to habit than malice, the Canadian people and the Canadian parliament today do not know enough about what the government is doing to hold that government accountable in any meaningful way.

There are a number of reforms that we have to contemplate in this House of Commons. One of them has to do with the power of parliamentary committees, and another, in my judgment, has to do with the capacity of individual private members to introduce private members' bills and legislation that will be considered seriously by this House.

The third matter that we have to consider is the excessive power of party leaders in our parliamentary system as it has evolved. I intend personally, as leader of this party, to act upon these reforms as quickly as it is within my power.

The most urgent and basic of these reforms is to stop the secrecy which denies public access to public documents. This parliament cannot control what it does not know. Indeed, I find it hard to understand how ministers can command the variety of information they require to run their departments when there is such an overwhelming atmosphere of secrecy as we have in this matter. It is entirely conceivable to me that a government which distrusts parliament could come quickly to distrust its own ministers with information that is outside their specific responsibility.

This is not at all a narrow legal question we are dealing with here. What we are talking about is power—political power. We are talking about the reality that real power is limited to those who have the facts. In a democracy that power and that information should be shared broadly. In Canada today they are not, and to that degree we are no longer a democracy in any sensible sense of that word. There is excessive power concentrated in the hands of those who hide public information from the people and the Parliament of Canada.

Sir, I said earlier, that I suspect that much of this secrecy is rooted and based in habit and not in malice. Some in this House would not be that charitable, but I think we all recognize that—particularly with the perpetuation of one party in office for so long—a practice has grown up among some ministers and their advisers of protecting themselves against the inconvenience of scrutiny by denying access to information. The purpose of this debate is to bring focus to the wide concern in the country about this practice which can destroy democracy, and to serve notice on the government that, if it continues to ignore demands for free information, then the excuse that it is a matter of habit will be completely gone and the governing party and all its members will be revealed as deliberately denying the people of Canada the right to know what their government is doing.

Later I want to cite some of the abuses of secrecy which exist today. Before doing that I want to draw attention to the attitude which is at the root of our problem. I think that attitude is revealed in the title of the green paper on freedom of information brought down by the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts). The title is "Legislation on Public Access to Government Documents". The distinction between "government documents" and "public access" indicates a belief that the government is somehow separate from the public. Sir, it is not. The government comes from the public, and it owes its loyalty and legitimacy to the public and the people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I find the idea that government is separate from the people, that it is somehow superior to the people, to be reprehensible in a democracy. Yet the government's document is infused with that idea. These matters that we want to have brought into the bright light of day are not government documents; these are public documents, paid for by public taxes, and legitimate only if they serve the public good. They should not be hidden from the public they are supposed to serve. This idea that the government and the people are adversaries should be rejected as simply paternalistic nonsense.

Let me deal with some of the abuses and make a short list of them, Mr. Speaker.

Residents of Port Hope, in the riding of my colleague from Northumberland Durham, became concerned about the potential health hazard from radiation poisoning. That radiation poisoning came from a refinery of Eldorado Nuclear, a Crown corporation. The government conducted studies and said that everything was fine, but refused to release any reports on the grounds that those reports contained classified information.

The Foreign Investment Review Agency carries out screening of takeovers. Yet its deliberations, which are of vital concern to the economic health of this nation, are carried out in secret. No information is ever made public other than whether an application has been approved or turned down.

Not long ago in this House the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) refused to make public to parliament, or to the people of Canada, a consultant's study on the Post Office, this at a time when there is deep concern throughout the country about the failure of the government to be able to deliver mail, and deep interest in knowing what went wrong and what might be changed. There was no justification for the minister's refusal to release this public document, particularly since it was already in the possession of a newspaper and had been the subject of two articles in that newspaper.

There is the case of Bernard Maguire who has been trying for more than three years to find the reasons for his being fired from his job with Canadian National Telecommunications in the Yukon. Mr. Maguire was allowed to see some personnel files in an effort to determine the unspecified security reasons for his dismissal. But he cannot divulge what he saw, to anybody.

Anyone else, anyone in this House could find and read into the record of parliament a list of other instances where individual interests and the public right to know have been limited or qualified by this government's insistence on secrecy.

Shortly after I came to this House I remember going to a public servant to try to get information on a matter of real concern to my constituency. He refused to give me the document saying there was no reason that I should not have it and that there was nothing in it, certainly nothing particularly serious, but that it was stamped "confidential". For this reason he was bound not to give it to me. I was merely a member of the House of Commons of Canada, merely an elected representative of the people whose lives were affected by this government. As I was going out the door he said, "Around here, we stamp 'confidential' on toilet paper." That is, unfortunately, an accurate indication of the abuses to which this practice has led. It will only be corrected in a useful way by legislation which ensures the principles of freedom of information such as I intend to elaborate upon now.

We believe that the essential elements of any law of that kind are the following: first, a worth-while, workable, effective freedom of information law must assert in clear and unequivocal terms that Canadians have a right to access of information held on their behalf by their government, and the government in turn has an obligation to respect and respond to that citizens' right.

Second, any exceptions to that norm should be limited exceptions and should be specific exceptions, and the burden of proof to establish that an exception is warranted should rest with the government and not with the citizen. We accept, sir, as every person of reason in the country does, that there are exceptional circumstances where the right of access has to be limited. Genuine matters of national security would be one of those. Information concerning certain legal investigations and proceedings would be another. The private records of individual Canadians would be another. Those are three exceptions on which there appears to be widespread agreement. The law should set forth those exceptions clearly and specifically in limited language that will not be subject or capable of being interpreted in a way that will hide that which should be public.

Third, and fundamentally, particularly to this debate because there has been fairly general agreement in principle on the first two points, any useful bill has to provide a procedure for resolving disputes over whether an exception applies in any particular case. That procedure has to be accessible to all Canadians, and it has to be a procedure in which the final decision rests with a body or a person completely independent of the government that would want to hide the information.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: On this side of the House we are now ready to give our support to a bill which contains those essential elements. We are equally ready to declare our readiness—I make this very clear to the minister—to fight any pretense at a freedom of information act which lacks those essential elements. We have discussed in this House, in committee, and with the public at large, the principles involved in freedom of information at some length. I refer again to the private bill introduced by my colleague, the hon. member for Peace River, back in 1969. In 1974 he was successful in having the subject matter of that issue referred to a standing committee. There was a debate, a discussion, and a report brought forward that was concurred in unanimously by all members of this House in February, 1976. We have had the government's own green paper which has been the subject of discussion in parliament and by the country at large.

I do not propose today to go over all that ground again. Instead I want to refer to the two principal arguments that the government seems to raise against any kind of meaningful freedom of information law. The first argument is that a law of that kind, a law making public documents public, would somehow compromise the neutrality of federal public servants by identifying those public servants with specific policy proposals. That objection is very easily met. All one has to do is delete the pertinent names of the public servants involved in the documents which are revealed, and that would clearly protect the anonymity of any public servant who might be compromised by the publication of his name in association with the document.

A second argument that is put forward, and it is an argument to which I hope the minister will address his attention today, is the argument that judicial review, and I imagine that extends to any kind of review independent of the ministry, would, to quote the government "usurp the constitutional role that parliament plays in making a minister answerable to it for his actions." The fact is that that constitutional role is usurped already. It is usurped by ignorance, because we cannot hold a government accountable unless we have information as to what that government is doing. When I say "we", I do not speak simply of the opposition, I speak of the whole Parliament of Canada. What is at issue here is not a responsibility exclusively of the opposition, it is a responsibility of each member of the House of Commons elected here to carry out our fundamental responsibility to keep control of and supervise the government of the day. We cannot do that without information. Without information there is no working, practical principle of ministerial responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: It is important to make the point, and I hope it is a point to which the minister will respond, that the notion of ministerial responsibility, as we practise it in this country, now does not at this point in time preclude subjecting ministers to checks and balances that are enforceable by the courts of the land. The courts have traditionally played an important role in reviewing executive actions, a role that does not at all conflict with the relationships of ministers of the Crown to parliament.

In examining whether or not the court is the appropriate forum to decide on freedom of information matters, we have to keep in mind as a parliament that such legislation, such as is being proposed here, would create a new universal right in Canada. It is the natural function of the courts to adjudicate upon disagreements over civil rights. To assert that ministerial responsibility demands that the minister's voice be the final voice means, in effect, that the minister would be the judge in his own case. The court apparatus can deal with sensitive material, if it needs to, on an in camera basis. It is therefore a viable, impartial social institution to check possible abuses of executive power.

When we indicated yesterday the nature of the motion today, the government House leader on the other side rose and raised some concerns about whether confidence would be involved. He indicated that the sections of our motion which bothered him most were those sections which proposed an ultimate appeal to the courts. I think that reveals the nub of the problem that we have here, not only in this debate but in getting this government to bring forth meaningful freedom of information legislation.

The fact is that the government wants to avoid the jurisdiction of anybody it cannot control. The government wants to appear to introduce freedom of information legislation, while in fact it retains the capacity to hide anything the publication of which would be inconvenient to this government. There is strategy in this matter as I see it. I say this with some regret, but its strategy appears to be twofold. First, it attempts to define exemptions so broadly that in effect nothing will change. Second, in the event a minister's discretion is questioned, it wants to ensure that somebody or some agency whom the government can control will decide, and will decide in the minister's favour. That, sir, cannot be allowed to occur. We require an independent body, an independent judge, in case of conflict. We require a law whose exemptions are specific and closely limited. Otherwise, and let us not fool around about its, the result will simply be a fraud, leaving the decision as to secrecy in the exclusive control of those who want to keep things secret.

There are a number of alternatives as to how that independent agency can be established. One would be to have an independent tribunal outside the government or outside the courts. Another would be to have the courts perform that function. That is the alternative preferred by the committee of this parliament and it is one which we, given the unanimous view of the committee of parliament, are certainly prepared to support and argue in this House.

I want to make it clear that there is no conflict in this matter with Canadian practice—I have made that point before—nor would there be any clogging of the Canadian courts. The experience in the United States has shown that the business of the courts does not increase appreciably because of a similar provision in the law of that land, a country which practises democracy that we only preach about here.

The basic question has to do with the willingness of this government to step out from its shroud of secrecy and let the public of Canada know the public business of Canada. The starting point for a freedom of information law and freedom of information is a freedom of information attitude. In fact, without that attitude, the law will be little more than a token.

A freedom of information attitude demands that government accept the elementary proposition that all its information belongs to the people of Canada and should be accessible to the people of Canada, unless a specific and persuasive argument can be made for confidentiality. Let me emphasize that the burden for making that argument must rest not on those who want sunshine, which must be the norm, but on those who want secrecy, which must be the exception. That is the essence of freedom of information. Any law not based on those principles is a fraud. Any government unwilling to operate according to those principles will make a mockery of the law and of its own commitment not just to freedom of information but to basic democracy.

I said at the outset that we did not intend this to be a partisan debate. However, it is impossible to deal frankly with this subject without raising a serious question whether this government has any commitment whatsoever to a freedom of information attitude. Its record, both its foot-dragging on introducing legislation and the lengthy list of specific situations in which it has consciously and deliberately kept information from the people of Canada, indicates a mentality which is fatal to freedom of information. In fact it is that mentality, rather than the lack of any legislation, which is the root problem. The hard truth is that there is no freedom of information attitude in our national government. The prevailing and pervasive attitude right throughout the government, from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on down, unfortunately is precisely the reverse.

There is no commitment to the principle that all information is public unless there is a specific over-riding argument to the contrary. Instead, there is a belief and a practice that all information is, in fact, confidential, unless there is a partisan or bureaucratic advantage to be gained through publicity. That is the hard truth, Mr. Speaker, and unfortunately the deeply-rooted truth. This devotion to secrecy, this comfortable notion that scrutiny can be avoided with the indiscriminate imprint of a "confidential" stamp, did not begin yesterday or, to be fair, even in 1968. It is a part of an Ottawa tradition which this government simply has extended and imbedded even more deeply into the system.

It is essential that we now shatter that tradition. Our own credibility and effectiveness demand it. We can begin that process today by giving unanimous support to the motion I have placed before the House. Indeed this House is the place to begin. Until we make our commitment to a freedom of information attitude clear and unequivocal, we can hardly expect those who have a vested interest in secrecy to change their attitude.

If all members in this House will join with us today in making our position clear, the responsibility then will rest squarely on the shoulders of the Prime Minister. I say that not only because he must accept over-all responsibility for his government, but because this matter demands the personal leadership of the first minister of our country. He must set the standard. He must make the commitment for his ministry and for his public service.

The Prime Minister used to believe in freedom of information; at least he talked as if he did. In 1964 he said, and I quote:

> Democratic progress requires the ready availability of true and complete information. In this way people can objectively evaluate their government's policies. To do otherwise is to give way to despotic secrecy.

In recent days that concern about despotic secrecy, the determination to protect the interests of the individual citizens of Canada, has appeared to take second place to an overweaning concern for secrecy and confidentiality.

I put it to the Prime Minister and his ministers; what is more fundamental than the right of a citizen to information which is his, and without which his role in our democratic process becomes almost meaningless? Here is a right as fundamental as those he wants to enshrine in a constitution. Here is a right where the Prime Minister can act now. Here is a right that we are prepared to act on well before July of 1979.

We hope that the Prime Minister of Canada and his colleagues will act on their declared interest in freedom of information in a way which ensures that the critical decisions will be made by people who are not in the control of or subject to the influence of the government, and will support the motion that I have put down today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, it has been said that a well informed citizenry is the lifeblood of democracy. I believe that to be true. We cannot have a truly effective democracy unless we have at the same time a well informed group of citizens. They can only be well informed if they have access to information. That was said some time ago, yet we have an ever-growing mass of materials being gotten together, assembled by government and made available in reports. However, much of it is hidden in an aura of secrecy from the people of this country, even in those cases where they paid to have the research and the studies made which led to the production of those documents.

For this reason our party will support the freedom of information act and the motion by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). We will support it and we call, as he has done, on all parties to give their support to this motion. I am very glad that he has made it clear that this motion is not a party matter.

I join in paying tribute to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). No one has been more persistent, aggressive, and persuasive with regard to this matter of freedom of information. He has done a magnificent job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: The Leader of the Opposition was generous and fair in pointing out that this was not the prerogative of any particular party. This concern is shared by people of all parties. In fact the first private members' bill dealing with this subject was introduced by a former colleague and present friend of mine, the then hon. member for New Westminster, Barry Mather.

Mr. Friesen: My predecessor.

Mr. Brewin: I will not make any comment on your connection, but he is the one who introduced the first bill.

I point out to all the Liberals in this House that even though there may be some incidental criticism of government as we have it, the basic principle embodied in the motion by the Leader of the Opposition is a basic principle that is fundamental to their task as parliamentarians and, indeed, as Liberals.

I sometimes wonder whether some members sitting on the government side really understand what the word "Liberal" means. If it means anything, it is a willingness to see that information is made available to the public. Information is said to be power, and power should be in the hands of the people, not of any select minority or select group. Therefore I hope that every member of the Liberal party will not feel that he is called upon to vote in this debate on any partisan or narrow basis, but on the basis of the fundamental principles which that party, to its honour I must say, has espoused, just as other parties have done.

If my friends need any encouragement, it should have been given to them by the Leader of the Opposition when he quoted the statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the effect that a failure to provide true and complete information would be to give way to despotic secrecy. It is a test for this House at this time to see whether it is ready to reject that temptation by producing meaningful legislation on this question. It is not enough to say that we will have legislation. It is not enough to have green papers which produce rhetoric. What is required and what is essential is legislation.

I am glad to say that the motion, from my point of view, does contain the basic essentials. It also happens to be part of the Constitution of Canada in an unexpressed manner. I am looking at a printing of a declaration of the Canadian government in 1948 at the United Nations Conference on the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It says this:

> Canada is a democracy which cannot be maintained without a foundation of free public opinion and free discussion within the limits set by the civil and criminal laws in Canada. Freedom of information is inherent in the Canadian constitution, but it is not specifically enacted.

What is being asked in this motion is that it be specifically enacted and, as I said, in meaningful terms which can be enforced.

I found that citation in an excellent book on this subject by a professor Rankin, entitled "Freedom of Information in Canada". Professor Rankin comments on that passage regarding the Canadian government's assertion about the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as follows:

> Notwithstanding such assurances and despite growing public concern over administrative secrecy, the citizen's access to government records remains subject to the whims of the government of the day.

He speaks about the confused state of the law, and I will have something to say about that later. What we are asking is that what is already implicit in the Constitution of Canada be made explicit.

I suppose every member of parliament has had his own experience regarding access to government documents being denied to him. I was long involved in a practice having to do with matters of immigration, and I found out that immigration manuals and instructions to people dealing with the lives of people were not made available either to the people concerned, their lawyers, or to any member of the public. I am happy to say that my understanding is that at long last, after years of battling on that matter, that practice is being changed and that immigration manuals are now to be made public.

When I was on the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence the committee was informed that a group of accountants had made a report, with financial suggestions and financial implications, on the operations of CIDA, a very worth-while agency, but one which has spent a great deal of Canadian funds. The committee asked to see the report because the committee was charged with responsibility for working toward an efficient system of administration of CIDA, and the committee wanted to see what these critics had said. The committee was denied that report.

As a matter of fact, the then chairman of CIDA, Paul Gerin-LaJoie, was ready to produce it, but the then secretary of state for external affairs, who we all know well and respect very much, Mr. Sharp, jumped into the breach and said no, that it was not to be produced. Members of this House sitting on that committee dealing with this serious matter were denied access to that report.

Others have had other experiences. Reports dealing with the environment, which are of great importance to Canadian citizens, have been concealed and not produced. Let us not forget that this atmosphere of concealment or secrecy has the effect of covering up the incompetent and of diminishing efficiency.

If people can put a blanket of secrecy over mistakes they have made, those mistakes are not likely to be corrected. I think the Leader of the Opposition has already put his finger on the key matter, and that is that it is perfectly obvious that there are some documents which should not be produced. There are certain documents which, by their nature, would be against the welfare of the state if they were produced. These could be exemptions from the general provisions of an act which could perfectly properly provide that all other documents should be made available to citizens. However, nobody but the most absolute purist would suggest that that general expression should not be subject to exemptions in proper cases.

One of the ways the effectiveness of a freedom of information act would be denied would be to draft exemption provisions in broad terms and to fail to provide adequate means for decisions as to whether particular cases fit within the general rule of production or whether they should be exemptions and need not be produced. These matters are absolutely essential to the proper working of such an act. When we talk about meaningful legislation, we should be talking about exemptions which are clearly and narrowly defined having regard to the public interest.

The criticism of the green paper produced by this government is that it failed to recognize that. The proposed exemption is so broad in its terms that anybody with, or even without, legal experience could find some excuse for not producing a document when it was demanded.

As the Leader of the Opposition has said, the key to it all is who shall in the ultimate analysis enforce the act. It may be that people at lower levels could investigate and report, but the final decision must be made by some independent judicial authority. It does not necessarily have to be the courts, but it has to be someone outside the machinery of government. Any act—and this was proposed by the green paper—purporting to call itself a freedom of information act, which does not provide for that independent judgment on the ultimate analysis of whether the act is applicable, and any act which tries to arrogate to a minister or a group of ministers or anybody within the sphere of government the right to say no—a final no not subject to review—is, and will be, a sham, and will be something which should never be dignified by the title "freedom of information".

The argument in the green paper is that somehow or other judges are incompetent to deal with this. Whoever heard of such nonsense as this! It is precisely that sort of thing that the whole judiciary system is set up to deal with, and I want to give a few illustrations of that in my speech. This is what Mr. Justice Rand said in a case in 1954 which was reported in the Dominion Law Reports of that year at page 483. He said:

> What is secured by attributing to the court this preliminary determination of possible prejudice is the protection against executive encroachment upon the administration of justice; and in the present trend of government, little can be more essential to the maintenance of individual security. In this important matter to relegate the courts to such a subservience as is suggested would be to withdraw them from the confidence of independence and judicial appraisal that so far appear to have served well the organization of which we are the heirs.

The matter was dealt with in England, a country where, I suppose, the rights and privileges of the Crown are defined as widely as in any other country.

In a recent important case reported in the 1968 Appeal Court Reports, of Conway versus Rimmer, the issue that was to be decided was set out very clearly by one of the judges in the House of Lords, Lord Morris of Borth-y-Gest. He said:

> My Lords, stated in its most direct form, the question . . . which is raised in this case is whether the final decision as to the production in litigation of relevant documents is to rest with the courts or with the executive. I have no doubt that the conclusion should be that the decision rests with the courts.

All of the members of this English court so held. They said that they were satisfied there would be no constitutional impropriety in allowing the judges the power to overrule ministers on matters of secrecy.

If the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) is going to reply in this debate, I hope he will not pretend—because it is such a false sort of pretence—that there is some judicial impropriety about leaving to judges, rather than to cabinet ministers or to people within the government apparatus, the final right to decide on these matters. As I said, that was the view even in England, which puts on a pretty high level the assertion of the privileges of the Crown to resist the production of documents.

It was described in another way in the book by Dr. Rankin to which I have already referred.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Brewin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank hon. members for their generosity in allowing me a little extra time. I will not take very much. Usually I try to take less time than is allowed me, so I appreciate getting credit time in this instance.

I was going to quote the following from Dr. Rankin:

It has also increasingly become clear that such objections are based on a self-serving myth that is sought to be perpetuated in the 1977 green paper: that "there is no way that a judicial officer can properly be made aware of all the political, economic, social and security factors that may have led to the decision in issue. If the American experience has indicated anything, it has indicated the hollowness of this assertion.

From the same author, we read the following at page 126:

The fact of the matter is that the courts are the natural repository for decisions on the exercise of constitutional or civil rights and what is contemplated in freedom of information legislation is nothing less than the creation of a new citizens right—a right to access to government documents.

He goes on to point out that the assertion by ministers that they shall do this is without foundation.

I want to say that changes are required in the legislation we have at the present time if we are to effect the principle contained in the motion. First, a freedom of information act must be passed, and for that we have admirable precedents. Our committee visited Washington and discussed the U.S. freedom of information act which was, first of all, found to be unsatisfactory and substantially amended in 1974, and in which they insisted that essential to that type of legislation was a judicial determination, in the ultimate analysis, of whether or not a document was admissible. We have to change that and bring in a new act.

In addition, we must repeal section 41 of the Federal Court Act which, by subsection (2) gives the minister the right to deny access to any document by merely producing an affidavit that in his opinion it would be contrary to the public interest. This flies right in the teeth of what we are arguing for. As a matter of fact, I have filed a private member's bill, which is somewhere down the order paper and not likely to be reached while I am a member of this House, which proposes precisely that amendment.

Another document which we must change is the Official Secrets Act, which was antiquated 50 years ago and is even worse now. It gives up to 20 years, in the vaguest terms, for so-called breaches of official secrets. That act was intended to be confined to cases of spying, cases of clear treason and treachery. Certainly, as applied to that, it may have a useful purpose, but as it is now drafted it can be misapplied in many different ways, and it has not been used very often, I suppose for very good reasons. So those things have to be changed also. We have ample precedents in the U.S. and in Sweden, which, I think, since 1902 has had legislation of this sort.

I want to conclude by once again reading from the book to which I referred, as follows:

After an exhaustive analysis of the Canadian administration, Professor Mallory concludes:

Government in a modern democracy is largely in the hands of a bureaucracy, using the term in a neutral sense as meaning a body of professionally competent, hierarchically organized administrators. The major problem in modern constitutional government is to retain an effective control, by public opinion and by legal restraints, of the apparatus of the state which constantly expands with the increased public demand for more social welfare services and with the growing burden of national defence in a world of increasing peril. Liberty in such a world can be nourished only by the full and effective functioning of the political and legal restraints on abuse of power.

Then it continues as follows:

As noted throughout this study, there can no longer be any justification for the aura of secrecy which surrounds the business of government. Access to government information is essential to participatory democracy. And access must be a meaningful legislative right rather than a sham. There is no compelling reason why the courts in Canada should not be entrusted with the responsibility to review all information requests which the government has denied.

In another way this states the basic purpose and principle of the motion before us. I commend it to all hon. members of the House, especially those who have any pride in calling themselves Liberals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I ask that a roll call be taken. There is no quorum.

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought there was some agreement on the part of various members that I would be the next person recognized by the Chair. There had been consultations with the hon. House leader of the New Democratic Party on this point. Indeed, I understood that I had the right to rise and exercise my responsibility to speak, after the initial speech by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). At that time I did not rise to speak because of my desire to hear the comments of the various official representatives of opposition parties, before responding to some rather constructive remarks. Therefore I was a bit surprised when Your Honour recognized the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Jones). I thought there was a disposition on the part of the House to hear me at this stage.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There are only 19. You had better keep talking.

Mr. Roberts: I did not hear the interruption by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There are only 19 members here now.

Mr. Beatty: I think we should count. Perhaps the hon. member is wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The Chair has just counted, and there are 20 members in the House. The hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts).

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order. When I requested a roll call, there were less than 19 members in the House. There were four Liberals, nine Conservatives, two NDP, and one Independent. I think the roll call should have been conducted when I asked for it.

Mr. Kempling: That is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The Chair recognizes that there are 20 members in the House. The hon. Secretary of State.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with those hon. members who have previously pointed out that many of our distinguished colleagues have taken an interest in this subject, greatly to their credit. I want to associate myself with the compliments which have been extended already. This continuing and important question of freedom of information has been brought before the House over the past year or so. Particularly I cite the contribution which was made by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

I must confess that my heart sang with delight when the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) promised to be not only non-partisan but short, in order for other interested members to be able to take part in the debate. I think he made a very constructive contribution to the debate. I regret that there were one or two moments when he lapsed from the promise of non-partisanship. I hope I shall be relatively non-partisan and relatively short, because I know there are other hon. members who wish to take part in the debate.

I was somewhat disappointed that the hon. Leader of the Opposition attempted to suggest the very title of the green paper, which the government has brought forward, indicated some kind of assumption on the part of the government that it was separate and superior to the public. There is no basis, either in the title or in the document, for making such a charge. If the government had been so separate and superior to the public, as was suggested by the hon. member, it could not have possibly survived in office for so long in this century. It is because this government is close to and represents the interests of the public that it has received the support of the public impressively in this century.

I do not think it was worthy of the hon. member to ascribe various motives to the government for wrestling with two very difficult questions concerning freedom of information. The first is the definition of what exemptions should apply to the general principle, which we accept and urge, that government documents should be open to the public. The second is the question of the review process to establish whether those exemptions have been applied properly within the government, and whether the review process is properly constructed. I say this in a non-partisan way: these are difficult questions to resolve. They are not easily resolved. Unfortunately the hon. member lapsed into a description of motives on the part of the government which simply do not exist. However, with the exception of those two lapses, he made a very constructive presentation to the House. I hope the debate will continue on that level.

To some extent I was disappointed with the intervention of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). In his speech he misconstrued what the purpose of the government was in bringing forward the green paper on legislation on public access to government documents last spring. He talked about the green paper proposal. I am not sure if I am interpreting his view properly, but it seems to me he was suggesting that what was put forward in the green paper was proposals for government action. As in the essence of a green paper, we were putting forward proposals for discussion. In many cases we put forward alternative wording of what the exemptions could be. We solicited the advice of the House, and indeed the advice of the joint committee, which is performing an extremely valuable role, as to how the exemptions could be made more precise, or which of the various approaches to the review of exemption applications should be accepted. I hope the hon. member listened to me in the past. Perhaps he will take more heed of me today.

I am being completely straightforward in saying that the purpose of the green paper was to solicit debate and discussion in the House, joint committee, and on the part of the public. It has been successful in that objective.

As I said before, the activities of the joint committee have been valuable. Both the ultimate report of the committee, which I expect in the next few days—it may have already been prepared, but I have not yet received it—and the briefs presented to the joint committee, have been stimulating and useful in the deliberations of the government as to how a proper freedom of information or access to public documents policy should be conceived.

As was indicated earlier by the President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), we are largely in agreement with this motion presented by the Leader of the Opposition because we know and accept that there is a need for changes in this area. This I think is accepted and recognized by members on all sides of the House and, certainly, it is recognized by members of the government.

We are not holding back from confronting the challenge of meeting that need. There are undoubtedly abuses which have occurred in the past, but I do not think that they are abuses which stem from the long life of this government. If one, for example, regards the situation in Australia or the situation in Great Britain, one finds a situation of comparable difficulty. I suspect that the tradition of confidentiality stems much more from the traditions of parliamentary government than it does from the life of any particular government.

We accept the fact there is a need for reform in this area, and we urge it. If I have to do so again, I will make the commitment which I made less than two weeks ago in this House in my speech on June 9, 1978, as reported on page 6254 of Hansard, that we are committed to bringing forward in the next session effective freedom of information legislation. On the government's part, there is not a great deal of disagreement with the motion presented by the hon. Leader of the Opposition and, indeed, if the members of the House are good enough to look at the speech I made less than two weeks ago, they will find presented there—no doubt because I am subjectively biased—in a more eloquent form, essentially the same arguments which have been made in this House this afternoon both by the hon. member for Greenwood and the Leader of the Opposition, a description of why it is essential that there be freer access to public documents, and of the principles which should guide us.

I noted with interest the comments of the Leader of the Opposition during his speech, and I jotted down what I thought he described as the essential points.

[Translation]

I hope I am not distorting the meaning of his remarks.

[English]

I think I have jotted them down correctly; I tried to do so. He thought it was, first of all, necessary to establish that there is a public right to access to these documents. I agree. Secondly, he said that the exceptions to this general right should be presented in a limited form. I agree entirely with that. Third, he suggested that these exceptions to the general principle should be put in extremely clear language, and I agree with that. He said—I hope I am quoting him correctly, but I may be paraphrasing a little bit—there should be a procedure for resolving disputes as to whether a document should or should not be released, and that this procedure should involve persons or a body—he did not at that time say the courts—but persons or a body which is independent. There, too, I am in accord with the four essential principles which, if I understood him correctly, the Leader of the Opposition presented for the consideration of the House in what I thought was very useful way.

Why then is there some reluctance on my part—and a reluctance that I will urge on my colleagues on this side of the House—not to accept this motion? It stems essentially from the fact that this motion contains a representation that the method for independent review should be that of a judicial review. If time permits, perhaps I will be able to say a few words about that in a moment or two.

The Leader of the Opposition poses two specific challenges or points on which he asked me to comment, and I will therefore do so. He ascribed to the government an argument that there was a necessity for confidentiality of documents in order to protect the—I am not sure whether he said anonymity or neutrality of civil servants—perhaps neutrality of civil servants—and implied that one could deal with this problem by the simple process of blacking out the name of the civil servant involved. My comment on that would be that it is not simply a question of neutrality, or perhaps even anonymity, of civil servants; it is a question of whether there is to be surrounding the decisions of cabinet the kind of confidentiality which leads to frankness in advice and frankness in questioning. I would suggest it is desirable to have this confidentiality and that it is in the public interest when the executive government takes its decisions.

While this is certainly a debatable point and one on which I hope the joint committee will give us some precise recommendations. It is not irresponsible to be concerned about the context in which advice is given to the cabinet so that it may make its decisions as quickly as possible in as free an atmosphere as possible.

I hope that I am not contaminating him with any sort of guilt by association, for instance, in saying that when the hon. member for Peace River presented his proposal for legislation on this subject in 1974—and I think it was a very useful step which he did take—he put forward as desirable in the legislation an exemption on page 3, section 4, sub-section (g), "where the information on record is of a confidential nature exchanged by public officials within the government or between public officials of the government and any other government, and is expressed to be confidential." That describes a rather sweeping exemption. Myself, I would want a rather narrower one. I do not cite that particular paragraph to criticize the hon. member, far from it, but simply to say that there is an area of decision making in government where it is extremely important to have, not only the names of civil servants protected, but where the essential advice given or the range of advice given may be desirably held back from public view in the interests of a more efficacious, speedier and more wide-ranging process of decision making.

The second point the hon. member asked me to comment upon is that of the question of ministerial responsibility. His remarks were later joined by the points of view presented by the hon. member for Greenwood. It revolves around the question of how the process is to be designed which will review those decisions which are taken within the exemptions, which I think all members of the House will admit are necessary. No matter how fundamental the principle that the public should have access, there must be some exceptions. I think all members will admit that, with the possible exception of my friend from Saskatoon-Biggar speaking in committee—I am not sure whether it was simply for the purposes of argument or description or whether he sincerely believed it. I think almost all members in the House believe that there are some areas where exemptions are necessary. The question then is how do you judge whether the exemptions or the exceptions have been properly applied.

As I said earlier, there must be some process which is independent of ministerial decision in order to make the process credible. Both the hon. member for Greenwood and, I think, the Leader of the Opposition—although he may have perhaps had a bit more latitude on the question than I am now ascribing to him—suggested that the courts were an essential element in such a process of review and, indeed, that it was the proper function of a court to apply such a review to this application of the exemptions. It is that thought as expressed in the motion before the House which causes us on the government side some difficulty.

Why are we cautious on this side of the House that judicial review is the appropriate way to supervise the application of the exceptions? I think the phrase of the Leader of the Opposition was that it was natural that the courts should make an adjudication of the rights of the citizens. I would suggest that the proper question is not simply a question of adjudication of rights, but an assessment of the public interest. It is that which gives some of us on this side pause as to whether the courts are the appropriate means of independently reviewing the question of how the exemptions or exceptions are applied.

I would like to elaborate on that point for a few moments. Why are we cautious about this? Perhaps the best way of describing my own mind at the moment would be to say that I am as yet to be convinced that the process of judicial review is an essential element in establishing an independent review process. The hon. member for Peace River and others who participated in the joint committee know that this is the point of view I expressed when I appeared before it. I certainly did not want to make up my mind on that important matter before I had a chance to study and reflect on the report which the committee will present.

We are cautious, first of all, because the court process tends to be both expensive and time consuming. That has been the experience in the United States. Our estimate is that the cost of applying a judicial report procedure would be $10,000 or so for each judicial test. In such a case the judicial review is likely to favour those who can afford to tackle the question that way, such as large corporations which have an interest in obtaining information and can handle the necessary cost of taking the matter to court. This has been the experience in the United States.

There is a question in the mind of the government of the appropriateness of this in relation to what parliament has decided in other areas. Parliament has established, for instance, the Human Rights Commissioner as an officer of parliament, and the Commissioner of Official Languages as an officer of parliament. In both cases these officers will be called upon to apply rights, if you wish to describe them as such, in disputed areas, and to assess whether those rights have been properly met or accepted by government. It may very well be that in the parliamentary system this kind of decision can be reviewed. Because of the separation of power in the congressional system, this is not open to the United States. In Canada we have an instrument in the offices of the Auditor General, the Commissioner of Official Languages, the Human Rights Commissioner, which would make it more appropriate to have an officer of parliament perform such a function, rather than an appeal to the courts.

There is also the question of consistency in a rather different way. If we instituted a system of judicial review there would be a variety of decisions taken by different judges on the same kind of question. I would suggest to the House it might be more useful to have an officer of parliament or some officer whose job it is to concern himself continually with this kind of question, so that decisions taken about the application of exemptions or exceptions would be reasonably consistent.

There is a fourth consideration which will weigh heavily with the government in coming to a decision, though not necessarily decisively. We must ask if this is the kind of decision it is appropriate for judges to make. I am not surprised that the hon. member for Greenwood, who is a lawyer, thinks that it is, and I am not surprised that the Canadian Bar Association thinks it is appropriate. I am not even surprised that the hon. member for Peace River may think so, although I thought his experience with the courts over the last few weeks might have tempered his conviction in this regard. I would have thought that the hon. member for Greenwood, if not the hon. member for Peace River, would have been concerned about the views of their National Anti-Poverty Association which specifically rejected the idea of a judicial review because of its cost, its delays. They recognized it would mean a process of review was not open equally to the poor and the wealthy.

I suggest we must at least consider whether this is the kind of decision it is appropriate for judges to make. We are not talking about whether a set of designed procedures have been followed in taking a decision. It is clear that courts would determine whether procedures for taking the decision had been appropriately followed. Nor are we considering an assessment of fact by a court. We are not considering the application of "black letter" law, the interpretation of what the words of a law mean or what the motivation of parliament was in placing those words in an act. What we have here is an assessment of the public interest.

We would often have a question of assessing conflicts in public interest, for instance, a conflict between the desirability of knowledge to be given an individual which would conflict, perhaps, with the right to privacy of another individual. I think this is an argument which has to be met, discussed, and perhaps refuted if that is possible. I want to cite the way in which this particular point was presented to the joint committee by the Parliamentary Press Gallery and quote from a letter on the same subject by the well known journalist, Anthony Westell. I only cite these so that I may be brief, because I think they put the argument in succinct form, and I am anxious to allow others to take part in the debate.

First of all, I should like to quote from a brief presented by the Parliamentary Press Gallery to the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. In issue No. 14 of the committee proceedings at page 14A:18 there appears the following passage:

> But we do not think it is a sound argument to say that because the ministers are not fully accountable to parliament—

Parenthetically, Mr. Speaker, I think this is the argument the Leader of the Opposition made a few moments ago.

> —they should be made accountable to judges. Such a step would further weaken parliament. The role of the Commons would be reduced because one of its functions would have been transferred to the courts—courts which in the end are responsible to no one.
> If it were merely a matter of giving the courts power to examine disputed documents to see if proper legal procedures had been followed in classifying them as secret, there might be no great objection. But the suggestion seems to be that the courts should also have the power to review and reverse the judgment of a minister that the publication of the information might, or would, be injurious or damaging to national security or to foreign relations, or to cabinet secrecy and so on. Such a decision would rest not on fact or interpretation of the law, but on political judgment. Ministers are elected and mandated precisely to make such judgments, and are responsible for the consequences. If judges were to be empowered to overturn the decisions of ministers, who would then be responsible if in fact the result of the publication proved to be injurious to the public interest? We would be asking the courts to make what are essentially political judgments.

I should also like to quote from a letter which appeared in the Globe and Mail of June 7, 1978, from Mr. Westell who, I believe, was instrumental in writing the press gallery brief. The final two paragraphs of the letter read as follows:

I can understand why the Bar Association should wish to transfer jurisdiction from parliament to the courts, and I suspect that the lawyers have influenced their clients in big business and big labor. But I can't understand why Mr. Stevens—

That is another journalist.

—should believe that Canadian judges, most of whom seem to be highly conservative fellows, are likely to be more liberal than parliament in dealing with the release of information.

The decision on whether to release information may often involve a conflict between public interests: The so-called right to know and the proper protection of privacy and security. If judges are better equipped than elected politicians to make that sort of decision, why bother with parliament at all? Let the judges with their superior wisdom run the country.

I admit there are arguments on the other side of the question to the effect that the benefits of further reducing the doctrine of ministerial responsibility may be greater than the disadvantages of so doing. It is, however, not an artificial problem which confronts the government but a real problem which I hope and am convinced the joint committee will wrestle with. It is one of the reasons I await their report with great expectation.

I believe that all of us in this House have a conviction and determination to press forward in this matter and bring to parliament and pass through it effective legislation on freedom of information. That has been the purpose of our policy and was the underlying reason for the presentation of the green paper which was an honest exposition on our part, soliciting the debate which has taken place. I know that the joint committee has performed valuable work, and many of the witnesses before it presented valuable contributions to the debate. We now await the report of the joint committee, and I will remake today the commitment which the government has made often in the past, that we are determined to bring legislation on this matter before the House in the next session.

I will not today counsel this side of the House to accept this motion because I believe that it is unwise, particularly before we have seen the reasons and arguments brought forward by the joint committee. Let us not assume automatically that the most appropriate way of achieving the kind of independent review that we all wish to have is through a judicial review. Before I make up my mind on that question I certainly want to have the counsel that the joint committee will present to us.

It is on those grounds that I am reluctant to accept at this stage something that—with fuller experience and fuller knowledge which the committee provides—may not prove to be prudent, and I will oppose the resolution before the House. I would hope that no members of the House and certainly members of the public would not interpret that opposition to be any lessening of our determination to act in this area in the next session of the House.

[Mr. Roberts.]

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a pleasure to be able to speak in support of the motion moved by my colleague, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark).

In a democracy no issue is more central to the survival of democracy itself than people in a country being able to have information they need to make informed judgments on issues of the day. I think James Madison, a former United States president, probably stated that principle much more articulately and profoundly than any member of this House could today. He described it in this way:

A popular government, without popular information, or the means of acquiring it, is but the prologue to a farce or a tragedy; or perhaps both. Knowledge will forever govern ignorance: And a people who mean to be their own governors, must arm themselves with the power which knowledge gives.

Surely there is no issue which is more central to democracy itself than ensuring that the people of Canada have access to the information they need in order to make informed decisions about their government.

Over the course of the last several years government in Canada has grown in size and pervasiveness, so that today virtually no aspect of the average citizen's life is left untouched by government in one form or another. Just yesterday the Toronto Star ran a Gallup poll in which Canadians were asked to respond to questions about the extent of government involvement in their lives. When they were asked whether they felt the federal government affects their lives to a greater or lesser degree than it did ten years ago, 69 per cent of Canadians said that they felt that the involvement of the federal government in their lives was greater today than it was ten years ago. When they were asked the question "Do you think the level of influence of the federal government today in the way of life of the average Canadian is too great, too little or just about right" 51 percent of the Canadians polled indicated that they felt the level of involvement of governments in their day to day lives is too high.

The very size of government itself and the complexity of decisions which have to be made by government today make it that much more difficult for citizens of this country to discharge their responsibilities, to appraise judiciously the activities of their government, and to be able to make sound judgments about the political issues of the day. As the power of big government grows and as its pervasiveness grows, as its involvement in the day to day lives of Canadians grows, the stature of the government increases, but the stature of the average citizen, his power to affect his day to day life, diminishes.

Governments today have a tremendous advantage over everyday citizens and over parliament in trying to state their point of view. If one takes a look at the difference in resources which are available to government today, there are several. First, the government has virtually unlimited resources in terms of spending to promote its particular point of view. In 1978 the government spends hundreds of millions of dollars to put across particular points of view on issues which it supports. It has large staff resources at its disposal which are able to do research for the government and are able to put a particular viewpoint across by making speeches on behalf of the government across Canada. The government has access to computers and other research facilities which allow it information which the average citizen just does not have. Finally and most important, all too often governments in Canada have the ability to operate in secrecy without public scrutiny, without giving the average citizen an opportunity to know how decisions are made which affect his life and affect the way in which his tax dollars are spent.

The brief to the Joint Standing Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments which was presented by the Canadian Bar Association makes the point that today in Canada there is no statutory right that Canadians have to freedom of information. There is no principle involved there that is enshrined in the law which allows Canadians to know how their money is being spent and how decisions affecting public policy are being made. Today, the principle seems to be that information about how the taxpayer's money is being spent and how public policy is being made is the private property of the government. The principle seems to be that the onus is upon the citizen to prove that he should be entitled to know how his life is being affected by government decisions, and not upon government to justify withholding that information from the average citizen.

The Canadian Bar Association summarizes the problems which are inherent in the present situation and the difficulty that there is for the average citizen to have proper access to information, in the following way. They make this statement, "In short, therefore, the legal obstacles to disclosure reinforced by the civil servant's tradition of secrecy have created a climate of secrecy which surrounds even the lower ranks of the bureaucracy." That is the way it is for the average Canadian today. When a person is faced with decisions made by government on a daily basis which impact on his life, he finds that he is not allowed access to the information which is absolutely essential if he is to discharge his responsibility as a citizen properly.

In 1965 the first bill was presented in the House of Commons to provide for a legal right for citizens to have access to public information. It was in 1969 that my colleague, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), first introduced his private member's bill on freedom of information. Today, 13 years later, after the first bill was introduced in parliament, parliament is still reduced to the position where we are led to debate the principle of freedom of information, and the government has yet to come back to parliament to place before it comprehensive legislation which will protect the rights of our citizens to have access to this information.

It is the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts), who spoke just before me, who has the responsibility for freedom of information. He indicated that the Liberal party would not support the motion that was moved today by the Leader of the Opposition in an attempt to gain all-party support for the principle of freedom of information and for the principle of ensuring that where decisions are made by a minister in which he is one of the parties to a dispute, an impartial arbitrator should have the right to determine what the citizen's rights should be and whether the minister acted properly or not. The minister indicated he has yet to make up his mind as to what the principle involved really is, and as to which side he will choose to support in this particular question. He has indicated his party will rise tonight to vote against this motion which would give citizens of Canada this right.

The minister has indicated that in the next session of parliament he intends to introduce and to pass a freedom of information act. I do not expect, and I think that most members of this House and most Canadians do not honestly expect, that this government will pass a freedom of information act before the next election. If it were his priority to do so, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had ten years to bring before parliament a tough and comprehensive freedom of information act. He has not done that. We know from the attitude of this government that its members see it is in their partisan interest to put themselves on the side of the angels by claiming they support the principle of freedom of information without actually having to come forward to parliament and pass legislation. That is essential. It is not introducing a green paper or even a bill to parliament that is essential, but passing legislation which would enshrine the rights of Canadians to have access to information.

The green paper which was tabled by the Secretary of State a year ago outlines very well the concerns of this government. It describes at great length some of the difficulties the government sees that are inherent in the concept of freedom of information. I quote one statement from page four of the report:

> As well, advice contained in such documents might be construed in the press and parliament as embarrassing to a minister or be used to try to break down the unity of the governing party, even though such advice did not represent government policy or a course of action acceptable to the minister.

Where are we in Canada today if it is acceptable to withhold information because the government is afraid it might be potentially embarrassing to it? That is the record of this government. There are many instances where, if the government had only levelled with the Canadian people, let the facts be known, and given them the opportunity to make sound and informed judgments about the activities of the government, the government simply refused to let that happen because of potential embarrassment of partisan disadvantage that might accrue to it.

My leader made it clear that a first priority of a Progressive Conservative government led by him after the next election will be to introduce a tough and comprehensive freedom of information act. It will enshrine this right in law for all Canadians, and will ensure that cover-ups do not take place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: It has to be a priority item. I think my leader feels the same way. Any government which, irrespective of political affiliation, operates in secrecy, begins to develop its own secrets that could be embarrassing to it. The pressure builds day after day to withhold information on the grounds that it could be politically embarrassing to release it. That is why a new government should, as a first priority, and our government will, introduce a freedom of information act before many days have passed in a new parliament.

Even parliament finds that its hands are tied in trying to obtain information from this government. In February, 1973, the government House leader tabled in parliament 16 principles for refusing to produce papers which were requested in motions for the production of papers which were placed on the order paper by members of parliament. Nos. 4 and 14 are so broad as to allow the government to refuse to give parliament virtually any bit of information that it does not want to give. It does not even need the other 14 provisions. Those two provisions alone would give ample justification for refusing to produce any documents of any kind to parliament.

I asked my office to do some research on what has happened since this session of parliament began with regard to motions placed on the order paper by individual members of parliament requesting the production of papers. My office found there were some 75 notices of motions for the production of papers placed on the order paper. Of those 75, 12 have not yet been answered by the government. Of those, 63 have been dealt with by the government. Of these 63, 49 requests have been rejected by the government and no documents were produced. Therefore, on only 14 out of 75 requests has the government satisfied the member by even producing some or all of the documents, of giving sufficient reasons why the documents were not produced that the member withdrew his request.

We do not need in parliament a new freedom of information act for the government to begin to relax the security that it puts upon government documents today. The government could today begin to free up the restrictions it puts on those documents. It could prove by its relationship with parliament that it is prepared to share information with the people of Canada. I submit this government has, through its behaviour over the last several years, proven it is not serious about the whole question of freedom of information.

No freedom of information act has any value for our citizens unless it includes a citizen's right to appeal a decision made by the executive of the government to refuse to produce information that is requested. Unfortunately the government's green paper makes it clear the government has no intention whatsoever of allowing Canadians to challenge a cabinet minister's right to give information to the Canadian public.

In the green paper there are five options listed as a means of appealing or considering decisions made by cabinet ministers to refuse to release information. Of those five, the green paper itself lists serious arguments against four of them. That leaves only one option which it does not criticize in any way, that is, that an individual information commissioner be created who would act as an arbiter between the government and the public. However, he would have no authority to overrule a decision that has been made by a cabinet minister who wants to hide information to which the public is entitled.

The government argues that it is somehow improper for the judiciary to have the right to evaluate a refusal by a minister of the Crown to make information available. I want to read the words in the green paper because they illustrate the mentality that is involved here. It says this about the judges:

> To require that he became a judge of a minister's actions, that he should have the power to replace the opinion of the minister with his own opinion, is to change his role entirely and to bring him into the political arena where he cannot properly defend himself. All of this could seriously threaten the independence of the courts and thereby place in jeopardy our present judicial system. Under our current conventions, it is the minister who must remain responsible for deciding whether to refuse or grant access to documents and this responsibility is a constitutional one owed to his cabinet colleagues, to parliament, and ultimately to the electorate. A judge cannot be asked, in our system of government, to assume the role of giving an opinion on the merits of the very question that has been decided by a minister. There is no way that a judicial officer can be properly made aware of all the political, economic, social and security factors that may have led to the decision in issue.

What more clear statement could there be of the government's position on this question? What more damning answer could there have been than that presented by the Canadian Bar Association to the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments when they included the study done by Professor Murray Rankin of Victoria on behalf of the Canadian Bar Association? This is what they had to say in their brief to the standing joint committee:

> Professor Rankin's study also condemns as a "self-serving myth" the contention in the green paper that there is no way a judicial officer can be properly made aware of all the factors that may have led to a decision to withhold a document. This assertion must be based on one of two assumptions, Professor Rankin concludes: "either that the evidence or arguments that a minister can advance to support non-disclosure are so insubstantial or ephemeral that he could never hope to persuade an independent person of their worth, or, alternatively, a judge lacks the intelligence or capacity to understand the evidence or arguments and to give them appropriate weight. That either argument could be seriously advanced by a present day government is eloquent evidence of its determination to avoid any meaningful legislation on the subject.
> The study concludes, based on British and American experience, that to hand the final decision on disclosure of documents to the unreviewable discretion of a minister, "who is hardly a disinterested party" would make a sham of any system of access to government information.
> Legislatures enact laws, ministers administer legislation and courts independently interpret the legislation and rule whether it is being obeyed. Hence, once parliament has exercised its jurisdiction to pass legislation, the government must comply with its terms. It is therefore obvious that some institution other than the government must be charged with making the final ruling concerning whether the government is correctly interpreting the obligations to comply which the legislation imposes.

Surely that is the principle embodied in this motion today. That is the principle which members of parliament are called upon to support.

What position has been taken by members of parliament up until the present on this particular question? The all-party committee on freedom of information surveyed members of parliament and senators and issued a report to every member of parliament. That report contains the following information: "A surprising 90 per cent said they favoured such legislation. Furthermore, 73 per cent favoured legislation with teeth, i.e., they wanted legislation with some form of judicial review which by its very nature would be binding on the government of the day. This is in direct contrast to the position of the government taken in its green paper on freedom of information, despite the fact that the survey was conducted after the green paper had been tabled."

That report, produced by the freedom of information committee of parliament, was signed by members of parliament of every party, including the Liberal party. It is incumbent upon Liberal members of parliament, as well as upon those on this side of the House, to prove that they meant what they said when they said that parliament should have that right, and that built into freedom of information legislation the public should have the ability to have an independent review of decisions to hide information which have been made by ministers.

In the past ten years this government has indicated in many ways that it has slight regard for civil liberties in Canada. We have seen that in the Peter Treu case where a secret trial was conducted. We have seen that in the prosecution, perhaps persecution would be a better word, of the Toronto Sun, which is currently charged under the Official Secrets Act and which was raided on the order of this government. We have seen it in the invocation of the War Measures Act. We have seen it in so many other areas that I think parliamentarians should examine the record of this government, and should have the right to question whether this government is truly serious when it claims it believes in freedom of information.

I began my remarks today by saying that access to information about how the public's money is being spent and about how public decisions are being made is essential if democracy is to survive in a healthy form in Canada. I continue to feel that way, and I think that the motion which has been placed by the Leader of the Opposition before parliament today gives members of parliament on all sides of the House the opportunity to prove that they believe that democracy in Canada should be kept vital and that the indispensable right of citizens of Canada to freedom of information should be protected and enhanced.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the subject of freedom of information in a parliamentary democracy is an immensely complicated one which is not susceptible to simple solutions. Obviously, this House will wish to continue to affirm its support for the principle of freedom of information as a prerequisite to open and responsible government. I thank the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) for his personal references earlier, and I want to assure him and other hon. members that hon. members on this side will reaffirm that principle of freedom of information as a prerequisite to open and responsible government as fully and as strongly now as we did on February 12, 1976.

This affirmation will have the fundamental but, nevertheless, limited effect of providing a framework for as much openness as is consistent with responsible government. The governmental system should be so oriented as to provide a maximum of openness, and in all cases of doubt the presumption should be in favour of public disclosure.

However, because of the complexity of governmental operations and public needs, the general principle of openness cannot by itself resolve the problems of detail.

The absence of valid precedents increases the difficulty of the problem. We have Swedish and American precedents. They are probably the most extensive in today's world, but neither one is very close to our system of government. If they are of value to us, it must be because they commend themselves to us by reason of their application as individual elements rather than as part of a general system. Indeed, one would want to look at the American experience to see to what extent the freedom of information law there has benefited large corporations for their private interests more than any other sector of the population. I think these precedents would obviously have to be looked at with a great deal of care.

The consideration of this issue by the MacKenzie commission was not very satisfactory either. That commission dealt with only part of the problem, that part dealing with official secrets, and the principle which it advocated is, to my way of thinking, rather inadequate. I would like to quote from page 77 of that report. Paragraph 209 says the following:

> We have given some thought to the ideal content of an official secrets act. In our opinion, such an act should in the first place protect all classified information from any unauthorized dissemination, whether or not the purpose of such dissemination is prejudicial to the interests of the state and whether or not the information is intended to be directly or indirectly useful to a foreign power;

Just reading that much of the attitude of the MacKenzie commission regarding this part of the problem, we can see that there is an acceptance of an unfettered discretion of the executive to classify documents, backed up by the criminal law power, and the criminal law power would be used to punish espionage and general leakage on an indiscriminate basis. To my way of thinking that type of approach is not at all satisfactory. It is far too general and gives far too much power to the executive of the day.

Much more satisfactory, from my point of view, is the approach of the Franks committee in England. I would like to quote briefly from page 101 of volume one of that report where the committee recommends that:

> Section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911—

Which is the equivalent of section 4 of our act, I might say parenthetically.

> —should be repealed, and replaced by a new statute, called the official information act, which should apply only to official information which—> a. is classified information relating to defence or internal security, or to foreign relations, or to the currency or to the reserves, the unauthorized disclosure of which would cause serious injury to the interests of the nation; or
> b. is likely to assist criminal activities or to impede law enforcement; or
> c. is a cabinet document; or
> d. has been entrusted to the government by a private individual or concern.

In the view of the Franks committee the use of the criminal law would be limited to those categories of information, and beyond that the secrecy—"confidentiality" perhaps is a better word—of government would be maintained by internal discipline, the various forms of discipline which are known to public services the world over, including the risk of discharge if the offence is of that serious a nature.

However, even if one accepts the Franks recommendations, they cover only a part of the subject of freedom of information. They cover the part which deals with unauthorized release of information, but they do not cover the more difficult question of authorized release, and what information should, and even must, be made available by the government to parliament, to the press and to the people.

With respect to this large problem, as hon. members are aware, there are two principal issues. First, granted the principle of openness, what should the exceptions be? I think there would be no disagreement anywhere in the House that there would have to be exceptions to the principle of openness because certain activities of government require confidentiality and even secrecy. Second, granted that the initial decision as to confidentiality should be made by the government, what should the review process be? I would like to take each of those questions in turn and deal with them, not as fully as I would wish, but as fully as time today will allow.

I suggest, with respect to the first question as to exemptions, that perhaps four principles should be operative, and perhaps we would wish to protect confidentiality in four categories. The first of those would be where the security of the state or the safety of the people is involved—this would involve matters of national security, so-called, and also matters of law enforcement; second, the ordinary confidentiality of the internal processes of government; third, the private affairs of people and business; and fourth, that private gains should not be allowed to be made as a result of the release of information.

The greatest difficulty, it seems to me, is with respect to the second of these principles. Obviously these are large principles, and certainly I would not maintain—and I suspect few would—that all the internal processes of government should enjoy confidentiality.

With respect to the exemption principles advanced by the government in the green paper, the most controversial would be No. 8 which deals with the area of ordinary confidentiality in the ordinary operations of the government. I suppose that there might also be some questions raised about No. 6 of those exemptions. It is obviously possible to raise questions on all of them, but it seems to me that those are probably the exemptions about which the largest number of questions might be raised.

What I would try to strive for in elaborating a theory on the basis of which we could distinguish between documents which should be released and those that should not be released to the public, is as follows. What I believe should be protected from disclosure is working documents, documents which are directly part of the process of governmental or ministerial consideration. Here I would go beyond the recommendations of the Canadian Bar Association, which, I believe, would restrict these to governmental consideration.

What I believe should not be protected and should not have exemptions to cover them are a number of categories which I would like to mention. I believe there are four of these categories. First of all, factual data, such things as surveys, environmental studies, feasibility studies or consumer test reports, should not be exempted. All of those documents are of a factual nature, or at least their factual aspect can be isolated to the extent that it is predominant. Second, I do not think we should protect from disclosure internal directives and administrative policies respecting matters which may affect the public, except for reasons such as security and safety. Third, I would not grant an exception to opinions of a general nature that are not directly and immediately concerned with decision making, and here I would exclude from exemption general legal opinions which are not directly related to actual or expected litigation. Fourth, I suggest that all documents, even those in the exempt categories, should be published after a lapse of time. Perhaps the ten-year period suggested by the Canadian Bar Association would be a good period in that case.

The distinction I am trying to draw is that if a document is part of something which is in process, if it cannot be isolated and is an integral part of the continuing operation of the government, it should not be subject to disclosure. But if it is something that is severable, which, even though it may have an indirect relationship—certainly everything has an indirect relationship to the processes of government—but is not directly related to the work of the government at the time, then that is a matter which should not be protected by an exemption and which should fall under the general principle of full disclosure. I would repeat that in all cases of doubt I adopt the presumption that disclosure should take place.

With respect to the second question as to the review mechanism, we come to a more difficult problem, one on which we will have perhaps less agreement with others in the House. What form of review is appropriate? Is it an external review, which I suppose would be considered to be a judicial review because it is certainly the most unbiased form of external review, or is it some form of internal review?

The argument for a judicial review is essentially that the rule of law in our system requires judicial determination, that in the protection of the judiciary they find, one might say, an essential characteristic of the rule of law. That is true in the traditional area of law, certainly in the private law, but it has not been generally considered to be true in the twentieth century in the area of administrative law. In the area of administrative law we have made distinctions, and we have said that some things are subject to judicial review and some things are not. Factual matters are not subject to judicial review and matters of law are, while questions of mixed law and fact can go either way, but we have found it necessary to make distinctions of that kind. Unless hon. members will maintain that this new tradition which we have evolved to deal with areas of administrative law is not a proper one, we can see there that the rule of law does not always mean judicial determination.

Here, of course, we are dealing with something which is really entirely new, something which has not developed any tradition. We are discussing what the rules should be. We have a dilemma to face. We have an argument for judicial review which rests on an analogy, which stresses an analogy between the usual processes of law which do allow a judicial decision to be the ultimate test of the validity of anything in our society and certainly any governmental act or any law. On the other hand, the argument against a judicial review is normally made in terms of responsible government, the feeling being that the principle of ministerial responsibility cannot be squared with the establishment of a judicial review. It seems to me that neither approach is satisfactory, because I believe that neither goes to the heart of the question, neither the analogy to the older law nor the resting on ministerial responsibility or responsible government.

The fundamental question seems to me to be whether the matter in question is justiciable or not. To be justiciable, that is, capable of judicial determination, something must be able to be resolved by fairly precise criteria. Judges through their powers of interpretation are inevitably legislators in an indirect way. I think all sophisticated jurisprudents would admit that. But, it seems to me, they must not be asked to assume the responsibility to be legislators directly, to make directly political decisions.

I find that the courts are appropriate as decision makers when the kind of questions that are involved are between a subject and the state, and where the subject is asking for some information from the state which is directly relevant to him, where his freedom or his rights or his property are in some way imperilled. But with respect to general questions, I would have great difficulty in finding to my own satisfaction that there is justiciability which I believe could be dealt with by a court. I am strengthened in this attitude by some words of the Franks committee, and I would like to quote from pages 54 and 55 of the first volume. The Franks committee said:

> In relation to these basic functions of government, the question of injury to the nation is essentially political, in the broadest sense of the term, not judicial. It is essentially a government responsibility to assess the importance of informationt . . . The government is accountable to parliament and the electorate for its discharge of these basic functions. Any system which placed this responsibility elsewhere would detract from the responsibility of the government to protect the security of the nation and the safety of the people. It would remove the element of constitutional accountability.

The committee went on to say:

> The questions arising in these cases would, by definition, concern matters which the government wished to keep secret. It might be impossible to show why the information disclosed by the defendant was secret, except by revealing other secret matters in the evidence. Cases of this kind have arisen in the past and will arise in the future. It might not be sufficient for the court to sit in camera, since the accused himself, his legal advisers and the jury would all remain present. The government might not be prepared to take the risk of letting them hear the secret evidence. Yet it is basic to natural justice that an accused person should know the evidence against him.

I am impressed by those words. It would be a serious mistake for us to present the courts with issues which, because of their very nature, cannot be properly decided by judges. That is the question. Can these issues be properly decided by judges or not? Are they political issues which must be placed before parliament and the people?

Therefore, I recommend an information commissioner with ombudsmanlike powers to consider complaints, but more importantly, to scrutinize government documents in general. Just as government accounts are open to the Auditor General, all government documents must be continuously available to him. I should like to propose five characteristics of this office: First, it must be independent. Second, it must have total permanent access to all government documents. Third, it must be an internal examination conducted within the walls of government itself. Fourth, it must give public advice to government, not only in general periodic reports, but in specific reports which pinpoint particular documents—It should say whether such a document should be released to the public. Fifth, it would be an advisory rather than a compulsory body, which would employ the powers of public opinion.

A spokesman for the Ontario government, before its royal commission looking into these matters, said that all these issues cannot be solved by legislation. The power of public opinion is the final protection in these areas. Mr. Justice Brandeis of the United States once said the following:

> Publicity is justly commended as a remedy for social and industrial disease. Sunlight is said to be the best disinfectant and electric light the most efficient policeman.

Publicity could be mobilized by an information commissioner with the powers I have described. His powers would be greater than any other government official, even the Auditor General. As a representative of parliament and the people, he could keep us adequately informed on areas where the government was not living up to the general principles and categories of exemptions otherwise laid out. In the final analysis, this is not strictly a legal matter. It is a political matter and, as such, there must be a political solution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening with a great deal of interest to various spokesmen who have participated in this debate. The first spokesman I listened to was my leader. He made a very masterful presentation of an eminently sensible proposition which I thought would not obtain the full support of the House of Commons, and I have been reinforced in my thoughts.

I participated in the all-party committee on freedom of information. The hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty) indicated that 90 per cent of the responses to a questionnaire which was put out by us supported in essence the proposition contained in the motion before us.

As I listened to the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) and the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), who has some influence in his party with regard to this particular topic, I am now convinced that the issue of freedom of information unfortunately is becoming a matter of partisan politics. Now there seems to be a clear statement on the part of the Liberal party, notwithstanding any resolution passed in open conference at Ottawa in February, that it is coming down on the side of a refusal to accept any form of independent assessment and adjudication on freedom of information.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This really distreesses me. As a former dean of law, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville should have a fuller and better appreciation of the speciousness of the argument against an ultimate judicial review. I listened to his argument about the limitation of exemptions. I understand and commend him for some of those observations. I thought his observations were responsible. On the basis of his presentation in that regard, I do not think we differ substantially.

But I detected great difficulty in his presentation when he attempted to defend the indefensible. I felt he was struggling to bring logic to an illogical proposition. He attempted to justify his argument by indicating that whether a person is entitled to some government document is beyond the ken of any judicial officer. If that proposition was taken to its logical conclusion, the judiciary would have a very limited area in which to pass judgment. I think the hon. member knows this in his heart of hearts.

What is a judge supposed to do when he draws any conclusion on a matter of national security? What is he to do when he reads thee definition of "national security" in the Federal Court Act? Is he not drawing conclusions which are very political in nature? Is the hon. member suggesting in the judge's interpretation of section 41(2) of the Federal Court Act that he is not involved in a political decision by deciding what does or does not constitute national security? What about the Official Secrets Act? There are many instances and examples in our laws where in fact judges are required to pass judgment on matters which I consider to be political in nature, or are required to take into account matters which perhaps are sensitive or secret. The argument that judges or independent arbiters of whatever stripe are somehow not qualified, or could not understand the implications of an application, just does not warrant any support.

Also I detected a strain on the part of the Secretary of State during the course of his remarks. He came out clearly against independent judicial assessment of these applications. He was careful not to say that he was against independent assessment, but his argument gave us some indication of what might come forward as a government bill. I hope I am wrong in this respect, but he left the impression that it will be something in the nature of what was presented by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

I notice the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville made reference to the information commissioner being of the same nature as the Auditor General. I do not know of a better example to illustrate the pitfalls that might occur with respect to a true freedom of information act and endorsement of that principle than trying to suggest that we have an information commissioner on the same basis as we have an Auditor General. We know that in some instances the recommendations made by that officer of parliament have fallen upon the deaf ears of the government, and I would venture to say that more times than not his recommendations have not been acted upon. We know that the Auditor General has absolutely no powers of endorsement with respect to any recommendations he may have, however sensible they may be. If we are talking about that kind of final assessment of applications, we are not doing the concept of freedom of information any good at all, and it would be counterproductive, as far as I am concerned, in ensuring true freedom of information.

Mr. Baldwin: They didn't like one Auditor General. They tried to fire him.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This is the problem, as my colleague has pointed out. We need someone quite independent of any pressure exerted by the government. In the final analysis, it is the majority that would appoint this officer. Whether he is an officer of parliament or not, the practical fact is that the majority party will be able to exert certain pressure on that appointment, which will probably be limited to the usual term of seven years.

The reason I ask members on the government side to give support to this motion is that it is not a partisan matter, nor should it be, to support a proposition put forward by my leader. What I am suggesting is that it is as much in the interest of the government as in the interest of the members of the opposition to have truly effective freedom of information legislation in force in Canada.

I would like to remind hon. members who are interested in this particular debate of a statement made by a recently departed cabinet minister, the hon. Mitchell Sharp, who said in a speech he made in Fredericton in March, 1977:

> In the political sphere . . . senior civil servants are much more powerful than ministers. "In the main, ministers are amateurs in government while the civil servants are professionals"—

He was talking about civil servants who advise ministers on policy matters.

It is as much in the interest of ministers to ensure there is an adequate and free flow of information as it is in the interest of the members of the opposition. I contend that in the complexity and the labyrinth of the administrative processes we now have in government there be some measure, if I can put it in parochial terms, to keep everybody in the government operation honest.

It was interesting to read a speech made by a public servant of some seniority and distinction in the government, Mr. Gordon Robertson, on November 19, 1977 entitled "Confidentiality in government". Mr. Robertson is secretary to the cabinet for federal-provincial relations. I know the man and have had correspondence with him, and I think it is fair to say that he was not stating the government's point of view in connection with the speech. It was his own point of view. He did not ask to speak at the lecture in Kingston, Ontario, for which the speech was made, but he was asked to speak specifically on this topic.

Mr. Robertson drew certain conclusions in that speech which, after listening to some of the comments from the spokesman of the government side, have a familiar ring to them. I would say that Mr. Robertson is not exactly enthusiastic about freedom of information legislation. For instance, he said:

I submit that much of the popular interest in freedom of information is directed by curiosity about the internal processes of government that does not have much purpose behind it except curiosity.

I suspect that this is a belief that is firmly held by some, if not many, senior public servants at the present time. I can understand the point of view, but the difficulty is that this idea has by some process of osmosis been transmitted to government ministers and to the government itself. I am concerned about this because we are veering away—I think that this has been generally conceded by most members of parliament—from the opportunity to speak out and discuss a matter without the constraint of the whip on the government side. This sort of position is acceptable to the majority in the House of Commons, and this is why I say there should be a process of independent review.

Mr. Robertson also said that the demand of the public for more information about the processes which govern them would be simply a waste of money. He went on to say:

I am sceptical of whether their satisfaction (demand for information) ought to be financed to any large degree by the public or ought to be given priority over other requirements for the energies of ministers of public servants.

It is my firm submission, Mr. Speaker, that the great balance of any expenditure the government may incur with respect to freedom of information will be less than the phenomenal amount of waste that goes on in government spending. A greater access to the workings of government would shine the light of day on some of the more glaring aspects of waste, and the cost of freedom of information in relative terms would be insignificant. The prospect of looking in and finding out precisely what is going on in the government, either by members of the opposition or the public, would have a very therapeutic effect on government operation and the administration generally.

Mr. Robertson put forth the proposition that confidentiality is needed to protect the public service, which he described as:

—the preservation of a non-partisan professional public service—

There has been a rather curious development in the short time that I have been here in so far as confidentiality and faceless public servants are concerned, and that is that ministers themselves, in attempting to avoid responsibility which they would have traditionally accepted, are more and more resorting to the tactic of blaming the public servant for any mistakes that may occur. The Hon. Mitchell Sharp has recently been quoted as saying something to the effect that in this day and age public servants should more and more bear the responsibility for their actions as opposed to the traditional concept of ministerial responsibility.

Mr. Pinard: You are blaming Mr. Robertson. What are you doing?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am not blaming Mr. Robertson, because I think he has his own point of view. I am suggesting that it is a point of view which is now being accepted by members on the government side. I suggest, with all deference to Mr. Robertson, that he is mistaken in his own conclusions, as the government would be mistaken if they were to accept the attitudes enunciated by him. I have every respect for Mr. Robertson, but I think he is wrong on this issue, and I do not want to see the government take up the cudgels on his theory because that would be a mistake. I say to the members on the government side that they are going to back themselves into a corner if they are going to make freedom of information a partisan issue.

Mr. Robertson also said that to preserve ministerial responsibility there should be no mandatory powers either of the courts or a freedom of information commissioner to demand and secure a document. He went on to say:

I would also like to suggest that to have the final decision taken by any agency other than the responsible minister when a document relates to decision making or to the integrity of the state will be destructive to the clear identification of executive responsibility which is one of the best features of our parliamentary system of government.

There is a ring of truth in what Mr. Robertson has concluded and in what has been said by members on the government side. If we shy away from the independent review of applications we will have second rate, unsatisfactory legislation. The arguments put forward today indicate why there has been something less than wholehearted enthusiasm on the part of this government to bring forward this legislation, notwithstanding the protestations of the Secretary of State and other spokesmen.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has presented legislation for consideration. The topic has been studied to death—it has been before the House for 13 years. Since I have been here I have been involved in a study of the whole proposition through the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments and in other ways.

To see how this government operates on this matter gives me a new appreciation of the word "eternity". I do not think they are anxious to go ahead with this matter. I do not know that we can wait for the government to bring in effective legislation. The Secretary of State quoted two dissenting briefs that were presented to the joint committee on the question of an independent review of applications for documents under freedom of information legislation. He omitted to say that everyone else who came before the committee, including the vast majority of members of parliament, supported the proposition as being fair and reasonable and did not regard it as an intrusion.

Freedom of information legislation has been introduced in Australia and some hon. members referred to the position taken by Sweden and the United States. I think the problem is the serious and deep division within cabinet on the question of how far they should go. This was evidenced yesterday by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) who initially was in favour of the motion before someone got him to point out there was no consensus in cabinet.

I hope members of the government will exert pressure to make sure the point of view presented in this motion will be adopted.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I propose to make a short contribution to this debate and I hope you will not notice the time too intently. I have a committee meeting at eight o'clock so I hope I can carry on for a minute or two past six o'clock.

I listened with rapt attention to the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) who continues to be given a very special role in the Liberal party. He is one of those people with credibility in the area of civil liberties and in the area of freedom of information. He is becoming the token to be put forward by that party to convince the Canadian people there are still some small "l" liberals left.

If you reject the concept of judicial review, as has been done by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville and by the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts), you continue to reject the view of the Canadian Bar Association which has given this matter intensive study, the views of most constitutional lawyers and the view of the Canadian Labour Congress.

I should like to direct my specific attention to the remarks made by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville about the need for an independent review rather than a judicial review. In order to do that I want to refer to the study done by a very learned man, Mr. T. Murray Rankin, of the law school of the University of Victoria and published in his book "Freedom of Information in Canada". His study was adopted by the Canadian Bar Association and it replies to the argument that under our system you cannot have a judicial review of matters that are essentially political in nature.

The government's position has been to shun this idea of using the courts as arbitrators. It rests on the conviction that final responsibility for the release of government documents must remain with cabinet ministers since the matter is fundamentally of political concern, and that permitting a court to exercise supervisory jurisdiction would violate the convention of ministerial responsibility.

That objection is based on a self-serving myth which Mr. Rankin deals with at page 122 of his book, as follows:

> —based on a self-serving myth that is sought to be perpetuated in the 1977 green paper: that "there is no way that a judicial officer can be properly made aware of all the political, economic, social and security factors that may have led to the decision in issue." If the American experience has indicated anything, it has indicated the hollowness of this assertion.
> What one is talking here is not a substantive political decision such as the location of an airport, a nuclear plant or a pipeline—although even in these cases the executive has frequently called on the judicial arm for assistance and advice. What one is discussing is essentially akin to a procedural decision on whether certain information or documents useful in assessing the location of an airport, a nuclear plant or a pipeline should be produced, based on criteria which can be carefully spelled out by parliament in legislation. The judicial branch is uniquely suited to this task, and discharges similar duties in Canadian courts every day.

That is the view of the Canadian Bar Association and they are not unaware of the political ramifications of that position. We are not asking a judge to make a political decision but a judge can make a judicial decision based on criteria set down in the legislation and presented to parliament. I am disappointed that my distinguished colleagues at the Bar, such as the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, would make this old-fashioned, specious argument.

About two years ago I took the trouble to go to the Environmental Protection Agency in Washington to find out how the freedom of information legislation in that country was operated. I expected to see layers of bureaucracy and expensive duplication. Such was not the case. Instead, I found some civil servants and bureaucrats who understood that the information they had belonged to the people of the United States; it did not belong to them and it did not belong to the government. Through their taxes the people of the United States had paid for this information. They had a right to it but it took freedom of information legislation to turn the bureaucracy around and make them understand they were the servants of the American people, not their masters.

That is why it is so important that the motion should be supported on all sides of the House. The government had a wonderful opportunity in the motion before it but to get picky about the one question of appeal to the courts when we could have made some very real progress in this House I think is disappointing to every member who wants to see this matter go forward, who wants to see a change not merely in terms of gaining information in which we are all interested, but maybe a change in the atmosphere of the bureaucracy and as well in the attitude of politicians who serve the constituencies. It is the people's property; they have paid for it and by God, Mr. Speaker, they have a right to that information. The onus must be turned around.

This government I think has failed to accept or to see that particular principle. The legal back-up on it is overwhelming. There is no question that judicial review is the right answer. There is no question that independent review will still be an in-House review of some kind and far more likely to be a biased decision, biased against the applicant for the information.

As I say, I come late to this debate. I do not think there is another issue more important than this one if we are to talk about protecting democratic principles. We have the example of the American experience. It is working extremely well. It is not costly and it is providing a very useful service.

I simply say in closing that it is a unique situation in Canada where we cannot get information about our own Canadian corporations without going to the United States Security Commission under their freedom of information legislation. Our reporters across Canada cannot get information from this government, but they can cross the border and get that information from the United States government in order to provide themselves with back-up for fulfilling their duties to their readers.

Surely it is time to move on the legislation. There is a member of parliament who has done something to his everlasting credit that may be more important than all the fine years he has spent in this place; I refer to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). He has done the Canadian people a great service and I give him full credit for the work he has done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6.04 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago we debated a motion put forward by this side of the House with regard to the Official Secrets Act. Today we are debating another motion put forward by the official opposition on freedom of information. The subject matter of both these debates is very closely related. This point was succinctly made by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) when he took part in the debate a couple of weeks ago. He stated in that earlier debate:

> The "official secrets" question is almost the most serious aspect of the general problem of freedom of information. In the field of freedom of information we try to arrive at principles to what should be released and how documents should be classified by the government. In the Official Secrets Act we impose penalties for releasing those documents.

I presume he was referring to highly classified or highly sensitive documents touching on national security. He went on to say:

> Official secrets legislation is, therefore, the completion of the doctrine of freedom of information.

That might be the ideal but it is not the reality. The Official Secrets Act which we have in Canada is, as my colleague for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) pointed out in the earlier debate, enormously sweeping and catches up virtually everything anyone would think of.

Our present Official Secrets Act is not the completion of the doctrine of freedom of information. It is the antithesis of any principle of freedom of information. As it stands now, that act could serve to make any freedom of information legislation meaningless. More than that, our Official Secrets Act, which the government seems so loath to put up for revision, stands as an attitude of secrecy which pervades the government and its employees. The Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) referred to it as an unfortunate tradition, one which even he in his green paper is doing very little to dispel.

I want to take a look at this attitude of secrecy. I prefer to call it a presumption of secrecy and compare it to its opposite, a presumption of openness. Whatever form the principle of freedom of information is to take will be determined by whether it is based on a presumption of secrecy or a presumption of openness.

I do not doubt the sincerity of the Secretary of State when he expressed before the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments his concern that "government is too enclosed, that too much is hidden behind doors". Nor do I doubt that he truly desires to do something about the present situation. But I do doubt that he will go far enough, and I doubt that he will start from a presumption of openness.

The all-party committee on freedom of information expressed a similar reservation in its brief to the joint committee. Referring to the green paper's statement that exemptions should be confined to the genuine need for confidentiality, should be clear and few in number, the brief stated:

● (2012)

> The all-party committee is in complete agreement. However, the committee does not think that the green paper has observed its own wisdom. The exemptions proposed in the green paper are fewer in number than the ones used in the notices for the production of papers, but are just as wide in their implications. In other words, if a member of parliament has had trouble with the notices for the production of papers, she or he would likely have just as much trouble with the freedom of information legislation that the government is presently in favour of introducing, no matter what form of review were adopted.

That was the stand of the all-party committee on freedom of information legislation.

The problem at hand is not whether there should be more open government; I think there is unanimous agreement that there should be. The problem is more subtle, and it deals with the attitude from which the more open government will arise. It deals from this basis: either an attitude of secrecy or an attitude of openness.

The attitude of the minister responsible for the green paper—and, unfortunately, it is shared by too many of his colleagues—is that of a government which owns its documents and must decide which of those documents it can release to the public.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) spoke about that very clearly this afternoon when he indicated that the government sees itself as being on one side and the public on the other. As he pointed out, even the title of the green paper is a reflection of that attitude on the part of the government. The title is "Public Access to Government Documents".

These are public documents. Government business is public business. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), who we all know has been eloquent and outspoken on this subject, made that point succinctly in a recent article when he wrote:

> Everything the government does is the public's business and the public, through its representatives in parliament, has the same right to information as the government decision makers ... The onus must be on the government to justify every instance of official secrecy.

Stated in that way, that is an attitude of openness. It is a recognition that information in the hands of the government is public information. Not only does the government have a duty to provide that information to the public, but the public has a right to access to it.

The minister, unfortunately, is not operating from that presumption of openness. If he were, he would not have drawn up a list of exemptions which was so broad as to encompass anything the government wants to put in it. Nor would he be so eager to keep the review process within the control of ministers. I find it somewhat ironic that the minister justifies that position by trotting out a concept so often ignored by this government, the concept of ministerial responsibility. No, sir, the minister is operating from a presumption of secrecy. His green paper is just an extension of the present policy whereby the government decides what the public should know and what it should not know. It makes these decisions, we are told, in the public interest or for reasons of national security. These nebulous terms, "public interest" and "national security", turn out, more often than not, to mean the interest of the government.

A stunning example of this penchant for secrecy in the interest of the government is a reply of the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) in the House of Commons on June 8, just a couple of weeks ago. When asked to table a report on the operations of the Post Office, the 1975 Hay report, the minister replied with these words:

> If that confidential document were made public it might embarrass some components of the Post Office Department that did not operate properly at the time, for various reasons.

It seems to me that whether or not certain components of the Post Office operate properly is a matter of public interest, and the public interest would best be served by making the report available. It is the government's interest that is being served by withholding it.

This example reaches absurd proportions when one reads in a Canada Post bulletin called "Com Team" that, and I quote:

> We must remember that, in spite of what the press may say, these studies are not secret . . . It's true they are not made public, but there are good reasons for this.

What that bulletin said was that the documents are not secret, they are just not available.

This morning's newspaper gives another glaring example of where this attitude of secrecy has taken us. Last year in this parliament we enacted human rights legislation with a provision to allow individuals access to personal information about them which is contained in government files. This was a much needed and much heralded step toward countering the growing interest of government in the personal lives of citizens.

This morning we read about a case which illustrates a complete distortion of the intent of that legislation. A person was permitted to see government files about himself only on condition that he sign a pledge never to divulge what he saw. In addition to that, he was warned, if newspaper stories are correct, that if he violated that pledge he could be charged under the Official Secrets Act. This man was fired from his job for unspecified security reasons. He has been effectively blacklisted in his occupation, and he cannot clear his name because he cannot divulge what information the government has about him, whether it is true or not.

Given the possibility of similar occurrences and given the broad categories of exemption in the green paper, I do not have much faith in this government's commitment to freedom of information. If the government were to have the final discretion in a dispute over releasing such documents, what would be its decision? What would be the decision of the minister?

Much as I welcome freedom of information legislation, I would welcome it more if I was convinced that it would allow for independent judicial review and if I could be certain that the final decision in cases of dispute would rest in the courts. I would not welcome freedom of information legislation which left the final decision in the hands of a paternalistic government minister who thought he or she knew best what was in the public's interest to know or not know, or in the hands of a protective minister who would protect the interests of a department over those of the public.

Open government does not have to be a threat to those in power. An informed public is able to rationalize the information it receives and come to intelligent conclusions about the workings of government. Access to reports on the operations of the Post Office, for example, might serve to make the public more aware of the difficulties which are involved in such a gigantic department. It might make citizens more confident that something is being done about them and that someone really does care about their mail delivery.

Similarly, with regard to nuclear safety, a matter of critical significance to all of us which is very much in the news these days, the public might be more trusting of the government if it could be made aware of all the facts and information rather than getting bits and pieces of alarming information through leaked sources and leaked documents. People would be less apt to jump to conclusions or to offer simplistic solutions if they could be certain that the government was levelling with them and treating them with trust and respect, no matter how difficult, dangerous or technical the subject matter and the situation.

Ignorance, contrary to the popular aphorism, is not bliss and the people who live in Pickering or Douglas Point do not rest easier knowing that there are any number of facts about nuclear safety that are being withheld from them, and they are told that it is presumably for their own good. They might, however, feel more secure knowing all the facts instead of leaving so much to imagination.

Knowledge is power, and unless a citizenry has knowledge, it is powerless. In order to assert themselves, in order to take part in a democratic process, individual citizens and organizations must have access to the information they need. Without adequate information, citizens are alienated from the decision-making process.

Not only does this break in the outflow of information and the equally pervasive overclassification of information in government hands work to the detriment of the democratic system, but as well it places conscientious civil servants in a difficult position. These people, who have a sense of what is right and of what the public has a right to know, are, because of an ingrained and overrestricted syndrome of secrecy on the part of the government, being forced to invoke their own brand of civil disobedience through the anonymous brown envelope. The continuous aura of secrecy creates a dilemma for them and they are forced to deal with it as best they can. That does not say a great deal for the openness of government.

As members of parliament seeking to get information to meet the needs of the individual Canadians whom we represent throughout this country, we probably all have our own set stories of ludicrous examples as to what can happen when this aura of secrecy is carried to the extreme. Just recently my own office attempted to get a copy of a magazine from a government department. We had read in the newspaper that a certain issue of the British magazine, The Economist, was available because of an article it contained on the Canadian economy. My office called for a copy of it and was told that the department had copies, indeed had lots of copies, but it took several calls back and forth to several different people because no one was sure if it was quite proper to release a copy of that magazine to me. That edition of the magazine was one of over a year ago.

Most Canadians are intelligent and mature people who are able to understand and sort out the myriad pieces of information with which they are bombarded every day. It comes at them through all sorts of media and in all sorts of situations. They absorb complex and technical facts constantly, but to date they have not been done in by this information explosion, and I do not expect that they will be.

I think it is time that the government recognized that they are able to handle information on their own and that they do not need the experts in government to do it for them. A little more faith in the ability of the ordinary Canadian would go a long way in changing the entrenched attitude of secrecy with regard to information that the government could provide. So I say, let us attempt to make such faith the basis of our freedom of information legislation.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate because I think it is a very important topic that is of concern to Canadians. I am somewhat surprised when I hear speakers for the opposition trying to lay at the door of this government the tendency to secrecy and the protection of government information. This is not something that can be dropped at the doorstep of one party or one government in this country, and that can be demonstrated by the fact that there are all across this country governments of various political persuasions which are less willing to release information than the federal government.

An hon. Member: There is only one federal government.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I might remind the hon. member that there is also only one federal official opposition.

We have introduced in the House Bill C-12, the purpose of which is to provide legislative authority for the collection of certain statistics relating to Canada's petroleum industry in order, first, to enable the Government of Canada better to plan and develop policies for the management of Canada's energy supplies and resources and, second, to provide the Government of Canada with the detailed knowledge necessary to give authoritative assurance to the Canadian people that those policies are being effectively pursued in Canada.

That bill has been opposed by the official opposition, for what reason I do not know, but it is an attempt by the government to obtain information which can assure Canadians that information on the development of our natural petroleum resources is made available to the Canadian public. As I say, the bill has been opposed by the official opposition, so again it is not something that can be laid at the door of any particular party.

Someone across the way thinks it is a joke. I do not know what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) finds so funny, but if he continues to follow the course he has followed in the last month—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since the hon. member has inquired, let me tell him that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said that if the hon. member was defending us on a murder charge, we would be charged with attempted suicide.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, hon. members opposite are the obvious experts in the House on suicide, at least political suicide. As I was saying, if the Leader of the Opposition continues on the course he has been following in the last few months, he will probably become the only Leader of the Opposition in Canadian history known for having lost his job by the seat of his pants.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): If you want an explanation, it is because he talks all the time from the seat of his pants.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): There is an obvious need in this country, as there is in any country, for some secrecy, and I would like to deal very briefly with some of the situations in which secrecy or curtailment of information is required. Obviously, national security is one of those areas. The hon. member who preceded me referred to national security as being a nebulous term. It does not seem to me a particularly nebulous term. It seems to me to be a very important term because the security of our nation, after all, should be the first priority of any government. It is obvious that if there is no confidentiality of information with regard to national security, the government and the security services of this country will not be able to gather information in order to protect the freedoms we enjoy in this country; and despite the charges that are made, there is no country in the world that enjoys more freedom than we do in Canada.

Miss MacDonald: You should ask Dr. Treu.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I do not have to ask Dr. Treu, who is being defended quite ably by the white knight from Peace River.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Thank you. The second area where confidentiality of information and secrecy are necessary is national defence. The armed forces of the nation must have some assurance that their operational, tactical and strategic plans have confidentiality. Otherwise, there is no point in their making such plans. Of course, the same rule should apply to police and security force investigations.

It goes without saying that no government can function at cabinet level without knowing that the discussions which take place within the walls of the cabinet room are confidential and privy to the members who participate therein. Also it would be extremely difficult to carry on international or federal-provincial negotiations completely in public. There has to be some confidentiality and a degree of confidence on the part of those who participate in the negotiations that what they say in those sessions will remain confidential. Obviously there must be some give and take. The nature of politics being what it is, the leaders of various governments who participate in these negotiations will want to know that the concessions or the compromises they make at the expense of a smaller constituency, in order to advance the interests of a larger constituency, will not be held against them.

Another area where secrecy is required is in the preparation of the budget. Of late we have seen the efforts of a rather innovative Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). He attempted to consult other levels of government in the preparation of a budget and was charged with violating budget secrecy. That is somewhat of an about face in that it comes from a party which is calling for absolute openness. In the preparation of changes in monetary or fiscal policies, the government must be careful not to give away what it plans to announce on budget day, so that some individuals will not be able to take unfair advantage of that information.

Having dealt with the negative side of freedom of information, or the lack thereof, I should like to deal with the necessity for information. The public at large must have access to sufficient information to make rational decisions concerning the actions of governments at both federal and provincial levels, and in order to be able to make rational decisions in the casting of their ballots. It is only by this process that the electorate will have a full appreciation of the actions taken by government and will be able to make sensible and logical decisions as to which candidate they should support during elections.

The public has an interest in the information accumulated by the government in the exercise of its responsibilities. In the final analysis, that is the only way we can have responsible government. Free elections will not mean very much if the public does not have access to sufficient information in order to make a rational and sensible decision on election day.

Mr. Johnston: The government told them that wage and price controls would not be brought in.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): We did not say any such thing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): That is another example of the type of fallacy hon. members opposite have been spreading over the last four years because they were burned on their own policy of freezes.

Another reason for the public having access to information is that they can determine whether there is honesty and forthrightness in the administration of public good. If information is not made available, the public will not be able to decide whether the rumours, reports, stories, and so on, which they hear and read are accurate.

Whatever government may be in power, it is in its interest to make available all possible information in order for the public to make a rational decision concerning the actions of government. The federal and provincial representatives chosen by the people must have access to the information they require in order to carry out the responsibilities which were assigned to them on election day. It is impossible for any member of parliament or any member of a provincial legislature to make adequate representations on behalf of his or her constituents unless the detailed information on which to make those representations is available. They must have access to the information which the bureaucracy of the various ministries holds, whether it is correct or not.

Mr. Johnston: How about Treu?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): In far too many cases that information must be dragged out of the bureaucracy with a great deal of effort on the part of the representatives.

Mr. Friesen: And the cabinet ministers.

Mr. Johnston: And the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Hon. members opposite seem to be interested in making representations from their seats rather than rising to make speeches. I hope they will listen to my remarks in order for them to learn something, and perhaps we will receive some consistency in the representations they make.

Mr. Johnston: Our trouble is that we have been listening.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): In my comments I was not referring to any particular party. We have only to witness what happens in the provinces, as well as in the federal capital, to see that the penchant for secrecy is not confined to any one party. Many problems could be averted if there were consultation and a free flow of information. For example, the waste of public funds in industrial adventures which are poorly conceived and executed—might be avoided if the public knew what the government was investing from the beginning, and what future plans the government had for the investment of public funds in those ventures.

Over the past quarter of a century, the developed world has experienced an absolutely phenomenal increase in the information which has become available through scientific study and the complex problems that has created. Representatives such as myself have not been able to keep pace with the complexity of these issues because we have not been given the tools to do so. Again, if anyone is to blame it is ourselves, and perhaps the public at large, for not demanding of government that their representatives be given sufficient staff and research assistants in order to keep fully informed of the complex issues we face.

Government, on the other hand, has been able to more or less keep pace by hiring in the public service in its jurisdiction the experts it needs to deal with these complexities. Because of the complexities of the problems we face and because society itself has become much more complex in the last 25 years, bureaucracy has grown at a rather phenomenal rate and there has been a passive usurpation of power that should belong to the elected representatives of the people into the hands of the bureaucracy, which very often seems to be accountable to no one. That seems to me to be the crux of the problem. We should be talking about accountability rather than freedom of information.

I have no objection to the term "freedom of information", but when we have absolute accountability we will automatically have freedom of information, it seems to me. We have in this country many public servants who are extremely dedicated and knowledgeable and who are in many cases making personal financial sacrifice, personal family sacrifice and personal leisure sacrifice to serve their country, so I do not want my remarks to be misconstrued as an attack on the bureaucracy. But over the years the power base has shifted, in my opinion, from the elected representatives of the people to the continuing invisible government that is known as the bureaucracy. Until that power base is shifted back into the hands of the people who are put here by the public at large to represent them, we will continue to have a problem in respect of freedom of information.

What must happen, in my view, is that members of elected legislatures have to be given the tools, and they must receive adequate compensation. I am not complaining about the compensation level of federal members of parliament, but at the provincial level, particularly of some of the provinces of this great and wealthy nation of ours, the recompense offered is a disgrace.

Mr. Johnston: Let's hear it for the federal members while you are at it. Don't chicken out.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I understand the hon. member would not be interested because he is quitting. In any event, I am not complaining about my level of recompense, but I do complain about the fact that, although we are considered responsible enough to represent constituencies containing anywhere from 45,000 or 50,000 people to 120,000 or 130,000 people, we are not yet considered by this institution itself to be sufficiently responsible to control a budget for the employment of personnel in our own offices. If the institution in which we serve has no confidence in us, I wonder how the people are to have any confidence in us.

I have tried in my few brief remarks to point out that the problem, in my view, is one not of freedom of information but of accountability. I am referring to the accountability of the invisible government which cannot be changed by any election, no matter what party is elected to office. Until that situation is changed, and until the elected representatives of the people have control over that invisible government, we will continue to have a problem in respect of access to information.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I respond first for just a minute or so to the speech of the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne). I agree with him that there is a problem regarding accountability; this is a problem of all democratic governments today. But that accountability will never be achieved in the system under which we operate until there is available to the elected members, whether they be of a legislature, of a city or of this federal parliament, the knowledge and the facts upon which they can challenge government and make it accountable. Accountability will follow knowledge and the capacity to challenge and scrutinize the actions of government and the executive branch of government, whether it be the elective or the appointive. That is the problem we face in Canada and which legislators face all over the world.

I agree with the hon. member on another aspect. We do not restrict this criticism to Ottawa alone. I am glad to say that in the province of Nova Scotia my old friend, Premier Regan, enacted a freedom of information bill. I think that is the first parliamentary institution, following the Westminster tradition, which has done so. I give him credit for that and I have told him so. I would have had a better bill, I hope, but at least it is a bill and a start.

I have every reason to believe that the legislature of that province from which the hon. member comes will shortly introduce a freedom of information bill. Mr. Davis of the province of Ontario has established a royal commission which is making enquiries into the matter, and white papers are being prepared elsewhere. This is essential because the people demand it. The people are frustrated, sick of and dissatisfied with the system of government that has controlled them so far.

I want to extend my thanks to hon. members who have spoken about the limited contribution I have been able to make in this regard. Many of us come to this institution with the genuine intention of making a contribution, not only for our own constituencies and provinces, but for the people of Canada. Many of us have had the opportunity of taking up causes which others have initiated, taking up the torch and carrying it forward, and perhaps handing it on to someone else. I have had that privilege. Many of my friends sitting on both sides of the House have had the same opportunity; and I pay tribute to all those who preceded me, including Mr. Barry Mather and others, who supported this cause and made a genuine impact in parliament with the first legislation.

I also want to pay tribute to the Joint Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. That is an example of a committee where members of this House and the other place of all parties have worked together zealously and will produce a report shortly. In a way this will inhibit my speech today. I have the honour to be one of the co-chairmen of that committee, and a report has been drafted by the steering committee and will be presented shortly to the main committee. With knowledge of what is in that report I think I should restrict my remarks to matters not dealing with what might be the content of the legislation. I pay great tribute to that committee and all its members, because not only have we had that task, we have had the other very onerous responsibility of dealing with statutory instruments and regulations.

As a simple indication of that, I say to the House through you, sir, that since February 1 we have examined almost 1,000 regulations and statutory instruments. We had five, six or seven people sitting in a dusty little room down in the basement once a week. Just today we examined 75 or 80 of these statutory instruments. The very fact that this committee exists is an indication that if there are good people who believe in a cause, it is possible for members, and not necessarily members of the government, to promote it and bring it to fruition.

The gestation period of reform is always lengthy, and with regard to statutory instruments it was probably 23 years from the time we first debated this in the House until the late Lester Pearson first established a committee under the chairmanship of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan). That committee reported and legislation was introduced—imperfect legislation, but legislation. A committee was established, counsel were finally persuaded to come to the committee to lend their services—excellent counsel—and at the present time this is an effective working committee which protects the people of this country by examining in detail and challenging, where necessary, orders in council and regulations which form by far the great mass of laws that have an impact on the people of Canada. And so it will be with freedom of information. I want to extend my gratitude to the members of that committee for the services they have performed.

Sometimes I wish that there was sitting up in the gallery tonight some familiar names, Walter Rudnicki, Dr. Treu, Bernard Maguire and other people who have suffered from inability to obtain information or government transgressions, but people who have had the intestinal fortitude and capacity to fight back. But for every Dr. Treu, for every Bernard Maguire, how many hundreds are there who have suffered from this inability to find out information, to secure facts which have had an adverse impact upon them, and to fight the battle to try and secure a remedy? How many people are there who say, "We can't beat city hall, we can't challenge it," who meekly accept the facts, submit to the indignities, the loss of reputation, and the loss of money or jobs? How many hundreds and thousands are there in that category in this country?

It is only now that we are beginning to find out, through the experiences of the last few months, what the situation really is. It is a dangerous one and we have to do something about it. For example, the other day when I was speaking in the House the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said to me that I should go and plead the case of Dr. Treu in the courts of Quebec. He was being facetious. But I seek no allowance from the Prime Minister in this House to speak up for what I think are the requirements of justice and equity for any man.

I would suggest to the right hon. gentleman if he were here that it is not Dr. Treu who is on trial so much as this parliament that is on trial. It is on trial in the minds of the people of Canada. We cannot wait because time does not wait, because there is present in the minds of many people in this country today the feeling of dissatisfaction and frustration that the government is no longer there. They talk about "we and they"; there is a lack of understanding, sympathy and co-operation, all of which must exist if the government wishes to produce the kind of rules, laws, equity and decency essential today in this very difficult world that we live in.

I literally shudder, Mr. Speaker, when I think that this party will be called upon to form a government after the next election, with the problems and the limited tools which exist. For that reason, I was gratified to hear the leader of our party say today that it would be a matter of urgent priority to undertake to bring before this House a freedom of information bill to make it possible for this House and the people of Canada to know what is going on. I was gratified, not only because of the idea itself, but because it is in earnest. It is an understanding, a beginning and a sign to the people of this country that there is at long last a government which understands that it governs by and with the consent of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: When that happens there will, at long last, return to this House the essential element of confidence which is lacking in this country today. There is money in the banks, there is talent, there is knowledge, there is experience, there are resources; but there is a lack of confidence in the mind of the average person in Canada in the capacity of this government and this parliament to operate for and on their behalf, to pass the rules of conduct which will make it possible for them to live the life they should. It is a simple thing and yet a very precious and important thing. If that confidence is brought back, I have no hesitation at all about what will happen in this country.

I made mention of Mr. Bernard Maguire, as did my hon. friend for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). I think I should pay a little attention to that case. Some months ago in a committee of this House we dealt with human rights legislation, which was good legislation. Part IV of that bill provided for, allegedly, the right of individuals to have access to their own files. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) with eloquence and skill both here and in the committee said, "This is a great thing; at long last people who want to look at their own files have the right to do so and to correct them if the information is wrong".

What has happened in the case of Maguire? It is a typical illustration of the failure of this government to bring to fruition the promises which were made at the time this legislation was introduced. Mr. Maguire was dismissed three years ago and told after he challenged it that it was for security reasons. His union took all the grievance procedures it could, but they were rejected. He was told through the grievance procedures to go to the courts, whereupon he went to the supreme court trial division and then to appeal but got nowhere.

Suddenly, at long last, there appeared on the scene part IV of the Human Rights Act. Mr. Maguire went through the offices of a former colleague of ours, the chief commissioner, Mr. Gordon Fairweather, who is doing an excellent job, and secured what he thought would be the right to examine his own file under section 52 of the act. At the time he had to sign a document, a copy of which I have here, which says that he reviewed his personal file, including folio so and so and initialled each folio accordingly, and then says, "I recognize that folios"—and there are eight numbered folios—"are classified and that the contents are not to be divulged to third parties." Then he signed that. He could not go there with counsel or with an adviser, only with a security official who is a sub-official of Mr. Jenkins, an employee from supply and services connected with the Treu case. Mr. Maguire found in those folios what he considered to be certain proof that he was not a security risk and that the job from which he had been dismissed did not require security clearance in the first place. So he had been lied to about that.

What does he do now under this famous right of access to one's file? He has no opportunity to try and redeem himself or to repair his good name. He can make no attempt to recover the loss he sustained and is condemned to go through life with this blot on his name.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) has not committed himself definitely but I judge from what he said that the government leans heavily toward the idea that if there is a freedom of information law, it will not provide for an appeal to an independent judicial tribunal. Exactly the same reasoning was advanced when the human rights legislation was debated in the House and in committee. We were told that we had good, kind, intelligent, honest ministers who would give out information and that appeals could be made to a privacy commissioner. The commissioner had no power to compel the ministers to produce documents, however, and there were too many exemptions in the privacy provision of the human rights legislation. If we have a freedom of information act without a firm declaration of ultimate appeal to the courts, the situation will be exactly the same.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that I have only a few minutes left but I wanted to make a suggestion. Some time ago a task force was established to inquire into government services. In the summing up in volume 1 of its report there appears the following recommendations:

> The right of Canadians to full, objective and timely information and the obligation of the State to provide such information about its programs and policies be publicly declared and stand as the foundation for the development of new government policies in this field. This right and obligation might be comprehended within a new constitution in the context of freedom of expression.

As we proceed in the next weeks and months to a consideration of the new constitution and the bill of rights which is to be embedded in it, I suggest that we should examine this recommendation very carefully. Most international charters on human rights contain a provision for freedom of speech and freedom to receive and impart information. I should like to think that there would be embedded in our constitution—with the bill of rights which I hope will emerge in due course—a declaration that the people of Canada have a right to be informed on what their government is doing, much like the Swedish right of information.

I am not alone in that view, Mr. Speaker. On February 10, 1970, when the Prime Minister tabled the theme of the Information Canada program which he obtained from the task force report, he made the following statement which is reported at page 3405 of Hansard for that day:

> The task force made 17 major recommendations. We accept those recommendations in principle, with two exceptions. Recommendation number five proposed the establishment of a citizens advisory bureau and neighbourhood councils. The government is sympathetic toward this proposal but feels it warrants further study. Recommendation number ten suggested that a government agency undertake a role as public advocate which we feel more properly belongs to parliament.

I will pass up the opportunity to comment on the last phrase, Mr. Speaker. In that statement, as I understand it, the Prime Minister accepted implicitly the recommendation of the task force that a provision for freedom of expression should be written into the new constitution. I lay this before the House at this time and hope that it will be implemented.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I hope that some hon. members opposite will be persuaded to vote for this motion. No government will fall on issues of this kind. It is not likely that enough members opposite will vote for the motion for the government to be defeated, but if any of them honestly feel, as I know some do, that there is a need for a right to know, that right ought to be hedged by adequate protection. If they feel this way, let them say so with their vote and let the people of Canada know that there are members on both sides of the House who believe in this principle and its protection.

Freedom of Information

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, to speak of freedom of information is immediately and logically to refer to a truly democratic administration. In our parliamentary system, the people elect governments and the latter exist only through the will of the citizens, will expressed without constraints, without pressure, and therefore in all freedom and full awareness during democratic elections. Consequently, when a citizen is poorly informed, or not informed, badly or incompletely informed, he runs the danger, though unconsciously, it is true, of contributing to the election of a government he would not wish to have, or which the majority really does not wish the country to be stuck with. The opening sentence of the green paper on public access to government documents, tabled by the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) on June 29, 1977, states that clearly, and I quote:

Open government is the basis of democracy.

May I be allowed, Mr. Speaker, to read the first two paragraphs of the introduction to the green paper, and I quote:

It is an essential consequence of the extension of the franchise to all adult citizens. For a democratic society is one in which the exercise of governmental power is undertaken not by an elite according to its own precepts, but by an executive accountable to the public itself for the goals of goverment action and the effectiveness of government performance in their achievement.

Democratic government must be government acceptable to the collectivity of citizens. To ensure that it is acceptable, there must be a political system to establish that government is accountable. Effective accountability—the public's judgment of the choices taken by government—depends on knowing the information and options available to the decision makers. Assessment of government depends upon a full understanding of the context within which decisions are made.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, despite those beautiful ideal evocations about open government, and consequently a democratic government, it is a secret for no one that a host of decisions made by the government are hatched in the great secrecy of departmental dens where the thinkers, those great mandarins of the public service, do their thing.

Consequently, the product we get, aside from the intentions expressed in election programs, speeches from the throne, white, green or yellow papers or whatever colour you want, press releases, speeches by ministers, the various information provided by members of parliament, the media and other means of information, the product we get, Mr. Speaker, escapes the prior influence of the public. So the knowledge of the process used at arriving at a government decision which can affect the daily lives of the public, the citizenry, for years to come is practically, not to say absolutely, nil. Such a secretive attitude is not unique to the Government of Canada; most governments, indeed all provincial governments in Canada, most western governments suffer from that morbid fear of making public information that could further enlighten people on the existence of certain government measures which they consider unduly coercive and which sometimes seem to interfere seriously with their freedom.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

However, Mr. Speaker, it must be recognized that governments, particularly the Government of Canada, never did so with a view to knowingly hiding anything from the people to harm them. Never! On the contrary, and this is why those who favour greater access to government information—and I am one of them—have serious reservations, when national security, which has not yet been defined, so requires, certain information is considered confidential and up until now the policy of the government has been that such information cannot be divulged for important reasons. The same applies to the duty of the state, which possesses much information about individual citizens, to protect the right to privacy of those individuals.

Mr. Speaker, freedom of information is an issue which interests everyone, and especially our constituents, the citizens of Canada. By passing such legislation as the Human Rights Act, which was referred to earlier, and by introducing recently Bill C-43 concerning the ombudsman, the government clearly shows that it wants to keep the commitment that it made in the green paper to protect by legislation the basic rights of Canadians. The Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) reasserted recently in the Joint Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments the commitment of the government to introduce legislation on public access to government papers and stated that, as minister responsible, he was prepared to submit as soon as possible to the cabinet a recommendation on the position of the government in this matter and to introduce a bill during the next session of parliament.

Mr. Speaker, these are serious indications that the government wants to act in this area and we should be happy about this. Since I am a member of the standing joint committee, I have had the opportunity to study in depth the green paper on this issue and to hear the many memoranda submitted to the committee. I wish to point out that the committee is drafting a report, as the vice-chairman mentioned it a while ago, and it should be tabled in parliament in the near future. The green paper which was tabled in the House on June 29, 1977 and referred to the joint standing committee to be considered thoroughly provides a framework to discuss the basic questions and the issues which should be taken in consideration in any legislation on the freedom of information. Its purpose was to provoke criticism and in a certain way to launch the debate. I can tell you that we were successful judging by the many submissions and the comments made by the witnesses.

The groups which appeared before the committee made up a fine sampling of the Canadian public; there were some spokesmen for the professional classes, for various organizations and movements. In several cases, a new aspect of that most complex question was shown to us. To introduce a bill on public access to government documents is to pull out official decision-making from under a veil of secrecy. But, as I said earlier, this is only one of several steps which the government has already taken or will take to preserve the fundamental rights of the people, while maintaining among Canadians the necessary atmosphere of openness and confidence.

Therefore, this is not, as a number of groups have suggested, a means to remedy the shortcomings and imperfections of our current democratic government. The purposes of this bill is merely to make available to Canadians the documents which private citizens and groups wish to look into in order to understand better the mechanisms of government. Freedom of information is part of our human rights; when considering it, one must take into account the current legislation and bills which aim at protecting the fundamental rights of all Canadians and at favouring respect for these rights.

Some witnesses who brought evidence before the committee seemed to attach too much importance to the mechanism of the administration of a piece of legislation on freedom of information. Of course, this is an important principle to consider in view of any piece of legislation but we should bear in mind the important thing, which is to give good service to the public. On the evidence of the experience we acquired through the implementation of relating pieces of legislation, namely the legislation on individual rights, we noticed that, to obtain the expected results, a piece of legislation should be understandable and accessible and be directed to all Canadians rather than being an instrument for certain interest groups.

I should also say that this is the appropriate time, because we can take advantage of the experience of those countries which already passed legislation on freedom of information, namely Sweden and the United States. We can also take into consideration the ongoing deliberations and the discussions on this complex issue both in this country and abroad. But we must not forget that, while drawing a lesson from that experience, we must shape our legislation to the particular needs of Canadians.

Because of the open-mindedness that was present at the committee, its deliberations, I repeat, drew active participation. However, three main issues dominated the briefs which were presented: the exemptions, the cost and the review of complaints. By exemptions, we mean cases where access to documents would be justifiably forbidden. By cost, the expenses resulting from the implementation of the legislation on public access to government documents. The review of complaints would be done through a process inherent in any appeal procedure. As some of my colleagues will speak on the two first points, exemptions and cost, I would like to briefly touch upon the complaint review. It would only come into play—I mean the complaint review—when access to a document in refused. Those who suggest a judicial review seem to consider the whole matter within the framework of our present system of opposition between the prosecutor and the defendant. After all, the judicial review is but one of the solutions proposed in the green paper. And the review of the complaints will be only one of the elements, among many others, of the proposed legislation.

A number of witnesses before the committee seemed to be wanting to deal only with the complaint review board, thus attaching more importance to this board than it might ever have. The Bar, in particular, has expressed the opinion that any law on public access to information which would not require a judicial review of the matter would only be a hollow commitment on the part of the government. I fully appreciate the point of view of the Canadian Bar Association and the comparison they make with what is being done in the U.S., but I maintain that there are other solutions that are just as good. It must be noted that this government, with the Human Rights Act, the Official Languages Act and the proposed legislation on the ombudsman, has proved by actual measures that they strive to safeguard the fundamental rights of citizens, which is akin to the concept of a commissioner. For any bill relating to freedom of information, which is an analogous issue, one must also take this notion into its conception.

The green paper carries an extensive survey of the various possible ways of appeal. The witnesses have all tried to present the ideal solution to the standing committee. They have actually put forth a certain number of new ideas. One, for instance, Mr. Speaker was to give the Prime Minister the ultimate say in such matters. The press gallery proposed in its brief the designation of a commissioner for information who would be accountable to parliament and who would have the power to review the documents in camera but not power of invalidating a ruling. As for the National Anti-Poverty Organization it proposed instituting a parliamentary commission whose members could become the attorneys of those who seek the release of information.

It goes without saying that in order for that law to really produce its effects, an independent review commission must be established to pass rulings on cases where information will have been denied because the law would not otherwise be fair. Therefore a review commission for the hearing of complaints must be set up and characterized by its firmness and efficiency.

However I want to remind those groups who have strongly supported the principle of judicial review based on the United States model that the average cost of an appeal is $10,000 and that even on a priority basis the time needed to get a case before the courts varies from six months to two years. One must not forget either that a relatively small number of documents is involved. For instance, the Secretary of State who testified before the committee revealed that there are about 4.5 million documents out of which barely 2 per cent are classified. It is understood that a high percentage of government documents are absolutely not sensitive and do not therefore constitute an issue. The recommendations contained in the report presented by the committee to parliament will surely deal with these complex issues and will put forth solutions.

In closing my remarks I wish to reiterate that the only thing which concerns me and I think concerns most if not all the members of that committee is the desirability of bringing about before the end of this decade a good legislation which will give all Canadians access to government documents without causing any prejudice to the smooth operation of our democratic regime. The ultimate objective is on the one side to have a reasonable and receptive government and on the other side an active and dynamic citizenry.

[English]

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to my colleague on the statutory instruments committee, the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard). I think I caught in his words an acceptance of the idea of a great deal of openness in government beyond that which we now have. I heard him say that he would be in favour of some type of independent review procedure which I, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and most members of this House favour. However, I did not hear the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine make a statement with regard to the last part of the motion before the House today, which reads:

—subject to a review process with ultimate appeal to the courts.

I hope that was an omission from his speech. I have been his colleague on that committee for some time. I know him to be a man of fair and open mind. I know that is not confined only to the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine in terms of the other side of the House, but rests in the minds of other members both on and off the committee.

I would like the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine and others who feel that way to demonstrate their commitment to openness tonight by supporting the motion. I use the word "demonstrate". I want them to demonstrate by deed that commitment to openness tonight by supporting the resolution before the House standing in the name of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). It will not be the first time that members of this House have done that. It was done on February 12, 1976 when a unanimous resolution was adopted by this House of Commons.

The motion before us tonight asks the members of this House to take one more step. It is a simple step, but a profound one in terms of the whole meaning of freedom of information. That is to assure the citizen, the bureaucrat, the politician, the supporter of the government and the opposition, and, most important, the members of the executive and the cabinet, that there has been a commitment in this parliament to an ultimate review of the question whether documents will be released or information will be forthcoming to an authority outside the political or bureaucratic process.

That is the important part of this resolution. I ask the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine—and I will look at him when we vote in a few minutes—to stand in the affirmative on this resolution.

I listened to the speeches today. Years ago for members of parliament and members of the public the issues that affected us, moved us and caused debates in this and other legislative chambers were relatively simple. I guess it was appropriate in those days for this House and members of the public to make judgments more or less on instinct or reach an understanding of a set of facts or technical factors which were relatively minor or uncomplicated. But as society changed, so did the relationship of the government to parliament and the relationship of the government to the people. Governments for better or for worse—and the situation we deal with is for worse—intruded into the lives of the citizens in a democratic country. Issues have become more complex.

The tools and machinery of eighteenth and nineteenth century parliamentary government are inadequate for their role today. They are inadequate for our job as parliamentarians and inadequate to supply information so that the people of our country can be informed exactly what government is doing, why it is doing it, whether something should be changed and, more important, to make government more accountable to the people and to parliament.

That is why in this day and age we talk about openness as a concept that is desirable. We can discuss the role of the ombudsman because the bureaucracy, even if it is well intentioned, tends to roll over people and push them aside. It thinks of them as statistics rather than human beings. Because of this intrusion of governments, the development of the computer and the facility of exchanging information almost as rapidly as it is created, we call for legislation for the protection of privacy.

Because of this complexity and because there is a growing need in this parliament, it is recognized that this and other parliaments are inadequate to do the job of bringing government to reasonable account—not to impede or obstruct, but to make it account.

We talk about the reform of parliamentary procedures because it is important that the power which is contained within knowledge is shared in a free society. Because that is not happening today, we talk about freedom of information laws, laws that will not impede or stop a government from governing reasonably but which will give those who are governed, the people who entrust the power of government to a group of men and women for a period of time, a sharing of power and a lessening of the concentration of the power which is contained within that knowledge.

There are exemptions which have been set forth in the green paper. My friend the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine outlined some of those exemptions. I do not intend to deal with them all. I do not agree with them. I think the paper is far too restrictive in this the beginning of the pursuit of openness by government.

Be that as it may, a committee of this House is working on a report which I think will be a landmark in terms of providing something new and bringing part of our procedures into tune with the first part of the twentieth century, if not the last. However well intentioned a cabinet minister, deputy minister or those below him who would make a decision as to what information could be released to an inquiring member of the public, it is axiomatic that from time to time information will be withheld, not on the ground that it is confidential, that it affects national unity, national defence, the involvement of the criminal law, personal business affairs or a whole host of exemptions which have been talked about, but simply on the ground that what may be released may embarrass, upset, tend to politicize the public service or a whole host of reasons.

I suggest that in a free society with the healthy scepticism which ought to be the hallmark of a free society all those things are irrelevant to the question whether that information should be released. It is against this whole tradition of closet politics and closet bureaucratic operations that this resolution, the work of the committee and, I hope, the vote of this House tonight will move.

Today the Leader of the Opposition took the position that this motion was not considered by the official opposition—the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) supported this position, and I did so yesterday in my capacity—to be a matter of confidence. In other words, what we are trying to say to the government—perhaps not articulately but, I think directly—is that what we want today out of this resolution is a buttress and support for the committee which is now drafting a report on freedom of information.

We want this parliament to act openly, notoriously and freely in terms of the party whips. We do not want hon. members to be pressured in terms of their votes. Like certain other things which go on here regarding freedom of information, we want this vote on freedom of information to be a matter of the conscience of each hon. member. We want each hon. member to decide for himself or herself whether he or she believes in this concept, and that ultimately the question of judicial review is not repugnant to the idea of open government. We stand by that, and I repeat it as House leader of the opposition.

I invite my hon. friends opposite who believe firmly in this resolution to support it. If they do, I guarantee that there will be no calls for this government to resign. Indeed, if hon. members opposite support this resolution, they will do themselves, let alone parliament and the people of the country, a great service. That was the spirit in which this resolution was advanced.

There are some who say that judicial review is a bad thing, that judges are not fit and that they do not have the knowledge necessary to deal with the complex issue of documents. The experience in this country is exactly contrary to that line of argument. We have trusted judges such as Mr. Justice Berger in dealing with the complex matters of native people and pipelines. These are things which are normally foreign to what we think judges might deal with. We have trusted judges to conduct hearings regarding labour relations. We have trusted judges to conduct royal commissions and commissions of inquiry which have nothing to do with the law, but which have much to do with complex technical questions and other matters. Judges are capable of dealing with such matters. There are some who say that courts would be plugged with freedom of information matters. That has not been the case in the United States which, I am sorry to say, is a much more open society than ours.

I ask my hon. friends who may be considering voting for this resolution to look at the word "ultimate" which appears in it. The resolution refers to "a review process with ultimate appeal to the courts". That word "ultimate" relating to appeals was put there for a very important reason. It may very well be that the committee, and ultimately this parliament—or the government when it drafts the legislation—will establish a commissioner of information or some other office to which the great bulk of appeals could be taken, before which procedures would be summary and matters would be completed quickly and easily. It may be that only a minimum of those matters would ultimately go to the courts.

I do not see how we could sit idly by and let this moment pass without standing in our places and speaking on behalf of an open and free society, to which we give lip service on so many occasions. I invite the government to give more than lip service to this concept, to stand behind the courts as appropriate authorities and to take this step in giving not only to parliament but also to people, not the secret and confidential information which is passed from a public servant to a minister or the conversations or the memoranda which may go into the decision-making process ultimately, but all the factual documents which lead up to the suggestion of options.

I invite the government to take this step and to make available background documents which inform ministers and are used by the public service to advise ministers with respect to various options in particular matters. Why ought not those be released, especially in a day when we feel so strongly about access to courts that we fund pressure groups to take actions against governments? It would not be a much larger step to provide information with which those pressure groups and other groups in society could operate.

I congratulate the Leader of the Opposition on this motion and on the principles which are contained therein.

I also want to say that it is an honour for me to follow in debate for a few moments the hon. member for Peace River, who has become the advocate of openness in Canada and as such has brought honour to this House. He has always acted in the highest tradition of this House and the profession of which he is a member.

This can be one of two kinds of days in parliament. It can be a day upon which the government does not accept an unusual invitation by the opposition not to treat this as a matter of confidence or follows its ordinary course of suggesting that motions which come from the opposition side ought not to have any attention paid to them. Or, it can be another kind of day. It can be a very historic day when this parliament, to aid the committee which is now drafting the legislation arising out of the green paper, takes positive action and stands behind a principle which is not foreign to a parliament in a free and open society.

We need freedom of information legislation for more than the reason commonly given, namely, that people are entitled to information gathered by public servants at public expense. That in itself is not sufficient reason, in my mind, to justify the complications which we may create as a result of such a bill. The real reason lies behind the basic theory and purpose of democratic government. Democracy thrives on the competition of ideas, argument, criticism and visions of the future. It depends not only on the electoral and parliamentary competition of political parties, but on the contribution of other voices in society acting fom altruistic or selfish motives. As a parliamentary democracy we encourage organized probing of government actions through the formal structures of the House of Commons. As a pluralistic society we believe in the value of those organizations referred to as pressure groups.

What I am saying to my colleagues in the House tonight, and I say it earnestly and strongly, is that if this parliament is to function, if groups in society are to function, if the people of the country are to be able to judge in a knowledgeable way, then some of the tools of power must be shared. One of the great tools of power is not only the ability to probe all the structures within this place, but also to have the knowledge by which that probing, that investigation, that calling to account of a government, can be done effectively based on information and knowledge rather than instinct.

If the government are prepared to move in that direction tonight, then they will not only have done themselves and this parliament a service, but for once we will be able to say to them that perhaps they made the country a little better because of the decision that was made here. I invite them to share in the concept of openness of government and support our motion tonight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to section (10) of Standing Order 58(10), to interrupt the proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the motion, main estimates, and for the passage of all stages of the bill based thereon.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Clark) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN VOTE 20, ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That Vote 20, in the amount of $20,426,000 under Finance for the Anti-Inflation Board—program expenditures for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1979 (less the amount voted in interim supply), be concurred in.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to make it clear that I take no objection to the way in which this matter is set up on the order paper. I think it is unfortunate and that something ought to be done about the fact that unless one rises on a point of order there will be nothing in Hansard or in Votes and Proceedings to show why the House voted on two items in the estimates by themselves and then voted for all the rest of them in one vote.

I should like with this point of order to make it clear that the reason we are going to vote now on the items on the Anti-Inflation Board and the Senate—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member realizes, as do other hon. members, that he has taken the floor on a valid and serious point of order with respect to the procedures which we are locked into, as it were, to take an item in our estimates that has been objected to and singled out for special treatment because it has been opposed. Nevertheless, a motion in opposition to that item is not the question that has to be put; it has to be a motion in support of it for rather technical reasons, and following our procedures.

The hon. member's point is well taken, namely that those who oppose are not identified in the procedure; neither is the motion or question put. That is a difficulty we have to face in order to conform with our procedures. I recognize the validity of the hon. member's point; we have agonized over it many times but have not found a solution. To go on and allow the hon. member to give his reasons would be to go beyond the point of order. I recognize the hon. member's concern but I do not think I can allow him to state his reasons.

Therefore, the motion is that Vote 20 be concurred in. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Is the House prepared to take this vote without further ringing of the bells?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Andras), which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN MAIN ESTIMATES

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That the main estimates for the year ending March 31, 1979, except those items disposed of earlier this day, and less amounts voted in interim supply, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Andras thereupon moved that Bill C-61, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1979, be read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Andras moved that the bill be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, may I have the usual undertaking from the President of the Treasury Board that this bill is in the usual form of an appropriation bill at this time on main estimates and that it contains nothing out of the ordinary? We have had some rather unfortunate examples in the past. Can the minister tell us whether the bill contains anything out of the ordinary?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Chairman, I can give the hon. member and the House the usual assurance.

The Chairman: I might add that the bill was made available to hon. members this afternoon.

Clauses 2 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule agreed to on division.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Andras moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: It being after ten o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 10.37 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EXPRESSION OF CONCERN FOR TREATMENT OF TWO U.S.S.R. NATIONALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of great concern and pressing necessity. Given the deep concern felt by members on both sides of this House that two citizens of the Soviet Union, namely, Ida Nudel and Vladimir Slepak, were given severe sentences for expressing their belief in the preservation of human rights in that country, and specifically that they were sentenced for expressing their desire for free immigration, an element of human rights which we and all like-minded people regard as fundamental, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni):

That, in light of the severe sentences imposed upon two citizens of the Soviet Union, Ida Nudel and Vladimir Slepak, for expressing their belief in the preservation of human rights in that country and specifically for expressing their desire for free immigration, the House of Commons wishes to convey its deep concern to the government of the Soviet Union together with the wish that the sentences might be reviewed on humanitarian grounds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST HOUSE PAY TRIBUTE TO FRENCH CANADIANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move an important motion of special national interest.

Considering that today marks the beginning of the French Canadian holiday in Quebec, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin):

That the Canadian parliament pay tribute to all French Canadians on that holiday.

PETRO-CANADA

REASON FOR SELECTION OF AGENTS IN HUSKY OIL TAKEOVER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the retention by Petro-Can of the investment and financial counselling firm of Pitfield, Mackay Ross, Ltd. in its attempt to acquire control of Husky Oil Ltd., in view of the fact that Ward C. Pitfield, president of Pitfield, Mackay Ross, Ltd., was a director of Husky Oil Ltd. during initial negotiations with the company on behalf of Petro-Can, and in view of the participation in the negotiations of a representative of the Prime Minister's office, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence):

That this House directs the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to make statements on motions at the earliest possible date as to what considerations led to the selection of Pitfield, MacKay Ross Ltd. as agents for Petro-Can, and specifically whether the fact that Ward C. Pitfield was a director of Husky Oil Ltd. played any part in the appointment.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

YOUNG CANADA WORKS

REDUCTION OF PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since the Department of Employment has cut $2.5 million from the Young Canada Works program, which seriously hurts young adult students from areas of Canada with far above average unemployment rates, and since the same department has now cut $50 million from phase III of Canada Works as compared to phase II, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez):

That the officials of the Department of Employment be taken before the Canadian Human Rights Commission for discriminating against the needy.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Members will have noted, I am sure, that I did not put the question in respect of the motion proposed, pursuant to Standing Order 43, by the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Lavoie). The reason I did not do so was that I have consistently refrained from using the provisions of Standing Order 43 in order to issue salutory messages of any sort. It seems to me that to use the motion in that way—and I am certainly prepared to be consulted if I am wrong in this approach—would be a temptation to use a motion for various messages of congratulation all of which are praiseworthy but surely are not matters of urgent and pressing necessity within the language of the Standing Order.

It seems to me if we are going to open the use of that motion for one kind of congratulatory message, we must be prepared to take, on a daily basis, motions pursuant to that Standing Order in respect of birthdays of cities and of provinces or in respect of various historic events and congratulatory messages. I have consistently refrained from doing that. I have listened to the motions and it seems to me that hon. members who put them forward enjoy the opportunity of doing so. However, the Chair has never put the question to the floor as to whether there is a matter of necessity requiring unanimous consent for debate. I really think if I start doing that, we must be prepared to accept a great flow of this kind of motion and I think that should be resisted. That is the reason for that approach this morning.

Again I say that if members want to speak to me about a change of policy in that regard, I would be only too glad to take it under consideration.

[Mr. Speaker.]

CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION SUPPLIED TO RCMP

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I want to take the Minister of Employment and Immigration back to the very important topic I asked him about on Wednesday. It is a matter that affects all Canadians and the degree of confidence they can have in their dealings with their government. I have carefully read the answer given me by the minister on Wednesday. I want to ask, again, specifically what information his department has been in the habit of supplying the RCMP from confidential files.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, there is a specific provision in the act which in fact allows information from the files to be made available for particular purposes. There is also a discretionary factor in section 114, which was amended, as you know, under the new act. There was some concern about whether the discretion that could be applied was directly related to the act itself and to social insurance numbers. The legal opinion I received was that this, in fact, was the case.

Given that situation, it was no longer possible to give information to the RCMP which would help with its investigations of criminal activity. The kind of information involved would obviously be names, addresses and names of employers, the information that is in the file.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, the evidence given to the royal commission is that the Unemployment Insurance Commission, on hundreds of occasions since 1974, has given information to the RCMP. When did this government decide to ignore the assurances given by former prime minister Pearson in 1964, when the social insurance scheme was first introduced, that this information would be held strictly confidential, not to be used for any other purpose but for internal unemployment insurance purposes?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the interpretation which has been given to that particular section is, as I have said, somewhat fuzzy and subject to interpretation, namely, that there is a discretionary power, formerly in the commission and now with the minister, to make that information available; so there was no feeling that there was, in fact, any illegality or any breach of that particular statute.

Because of recent events and, particularly, my own responsibility as minister, I sought and obtained a legal opinion to the effect that my discretion could only be exercised in a very narrow area in so far as the Unemployment Insurance Act is concerned. There is no feeling that there has been any illegality. It was an interpretation that was taken, I gather, by former commissioners that they in fact had this authority.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest the minister refer to the remarks of the former prime minister. Finally, I want to ask him, in reference to what he said on Wednesday about amending legislation, what plans does the government have to amend legislation and what would they be proposing to amend such legislation?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, it seemed to me, on the surface, that it was important, in the interest of helping the RCMP both with security and with criminal investigations, that information of this kind should be made available to assist them in that particular enterprise, but because this subject matter is being looked at by the McDonald commission it would be somewhat premature to suggest the kind of legislation we would have in mind.

RCMP TELEX ACCESS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the same minister. Going back to 1964, the assurance made by the then prime minister, Mr. Pearson, about the confidentiality of social insurance numbers, subsequent to which, in or about 1969, direct telex access to computer information was given—not just to the RCMP but, indeed, to approximately 800 police forces across Canada which would work through the commercial crime unit in Ottawa and have equal access to this information—can the minister tell us whether the telex access was given for all purposes, not just investigating UIC fraud but for all purposes, with ministerial knowledge and approval or by order of a predecessor of the present minister? In other words, what happened in 1969 which opened all computer files by this telex system; and was it with the knowledge and approval of the responsible minister of the day?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not certain that that particular date is, in fact, appropriate. It may be that the memory of the individual who was giving evidence indicated that this information had been made available. According to my information, this kind of information had been made available since the forties when the legislation first came into effect. There was a discretion exercised at that time by the commission that was somewhat broader than apparently we have authority to give. That is why I had to give instructions that it was no longer to be made available.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I compliment the minister for making that order, which I think may have been prompted by my colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton West. But that does not matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister was quite frank in admitting that earlier in the week. The minister said, in reply to my colleague from Vancouver Quadra, that it was the commissioner's interpretation—and I think he said that quite deliberately—rather than the minister's interpretation of section 126 and predecessor sections of the same nature, and be referred to the fuzzy nature of that particular section in its interpretation. Was there never a legal interpretation requested by a responsible minister subsequent to, say, 1964, the date of the Pearson assurance, until just recently when the minister took the initiative for which I commend him? I am speaking of a legal interpretation of what he described as a rather fuzzy section.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I doubt that there would have been a legal opinion obtained by the minister in view of the discretion exercised prior to the amendment which was made at the request of the hon. member for Hamilton West when Bill C-27 was before the House. Prior to that particular section being amended, the discretion rested with the commission and I would expect that they secured an opinion, were satisfied that they were correct or assumed they had that authority.

POST OFFICE

SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Can the Postmaster General confirm that substantial cutbacks in the manpower of the Post Office are now being actively implemented and that a national plan is being developed in which some 3,000 to 3,5000 man-years of work will be eliminated by the fiscal year 1981-82?

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, there is no question of cut-backs of the workers in the Post Office. I am sure the hon. member is referring in his question to an article which appeared in a newspaper recently, saying that there would be a cutback of 269 employees in the Post Office. It is very wrong.

Of course, I cannot stop my management from supplying me with studies on ways they could maybe save some money in the Post Office, when sometimes we are accused of having large deficits and being inefficient. These cutbacks if any will be made with the collaboration of the unions and will come about mainly by attrition. There is no question of someone losing their job in the Post Office.

Mr. Rodriguez: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that I have in my hand a plan called "Ontario Postal Region Business Plan Summary 1978-1982", in view of the fact that the minister said these cutbacks will come about through attrition, and in view of the fact that in this plan it specifically states that the instructions and guidelines to management in the Post Office are to optimize use of part-time help in districts across the region, I ask the Postmaster General how he squares what he has just said with the instruction in the plan that they must maximize and optimize use of casual help, while at the same time cutting back on full-time and part-time employees of the Post Office.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I think instead of criticizing management for such a report, I should compliment them because they are trying to find ways to be more efficient. Again I state that there is no question of some workers losing their permanent jobs. One would have to go to some of our plants to see how a Post Office operation is handled: it is not easy, and sometimes we have to pay extra time and hire casual workers because of overvolume or accumulation of mail. If we want the mail to get out, we have to get it out with casual workers and extra time. It is a planned way to be more efficient and to try to save money for the taxpayers.

Mr. Rodriguez: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Postmaster General confirm that the instruction in the plan to optimize casual help is a direct attempt to undermine the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, and will he also assure the House that he is prepared to guarantee jobs for those workers presently serving on counter service and mail sortation?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, no such instruction has been given in the way the hon. member mentioned. It is strictly a report given to me as suggestions.

Mr. Rodriguez: It says "must".

Mr. Lamontagne: They can say "must", but that does not mean it is going to be done. It is just a report given to management and to me to see how we perceive such suggestions. If it is done, it will be after consultation with the unions. I think it is absolutely normal that management should give me some ideas and new ways to save money.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PROGRAM TO DEVELOP TOURISM IN QUEBEC

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Sometime in April, an agreement was signed by Quebec and the central government dealing with the development of tourism in Quebec. In the press release, a few projects are mentioned but it is also reported that there may be up to 80 of them.

Can the minister tell the House how one goes about benefiting from that program in areas where municipalities or other bodies may want to develop that industry in the interest of residents and visitors alike? I am thinking more specifically of the area south of the St. Lawrence along the American border, which Americans go through in large numbers.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I can say to the hon. member for Bellechasse that several parties were involved in the consultations which resulted in the signing of that agreement. There were municipalities, it goes without saying, several private and public groups involved in the promotion, development and operation of tourist complexes, with either private or multiple operations. I might suggest to the hon. member that the organizations to which he has referred might go to the department of tourism, fish and game, in this instance, as well as to the high commissioner for youth, recreation and sports; they might also go to the Quebec planning and development bureau. I would suggest that those organizations also make representations to those various provincial bodies; they might also be well advised to send me or my deputy minister in Montreal copy of the documents or projects they may want to draw to my attention.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

The minister stated in his reply that a private enterprise, an individual or a group of people could take advantage of such a program by submitting a project to whom it may concern. I should like to be understood: this will not be a profit-oriented enterprise but one which really wants to develop the industry in the area, something which would foster other developments.

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Speaker, I am in a position to confirm this, for among the projects which we have accepted to finance under the current agreement are several which will be carried out by non-profit organizations such as those mentioned by the hon. member, and of which I could name from memory at least four or five.

PIPELINES

NORTHERN PIPELINE—COMMITTEE STUDY OF FINANCIAL AND TECHNICAL DIFFICULTIES

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council in his capacity of having jurisdiction over the pipeline agency. Is it the government's intention, as I have previously suggested, to reactivate the standing committee dealing with this specific matter, particularly in light of the imminent recess of parliament and the obvious difficulties the companies have with financing and possible delays with respect to technical difficulties, which have been reported in the press, so that while parliament is in recess, members could address themselves to these possible problems?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would be ready to discuss that possibility with representatives of other parties as to whether, within the terms of reference established for the committee, it would be possible to meet. I have no objection whatsoever if it is generally agreed that the committee might perform a useful service.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, since it is apparent that the companies are experiencing difficulty with financing, and since the bill that was passed by the House deals with that aspect, including the time-frame, in concise terms, is the government presently discussing with the government of the United States the possibility of reopening the pipeline agreement to make certain changes to the timing of the start of construction as well as to the financing formulas? Are there such discussions under way at this time?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the discussions with the United States on the terms of the pipeline agreement, we have no intention of initiating such discussions in order to reopen the terms of the agreement. The hon. member has mentioned that the companies are having difficulties with respect to financing. I met with the president of Foothills earlier this week. In so far as Canadian action and performance are concerned, there are absolutely no obstacles; the Canadian operation is going as quickly as possible. What has to be determined at the present time is up to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, many of the areas to be traversed by the pipeline have never been subjected to any impact study in terms of the environment or socioeconomic impact, particularly areas in British Columbia and Alberta. It is the intention of the government and the pipeline commissioner to activate one or several of the advisory councils provided for in the bill, in an attempt to get them to fulfil these functions and catch up with the studies that were made in the Yukon and other parts of the pipeline area? Is it the intention to get some of these advisory councils going, as was suggested by some of the interveners before the committee?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is our intention. It will also be the intention of the agency to consult with the public on the social and economic terms which have been tentatively established for carrying out the project.

NORTHERN PIPELINE—PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question in direct line with the last comments of the House leader about consultation with the public. More than a week has gone by since the preliminary date for the submission of views on the environmental and socioeconomic impact studies asked for by the commissioner. Has the minister been in touch with the commissioner to set up a program of public hearings? If so, will the schedule be made known to all members of the House so that they can be there and hear what the public has to say about this matter?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received from the commissioner any schedule of meetings, but I will raise the matter with him.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): In that case, will the House leader given an undertaking that when he does get the schedule arranged with the commissioner, he will communicate with the other House leaders even if the House is not in session so they may apprise members of the various parties about this particular schedule?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, if my colleagues are available during the recess, I will be happy to consult with them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA'S PROPOSALS FOR SETTLEMENT OF SOUTH AFRICAN PROBLEMS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, whom I welcome back to the House after his trip abroad. I have two questions concerning Canada's involvement in southern Africa. The first concerns Namibia. Canada put forward, on behalf of the five western nations, a package of proposals for a UN supervised transition for the future independence of Namibia. That package ran into trouble with the leaders of SWAPO and was followed by South Africa's raid on guerrilla units.

In light of the recent meetings in London, can the minister indicate the present status of that package, bearing in mind his previous remarks that it was not negotiable, and can he specifically tell the House what Canada's continuing role will be in the obtaining of independence for Namibia?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the package to which the hon. member refers continues to be on the table. As the House knows, it has been accepted by South Africa. While not rejecting the package outright, SWAPO indicated some reservations concerning it. There was a period of several weeks during which no contact occurred—official contact, in any event—between the five western countries and SWAPO.

The hon. member made reference to meetings in London. Perhaps he was alluding to the meetings in Paris. In any event, we met in Paris last week. The decision was taken there that the Western Five countries would resume the initiative and would seek means of talking with SWAPO once again about keeping the initiative going and keeping the progress going. To date, those meetings have not taken place because a number of steps have to be taken with regard to consulting South Africa and also some frontline states. I am shortening, here, a very complex subject.

In so far as the package remaining the same as when it was put forward, as to its substance, the answer is yes. There are two matters on which I gather SWAPO wants further clarification, if you wish. One is the location of the residual South African troops in Namibia, where they would be stationed; the second has to do with the future of Walvis Bay. Our talks with them will be principally concerned with elaboration of these matters rather than any change in the Western Five proposals.

Mr. Roche: Second, Mr. Speaker, I wish to touch on the subject of Canada's involvement in Zaire through our participation in the new $116 million western aid package as part of the $1 billion salvage operation for that country.

I would like to know the full extent of Canada's involvement in the aid package. What monitoring devices will be set up, bearing in mind the widespread corruption in Zaire? Related to that, since economic stability is directly related to the question of security, has the minister investigated the report in the London Sunday Times that 11 Soviet generals have moved into Angola, a move that could presage intensified military activity in the southern regions of Africa?

Mr. Jamieson: I have no wish to short-change the hon. member on my answer, but I think it is obvious that I would not be able now to go into all the details of such a complex and multifaceted question. I would be glad to send him a written response. I simply say in passing that the reference he has made to co-operative effort with regard to assistance to Zaire predates, in terms of its starting-up time, the most recent developments in Zaire. In other words, it has been contemplated by a number of countries, particularly western countries, for some time.

The security measures to which he referred are of very great concern to all the parties. Similarly, as the hon. member will have noted, there have been a number of expressions that this kind of assistance, if it is put together, must be on condition that the present government of Zaire undertakes certain reforms and improvements in its procedures and general attitudes. I think that is as much as I can say within the constraints of the question period but, I repeat, I will provide a written answer in supplement.

TRANSPORT

GRAIN—USE OF THUNDER BAY AS EXPORT TERMINAL

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport regarding grain movement. Given the degree of congestion in Vancouver with the tie-up of hopper cars, and the fact that the port of Thunder Bay is under-utilized at this point, will the minister give more consideration to a study to see if it is possible to move more grain through Thunder Bay than has been done up to this time, even to the point of dealing with some of the purchasers of the grain to see whether, for example, in Russia the Baltic ports could be used as opposed to Darien?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Wheat Board is very conscious of the opportunities at the various ports. A certain amount of grain can be shipped from the west or east, alternately. There is this year a very heavy program of grain for movement through Thunder Bay and east coast ports. I do not think any further switching of grain at this moment would be a solution.

RECALL OF DEFECTIVE MOTOR VEHICLES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. In the United States, several million cars have been recalled because of unsafe construction defects in the pollution controls, steering and gasoline tanks. Although this mass of information concerning unsafe automobiles has resulted in recalls by the manufacturers, no similar recalls have occurred in Canada. What is the reason for manufacturers selling cars in Canada and not having to make similar recalls, as the same unsafe conditions exist here as in the United States?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are differences in law as between the two countries. That has implications as to whether there is an obligatory recall or not. However, I am not aware of the situation to which the hon. member refers. The general practice has been for recalls in Canada to occur when they occur in the United States, sometimes with a time lag although only a very short one. If the hon. member has specific examples where he thinks that is not happening, I will be glad to hear about them.

Mr. Peters: I think lack of legislation in Canada is the difference. Is the government considering legislation to provide up to date supervision of all cars licensed in Canada to guarantee the public that unsafe defects will be repaired by the manufacturer, without cost to the consumer? If not, why do we not intend to provide consumer protection for the Canadian public?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, we will indeed be looking at appropriate changes in the legislation in order to give us the necessary power if the motor company refuses to carry out what seems to be its obvious responsibility. In the meantime, however, the existing system, while lacking the legal power to require recalls, is working fairly satisfactorily in terms of companies actually responding to a need and recalling vehicles.

IMMIGRATION

INTERROGATION OF TRINIDAD CITIZENS AT TORONTO AIRPORT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I feel very comfortable now that my seatmate from Calgary North is back.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I want to address a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I have heard some very disturbing news. I do not know whether the minister is aware that on Sunday last a plane coming in from Trinidad with some 86 people aboard landed in Toronto, and that some 30 of the passengers were shuttled off into a corner and subjected to intense interrogation lasting from 12 midnight until eight o'clock in the morning. We are speaking now of a visible minority.

Having given these sentiments some consideration following an exchange with the hon. member for Greenwood, will the minister look into this matter and see that a full investigation is carried out? Surely, we cannot have the world thinking that as far as this country is concerned, people of colour are undesirable.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): It is a pleasure, once again, to reply to a question by my colleague from the class of '68. On Sunday we shall be celebrating ten years of our presence in this chamber. I am not familiar with the situation to which he has referred. The fact of the matter is that visible minorities are assuredly most welcome in this country. If action of the kind the hon. member has described was taken, I am satisfied my officials had good reason. But I will check to find out why they followed the course they did and why the inquiries were so prolonged.

Mr. Alexander: I would remind the minister that there were 86 passengers aboard this plane and that those who were not bothered were white. To my mind, that raises a number of questions. I do not want to put words in the minister's mouth with respect to discrimination, but since the hon. gentleman visited the city and port of Toronto the other day to explain what our immigration policy is all about, I think it is time he went to Toronto and other ports to advise his officials what the policy really is in terms of discrimination. I think it is time he lowered the boom. This sort of thing is destroying our credibility and is affecting our relations with our Caribbean Commonwealth partners.

Mr. Cullen: Like myself, the hon. member is a lawyer and he will appreciate that I should hear both sides of the story before making the kind of judgment he seems to have made in advance.

Mr. Peters: What lawyer ever did that?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: I gather that the hon. member for Timiskaming has lost the odd case, Mr. Speaker. As far as visiting my officials is concerned, I do not think that is necessary. They do not practice discrimination and they have been advised both by myself and my deputy minister of our policy with respect to discrimination. We do not want to see any of it.

TRANSPORT

STUDY OF PASSENGER TRAFFIC IN SOUTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister advise us the extent of the co-ordination between VIA Rail and GO Transit in the Oshawa-Toronto-Burlington-Hamilton corridor? Is there a joint committee established comprised of representatives of the Department of Transport, VIA Rail, GO Transit and the Ontario ministry of transport and communications to look into the co-ordination of the services in this corridor?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): A joint committee comprising, particularly, representatives from the province of Ontario and the federal government has been examining passenger traffic in the whole of southern Ontario, which would include the corridor to which the hon. member has referred. The officials engaged in this work do, of course, consult widely with the interested operators including VIA Rail, GO Transit and other forms of transportation.

Mr. Kempling: Can the minister advise us whether, in particular, there has been any co-ordination in the location of station facilities in the Oakville-Burlington-Hamilton area? It would seem to make eminent good sense to combine facilities wherever possible and it appears to me this is not likely to happen, particularly in the Burlington-Hamilton area.

Mr. Lang: The general subject of the co-ordination of facilities, including train and bus transport, is of concern to this committee. If the hon. member has a specific case in mind where he thinks development is occurring contrary to this spirit, I would be glad to have the information and to look into the matter.

MANPOWER

EMPLOYMENT OF IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration: it follows a question put to the minister on Wednesday by my hon. friend from Halton. It concerns a problem on the west island of Montreal; potential immigrants have been refused entry into Canada to fill positions which employers have not been able to fill with Canadian workers.

My question has to do with salary levels and a statement by the minister that there are 150 qualified physicians in Quebec who are unable to secure employment and for whom salary levels considered adequate vary from $60,000 to $80,000 per annum. Does the minister continue to insist that a company offering employment for an industrial position requiring medical expertise at a salary level of, say, $38,000 per annum should be denied access to the services of a competent potential immigrant from the United States because unemployed Canadians have expectations of a salary at twice that level?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): That is probably the best advertising in the world for those particular positions, Mr. Speaker. I would say, that, most assuredly, if there are people prepared to work in that field whose salary expectations are too high, immigrants will be welcomed. But I would wish to check the facts the hon. member has given us.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

INCREASED TRADING IN SHARES OF HUSKY OIL

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is the minister aware of any investigation or inquiry by the federal government into the source of increased trading, at obviously increased prices, in the shares of Husky Oil of Canada prior to the initial release and publicity surrounding the original offer of Petro-Canada to purchase those shares?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any such investigation. However, as the hon. member knows, the director of research under the Combines Investigation Act sometimes carries out investigations on his own initiative or at the request of six citizens. I will check with him to see whether such an investigation is under way or is proposed.

Mr. Lawrence: I understand the minister is wearing two hats this morning; that he is acting solicitor general. I ask whether he is aware of any federal investigation into this whole matter, bearing in mind that provincial investigators might not have the jurisdiction needed to seek answers from departments of the federal government? In this case, not only was the offer known to Petro-Canada but details of it were intimately known to officials right in the office of the Prime Minister, as in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; so there might well be a need for a federal investigation. Does the minister know of any such investigation by the law enforcement agencies?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Acting Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as Acting Solicitor General I have noted the hon. member's questions and representations. I will bring them to the attention of my colleague.

POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST IN CONNECTION WITH HUSKY OIL TAKEOVER

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to accept the allegation that there was a conflict of interest. That is something for the director himself to consider. The decision to engage the company, of which he was a member, and the other agents acting for Petro-Can was made by management and the board of directors of Petro-Can. They were seeking the best in the business.

GOVERNMENT KNOWLEDGE OF POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): My supplementary question is to the Prime Minister, whose office has a direct liaison with Petro-Can in the negotiations for the acquisition of Husky Oil Limited shares. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister and his office has a personal interest in the negotiations for the acquisition, did they take time out to consider what particular qualifications Mr. Ward C. Pitfield, of Pitfield, Mackay Ross Limited, had for acting as agent in this connection, and did they satisfy themselves with regard to any potential conflict of interest of this investment counselling firm when making the appointment of that firm on behalf of Petro-Can?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the substance of the question, I can only repeat exactly what the minister has just said. In so far as the allegation is concerned that there is a particular link between my office and Petro-Can, of course that is not true.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PARITY OF NATO AND WARSAW PACT FORCES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. There have been reports, of apparent authenticity, which indicate that the U.S.S.R. has proposed to accept parity of forces in Europe which would involve reduction in the Warsaw Pact forces to a greater extent than any NATO reduction. I should like to ask the minister, who is responsible for Canada's participation at the Vienna conference on mutual and balanced force reductions, to confirm or deny this report, if he can.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm it in general terms. There has been a proposal by the Soviet Union with regard to force reductions in the context of the MBFR discussions. It is a welcome initiative and is being regarded by what I would describe as the allies as a genuine offer. It is being examined in detail in that light. Once that examination has been completed, a response will, of course, be made to the Soviet Union and it may be possible for me to say something more about it at that time.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, will the minister, in light of the great importance of force reduction in the vital area of Europe, not only secure this information from his officials in Vienna or people who are connected with this reduction, but also make a statement to the House or, if the House is not sitting, make a public statement indicating what is happening, so that Canada can contribute to the fullest extent in this rather promising development?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to do that. I repeat that I do not know how soon an assessment and a response will be made, nor the channels that will be employed for that; but to the extent it is possible for me to do so, certainly I will make either the House or the public aware of what the developments are. I agree with the hon. member that this particular development is of very great importance.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

"BUY CANADIAN" PROGRAM—LOTO CANADA PARTICIPATION

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Government of Canada has embarked on a $1.7 million program called "Buy Canadian", and in view of the fact that the Canadian government owns 53 per cent of Consolidated Computer Incorporated which wants to bid on the Loto Canada $23 million award on computers, and considering that over 80 per cent could be manufactured in Canada if tenders had gone out to Canadian computer manufacturers, about which the Ontario government has already inquired, would the Prime Minister make an investigation to see whether or not the policy of his government and of Loto Canada cannot fall in line with the $1.7 million program to buy Canadian, rather than buy from this American shell which has been set up in Toronto?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Acting Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport): Mr. Speaker, may I say, on behalf of the minister who is absent today and whom I replace as acting minister, that the minister gave a full answer to that question. But if the hon. member wishes to ask further questions on that subject matter, I will certainly be very happy to bring such questions to the attention of the minister who will be back next week and will answer them.

Oral Questions

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REVIEW OF VETERANS PENSIONS

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Could he give a report on the progress of the review being undertaken by his department with respect to changes in the War Veterans Allowance Act and war disability pensions? In answering that question, could he say whether he intends to bring forward legislation to implement the suggested changes or direct that regulations be changed so that veterans who are presently disqualified and in severe financial straits might be relieved of their financial worries?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, let me say that the review in question has just been undertaken and is in progress. It will be a lengthy review: the act in question is 48 years old and it has been amended many times. But there is more work to be done on it. All this is done in consultation with veterans' organizations across the country. I expect only an interim report this fall.

So far as disability pensions are concerned, there is nothing under review in that respect. It would certainly be premature for me to indicate at this time that legislation will be forthcoming from that review until the studies are completed.

AGRICULTURE

WOOL INCENTIVE PAYMENT PROGRAM—GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture. A short time ago the minister was sent a brief by the Canadian Co-operative Wool Growers Limited expressing concern about the sheep and wool industry in Canada. Has the minister had an opportunity to study this brief and is he prepared to recommend a proposal to cabinet for a wool incentive payment program?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Not at this time, Mr. Speaker, because the economic conditions so far as sheep production is concerned in Canada have been very good in the last ten years. The situation has not encouraged more production. It has been a money-making venture. Less people are going into wool production and more are going out of business, but not because they are not making money on it.

Mr. Neil: I doubt very much that the minister has read the brief. I should like to ask him another question with respect to the GATT negotiations. Can the minister advise the House whether or not the Canadian negotiator has or will be discussing the tariff structures of this industry with a view to parity?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, not only did I read the brief, I met the representatives of the sheep growers association in my office in Ottawa approximately three weeks ago to discuss all the problems which they presented to me. Naturally, I disagreed with them on how great some of their problems are. Concerning GATT negotiations, all I can say is that we have made those representations. In answer to the hon. member's question as to what we will gain from it, that is unknown at this time.

PRICE STABILIZATION PROGRAM FOR POTATOES

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he has reconsidered his decision with regard to the quantity of potatoes to be subsidized under the price stabilization program. Has he had representations with respect to the quantity of potatoes for which each producer may expect a payment, in view of the fact that the initial amount which he stipulated will be paid on a pro rata basis depending on the number of acres planted, rather than the number of acres produced? There are serious complaints from potato producers on that basis.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my officials were in New Brunswick—they also met representatives of the potato industry from P.E.I.—in the area of greatest concern, about which the hon. member is speaking. I have not received a report because some of them are returning to the capital only today from their meeting in New Brunswick.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, in view of the severe difficulties, can the minister advise when he will be able to determine what the final payment will be? Will he take under advisement the idea of changing the regulations which are strangling the amount of the payment to farmers?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we have one of the fairest stabilization programs for farmers in the world. We will be reviewing it. But no matter what I offer, the hon. member will still have some criticism of it.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAVOIE—PROCEDURAL DIFFICULTY IN MOVING CONGRATULATORY MOTION UNDER STANDING ORDER 43

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege because at the beginning of the sitting of the House I moved a motion under Standing Order 43 to enable the House to send a message of congratulations to all the French Canadians who make up one of the two founding groups of the country, a French-speaking and English-speaking community. I think, Mr. Speaker, that all hon. members were surprised to see that you did not put the motion so that hon. members could vote on whether they accept it or not. I understand that later you made a remark about motions under Standing Order 43 concerning congratulations and so on, but I remember, Mr. Speaker, that motions under Standing Order 43 were introduced in the House to congratulate the Canadian hockey club, to wish prompt recovery to some hon. members and for similar reasons. I think particularly that we have come to a turning point in our history where we talk more and more about Canadian unity and by that means—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must correct the hon. member. If he examines the circumstances which in the past surrounded the presentation by an hon. member of such a motion or of a motion of congratulations to a certain group in the country, he will see that they were always moved by an hon. member but never by the Chair. That is the difference. It is impossible to prevent an hon. member who wants to move such a motion under Standing Order 43, but this is something completely different from the Chair putting a motion or asking for unanimous consent. That is simply the difference I explained this morning.

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, unless you consider you rendered a decision, I would like to raise under the same question of privilege as the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Lavoie), if you allow me to do so—

Mr. Speaker: I said that if some members intend to discuss the difficulty of interpretation of Standing Order 43, I invite them to agree between themselves and submit their ideas later next week, but this is certainly something I will consider carefully.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is precisely on Standing Order 43 that I want to make a remark. In the past, and I recognize the procedural argument of the Chair, you have dismissed with good reason motions under Standing Order 43 because they were frivolous like the motion of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) whom we can hear now, because preambles were too long, because motions were politically oriented, or were speeches in themselves, and I recognize that the Chair was right in dismissing those motions. One of the main criteria on which acceptance of a motion under Standing Order 43 must be based is the following: it must be of an urgent nature. That is what Standing Orders indicate. I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that if you have judged today in your discretion that it was not urgent to move a motion under Standing Order 43 to pay tribute to French Canadians on June 23, on the eve of their national holiday, if you have determined that this motion is out of order, I want to take advantage of this opportunity to insist that in future motions moved under Standing Order 43 be rejected much more frequently, because very often not only are they not urgent, but frivolous, politically oriented, have long preambles and serve much more opposition members' political purposes than they emphasize an important and urgent event.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may have a point to make next time a motion which he considers frivolous is presented, but for the time being, we have finished for today with motions under Standing Order 43. Next time, this may be something to discuss, but for the moment the discussion is closed.

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 253, 1,161, 1,318 and 1,604.

BLUE LINE TAXI

Question No. 253—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does Blue Line Taxi have exclusive rights at the (a) Ottawa International Airport (b) Ottawa Railway Station (c) Chateau Laurier Hotel and, if so, in each case (i) over what period of time or times (ii) on what basis was the Company selected?

2. In each case, were tenders called and (a) if so (i) on what date (ii) what are the names and addresses of all those who tendered (b) if not, for what reason?

3. In each case, does Blue Line Taxi pay a fee to the government for the concession and, if so, what is the yearly amount?

4. In each case, what are the names and job designations of the highest ranking persons who made the decision to award the concession to Blue Line Taxi?

5. In each case, will the concession come up for review and, if so (a) on what date (b) will other taxi companies be given consideration and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Transport Canada advises as follows: 1. (a) Yes, Blue Line Taxi Company Limited has a licence with Transport Canada for the exclusive operation of a ground transportation system at the Ottawa International Airport. (b and c) To be answered elsewhere. (i) The licence is on a year to year basis with provisions for cancellation by either party on six months notice. (ii) On September 1, 1952, Red Line Taxis Limited was granted a licence to operate a ground transportation system at the Ottawa International Airport. The licence was on a year to year basis with provisions for cancellation on six months notice. On October 20, 1970, Blue Line Taxi Company Limited purchased the outstanding shares of Red Line Taxis Limited and in so doing, they acquired all the interests of the company including the licence with Transport Canada.

2. Tenders were not called because Red Line Taxis Limited was considered to be the only company at the time capable of providing the required level of ground transportation service. Red Line Taxis Limited was purchased and incorporated under the name of Blue Line Taxi Company Limited on October 20, 1970.

3. Blue Line Taxi Company Limited pay Transport Canada 5 per cent of gross revenues derived from the bus service and 15 cents for each taxicab carrying passengers from the airport. The amount of gross revenue paid by Blue Line Taxi Company Limited to the Crown is considered confidential to the parties involved during the term of the agreement.

4. The official responsible for the initial issuance of the licence was the regional director, air services, Toronto.

5. (a) The operation of the ground transportation system at Ottawa International Airport is reviewed periodically to ensure that the required level of service is being provided. There are presently no plans to call tenders. (b) At such time a tender is called, it will be unrestricted public tender call affording all ground transportation companies the opportunity to bid.

The management of the Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. (a) To be answered elsewhere. (b and c) Yes, with respect to the provision of taxicab service and in so far as that privilege may be lawfully given; (i) for five years from October 1, 1974; (ii) tenders.

2. (a)(i) Yes, September 13, 1974. (ii) It is not the practice of Canadian National to disclose the names of persons or firms submitting tenders for the supply of services. (b) Not applicable.

3. It is not the practice of Canadian National to disclose financial details of commercial transactions between itself and persons or firms providing services.

4. The decision was taken by responsible officers of the company duly authorized to take such decisions.

5. (a) At the termination of the agreement. (b) Yes.

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: (a) $1,962,-582.81 (b) $4,497,489.54 (c) $3,088,064.97 (d) $1,581,792.59 (e) $614,384.01 (f) $3,583,314.99

GRAIN RESERVES

Question No. 1,318—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Does the government intend to take action in regard to assisting with the costs of storing and stock-piling grain and other food in regard to the establishment of an internationally coordinated system of nationally held cereal stocks adequate to provide food security and to make the grain market more stable in the future, as agreed on by the participants at the two-day meeting of agricultural ministers from the 24 member countries of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development in Paris last week and, if so, what is the action?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The Canadian government is prepared to play a positive role in the establishment of grain reserves. Grain reserves are an important element in ongoing discussions aimed at developing a new international wheat agreement. The Canadian government has supported the principle of a world grain reserve to help overcome the problem of world food security. Support for its establishment is contingent on development of suitable arrangements for implementation including the sharing of obligations in carrying any reserve and assurances that the reserve will not interfere with commercial markets. Action which could be taken by governments to assist with the costs of storing and stockpiling grain would depend on the final form of any new agreement. The government is prepared to examine ways in which assistance might be provided when negotiations are at a more advanced stage.

B.C. FISHING FLEET

Question No. 1,604—Mr. Clarke

1. Is the government at present involved in reissuing licences to those vessels in the British Columbia fishing fleet, which for economic reasons were previously taken out of fisheries by the government and, if so (a) what was the original intention of the government in participating in the buy-back scheme (b) on what grounds are the vessels now being reissued licences (c) how many of the vessels with reissued licences have been resold to date and what was the resale price in each case?

2. At the time of the buy-back scheme, how many vessels were purchased by the government and at what cost?

3. Did the government later sell the boats at a public auction and, if so, what was the amount received?

4. What was the number of registered fishermen in British Columbia at the time that the buy-back scheme was inaugurated?

5. What is the present number of registered fishermen in British Columbia?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): 1. No the government is not so involved, however, a total of seven licences were inadvertently reissued; all were subsequently recovered, and five of which were reinstated by the minister's decision based on their appeals.

2. Three hundred fifty-four vessels. Cost, $5,848,000.

3. Total revenue from sales, $2,647,000.

4. Number of registered fishermen in 1969 (based on number personal licences issued) was 10,870.

5. In 1977 there were 10,668 personal licences issued in British Columbia.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 426 and 479 could be made orders for returns, these returns would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall questions Nos. 426 and 479 be deemed to have been made orders for returns?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

LAWYERS IN ALBERTA

Question No. 426—Mr. Elzinga:

What are the names of all lawyers in Alberta used by the government or any Crown corporation?

Return tabled.

CMHC—NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 479—Mr. Crosbie:

What law firms or individual lawyers (a) in St. John's (b) in Corner Brook (c) elsewhere in the province of Newfoundland drew up CMHC mortgages in (i) insured (ii) uninsured loans in 1974, 1975, 1976, 1977 to date and, in each case, what were the number of loans and what was the total amount of mortgage loans in each year?

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE RESPECTING LANGUAGE USED IN COURT TRIALS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-42, to amend the Criminal Code as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacEachen (for the Minister of Justice) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, to facilitate the discussion on Bill C-42 by the House today, it might be useful if I briefly restate the major thrust of the legislation.

In essence, Bill C-42 attempts to set minimum standards of official language rights for accused persons in criminal proceedings everywhere in Canada. This is done by providing such persons with the right to testify in their defence in their own official language before a judge or a judge and jury who speak and understand that official language.

I am pleased to say that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs supported the concept of the bill in a manner which was most encouraging. Members obviously devoted a great deal of thought and effort to their comments and deliberations on the legislation, since it addresses an issue which is a cornerstone of Canadian federation. Particularly I want to convey the minister's deep appreciation to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) for his most useful contributions to the discussions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Young: Several amendments were worked out at committee stage which I feel maintain the essential spirit of the bill, while taking full cognizance of the fact that it must be administered by the provinces and implemented in the final analysis through judicial decisions of the courts. Also I wish to pay tribute to the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) for their contributions, encouragement, and the leading roles they took in ensuring a full and thoughtful presentation of this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Young: Of key importance are the amendments made with respect to proclamation of the provisions in each province. The committee was extremely concerned to ensure that the fullest possible consultation takes place with the provinces, and that every care is taken so that the provinces are in a position to implement the legislation in an effective manner. Thus, the original provision permitting separate proclamation of the legislation with regard to indictable and to summary offences remains. We have added to this a provision spelled out in the legislation which provides that consultation between the federal and provincial governments must take place in order to ensure orderly implementation before proclamation can take place.

Should the federal Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and a provincial attorney general be unable to come to an agreement on an appropriate date for implementation, after due consultation has taken place, and after the Minister of Justice has satisfied himself that implementation would be feasible in that province, the legislation would give the province an additional two years to establish appropriate facilities, and then proclamation would take place.

I might just add that as a result of discussions at the officials' level we are confident that Ontario would agree to implementation of these provisions within approximately one year after royal assent. As regards Quebec and New Brunswick, it is expected that the time frame for implementation would be in the area of four to six months.

We have agreed in our discussions with the provinces to give every possible assistance in facilitating implementation. The bill permits a change of venue where it is impossible to hold a trial with a minority language judge or jury in a given territorial district. Although the committee explored the possibility of transferring a trial out of province, it was generally agreed that the fundamental principle of common law should be upheld, which requires that an accused be tried as close as possible to the place where a crime was committed so the community offended may see justice done.

The legislation allows for the ordering of a bilingual trial where circumstances warrant it. Thus, in a case where a defendant wishes to be heard in his minority official language, but many of the witnesses speak only the other language, the judge may order that jurors be empanelled who are able to speak both official languages. This respects the rights of the accused and at the same time facilitates the conducting of the proceedings.

Also, it is a general fact that the bilingual population of any province is larger than the unilingual minority official language population and it is, therefore, relatively easy to constitute a bilingual jury.

The standing committee which, as we know, includes some very talented lawyers, as well as hard working lay persons, expressed concern that the provision which requires a judge to inform accused persons in criminal proceedings of their right to testify in their official language might cause delays and add an undue strain to the already overburdened court system. We have, therefore, amended the legislation to provide that where the accused is represented by counsel, counsel may, if necessary, request such a trial. Only where there is no counsel would the law oblige the judge to advise the accused of his or her right to be tried in his or her minority official language.

In closing, I just want to say that I feel the discussions which took place and the agreements which were reached in the standing committee hearings were extremely useful, both in terms of clarifying the intent of the legislation and in improving its effectiveness. Again, let me thank the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for its hard work, and express the hope that this House will deal equally expeditiously with this very important piece of legislation today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Criminal Code

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to Bill C-42 today I would first like to endorse the words of the parliamentary secretary, that we did carry out a very thorough, careful, and thoughtful study in-depth at the committee stage of this bill, and came up with some pretty good answers.

In order that the House will understand the position we first took on this side, and in order that it will not ever be misunderstood at any time by anyone anywhere, let me state that when the bill was first presented to this House it said that the legislation would be deemed to have become law on proclamation of the federal government.

The second important thing it said, leading to the position we took, was that every accused person should be informed by the judge before whom he was being tried that he or she had the right to be tried in the French or English language.

During my speech at the second reading stage I took the position, on behalf of my party, that the bill required two amendments. I suggested that either there must be enabling legislation brought in by the provinces in order that there might be a joint proclamation, or the bill could be brought into effect by proclamation of the federal government after legal, and I would emphasize that word "legal", consent by the province, whether it be British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Ontario, or even Quebec. That was our position at second reading.

At that time I made a short speech and proposed those two amendments. I do not think I am breaking any confidence with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) when I say that we had several meetings during which he expressed the feeling that the amendments I suggested had merit. He saw some difficulty in the words "consent" and "joint proclamation". As a result, there was a compromise. After all, the art of politics is the art of making the impossible possible.

I did go along with the suggestion, on behalf of my party, that the federal government could proclaim the bill, but before doing so it must have consultation with the provinces, and not something wishy washy by the Minister of Justice. I make nothing more of that than to say that the minister will not soon be the Minister of Justice.

I have heard here in parliament, as have other hon. members, ministers giving their word, only to see the opposite happen. I remember the Hon. Judy LaMarsh once saying that social security numbers would never be used by members of parliament. Before the ink used to write that statement was dry that practice became part of what we were obliged to do in the House. I have always taken the view that the greatest protection human beings have is the protection of the law.

I told the Minister of Justice I would accept that suggestion on one ground, namely, that consultation had to be consultation by law, and that consultation had to take place before the bill could be proclaimed in Alberta, British Columbia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island or any other province. In other words, the federal government had to consult in a serious and meaningful manner with provincial governments, that consultations had to take place by law, and until that process had been completed the bill could not be proclaimed in any province.

The reason for this is very simple. In some provinces there are areas with very few French-speaking people. There would not be a sufficient number to make up a jury or to provide the necessary court reporters and registrars. In fact the minister admitted that in at least one province, even considering all the judges in that province, he could not find one that was bilingual. We must have a practical approach.

The first amendment I proposed, and which has now been put forward by the parliamentary secretary, is that consultation must be by law, and not just at the convenience of the Minister of Justice or his officials.

The second amendment was with regard to the date of implementation. Some of my French Canadian colleagues took great exception to this and wanted to stipulate a time limit of two years. However, they themselves were voted down by their own members. I can appreciate their position and that they do not want to wait forever, because Christmas must come some day. I was not in any way unfair, nor was I inflexible in any way, but I pointed out that we should leave it open because any government, whoever the minister of justice may be, is responsible to the people, to his cabinet and, above all, to his leader.

If the Minister of Justice fails to fulfil the responsibility he has to Canadian law, then public opinion would soon take a course whereby he or she would have to change their ways. According to this section amendment the government could move a proclamation exclusive of the time of negotiation, even if it takes three years. I am thinking now of Prince Edward Island where it would have taken three or four years just to get them to phase in this bill once the federal government decided to proclaim it, exclusive of the time of consultation. Under the amendment, it would be two years before it would become law. This seemed to be a very fair approach and is almost the proposal I put forth on second reading.

There is a third catch which the Minister of Justice and I discussed, and I just wish that he were here. I am not breaking confidence with him, because it is a question of law. It dealt with the qualification of a jury, which would be a matter for the provinces to decide. For example, if I was holding a trial in Calgary and the sheriff brought together 60 German-speaking people—and considering our whip, I had better put some Poles in there—and some Poles and some others who could not speak English—I am not suggesting that our whip cannot speak English—the defence attorney would challenge the whole panel on a motion to the judge and say that those people were not qualified because they could not speak English and therefore were unable to comprehend what they would hear in evidence. Thus, the question of qualification is very important, and I wanted to review it thoroughly so there would be no misunderstanding.

It would have been very easy for me or for anyone from western Canada to vote against a bill of this nature, and maybe as politicians we would get some votes. That, however, is not what I came to parliament for 20 years ago, to show how many votes I could get from people who for some reason have prejudices and who may be bigots in Quebec or bigots in western Canada. I came to parliament to try to create laws that would work for Canadian people and keep this country together in a unified way to enable Canada to survive as a great nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I would take great exception to anyone who says, "I stood alone". There is a time to stand alone and there is a time to go to work. If the man who says he stood alone was so worked up about the situation and so sincere with regard to what was going to happen, why did he not do something? I understand the problems, and I have read some of the speeches the hon. member has made, and some of the points he has made are correct. Why did he not come to committee? It is true that he is an independent now, but he could have called me up and I would have said, "Look, we cannot put you on the committee but I'll speak to the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), the chairman of the committee, and I will suggest that you move a motion and we will move it with you."

If he had ideas on this bill and they were reasonable, I am sure we would have backed him and invited him to come to committee and interrogate the witnesses and work with the people. That, to me, is what a member of parliament is here for, not just to stand alone, to build a field of politics for political votes and vote buying at the polls.

Having dealt with those two amendments, I would like now to deal with the third. The idea I think was in the draft, and I do not think that the government did anything it thought would work against the functions of the courts. It was in the draft that says that every judge would have to read, "You have a right to be tried in French or English". We have thousands of people living in our cities for whom this would be totally unnecessary.

When I see how hard in my lifetime the magistrates, who are now called provincial judges, work, they have no time to be reading out a lot of rhetoric which means nothing. They work far harder than county or appellate court judges. Some of those men sit on 50 trials a day and have to make 50 decisions which in some cases call for lengthy sentences. So, I suggested to my Liberal friends and to the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), who went along with me, that we make an amendment to the effect the judge would have to read it out only if the person was not represented by counsel. This seemed fair, because in this day of legal aid there are few people who are not represented by counsel. It even goes further to say, "if he has not been represented by counsel on that charge".

We were able to streamline a bill and put it into effect, that, if it had gone through in its original form, might not have been done fairly or for the right purpose. It may have been done because some people do not understand the regional make-up of the provinces and the difficulty a person faces when he or she is bilingual on 8th Avenue in Calgary, and not considering that it is easier to be bilingual on St. James Street in Montreal. I say that to you fairly. I am sure that if I had been raised in Montreal I would have been pushed around at the old baseball game in French and known what it meant. In Calgary I was pushed around with some obscenities, but mostly in English. I am saying that that is what the spirit of the bill is about.

I have one thought that I would like to leave with hon. members. It refers to two decisions which have to be made by the Supreme Court of Canada, and they bother me somewhat. I will always remember an incident which occurred to me as a second-year law student, and which exemplifies exactly what I am about to say. We had Dean Cronkite from New Brunswick. He was a fine dean with a tremendous sense of decency and a sense of the social life of man, and particularly a sense of Canada. He knew the difficulties because he came from New Brunswick. A student said to him, "Mr. Cronkite, I am in trouble. I have found two cases, with the same facts, and the decisions are different." The dean said, "I want you to go to your desk immediately and make a note of that, because if it ever happens again I will have to do something with this library."

That is what I say to the Supreme Court of Canada now. In a case which I have mentioned before, the question was whether Quebec could have an investigation in that province. I never understood why the federal government challenged Quebec on that. I suppose there was some jealousy about guarding their jurisdiction. Sometimes you have to be jealous about guarding jurisdiction when it comes to things like this becase a province never knows when the federal government is going into the provincial house to change things around.

There are two sections of the BNA Act which are relevant. Under powers delegated by the BNA Act, criminal law falls directly under the federal government. The penalty for murder in Quebec is the same as it is in Vancouver; it is the same for rape and for robbery; the criminal law is the same. In that, I think the Fathers of Confederation had great foresight. They saw farther than the founders of the United States where there are different criminal laws in each state and there has to be extradition from one state to another. We do not have that problem. It was spelled out very carefully that the administration of justice within the province, including the constitution, the maintenance and organization of provincial courts both civil and criminal, and including procedure in civil matters in those courts, falls directly under the jurisdiction of the provinces. That is why they ruled that Quebec could even have witnesses come from other areas.

I should like to quote now from Canada Supreme Court Reports, Part 1, 1978, Vol. 1, page 156, where the Chief Justice said:

Although it is recognized that s.92(14) of the BNA Act gives the provinces a source of authority that enables them to blend with exercises of federal power when the latter is used to invest provincially-established courts with jurisdiction in matters within exclusive federal competence, federal overriding authority is always in reserve. Thus, although the Parliament of Canada has designated the provincial courts to administer criminal law, they have to do so according to procedures which under s. 91(27) of the BNA Act, are within exclusive federal competence.

There is one exception—the administration of justice.

Then there is the famous Jones case which went to the Supreme Court of Canada. The question was whether language is a matter of criminal law or a matter of the administration of justice. I say it is a very fine point.

We often hear media commentators say something to the effect that they are now going to introduce Senator "X", a great expert in constitutional law. The only experts that I ever knew in constitutional law sit in the Supreme Court of Canada. They can weigh and interpet the law to suit the social-political situation as it exists. All courts have done that. Maybe it is one of the things that has to be done. We have only to look at the tremendous decisions made in the United States in the last ten years to see how very political they are.

In many cases jurisdictions overlap, and I have dealt with this before. For instance, there is a federal Minister of Agriculture who has certain duties and a provincial minister of agriculture who has certain duties, and the duties overlap. The administration of justice overlaps, and trade and commerce overlaps—trade within a province is a provincial right, and trade outside a province is a federal right, and there is often a conflict. I should like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the case of Nicola Di Iorio and Gérard Fontaine, appellants; and The Warden of the Common Jail of the City of Montreal, respondent; and Rhéal Brunet, et al. Mis en cause; and The Attorney General for Canada, The Attorney General for Quebec, The Attorney General for Ontario, The Attorney General for Alberta, The Attorney General for British Columbia and The Attorney General for New Brunswick, intervenors, which is reported at page 152 of Canada Supreme Court Reports, Part 1, 1978, Vol. 1. There seems to be a conflict between what Justice Martland said in this case and what other judges said in the Jones case.

I want to say here, Mr. Speaker, that I am glad the government made the amendments to this bill. I do not know where we would stand today if it had not. It was a pretty brash kind of thing if you said you were going to take it like the cod liver oil treatment, but at least members of the government were flexible and they gave in. They knew that if they were to get a bill through that would work in Canada, there had to be some sort of flexibility. Once again I congratulate them.

I want to come back to my earlier point. The hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) is a great friend of mine. I never thought I would read a speech of his and find fault with it. I thought I taught him well when he was a student, but it seems I have strayed in my ways. Let me give a little bit of history, Mr. Speaker. In 1968 it was suggested that I should run in the new Calgary North constituency, the university area, and that somebody else should run in Bow River. My friend got the riding of Bow River. He inherited Bow River with every poll that was won for the Tory party, so he started off pretty well.

Mr. Rodriguez: The silver spoon.

Mr. Woolliams: I would have said golden.

When the hon. member for Palliser spoke in the debate on Bill C-42 on May 4 this year he said, as reported at page 5153 of Hansard:

—from the official opposition because the spokesman for that party said he wished to see the bill amended in such a way that the provision would not be imposed in any province without some sort of positive action being taken on the part of that province.

The experience we have had with amendments is another matter which bears consideration.

He had better attend a committee and find out if that is correct. He continued:

I, for one, do not feel the hon. member's suggestion will receive very real consideration from the Minister of Justice because the Conservatives have 'cried wolf' before in this regard.

He implied that we had cried wolf and lost. I know that I have moved amendments that probably should have been passed. I have moved amendments that I know I probably should have won. I moved amendment on the gun control bill, and Bill C-83 died because of our amendments. The government brought in a new bill and it went through. Then the hon. member for Palliser goes on to say as recorded in Hansard at page 5154:

My understanding was that we did not have to worry about that and that the minister would see what the situation was. Perhaps he is correct in saying that he should be able to rely on the attorney general for Alberta. I have a different opinion, and if I were the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) I would not want to support the proclamation of this particular bill if I had to rely on the attorney general of the province of Alberta, because sometimes I think he is completely out of touch with what he is doing.

Then he goes on to challenge him that he had broken his promise for which the Minister of Justice took him to task.

I will say this once again about voting. Once or twice in my lifetime I have voted against my party. I remember once, and Stanley will like this,—I never knew whether Mr. Stanfield did, and excuse me for calling you by name—but it was a question concerning the minimum wage. I forget the amount involved. I know at that time we were trying to cut back, but it seemed to me it was pretty small potatoes, that we had to raise the minimum wage, and I voted to increase it. Looking back, I might have been wrong.

The point I want to make, and which I want to re-emphasize is that it is easy now for a member to go to western Canada, especially if he has written all these letters and said in them, "Do you want a French trial in Acme?"—or somewhere else,—the answer will be no. If I wrote to Quebec and in my letter asked, "Do you want to have an English trial in Quebec?" Naturally it will be interpreted that there will be no French at all, we will have English. But if the polls report 88 per cent, his polls are the greatest polls. If we had a Gallup poll like that and they came in for the Tory party that they were right and justified, I am sorry for what would happen to the Liberals; they would look worse than they did in 1958.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I will be extremely brief. No doubt the parliamentary secretary will be pleased to hear that.

However, I would like to open by saying how pleased we all are in this House to have with us once again the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and to hear him in such excellent form as he has displayed this morning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: I wanted to speak on third reading because I had hoped to speak on second reading, but I was indisposed at the time and was unable to be present in the House. I do want to take the opportunity on this third reading debate to express my wholehearted approval of Bill C-42 with the amendments in it which have been introduced by the committee. It seems to me to represent what has been long overdue, a measure of recognition of justice toward minority groups.

As some of you may know I have had something to do with the courts of law. There is nothing much more pathetic than a person who is in the unfamiliar circumstances of being charged and tried on a criminal offence. Such a person is deemed to be innocent, of course. But there he is in unfamiliar surroundings. Add to that the difficulty that the matter may be entirely conducted in a language which he does not comprehend. Denying him the right of the use of one of the official languages in that trial, in my judgment is a serious interference not only with the rights of minority groups but a serious interference with a person's individual right.

I think this act does justice to both of those things. It is 110 years or more since Confederation and it is high time that we established beyond doubt this right of a person, no matter to which official language group he may belong, should that person be in court tried or charged with a criminal offence he should be able to have part of those proceedings at least in a language that he can comprehend. Therefore I welcome this bill.

I understand why it is necessary that the bill should not come into effect without a proclamation which involves the approval of the province in which the bill is to be administered. Normally speaking I am not sure that I would be in favour of that, but in this particular case it is necessary. As the hon. member for Calgary North has pointed out so clearly, the administration of justice is a provincial right even though criminal law is a federal subject matter. However, may I be permitted to say that I hope the various provinces of Canada will give hasty consideration to agreeing to a proclamation so that throughout all of Canada people will have this right to a criminal trial, partly at least, in the language of the person charged.

Most of the members of this House know by now that I have indicated my intention not to be a candidate again. Therefore I will not be able to address this House too often in the future. I believe, as I think all members do, most sincerely and wholeheartedly in Canada and our federation. I want to add to that statement of conviction that part of my feelings on the matter is based on my experience of 16 years in this House, which is not very long compared to some hon. members, but it is still a fair chunk out of one's life. My experience during that time has been one of warm, close, and friendly association with people whose original language is different from my own.

I have had the experience of travelling across Canada with hon. members. As well, I have recently been on a trip to South America with the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos), and a trip across Canada with the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier). I have had the closest co-operation with various people on the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, including the present chairman, the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). I am sure other members can give similar examples. With that co-operation, working across party lines and working for the constructive benefit of Canada, we can maintain, improve, and expand the welfare of Canada and the strength of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take part briefly in this debate on Bill C-42. Since Fridays seem to be great days for understanding in the House, and this one being no exception, we are looking forward to such an experience. I listened with much attention to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) who made a fine speech, evoked heart warming memories which are likely to bring us all close together, create a better atmosphere and better feelings between Canadians from various provinces.

Mr. Speaker, during the debate on second reading, I indicated how pleased I was finally to see a bill being introduced to make sure that Canadians living in other provinces would be tried in their own language. I am aware of the fact that this bill may prove difficult to apply at first, but with consultations and good will, this bill may certainly become a fact of life. Of course, there will have to be consultations, but with the communication such as those we have today, I think we have much more chance than, say 40 or 50 years ago, of reaching our goal more quickly.

Because of this, Mr. Speaker, it is a fact, as I indicated early in my remarks, that I fully supported Bill C-42 and that I shall continue to do so. I am sure that if my colleagues were called upon to speak today, their comments would be in a similar vein. Therefore, if there is a vote, I shall certainly support this bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree to call it one o'clock?

The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) on a point of order.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that we could go on to other things, but I have a suggestion to make. Since consideration of Bill C-42 went very quickly and since tomorrow, June 24, is the national holiday of French Canadians, and to enable hon. members who live far away to get to the celebrations tomorrow somewhat refreshed after having rested a bit, I suggest that the House adjourn now until Monday afternoon at two o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The intention of the hon. member is very valid. He has moved a motion in good faith which is certainly appreciated by everyone, but this motion is not quite regular. First of all, there is no one to second it. Perhaps hon. members can think about this during the lunch break because the motion of the hon. member is related to certain conditions. He made a few comments, but he could have simply suggested the adjournment of the debate, and then, the House could have met in an hour and hon. members could have been called in for a vote. I believe this would meet the same objective. There could be consultation during the lunch break.

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): I am prepared to second the motion of the hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe that when we come back at two o'clock for the report stage of the bill on the Export Development Corporation, we could consider the possibility of disposing very quickly of that bill, and if we can do so, we could leave much earlier than usual this afternoon. I would personally favour this procedure.

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, indeed I believe it would be acceptable to us if we were to consult the House leaders and use the next hour to discuss the possibility of acceding to the wishes of the spokesman for the Social Credit Party of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In view of all this show of good will, I am sure that hon. members will allow me to leave the chair and call it one o'clock. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SAINT-JEAN-BAPTISTE DAY

Mr. Pinard: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the business of the House today, June 23.

Although Standing Order 2(3) of the House provides that the House shall not sit on New Year's Day, Good Friday, and so on, and Saint-Jean-Baptiste day is also in there, although that part of Standing Order 2 does not specify the day on which Saint-Jean-Baptiste day is to be celebrated but rather Saint-Jean-Baptiste day itself, which is tomorrow, June 24, and I know that our hon. colleague from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) participated in the drafting of that order and the interpretation that must be given is that indeed the House is not required to sit only on Saint-Jean-Baptiste day, and not the day before that, in spite of that standing order, Mr. Speaker, in the present circumstance I suggest that we in Canada urgently need to change our attitudes and take every available opportunity to show that we have that great state of mind that is required to promote a true coexistence of our two major French-speaking and English-speaking communities in an atmosphere of mutual generosity and full equality. I believe that to underscore the anniversary of all French Canadians by giving unanimous consent to adjourn the House at this time of the day would really be showing a favourable attitude toward that true coexistence that is desirable in Canada.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps a happy coincidence that this morning all parties co-operated to give third reading to a bill to allow Canadians to be tried in their language all across Canada. On the eve of the anniversary of French Canadians I think it is a fortunate coincidence and I think the event should be celebrated by allowing all members present here this afternoon at two o'clock to give their unanimous consent to adjourn the House until next Monday and pay tribute in this way to all French Canadians. So I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to adjourn until next Monday, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great care and, indeed, with great sympathy to the words of the parliamentary secretary. Although the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and I have some doubts as to the interpretation of the standing order, one which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre participated in drafting, I want to say I have no doubt at all that the hon. member did not participate in the drafting of the British North America Act.

An hon. Member: Prove it!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): However, I think the suggestion is an appropriate one and therefore, on behalf of my party, I can see that we consent.

The matter was originally raised by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) in another way, but there have now been consultations with respect to it and I think the course suggested is quite appropiate. It may be we should take a look at the standing order if there is any reasonable doubt about it so that no misunderstanding could arise in future. Not only because of the interpretation the hon. member has placed upon it but from strong personal feelings I think it is important that in this place particularly we should recognize events which are of major interest to all people in Canada, and one of those occasions is, of course, the feast day of Saint-Jean-Baptiste.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) for making it clear I did not participate in drafting the British North America Act. I can tell him that in 1949 I did move certain amendments to section 91(1) which were accepted, so some of my language is in the British North America Act.

Mr. Lefebvre: How about Magna Carta?

An hon. Member: How about the Ten Commandments?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It sounds to me as though it is time for us to adjourn. I am glad the parliamentary secretary did not try to found the proposal to adjourn this afternoon on the wording of the standing order because I happen to think it is quite clear what is meant under that standing order. In any case, I think it is better we should decide to take the afternoon off by unanimous consent rather than under the terms of a standing order. Therefore, on behalf of my party I am in favour of this House adjourning now in recognition of the feast day of Saint-Jean-Baptiste.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Co-operating with the goodwill of hon. members, I am pleased to recognize the unanimous consent for adjournment. However, it has been suggested to me that, from the point of view of procedure, it would be advisable to present a motion for adjournment of the House until Monday.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), I move that this House adjourn until 2 p.m. Monday next.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This House therefore stands adjourned until 2 p.m. next Monday.

The House adjourned at 2:13 p.m.

WILDLIFE

HUMANE TRAPPING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion is urgent and pressing because of the decisions likely to be taken today and tomorrow in Quebec city at the federal-provincial wildlife conference affecting the federal-provincial committee on humane trapping whose mandate could end next year, and also because of the unanimous report on humane trapping tabled in this House on Monday, April 24. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen):

The conference in Quebec be informed of the view of this House to the effect that research and field testing of humane trapping devices be continued and be co-ordinated by the federal-provincial committee on humane trapping for at least a further two years beyond its present mandate in an effort to develop humane trapping methods and a code of humane trapping ethics, and that provincial governments and the industry be urged to collaborate with this committee in this worthy endeavour.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity arising out of the news that the federal government has become involved in a bidding war to attract auto plant investment to Canada, and specifically arising from the news that as a result of his failure to convince Ford Motor Company of Canada Limited to live up to its obligations under the auto pact, in spite of having profits in Canada during the 1971-75 period which were more than double their profits elsewhere in the world, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has offered Ford Motor Company a subsidy of $37.5 million to locate a new engine plant in Canada.

In light of the fact that the auto pact between Canada and the United States obligates the auto makers to allocate investment in our country in order to ensure that we get our fair share of growth in this industry, and considering that this obligation commits the auto makers in principle to invest several hundred million dollars a year in Canada for the foreseeable future, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House condemns the government's failure to force the auto makers to meet their investment obligations under the auto pact and that, moreover, it condemns the government's attempt to cover up this failure by offering taxpayers' money as subsidies to entice them to do what they ought to have done without subsidy.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ANNIVERSARIES

CELEBRATION OF ST. JOHN'S DAY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that Saturday, June 24, marked the four hundred and eighty-first year since the discovery of Newfoundland by John Cabot on June 24, 1497, and that the discovery is celebrated as St. John's Day and is marked by a public holiday in St. John's, Newfoundland, today, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House join all Newfoundlanders in celebrating St. John's Day and the anniversary of the discovery of their native isle 481 years ago, after the Vikings but before the Canadians, and looks forward to a happy and enduring union for at least another 481 years.

"BUY CANADIAN" POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the Ontario Lottery Corporation and Loto Quebec have asked for proposals from electronic terminal and computing firms, which manufacture here in Canada, as of early June, 1978, and subsequently have had public bidders' conferences to give representatives of these firms more specific information, these conferences attracting some 125 representatives in Toronto and 95 in Montreal, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House condemns Loto Canada for sole-sourcing its lottery gaming contract to an American firm which will result in less Canadian content than other Canadian manufacturers could have guaranteed, thus ignoring the federal government's announced "Buy Canadian" policy and in effect exporting what would otherwise be Canadian jobs to the United States, and that this House instructs the Crown corporation, Loto Canada, to withdraw from any agreement with General Instrument of Canada Ltd. and to seek applications from the Canadian industry through public tenders for the large, $23 million contract.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRANSPORT

CAR RENTALS AT AIRPORTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of difficulties and law suits involving the Minister of Transport and his department because of policies, rules and regulations respecting car rental concessions and counter space at nine major Canadian airports, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That the minister make a statement on motions this week dealing with some of the following points: complaints on file from major car rental companies that Host Rent-A-Car has not met the strict requirements of articles 4 and 5 of its agreement with the Crown re non-payment of fees and guarantees; what if any action he has taken pursuant to article 27 respecting default of the agreement between Host and the Crown relating to the non-payment of fees and guarantees; whether interest on such moneys is being claimed pursuant to article 6 of the agreement; and, finally, in view of the substantial problems recently encountered, whether the minister intends to change tendering procedures which up to now have encouraged unrealistic projections.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

POSITION TAKEN BY EX-CHAIRMAN OF NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It relates to the former chairman of the National Energy Board, Mr. Crowe, who was in that position until December 31 last and has now accepted a position on the board of directors of Sulpetro of Canada Limited which currently has an application for gas exports before the National Energy Board. I have in mind the letter sent by the Prime Minister to senior office holders on October 18, 1976, which states:

A former office holder must not, within the relevant time period accept appointments to the board of directors of a commercial corporation which was, as a matter of course, in a special relationship with the department or agency with which he was last employed, where "special relationship" means regulation of the corporation by the department or agency.

I ask the Prime Minister whether it is his view that Mr. Crowe was in violation of these guidelines in accepting that specific directorship.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without wishing to comment on this particular case, I remind the hon. member that the guidelines we issued did not apply to judicial or quasi-judicial officers. We published guidelines concerning ministers and members of parliament which were then studied by a committee of the House. We also published guidelines concerning former civil servants. Although we did look at the matter of holders of judicial or quasi-judicial offices, it was our feeling at the time that we should not publish guidelines in that area, certainly not without further discussions with the courts. I think the House will understand that the government was somewhat reluctant to go from the executive or legislative branches into the judicial branch. That is why we have not published guidelines.

I am not commenting on the particular case. It may or may not be a conflict of interest situation. But I can tell the House that on the basis of the public guidelines, there were none for holders of quasi-judicial offices.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, without entering into a debate with the Prime Minister on the nat. .e of that specific office, may I ask him whether the advisory committee would have advised this specific former chairman, Mr. Crowe, as to the applicability of the guidelines to his particular case when he left the National Energy Board last December 31?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the advisory board applied to those who are covered by the guidelines, not other persons. I repeat, it is a delicate matter for the government to publish guidelines to holders of judicial or quasi-judicial offices. I think that particularly the parties on the other side of the House which were critical of the government when it took action which might be interpreted as intervening in the judicial process would understand that reluctance.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister still has not said, in relation to this specific case, whether he regards it as being exempt from the guidelines. I ask him this specific question: To his knowledge, was the superior—in this case, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—consulted pursuant to the guidelines which provide specifically for disclosure to a superior when one has received or intends to accept an offer in the private sector which may be offensive to the guidelines? Does the Prime Minister know whether the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was consulted by Mr. Crowe pursuant to those provisions and, if so, what advice was given to Mr. Crowe by the minister?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, after two answers I am afraid the hon. member still has not understood. There are no guidelines concerning holders or former holders of judicial or quasi-judicial offices. The National Energy Board is a quasi-judicial office. If the House in some way wants the government to publish guidelines in that area, we will consider the matter.

LEGISLATION COVERING PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps ironic that today, when the government House leader is scheduled to introduce conflict of interest legislation for members of parliament, we should discover how weak the guidelines are for public servants. I ask the government House leader whether it is the intention of the government to bring to parliament comprehensive and explicit conflict of interest legislation which will apply to public servants who will be leaving office and seeking outside employment.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the House knows, there is on the order paper notice of a bill called the independence of parliament act which will establish rules and regulations for members of parliament and members of the Senate. It is not the intention, nor does the bill cover, quasi-judicial offices. But if it is the wish of the House that we move in that direction, of course it will be a matter that we would want to consider, as the Prime Minister has suggested.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, the amended guidelines which involve, among other things, public appointees who are appointed by the governor in council, contain the following statement:

> The policy will apply to all persons appointed to new positions within the government and its agencies who will be expected to conform to it as a matter of honour and of personal choice.

Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation before parliament or to take some action with these guidelines to ensure that sanctions are put in place so that people who decide to violate the guidelines out of choice can have sanctions applied against them?

Mr. MacEachen: There is no intention to bring in legislation to that effect, Mr. Speaker.

APPOINTMENTS ACCEPTED BY EX-CHAIRMAN OF NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister on the same subject matter. Is he aware that Mr. Crowe, in addition to his new position on the board of Sulpetro of Canada Ltd., was also appointed just last month director of Energy Ventures Company Limited, of the United States, which, together with Alberta Gas Trunk Line Company has purchased 4 per cent of Husky Oil shares and, furthermore, that Energy Ventures is controlled by Northwest Pipeline Limited, the U.S. partner of Foothills, in the building of the Alcan pipeline?

I submit to the Prime Minister that this is factual information, and I ask whether he is aware of it and, more specifically, considering that the National Energy Board must give its final approval on major details pertaining to the construction of the pipeline, involving the expenditure of millions of dollars, does he not think that in the spirit of the guidelines he should recommend to Mr. Crowe that he not accept these positions?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question, yes, I have been so informed in the last few minutes. With regard to the second part of the question about my informing Mr. Crowe, I will put the question back to the whole House. Do hon. members want the government to communicate with judges, former judges, quasi-judges, or not? Until now, because of the delicacy of the administration, the government commanding judges or quasi-judges to perform in any particular way, we have not covered them with new guidelines. Whether or not we should do so is a matter for debate in the House. We are very anxious to hear whether members of the opposition think that henceforth, before appointing judges or quasi-judges, we should impose certain conditions on their post-employment.

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister cannot shift the responsibility of his government to the opposition. I point out to the Prime Minister, who is a lawyer, which I am not, that it seems to me he is playing pretty loose with the term "quasi-judicial bodies" when he is talking about the National Energy Board which makes major policy decisions and major recommendations to the government involving the spending of millions of dollars. Speaking for my party, I can tell him unequivocally that, yes, we are in favour of the guidelines being applied to such positions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member put his supplementary question.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am coming to my specific question. Given the spirit of the guidelines, will the Prime Minister deal with them in the spirit as they pertain to

Mr. Crowe who has now involved himself in major corporate positions involving submissions to the NEB which he headed a few months ago? Does he not think, as Prime Minister, that he should have a chat with Mr. Crowe urging him to step down in the public interest from the positions he has accepted?

Mr. Trudeau: Not so many months ago hon. members on the other side of the House generally were arguing that we should not have chats with people who held judicial or quasi-judicial positions.

Mr. Trudeau: If the opposition wants to be fair at all on this, they will recall that following certain events concerning the judiciary we published guidelines for ourselves indicating in what way the ministry should be entitled to communicate with the judiciary, and that included the quasi-judiciary. At that time we made it quite clear that quasi-judicial officers were in a particular situation vis-à-vis the administration. Now we hear the opposition telling us this is only a fiction, that they are not quasi-judicial officers, that in some way they are the instrument of government policy. I tell the leader of the New Democratic Party that the consequences of this new policy of his is a very strange one indeed if he thinks that the National Energy Board is an emanation of government policy. He should revise his views on that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Read the act.

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister has made his usual equation in carrying a logical point all the way to an absurd conclusion. It is not at all warranted by the facts. Would he answer the question? I put it to him for the third time. In the interests of the spirit of the guidelines, with specific reference to the National Energy Board—no other body in this instance—would he not think it appropriate, as Prime Minister, to recommend to Mr. Crowe that he step back from the positions he has accepted, which put him in my mind, unequivocally, in a conflict of interest position?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that is the third time the same question has been asked. The answer is that the spirit of the guidelines and the letter of the guidelines does not apply to quasi-judicial officers. The government is prepared to advance in this field. As a matter of fact, we did look into it before publishing the guidelines, but then we thought it would be more compatible with the division of powers and the non-interference by the executive into the quasi-judicial branches that we not publish guidelines. I note the House now is taking the position that we should have. That is natural. They always take the counterposition to whatever the government does.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

AIR CANADA

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF ACCIDENT AT TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

At about 8:15 a.m. at a Toronto airport, an Air Canada DC-9 aircraft made an unfortunate crash which resulted in injuries to several passengers and the death of a few others. Is the minister in a position to tell the House whether he has been officially advised of the number of losses of life and also the main cause of that accident.

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have, of course, received preliminary reports about the incident and our investigating team is on the site. I hesitate to use specific figures until I have a further report both with regard to the causes of the accident and also with regard to the exact number of persons killed or injured. However, the report at this point does tend to indicate there were three persons killed and 43 injured.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

According to the news service, the aircraft had left the Ottawa airport for Winnipeg via Toronto. Was the minister told whether there were federal civil servants or parliamentary officials because another source, another radio station, suggested that among the victims there were parliamentary officials on the aircraft. Can the minister tell the House whether this is true?

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I do not have full information about passengers boarding in Toronto, but I am informed that only two of the passengers on the aircraft had boarded in Ottawa. They were not connected with parliament or the government in any direct employment capacity.

• (1427)

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Given the gravity of the situation and also given the fact that in 1970, if I remember correctly, another Air Canada aircraft was involved in an accident which cause the death of over 100 persons, can the Minister tell the House, in order to reassure Canadians about the safety of Air Canada aircraft, whether he will order an inquiry to identify the real causes of these two accidents? The causes of the first one may be known, but they were not reported, at least not in this morning's news. Can he do that to reassure Canadians about the safety of this Crown corporation so that it is demonstrated that the situation is not worse with this company than with others and that we can go on travelling safely on the aircraft of Air Canada?

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not think the two incidents should be connected at all, since they involve different aircraft and, very clearly, different causes, quite apart from what those causes might be. It is important, even while we regret any particular incident and extend sympathy to those who have lost friends and relatives in a crash like this, to recognize that Air Canada's record of safety is very, very good. Indeed, I think it's very close to being among the best in the world.

INDUSTRY

LOCATION OF FORD MOTOR COMPANY PLANT IN ONTARIO

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the acting minister, I will go to the second minister, the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Can he tell us why the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce reneged on the offer he made to the province of Ontario through the minister of industry and tourism of that province to share in the subsidy that was about to be offered to Ford Motor Company to locate their plant in Windsor, Ontario?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, indicated there was no reneging nor was there any commitment made to the 75-25. If this plant were built in Ontario in a DREE area, there would be some basis for making that particular allegation. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is, I believe, in Toronto today discussing this very matter.

Mr. Gillies: Can the Minister of Employment and Immigration tell us whether the government has a set policy with regard to this type of operation, because it seems clear that the degree of subsidy offered in a variety of areas is considerably different? For example, General Motors has apparently been offered an 80 per cent subsidy if it locates in or just outside Montreal. What is the policy of the government on this? Is there an established policy of providing significant aid through the provinces to these locations which is the same throughout the country, or does it vary according to the circumstances?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the government's policy under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is well known. It is a consistent policy and it is applicable right across the country. Therefore, there is no conflict in that area at all.

Mr. Gillies: If I might go back, Mr. Speaker, it seems there is a conflict. It is quite clear that the offer made to General Motors is different from the offer that was made to Ford with regard to the percentage of the subsidy. All reports suggest this is the situation. I again ask the minister, why was the offer of support 80 per cent in the case of General Motors and only 50 per cent in the case of Ford?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, that sounds to me like the wildest kind of speculation in which the hon. member is engaging. I do not think that question should be answered.

REASONS BEHIND ALLEGED POLICY TO REDUCE JOBS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question which concerns at least 150,000 workers in the province of Quebec.

In view of the fact that over 30,000 jobs have been lost in the province of Quebec during the past few months in the traditional sectors of the clothing, textile, footwear and furniture industries, and that the unemployment there, which averages over 11 per cent, reaches some 15 per cent in a number of cities, I should like to know why, in an official document entitled "Briefing Notes for Consultative Task Forces" and dealing with tariff bargaining, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce indicated the following objectives as government policies for these sectors, and I quote:

> The objective of the policy should be to reduce gradually the number of jobs by increasing rationalization with a necessary minimum of protection during the trasition period.

Given those facts, I ask the right hon. Prime Minister why the government supports such a policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what documents the hon. member has in his hand, but perhaps he could table them and I could discuss his question.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know from the right hon. Prime Minister whether the ministers from Quebec intend, during parliamentary recess, to visit the Quebec localities where the textile, clothing, footwear and furniture industries are located to explain why it is the policy of the government to cause those industries to disappear, and to inform—

Oral Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PURCHASE OF FIGHTER AIRCRAFT

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence I will direct my question to the Prime Miniser. Can the right hon. gentleman confirm that the new fighter project management office has recommended that a short list of three planes be considered for the impending fighter contract—the F-16, the F-18A and the F-18L?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not sure what the hon. member is quoting from. It is certainly not government policy.

Mr. McKinnon: I was not quoting from anything at that point except my own question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Prime Minister has noted the following quotation from a Canadian Press release:

"One of the options the cabinet is considering is a so-called short list dropping some of the competing firms", Danson said.

Could the Prime Minister tell the House whether the choice is being dictated entirely by the fact that these three planes are the cheapest of those under consideration and that since only a fixed sum of money is available—$2.3 billion in 1977 dollars—other important factors such as air superiority qualities, range, and target acquisition capability all have to be sacrificed in favour of financial considerations?

Mr. Trudeau: The question is purely hypothetical. However, I can tell the hon. member that we want to try to get the best plane for the least money.

CANADA WEEK

OFFICIAL SCARF MADE IN JAPAN

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Given the depressed state of the textile industry in Canada and the amount of public money which has gone into the promotion and celebration of Canada Week activities, I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman why the official scarf for the celebrations bears the label "Made in Japan"?

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I did not order that scarf myself. I will take notice of the question.

AGRICULTURE

FARMING METHODS—BEEF IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, the largest show of its kind in the world, the International Plowing Match and Farm Machinery Show, will be held in Huron county this year from September 26 to September 30. This event features new and old methods of plowing and over 400 exhibits including the latest in farm machinery and new technology and will be held just outside Wingham, Ontario.

I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether, when he receives his invitation to attend, he will reply in the affirmative so that he can be brought up to date in the latest farming methods. Further, since Huron is a large beef producing country, I suggest he should not allow the government to increase the import quotas on the entry of beef into Canada or he might not be very welcome at the event.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I will take the hon. member's representations under consideration.

MANPOWER

RESTRICTION ON ONTARIANS WORKING IN QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration: it concerns the impending application by the province of Quebec of restrictive labour regulations preventing, as of July 1, many Canadian tradesmen from working in Quebec. Is the hon. gentleman consulting with his colleague, the Minister of Labour, with a view to supplying this House with statistics showing the effect of this move on, for example, mobility grants which constitute an important program in his department, and will he tell us what decision he has taken to ensure interprovincial mobility in light of the socioeconomic impact the regulations may have on border communities?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): This issue has also been raised by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance since the proposal would have a particularly detrimental effect on people who live in Cornwall and along the border. It would certainly have a negative impact. I believe the Prime Minister indicated on Friday that we are opposed to action of this kind being taken, and I believe he also said he was awaiting an opinion from the Department of Justice. We do make mobility grants available to workers moving both ways. I will get the figures for the hon. member.

TAKEOVER OF HUSKY OIL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It arises from the statement made by the premier of Saskatchewan indicating the support of that province for the Petro-Canada proposal rather than that of the Occidental Petroleum Corporation on the grounds, and I quote, that "it would serve the public interest better". In view, also, of Alberta's lack of interest in operations outside that province, may I ask the right hon. gentleman whether the government still supports the Petro-Canada proposal and will so indicate to FIRA?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Petro-Canada is a Crown corporation which is operating at arm's length from the government, and the role of the government thus far has been to change the speed of cash flow in order that Petro-Canada could make the offer it did. Petro-Canada is operating in the marketplace and I am happy to learn that the premier of Saskatchewan has supported its action.

Mr. Orlikow: Would the Prime Minister tell us whether the cabinet has approved the capital budget of Petro-Canada in an amount sufficient to acquire Husky Oil and, if so, can he tell us why the government is not expressing in more direct terms its approval of the principle that the heavy oil resources of Saskatchewan should be developed by Canadian rather than United States interests?

Mr. Trudeau: It was made quite clear by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and by myself the other day in replying to a question from the leader of the New Democratic Party that we wanted Canadian resources to be exploited by companies which were 50 per cent to 60 per cent owned by Canadians. That is still our policy. As for the first part of the question, arrangements were made to permit Petro-Canada to get into the market and make this bid.

AIR TRANSPORT

CRASH AT ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It concerns the tragic crash on Friday in St. John's, Newfoundland, of a chartered aircraft resulting in the death of ten people including the chairman of the National Historic Sites and Monuments Board, three members and two senior employees of the board. I know all hon. members will identify with me in extending sympathy to the families of these public service people. Can the minister tell us whether there is an investigation under way and whether the Minister of Transport has been able to determine the cause of this crash?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Certainly, we all join in expressing sympathy to those who were bereaved as a result of this crash, including the families of the pilot and co-pilot of the aircraft. An investigation team arrived on the site the same afternoon, I am informed, and an investigation is going forward. It would be premature for me to attempt to say anything further.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

EVIDENCE BEFORE McDONALD COMMISSION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for either the Minister of Employment and Immigration or the Solicitor General. What representations, if any, have been made to date to expedite the return to Canada of Warren Hart to testify before the McDonald royal commission further to the meeting which took place in Washington between Mr. Hart and his counsel and the chief counsel and an investigator from the commission? I should like to know when his return is likely so that we can get to the bottom of matters directed by the RCMP involving this former FBI agent.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have received no representations from the inquiry for the return or presence of Mr. Hart to appear before the commission.

Mr. MacKay: A brief supplementary question concerning the royal commission. Could one of the ministers—I suppose it should be the Solicitor General—tell me whether, when ministers and deputy ministers are testifying before the McDonald commission, they will be cross-examined by the same counsel who are seized of specific areas in the inquiry such as National Revenue, the Post Office, and so forth, in order to ensure that various counsel will have an opportunity to cross-examine on the various aspects implicit in ministerial responsibility?

● (1442)

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I will inquire and advise the hon. gentleman.

IMMIGRATION

ALIENS SMUGGLED INTO U.S. FROM CANADA

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the derailing of an underground railway which operates between Toronto, Montreal and the United States. Illegal aliens were smuggled into the United States from Canada. How long did the minister know about this operation, how many Canadians were involved, and how many illegal aliens have been taken to the United States by the principals involved in this operation?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not have all the facts. I know that seven of the nine adults arrested have been deported from Canada. I believe that was the total number of the group in this particular investigation.

Mr. Epp: On April 18, and again on April 25, I pointed out to the minister that his own officials in Toronto had documented 100 cases of marriages of convenience and that departmental documents indicated that this was but the tip of the iceberg. In view of further revelations that Canada is a base of operations in the exploitation of humans in the most repugnant manner, I would like to ask the minister whether charges have been laid in connection with both cases I brought to his attention. Especially in this latest case, has he laid charges and, if not, why not?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, thankfully, we have one of the best federal police forces in the world and I think it has done a commendable job in this regard. The whistle had to be blown a little earlier here, again, I think, in a humanitarian way because of the two children involved and the somewhat intemperate weather.

As I indicated to the hon. member during the study of estimates and here in the House, the marriage of convenience question is very difficult. It is a judgment call which has to be made. When a lady swears undying love for a gentleman and says this is what she has been waiting for all her life, it is a pretty tough call for someone to make.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF RESTRICTION ON ONTARIANS WORKING IN QUEBEC

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked by my colleague, the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier, and I direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the policy of the elitist government of Quebec to eliminate freedom of movement not only interprovincially but also within the boundaries of Quebec, can the Prime Minister advise the House whether he has decided to have this arbitrary and unCanadian law referred to the supreme court to determine its constitutionality? This law could have serious effects on workers in Quebec as well as in several other provinces.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I share the concern of the hon. member but I am afraid I cannot add much to what I said late last week in answer to a question. The matter is being looked at by the Department of Justice and we will get advice from that department on the matter of a reference.

In the meantime, I repeat that this is a matter which we hope will be solved between the two provinces mainly concerned. I understand that Premier Davis and Premier Lévesque have been in communication on this matter. It is the general desire of the provinces that we not intervene in matters of provincial jurisdiction. I hope the premiers themselves will be able to settle this matter, but if they want our help and if it is possible, we will gladly give it to them.

MULTICULTURALISM

FUNDING OF FRENCH-SPEAKING GROUPS OUTSIDE QUEBEC

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the minister's desire to cut government expenditures which effort, he says, is restricted by obligations imposed by statutory transfer payments to the provinces, can the minister say whether he considers it proper for the province of Quebec to fund the activities of French-speaking groups outside Quebec, as has been recently described by the Hon. Claude Morin, who in turn has been described by Premier Lévesque as his foreign minister?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the key question would be with whose funds such activities are being financed. I am not aware that any federal funds transferred to the province of Quebec are being so used.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Speaker, can the minister assure us that activities funded by the province of Quebec are not of this nature, and is there any monitoring device to make sure that federal funds which are paid by way of transfer are not used in this way? Are the activities involved in any way similar to those previously carried on by the Parizeau spy network?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I will have to examine that question carefully. I will take it as notice. I am not aware of any such trend, but I will investigate.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT GUIDELINES

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring the Prime Minister back to the question regarding the National Energy Board. The Prime Minister indicates it is his view that the National Energy Board is exclusively a quasi-judicial body and consequently exempt from conflict of interest guidelines. On consulting the act setting up the National Energy Board, he will find that section 22 vests clear advisory functions. I quote the relevant section as follows:

> —shall recommend to the minister such measures within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada as it considers necessary—

Consequently, it is very clear that the National Energy Board is not exclusively a regulatory body. I should say, in passing, that the Prime Minister is trying to draw a red herring across this debate when he suggests that quasi-judicial bodies are in exactly the same position as judicial bodies. Let us put that to one side for the moment. Given the advisory nature set out in the statute of the National Energy Board, is it the intention of the Prime Minister to continue to exempt people associated with the National Energy Board from the conflict of interest guidelines?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition introduced the word "exclusive", which I never used. He obviously used it for a very good reason. He seems to have been shown what the act says, but if he had not read selectively only one paragraph of the act, he would have seen that section 10(3) describes the powers of the board and says:

—all such powers, rights and privileges as are vested in a superior court of record.

It seems to me that this makes it quite clear that the National Energy Board has the powers of a court of record, and that makes it a quasi-judicial body.

Mr. Gillies: Preposterous.

Mr. Trudeau: This does not alter the substance of what I said earlier, that the government studied the possibility of regulating post-employment conditions for members of judicial or quasi-judicial offices. It might apply a fortiori when these quasi-judicial offices also have advisory functions, as the Leader of the Opposition said, and I indicated that the government had considered such guidelines and would be prepared—possibly to follow up the bill which will be given first reading today and which I am sure will be studied by all members of the House—to go one step further. I indicated that we had some hesitancy in doing so, but I am glad that the opposition parties seem united in stating that the government should extend its guidelines to holders of judicial or quasi-judicial offices.

The Leader of the Opposition shakes his head. Now he has a new position. I really would like to know the position of the Leader of the Opposition and his party. However, as far as we are concerned, we will continue with our work and probably publish such guidelines. I think when that is done, even the opposition will recognize that a holder of such office could certainly be asked to abide by the spirit of the guidelines, but he certainly could not be held retroactively to abide by guidelines which have not yet been published.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I shake my head in wonder at the attempts by the Prime Minister to work his way around the failure—and I take it the Prime Minister is now admitting it is a deliberate failure—to apply the conflict of interest guidelines to an advisory agency such as the National Energy Board which, by statute, it is. I asked the Prime Minister a question. He did not answer it, although I can assume from his long evasion that his answer is that he intends to continue to exempt agencies like the National Energy Board with statutory advisory functions as long as he can find any way at all by which they can be called quasi-judicial agencies.

The Prime Minister has by his answers today drawn the attention of the Canadian people to a very large loophole which he and his colleagues have drawn into the conflict of interest guidelines. Just so he can confirm things, are we then to understand that these guidelines do not apply, for example, to members of the CRTC, the Canadian Transport Commission, FIRA, the Canadian Dairy Commission, Canadian Patents and Development Limited, the Canadian Pension Commission, the Northern Pipeline Commission and at least 15 to 20 other major administrative tribunals in the country? Is that the policy of the government?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, the conclusion the hon. member reached in the first part of his question is exactly contrary to what I just said. If the hon. member would listen to my answers rather than preparing his next question, he might be able to dispense with some of his questions. He said that I was prepared to continue to exempt. On the contrary, I said that we had studied these guidelines, that we were hesitant to put them into effect, and that I was encouraged to see, until opposition members shook their heads, that the opposition was encouraging us to go ahead with such guidelines. This does not apply to the bill which will be introduced in the House today: it is on conflict of guidelines—conflict of interest guidelines.

Mr. Paproski: Your first comment was correct.

Mr. Trudeau: It is on conflict of interest guidelines for members of parliament. The House will recall that all this business of publishing conflict of interest guidelines went through several stages. We started with ministers, then we went to members of parliament and then to officials. I indicated that we had not yet gone to holders of judicial or quasi-judicial offices. That will be the next step. What I am indicating is that if we take that step, of course these members will be covered, but they will be covered for the future and not for the past.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the one absolutely unquestionably true statement the Prime Minister just made is that he and his colleagues are hesitant to put guidelines into effect. There can be no doubt about that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister has drawn our attention to this very large loophole which he and his colleagues deliberately wrote into the conflict of interest guidelines as they affect public servants; this "out" by use of the regulatory or quasi-judicial cover. In the interests of giving some direction to people who might be associated with these agencies and might be contemplating leaving them, and indeed so there can be some standards set by the government, will he and his colleagues consider immediately this week in cabinet, today or tomorrow, some recommendation which they can bring before the House of Commons and the public so there will not be the kind of odour of evasion which is very clear about the National Energy Board case before us now?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the words "odour of evasion" are quite unfair. I am absolutely convinced that Mr. Marshall Crowe, since we are talking about him, had no intention of evading guidelines.

Mr. Clark: We are talking about you.

Mr. Trudeau: When the hon. member talks about loopholes, there are no loopholes when the guidelines themselves indicate that they apply to certain persons and not others. If the hon. member had made himself familiar with the guidelines, he would have seen that indeed we proceeded through several stages and covered an increasing number of people. The people who hold judicial or quasi-judicial offices have not been included. I understand the House would like to see them included. I am indicating that the government is prepared to go that route. We thought it would be nice to have the opposition debate the bill which will be given first reading today, to give their opinions on it, and then we would know how far they are prepared to go regarding guidelines for members of parliament themselves.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

GATT NEGOTIATIONS ON AGRICULTURAL ISSUES

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar) Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council in his capacity to answer questions respecting our trade negotiations. Mr. Robert Strauss, the United States negotiator to the GATT negotiations now taking place in Geneva, has said there will be no agreement at the talks unless considerable movement on farm issue comes into being in the next few weeks. As far as the minister knows, have there been any improvements or movement on farm issues in terms of the main negotiating countries? If there has been movement, what implications do they hold for Canadian agriculture?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, despite what Mr. Strauss has stated, I believe it is premature to forecast the pattern of proposals and counterproposals. There is dissatisfaction not only with the agricultural offers which have been made; there is dissatisfaction in fisheries and other related fields. In a sense, we are at a prenegotiating state. Recently at the meeting in Washington there was an understanding and the timetable was agreed to during which the period of June 30 to July 10 would be used intensively by the participants in order to develop a negotiating framework which might be put to the summit in Bonn later in the month.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister can be more specific on this question. One very important farm commodity is pork. Pork producers and their associations want greater access to international markets, especially the Japanese market. Since Japan tabled its offer list some time ago, can the minister inform the House if pork is on that list?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the list, but I can tell the hon. member that there has been considerable dissatisfaction expressed by quite a number of participants in the negotiations at the Japanese offer. Certainly, in the case of Canada, it is not expected that we would be able to maintain our offer list to Japan or our offer list generally unless Japan improved its performance, which we hope will take place.

POST OFFICE

PROPOSED CLOSURE OF POST OFFICE IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. It concerns the likely closure of the post office on Vale Island at Hay River in the Northwest Territories. The previous Postmaster General made some effort to prevent the closing of this post office. Can the Postmaster General report anything on this matter to the House? Specifically, will he do whatever he can to keep this post office open? It is an essential service to a few hundred people on Vale Island, including two or three government departments and a Crown corporation, namely, the Northern Transportation Company, Limited.

[Translation]

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the question of keeping that post office open is still under consideration. In a way, we agree with the hon. member from the opposition that this is an essential service in Vale Island, and we are doing our best to try to maintain an adequate mail service.

TRANSPORT

SHORTAGE OF RAIL CARS IN INTERIOR OF B.C.

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that there is a shortage of rail cars in the forest industry in the interior of British Columbia, that out of 786 cars which were ordered only 335 were received, and that this results in 100 per cent more lumber awaiting shipment from this very important industry of British Columbia, can the minister tell the House what he has done in reply to an appeal by the Interior Lumber Manufacturers Association to him and to the railways for more boxcars?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I met with representatives of the forest industry in Vancouver several weeks ago to discuss this entire question. The existing situation is a difficult one in terms of numbers of cars. Even though, in the particular case of Canadian National, more products are being moved than last year, the waiting time for cars to be returned from the United States has increased very rapidly. This is largely because of changes in the situation in the United States. I discussed this matter with the railway presidents at a meeting last week looking into the question of whether more cars ought to be obtained immediately, in light of the possibility that the American situation would be prolonged. They are looking at this question together with certain alternatives including the creation of lumber distribution centres in certain places in the United States. Perhaps that will allow the unloading of lumber and the return of cars to be handled in a much more expeditious manner.

AIRPORTS

RADAR SYSTEM AT VICTORIA, B.C.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Can he bring us up to date on the plans of his department to instal radar at the only international airport in Canada which does not have radar, namely, the Victoria international airport? Can he give us some idea of the timing of the installation of that equipment?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have had no report of any change since the last time we discussed this matter. There are other airports where the numbers of landings and complications in terms of terrain and traffic are greater than at Victoria. Therefore, at this moment it is not at the top of our list.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that there has been an additional responsibility imposed upon air traffic controllers in Vancouver in that they are obliged, in addition to bringing aircraft into the Vancouver airport, to take aircraft to within the area of visual controllers in Victoria; and is he prepared to admit that this elevates unduly the fatigue threshold of controllers in Vancouver and thereby increases the risk in respect of security in that general area?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the air administration at all times tries to take the workload of controllers into account in arranging the circumstances under which they work. I think the hon. member would have to agree that the workload situation in Vancouver, even with this additional responsibility, is not as great, for instance, as that of those who work in Toronto.

KOREAN ARMISTICE AGREEMENT

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to inform hon. members that July 27 of this year will mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of the signing of the Korean Armistice Agreement.

This agreement was concluded between the United Nations Command, in which the Canadian forces participated, and North Korea and the Peoples' Republic of China. Canada participated directly in the Korean operations from June, 1950 until the final cease-fire in July of 1953. During this time Canada sent more than 22,000 troops to that Far Eastern theatre. A further 7,000 served there between the cease-fire and the end of 1955.

Of these brave Canadians who volunteered to serve half way round the world, 516 never returned. These men rest today in the soil of Korea and Japan, and are remembered here at home as their names are perpetuated in Canada's Korea Book of Remembrance.

As Minister of Veterans Affairs I am honoured to be able to lead a delegation of veterans of this conflict to the scence of their heroic actions. In July of this year this delegation will travel to the United Nations Memorial Cemetery at Pusan, Korea, to honour the memory of our dead in the presence of their comrades and their allies who fought by their side.

We are proud of our heritage and the sacrifice of our sons and daughters, and are always prepared to stand firmly in the company of other peace-loving nations for the preservation of international law and order.

Those we will commemorate gave their lives in the service of the first international police force. They did so that never again would another generation be called up to redeem their ideals and principles at so terrible a price.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Korean Armistice

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the statement just made by the minister was delivered to me. I find it fit and proper that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) should be leading a delegation of veterans to the scene of their former conflicts. I join with the minister in paying tribute to those valiant Canadians who lie in graves far beyond our borders. We pay tribute not only to the glorious dead but also to their fellow soldiers who returned home as members of our Armed Forces.

I think this points out and is further proof that Canada is willing to shoulder its share of the responsibility for maintaining world peace and in promoting world peace wherever there is potential trouble.

I trust that the minister will find that cemetery at Pusan, Korea, maintained in the same high degree of perfection that we found at the cemeteries in Italy, where I was privileged to travel with the minister a few years back. If that is not the case, I trust he will see that Canada makes every effort to have this cemetery looked after as it should be. Again, we in the official opposition join in paying tribute to our glorious dead who lie beyond our borders.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour as a veteran of one war to pay tribute to the veterans of another war. Although only five years separated the signing of peace following the Second World War and the beginning of the Korean War, those wars were worlds apart in many ways. In some ways the Korean War was an indication that total war is impossible. That war, in which Canadians fought under the auspices and direction of the United Nations, could probably have been ended more quickly with the dropping of a nuclear bomb.

What is significant about that war is the fact that the nations of the world realized that the use of nuclear weapons was no way to end a war. This was recognition of the fact that it is no longer possible to have total war. That war dragged on, and there were many more casualties. Many of the sacrifices represented a double sacrifice. Many lives were lost during the course of the war, and many additional lives were lost because of our determination to avoid a nuclear holocaust. In that sense the Korean War was a watershed.

When peace finally came it was not total peace, just as it had not been total war. The lesson was quite clear. It is no longer possible in a world so interconnected to have total war or attain total peace. At some point nations have to come together.

It is a great honour for me to pay tribute to those who participated in the Korean War, and to wish the minister and his delegation well on their trip to the scene of these soldiers' heroism.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the minister who sent me copy of the statement he has just made to the House recalling to memory the participation of Canada in the Korean war during the '50s. In his statement, the minister mentioned that 516 Canadian troops died on the battlefield who are today buried in a cemetery the minister himself will visit sometime in July with a small delegation.

It is always with deep emotion that we evoke the memory of those Canadians who went away to fight on battlefields outside our land and who gave their lives to ensure the survival of the freedom we now enjoy. I think it is well to think of that occasionally, and to remember the participation of Canadians in the fight for our freedoms; to evoke it not so much for the people of our age but more specifically for the young who enjoy that freedom, and who at times abuse it, unaware, unfortunately, that those who came before them, some of whom were loved dearly, gave of themselves intellectually, financially and physically to guarantee that freedom.

I therefore take this opportunity to assure the minister of our co-operation on the occasion of this trip to Korea. I ask him to give a special thought to those Canadians. I know at least two whose names I remember, I can assure him that when he visits that cemetery our hearts will go with him remembering the fallen while at the same time asking Divine Providence, if it is not already so, to grant them real rest that is well deserved.

INDEPENDENCE OF PARLIAMENT ACT

MEASURE TO OBVIATE CONFLICTS OF INTEREST

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-62, respecting the independence of parliament and conflicts of interest of Senators and members of the House of Commons and to amend certain other acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I realize that we do not often ask for an explanation of a bill on its introduction into the House by a minister, but I point out that Standing Order 68(2) provides for such a situation, as does citation 356 of Beauchesne's fourth edition. In view of the importance of this bill and the interest in the subject today, I believe the minister should be given an opportunity to give the House a brief explanation.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the suggestion made by the hon. member, but unfortunately the bill is so comprehensive in its nature that it would require more than a brief explanation. Therefore, and not to do an injustice to this work, I would like to suggest to the hon. member that he read the supporting material, which I will make available to him just as soon as the bill is given first reading.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

On the order: Government notices of motion:

June 22—The Prime Minister—That a special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons be appointed to examine and report upon proposals that have been and in the future are from time to time made public by the Government of Canada, on subjects related to the Constitution of Canada;

That twenty members of the House of Commons, to be designated by the House at a later date, be members of the said committee on the part of this House;

That the committee have power to examine and enquire into all such matters as may be referred to them by the House, and, to report from time to time, and, except when the House otherwise orders, to send for persons, papers and records, to sit while the House is sitting, to sit during periods when the House stands adjourned, to print from day to day such papers and evidence as may be ordered by them, and to delegate to subcommittees all or any of their powers except the power to report direct to the House;

That the committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting Their Honours to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems so advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed special joint committee.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21, this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders later this day or at the next sitting of the House.

Order Paper Questions

SECOND LANGUAGES

Question No. 1,144—Mr. Herbert:

Does the government consider that it has a direct financial interest in the agreement for the federal funding for minority and second language instruction and, if so, does this interest include a responsibility to (a) explain the intent of the agreement (b) obtain an accounting of the spending of such funds and make it public?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Yes. The hon. member is referred to the copies tabled in this House on April 7, 1978, of the letters exchanged between the federal and provincial governments regarding the federal-provincial program of bilingualism in education for the period from April 1, 1974, to March 31, 1979, (Notice of Motion for the Production of Paper No. 49—Sessional Paper No. 303-3/149). Reference is made in the letters to the provinces of the direct financial interest of the federal government in the funding of these programs. (a) Yes. The hon. member is referred to the documents tabled in this House noted above. (b) Yes. The hon. member is referred to the documents noted above, and in particular to the sixth paragraph of the letter to the province of Quebec, and the fifth paragraph of of the letter to the nine other provinces, stating the federal concern that there be full accounting of federal funds provided to the provinces under this program.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AUTHORITY

Question No. 1,513—Mr. Forrestall:

In light of recent announcements that the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority will proceed with studies on extending the St. Lawrence Seaway season to eleven months, will the government give iron-clad guarantees to the taxpayers of Atlantic Canada that all costs of operating the Seaway for an eleven month season will be fully recovered from users as a precondition to proceeding with such a project and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority advises as follows: the seaway authority will award a contract shortly for a study of the benefits that would accrue from a navigation season extended in stages to eleven months. So little is known presently about the relationship of benefits and costs that it is premature to anticipate any decision to extend the seaway season. The government is not in a position at this time to give the guarantees requested.

ORFORD ARTS CENTRE

Question No. 1,593—Mr. Beaudoin:

Did the government pay any grants to the Orford Arts Centre in the eastern townships and, if so (a) what was the total amount (b) in what years were they paid?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Department of the Secretary of State: Grants totalling $254,000 were made to the Orford Arts Centre as follows:

	Amount	Year
Jeunesses musicales du Canada (through the Centennial Commission)	$ 4,000	1972
Federal contribution to the development of the "Man and Music" pavilion	$250,000	1972

Canada Council: The Canada Council has awarded the following grants to the Orford Arts Centre: For Canadian guest artists and teachers: 1976: $6,000; 1977: $9,934. For guest artists and teachers from other countries, under the Cultural Exchanges program administered by the Council for External Affairs: 1969: $15,700; 1970: $10,542; 1971: $11,290; 1972:

$9,955; 1973: $5,313; 1974: $6,674; 1975: $9,925; 1976: $10,682; 1977: $4,480; 1978: $5,777.

CBC—MULTICULTURALISM

Question No. 1,621—Mr. Mitges:

What is the policy of the CBC with respect to (a) multicultural programming (b) broadcasting in languages other than English or French?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: (a), (b) The CBC's policy on multicultural and multilingual broadcasting, dated September, 1973, reads as follows: "Canada comprises on the one hand two large linguistic and cultural communities, one of British origin and the other French, which give rise to the bilingual character of the country at the official level, and on the other hand a native population of Indian and Eskimo origin, plus first and second-generation Canadians and recent immigrants from many lands. While the presence of such diverse groups gives a multicultural character to the country, it also generates tensions and creates problems of integration, adaptation and understanding between the different communities. During the sixties when these problems became acute, the Royal Commission on B & B was assigned the task of examining the question and recommending solutions. In its report the commission put forward a series of measures designed to preserve and extend the presence of the French language and culture in many aspects of Canadian life. Volume IV of the report also examined the contribution to the Canadian mosaic of groups who are neither British nor French in origin and urged that steps be taken to preserve their heritage. In response to the recommendations contained in volume IV, the government announced in the fall of 1971 a policy of multiculturalism within a bilingual framework and stressed the importance of the ethnic groups and the quality of their contribution to the social and cultural life of the country. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, one of whose priorities is to contribute to the development of national unity, shares this general concern and recognizes the need to strengthen the ties between the various regions and between the different linguistic and cultural communities in those regions. By virtue of the policies arising from the directives in the Broadcasting Act and by reason of the ethnic diversity of its audience, the CBC has long practised a policy of cultural pluralism in its programming. It intends to continue to affirm and reflect in its programs the multicultural riches and multiracial characteristics of Canadian society in keeping with the corporation's obligation to "contribute to the development of national unity and provide for a continuing expression of Canadian identity". Schedule planners and program staff are expected to demonstrate continuing awareness of and sensitivity to this aspect of the CBC role. The corporation believes that recognition of the ethnic fact in its programs, by regular and frequent appearances by members of ethnic groups, by the inclusion of subjects in which they are keenly interested, by the systematic examination of prejudice, negative attitudes and even manifestations of hostility towards them, by an honest appreciation of the cultural values they bring to society and by an explanation of their contributions to Canadian life, will reduce the feeling of alienation among these groups. However, the CBC will not engage in multilingual broadcasting on existing stations and networks, because in so doing it would be departing from the express priorities laid down in the Broadcasting Act to provide complete services in both official languages. The CBC makes an exception only for the original inhabitants of the country, the Indians and Eskimos, to whom the northern service broadcasts in several languages and dialects."

NATIONAL MUSEUMS—KOOTENAY WEST

Question No. 1,680—Mr. Brisco:

What is the best estimate of the amount spent by the National Museums Corporation in the constituency of Kootenay West from July 22, 1977 to date?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): In so far as the National Museums are concerned: National Museums expended approximately $24,000 in the constituency of Kootenay West from July 22, 1977, to date.

AGRICULTURE—TAX WRITE-OFFS

Question No. 1,718—Mr. Brisco:

Are the same tax write-offs allowed for greenhouse agricultural projects, such as the growing of tomatoes, as are allowed for field grown products outside of a greenhouse environment?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Different types of expenses are incurred in different types of farming businesses but, generally speaking, there is no distinction made between the tax treatment of write-offs and expenses incurred in growing products in a greenhouse and the tax treatment of write-offs and expenses incurred in growing products in the field.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. FRIESEN—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION NO. 1,306

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, again I would refer the parliamentary secretary to question No. 1,306 which I submitted in February. I have asked on two different occasions if he could expedite the answering of this question and the sub-questions under No. 1,306. I cannot imagine why he would hesitate to have them answered, but I urge him since, presumably, this is the last week that the House will be sitting, the he provide an answer for me this week.

MR. BEATTY—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS NOS. 1,233, 1,236 AND 1,237

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I would like to invite the parliamentary secretary to join with me in celebrating the six months' anniversary today of three questions which I placed on the order paper on January 26. I refer to questions Nos. 1,233, 1,236 and 1,237. I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that a good way of making the celebration much happier would be for him to answer the questions.

MR. McKENZIE—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION NO. 895

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I too have a complaint for the parliamentary secretary about a question I placed on the order paper on December 7, 1977. This is the fourth time I have requested an answer for this question, which refers to the number of government members allowed to use the MOT telex to send political messages. It does not take seven months to compile that information, and it is becoming quite obvious that this is some kind of cover-up on the part of the government, and particularly on the part of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), who seems reluctant to reveal this information. Nevertheless the question has been accepted, and it is ridiculous to wait for so long to have a question of this type answered.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, concerning the three remarks which have just been made, I would like to tell the House that I shall consider them very seriously and check the progress in our research work to give as usual the most accurate, detailed and acceptable answers possible. I want to take the opportunity to underline that we have an excellent average of answers with regard to the question rate, and that this week, we are going to make a particular effort to improve this average.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

INDUSTRY

CANADA-U.S. AUTOMOTIVE AGREEMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the crisis in the implementation of the Canada-U.S. Automotive Agreement as reflected in the cumulative trade deficit for Canada of $7.5 billion since 1965, which has resulted in the net loss to Canada of 25,000 jobs, and to which the Government of Canada has responded by making an offer of $37.5 million to induce Ford of Canada to expand in this country, such action being revealed in the legislature of the province of Ontario on Friday, June 23, 1978.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member, pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 26, gave the Chair appropriate notice of his intention to make this application at this time. Without going into elaborate reasons, I want to indicate to the hon. member that I will not be granting the application for consideration pursuant to Standing Order 26.

The hon. member has spoken in his motion of the crisis in the implementation of the Canada-U.S. Automotive Agreement and goes on to indicate that they are developments which have occurred in a gradual way over the 13 years since 1965, the beginning of the effect of that agreement. There is also the allegation of the loss of jobs, and that is one area I certainly think is a chronic and continuing problem and not the proper subject matter for the provisions of Standing Order 26. In the latter part of his motion the hon. member refers to an offer of $37.5 million to induce Ford to come to Canada, that offer having become known in the Ontario legislature last Friday. At the moment the circumstances surrounding the last part of the hon. member's motion seem to be a matter of dispute, and somewhat uncertain.

I do not think that the rule is meant to apply to areas in which the centre of the matter is one which in itself is a matter of dispute, but I do not want to eliminate for all time that possibility. It seems to me that the rule is intended to apply to circumstances which are in themselves not subject to interpretation. Whether or not parliament is responsible for them or can do anything about them, I do not think we ought to use this rule to apply to circumstances where the crisis in itself is subject to argument or disagreement. Certainly, in answers given in the question period today, there seemed to be disagreement on the very circumstances which would form the core of this motion.

It may be that further facts and later exploration through the week and days to come will indicate that, indeed, the hon. member has a legitimate case, and I would not rule out the possibility of a new application under those circumstances. But I certainly think that it would be very premature for the Chair to come down on one side or another on an item which remains in some considerable dispute. Therefore at this moment I set aside this application under Standing Order 26.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-36, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Before calling the first motion to be considered among the six motions that appear on the order paper at this report stage of Bill C-36, I do want to indicate that both in respect to the report stage of this bill and also the oil and gas measure which has been reported out of committee, we find a similar report stage motion. It is motion No. 5 standing in the name of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). In the other case, the oil and gas measure to which I will refer in more precise detail in a moment, the amendment was in fact made in the standing committee and has been reported, not in the name of any individual member, but as an amended part of the bill. In both cases the attempt is the same, that is, to bind future parliaments to make an automatic order of reference, in this case of a report, and in the other measure, of the act itself.

I invite hon. members to examine these provisions and, when we come to them, to be prepared to argue whether parliament can go further than ordering, in proper procedural terms, a re-examination by parliament or, in the case of a report, order that the report be filed with parliament, and whether an amendment to a particular statute can go further than that and indicate what will happen to a report when it is in the hands of parliament at a future time. It seems to me that in this case there might be an argument that the Standing Orders of this parliament can be amended to accomplish the purpose which the hon. member for York-Simcoe has in mind.

In respect of the other measure, which I only mention peripherally now—we will obviously have the same problem before us more than once and therefore I mention the same argument in respect of the other matter—it is not even a question of a report, it is the referral of the entire statute to a committee which might or might not be in existence, and which is not accurately described. Similar language is used in motion No. 5. The committee is referred to as the committee to which ordinarily things on this subject matter are referred.

When we get to motion No. 5 and think it should be subject to argument, I hope that argument will be helpful to me in making a decision. But I question whether, by amendment to a statute, we can affect the operation of future parliaments, not in having the matter reported to parliament but in having parliament carry on further with it in an automatic way and make an order of reference of that material to a committee, when in fact the committee is not even named. I do not say in an absolute way at this time that it cannot be done, but it seems to me to be a very dangerous practice to attempt to describe it in a motion.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I do not see any difficulty in the motions that have been introduced in the past where an automatic process of review is proposed. What comes to my mind, for example, is the anti-inflation legislation where, by way of amendment, a review process was introduced so that a report had to be made to parliament; or parliament, as a result of the action of a certain number of members, was able to call into review the operation of the statute. That seems to be a provision which has been accepted in the past.

Certainly there is no argument about statutes which call for a report to be made to parliament, or a report, having been made public, to be filed with parliament. There is nothing the matter with that, but I question whether or not a motion can go one step further and say that when parliament gets it, it must automatically do something with it. In the first place it seems to me that if that can be done it will have to be very specific, and second, if it can be done it would have to be done by an amendment to the Standing Orders, which are what govern our process of reference to standing committees.

Therefore, I invite the hon. member who has sponsored motion No. 5, who is here in the House now, as well as other hon. members, to examine this matter and to give it some thought to see if, when we come to motion No. 5, some argument can be advanced which would dispel my fears that the matter cannot go ahead on procedural grounds.

With respect to the other five motions, I have no difficulty with them from the procedural point of view. Motions Nos. 1 and 3, in the name of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), seem to me to have a similar intention and therefore should be grouped for discussion, and the vote on motion No. 1 should also dispose of motion No. 3. Similarly, motions Nos. 2 and 4 should be grouped for debate, and the vote on motion No. 2 will dispose of the vote on motion No. 4. Motion No. 6 in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) should be debated and voted on separately. Again these are the suggestions of the Chair for the disposition of the report stage of the bill. If there is any disagreement with those suggestions, I would be glad to hear it.

Now we can proceed to motions Nos. 1 and 3.

Mr. Stevens: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I will be preparing further comments in anticipation of us reaching motion No. 5, but I would call Your Honour's attention to the Air Canada bill which was recently passed because it has an identical provision to the provision we are proposing in motion No. 5 with respect to the Export Development Corporation, and in fact the wording we have used in motion No. 5 was plagiarized, if you like, from the wording which apparently was approved with respect to Air Canada. In that case there was a permanent reference to a committee of the House considering transportation matters, so I would ask Your Honour to consider in the interim the arguments that were raised at the time of the Air Canada amendment which, as I said, was passed by the House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York-Simcoe has raised a valid point. We are aware of the Air Canada example and of the occasions on which attempts of this sort have been made with respect to a particular statute. However, that does not eliminate the concern that I have about it. I recognize the precedent which the hon. member for York-Simcoe has cited. However, I do want to sound a note of caution with regard to what we are attempting to do. It seems to me that we are regularly attempting to amend the Standing Orders of the House by virtue of an amendment to a statute, and I have some misgiving as to its validity and, in any case, to its procedural regularity. But we can discuss that again when motion No. 5 is reached.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), I accept the arrangements you have made regarding the six report stage motions, in particular the groupings you have made which seem to be appropriate. I am glad you have left until later a discussion of the procedural admissibility of motion No. 5. I have sent to the Library for the Statutory Instruments Act. It seems to me there is something in that act which says that certain items stand referred automatically to a certain committee. However, we can deal with that when we get to the point later on.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will understand that the reason I sounded a note of caution with respect to this motion, despite its similarity with the other two examples that have been cited, and others, is that the trend has already become more severe, and with respect to the other measure there is now a reference not of a report but in fact of the statute, the act itself. It seems to me that has gone one step further, and therefore I am beginning to question the validity of the process, both from the procedural point of view—which is of course my only concern—and because I would like hon. members to re-examine it to see if we are heading in the right direction. In any case, we should now consider motion No. 1, which is in the name of the hon. member for St. John's West, and which should be taken together with motion No. 3 for discussion and for a vote.

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-36, an act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in clause 3 by striking out line 24 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"equal to six times the authorized capital of"

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-36, an act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in clause 4 by striking out line 21 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"equal to six times the authorized capital of"

He said: Mr. Speaker, the two motions that are now being discussed together would have the effect of amending the bill now before us so that the expanded limits which the government is suggesting for the Export Development Corporation to grant credit, to make loans or to give guarantees, would be less than the government has sought.

Motion No. 1 deals with the question of the authority of the EDC to establish a ceiling for its contingent liabilities and corporate account, its own account. Until this legislation passes the House, whenever it does pass the House, the limit on the contingent liability which the EDC can incur is $2.5 billion. The government is suggesting that this be increased to $10 billion, a fourfold increase. My amendment suggests that the limit be set at $6 billion, that is over double what the present limitation is now. We are suggesting an increase from $2.5 billion to $6 billion, which gives enough leeway and discretion to the corporation.

The second motion we are dealing with at this time would have the same effect as the amendment proposed by the government. They want to remove guarantees from the ceiling on loans made by the EDC on its own account at the present time without any legislation or any bill amending the act passed. The limit is $4,250 million. The government is suggesting that the EDC should be given the right to loan up to $10 billion without coming back to this House. We are suggesting that the limit should be set at $6 billion, which would be a considerable advance on the present limit. There are two other motions to the same effect, Mr. Speaker.

Why do we do this? Why are we suggesting this? It is because this is a government agency that has considerable power and is exhibiting the fact that it is not prepared to exercise that power with moderation. We all know that Canada has to have an export financing agency, that we have to assist financially in Canada exports to other countries in the world, that we have to meet the competition. Therefore, an Export Development Corporation is needed. We all know that the United Kingdom has an export credit guarantee department, and France and the other countries of the world have their various export financing agencies. Canada has to have one too. But, Mr. Speaker, there are many reasons why we believe that this agency has to be kept under closer scrutiny by this House of Commons and this parliament.

Some of those reasons were expressed by our leader in a speech on second reading of this bill on April 27. What I want to do is refer to the points made then by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) on behalf of the official opposition and show what has happened since to bear out the points made by him when this bill went to a committee of the whole House, and therefore to advance the reasons why we believe these limitations—the limits on lending authority and guarantee authority—should be more restrictive than the government proposes.

Let me just say this that when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) was in committee—he is not here today, I suppose he is on other business, but it is a coincidence that he was on other business when second reading of this bill was going ahead and I spoke in the House, and he is not here again this afternoon, I understand he is in Toronto on some other kind of government business, I suppose he will be back before the debate is finished—he said that if this legislation was passed in the form it now is, the EDC will have sufficient lending and guaranteeing authority to operate until 1983. Nineteen eighty-three, of course, is five years from now. It does not have to come back to us in the estimates if it gets its funding from non-government sources.

It means it would not have to come back to us until 1983 to get these limits established or expanded again. We believe that that is far too long a period.

It was suggested by the president of the corporation that they might have to come back in three and a half years' time. Even a three and a half year period, in our view, is too long. We need some assurance that this corporation is going to come under the scrutiny of this House of Commons or its committee every year. The people who are running this corporation have amply demonstrated the fact that they need to be under someone's scrutiny. They suffer, according to the evidence that came before our committee, from what the Greeks call "hubris", insolent pride or over-weaning pride, and it is going to lead to their nemesis unless they come under closer scrutiny by this House.

We know that the financing and the gaining of exports are only part of what we need here in Canada to overcome our economic problems. The problem is that the government has no over-all policy. The only policy that the government seems to have is to have EDC finance exports madly and competitively, and try to get all the exports we can without worrying about the type of exports. Manufactured end products are not being exported in any great quantity, it is mostly raw materials and semi-processed goods, and 70 per cent of our exports are to the U.S. anyway.

The government has overlooked the fact that in addition to increasing our exports we need to be more competitive so we can decrease our imports, Mr. Speaker, and that we can exercise import substitution so that we can see Canadian manufacturing industry produces more of the manufactured end products in order that we do not have to be importing huge volumes of manufactured and products, which caused a deficit in that area of $11.5 million last year. There is no over-all strategy.

I want to refer to some of the points that were made on second reading of this bill, particularly by our leader when he spoke on April 27, and then to see where some of these points were borne out in the evidence that came before the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee of this House.

The first point that our leader made in his remarks on April 27, is reported in Hansard at page 4925, and reads:

> I personally have been alarmed at the performance of information officers of the Export Development Corporation, which very much borders on the partisan—

That was a matter well borne out in the committee in the way that the EDC has conducted itself in its public relations in recent years, its political partisanship. For example, in the January-February 1978 issue of EDC News—here is a Crown corporation putting out a bulletin paid for indirectly by the taxpayer—on the second page of that bulletin practically the whole page is taken up with an article entitled "EDC Answers MP's Charges," They go on to cite the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott) who had had an article in some local newspapers calling for the abolition of the EDC, and answering points they said he made, and identifying how they thought he was in error.

That matter also came up in committee, the matter of the EDC taking it upon itself to involve itself in the political in-fighting that goes on, and must go on in our system. That, Mr. Speaker, was something that should have been left to their minister to do if he thought it worth doing. If he thought the EDC needed to be defended politically, it was for the minister to do that, not for a Crown corporation to undertake that job itself through its public relations officers.

When the minister was before the committee and he was questioned on that and or other incidents such as the public relations officer for EDC actually writing to a newspaper out in the district of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco), actually writing letters to the editor replying to some statements that the member for Kootenay West made in this House—they had actually sent letters to the paper repudiating or answering arguments that he had made. It was put to the minister when he was before the committee that this corporation was dangerously involving itself in the political sphere. The minister was good enough to admit that perhaps he should have authorized the letters, and signed them. He gave an indication that my criticism was accepted and that the chairman was there and had heard the criticism. It would be taken note of that the political affiliation of anyone misconstruing, he said, the department's good work would not be mentioned from here on in. That is found in Issue 28 of the committee at page 28:9.

Later in the proceedings of this committee the president of the corporation himself, the man who exhibits dangerous signs of arrogance, did not appear prepared to take the advice of his minister in this direction. He felt there might be certain occasions when he would have to defend the EDC that could not be left up to politicians I suppose such as the minister, who might not able to do a capable enough job defending them—that was the implication. He seemed to be taking the position that it still might be in order for them to engage in this kind of partisan debate. That is one of the reasons why this agency needs to be closely watched by this House—the kind of article which we saw in the January-February EDC News that I hope we will not see again.

Along the same lines we have certain political advertisements that have been appearing, on the Export Development Corporation. I would like to refer to Issue 29 of the committee where that is also mentioned. The EDC has had quite an ad campaign under way in recent months in this country. It is peculiar that the timing coincides with the fact that the legislation was coming before this House.

Questions were asked as to what was the advertising budget for the Export Development Corporation. It is quite interesting to see what happened. In 1973 this Crown corporation spent $1,500 on advertising. In 1974 that jumped to $12,100. In 1975 they went berserk and went to $161,000. In 1976 there was a slight reduction; they spent $128,000. Perhaps the political pressure was off. In 1977 their advertising budget went to $240,000.

In 1978 this Crown corporation, this servent of the people, spent $177,000 in the first five months of the year, up to the end of May, on advertising. Therefore I would guess that this year they are going to spend well in excess of $300,000.

Why is that money spent? Everyone in business in this country knows that we have an Export Development Corporation and that, if they want to export, they can get financial help from the EDC. If they do not know that, the EDC has easy methods of letting them know, going through the classified business directories and sending out information and notices. They do not need to have ads in the daily newspapers to make their activities familiar to businessmen.

What do we have? We have a press campaign across this country. I have here an ad from the Ottawa Journal, Thursday, June 8. Every paper in this country has this kind of propaganda exercise by the Export Development Corporation, exporting its jobs for people like you and me. That is the name of the campaign. It is on a par with the Liberal party propaganda. I quote:

That's right, Dan Siminiuh, millions of Canadian jobs depend on exports. And it's Export Development Corporation's job to finance and ensure export sales that help generate employment at home.

It goes on to say some of the things they do. This is to give the impression that millions of Canadian jobs depend on the EDC and therefore depend on the government which controls the EDC. That is what that ad is supposed to create in the minds of the Canadian people.

I have other examples here. There is a hole supplement in the Financial Post of April 29, 1978. I just happened to coincide with a second reading debate in this House when the minister had us under pressure to pass the legislation before we even had a good chance to look at it. There is a whole supplement in the Financial Post. "EDC predicts 1978 banner export year." Do you know what that supplement cost, Mr. Speaker? That supplement in the Financial Post cost—

An hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Crosbie: That is what I am looking up now. The hon. member wants to know how much. He is going to find out how much. He will get the information here today. He will not get it from the minister because he won't ask the minister. We are going to tell it as it is. He wants the Financial Post so we will look it up for him. Page 31(4).

The cost of the EDC News, by the way, was $5,500 for the last six issues. That is the average. The cost of the Financial Post advertisement was $20,872.54. That is what the cost of that was. Therefore, we have this kind of malarkey, this kind of political puffery, advertising across the country to coincide with the hoped-for election this year. At least we all thought there was going to be an election until the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) got his feet so cold that his toes curled up and disappeared.

Here is another ad which they had in the paper:

Julia Noël works for Canada Wire and Cable Ltd. in Toronto. Julia and 2,600 other people across Canada turn out products sold to about 65 countries and supported by EDC insurance and other financial services.

That's their calculated design. That is there to give the impression that all 2,600 people who work for Canada Wire and Cable Limited are dependent on EDC for the work they do. In other words everything that Canada Wire and Cable sells around the world is financed through EDC. If EDC was not there, those 2,600 people would be out of their jobs.

That is the kind of secular advertising that this Crown corporation is doing. It is exporting its jobs for people like you and me. That's right, Julia Noël. Don't tell Julia because you won't fool her.

That's right, Julia Noël, millions of Canadian jobs depend on exports. And it's Export Development Corporation's job to finance and ensure export sales that help generate employment at home.

That is to give the idea that all of our exports are financed through EDC.

You may not work for a company that exports directly. But chances are some of your company's products or services are used by others who do.

I do not have the time today to delve into all the iniquitous phrasing and wording in this iniquitous ad, which has been paid for by the taxpayers' money, while trying to put pressure on us when we are considering this legislation.

Here we have a Crown corporation suffering from a rush of arrogance and pride to the head, which spent $12,000 on advertising in 1974, spent $240,000 last year, and $177,000 in the first five months of this year. Is it any wonder we want them to come under our scrutiny and control? Is it any wonder we consider them the agency of the Liberal Party of Canada? We will change that after the next election. They will find out what party they are agents for.

That is ample support in these hearings and ads which I produced to the House today for the fact that this corporation is not acting as a Crown corporation should. It is too partisan, has been too partisan, is misusing advertising funds, and is spending too much on advertising. It is trying to cod and fool the public into believing that it finances all Canada's exports and you have to thank EDC if you work for a company or in a job that is connected with advertising. That is one point made by our leader amply borne out.

The second point he made was with regard to financing of EDC. The government has been boasting that it does not have to finance EDC, that it does not have any money in the estimates for EDC. This wonderful EDC finances itself. It can go to the bond markets and borrow money. They say it is not on the taxpayers' back at all.

I say it is like a monkey on the taxpayers' back. Every taxpayer in this country has a little EDC monkey on his back. That is where they are. Never mind that it can borrow from sources other than the government. It can borrow from sources other than the government, but why?

Our leader pointed out that the government says that loans to the EDC are not direct obligations to the taxpayers of Canada. We agree they are not. If the EDC borrows money from some source not involving the government or direct government guarantee, that is not a direct obligation of the government. However, as our leader pointed out, it is incorrect not to reflect their borrowing in our national accounts.

Let us check and see if our leader is correct. If he is not, we on this side are willing to admit it. We are very willing to admit it. We have never come across an instance yet but, if we do, we will admit it.

Let us look at issue No. 29 of the Finance committee, page 29:18. Here we have the president of the corporation, Mr. MacDonald, answering questions. I am questioning him on borrowing and so on and so forth, borrowing short term and long term. I quote:

Are they lending the money just to you, EDC, or is there any government involvement in the guarantee of repayment of that money?

MR. MACDONALD: There is no guarantee, Mr. Crosbie, but we are clearly looked upon as a Canada credit, and we benefit from that.

EDC borrows the money because they are looked on as a Canada credit. I quote from further down that same page:

THE CHAIRMAN: Did you say you had the backing of the Consolidated Revenue Fund?

MR. MACDONALD: We have a legal opinion that says the corporation is an agent of Her Majesty, and that, in effect, makes us a Canada credit. But it is not a formal guarantee.

That is the president of the corporation stating he has a legal opinion that EDC is a legal agent of Her Majesty. When the EDC borrows money, it is the same as the Government of Canada borrowing money. It is the same as taxpayers borrowing money. If EDC does not repay the money, the Government of Canada will have to repay the money. We, the taxpayers, will have to repay the money.

The government is trying to pull the wool over the eyes of the taxpayers of Canada when it does not show the loans to EDC in the national accounts because the government has not formally guaranteed those loans. It does not matter where EDC borrows the money, it is borrowing it for you and me. We do not see that in their ads, Mr. Speaker. We do not see them putting that in the Financial Post. We do not see this statement in the Financial Post, exporting its debts to people like you and me. We are going to have to repay them. We do not see the EDC advertising that fact.

Once again, right from the horse's mouth, the mouth of the president of the corporation, we find confirmed that the corporation is an agency of Her Majesty, and that when the corporation borrows money it is the same thing as the government borrowing money. The government stands responsible for it. Again, the second point made by our leader in his speech of April 27 is borne out by what went on in committee.

Our leader made a third point, a point that many of us on this side have made, including members of the NDP, the unofficial opposition, or whatever they are. Our leader pointed out that we are realizing some short-term gains for Canada in terms of encouraging exports, but we are also gathering for this country very serious long-term harm. He said:

What is happening is that Canadian money is being used to build plants abroad which will compete with plants which are already operating in Canada. Canadian money is being used now to build plants abroad whose existence outside this country may very well prevent the development and construction of plants and provision of jobs right here in Canada. In other words, we have a situation where we may be spending Canadian money now to create Canadian unemployment later.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the EDC, with glee and wholesale abandon, is financing pulp and paper mills and mines and the like about the world, using Canadian credit and money, without a thought of any kind to the long term consequence for this country. Every time we make this point to the government, or the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) makes this point—and he is much exercised about it—the only answer given is: "If we don't finance it some other nation will." That is no answer.

Why should we use Canadian money and Canadian credit to help build abroad pulp and paper mills which will perhaps put our own pulp and paper mills in Canada out of work? Even while the committee was sitting we saw a fantastic example of this very thing. This is how arrogant that group over there is, Mr. Speaker. Even while we were considering this very issue, the government made a $47 million loan agreement to support construction of a newsprint mill in Virginia. It was signed in the third week of May. The money will support the sale of Canadian equipment and construction services in Quebec and Ontario. It is being loaned to Bear Island Paper Company, a limited partnership which includes the Washington Post. In other words, people who now buy Canadian paper and pulp and paper products will no longer buy it because we are helping them to finance and produce pulp and paper in their own country. Is that short-sighted or is it not, Mr. Speaker? We say it is.

When Mr. MacDonald and the minister and his officials are asked about these things, all we meet is the same tired old refrain: "If we don't finance it, if we don't do it, some other country will." Well, I say let some other country do it. Why use our money? Let us use our money here in Canada.

Just let us see the confirmation of what I say in the committee hearings. At page 31 of issue No. 29 we discover that EDC has never turned down any loans or deals. Here is the statement:

MR. CROSBIE: Have you turned down any loans or deals at any time because you thought that in the long run it is not in Canada's interest?

MR. MACDONALD: No, because we judged it would be in Canada's interest to export rather than cut our nose off because we could not prevent them having the project anyway.

Never had EDC turned down any deals because the corporation thought it would be in our long term interest to do it. In other words, they are short term thinkers. They are short-sighted. They do not consider the long term. It is fantastic, Mr. Speaker. They do not even consider the long-term future of Canadian industry when they are making these loans. I nearly dropped from my seat when Mr. MacDonald said they had never turned down a deal because in the long run it might not be in Canada's interest.

In issue 36 we see the same kind of answer in connection with the Virginia mill I mentioned a few minutes ago. This is my question as reported at page four of issue 36:

My first question to Mr. Horner or Mr. MacDonald is that before this agreement was entered into, was any examination made of what effect this has on the long-term prospects for Canadian newsprint sales in the United States, or was any consideration given to that at all?

Mr. MacDonald replied:

Mr. Crosbie, naturally these questions arise but I think the fundamental point you have to understand, as we do, is that that mill is going to be built by the Washington Post and Dow Jones enterprise in Virginia no matter what we say.

That was his answer. Then Mr. Summer said, as reported at page 36:5:

Thus you could say that, through increase of competition, it will in fact compete with Canadian sourced newsprint.

The EDC admits that this new mill will compete with our newsprint. Consolidated Bathurst came in to discuss the issue with them and got the same flapdoodle, the same old bafflegaff, the same old twitter-twatter that we all get: "If we don't do it somebody else will."

Mr. Paproski: And Lalonde just laughs.

Mr. Crosbie: I don't mind that. I like to see the minister laugh. He is normally of somewhat sober visage. I like to see him get a chuckle out of this while our jobs and future industry go down the coal scuttle. There is ample confirmation, Mr. Speaker, of EDC using billions of our money and credit while not giving a thought to our long term future at all. They never consider whether what they do outside may compete with Canada inside. Can you imagine what would happen if the people in the pulp and paper industry and in the mining industry got that through their heads? They would be storming the EDC's gorgeous offices. They would storm those glass towers over there which the minister occupies, that emporium, that beautorium. It is futuristic. The elevators are all glass so you can see who is coming after you and get out some other door. I assume that's the reason, Mr. Speaker.

Well, sir, there is no wonder we are moving these amendments. It is surprising that our amendments are not stricter.

Another point our leader made was that every year we should examine, through parliamentary committees, how EDC is fulfilling its mandate. Our leader said we need a full-scale, thorough, and calm review of all activities of the Export Development Corporation. Well, the committee meetings we held were not all that thorough, full-scale or calm. We did our best, but we were harried and harassed every step of the way by an obdurate government with a big majority trying to crush the thing through the committee. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) one evening held off 12 Liberals by himself and saved the day for us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: They tried to rush everything through. Imagine, 12 to one. But one Tory equals 12 Liberals any day, Mr. Speaker, except that we would like a few more in this House.

Our leader in his speech on second reading also pointed out that we propose lowering of the ceiling. When he first came to our committee, the minister said he would consider that. It appeared to be something of a miracle—the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was going to be reasonable for a change, that he would not continue exhibiting the stubbornness he has shown ever since he crossed the House last year. It appeared he would be reasonable and consider our amendments. But he came back full of hubris—if that's the word. He told us later: "No, I am not going to consider any of your amendments. We are putting it through the House." He had to have it. Closure! By God, he was going to do everything to get it through the House. Thank God we only have the rest of the week, Mr. Speaker. I wouldn't want him after me in his cowboy boots all summer if we don't get this through for him. So his reasonableness disappeared very quickly. I don't know why. We are hoping he is going to swing around and support these amendments today.

I would like to refer to something said by my hon. friend from York-Simcoe. I am perhaps treading on his ground here but it was so extraordinary that I hope he will touch on it too. I want to refer to Issue 37 of the finance committee hearings, at page eight. The government is proposing a huge increase in the limits of the corporation now, but we really need to place limits on it, Mr. Speaker. Just listen to this. Mr. Stevens was speaking:

I noticed that you said this power project may be $500 to a billion dollars. Is there some level beyond which you say you cannot go?

They are into the billion dollar deals now, but there is no level beyond which they say they cannot go on the lending side or whatever side, and I am sure that the hon. member for York-Simcoe will develop that a bit further. So that is another reason why we are suggesting stricter control over this corporation, Mr. Speaker, and any corporation of the Crown led by somebody who thinks there is no level beyond which they cannot go has got to be put under some kind of restraint. I would say anticipatory arrest would be the proper step to take so that this corporation does not continue thinking that there is no level beyond which it might not go.

Well, then, we get to another point that our leader made in his same speech on the second reading, and that was a point about the number of jobs created. I think that was mentioned by our leader. I just cannot find it. He mentioned sunset laws and so on. One of the points he made, or that we make, is the question of how many jobs this corporation is really creating because, Mr. Speaker, in its pride and in its political puffery, and in its political advertising and in its efforts to help the government in a partisan sense, this corporation claims that it is creating over 200,000 jobs a year.

That is what it says in its advertising, that it is creating 200,000 jobs a year. It is contributing to Canada. When that was challenged in the committee by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), who I am sure will go into this a bit more, when he wanted to find out more about this, how they made these estimates, the minister said, "Well, what they always said was there are 200,000 jobs created or maintained". Not 200,000 new jobs, 200,000 created or maintained. He whacked in a few weasel words because he knew he could not support the 200,000 jobs. They said that they used to say "about", that they never claimed 200,000. This is the defence you will find in the evidence of our committee because we say we have no way of showing they created 200,000 jobs. So then their defence was, "Well, what we say is about 200,000".

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand here a document which gives the lie to that statement in the committee. Here is an advertisement that appeared in the Ottawa Journal on Thursday, June 8, 1978: "Exporting . . . it's jobs for people like you and me". Down in the second paragraph it says:

> Last year EDC financial support for Canadian export sales totalled $2.6 billion, which sustained or created work for at least 200,000 Canadians across the nation.

There is no "about" there. There is no shilly-shallying. They sustained and created work for at least 200,000, not about 200,000 or approximately 200,000. "For at least"—in other words, more than 200,000.

The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, who is a chartered accountant, I believe, among his many other accomplishments, inveigled the president, Mr. MacDonald, to give us a document to show how they arrived at their calculation of jobs. Well, it wasn't jobs anyway, Mr. Speaker, it was man-years. It was 200,000 man-years they were talking about. Two hundred thousand man-years is not jobs. A job might last six months or 12 months and the man may be out of work again, but man-years is a different concept. It is like the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) who got up in the famous conference, the first ministers' con job conference, in February, and he said, "There is going to be one million jobs created in big energy projects". Eighty billion dollars, and there has not been one job created yet. He wasn't talking about jobs either. He was talking about man-years. He was talking about con jobs. Those are the kinds of jobs these people are talking about, con jobs. There are about 200,000 con jobs created by their advertising each year.

So they were asked to put in their calculations and show how they arrived at it. And, Mr. Speaker, it was laughable. It was tragic in the committee, the piffling nonsense that went as an exhibit to the committee to show how they arrived at the 200,000 jobs. I am going to leave the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra to deal with that in his bright, no-nonsense, chartered accountant manner that will show there is nothing like 200,000. That is a pure work of fiction. It is completely fictional, this 200,000 that is being advertised all across Canada. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) would not have to worry about his department. He could close his department down if EDC were being truthful and correct. There would be 200,000 new jobs every year. He could shut her down, and we would save billions on the unemployment.

In issue 36, just to give you my evidence, at page 22 there is some discussion of the whole business here, and as the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra pointed out, there was no method of arriving at the figure. Mr. MacDonald said:

> —the breakdown, as I think that memorandum endeavours to explain, is the utilization of rules of thumb—

Perhaps it was 200,000 thumbs it was talking about, not 200,000 jobs. Have you ever heard such foolish baffle-gab in your life, Mr. Speaker? I will just read it again:

> Mr. Clarke, the breakdown, as I think that memorandum endeavours to explain, is the utilization of rules of thumb, which are reasonably widely accepted, based on the work-generative effect of a million dollars of expenditure per industry.

Pure and simple Ottawa baffle-gab, but we are not fooled by baffle-gab, Mr. Speaker. We can see that that is meaningless nonsense and that they have no way of showing. Then he went on further down to say:

> That is why we use the expression "about". I do not think we purport it to be a statistical head count; we said about 200,000.

In other words, it is pure fiction. Edgar Rice Burroughs, when he was thinking of Tarzan swinging through the trees, could just as easily have thought up this kind of baffle-gab "about 200,000". It was about 200,000 times Tarzan swung through the trees. "A statistical head count" of the minds. Did you ever hear anything like that, "rules of thumb"?

"Utilization of rules of thumb". Any time anybody tries to trap me into an answer when I don't know what I am talking about, I am going to get up and say, "Gentlemen, really we have to depend on rules of thumb here, and the statistical rules of thumb show that this, that and the other is correct". This man should be in politics, Mr. Speaker. It is easy to see where he is going when he leaves the Export Development Corporation. So that is the number of jobs created. One hundred seventy seven thousand dollars was spent this year on false and misleading advertising across Canada by this Crown corporation. It is a wonder we are not so nauseated that we are going to vote against this bill at third reading. I am hoping that the ministers here today will persuade their colleague to accept our amendment so that we can be sure this corporation will be back before our committee again before three and a half to five years is up so we can keep a check on them. We need a tight check rein kept on them.

We had heard that the Canadian Bankers' Association had written the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) with a copy to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, making a submission as to how things might be changed with respect to EDC. We had understood that it contained some criticism and some suggestions for change, so we asked, "Can we see the submission?" Here was a committee of your House, Mr. Speaker, considering this bill, so we asked, "Could we see the submission from the Canadian Bankers' Association?" Well, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce hopped from toe to toe and foot to foot and heel to heel, he hemmed and he hawed and he hoed, and he said he would take it under consideration. Two weeks later he took it under further consideration, and two weeks later he took it under more consideration, and he was worried what the Canadian Bankers' Association would think about it. Then he was worried what the Minister of Finance would think about it. Then he was worried what his colleagues would think about it. Then he worried what he thought about it himself, and we went through eight weeks of committee hearings, and we never did see the Canadian Bankers' Association submission.

The Canadian Bankers' Association agreed for us to see it. They said, "If the government agrees for you to see it, it is fine with us." But then the minister said no, he didn't think the Canadian Bankers' Association did agree for us to see it, and he had not had time to call Mr. Frazee to see if Mr. Frazee agreed that we could see he. He didn't even believe that, and he never did get around to checking it, so we haven't seen it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the bankers of this country made a submission to the government about the EDC, and we are considering legislation about the EDC, with a gigantic increase in its loan limits and guarantee limits, and no member of this House except maybe somebody in the cabinet—there might be one or two of them interested, or the Minister of Finance or the Minister of IT and C has seen what the Canadian Bankers' Association have suggested, so we are being asked to approve these huge increases in ignorance of that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but I must inform him that his time has expired. Nevertheless, he may continue if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Crosbie: I will be only a minute.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I heard some hon. members say no.

Mr. Crosbie: We have a lot of motions coming up, and we have lots of time to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I think it is significant that the first speaker on this side has been the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and the second will be myself. I am from Vancouver Quadra, and that indicates the Canada-wide concern which we think is being shown about this bill.

I think it would be useful on motions Nos. 1 and 3 to go through some of the history of the limits which have been set for the Export Development Corporation. This corporation is not even as old as the present administration under the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The Export Development Corporation was established by an act of parliament on October 1, 1969. In less than nine years the corporation has shown the voracious appetite of the government for increasing figures. During this fiscal year the government will produce a larger deficit than the total budget for 1968, which was the first year the Prime Minister was in office.

When the cautious little corporation, EDC, was set up in 1969, the authorized capital was $25 million. At this point that capital has been increased to $400 million. Now the government is proposing to increase that authorized capital from $400 million to $1 billion, which is more than double. I mention only the authorized capital because the proposal of the government, and therefore the amendments proposed, are named as multipliers of the authorized capital of the corporation. Similar increases are proposed in the insurance limits. They will be increased approximately four times, from $2,500 million to $10,000 million. The initial limits set in 1969 were $250 million. From 1969 to 1977 the initial limits were increased ten times, and now they are requesting an increase which would amount to another four times. Thus, 40 times the initial limits are being sought at this time. There has been a similar increase in the insurance on the government sector. The loans in the corporate sector have increased from $600 million in 1969 to the proposed $10,000 million, or ten times the $1 billion shared capital.

Why do we need these changes? I should like to refer hon. members to the list presented before the committee. It indicates the insured volume, and it is detailed by country. I will not bore the House with the list, but it is an impressive one. It consists of approximately five pages of countries, and the present insurance volume. During 1977 the total insurance in force was $1.445 billion, which is less than $1.5 billion. At that point the Export Development Corporation had a limit of $2.5 billion which was passed in 1977. Now they want us to increase that to $10 billion. It has taken all this time for them to reach $1.5 billion. Why do they now need to increase the limit from $2.5 billion to $10 billion? No evidence was adduced in the House or before the committee to justify that huge increase.

The other motion deals with the loans balances. I refer hon. members to page 30 of the Annual Report of the Export Development Corporation. It lists all of the export financing agreements signed from 1969 to 1977 under the authority of the board of directors. The signed agreements for those years total $4.3 billion. Only $2.5 billion has been paid out, and there have been repayments of approximately $700 million. The balance outstanding on these agreements and guarantees, at the end of 1977, was $1.8 billion. We are being asked to increase that limit. The existing limit is $4,250 million, but that is not adequate. With $1.8 billion outstanding, the increase being requested is up to $10 billion. So that anyone reading the motions will not be disturbed, the $10 billion is not referred to—it refers only to ten times the authorized capital, which is a nice way of soft-pedalling the enormity of the figures.

Repeatedly in committee the officials, the government and the minister were asked why the government, which is the sole shareholder, did not take up more of its shareholders' equity. Why does the government not buy some more shares, in other words? The current authorized capital is $400 million. According to the current annual report, the capital stock, of which four million shares are authorized, consists of one million issued shares which have a par value of $100 each. Simply that totals $100 million. Why does the owner of this corporation not subscribe the other $300 million? Why should it expect to increase its financing or request increases in other limits when the owner of this business is not willing to put forth the rest of the money it promised to invest?

The committee received some very fancy explanations, none of which made any sense to me as an accountant and businessman. For example, one explanation was that the government, under the rules of its association with EDC, was allowed only to make certain purchases in relation to a certain formula. It would be easier to change the formula. The government should show faith in this corporation and its business by increasing its shares and its investment.

I should like to deal with the value of EDC as far as jobs are concerned. The hon. member for St. John's West told the House a few minutes ago that the government continually referred to this 200,000 job figure. We asked and asked, but could not find out how the government justified the 200,000 jobs. Finally, the government produced a two page document entitled "The Method of Estimating the Number of Man-Years of Employment Maintained and Created, Directly and Indirectly as a Result of EDC Support". Apparently this document was drawn up on the spur of the moment. It bears no authentication of having been produced by the corporation or any of its members or employees.

I should like to refer to some of the terms used by the government in arriving at the 200,000 figure. How does the government justify its claim that 200,000 jobs are created in Canada by EDC? The introduction of this paper refers to 200,000 man-years of employment. There is a definition of "man-year" which reads as follows:

> A man-year is a measure of employment which is the equivalent of one person working for one calendar year.

The hon. member for St. John's West pointed out that man-years does not necessarily equal jobs. At times there can be more jobs than there are man-years. If a man receives a job for less than a year, it is not that much good to him. The pièce de résistance of this document is the method of calculation, which reads:

> The total number of man-years is determined as follows: the initial analysis is based upon labour generation shown by the exporter in the loan or insurance application.

Anyone requesting financing from EDC is bound to err on the generous side in order to make his application more acceptable to the government which hands over the goodies.

● (1622)

The next paragraph states:

> The subsuppliers' contribution is based on the value of Canadian goods and services reported as part of the Canadian content assessment conducted by EDC staff prior to consideration of the particular transaction by the board of directors. In cases when information is not readily available from sub-suppliers, a factor involving various industrial indices is estimated on the basis of the professional judgment of the Engineering Advisory staff of the corporation. This in turn is founded upon experience and knowledge of the particular sectors involved. The factor can vary, of course, by province, region and company. A further estimate is made of the indirect employment (measured in man-years) that is created by the transaction. The method employed is to multiply the value of the exporter's commercial contract by a job factor. These factors are obtained from a report prepared by the Government of Canada "Employment and Occupational Impacts Using the Version III Interprovincial Input-Output Model". These in turn are tested against other information provided.

I hope the House has some better success than I did in trying to figure out what that paragraph says. I want to point out to members opposite, in case they thought they understood what was said, that there are so many indefinites and so many variables included in this paragraph that reliance on the figures produced by these arithmatic gymnastics would be questionable, indeed.

Here are some of the words I read a minute ago, and I will just repeat them to indicate the variables the government is relying on in coming up with this 200,000 figure which we question. First of all it says it "is based on the value ... reported as part of the Canadian content". It states that if "information is not readily available ... a factor involving various industrial indices is estimated on the basis of the professional judgment". That is another indefinite. Then it says "This in turn is founded upon experience and knowledge of the particular sectors involved. The factor can vary, of course, by province, region and company". There are three variables in the one sentence there. It goes on to state that "A further estimate is made of the indirect employment", and then they "multiply the value of the ... contract by a job factor".

I suggest to the House that with all of those variables we come out with a complete guess. The witnesses at the committee were unable, anywhere along the line, to say they could put a hard line in respect of the 200,000 jobs claimed. When the minister, who used to be a reasonable man, in my view, was questioned about this, and he had not been there when it was first presented, and when I pointed out to him all the problems there were with this method of calculation, he said that no further information would be coming forward and that we, as the opposition, were free to draw our own conclusions from the information tabled. The conclusion we draw on this side is that there will be nothing like 200,000 jobs created by the gymnastics going on over there in the building of this monstrosity of a government-owned corporation.

I know we are going to have other motions and other debates. There are other factors which properly belong to other portions of the debate, so at this time I will let the debate on Motions Nos. 1 and 3 be continued by other members of the House.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of attention and concern to the figures produced by the speaker who proceeded me, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke). He outlined the degree to which the Export Development Corporation has been expanding over the years from 1971; in the last seven or eight years. I was not making notes of the actual figures, so I would not dare quote them. I recall one being the increase from 1971 to 1978 as 1,600 per cent. Whether that had reference to insurance coverage or capitalization, I do not know. I will leave that for the moment. However, it is symptomatic of the degree to which this corporation has decided to balloon its hold over industry.

It has been said, for example, that a very high percentage of Canada's exports of manufactured products is financed by the EDC. I suppose this is true in respect of other countries as well, but I wonder why there is not some attention being paid by the EDC, or some comparable agency in Canada, to increasing the manufacturing capacity of our industries in respect of our internal needs.

My comments during the short time available to me will be directed toward one particular sector of interest to me. This is a sector in which I have been interested for a long time. When I first came to this House my maiden speech was about maritime problems in this country and the lack of a merchant marine. It might be of interest to put on the record the extent to which this Crown corporation has been financing merchant marines of other countries around the world, even those merchant marines which carry our goods to markets around the world.

We might ask ourselves where is our merchant marine? The answer is, of course, that we have no deep sea merchant marine. We do have an inland merchant marine, but our deep sea merchant marine has been allowed to wither and die under the direction of this government, and there is no sign whatsoever that I can see of it being revived.

Let me place on the record the degree to which ships have been built in Canadian shipyards over the last seven or eight years for foreign merchant marines. These ships have been built in Canadian shipyards and man-years of employment have been provided, particularly in riveting plates and in the producing of some steel, but not in respect of design, and I will have something to say about that later if time permits.

I looked through the reports in respect of the shipbuilding industry and could find no trace of any assistance by EDC in the building of foreign ships in the years 1969 and 1970. However, 1971 was a cracker-jack year. There were twelve vessels built for France. They were 15,600 ton container ships, financed by the Export Development Corporation. They were built in two shipyards on the St. Lawrence, and the extent of the financial assistance was $83 million. In addition, there were three 80,000-ton tankers built for Greece, financed by the EDC to the extent of $43.5 million gross. At the same time there were two dry cargo vessels of 20,000 tons each, partially financed for the United Kingdom.

When all these vessels were completed—twelve for France, three for Greece, and two for the United Kingdom—they were rolled off the stocks and registered in the country which had ordered them. Presumably they are now plying the North Atlantic carrying Canadian goods to France, Greece, the U.K. and other parts of the world. This covers only 1971.

In 1972 there was nothing. Perhaps some of those vessels were being built at that time. In 1973 the enterprise was resumed and there were six vessels constructed for Panama; 16,500-ton deadweight dry cargo vessels financed or insured—I am not sure which—under the EDC to the tune of $65 million. Once again there were two more for the United Kingdom. These were 39,000-ton tankers financed to the extent of $30.4 million.

The year 1974 was another good year for what is known as the man-year operation. There was one vessel financed which was destined for the Bahamas. Bahamian registry is also a registry of convenience. It was a 37,500-ton—I suspect it was a tanker, but I did not note it—vessel financed to the extent of $14.4 million. There were also two Liberian tankers weighing 39,000 tons and financed in the amount of $16 million. Once again we are in the flags of convenience. The United Kingdom received two 39,000-ton tankers financed up to $16 million as well.

In 1975 two 17,000-ton general purpose vessels were built for Algeria and financed in the amount of $30.1 million. There were six more vessels built for Bermuda. You will note again, Mr. Speaker, a flag of convenience country. These were 31,250-ton vessels financed to the tune of $110.9 million, and there were 10 more vessels for Panama which were classified as 17,000-ton multi-purpose vessels financed to the extent of $154.9 million.

In 1976 I suppose those 18 or 20 vessels which were in two yards on the St. Lawrence seaway were working their way through the system. By 1977 there were three more vessels, this time designated for Cuba. They were 10,160-ton deadweight tankers financed to the tune of $3 million. The next situation, Mr. Speaker, is interesting. In 1977 there was one or several—I cannot quite make it out from the way it is described in the report—vessels for Senegal described as fisheries surveillance vessels financed in the amount of $4.7 million. To my knowledge, aside from the icebreakers that are under construction in Vancouver, there have been no fisheries surveillance vessels produced within the last four or five years.

What does this all add up to? How much Canadian funding has gone into the financing of ships for foreign merchant marines? If you add all those items up, there were 51 vessels produced with total financing by the EDC amounting to $592.3 million—half a billion dollars. There ought to have been some means, and I would have thought that some of our members in shipbuilding areas would have been interested in this, of getting ships of this sort built for a Canadian merchant marine to carry our goods across the oceans. We hear of all the vessels sitting in Vancouver harbour waiting to be loaded with wheat. It is not because they are waiting, but why are those vessels not Canadian owned?

What does that figure of $592.3 million in financing operations, producing 51 ships for foreign countries, mean in terms of an increase in the shipbuilding industry in Canada? It is a tragic record. In 1975 the employment in those shipyards, including the building of all those vessels I have mentioned, was something in the order of 12,800 employees. In May, 1977, it was approximately 11,800 employees. There has been a drop of 1,000 employees in the shipbuilding industry, in spite of the fact Canada built 51 ships and financed them to the point of half a billion dollars.

I realize that I am referring only to the shipbuilding industry, but where does 200,000 jobs come out of that? It is a mathematical conundrum which I cannot solve. I am not saying that all those jobs were in the shipbuilding industry, but surely, having committed $500 million to building ships for foreign merchant marines, you would think that at least the employment level would be maintained. Surely there would have been something left over in Canada in the way of permanent employment. No, the figures we are given—and I have reason to believe that they are drawn from the statistics produced by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to which EDC reports—demonstrate that as a result of this expenditure there was a drop of 1,000 jobs in the shipbuilding industry in Canada. How can we justify that sort of operation?

I would like to refine this a little bit more, but in doing so I am afraid I will have to introduce some confusion into the picture, confusion which I am not able to explain. I hope that one day the minister will be able to explain it. I would like to refer to the record so far as it relates to the contracts signed with France in the shipbuilding industry. This is drawn from the reports for 1971 to 1977, which contain a list of the contracts signed each year and the disbursements made each year. I find it totally confusing, but I think it is worth putting on the record. These are contracts for the building of vessels for France. It will be possible to correlate the dates with the figures which I gave earlier.

In 1971 contracts were signed with France for $88.71 million, and in that year, since the contracts were just beginning to work themselves out, only $1.53 million was disbursed. The next year contracts were signed for $55.61 million, and in that year only $2.28 million was disbursed. In 1973 contracts were signed for $40.74 million, and $11.67 million was disbursed. In 1974 contracts were signed for $60.896 million, and $34.510 was disbursed. What I cannot understand is that there seems to be some difference from year to year in the contracts in effect between France and Canada for the construction of these vessels. Now I come to the year 1975 when figures for the contracts signed and disbursements happen to coincide. In 1975 contracts were signed for $60.248 million, and the disbursements were $60.248. That works out, and the same occurred in 1976 when the contracts signed were for $60.230 million and the disbursements were also $60.230 million.

I think I mentioned in my earlier figures the number of vessels that were built for France in this program. I am glad that the people in the shipyards had these jobs, and I am not complaining about that. My argument is that these vessels should have been built for the Canadian merchant marine, and that the assistance which was granted to overseas purchasers should have been and should be available to Canadian enterprises if they are inclined to use it. The same number of ships, 51 ships, could quite as easily be flying the Canadian flag around the world, carrying Canadian goods from Canada and bringing imports back into the country. What does this mean in terms of our Canadian merchant shipping? I think the answer is obvious.

The following question also arises in my mind: what does it mean in terms of the Canadian maritime design capacity, or naval design capacity? What we have been doing—and I think this is the message we should extract from the figures that I have put on the record and the EDC's performance—is using Canadian welding techniques in Canadian shipyards, but we are contributing nothing to the technology that should be there and that was there, and that is part of Canada's tradition in shipbuilding. We are contributing nothing, and the EDC is contributing nothing to that distressing situation.

The Canadian naval maritime shipbuilding industry had been known for centuries until after the Second World War when it began to decline, and we are suffering as a consequence. Our shipbuilding and design capacities have withered and are in the process of disappearing as a result of the policies of this government to encourage the welding and putting together of a vessel according to someone else's design. What I fear is that this will be the history of our naval program: that we will go offshore to buy a design, to have it made up in a Canadian shipyard because it would be cheaper. Perhaps it would be cheaper in simple dollar terms in getting that hull on the waters and floating it, but would it be cheaper—and I insist that it would not—in terms of the development of the technology we should retain in this country?

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are stirring uneasily in your seat. Perhaps I could come back to this later to develop this very important notion of the loss to Canada of the technology of marine design for civil and naval purposes.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be debated at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Celebration of Canada Week; the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington)—Finance—Dumping duty on wide-flange steel beams; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen)—Finance—Dumping duty on wide-flange steel beams.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-36, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, thank you for permitting me to take part briefly in this debate. This bill authorizes the Export Development Corporation to raise $26 billion.

Since its inception in 1969 the EDC has had its authorized capital for corporate lending increased from $600 million to $10 billion. In corporation insurance, its authorization has increased from $250 million to $10 billion.

I am going to suggest to the House that, by effecting greater selectivity in the projects being supported, the corporation can have a greater impact on national and regional development. An industrial development strategy for Canada with ancillary strategies for regional growth can make the EDC a more valuable and viable instrument for economic growth. At the present time, like a man jumping on a horse and driving off in all directions, the corporation has funded industries for short-term gain, with disastrous long-range implications.

The EDC is lending $47 million to a newsprint mill in Virginia to buy Canadian-made equipment and engineering services. A coated paper mill in Kimberley, Wisconsin, is arranging a similar deal. Canadian tax dollars are funding future competitors of our pulp and paper industries. Aurele Ferlatte, Atlantic regional vice-president of the Canadian Paperworkers Union, was recently quoted in the New Brunswick press as indicating this policy could lead to the eventual unemployment of several hundred workers in the maritime region. In addition, the advanced technology used in a new mill gives it a further competitive edge.

Canada currently exports 65 per cent of its newsprint to the United States. The capacity of the new mill in Virginia will be 175,000 tons of newsprint annually, about the same as produced by the Rothesay-MacMillan mill in New Brunswick.

The EDC has lent something like $350 million to finance competing pulp and paper mills in Poland, Peru, Romania, Argentina and Iran. These mills were built with money in some cases borrowed from Canadian taxpayers, including owners and workers in the Canadian pulp and paper industry, who are, in many cases, struggling very hard to keep their doors open.

The EDC has also financed projects in a number of countries with state-planned economies such as Russia, Poland, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria, and Cuba. In these countries, because of the nature of their national economies, our competitors can enjoy an unfair advantage, aided by Canadian dollars.

EDC has financed a mini steel mill in New Jersey, and other steel operations in Texas, Minnesota, and Great Britain, with Canadian tax dollars.

In 1975 the EDC provided $30.6 million to Ireland for an aluminum development, $3 million to Peru for a copper development, $55 million to Poland for forest products development, $2 million to the United States for a steel mill, and $8 million for a lead-zinc development in Turkey. These are all sectors of development providing unhealthy competition for Canada.

I do not have to underscore the drastic erosion of our manufacturing industry in Canada and the fact that the last thing it needs is competition from beyond our borders with tax dollars supplied in part by these very same Canadian industries. We have to consider the need to enable Canadian manufacturing industries to use the Export Development Bank as a vehicle to reach foreign markets without, at the same time, financing our competitors abroad and defeating our ultimate purpose of creating good jobs for Canadians at home.

Clearly, we have to be more selective in determining the areas of natural advantage we wish to exploit so that, in the long run, our policies are not self-defeating. An industrial development strategy is urgently needed in Canada if we are to pursue our areas of natural advantage, build on our successes, and develop all regions of our country. I question whether the EDC can continue to take a shotgun approach and fund export development in every industry that comes along and in every segment of our economy. I believe that in a country with our population, wealth, and resources, we have to be more selective.

My suggestion is that we should consider as one element in an industrial development strategy making Canada self-sufficient in food and energy.

I believe, too, that by fixing the ceilings asked for in this bill at lower levels we could save an expenditure of between $8 billion and $10 billion and, if we invest a fraction of this amount in the Atlantic provinces in badly needed infrastructures, including the greater infrastructures that cry out to be done, we could enable that area of Canada to move forward on its own initiative without the handouts and subsidies that have, unfortunately, become a trademark of repeated governments of Canada. Where millions of dollars have been spent, billions are needed, not in handouts, but as an investment in an area that can pay great dividends.

The development of the ports of Halifax and Saint John, the shipbuilding industries, the Chignecto Canal, and the Fundy tidal development, together with modern highways, rail and bus lines, air service and all-weather roads, can allow this neglected region of Canada to develop a regional industrial strategy in concert with a national development strategy, and move forward on its own.

If, for example, this government used a portion of this money to build the Fundy tidal project for the maritimes, the resultant energy cost—where the fuel is free—would be the lowest in the nation, and its use in the more expensive energy mix would be a beneficial reduction in electric energy costs. At present Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island lead the nation in high energy costs.

The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is about to embark on a $1.7 million advertising program to encourage Canadians to buy Canadian. Does it make sense at the same time to spend billions of dollars building foreign plants for competitors? And right under our noses we have in our own department of Supply and Services 44 per cent of $1.9 billion spent for science and engineering going to the United States and only 2 per cent of the budget spent in the four Atlantic provinces. Clearly, our government must understand it is Canadian industries that it is supposed to help.

With the riches of the three oceans washing our shores, largely unexplored and unexploited, and the tremendous potential of fish farming and fish ranching, to say nothing of the oil that remains unexplored along our continental shelves, our own national oil company, Petro-Canada, is making token efforts in the Atlantic Ocean and is busily engaged in the exploration of oil in Pakistan, financed, of course, by Canadian dollars. The Petro-Canada and CIDA operation involves some $70 million. No wonder the EDC thinks it is proper to finance foreign competitors!

Recently in California the people gave a message to their government which was, in effect, that they are fed up with the inefficiency of government and its involvement in areas that are best left to those who wish to take the risks and receive the profits in the private sector. We must cut the cost of government, and do it now.

On two occasions I have proposed the use of a commission to blueprint areas in which the government should not be involved, and to promote greater efficiency in our administration.

The Auditor General repeatedly fingers operations where corrections are required. My suggestion to parliament today is that at this moment we have an excellent opportunity to move in that very direction. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the corporation has not justified the expansion represented by this bill.

The EDC can become an excellent vehicle for development of our foreign trade, but I believe it lacks direction and proper guidelines, and that it is trying to do too much for too many, and consuming an inappropriate percentage of our gross national product. The sum of $26 billion is equivalent to 10 per cent of the current domestic gross national product. The EDC can be made to work for Canada and Canadians, as well as for foreign interests. We know what the priorities should be. Let us get them in perspective.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks to make on this motion before we dispose of it.

I suppose there is no piece of legislation before this House, indeed before this parliament, which will be more regretted by future parliaments and certainly by the people of Canada than the passage of the Export Development Corporation legislation that is now before us, if the irresponsible lending activity that this government has engaged in is allowed to continue.

The concept of supporting export as far as our exporters are concerned was conceived with good intentions. It is a good idea to support those who are trading on behalf of Canada. It is certainly a good idea to support our exporters if they in turn are having to meet competition from other countries whose governments give financing support to those exporters. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we find in the case of EDC that a government starting without any industrial strategy whatsoever has allowed itself to become more and more dependent on a system whereby our manufacturers increasingly find that they have to sell financing instead of the goods themselves which we hope to export. That is the tragedy before us.

To hear the president of EDC, when he appeared before a committee, tell us in a rather boastful way that 40 per cent of the capital goods exported offshore as they call it—that is other than to the United States—is now financed by EDC, this is a sad testimony with respect to the state of our manufacturing industry and its competitiveness as far as world markets are concerned.

In considering the two motions of my hon. colleague I would ask hon. members to simply ask themselves this: Are they prepared either to acquiesce or possibly even vote with the government later today or tomorrow? Are they prepared to accept the consequences of the eventual write-offs that will occur with respect to the billions of dollars that this government, through EDC, is determined to make in support of the exporters who in turn are demanding this type of financing because they are no longer competitive in world markets? These are simple questions.

When we ask that these authorizations be lowered we are simply saying, "Bring in some sanity and, bring in some perspective" so that the Export Development Corporation, instead of loaning money virtually with no security and no limit in mind, will be brought down to the reality of saying, "We have to operate within a limit." The limit we are suggesting is $16 billion. Surely a $16 billion limit is not unreasonable when it is borne in mind that the total lending activity of the EDC at the present time is approximately one quarter of that amount.

What we are saying, and I emphasize this with every ounce of conviction that I can, is that we in this House are going to become party to, either today or tomorrow, should this bill ever pass, a system where almost unlimited, uncontrolled financing is going to be poured through the Export Development Corporation to foreign governments, many of which will never pay that money back to Canada in future years.

Put any figure on it you like. We are now talking in terms of $10 billion or $15 billion. I would guarantee that within five to ten years, certainly within 15 years, 25 per cent of that money will never be repaid to the Canadian public.

The most shocking thing about this is the utter deceit and misrepresentation this government is guilty of, concerning this financing. Incidentally, there is one minister in the chamber at the present time. That shows the concern they have for the Canadian public. Here we have $26 billion of authorization being requested to go to a Crown corporation, and the minister in charge, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), has not even appeared in the House today, let alone spoken on the bill. None of his acting ministers are in the House. How shocking!

Mr. Young: Play to the galleries.

Mr. Stevens: Let me make this clear. When I refer to this authorization and the fact that probably within a 15-year period we or some other government will learn that 25 per cent of the amounts involved as far as the lending activity is concerned will have to be written off, the most deceitful thing this government has done with regard to the Export Development Corporation is the pretext that the money is not an obligation of Canada.

Just look at what they have done. It used to be, in budgets that were submitted to this House, that it was very clearly set out that included under financial requirements was any financing required by Crown corporations. For example, if Petro-Canada needed money, that was included as a financial requirement of the Government of Canada. If the Export Development Corporation needed money, that was included as well. However, we now find that any reference to that type of financing has been conveniently shuffled off in our budgetary papers, to a note to the budgetary papers.

In that connection let me refer hon. members to the last budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) delivered in this House on April 10, 1978. Various financial requirements for Canada are set out. It is pointed out that the total national accounts expenditures are $49,775 million. They point out, for example, that the financial requirements, depending on whether you take a budgetary basis or a national accounts basis, are as high as $11½ billion.

Here is where the deceit comes in. It is not until you turn to page 27 of the notes of the Minister of Finance that you find he deals with the question of direct borrowing by Crown or government agencies. Here is what he says:

> In the projection of financial requirements for 1978-79, it is envisaged that such direct borrowings by agent corporations will continue, and that in particular the Export Development Corporation will raise the bulk of its requirements through direct borrowing.

In short, Crown corporations last year are recorded in this note as borrowing, in the case of Petro-Canada, Export Development Corporation, and Eldorado Nuclear, $350 million, and $463 million the year before. They now say that those requirements are not now being reflected in the general financial requirements of the government. I call that deceitful. It is misrepresenting the facts.

They have taken a base year which included such Petro-Canada and Export Development Corporation borrowings, included that as their inflated base year figure, and compared current expenditure and financial requirement figures against that base without making it clear on the face of their statement that the Petro-Canada and Export Development Corporation type of borrowing is not now being included in the gross figures. That is a serious misrepresentation of the facts. Unfortunately, future generations of Canada will have to pay the penalty that this government is now putting on their backs.

It has become very popular for some of the Grit supporters, who I notice are not speaking today, to say, why would you ask us to include the borrowings of Crown agencies when in fact they are borrowing the money on their own account? The inference is that somehow the covenant of Canada, the people of Canada, does not go with that borrowing. However, as so often happens in the secrecy that shrouds this government, it is on the American side that we learn the facts. It is not within this House, and certainly not general as far as Canadian information is concerned.

A very elaborate presentation was made to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Various schedules are set out in that, including a schedule which is simply a reproduction of the Export Development Corporation's type of prospectus which was filed in Washington concerning the Export Development Corporation raising funds in the United States.

I find this interesting. The one I have before me is dated June, 1977. The two parties involved are Salomon Brothers and Wood Gundy Incorporated. The amount being raised by the Export Development Corporation in the United States is $50 million U.S., due August 1982. On page 12 of this circular we find the following very interesting comment. Under "Description of the notes", it states:

> The notes will be direct, unsecured general obligations of EDC and as such will constitute obligations of Her Majesty in Right of Canada. Payment of principal of and interest on the notes will be a charge on and payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada. The issuance of the notes is subject to the approval of the Minister of Finance of Canada and the notes will be created pursuant to resolutions of EDC's board of directors.

That is what this government is telling the Americans who are loaning Export Development Corporation the funds. They are boldly stating that any money loaned to Export Development Corporation, to use their words:

> —will constitute obligations of Her Majesty in Right of Canada. Payment of principal of and interest on the notes will be a charge on and payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Imagine the utter deceit of this government, knowing that is the legal statement they are making in Washington when they file that clearance of these notes, turning around and in their budgetary presentation saying there is no need to refer to any borrowings as far as the Export Development Corporation is concerned because they are doing that in their own name. It is not true. The fact is, year in and year out, there will be added to the direct obligation of Canada billions of dollars in the name of the EDC, with no budgetary reference being made to them, until the day comes when massive write-offs will need to be made with respect to those borrowings. There is going to be a build-up year after year.

On the one hand, the EDC is binding the people of Canada; on the other hand it is making loans under questionable convenants around the world. How fast does the minister see the volume of lending activity rising? It is estimated that by 1981 the corporation will have $12,300 million outstanding. The corporation will have more than $12 billion of exposure under some type of convenant around the world, and I am saying that of this amount about 25 per cent will be non-collectible between five and 15 years from now. We are playing a game for the sake of supporting an exporter for a year or two, lending money to other countries and hoping to be repaid in five to 15 years' time.

In our questioning of Mr. MacDonald we naturally asked whether there had been any write-offs already—had there been any cash drains as a result of loans coming a cropper. First of all, Mr. MacDonald said, "No, no, we are really clean; we have never experienced a default." But here again we come up against the utter deceit practised by the government in power, because different facts emerged from the American documentation. I invite hon. members to look at the circular to which I have referred. On page six, we find this interesting revelation. The Americans were told that since the inception of the program loan payments totalling $61.2 million had been rescheduled of which $15.9 million had been repaid by December 31, 1976. The statement continued:

Interest rates on rescheduled loans have been generally at the same or higher rates. On other loans, principal installments totalling $1.8 million were overdue at December 31, 1976. No loans have been written off since inception of the international lending program but one loan was cancelled at no loss to EDC under an arrangement with the Government of Canada to cancel a corresponding amount due from EDC.

I call particular attention to that last sentence. How clever this artful dodger of a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is. The truth is that when we pressed this point we found the corporation to be in unbelievable trouble with the Bangla Desh loan. What happened? Rather than accept the loss through EDC the government lent the money to Bangla Desh on the understanding Bangla Desh would repay the money to the corporation.

Mr. Speaker, every phoney finance company in the world has played the game EDC is trying to play when they get into trouble with loans. That is the cop-out. Reschedule the loan, charge a new interest rate, get the other party to sign, and forget about it. And if you really reach the point at which the debt must be written off, call somebody else in to give the cash to the defaulter, thus putting him in the clear. Mr. Speaker, that is no way in which a Crown corporation should be operating. It only emphasizes the precarious position in which we find ourselves when the Minister of Finance lacks the courage to reflect this enormous borrowing in its own budget, and when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce does not even have the courage to come into the House and respond to criticism of his own bill requesting authorization for $26 billion.

Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you what is happening down in Peru with respect to some of these lending activities.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will need unanimous consent to do so, because his time has now expired.

An hon. Member: No!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am not clear whether there is unanimous consent or not.

Some hon. Members: No!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It appears there is no consent.

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I hope the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) will forgive me for raising a point of order before he begins, but in view of the importance of these two amendments I wonder whether there is to be some sort of response from the government side. We have not heard a word from the government side this afternoon. We have been listening only to Tories.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is asking the Chair to answer a question with regard to which the Chair has no influence. I am just here to apply the rules of the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I do not object at all to the comments made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). We are dealing with amendments which involve millions upon millions of dollars and I find it almost unbelievable that the minister who is principally involved, the minister who is piloting the measure through the House, should not be here to give some answers to the pointed questions which are being raised concerning the operations of the EDC.

The average citizen cannot comprehend the magnitude of the amounts involved. The average citizen can relate, for example, to the expenditure of $180 by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for ash trays in his office. He can understand, for example, the expenditure of $8,000 for a sofa in the Prime Minister's office. But he cannot comprehend the size of the amounts we are talking about under this proposal to extend the financial limits under which the EDC is allowed to operate. With scarcely any information being given us on this subject it is no wonder parliament and the country's institutions in general are falling into disrepute.

It is difficult to understand why no one on the government side is willing to stand up and at least attempt to give some justification for what is being proposed. I want to give an example of the kind of secrecy which shrouds the operation of this corporation. There are considerations here about which, for the life of me, I cannot understand why we are not receiving more information. Is there something we should read into the failure on the part of government spokesmen to bring forward this information?

Just recently much attention has been given to the Bell Canada contract with Saudi Arabia. I suppose it is appropriate that we talk about Saudi Arabia. The Saudi Arabian oil minister is here visiting our Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie). They are in Alberta now. I do not know what the Saudi Arabian minister is here for. Perhaps he is going to buy the Alberta tar sands, for all we know. We get no information from this government. It is a closed shop. We have absolutely no information with respect to the operation of Bell's contract with Saudi Arabia. We have been denied access to the contract, even though it has been called for by an independent commission set up by this parliament for the people of Canada. The Human Rights Commission has asked for access to that contract, but that request was denied. An application to the CRTC was also denied.

This contract has been the subject of much public attention regarding boycott provisions and an apparent undertaking by Bell that it has no existing or outstanding contracts with the Israelis. The contract is also interesting because of other provisions which have come to light, not through any disclosure on the part of the Government of Canada or EDC which is, in effect, providing insurance, and not through any disclosure by the CRTC, which is a regulatory agency now considering an application by Bell for a substantial rate increase which will bring something in the vicinity of $171 million to the company in revenue this year, and another $398 million next year.

The information we get about this contract comes through the securities and exchange commission of the United States. What information do we get about this contract, which is being insured by the EDC? We find that Bell Canada, through this contract, is paying $88 million to Saudi Arabian business interests. Let us do some simple mathematics. I believe $88 million is about 8 per cent of the total contract. That is a round figure, but it amounts to about one half what Bell Canada is asking for in increased fees. It is a little less than one half the $171 million. We find this out, not through any of our own government agencies and not through disclosure requested by as important a body as the Human Rights Commission, but through the American Securities and Exchange Commission.

What is the next step? Mr. Ben Tierney of Southam News in Washington thought this was rather vague. We are paying $88 million to Saudi Arabian business interests. The president of Bell Canada was asked what this is all about. The response was a flat no, that there would be no information forthcoming as to the nature of the payments, nor to whom these payments will be made. The point here is that the EDC is involved, and the whole question of accountability is very much on the minds of parliamentarians who are participating in this debate, and of Canadians generally. We are not talking about an $8,000 sofa, as expensive as that may be, in the Prime Minister's office. We are talking about $88 million. Perhaps that does not impress hon. members opposite. Perhaps they would ask, "What's $88 million", to paraphrase a famous statement made by one of their predecessors. However, I find this to be endemic of the attitude which this government takes with respect to disclosure. It is also endemic of the attitude the government takes with respect to the operation of the EDC.

The chairman of the EDC was questioned in committee with respect to the Bell contract. He gave general responses with respect to the boycott provision, but what about this $88 million? Are we to assume that these are payments similar to the payments which have been made by AECL and which have come under some criticism by thoughtful people, and certainly by taxpayers who wonder what is happening to their money?

What kind of system are we living in when the EDC can take the attitude, as has been outlined by my colleagues, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and other speakers on this side of the House, that it has absolutely no responsibility for reporting its activities or for accounting for them to the representatives of the people of Canada? What kind of rationale is there on the part of a government which now asks us to increase vastly the amount the EDC should have available to it when we have clear indications, as the hon. member for York-Simcoe has pointed out, that until there is any default—and even then I do not know whether the EDC will be subject to being asked questions or giving answers—there is a lack of accountability? The government and its supporters seem to want to force this bill through.

The facts surrounding this contract between Bell Canada and the Saudi Arabian government are an example of the kind of attitude the EDC has brought into its affairs. It accounts only to itself. It feels it has no responsibility for accounting to parliament. Who is to say that there is any accounting to the minister? What controls are we going to have—or can we look forward to in the future—on the basis of what has apparently transpired in the past and the record of the EDC as far as legitimate requests for information are concerned?

We have been spending much time debating the question of freedom of information. The question here is whether we should have a meaningful freedom of information bill brought forward. One after another hon. members opposite rise in their places and talk about how much they believe in freedom of information. In open convention the Liberal party passes resolutions supporting the concept of freedom of information and of independent reviews of applications for information, yet every time we come forward with requests for information concerning the operations of Crown agencies and the government itself, the argument of the government seems consistently to be that our parliamentary system dictates that the government should make the decisions in these matters and that every few years—four conventionally, but with this government perhaps five and a half or longer, whenever the Prime Minister has the courage to call an election—the people of Canada will speak.

The argument is that the people of Canada will speak as to whether the government has been withholding information. Well, I hope and trust that in the next election the question of withholding information which the Canadian people ought to have will play a key part in electoral decisions, because no thinking Canadian can support the position this government has taken throughout its mandate.

● (1732)

As far as EDC involvement is concerned, a line of insurance worth $430 million is being provided in this particular transaction with Bell Canada. This transaction involves modernization and expansion of that company's telephone system. In view of the fact that this transaction is supported by the Export Development Corporation to that extent, I think the minister should be in the House. He should rise in the House and tell us whether any of the $88 million payment, if made in Canada, would violate Canadian law. That is not an idle request.

I referred to the example of AECL making kickback payments. Whenever government agencies refuse to give information with respect to payments of enormous amounts of money, such as this $88 million, I do not think I am being overly suspicious or irresponsible in wondering what those payments are all about. Have we reached a point in government where the contract is the thing? Are we to accept the rationale of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), with regard to the question of the Arab boycott, that somehow it is more important for Canadians to have this contract than to stand up for the civil rights and liberties of a large number of Canadian citizens with Jewish backgrounds?

It boggles the mind that hon. members would vote in support of this particular proposition, when information respecting this enormous amount of money is not forthcoming. This is almost a matter of right. If there is nothing to hide, and if this is a legitimate expenditure of money, why is there reluctance to make disclosure of this information? If services are to be performed by Saudi Arabian business concerns, we should receive a reasonable accounting of the reasons. We would be prepared to facilitate the transaction and be supportive of EDC if we were given the information by which we could make a reasonable, proper judgment.

What we have received is silence, a very ominous silence. On the basis of the record of the government, it is almost an axiomatic rule that where there is silence, there is a political reason for the government wanting that information concealed. There is a reason for this government veering away from having an independent arbiter making a decision concerning applications for information. Once a decision is taken as to whether information should be made available to Canadians and parliamentarians, and once it is taken out of the control of government, an awful lot of information which may not be beneficial to the government will come out. I hope I am wrong.

I did not intend to participate in this debate. On listening to the remarks of the hon. member for York-Simcoe and considering this particular transaction as an example of the incredible insolence with which EDC, other government agencies and the government have dealt with this particular matter, it is time to stand up to the government. We must let the government know that we will press as hard as possible for a proper accounting and for freedom of information in this country.

When we form the government after the next election, under the leadership of the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), freedom of information legislation will be brought forward and passed. It will be effective legislation and not the second class proposal the government is putting forth now. The government wants an information commissioner with powers similar to those of the Auditor General. He will be able to make recommendations but his decisions will not be binding on the government.

Perhaps we can be critical of Americans in many respects. They are our next-door neighbours. We see a lot of them, and we know what is going on there. But there is a lot in the American system respecting disclosure which we should pay particular attention to and perhaps emulate in the interests of good government, regardless of which party forms the government. I say that in a non-partisan sense. I am not suggesting that we are saints on this side and that the devils are on the other side. But unless there is a meaningful freedom of information mechanism, there will be a temptation for whatever party makes up the government to conceal in order to perpetuate its own political administration. If a different tone was set, this country would have the benefit of a better government. This is something government members should pay more attention to.

The only way members of parliament can receive information concerning Canadian activities is by operating through the freedom of information legislation in the United States. We are faced with going through the securities and exchange commission of the United States in order to determine what is happening, for example, in respect of Bell Canada. Under their regulations and legislation, they require a prospectus to be filed. Presumably they pulled teeth in order to receive information concerning the $88 million.

I see my time is fast coming to a close. Perhaps I will pursue this matter on another occasion when this bill is discussed. I thank the House for its attention.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of becoming involved in this debate, but after listening to the remarks of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn), suddenly I realized how important this bill is. Earlier I heard it was of some significance because there is a move afoot which Canadians are not fully aware of in terms of the ultimate repercussions. Of course, this has been clearly articulated by my colleagues.

We are attempting to indicate that apparently the government thinks EDC is the panacea for the ills of the world, and that it should have some $26 billion at its disposal in order to finance, insure and guarantee loans to various countries throughout the world. Apparently the government does not understand that the Canadian private sector needs assistance as well. It is turning a deaf ear and a closed eye to the problems of the pulp and paper industry and the steel industry, just to name two.

● (1742)

I am from the city of Hamilton where we have the greatest steel company in the world. How long will that steel company last when we have this government, through EDC, subsidizing steel mills in the United States and throughout the world? How long can it possibly last? I want to stand up and be counted among those against this sort of thing, because it is something that in the long run, for some alleged short-term gains, will put us in very difficult circumstances years down the road. In other words, we are attempting to bankrupt the future of our young people who are even now crying out for help.

An hon. Member: Sold down the river.

Mr. Alexander: Someone says they are being sold down the river. Our young people are looking for more leadership than this government is prepared to give.

There is something else about this whole thing that bothers me. The EDC apparently dislikes members of parliament criticizing its actions. We are elected by our constituents throughout this nation to stand up and be counted and to bring about constructive criticism when we feel it is required. We then have members of a Crown corporation or an agency, whatever you want to call it, who are not accountable to parliament, getting very angry about such criticism. They even go so far as to prepare and send out a bulletin for the edification of the people of Canada. I do not know what this is supposed to be all about, but under the heading "EDC NEWS", dated January-February 1978, there is an article which is in reply to a highly respected member of parliament who, having seen the direction in which the EDC was going, wrote an article which was published in a number of newspapers. The first thing that happened was the EDC replied in this newsletter, or whatever it is, at page 2 in the following words:

> In an article that recently appeared in a number of local newspapers, Conservative MP William C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton) called for the abolition of EDC and charged that it was a "threat to the future of some of (Canada's) domestic industries".

The article then has a series of reasons why that hon. member was wrong. This corporation is trying to flim flam and bamboozle the Canadian public. That hon. member had every right to bring to the attention of the Canadian people what he thought was wrong because, unlike members of the government, he realizes that questions are being asked about what is going on. That hon. member was in fact stating that the EDC is providing a lot of money to finance our competition abroad. That is what the hon. member was suggesting. Members of the EDC did not like that criticism, so they got their brain trust together, their lawyers, accountants and speech writers, and prepared this article castigating the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott).

The second question that should be asked is, should the Government of Canada use taxpayers' money to commit loans in respect of industries that will eventually hurt our own struggling companies? That was the second question asked by the hon. member. The EDC did not like that and went even further than preparing this article; it conducted a $20,000 advertising campaign in the Financial Post, again to flimflam and bamboozle the Canadian people about the amount of employment EDC was creating.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar and others who have taken part in committee hearings have tried to determine just how the EDC created the supposed 200,000 jobs. They have not met with success as yet. As the hon. member for York-Simcoe has indicated, this is all a farce and a fraud perpetrated against the Canadian people.

Just let me refer again to this document which is headed "The Method of Estimating the Number of Man-Years of Employment Maintained and Created, Directly and Indirectly as a Result of EDC Support". This is another document issued by those people who are trying to bamboozle not only the Canadian public but, in this case, members of parliament. They did not get away with that because of the efficiency, credibility and intelligence of our financial critic, the hon. member for York-Simcoe, who gets on top of issues like this, holding on as though with the tentacles of an octopus until his opponents cave in under the pressure. Apparently the EDC gave in under that pressure because it is now seeking the sympathy of the Canadian people through a campaign of advertising and articles of this kind in issues of their own news magazine.

Officials of the EDC apparently want carte blanche from the government in respect to all they are doing. On the other hand, the Canadian people are wondering why our pulp and paper industry is going down the drain while at the same time this government, through the EDC, is lending money for the development of the pulp and paper industry outside Canada. The Canadian people were never stupid, and as a result of television they are no longer uninformed. They now realize there is something wrong with the leadership we have been getting.

The people of Canada know that the Steel Company of Canada and the steel company in Saskatchewan will be supplying pipe for the Alaska pipeline. They know that this will be for the betterment of Canadian life. What they cannot understand is why we are lending money, some $70 million, in order to build steel mills in Texas, Minnesota and New Jersey. This is absolute nonsense. We are attempting to be competitive, and I suggest we can succeed, but why is this government through the EDC trying to undermine the Steel Company of Canada and related industries?

I cannot sit idly by knowing that these things are happening. I have to stand and be counted as one of those who wants to know what is going on.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But we have to give Ford money to get it to come to Canada.

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member says we have to give Ford money to get it to come to Canada. We do not understand the priorities on that side of the House. No wonder the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) did not go to the people. I remember the Prime Minister going down to Toronto and holding Mr. Evans' hand. He is going to lose as well. In any event, the election machinery was in place and rolling. Apparently those in government felt they had bamboozled the Canadian public for just about ten years and this was another opportunity to do the same.

An hon. Member: They were all oiled up.

Mr. Alexander: They were oiled up and the machinery was moving once again. The Messiah over there was going to bring about national unity. The Messiah was going to wrestle inflation to the ground again. The Messiah was going to create—

An hon. Member: Come off it.

Mr. Alexander: We hear from the Minister of State (Environment) (Mr. Marchand). We do not hear from him often because he does not understand his job. That party over there was saying to the Canadian people that they can solve our problems. I know they always feel they have control in Quebec. That is what the Prime Minister thinks but I do not know whether he still has Quebec in hand after the sales tax argument we heard around here over the past several weeks. That government over there lowered the boom on that debate. It brought in closure and cut off criticism by the opposition. Hon. members opposite like to interrupt and feel that we should not be allowed to speak. I intend to continue to speak in the hope of saying something for the edification of the people, not for that group over there. They do not want me to talk. They do not want the opposition to talk. They cannot stand criticism. I intend to continue to talk and I will ask for extra time if necessary.

An hon. Member: Tell us more about the Messiah.

Mr. Alexander: The Messiah was saying that his party would bring about national unity. Has he forgotten that he has been in parliament as Prime Minister and the leader of this country for ten years? Because he has brought about national disunity. To make a long story short, he did not solve inflation. There has been no growth. Our growth will be lucky to hit the 3 per cent level in spite of the fact the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) says it will be 5 per cent. We cannot believe him, however, because every statement which his officials give to him with respect to growth, employment and inflation has been wrong, wrong in such a way that no one can plan anything because no one knows what is going on.

● (1752)

What I am trying to say is that Canadians have lost confidence in this government. It is confidence which they thought they had until the polls came in vis-à-vis the province of Ontario; then they were shocked. They ran. They were all geared up and the machinery was well oiled until they saw that Ontario does not love the Prime Minister any more. He has had the biscuit. This government cannot bamboozle the Canadian people any more.

The strange thing about it is that there are only two ministers here, the Minister of State (Environment), who does not know what this bill is about—

Mr. Marchand: I know as much about it as you do.

Mr. Alexander: —and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen), who has a lot of problems. I do feel sorry for him because he has so many problems with respect to creating jobs. But I look at my old friend the Minister of Employment and Immigration and I say, "Doesn't he understand what this bill is all about?" Why doesn't he stand up and say "Well, I've looked at it, it looks good but I really don't know; we think that in the short run it is good, or in the short run it is bad." I say that in the short run it may be good but in the long run this bill is a monstrosity. The members on the other side should at least have the decency and courtesy to stand up and speak on it. They are just looking at me. I know I am handsome. I say to them, "Don't look at me; read your bill and understand what is going on."

Mr. Marchand: How are you voting on the bill?

Mr. Alexander: There is the Minister of State (Environment) again. We only have to follow our spokesman. The spokesman knows what he is going to do, as I always do when I have the carriage of a bill. We over here know what we are going to do, but what are the people opposite doing? What do they think of this bill that is trying to bamboozle the Canadian people out of $26 billion? Is the Minister of State (Environment), Mr. Speaker, going to stand up and talk instead of sitting in his chair? That is no way to debate; you have to be a man or woman and stand up in this House and let your thoughts come out. There has not been one member of the Liberal party who has had the decency or courage to stand up and say, "We will give the government position." Usually there is at least a parliamentary secretary who will stand up and give the government's point of view. That is the most I have heard the Minister of State (Environment) say in this House, and he is always speaking from his chair. One of these days, Mr. Speaker, we are going to hear—

Mr. Lumley: Stonewalling.

Mr. Alexander: Stonewalling. There is the parliamentary secretary who bamboozled the provinces with respect to Bill C-56. Some of the provinces were blackmailed into going along with the bill, and before they knew it they were paying the people of Quebec $85 and forgetting the poor people. That is the attitude which the parliamentary secretary has, and yet they say that they are treating all provinces equally.

This bill is worthy of more comment, particularly from the Liberal side. The Canadian people are asking themselves why the government is paying more attention to offshore industry than to the plight of our own industry which in the long run will make this country more viable and bring about an economy which we can hand to our children. The Canadian people are saying, for example, "Why are you not interested in the pulp and paper industry?" It is slowly going down the drain and needs the uplift of a financial commitment. Surely we have the human resources and the people ready, willing and able to work. How long are our industries going to be second class citizens in Canada as opposed to world industry? It is no wonder this government did not go to the people.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that our motion is merely stating—

An hon. Member: Keep on going.

Mr. Alexander: An hon. member has said to keep on going; I certainly will.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe spoke on the crisis in Peru. This is certainly a disaster, and the hon. member does not even know what is going on.

Mr. Paproski: Lots of hanky-panky.

Mr. Alexander: I would like to quote from, I believe it is, the Toronto Star, but I will hold it up in case some members wish to have their research assistants follow it up. The heading of the article is "Canadian bankers nervous as Peru nears bankruptcy", and it says:

> The Canadian Export Development Corporation, which in effect ensures Canadian investment and sales abroad, stands to lose a further $72 million if Peru goes belly-up.

It seems everybody knows about Peru except the Export Development Corporation and the Liberal government in Ottawa.

Mr. Paproski: Jack Horner.

Mr. Alexander: I will not even mention his name.

Our motion states that rather than allotting $26 billion, which is up from $8 billion in terms of financing guarantees, the EDC should be happy with $16 billion. This government should be delighted that we at least let them know we understand there is a role for EDC, but not at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer. That is all we are talking about.

I want to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me an opportunity to put forth those few unprepared comments, but they must have struck home because as yet I do not see a member on the other side trying to stand up and say, "Well, the hon. member for Hamilton West has a point. He has been mean, he has been tough, but he has been wrong and therefore I want to challenge him. I want to stand and challenge the hon. member for Hamilton West." I would like to see hon. members opposite let me know, because I do not know everything. I know a lot, but I do not know everything.

I thought that at least there would be one member who would stand up and show me where I went wrong, but as yet there has been nobody, in spite of the fact we have two ministers present, the Minister of State (Environment), who wants to sit on his fanny and throw smart-alecky remarks across the floor, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The minister of employment has nothing to say because he has other work, but I am ashamed of my long-standing friend, who knows what this bill is all about and that one of his roles is to create an environment whereby we have the necessary jobs to reduce that figure of one million and over in the hidden jobless. That is his role, sir, but the minister remains silent. The minister is a member of the class of '68, as I am, and he has had a very meteoric rise. I will not say that I am ashamed of him because I do not think that that would be honest; but I would ask him why he does not stand up and be counted.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see you are just going to rise; I am going to sit.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) is quite right, I was just attempting to rise. Earlier I had expressed some concern about motion No. 5 standing in the name of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). A few minutes ago I attempted to indicate to members who are involved or intend to be involved with this discussion that I would return to the chair at this minute in order to try to inject some certainty into the situation. I wanted to interrupt the process of procedural arguments, since we have spent this afternoon on this question and given it some time prior to this afternoon's sitting.

I attempted to sound a warning to the House about the practice that we were following with respect to motion No. 5. I think the Chair must always be careful to distinguish between procedural matters and matters of policy or practice. They can come close together, and certainly this is one of those occasions.

I find that an examination of the precedents indicates that there is not just one but several examples of the kind of motion put forward by the hon. member for York-Simcoe which have become part of the legislation, such as the Air Canada Act, the CNR financing and guarantee act, both of them of recent memory, and quite a number of others which I have collected this afternoon. Therefore, I want to say that I would not be able to justify on procedural grounds intervention in the hon. member's motion. On the basis of precedents I think it would be a departure from the practice which we have followed recently for the Chair to intervene in the motion of the hon. member for York-Simcoe and for the House not to go ahead with debate and decision on it.

However, I think I should warn the House that we began with two rather excellent examples, with two strong cases. The first was the Auditor General's report, and the second was the statutory instruments committee. The House wanted to ensure that the Auditor General's report was automatically referred upon tabling to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. That objective is so meritorious as to scarcely find any difference of opinion in any corner of the House. However, we should remember that we appropriately amended the Standing Orders to that effect.

With respect to the statutory instruments committee we also amended the Standing Orders to give effect to the design that any statutory instrument, any regulation, be automatically referred, or, in other words, that the committee have authority to examine any statutory instrument or regulation. Otherwise, there would be no purpose for the committee to exist, if it had to wait for an order of reference. It is there as a safeguard against an abuse of power contained in statutory instruments or regulations, and therefore it should have authority to look into every regulation as it is passed.

Those two specific purposes resulted in corresponding amendments to our Standing Orders. Both of those had a clear and explicit purpose. Now we have moved to clauses which say that reports of Crown corporations, once tabled, will be referred automatically to a standing committee. Once again a very meritorious objective, but there is no concurrent amendment to the Standing Orders. That is one very important step away from the original example.

In the forthcoming report stage of the oil and gas measure to which I referred earlier, an amendment has been passed in committee which takes it one step further again. Because in this respect—and I think we will have to look at it very carefully—no report was to be filed, no order was to be made by any board, no statutory instrument and no regulations would be passed; in fact, nothing would take place except that five years hence the act, which is on the statute books, will be referred to a committee. The language of the act suggests that several committees may be involved because several committees may claim jurisdiction, and they are all required, by the language of the statute, to activate themselves, to work quickly and deliberately and to report to parliament.

It may be that procedurally I am stretching too far in trying to stop the practice, and perhaps it is clarity and draftsmanship that is concerned here; but I will not intervene in the motion of the hon. member for York-Simcoe, because examples of it have been repeated in the statute books several times previously and it is exactly in conformity with those provisions, as he said earlier today.

However, I am now worried that we have gone one step further in the oil and gas measure, because there is no intervening step, no initiative taken by any member of parliament, not that parliament will review the practice in the situation with respect to the bill, but that automatically, without any action on the part of any person, without the tabling of any order or regulation or the filing of any report, there is a reference to a standing committee, not to parliament. If that is not bad procedure, it is certainly a vague and dangerous practice.

I simply want to say to the House that the motion of the hon. member for York-Simcoe is procedurally acceptable. However, it seems to be used as a steppingstone to another practice in the oil and gas measure which is close to being too vague to be acceptable on procedural grounds; and if it is acceptable on procedural grounds, it is certainly a dangerous practice in terms of attempting to predict five years into the future, with lack of precision as to how it will be accomplished.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I warn members that when that measure comes forward we should look at it again, whether this week or whenever it comes before us. We should receive the arguments that have been prepared now to see whether it is not too great an extension of the principle which was established on stronger grounds than the ones we find now.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your ruling with respect to motion No. 5, but in line with your thinking, in which you have raised considerable doubt concerning a similar provision in the oil and gas legislation, I wonder if you have directed your thoughts to Bill C-60, the constitution bill, which seems to be the ultimate extension of what I think is giving you some trouble in that it is proposed in the bill to make various provisions somehow or other binding on future parliaments. I wonder if before that bill is debated some thought could be given as to whether or not it is procedurally out of order.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6:10 p.m. the House took recess.

● (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I understand the vote on motion No. 1 will dispose of motion No. 3.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe there was some understanding that there would be a deferred vote on the various motions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): My understanding of the Standing Orders is that the Chair has the right to postpone the vote until both motions are disposed of.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt motion No. 3?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The division is deferred pursuant to Standing Order.

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West) moved:

Motion No. 2.

That Bill C-36, An Act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out line 3 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"shall not at any time exceed two billion".

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C-36, an act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out line 12 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"shall not at any time exceed one billion".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In accordance with a ruling made earlier today by Mr. Speaker, a vote on motion No. 2 will dispose of motion No. 4.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of these two amendments is once again to try and hold within a reasonable limit the amount of authority that this House will delegate to the Export Development Corporation. The first amendment to clause 3 has to do with the ceiling for contingent liabilities of the Export Development Corporation. The government's amendment proposes to change it to $3,500 million and the present authority is $1 billion in contingent liabilities. Our amendment suggests that the amount should be $2 billion, for the same reasons that I outlined earlier today, because the ceiling the government is now suggesting would keep the Export Development Corporation from the scrutiny of parliament and the House of Commons for too long a period of time, namely three and a half to five years. We do not think their record justifies that kind of authority being given to them.

The other motion we will consider at the same time is an amendment to clause 5, line 12 at page 5. This has to do with the government account. As hon. members know, there is a government account and a corporate account for the Export Development Corporation. In the corporate account, they exercise their own authority. In the government account, the government may direct them to do certain things. The government stands directly behind the liability if matters are unsuccessful.

Certain loans are entirely at the government's risk. As the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and I explained earlier today, all of these loans are at the government's risk. The corporation itself has admitted it is an agent of the Crown. It has a legal opinion saying the Crown must stand behind all its debts and obligations. The legislation before the House wants to fix the ceiling for the government account at $2,500 million, whereas at the present time it is $850 million. We suggest that that be reduced to $1 billion, which should be ample. It may require the corporation to come back to us for more authority in a couple of years.

One of the peculiar things about the Export Development Corporation is that the Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Loiselle) said in committee there is going to be new legislation regarding the EDC brought in this fall. It is going to change around its operation in some way or another. Why do these huge increases then have to be secured for the EDC in light of that? That is a bit of a puzzle.

It is also a bit of a puzzle as to why the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) wanted to ram this bill through the House so quickly last March or April. He tried to get our finance critic to agree to rush through this legislation on an emergency basis with practically no debate because it was of such great importance. Naturally, our finance critic, being the man of character and probity that he is, would not agree to that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: He said he would have to give it our normal penetrating scrutiny, which we have done. We have given it that X-ray vision. The $6 million men on this side have given it intensive scrutiny and have found it wanting. Unfortunately that is what we have found.

When I was speaking earlier this afternoon, members opposite would not let me go on past my 40-minute allotment. I could have finished all my remarks this afternoon. I would then have gotten up this evening and said that I have already covered the ground. Now they have so irritated me that I feel I must go another 40 minutes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: If they behave themselves while I am speaking, I may be able to shorten it a bit. Any interruptions will make me very, very irascible.

This afternoon I was discussing the Bankers Association and how the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce did not want us to see a communication that had been sent to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and myself by the Bankers Association. We were informed, of course, that there was no reason why we could not see it.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said he did not go along with the banks. He did not think the banks really knew what they were doing. He let one or two asides like that slip through. Of course, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is an expert on banks. He said he did not altogether agree with what the banks were doing and just because they had certain views on this legislation was no reason why we had to pay any attention to them. To make sure we would not pay any attention to them, he would not make public this submission from the Canadian Bankers Association.

We can only assume that their views were not the most favourable. They obviously were not favourable to the government's ears. I leave it there because we do not know what their views were. However, if they were anything like our views, they are unprintable.

I want to touch on another inconsistent matter in the government's policy. We were told by Mr. MacDonald, the president, in our committee hearings that the EDC will positively not have anything to do with Rhodesia. Rhodesia is not on the list. It does not matter what commercial sense it makes to finance a transaction with Rhodesia, Rhodesia is just not with us. I think it is still called Rhodesia and not Zimbabwe.

The corporation says the government has no power or authority regarding to whom they lend. However, if the government issues an official communication and passes an order in council that it has no relationship with Rhodesia, EDC will not finance a transaction with Rhodesia.

This was indeed welcome news, that if the government had passed an order in council or had a policy of not having anything to do with Rhodesia, EDC would not have anything to do with Rhodesia. One gained the impression from Mr. MacDonald that if the government passed an order in council that would be all that they needed to have something to do with them. However, he said it was their policy not to finance transactions with countries no longer ad idem with the Canadian public.

He was then asked about Cuba, whether EDC was still prepared to finance transactions with Cuba. We know that Cuba has a particularly soft spot in the heart of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He is heart to heart with Fidel Castro. He has been beard to beard with him in the past.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: In fact, they liked each other so much at one time that, as our former Prime Minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), said, he tried to canoe to Cuba from Florida, unsuccessfully. That would have been one of the great meetings of 1960 if we had been privileged to see that.

In any event, the Prime Minister has a very soft spot in his heart for him. We asked about Cuba because the Prime Minister has gotten a bit irascible about Cuba lately with all the bother in Africa, there being tens of thousands of Cubans in Africa. They are buzzing around like an African bee, stirring up trouble, stinging the economy and going into Mozambique, or whatever it is called these days. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, I am not the international affairs critic. It is hard to keep up with these names.

In any event, the Cubans are becoming a bit of a nuisance in Africa. The Prime Minister said in this House that we are not going to give Cuba anything else. He said they are not going to be on our gift list any longer. Therefore, we asked the president whether this would have any effect on EDC, whether EDC was still going to finance transactions with Cuba. We know that the minister of amateur sport and fitness, or amateur fitness and sport, or amateur fit sport or whatever it is, went to Cuba over Christmas.

Mr. Paproski: The minister in charge of gambling.

Mr. Crosbie: The minister in charge of lottery and gambling went to Cuba over Christmas. Apparently we are still allowed to go there as tourists even though one minister is saying we should spend all our touring time in Canada. However, I do not want to get nasty and point at any inconsistencies about government action.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Hon. members opposite are very touchy. There must be an election coming in the next 12 months some time and they are getting very nervous. As I was saying, we asked whether EDC would still finance a transaction with Cuba. Lo and behold, Rhodesia is out and Cuba is in. If a commercial transaction comes along with Cuba, Cuba will be looked after. Therefore, Cuba is in and Rhodesia is out. They are on different continents; I suppose that accounts for the difference.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) asked about Taiwan. Lo and behold, Taiwan is out and Cuba is in. The poor Taiwanese cannot get a bone or a sou. They cannot get a low interest loan from the EDC. It does not matter how good a piece of business it is for Canada, they cannot do any business with Taiwan. Nor can they do any business with Rhodesia. However, they can do it with Cuba, the U.S.S.R., Czechoslovakia, Poland and every other communist country in the world. They can do it with the high countries, the low countries, the mighty countries, but they cannot do it with Taiwan and Rhodesia.

The policy of this government is supposed to be all business. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is all business. He does not want to have anything to do with outlawing and making illegal boycotts in the Arab-Israeli situation. He does not want to spoil Canadian trade and commerce with the Middle East and Arab countries. Therefore, he does not want to make the Arab-Israeli boycott illegal. He wants to allow Canadians to boycott Israel if they do not have to come to the government for assistance to do it. He will not assist them in doing it, but if they want to do it on their own, it is perfectly all right. However, it apparently is not all right for the EDC to do business with Rhodesia and Taiwan.

We can't make cheese of one and chalk of the other. Has the country got a policy or hasn't it? Does it do business with the devil or anyone else who wants to do business with it, or does it not? In the committee, the minister said that we would do business with the devil if it was in the interests of Canada to do business with the devil. But apparently the Rhodesian devils and the Taiwanese devils are not in the same class as the Cuban devils. So we have discrimination now among devils and I intend to ask the Human Rights Commissioner, Mr. Gordon Fairweather, to examine this policy; it doesn't make much sense to me.

Either a country is going to base its foreign policy on human rights or some kind of moral consideration which we are told by the practised diplomats is not the right thing to do—it is apparently tricky and dangerous to make moral judgments on what happens in the rest of the world—or it is not. If we are going to make the moral judgment that Rhodesia is out and that Taiwan is out, then in my opinion we should make other moral judgments. There are a lot of other countries in the world just as bad in their domestic policy, in my view, as Rhodesia and Taiwan. In most of the world there are dictatorships of one sort or the other so it cannot be that we are knocking out Rhodesia and Taiwan because they have dictatorships.

What is the reason? One reason, of course, is that we want to be friendly with Red China and Red China does not want us to have anything to do with Taiwan. That is quite understandable. There are other reasons in the case of Rhodesia. But I say it is an inconsistency that this corporation, which lends Canadian money at low interest rates and uses Canadian credit, is still permitted to do so in Cuba and everywhere else in the world except Taiwan and Rhodesia. It makes no sense and it is time the government thought out a policy which is consistent. Perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) can put his well-honed mind to work on this matter and get things worked out, or at least talked out. If we could only hear him talk in those soporific tones of his on the matter, I am sure it would satisfy everybody in this House who wished to be satisfied by listening to him. We want a new policy in that direction.

What about rescheduling debt? My hon. friend from York-Simcoe spoke this afternoon about rescheduling debt. We were told by Mr. MacDonald and his associates at EDC not to be concerned about the billions of dollars that EDC is lending and guaranteeing. We were told not to be concerned because, after all, they are lending to sovereign nations and no one ever has a bad debt dealing with a sovereign country. Did you ever hear such absolute—no, I'm not going to allow myself to be pushed into rudeness by the vacuity of the answer we received from the officials of the corporation that when you lend money to a sovereign country you don't have to be worried because you are always going to get your money back. Has anybody thought about all those countries in the first world war from which nobody ever got their money back? The bonds are still floating around and are discounted to about one cent on the dollar. Has anyone ever wondered about sovereignty in these instances? What kind of bellywash, what kind of codswallop, what kind of tripe—to use a term that all the farmers and fishermen in this chamber will understand. What kind of tripe and codswallop is it, Mr. Speaker, to say that because you lend to a sovereign nation you are going to get your money back?

Who is going to get their money back from "Zairy"? It is hara kiri to lend to "Zairy", or Zaire, to use the correct pronunciation. They are all rallying around at the moment because there is a bit of an external threat to Zaire. We all know there was an invasion, and it might happen again, and everybody is rallying around. But those people who have made loans to Zaire are very worried gentlemen. The great American banks and the international banks and the countries which got involved all realize they are not going to get their money back from Zaire, at least not for a long, long time—maybe a hundred years. Anybody who pays off a Canadian loan in a hundred years time will only be paying about 1/1,000 of the value at the rate of inflation we are seeing today, Mr. Speaker.

Then there is Peru. The hon. member for York-Simcoe mentioned Peru earlier. And in the committee we were told EDC were having problems in Biafra. They are having problems with Turkey. Mexico is looked on with a bit of a jaundiced eye, and India and Pakistan are not all that good. So here is the EDC telling us not to worry about the money they are lending, not to worry about the $26 billion, because they are going to lend it to sovereign countries. Just because it is a sovereign country does not mean you are going to get your money back. We don't swallow that. The hon. members on the other side who are so interested in this debate that they are listening with avid attention to every detail and intend to spring to their feet to try to reply to what I am saying do not believe it for one minute.

The EDC has a lot of shaky money out, and it is going to come due some day. Then they will have to come to this House and tell us about it, because they are an agent of the Crown in right of Canada. This House has to stand behind them and when the Zaire loan goes, and the Peru loan goes, and the Afghani loan goes—if there is an Afghani loan—and the Biafran loan goes, we'll see the minister down trying to lasso the llamas. He'll be in Peru trying to get our money back. He's probably got a chattel mortgage on the llamas down there—off on the last round-up.

Mr. Railton: I want my money back after listening to you!

Mr. Crosbie: There is the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton). We have a canal right here in the chamber at low tide.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Don't believe for one moment the story that the EDC are putting out—that there is nothing to worry about in connection with our money. There is plenty to worry about.

We have seen the situation in reverse. I will not mention the place where a certain export credit guarantee department got a little shellacking on the financial side here in Canada. Isn't that an inconsistency? If you try to put up an oil refinery or some kind of installation down in the maritimes you have to go over to England to get the credit and the loans you need. You have to buy English equipment and spend all the money in England. Here we have our own export credit department and they are financing oil refineries and everything else throughout the rest of the world. What kind of a crazy, mixed-up world do we have? It is time for us to have our own domestic EDC here in Canada, as my leader has suggested. When we get in next year I am sure we will be sailing full speed ahead on that one.

We have to be concerned about rescheduling the debt and that is why we want the committee back next year. We want an assurance that we will be back so that we can see what has happened to these loans in the meantime.

Does anyone recall reading about Indonesia in the last two or three months and how all the smart American bankers, those debonair and sophisticated bankers who had slashed their money out all over the world, got together in a huddle because Indonesia was going down the spout. Pertomax, or whatever the name of the company was, had the great monopoly. I won't say what part of the body was going up; all are familiar with that expression. All these banks had to get together and be concerned about Indonesia which has tremendous oil resources, oil wells, and yet was unable to meet its obligations. The loans had to be stretched out. Hon. members had better be prepared to see what kind of loss the EDC is going to take.

Evidence before the committee showed that the EDC first put forward proposals to the government for extended limits last fall. That is to be found in issue 29 on page 39. Last October or November, EDC told the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that it had to have the limits increased—that they were going to run out of funds some time this year. The minister dawdled and fiddled around, he diddle-diddled around and talked to his cabinet colleagues. He went out and around at Christmas and he toured his district and worried about his district and he almost changed his district. He should have changed his district—he should leave Alberta if he has any hope of being re-elected. He did all of those things and he did nothing about the EDC legislation. Then he had the gall to come to our financial critic in April and say he had legislation he wanted to see whistle through the House in 24 hours, otherwise he was going to tell Canadian exporters that we were holding up their credit and ruining Canadian export trade.

Where is the minister today? He is supposed to be in Toronto trying to deal with the auto schmozzle, the auto mess, the auto shag-up, the auto round-up. That's where he is today. Otto is blotto and Jack is up in Toronto. And he is probably blotto too, trying to deal with the auto pact. So no wonder he is not here. I don't blame him for not being here. If I had this mess on my plate I would be in Toronto too. Instead of that we are here trying to do business of the country.

Next year you boys will be out. You are going to be on this side and we are going to be over there. We'll be listening to all your foolish criticisms. You may as well get used to it. We will be there solving the problems.

Another interesting point—there are so many interesting points that it is lucky we have a lot of amendments here. The president of the corporation told the committee that EDC had between $6 billion and $7 billion out in the form of obligations. In other words, Mr. Speaker, what happens is that you want to do a deal in some foreign country and you come to EDC and they consider it and they may agree, "Yes, we can do your deal." It's a $100 million deal. "Yes, if it goes ahead as you project it is going to go ahead, we will stand behind you for the $100 million."

Now, that is not legal. That is in the form of a comfort letter or a moral commitment but not a legal commitment. It might be a year or two years before the EDC actually has to enter into a legal commitment for the $100 million or even advance the $100 million, and while we are talking here in this House now—and this was information that came two or three weeks ago—there were $6 billion to $7 billion out in letters from the EDC to various companies and firms and so on in Canada giving them commitments that the EDC would finance various deals that they were hoping they were going to be able to carry on. So their obligations and liabilities are not just what is outstanding at the moment or what is legally committed at the moment; there is another $6 billion or $7 billion apparently that they are committed to in a moral sense and they would look and the country would look and the government would look very bad if they ever went back on it.

That $6 billion or $7 billion is well past their limit. I think that is right, hon. member for York-Simcoe; the $6 billion or $7 billion added to what they have spent to date would be well past their limits?

Mr. Stevens: Sure.

Mr. Crosbie: So the EDC has gone well past their limits that are set in the legislation that is now before the House.

Mr. Stevens: That is their problem.

Mr. Crosbie: That is their problem, as the hon. member for York Simcoe says. In these letters of commitment, not legally binding, they have gone well beyond the present limits in the legislation now. That raises the question: Can we have a Crown corporation that can put us in the position where we have got to follow through whether we like it or not on obligations and commitments that they enter into, not just the legal ones but the ones where they have given people a handshake or a commitment that we would have to follow through if we were individuals? I think that if that is the case, then it certainly behooves us to look very carefully at who is doing what in the EDC and to whom.

I spoke this afternoon on the alarming Goldfarbian tendencies of the advertising of the EDC—I do not need to go into that in any great particular tonight—their misleading advertising, the politically partisan advertising, Liberal—fudging of figures, Goldfarbian tendencies; and it is quite obvious that for upward mobility in the executive ranks of the EDC you might have to be ready to do some Grit grovelling. Grit grovelling will get you ahead, and this is reflected in their advertising.

By the way, this afternoon from time to time there was not one minister in the House. Not one, not a single one. The House is usually vacant of ministers when they are here, but this afternoon it was physically vacant as well when this $26 billion bill was going through.

So, Mr. Speaker, to sum up those several points, the EDC is far too sanguine about the credit risk it is taking. They are not concerned. I mean, what's $26 billion? What's a billion here, what's a billion there? That was the attitude of the EDC. You should have been at the committee to see it. Old C. D. Howe said "What's a million?", and we practically all dropped our teeth. The whole country practically collapsed. He said, "What's a million?", and here is an outfit that says, "What's $26 billion?" They are very sanguine, very easy going, very nonchalant about credit risks and sovereignty. They are the world's greatest exponents of sovereignty. I never heard so much talk about it until I got into the committee, and I think we are going to have to see a lot more of this bunch so that they learn just what they are up to and the responsibilities they have got.

The Americans are at this very moment considering their export policy. This is interesting, Mr. Speaker, because down in the United States the legislative branch has some real authority. It has some real get-up-and-go. It has some power. It can make the executive shake with anxiety when the legislative branch decides to do something. Here we are captive of the executive and their members on the other side who do as they are told to do and as they are bidden. But not in the United States. The legislature is the legislature, not the eunuch we are here. Our House of Commons today is eunuchized. The American House of Representatives and the Senate still have everything they should have.

Now they are trying to search for a new export policy down in the United States. One of the interesting things is, imagine if we put this amendment and it was carried by the House. Well, what a pleasure it would be to look over at the ministerial ranks the next day and and see their faces. One of the things is that the Senate banking committee now has legislation going through the Senate and the House on the EX-IM bank down there. They are moving the loan ceiling up to $40 billion from $25 billion. The Senate banking panel tacked on a requirement that the administration submit to Congress a list of countries eligible for EX-IM credit based on their performance in such matters as—listen to this, Mr. Speaker—human rights, nuclear proliferation and environmental protection.

I think this is a good example for our government to give us. Give us a list of countries, and we will put them in the legislation if we find them eligible, and we look at their performance in human rights, nuclear proliferation and environmental protection. If it was our government they would be saying, "Yes, nuclear proliferation, they must buy a Candu or they won't get our credit". As for human rights, I don't know what their criterion is, or environmental protection either.

This is what Congress is doing down in the United States. Congress itself has decided who they think is credit worthy, and they may attach to the legislation what countries, country by country, are eligible for credit. That is a country that still has a legislative branch, not a bunch of tame pussycats like we have in Canada—on the government side of the House. On this side they are not tame. So, Mr. Speaker, export policy is being looked at down in the United States and also in Britain.

Mr. Pelletier: You lost the punch line.

Mr. Crosbie: I will give you a punch if I get close enough to you. Mr. Speaker, in May and June of 1978 we had another issue of the EDC News. "EDC undertakes largest-ever financing". Every time you look at EDC financing it is the largest ever, and this was a $730 million job, a natural gas processing plant in Algeria. There is no doubt about it, those Algerians need a lot of help.

In Ottawa the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce commented. Well, that is no surprise. My surprise in looking at this issue is that he didn't have his picture in it. The last time I looked at the EDC News he had his picture in French and English sections. In this one here it is only the president, Mr. MacDonald, who has his picture, not the minister. The minister slipped up.

This deal is going to create a job ripple. I suppose that job ripple is over in Algeria. It is not going to make much of a ripple in Canada. The EDC 1977 annual report revealed record levels of business, 200,000 jobs for Canadians. I touched on that this afternoon; I will not go into it any more. The figure was never substantiated. "EDC issues the largest one-time insurance cover". Everything is the largest. "EDC's Halifax office officially opened". They have an office in Halifax. They have no office in St. John's yet. If they get an office in St. John's, then we will see what happens next year when they come up before us, but so far they are only in Halifax. They believe a mari usque ad mare or whatever it is—from sea to sea—means from Halifax to Vancouver. They are leaving out the most important part of the country. They have appointed a communications head. Thank God for that because communications haven't had much of a head in the last year or so.

I mentioned this afternoon about the EDC and their funding of two U.S. paper mills. That is a great body we've got there. I suppose we are going to apply to the Americans to give us lend-lease to get our pulp and paper while we are funding theirs down there. I quote from the Globe and Mail of June 8:

> Export Development Corp. is finding itself under fire from the pulp and paper industry for helping finance two paper mill expansions in the United States, both of which will produce paper grades that compete with Canadian products . . . $47 million to a newsprint mill in Virginia—

Here is a comment from the pulp and paper industry of Canada:

> In a recent speech at a Conference Board in Canada seminar, J. Ian McGibbon, vice-president of finance for Abitibi Paper Co. Ltd. of Toronto, said the EDC's action can "hardly be seen as an expression of confidence in the long term outlook for the Canadian industry."

What is the Minister of Finance doing? The Minister of Finance is trying to perk up the Canadian economy in his own pitiful way, and he is having no success, and he has been Minister of Finance now for what, nine or ten months? He is trying to perk it up, and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has got the EDC trying to perk up the American economy. What about perking up ours? The Minister of Finance of this government has been licensed by the Prime Minister. He is 007. He is licensed to kill the Canadian economy. James Bond rides again, and all they are able to do with all these billions of dollars in the EDC is help out the economies in other countries.

I want to quote again. I am not the author of these words. The author is Mr. McGibbon of Abitibi. It can "hardly be seen as an expression of confidence in the long-term outlook for the Canadian industry". It is robbing Peter to pay Paul, and Peter is here in Canada and Paul is anywhere in the world except Canada. What kind of an outfit is governing the country? The left hand doesn't know what the right hand is doing.

● (2042)

We saw that illustrated one night when the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) spoke on a matter about which he knew nothing. That was the pipeline from Alaska down to the United States. He did not know that there had been a study by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. We raised certain questions, he gave certain figures, and he looked piteously to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The look in his eyes said: "Help me, please, Jack, help me". Naturally he received no help from "Jack" because "Jack" knew nothing about the report himself; it was only his department.

To go on with the Globe and Mail observations:

Other industry observers have said such loans are an insult to the Canadian industry since Canadian tax dollars are funding the industry's future competitors.

The official opposition did not say that. It was not the NDP opposition. It was not the Social Credit. It was not the independent members. They were not politicians at all who said this. We have made the point here for the last few months that it was the industry. Such loans are an insult to the Canadian industry since Canadian tax dollars are funding the industry's future competitors. What kind of a country cuts its own throat in such a stupid manner? Just to get a few construction jobs for 12 months or 15 months, we are going to build pulp and paper mills in the United States, give them every assistance, low interest cost loans and every assistance under creation. So they put up their own pulp and paper mills, and that is another couple of hundred thousand tons of newsprint that we cannot sell to the United States in the future. What kind of a policy is that?

When we ask about it, we get the stupid answer, the ridiculous answer, "If we don't finance it, someone else will". Well, let some other fool finance it. Why should we do it? Imagine the stupidity of that answer—"If we don't finance it, someone else will". Let the Canadian idiots finance it; that is their answer. Let us be idiots and do it, and not have some other idiots elsewhere do it.

The article continues:

An EDC spokesman said that the corporation would not make such loans if it meant providing a unique Canadian technology to a foreign country, thereby weakening a Canadian industry's unique position.

Have you ever heard such trash? They would not do it in that situation, but they do not mind doing it if it is not a unique Canadian technology. If it is an industry that is not unique, if it is an industry that is already exposed to international competition, and if it is an industry that is already half to its knees, then go ahead and give it a boost. That is what that statement says. Have you ever in your life heard such junk? An EDC spokesman said that it would not make such loans if it meant providing a unique Canadian technology to a foreign country. It continues:

In the case of the loan to Bear Island Paper Co. for its mill near Richmond, Va., however, Canadian suppliers are competing with those in other countries that can produce similar equipment and also provide financing. If the services and machinery were not bought from Canada, they would have been bought elsewhere, he said . . .

That is their justification. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has taken the same stance. Of course he has taken the same stance, and he has taken the same dance. If they take a different stance tomorrow, he will take that stance. If it changes the day after, he will take that stance, because he does not know what stance to take. He only knows that it is his job to take whatever stance they take.

A second mill, the Richmond mill, will be owned jointly by Bato Co. and Dow Jones. Bato Co. should be the name of EDC. The article continues:

The Richmond mill will be owned jointly by Bato Co., Dow Jones and Co. Inc. and Washington Post Co. Both Dow Jones and Washington Post now buy newsprint from mills in which they are partners in Canada, as well as from other Canadian newsprint suppliers.

Are they going to do it in the future, not in a year and a half or two years, or not because they are going to produce their own? Financed by Canada, they are going to produce their own news points down in the States, and they will not be buying any more from mills in which they are partners in Canada as well as from other Canadian newsprint suppliers. Well, there is no point in beating the thing to death; I just point that out. We have pointed it out in committee and nobody listened. Nobody on the government side cares. We have to hope that the public is listening and caring.

Mr. Boulanger: That is not what the Gallup poll shows.

Mr. Crosbie: Did I hear somebody speak over there?

Mr. Boulanger: That is not what the Gallup poll shows.

Mr. Crosbie: If the Gallup is so good, why do we not gallop to the polls? Why are we not clop-clopping there now? We all thought in July that we were going to be at the old polls, and that we would see whether Gallup was right or wrong. The hon. Prime Minister's feet are so cold that he walks backwards these days.

I mentioned the edition of the Financial Post, the special one on EDC which cost $20,000. Here is a statement that I would like to see EDC prove. This is what I was saying. It is like truth in lending. You should not have to pass legislation to make Crown corporations tell the truth. The ad on the back page of the Financial Post supplement reads as follows: "At EDC, we finance export sales".

That was an astounding bit of information. It continues:

We can also insure them. Or we can guarantee Canadian investments abroad—every dollar thus invested returns an average of $7 in payments, contracts and jobs here at home.

Now, I say, prove it. They are unable to prove that they have created 200,000 jobs a year. I want to see EDC show us how every dollar thus invested—whatever that means, because we do not know how it was invested, whether it was insurance, a guarantee or how they did it—returns an average of $7 in payments, contracts and jobs here at home. That is the kind of thing that makes one suspicious of this Crown corporation. That makes one suspect that it is untrustworthy. It makes one suspect that it is a little like that fellow whose nose grew all the time, every time he told a lie, Baron Munchausen. His nose got bigger. There are noses here in Ottawa that would be so long they could not move if we had the same kind of thing going on here. It says that for every dollar spent, there is $7 in payments, contracts and jobs here at home. Do you wonder that we are a little bit suspicious as to what EDC is doing, how well they are doing, what they are doing, and what will be found out in five or ten years time about it?

I am coming to the end of my remarks, I am afraid.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I want to give hon. members a little theme song which I thought up for EDC. It is patterned after the old engineers' song at university.

We are, we are, we are, we are, we are the EDC
We shall, we shall, we shall, we shall from parliament be free
From parliamentary control and general scrutiny
So boys go in and obfuscate.

The last line does not rhyme, but it gives you the picture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman who is on our committee will be asking me, "Where is the French translation?" I have not got that yet. That sums up what we have found to be the general pattern of operations of the EDC—obfuscation and a general desire not to have any parliamentary control. The EDC generally thinks that it is under control now by having the minister. If that is control, it is certainly easy to get along with.

I have a song for the minister too, but he is not here tonight.

An hon. Member: Sing it anyway.

Mr. Crosbie: All right. It goes:

Yippy yi qui yea, I'm on my way
Back to the saddle again
Back on the ranch with time to learn French,
Yippy yi qui yea.

That is where the minister is going to be when the election is called, the one which the Gallup poll shows is so desirable. I wonder why it has not been called to date. The hon. gentleman looked very cross today. He was a cross patch today, particularly when he found out that Canada's handkerchiefs and neckerchiefs were all made in Japan. I bet they were financed by EDC.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: In ending, as I do not want to keep this House unduly, the Auditor General made some remarks in 1975 on EDC which we should also keep in mind. One of the points he made which I think is well worth remembering, is that Crown corporation loan financing derived from external sources should be restricted, and where deemed necessary it should be subject to appropriate parliamentary review through budget submission. That is something for us to keep in mind when we hear these proud boasts that EDC and other corporations do not have to borrow their money directly from the government, that they can go out and borrow on their own. When they borrow on their own, they are still borrowing with you and I behind them, Mr. Speaker. When they borrow, they should be made to come before us so that we can give them a thorough examination.

In ending these remarks—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish I could make rhymes and recite poetry like the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), but I will have to stick to the basics!

This is a very interesting bill. I am sure many Canadian industries and municipalities wish that such a bill was being drafted for them to assist with their problems, which I will go into in a moment. This bill says the proposed amendment to subsection 11(1) would increase the authorized capital of the Export Development Corporation from $400 million to $1 billion and the number of shares from four million to ten million.

● (2052)

We have a number of problems in Winnipeg. Our mayor, Robert Steen, has been dealing with the federal government and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in respect of aid for an overpass in that city. We need a new bridge at this point and if we could get some financial assistance from the federal government in building this much needed overpass it would create a number of jobs in the Winnipeg area. We would be buying steel, bolts, cement and so on for its construction. The Winnipeg Free Press covered this subject last week when it stated:

Half of all federal urban transit money coming to Manitoba during the next five years must be committed to the Sherbrook-McGregor overpass before Ottawa will consider giving more money for the $17.8 million project, Mayor Robert Steen of Winnipeg said Wednesday.

But the Mayor also confirmed that the financial offer by federal Transport Minister, Otto Lang is vague and promises "no specific amount"—

When it comes to Tasmania, Zaire and all the rest of those countries there is absolutely no squabble at all and the money is made available immediately. The article goes on to state:

Revealing details of last week's secret federal proposal for the first time, Steen said Ottawa has asked the province to earmark $5 million of its five-year, $10.2 million grant from the federal urban transportation assistance program to the project immediately.

There have been a number of delays, much procrastination and stalling on this. The mayor has been down here looking for aid for a large, needed storm sewer in Winnipeg, the construction of which would create thousands of man-hours of work. Just consider all the material that would be needed, and which could be purchased from eastern Canada and elsewhere to build this much needed storm sewer. This would certainly create a tremendous number of jobs in the Winnipeg area and in industry throughout Canada.

In an article in the Tribune of June 23 it is stated:

A motion to give the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce the job of attracting industry to Winnipeg will go to city council with the shaky support of executive policy committee.

The six-member committee split on the proposal, with mayor Bob Steen using his second, tie-breaking vote to approve the motion four to three.

The council proposal would give the chamber a six-year contract to study proposed economic development in Winnipeg starting September 1 with the city funding the effort by giving the chamber $200,000 a year. In Winnipeg we have continually to struggle to get storm sewers built, to get support for much needed projects, and struggle along trying to attract industry, while at the same time we are pouring billions of dollars out to other countries.

The hon. member for St. John's West referred to recent criticism by the paper mill industry in Canada. There was a rebuttal to charges made by Mr. Ian McGibbon, Vice-President of Finance for the Abitibi Paper Company. The article I have states:

An EDC spokesman said that the corporation would not make such loans if it meant providing a unique Canadian technology to a foreign country, thereby weakening a Canadian industry's unique position.

In the case of the loan to Bear Island Paper Co. for its mill near Richmond, Va., however, Canadian suppliers are competing with those in other countries that can produce similar equipment and also provide financing. If the services and machinery were not bought from Canada, they would have been bought elsewhere—

As the hon. member for St. John's West pointed out, that is a very strange rationale.

There are two factors involved here. There is criticism in respect of assistance in establishing paper mills outside Canada, and there is the clear indication that the EDC and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) are not consulting with the paper mill industry of this country. They make their rebuttals after they find out about what is going on outside the country. Mr. McGibbon pointed out that:

—one mill will produce the equivalent to half of total Canadian capacity manufactured by Abitibi at its Thunder Bay Provincial Paper mill and by Kruger Pulp and Paper Co. Ltd in Trois-Rivières, Que. It is a grade that is able to gain duty-free access to Canadian markets, although Mr. McGibbon is not suggesting the mill is being built for that purpose.

The Richmond newsprint mill will be larger than Abitibi's Thunder Bay mill, Mr. McGibbon said.

There is an open conflict there, and I am wondering why. In 1976 there was a special report compiled for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce entitled "How to Improve Business-Government Relations in Canada". This was forwarded to the government in 1976. It suggested that the way to improve business-government relations in Canada is by consultation with industry. After reading the article I just quoted and referred to by the hon. member for St. John's West, it is obvious that these people are not working toward improved business-government relations in Canada.

The chairman of the task force that compiled this document in 1976, Mr. Roy MacLaren, pointed out to the then minister, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien):

I have the pleasure to present to you my report "How to Improve Relations between Business and Government in Canada".

The preparation of this report has benefited from the part-time assistance of members of the Task Force on Business/Government Interface (established earlier this year) and from the contributions of senior public servants, a wide range of businessmen across Canada, and the staff of several research institutes.

This is a very noble approach, but it is unfortunate the government has not carried out its recommendations. This study no doubt cost the Canadian taxpayer the usual $250,000, as most studies do, but, like most other studies, it has been absolutely ignored by this government. It is stated in this document:

The need for understanding and co-operation between business and governments in Canada must be evident to all those who believe that a mixed economy is the system best suited to Canada's current needs. Yet few today are satisfied with the state of understanding and co-operation.

That statement certainly is correct. There seems to be a complete lack of understanding and co-operation. We hear these continual complaints from small businessmen in Canada who are having such great difficulty obtaining financial assistance. We know about this by virtue of the number of bankruptcies taking place in the country today. The number is increasing at a terrible rate.

This report goes on to state:

The work of building greater rapport between business and government must be predicated upon clear commitment by both sectors. That work will necessarily be cumulative, with confidence begetting confidence. It will not be sudden; the structure will be built only by brick being placed upon brick. Concurrently, the yet broader task of developing tripartite understanding can be pursued upon a more certain basis.

This is a very interesting document which also points out the following about business perceptions:

We have reviewed the evolution of relations between business and government in Canada, suggested some future trends and noted some general differences in approach between Canada and other OECD member states. Let us now describe in more detail the varied flavour of current perceptions of governments by Canadian business leaders by quoting from our conversations with them:

● (2102)

Co-ordination between governments and business is a prerequisite to the implementation of a successful approach to industrial development during the 1970s . . . but far too many contacts between government and industry continue to be coloured by attitudes such as "them" (government) and "us" (industry), as if we did not have mutual objectives.

The less government there is, the better our company likes it.

It is too bad that they do not concentrate more on dealing with Canadian businesses and municipalities with their much needed projects. If the government is going to spend billions of dollars abroad, they could at least direct some of that money into the municipalities. I have given some excellent examples of what we require in Winnipeg, but the city has to go it alone and get the runaround from the Minister of Transport in its attempts to obtain a few dollars to build a much needed bridge and much needed storm sewer. This government's priority, however, is to pump millions of dollars into other countries around the world.

Also in this book, "How to Improve Business-Government Relations", they go on to say:

—a rejection of the idea that business is just another interest group and the corollary conviction that business and labour together create the necessary economic underpinning for the existence of interest groups; a fear that there is no stable ground on which to take a stand between a market-based, investor oriented system on the one hand and "socialism" on the other. Governments are seen as moving increasingly large sums away from the producers to less productive elements in society;

Of course, we are moving large sums away from Canada to assist other countries.

We hear a lot about referendums today. If there was a referendum taken today in regard to EDC and the amount of loans we are making around the world, you would probably find that 95 per cent of the Canadian population would oppose a lot of those loans in light of Canada's current situation of one million unemployed and the high number of bankruptcies.

Another problem with the policies of this government is that it is driving business and investment out of the country. In the first quarter of this year, $1.6 billion of investment money left Canada, more than the whole of last year's total, which was $1.3 billion. The trend here is very dangerous with capital and business leaving the country and the government placing a higher priority on assisting other countries and establishing businesses in these other countries. Canada has many bankruptcies and many cities that need financial aid. If these cities had this financial aid, they would be buying goods and services in Canada, which in turn would create employment.

I hope that the parliamentary secretary or somebody on the government side will bring this document to the attention of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. One of the first things the minister should do is to take a second look at the tremendous amount of money the government is requesting for the EDC and start directing it toward some of our Canadian cities which need the money more than many of these foreign countries.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The import of the motions now before us, Mr. Speaker, is to impose certain restraints on the limits available to the EDC in its loans. One motion applies to clause 4(a) which reads:

The total of

(a) the liability of foreign customers for the repayment of the principal amount amount under all loans made by the Corporation pursuant to section 29—

That is in reference to motion No. 3. Clause 4 also provides that the total liability——shall not at any time exceed an amount equal to ten times the authorized capital of the Corporation.

What has been suggested in this motion by my friend from St. John's West is that the total liability shall not at any time exceed $2 billion. The other motion is somewhat similar but under a different heading—that the loan shall not at any time exceed $1 billion, whereas we are being asked by this government to accept that the limit shall not exceed $2,500 million. In other words, we are trying to impose a certain restraint upon the corporation because of the excessive manner in which it is seeking to free itself from coming back to parliament for a greater mandate.

When I was speaking this afternoon on the previous amendment, I had a similar purpose in mind when I referred to the shipbuilding industry and the fact that there had been 51 foreign flag vessels financed by the EDC over the past seven or eight years amounting to approximately $500 million, and the fact that in the last four years the shipbuilding industry had lost approximately 1,000 men. The government, however, claims that the purpose of the EDC is to create or sustain jobs and that it has created 200,000 jobs. The evidence is clear that in the shipbuilding sector there has been a loss of jobs. That is the first balance sheet.

I would like to read a section of the 1977 annual report of the Export Development Corporation. They are fine words, aside from splitting the infinitives to start off sentences. Reading from about the middle of the first paragraph, it says:

Each export transaction must provide significant benefits to Canada—

The fact that there has been a loss of 1,000 jobs in the shipbuilding sector is not a significant benefit by my reading.

—and is reviewed in consideration of such factors as: the level of the Canadian participation in the project—

In the shipbuilding industry, and I hope I am correct in saying this, there has been an actual participation of 100 per cent, and on those grounds the government is probably covered. It goes on to say:

—the nature and degree of sophistication of the Canadian package of goods and services supplied—

In referring to sophistication, we run into another problem. I will admit that while I have been concentrating in the area of shipbuilding, there were man-years sustained in different industries over the course of the last seven or eight years as a result of the activities of the EDC. However, these were short-term in the shipbuilding industry and in fact they have resulted in a loss, because while they may have been keeping our shipbuilders working during the past seven or eight years, there has been a reduction in the number of jobs. Perhaps it is due to advancements in technology, I do not know.

The matter I am concerned with is the long-term gains in the shipbuilding industry, and this is of concern, I am sure, to all Canadians interested in shipbuilding and in Canada as a striving, developing nation capable of producing goods for export. I maintain that one of the things an exporting country ought to be able to do is carry its own goods around the world and bring the goods it needs to its shores. We are not doing this, and this was amply demonstrated in the figures I produced this afternoon.

One aspect that we tend to overlook is the design and development aspect of shipbuilding. What we are being asked to do in building these ships with designs that are brought to our shores by the British, by the French, possibly by the Greeks—or they may have borrowed from others—is just the same in the shipbuilding area as what hewers of wood and drawers of water do in other areas. We are made to be hewers of wood and welders of steel—that is all. There is nothing in the way of Canadian design going into these ships, and yet we are looking at technology which is part of Canada's tradition.

We all know of the Bluenose. In the nineteenth century the Bluenose was developed in Canada as a schooner. It was a beautiful ship which was improved and adapted to different sorts of trade. The design was basic. And then when steam came in, we developed steamships and moved into that area as well, but shortly after the war we began to lose the knack of designing our ships. We went into something pretty adventurous after the war when we built the Bras d'Or. It was a scary job and we went into it in the belief that we could produce a vessel which would have a greater capability than any other vessel doing the job that Canada should do as a member of NATO. We developed that vessel, but unfortunately it had to be put into mothballs before it became operational.

Out of the Bras d'Or came other developments, because it was designed by Canadian designers and developed in Canada. As a result, we were able to produce the best destroyer in the world, namely the DDH. There is no evidence that I can find anywhere in all the answers to my questions to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) that Canada is continuing to develop and design ships for trade or for our armed services. This is a net loss. Sure, we are keeping our shipbuilders alive, keeping them at work, and that is good, there is no problem about that. But where are our ship designers?

What happened when the Avro Arrow had to fold up because we could not find markets for it? We lost those men. What happened when the Bras d'Or folded? As I said, we moved into building the DDH class destroyers, and the technique and design is exportable. It is being used by other navies, something of which Canada can be proud. The programs that are now in force for building 51 ships for half a billion dollars from foreign designs, to travel under foreign flags, means that we are losing the capacity to design our ships. You know, Mr. Speaker, we are reaching the point now where we will have to design a new military vessel or we will have to buy that design abroad, and I think it is shameful. The way things stand at the moment, we will have to buy our designs abroad. Sure, we will put them in our stocks, we will be the hewers of wood and the welders of steel, but not the designers of what goes inside that vessel, and that, I think is absolutely deplorable.

That is why I feel that the EDC should be doing more than it is doing. It should be diverting some of its resources to the development in Canada of Canadian technology in the shipbuilding field and in others.

I see here that Versatile Manufacturing is being supported. I say good; Versatile is a good Canadian product and I hope plenty of support is given to it, not just to produce tractors for export but to help the company develop a better Versatile. Those are the things that this country needs. We do not need just R and D. What we need might be called D and D, design and development of high grade technology of which our university people in Canada are capable. We are producing some of the best minds in the world and we are putting them to welding steel plates. Shame, I say, utter shame!

What is the matter with this government that it cannot provide incentives? What is the industry asking for? Here is an outline of the shipbuilding industry assistance program as published by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is stated that the objective of the program is to maintain a shipbuilding capability in Canada for reasons of security, national sovereignty, maintenance of skilled tradesmen, and employment. Boy, the man has himself wrapped up in the flag, that is for sure! It says we are going to maintain our shipbuilding capability, not a ship design capability. To maintain our shipbuilding capability is to just continue maintaining the ability which the Canadian shipbuilding trades have now. What is happening to the assistance program? It speaks of a subsidy of 20 per cent of the approved cost of a vessel built in Canada. The program has no terminal date, but the subsidy will drop to 11 per cent on November 1, 1978. That is quite an incentive! Then it is to drop to 10 per cent on January 1, 1979, and each year thereafter the subsidy will be decreased by 1 per cent, until it reaches 8 per cent. That is a fine incentive to one of Canada's traditional industries!

Where does the following schedule stand in 1977-78? The following schedule provides the breakdown by province of the estimated financial expenditures under this program during the fiscal year 1977-78. Under the 20 per cent subsidy there will be $4.5 million in British Columbia, $10 million in Ontario, $23 million in Quebec, $8 million in New Brunswick, $3 million in Nova Scotia, $21,000 in Prince Edward Island, $1.2 million in Newfoundland, for a total of $52 million in one year. What did I say the EDC assistance was? It is for half a billion dollars.

The shipbuilders and ship designers of this country, to make Canada stand on its feet again as a nation which is proud of its accomplishments and proud of the fact that it can carry its products to other shores and bring the products it needs to our shores, are asking for a very simple thing. In a joint submission to cabinet by the Canadian shipping industry, the Council of Maritime Carriers, the Dominion Marine Association, the Newfoundland Shipowners Association and the St. Lawrence Shipowners Association set down eight points. They want new legislation to restructure the advisory committee because they want elements of industry in the committee. That is fine. Their financial recommendations are along the following lines: debt financing assistance should be similar to that available in other countries engaged in marine activities. I see the minister raising his eyebrows and shaking his head—nobody has told him about this. They propose that future legislation should recognize the advantages of leasing. Shipbuilding assistance should be available at appropriate rates, shipbuilding capital subsidies for new construction or major conversions, and tax incentives.

● (2122)

It seems that the EDC can wander about the world, conclude contracts with Greece, France, the United Kingdom, Panama, Bermuda, the Bahamas, Cuba and Senegal and build ships for these countries while our shipbuilding industry is asking for assistance. Why is there not, even one fraction of the EDC funds available to Canadian industry on the same terms as are available to foreign buyers? It is as simple as that.

An hon. Member: It is as simple as the minister.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I find it extraordinary that the minister and the EDC should be touting these wares and asking for an increase in the loan limits—and I hope I am right about this—to $26 billion.

Mr. Stevens: Loans and insurance.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Loans and insurance, and if I remember correctly this is from something like $4 billion at the present time, maybe $10 billion.

Mr. Stevens: Eight billion.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Say $8.5 billion to $10 billion; two and a half times the total limit.

Mr. Stevens: The minister shrugs.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Yes. What's $26 billion? It is only twice our present debt, that is all. Why is some of that money not available to Canadian industry to build ships for Canadians, designed by Canadians for use by Canadians and not built to put another flag on them? I find that I am absolutely incapable of understanding this aspect.

Mr. Stevens: The minister does not care.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I wonder if the minister is beginning to wonder why it is not a little different too. Maybe he never thought of it. It is about time he did. Unless we are to continue as hewers of wood and drawers of water and welders of plate, Canadian industry must have that sort of assistance for its shipbuilding industry.

I conclude with a final plea. Restraint must be practised if we enter this foreign market with these fantastic sums tucked in our back pockets. Please consider the need of our own industry, in the shipbuilding area particularly, which needs to build Canadian ships to carry Canadian goods designed by Canadian minds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, it had not been my intention to speak on this matter today. However, as I listened to some speakers on the other side—not the last speaker because I must say I have a great deal of sympathy for him in his plea for the development of an indigenous merchant marine and for the development of our shipbuilding industry—I got the impression that if one came into the debate lately, although some of us have been discussing it in committee for some time, one would get the impression that it was some kind of a foreign aid scheme where we loaned money to countries all over the world for some vague purpose because we were fine people.

There is a strong reason for the existence of EDC. We loan money to foreign countries to buy goods made in Canada to create jobs in Canada. Do not buy any of this nonsense, as the hon. member from Winnipeg or the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) did, about this being a foreign aid scheme. Most hon. members on the other side know perfectly well that every country that is exporting and selling in foreign countries has some kind of an agency like the EDC. Japan has one, Germany has, the United States and so on.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): So has Cuba.

Mr. McRae: As a matter of fact the only countries that do not heavily subsidize, directly or indirectly, are the United States and Canada. Other countries subsidize these things very heavily. We cannot possibly sell goods abroad unless we get into this business.

The hon. member for St. John's West talks about his own province. What about the millions of dollars allocated to the Marystown shipyards so they could build tugs for Norway? This is an example of what has happened. I mention this particularly because in my community over the last four or five years we have had in excess of $100 million worth of business through Hawker Siddeley in terms of rail cars to Mexico, and tree farms to Poland. This has created thousands and thousands of man-hours in our community and it is the same all over the country. I have not seen the figures for Winnipeg but I am sure there are many firms in Winnipeg that have created many jobs due to the fact that EDC arranged a loan with some foreign country. I get angry when members talk like this and say that this is some kind of a foreign aid scheme. It is not a foreign aid scheme, it is a scheme to support Canadian industry and Canadian workers. It creates thousands and thousands of jobs.

I have one last point I wish to make. I support the discussions hon. members have had, but one has to admit that these orders to the shipyards at least keep the shipyards going and therefore they should be supported in the same way as a rail car order, for instance, to Hawker-Siddeley in Thunder Bay tends to keep that company going between receiving local Canadian orders. It replaces its capital goods, etc. For these reasons, although people can object to certain aspects of this bill, it must be understood that it is a scheme to support our export industry, to support industry across Canada and thus create jobs.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, on motions nos. 2 and 4 I want to refer again to the history sheet as I did on the other amendment and remind the House that the present limits under the insurance section are presently $1 billion. The amendment is proposing they go to $2 billion rather than the $3.5 billion as proposed in the bill. We think the extension of double the present limits should be adequate for the government, the reasons for which I partly stated earlier.

The other amendment, being the increase from $850 million to $2.5 billion, seemed somewhat excessive so therefore we are suggesting that we amend that increase to $1 billion. The over-all effect of changes or increases given to the EDC since it was incorporated in 1969, a short nine years, as taken the total government commitment from $1.5 billion to the now proposed $26 billion. As I have already mentioned, the profligate spending ways of the government opposite are nowhere better displayed than in the expansion given in the EDC. I may have something else to say about the spending habits of EDC in a moment or two.

I am glad to see that the minister has been able to join us for the continuation of the debate because he was involved in many of the committee hearings. I referred to some of his remarks and his refusal to help us out in the committee on some of the points we felt were important in this debate.

I note also that the parliamentary secretary informed the committee that the Export Development Corporation would be returning in the fall with a rather more complete overhaul type of bill. At that time we repeated our wonderment as to why they felt it necessary to get this huge increase in such a hurry when they would be well able to live within the limits until the fall. In the fall they could have had all this done under the new bill that they are going to be presenting to the House; that is, if we are not involved in an election campaign or do not have a new government by then.

Why should we not take the cautious approach and live within our guidelines? The government was told there are many ways it could exist for the time being with the limits that are there. It is probably impatience on the part of the government. Having been so used to doing things in its own way for so long, it does not want to change its ways and take any kind of reasonable course.

Why should parliament be asked to approve this enormous increase now when the government has told us it is going to change the rules later? Why would any government expect any investor to be willing to put up money now, not knowing what changes in the rules are going to be coming later? The limit is now going to be increased from $8.8 billion to $26 billion, an increase of some $17 billion. It is interesting that in committee and in earlier hearings it came out that the involvement in the EDC per capita is away out of whack. It is much higher than the EX-IM Bank in the United States which has an authorized ceiling now of $25 billion. That is less than we are being asked to approve for EDC. On the basis of per capita comparisons, the difference is even more pronounced.

The official support expressed as a percentage gross national product in Canada is now just over 1 per cent at 1.05 per cent. In the United States it is .04 per cent. A comparison like that brings home better than straight numbers the extensive overinvolvement that EDC has in the business affairs of this country.

It is pertinent to note at page 61 of the annual report a section on the loans payable. Divulged there is that the loans payable to the Government of Canada and other lenders, and there is no breakdown, totalled $1.5 billion at the end of the fiscal year. The interest rates vary from 5 5/16 per cent to 9 1/2 per cent per annum.

The government has made a big point of the fact that EDC operates independently of subsidies, that it is a profit-making institution and the taxpayers do not subsidize the operations of EDC. However, I ask hon. members to consider how EDC is able to borrow money at 5 5/16 per cent, albeit that maybe the portion to be paid back during calendar 1978. No one can borrow money at 5 5/16 per cent from the Government of Canada without admitting there is a real subsidy from the taxpayers of Canada. Money at 5 5/16 per cent just is not available to us today.

We know the government will say that is what it was borrowed at a long time ago when rates were lower and it did not have to pay it back until now, and that it is paying it back on schedule. I cannot deny that is within the terms of the borrowing and they are paying it back on schedule. However, to claim that 5 5/16 per cent interest is not a subsidy by the taxpayers of Canada is not being truthful to the House or the committee.

We are not told how much of that $1.5 billion has been borrowed from the Canadian government, although that question was asked in committee. We are only told it is being repaid to the government and that new borrowings are being made in the open market. We do not know where it is coming from, whether it is from superannuation funds or what. It may be significant to note, as is noted in note 4, that some 20 per cent of the amount outstanding in loans of $1.5 billion is borrowed from the United States sources. It is expressed here in U.S. dollars. We do not know whether it was borrowed in U.S. dollars, but certainly the recent action of the Canadian dollar is going to make that more expensive for the Canadian taxpayer when it comes time to repay that loan in American dollars.

I want to say a word about the expenses of EDC. We have been saying a lot about the expensive nature of this company. The president is known to be able to throw a pretty good party. He seems to have a reputation in Ottawa as being one of the big spenders. I know the president told us he only drank 7-Up, but everybody else was drinking champagne. In any event, a $75,000 party must have provided a lot of champagne for a lot of people.

I was taking a look at the statement of income and earnings for the year ended December 31, 1977. Although I am sure it is pleasing for the minister and company to note that interest earned and fees earned increased by 32 per cent during the year, neither the minister nor the president of EDC were able to explain how it was that the net income before administrative expenses was only up 9 per cent for the year.

When we had a look at the administrative expenses, we found they were up over $1 million, from $6 million to $7.1 million. That is an increase of 18 per cent during the year. However, the minister found nothing unusual about the fact that the administrative expenses were out of line with the net profit that the company was producing.

In any event, the net income for the year had an increase of only 6 per cent, partly as a result of the increase in the administrative expenses. With an increase in gross of 32 per cent and an increase in net of only 6 per cent, some investors might wonder what is wrong with the management of that company.

A word about the amount of the net income might be appropriate here. This is probably one of the few profit-seeking and profit-making companies in Canada that pays no income tax. Some companies that we can think of, Air Canada for one which has finally turned around and made a profit in the recent fiscal period, are required to pay income tax on their profits. For some reason, it is enshrined in the incorporation act of Export Development Corporation that it is exempt from any burden of income tax on any of its profits. Many businesses in Canada would like to have that privilege and might even be able to show better than a 6 per cent increase in their returns.

We should not leave these amendments without considering who is going to benefit from the increases sought here. I have a note or two which indicates that the government says that many jobs are produced. We went through that this afternoon; I do not need to do so again. I hope the minister will look at these remarks and refresh his memory. In the committee hearings we went through the matter of whether or not there were 200,000 jobs.

In any event we heard about the jobs and we heard there are thousands of businessmen who like to get financing from EDC. We have complained that we should be more careful about the way we are exporting jobs. We should ensure that we are not exporting jobs as well as these beautiful mills we are building and exporting.

Mr. R. H. Summer, vice-president of operations, admitted that the plant being built with a $47 million EDC loan for a newsprint mill in Virginia will compete directly with Canadian mills. The minister, and I think the president, told us this was not the case. However, here we have the vice-president of operations telling us it is. He said this:

> —it will obviously increase competition in the more northern part of New England and those states closest to Canada. Thus you could say that, through increased competition, it will in fact compete with Canadian-sourced newsprint.

How can we argue with a fellow who is in the corporation and right on the ground? The government has sought to assure us that no matter how many pulp or newsprint mills we build overseas, Canadian business will not have to meet increased competition. The evidence does not support that statement.

What we would like to see was well expressed by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche), when he said:

> What is badly needed is a national policy for development which harmonizes our interests in Canada with our interests in developing markets abroad.

That is a quotation from one of the committee reports. My hon. friend from Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) has argued that Canadian business also needs help from the Export Development Corporation. This may sound contradictory but it seems ridiculous that Canadian companies wishing to expand in Canada are often unable to obtain financing at prevalent rates, yet if they chose to expand their plants across the border somewhere they would seem to qualify for loans from the EDC. We on this side question whether such treatment for Canadian business is right or proper.

There are many businesses which rely on EDC backing. We recognize this but we believe the government has moved much too recklessly in permitting the EDC to expand as it has. The figures speak for themselves. I do not understand how the minister can sit over there and agree with the policy the government is following. The bill before us indicates that the government increasingly believes that it knows better how to do things than does the private sector. It is increasingly putting into place interventionist policies. The fact that its programs have not been working over the past ten years, as evidenced by the present lack of confidence, business dislocation, inflation and all the rest, makes no difference to those who sit on the treasury benches opposite. Finally, I suppose the government will wish to do everything itself; there will be no room for individual entrepreneurship at all.

I will conclude on that note. The direction of government policy as shown by its treatment of EDC over the last nine years must be viewed with great suspicion, because the trend which is being established is one Canada cannot live with.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I intend to raise some points which have been dealt with by other members but I want to relate them to the region of Canada from which I come. I am pleased the minister is in the House this evening. During the afternoon he was represented by his parliamentary secretary and the silence which greeted comments from this side of the House was rather obvious.

Now that the minister is here, with his reputation for silence both in this chamber and throughout the country, I am sure that after we are through speaking he will want to make some comment on the report stage of the bill. Indeed, if the minister wishes to speak at this time I would be willing to yield the floor to him. Perhaps he could answer some of the myriad of questions which have been raised. I feel, however, that the minister is not ready to answer questions—either he is afraid to do so or he does not know the answers. Instead of speaking in the House as was his wont, he keeps silent. I recall the days when he spoke at the drop of a hat or the flicker of a new idea. Suddenly he finds it safer to speak outside the House to audiences who will not respond by asking questions. He can make his pat speeches, and I must say they read a little better now than they did in the early months when he began to read speeches. As I say, I am glad he is here tonight to give us some information on Bill C-36.

He and his colleagues have asked parliament to guarantee $26 billion in connection with the EDC without offering a word of explanation. All we hear is the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) suggesting that these are not gifts or outright grants but merely guarantees. The point is that when the loans are not paid back the people of Canada will be left on the hook to sustain a direct loss.

The EDC has been making and guaranteeing loans on the basis that the acquisition of certain contracts create jobs within Canada. On the basis that we are bound to develop an export industry, the minister has my support. But we are bound to consider the over-all picture—the deficits the government has incurred and, in particular, the heavy deficit on current account. I recall the days when the hon. gentleman was on this side of the House and was one of the most vigorous opponents of deficit spending. Today he accepts deficit spending by the government of which he is a member. Indeed, he almost argues that it is good for Canada. I remember his telling us that future generations would have to pay for deficits presently being incurred.

Suddenly all that is changed. While the minister is asking for $26 billion we find there is extreme difficulty in developing industry here in Canada. In Provencher, for example, there is a long established pulp and paper industry. The pulp and paper industry has had difficult times for the last few years competing in the world market because of additional newsprint capacity. Through the EDC the minister has helped to develop an increased international newsprint capacity, but in the pulp and paper industry in Canada—in my riding specifically and in the ridings of other hon. members, especially in ridings where there are similar plants—there is difficulty.

The minister has been very reluctant to advance expansion capital here, but that is not so in other countries. It seems that there is a double standard. On the one hand he will allow a certain benefit so that other countries can develop their industries, but Canadian taxpayers who are contributing to this slush fund are not supposed to benefit. They are not getting the benefits international companies are receiving.

I am talking not only of the pulp and paper industry. I have received a fair amount of correspondence, and I have spoken twice in this House since the appointment of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) about the tantalum mine at Bernic Lake, Manitoba. That mine has known reserves of tantalum, cesium and lithium. In 1974 this government placed cesium under the Export Act. The U.S.S.R. has been using cesium in research and development, especially with regard to coal-burning to increase the capacity of coal for purposes of energy generation. As I say, the government placed it on the export control list.

I have said before to the minister and his officials that I do not object to placing cesium on the export control list, but I have been saying that it is one of the twenty-first century materials which has vast potential. That potential cannot be realized without research and development. The Soviets are ahead in research and development on cesium, well beyond anything we have in Canada. The Soviets have been importing cesium from Canada. When they are moving ahead in research and development, what do we do? We put it on the export control list. However, do we then take the second step and start research and development in order to develop Canadian industry and give us at this point some cesium development so that we can become world leaders? No, we do not do that. Do we do it in order to create jobs? No, we do not need those jobs. Instead we use the EDC and build plants elsewhere.

What are the facts?

Mr. Breau: The fact is that you can buy it elsewhere.

Mr. Epp: That is exactly the fact. We should create industrial capacity so that we can compete, but instead we export our money and development elsewhere. We will create jobs in the short term that way, but I am saying that we should create long-term jobs in research and development.

This government has finally realized the ripple effect of research and development. It was actually going to increase expenditures in the last budget for research and development. At the present time the U.S.S.R. is number one with regard to the amount of research and development expenditure per capita. West Germany spends 2.3 per cent of its g.n.p. on research and development, roughly the same percentage as the United States, the only difference being that the West Germans are increasing their percentage of g.n.p. on research and development and the United States is not. How much does Canada spend? In 1968 we spent 1.2 per cent, and today we spend less than 1 per cent. If the minister wants to do this extra funding for loans in order to export technology, I say he should look at his priorities again because Canadians are demanding that more money stay here to develop our research and technology and create the jobs that are needed here.

What has happened in the glass-making industry? There is much silica sand in Canada which can be used in the glass-making industry. In the past most of the Canadian resource has been found in Ontario. I do not want to say anything about silica sand quarrying in Ontario, but the overburden which has to be removed before that sand can be quarried averages 59 feet in Ontario. In Manitoba we have been quarrying silica sand on Black Island, and we have tried to develop additional quarrying of silica sand on Deer Island.

I have been in contact with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce prior to this minister taking over the portfolio and also since. I have been asking for comprehensive research on the potential of enlarging the glass-making business in Canada, but up until now it has been virtually impossible to get any movement in order to determine whether that industry can expand and whether there is a potential market. In fact, about the only study which was done was by the former provincial administration in Manitoba. That administration did a study on glass-making potential and the Canadian market. I thought we had an abundant supply of silica sand. In doing more research on this I found that we import much of the silica sand we use.

I am the first to concede that some of that silica sand is needed because of the chemical formation in the glass-making process and in foundry processing, but the point is that Canadians today import one million tons of silica sand for glass-making purposes per year.

The area about which I am speaking is an area where there are native Canadians and Metis residents, and chronic unemployment has been part of the economic pattern of that region. These people have held rights to that island for as long as nine years and have paid claim fees for those nine years in the hope that they would be able to develop a glass-making industry, minimally at least. They would like to quarry the sand and have someone else start a glass-making industry so that they can market that sand. However, what has happened? We cannot even get a study out of the department.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before we proceed to the late show, I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) could tell us what the program is for tomorrow.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will deal with the motion in the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the motion to appoint a special joint committee to study the proposals related to the constitution of Canada. We hope there will be a short debate. Then we will resume debate on the EDC bill, Bill C-36, because the report stage and third reading of that bill must be completed before the summer adjournment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, so that hon. members will know what is happening tomorrow, I give notice that we shall be moving an amendment to that motion to provide that it be a special committee of the House of Commons only.

Mr. Alexander: What is the matter with the Senate?

● (2202)

Mr. Pinard: I understand, even if the hon. member moves an amendment, that the debate will be very short just the same, and that we can resume debate on Bill C-36 for the reasons I mentioned before. We have to complete all stages of Bill C-36 before the summer adjournment.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—CELEBRATION OF CANADA WEEK

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, during the question period on June 14 last I put questions to the minister responsible for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation about the holding of a press conference on June 13 last announcing the programming for the Canada festivities. Naturally, the cameramen and reporters of the Crown corporation were there but I deplored their invisibility and their silence on the evening news program. So I asked the minister to inquire of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation because Canadians are proud of their commemoration day. Since parliament has set aside modest amounts for the organization of Festival Canada it seems to me that the Crown corporation which receives $487 million from Canadians should cover all the events relating to the national day of Canadians.

My concern, Mr. Speaker, is based on a situation which I deplored two years ago when I informed the president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—and I have here the contents of the correspondence—when I informed him on July 6 last that the CBC had not mentioned at all on any of its news programs the commemoration day of Canadians. That was in July 1976. I received an answer from the president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and the letter was signed by Dennis Thompson, who recognized that the Crown corporation had not mentioned Canada Day on any of its news programs, citing the reason as being a matter of budget, Mr. Speaker. Because of the restriction period we were going through, CBC commentators had just left out the ceremonies, the activities here on Parliament Hill when the Prime Minister of Canada was giving out certificates of citizenship. They left that day out entirely.

It is because of this attitude and my own experience that I emphasized the importance of these activities to the minister. Not that I am opposed to the coverage we had last week, because I am proud of this. As a French Canadian, I took part in the festivities of June 24. Mr. Speaker, I believe that you took part yourself in many activities in Valleyfield and I believe also that the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada attended festivities in Vankleek Hill to celebrate the day of French Canadians on June 24, along with 15,000 other people.

I want to congratulate the public corporation for having covered these events. However, I am concerned about its silence on the activities of Canada Day, which is the day of national unity. I believe I speak for many Canadians who would like to make the authorities of the CBC aware of their dissatisfaction concerning certain news or public affairs programs.

I am not an expert, but I am aware of the difficulty that such an expert would have in judging the contents of a program if we consider the lighting, the camera shots, the choice of news, the choice of participants, the choice of music, the editing of films and sound tracks, which all give out a very pervasive and partisan message, but in such a way that it was nearly impossible to define.

We can understand this little game. We have only to read the report of the investigation committee on television which refers to all sorts of the situations which were discovered. Among others, it says that within 10 days, and without counting the provincial premier, Mr. Lévesque, Quebec ministers were mentioned 153 times by the spoken media, 145 times on the French network, that is 82 times on television and 63 times on radio, and eight times on the English network. It is mentioned that Quebec ministers were well known personalities in the province of Quebec but almost unknown in English Canada. Federal ministers make less often the headlines on the English network than Quebec ministers on the French network. This is the report of the enquiry committee.

In the light of all those circumstances and considering that my time is limited, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the CBC has the responsibility, through its news services, to encourage a spirit of tolerance, respect, understanding and dignity among Canadians in the interest of national unity. It is unfortunate to see that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, instead of promoting better understanding between Anglophones and Francophones or any other ethnic groups, between employers and employees, as it is its duty, chose, through some news or movie programs, to use and develop the potential antagonism between some individuals. The corporation should not orient public opinion towards a given answer but it should at least reflect, in that constitutional debate, the importance of that debate.

I conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker. After having seriously considered the situation and those comments from the committee, I intend to table, in the near future, a notice of motion reflecting my concern with regard to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and suggesting a revision of its administrative controls and a redifinition of its responsibilities concerning the present situation and the many comments contained in the reports tabled in this House.

Mr. Ed. Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) for having raised that matter tonight. There was a press conference concerning Festival Canada on May 29, 1978 at the national level, in Ottawa. The CBC reporter, Mr. Jacques Rivard, opened the news conference and that news sequence was used for the first news bulletin of the evening, on the French television network "Ce soir", and in the late evening news bulletin, "Le Téléjournal", on the same day.

The French television network also made a report of the press conference in Montreal but, as the essential components of the conference were the same, and considering the volume of news that day, the sequence of the Montreal press conference was not used.

● (2207)

[English]

As the minister assured the hon. member, he is in complete agreement with him concerning the importance of Canada Week. He has been assured by officials at Festival Canada that the CBC has been working closely with them in conjunction with the upcoming festivities and, furthermore, that both the French and English networks of the CBC have been reacting in a very positive and satisfactory way to the needs of Festival Canada.

FINANCE—DUMPING DUTY ON WIDE-FLANGE STEEL BEAMS

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I take serious issue with both the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in respect of their replies to me last June 16 as they appear in Hansard at pages 6480 and 6481, whereby my concerns on behalf of the steelworkers and the steel fabricating industry in British Columbia were written off as following a very dangerous course, and that I was advocating ten different markets controlled internally within Canada. The Prime Minister subsequently, as reported in Hansard at page 6482, said I was suggesting a policy that would regionalize the country and, further, he said it was a question of bad economics.

In reply to those charges I must say I was not even associating markets with provincial boundaries in Canada, and both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance knew that. Markets in Canada are determined by freight costs and the ability of Canadian producers to supply.

Historical records show that there are basically three markets determined by freight rates and the ability of Algoma Steel in Sault Ste. Marie to supply. The Canadian demand for wide-flange beams is 17,000 tons, but the productive capacity of Algoma Steel is 13,000 tons. Their production is allocated on the basis of previous purchases by their customers, and their freight cost factor is approximately twice that of the ocean rate to B.C. ports. The markets in question are: west of the Alberta-Saskatchewan border, east of the Alberta-Saskatchewan border through to and including Quebec and to a limited extent the eastern seaboard, and then, of course, Newfoundland. The freight cost factor and the ability to supply determines these markets.

Within that market, which I represent as a member in this House, a great injustice is being done to the steel fabricating industry and the steelworkers of that province. That market which they have worked within has been destroyed and delivered into the steel fabricating industries and steelworkers of Ontario.

This example of the Prime Minister's just society might in his opinion be good economics for that region of Canada with all the political clout and good economics for the Liberal Party of Canada, but I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it is bad nationalism and disastrous to regional good will which is so precious in Canada today. I am not against anti-dumping safeguards because they are a necessary fact in industrial life. I say again that within the spirit of GATT and by precedent of the anti-dumping tribunal, the concept I propose is sensible and equitable for a country such as Canada, covering just less than ten million square kilometers, touching on the Pacific Ocean, the Atlantic Ocean and 4,000 miles of border with the United States.

I ask again that the government reduce the level of regional inequity by accepting the principle that safeguards be applied to those regions or markets where the threat or reality of injury exists, and that safeguards not be applied to those markets in Canada where the threat or reality of injury does not exist.

The wide-flange steel beam situation is volatile and has reversed itself in the last six months. The decision made by the government last June 13 and announced last Saturday, June 24, will create chaos in the B.C. industry because the government has not announced the margin of dumping. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are working against a healthy Canadian federation with this type of confrontation. Once again I urge them to rethink the matter and decide in favour of regional equity.

Algoma is playing a very cute game with the west. They are not accepting Alberta orders but, on the other hand, are accepting B.C. orders—not turning them down but saying they cannot supply at this time. Their games leave no alternative but for the B.C. government to reopen the tribunal hearing on the grounds that Algoma cannot supply. This is such a waste when what we need today are jobs and productive work. This policy of the government and its continued rigidity in this direction is costing jobs in western Canada. You cannot keep this country together with that type of centralized policy.

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the comments of the hon. member for Capinalo (Mr. Huntington) concern the question of applying anti-dumping duties on wide-flange steel beams imported into British Columbia. He is proposing that the current remission order be extended beyond its present expiry date of June 29. As hon. members are aware, the remission order was provided by the government in order to allow sufficient time for fabricators in British Columbia, as well as in Alberta, Newfoundland and the Yukon Territory, to adjust to the new situation following the decision by the Anti-Dumping Tribunal that imports of dumped steel were causing injury to Canadian producers.

The hon. member appears to base his case on his view that a regional market for these products exist in British Columbia. This view was, of course, not shared by the Anti-Dumping Tribunal when it examined the issue in the terms provided for under the Anti-dumping Act. Hon. members will be aware that section 16(4) of that act requires the tribunal to take fully into account in its determination of injury the definition of domestic injury as provided for in the GATT anti-dumping code. This definition sets out the circumstances in which a country may be divided into two or more competitive markets for the purposes of considering injury to domestic production.

We were advised that the Algoma Steel Corporation is making a considerable effort to ensure that western Canadian consumers will be supplied with wide-flange steel. In this regard, it should be kept in mind that the imposition of anti-dumping duties does not prevent imports and, although western imports of wide-flange steel are down so far this year, I understand that the availability of wide-flange steel to western Canada is equivalent to that of last year.

With respect to the request concerning the remission of the anti-dumping duties, the government has considered the matter and I understand that a reply has gone today to the premiers concerned. The government has decided not to extend the remission order in view of the fact that the prices at which steel is moving internationally have increased significantly over the past few months by comparison with the unremunerative levels which had prevailed previously.

Nonetheless, many steel mills around the world are working well below capacity and the potential for large shipments of injuriously priced steel into the Canadian market still exists. Against this background, and in view of the fact that the remission program on imports of wide-flange steel shapes for use in British Columbia, Alberta, Newfoundland and the Yukon Territory was intended as a temporary and transitional measure, the federal government has decided not to review the remission order beyond its present expiry date of June 29, 1978.

I can assure the hon. member, however, that the final determination of normal values of wide-flange steel shapes under the provisions of the Anti-dumping Act will be made shortly so that, while injurious dumping of these products in Canada will not be countenanced, the products will land in British Columbia ports as in the rest of Canada at competitive prices. This, I believe, should serve the best interests of all parties concerned.

FINANCE—DUMPING DUTY ON WIDE-FLANGE STEEL BEAMS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary's answer to the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) is nothing short of misleading. To suggest that Algoma is planning to do everything it can to supply the western Canadian market, particularly the B.C. market, is nothing short of misleading when just a month ago they put the western Canadian fabricators on allocations, as the parliamentary secretary knows, based on a percentage of the previous year's supply and, as he knows, 1977 was not a year of high sales to western Canada. This means that sales will be decreasing. To suggest that Algoma will do everything it can to supply the western Canadian market is, as I said, nothing short of misleading.

On June 20 I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the following question:

> Since Algoma produces only 13,000 tons, and Canadian consumption is 17,000 tons, obviously Algoma cannot produce for the entire Canadian market. Algoma has already put western fabricators on an allocation system, thereby permanently ensuring they cannot supply that market. Will the Prime Minister now recognize the reality of the regional market that exists in British Columbia and give assurance that the anti-dumping duty will not be re-instated at the end of this month?

The Prime Minister replied in part that it was a temporary measure made with the agreement of British Columbia and other provinces which expressed satisfaction in order to permit all parties to readjust to the current situation. Surely it is the objective of producers in Canada, including Algoma, to try to produce for the entire Canadian market, said the Prime Minister. He went on to say that the temporary measure was reinstated to permit the various parties to adjust to the current reality.

The Prime Minister's reply is great on theory but not great on realism or reality. I know he went to the London School of Economics, and perhaps he pretends he is still there, that Canada is a small island like Great Britain and that one central producer can supply the whole island. Well, I have news for him. The continent on which Canada sits is 4,000 miles across, and one single supplier cannot do what the Prime Minister imagines he should be able to do. The reality is that we have distance to contend with, we have transportation cost to contend with, we have familiarity of market to contend with, and it is human and natural for those producers to supply the market close to home first. They understand that market best and they are doing just that. That is what Algoma is doing. It is even supplying the U.S. market, which is closer to them, before it takes care of the B.C. market, and therefore it is neglecting the domestic market.

Then there are the realities of cause and effect on the construction industry in B.C. Just this afternoon I spoke to one processor in B.C. who told me that in January of this year the price of Japanese plate was $14.50. Today, that same product costs $25 because the Japanese have been scared off from the market in Canada by the anti-dumping decision of this government.

As I have already indicated, Algoma has put the Canadian western market on the allocation system, but they do not call it that any more. Now they call it restricted delivery. They cannot say when they will deliver and they do not confirm the orders. Anybody who has been in business for a short period of time knows that if you want to supply, you have to make a promise of delivery. If you cannot promise that delivery, how can you bid for the contract? The Prime Minister does not seem to understand that kind of economics. Various industrial companies in a telegram to the Prime Minister dated June 5 said, and I quote:

> The B.C. industry is therefore unable to purchase their total wide flange requirements from Canadian mills within the necessary time frame, neither can wide flange be purchased from normal offshore sources, because importers are unwilling to import wide flange before determination of dumping duty.
> Therefore B.C. industry is unable to fulfill some orders on current projects on schedule or quote competitively on future projects because of uncertainty of supply and prices.

That is the reality of the marketplace in British Columbia today. The Prime Minister say that the B.C. government and others have expressed satisfaction. Then why did the B.C. government in its brief of April 14 ask for two major revisions in that decision on the part of the anti-dumping tribunal, and why in its closing presentation does it say, and I quote:

> While the logic of applying uniform economic policies within a single country can be justified the fact that these policies have highly differential impact between the various regions of Canada is factual and it is on this basis that we therefore request that you reflect your understanding of this principle in response to our submissions.

The Prime Minister was nothing less than misleading the House.

Now I come to the human element. I read from a letter from a Kitimat man operating a small fabricating industry. He says this:

> Being a reasonably new company of four years, having just completed a new extension giving us 5600 square feet of working area which will enable us to hire from fifteen to twenty men.
> Presently we employ six men, three of which are married with families, the extra cost brought on by the this tariff could possibly decrease our work load forcing us to lay-off our present employees adding to the already unemployment situation.

The tragedy and the great irony is that the loss of jobs in British Columbia will create no extra new jobs in Algoma because they are already operating at capacity. What is the sense of this kind of policy that is creating misery for those employed in British Columbia? The role of the government is to make life easier and more equitable for people. Why does the government not admit its mistake and back off and say that there is a regional market that deserves special treatment in British Columbia?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is most unfortunate that in the adjournment debate the government has only three minutes to reply to each question. On an important question such as the one raised by the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and the one raised by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen), as well as members on this side who made representation to the minister before, we should have more time in order to prepare a more comprehensive answer.

Without repeating some of the statements I made earlier in answering the hon. member for Capilano, I would suggest most sincerely that the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock refer to section 16(4) of the Anti-dumping Act, which requires the Anti-Dumping Tribunal to take fully into account in its determination of injury the definition of domestic industry as provided for in the GATT anti-dumping code. This definition sets out the circumstances in which a country may be divided into two or more competitive markets for the purposes of considering domestic production. This is really the crux of the whole decision taken by the government.

Freight costs, for example are obviously a very important element in the movement of heavy bulk items such as wide-flange steel beams. This problem is by no means peculiar to these products. It applies across the board to all processed and manufactured goods produced in one area and sold in another area of this country. Personally I am confident that both members opposite are not suggesting that the protection provided Canadian producers under the Anti-dumping Act against unfair trading practices by foreigners be limited to the area of the country in which a producer is located.

In the case of wide-flange steel beams it is clear that the primary competition for the domestic producer is offshore steel landed in British Columbia. In spite of statements made to the contrary by members opposite, the government has made all possible effort to ensure the steel is being shipped to the west coast at the lowest possible cost.

I just want to reiterate the last paragraph of my reply to the hon. member for Capilano. The final determination of normal values of wide-flange steel shapes under the provisions of the Anti-dumping Act will be made shortly so that, while injurious dumping of these products into Canada will not be countenanced, the products will land in British Columbia ports as in the rest of Canada at competitive prices. This, I believe, should serve the best interests of all parties concerned.

This is a very legitimate inquiry by members opposite and by members on this side of the House. I hope when the final decision is taken by the government that the aspect of the layoffs and so on as alleged by members opposite will not come to bear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

At 10:27 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

CANADA COUNCIL

MPs SUED FOR CRITICIZING SYSTEM OF GRANTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that six members of parliament, namely, the members for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), Battle River (Mr. Malone), Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson), Hastings (Mr. Ellis) and Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), are being sued for comments made while performing their duties, particularly in their attempt to make the government accountable and responsible for repulsive and outrageous Canada Council grants and inadequate financial documentation of the council, in view of the government's April decision to pay the libel fine for the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Goyer), and while I am not—nor do I intend to do so at this time—asking for financial assistance from the government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Battle River:

That the government state its policy on payment of fines for MPs convicted of slander, libel and the like while in the performance of their duties.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion can be introduced for debate only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN WILDLIFE FEDERATION

PROGRAM TO PROTECT ENDANGERED SPECIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgency. In view of the fact that last Friday the minister of the environment, in a meeting with officials of the Canadian Wildlife Federation, refused to provide any of the $250,000 required for the federal-provincial program on endangered species, and since the Canadian Wildlife Federation is prepared to provide matching dollars, as are the provinces, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this government take immediate steps to resolve this confrontation, since there is a fear that they, too, are on the list of endangered species.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PENSIONS

EQUALITY FOR WOMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, according to a report made public today by Statistics Canada, the housewives of this nation by their work earn approximately $80 billion a year and are responsible for about 40 per cent of the gross national product. It seems to me that it is time we did something about this, but I suppose if I suggested that the bill be paid, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) would have a heart attack. We could start, however, by establishing pension equality for women. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House calls on the government to recognize the contribution that women in their homes make to our economy and, as a minimum, to recognize this contribution by establishing pension equality, including the equivalent of the Canada Pension Plan for women whose work is in their homes, equal pension rights for all women between the ages of 60 and 65 regardless of marital status, increasing the pensions paid to widows under various government plans to at least 75 per cent, and the continuing payment of pensions granted to widows regardless of any subsequent change in marital status.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

AIR TRANSPORT

EXPRESSION OF SYMPATHY FOR THOSE BEREAVED AS RESULT OF CRASH AT TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 may I move, seconded by the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming):

That all members of this House join me in extending sympathy to the members of families bereaved as a result of the plane crash at Toronto international airport yesterday, and that all members also join me in commending the fast and co-ordinated action taken by the airport staff, the Peel regional police, the medical staff of the surrounding hospitals and the many ambulance and fire department personnel whose effective action served to reduce the serious consequences of the accident.

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST MILLHAVEN AUTHORITIES RECONSIDER DECISION TO REDUCE NUMBER OF VISITORS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Millhaven penitentiary authorities recently decided that as of June 19 last all visits in a common hall for inmates in special units, that is inmates escorted by guards, would be reduced from seven days a week to a single day—Tuesday. The authorities of that establishment did not state the true reasons for those changes. Considering that this decision is unfair for the inmates and does not help improve the climate in that penitentiary, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the House deeply regret the decision of Millhaven authorities and enjoin them to reconsider that decision to improve the climate in our penitentiaries, as requested in the report of the sub-committee on justice and legal affairs published last year.

Mr. Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

URBAN AFFAIRS

ROBERT CAMPEAU REAL ESTATE DEVELOPMENTS IN HULL, QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, involving the National Capital Commission. Since Mr. Robert Campeau has been very strident in his demands that the proper procedures of the NCC be circumvented and short-circuited in order to expedite and facilitate his real estate developments in Hull, and since he has been calling the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and sending copies of letters to him, such as his letter to Pierre Juneau on February 20 of this year which complained about an alleged breach of agreement with the NCC, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the Minister of Justice inquire into the circumstances as to why the Justice Department was informed from the office of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs that a lawyer from Buckingham, Mr. Pierre Joanisse, would act over the heads of Justice officials to expedite the matter of Mr. Campeau's convenience in pursuing his private interests, and that the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs indicate the expected cost of bowing to Mr. Campeau's demands.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate, in conformity with Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INTEREST ON NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance: it centres on the mounting debt load that this government has imposed on the Canadian public. Is the minister aware that the average worker in Canada today has to spend 2½ weeks of solid work to earn enough to pay his share of the federal interest charges alone, compared to 1½ weeks ten years ago?

If the minister is aware that the average worker now has to spend one extra week earning enough money to pay his share of the extra load imposed upon him, would he indicate if he sees this trend continuing? If it does, it will mean that for every succeeding year the federal debt mounts at the rate it has been mounting, a worker will have to spend one clear day earning enough to pay for it.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is exactly because I am aware of the burden on taxpayers because of the deficit we have to run in order to stimulate the economy that I have rejected the plan of the opposition to run a deficit of $2 billion more this year.

Mr. Gillies: Another lie.

Mr. Stevens: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of his answer, would the minister indicate why the Canadian budget now takes 14 per cent of its total spending to pay for the debts of last year and other years, compared to 9 per cent of the United States budget? Could he indicate why we are taking 14 per cent, compared to the United States only taking 9 per cent of their budget, and would he indicate why we have got so out of whack considering the competitive disadvantage in which this puts Canadians?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I just said a moment ago that I am fully aware of the fact that we have a very heavy burden as regards the repayment of our debt, but it is not however out of proportion with the average debt of western countries. I reviewed the situation a few weeks ago and among all western countries the per capita debt load in Canada, in relation to the gross national product, is about equal to the average level of that debt in developed countries. That is an acceptable average at this time, keeping in mind the stimulus we want to give to the Canadian economy.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the minister had compared recent increases in debt load, he would find that the figures he has just related to the House would not stand up. The minister has represented that the debt is due to the stimulus he is putting into the economy, while ignoring the massive borrowing the government has been entering into to shore up the Canadian dollar.

● (1417)

Would he tell us whether the government is now attempting to defend the dollar at 89 cents, it having fallen to 88.70 cents yesterday, bearing in mind the government spent another $90 million yesterday in its attempt to defend the Canadian dollar, which will mean an added debt load for Canadians to bear?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I explained to this House and to the committee that we are borrowing to supplement the reserves. This is not adding to the deficit. When we borrow abroad, it supplements the borrowing we undertake in Canada. It is not adding to the taxpayer's burden, as the hon. member is trying to suggest at this time.

Mr. Stevens: You owe the money.

Mr. Chrétien: I have tried to explain that to members many, many times and it is impossible for me to make them understand that very simple proposition.

Oral Questions

DECLINE IN BUDGETARY REVENUES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the minister. I would point out to him that budgetary revenues are down 8.2 per cent from April, 1977, to April, 1978. Given the fact that the minister has indicated budgetary revenues for 1979 will be 10.1 per cent over 1978, we can see once again that the minister's forecasting is dismal and we can see the downward trend.

Can the minister advise this House what is happening with respect to the revenues, given the fact that he thinks in 1979 we will have something like a 10.1 per cent increase in budgetary revenues over 1978?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did not quite understand the question because the hon. member was looking to the other side of the House. I was not aware that he was talking to me. I must tell him that I do not have to change the estimates we made this year. We presented a budget two months ago, and I have not yet decided to change any of the estimates we made, including those concerning government revenue.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, seeing that the minister is not only incompetent at times, but is sleeping during the question period, I will repeat the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Apparently, budgetary revenues—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Don't you know the rules, Jean?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will understand that a minister has only one opportunity to answer a question and, similarly, an hon. member has only one opportunity to put a question. If the hon. member has a supplementary question, he should put it forthwith and not repeat the same question.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I will now ignore the Minister of Finance and direct it to the President of the Treasury Board. In light of the fact that budgetary revenues are now down 8.2 per cent from April, 1977, to April, 1978, and given the fact that the Minister of Finance has indicated budgetary revenues for 1979 will be 10.1 per cent over 1978, the minister must be aware that this will affect his budgetary estimates for 1979.

Concerning this downward trend in revenues, can the minister give us some indication of what his budgetary estimates will be for 1979? Will they be zero, 5 per cent or, keeping in mind that revenues cannot keep up with spending, what are the minister's thoughts in this regard?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we have indicated to the House our commitment to keep the rate of growth of government expenditures to something less than the rate of growth of the economy.

Mr. Stevens: That is not good enough.

Mr. Andras: That is the principle we would adhere to and meet in 1979-80, as we did in 1978-79, 1977-78 and 1976-77.

MEASURES TO STIMULATE THE ECONOMY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance, in the absence of the Prime Minister. On May 11, for some mysterious reason, the Prime Minister suddenly discovered problems with the economy. In announcing on that date that the election had been called off, he assured the House that measures would be brought forward soon to deal with the serious economic situation: he said that was what parliament should be doing.

● (1422)

Considering that all we have had so far from the government is the motion on the order paper yesterday announcing an adjournment of 100 days—presumably 100 days of indecision—and since unemployment is over one million, inflation is at 9 per cent and the gross national product is only 2.8 per cent, when can we expect the new economic measures which the Prime Minister promised?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had followed the scene, he would know that we passed a budget bill, we announced a package for small business not long ago, we announced a new policy for the textile industry in Canada, and dealt with some employment programs in the country. We have done a lot of work in the last month. I do not think the hon. member has followed the scene. The House of Commons has been extremely busy in the last month and a half, so much so that everyone feels we have to take a holiday at the end of the week.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I thought the Minister of Finance might say that. In the House on May 11, the Prime Minister specifically said measures in addition to the budget bills. The textile reference the minister has made came prior to May 11, not after. Is he trying to tell us that the small business measure which he introduced will produce jobs for the one million unemployed? The minister will be meeting with his provincial counterparts next week in Winnipeg: will he be taking to that meeting specific proposals aimed at improving the deplorable state of the Canadian economy and seeking their co-operation?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we have announced many programs. Next week I will review the situation with my provincial counterparts—something that is very useful. I do not propose to put forward any new programs at this time. Of course we are having some economic problems. However, it was said at the OECD ministers' meeting in Paris last week that all economies except for Japan are performing less well than the Canadian economy. Of course, we always aim for as much growth as possible. However, we have to take into account that Canada is doing better than most nations of the world.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister mentioned the OECD meeting of last week. He, of all people, should know that the Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs was very busy at that meeting, urging other countries to take expansionary measures, saying that the industrial countries had to do something in addition to what had been done in order to create jobs.

Is the government going to practice at home what it preaches abroad? More specifically, will it consider adopting in Canada the direct job creation programs which have been so successful in the United States where, on a comparative basis, they are spending twice as much as the Canadian government on direct job creation programs in recognition of the fact that it makes more sense to put people to work than to give them hand-outs.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, at the OECD meeting the Canadian economy was praised for being more stimulating than that of most nations of the western world.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: As usual, the opposition will not recognize what is the reality. A few minutes ago I was blamed by the other opposition party because our policies were so stimulating that we were running up big deficits.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

STATEMENT OF FRENCH MINISTER CONCERNING QUEBEC POLITICS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the right hon. Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister, I shall direct my question to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations.

Mr. Speaker, in a new bulletin this morning, the French network of the CBC reported statements of the Quebec premier as well as those of the secretary-general of the Independent Republican Party of President Giscard d'Estaing to the effect that he was bringing the political support of the president of France for the sovereignty-association principle of the Quebec government. Can the minister tell the House whether he has been advised of the news bulletin concerning France's recreation and sports minister Jean-Pierre Soissons and, if so, whether he has any comments to make in this regard?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I have not had the opportunity of acquainting myself with the news mentioned by the hon. member. I shall certainly inquire about it without delay and the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs for Canada will surely have comments to make if the news, as reported by the hon. member, is confirmed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER INFORMED OF POSITION OF FRENCH MINISTER CONCERNING QUEBEC POLITICS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Further to the question I just put, can the minister tell the House whether he has been informed of the presence on Canadian soil of France's recreation and sports minister Soissons, and of the stand taken by him on behalf of the French government with regard to the problems which confront us here in Quebec in relation to the constitutional problem? If he has been informed of those remarks, what comments does he have to make about them?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have been advised of some of the statements made by the visiting minister from France, but I have not had an opportunity to look into them in any detail or to obtain a final report on what was said. I assume the French government will continue to take the position it stated it would, namely, to refrain from any intervention or involvement in the purely domestic affairs of Canada. However, I will look into it and perhaps be in a position to say something more substantive later.

LOTO CANADA

BUY CANADIAN POLICY

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The hon. gentleman's department has just announced a $1.7 million program to encourage people to buy Canadian and the minister now has on his desk a letter from Mr. Sellmeyer, president of Consolidated Computer Inc., stating that his firm in conjunction with another Canadian firm can do the job which both the minister of fitness and amateur sport and the president of Loto Canada said no Canadian firm could do, and do it with more than 80 per cent Canadian content.

Will the minister explore ways to prevent Loto Canada exporting high technology and experience to foreign firms, a process which can only widen our trade deficit in manufactured goods? Will he press for this $23 million contract to be awarded to Canadian firms, thus ensuring Canadian content and giving such firms an edge when trying to break into the European market for this type of equipment?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The hon. member is really asking what we are attempting to do with the $1.7 million. The purpose is to inform Canadians that when Canadian manufactured goods are suitable and are priced as reasonably as imported goods, they should buy Canadian. We are not saying people should forgo doing something because the goods they require are not available in Canada. In this case, I believe Loto Canada advertised widely and accepted an offer to do the job it wanted done.

Mr. Dick: The minister, unfortunately, does not know that Loto Canada did not advertise at all; it acted without even going to the Canadian industry.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Dick: The Canadian industry is now mad. Both Ontario and Quebec are turning to Canadian industry and promoting it, the very thing the federal government is telling others to do but will not do itself. The President of the Treasury Board may have an interest in this because Consolidated Computer Inc. is owned by the government to the extent of 53 per cent. Has he proposed in cabinet that Canadian firms, particularly, one might think, Canadian firms owned or controlled by the government should be given a fair opportunity to bid on this important contract?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): We are always biased in favour of Canadian content and Canadian operators. I will certainly note the hon. member's representations.

MANPOWER

BUY CANADIAN POLICY TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the fact that the government appears to be urging everybody else to buy Canadian but does not want to do so itself, I wonder if the minister, who has a very important stake in this because it would create 500 jobs in Canada, will be applying pressure in an effort to convince his colleagues that the Canadian government should also buy Canadian for the Loto Canada computer and gaming terminals.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): As usual, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has refused to comment on the splendid answer given by the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) indicating in some detail the action which is being taken by Loto Canada in this instance.

INDUSTRY

LOCATION IN CANADA OF FORD MOTOR PLANT

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The minister has said that he never offered a 75 per cent subsidy for the building of a Ford parts plant near Windsor. How can he reconcile that statement with a statement from a working paper prepared by his officials which was presented to the Ontario government and which contained the following statement:

> Cabinet approved 75 per cent federal, 25 per cent provincial sharing in the Ford case. Officials will have discussed cost-sharing with Ontario prior to this paper being presented—

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Well—

An hon. Member: Well!

Mr. Hees: This had better be good, Jack.

An hon. Member: Take your foot out of your mouth.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the House that I am disappointed in the Ontario government, but I am still attempting to negotiate a successful landing of the Ford engine plant. What I offered some months ago—I think back in February—was a similar deal to the one Quebec was getting. We made a similar offer to the province of Quebec with regard to a General Motors plant, but less money was involved. However, I was turned down flat by the Ontario government. The Ontario government said it would not contribute a five-cent piece to the landing of a Ford plant.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Horner: I have made it clear in both instances that we would prefer to have the plant go to a DREE area. Ford came back in the intervening period and specifically outlined to myself and the Minister of Finance the reasons it would feel justified in asking for a contribution from both levels of government for the building of a Ford engine plant in Canada because the costs were going to be "X" million dollars more than the cost for the enlargement of their existing plant in Ohio. Ford then indicated a considerable sum of money to the Minister of Finance and I.

Mr. Clark: "Me," Jack.

Mr. Horner: Me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Dick.]

An hon. Member: There are a lot of jokers over there.

Mr. Horner: I was then informed by Ford that it would be seeing the Ontario government. Ford saw the Minister of Finance and myself on a Wednesday and the Ontario government on a Friday.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I thought this was the minister who once said that a man's word is a man's word. I ask the minister whether he will tell the House with honesty that the offer which was made by Ford and which was under discussion between the Ontario and federal governments involved Ford building a parts plant anywhere other than Windsor. Did Ford ever consider any spot other than Windsor, Ontario?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether Ford considered any spot other than Windsor.

Mr. Beatty: You are as phony as a three-dollar bill, Jack.

An hon. Member: Stop shouting.

Mr. Horner: I think, however, that in the minds of people in many areas of Ontario it was thought that Ford was considering their areas. Certainly, the government of Quebec thought Ford was considering the province of Quebec. But on a specific matter Ford came to this government wanting $75 million for the building of a plant at Windsor. That was far greater than I had obtained permission from the cabinet to offer anybody. I went to cabinet, and we were prepared to go into a non-DREE area in a substantial way.

As I said earlier, I was disappointed that the Ontario government did not feel that the auto industry was important to Ontario, and that the Ontario government was not prepared to assist us in landing a plant in the province of Ontario. I believe we are still going to attempt to negotiate because of the secondary effects of a Ford plant: the spin-off effects would be of tremendous benefit to whatever province a plant is built in, and I think Ontario should reconsider.

LOCATION IN WINDSOR, ONT., OF FORD MOTOR PLANT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. While recognizing the very heavy provincial responsibility in this matter, I would like the minister to assure us that the federal government is taking all reasonable steps open to it to ensure that Canada will have its fair share of new automotive plant production employment, bearing in mind that certain automotive centres in Ontario have had unemployment rates above the national average.

In addition, if reports that the Ford Motor Company is interested in establishing a major engine plant in the Windsor area are true, and if the alternative to having that plant in the Windsor area is that it be built in the United States, I ask the minister to ensure that the government will take every possible step to have that plant in Canada and in the Windsor area in particular.

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that the offer made by the federal government to Ford and to the province of Ontario is substantially higher than Ontario has agreed to put forward so far.

URBAN AFFAIRS

ROBERT CAMPEAU REAL ESTATE DEVELOPMENTS IN HULL, QUEBEC

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, and I hope I will get more of a response than I did on the nineteenth of this month. With respect to the involvement of Mr. Campeau in various organizations in Hull, I would like to ask the minister whether it is a fact that the Campeau organization has recently consistently threatened to delay the construction of the hotel part of les Terrasses de la Chaudière and whether the minister acknowledges this, in view of the fact that on February 7 a letter was written to Pierre Juneau urging him to direct his staff to address themselves to the program, "we agree to, without wasting further time". There is also further correspondence. I would like to find out how much further we are going to go in this country wasting taxpayers' money to accommodate Mr. Campeau.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am under the impression that the hon. member is asking a question concerning a letter of which a copy is in his possession. I cannot understand why he is asking that question since he already has the answer. Furthermore, I strongly object to the conclusion he draws from his own remarks since they are groundless and have no relation to the activities of the National Capital Commission in Hull. I think the hon. member, faithful as ever to his old habits, is once again making absolutely unfounded allegations.

[English]

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, the only way to get an answer from this minister is to know it before asking the question. However, I want to ask him if he can tell the House and the country why a solicitor, one Pierre Joanisse, has been retained, over the heads of justice officials in the ministry, to facilitate Mr. Campeau's request to have the Brewery Creek development accelerated at a cost of over $3 million. Why has the advice of the proper departmental officials been ignored again and why has this outside solicitor been brought in?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the appointment of a solicitor by the National Capital Commission is an exclusive prerogative of that commission. It is an independent organization which has the right to hire consultants whenever it wishes to. Furthermore, the development of that park in Hull was decided many years ago. It has nothing to do with Mr. Campeau's interests or activities. Obviously, the fact that the park will be in the vicinity of les Terrasses de la Chaudière is quite likely to embellish the surroundings of these buildings. But this park is not being developed in Mr. Campeau's interests, but for the enjoyment of Canadians who will come to visit the national capital and who want to have a national capital which is beautiful on both sides of the river and not only on this side.

NATIONAL REVENUE

BRAMPTON WOMEN'S CENTRE—QUALIFICATION FOR CHARITABLE STATUS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of National Revenue. It is based upon a news report to the effect that the president of the Brampton Women's Centre has stated that her organization had to sign a statement that it will take no part in political activities, in order to qualify for charitable status under the Income Tax Act.

In view of the fact that the bulletin in that connection was suspended by the Prime Minister and we were told that it was for information only and not a demand or a directive, can the minister tell us why people in the Department of National Revenue would require a signed pledge from an organization such as the Brampton Women's Centre?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Acting Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, the procedure was that officials in the department would study the charter of any organization applying for the tax exemption registration number for charitable donations. I have never heard of the procedure outlined by the hon. member. With great pleasure I will make inquiries and refer the question to the minister.

PLEDGE THAT ACTIVITIES NOT OF A POLITICAL NATURE

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. The organization in question, the Brampton Women's Centre, was asked to sign a distinct pledge including the following words:

The Brampton Women's Centre hereby pledges that its endeavours will not include activities of a political nature.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Miss MacDonald: Is this the first time this has been carried out? Why was a pledge requested from this particular organization? Will it continue to be the direction of the government to ask for such pledges during a time when the Minister of National Revenue assured us that the entire question of definition of political activities as they relate to charitable institutions is under review in co-operation with charitable organizations?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Acting Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I clearly understood the problem as put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. This is a repetition of the same question. I have said that I will inquire into the details, starting of course with the date, if that is prior to the circular or after the withdrawal, and so on. I will report as soon as possible.

PETRO-CANADA

TAKEOVER OF HUSKY OIL—ROLE OF EX-CHAIRMAN OF NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It relates to what appear to be further developments in the conflict of interest situation involving Mr. Marshall Crowe, past chairman of the National Energy Board. As the minister knows, Mr. Crowe is a member of the board of directors of Petro-Canada; also, he is a member of the Board of Energy Ventures Ltd. of Boston, which reportedly is acting as an agent for Alberta Gas Trunk Line which is now bidding for control of Husky.

What action is the minister taking to end the situation where one of the members of the board of Petro-Can continues to sit on the board, while another company of which he is a director competes in a takeover bid against Petro-Canada?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe I heard the hon. member allege that Mr. Crowe was a director of Petro-Canada. He is not.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister will check out the relationship between Mr. Crowe and Petro-Canada.

Mr. Gillespie: You can check it out.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: In view of the substantial government involvement in the development, does the minister condone Mr. Crowe taking a position of consultant with Dominion Securities, which is a financial adviser to Alcan Pipelines, only one month after he resigned as chairman of the National Energy Board?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I think those questions were put yesterday to the Prime Minister and he dealt with them very adequately.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We have received no answer at all.

Mr. Hees: He said that you would answer today.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-U.S. FISHERIES AGREEMENT

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On June 13, 1978, the United States treasury department announced that it was not going to impose countervailing duties on Canadian groundfish, at least up to January 4 of next year. In the statement issued, they indicated, although they found that certain actions were subsidies, that Canada had agreed by October 1 to "almost entirely eliminate" the subsidies. They listed the subsidies as being cash payments to Canadian fishermen and fish processors from the federal and provincial governments; cash payments to fishermen for financing the construction of fishing vessels; grants for facilities required in the fishing industry; and loans for vessel construction and processing facilities, presumably regional development grants and loans. Has the Canadian government agreed to eliminate all or any of those in addition to the two cents a pound which the government has agreed to drop by October 1?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, we have not. The negotiations, which I am very grateful to the United States for having carried on so effectively from our point of view in Canada, dealt exclusively with assistance to fishermen and to vessels for catching. We have not had any negotiations—I, personally, have not—on the direct matter of vessel subsidies and the like, which we maintain indeed are part of regional development effort and do not constitute anything by way of particular assistance to Canadian fish products entering the United States.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, St. John's West. There are two members from St. John's. The statement issued by the American government refers to grants other than those which the minister has mentioned as loans. The minister will remember that in the case of Michelin, this was DREE assistance in a regionally disadvantaged area. It did not prevent them from imposing countervailing duties. In addition, the release indicates that Canada will have a 92 per cent reduction by October 1. Is the minister quite confident that we have to do nothing further to retain this status in any of these matters, in view of the statements by the American treasury board?

Mr. Jamieson: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think we can now stop doing anything. However, I emphasize that the most important single problem had to do with the two-cent a pound payments with regard to fish, which was a direct subsidy. Therefore, that was the matter on which we concentrated. These other questions have been under discussion for many years. In fact, the hon. member referred to Michelin as a case in point, which has been part of the irritant for as long as that plant has been in existence.

I would hope that the final solution to these matters will come about through the GATT negotiations in Geneva, where such matters as non-tariff barriers and related questions will be dealt with on a permanent basis. We have never tried to conceal the fact that there is uncertainty about the American reaction to these forms which I am sure the hon. member will agree are essential and valued assistance. It is a difficulty for us. We would like to get it resolved permanently.

MANPOWER

UNITED STATES WORKERS EMPLOYED IN CANADA

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the very helpful Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Philbrook: Last week I asked the minister about cases where immigration was held up even though immigrants were needed for certain jobs that we could not seem to fill with Canadians within a reasonable period of time. I understand that since April it has been increasingly difficult to bring in American and other maintenance men to do necessary maintenance service work in Canada, even though that service cannot be obtained within Canada, even perhaps to the point of an interruption of production and possible lay-offs.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a question, will he put it forthwith.

An hon. Member: What is the question?

Mr. Philbrook: Would the minister be good enough to look into that question with the same flexible look as he offered to look into the previous problem?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was doing very well at the beginning of his question.

An hon. Member: But he blew it at the end.

Mr. Cullen: I would say yes, Mr. Speaker. We have a specific situation from time to time where pieces of machinery are bought from the United States and have to be installed by technicians from a particular plant. We do what we can to facilitate the entry of these people to work on them, installation work or maintenance work. Recently, we had a case in Fort Erie where we were able to accommodate the people. Hundreds of Canadian jobs will result from the impact of these people who have particular skills for a particular job.

INDUSTRY

ESTABLISHMENT OF GENERAL MOTORS PLANT IN CANADA—PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. There was an earlier reference to the Ford Company. I would like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce if he can report to us now on the negotiations with General Motors about the establishment of an automobile parts plant on Canadian soil. I wonder whether the minister can report any progress on the negotiations in this regard to the House.

[English]

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, General Motors have expressed an interest in building a plant in Quebec and have asked us whether such a plant would qualify for DREE assistance. We informed the company that it would. The company has expressed an interest in building an aluminum foundry in which it could assemble a lot of aluminum parts for its auto industry. As far as I know, negotiations are still going on and General Motors have not yet determined what engineering projects it will undertake in that new plant, or whether in fact it will go ahead and build it.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Can the minister tell us, on the assumption that that industry would be set up on Canadian soil, what will be the financial contribution rate by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, I suppose?

[English]

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I think the question would be better directed to the minister in charge of DREE, rather than me. I can say that General Motors is anticipating the expenditure of some $600 million on the plant, which could mean something like 3,300 jobs. Therefore, I think it would be a fairly substantial asset to the industry in Canada and, more particularly, to the industry in Quebec.

AIRPORTS

REPORTED CLOSING OF CONTROL TOWER AT HALIFAX, N.S.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to direct a question to the Minister of Transport but in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister or the distinguished parliamentary secretary. Reports are currently circulating in respect of plans by the Ministry of Transport to close the tower at Halifax international airport. My question basically is, can the acting minister or the parliamentary secretary confirm this? I would then simply put my supplementary question. If that is so, will the minister institute a review, if from no other point of view than the safety of international air traffic coming into the North American continent over that very heavily-travelled route, with a view to ensuring that the safety factor on this trans-atlantic route will be maintained?

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not been aware of any report in this regard, but I think the hon. member will allow me to look a little more thoroughly into the matter and get directly in touch with him to give him more details.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC ON TRANSFERRING PUBLIC SERVANTS IN THE PROVINCE

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations and relates to the federal project for the decentralization in the city of Sherbrooke of the mapping branch of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in Ottawa. Considering that slow progress in this case might lead us to the conclusion that the population of the eastern townships, and more particularly the residents of Sherbrooke, bear the cost of a political conflict between the federal and the provincial governments, can the minister report progress, if any, on this matter?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, the delay is not caused by a so-called political conflict between the federal and provincial governments. All we have asked in all cases and in all provinces is that, when the federal government establishes new agencies in various provinces, the provinces concerned should guarantee to the minorities of either official languages the right to send their children to a school giving education in the language of this minority. We stated this requirement to all provinces, and it is the same for Quebec as for Ontario, Manitoba or New Brunswick. We are simply waiting for the answer of the government of Quebec, which would guarantee English-speaking civil servants moving to Sherbrooke under this project, the right to send their children to an English school, to a school which gives education in the language of those children. As soon as we receive this assurance from the government of Quebec, we shall proceed further, of course.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. Can the minister tell us when he asked that question to the minister responsible for the administration of bill 101?

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Mr. Lalonde: There were discussions, not between myself and a Quebec government minister, but between the Minister of Finance, who is responsible for this project, and the Quebec minister who is also responsible for this matter. The last contacts were made a few months ago and there have not been any new developments since then.

TRADE

TERMINATION OF GATT NEGOTIATIONS AT GENEVA

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can he tell the House when the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade negotiations at Geneva will be terminated, and when we can expect an announcement on the results of those negotiations?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think negotiations will continue pretty nearly throughout the full year 1978, but we hope to see some conclusive results, or some direction in respect of those results, prior to or perhaps at the Bonn economic council discussions in the middle of July.

INDUSTRY

PARTICIPATION BY DE HAVILLAND IN AIR SHOW AT ABBOTSFORD, B.C.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the minister's obvious interest in developing Canadian industry, I would ask what progress he has been making in contacting the de Havilland Aircraft Company with a view to having that company participate in the international air show at Abbotsford, British Columbia, considering the opportunity this presents for development of the Canadian aircraft industry?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I conveyed the hon. member's representations to de Havilland which indicated it will look at them. I have not yet received a yes or no reply, but I will convey the reply to the hon. member as soon as I get it.

CANADA COUNCIL

REFERENCE OF ANNUAL REPORT TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my question to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that in the original legislation for the Canada Council drawn by the St. Laurent government and amended with provisions for accountability by the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert, particularly the Hon. Howard Green, which called for a parliamentary review, in view of the fact that over 20 years have passed without such a review, bearing in mind the internal investigation by the department and the Canada Council itself, and the court case, will the minister finally agree to providing for such a legislative review by referring the annual report of the Canada Council to a parliamentary committee for detailed consideration, as directed by the legislation?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would have absolutely no objection to such a course of action, if the members of the committee express the desire to meet through the chairman, and that such should take place.

OLD AGE SECURITY

PORTABILITY OF PENSIONS BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND CANADA

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare and it arises from the news that the Canadian dollar is starting another decline. While I would not expect the minister to be able to retrieve a great deal from the situation the Minister of Finance has brought the country to, nevertheless I would ask whether she can report on negotiations with Great Britain in respect of the portability of old age security pensions between that country and ours, negotiations that should be simplified as the Canadian dollar weakens and the pound grows stronger.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry for the depressing mood of the hon. member. I think he will not even vote for himself in the next election. At this time, I can inform the House that we are continuing to press for a reciprocity agreement on pensions with Great Britain. I wrote again a few weeks ago to the right hon. David Ennals and reminded him as diplomatically as possible that their economy was a sunny one and Canadian and British citizens here should benefit from it.

PRIVILEGE

MR. RICHARDSON—ANNOUNCEMENT OF DECISION TO SIT AS INDEPENDENT

Hon. James Richardson (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of personal privilege of which I have given you notice. I understand that this afternoon this House will consider a government motion in relation to the Constitution of Canada. In recent days I have studied and carefully examined the government's proposals as set out in the white paper called "A Time for Action", and in the constitutional amendment bill, Bill C-60, which was given first reading in the House last week.

I am convinced from studying those documents that this government legislation cannot possibly achieve unity in this country. In fact I find myself in such fundamental disagreement with the government's proposals that I can no longer, in good conscience, sit on the government side of the House.

It is my belief and my conviction, Mr. Speaker, that the government's two-phase plan to amend the Canadian Constitution is in fact a blueprint for permanent national division, and for that reason I intend, after this brief statement, to cross the floor of the House and to sit as an independent member of parliament in opposition to the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I therefore ask you if you will assign me a seat on the opposition side.

I have not at this time, and I do not at this time seek membership in any of the parties in opposition, but I do want to make it clear that I wish to join all hon. members who are in opposition to the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richardson: I would like to confirm that, for my part, I wish to continue and I will continue to represent my constituents in Winnipeg South, and to serve my constituents as an independent member of parliament.

To conclude—and I realize that this is a trite expression but I believe it is truthful and appropriate for me to say at this time—I leave this side of the House, and I leave friends on this side of the House, much more in sorrow than in anger. That sentiment applies most particularly to my former colleagues and, of course, to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who are on my right on the front bench. My deep sorrow, and my only sorrow, is that together we were not able to do more for the unity of this country.

Finally, I hope that members on both sides of the House will understand that my decision to cross the floor is motivated by my belief in what Canada is and what Canada can be. For me, the cause is Canada; for me the ultimate cause is the equality and the well-being of all Canadians.

Order Paper Questions

I now cross the floor, Mr. Speaker, in the cause of a Canada which I believe in, the cause of a united Canada.

Some hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 139, 774, 775, 1,074, 1,140 and 1,226.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

PORT FACILITIES—GROS CACOUNA

Question No. 139—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is the government considering the construction of port facilities to handle general cargo at Gros Cacouna and, if so, has the project been approved in principal?

2. What specific commodities is it anticipated will be handled at the facility?

3. What commitments from users or operators have been obtained?

4. What is the estimated cost of the facility?

5. What revenue is anticipated during each of the first two years of operation?

6. What is the return on investment or loss anticipated by the government during each of the first two years of operation when all costs including depreciation and interest have been considered?

7. Could the cargo be handled in containers at existing ports such as Quebec, Montreal, Halifax or Saint John?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. The construction of a general cargo terminal at Gros Cacouna is underway. The terminal will include a 600-foot marginal wharf, related dredging, a 25,000 square foot transit shed and a backup area of approximately 18 acres.

2. Forest products, newsprint, corrugated cardboard, lumber, general cargo, petroleum products.

3. Seven local and regional companies have been identified as potential users and have expressed positive interest in the proposal. One company is committed to a long-term agreement with Transport Canada regarding storage and shipment of their product through Gros Cacouna.

4. The estimated cost of the facility is $12.5 million.

5. It is anticipated that the revenue in each of the first two years of operation will be in the range of $80,000 to $100,000. In addition, certain savings will be realized on operation and maintenance of other public wharves in the area.

6. As a regional economic development project, this terminal is not expected to earn more than its operation, maintenance and depreciation costs during the first two years.

7. The commodities involved are not generally shipped via container. The markets for the commodities are along the north and south shore of the St. Lawrence River, in the U.S.A. and overseas. The potential users would realize substantial savings in transportation costs shipping via Gros Cacouna. It would be possible to ship some of the commodities by container through established ports but this is not practical given the nature of the commodities and the fact that they are produced in the Rivière-du-Loup area.

IMPORTS OF PORK

Question No. 774—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Did Canada import pork meat between September 1, 1976 and September 1, 1977 and, if so (a) of what category (b) in what quantities (c) from which countries (d) at what cost per pound (e) were transportation costs over and above the price and, if so, what were the transportation costs per hundred weight?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports the following: (a), (b), (c) and (d) Statistics on imports of pork in the period September, 1976, to August, 1977, inclusive appear below in terms of quantity, value and unit value, by category and country. (e) The valuation used is that established for customs duty purposes according to the provisions of the Customs Act and import documents are required to show values which exclude all transportation charges. Some imports from the United States are however purchased on a "delivered" basis and their prices therefore reflect an allowance for transportation costs. Separate statistics on transportation costs by commodities are not compiled.

RESOLUTE BAY AIRPORT

Question No. 1,074—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Was the operation and maintenance of the Resolute Bay Airport contracted out and, if so, on what date?

2. What was the total cost for the operation and maintenance of the Airport in the year prior to contracting out?

3. What was the total annual operation and maintenance cost for each year since contracting out?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. The operation and maintenance of Resolute Bay has been contracted out since 1964. The latest contract, awarded after a public tender call, was effected on November 1, 1974 for a period of five years.

2. Figures for the operations and maintenance costs prior to 1964 are not available.

3. 1964/65, $965,437; 1965/66, $1,247,359; 1966/67, $1,164,343; 1967/68, $1,455,065; 1968/69, $1,266,544; 1969/70, $1,283,317; 1970/71, $2,204,511; 1971/72, $2,239,681; 1972/73, $2,156,650; 1973/74, $2,366,098; 1974/75, $2,624,539; 1975/76, $3,042,024; 1976/77, $3,172,278.

IMPORTS OF BUTTER

Question No. 1,140—Mr. Herbert:

1. How many pounds of butter were imported in each of the past five years and from which countries?

2. What was the (a) lowest (b) highest (c) average price paid in each year?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada report the following: 1 and 2.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE CONSTITUTION

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) moved:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons be appointed to examine and report upon proposals that have been made and in the future are from time to time made public by the Government of Canada, on subjects related to the Constitution of Canada;

That twenty Members of the House of Commons, to be designated by the House at a later date, be members of the said committee on the part of this House;

That the committee have power to examine and enquire into all such matters as may be referred to them by the House, and to report from time to time, and, except when the House otherwise orders, to send for persons, papers and records, to sit while the House is sitting, to sit during periods when the House stands adjourned, to print from day to day such papers and evidence as may be ordered by them, and to delegate to sub-committees all or any of their powers except the power to report direct to the House;

That the committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting their Honours to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems so advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, to say the least, at the outset of this debate, the constitutional issue has been with us for a long time. It is in 1927 that efforts were initiated, under the government of my predecessor, William Lyon Mackenzie King, some time between the Balfour Declaration and the Statute of Westminster, of 1931, those two steps which enabled Canada, formerly a colony, to accede formally and legally to the status of an independant country.

I shall not refer to the intermediate steps—there were many—but I shall deal briefly with the last stage which started in 1967, this time on the initiative of the provinces, when Mr. Robarts, the then Ontario premier, convened the so-called Confederation of Tomorrow Conference, which was followed soon after by a series of federal-provincial meetings at the first minister level, the first of which was called in February 1968 by my illustrious predecessor, Mr. Lester B. Pearson.

This last stage, which extended over a period of several years, saw the publication of many white papers which were debated at various federal-provincial conferences, which resulted in a complete failure at the so-called Charter of Victoria Conference in 1971. The Victoria effort, however, was partly brought back to life between 1975 and 1977 both at meetings and through an exchange of correspondence between the premiers and myself, where we considered the possibility of implementing a number of clauses of the Victoria Charter.

In view of this long series of failures which has lasted some 51 years, why has the government decided to make a new effort in the constitutional field, an effort which was announced in the Speech from the Throne last fall when we indicated the government's intention to introduce in the House a number of initiatives in areas which are of strict federal jurisdiction? The reason, Mr. Speaker, is very simple. I suggest that the current situation imposes upon us, the government, who have been elected to represent the people, the obligation to face this issue once again. Of course, several things have changed in Canada during these 51 years, but the rate of acceleration of these changes has been particularly high over the past few years.

We have seen a shift of power relations develop in Canada which has expressed itself in various ways.

• (1512)

[English]

One of the ways in which this new relationship has expressed itself is in the increase in the size of all governments. In 1967 expenditures by all governments constituted some 23 per cent of the gross national product; ten years later, in 1977, this had increased to 40 per cent. Even within this increase of 8 per cent it is important to note there had been a shifting of power relationships. While federal spending went up by 3 per cent between 1967 and 1977, provincial and municipal spending together went up by 5 per cent, most of it provincial.

New power relationships were developing. The citizen was faced with governments which were growing in size. Of course the regions were taking on increased importance. The Atlantic regions were surging toward the hope held out to them by the new resource base, particularly the maritime resource. The western provinces had gone from a time when they were small markets, distant markets, and suppliers of raw materials, to the present situation where they comprise some one quarter of the Canadian population. In terms of wealth the three "have" provinces in Canada now comprise in their number two western provinces, Alberta and British Columbia.

Mr. Benjamin: And another one coming up fast.

Mr. Trudeau: Another one is coming up fast—Saskatchewan. There has obviously been a shift westward in that sense, not only in population but of the centre of economic gravity in Canada.

Ontario, of course, has gone increasingly toward a province which is open, hospitable to everyone, and which has shown in the composition of its population that it is multiethnic and very democratic.

[Translation]

Finally, the case of the province of Quebec is well known. For quite some time, constitutional matters were discussed there but, since the month of November 1976, it has become particularly obvious, with the election of a provincial government which set itself the mission of pulling Quebec out of Canada, that the constitution and constitutional matters are of prime importance in that province.

Why, I ask again, should we tackle once again the constitutional problem? Because it is important, Mr. Speaker, that we should try through new documents, through a new constitution, to deal with this new power relationship, the concerns of the citizens, the new requirements of the various areas, and especially, and that may be the absolutely irrefutable reason, of importance to all Canadians and Quebeckers in particular, to prove that new constitutions are a possibility before the citizens of that province have to commit themselves in a referendum on their fate, on their political future.

So, for all those reasons, the government of Canada has decided to come to grips once again with that constitutional matter. Mr. Speaker, efforts were always met with failure on previous occasions because we tried to reach unanimity among the provinces and the federal government, we felt this time that we might solve the problem in two stages, the first of which would entail amending the constitution in such fields as fall within federal jurisdiction, and the second, amending the constitution on matters of joint federal and provincial jurisdictions.

We realize, of course, that it would ill become the federal government to propose amendments regarding provincial jurisdictions without the consent of the provinces. That is why in our determination to solve the constitutional issue, we have decided to take action, and as the bill now before us clearly shows, we have decided to start with the field that comes under our jurisdiction.

[English]

It is important to make this point clear, that the Parliament of Canada has, under the present constitution, the power to amend its constitution. Section 91 of the British North America Act in the first paragraph says so quite clearly. When the present constitution, the British North America Act, enumerates the powers of the federal parliament it indicates as the first among those powers the amendment from time to time of the Constitution of Canada in respect of the six areas which are enumerated.

The equivalent of that for the provinces is well known by this House. Section 92 in the first paragraph says that the provinces can amend their constitution from time to time in all matters except—and then there is one exception, that relating to the office of the lieutenant-governor.

So it is quite clear that the Parliament of Canada can amend the Constitution of Canada except in certain areas which I will return to, and the provinces can amend their constitution except in one area. Indeed, the provinces have repeatedly amended their constitution. Well-known examples of that occurred when a few provinces decided to abolish the legislative council, their second chamber. This was done within very recent times by the province of Quebec. It had been done before by other provinces. It is quite clear that both levels of government can amend their constitution in so far as it concerns matters not excepted under sections 91 and 92, in the first paragraphs. But also it follows that both governments cannot amend the Constitution of Canada acting alone, unilaterally, by mere action of their particular legislature.

We have proposed to the country and to the House of Commons that we exercise our rights under section 91, and that we amend the Constitution of Canada in several areas which I will detail briefly, but none of them, of course, are areas which are covered or concerned by the exceptions, namely, section 91 first paragraph. Before going into details on that, let me add a word about patriation and amending formulas.

[Translation]

From a jurisdictional point of view, where does the problem of repatriating the constitution and finding an amendment formula belong constitutionally? It could be either in the first or in the second phase, depending on our discussions with the provinces. In fact, the patriation could very well take place in the first phase since it would in no way affect the distribution of powers among the federal government and the provincial governments. At the same time, if we patriate the constitution and agree on an amending formula, the participation of the provinces would be required some way or other. That is why the provinces might prefer to postpone until the second phase the discussion on patriation and the amending formula. For our part, Mr. Speaker, we are proposing a bill dealing with our powers and jurisdiction. That does not mean that we are not prepared or even not anxious to discuss that second phase when the provinces will want to do so but we know that should not be done without the agreement of the provinces to open the discussion.

I know we have been blamed for starting with what is not more important. That is a point of view, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the sharing of powers is extremely important but I also remind the House that we are dealing in the province of Quebec with a government which does not want to discuss any sharing of powers but rather the handing over of the totality of political powers to the province of Quebec. Of course, that is a situation we cannot consider. I know that the other provinces cannot entertain it either. So it would be useless to say: let us start the discussion there when we know that at least one of the participants refuses to support that discussion. So I believe we have not only the right but a near obligation to move ahead on that constitutional issue and move ahead in the area where we have the right to move ahead. It could be that in previous discussions the constitutional issue concerned mainly the experts—lawyers, politicians, academics and news commentators. But I believe I am right, Mr. Speaker, in saying that this time the constitutional issue concerns everyone. It concerns Canadians, particularly those in Quebec who are looking at their future, their political destiny with a measure of anguish, and it concerns that very large number of people who wanted to show their interest in the constitutional issue before the Pepin-Robarts commission or other forums.

So we made that proposal, and to try to explain it without going into the technical details, I would like to say that we think that three major problems stand in the way of harmony and unity in this country. The first one has to do with the relationships of the people with governments. The second is the language problem, the fact that we have two official languages. The third one has to do with regionalism, namely a certain alineation of the regions vis-à-vis the government and the central parliament.

[English]

I would like to show how this constitution bill attempts to deal with these three very important sources of uncertainty and division in Canada.

Let us begin with what I suppose could be described as the alienation of the citizen toward governments, big governments, as I indicated earlier. They have been getting bigger as modern governments in industrial societies feel they must deal with an increasing number of areas. At the same time as the citizen has been asking his governments to do more things for him, he has been subjected to legislation which naturally reduces the area of his liberties. For that he has been asking certain guarantees against big governments.

At the same time citizens in Canada seeing this evolving power of relationship, sensing frustration toward big governments, federal, provincial, and sometimes even municipal levels, sensing the divisions between regions and the central government which often express themselves in federal-provincial tensions, sensing too the linguistic problem which has caused a great deal of puzzlement and sometimes annoyance among citizens where minorities, French minorities in other provinces or English-speaking minorities in Quebec, also with the increasing number of Canadians of other ethnic stock than that of the French or those from the British Isles who have wanted to know their place in this society, have wanted to know the constitutional rank that was given them as well as the rank that the native peoples were concerned about. We attempted to deal with all of these problems in the following ways.

First of all the preamble, the statement of aims, which I will not recite here, does try to create for Canadians a sense of purpose, a sense of identity. It does try to tell them in reasonably simple and intelligible language that in Canada we honour and respect diversity, but that basically we are all united and we all share the same goals, goals of equality of opportunity from any part of this country where one may come, or from whatever part of the world one may emigrate to Canada. We tend to express this in the preamble and in the statement of aims in a way in which Canadians can feel that their government in a constitution binds itself to recognize these basic rights, freedoms, and the right to seek one's fulfilment in equality of opportunity.

The next problem with which we have to deal is the problem of regional alienation. The expression is well known and often used. Essentially, it comes and is expressed from and by the people who feel that they in some way belong to regions which are either too distant from Ottawa in terms of geography, political representation, economic fulfilment, or linguistic equality.

These various feelings of alienation have been the object of concern by all governments. That is why so many of them have been talking about constitutional problems and why so many other groups have been talking about constitutional problems. The official opposition recently published a paper, a white paper or policy paper, on the constitution. There is a group called, I believe, Canada West, which has published such a paper. There is a group of academics from Toronto. The government of Ontario has published policy papers trying to deal with this problem.

Looking at all these documents, it appears there are two ways essentially of approaching this problem of regional alienation. The first would be for the constitution to transfer vastly increased powers to the regions so that in the regions or in the provinces those powers would be exercised by governments which are at least closer geographically to the centres of population.

This approach of massive decentralization, which takes various forms, is one which this government rejects. We believe that whatever form the constitution takes, there must always be a central government able to speak for all Canadians in all parts of Canada in areas which are important in the lives of those people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: We think it would be a mistake to try to save the unity of Canada merely by saving its geographical entity. We think that unless the central government can indeed govern effectively over all citizens in the country, we might have saved the map of Canada but we would not have saved the reality of a nation, a people united in their purposes and seeking to fulfil their destiny together.

That is why, along with massive decentralization, we reject other approaches which tend in the same direction. I would name solutions such as associate statehood or loose confederations as other forms of constitutional change which would tend to save the country by destroying it in the long run.

Therefore, if we cannot and should not solve the problem of regional alienation by giving powers out to the regions, we look at the other approach and feel that that must consist in bringing, in some way, the regions to the centre, making sure that that feeling of alienation which exists in the regions is in some way healed by making the regions feel that they are truly represented in some ways at the centre.

There are various ways of doing that, Mr. Speaker. One, of course, would be through changing the approach in this very chamber. We could, for example, decide that in the future the electoral system in this country for election to the House of Commons would be one based on proportion representation. In this way the citizens of the regions would find that their national government would tend to be formed of coalitions, of groups, of parties speaking for the regions, since this indeed would be the object.

This is a remedy which has been examined by some and, I am sure, will be debated by others. However, it is an approach that this government also rejected for a very simple reason. We fear not so much governments of coalition, although it is certainly very debatable whether that is a very desirable approach, but governments of coalition which would be based on rivalries between regions rather than slight ideological or party differences. To our mind, that would not unite the country, but divide it further. This House, parliament, would become a place where regions would quarrel amongst themselves and seek alliances, not to further the national good of all the country but in order to further their own particular regional or provincial interests.

That is why we have rejected that approach and chosen instead to try to reform our constitution by acting in a way which is common to most federal systems, acting through the second chamber and seeking ways in which that second chamber, which we call in this bill the House of the Federation, can in some way bring the concerns and the debates from the regions to the centre. They can make sure that whatever concerns are expressed and felt in the various regions of Canada will be debated and resolved not only and not mainly at the provincial level, but here on Parliament Hill in the parliament of all Canadians. For that we have decided to produce certain modifications to the second chamber, the House of the Federation.

Here again various approaches would have been possible. One would be to have the members of the second chamber elected directly by the people. As everyone knows, this is the system which is in practice in the United States and in Australia, where the senators are elected directly by the people, according to certain percentages and numbers across the totality of the federation. In this way the upper house, the second chamber, reflects not national parties which are geared and oriented toward the expression of the greatest common good of the whole country, but is filled with people who are elected to speak more precisely for their regions.

This, once again, is a solution which will be debated and on which the government is anxious to hear argument. But we rejected this for a very simple reason, too. It is that experience has shown in Australia—and, I think, theory would also demonstrate—that this system of direct election of two chambers, the House of Commons and the House of the Federation, would result almost inevitably in difficulties in the functioning of the parliamentary system. There would be the question to which of the houses is the government responsible, and what should be done in the case of an irreconcilable difference between the two chambers? What would be the result at a time of double dissolution, and so on?

It is because of such questions that we are afraid the introduction of this system is not compatible with the parliamentary method of government and would tend to lean more toward the presidential system where somebody above the elected chambers, someone responsible to the whole country—a president of sorts—would exercise legislative authority. That is the difficulty to which direct representation in the second chamber would lead us. I submit this would also be the difficulty if we had one chamber, elected by PR, which was the forum of contending regionalist parties. We would inevitably drift, I submit, toward a presidential system since some authority above these quarrelling regions would have to be elected, such authority coming directly from the people. Therefore, through a process of elimination, Mr. Speaker, we ended up with a second chamber which would not be elected but which would be appointed.

Now it may be asked: why not have the provinces appoint the members of the second chamber in a system which would be somewhat attuned to the system of the government in the Federal Republic of Germany? Our view is that the provinces have a function within the constitution which is to exercise the jurisdiction contained in the constitution, and particularly in section 92, or some modification thereof, with authority over the citizens of those respective provinces in areas of provincial jurisdiction. We do not think it would be the right approach to tell the provinces, whose authority is absolute within their spheres of government in the provinces, to determine also how the national government shall be managed and how the national parliament shall be run.

We think it is important for the people of the regions to know that they, as regions, have spokesmen in the second chamber. That is why we have proposed that members of the House of the Federation be chosen by a system which ensures that the result will correspond to the popular vote in those different provinces—not a system which corresponds to the will of the national government or of the provincial governments, but a system which equates itself to the voting pattern of the people of the provinces voting sometimes in provincial elections and sometimes in federal elections. This is the result which is proposed to the House in this constitutional amendment bill, Mr. Speaker.

It is said it will be very complicated. I suppose it is possible to look for alternative ways, and I repeat the government is anxious to hear discussion on all these questions. But I submit that every constitutional change is probably met with the fear that it will be too complicated. Certainly the system which exists in connection with the Senate in the United States, with a third being elected every two years for six years, and the congressional system, must have seemed very complex when the constitution of the United States of America was brought forward. The system of the Bonn government must also have seemed very complicated when it was introduced.

In fairness, Mr. Speaker, I ask those Canadians who want to debate constitutional problems and look for solutions, to consider this whole matter, going back to the first principles I have put before the House—how do we bring the regions to the centre and make sure that in some way we end the feeling of alienation which eventually, if left to develop, will destroy the legitimacy of the national parliament? How can these questions be resolved in a constitution?

Finally, I said there was a third area where problems in Canada were acute and had to find their solution in the constitutional bill. That is the area of language. I believe it is the matter which is of most concern to the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Richardson) who just crossed the floor. I believe it must be for that reason, because I know that when the hon. gentleman was a member of cabinet he was most earnest and ardent in his search for greater equity for the regions. I doubt whether he could object to any honest effort to ensure greater representation for the regions. If, as I suspect, he crossed the floor because of a disagreement on the question of language, I can only say that I respect his decision but do not deny that it is a profound disagreement and one which could not be reconciled.

We on this side of the House take it as a basic tenet of Canada that we must avoid any constitutional or legal development which would result in one province speaking only or mainly French, and all the other provinces speaking only English.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Given the historic and demographic data of this country, I think it is folly to say that bilingualism is divisive. Again, given the historic and demographic data, I think one must conclude that equality of the two official languages is not divisive but the only way in which this country will remain united.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I say this because it is the only way in which English-speaking Canadians will continue to live and want to live in Quebec and feel at home and equal citizens there, and because it is the only way in which French-speaking Canadians will continue and want to continue living in other parts of Canada. And it is the only way whereby we can avoid developing in Canada two nations, one French-speaking in Quebec and the other English-speaking elsewhere, which would inevitably lead to the dissolution of this country either into the form of a loose confederation of associated states or of two nations expressed as sovereign independent states.

● (1552)

The only way in which this problem will be solved will be to tackle honestly and squarely the problem of the French and English languages. Here again, this is what is attempted in this bill. It is attempted, first, at the federal level by the linguistic guarantees which are part of the bill of rights. As I wanted to indicate earlier, the bill of rights covers a multitude of areas—political, democratic, civil and, of course, anti-discrimination provisions—but it also covers linguistic provisions and ensures that at the federal level the spirit of the Official Languages Act, which was adopted by all parties in this House, is incorporated into this constitution. It also ensures that the provisions of section 133 of the present BNA Act are incorporated in this constitution, putting both languages on an equal footing, not only in parliament and in the records and publications of parliament but also in the courts.

Insofar as provincial jurisdictions are concerned we can only suggest ways in which the provinces will assure this linguistic equality, and the way in which we approach it, of course, is to impose—to suggest that three provinces accept for themselves the provisions which Quebec has as regards its minority under section 133. We know that section 133 of the present constitution gives certain fundamental guarantees to the English-speaking people of that province.

We think it would be unrealistic and probably impossible, within the future which I can foresee, to see the provisions of Section 133 which protect the English in Quebec apply in every province of Canada, but we do suggest that the provisions should protect French-speaking Canadians in Canada in those three provinces where 95 per cent of all Francophone Canadians live, that is to say, New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario. We realize that we will cause some difficulties but probably not that much greater than have been caused in Quebec for the past 111 years. However, once again this is in an area of provincial jurisdiction. We are seeking solutions here, and we are asking for provincial contributions in this area.

As far as education is concerned, we do not differentiate. The approach of this constitution is to protect official language minorities in the area of education wherever they exist, the English-speaking minority in Quebec and the French-speaking minority in every other province. We think this is the proper solution.

I know that some provinces will say that we should not be discussing education because it is purely provincial, but the way in which this constitution is couched will permit the provinces to see that indeed we are not attempting here to legislate in that area. We are suggesting the way in which we think the linguistic problem at the provincial level will be solved, but I merely want to remind those who make that point that we have in our present constitution, and have had since 1867, provision for the federal government to intervene in areas of legislation and to protect minorities in the educational system. Therefore, the concept is not new.

It is true that when the Fathers of Confederation approached this problem 111 years ago they defined minorities then in religious terms because there was a certain equation between religious and linguistic problems in the province of Quebec and, indeed, at that time in the province of Manitoba, but the concept of the federal government's protecting minorities in the area of education is not a new one. It is 111 years old, and all I want to say is that we are not proposing the continuance of this protection by the federal government; we are suggesting that all governments in a sense give up some of their jurisdiction, not to other levels of government but to the citizen in a declaration of rights, including that of linguistic rights.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that is about all I had to say on the bill now under consideration and I chose not to get into technicalities because I hope the debate will bear on basic issues rather than matters of detail. Indeed that is why we are not on second reading of this bill today. Instead we are discussing a motion to establish a committee of the House of Commons and the Senate to study the bill and other constitutional documents which may be referred to it by the government or which the committee itself may wish to study. I am thinking particularly of the proposal concerning constitutional matters made by the Progressive Conservative party one or two months ago if my memory serves me well.

So it is important to remember that this bill, which, as I have been trying to explain over the last thirty minutes or so, embodies the solutions proposed at this stage by the government and the Liberal Party of Canada, has not gone beyond first reading yet. In other words, before its re-introduction in the next session, there will be not only, I hope, a very positive discussion in the joint committee of both Houses, but also possibly a report from the Pepin-Robarts commission which we might take into account in drafting the bill for the next session and that there will be discussions at the provincial level. In fact, my colleagues, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Lalonde) and other ministers have already met the premiers to explain the spirit, the philosophy and the economy of the bill and we are at their disposal to provide them with further explanations.

Mr. Speaker, we know that there will be a meeting of premiers in August and that one of the issues on the agenda will be those constitutional proposals. So I repeat, it should be well understood that it is not a definitive or unilateral action that precludes any discussion. It is the result of the ideas developed by the government with the support of the Liberal caucus. It is the result of our thinking but, as I said, we are prepared to continue the debate and improve the way in which we shall be able to study the bill.

I note, Mr. Speaker, that I have forgotten a very small item in my outline. I would like to refer to it simply to show the House that we believe this to be important. When I suggested that the regions should be represented within the legislative body in the second chamber, I should have added that we also want the provinces to feel represented, or in any case not alienated, with regard to the national government and the supreme court, and certain proposals to this effect are contained in the bill.

But it is time that I concluded, Mr. Speaker. In closing, I would simply like to say once again that we do not believe that a constitutional bill can lead the country towards greater harmony or unity if the bill is not debated and eventually accepted by the great majority of Canadians. This is why we have proceeded in this way by moving a motion to establish a committee. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this committee can report to us in the coming months. As for me, I am convinced that we owe it to ourselves and that we owe it to Canadians to give them finally a constitution written, passed, proclaimed in Canada, for Canadians, by Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, naturally I am pleased that the government has decided to establish a parliamentary committee to look at the question of constitutional reform. I should say to my hon. friends to the left that we are pleased this is a joint committee, and that we intend to do our part to keep it that way. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated, and as the House will recall, this is something we proposed more than a year ago. Frankly I think it would have been even more effective than today to have had a parliamentary committee representing the whole of the country and dealing with the matter. At that time, it was turned down by the government.

I have one or two comments in direct response to what was said by the Prime Minister. I want to raise these matters at the beginning, because they reflect some attitudes of mind of his which may well be causing difficulty in the country. He may well disagree with the suggestion that those attitudes of his causes problems, but probably it is good for him to know that we on this side of the House think they do.

He made reference to the very real difficulty, and I think he used the word "impossibility", of dealing with one province which has elected a government that is determined to separate the country, the province of Quebec. Perhaps it will be impossible for any federal government to deal with that province. However, it is important for the country and the House to recognize that virtually nothing has been proposed to that government, or indeed the other provincial governments of confederation, by the federal government which might indicate some willingness on the part of Ottawa to consider very seriously some of the substantive jurisdictional changes of power that will be essential, if we are going to have a system which is satisfactory.

I regret the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) is not in the House. Indeed, in those relatively isolated cases when something has been tried by the government, as was attempted in relation to the immigration arrangement, an agreement was reached between the Government of Canada and the province of Quebec.

From time to time, even in the absence of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), the fact that everyone in the House of Commons is a federalist needs to be underlined. Everyone wants to see elected in the province of Quebec a government which is committed to maintaining the Canadian federal system. There is no disagreement about that. It seems that one route to that goal will be to demonstrate that there can be changes in a system which a large number of Quebeckers and a large number of other Canadians believe is not working. Frankly they are not particularly interested in patriation formulae or amending formulae. They are interested in the effectiveness with which governments do their jobs.

It would be very helpful to making a case for federalism if there were a much greater determination on the part of this federal government to sit down with the provinces, including Quebec, in an attempt to reach a specific agreement on specific changes of power where a failure to agree now means that services are not being well delivered. It means frustration is high not just with government, but potentially with the system.

I do not want to go on at any length, but I hope the Prime Minister's view of Quebec, that it is absolutely impossible to deal with that government, even though his colleagues have found that it is possible to deal with them on matters such as the immigration question, will not be used as an excuse to stop him from sitting down with the other premiers of Canada, including the premier of Quebec if he will come, to discuss specific changes which may make modern the Canadian federal system.

I could not help but be amused when I heard the Prime Minister speaking about the problems of Canadian citizens dealing within a larger society with distant governments and more complex matters, and the fact that he went back to his quite long standing concern for a charter of rights. It is agreed that a charter of rights would be of very real value. Certainly the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) took an important initiative in introducing the Bill of Rights. It is quite important for us to make the point that the introduction of a freedom of information law in this country, or the determination of a willingness to amend the Official Secrets Act, would at least be as effective as a charter by demonstrating in practice what we proclaim in a charter as regards human rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: In case it is not clear, the point of that is: I think the Government of Canada should realize that there are ways to demonstrate good will and that there are ways to make progress, other than by drafting laws and proclamations. They and we will be judged very much by our actions, as well as by our declarations.

As I said at the outset, we look forward to the establishment of this parliamentary committee. Certainly we will do our part as the official opposition to ensure that there is a thorough and informed consideration of the contents of the document tabled by the Prime Minister. I think it is important to make it clear now in the House of Commons that we believe it would be wrong to attempt to have parliamentary consideration of constitutional changes limited by or to this document. We think it would be wrong to let the government pretend that presentation of this so-called bill exhausts the obligations of the federal government regarding constitutional reform.

[Translation]

If you would allow me, Mr. Speaker, I would like to clarify those two statements. First of all, the exact status of this proposal is not clear. It has been presented in the form of a bill, which implies that the basic proposal of the government has already been established and that only the details can be changed. However, the proposal is referred to the committee without trying to obtain an agreement in principle on the part of the government, which leads us to believe that the government considers that it is not really a definitive proposal. I hope the second interpretation is the right one. We certainly intend to consider this bill as a white paper—as a simple proposal—and we hope that the government will not try to restrict the debate to the limited scope covered by its own proposal.

Indeed what partly differentiates a constitution from other laws is the fact that if it is to apply to the whole community a constitution must so reflect it. The Parliament of Canada is the best representative of the whole nation. This is why, as I have stated, my party proposed a year ago the creation of a parliamentary committee but I suggest that the committee will have to wonder whether it is in itself representative enough so that a sufficient number of Canadians who favour federalism as a form of government be able to consider this Parliament as a legitimate source for a new federal constitution.

[English]

I suggest we have at least two deficiencies. One has to do with our nature. In constitutional questions we represent only the national part of the Canadian partnership. The provinces are not here. The other limitation, which is quite a serious one, has to do with the mandate of this parliament. In normal circumstances this parliament would be ended, and the people of Canada would be choosing a fresh parliament and a new government. There is real doubt as to whether a parliament, which hangs on beyond its normal life, has the mandate to propose changes so fundamental as constitutional reform. Certainly any claim to legitimacy we have would be weakened seriously if we consider proposals from only one source.

As the Prime Minister indicated, it is our good fortune that a number of responsible Canadian organizations and individuals proposed constitutional reforms well before the government document was tabled. My list is not at all complete, but I think of groups like the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Advisory Council on Confederation, the government of the province of British Columbia, the premiers of Saskatchewan, Alberta, and New Brunswick, at least; the C.D. Howe Research Institute, the Canada West Foundation and, as the Prime Minister mentioned, my own party. We are pleased to be joined in June of 1978 by the proposals of the Government of Canada.

I would hope that some of those recommendations from the groups I have enumerated would be considered by the committee, and considered with some care and in some detail. Naturally, I think it would be a terrible waste of the money of the taxpayers of Canada, and an insult to the members of that commission, if we were not able to consider in the committee the recommendations, however tentative at this stage, of the Pepin-Robarts royal commission.

This is not an idle observation. Canadians have lived long enough with this government to distrust both its motives and its judgment on questions of constitutional reform. Many of us are puzzled—I tried to find a good neutral word and I think "puzzled" probably serves—by the change in tactics and by the timetable this government has adopted since it decided not to call a federal general election.

A year ago parliament was deliberately denied a voice in constitutional reform. Today we have what appears to be a bill going to a committee. Six weeks ago, as the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) mentioned, not long ago, in explaining his decision not to call an election, the Prime Minister spoke of the urgent economic initiatives his government still had to take. Parliament adjourns in four days and no new economic measure has been proposed. But what we do have is a deadline for concluding a very complex constitutional debate.

These inconsistencies inevitably increase suspicion that the government is using constitutional reform for partisan purposes, and that suspicion is going to be much greater if the government seeks to rush the work of this committee, seeks to stampede it through, or if it seeks to limit unduly the questions the committee can consider.

[Translation]

At the beginning I stated that the government cannot claim that its obligations in the field of constitutional reform are limited to issuing a document and setting a deadline. Indeed, the job of the federal government has only begun. This document deals mainly with its form. The true disagreements in Canada deal with the basic issue which is how to share power in a great diversified federal country. The present document does not even touch this issue.

Yet this is an issue which is the cornerstone of the problem. In fact a witty person could even conclude that one of the purposes of that proposal—with its proportional representation, its consultation process regarding judges, its council of state—is to divert attention so that people forget the urgent need of starting to reach an agreement regarding the powers which will be exercised by the various levels of government in a mordern and reformed type of federalism.

[English]

Sir, I have heard and read transcripts of the Prime Minister's remarks before—his lamentation, really—about his ten years of failure on constitutional reform. It is true that the initiatives that were begun by Mr. Fulton and Mr. Favreau have lost considerable momentum in the last ten years. As the late Prime Minister Pearson said, "The process has, of course, continued, although in the years since I retired it has lost much of its impetus. I regret that very much."

I think it is important for this House of Commons and for the people of Canada, as we embark on this latest step in constitutional consideration, that we put that failure in some kind of perspective. What have failed have been formulae, a formula to amend and a formula to repatriate. What has not failed, but what very sadly has not been tried enough, is agreement on specific changes in the conduct or jurisdiction of different levels of government.

There have been some successes, including some by this government. I mentioned earlier a very real success in the field of immigration. There may well be some others that I do not know of, although I would be surprised if this government had any successes that it had failed to communicate at substantial public expense. These successes are exceptions, because for the last ten years constitutional reform has been viewed by this government as a legal question, not a political question.

Earlier Canadian governments—governments that were less preoccupied with legal form—were far more successful in getting political agreements, ranging from the winter works program, the equalization grants, and the Fleming-Sauvé formula, initiated during the years when the right hon. member for Prince Albert was prime minister, and then through the Canada Pension Plan and Medicare with Mr. Pearson. Both those governments gave significant attention to the constitution as a legal document, but they were also able to look beyond legal reform; their eyes were not limited to the horizon of legal reform, and they were able to make the constitution work with an agreement among partners in this country.

That brings me in these remarks to probably the single most serious danger in this document. It is a danger about which I am pleased to note the Prime Minister was a little defensive in his own remarks. It is the attempt, however disguised, to have Ottawa unilaterally amend the partnership that is confederation.

The government argues with energetic innocence that it confines itself to its own strict jurisdiction, and does nothing that has any influence on a province. That, unfortunately, is not true. Anyone could go on at great length about this, but let me deal just for a moment with the supreme court.

At an earlier time unilateral federal amendment in respect of the supreme court was not considered by the provinces to be a serious matter, and hence it was not included originally in exceptions for federal amendment. That was at a time when the supreme court was not the final court of appeal. It is now the final court of appeal, and surely provinces have to be consulted as to a change of this magnitude which the government is proposing, and there is not provision in this House at this stage for that kind of consultation.

There are other instances of that kind of difficulty. Proposed section 14(2) in this bill, and since I think none of us is sure exactly what stage of this bill we have reached I hope you will allow me to quote from some of the specific provisions, sir, states:

> Any individual has the right to use English or French, as he or she may choose, in any of the debates or other proceedings of the legislative assembly of any province.

Proposed section 16(2) says:

> Either English or French may be used by any person in, or in any pleading or process in or issuing from, any court of Ontario, Quebec or New Brunswick.

Those are the provinces to which the Prime Minister is making the suggestion, and unfortunately he slipped and called it the "imposition", which is probably a closer reflection of his state of mind.

Proposed section 19(2), and this is a rather long quotation, states:

> Any member of the public in any province has the right to use English or French, as he or she may choose, in communicating with any principal office of a department or agency of the executive government of that province, or of a judicial, quasi-judicial or administrative body or Crown corporation established by or pursuant to a law of that province, where that office is located within an area of that province in which it is determined, in such manner as may be prescribed or authorized by the legislature of that province, that a substantial number of persons within the population use that language.

I recognize that the Prime Minister has already begun the argument, and some of his colleagues will carry it, that these provisions will not apply in a province unless the province agrees. The point I want to emphasize is that we have no business, in this House of Commons, passing a declaration expressing a direction as to how a province should act within the exclusive jurisdiction of that province prior to the province establishing its own considered opinion.

I have read the explanation. I know that the official explanation is to have federal parliamentary approval granted in advance so that there can be a very quick indication of federal approval and a very quick closing of the arrangement once the provinces agree. That may be the excuse, but the much more likely result would be to attempt to have that action by parliament give legitimacy to an action the legislature may consider to be impractical or impossible. It amounts to an official statement of direction in a field that is beyond our jurisdiction and beyond our competence.

Although proposed section 17 may provide some protection in this matter, a fair reading of section 16(2), which I quoted earlier, would require every traffic ticket in Ontario to be capable of being argued in either official language. In many parts of the real world that will be impossible for a long time to come, and parliament should not attempt to pressure any province into enacting what it cannot honour.

[Translation]

This approach involves two dangers, one specific, the other global. The specific danger concerns language rights and, more particularly, the objective of creating a climate in which residents and governments of predominantly English-speaking provinces choose to significantly increase services and encourage communication in French. In certain circumstances, it is useful to recognize rights and pass legislation. That is the conclusion arrived at by New Brunswick. In other cases, it may be preferable to go ahead without official declarations or provincial laws. As hon. members of the House know, I gave full support to the Official Languages Act and my predecessor, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), did more than any other member of the House to gain acceptance for this act throughout Canada, especially in the west.

This federal act is now part of the basic principles of our system and in trying to make it accepted we have learned a few things. We have learned that most people prefer to have a choice rather than be forced into something. It is encouraging to see the important practical progress made towards offering bilingual services in most English-speaking provinces. The progress made in Ontario is well known. It may not be so well known, however, that in my own province, Alberta, the number of students at the primary and secondary levels who learn French is increasing constantly. It rose from 6,323 students in 18 school boards last year to 7,601 students in 20 school boards this year.

This is happening at a time when the total number of students in Alberta is decreasing, but also when registration at the university college of Saint-Jean, in Edmonton, has increased substantially, especially among students who intend to teach French in Alberta. I can truthfully say, as one who knows that Albertans would rather choose than submit to restraints, that the passing of a piece of legislation may perhaps delay progress.

In my view, which, I think, was also the view of my predecessor, a personal type of leadership is more efficient than the mere passing of legislation.

[English]

That, sir, is the specific danger to which I refer.

The general danger is that the provinces, like the rest of us, do not much like the idea of being pushed around. One of the major sources of conflict in our country in the last ten years is that the federal government has tried so often to push provinces around, and there is every danger that the device of having parliament pronounce on matters within provincial jurisdiction, and pronounce before the provinces do, will be seen as one more cause of discord. There is already evidence to that effect from a variety of premiers representing a variety of political parties.

I think this is particularly true because in the course of the last six weeks we seem to have revived around here that atmosphere of confrontation between Ottawa and the provinces, from which we were happily freed for a long time. I remember that the Prime Minister actually called the premiers to go on television with him during one break in the pattern of his conduct of federal-provincial relations. But we seem to be back again at that attitude of Ottawa going out and picking fights with the provinces. We saw it clearly in the very stubborn manner in which the federal government proceeded with the invasion of provincial jurisdiction on the sales tax issue. We saw it again in the declarations of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), and we certainly see it in the lottery question. Indeed, we have a hint of that in the repeated assertions of the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Lalonde), that he is not going to let the objections of mere provinces stop his amending the common constitution.

We have a document here, sir, with a handful of specific proposals. They are going to be considered in detail at committee along with, as I have said, and I hope, a lot of other relevant proposals. Some of these provisions are curious, to say the least. I find it bizarre, for example, for the federal government to propose to the provinces that it is going to suspend the power of disallowance in regard to a province, which everybody knows is a useless power, when the provinces have agreed to certain federal conditions. The Prime Minister is the worldly expert in the House on forums and constitutions, but it seems to me to be odd that a constitution should enshrine the practice of offering a treat to those who are good. It is no wonder that this government is called paternalistic, with an attitude like that.

I also think that this government does not know much about the psychology of the people responding to treaties. There may be some kids around who may be cajoled by the offer of ice cream, but I do not think there would be very many who would respond to an empty cone, which is what we have here in regard to the power of disallowance.

Another curiosity is that the document extends constitutional status to the office of Prime Minister of Canada but not, so far as I can see, to the office of premier of a province. Again, it proposes an extraordinary safeguard, the double majority vote, and it accords that—and this is quite important—in relation to linguistic rights, but not in relation to provincial rights.

The Prime Minister spoke at some length about the role of the provinces, the role of the regions in making national decisions. As he knows, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) on behalf of my party put forward for discussion a proposal for Senate reform, a proposal which we have found was contentious enough in itself, which clearly established the second chamber as an institution that would allow the provinces to participate directly in national decisions. This proposal the Prime Minister has made, as he has been gracious enough to admit, is very different. What he proposes, when you strip everything away, is representation of party interests, not of provincial interests.

Indeed, when you read through the document, proposed section 64(1) prohibits membership in the upper chamber of any elected member of a legislature or of the House of Commons. However, proposed section 60 allows a member of the federal cabinet, but not a member of a provincial cabinet, to be invited to participate in questioning or debate in that second chamber. These matters are contentious in detail and in concept. They require the most thorough consideration and debate, and that is why my colleagues and I hope very seriously there will be no attempt to rush this matter through or to limit the agenda of the committee.

The Prime Minister, when he began, looked back to Mackenzie King and spoke of the historic concept and the history of constitutional change in this country. I think we all recognize, sir, that history, including history in a country like Canada, is made a step at a time. It may very well be that we are at such a step now. It may very well be that that is involved in this document or, more likely, that it will emerge from some of the considerations of the parliamentary committee.

I would like to repeat that it is the determination of members of my party to pursue serious proposals seriously. I think it is important that we recognize, too, that constitutional problems in a country will never be resolved, because there are always going to be differences among the people who make up a country and among the regions which make up a country. We may very well be able to change some of the institutions that are here. We may very well have to bring the actual document home, but it is important to recognize that any political system, particularly a large federal system, will always be defining itself and always be re-arranging itself. I should like to risk conventional wisdom by saying that, in my view, we have done that relatively well through much of our history as a country.

We face some particular challenges now, some of them very serious. One is a failure to nurture in the province of Quebec paticularly, a sense of security regarding the Quebecois culture and regarding its capacity to survive as a federal state.

Another challenge, as the Prime Minister admitted in his analysis but did not appear to recognize in his response, is the failure to respond to the new potential of our various regions, particularly of our distant regions, a potential brought by the discovery and development of our resources, by a movement of population, and by the simple fact that some of them now have power to exercise. It is a challenge that has been effected in no small measure. I will not go into this at more length at this time. I have done so on other occasions and I shall do so again. It is a problem that has been caused in no small measure by an unusually centralist government that has, throughout its life in office, reached out to try to gather to itself powers that would be more effectively exercised by municipal governments, by provinces, by the private sector, and by voluntary agencies. That has added appreciably to the tensions that we have to resolve and relieve in this country.

It is essential that we are able to find in this parliament—and I have full confidence that the committee that is established will help us in that search—responses that recognize the failures I have indicated, and that establish structures and attitudes that will serve the future of this country.

I very much hope that this document which is before us, and the discussion to which it gives rise, will prove to be valuable. I must say that I have more confidence in the usefulness of the discussion than I do in the usefulness of the document. The committee must have something to start with, however, and I am pleased that we have this document at last.

Whatever comes out of the discussion of structures, whatever we happen to do to the other place, what is absolutely essential is that we restore in this country a sense of partnership and co-operation among governments. That just does not exist now, although it is clear that it can exist if governments want to make it exist.

I will not elaborate on the experience I had as leader of this party in drawing together the premiers from four very different provinces at Kingston almost a year ago to get agreement on specific changes. We were able to get it not because we came from one party but because we came with one common purpose, which was to come to agree and not to come to disagree. I recommend that experience to the Prime Minister for the length of time he has left to exercise it.

The point is that in the provinces of Canada there is clearly a willingness to sit down and try to make some of the changes in particular powers, and in the administration of particular powers, that can make our federal system function far more effectively. That will is there among the provinces. The very real question, far more important than the contents of this bill, far more important I regret to say than the work of the committee we are establishing, the fundamental, important thing we have to do is to get the federal government to recognize again that it is part of a partnership and it is going to have to deal with the other partners in confederation on that basis. If that can be done I think we have the best possible prospect for success as a nation.

I can give the assurance to the Prime Minister on behalf of those members of my party who will be serving on that committee, that they will carry out their responsibilities in a very thorough and serious way. I say to him, since he is for a while longer Prime Minister of the country, that I hope he will change some of the attitudes that have caused so many of the problems in this country in the last ten years. I hope he will recognize that we can get agreement of some specific changes of jurisdiction, and that we can get agreement on making the federal system work if there is the same will at the federal level that has been demonstrated in so many cases at the provincial level.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in the opening sentence of the explanatory document for the bill we are discussing today regarding the process of referring it to a committee, the following is written to describe the purpose of the bill:

—to promote the cohesion and well-being of our federation and all its parts.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spoke this afternoon he essentially made the same point in justifying and setting the framework for the legislation we are examining in general terms today. He said its central concern was threefold in nature. It was to deal with the place that Canadians would find themselves in as individuals within our confederation; second, it was aimed at dealing with regional alienation, and third were linguistic rights, an important concern throughout the history of our country.

The purpose of the bill is very broad, and as the Prime Minister indicated in his tone, and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) in his, it is very serious. This means that in assessing the bill we must do so in that very broad, historic context. We must ask if it comes to grips with the serious question of national unity which has plagued our country for months, indeed, for years.

In assessing it we must all keep two things in mind, particularly we members of parliament who tend to be preoccupied with laws and regulations and who must face both questions. The first is whether, as a constitutional document, it is adequate in terms of providing a legal framework for nationhood. Does it adequately provide a new constitutional framework for over 20 million highly divergent Canadians representing many cultures, but with two principal cultures and two official languages? Does it meet the real needs of economically divergent parts of the country populated in different degrees of concentration? It seems to me that is a fundamental question that has to be answered in a positive way if we are going to say this package of proposals is the kind that, as a parliament, we should recommend be accepted by the people of Canada and the provinces.

Second—and I think it is very important that we deal with this second question—quite apart from its adequacies as a constitutional document we have to ask whether the issues, the tensions, the problems, the concerns about regional inequality, the concerns about language rights, can be resolved by any constitutional approach. That seems to me to be a pretty fundamental question in itself. If the answer is no, then as politicians at this point in our history we have a pretty basic obligation to provide some alternative answers than that which will be provided by a good, bad, or indifferent set of constitutional proposals.

I want to deal with the first question this afternoon, and to do so not by assessing all of the bill's proposals but by commenting on those which seem to me to be most essential to our concerns as a people at this time. During the summer the committee, comprised of members from all parts of the House, will be considering in detail the whole range of specifics to be found in the bill. My purpose this afternoon is much more restricted.

First of all I want to say very categorically what I find, and what my colleagues find, to be very acceptable and very good in the bill. First, like all Canadians, we find it desirable at long last to have our own written constitution here in Canada instead of in some distant part of the world.

Second, we think the proposal that the provinces have some say in the selection of judges in the Supreme Court is a good one.

Third, the proposal we have embedded in the constitution, that of a charter of basic rights, and fundamental liberty, including linguistic rights, we also think is a good proposal. However, we think there are problems associated with the implementation of this particular proposal, but the essential principle we accept and we commend the government for introducing it.

Finally, among those items found in the bill which are desirable and good at this time is the suggestion that the first ministers' conference in Canada be institutionalized. That makes a lot of sense.

To say that these proposals are not new is accurate, but I do not, in so saying that, mean in any sense to denigrate them. No country in the world at any period in the past or the present could conceive of dealing with a package of constitutional proposals that were primarily new. By definition, a constitution for a people has to represent a kind of serious level of consensus building. It has to reflect in a serious way the aspirations, the values, the objectives in a political context of people at a given time. Therefore, these proposals that have been made by the Prime Minister, by the government of the day, while not new, are relevant and are good and are, for us, acceptable in principle. I hope they can be speedily dealt with in terms of getting acceptance by the committee, and ultimately by the Parliament of Canada.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that what we do find to be new, and significantly new in this package of proposals which is not only unacceptable to us but disturbingly unacceptable, and in that regard I am referring to the proposed replacement for the second chamber of the parliamentary system, is the new House of the Federation. I say, and I say it in all seriousness, that if the government had deliberately set out to propose an institution that would simultaneously promote discontent, fractionalize the country, and frustrate the democratic will, it could not have done better than propose the House of the Federation. I say this without any attitude of partisanship on this question and with no exaggerated sense, in fact no sense at all of being negative.

The Prime Minister indicated in his discussion this afternoon an approach of flexibility on this and on other matters. I want to stress that what I am about to say will be in like vein, with the same openness of mind, to be persuaded, ultimately by the government if my arguments turn out to be fallacious, and we can be shown, on the basis of experience in other countries or on the logic of the system as I see it being proposed, as a mistake in judgment, then my party and I would be prepared to reconsider.

So the attitude on this fundamental question it seems to me has to be open on all sides of the House. With that in mind I make the following criticisms. Simply stated, if we create what I regard as a kind of abomination, for the first time in modern history we will have a body as a second chamber with even more powers than the existing Senate, but this power will be used. That is a fundamental concern, or ought to be a fundamental concern, not only for Canadians now but for our future Canadians. The inevitable consequence, in my judgment, of the proposal that has been made by the government will be a deadlock in democracy in our country. A triumph ultimately of the second chamber over the House of Commons is the exact reversal of the principle of parliamentary democracy, which is that the House of Commons should remain supreme in all legislative processes. The House of Commons is the body directly elected by the people of Canada, the democratic body in the system.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, we cannot allow this suggestion to be implemented as it stands. I will not go through all the details. However, we know there will be 118 members, almost half of the total coming as a result of federal elections in proportion to the party vote at the national level, the other half coming at various times corresponding to the popular party vote in a given provincial election. The duration of the tenure of the members, of both federal nominees and provincial nominees, will vary according to the duration of the various legislatures. In short, we will have a great change-over in membership. In comparison with the existing institution this might be welcome, but welcome only on first analysis. I say this because it signifies the kind of people we would get in this new body, if it comes into being. These men and women would come there in anticipation of acting. They would not only have that anticipation but would carry it out. They would not be there very long but while they are in Ottawa, coming from all over the country, they would propose to act and indeed would act as legislators.

The powers of this body are, if anything, greater than the existing powers of the Senate of Canada. In addition to the normal powers, they would have the right to appoint or play a role in approving nominees to the Supreme Court of Canada and to other key federal bodies. In the normal legislative process they would have the right to introduce bills of all kinds, with the exception of money bills. They would have this right, and significantly and crucially from our argument, they would have the right to frustration, that is, to stop the passage of any bill, including money bills, that come from the House of Commons. Once this is done it would take a two thirds vote in the House of Commons, with certain exceptions—the Prime Minister is shaking his head and I suspect I will come to a certain aspect of the argument that he is shaking his head about in a moment—to overcome this decision by the second body.

What is wrong with this proposed system? It would achieve exactly what the Fathers of Confederation 111 years ago intended for the Senate. We rarely read it in our school books, but without exception, Cartier, Macdonald, D'Arcy McGee, all said that the principal task of the Senate was to inhibit this pernicious force known as democracy which was emanating from the United States. There are a number of quotations, hardly the kind one would look on with a great deal of pride if one has a solid commitment to democracy, that make it clear that in addition to the representational role for the provinces, the Fathers of Confederation clearly had it in mind that the Senate of Canada, not being elected as was established about 100 years earlier in the United States directly by the people, was to be an inhibiting factor in the democratic process. Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, it did not turn out that way with the existing Senate for a variety of reasons, principally because the Senate turned out to be the fiefdom of the prime minister of the day and it was widely known and widely accepted that the day the Senate overturned legislation, certainly in recent decades, as passed by this House, within a matter of days if not hours, steps would be undertaken that would lead to the abolition of the Senate.

My concern is that this new creation proposed by the government would act effectively as a check on democracy, a check on the will of the people of Canada expressed in a federal election to elect the House of Commons.

Let me give a concrete example of my expressed general concern. I met with an official of the government, perhaps the leading constitutional official who, no doubt at the instigation of the Prime Minister, was playing a role with the Leader of the Opposition and myself the day the bill was introduced, in order to explain some of the technical details of it. During the course of this meeting I pointed out that, as I understand it, the present Senate, as a result of the most recent election, would be dominated by members of the opposition, the Conservative Party of Canada and the NDP, and the Liberals would have a minority. This was easily ascertained in terms of the voting records in recent elections.

The crucial point I put to him was that my understanding of the law as it would pertain to this new body was that, had it been in existence at the time, it could have held up the AIB legislation brought forward by this government a couple of years ago. I pointed out that a central proposal affecting, in the government's view, the good of the country, something that ought to have been done rather quickly, according to the government, could have been held up for as much as six months by that body. The reply I received from the senior official was yes, it could happen.

I asked why that would not happen. The reply I received was indicative of a number of people who are supporting this kind of body. He said that somehow these people would be reasonable, would sense the mood of the country, and would not respond in an inhibiting way when the House of Commons spoke clearly.

I have rarely heard a more naive view about the working of an electoral system. It is the height of naivete to assume that a newly created body, which is going to be based directly on proportional party votes in the provinces in half measure, and the other half on proportional party votes in the federal election, would automatically, especially when they are men and women in parties on the opposite side of the government, act with the same assumption about what the national interest is as the government of the day. With perfectly good conscience and perfectly good integrity, they would almost inevitably do the opposite.

In a party system in Canada the people respond in terms of the collective set of values of their party. They inevitably look at a situation from a party perspective. Therefore a national program brought in by a democratically elected House of Commons, and I used the example of the AIB, could be thwarted by that other body, not for weeks but for many months. In that situation the government would find itself, on issue after issue, stymied by a majority opposition in the other place.

I have no doubt at all that deadlock and delay would result. The practical concerns of Canadians at any given period of time, whether it is job creation, regional insecurity, housing, fishing, consumer rights or whatever, those legislative measures which should be produced rather quickly in a democratic age to meet the needs of the people, would be frustrated and held up by this body.

The result would be that instead of reducing tensions in this country produced by regional discontent, this new body would exacerbate them. It could lead to a sense of frustration with federal politics on a national scale that could be truly alarming at some point in the future. Perhaps that is why the Prime Minister was shaking his head earlier. I do not know.

If the government says that it assumes a government of the day would invoke the proposed urgency clause in the legislation to head off delays, I say it simply has not thought through its own proposals carefully enough. If that is the intention, the whole purpose of this newly created second chamber will seem to be simply a charade.

The conclusion is inescapable. The body could use its powers, and I am inclined to think it would, and frustrate the democratic will. Or not use them; in that event it would be seen to be a completely phony institution, fully equivalent to our existing Senate. It would play no real role in the world of power in Ottawa, which the Prime Minister in his comments this afternoon quite correctly described as being a central concern of the regions of Canada.

Everyone outside of 25 miles of Dundas and Yonge in downtown Toronto feels like a regional Canadian. All those Canadians have some sense that they are not getting their say in the legitimate legal power structure in Ottawa. I say that this proposal from the government is the last kind we should be considering to meet those needs.

An additional negative result of this body would be that it would undermine the potentially creative role played by the first ministers' meetings. I mentioned earlier that I was pleased to see in the proposals the suggestion that the first ministers' meetings be institutionalized, that a meeting take place at least once a year. I think that makes good sense.

The premiers of our provinces, unlike their equivalents in the United States, Switzerland, West Germany and Australia, have real power. They have much more power than the heads of the Australian states, the American states, the cantons in Switzerland or länder in Germany. They have to play an integral role in the governing of this country, particularly in areas of overlapping federal-provincial concern. Therefore the proposal to have the meetings regularized is a good one.

The practice initiated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) in discussing proposals for his most recent budget, although there was a significant bungling in the middle of it, was, as I said at the time, a commendable initiative and something that should be duplicated. The more that can be done in terms of this kind of federal-provincial recognition of the real powers which our provinces have, the better.

I suggest to the Prime Minister, however, that this body would undermine the good intentions of the recommendation that first ministers' conferences be institutionalized. It would not only thwart the democratic will of the House of Commons in Ottawa, but would undermine the role played by the provincial premiers, either when they meet alone to make proposals or when they meet with the Prime Minister of the day.

The third concern we have about this new body is the double majority principle, an idea borrowed from Calhoun, one to which we should give long, hesitant consideration. The Charter of Rights, including linguistic rights, is a good idea and is embodied solidly in the proposed new constitution. So I ask, Mr. Speaker, why do we need this new proposal of a double majority based, as it is, on racial differences? I simply say that my colleagues and I want to look at that question with a great deal of care because its very existence could be a source of significant disunity in the future.

I want to deal with the regional concerns which are at the heart of the sole significant new proposal. I refer, of course, to the proposed House of the Federation. The Prime Minister expressed his concern about it this afternoon. First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that for me the concerns of the regions are primarily economic. They are primarily dependent upon national and provincial political leadership which sets out the right kind of economic priorities. Having said that, it would be to misunderstand reality to see no role at all for constitutional procedures of the government in coming to grips with those regional differences. That is why federal states have been created around the world, including our own.

On behalf of my party, Mr. Speaker, I wish to put forward a proposal which seems to me deals in a much more fundamental and adequate way in meeting the terms of democracy and the requirements of regionalism than is embodied in the government's proposed second chamber. Instead of that abomination which has been proposed, it seems to me serious consideration should be given to the following: instead of setting up a new body with 118 members, take perhaps 100 of them, divide them into five to coincide with the number of economic regions throughout the country so that there would be 20 or so from each of those economic regions. I am using the 20 or 100 as approximate figures. These people would be elected, on the basis of proportional party votes in the regions, directly to the House of Commons.

Instead of setting up a second chamber on the line proposed by the Prime Minister, my idea is that we would take 100 people who would be proposed in a series of party lists in each of the regions so that citizens in every part of Canada could see, submitted by each of the parties, a list of outstanding individuals whom the parties are proposing as candidates for those parties in that region. So there would be added approximately 100 seats to those already in the House of Commons. Their holders would constitute a genuine representative force from the regions, and they would be indirectly elected by the people in those regions.

What would be the advantages of such a system?

An hon. Member: The Prime Minister smiles.

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the smiling Prime Minister, who tends to take that attitude toward any idea which comes from sources outside his own party, that the advantages would, in our humble view, be as follows: first, Atlantic Canada, the prairies, and British Columbia would gain proportionately in representation in this House. These are the regions which, for understandable geographic and economic reasons, feel they have less input into the conduct of this country's affairs than they should, less sense of identification with the decisions which are made here. They would have a greater say. To this extent, their increased representation would constitute a contribution to national unity.

Second, all parties in this House would virtually be represented in each region as a result of so many being elected on a proportional basis. This, in my view, would lead to a marked improvement in the caucus discussions of all the parties because they would more adequately reflect the diverse nature of our country. In addition, the government of the day would be relieved of some of the problems the present government faces. For example, it wanted a representative from Alberta and had to persuade a Tory member to join its caucus in order to get one.

By the process I am suggesting, the government of the day, whatever its political complexion, would have among its ranks not only competent men and women but, hopefully, since the party itself had prepared the lists, an outstanding man or woman, presumably of cabinet quality, at its disposition. That is regional input where it really counts in a democratic system. Regional influence would be felt directly in the caucuses of the parties of the House of Commons and directly in the cabinet of Canada.

Another advantage of this idea which I am submitting for consideration is this: the number I am proposing would be significantly smaller than the total composition of the House of Commons. The vast majority of the members would still be representing individual constituencies. The Prime Minister did not deal with this aspect when he was discussing the various alternatives—the only point he made about the House of Commons reflecting regional needs related to the election of all members by a PR system. As he knows, a number of other countries combine the two methods, right in the lower house there are members representing single constituencies and members elected by proportional representation.

The advantage of my proposal, it seems to me, is that the vast majority of the members would still represent constituencies, something which I believe to be very desirable in a democracy since the majority of the men and women who are elected have direct contact with the people and a direct opportunity to respond to the needs of given groups of electors. But there would be a significant minority element which would provide important and, in many cases, decisive regional input into the decision making processes of the House of Commons and of the cabinet.

Moreover, such an arrangement would not fly in the face of parliamentary democracy as I believe the other proposal does. It would be in accord with the tradition of parliamentary democracy that the House of Commons should be the ascendant body and that the cabinet should be responsible to the House of Commons. This would not be the case if the proposal for a House of Federation were adopted. The course presently proposed would undermine the authority of the House of Commons. I hope that not only the government but the official opposition will seriously consider the idea I have put forward.

I want in my concluding comments to turn away from the constitution. I said earlier that the principal sources of discontent in our land are not constitutional in origin. I strongly believe this. They have not had their origins in the maldistribution of constitutional power or other related legal matters which are inextricably connected with provincial and federal jurisdictional matters.

One hundred and eleven years ago the Fathers of Confederation talked about creating what became Canada. They did not restrict themselves in those discussions to technical, legal matters. They talked about the broadest essential purposes of nationhood. They understood that a constitution was to be a means, not an end in itself. At that time there was regional economic concern among the provinces in Atlantic Canada, and in Upper Canada and Lower Canada. A very real concern was expressed about the possibilities and opportunities for economic growth and expansion which would inevitably entail a crossing of this continent. In short, the problems were economic. Regional economics were an essential and central part of the confederation debates. They were a concern then. They are a concern today, and they are not related to the constitution.

Also at that time there was a concern among the provinces which were coming together to form the Dominion of Canada about domination by the United States. It was very real among all the delegates who gathered to discuss the future of Canada. I submit that that same concern is or ought to be uppermost in the minds of serious politicians today in Canada. That too is a non-constitutional matter.

One hundred and eleven years ago it was recognized that the principal means of ensuring French-speaking Canadians the survival of their culture was the creation of a province in which they would be the numerical majority and in which, through the democratic process, they would be able to ensure—within a united Canada which would protect them for other reasons and which would ensure growth for other reasons—the continued development of their own language and culture. That aspect of the constitution existed 111 years ago. That aspect exists today. That aspect, therefore, is a non-constitutional concern for us today. In fact, I suspect that perhaps the one permanent accomplishment of the Parti Québécois in the history of the province of Quebec will be the ultimate establishment of the supremacy and the sense of legitimacy and domination of the French language in every aspect of Quebec life. But that was done within the existing constitution.

There is in the history of a nation, our nation as well as any others, matters which completely transcend legal or constitutional discussion. They are economic and cultural in nature, and they are matters to which the government of the day has not addressed itself. The government of the day has failed in coming to grips with them, and to that extent the government must be held responsible for failing to generate the kinds of opportunities which could come in terms of economic growth.

In western Canada changes are needed to produce a system in the prairies whereby they could develop their secondary industry. Changes are needed in the freight rate system, and those changes would be policy economic decisions. Regional economic development in Atlantic Canada involves policy economic decisions and not constitutional decisions. So, the question of national economic independence for the country as a whole is a broad national economic matter, and again the government of the day has given worse than no attention to that important consideration.

What I am saying is that we support a number of the proposals which have been made—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the extra time. I will be brief.

We support a number of the key proposals which are in the proposed legislation. We look forward to discussing them in detail at the committee stage. We categorically reject the idea of a House of the Federation but are submitting an alternative for consideration which we think would much more adequately and democratically deal with the regional needs and concerns of the country. However, above and beyond that we are saying that the basic concerns of French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians at this point in our history, as indeed was the case 111 years ago, have almost no connection with constitutional matters. They have every connection with the question of economic and cultural leadership, and that more than anything else is required in this country.

Before I sit down I want to move an amendment which pertains to that other place which has been centred so much in the discussions so far today in the House. We believe that a matter as important as the Constitution of Canada should certainly be determined directly by the people who are elected by the people of Canada. We do not believe that future constitutional arrangements of this country should be determined, even in broad outline, by people who, as I said earlier, happen to be the fiefdom of the prime minister of the day or his predecessor. We categorically reject, therefore, the idea that members of the other place, the Senate, should be on such an important committee as this one is in the history of our country?

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the motion be amended,

(a) by deleting from the first paragraph thereof the words "a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons" and by substituting therefor the words "a Special Committee of the House of Commons";

(b) by deleting from the second paragraph thereof the words "on the part of this House"; and

(c) by inserting a period after the words "within Canada" in the fourth paragraph and by deleting all of the fifth paragraph from the said motion.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be debated at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert)—Manpower—Employment of immigrants; the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp)—Abortion—Request for review of abortion laws; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen)—Abortion—Funding of abortion clinics.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons be appointed to examine and report upon proposals that have been and in the future are from time to time made public by the Government of Canada, on subjects related to the Constitution of Canada;

That twenty members of the House of Commons, to be designated by the House at a later date, be members of the said committee on the part of this House;

That the committee have power to examine and enquire into all such matters as may be referred to them by the House, and, to report from time to time, and, except when the House otherwise orders, to send for persons, papers and records, to sit while the House is sitting, to sit during periods when the House stands adjourned, to print from day to day such papers and evidence as may be ordered by them, and to delegate to sub-committees all or any of their powers except the power to report direct to the House;

That the committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting Their Honours to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems so advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, we are perhaps entering today the most important debate in the last 100 years, during which discussion has been going on between the representatives of different Canadian provinces. At that time, Canada did not exist. There were Upper Canada and Lower Canada and the colonies, the present maritime provinces, and I think that since that time many things have been said and written about the constitution. Lately, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) submitted to us a bill on the reform of the constitution and we are asked today to adopt a motion for the creation of a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to discuss the bill on the reform of the constitution and report to parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I doubt that such a committee on the constitution is necessary because a few years ago, in 1970, the House of Commons created a Special Joint Parliamentary Committee on the Constitution of Canada. That committee went all over Canada, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, to find out what the Canadian citizens of every province and territory wanted. It visited all the provinces and 47 of the most important Canadian centres and gathered, in extraordinary quantities, testimonies of all kinds dealing with the constitutional problem and the ideas expressed by Canadian citizens, both Anglophone and Francophone, as well as Canadians of other ethnic origins. Those people contributed their ideas about what a new constitution should say. A report was tabled in the House in 1972; I have a feeling it was put on a shelf, where all it does it take up room in a library.

Mr. Speaker, the travelling expenses of that committee across Canada amounted to between $3 million and $4 million and, today, it is suggested that another special joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate be set up to travel to almost the same places, meet just about the same people, to get almost the same information that we already have in the report on the constitution of Canada.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I have doubts about the need for that committee but, having heard the speeches of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), I have a feeling that they seem to agree on the setting up of such a committee, which committee will, in any event, be created to study anew that constitutional problem. It goes without saying that it is indeed true that the problem is extremely important, and that it must be looked into, in every aspect.

Mr. Speaker, there is another point that surprised me as well as the members of my party—because this afternoon I am speaking on behalf of the Social Credit Party of Canada—and it is that this resolution proposes the setting up of a joint committee on the first phase of that constitutional amendment which precisely provides for the abolition of the Senate. Mr. Speaker, I and we, of the Social Credit Party of Canada, agree entirely with the amendment introduced by the Leader of the New Democratic Party to the effect that that committee be made up only of elected members of the House of Commons whose responsibility it would be to examine the issue of rewriting the main part of the Constitution of Canada dealing with the federal administration which is being proposed in the white paper introduced a few days ago and in the constitutional amendment bill.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the representatives of parliament should be the ones to consider this bill and meet with the Canadian public since it seems that it has now been decided to meet with the Canadian public to hear their opinions. Notwithstanding the decision that will be made following that committee report and the rejection of the bill introduced by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) last week, I believe at that time the senators will have to accept the decision made by the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment of the constitution is nothing new, and the culminating point I believe in that discussion arrives at a time when the national unity crisis seems at its highest point since the beginning of the federation. It seems that the party now heading this government—and it has been running it for several years—has a lot of things to blame itself for with respect to the events that occurred in Canada over the past ten or 15 years. I think we have every reason to blame severely this federal government because as the political authority in this country it promoted and brought about the national harmony crisis in Canada. They talk of national unity in a country which is made up not only of English Canadians and French Canadians but also a host of other nationalities and to try to make a united Canada out of all those diverse groups I believe is to daydream. We should rather talk about and try to harmonize all those cultural diversities to make a nation out of them. I think I could use here a musical image. For example, you can take a band of 20, 25 or 30 different musical instruments that have no resemblance and produce different sounds, and when you can put them together in harmony, you get melodies which are truly pleasant to listen to.

Mr. Speaker, if we do the same thing with all the nationalities which make up Canada we might build a truly strong nation, the kind of country we would like to have. I think that all Canadians in all parts of the country, maybe with a few exceptions on both sides of the linguistic border in Canada, wish to live in a strong nation but they also wish that each and every province making up Canada be strong and able to administer itself as it sees fit.

The Social Credit Party of Canada has long since been warning Canadians about the strictly strategic position of the federal government. Through its attitude, it has allowed the crisis to develop and then tried to make people believe that the same government would solve the crisis through amendments like these. Mr. Speaker, I have been sitting here since 1962 and I and several of my colleagues from Quebec, like our late leader Réal Caouette, have taken every opportunity to urge that Canada be given a constitution recognizing certain rights for every province and not only for Quebec. I remember particularly that during the general election the Progressive Conservative party had proposed two nations as an alternative. In the province of Quebec at least, that party did not receive the approval of Canadians on that subject and was practically wiped out. In the sixties Quebec had a Union nationale government which in some respects was closely identified with the Progressive Conservative party and the leader of that government, Mr. Daniel Johnson, was also proposing the two nations alternative. We know what happened to the Union nationale in a provincial election—they disappeared completely from the electoral map of the province of Quebec.

The Social Credit Party of Canada has always claimed—and our former leader Réal Caouette mentioned it several times in this House as well as in public tribunes throughout Canada—that our party was for a single Canadian nation, two official languages and multiculturalism precisely because Canada is composed of different nationalities which largely contribute to enhance the character of Canada and we must respect those ethnic entities.

Mr. Speaker, in the face of this constitution which we are being asked to reform, I think we must be very careful. In this first phase, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is proposing that we study only—or almost uniquely if you want—sections of the constitution dealing exclusively with the federal administration and in this regard the Prime Minister believes that the provinces have no say in what is already ascribed to the federal government by the present constitution. Mr. Speaker, I think we must be very careful in that respect. It is not quite true that the provinces have no right to voice their point of view about what comes under the federal administration. There may be some aspects which the provinces would like to see fall under their jurisdiction. To my mind, that is where the provinces should be given the privilege of deciding whether these sections of the constitution should be kept under federal jurisdiction or whether they should be reassigned to the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, if the provinces are to respect the constitution they must participate in its drafting without constraints, they must decide among themselves what they want to have administered by the central government and what they want to administer themselves. Only then could a province be said to act less than graciously if it did not respect a constitution to which it would have been a party. During a convention held in Drummondville, the Social Credit Party of Canada passed resolutions dealing with the Canadian constitution or the reform of the Canadian constitution and these resolutions have been ratified at a council or at a national convention held in Winnipeg. Mr. Speaker, what the Social Credit Party of Canada is asking for is a constitutional amendment which would allow the provinces to participate in the drafting of a constitution the same way the provinces participated in the creation of the Canadian federation in 1867. In the first phase:

Each province will have to institute a process of public consultation enabling all individuals, associations, groups or public bodies to express their views regarding the constitution. Second, in light of this first round of consultation, each provincial government will have to submit its proposal for a constitutional formula to the people of the province for their approval by way of a referendum. Third, when every province would have been given a mandate by its people, the provincial governments would initiate interprovincial negotiations on a basis of equality, that is the provinces or the government of the provinces would meet to negotiate among themselves without participtiption by the federal government. Fourth, the conclusions of these negotiations should be submitted a second time to the people of every province by way of a referendum and no province would be bound to accept them by virtue of their right to self-determination.

Finally, following the results of this consultation by referendum, the provincial authorities will ask the federal government to take all legal, political and administrative steps to respect the wishes of the provincial governments, duly elected by their constituents. Mr. Speaker, in a letter dated June 12, 1968, the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada wrote to the premier of Quebec and said among other things:

This renewal will give us the occasion to provide Canada with a new constitution which will remedy the deficiencies and drawbacks of the one we have been living with since 1867 and which will ratify a new pact between all citizens of Canada.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if we want to ratify a new pact between all Canadian citizens, it must be by referendum. It was not done in 1867, and maybe this is one of the wrongs of this constitution. But if we want this constitution to be recognized, accepted and respected, not only by the provinces but by all Canadians, I think we must give them the opportunity to decide, through a referendum, whether they want to accept the provincial proposals regarding what should be administered by the federal government and by the provinces. Mr. Speaker, if it is a renewed, amended or entirely new constitution that we are seeking for the next 50 to 100 years, then this constitution must stand on a solid foundation and that requires going to the Canadian people.

There is an aspect of the Prime Minister's proposal on constitutional reform which deals specifically with the representation or the changes in the Senate. It is proposed to abolish the Senate and to replace it with a House of Federation whose members would be partially appointed by the federal government and partially by the provinces. That is perhaps an improvement over what we have known so far in terms of appointment of senators, but I think, Mr. Speaker, that if we want a Senate that is truly representative not only of the regions of Canada but of all Canadians, we must go much further than what the constitutional reform bill proposes. Such a Senate could, in my view, be appointed partially by the federal government, partially by the provinces and partially by public bodies. It would then represent in some way Canadian corporations and public bodies, of which I could name a few, for example, the Canadian Federation of Municipalities, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the workers' unions, union-management associations, chambers of commerce, the Canadian Bar, the College of Physicians and so on. Those corporations could be called upon to appoint senators, and since of course they do not change as frequently as do federal or provincial governments—which could bring about rather frequent re-shuffles in the Senate personnel set up along the lines of this proposal—the participation of public corporations would I believe stabilize considerably the Senate chamber, and stabilize it to such an extent that they could be given the task not only of monitoring the legislations brought forward by the Canadian parliament, but most of all to deal with commissions of inquiry, for example. So I think we could get a truly representative Senate made up of men from all walks of life who could do efficient services with regard to commissions of inquiry and replace those we already know, which operate at tremendous costs and which we could dispense with since we would already have the people needed to undertake the same studies and inquiries.

Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. Prime Minister is looking for ideas, here is one which is not put forward lightly. The Social Credit Party of Canada is not the only one making suggestions, for I know that the public bodies have already done so, and I am making representations on their behalf calling on hon. members to seriously consider this method of appointing senators.

Mr. Speaker, there are other peculiarities in this bill which have caught my attention, and evidently for lack of time, I do not think I shall be able to examine every point. There is one, however, on which I should like to devote a few minutes, for I think it is very important. In the section which deals with political and legal rights and freedoms within the constitution, I read "the right of the individual to life, and to the liberty and security . . ." and "the right of the individual to the use and enjoyment of property . . ." Well, Mr. Speaker, it is all very nice to talk about rights, but rights without powers do not mean much. Until now, these rights were included in the Canadian constitution, but many Canadians did not have the power to benefit from them.

It is a fact that in Canada today—and I am not dreaming up these figures, because we often see them in the news following studies or statistical data—it is a fact that 20 per cent of the Canadian people, and maybe even more, live below the proverty line. Now, Mr. Speaker, for all those people who have a right to life, to freedom and to security, the use and enjoyment of property do not mean anything. We are a population of tenants in Canada and those who are not tenants live in houses owned by the BCN or other banks, guaranteed by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. So I think the proportion of the Canadian people who own their house is very low. For these people, then, use and enjoyment of property are very limited.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should add to the constitution something that would allow all Canadians not only to have some rights but also the power to translate those rights into reality, the power to use and enjoy their own property. We talk about conflicts between capitalists and socialists. I for one would like all Canadians to be capitalists and to have their own home in Canada. I see a Canadian constitution granting these rights through the powers it would give to each and every Canadian. No matter what kind of constitution we give ourselves, if it does not provide that assurance to all Canadians, they will never respect it because too many of them will be right in questioning the value of their country, their government and their parliament.

So, Mr. Speaker, if we are sincere men, if we are truly representative members of parliament, this is precisely the point of view we must never abandon now that we have started considering this constitutional reform: to ensure that all Canadians of all nationalities, from one coast to the other, have the right and the means to feel they are Canadians everywhere in their country.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, June 26, consideration of Bill C-36, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and motions Nos. 2 and 4 (Mr. Crosbie).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The question is on motions Nos. 2 and 4 in the name of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In accordance with Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe) moved:

Motion No. 5.

That Bill C-36, an act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in clause 5 by adding immediately after line 33 at page 5 the following:

"(4) The corporation shall, within three months after the termination of each year, transmit to the minister a report approved by the board on the activities of the corporation for that year, including accounts prepared under this section, section 30, and section 21, and the minister shall cause such report to be laid before parliament within fifteen days after receipt thereof or, if parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that parliament is sitting.

(5) Every report tabled under this section stands permanently referred to any committee of the House of Commons established for the purpose of reviewing matters relating to finance, trade, banking, and economic affairs."

● (2012)

He said: Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the motion which is in my name, I would like to emphasize that I feel that if the Export Development Corporation is given the authorizations which are set out in this bill, it will be virtually out of control. The government seems to have shown very little tendency to try to scrutinize tightly the activities of this corporation. We cannot count on the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) to keep a tight hand on the corporation. We know that from past experience. In fact, we find it wondrously strange that this minister, who at one time said he was the guardian of private enterprise and free enterprise and who was the champion of the free enterprise system, has not only joined the socialist Liberal government which has been ruling this country for ten years but also now is one of the stoutest advocates of government intervention, including the type of financing he is sponsoring through the EDC. He is now saying that more government assistance should be extended to help the various sectors in our society. At one time he claimed he stood up ruthlessly for free enterprise. In truth, the man is a phony.

Mr. Lumley: Shame.

Mr. Stevens: I say that because I think we must analyse what is happening here tonight and put it into perspective. In 1969 the EDC had an authorized capital of $25 million. Through three separate amendments that authorized capital was increased from $25 million to $400 million. If we pass this bill tonight, we will authorize an increase in that capital from $400 million to $1 billion. However, that is just the beginning. On the insurance side—what is called the corporate insurance side for the EDC—we find that while its total authorization in 1969 was $250 million, and as a result of three separate amendments has reached $2.5 billion, tonight we are being asked to consider an authorization of $10 billion on that account alone. We are taking the present authorized insurance sector of EDC from $2.5 billion to $10 billion simply by passing the bill tonight. That is on the corporate side.

On the government insurance side we find tonight that it is being proposed that we raise the authorizations from $1 billion to $3.5 billion, a jump on that account of $2.5 billion. However, most importantly, on the corporate loan account which initially had an authorized limit of $600 million in 1969 and at present is $4.25 billion, tonight it is being proposed that we increase that amount to $10 billion with this bill alone. That is for the corporate account.

On the government account we find that the government wants to increase the EDC loan amounts from $200 million, which they were initially in 1969 and which are now at $850 million, to $2.5 billion. As my colleague the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) pointed out earlier on other motions, we believe that when we add up those aggregate authorizations, which come to $26 billion, that is too much to give to any Crown corporation which appears to be out of control to the extent this Crown corporation appears out of control. His amendment suggested that $16 billion would be ample for the foreseeable future to give in authorizations to EDC. If the House decides to pass the amendments we have already debated, the net effect will be a reduction of these authorizations from $26 billion to $16 billion.

The thrust of my amendment would be to make a permanent reference from now on. If my amendment is passed, we would get the annual reports of the EDC referred to the appropriate standing committee of this House for detailed examination year in and year out.

What we are saying is that it is not good enough for parliament to be passing these massive authorizations, knowing that we will have absolutely no check on this corporation thereafter. It is not good enough, and we are suggesting in motion No. 5, which is in my name, that there be a permanent reference to the appropriate committee of this House so that there can be some detailed study of what in fact this corporation has been up to in at least the previous year.

I say this because during the committee hearings when we considered the proposals of the government, it was rather startling to learn the attitude of the officials of the EDC and, in particular, the president of the EDC, Mr. John MacDonald. He has a great name, John MacDonald. This country had a great prime minister at one time, a Conservative named John Macdonald, and I would be very surprised if that great prime minister would ever have countenanced the program which the present John MacDonald, head of the EDC, is proposing for the Canadian public through the EDC.

Mr. Danson: The president is sober.

Mr. Stevens: I refer to page 33:12 of the May 11 report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. John MacDonald was asked to give us a little more detail about some of the doubtful accounts already on the books of the EDC. The hon. member for St. John's West was doing some of the questioning, and among other things he asked for an up to date list of any countries about which the EDC was concerned. Mr. MacDonald replied:

It goes right back to the year 1965. The countries touched on are Chile, Egypt, India, Kenya, Liberia, Pakistan, Panama and the Philippines, which had one or more reschedulings.

Hon. members will recall from an earlier speech I made on this bill that this rescheduling is a rather clever wording. When a loan gets into trouble, the EDC simply brings the officials of the country involved in and tells them that it would look better on the EDC's books if they would sign a new note. The EDC agrees to throw in all the interests, take all the accumulated interest and principal, and sign a new note. That way it looks current to the EDC as well as to the country involved, and everyone is happy. Mr. MacDonald was saying that each of those countries had had one or more reschedulings. When he says that, it is interesting to note that some countries have been rescheduled more than once. They will do it one year, and if they still fall into default, they will do it the second year. Mr. MacDonald said:

● (2022)

In the years from 1964 through to the present time it gives the gross amount rescheduled—

He is referring to a statement he had tabled.

—the amount repaid, that rescheduled again and the amount outstanding. The gross figures are $65 million; $65.3 million has been rescheduled in total; $21.9 million has been repaid; $5.3 million rescheduled again—

That is the gimmick when they fall into default for the second time and they get them to sign up again. He went on to say:

—a further extension, and we have $38 million outstanding at the moment.

The chairman of the committee then said that he had just one last short question. Then MacDonald was asked again whether there are any additional bad loans that he is a little worried about. Mr. MacDonald replied:

The countries that are of concern at the moment in the international community are Zaire, which is under recheduling, and Turkey which is under discussion. Peru may, but has not yet become a subject of discussion.

Let us take a quick look at what we are talking about. Mr. MacDonald has said that they were taking a pretty serious look right now at three countries which may be in some trouble, namely Peru, Turkey and Zaire. If you refer to the annual report of the EDC for the last year ending December 31, 1977, you will find that the total amount for which they have signed agreements with Peru is $114,118,000. Of that amount they have already disbursed $81,662,000. They have received $9,084,000 back in repayment, with the total outstanding balance as far as Peru is concerned of $72,578,000. They still have $32,456,000 to be disbursed to Peru.

The point I am making is that surely this House would be negligent if we gave these massive authorizations which the minister is asking us to consider tonight without having some provision to ensure that EDC at least once a year can be examined by a committee of the House to find out what it has been doing, what loans it is rescheduling, and what countries it is concerned about as far as repayment is concerned. I say that in the context of Peru alone. According to Mr. MacDonald, it may become the subject of discussion, to use his words, and if it does, that will be $72 million that the Canadian public may have to reschedule, to use his words, or eventually even write off.

Mr. MacDonald also said that Turkey is under discussion. Here is the picture with regard to Turkey. The total amount of signed financial agreements with Turkey is $298,288,000. Of that amount they have $126,929,000 already disbursed, of which $18,248,000 has been repaid, leaving a total outstanding of $108,681,000. Let us take another look at this. Here we have the president of the corporation saying he is a little concerned about Turkey and about the $108,681,000 which was already disbursed to that country and not repaid.

I am pleased you are seated, Mr. Speaker, because you know what? They have $171 million of undisbursed funds waiting to go out to Turkey, to a country about which the president of this corporation is concerned, as he tells us. Surely a committee should have the right to review this situation on an annual basis to find out what is happening with Turkey in this case.

Let us take a look at Zaire, the other country which, as the president of the corporation said, has already been rescheduled, to use that beautiful term. They have financing agreements amounting to $14,993,000, and of that amount $14,726,000 has already been disbursed. Nothing has been repaid and they still owe $14,726,000, with $267,000 sitting in the kitty waiting to go out. That is the first reason I suggest we would like the amendment in motion No. 5 to be passed. It will give this House, through the appropriate standing committee, at least an opportunity to take a look once a year at the activities of EDC to see to what extent they will cost the Canadian public millions and millions of dollars in possible write-offs if they are not run in a prudent and responsible way.

I have referred to the authorizations which the corporation now has, but let there be no doubt that this corporation is so out of control that if the bill which is before us is not passed tonight, it would, in all likelihood, run over its present authorization ceiling because the corporation has given out commitments to such an extent that there is no way in which it could stay below the ceiling under which it is now required to stay.

Let me clarify here. I am not suggesting that the corporation is necessarily legally obligated. What I am saying is that it has certainly given encouragement and, if you like, moral commitments to various people to make extensive financial arrangements, and if it even lived up to only half of the so-called moral commitments, it would be way over the authorization that either this or the previous parliament has given to the corporation.

What I am saying was spelled out again in the committee as reported at page 40:11 of the committee's proceedings on June 6. On that page I am reported to have asked the president of EDC the following question.

I would be correct in saying of $6 billion in moral commitments, approximately half is out to either communist countries or OPEC countries.

[Mr. Stevens.]

I should make it clear that it was already established by the president of EDC that there was approximately $6 billion in moral commitments that were outstanding which they were hoping to honour, at least substantially, in the future. What I was trying to do was identify to whom those moral commitments were made, and what did I find? After asking Mr. MacDonald if I would be correct in saying that of the $6 billion in moral commitments approximately half is out to either communist countries or OPEC countries, I said:

I calculated you are up to about $2.7 billion of a pipeline to either OPEC or communist countries.

Mr. Hegan, who is vice president of finance for EDC, responded by saying:

Yes, Mr. Stevens. On what we have discussed at this juncture, that is correct. As I said in the introductory remarks, the character of our commitments will follow very closely the credit-worthiness characteristics and the efforts of Canadian exporters. One would find amongst the countries with oil revenues and some of the eastern European countries a strong credit-worthiness.

Let us put that into perspective. I have said that they have run over, certainly in moral commitments, the authorizations that parliament had given them, and not only have they run over those authorizations but they have done so to the extent of about $2.7 billion in favour of communist and OPEC nations. Surely a committee of the House should have the right to inquire to what degree the EDC is right in extending that kind of financing to a communist state. Communist states function in an entirely different way as far as their labour structure and wage scales are concerned. Consequently, by our encouraging development in some of those communist states, we are encouraging further unfair competition with our own producers in Canada. I will come back to that a little later.

The other thing we have to ask ourselves is to what extent should we, as EDC has been doing and proposes to do, be lending money to OPEC nations? Has the government totally forgotten that Canada is a nation which is running up significant current account deficits with the world, whereas the OPEC nations are running up huge current account surpluses? Let me put it into perspective, Mr. Speaker. We have a Crown agency proposing to lend hundreds of millions, even up into the billions, of dollars to the OPEC nations. These nations in 1974 had a current account surplus in the aggregate of $70.5 billion. In 1975 they had a current account surplus of $39.5 billion and in 1976 it was $41 billion. This figure was repeated generally in 1977. The figures which I have been referring to do not come from the government, but from where we get so much of our detailed economic information, the international economic report of the president of the United States transmitted to Congress in January of last year.

The point I am trying to make is that when we are dealing with a corporation which has requested authorization of $26 billion, it behooves this parliament to ensure that if they are granted any such authorization they are required to return to a committee of this House to give an accounting of their activities at least once a year, such as I am suggesting in motion No. 5. I say that because how else can you get some type of perspective into EDC or at least an explanation for the Canadian public as to why it feels justified in loaning hundreds of millions of dollars to OPEC nations which have current account surpluses of the magnitude I have been referring to, while we are running current account deficits of something over $4 billion per year.

I say that because I feel that so much could be done to help domestic industries with at least part of the money EDC is proposing to lend various countries around the world. Let me put it this way, Mr. Speaker. The fishermen on our east and west coasts need financing to help refurbish their fishing fleets. Money is needed to build the Bay of Fundy project, and more money is needed to develop the hydroelectric potential in the lower Churchill and in Labrador. And we all know that Montreal is still without proper sewage treatment facilities. These funds could be used to complete such projects as these.

There is also the Toronto area urban transportation problem. The Toronto area, Mr. Speaker, an area that I am familiar with, is a startling example of the inconsistencies of this government. In Toronto we need $58 million to help in the realignment of trackage coming in from the west of Toronto to Union Station. We cannot put any more commuter trains on the lines without that realignment. Railways are a federal responsibility and yet to date the government in Ottawa has consistently refused to lend or in any other way provide the $58 million which is needed for that realignment on the west side of Toronto.

Does it make sense that we have a government which says there are no funds available to help commuters get to and from work in the Toronto area and yet have a Crown corporation which is proposing to put out hundreds of millions of dollars that in many cases will help to build transportation facilities in foreign countries? I see that the minister is in the House, and I wish, before this debate concludes at the report stage, that he would get up and at least offer the government's explanation as to why there should be funds available to help people in other countries with their transportation needs but no funds available to help, for example, the commuters in the Toronto area with their transportation needs.

I know that the justification for much of the Export Development Corporation activities is the hope that they will create jobs in Canada. But would it not be doubly advantageous if we could not only create jobs in Canada but, in creating those jobs, build some of the infrastructures we need in this country, such as the commuter type of transportation facility which is needed to help our own people in their own livelihoods?

I would like now to go to the Canadian west. The grain handling facilities have needed improvement in efficiency for years. In many areas farmers have to leave the grain in the fields in the hope that they can get it off early enough in spring to avoid the rains and subsequent rotting. As we know, British Columbia would like to revitalize its pulp and paper industry. But to such projects as these Ottawa states that there are no funds available or very limited funds. However, the government seems to have funds to help countries like Poland, Cuba, Iran, Romania, the United States and even Russia with similar projects which are being completed in those countries.

The $26 billion package the government is proposing to award in this bill to EDC represents more than 10 per cent of all the goods and services produced in Canada this year. That is the magnitude of the figures we are talking about. To put it another way, the $26 billion is approximately two and a half times the total federal budget a mere ten years ago. For one Crown corporation to have such authority is unbelievable, but to have such authority without the proper scrutiny of a committee of this House is irresponsible. That is why I am proposing in motion No. 5 that there be this reference at least once a year to somehow police EDC activities.

Some of my colleagues have pointed out that not only is the bill proposing to give EDC this massive authorization, but there is nothing in it to prevent the corporation from loaning money to the very nations which are going to use those funds to become more competitive with us in international trade in subsequent years.

My colleagues have mentioned the $160 million loan for a pulp and paper mill in Poland, money the EDC put up despite the fact that our own pulp and paper industry is struggling to stay alive in the face of increased competition abroad, and despite the fact that everyone expects the Polish people to be one of our major competitors in the European paper market.

EDC has rationalized this decision by pointing out that Poland would buy Canadian equipment for its plant. However, this just does not hold up because in a state run society, as I have already mentioned, the Polish worker is paid far less than his Canadan counterpart, and ultimately Poland will be able to undercut Canadian prices. The pulp and paper industry, which is operating at something like 75 per cent capacity now, will be hurt even more, costing thousands of Canadian jobs.

The Polish loan is only the tip of the iceberg. The EDC, for reasons of its own, seems bent on clobbering this industry. Recent EDC projects include loans of $102.6 million for a forestry development in Iran, $57 million for paper mill projects for Argentina, and still more millions for pulp and paper concerns in Peru and Romania.

Mr. Rodriguez: And the United States.

Mr. Stevens: As the hon. member points out, they are also putting money into the United States to help build steel mills and pulp and paper facilities there. The EDC is putting up $400 million to help others compete with our forest industry. The government, it seems, expects Canadians to help everybody but themselves.

Just recently I spoke to the president of a pulp and paper concern. This company in fact was referred to in the hearings before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. He pointed out that the financing the EDC is extending to other pulp and paper concerns all over the world is so favourable that if his company wished to build comparable facilites in Canada there is no way they could get comparable financing. He also pointed out that if the company wished to extend or modernize their pulp and paper facilities, they were in the ludicrous position of having to go to other countries to see if they could get the same financial treatment that EDC is giving to foreign concerns. This would put them back in a competitive position while the EDC pursues its financing activity in foreign countries. Surely at some point the minister will see how ludicrous the situation has become where industry after industry is basically selling state financing as opposed to selling their goods.

The unfortunate thing is that while one year's work may be gained now, 15 or 20 years ahead the Canadian public will pay heavily when today's borrowers default on these loans. We have been a source of ready and cheap money for projects in the United States, in Russia, in the oil rich nations of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Iran and Venezuela. In fact, by the end of 1976 EDC had loaned a total of $275.8 million to the Arab bloc and oil exporting countries, and this year it granted Algeria a staggering line of credit of $1.2 billion.

If hon. members are interested in what Algeria is doing with our money, which is relatively long-term funding at a low interest rate, they should read the current edition of The Economist, the British magazine. If they do, however, they will not sleep tonight. The Algerians are proposing to invest that money and make 180 per cent on it as they develop their petrochemical resources.

Has sanity been lost in this country, Mr. Speaker? We are told that we do not have sufficient funds to develop the tar sands and Arctic gas resources, but apparently we have a $1.2 billion line of credit that can be made available to Algeria to develop their natural resources, such as gas, at a profit to them of 180 per cent. This is another example of why we would like a reference to a committee of this House in order to get this thing aired at least once a year.

Imagine, Mr. Speaker, at the end of 1976 the OPEC nations had accumulated more than $45 billion in trade surpluses while Canada hobbled along with a current account deficit of $4 billion per year, and if you aggregate that it is about $16 billion. Yet we are loaning them money. We are in deficit while they are in substantial surplus.

Equally perplexing are the loans to Cuba, Russia, Bulgaria, Romania and other communist countries. It is no doubt desirable to encourage trade with the east, but must we subsidize it with low-cost loans, on average at about 8 per cent interest, while our own industries are forced to pay much higher rates or cannot even get money? Would it not be much better if the government invested at least a portion of this $26 billion at home where we need jobs, where industry needs a hand and many infrastructure projects should be completed to help our commuters get to work in Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver, or Edmonton? Our fishermen need new fleets to enable them to haul better catches and farmers in the west need better facilities to help harvest their crops. That is why we would like a committee review of the activities of the EDC. It cannot be left with the authorizations that are proposed in this bill without tighter scrutiny by a suitable committee of this House.

[Mr. Stevens.]

I see my time is almost up and I want to give others an opportunity to speak on my amendment if they so desire. But this situation is serious, Mr. Speaker. In five to ten years Canadians will be asking why there was such negligence in 1977 and 1978—why authorizations were granted so irresponsibly to the Export Development Corporation without better scrutiny by parliamentarians.

That is what is at stake, Mr. Speaker. That is why I urge hon. members to support my suggestion that there be a permanent reference to a standing committee of this House to ensure that we have an ongoing scrutiny of the activities of the EDC. What we are asking for is not unique. There is a permanent reference with respect to Air Canada's activities and whose annual report will be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications on an yearly basis. Surely if it is right for Air Canada it should also be right for the Export Development Corporation, which will become one of the major Crown corporations of Canada if not the largest.

That is the case I should like to put in support of my amendment as set out in motion No. 5. I will have more to say about motion No. 6 and possibly I will speak again on third reading, but I urge all hon. members not to accept the EDC bill lightly. In future, they are going to be called to account for any irresponsibilities of the present time. I caution them that those irresponsibilities will surface if we do not ensure that there is proper committee review of this corporation's activities such as I have suggested.

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak for very long but I should like to say a few words to set the record straight. I would inform you, Mr. Speaker, that I intend to speak at length at third reading stage of the bill.

I should like to set the record straight on one specific point, however. In the past number of years the Export Development Corporation has been before one committee or other of this House of Commons on an average of every six months. It certainly can be called when the estimates of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce are considered every year. I see little purpose in the hon. member's amendment and I suggest that the House vote against it.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, if that is the minister's rebuttal of what the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) has said, he obviously does not recognize the reality of what goes on around here at estimates time. He knows as well as I do that on May 30 the estimates are deemed to have been reported back to the House and that there is no way of keeping the EDC henchmen of that department before the committee for any protracted period of time in order to get answers. I was in attendance during debate on the last two bills. These are the only occasions that we have had an opportunity to question the Export Development Corporation. In the last six years we have had representatives of the EDC before the committee twice with bills. It is at the committee stage when we attempt to get answers from the corporation.

There are some reasons why I support the amendment of the hon. member and there are some things about the EDC that strike fear into my heart, and they ought to strike fear into the hearts of every member of this House and indeed of the nation. The first instance that really struck me as frightening occurred on a day when the president appeared before the committee. I was questioning him about loans to countries that have less than what might be called acceptable human rights practices. Specifically we dealt with Chile. The president of EDC said: "We do not moralize". I asked him: "Does that mean you will do business with the devil?" And, Mr. Speaker, he said: "We would do business with the devil depending on his creditworthiness". So as long as he is creditworthy the corporation is prepared to do business with the devil.

The attitude that has been taken by the officers of the Export Development Corporation is my first concern. Even the United States has become most enlightened in respect to the way in which they hand out aid and lend money. Indeed President Carter, when speaking to the Organization of American States, told the Latin American states, who are members of the OAS, that in effect the United States expects them to clean up their act respecting human and civil rights if they expect to receive any aid and loans from the United States, which goes to show that the U.S. is concerned about moral aspects.

The minister and his henchmen in the EDC cannot act as a collection of Pontius Pilates, washing their hands and saying: "Well, we do not worry about their moral attitudes and moral commitments." That is despicable. Now the minister is smiling—

Mrs. Campagnolo: He is smiling at your hypocrisy.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is a big joke to have some sort of moral behaviour in the way we do business in this country and the way our Crown corporations do business.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member interpreted my smile as if I was being hypocritical regarding the intent of his remarks. I was smiling at the evangelistic approach which the hon. member takes to the matter. When he discusses morals, he could well campaign in Alberta and I would invite him to Crowfoot. I am sure his fervent fever would be well received.

Mrs. Campagnolo: To Camrose.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I would like to suggest to the hon. minister that that is not a point of order but a point of debate.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to extend that debate but I could say that we experienced a visit from the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) to Nickel Belt. He came there to speak. Some reports said it was the most boring speech ever heard. They went on to say that people were put to sleep with statistics which often times were questionable. Indeed, I wish the hon. minister would return to the evangelistic fervour which I have seen expounded in my office when he was a member of the official opposition; it seemed to fit him better then. Some may say the smile the minister has on his face—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he return to the motion under discussion.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I was just about to do that. In passing I would say the smiles can only be gas or some such thing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Another concern arose about the EDC and was brought out in committee. At one time the president of the EDC sat there, rubbed his hands and said: "We made $13 million profit last year. We are in business to make profit and we will double that next year."

An hon. Member: With no taxes.

Mr. Rodriguez: With no taxes, the hon. member says. But there is the concept, Mr. Speaker, of money-grubbing, making money, profiteering. These people are the same ones who will stand up and argue that they are really trying to help third world countries deal with their economic problems. One would say that they are trying to take advantage of third world countries and make all these millions of dollars.

The way in which the EDC goes about this whole business of lending money in the international market is a real concern. From time to time there is a useful editorial in the Northern Miner on the mining industry. Even though I take a subscription to it, I do not use this paper as my handbook for speech making or comments on the mining industry. However, if one is selective it can be put to use. One has to assume the people who write the Northern Miner and who contribute to it have some knowledge of the mining industry and have some concern about the way in which we develop this industry in Canada.

In this connection I quote from the Northern Miner of November 3, 1977. The following appeared in their editorial of that date:

Although Guatemala and Indonesia cannot be charged with having precipitated the current situation—

The "current situation" means the lay-offs of workers in the Sudbury basin. The editorial goes on to say:

—looking further down the road to the years when nickel markets improve, the reality is that there will be more nickel producers laying a claim to a share of the nickel market. And no amount of castigation of Inco's policies or motives will alter that fact. We sowed, so shall we reap.

The Export Development Corporation loaned Inco $77 million for developing its subsidiary operations in Guatemala and Indonesia. I have heard all the arguments in committee. I have heard all the arguments with respect to the EDC. The Export Development Corporation, I am told by officers of the company, is like a stock record. They say the purpose of the EDC is to encourage and to expedite the export of Canadian products and services. That basically is the thrust of the Export Development Corporation.

Next we are told that there are certain criteria which govern loans that the EDC makes. First of all is the product viable? Second, is the borrower creditworthy? Third, will the project go ahead? Those are the three criteria on which loans are disbursed by the Export Development Corporation. In the case of Inco's loans, Inco-Guatemala and Inco-Indonesia, one could not doubt that Inco was creditworthy; that is, the parent company. They are creditworthy.

Another criterion was the viability of the project. I have some difficulty as to how the EDC came to the conclusion that the project was a viable one. We have been through this in committee and I will go through it again, again and again until we get through to the people who are responsible for running the Export Development Corporation. Firstly, Inco's operations in Guatemala and Indonesia are lateritic nickel. A lot of energy is needed to smelt lateritic nickel, which is different from the sulphide nickel found in the Sudbury Basin where the ore contains sulphur which acts as an energy agent in reducing the ore. So, in effect, nickel would have to go to $3 a pound before it actually becomes profitable to develop the lateritic nickel of Indonesia and Guatemala. Nickel is now $2.15 a pound. It would have to go to $3 a pound because both those countries have to import a considerable amount of oil at world market prices. That makes the smelting process of that lateritic nickel extremely expensive.

The next step in the game of those corporations operating in Indonesia and Guatemala is to establish a subsidiary in those countries. They then go to the EDC for a loan in order to establish and look for oil so that they can bring that oil on to the market and supply it to their subsidiaries to smelt the nickel. At that point it becomes extremely profitable to exploit those resources. That would have an adverse effect on Canadian nickel and Canadian employment. That is the reality of the situation.

The EDC says that looking at the long term, the project would go ahead anyway. One surely has to set some priorities among the projects for which they have application. Once the money has been loaned, a more advantageous project may come along which does not challenge the Canadian employment picture down the road. The EDC would then not have the money to get into the other project. It is therefore a matter of setting priorities with regard to how the money is loaned.

There must be a sense of responsibility on the part of the Export Development Corporation to ensure that when money is loaned it will not have a disastrous effect on the long-term Canadian employment scene. Does that sound unreasonable? Well, it is not. I have looked at the American version of the Export Development Corporation. I got out the ground rules for the EX-IM Bank in the United States. I want to quote clause 2(B)1(B) which governs the activities of the EX-IM Bank:

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

—in authorizing any loan or guarantee, the Board of Directors shall take into account any serious adverse effect of such loan or guarantee on the competitive position of United States industry, the availability of materials which are in short supply in the United States, and employment in the United States.

It was under that very section that the United States EX-IM Bank turned down an application for a loan from an American steel company to build a steel plant in Trinidad. If you look down the road, you can see that in the long term it would have a disastrous effect in terms of American employment. However, that does not bother the EDC. They are proud to say they made millions of dollars in profit. That is their basic motivation. It would not matter if it were Hitler himself; they would even do business with him.

Indeed, this was taken to the ridiculous when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce appeared before the committee. I put this example to him. If an automotive parts company in Canada applied for an EDC loan in order to establish a plant in the southern United States, would EDC make the loan, even though it might have a disastrous effect on the automotive industry in that country? The minister replied yes, they would make the loan. That is ridiculous. What is the basis for that? Why are they not farsighted with regard to the way loans are made through EDC?

We have very serious problems. This country accepted over 1,000 refugees from Chile, not because they were being treated properly by that government but because they were put out of the country and living in refugee camps in Argentina, Panama City and Mexico City. When they came to this country, we heard their horror stories. We heard of President Allende committing suicide by shooting himself with a machine gun 16 times.

Today I picked up a press blurb from the EDC saying they had just completed a loan to Chile of over $40 million. However, we cannot get information on some 1,600 people who are missing. We make a great deal in this House, and quite rightly so, about the dissidents in Russia. We pass Standing Order 43 motions galore. We express a great deal of concern for the plight of dissidents, people who want to leave the Soviet Union to go to Israel. Yet in this situation we have 1,600 people about whom we have no word. We have been promised by the chief of the junta that we will get this information. However, EDC is prepared to lend over $40 million on a long-term basis at very favourable interest rates at the same time as we are accepting refugees from that unfortunate country.

These people have to be checked and questioned. The bureaucrats in our Crown corporations and government departments have become our masters. One would think they are the ones running the country. No one would believe it is the elected members.

This government which goes along with that sort of clothes closet approach is not doing a service to Canada. They should be the first to say this sounds like a reasonable amendment, that EDC should appear every year before a standing committee of the House in order to be questioned by, and be accountable to, parliament. For the minister to stand in his place and offer in exchange for that sort of detailed and extensive appearance and questioning one or two meetings during the estimates period is really an insult to parliament and the people of Canada.

There are very serious problems with the way in which we are lending money. The people of this country are concerned. I know those in my constituency are extremely concerned. The fact is that while Inco workers are becoming employed, their government is using their taxes and the credibility of Canada to borrow money in order to lend it to the very people who created the unemployment problem in their area. That is a real slap in the face for them.

The minister also said that EDC loans to companies such as Inco assist third world countries to develop. I say that loans to multinational resource companies do nothing of the sort. In the case of Guatemala, the loan was made to a subsidiary of Inco, a very large and powerful multinational mining company.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue only with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the minister has left the chamber. In addition to elaborating on some of the points made by my hon. friend from York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), I wish to correct a few of the remarks the minister contributed to the debate on motion No. 5.

● (2112)

As I understand it, the hon. gentleman said my hon. friend was in error and that there was no need for any reference back to the House because the corporation was always available to the finance committee for examination. I thought the minister had learned more than that during his 20 years in the House. Perhaps we did not teach him very well over here, but, of course, the finance committee has no right to hear from officials of EDC unless there is an appropriation to be voted on, and the stated purpose of this bill is to remove the necessity for the corporation to come back to parliament for more money.

I wish to advance a few arguments in support of the motion by my hon. friend from York-Simcoe. The first has to do with accountability. The House should know it is the Canadian taxpayer who is eventually responsible for the commitments of the EDC. Despite the fact that the corporation is increasing its borrowing from the private sector, it is the Canadian taxpayer who stands in the breach. Any time the management fails to keep things on a profitable plane it is the Canadian taxpayer who will have to pick up the pieces.

It is interesting to note that as of April, two months ago, the corporation owed the government $1.3 billion while its loans from outside sources amounted to less than $600 million. When Mr. MacDonald was questioned in the committee about the relationship of EDC to parliament, he said:

> We quite frankly stated that we were an agent of the Government of Canada and my presumption is that if this corporation and its board of directors made a mess of it and went bankrupt then the Government of Canada would have to stand behind it.

So there can be no question about where responsibility lies. Because of this situation we say the corporation should be required to come back once a year to account to parliament. The taxpayer, as a co-signer, relies on parliament to protect his interests. If the government wants to extend the corportion's already wide limits, then the voters have a right to expect parliament to insist on accountability by the corporation on an annual basis.

As things rest, everything depends on the judgment of the corporation's management. We are talking about a lot of money. It was disclosed in committee that there is no limitation contemplated other than the statutory ceilings we are talking about in the case of individual deals backed by the corporation. The agency is now in the position of making commitments to the value of $6 billion. There is nothing which would prevent bad judgment on the part of the directors from bankrupting the organization in the event of a bad deal, though I agree this is not likely to happen when there is such a big cushion to rely on.

Mr. MacDonald was asked in the committee whether there was some limit beyond which the corporation would not lend in connection with an individual deal. He replied that there was not. There was no limit beyond which the EDC might go in pledging the credit of the Government of Canada. Mr. Speaker, it is hard to conceive of a corporation which does not operate on the basis of there being some limit governing its deals. Even Citibank has set limits on the size of the loans it makes to other countries, and it is worth noting that Citibank declined to lend Canada more than $175 million in connection with the recent bond issue. We say, therefore, that in the absence of an upper ceiling a regular referral is necessary to enable parliament to keep an adequate watch on what is going on.

Up to this point I have been looking at things from the point of view of the taxpayer. Now, perhaps, we should look at them from the point of view of parliament in relation to the corporation. It is obvious that the EDC has become quite a political animal and that it is incurring criticism from many quarters. It has taken to publicly criticizing in print paid for by its own funds a member of parliament, naming him in local newspapers and in its own newsletter. It has run special advertisements in the Financial Post at a cost of over $20,000 at the same time as this bill was before the House, in addition to running other advertisements in newspapers across Canada.

We must remember that the EDC is a Crown corporation, that it is responsible to parliament and that it should not be attempting to mobilize political pressure on parliament for its own aims. This question of the accountability of EDC to parliament is critical and central to the amendment proposed by my hon. friend.

I do not wish to take up time unduly but I think I must say a few words about the attitude taken by the minister himself—I see he has returned. I refer to his irresponsible statement earlier, his remark about the committee always having access to officials of EDC, when he should have known that the corporation's affairs cannot be referred to the committee unless there is an appropriation to be voted upon.

It is interesting, too, to note the statement made by the minister accusing the opposition of unduly delaying the progress of this bill. The record will show that the Export Development Corporation first approached the government seeking higher ceilings last October. It took only a month or so for the government to approve new ceilings, but it took five months, until March 20 of this year, before Bill C-36 was brought before the House. So only three months have elapsed, including second reading and days spent on committee hearings, and it seems likely we shall be getting rid of the bill this week.

● (2122)

Better control is needed over a corporation which has a record like that of EDC and which is now asking for such limits. Control is needed over a government which would give such powers and such expansive limits to a corporation which does not have to come to parliament on a regular basis. All the Canadian taxpayer has to rely upon is the promise of the present administration that some future legislation might be coming along this fall. However, if that is the case, we are not quite sure why we have to have this bill before us right now. I urge all hon. members, in the interests of protecting their own voters, if not their own votes, that they should be supporting motion No. 5.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

[Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra).]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This motion being the last motion, I will now call in the members.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh, no. What about motion No. 6?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There is one more, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I had the impression that motions Nos. 5 and 6 were to be debated and voted on together, but since they are to be debated and voted on separately, the vote on motion No. 5 stands deferred and the House will now proceed to the consideration of motion No. 6 in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved:

Motion No. 6.

That Bill C-36, an act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended by adding immediately after line 34 at page 5 the following new clause:

"7. The corporation shall, before it implements the increase in authority provided by this Act, take into account the effect of such implementation on the Canadian economy and specifically the long and short term effect on employment in Canada."

He said: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Dispense.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is good to see that the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) is in the House tonight. It should be funny.

Let us look at the amendment we have before us. It calls upon the EDC to incorporate a certain criterion before approving a loan. It proposes that the criterion should be that the EDC take into account the long-term and short-term effect on employment. Is that an unreasonable amendment?

I want to reiterate that the EX-IM Bank of the United States is governed by a particular clause which provides that loans issued take into account long-term and short-term effects on employment in the United States. It is difficult for a Canadian worker, whether he works in the pulp and paper industry or in the nickel industry, to see stories about employment being created in his own industry while at the same time he reads in the newspapers that his government has subsidized the company he works for to establish a branch plant operation in a third world country. For him that spells disaster in the long term.

Inco has been granted loans to operate in Guatemala and Indonesia. The EDC claimed it was creating 4,000 man-years of work by lending $77 million to Inco, but Inco laid off 2,300 workers in the Sudbury basin. In the Sudbury basin we do not have an infrastructure around the nickel and copper industries.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Not again.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo) can say "not again" all she wants, but she knows very well she has problems in her own riding.

Mrs. Campagnolo: We lost 500 jobs under the NDP.

Mr. Rodriguez: There is unemployment in the minister's riding. Why does she not get out of that government and walk across the floor as her buddy did today? Twenty-three hundred workers were laid off, but the public relations people say 4,000 man-years of employment were created. That was for the short term. In the short-term analysis we have no doubt that with the $77 million loan to Inco the EDC did create 4,000 man-years of work, but it was very high technology and short-term work.

We in the Sudbury basin do not have an infrastructure around the nickel and copper industries. We have no research and development based around that resource. The resource is ripped out of the ground, put in boxcars and shipped out to be processed abroad and then sold back to us as finished products. When any attempt is made by entrepreneurs in the basin to diversify operations, they are told that there is no venture capital for that. No wonder there is not. Our Crown corporation, the EDC, is raising money in Canada's name and lending it to multinational mining companies so that they can go abroad and exploit the resources of third world countries. Much the same was done to us many years ago.

There is a legitimate question in the minds of Canadian workers. As they lose their jobs they see loans being made to the companies they work for. Their companies go abroad, not to develop for the benefit of companies abroad, but for the benefit of themselves.

We have the same situation in the paper industry. I am glad to see that the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi is in the House. The EDC made a loan to Bear Island Paper Company. It is a partnership of Bato Company Incorporated, Dow Jones and Company Limited and the Washington Post Company. That was a loan for $47 million to Virginia for the establishment of a pulp and paper operation. It will be probably one of the most modern plants.

The paper workers there have a concern. They have written to me expressing their concern about the pulp and paper companies in this country which have not modernized their operation so that workers can be more productive. When I was out in Vancouver I found that the MacMillan Bloedel Company's pulp and paper section was decrepit and that their plant needs to be modernized.

In Timiskaming the pulp and paper mill has been closed down. What happened there? EDC has come up with $47 million to develop the pulp and paper industry in the United States which, as EDC has admitted, will be filling markets that are currently being filled by Quebec plants. I just do not see the sense in that sort of operation. Here we have pulp and paper mills in this country having to compete and fill markets, and the EDC is lending money for the long term at favourable interest rates to develop competition for these pulp and paper mills in Canada and moving into the southern United States of all places, which is not noted for modern industrial relations techniques. They have right to work laws on their books, no strike laws on the books, their minimum wage is $2.35 an hour, their plants do not have to be heated in the winter and their government gives them years and years of tax free holidays. Those are the hidden realities, but the EDC steps into the breach, as Mr. MacDonald, the president, would say, because "we can make a buck and we are not interested in the long-term effects."

The EDC uses three criteria in making loans. The first is that the plant be creditworthy. Is the operation going to make money? Is it a flexible operation? Will the operation go ahead anyway?

Mr. Kaplan: I wonder if I could ask the hon. member a question. Does he honestly believe that if Canadian companies do not participate in the development of the nickel resources in the United States, they would lie undeveloped, or that if Canadian companies which manufacture this mining equipment did not get the business developing in Indonesia or Guatemala, that the great nickel resources in these countries would lie undeveloped? Does he believe that these countries with their rich nickel resources are lying starving and waiting, and that without Canadian participation they would remain undeveloped and in poverty?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member mentioned nickel resources in the United States. He also spoke of Indonesia and Guatemala. It is a good question and I should give the parliamentary secretary credit for asking a good question. Probably he was not in the House when I mentioned the EX-IM Bank because I am always making comparisons. Section 2(B) of the act governing the EX-IM Bank says:

—in authorizing any loan or guarantee, the board of directors shall take into account any serious adverse effect of such loan or guarantee on the competitive position of United States industry, the availability of materials which are in short supply in the United States, and employment in the United States.

It was brought out in committee that in the United States there was an application from a borrower to establish a steel plant in Trinidad. An American company wanted to build that steel plant and it applied to the EX-IM Bank for a loan. The EX-IM Bank considered all the criteria applied by EDC, and in applying the fourth criterion said that to develop the steel plant in Trinidad would, in effect, be competitive and create unemployment in the future among American workers. So the loan was turned down. That does not prevent some other bank, the Japanese equivalent of EDC or the German equivalent, from lending money to build the steel plant in Trinidad.

I am saying to the hon. member that the resources in Guatemala, for example, are not developed by that country, although the impression is left that that is so. I do not know how many times I have to bring this to the attention of the hon. member, but in effect it is an Inco subsidiary that is developing the ore in Guatemala and Indonesia, and it is developing it not for the benefit of the Guatemalan people but for the benefit of the multinational mining company. If Guatemala itself were applying for the loan, then all the criteria would come into effect; that is, the criteria for putting technology into the hands of third world countries and helping them to exert some control over their economic destiny.

But that is not what we have here. We have EDC, promoting imperialism in third world countries, because in effect that resource is being scraped off the top of the ground, put in ships and shipped out to Wales where the final processing is done and the manufacturing of the finished product takes place. It does not take place in Guatemala. So the resource is exploited, but not for the benefit of the people. When the operation is fully operative in Guatemala, only 700 people will be hired. It is a highly capital intensive operation. The labour intensive part of the operation is at the processing and finishing end of the project.

So the suggestion that somehow or other we are helping Indonesia and Guatemala develop their resources through EDC loans is not correct. We are not doing that at all.

Earlier I spoke about pulp and paper mills. We did the same thing with steel plants. One of the things we need to do in Cape Breton is to modernize the steel plant, and it takes a lot of capital to do that. EDC lends millions of dollars to a Canadian company to go down into the United States eastern seaboard to develop a modern steel plant, which makes it very difficult for the Cape Breton steel company to compete for those markets with the kind of decrepid equipment they have and the resulting lack of productivity.

An hon. Member: You are comparing apples and oranges.

Mr. Rodriguez: I am not comparing apples and oranges at all. I would like all these yahoos who are making comments to come up to Nickel Belt, where they will be invited to a public meeting at which I would like them to stand up and make all these comments about EDC doing such a great job.

● (2142)

There is also another aspect. The jobs which are created in the short term accrue primarily to the southern part of the province of Ontario. The jobs are created in Toronto and Montreal and some are spun off to Vancouver. Thus, we have the EDC stimulating employment in areas which are already heavily industrialized. For example, if a plant has an order to complete, it will more than likely expand its operation where the original plant is located. So what we have is EDC acting with one set of ground rules while DREE operates with another set of ground rules. Then there is the taxation system which operates with a different set of principles. There is no cohesion whatsoever with respect to the manner in which the loans are given. There is no plan to diversify industrial development into areas which need it.

There is also the question of the effect of employment and the loans of the EDC. In none of the questioning during the EDC committee was there any indication from the officers of that corporation that they even consider the long-term effects on Canadian employment. They are more concerned with showing a good profit. There is also the fact that they do not make moral judgments on the regimes with which they do business.

It seems to me that in this particular instance we should consider the concept—and no one can deny that it is a good one—that when dealing with Canadian finished products and services there is a good argument to be made for an Export Development Corporation which assembles capital for the export of Canadian finished products. However, when it begins to come into areas where Canada for years has been very predominant, for example the resource sector, it seems to me that it begins to undo whatever good it may have accrued in terms of job creation in the long term.

The taxpayers of this country must be assured that no corporation which they support with their tax money is used to create their unemployment some years down the road. This is what is going to happen. There is no question at all, for example, that when the nickel industry starts coming on stream it will have an adverse effect on the areas dependent on the development of nickel. We cannot get diversification in our areas. We saw today where we would love to have an auto parts plant build some cars and sell them to southern Ontario for a change, but we cannot even get that in the Sudbury Basin. It seems the only strength we have is nickel and copper, so why, if there is money to be loaned, is it not loaned in the Sudbury area so we can diversify our industrial base?

That is a very legitimate question, Mr. Speaker, and a question which people are asking. In spite of the gentle answers and smiles we received in committee, it is a very legitimate question for a man or woman who has worked five years in a nickel or copper mine and who depends on that industry for their income. While the EDC officials may come before the committee and make very esoteric and flim-flammy arguments about how we are, in effect, helping Third World countries and really creating employment, it does not answer the question raised by the Canadian taxpayer who feels the effect of the unemployment created by the loans of the EDC.

I suspect that members opposite will vote against this amendment which we have put before the House. I notice that they are banging their desk tops. That is an indication that they will vote against an eminently wise and judicious amendment. It is obvious they are not concerned about unemployment in this country, particularly the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) who has close to 30 per cent unemployment in his area. He should not be sitting there braying like a donkey; he should be interested in what this amendment says.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct when he says the rate of unemployment in my area is high. That is why I have been doing something about it over the last four years. I would not think of braying like a donkey, because I think that is his department.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has been working for four years to improve the 30 per cent unemployment rate since he first came to this House, but it is still 30 per cent. That is work only a Liberal can do, and it is either very bad mathematics or playing around with Canada Works or Young Canada Works grants. I wish that he would participate in the debate on this amendment because it is an extremely important question with respect to his own area where there is pulp and paper industry. The hon. member should be concerned about the effect of that $47 million instead of getting up on spurious points of order. Rather, he should participate in serious debate on how we can make the EDC work for the benefit of Canada, not to the detriment of Canada.

The first and foremost consideration is how this loan will affect employment in Canada in the long term. It is a very wise amendment and I urge hon. members to support it. Let us make the EDC accountable to Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly concerned about this bill and I had hoped that the minister would have given greater consideration to it. This matter was brought to his attention in committee, and it does not seem as though there was very much done about it. Instead, it seems that the government is intent upon supporting business in other countries at the expense of developing our own.

We in Alberta are very concerned about developing our own oil and gas industry. It seems that we will have to do it alone with very little help from the federal government. However, when you consider that the EDC has a line of credit in Algeria of $1.2 billion and we in Alberta are having difficulties developing the petrochemical industry, it is a gross injustice.

I would like to put on the record a quote from The Economist of June 17, 1978 which states that Algeria will spend $28 billion on oil and gas projects between now and 1985, according to a master plan prepared by the American consulting engineers, Bechtel of San Francisco. It will build ten new gas processing plants, six plant extensions, eight reinjection units, 6,000 miles of pipeline, eight gas liquification plants and three oil refineries. The whole oil and gas program will last 30 years. In return Algeria expects to get $250 billion from oil and gas sales over those 30 years.

If those estimates are correct the Algerian government will receive a return of 180 per cent on its investments. It needs every penny of it because 100,000 school leavers will be available on the labour market between 1985 and 2000. By 1993 Algeria plans to sell oil only in its refined state and not as crude.

You can see, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta does have a grudge and I hope hon. members opposite recognize this. We want to sell processed gas and build petrochemical plants too. We want to get into the business, but as long as the government insists on helping other countries we will be held back. It is all right, of course, to do this in certain cases, but to do it at the expense of our own country to me is incomprehensible.

The minister comes from Alberta. I hope he will give consideration to the fact that we in Alberta want to get the business too. We do not want to be cast aside because of policies that are hurting us so badly.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, it is the intention to have a vote tonight so I shall continue my remarks on third reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 6 (Mr. Rodriguez) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Accordingly, I am to take the recorded vote on motion No. 1 and other motions at this time. Call in the members.

• (2232)

Mr. Speaker: The question is on motion No. 1 which will also dispose of the vote on motion No. 3.

The House divided on motion No. 1 (Mr. Crosbie) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 6 having been disposed of earlier this day, the question is therefore on the motion of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) that Bill C-36 be concurred in. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Paproski: Next sitting of the House.

Mr. Speaker: I sense that the bill will be read the third time at the next sitting of the House.

It being after ten o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 40 the House will proceed to the questions raised upon the adjournment.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, because of an oversight it will be impossible this evening to provide an adequate answer to the question of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). It has been agreed that we will proceed with question No. 2 which stands in the name of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp).

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

ABORTION—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF ABORTION LAWS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, the year 1979 has been designated as the International Year of the Child by the United Nations in commemoration of the signing of the UN declaration on the rights of children some 20 years ago. The purpose of that declaration was to enhance the living standards of children around the world, to improve their nourishment, their education and their total development. All members support that resolution.

On June 9 of this year I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether he would mark the International Year of the Child in Canada by reviewing Canada's abortion laws. My basic argument at that time was, and still remains, that the greatest gift society can give to a child is, of course, the gift of life. The Prime Minister responded by saying it was not up to the government to give life but rather for God and parents.

Most of us recognize that life is a gift of God, but what I was asking the Prime Minister that day was whether he would review Canada's abortion laws which are removing the right to live inasmuch as they are taking life away from 60,000 Canadian children. The facts before us are a condemnation of each one of us. In 1976 there were 54,536 legal abortions performed in Canada, an increase of 10.4 per cent over the preceding year. It is estimated that an additional 4,000 Canadians had therapeutic abortions performed outside Canada's borders. We know that the figure for the last calendar year exceeds 50,000.

The government has argued that it is not involved in this taking of life by Canada's hospitals and medical personnel who should be dedicated to the preservation of life and the alleviation of suffering. The point is that the government is involved, and it is very directly involved with its grants system.

Planned Parenthood of Canada has largely become an abortion referral agency. More than 90 per cent of its funding comes from federal government grants. The Department of National Health and Welfare has granted $600,000 in the last fiscal year. The Canadian International Development Agency has granted $39,865 in the last year. One might ask whether the purpose of the Canadian International Development Agency is to provide aid to the third world. What is it doing granting aid to Planned Parenthood of Canada?

I could go on, but I know that my friend and colleague, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen), will delve into this subject further. However, I want to impress on the government that this blot on society cannot go unchecked any further, because all statistics—and I do not want to speak about statistics; I want to speak about people—indicate that legal abortions are increasing on the average by 10 per cent per year.

What is happening to respect for life? What is happening to our civilization? Has life become expendable? All of us have been horrified time after time by pictures of the holocaust of World War II in which life became cheap. I ask sincerely whether we are any different today. If life is expendable for the unborn child, how much longer will it be before life becomes expendable at the other end of the age spectrum? When will society decide to remove life from those who are aged, infirm or terminally ill?

I do not want to play God, but I want to impress upon my colleagues here today—and this subject crosses all political partisan viewpoints—the point that we as a civilization are doomed if we do not respect life. We can have it no other way.

In the study of nations, if one wants to look at comprehensive studies like Arnold Toynbee's from a secular point of view where nations have lost their moral bases and justified everything on the basis of expediency, those nations are doomed.

These are serious words, but I am totally convinced as I stand here that we are going down that road. If we have any respect for life at all, I plead with the government to make the International Year of the Child a year of life and a year in which 60,000 Canadians will not face the spectre of death. I ask the government to reconsider. The Badgley committee stated that if abortions were to continue, the value of life would be lowered. I believe that as a civilization and as a nation we are at the crossroads. I plead with the government to reconsider and to give life to Canada's youngest citizens.

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure that I can respond on behalf of the minister to all of the comments of the hon. member this evening. I respect a great number of the points the hon. member has made. One thing I could say on behalf of my minister would be that the federal government would very much like to see an even handed and equally fair administration of the laws of Canada right across the country and throughout each of the provinces. It does not assist us to have our laws interpreted unfairly or differently in the provinces and regions of Canada.

Whereas the abortion provisions fall within the Criminal Code and are a matter of federal jurisdiction, hospitals come under the control and administration of the provinces, and the enforcement of our Criminal Code and the administration of our justice is also under the control of the provinces. Therefore, it is up to the provinces to co-ordinate their approach to and their interpretation of this subject matter.

Without doubt the issue of abortion is a deeply emotional and moral one, and there are bound to be definitive and strongly held feelings on various sides of this issue. It would appear that no matter what words might be used in such a law, their scope will often be determined by the canons of local medical custom—and those in turn are often set by varying social values in the different regions of this country.

I should point out to the hon. member that my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Robinson), will undoubtedly expand on some of his points and questions in relation to Planned Parenthood, and I understand the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) will also raise some of those points this evening.

I could point out to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) that provision is made in the Criminal Code for provincial ministers of health to review information relating to the circumstances of therapeutic abortions. The justice minister has said that he is not in a position to instruct the provinces on the matter. However, he has stated that he and his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), either directly or through their officials, would be meeting with provincial health officials once those officials have had a thorough opportunity to study the findings of the Badgley report, and the provincial review of the abortion procedure may be one of those topics to be discussed.

I could go on to read some portions of the Badgley report, but I think the hon. member is perhaps familiar with them and time will not allow me to do so this evening. Perhaps I could discuss this privately with him, if he so wishes.

ABORTION—FUNDING OF ABORTION CLINICS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, on June 9 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made one of his cute remarks, which was designed to deflect attention away from the real issues, saying that only God and parents can give life. He said that in partial answer to the question posed to him by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). My question to him was based on the fact that while it is true that only God and parents can give life, it is the abortion clinics which take that life away. I asked the Prime Minister whether or not he would reconsider the policy of this government in funding abortion clinics or groups in society which offer abortion counselling to people and withdraw some of that funding to those organizations.

● (2302)

There are two principles involved in government funding of organizations. Number one, the government has no business funding organizations which have the goal of changing lifestyles. That deals with social programming and programmed responses, and it is a system of robbing citizens of genuine choice.

I have before me the press release of Planned Parenthood Association of British Columbia dated May 16. It says:

> The problem is that more babies are being born to those least prepared socially, emotionally or intellectually to function as parents. Many of these disadvantaged-from-birth children will likely become mentally and physically ill, with a potential for violence that is of serious concern.

It appears to me that Planned Parenthood is becoming something omnipotent when they can predict which children—not yet conceived, not yet born—are going to become problems in society. It seems to me that Planned Parenthood is reducing family planning to predetermined choices made by some omnipotent person who decides who has the right to be born. I remember a European leader who just 40 years ago decided that only those people who are blond and blue-eyed ought to have the right to bear children.

I hope that this government will not continue to fund organizations which are of that kind of mentality, whether it be different criteria that they use or not. It so happens that my mother had a grade three education and my wife's mother had a grade one education, neither of which were in one of Canada's official languages. I suppose that on the criteria which Planned Parenthood has established neither of those people would have qualified to bear children. My experience with them, however, has been that they were intellectually brilliant people irrespective of their lack of education. That is the first principle, that the government has no business in funding organizations which are determined to change lifestyles.

The second principle is that voluntary organizations must prove broad public support to obtain government funding. If they establish public support by raising money locally, which would indicate that they are enjoying public support, then perhaps the government could examine whether or not the organization deserves broader funding from taxpayers across Canada. The government should fund such organizations only to the extent of matching dollar for dollar.

The kind of budget which Planned Parenthood has established indicates to me that there is no broad public support for that organization. This is indicated by the fact that it could raise only $30,000, while on the other hand it is asking the government to supply $650,000 a year. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) asked the government on April 20 to provide increased funding to Planned Parenthood because they were not keeping up with the cost of living. His rationale was the fact that there were 12,956 teenagers who gave birth in the past year.

There is more education on sex today than ever before. There is less restraint in talking about sex, and there are more teenage pregnancies, but the hon. member for New Westminster or the government presumes that more education will reduce this incidence. The government has no business getting into the funding of organizations which do not enjoy broad public support, and I hope the parliamentary secretary will not bring up the business of how much they give to Serena. That is not the same argument, nor is it the same kind of organization. It is an organization that works for itself.

It seems to me that this whole organization is now deciding that fertility and pregnancy is some kind of disease, that unplanned children or unexpected children are some kind of pestilence on the corporate body. We need to reconstruct our thinking on that. I ask the government again to reconsider their funding policies of Planned Parenthood, to decrease that funding, and to justify it only on the basis of legitimate family planning and counselling, not on abortion clinics which this organization broadly supports.

● (2307)

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that essentially the hon. member's question was the representation that funding in respect of certain groups be withdrawn. I recall that on or about April 6, 1978, I indicated to the hon. member that the Department of National Health and Welfare is attempting to reduce the dependence of these organizations on federal funds. I would point out to the hon. member also that in so far as I am aware the federal government does not provide funds to organizations to change lifestyles. Maybe that is a point upon which the hon. member requires more explanation, but it is not the case.

It may be of assistance to the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) to look back upon the historical development of family planning services and the provisions of the Criminal Code, as well as established programs financing, in order to understand the funding policies of the federal government in this area.

In August 1969, parliament amended the Criminal Code in order to allow for the dissemination of information concerning contraception. In the same year, parliament amended the Criminal Code to allow for therapeutic abortions when, in the opinion of a therapeutic abortion committee, the continuation of pregnancy would or would likely endanger the life or health of the woman.

Following the tabling of the report of the committee on the operation of the abortion law, which stated that most people across Canada from whom information was obtained did not wish to see changes in the law, the federal government indicated that it was not prepared to propose changes in the Criminal Code at the present time.

The Department of National Health and Welfare provides sustaining grants to two national voluntary agencies, namely Serena Canada and the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada, in accordance with their objective of providing family planning services and information on all contraceptive means. These agencies received $175,000 and $600,000 respectively, based on the extent of their activities in the area I mentioned. The department does not fund agencies whose activities are predominantly directed towards implementing changes in Canadian law, nor does it align itself with either the pro-abortion or anti-abortion positions.

On September 11, 1973, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Lalonde), the former minister of national health and welfare, stated:

> In terms of general policy, the federal government does not regard abortion as an acceptable method of birth control; I should like that point to be made very clear. It does, however, recognize that unwanted conceptions may occur as a result of failure to use an effective method of contraception or any contraception at all. In these cases, there may be justification for therapeutic abortion, not because the pregnancy was unplanned but because it may have given rise to conditions which, in the opinion of a therapeutic abortion committee, provide appropriate grounds for termination in accordance with the Criminal Code.

The minister went on to say:

Birth control clinics are often visited by women seeking advice about unwanted pregnancies. To turn them away without help would be inhumane and could be regarded as tantamount to an attempt by the clinic's staff to impose their personal views about a subject on which society has expressed its collective will through the law.

On March 4, 1977, he also announced that the federal government would work with provincial governments to ensure that family planning services are made available to all those who wish to use them, and at the same time would intensify its own planning information program.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 11:10 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

LOTO CANADA

EXTENSION OF PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise on an important matter under Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that this House and the Canadian people were assured in 1976 that no extension or expansion of federal lotteries in any way would take place beyond the agreed upon termination date at the end of 1979 without the consent of parliament and the provinces, and in view of the fact that decisions have already been made unilaterally by this government for the Loto Canada Corporation to spend over $120 million over the next four years on a new, expanded slot-machine style operation, without any consent whatsoever, and this with the questionable non-tender contract of $23 million already let in a somewhat undemocratic way, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That any further plans to expand or extend Loto Canada beyond the end of 1979 be terminated and that the whole matter of federal lotteries be brought before the appropriate standing committee forthwith in order that parliament can deal with these questionable, though important, proposals accordingly, as required by legislation set by this parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

INCREASED MILK QUOTAS TO INCREASE CHEESE PRODUCTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of extreme urgency to a section of the Canadian cheese industry and in particular to my own constituency of Leeds. I refer to a lack of sufficient milk quota given to small cheese factories producing cheddar cheese such as the Plum Hollow cheese factory and the Forfar cheese factory in Leeds. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the Minister of Agriculture immediately take all steps possible to correct this serious situation for cheddar cheese producers who are in many cases unable to meet public demand for their product because of low milk quota and, finally, in keeping with the fact that Canadian goods should be purchased wherever possible, the House congratulates the Leader of the Opposition for his foresight in seeing that among the all-Canadian products used at his reception of last week was excellent cheddar cheese produced by the Forfar cheese factory in the electoral district of Leeds.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FORECAST LOW LEVEL OF ECONOMIC GROWTH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity arising out of remarks made last night by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) who suggested that Canadians must learn to "take it on the chin" in the months to come and voluntarily reduce their standard of living in order to save the country from economic disaster.

In light of the fact that, as the Minister of Finance admitted in the same speech, the Canadian economy has grown at a rate below its long-term potential throughout the period he has been Minister of Finance, and in light of the fact that all economic forecasts except his show an extremely poor rate of growth in the coming months, with consumer demand one of the weakest elements, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth):

That the Minister of Finance learn to "take it on the chin" by reducing his salary to the sum of $1 per year until such time as the Canadian economy begins again to grow at a rate sufficient to reduce substantially the number of unemployed Canadians, which now stands at the tragic figure of over one million.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion can be introduced for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

REQUESTED PROTECTION AGAINST DUMPING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I wish to place before this House a matter of urgent and pressing necessity related to agriculture. Whereas Canadian fruit growers are now marketing a first quality, fresh strawberry crop for which the trade has been paying $4.80 per flat with no complaints; whereas this past weekend California berries, which all winter sold for $8 to $10 per flat, are now being dumped on our fresh produce market at only $3 per flat; whereas the Canadian retailer now invents spurious reasons for rejecting first-grade, home-grown strawberries—fruit which I personally inspected—and whereas Canadian farmers are, as a result, left with a perishable commodity with no market or with a market paying a price less than the cost of production, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

● (1412)

That the Minister of Agriculture take such measures as may be necessary to protect our Canadian producers of food against unjustified dumping practices by foreign competitors.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN INCOME SUPPLEMENT TO PERSONS 65 AND OVER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion regarding a very important problem.

Given that people of 65 and over who live in their own houses and whose only income is the old age security and the income supplement are in a very difficult financial situation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House recommend that this problem be studied and that the income supplement be increased to help those people live decently.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REQUESTED ASSISTANCE FOR VICTIMS OF BUCKINGHAM, QUEBEC, DISASTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion relating to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Yesterday afternoon, around 5.30 p.m., a tornado struck the town of Buckingham and more particularly the ancient municipality of Masson which were heavily damaged. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Lefebvre):

That the federal government, in co-operation with the Quebec government, give assistance to the victims of this disaster.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion can only be put with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INDUSTRY

ENCOURAGEMENT OF AUTO INDUSTRY TO LOCATE IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the government has indicated its intention to assist financially in the most welcome expansion of the auto industry, and whereas a more balanced industrial capacity is required across Canada, particularly in areas of chronically high unemployment, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the minister of DREE be directed to meet with their counterparts in the Atlantic provinces with a view to encouraging a portion of the anticipated expansion to be located in the Atlantic provinces where unemployment is the highest in the nation.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. Speaker: Before beginning the oral question period, may I ask hon. members to join with me in signalling the presence in our gallery of some very distinguished visitors. This is a somewhat historic event and the beginning of what we hope will be a number of useful exchanges between the elected assemblies of both countries. Present in our gallery is a delegation from the National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China, headed by the leader of their delegation, the Vice-Chairman of the National People's Congress, the Hon. Chi Peng-fei.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASES IN CPI—MONITORING OF FOOD PRICES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Today, the Ontario Food Council announced a 4.1 per cent increase in its monthly food basket, which means we can anticipate substantial increases in the consumer price index. The monitoring agency set up under the Economic Council of Canada will have no investigatory powers: it will not, in fact, study the underlying causes of food prices and energy prices. It will not even have the powers of the Food Prices Review Board or the Prices and Incomes Commission.

● (1417)

In the midst of charges by producers of profiteering and price gouging in food prices, who will examine into that matter; or does the minister subscribe to the view expressed by his colleague, the Minister of Finance, that one million unemployed in this country, the poor and the old age pensioners have to tough it out and take it on the chin. Is that his view?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, it is not, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the first part of the question, I must tell the hon. member that I have no responsibility for the group under the Economic Council. I will be watching it closely, with my colleagues, to see whether in fact it can do the job. We feel it can do the job, in view of the recommendations made by many people, for monitoring prices in the post-control period.

With regard to food prices in general, for the past week or so I have been working with the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance on a program to help in the area of food prices. We hope we can announce something soon.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MONITORING OF FOOD PRICES POST-AIB

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance whom I presume does have responsibility for the new agency. Perhaps I can redirect and rephrase my question to him. In view of the announcement by the new monitoring agency that it will not in fact be monitoring food prices or energy prices—two of the major components, in the current round of inflation, in the consumer price index—and in view of the charges of price profiteering and price gouging and the impact this is having on low income consumers, indeed on all Canadian consumers, who is going to look into this matter? We no longer have the Food Prices Review Board. The AIB will soon be going out of business. Who will be looking after this question?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): As I said last week, Mr. Speaker, I have asked the AIB to look at that in the meantime because many of the processors and distributors are still under the AIB. I have asked them to see if some are profiteering from the present situation. Last night, when returning from Toronto, I spoke with Mr. Renouf, the president of the AIB. He said he was looking into that matter. I want to tell the hon. member that last fall and last winter, when I was proposing an agency to replace the AIB, there were hundreds of questions from his party asking me not to proceed with that kind of supervision.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the minister again hauls out that old chestnut when he knows he has misled the House. He did not place a measure in front of this House to set up a monitoring agency for the post-controls era. He knows that is not true. In view of the minister's admonition to the Canadian people to tough it out and take it on the chin, and in view of the anticipated wage demands in the post-controls era and the impact this will have on food prices and energy prices, why, as the first order of priority, is the new monitoring agency under the Economic Council of Canada studying the consumer price index, a study that is already under way by Statistics Canada? Surely that is indicative of their misleading or mixed-up order of priorities.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we are very preoccupied with these developments. However, I want to say to the hon. member that there were a lot of complaints with regard to having the AIB, that we should get out of controls and let the marketplace decide. That is exactly what parliament did when we decided not to have the AIB, starting on April 15, two months ago. Therefore, the marketplace has to decide. The hon. member cannot have it both ways, complaining because there is too much control and, now that the marketplace is in operation, saying there are problems with that.

Oral Questions

STEPS TO CURB INFLATION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The minister now tells us that they have abdicated their responsibility in economic terms and that the Canadian people should take it on the chin—a most insensitive statement on the part of the minister.

In view of the statement by the Prime Minister that parliament will have a lot of work to do in economic terms and that was the reason he did not call the election, can the minister tell us what specific initiatives the government is going to take regarding food prices and the general inflation problem? In view of the fact that we look forward to a falling standard of living, will the minister also tell us how much, in terms of dollars, the Canadian family will lose in purchasing power over the course of the next year, according to his department's estimates?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows very well that in the last four or five years Canadian purchasing power has increased very substantially compared with most nations of the world. The hon. member knows as well as anyone that this parliament will be adjourning on Friday. He wants to create the impression that he is very concerned.

● (1422)

We have done a lot of things in the last two months. The budget legislation which was passed contained something on energy, something for research and development, something for small business, and so on. It is, of course, very convenient for the hon. member to pretend to cry just before he leaves for a holiday.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: With responses like that, it will be the government which will take it on the chin: it is the government which will be crying after the next election.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The minister refuses to tell us what the expectations are for next year. During the past year, the buying power of the average wage earner has fallen by $262, the equivalent of a week's wages. The minister says that ordinary Canadians will have to take a cut in income and that there will be a 5 per cent increase in productivity. Will the hon. gentleman tell the House where that 5 per cent increase in real wealth will go, having regard to his statement last night that the average Canadian worker will have to take a cut?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I explained yesterday that it was impossible in an economic system such as ours to secure all Canadians against price increases on imported products, like food products imported during the winter. I also indicated that it was necessary, in the present circumstances, to accept higher prices for cattle products, because that industry has suffered great losses over the last few years and if we want to maintain that industry it is normal that we should be ready to expect to pay a little more for those products.

A little earlier during that same question period an hon. member from the same party as that of the hon. member who has just put that question was asking for still more protection for Canadian farmers to eliminate foreign competition which, of course, tends to push prices down.

[English]

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I saw him wandering around behind the curtain just a few moments ago.

Mr. Speaker: Then I will recognize another hon. member for the moment.

TORNADOES

REQUESTED ASSISTANCE FOR VICTIMS OF BUCKINGHAM, QUEBEC, DISASTER

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

A violent windstorm swept part of the Ottawa River valley yesterday. According to the preliminary investigations, it seems the city of Buckingham has suffered most, particularly in the sectors of Masson and Beauchampville. Up to now, the victims number 172. In fact, 44 houses were completely destroyed, among them a six-apartment house.

Can the minister tell us whether he intends to come to the help of these victims and how?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Gatineau contacted me on this matter very early this morning. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has sent officers from their Hull office to the scene to estimate the extent of damages and to advise local municipal authorities that CMHC is prepared to help, as much as possible and in accordance with the corporation's rules, the citizens who have lost their homes or who will have to repair them substantially.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

I would like to know whether the Quebec Housing Corporation has intervened in this matter, has the federal government been asked to intervene or help finance those requests?

Mr. Ouellet: To my knowledge, the Quebec government has made no request.

URBAN AFFAIRS

ROBERT CAMPEAU REAL ESTATE DEVELOPMENTS IN HULL, QUEBEC

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. On June 2, 1975, the NCC advisory committee on design and the executive of the NCC saw the presentation of what was planned for les Terrasses de la Chaudière project. The minutes stated the project was not approved by the advisory committee on design. The project was resubmitted later, on July 7, September 9, September 16 and November 4, and on each occasion approval was withheld. Can the minister explain why this project was proceeded with over the objections of his officials who have specialized knowledge and concern for the over-all orderly development of this area?

● (1427)

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was not a minister then. I would have to check the minutes of those meetings. Apparently, the hon. member is obtaining internal documents of the corporation. I presume he has friends working for him. I will check his allegations and report later to the House.

[English]

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, the friends to whom the minister refers are also friends of the taxpayers of this country: I want him to understand that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: In the absence of the Minister of Public Works, I would like to ask the Minister of State for Urban Affairs a supplementary question. Since the Minister of Public Works has made a statement that Mr. Campeau owned or had options on some 178,000 square feet of les Terrasses de la Chaudière project which the minister claimed at that time amounted to 80 per cent or 90 per cent of the land required and provided the raison d'être for this $300 million deal with Campeau Corporation, and in view of reports in today's Ottawa papers that such is not the case and that the records at the land registry office in fact indicate something entirely different, I wonder if the minister will be good enough to resolve this difficulty or report the same to his colleague. When can we expect to find out who is correct, the minister or the land records?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member is trying to ruin some reputations. I think that in the past most of his statements proved to be unfounded. I could again check the facts, but it seems obvious that if it turns out as it did before the hon. member says things which after a thorough investigation will be shown to be incorrect.

[English]

ENERGY

TAKEOVER OF HUSKY OIL—DEVELOPMENT OF HEAVY OILS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Today's press reports the pipeline commissioner, Mr. Mitchell Sharp, as saying that the government knew last week that Alberta Gas Trunk Line company was considering acquiring control, or a substantial portion of the shares of the Husky Oil company. I want to ask the minister if that statement is correct and, if the government knew that this was likely to take place, why did it allow Petro-Canada to be left without any assistance or any support, with the result that public control of this vast reservoir of heavy oil has now slipped out of the hands of Petro-Canada?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there were indications last week that AGTL and Mr. Blair were considering the possibility of adding to the investment they had already made in the acquisition of shares of Husky Oil. There was no indication as to what their course of action was going to be or as to whether they were going to pursue adding to the investment they had already made. They were operating in an entirely legal way in acquiring shares for their own purposes, so there was no question of law involved. It was not a question of the government saying "Thou shalt not". They were operating in a perfectly legal way, as far as I know.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the press release from Petro-Canada says:

—Petro-Canada assumes that AGTL has . . . indicated its commitment and capacity to carry out the necessary development.

I want to ask the minister what that assumption is based on. Has Alberta Gas Trunk Line given any assurance to the government or to Petro-Canada that it intends to develop these oil deposits? Has the minister any assurance that AGTL will do so with a greater sense of urgency than did the Husky Oil company, whose failure to do so was the reason Petro-Canada offered to purchase the shares of that company?

● (1432)

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the remarks made by the president and officers of AGTL lead one to believe that that particular corporation is very much interested in expediting the development of heavy oils. I cannot conceive of any reason why, given the parameters of government policy with respect to the priority of development of heavy oils, and the large investment they are making in the acquisition of Husky stock, there would be any other possible interpretation with respect to the interest and commitment of AGTL toward the development of the heavy oils and that they would proceed with them in a vigorous manner.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If that is all the assurance the minister has, I am really sorry for this country. There is no indication that they will be any more aggressive than Husky Oil, unless the minister has some commitment. Therefore, I want to ask the minister whether this time, instead of leaving Husky Oil to dither around on its own, he intends to set a policy and to make an approach to AGTL with a view to undertaking a joint operation among AGTL, Petro-Canada and either, or both, of the provincial governments in order to ensure that this area will be developed in order to offset the growing danger of Canada being increasingly dependent on imported oil.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I suppose there would be a temptation to say the federal government hopes that Petro-Canada would move forward with an offer to assist AGTL in its plans, in the same way that there might be a temptation to express the hope that the Saskatchewan and Alberta governments would do the same thing. I think we have to take the position, certainly the implied position, of AGTL in moving forward at this time with its obvious intent, which is to say, the development of heavy oils.

There may well be opportunities for the governments involved and Petro-Canada to assist them, but I think that quite clearly the onus is now on AGTL to show the Canadian people what their plans will mean in terms of the development of the heavy oils in Saskatchewan. They know very clearly, as you do, Mr. Speaker, that the development of heavy oils is a priority so far as Canada is concerned.

LOTO CANADA

JUSTIFICATION FOR EXTENSION OF PROGRAM

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for federal lotteries. Notwithstanding the fact that the recent $23 million Loto Canada contract has been let in a somewhat undemocratic, if not immoral, way I should like to give her a second chance to answer a question she refused to answer last week. The issue is simple: this House was assured by the government in 1976 that any further extensions of federal lotteries must be approved by parliament, yet the minister has now gone ahead unilaterally in setting in motion a program estimated to cost $120 million over the next four years for the extension of Loto Canada.

I should like to ask the minister if she can tell the House how she can justify approving these or any expenditures for the extension of federal lottery programs without approval by the House, as required in the legislation.

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I can justify it quite clearly because there are only 18 months to go under the present sharing formula. There was never any agreement that we would terminate the lottery at that time.

I should like to read into record, if I may, a motion of the miscellaneous estimates committee, put forward by the hon. member for Vegreville, which reads as follows:

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Mr. Chairman, I think the motion is self-explanatory. As the minister has indicated, Loto Canada does not terminate—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, obviously, the minister is still not answering my question.

Mr. Ouellet: You don't like the answer.

Mr. Jelinek: That is not so, and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs was responsible for it and was misleading the House at that time.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Jelinek: My supplementary question to the minister responsible for federal lotteries is as follows. In view of the fact that when the first federal lottery was approved by the House in order to help defray the Olympic deficit—that is what it was for—it was done in good faith by the opposition, will the minister now abide by those commitments and bring this whole issue before the appropriate standing committee in order that the House can deal with the matter accordingly?

Mrs. Campagnolo: On several occasions I have answered that question in the House. I have said I will bring such legislation either before the House, or the regulations to the committee. I have, indeed, made that commitment and will carry it through, as my predecessor said.

PUBLIC SERVICE

TRANSFER OF EMPLOYEES TO HIGH-PRICED OFFICES IN HULL, QUEBEC

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board, if I can catch his attention. It has to do with the cost of les Terrasses de la Chaudière and the fact that the Minister of Public Works has said, generously, that this would cost the taxpayer only $6 million more under the Campeau deal than it would if the Crown had dealt with the matter. I say to the minister that the estimate is rather low because it does not include rental costs, etc.

I ask the minister, what is the justification for this, and what conceivable benefits can the government and the people of Canada have from moving servants out of offices which cost $8 to $10 a foot in one part of the national capital, across the river to another part of the national capital to office space which costs $13.72 a foot? Would the President of the Treasury Board tell us what possible tangible benefit there would for the people and the Government of Canada from such an outlandish arrangement for moving people into such high-priced property, high-priced in operation and in cost to the government?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is obviously ignoring the policy implications of attempting to bring the Hull downtown area into the ambit of the national capital. It would be very desirable, of course, if all this could be done at no cost whatsoever, but there is a policy implication involved here which has to be weighed against the straight dollars and cents involvement, which we are attempting to keep to an absolute minimum, premium or penalty, as the hon. member may describe it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It may well be a policy matter, but as I understand it there is also the policy that matters of this nature are done by tender, not by stealth—and that is what has happened in this case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Time after time, public servants have advised against this transaction, which was reconsidered time after time. In fact, there was a danger that Mr. Gallant and his committee would resign—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a supplementary question, would he put it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There was a danger that Mr. Gallant and his committee would resign because of what the government was doing. I put a question to the minister and I would like an answer. Is it only to be justified for policy reasons and for the ambit of the national capital that we spend $6 million a year on the capital cost on the one hand and $3 million a year more on rental over the period of at least 35 years? Is that to be the cost, and is that how the government justified it? Is that the only justification for such outlandish financial disaster?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the details of the hon. member's preamble, I would want to examine it extremely carefully, and I doubt very much the accuracy of his figures. My colleague, the Minister of Public Works, has dealt with this question in the House often and, so far as I am concerned, to my satisfaction. I think he has stated clearly the conditions under which that transaction was negotiated and I think they are reasonable.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TRAINING OF TURKISH PILOTS AND SALE OF CANADIAN AIRCRAFT

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns statements he is purported to have made in Ankara last week, when he left the impression that Turkey may be interested in buying planes from Canada and in resuming the training of Turkish pilots in this country. In view of the U.S. arms embargo to Turkey because of that country's aggression in Cyprus, can the minister assure the House that Canada will not provide military assistance to Turkey until there is a satisfactory resolution of the Cyprus issue?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the last part of the question, certainly that kind of assurance can be given because any discussion between Canada and Turkey was very tentative and very long range. I should remind the hon. member and the House that Turkey is our ally in NATO and that what the Turkish government was requesting was that we examine the possibility of some co-operative efforts with regard to arms for them, as our NATO ally, at some point in the future; and, of course, under the NATO agreement as well we are also obliged to consider any request for the training of their pilots in this country. But I emphasize once again that there is no relation between those discussions, which were initiated by Turkey, and the current U.S. embargo. This is a matter of ongoing co-operation between NATO allies. I hope at some point in the future matters can be worked out satisfactorily between us.

ENERGY

CMHC SUPPORT OF SOLAR INSTALLATIONS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Now that CMHC has stated its unwillingness to support solar installations and went so far as to call people in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources zealots if they support them, can the minister state whether he agrees with the statement?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that is quite false.

AIRPORTS

REPORTED CONSTRUCTION OF SUPERMARKET AT MIRABEL TO SELL IMPORTED GOODS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. As has been widely reported in the press, the minister's department is planning to fill part of the large amount of unused space at Mirabel airport with a supermarket to sell imported goods to Canadians as a means of trying to offset the more than $50 million a year deficit which Canadian taxpayers have to pay for this white elephant every year.

Is this plan the best that his department can devise for making some use of an airport which obviously never should have been built, because the second planned terminal for Dorval would have handled easily the projected traffic for the next 25 or 30 years?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, no such plan has been brought to my attention to this point, although there is a development planning committee trying to work on the entire development of the Mirabel area. I say once again to the hon. member that he will be proven false by the events of history. Mirabel, which we can now talk about as a white elephant in a happy way, will prove itself to be one of the most useful airports in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, is the minister not aware of the fact that a very large number of Montrealers travel to Europe and other parts of the world through the Toronto airport rather than undergo the inconvenience, delay and inefficiency of Mirabel? If the minister considers Mirabel is an outstanding success, would it not be interesting to hear him outline to the House his idea of a disaster?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC BOYCOTTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In a publication issued by the Department of Supply and Services, on behalf of his department, entitled "Markets for Canadian Exporters—Saudi Arabia", there is a section entitled "Insurance Certificate" which reads as follows:

> Two copies must be prepared by the insurance company stating that the company is not on the Arab blacklist.

Such a certificate clearly is contrary to the government's present policy on international economic boycotts. How is it that the government is providing exactly contrary advice to Canadian companies, thus facilitating compliance with an unacceptable boycott undertaking?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, Saudi Arabian authorities recently amended their insurance and steamship certificate requirements in a manner which now conforms with the Canadian government policy on international boycotts. The new requirements will be incorporated in the revised edition of the magazine "Markets for Canadian Exporters".

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, have instructions gone out to his department to stop circulating this document, which was received by some members of parliament yesterday, until a new publication is ready?

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Horner: In the current edition an addendum will be added which will note the significant change.

INDUSTRY

REVITALIZATION OF SHIPYARD AT HALIFAX, N.S.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Does he have any progress to report with regard to the revitalization of the Halifax shipyard, which is only a shadow of its former self and about which the minister expressed hope some months ago?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Halifax shipyard has remained a very big concern to the government because it is our opinion that the present owners really want to sell it. Our difficulty is in obtaining a new purchaser in co-operation with the Nova Scotia government. I suppose the difficulty remains until we can find new owners who are prepared to go ahead with some developments in which we are prepared to assist them.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, is not part of the difficulty, with a viable operation, the lack of an adequate dry dock, which was put before the government many months ago? Can the minister report to the House whether a decision has been taken with respect to this matter?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, this is the problem. We are prepared to assist in refurbishing and enlarging the dry dock facilities in Halifax, but on condition that the owners really want to go ahead with that development. The current situation is that the present owners would like to sell their interests in the Halifax shipyard. Until we can find new owners, in co-operation with the government of Nova Scotia, then really an investment on our part would not be correct.

REQUESTED ASSISTANCE FOR VICTIMS OF BUCKINGHAM, QUEBEC, DISASTER

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In addition to the assistance which could be provided through the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and which the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has just indicated, could the right hon. Prime Minister advise whether there exist other ways of helping the severely affected families in the city of Buckingham in general and in the former municipality of Masson in particular, because of the extensive damage caused by a tornado which raged through this community yesterday afternoon.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for bringing this matter to my attention this morning. The Minister of Finance whom I have contacted has indicated to me that the federal proposal is still available to the provinces, which means that beyond a certain threshold, a disaster becomes something to which we are prepared to contribute financially. In this respect, the minister has advised me that we have not received an application from the province of Quebec. I suppose they are trying to assess the extent of the disaster before contacting the federal government.

FISHERIES

GROUNDFISH LICENCE FOR VANCOUVER, B.C., COMPANY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. As I understand it, since May 15 the minister has received more than one letter from the Sumas Fisheries Company, of Vancouver, relating to licensing for fishing groundfish within the 200-mile limit. Since Sumas Fisheries is seeking licences or unsubsidized deep sea vessels under the Canadian flag, which operations should employ more than 240 people on a year-round basis, serving markets now being supplied by foreign vessels fishing in Canadian waters for hake and cod, why has the minister withheld these licences from a bona fide Canadian operator but is prepared to licence Japanese, Polish, Soviet Union and Korean fishermen to take the same stocks?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member distorts some of the facts of this situation. We are endeavouring to move Canadian fishing enterprises into the stocks which they have not fished traditionally. To this end, I approved the licence for a large groundfish trawler operated by the Prince Rupert Co-op. We will look at this type of proposal. We are replacing the foreign fleet within the Canadian zone. I will examine this proposal to see if, in fact, it fits into the policy which I have enunciated previously.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, in light of the minister's response, since the principals of Sumas Fisheries Company are prepared to turn in their existing licences on two ships provided those licences may be transferred to two new ships which they have under construction, why is the minister blocking the development of this type of private enterprise, particularly since groundfish catches during the past three years have been substantially lower than the scientific estimates of available stocks, especially ocean perch and hake, which showed a surplus of 85,000 metric tons in each of those years?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check to see that the type of vessel proposed is not of such large expansion in size and power that it means a completely new type of vessel. I will try to give the answer to the hon. member within the next day or so.

LOTO CANADA

SOURCE OF PROPOSED PURCHASE OF COMPUTER SYSTEMS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport). I am wondering, in relation to Loto Canada, whether the minister has any knowledge that General Instrument of Canada Limited does not have the manufacturing capability for producing either the terminals or the computer systems in Canada, and if she can say, in fact, that they will not be manufacturing either the terminals or the computer systems for the $23 million contract which was awarded, and all that technology will be carried out in Maryland.

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I have had full consultation on this contract. Indeed, there were four consultants—the Department of Supply and Services was also involved in the contract—and a full investigation of the other Canadian potential suppliers was undertaken. The result is that we are not just talking about $26 million, we are talking about $121 million, and of that amount some 80 per cent will remain in Canada with companies that pay taxes in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, although the government side may applaud the answer, the question has not been cleared up. What I am asking is, does the minister know that none of the technology necessary for the manufacture of these terminals or the computer systems in the initial $23 million contract will be carried out in Canada?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, if any of it were available in Canada to our specifications I would, of course, be purchasing it here.

Mr. Dick: It is available now in Canada.

AGRICULTURE

REALLOCATION OF MILK QUOTAS FOR ONTARIO DAIRY PRODUCERS

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In recent years, the manufacturing and domestic consumption of dairy products has decreased considerably in other provinces in Canada, whereas in the province of Ontario manufacturing and consumption has significantly increased. With the present federal milk quota allocations to the provinces, Ontario is seriously short of milk requirements, as mentioned by the hon. member for Leeds in his motion under Standing Order 43.

Is the Minister of Agriculture prepared to make the necessary reallocation of quotas to the provinces so that dairy producers and manufacturers in his home province can receive some semblance of justice?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if the hon. member checks the history of the industrial dairy market and industry, he will find that the province of Ontario decreased in industrial milk production significantly and let other provinces produce it. I have to look at this situation, as Minister of Agriculture for Canada, not only for the province of Ontario but for all other provinces. We are still in a surplus position in industrial dairy production in Canada. We have a tremendous supply of cheddar cheese and we have a surplus of butter and skim milk powder at the present time: there is nothing deficient in it at all. If the supply management committee sees fit to allocate to any province or to all provinces extra quotas, that will be their recommendation and I generally follow their recommendations.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, can the minister advise the House if the supply management committee will meet shortly to consider the situation?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I believe they made a commitment several weeks ago, and I am given to understand that they are to meet before the provincial ministers' meeting takes place at Yorkton in the first part of July.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

DATE OF FIRST MINISTERS' MEETING

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister could tell the House whether firm dates have been set for the first ministers' meeting on the constitution and, if so, what those dates are?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when we met in February, the first ministers and I agreed that we would look at a date in the fall: September was mentioned, but no firm date has been arrived at yet. I have instructed my office to try to set up dates in the last part of September.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether it is still the plan of the federal government to convene a meeting with provincial ministers to discuss some of the federal proposals for constitutional reform before there is an opportunity for the premiers and the Prime Minister to meet?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as the House will remember, several federal ministers were engaged in the past two weeks in briefing the premiers, not only on the substance of the white paper, but on the general tenor of the bill which was presented in this House. The Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, in particular, has made himself available to provincial ministers of interprovincial affairs and attorneys general should they wish to meet with him. I know he has volunteered to meet with them as a group, or in two groups, east and west, depending on their convenience. My understanding is that they do plan to meet amongst themselves and that the minister has made himself available.

We know, of course, that the premiers will be meeting also in the first part of August to discuss general problems and, no doubt, the constitution. We have made sure they know that federal members of parliament and officials are available to discuss and explain every part of our bill which was given first reading this week.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN INCOME SUPPLEMENT TO PERSONS 65 AND OVER

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Last week, the minister sent to the offices of hon. members a letter indicating that a study, in conjunction with the New Horizons Program, had revealed that barely 25 per cent of our senior citizens of over 65 years of age were aware of the program. The minister then had a booklet printed which she wants to distribute.

I therefore ask the minister how much she intends to spend in publicizing the program, and how many more of our senior citizens of over 65 she wants to inform about the program, since only 25 per cent of them are now aware of it?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to remind the hon. member that the New Horizons Program has existed for only five years and a half and that we are quite proud of the fact that it is the program Canadians like best. I should also like to add that the senior citizens' clubs born with the help of the small amounts we have offered them must group over two million retired Canadians. It seems that 25 per cent of them have been reached by various projects so, in reply to the question of the hon. member, I would say that of course we want to reach the maximum possible number of people, without however trying to impose modes of life that do not agree with them; still, 45 civil servants are making a special effort as social organizers; as soon as they get the names of senior citizens, they get in touch with them and even help them organize small groups of at least ten members, thus increasing the number of those who benefit from the program.

POST OFFICE

CONSULTATIONS WITH UNIONS BEFORE REDUCTION IN MANPOWER

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that last Friday the Postmaster General told this House that any proposals to reduce manpower in the Post Office were exactly that, proposals, and that they would not be put into effect until after consultations with the unions, in view of the fact that I now have in my possession a document entitled "London Post Office Business Plan, 1978-1979", with a starting date of April 1, 1978, and in view of the fact that no consultation concerning the implementation of this plan has been undertaken with either LCUC or CUPW, can the minister explain to this House why his department is going ahead with the implementation of such plans at a time when the minister is telling the House that no such plans will be undertaken without consultation with the unions involved?

● (1502)

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I think my statement in the House on a previous day was very clear. It was that no permanent postal employees would lose their jobs as a result of departmental change, but that manpower reduction will be done through attrition, with consultation in the union.

Mr. Rodriguez: Not prior to consultation?

Mr. Lamontagne: I should like to mention that with the LCUC, consultations are very easy and before any change is made it will be done with the LCUC. It is a different story with CUPW, considering that consultation with CUPW is very difficult and sometimes they are forbidden to talk with management.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS—CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre) moved that the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, presented to the House earlier this day, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion as presented, since it relates to a report filed only today, would require the unanimous consent of the House for presentation at this time.

Does the hon. member have the unanimous consent of the House to present this motion at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved that the fifth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments presented to the House earlier this day, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion refers to a report tabled earlier this day. Accordingly, the motion cannot be presented at this time without the unanimous consent of the House. Does the hon. member have the unanimous consent of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have not even had a chance to look at the report and I should like to do so.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I would be agreeable to my motion standing and time may be found to consider it later without debate; otherwise we may have the opportunity to have a fairly extensive debate next Friday.

An hon. Member: Monday!

Mr. Baldwin: Friday. Monday is a holiday. The minister can take his choice.

VILLE-MARIE WHARF

Question No. 898—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. For each year since 1965, did the government invest money in the Ville-Marie wharf in the constituency of Témiscamingue and, if so, in what amount?

2. Does the government own the lands near the wharf and, if so, what are the boundaries?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): 1. No record is available of any monies spent on this wharf prior to 1973. The following expenditures have been made since this department assumed the administration of this facility in 1973. 1973, wharf repairs, $8,000; 1975, Minor Repairs, $2,851; 1977, wharf repairs, $8,682.

2. The right of way of the wharf is a continuation of St.-Anne Street, Ville-Marie. In 1974, a water lot was surveyed and an application was made to the province of Quebec for the 0.71 acre waterlot on which the wharf is located. To date no confirmation has been received from the province on our request.

EXPENDITURES IN ABITIBI

Question No. 919—Mr. Laprise:

Has the Department of Public Works (a) carried out projects in the constituency of Abitibi in (i) 1975-76 (ii) 1976-77 (b) planned to carry out projects in the constituency in 1977-78 and, if so, what are they?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): (a) The following projects have been carried out by DPW: (i) 1975-76. Location/Description: DPW-Funded: Amos—General alterations to Post Office; Amos—Interior Landscaping for Canada Manpower; Amos—General alterations to Post Office; Duparquet—Post Office alterations; LaSarre—Fitting up 2nd floor, Government of Canada Building; LaSarre—Interior landscaping for Canada Manpower; LaSarre—General alterations to Post Office; LaSarre—Installation of electric sign for Canada Manpower; Macamic—Improvements to electrical system, Government of Canada Building; Normétal—Post Office alterations; St-Marc-de-Figuery—Installation of unit-heaters, Farm School; Val-d'Or—Ventilation and alterations, Federal Building; OGD-Funded: Lac Tiblemont—Repairs to wharf. (ii) 1976-77: DPW-Funded: Radisson-Baie James—Post Office fitups; Val-d'Or—Federal Building, extension and renovations; OGD-Funded: Duparquet—Wharf repairs; Joutel, Rivière Harricanna—Wharf and launching ramp; Lac Mourier (Malartic)—Wharf and approach repairs; Lac Preissac—Tourist wharf; Laferté (Lac Lois)—Wharf and approach repairs; Launay, Lac Chicoby—Wharf and approach repairs; Palmarolle (Rivière Dagenais)—Wharf repairs; Preissac, Lac Preissac—Wharf demolition; St-Mathieu de Figuery, Lac Figuery—Wharf repairs. (b) Planned projects for 1977-78. Location/Description: DPW Funded: Matagami—Post Office improvements; Radisson-Baie James—Post Office fitups; OGD-Funded: Clerval, Lac Abitibi—Wharf and ramp repairs; Lac Chibougamau—Wharf and ramp construction.

GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Question No. 943—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Will the outcome of the upcoming GATT negotiations have a major effect on most sectors of the Canadian economy and, if so, what consultations were held between the government and the business and labour groups who will be effected by the GATT talks?

2. Will the position bargained for by Canadian negotiators be submitted to Parliament for approval or will it be unilaterally imposed?

3. Have steps been taken by the government to develop a programme which will assist sectors of the economy effected by the outcome of the GATT talks in adapting to the new trade environment and (a) if so, what are they (b) if not, will the government develop such a programme well before bargaining is almost completed in order to give business and labour time to begin adjusting before it is too late?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. The "hard bargaining" phase of the multilateral trade negotiations has commenced but it is not possible at this time to foresee what the precise impact of the eventual results might be for the various sectors of the Canadian economy. Changes in the level of protection in both foreign markets and in Canada are to be expected, however, in respect of both tariff and non-tariff barriers to trade. The government, over the past several years, has invited all Canadians who might have an interest in the results of the negotiations to make known their views. Over 400 written briefs and 150 follow-up submissions have been received by the Canadian Trade and Tariffs Committee from individual firms and from industry and business, from agricultural and fisheries interests, from labour and consumer associations and other groups. More than 100 oral consultations have been held with those submitting briefs. All provinces individually and, in some cases, jointly, have submitted views to the government; there has been a great number and variety of meetings with the provinces at the ministerial and other levels. Numerous direct representations have been received and meetings held by ministers, departments concerned and by the Canadian coordinator for the multilateral trade negotiations with private sector interests. As the negotiations have evolved, the coordinator and senior officials have had, and continue to have, confidential discussions with the provinces and the private sector.

2. Our negotiators in Geneva are working under the instructions of the government. It is expected that the results of the negotiations, as approved by governments, will be made public simultaneously by all the countries concerned at a time and place to be agreed by the participants. The trade concessions received and granted by Canada will be tabled in parliament.

3. Assistance to industry in one form or another has been an important element in the work of the federal government for many years, and a considerable range of programs is already available to facilitate adaptation of industry and labour to various kinds of changes. To help producers, business and workers adjust to the freer trade environment which will result from the negotiations, the government is now considering possible improvements in these programs as well as new programs which may be required. It is expected that adjustment assistance will be available to help those concerned take advantage of new export opportunities as well as to adjust to more intensive import competition. The provinces are being consulted in the course of developing these programs. The approval of parliament for the funding of programs will be sought through departmental estimates.

Order Paper Questions

ACCESS ROUTES BETWEEN ALBERTA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 1,524—Mr. Schumacher:

1. Since 1970 to date, what studies were done by (a) independent groups (b) governmental groups at each level of jurisdiction (c) private industrial sources, and presented to the government for consideration, on the East-West transportation access routes between Alberta and British Columbia and, in each case, on what date were such reports presented?

2. For the same years, what specific recommendations were (a) made (b) implemented (c) rejected (d) passed for further study, concerning the access routes and, in each case, in what way do they effect the (i) Province of Alberta in general (ii) City of Calgary and area in particular, and by whom were these decisions taken?

3. Since 1970, what specific recommendations were made and by whom, regarding re-routing the Trans-Canada Highway in favour of twinning the Banff National Park Highway and, in each case, what is the status of such recommendations and proposals at the present time?

4. Were any objections received to any proposal to twin these highways and, if so (a) on what date (b) from whom (c) for what reason?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by Transport Canada and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as follows: 1 and 2. The information requested is not readily available and to provide an acurate reply would entail a lengthy and manual search of government files which cost in manpower and time, would be excessive and prohibitive.

3. In late 1972 the consultant firm Lombard North Group, Calgary, commenced an Environmental Impact Study, for Public Works Canada, of twinning the Trans-Canada Highway through Banff National Park. The study, published in January 1975, recommends potential corridors for the additional two lanes of the Trans-Canada Highway. Current proposals resulting from discussions among Transport, Public Works, and DIAND, call for twinning only the 8.4 mile section of the Trans-Canada Highway between Banff East Gate and the Banff townsite interchange, plus upgrading of the highway from Banff townsite to the vicinity of Healey Creek at mile 16. Traffic studies and a detailed environmental impact study will be undertaken in 1978.

4. Numerous written and oral briefs have been presented to Indian and Northern Affairs (Parks Canada) the contents of which are summarized in a report entitled "Public Hearings Report, Mountain Parks and Lake Louise Area" issued in 1974 (INA Publication No. QS-2097-000-EE-A1). (a) The public participation program on the twinning project was held in 1975 in the form of workshops and meetings. (b) Most conservationist groups including the National Provincial Parks Association, Alberta Wilderness Association and Parks for Tomorrow Group have opposed the twinning project. (c) General statements of objections were received following the public participation meetings. The conservationist groups opposed various aspects of environmental impact, e.g. access, increase in traffic, general crowding and suggested that Parks Canada should consider the following options to twinning: (1) reroute the Trans-Canada Highway outside of the park; (2) introduce public system and improved train service; (3) restrict traffic.

Order Paper Questions

EXPORTERS' AGREEMENTS WITH FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Question No. 1,600—Mr. Gauthier (Roberval):

During the past ten years, did exporters and sub-contractors sign agreements with foreign countries and, if so, in each case, what was the (a) name of the (i) exporter (ii) sub-contractor (iii) country (b) subject of the agreement?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as Export Development Corporation is concerned: Exporters with which EDC has arrangements do sign sales contracts with buyers in foreign countries, and in many cases the foreign buyer is the state or a state agency. Sub-contractors sign agreements with the prime contractor. (a) in each case (i) in each case of loan financing shown in EDC's Annual Reports for each of the last 10 years, the exporter of record had a written agreement with a foreign buyer. Each of such Reports has been distributed to Members of Parliament and that information is a matter of public record. Sub-contractors' agreements are made with the prime contractor and not with the foreign country. In cases of EDC's credits insurance and foreign investment guarantees, the information as to any sales or investment agreement by a Canadian or Canadian company is given to EDC in confidence; EDC cannot publish particulars without the party's consent without a breach of that confidence. To do so would assist the party's competitors domestic and foreign. Parliament has not requested a Crown Corporation to answer detailed questions on their administration and operation, and in the case of Export Development Corporation, the Export Development Act places that responsibility for such matters on its Board of Directors. (ii) sub-contractors do not make agreements with foreign countries, but with prime contractors. (iii) as to the countries, please see the general answer first above. (b) As to the subject of the agreements, please see the general answer first above.

LOANS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Question No. 1,601—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

In the 1977-78 fiscal year, did Canada grant loans to foreign countries and, if so (a) to which countries (b) what was the amount in each case (c) what was the interest rate in each case (d) what conditions were attached to the loans?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): In so far as the Canadian International Development Agency is concerned:

In so far as the Export Development Corporation is concerned: (a) Its loans were made to foreign countries and to foreign companies to finance the sale of Canadian capital goods and services. Details of each loan signed in the calendar year 1977 are shown in EDC's 1977 Annual Report, distributed to Members of Parliament, and that information is a matter of public record. For the period January 1 to March 31, 1978, it has announced the loans to the foreign buyers described in the table hereto.

responsibility for such matters on its Board of Directors. (d) Please refer to (a).

In so far as the Department of Finance is concerned: None.

SALARY INCREASES TO PUBLIC SERVANTS

Question No. 1,692—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Since January 1, 1978, have any public servants received an increase in salary, and (a) if so, what was the percentage increase (b) if not, does the government intend to grant an increase and, if so (i) on what date (ii) what will be the percentage (iii) will it be retroactive to January 1, 1978?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Since January 1st, 1978, individual public servants may have received an increase in salary, depending on the following circumstances: (a) (i) As of May 23rd, 1978, some 33,090 public servants received salary increases effective during 1978, as follows:

Group	No. of Employees	Wage Increases %	Effective Date
Foreign Service	973	5.95	20/03/78

(ii) During the period January 1st—May 23rd, 1978, individual public servants may have received a salary increase if they were eligible for merit or incremental increases within their salary band. The amount of any such increases vary from group to group, subject to their particular pay plan. (iii) Any individual public servant who received a promotion during this period would likely have received an increase in salary. (b) Salary increases for other groups will be granted as follows: (i) Effective dates of salary increases are not granted on the same date for each group but rather the date will vary between groups. (ii) Percentage increases for each group will vary with the salary comparability status of the group. Groups of employees having compensation increases with effective dates prior to April 14, 1978 are still subject to A.I.B. guideline limitations. (iii) Retroactivity provisions for bargained groups are subject to negotiation between the parties but retroactivity where it has applied has usually become effective on the first day following the termination date of the previous collective agreement. In addition there are some pay plans for public servants not included in collective bargaining which expired during the period January 1—May 23, 1978. Revisions to these pay plans, announced after May 23, 1978, would also be retroactive.

DVA—CONTRACTS FOR PROFESSIONAL SERVICES

Question No. 1,817—Mr. Orlikow:

1. For the fiscal year 1976-77, what contracts for professional services were let for studies, surveys and analyses into (a) present or future policies, programmes or information analysis and their efficiency and effectiveness (b) the examination of the administration or internal operation of the Department of Veterans Affairs?

2. How much was committed on each contract and to whom?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. (a) (1) Consultation on the development and application of a methodology for longitudinal survey of veterans affairs employees which will measure improvement in administrative practices. (2) Consulting services during the process of gathering and analyzing data on which to base strategies for improving administrative practices. (3) Determination of overhead. (b) None.

2. (1) $883.90 to Mr. Gérald Lefebvre, Réseau de développement d'organisations inc., 5055 avenue Gatineau, Montréal, Québec. (2) $4,123.65 to Mr. Yvan Joly, Réseau d'évaluation et de recherche sociale enr., 1532, boul. Gouin est, Montréal, Québec. (3) $1,711 to Bureau of Management Consultants, Department of Supply and Services, Ottawa, Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. BEATTY—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION NO. 1,332

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the parliamentary secretary to question No. 1,332 which I placed on the order paper on February 22. The question relates to the trip that was taken to western Canada by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) in opposition to the attempt by Mr. Harold Ballard to buy the Hamilton Tiger Cats. Surely information requested about the minister's itinerary and whether he flew by government aircraft should be available by now.

The question also relates to the minister's public assertion that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was coming forward with grants to extend seating in Ivor Wynne stadium. Surely that information should be available now too. I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could indicate, as the question has been on the order paper since February 22, why he has yet to provide an answer.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the number of the question is all I need. I am quite capable of reading the order paper. I can assure the hon. member that we will give his question all the attention it requires within the next few weeks.

[English]

MR. ELZINGA—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION NO. 423

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the parliamentary secretary to question No. 423 which was on the order paper for the entire last session as well as this session of parliament. It is obvious the government has something to hide in this regard. I wonder if we could be given a commitment that an answer will be forthcoming before this session is completed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved that Bill C-36, to amend the Export Development Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased to participate in this debate on Bill C-36. This bill gives me an opportunity to make some rather laudatory comments on a Crown corporation. We seldom have the opportunity in the House to agree with the objectives of a piece of legislation. There is always a stumbling block somewhere which prevents us from giving our support or at least an unconditional support. On the other hand, this bill which aims essentially at making the Export Development Corporation more dynamic does not have those difficulties. Its intentions are clear and its objective is commendable. Moreover, consideration of the operations of the corporation during the last few years confirms the confidence we should have in it. The Export Development Act adopted in 1969 gave extensive powers to the Export Development Corporation. The corporation may borrow money, grant or guarantee loans, enter into insurance contracts, grant export credits and guarantee export and foreign investment transactions.

An amendment to the legislation contained in this bill would allow the corporation to issue bid bonds when a Canadian exporter is bidding on a foreign contract. Those are very extensive powers, Mr. Speaker. For all practical purposes, those are the powers of a commercial merchant bank. But since this is a Crown corporation, it has a special responsibility towards the Canadian people through parliament. Before giving it more authority, we must first determine whether its activities are in Canada's and the people's best interests, and second, whether its financial performance deserves a vote of confidence.

On the first point, I must say its record is rather positive. I think that the best way to show this is to analyse its activities and their effects in each of its spheres of operation. Let us start by export loans. These loans are made to importing countries so that they buy goods or services from a Canadian supplier. The effect of this is to maintain, if not create jobs. For the first time, in 1977, the value of export financing climbed over the billion dollar mark. This represents an increase of more than 30 per cent over last year's figure of $763 million. Loans to Canadian exporters reached approximately $600 million. Canadian export sales supported by these loans helped more than 50 exporters and 250 main subcontractors.

If I have anything to blame the corporation for regarding beneficiaries of loan agreements it is that these companies often operate in the larger Canadian centres, that they are large companies, whereas it is urgent to encourage small and average firms. I would cite as an example a firm that operates on the south shore area, in the Bellechasse riding, and which cannot avail itself of the opportunities offered by the corporation because it cannot afford to pay agents to find out what its production is.

The fact still remains that this company could profitably increase its production of machinery for export, which would create jobs in Canada. I bring this matter to the attention of the minister so that, when he receives representations from this or other similar companies, he pays particular attention to them. I know, Mr. Speaker, that this is due to the heavy concentration of enterprises in these areas, but I still think an effort could be made to contact in a more effective way the businesses which are located outside larger centres. As to the export credit insurance program, this service provides to Canadian export businesses global or specific insurance contracts for risks that are not covered by commercial policies. The risks covered include war or revolution in the buying country, default of payment on the part of the foreign buyer and other risks. Those insurance policies encourage the export of Canadian goods by removing certain risks which, unfortunately, are very real in some countries.

In 1977, Mr. Speaker, our insured exports reached a record $1.45 billion. The increase in the value of insured exports last year amounted to some $100 million. The corporation also offers services to companies which want to invest abroad thus enabling Canadian businessmen to invest without fear of the political hazards that could make them lose their investments.

Mr. Speaker, the matter of Canadian investments abroad is a touchy subject. Some would oppose them saying that money would benefit Canada more if it were invested here. The reasoning is logical and valid, and I should like to give as an example the development of the Canadian merchant marine. Some companies could accept coastal trade contracts on the St. Lawrence River and in the Great Lakes, but they lack the money to build the ships that are needed, and our shipyards do not operate at full capacity for lack of investments and funds necessary to develop our merchant marine. So I think that in that regard, even if through its Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce the Canadian government were to grant subsidies of from 17 to 20 per cent to Canadian shipyards where ships are built for other countries, that help would not be enough to meet our own needs. I see the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) nodding in agreement; I think we both agree on that score because our electors are extremely interested in and concerned about our shipyards.

Mr. Speaker, that reasoning may seem sound at first glance, and it is extremely so, but the corporation does not take sufficiently into account two important factors: first, an investment abroad is seldom possible precisely because it is abroad. Let me give you an example: If I produce pulp and paper, chances are I can export a big part of my production, which is what usually happens. New markets are accessible to me but, to take advantage of them, I should have to invest with foreign partners in a mill located in their land. I know the equipment for that mill will come from Canada, and also that the know-how of Canadians will be required to get the mill off the ground. Finally, I know that if I do not take advantage of that opportunity, investors in that country will go to another land for the money and techonology they lack. So we must be cautious and take that occasion. We must also remember that every contact which can be established following such investments might bring contracts. It is always advantageous in business to make oneself known. It is not by staying home in complete isolation that one can show dynamism.

In our era of instant world communications, a man who is unable to look beyond his immediate circle does not go very far. The figures are there to prove it. The Canadian investment insurance program had an impact of over $1 billion in our country. This is a positive contribution to the Canadian balance of payments. Following that very positive statement about particular operations of EDC, I would now like, Mr. Speaker, to point out some interesting aspects relating to the general operation of the corporation. These figures and facts as well as my related comments will be, I am sure, all valuable arguments in favour of the adoption of this bill which, we should recall, would give EDC better opportunities to help Canadians benefit an ever more international economy.

Allow me to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the corporation is increasingly applying to international markets for funds. Indeed, it borrows abroad to lend abroad. As a result, as far as the balance of payments is concerned, a credit operation is converted into a cash transaction. In addition, that procedure allows it not to draw from the consolidated revenue fund as it used to do. The adoption of that bill will only increase its borrowing capacity on international markets and thus encourage Canadian exports.

Mr. Speaker, the point on which I disagree was underlined yesterday when I voted for some amendments presented in the House, because I would rather have us maintain an intermediate position. I feel that although the increase may not be excessive, it does exceed our possibilities. Anyhow, I said and I repeat that I am for the bill, I will vote for it and I am convinced that my colleagues will do likewise. However, it should be pointed out that when making private investments in the United States the corporation was given a triple-A credit rating. In the financial field that means something. A triple-A credit rating is really extraordinary, the corporation being the first Canadian issuer to be thus recognized by both firms. It is one more proof of the respect shown to the corporation on the financial market. I would also like to point out the 30 per cent increase from 1976 of the balance of financial services enjoyed by Canadian exporters in 1977. That increase raised to $2,600,000 the value of the financial services offered by the corporation. For the first time it exceeded the $4 billion level in its loans on foreign markets.

For once it is good to see Canadians lending money on foreign markets rather than the other way around. This does not mean, Mr. Speaker, that I give up my idea that the Bank of Canada should lend money to the governments of the provinces and of Canada under very favourable terms, as it was often said and as I repeat, including only administration fees. But since we live in a world, it is understood that we must do business with the rest of the world, and it is through this corporation that I see a means of gaining recognition without neglecting the domestic sector, so as not to put all our eggs in one basket. Mr. Speaker, according to its own calculations, the Export Development Corporation has contributed directly or indirectly to provide employment in Canada.

Finally, I would like to note that this public corporation is profitable as its net profits for 1977 amounted to $18.7 million, which is an increase of 6 per cent over 1976. I think that the administrators of the corporation should be congratulated. We sometimes bitterly criticize public servants and the executives of Crown corporations, but when we think that they deserve congratulations, we must have the honesty to say so. This is what I am now doing. Mr. Speaker, those profits represent a rate of return of 11 per cent on funds invested by the Canadian government on behalf of the taxpayers. This investment amounted to $171 million in early 1977. This is a very respectable return, especially when it is compared to that of other Crown corporations.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to state that the Export Development Corporation is a Crown corporation of which Canadians can be proud. Its good reputation throughout the world reflects on Canada and the whole Canadian population. Moreover, it greatly contributes to Canadian industrial and economic expansion. It is for those reasons that I support Bill C-36. Its passage will enable the corporation to serve even better the needs of Canadian exporters and this will benefit the whole country.

However, Mr. Speaker, I would like to note that, as I have already said, the corporation is not sufficiently concerned about the small businesses which could eventually export their products and their innovations and which provide and would provide even more employment for our specialized manpower. I also want to emphasize the fact that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, does not co-operate fully with small businesses. I realize he is new in his position, he does his best but he cannot learn everything in one day even though he has been a member of parliament for some time. He has been minister only since he crossed the floor of the House. Everyone has to learn. We must give him a chance. However, it is our duty to ask him to give particular consideration to small businesses, since the large businesses can better fend for themselves.

In closing, because I must attend a very important committee meeting, which means that members of parliament are very busy, even if a number of Canadians as well as gentlemen of the press would suggest that we have nothing to do. We must do the right thing whenever it is possible, and we must do so quickly, putting to use the time Providence has deemed appropriate to give us. To summarize, I shall support this bill and I urge very sincerely once again the minister to pay particular attention to the requests for assistance he receives from small businesses, for they provide over 60 per cent of all jobs in Canada. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): If the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) speaks now, he will close the debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think you will find that on third reading the rule about a minister closing the debate does not apply. Last night the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) said to the House, as recorded at page 6804 of Hansard:

I would inform you, Mr. Speaker, that I intend to speak at length at third reading stage of the bill.

We would rather like to hear him as early as possible. I hope you will see the minister now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Does the hon. minister want to get up on a point of order? The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers).

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I am rather disappointed that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) did not see fit to make his comments now.

Mr. Horner: I did.

Mr. Lessard: He tried.

Mr. Towers: I would rather welcome the opportunity to listen to his remarks and then reply to him.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then let him speak now.

Mr. Towers: In reviewing this bill, we have to realize that we are dealing with the last of the big spenders. The Export Development Corporation is, to all intents and purposes, removing its ceiling, going from $8.5 billion to $26 billion. That is a tremendous increase; we must wonder about that.

This government has allowed the manufacturing industry in Canada to depreciate to the point where we are now running at a deficit of $11.1 billion a year. Last year there was a 37 per cent increase in the amount of business being done by the Export Development Corporation. Generally speaking, the Export Development Corporation is involved in exporting our manufactured products.

Why does the federal government and the Canadian manufacturing industry run up such a tremendous deficit in the world of trade, while at the same time financing of the manufacturing industry through the Export Development Corporation has increased 37 per cent? The only realistic answer one can come up with is that we probably do a better job of financing than some of the other countries. We are doing it, however, at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer and, at the same time going into an increasing debt load. We recognize that last year our debt increased considerably in Canada and that a greater debt load will be carried this year.

From 1966 to 1976 the real growth in the g.n.p. was 4.7 per cent and in manufacturing production during the same period it was 3.9 per cent. In the period 1971 to 1976 the real growth in the g.n.p. was 4.6 per cent and manufacturing production was down to 3.7 per cent. From 1973 to 1976 the real growth in the g.n.p. was 3.1 per cent and manufacturing production was 1.6 per cent.

This shows the trend the Canadian manufacturing industry is on as a result of policies of the government. There seems to be no change taking place to correct this situation. While we realize that the financial aspect of the Export Development Corporation assists to a degree in correcting our deficit balance of trade, in so far as manufacturing is concerned it is a very expensive way of doing it. In the years 1966 to 1977 the manufacturing industry's share of national employment fell from 25 per cent to an estimated 19 per cent. During the same period the compound annual growth rate in manufacturing employment was only .7 per cent.

The figures I have referred to prove that we are exporting a large number of our graduate students. Last night I put on record the fact that the Export Development Corporation is bank-rolling Algeria, providing credit for that country. It is understandable that they want business. It is anticipated that in the next 15 years they will have over 100,000 graduates who they want to put to work.

One of the things I must impress upon this House is that we in Alberta also have graduates for whom jobs will be needed. We do not want to see them all leave the country. We want petro-chemical industry jobs with all the derivative plants which will result as a consequence of development. Certainly if we help develop manufacturing industries in other countries we must be prepared to see our graduates follow those industries in order to get jobs. This is the part which really worries me. I believe we should be giving Canadians top priority in the consideration of what we should be doing with the amount of money at our disposal.

The minister has been a farmer and knows that if he is away tending his neighbour's chores rather than looking after his own, his own place soon falls into disrepair. This is what I am afraid will happen if we do not recognize the fact that we have to take care of industry in Canada. Coming as he does from Alberta, the minister knows we must have development out there if we are to provide jobs for students who are graduating. All he has to do is read any newspaper at this time of year to realize the number of students who are graduating. This would surely lead him to recognize that we need permanent jobs for these people, not temporary work which is made available by exporting some of our manufactured products. We need permanent jobs so we have to change policies which have been established by the present government.

In committee, Mr. Speaker, I brought one matter to light which I believe deserves more consideration than it has received this far. I am not condemning the minister since I know he is new to his position and has not had the necessary opportunity or, perhaps, the facility to look seriously at the problems which are being created by the export of some of our manufactured products. I wish to refer, Mr. Speaker, to the minutes of proceedings of the committee which was held on Tuesday, May 23. I posed the following question, as reported at page 28 of issue 36:

> I realize, Mr. Chairman, that my colleague, Mr. Crosbie, got into this in his earlier questioning, but is any examination done before a deal is made through the Export Development Corporation with the company in Canada with perhaps another company in Canada that was going to be given a disadvantage because of a sale? Perhaps it had a contract, or some type of an agreement with a country, and this type of financing may inhibit their operation. Do you ever have an examination of this kind?

This is what I was referring to when I suggested that the minister should take a serious look at this question. Mr. MacDonald replied in this way:

> I think I have stated many times that we are not totally economically ignorant; we appreciate there can be repercussive effects. But the next question we ask ourselves is, what can we do about it? Have we any power over Chile, the United States, Poland, whatever country you want to take?

Further to that I find that the Export Development Corporation entered into contracts with the country of Chile to the amount of about $32 million between 1961 and 1976. The company I referred to which is having a problem with the policies of the federal government is a company known as Avalon Aviation Limited, located at the industrial airport in Red Deer. This company is in the water bombing business. Perhaps the minister would take it upon himself to answer the questions raised in the letter from Avalon which I would like to put on record. If he cannot do so in his speech, perhaps he will do so later. The letter from which I quote is dated June 13, 1977 and is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson):

> In order to balance cash flow and provide year round employment, our company has been operating water bombing services in Latin America for the past four years. We established our contacts and negotiated contracts without assistance from the federal government.
> Canadair has used the Quebec Government Air Service's personnel and aircraft to promote the sale of a water bomber before the CL-215 was on the drawing board.

It is my understanding that the federal government, through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, has invested about $30 million in Canadair. That is not chicken feed in anybody's language. In fact, when you don't even ask for interest on it it does give a corporation a real advantage; and when you have the advantage of no interest and then receive benefits on the other hand through the Export Development Corporation, it puts corporations which are trying to compete at a disadvantage. The letter continues:

> In the past twelve months, Canadair, now a Crown corporation, has continued this practice, promoting the operation of CL-215's and PBY's by the Quebec Government Air Service in Argentina, Venezuela and Chile.
> We cannot fault the government in their attempt to assist in the marketing of the Canadair CL-215. However, in view of our continued Canso PBY programs in Latin America, we find it most frustrating to have our own government as a competitor. You are probably not aware, but our contracts were won in competition with U.S. carriers.
> If the Government of Canada continues to support the Quebec Government Air Service Canso PBY program, we would be interested in receiving similar subsidies. On the other hand, in view of our success in Latin America to date, it may be of mutual advantage to have us work with the Canadian Government in water bombing projects.

There is the possibility that the federal government does not know that Canadair is using these sales practices. In any case, we will do everything in our power to retain our Latin American contracts.

● (1542)

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this is just a straightforward request from a legitimate Canadian corporation for consideration and, perhaps, help.

The following was written in a letter dated January 13 to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce:

I was informed by our agent in Chile early in November 1977 by telephone, followed later by a complete written report, that Canadair had offered the service of one CL-215 for 90 days and 175 hour guarantee to the Chilean Government for the price of $235,000.00, half of this amount being applied to the purchase of a CL-215. The purchase price to the Chilean Government, without spares, was $3.2 million.

On August 15, 1977 Mr. Ponce, Director of CONAF, and his secretary arrived in Montreal as guest of Canadair. They were taken to Quebec City, then Montreal, Nice, France, Marignane, France, for 1½ days, then Paris, London, Montreal. In Montreal they were given a 1 drop demonstration by one of Canadair's CL-215's. They then returned to Santiago, Chile. They were accompanied throughout the trip by Mr. Sergio Besa, Canadair Chilean representative, and Mr. Robert Aver, Canadair Canadian representative.

On October 23, 1977, the above-mentioned Canadair representatives presented to the Chilean Government the proposed contract agreement as referred to above.

Due to a report by Mr. Maldonado to Mr. Ponce that the CL-215 could not operate from available paved runways due to length, also its inability to operate from dirt strips, and its low cross-wind performance, it was decided this aircraft wasn't feasible for their operation. Besides that, prior to Canadair's proposal, CONAF had contacted Canadian and American operators for bids on the PBY-5A Water Bombers. The result was that they could have 2 PBY-5A Water Bombers for the price of one CL-215 from Canadair, for namely $235,000.00, which is only 25 per cent of the true operational cost of the CL-215 to a private operator.

Unfortunately, due to Canadair's expensive promotional trip for Mr. Ponce and his secretary, and Mr. Maldonado's report on the CL-215, it was concluded that they could not sign the agreement with Canadair. Due to the fact that Mr. Ponce was obligated to Canadair for his trip to Canada, France, etc. his decision was not to allow any foreign operators into Chile during this fire season. This means that Avalon Aviation Ltd. has been deprived of a contract in Chile this season.

On November 18, 1977, I went to Chile and I spent $2,000.00 of my Company's money to try to salvage the contract. However it was worth every cent of it because I have obtained additional information regarding sales practices by Canadair marketing division. There is no justification for the federal government to allow Canadair to conduct sales practices within or outside Canada which are detrimental to Canadian Registered Companies.

That letter is signed by R. H. Murdock.

Further to that I would like to put on the record another letter dated February 6, 1978. This letter is also to the minister, and it reads as follows:

Dear Sir:

This letter is for the records. In the late summer of 1976, Avalon Aviation Ltd. leased a PBY-5A Water Bomber to Haydn Air Charter for fire suppression for the Norwegian Government. The aircraft was again on contract for the 1977 fire season.

Haydn Air Charter, in negotiating for a fire suppression airplane for the 1978 fire season in Norway, found that Canadair has a sales representative by the name of Mr. Olsen, a charter operator in Norway, to contract the CL-215 to the Norwegian Government through his company, again at cost well below the break-even operational cost for the C1-215.

[Mr. Towers.]

How can members of the federal cabinet, which includes yourself, state publicly that the government is doing everything in its power to assist and promote off-shore sales for small Canadian businesses, then allow a federally owned company, namely Canadair, to enter into leasing and operating aircraft in foreign countries? Avalon Aviation Ltd. promoted this particular operation through Haydn Air Charter during the above mentioned seasons.

As I said before, the Canadian commercial operator cannot compete with Canadair, either in Canada or abroad, when Canadair is being subsidized by the federal government.

Surely the federal government cannot stoop so low as to continue to offer to lease and operate the CL-215 in Canada and overseas in competition with the Canadian operators of fire suppression aircraft, at below cost, just because they lacked sales for it.

I feel I am failing in my efforts to convince you that the CL-215 could become a public scandal if the truth was made known. It is certainly a burden to the Canadian economy regardless of the outcome.

At his own expense Mr. Murdock had to go to Chile to try to redeem that contract. He was unable to do so. It cost him $2,000 to make the trip. He did go to Norway, and he did manage to salvage that contract.

I will read into the record part of a letter dated February 21, 1978 and addressed to the minister, as follows:

Dear Mr. Horner:

—Is Canadair contracting the CL-215 to other foreign or provincial governments in competition with Canadian Commercial Operators? How do you think we feel if Canadair, a federally owned company is, by their sales practices, depriving Avalon Aviation Ltd. of renewing existing contracts.

The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, federal forestry and others, have advanced millions of dollars towards the construction of the CL-215. I have no doubt in my mind that the officials of your department will agree to anything in order to retrieve these investments and it would appear, from your replies, that your department sanctions their sales practices.

The February 1978 issue of Canadian Aviation magazine also mentions the sale of two CL-215's to Thailand for 8.9 million dollars. That is not bad for a 3.2 million dollar airplane and don't tell me that the balance is for spare parts. You state that these transactions are on a cash basis, but we all know that the financing is backed by the Canadian Export Development Corporation.

As a company Avalon Aviation Ltd. is associated with business organizations and any meeting that we have with officials of your department will include members of one of these organizations.

I am prepared to meet your officials at any time, under these arrangements. I am not prepared to accept federal government policy statements regarding support of small businesses. It is about time these small businesses knew what is really going on in this country.

There are other letters I could bring to the minister's attention, but I think this gives a general summary to the minister and to the House. The minister, the department, and the Export Development Corporation particularly, must be very careful when negotiating that they do not impinge upon other Crown corporations or small businesses which are trying to keep their businesses going. Coming from Alberta, I am sure the minister recognizes that during the fire season it is advantageous for us in Alberta to have Canso planes available to fight fires. There is no other way to control fires.

I thank the House for the time I have had to bring this matter to the attention of the minister. I hope he and his department will give those letters I have put on the record due consideration. I hope they will meet with Mr. Murdock and solve this problem once and for all. He is being unfairly and unjustly treated. This individual went out on his own to get contracts. He subsidizes the federal government. He pays taxes. He paid a share of the $30 million subsidy which went to Canadair. He pays his share of the money which goes to the Export Development Corporation. I hope the minister will see fit to clarify this abominable situation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I point out that if the minister wishes to speak now, he will need unanimous consent. Does the minister have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct some of the errors, erroneous statements and, I suppose, misunderstandings which have been in evidence in the debate, but first I would like to thank the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) for his complimentary remarks about the Export Development Corporation.

He was not quite so complimentary about me. He suggested to the House that I do not have a sympathetic ear for small business. I certainly do not know where or how he arrived at that conclusion. Small businesses are very dear to my heart. I have been involved in a number of them over the years. Some have turned out to be successful and some not so successful. I am fully aware of the problems small businesses have, and it was with a great deal of pleasure that I sat in on the cabinet discussions which eventually bore fruit and resulted in the small business package which the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) was able to announce earlier this month.

● (1552)

With regard to the speech of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), I think I should comment on it before I start my own remarks. Canadair is a Crown corporation mainly because it was sufficiently bold to venture into a major new project in developing what might be called the wide bodied executive jet. It took a great deal of additional financing and, I suppose, an expression of confidence on behalf of the government of the day and the then minister of industry, trade and commerce, who was able to encourage Canadair to go into the production of the wide bodied executive jet which has turned out to be one of the most successful phenomena in the air industry today. Over 130 orders have been placed, with money on the line, and it is my hope that next month the plane will make its own inaugural or initial flight and will live up to all the expectations that prospective buyers have placed in it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: I know that this will make the former minister of industry, trade and commerce and the government extremely happy and will give Canada something of which to be proud.

Canadair employs in the order of 2,600 employees. Naturally the company is in the business of manufacturing and selling airplanes. It is not subsidized, and in fact this year it turned to the world market to raise money and had no difficulty doing so. It paid back what the government has invested in it by floating bonds on the world market. So, first of all, Canadair is not subsidized, it is in the business of manufacturing airplanes, and it employs a great many Canadians; therefore, it should have the scope of the world market in which to sell those airplanes.

It has been said that Canadair is carrying on unfair trade practices and is selling airplanes at reduced rates in order to entice new customers. I do not think that this is true. Is the CL-215 a good water bomber? Certainly it has been used in many countries throughout the world and has established its own reputation. In fact, it is in demand throughout many areas in the world. I am not saying Canso is not just as good, or even better in some regards, but certainly we as a country must acknowledge the fact that both airlines and both companies can and do place their airplanes on world markets.

The Export Development Corporation has been greatly misunderstood, Mr. Speaker. Some hon. members who have taken part in the debate have complained about the advertising carried out by EDC and that it has spent too much money on advertising. I am certain that if the board of directors of EDC have read or listened to the debates in the House, they will double their advertisement fund next year. Because if they realize the gross misunderstanding that exists in the minds of the people's representatives with regard to EDC operations, that is what they should do.

Mr. Clarke: What about the champagne?

Mr. Horner: So in fact, I would encourage EDC to advertise more fully for two reasons: first, so that Canadians will appreciate what EDC is doing to assist Canadian business and the creation of jobs throughout Canada; and second, to make all Canadian manufacturers and exporters more fully aware of the services it provides.

Mr. Rodriguez: Break out the champagne.

Mr. Horner: The hon. member might like champagne, that is his choice, I am not one who prefers it.

Mr. Rodriguez: EDC loves it.

Mr. Horner: The hon. member for Red Deer referred to the manufacturing industry. Apparently he is not aware that there has been a growth in jobs in the first quarter of this year in the manufacturing industry to the tune of 9,000. I think that is a significant number. Some sectors of our economy are, in fact, overheated because the demand for steel is so great in Canada that Canadian steel mills are having difficulty supplying our markets. So there was a considerable improvement in the manufacturing sector in the first quarter of 1978.

The hon. member for Red Deer also spoke about our total trade and the role which the manufacturing sector plays in it. It is true that the percentage of jobs created by the manufacturing industry in the labour force has decreased from about 24 per cent to 20 per cent in the past number of years, but that has happened in every industrialized country in the world, not only in Canada. The reason is that consumers are demanding more and more services, which has resulted in a growth of the service industries. That is why in every industrialized country in the world today there is an increase in the growth of jobs in the service industries and a marginal decrease in the number of jobs in the manufacturing industries.

Opposition members love to refer to the trade deficit in manufactured goods as a growing deficit and as a shame. That is not so, Mr. Speaker. If one goes back and looks at our total trade ten years ago as compared with our imports over exports today, one would find that the percentage of our deficit in our total trade is relatively the same, or even slightly improved.

Mr. Friesen: Does CMA agree with you?

Mr. Horner: Yes, they certainly do. The hon. member can check the figures, if he likes. Ten years ago, our total trade amounted to $10 billion and our deficit in manufactured goods was about $3 billion. In 1977, our total trade was $44 billion—a substantial increase—and there was an increase in the deficit in manufactured goods. But in looking at manufactured and semi-processed goods we find that there has been a tremendous increase in our trade with the world. In fact, two-thirds of Canada's exports or in manufactured and semi-processed goods, not raw materials, as members of the opposition have sometimes said in the House.

In 1977, looking at agricultural commodities alone, less than 10 per cent of our total trade was in agricultural commodities. Many people in western Canada believe that we survive as a trading nation mainly because of our wheat sales. In fact, less than 10 per cent of our total sales are in agricultural commodities and less than 20 per cent of our total exports are of natural gas, oil and minerals. So if you take a look at those figures you see that the other portion is manufactured goods and semi-processed goods, including forest products, an industry which is thriving in the province of British Columbia. This gives you an idea of what the total trade picture is.

How does EDC assist total trade? Much has been said about their excessive demand for money in this legislation and it is suggested that we are granting EDC too much money because hon. members opposite fear that somehow or other EDC will squander it and help a host of communist countries. First of all, I want to make it abundantly clear that EDC is helping the Canadian manufacturing industry in all parts of Canada. It will certainly help the Avalon Company. If it wants help, it can come to EDC and receive that help. EDC has assisted Versatile Manufacturing Limited in Winnipeg, shipyards on both the east and west coasts, and the mining and nickel industries of Ontario. In fact, they have assisted substantially the nickel industry.

Many speakers have expressed concern about the fact that we are selling pulp mills to Poland and the United States, as well as steel mills to the United States. This helps Canada maintain its expertise in the development of efficient pulp mills. Why are Canadian steel mills far more efficient than American ones? It is because they are more modern, and we have been able to take advantage of new technological advances in the steel industry. Why are Canadian slaughtering houses and packing plants more modern than many others? It is because they are new and up to date. As I once said in this House, we were able to sell even a sausage-making machine to Germany. The Germans found it hard to believe that we could manufacture a better machine than they could.

Canada's ability to sell pulp mills, steel mills and packing plants enables us to maintain our position as a leader in those industries. No matter how much protection the opposition wants our industries to have, one must realize that we are living in a fiercely competitive world. Our entire survival depends upon our ability to compete. Whether a pulp mill is in Poland or the United States, we must be able to compete with it. Our ability to compete will be determined by the source of our raw materials, efficiency in handling those raw materials, as well as the speed of the transportation system which allows us to move processed and semi-processed products to the markets of the world. We must recognize that. We cannot say, "Do not finance a steel mill or a pulp mill in the United States because they will be competing against us someday". Of course the competition will be there. If we had not invested in the American pulp mill, Finland would have. Finland was ready and able to do it.

We have heard a great deal about the Export Development Corporation and its extensive use of money. In order to provide hon. members with some idea of the value of support which EDC has given to the Candian gross national product, I should like to point out that in Canada it amounts to a little over 1 per cent. If one compares that with all other countries, one would have some idea whether EDC is requesting something which is outlandish or too large. For example, in Germany the support is 2 per cent of the gross national product, in Italy it is 2 per cent, in Japan it is over 5 per cent, in Great Britain it is over 5 per cent, and in France it is 7.5 per cent. In fact, EDC assists in 5 per cent or less of our total exports. If someone wanted to take a very negative position and suggest that we have no confidence in Canada's ability to export, then I suppose he should say that EDC is requesting too much money. If one wanted to be negative in one's thinking, one could adopt that idea, but certainly it is not my belief.

Canada's ability to export goods is growing at a great rate. As the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) pointed out, the Middle East is becoming quite credit worthy, to put it mildly. It has developed and increased its oil reserves, and is now charging a high price for those reserves. The Middle East wants the commodities which Canadians have become accustomed to. It wants to buy those commodities, and we are in the business of selling them. One can say that the Middle East does not require any assistance in purchasing our commodities because of its oil reserves. If a person has a good creditworthiness, then he extends his credit in all directions. That is what many countries are doing. Certainly that will expand our export markets in the next five years particularly.

Argentina, Chile, Brazil, Venezuela and other South American countries are establishing very sound economic footings. We have a trade deficit with Venezuela of approximaely $1 billion because of our oil purchases from that country. We should expand our trade in manufactured merchandise with that country. In fact, we are. The signing of the Canaven rail project in Venezuela was tremendously important to us. It will mean a great deal to many Canadian suppliers of that project, particularly those in Nova Scotia. The EDC played a prominent role in finalizing that project. It played a prominent role in finalizing the sale of hydroelectric equipment to Brazil, Argentina and Chile. In doing so, jobs have been created in Canada.

There has been much talk about whether the Export Development Corporation has provided and maintained 200,000 jobs in Canada. Normally I am not picayune about numbers.

Mr. Rodriguez: That's for sure.

Mr. McKenzie: You are absolutely correct.

Mr. Horner: I hear what hon. members opposite are saying, but I am sure they must agree that the creation of 200,000 jobs is well within the scope of EDC. That has been accomplished, and that figure will be exceeded this year and in years to come.

Last year our trade surplus was $2.9 billion. We stand to nearly double that amount this year, if trade figures continue to roll in as they are today. With the help of EDC, we are selling on world markets. Some members indicated shock at the fact that EDC has expended all its money to date. That corporation works on a long-term basis. A deal cannot be made in Venezuela today and financed tomorrow. It requires two or three years to accomplish such a deal. Our exporters must be assured that money is in place to insure, loan and pay for the manufactured goods which they sell in world markets. This is the role of EDC.

The hon. member for Bellechasse indicated that EDC has done a good job. In 1969 when it was incorporated, the party I was associated with at that time supported its creation. If one listened to and read their speeches in this debate, one would assume that they have lost confidence in EDC and are no longer in support of it. In fact, one would think that the Conservative party feels that EDC is not doing a good job for Canada.

From time to time during this debate speakers have referred to the question of an over-all industrial strategy, which is a very nice and high-sounding expression. What does it mean? I suppose in many persons' minds it means different things, but certainly in my mind it means a game plan, a strategy to assist Canadian industry to meet that work competition.

Mr. Rodriguez: It needs co-ordination.

Mr. Horner: It needs co-ordination in many areas, the hon. member is quite right. But certainly a part of this government's concept of industrial strategy is the Export Development Corporation and its ability to insure and finance Canadian sales on the world market. We would hate to see our manufacturers selling on a world market in competition with EX-IM of the United States, or the Japanese, German and French finance corporations, without a similar body assisting our manufacturers to compete. The Export Development Corporation tries very hard to assist Canadian manufacturing as much as the American manufacturers are assisted by EX-IM and the Japanese, Germans and French are assisted by their financing corporations.

Part two of that industrial strategy is tied to money. In the department we are making tremendous efforts to make available to industrial and manufacturing concerns information on the Enterprise Development Board which will loan guaranteed money to corporations operating in Canada by guaranteeing their loans at chartered banks. Many speakers in the debate commented that if we can make this money available to foreign buyers, why can we not make it available to Canadian buyers. We are doing that through the Enterprise Development Board and the Federal Business Development Bank. We are assisting industry in Canada in a host of different ways, and we are not alone in that regard because the provincial governments provide assistance as well. Our tax system assists industry.

I think of the condemnation the government receives from time to time because it dares to try to entice automobile manufacturers to locate in Canada. The opposition has complained that we should not be doing that, but on the other hand they say that we are not helping Canadian industry enough. I can only say that it is part of the industrial strategy which is in place to assist Canadian business and to service Canadian markets as well as the export market.

I mentioned the Enterprise Development Board and the FBDB. Also part of the expansion concept of world trade is the multilateral trade negotiations which are going on right now. From the very beginning Canada has been a full and conscientious participator in those negotiations. We have joined in the negotiations in an attempt to widen the markets for Canadian industry, and certainly our participation has assisted in the deliberations which, I hope, will amount to a greater liberalization of trade. Rather than Canadians having preserved for themselves a market of 23 million people, they will have access to the huge market in the United States and perhaps greater access to European and Asian markets. That is part of our industrial strategy.

Participation in the multilateral trade negotiations is part of the responsibility we will be asking the EDC to assume if that trade liberalization comes about. Certainly, more goods will be moving from Canada into the world. The Export Development Corporation's role will be enlarged and more financing will be needed.

Also, my department has carried on extensive studies, what are referred to as the sector studies, of various segments of our industry to determine whether or not we can look forward to continued growth and expansion of markets in each sector in which those studies took place. They have been correlated very well with the MTN talks. I expect the sector study reports at the end of this month, and they will probably be made public in the middle of July. I am certain they will point out the potential export markets available in each one of those sectors, which in turn will add a greater responsibility and work load to the Export Development Corporation.

I hope people will take a look at the industrial strategy I have tried to outline and realize that the Export Development Corporation is part and parcel of it. The Enterprise Development Corporation and the Federal Business Development Bank, along with the sector studies and the MTN negotiations, are a part of it.

Much has been made of EDC loans to assist communist countries to buy Canadian goods. As I was sitting in my seat and listening to the hon. member for York-Simcoe mention this fact as though it were some great sin, I remembered the debate some 20 years ago when another government of which I was a member made a sale of wheat to communist China on credit. That party in those days supported the idea of making credit loans to communist countries, but apparently it has changed a great deal since then, and it is just that I took a long time to catch on to the change.

Opposition members complained a great deal about the loans to Cuba under the EDC. Cuba has purchased and has had fitted in many of our eastern shipyards ships for their use through the EDC, and this has meant a great deal of employment to Canada. There was also the great debate of the early sixties when the opposition supported trade with Cuba and the United States was soundly condemning the Canadian government for it. Today, if one believes that the hon. member for York-Simcoe is the spokesman for that party on questions of finance, it would follow that he would cut off all trade to communist countries and all assistance to trade with communist countries. I do not believe that that is the wish of the Canadian people; nor do I believe that western Canada or British Columbia would support that idea.

I hope to go to China this fall, Mr. Speaker, where my department will be sponsoring a trade fair with regard to agricultural equipment, oil and gas facilities, drilling rigs and fishing gear. Certainly I think that we can, as I look to that market, expand our business there substantially. It may require more financing from the Export Development Corporation, but it will further the sale of a great many goods which I believe that country is on the threshold of needing, in the same way that the Middle East is on the threshold of buying, and is buying, a great many of the commodities which you and I have become accustomed to, Mr. Speaker.

I have tried to set the record straight with regard to some of the misunderstandings that have taken place in this debate. I know that hon. members want to see passage of this piece of legislation. I will not condemn the opposition too much for what they said about me personally in the debate. I want to thank them for their participation and inform them that the management of EDC is open to their suggestions and thoughts. They have initiative and they are imaginative, and I know they will assist Canadian exports in reaching new heights of success this year and in the years to come.

• (1622)

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): I appreciate the opportunity you have given me, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister some questions concerning the Challenger aircraft. I would like to know why there is a delay in its first flight. In a press release the former minister of industry, trade and commerce said that it would fly in January, 1978, six months ago. That represents quite a considerable delay. If the minister will bear with me, Mr. Speaker, I will put two or three questions to him now in order to save time.

Is there any concern in the department about the penalty clauses in the contract for the new Challenger aircraft? I understand that some of the contracts can be cancelled if the plane is a year behind schedule.

The second question I would like to ask is about the Federal Express order which was the largest order they had a few months ago. I understand that they are now uncertain whether they will buy the planes from Canadair, and I would appreciate any illumination the minister could cast upon that. I understand Federal Express are ordering planes from other companies and are interested in a stretched Challenger.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the $70 million support the government gave when the loan of $140 or $150 million was being arranged for the Challenger project was on the understanding that the government would not withdraw from full control of the company. I understand the $70 million is no longer a government commitment but is being picked up in Eurodollars by another organization. Is the government still committed to retaining full ownership of Canadair? As the minister is well aware I am sure, when the government bought Canadair it was with the idea of putting together an aerospace industry and selling it to private enterprise.

I would appreciate it if the minister could clarify these matters.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the government is still in control. The hon. member is quite right with regard to the floating of bonds in Eurodollars. With regard to Canadair, I suppose we are always prepared to negotiate the sale of it. We do want to promote the air industry in Canada, but we do not have any prospective buyers for Canadair right now.

With regard to the Challenger aircraft and the federal agency's approach, this is now not the largest order but they are still committed to it, and they do want some stretched versions of the Challenger.

With regard to the delay, I suppose in some respects we are all a little disappointed at the delay but we must take into consideration the time that will be needed to get the airworthiness certificates in Canada and the United States. The delay in the inaugural flight may be taken up in the time needed for the airplane to obtain its certificate in the United States and Canada. It is really not considered a major delay yet. Delay may come about in certifying the plane, but we have not yet reached that stage in its development and therefore I do not consider it a delay.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would accept a question?

Mr. Horner: Certainly.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the minister seemed to have made no differentiation between EDC financing the sale of finished products as opposed to the potential for competition in the resource sector. In many ways Canada's economy is still resource based. Is the minister not prepared to make the necessary changes in the Export Development Corporation legislation so that instead of putting money into preparing for the competition ahead in the resource sector it could be directed into the resource sector in Canada so that we can diversify it, so that in future it can be competitive from the minehead to the final product? We are not going to be competitive if we just mine raw resources while Guatemala, Indonesia and The Philippines are also doing that.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I clearly spelled out in the earlier part of my speech that the export of finished plants, whether they be pulp and paper or mining equipment manufactured in Canada, allows Canadian industry to maintain an expertise superior to that of most countries.

With regard to Guatemala and Indonesia, the total expenditure there, financed mainly by German, British and Japanese money, was $900 million. Canada participated in the sale of mining equipment worth in the neighbourhood of $60 million—

Mr. Rodriguez: $77 million.

Mr. Horner: About $70 or $80 million in the two countries. Our contribution of $80 million to a total of something like $900 million would not have initiated production, nor had we withdrawn would it have stopped the project. We developed better expertise by getting involved in the project and by turning out mining equipment for it. The project would have gone ahead anyway, the nickel produced would have been competitive with ours and we would not have gained anything in the development of the mining equipment. Those are two alternatives that Canada had.

There is no question in my mind that we should have had more than $80 million of that $900 million, but that is as much as we could get. They wanted $1 million worth of equipment from us and wanted the Export Development Corporation to guarantee it. We said we must have more than that and we got it. I think the Export Development Corporation served the manufacturing industry well. It also served the mining industry well because the mining industry would have had to compete with those resources in any case.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am going to develop a subject which I do not think has been developed, certainly not at length, in the debate so far. It concerns the use of the Export Development Corporation, a Canadian owned Crown property, to assist Chile and the effects of that assistance. I will have an amendment to propose dealing with that subject.

May I point out first of all that Canada's investment in or contribution toward the Chilean economy, which is run, as everybody now knows, by a military junta, is very considerable. According to my information, Canada is Chile's No. 2 patron, ranking only behind the United States. I understand that we cannot pick and choose the different countries we would trade with or assist in trade, but in the case of Chile there are international documents that indicate it has subjected its own people to flagrant and continued violations of human rights and freedoms.

Since the military coup, a number of international bodies such as the U.N. Commission on Human Rights, the International Commission of Jurists, Amnesty International and the United Nations itself, have condemned the régime. No régime is perfect, of course. No régime can say it has never done anything against human rights. But this is one of the most extreme cases in which some sort of action is required.

In the United Nations in November 1977, when approving the report of the Economic and Social Council, the following was said:

—the Chilean people continue to be subjected to constant and flagrant violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, to lack of adequate constitutional and judicial safeguards of their rights and liberties and to suffer assaults on the freedom and integrity of their persons, in particular by methods of systematic intimidation, including torture, disappearance of persons for political reasons, arbitrary arrest, detention, exile and deprivation of Chilean nationality.

I leave the description of the régime to the statement issued by the United Nations which Canada supported. The policies which followed from that Canada has supported from time to time.

It is true that this régime has, on the surface at any rate, somewhat softened the methods of terror which it used. However, some of this seems to be window dressing. By replacing the state of siege it justified them, so they said, in imprisoning people without trial. They replaced the state of siege, and with a good deal of publicity then established an equally onerous state of emergency. They provided for amnesty for political prisoners but it was so conditioned that it was not available to most of those concerned. It is because of these matters, including the abolition of parliamentary government and the deprivation of trade union rights, that we are justified in saying that this is unquestionably a régime of repression, repression which is directed toward its own people.

I will go into some detail as to what assistance has come from the Export Credit Corporation. Not all of the investment or money made available to Chile from Canadian sources comes from the Export Credit Corporation. The Canadian banks have made loans and other businesses have sought to invest there, notably Falconbridge and Noranda. But nevertheless the only publicly owned or Crown operated institution which has carried on systematic assistance to this régime happens to be the Export Credit Corporation.

I point out that it is not possible to loan large sums of money to secure substantial indebtedness and to enter into fairly large scale transactions without developing a vested interest in the continuation of the regime in which one is investing. That is precisely what has happened in Canada. I am sure the minister has discussed, and certainly others have discussed, the types of assistance offered by the Export Development Corporation. They include credit insurance, long-term export loans, foreign investment guarantees and surety insurance. The Export Development Corporation has expanded rapidly the loans it has made and the assistance it has given under these provisions.

A most striking illustration of the situation there occurred on October 2, 1973 a few weeks after the military coup and all the brutality surrounding it, when the EDC announced it was granting an export credit of $5 million to the Central Bank of Chile. This credit would be used to purchase six Twin Otter aircraft. These planes were for Chile's domestic airline, but military experts will confirm that these Twin Otter aircraft are extremely valuable for military purposes and particularly for the purposes of suppressing any internal trouble that might develop.

It is true that in defence of this line of credit it was said that this arrangement was negotiated before the new government came into power and while the Allende government was in office. But the loan was not announced until after the coup. Indeed, the document was not signed until January 1974, while the coup was as early as September 11. There was ample opportunity to find out exactly what was going on.

In October 1976, shortly before Canada voted condemnation of the Chilean régime at the UN, the EDC approved ten agreements covering loans, credits, insurance, foreign investment guarantees and financing to support the export sale of Canadian goods and services valued at $103 million. Chile was named as one of the six recipients. In accordance with the practice approved in a statement made by the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), it was not thought good policy to tell the people of Canada or its parliament how that loan was divided up, how much went to Chile and how much went to other countries.

The following statement in regard to the EDC foreign investment guarantee to Chile was made in 1977 to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs by the ecumenical task force on the churches and corporate responsibility:

> When the EDC provides a Canadian corporation with a "political risk" insurance for a private investment in a country which consistently violates human rights, there are long-term economic and political implications. Such an investment guarantee establishes a vested interest in the "staying power" of the regime. Both the corporation making the investment, and the EDC insuring it, develop a financial interest in the stability of the recipient regime, regardless of the repressive means necessary to maintain the status quo. Thus it is possible that the EDC implicates itself, and the Canadian government, in economic relationships which maintain repressive regimes.

Again on January 18 a press release was issued announcing the approval of export credit insurance investment guarantees, surety insurance and long-term loans totalling $1,003 million to support export sales to nine countries. Chile was included among the list of nine recipients. The amount and type of facility exported to Chile have not been disclosed to date.

● (1642)

More recently, in March 1978 the Chile Economic News stated that a $14.7 million export credit was going to be extended jointly by the Bank of Montreal and the Export Development Corporation to a Chilean company, which when translated into English would be the Paper and Cardboard Manufacturing Company. The Export Development Corporation denies that such a credit has been authorized to date but admits that it might be under discussion.

Then there is the whole question of the renegotiation of debts under the so-called Paris Club in which five nations refused renegotiation of Chile's debts. Canada agreed that a renegotiation was extremely helpful to the régime.

Mr. Grafftey: Pep it up!

Mr. Brewin: Did the hon. member say that's enough? I did not catch what he said.

Mr. Grafftey: Pep it up. We are going to sleep.

Mr. Brewin: I am nearly through; then you can go to sleep. I can understand the hon. member's desire for sleep.

The picture of Chile is very clear. It is a picture of a thoroughly oppressive regime bolstered by Canadian investment and guarantees, to a considerable extent financed by a Canadian Crown corporation. That is wrong. A former minister of finance, John Turner, said when this matter was discussed that the question of the morality of the régime should be discussed by other fora. In other words, he advocated a policy whereby you condemn something in the United Nations and then you acquiesce and strengthen it in practical actions.

I propose to move an amendment. Perhaps I can read it now. I am afraid the hon. member will not find it very exciting. However, it complies with the rules, I believe. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

> That all the words after the word "that" be deleted and that the following words be substituted therefor:
> "Bill C-36 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for the purpose of reconsidering clauses 2 and 3 thereof."

The purpose behind the amendment is to give the committee an opportunity to consider the matters which I have raised. The present bill provides for the extension of further credits and further financial assistance. It in no way limits where they shall go. It in no way complies with the policy of the United Nations. Clauses 2 and 3, if reconsidered, could be amended so as to prohibit these loans.

One does not like to call the government of one's own country hypocritical. I have tried to figure out what hypocritical means. It means somebody who talks one way, who pronounces noble sentiments in one breath, but whose actions totally belie what he has said.

When you have a policy of using our Crown corporations and money secured from Canadian people to bolster a regime that is repressive, depressing all the people of Chile, the Canadian people might like to know how you determine that country should be banned. I say it is very simple. The Commissioner of Human Rights should be asked to secure information from organizations such as the United Nations and Amnesty International and to say that there is evidence that this is a régime which not incidentally but systematically and continuously breaches human rights. If the House accepts this amendment and the committee sees fit to deal with it in the way I have suggested, we will at least be making our actions fit in with our professions. I believe the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at one time said we should do that, and I agree.

Hypocrisy is not an attractive thing. It is certainly not attractive to other countries we deal with and it should not be attractive to us. I hope the House will decide to take some action on this motion.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I wish to participate in this third reading debate and, in the process, deal with some of the comments made by the minister this afternoon.

When I first came to Canada, I recognized that this is a country which in many instances is a developed country but at the same time is a developing country. In effect, it has much of the characteristics of the third world.

Exports from this country have predominantly been raw or semi-processed goods. While we in this party have no quarrel with the aims of the Export Development Corporation in assisting and facilitating the export of finished products, in Canada's present state of development there are certain areas in which the EDC involves itself which do not serve the best interests of Canada. This is what we have been arguing in committee and it has been exemplified in many parts of the country.

When I moved from St. Catharines in southern Ontario to the Sudbury basin, I asked why the people there take nickel and copper out of the ground, process it to a semi-processed state in pellet form, put it in barrels and ship it to the United States for final processing and finishing into a product, or ship it abroad to Norway or Wales for final processing. Then later on we buy back the finished product. These are questions we must ask ourselves.

When the minister speaks to selected audiences, as he spoke the other day to the Bankers Association, he does not talk to people at the grass roots. He does not face the people to answer the questions which are on their lips. That first question of mine is one of them.

Another is this: Why not carry out research to find new uses of nickel and copper? This is 1978. They have been mining the stuff for well over 60 years now, yet the industry still lacks an infrastructure. Why should it be necessary for us to import rolled nickel for the use of the Royal Canadian Mint? Why should we buy back at a high price material which was originally produced here in Thompson, Manitoba? Why is it that we produce pulp from the forests of this country and ship it out in a semi-processed state, buying back the finished products from Europe and the United States? We have the resources and the manpower right here. With one million people unemployed why should we import these finished products? Take any resource sector you like, the same question must be asked.

Another important factor in this equation is the extent of the foreign ownership of our industries. So much of our industry is locked into the multinational web. Take, for example, Inco and Falconbridge. These companies mine nickel and copper in the Sudbury basin but they have expanded to other parts of the world. Inco has to be flexible and at certain times it might be more appropriate for the company to increase production in Guatemala or Indonesia. It is more convenient to carry out research and development in the country of the parent company. In the case of Falconbridge and Inco it is important that research and development be done in the United States, so that if any untoward political event occurred in Canada the technology resides with the parent company. Much of Canada's trading pattern is related to this important aspect. We find subsidiaries of parent companies in other countries being forbidden to bid against the parent company in world markets.

What we are seeing now is the superimposing of the Export Development Corporation on this picture. We do not quarrel with EDC assisting, for example, Northern Telecom to put in place a telecommunications system in Algeria or Saudi Arabia. This involves finished products and such projects improve the quality of life in the countries receiving them. They are probably sponsored by the governments concerned.

On the other hand, there are certain sectors in which the corporation should bear in mind the long-term interests of Canada in terms of jobs and economic advantage. It is not the short term the corporation should be considering but, rather, the long term. I have in mind the loans made to Inco, the insurance offered to Superior Oil in the Dominican Republic, the loan to the Bear Island Paper Company in Virginia. EDC should ask itself: What will be the net effect down the line of our decisions on employment in Canada? This is an extremely important factor and one which is missing in the corporation's appraisal of applications for loans.

We are told by ministers and others that if these developments are going ahead anyway we should join in and get our piece of the action. I am not convinced that this position is a sound one to take. I have looked at the rules governing an agency comparable to EDC, the EX-IM Bank which operates under an act of the United States government, and it is clearly stated that the EX-IM Bank must consider the long term effect of its decisions on employment in the United States. It was on the basis of this clause that the bank turned down the application for a loan to establish a steel plant in Trinidad; it was evident that in the long term the establishment of such a plant would have an adverse effect on employment in the United States.

The argument has been advanced that by granting these loans we were somehow or other improving the quality of life in countries abroad, for example, in Indonesia or Guatemala. But the question workers in the Sudbury basin ask when they receive lay-off notices and hear on the news that EDC has lent an Inco subsidiary millions of dollars to go to Guatemala or Indonesia is this: Why cannot that sort of money be used as venture capital in Sudbury so that we can diversify the nickel and related industries? Why cannot we develop new uses for copper and nickel? We are talking now in terms of $77 million—the minister himself rounded it off at $80 million. Suppose that sum was matched, $80 million from the federal government and $80 million from the province. Action on these lines ought to be part of an industrial strategy.

I do not understand how EDC can be following its present course at a time when the nickel industry in this country is still not fully integrated, at a time when the industry is being challenged by supplies of nickel from Guatemala and Indonesia. Mr. Speaker, we are not improving the quality of life for workers in Guatemala and Indonesia. The technology resides with Inco, not with the people of those countries.

When the company decides to move out of Guatemala for one reason or another, or when the resource is exhausted because it has been high graded, no technology will be left with the people. So they really have no control over development for the benefit of future generations. I think we have to keep that in mind. That is the kind of propaganda we have been getting from the minister. He says that somehow we are improving the lives and living standards of these people. It is all short term. It is short term for Guatemala as well as for Canada.

It is not by accident that we end up supporting and lending money to corporations like Inco in places like Guatemala, Indonesia and The Philippines. These are all countries with very repressive dictatorships. Amnesty International has documented the fact that over 50,000 political prisoners are in Indonesian jails without trial. It is not by accident that we are now lending $22 million to develop a pulp and paper industry in Chile, which has one of the most repressive regimes ever seen in the western world. Let us keep in mind that that junta overthrew the legally elected democratic government of Salvador Allende. Today is the anniversary of Salvador Allende's birth, and I think it is inappropriate that through the Export Development Corporation this government is strengthening a junta which has denied democracy in a Latin American country which had a long history of democratic government.

This is a hypocritical performance on the part of this government. On the one hand we condemn the loss of democratic freedom in one part of the world, and on the other we do not bat an eye when the same thing is done in our own back yard. The Export Development Corporation is moving in to strengthen and develop an industry in Chile. People are asking why we are putting that kind of money into an industry which we ourselves have not fully integrated and modernized.

We are helping to develop a modern pulp and paper plant in Virginia. The minister mentioned that. He said it will be a modern plant which will make us more competitive in the development of technology. However, we have not built into our own pulp and paper industry the infrastructure and diversification which would allow the industry to be competitive on the world market. We still have pulp and paper plants which are decrepit. Companies have refused to modernize their plants here, yet they borrow taxpayers' money to modernize abroad. There was a perfect example of that in Témiscamingue, Quebec where an American multinational headquartered in New York closed its plant because it was not modern. The company left the people in that community high and dry. Governments had to come to the rescue.

It seems to me we are always picking up the pieces after the fact. I wish we would start moving in where there are profits for a change instead of subsidizing losses. Parts of the MacMillan Bloedel operation in Vancouver need to be modernized if the company is to be competitive, but what does the EDC do? I heard in committee that $75,000 was spent breaking out the booze last year to celebrate those fancy contracts which were signed. It makes the people in the Sudbury Basin really happy to know that $75,000 was spent to entertain.

Some might think that these companies are doing us a favour, but we are doing them a favour because we are giving them long-term loans at very favourable rates of interest, considering those long terms. The board of directors of the EDC contains not one worker or representative of workers. Who is on the board of directors of the EDC? Mr. MacDonald is the president. He was a big-wig in the Department of Supply and Services. Now he is the big president. Then there is Mr. Bouey, Governor of the Bank of Canada. Then there is Mr. Burns, who is a Deputy Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Then there is Mr. Dupuy, President of CIDA, Mr. Godwin, President of Seismic Service, and Mr. Gotlieb, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs. Then there is Mr. Lavoie, President and General Manager of Credit Foncier, and Mr. Osbaldeston, a Deputy Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. There is Mr. Shoyama, Deputy Minister of Finance, Mr. Ross, President of Swan Wooster Engineering Company Limited, and Mr. Stuart, President and General Manager of the Electrolyser Corporation Limited. Now Mr. Nickerson of the company Nickerson and Sons of North Sydney has been added.

Here are these boys breaking out the champagne to celebrate these contracts. What are the workers doing? They are breaking out the 7-Up as they get their lay-off notices because their plants have to close down for seven or eight weeks. They have to go on unemployment insurance and collect from the taxpayers of this country. This cabal, it seems, has no concept of what it is like to be unemployed. I think they should spend a year on unemployment insurance with no other income so that they can get the feel of it. Let them drink 7-Up rather than the Andres Baby Duck or whatever. They probably had imported champagne anyway, $75,000 worth of the sparkling stuff. I suppose they were drinking champagne and eating those little things called hors-d'oeuvres.

Instead of going up to the big bash for the Bankers Association of the Sudbury basin and speaking to those people, I wish the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce had gone down to the union hall and answered workers' questions. Perhaps he might then have been glad that capital punishment has been abolished. In an industry so sensitive to development as the nickel industry, people ask why we have this kind of money to lend abroad.

The minister made light of the fact that only $80 million in a $900 million operation was involved. Well, $80 million is not a small amount, and every $80 million counts. For example, it was $80 million for the Inco operations in Guatemala and Indonesia. It was about $40 million for Alcan. There is another perfect example. Alcan closed down the community of St. Lawrence. Every single person in that community was put out of work. The community became a ghost town. With this federal Liberal government in power ghost towns have been created across northern Ontario and across the country. Alcan closed down the community of St. Lawrence, and what is the EDC doing? It is lending Alcan about $40 million to run off to Ireland to build a refinery. People wonder why the EDC is doing these things, and the answer does not come. We keep getting the answer that if we do not put the money there, the project would go ahead anyway, so we get our piece of the action.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that there are better places to put our money. We could take the $1 billion EDC is asking for and invest it in the industrial development of areas such as the Sudbury basin or Cape Breton, and spend $500 million to modernize the steel plant there so that the community could compete with steel products in the world—never mind building a steel plant in the eastern United States. We need to spend that money on developing the planning and processing operation of the fish we catch off the east coast. We are still sending semi-processed fish to the United States to be canned and sold there. What we should do is to spend that money on modernizing and extending our fish plants so that we can have an integrated operation here. This is our strength. Why is it that in as fragile an economy as ours in terms of the resource sector we are investing billions of dollars on short-term projects when in fact we should be investing that money on long-term projects?

When I criticized the EDC loan, Inco wrote to me and said that the loan had created 4,000 man-years of work as a result of the subcontracts that were given out. We have to keep that in perspective and remember that those man-years were taken up mostly by Inco workers, Inco top brass people who were sent down to Guatemala and Indonesia. The loan did not create any new employment but was taken up by their full-time employees. Only the other day I received the passport of one of them who was going to Indonesia.

The minister spoke about expertise. We do not have expertise in terms of research and development. It needs to be developed. We do not have the expertise to create new products from copper or nickel. It needs to be developed. If the minister were to say honestly to EDC: "We will look at long-term jobs, we will look at the sectors to which we will lend that money", I would have no objection or quarrel with that. I would not object to having the money go to, say, the development of a telecommunications system in Algeria, or to putting it in the building of new railway lines in Mexico so that we could sell them our railway stock. But when it comes to the resource sector, we have not developed the infrastructure around it, so it is stupid to create employment outside Canada instead of investing our money in research and development for the development of rolling mills for copper and nickel in this country, for example. That is where the misplaced emphasis is. There is a great emphasis on short-term, high technology jobs, whereas there are other opportunities in the long term.

Some government members sit over there like a bunch of scarecrows putting up five fingers. I do not know what it means. They can make all the fun they want, but they did not get an unemployment or lay-off notice in October. They will get one at the next election.

These are the concerns that the people have. The minister said that we need an industrial strategy. I agree we need an industrial strategy, but it should be co-ordinated.

Mr. Horner: It is. You did not listen to me.

Mr. Rodriguez: There is no co-ordinated strategy.

Mr. Horner: It is being co-ordinated.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is not co-ordinated. How can you be lending money to Inco to go to Guatemala and Indonesia when we have not even developed the infrastructure in our country to enable our industries to be competitive?

Mr. Horner: We are.

Mr. Rodriguez: No, they do not look down the line and they do not see the threat from ocean floor mining. The advent of ocean floor mining is posing a threat to our nickel and copper industries. A tentative agreement has already been reached respecting the exploitation of ocean floor mining. In effect, it will create a great threat to communities such as the one I represent and communities like Thompson, Manitoba. We say what happened in Stewart, British Columbia, and in St. Lawrence, Newfoundland.

I suggested to the minister that instead of lending money perhaps we should develop, through a Crown corporation, an infrastructure in the Sudbury basin and in Thompson, Manitoba so that we can make our nickel industry competitive and modernize the operation. I ask the minister, why are we importing raw nickel? I asked EDC to send me a breakdown of their figures because I wanted to know how many jobs would be created with the $77 million. I found that that money created jobs mostly in the metro Toronto area. Some 80 per cent of the jobs were created there, and the next area where jobs were created was Montreal. How does that square with any sort of industrial strategy according to which we should be moving jobs to where our resources are? While that money has created 4,000 man-years of work, it is work primarily and basically in the industrially developed communities. We have done nothing in areas such as the Sudbury basin, northwestern Ontario and northern Manitoba. They ask why we do not take $80 million from the provincial government and $80 million from the federal government and embark on a program of industrial diversification in the Sudbury basin based on our resource. We will be cutting off our noses to spite our faces if we continue to lend money to Inco to move into Guatemala and Indonesia.

The minister said that he is not one to be picayune with figures. No one could ever accuse the minister of being picayune with anything, least of all with facts. Someone used to say that he should not be confused by the facts, but I have never held that opinion of the minister. The fact of the matter is that $77 million lent to Inco did not result in transferring technology from Canada to Guatemala or Indonesia. It is the multinational corporation which is holding the technology. All it will do is to scrape the stuff off the ground and ship it to Wales. That is where the technology is located.

The minister says that our contribution is only $77 million of $900 million. If that amount of money were properly and judiciously used in Canada, it would go a long way toward diversifying our economy. That is why we have employment problems in Canada. The minister is making loans through EDC which create short-term jobs, while the large multinational corporations are laying off employees in the hinterland. The balance is tipping, because as we assist in the development of third world resources, multinational corporations lay off Canadian workers.

The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) referred to the question of morality involved with EDC loans. The government set out guidelines regarding the behaviour of Canadian corporations doing business with South Africa. EDC has indicated that its men have been removed from Cape Town, South Africa; but if a Canadian company which does business in South Africa applies for an EDC loan, there is no question at all, the loan is granted. In effect, we are supporting the régime in South Africa.

This has nothing to do with politics. It concerns human realization. The South African government is based on the philosophy that black men and white men are not equal, that the white men are better. A war was fought over the concept of a super race, yet South Africa bases its government and its laws on racism. The government issues guidelines but does not forbid Canadian Crown corporations making loans to corporations which do business in South Africa.

Also EDC indicated that it does not do business with Rhodesia because Great Britain has said that the Rhodesian government is illegal. In fact, that country was put out of the Commonwealth, as was South Africa. During the time when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was the prime minister of this country, South Africa was put out of the Commonwealth because of its racist policies, philosophy and behaviour. The government should display some backbone and indicate that Canada does not aspire to the philosophy that one race is better than another. This government should take that position. It took a similar position in respect of Taiwan for political reasons. Why would the government not take that position regarding South Africa on the basis of common decency and humanity?

Also the hon. member for Greenwood mentioned the strengthening of the Chilean and Argentinian régimes. It was a government guarantee which put $126 million into the pockets of the Argentian government for the purchase of a Candu reactor. We are well aware of the spin-off effects of that. Not only are régimes strengthened, but secrecy surrounds the operations of EDC. It would be eminently wise if this corporation was brought before a standing committee of the House on a regular basis in order to question it on the basis of its regulations respecting loans.

In closing, I do not have any disagreement with the basic premise of EDC. I see a need for that corporation in respect of the exporting of finished Canadian products. In the area of resource development, until we are on the path of placing ourselves in a competitive position at home, then it is stupid and insensitive to help multinational corporations develop and integrate more modern facilities in other parts of the world. Oftentimes this occurs in very developed countries such as the United States. That is being very insensitive to the needs of Canadians.

Basically that is my quarrel. EDC should adopt a hands off policy respecting the resource sector. If there is money for investment, we should develop our resource sector first. We should modernize it, integrate it and make it competitive at home. After that has been accomplished, then Inco can develop a plant in Indonesia, Guatemala or wherever. That would result in Canadian workers having a better chance of maintaining their long-term employment.

One should consider that problem as well as the question of morality, but the crux of the problem is in the area of long-term effect on Canadian jobs. Instead of receiving lay-off notices, the people at the grass roots level will respond. When they see pictures of the president of EDC and the boys from Falconbridge in the newspapers breaking open champagne, enjoying lobster and having a whale of a good time—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) left me a few minutes between now and six o'clock to make a few comments. At the outset I should like to indicate that I have listened to much of this debate. I am pleased that it has gone on for some period of time, and that it has been given some airing. It provides the Canadian public with an opportunity to be concerned about many of the things EDC has been doing.

EDC has done three things. It has assisted companies to develop certain techniques in this country for export, which is all to the good. This has helped these Canadian companies establish international reputations. They are able to sell products in countries which are having difficulties. Hopefully those countries will repay us. If they cannot give us the money back, at least they can provide us with markets. That segment of EDC is very valuable, and we support it.

The other two segments cannot be explained easily to the general public. The hon. member for Nickel Belt dealt with one in his closing remarks. What has happened to the resource industry of this country when we allow companies to take their money, money which they make in this country from natural resources, into another country? We not only allow them to do that which is prohibited in most other countries, but the Canadian government assists them, although there is very little chance of any gain and a good chance of eliminating our own markets.

Members have mentioned the pulp and paper industry and the mining resource industry. In both areas there is no justification for allowing loans to be made to industry that will be in direct competition with the industries of this country. There are other areas we can develop in other countries that are not competitive with Canadian industries. We should develop our own industry. The minister comes from an area where we have been developing our own industry for a long time, and that is the industry of cereal production.

We have given loans to people to buy our products through EDC and to develop in their own countries an agricultural potential as well because we know that we are able to out-compete those countries. We should not, however, allow an unfair advantage to develop in industries such as gold, silver, nickel, magnesium and many other commodities which come from deep sea mining because it will be at the expense of our own industry if that foreign industry can develop and compete in world markets.

I think that it would be wise for the House to give some consideration to the CIA operation we have been supporting in Canada under the guise of other agencies. EDC is really one of the branches of our Canadian CIA. We provide aid to some countries that are not economically viable and from which we have no chance of getting our money back. We are simply making that loan in a political sense to governments that we would not, under any circumstances, as Canadian citizens support if we understood the policies of those governments.

When we give aid to countries in Africa we should know what kind of country we are giving that aid to and who will be receiving the benefits. There was a book recently previewed on television by a CIA agent from the United States who did an exposé on his experiences heading up the CIA in Angola, where that organization was running an army and in effect trying to maintain the status quo by covert acts. The Canadian public does not want this to happen with the EDC.

I think, therefore, that we should support this amendment which in effect would send this bill back to committee to consider some of the countries and companies to which we are providing aid today, as well as some of the aspirations and wishes to the Canadian public who are really never considered in many of these giveaway programs.

I, like the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), sometimes get annoyed when I see a number of people indicating that if we are going to continue talking we will interrupt their supper hour and that it behooves me to sit down so that they may have a lot of time for their supper.

Mr. Clarke: That's dinner.

Mr. Peters: Dinner, supper; to me supper, to you dinner. I come from an old Canadian family where we had breakfast, lunch and then supper. If some other people come from the English aristocracy, that is perfectly all right and they can call it what they wish. I do not want to get sidetracked, but I know that you will bring me back to the subject if I get the least bit off it, Mr. Speaker, we did not really stop for tea in those days.

I would like members of this House to consider the wishes of the Canadian public who do not want to see our natural resource industries put out of business and all our communities placed in jeopardy because we provide loans to people which give them a competitive advantage over our own industries. Nor do Canadians want to provide the tyrants of South America, Africa and any other country operated by such governments with the kind of support they could receive under the EDC. I ask that hon. members reconsider this bill and support the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Brewin), which was negatived on the following division:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-61, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1979.

It being after six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 6.14 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

STATISTICS CANADA

DIRECTIVE THAT EMPLOYEES SIGN BLANKET AGREEMENT AS TO BEHAVIOUR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that over 6,000 employees of Statistics Canada below the directors level yesterday received forms and were asked to sign them before July 14, in view of the fact that at least some employees of Statistics Canada are refusing to sign a blanket agreement with the rules imposed upon them by the booklet, especially the rules which forbid them to criticize in any way the federal government, and in view of the outrage that such a sensitive and regressive policy by Statistics Canada is causing, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce withdraw immediately the booklet from circulation as well as the form which forces the employees of Statistics Canada to sign it.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENERGY

PARTICIPATION BY PUBLIC IN FORMING NATIONAL POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the conclusion reached by a study of the Organization of Economic Co-operation and Development that the Canadian public has been barred from having any real influence on national energy policies, particularly in nuclear matters, and that the federal government has resisted initiating any nationwide nuclear information program, in view of the fact that the report indicts Canada's parliament for being exceptionally inactive in the nuclear debate and the government in energy and other fields for allowing bureaucrats to take over power from the cabinet, and particularly in light of the admission of Dr. A. T. Prince, president of the Atomic Energy Control Board that there is a cult of manipulation of government officialdom, that they are undemocratic and want their own oligarchy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence):

That this House direct the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works to immediately convene and to hold sittings during the parliamentary recess with a view to preparing a report to parliament on recommendations to increase participation by and consultation with the Canadian public on national energy policies and to otherwise alleviate the aforementioned deficiencies.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to the introduction of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ACTION TO AVOID POSSIBLE STRIKE OF NURSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that 1,900 federal nurses, many of whom provide exclusive medical care to people in remote communities across the country and to the government departments of National Health and Welfare, Veterans Affairs, National Defence and the Canadian Penitentiary Service, are members of the Professional Institute of the Public Service and have been without a contract since December 28, 1976, and in view of the fact that action must be taken immediately in order to avert a national strike by the nursing group, who will be in a legal position to strike on July 4, 1978, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That Treasury Board accept the majority report of the conciliation board, chaired by Mr. T. C. O'Connor, and take appropriate action to reach an immediate agreement with the nursing group.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

NOMINATION FOR NOBEL PEACE PRIZE OF HELSINKI MONITORING GROUPS IN U.S.S.R.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. Recognizing that members of five Helsinki monitoring groups in the Soviet Union have placed their own freedom at risk, have been harassed, imprisoned and exiled in seeking compliance by the Soviet Union with the human rights obligations which it freely undertook under the Helsinki Final Act of 1975, to which Canada is a signatory, and in the conviction that the observance of human rights under international agreements and the freer movement of people and ideas contribute directly to international security and peace, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche), the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) and the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That this House join with parliamentarians in the United Kingdom, Norway and Belgium in nominating the Helsinki monitoring groups in the U.S.S.R. for the 1978 Nobel Peace Prize.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with Standing Order 43, such a motion can be introduced for consideration only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

ACCESS TO GOVERNMENT FILES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek unanimous consent to move a motion, the urgent and pressing circumstances of which appear in the motion. If leave is given, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That in light of the experience of Bernard Maguire who sought, under part 4 of the human rights bill, to examine his personal files but was threatened with prosecution under the Official Secrets Act if he used facts from government files to clear his name from allegations which led to his dismissal from employment with CN Telecommunications, a fact which makes a farce of the proposals to imbed a bill of rights within the constitution, this House orders the Minister of Supply and Services to alter the security practices of his department and change the regulations to permit Maguire to make use of the facts which are available in government files in order to clear his name.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL

INVESTIGATION INTO LAY-OFFS CAUSED BY DUMPING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the announced lay-off yesterday in Oshawa of between 150 and 175 employees of Fittings, Limited. These employees are being laid off as the result of a shutdown in the production of certain plumbing fittings which are being imported in unprecedented numbers from abroad. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instructs the Minister of Finance to take steps which will cause the Anti-dumping Tribunal to investigate the possibility of dumping in this sector of the Canadian market and, secondly, instructs the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to move immediately to see what might be done to halt this lay-off.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

OBJECTION TO "ROYAL" NEWFOUNDLAND CONSTABULARY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the government of Newfoundland, on August 19, 1977, requested the Government of Canada to support a request to Her Majesty the Queen for approval of the use of the prefix "Royal" by the Newfoundland Constabulary, established at St. John's in 1871 and patterned upon the Royal Irish Constabulary, and in view of the fact that the Government of Canada has failed to act with dispatch or to support the request and now advises that such a request cannot succeed since the Newfoundland Constabulary is, firstly, not a national association and, secondly, that there is an objection from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to the use of the prefix "Royal" by another police force, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the government acquire some backbone and reject objections from the RCMP to the use of the prefix "Royal" by the Newfoundland Constabulary, that the government transmit the request of the government of Newfoundland to Her Majesty the Queen with the endorsement of the government immediately so that the matter can be decided in time for the visit of Her Majesty the Queen to Newfoundland commencing July 26, and that the government cease its contemptible treatment of our historic connection with the royal family and Her Majesty the Queen as head of state, revealed both in their lack of action and pusillanimous conduct with respect to the request of the government of Newfoundland and in constitutional proposals recently presented to the House of Commons which propose further reducing the association of the royal family with Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

URBAN AFFAIRS

NCC ADHERENCE TO EXISTING LEASES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, involving the National Capital Commission. In view of the many buildings demolished and families displaced as a result of the massive development in Hull involving projects such as Place du Portage, les Terrasses de la Chaudière and auxiliary structures, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That the Minister of State for Urban Affairs instruct the National Capital Commission to be extremely careful in adhering to existing leases and in no way inconvenience nor adversely affect any parties in the area for the sake of advancing the interests of commercial developers.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for discussion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

EXAMINATION BY HOUSE COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of grave importance under Standing Order 43. In view of the current and topical concern regarding conflict of interest guidelines and the government's apparent deathbed conversion occasioned by pressure of the opposition and public opinion to introduce further proposals regarding this very important matter, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling):

That the circumstances surrounding the part played by Donald Macdonald, former minister of finance and minister of defence and a recent addition to the board of directors of Douglas Aircraft in obtaining favourable consideration for that corporation with respect to Industry, Trade and Commerce file No. 53/513C-120-1, involving more than $16 million, be examined by an appropriate committee of the House of Commons, particularly since the context of the file indicates that he participated in preliminary negotiations while he was a member of this House.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADE

PROPOSALS AT GATT TO MAINTAIN COMPETITIVE POSITION OF CANADIAN INDUSTRY

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. We understand the government's policy is for freer trade in the GATT negotiations. We have been asking for some time what provision would be made to assist industries which may lose their viability as a result of the lowering of tariff barriers. I am sure the Deputy Prime Minister is familiar with the report of the Economic Council of Canada, "For a Common Future", just released in which it is pointed out that leather goods, textiles, knitting mills, clothing, electrical and sports goods industries in Quebec and Ontario may be very badly affected by competition from the developing countries as a result of the lowering of tariff barriers in the course of the GATT negotiations, losing perhaps 250,000 jobs.

Has the hon. gentleman, together with his colleagues, considered the recommendation of the Economic Council of Canada that the federal government should agree with the provinces concerned to establish an industrial adjustment and redeployment fund and create a comprehensive joint redevelopment strategy, supported by funds amounting to a total of some $4 billion over a period of 15 years to help workers forced out of those industries to redeploy their resources?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): The Government of Canada, like other governments at Geneva, is looking toward a liberalization of trade, but it is not the intention of Canada to open its markets to other countries in the name of free trade unless there are reciprocal advantages for Canadian exporters in other markets which are made available to us.

In connection with adjustment assistance, while I have not had an opportunity to examine the recommendations of the Economic Council, it is the intention of the government to provide such assistance programs where necessary in co-operation with the provinces. I can assure the hon. member that this is the policy of the government and I believe some consideration has already been given to the prospect of establishing an adjustment fund. Of course, we understand that whatever agreements are reached, they will not become effective immediately but that a period as long as eight years will be involved in certain cases.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Unaccustomed as I am to public approval, Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Deputy Prime Minister. The hon. gentleman is aware that textiles, knitting mills and the leather industry are among the industries most threatened, even before any tariff reductions have been made. Could the minister be more specific in telling us what plans the government has in mind, particularly since, as the report points out, eastern Ontario and the province of Quebec are most threatened by any reduction in tariff barriers or even the continuance of the present quota system and it is the government's policy to support the developing countries?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I understood the applause was because of my answer. However, I give full credit to the hon. member's interpretation of that applause.

An hon. Member: You are both wrong.

Mr. Crosbie: It may be my gadget is not working: I did not hear an answer. The Deputy Prime Minister will be bent more broadly than Mr. Broadbent when the election comes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: A report will appear in the Financial Post tomorrow that Canada's negotiator, Jake Warren, told the Japanese and European Community negotiators last week in Washington that they should improve their bids or risk a Canadian walkout. He said he was fed-up with their scornful tactics and meagre tariff offers, and that we need wider access for some of our major export products to their markets, including fish, non-ferrous minerals, and so on. Is it correct that Canada has informed the European Community and Japan that they must improve their bids or risk a Canadian walkout?

● (1422)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we have not at any time stated that we would walk out of the negotiations and I am quite certain that Mr. Warren has made no such threat. We have said, of course, that we are disappointed with certain offers, particularly the Japanese offer, and as well with certain aspects of the offer made to Canada by the European Community, especially with respect to fisheries and agricultural products. Obviously, if these offers are not improved, it will not be possible for Canada to offer as much in the way of reciprocal benefits to other countries. Presumably, what Canada will have to decide at a certain point, if these offers from other countries are not improved, is whether we can leave on the table the offers we have already made.

With respect to the previous question dealing with textiles, it is clear from the discussions up to the present time that there will not be very deep cuts in the field of textiles because quite a number of countries, including Canada, understand the weakness of the textile sector at the present time.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF TASK FORCE REPORT ON TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, according to the report of the consultative task force on textiles and clothing to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, which report I have in my hand, the 14 countries not covered by the seven bilateral restraint agreements with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce still constitute, and I quote, "a moving threat to Canadian jobs".

Will the minister who is responsible for our GATT negotiations table this report, as well as the other 21 sector reports, before the House rises so that members may examine and discuss them; and does the minister, as recommended by these reports, plan to seek bilateral agreements with the 14 nations as recommended by the task force report and by the Textiles and Clothing Board?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the reports to which the hon. member refers: I did not hear clearly his description of them. But I should say, with respect to the negotiations which are taking place at Geneva, that it is not the intention to conclude bilateral agreements. Presumably, there will be a general agreement to which all signatories will adhere.

Mr. Grafftey: It is not good enough for the Deputy Prime Minister to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a supplementary question, would he please put it forthwith.

Mr. Grafftey: My supplementary question involves 150,000 jobs in the province of Quebec alone. Since this report clearly warns the government that thousands of jobs are going to be lost, and since the government has announced no industrial strategy whatsoever—the Deputy Prime Minister says he has not read this report which warns the government—will ministers of the Crown be visiting the province of Quebec this summer to explain government policy to workers who will lose their jobs in towns throughout the province and to explain what alternative employment the government has for them?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I presume the hon. member is relating his question to the current negotiations which are taking place at Geneva. I think it is a mistake, unnecessary, unwise and, in a certain sense, tragic for hon. members to suggest that hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs will be lost as a result of these negotiations. It has been made clear already that the government—as are other governments—is sensitive to the problem of the textile industry in Canada as well as the footwear industry. Deep cuts in these particular commodities are not likely to take place, and any industry in Canada which might be affected because of tariff changes will have a very long period in which to adjust and will likely receive adjustment assistance from the Government of Canada as well as from provincial governments where necessary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLIC SERVICE

ACTION TO AVOID POSSIBLE STRIKE OF NURSES

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Is he aware of the negotiating problems between the government and the 1,900 federal nurses who are members of the Professional Institute of the Public Service, and is he also aware of the fact that the nursing group will be in a legal position to strike on July 4, 1978, following a long and futile series of negotiations which have left the nurses without a contract since December 28, 1976? If so, can he say what action he is prepared to take in order to achieve a settlement with these nurses?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am very much aware of that situation. There have been recent discussions. I do not think contract negotiations can be effectively conducted in the House of Commons, but I am prepared to inform the House that discussions are taking place.

I would also like to make it quite clear that in terms of monetary settlements, quite some time ago the government put on the table the maximum permissible increase for the nurses' group under the anti-inflation guidelines. Of course, there is that inhibition about further concessions in monetary terms. The other issues are most complex, involving a very detailed submission of recommendations and demands from the nurses' group which is very similar to those of another group involving the home economics people who have reached a settlement, in spite of the complexities being similar in both cases.

Mr. Firth: I have a question for the same minister and I would like to ask him if he is aware of the severe consequences that strike action would have in the communities, especially in the Northwest Territories, where these people have a very heavy responsibility and have to do work which is equivalent to work done by surgeons and other doctors. Is he prepared to accept the majority report of the conciliation board and give parity in pay rates with their counterparts in the provinces?

Mr. Andras: Of course, I am aware of the consequences of a work stoppage on the part of the nurses, and indeed I think the responsibility for a settlement rests on both sides, and we will meet ours.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): On the same topic, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board whether he is aware of the fact that in northern Quebec as well as in the northern parts of the other provinces and in the Northwest Territories there are several communities where there are no physicians and where the nursing staff who must do work which is equivalent to work done by physicians are being paid a $100 bonus every month. On the other hand, this nursing staff is required to do between 60 and 80 hours of overtime each month, which is entirely ridiculous for the sort of work it is doing. Therefore, I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board whether, during the current round of bargaining which must be completed by July 4, and before any strike occurs, he would be prepared to recommend that the work the nursing staff is doing in these communities be recognized and paid for accordingly.

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, of course, we want to pay the nurses as we do all other employees in consequence of the duties and responsibilities they have and in comparison with the salaries, wages, benefits and compensations existing in other jurisdictions. We believe we are doing that. I repeat that the monetary offer on the table is the maximum permissible under the anti-inflation guidelines to which both they and we are subject.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Since the suggestion which I have just made to the President of the Treasury Board is now applicable to the RCMP, I would like to know why it could not be applied to other health professionals working in remote areas in Canada?

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I will note the hon. member's comments as a representation and give them full consideration, although I think I have indicated some of the parameters within which we must operate in terms of the anti-inflation guidelines.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REPORTED FORTHCOMING DEMANDS FOR LARGE WAGE INCREASES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. It stems from statements made by the Minister of Finance during his speech to the Conference Board. I think the Minister of Finance is attempting to embarrass the Minister of Labour. The report in last night's Journal and the night before reads as follows:

He told the Conference Board in Canada that there are "disturbing signs" that labour groups in the public and private sectors plan to demand big wage rises after pay and price controls end this year.

Does the Minister of Labour share that view of the Minister of Finance? I see he is trying to get his instructions right now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Given the fact that the Minister of Finance is trying to destroy the Minister of Labour, may I hear from the Minister of Labour in this regard?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the hon. Minister of Finance, and myself are just having a chat about that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: We have all the time in the world. Does the Minister of Labour agree with the comments of his friend, who indicated that there are some very disturbing signs that labour groups in the public and private sectors plan to demand big wage raises after pay and price controls end this year? I thought the Minister of Labour was on the job. If he has finished his consultation, would he kindly answer my question?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I think the Minister of Finance was looking at a few contracts which might be a little too high which he perceived were coming down.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Finance, who is attempting to shaft the Minister of Labour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Would he kindly tell me what disturbing signs have him so exercised? Would he give the House an indication of what he is talking about?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Are you talking to me?

Mr. Alexander: I am talking to the Minister of Finance. Would you guys get your act together?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should realize that there is very close consultation all the time between the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Finance. The answer given by the Minister of Labour was exactly the right one. Some contracts which have been negotiated at this time look a bit loaded in the second year. It could create some problems if there are people seeking increases which are too big.

We have decided to get out of controls. The Minister of Labour and I have had discussions with the labour unions. They are planning to be reasonable, generally speaking, but there are a few cases which are worrisome. In raising the problem, I just want to warn every Canadian that everyone should be reasonable so that we can help the Canadian economy by keeping inflation as low as possible.

Mr. Alexander: The Minister of Labour does not agree.

STATISTICS CANADA

DIRECTIVE THAT EMPLOYEES SIGN BLANKET AGREEMENT AS TO BEHAVIOUR

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I should like to direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board. Yesterday, Statistics Canada issued a booklet to its 6,000 employees, entitled "Policies and Procedures on Conflict of Interest and Standard of Conduct". Contained in the booklet is a form which must be signed. That form makes the employees of Statistics Canada give the following undertaking:

Acts in such a way that tends to undermine confidence in the bureau or any of its employees, or that impairs relations with other federal departments of governments in Canada or that criticizes the government.

Clearly, this is in violation of the Canadian Bill of Rights. Is the President of the Treasury Board aware that such a guideline has been sent out and has been made a condition of employment by Statistics Canada? In view of the fact that clearly it violates the Canadian Bill of Rights, will he order that it be withdrawn immediately?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have not looked at it in detail. I will do so. If the hon. member's contention is correct, something should be done about it.

Mr. McGrath: Will the President of the Treasury Board assure the House that this circular will be stopped forthwith and will not be circulated to any other public servants in Canada? The regulations issued by the Department of National Revenue enjoined charitable organizations of this country not to become involved in political activities in order to enjoy their tax exempt status, which clearly is a violation of their human rights. Will he stop this form being circulated any further in the public service?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will add to my previous answer. I will take a look at it.

URBAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO CREATE DISTINCT ECONOMIC DISTRICT FOR NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs responsible for the National Capital Commission. Considering the violent storm which can be expected as a result of jurisdictional difficulties between Quebec and Ontario and which will directly inflict on workers in the national capital region some significant economic restraints, deep frustrations and serious injustices, could the minister tell the House whether he intends to take adequate measures with his cabinet colleagues, such as for example the creation of a special economic district to prevent that region from being split in two by a wall of shame as in Berlin?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that some statements and actions of the Quebec government could set up borders which should not exist in a country such as ours and there is no doubt that we must closely control its machinations and remind the government that it has been elected to provide good government for Quebeckers and not to promote Quebec independence.

AIR TRANSPORT

INVESTIGATION OF RECENT AIRCRAFT ACCIDENTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Now that the minister's department has launched a full-scale inquiry into the DC-9 crash on runway 23 at Malton airport on Monday, would he investigate a similar incident which took place in Winnipeg on Monday, June 19, when an Air Canada DC-9, flight 178, experienced mechanical failure and dropped ten feet to the runway but fortunately there was enough runway to allow the aircraft to come to a safe stop?

Also, would he comment on the statement of his officials that the ravine at Malton airport is an obvious hazard and provides less than ideal conditions for take-off and landing? Is the minister aware of this statement by one of his officials? Will the runway be closed until the inquiry is completed?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my officials already have in hand the incident to which the hon. member referred. Certainly, I will look at the matter specifically. As to the comment with regard to the ravine, I should assure the hon. member that my officials have been very aware of the ravine for many years and find the runway to be safe and usable. It will continue in use.

URBAN AFFAIRS

NCC ADHERENCE TO EXISTING LEASES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the good-natured minister of urban affairs. The minister has received a copy of the Campeau letter of February 20, 1978, to Mr. Juneau which reads in part:

I can understand your problems, especially the matter of the lease for the diplomat, but I believe you could go into litigation.

It went on to indicate that Mr. Campeau did not want to be implicated in that situation. In view of this, can the minister indicate if all leases and commitments of the National Capital Commission have been honoured? Has any pressure, such as interruption of power services or issuing of eviction notices, occurred, particularly in view of the hiring of an outside solicitor over the heads of Department of Justice officials?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said previously: the National Capital Commission has the right to seek the services of consultants when it deems it advisable. No lawyers were hired over the head of the Minister of Justice, as the hon. member claims. On the other hand, there is no direct relation between the development of a park near the Brewery Creek and the development of Mr. Campeau's hotel as the hon. member also claims. It seems obvious to me that the hon. member, as always, is trying to discover scandals where none exist and allows himself, as he has done in the past, to continue to sling mud in the face of French Canadians.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: In view of that remark, some people might consider calling the minister a political thug. I would not go that far—reserving that right, however. Will he tell the House whether he has seen the confidential report given to Mr. Gallant suggesting that instead of the $54 million buy-back provision which was proposed and ultimately given to Campeau, the government should have insisted on a buy-back provision valued at $1?

LABOUR RELATIONS

REQUESTED RECOGNITION OF EXISTING UNION AT MONTREAL STATION CJMS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. The Canada Labour Relations Board has just ordered a vote between scabs and strikers to decide which union will represent the employees of radio station CJMS in Montreal. In view of this dangerous precedent, which I consider unfair, does the Minister of Labour intend to intervene with the board and try to obtain recognition of the union that already existed?

● (1442)

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is aware that there is no provision for a minister to intervene in the deliberations of an administrative tribunal. It is for that very reason we have the Canada Labour Relations Board adjudicating this matter without political interference of any kind. The board has made this particular ruling, but that does not mean the union which is now in existence representing the employees will necessarily be prejudiced before the evidence is completed.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, as the minister refuses to intervene, perhaps rightly so, will he tell the House whether he is willing to give his support and every possible assistance to the union which is complaining about that injustice, and even perhaps to lead it to a higher court? What does the minister intend to do in the face of such glaring unfairness?

[English]

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I may have misunderstood the hon. member. As I say, there is no question of my refusing to do so. It is more a question of my not being able to do so under the legislation governing procedures of the Canada Labour Relations Board.

As far as the other question is concerned, it is my belief that the Canada Labour Relations Board is also seized with the issue of whether to implement a first contract in this particular dispute. These are the two issues before the Canada Labour Relations Board at the present time. I think it would not make any sense at all for me to say anything further until we find out the ultimate decisions of the board.

FISHERIES

SALE OF MERCURY-CONTAMINATED SWORDFISH

Miss Coline Campbell (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and refers to the sale of swordfish in Canada. It is my understanding that the Department of National Health and Welfare would allow the sale of swordfish if the people of Canada were told how often they could eat it. Will the minister allow fishermen to sell swordfish in Canada, in these circumstances?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, there are discussions going on to determine if there is a possibility of this type of measure being taken. In fact, the real problems relate to the export of fish to the United States because the level of tolerance of mercury would be higher than the tolerance presently accepted.

[Mr. La Salle.]

We are discussing this matter with the food and drug administration of the U.S. and hope to be able to design a way of indicating to the consumer that the amount of mercury slightly over the desirable level, in fact represents no great danger if consumption does not take place on a daily basis.

QUOTAS ON SWORDFISH CATCH

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. Last week a Nova Scotian-registered ship carrying a Nova Scotian crew landed 20,000 pounds or more of swordfish in a Nova Scotian port which were sold to a company in Yarmouth called Scamp for $1.02 a pound. In light of this fact, and in spite of the minister's recent answer, I ask on what date the import ban on swordfish caught in Canadian waters was lifted, is a licence required by Canadian fishermen desirous of participating in this industry and, since swordfish are in American waters one day and in Canadian waters the next, will quotas be established between our two countries on a joint sharing basis covering this species?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we were informed that a shipment had been exported to the United States. We understand the United States authorities are attempting to locate the shipment and that in fact there is a possibility of forfeiture of a bond of some $40,000.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES FOR WOMEN

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the President of the Treasury Board in respect of a report entitled "Equal Opportunities for Women in the Public Service of Canada", given to us a few days ago by his secretariat?

In view of the fact that this report suggests that the fact that only 3 per cent of the positions at senior levels in the public service are held by women seems to be responsible for the decline of female participation in the career assignment programs, what steps does the President of the Treasury Board intend to take to make it advantageous to women to participate in these programs, by making it known to them that there will be more opportunities for them at the upper levels?

An hon. Member: We are going to phone the minister's wife about this.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): That would be a good idea.

An hon. Member: We might get a better answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: And more accurate.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I think it is time we adjourned. I agree wih the hon. member's comments. We are reviewing with each departmental officer responsible in every department plans for more affirmative and aggressive action in future years. These plans will be available, I presume, at the beginning of the fall session and I will be able to give hon. members more detail about what is anticipated. Progress has been slow, but steady, and we wish to accelerate it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the President of the Treasury Board agrees not only with me but also with the recommendations in the report prepared in his department. May I also ask what he intends to do about the indication in the report that in departments where there was no co-ordinator for a period of months, the effect of the equal opportunities program was, almost without exception, devastating? What steps is the minister going to take to see that there is activity in the department which will make it clear to female public servants that there is hope for them to advance to positions at the higher levels?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, having a co-ordinator within departments is a very high priority subject matter of the discussions with the departments regarding their plans for more aggressive and affirmative action in the future.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

PROVINCES' PARTICIPATION IN AMENDING LEGISLATION

Hon. James Richardson (Winnipeg South): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richardson: I would first of all like to thank hon. members for the manner in which they have welcomed me to this side of the House. I think this is evidence that our parliamentary institutions allow us to have fundamental disagreements and still resolve them in a civilized way.

My question was for the Prime Minister, but in his absence I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister. As the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution cannot reasonably be expected to make recommendations about what should be in the revised constitution without knowing the procedure by which the new constitution would subsequently be amended, will the Deputy Prime Minister assure the House that the government will not recommend to or negotiate with the provinces any amending procedure which gives any single province of Canada a veto over amendments to the constitution of Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe it will be possible for the special joint committee to examine the constitutional proposals already made by the government, and I believe it is the intention of the government to raise with the provinces the question of an amending formula later this summer.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I did not expect that the Deputy Prime Minister would be able to respond to the question as to whether there will be a single province veto over amendments to the constitution of Canada. I would ask him whether the government will give consideration to changing the proposed timetable, in view of the importance of the relationship between the amending procedure and all that is in the constitution, in order to bring the important consideration of the amending procedure forward from phase two into phase one so that it will be considered concurrently with other important matters in phase one.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will realize that the matters involved in phase one are those which are within the competence of the Parliament of Canada. They do have a bearing on, and are of interest to, the provinces. Of course, it is the intention of the government to consult with the provinces and a first ministers' conference is planned for the fall.

At the present time, certainly there is not the essential link between phase one and the amending formula that obviously will be very much involved in phase two. As I said, it is the intention of the government, this summer, to circulate to the provinces a review of the whole question of the amending formula. It will be possible to seek the views of the provinces. But phase one is not necessarily linked to completion of phase two.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

CONSIDERATION OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister in his capacity as government House leader. I understand there have been discussions in various parts of the House with a view to amending the Canada Elections Act. If those discussions continue, is it intended to amend the Canada Elections Act by perhaps expediting the recess of this House and resolving some of the difficulties in which candidates find themselves because of the uncertain state of the election timetable?

Would the government House leader check with the Chief Electoral Officer about the way in which service personnel could be included in the preliminary lists which are the basis upon which spending limits are computed under the new Canada Elections Act?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we hope to give first reading to a bill standing in my name with respect to the Canada Elections Act which deals with two matters that have been the subject of all-party discussion. I would hope we could deal with that. But the matter mentioned by the hon. member is a new item. I doubt whether it would be possible to include this in any bill that has any hope of passing before the end of the sitting tomorrow. I would raise the matter with the Chief Electoral Officer, but I doubt if we could conclude discussions with such celerity that we could amend the bill before the end of the sitting tomorrow.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that any amendment to the Canada Elections Act cannot pass unless there is consent of all members of the House for all stages of the bill—and I think the government House leader did give some type of undertaking—surely he could consult with the Chief Electoral Officer to find out what kind of technical difficulties there may be to amending that part of the present law so that service personnel, who have always been discriminated against because of their peculiar status under the elections law, could be considered in the computation of the financing formulas.

At the present time they are omitted, even though candidates with a large service population will incur unreasonable and undue expense because of the difficulty of contacting service personnel. I think this omission could be remedied with a very simple definition. As long as there is some assurance that there will be an attempt to do that, it might help expedite the bill as far as I am concerned.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am in sympathy with the object of the hon. member's question and would attempt to co-operate. I will explore the possibilities, but I doubt whether it would be possible to get the kind of agreement that is necessary and to work out the amendments within the short timeframe facing us if we, as I wish to, adjourn the House tomorrow. We will make an attempt, but the hon. member ought to realize it takes a lot of time to work out the compromises involved in changes to the Canada Elections Act.

URBAN AFFAIRS

CMHC POSITION ON SOLAR-HEATED PROPERTY MORTGAGES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. There are reports that CMHC consider mortgages on solar-heated properties as unsafe investments. Will the government clarify CMHC's position on solar energy property mortgages? Why not provide them to home owners who are concerned about the environment, on the same basis as additional rooms which are not revenue-producing?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this question is under study by CMHC at the present time. Indeed, there is an interesting pilot project which could be contemplated in this regard. As far as making it available as a nationwide program, however, it seems to me a little premature unless we have established quite clearly that it is a feasible means of heating homes at a not too high cost.

CORPORATIONS

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO SUE NHL FOR ALLEGED EXCLUSION OF QUEBEC CITY, EDMONTON AND WINNIPEG

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Could the minister inform the House whether the officials of his department considered the possibility of taking legal action against the National Hockey League under the Combines Investigation Act since the league seems to be excluding Quebec City, Edmonton and Winnipeg?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Following discussions yesterday with my colleague, the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport), I called the director of investigation under the Combines Investigation Act about a review of the situation relating to the proposed NHL-WHA merger and possible NHL expansion and asked him to advise whether any activity in this area is subject to the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act. I have not yet received a report from him. As the hon. member knows, the proposed merger which was being discussed yesterday in Detroit has fallen through and meetings have ended for the present.

FINANCE

SUBSIDY TO FORD MOTORS FOR PLANT IN CANADA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I would direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Regarding the proposed $75 million subsidy to the Ford Motor Company, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce stated yesterday, according to a press report from Toronto, that if Canada wants a plant "we are going to have to go along with the incentive."

Can the Minister of Finance tell the House whether that statement reflects government policy? If so, would he explain why the government is allowing itself to be manipulated by a company whose operations, according to a government study, are twice as profitable in Canada as they are in the United States—a corporation which has conceded that in the particular proposal it is thinking of, it would be more profitable by $2.1 million per year to operate in Canada than in the United States?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce mentioned that, he was stating government policy that in the case of the establishment of an engine plant by Ford in Ontario, the federal government was willing, with the Ontario government—if the Ontario government wants to join—to offer an incentive for the company to establish in Ontario at this time.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, that is deeply disturbing news to all Canadians who will be involved in the millions of dollars in giveaways to corporations which are amongst the most profitable in the world. The minister's seatmate, the Minister of Labour, recently made the following statement:

—if Canada is to retain its fair and equitable share of the productive capacity of the automobile industry and protect jobs, we need to get at least $6 billion of the new investment.

Is the minister aware that if we continue the same proportion of government giveaways that he is prepared to give in the Ford case to get this $6 billion, it will cost Canadian taxpayers an additional $1 billion? This, presumably, is to get the kind of investment that the Minister of Labour has said we ought to be getting under the terms of the U.S.-Canada auto pact without any subsidies at all.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we are involved in both files at the present time, the GM file for Quebec and the Ford file for Ontario, and we have to compete with the United States which offer to those industries subsidies and services which are extremely expensive; as we want to keep an acceptable ratio of employment in the automotive industry for Canadian workers, we thought it necessary in both cases to make offers to those companies.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PURCHASE OF FIGHTER AIRCRAFT

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Since cabinet has had another week to consider the urgent decision needed for the next phase of the new fighter program, can the minister tell the House if the government has decided on a short list? If not, will the minister assure the House that the cabinet will not endanger the delicate timing of this program by postponing this vital step any longer?

● (1502)

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. gentleman that the decision has been made not to go to a short list at this time. The various vendors have been making unsolicited proposals. We felt, in fairness to all vendors, that they should have an equal opportunity to do that. They will be given until August 1 for any supplementary proposals they might wish to make. This does not affect the time schedule. In September, as was originally planned, the cabinet will either go to a short list or it will make a final decision. The most likely outcome will be a short list at that time.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, could the minister tell the House if it is true that at present the senior officials responsible for advising the cabinet on the final choice for the new fighter are unable to begin the next phase, that of detailed consideration and negotiations, because they are not permitted to consider any of the attractive offers or the "sweeteners" received after February 1 until the cabinet makes up its mind on this matter?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, this is precisely the reason for allowing each of the contractors intending to make further proposals to make them before August 1, so that everyone has an equal opportunity. At that time they can be considered and evaluated and we can see what is in the best interests of Canada and Canadian industry enabling us to get the greatest number of aircraft and the maximum industrial benefits.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MACKAY—COMMENT BY MINISTER OF STATE FOR URBAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a brief question of privilege, which I believe is covered by Section 155 at page 130 of the fourth edition of Beauchesne.

If I understand the record correctly, I rise on what I consider to be a despicable attempt to impute motives, made by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), that I am somehow adverse to the interests of Canadians of French descent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. MacKay: Coming from a minister whose record, to say the least, is undistinguished, I do not think anyone who knows me will take this very seriously.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: But I want to say to you, sir, that I resent it very much. Whether this particular act of political stupidity involving les Terrasses de la Chaudière occurred on the banks of the South Saskatchewan River or of the East River into Glasgow, Nova Scotia, or whether it was entertained by someone of Polish or Lithuanian descent, or any descent, is absolutely immaterial. To take refuge behind such an imputation at a time when the government side is trying to promote national unity, in my opinion is not only counterproductive but as I say it is despicable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: I would move that if the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has any tangible evidence whatsoever that I have ever been adverse to the interests of Quebeckers or Canadians of French descent, he should bring it forward, or he should withdraw. I would like to suggest to him and to the House that it will be an improvement, if we are going to start talking about hyphenated Canadians, that we put "Canadian" first instead of French or English.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker on many occasions outside the House the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) has said in Canada, despite the policy announced by our former leader, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) who is now our deputy leader, that the Progressive Conservative party was anti-Canadian and anti-Quebecker. This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) asked a very legitimate question, the minister again accused him, but this time in the House, of being anti-Quebecker and anti-Francophone.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member came to visit me many times in the province of Quebec. He has many friends among Quebeckers and the hon. member for Central Nova, in a similar case which occurred in this House, asked a question about people who are neither French-speaking nor Quebeckers. I find that the statement made in the House this afternoon by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs is a shame. It is not only an insult to the hon. member for Central Nova but also to Quebeckers, Mr. Speaker. An insult! And I insist on this. I have several friends on the government side and they all agree with me. Look at the smile on the minister's face. That's it. He knows. I therefore hope that the minister will not hesitate to withdraw what he said in the House this afternoon, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question the privilege in full support of the remarks made by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). Unequivocally the minister in question, not for the first time today but on a number of instances, has raised the point that the motivation is racist when members on this side of the House have made criticisms about policy or administrative matters, concerning individuals in this this country who happen to come from French lineage. I say that attitude on the part of the minister is despicable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: For me this is a very serious matter, particularly at this stage in the history of our country. In terms of matters of privilege, to call someone a racist, because that is what is involved, is just every bit as offensive as calling someone a liar in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The opportunity should be taken today to clarify this matter once and for all and to make it clear, particularly for people on the other side of the House, and by no means all of them—I want to make that clear. I restrict my point as it should be on a question of privilege to this minister today. The very least that hon. members on both sides of this House can do, who want a sense of decency about debate, will be to urge the minister to get up and unequivocally withdraw that accusation. It is very offensive for a member who has a serious question—and I do not care if the Canadian involved is of Ukrainian, English, German or French ancestry—but members have questions to raise from time to time and it is totally inappropriate to suggest that the motivation behind that question has anything to do with the racial ancestry of the person.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the acts of the minister and the words of the minister have been described as despicable. They could be described as being beneath contempt, they could be described as being vicious and vulgar, and they could be described in a lot of ways—

An hon. Member: Certainly unparliamentary.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): But the description of this might be unparliamentary.

I think it is important that this matter be cleared once and for all, not only for this House but for this country. Ministers of the Crown have to act in a way worthy as ministers of the Crown.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): But more than that they have to act in a way worthy of the best traditions of this parliament. I would ask you, sir, to consider the record today and to review it to see whether, in the context of this parliament, those words should stand. I reserve the right therefore to make a motion with regard to this matter either in my name or in the name of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), whichever is procedurally correct. However, I do not think this matter should be allowed to rest around in speeches condemning a minister who is beneath contempt. I think that the House and the Speaker have a part to play with regard to this kind of practice. It is very important.

• (1512)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) has raised this by way of a question of privilege. It may be that. It may be a point of order, or it may be neither one. I cannot be sure of that without examining, as suggested by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), the transcript later this day. I will look at that, weigh the arguments, and determine whether in fact privilege is here. Other hon. members will want to examine it to see whether a motion should follow. At the moment the matter has been raised by way of a question of privilege, yet no motion has been attached to it. Therefore there is no action the Chair can take. However, the matter has been reserved. When the transcript is examined, we can see if anyone wishes to introduce a motion which I may have to act upon one day from now.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. OBERLE—NORTHERN PIPELINE COMMITTEE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was hoping to raise this point of order, which relates to the business of parliament, during question period. I wonder if I could take this opportunity to bring to the attention of the House that parliament has a very special responsibility in the monitoring of events related to the Alaska pipeline. It is my understanding that the Standing Orders of this House have been amended to allow the northern pipeline committee to sit with a permanent reference.

A number of very important events have occurred in the last couple of weeks. It is therefore important for the House to know the government's disposition as to whether this committee will be activated during the recess of parliament. Is it the intention of the President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) to call the committee into action to refer to it the reports that he has received from the pipeline commissioner?

Since there has not been any evidence of the dialogue that has been carried on between the government and the provinces, I consider it particularly important that this committee be struck and that it meet during the recess of parliament. Can the President of Privy Council give the House an indication of the government's intention in this regard?

Mr. Speaker: It being Thursday I was anticipating that the point of order that would normally follow the question period relating to the order of business would be put. Perhaps we can deal with that at the moment.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): With regard to the question raised by the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, there is a specific Standing Order which establishes a permanent reference for the pipeline committee. The standing order prescribes the reports that will be sent automatically to the committee. I will again examine the standing order to see whether any of these reports have come forward. The moment they do, of course, the committee will be activated. In the meantime it might be useful for the House to name the members of the new committee tomorrow, so that if any report comes forward during the recess the committee will be able to look at it.

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTER OF STATE FOR URBAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with reference to Your Honour's ruling with regard to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). Tomorrow presumably being the last day when the House will be sitting, I wonder if it would be appropriate to get an assurance from the Minister of State that he will in fact be here when you hand down you ruling.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PETERS—COMMUNICATION FROM MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The other day I asked a question of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) concerning automobile safety. I was referring to recalls in the United States. At that time he indicated that because our laws were different from those of the United States there would be some delay in Canada.

The Minister sent me today, in the form of an "Information from the Minister of Transport", an indication that the examination by the Department of Transport did take place in relation to Chrysler cars, in particular the Horizon.

It goes on to state that they found the cars to handle in a normal and satisfactory manner. However, it further states they found that although with this type of steering, and it is a considerable difficulty which results in significant wheel oscillation, wheel behaviour was not uncommon in the past, it is not regarded as desirable and it is not a normal characteristic of contemporary vehicles. In other words, the model T-Fords did this, but ordinary cars do not. It goes on to say:

> Transport Canada nevertheless—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the hon. member goes any further, he should concentrate on persuading me that he has a point of order.

Mr. Peters: Maybe it is clarification. I do not understand what the minister is saying. He goes on to say:

> —Transport Canada nevertheless will request Chrysler Canada Limited to advise of what steps they are taking to eliminate this steering behaviour in future production of these vehicles.

It starts out by saying it is the normal and satisfactory manner. I wonder if the minister would be kind enough to clarify this because he certainly has not clarified it in this letter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the hon. member is really seriously contending that every time a member of the House of Commons has a communication from a minister that he does not fully understand, he would be entitled to raise it by way of a point of order. I am afraid there would be an extension of the practice.

PETITIONS

ROYAL DESIGNATION FOR NEWFOUNDLAND CONSTABULARY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to present a petition to the House on behalf of the officers, men, and civilian employees of the Newfoundland Constabulary. To mark the visit of Her Majesty the Queen to Newfoundland on July 26 they are petitioning the House that the government recommend to Her Majesty that this, the oldest police force in Canada, be designated the Royal Newfoundland Constabulary, by Her Majesty the Queen. The petition prays that the House will so direct the government.

IMPORTATION OF FILM

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition to this honourable House signed by approximately 4,500 citizens of Canada. The petition prays that this House strongly oppose the importation, introduction or showing in Canada of the film "The Many Faces of Jesus" and further requests and prays that the Prime Minister and certain other ministers therein named use their good offices in conjunction with their provincial counterparts to cause the film not to be imported, introduced or shown in Canada, and that this petition be acted upon immediately.

DOCKYARD AT ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to present a petition to this honourable House. It is signed by 4,250 residents of St. John's and other parts of Newfoundland, including 32 members of the Newfoundland House of Assembly from both sides. The petition is in connection with the dockyard at St. John's which is owned by the Government of Canada and operated by Canadian National. That dockyard is in a position to enter into contracts with the U.S.S.R. for the maintenance of some 60 vessels a year once a synchrolift has been provided. The work is expected to take about 18 months. The petition has been circulated by employees of the dockyard, supported by the St. John's City Council, the Ports Association, the Board of Trade representing 900 men and women and 23,000 employees, as well as by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). Of course I support it by presenting it. The petitioners hope that action can be taken soon so that the work can get under way.

DR. BERNARD SUTET

Question No. 785—Mr. Jones:

1. Is it possible for a public servant to affirm allegiance or subscribe to an oath for Canada and at the same time still be a citizen of a foreign country and also owe allegiance to that country?

2. How many days lapsed between the time Dr. Bernard Sutet, originally of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, obtained his landed immigrant status and the time he was hired by the department?

3. What is the normal amount of time taken by the Public Service Commission to hire a person from the time of the first interview until the final decision in the competition is made?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Employment and Immigration and the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. Yes.

2. Dr. Sutet obtained landed immigrant status on March 27, 1968, and was hired by the Department of Manpower and Immigration on April 1, 1968. Consequently four days elapsed.

3. The actual interviewing and selection of candidates is one of five major phases in the hiring process. It may require the Public Service Commission (or the department or agency to which the commission has delegated the authority to hire for its own needs) between one and fifteen working days to reach a decision in a specific competition after the first interview.

AIRCRAFT

Question No. 1,452—Mr. Masniuk:

1. To date, how many orders have been placed with de Havilland of Canada Ltd. for DASH 7 STOL aircraft and who are the purchasers?

2. To date, how many orders have been placed with Canadair Ltd. for Challenger aircraft and who are the purchasers?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. To date, ten orders have been placed with and announced by de Havilland of Canada, Ltd. for its DASH 7 STOL aircraft: Rocky Mountain Airways, Denver, 2; Spantax, Spain, 1; Wardair, Edmonton, 2; Emirates Air Service, Abu Dhabi, 1; Greenlandair, Denmark, 2; Canadian Forces, 2.

2. To date, 91 firm orders have been placed with Canadair Ltd. for its Challenger aircraft and a letter of intent has been submitted by federal express of the U.S for an additional 25. The list of purchasers is extensive and has not been announced publicly by Canadair. Following normal commercial confidentiality practice, the list is held in confidence in order to preserve Canadair's competitive position.

NFB—"NO ACT OF GOD"

Question No. 1,535—Mr. Epp:

1. Did the National Film Board produce the film "No Act of God" and, if so (a) who was the producer and how much was he/she paid (b) who researched and/or wrote the production and how much were they paid (c) what was the total cost of the production?

2. To what extent were Canadian officials and experts in the field of nuclear energy consulted and advised as to the authenticity and factual content of the film?

3. Is the film being distributed to schools and, if so, to what extent is it being promoted and distributed?

4. Is the film being distributed to the public at large and, if so, how is it being promoted and distributed?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the National Film Board as follows: 1. The National Film Board did produce the film "No Act of God", Mr. Ian Ball was the director researcher and commentary writer. Mr. Ball was paid a total of $14,023.83 for his work on the film. The total cost of the production was $104,893.

2. The point of the film is the implications of the expansion of a system of breeder reactors, none of which currently exist in Canada. Consultation with Canadian officials was therefore not considered necessary.

3. The film is being distributed through the NFB distribution system which includes the public school system. No special promotion in this sector has occurred, nor is planned.

4. See 3 above. The NFB distribution system includes regional libraries from which the public at large may obtain copies of the film. No special promotion has occurred, nor is planned.

PUBLIC SERVANTS

Question No. 1,591—Mr. Patterson:

1. What is the average length of service of employees of the Canadian Penitentiary Service?

2. What percentage of employees remain with the service until pensionable age?

3. What is the average length of service of employees of the government?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Ministry of the Solicitor General and Treasury Board as follows: The Canadian Penitentiary Service does not keep statistics in the manner in which the question was asked. However, we offer the following in reply: 1. Employees with less than one year's service, 13 per cent; employees with between one to four years' service, 32 per cent; employees with between five to nine years' service, 21 per cent; employees with between 10-14 years' service, 15 per cent; employees with between 15-19 years' service, 9½ per cent; employees with between 20-24 years' service, 5½ per cent; employees with over 25 years' service, 4 per cent;

2. Approximately 4 per cent.

3. Average length of service of public servants contributing under the Public Service Superannuation Act, 10.3 years.

EXPENDITURES IN KOOTENAY WEST

Question No. 1,676—Mr. Brisco:

What is the best estimate of the amount spent by the Department of Communications in the constituency of Kootenay West from July 22, 1977 to date?

Mr. C. Douglas (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the amount of money spent by the department in the constituency of Kootenay West from July 22, 1977, to date is best estimated at $1,300.

DSS—EXPENDITURES IN B.C.

Question No. 1,685—Mr. Brisco:

What is the best estimate of the amount spent by the Department of Supply and Services in (a) Nelson (b) Castlegar (c) Trail (d) Creston (e) Nakusp (f) Kaslo (g) Rossland, British Columbia from (i) 1968 to 1974 (ii) 1974 to date?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Our records* reveal no contracting activity for those cities.

*Prior to April 1, 1976, regional operations contracting is only available by province based on the location of the regional office.

PETROLEUM AGREEMENTS

Question No. 1,689—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

In the past ten years, did the government reimburse the provinces under the petroleum agreements and, if so, by year and province, in what amount?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): The following table shows payments to the provinces under the Oil Export Tax Act.

Payments to the Provinces under the Oil Export Tax Act.
($000)

	Man.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Total
1973-74	1,184	15,737	122,087	4,301	143,309
1974-75	507	12,195	95,353	3,056	111,111
1975-76	1	23	175	7	206

These payments are equal to one-half of the oil export tax for the six-month period October, 1973, to April, 1974. This amount was allocated among the producing provinces on the basis of their oil production.

CANADIAN PENSION COMMISSION

Question No. 1,824—Mr. Orlikow:

1. For the fiscal year 1976-77, what contracts for professional services were let for studies, surveys and analyses into (a) present or future policies, programmes or information analysis and their efficiency and effectiveness (b) the examination of the administration or internal operation of the Canadian Pension Commission?

2. How much was committed on each contract and to whom?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. (a) A study of Statistical Information System. (b) None.

2. Twelve thousand five hundred dollars to the bureau of management consultants, Department of Supply and Services, Ottawa, Ontario.

*HAWKER SIDDELEY CANADA LIMITED

Question No. 1,589—Mr. MacGuigan:

For the fiscal year ended March 31 (a) 1974 (b) 1975 (c) 1976 (d) 1977 (e) 1978, what was the amount of government aid, including but not limited to grants, loans, forgivable loans, insured loans and insured exports, given to (i) Hawker Siddeley Canada Limited (ii) Canadian Car (Pacific) Division in Vancouver of Hawker Siddeley Canada Limited?

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned:

(i)

Fiscal Year	Loans	Contributions
1973-74	$ —	$ 58,659
1974-75	481,970	530,648
1975-76	353,970	744,465
1976-77	73,740	259,001
1977-78	186,450	463,607

(ii) Any amounts for Canadian Car (Pacific) Division of Hawker Siddeley Canada Ltd., would be included in the above.

In so far as the Departments of Finance, the Regional Economic Expansion and Transport Canada are concerned: none.

Mr. Pinard: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETROLEUM CORPORATIONS MONITORING ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR COLLECTION OF CERTAIN STATISTICS RELATING TO PETROLEUM INDUSTRY

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-12, to require the reporting of certain financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of certain petroleum companies carrying on business in Canada, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Speaker: A few days ago, in looking ahead to the consideration of report stage of this bill, the House will remember that I made reference to an amendment which had been made to the bill in the standing committee. The amendment relates to a clause which would provide that after the fifth anniversary of the passage or coming into force of this bill it shall stand referred to the first meeting thereafter of the committee of this House to which ordinarily matters on oil and gas are referred.

I indicated at the time that I was dealing with another motion of a similar nature regarding another bill and that I had some very serious concerns about the ability of the House to accept that kind of clause. As the House knows, I examined the precedents in respect to a similar measure attached to the Export Development Act which was in due course accepted by the Chair but defeated, and I observed to the House, as I am going to do now, that the clause which has been added by the standing committee is one which I find I am unable to interfere with on procedural grounds.

However, I want to caution the House again that this process began with two clauses associated with two different bills, one relating to regulations and statutory instruments, whereby a committee of both Houses was being set up, the purpose of which was to examine and to endeavour to check in a precautionary way possible excesses of power taken under the executive by the use of the regulation and the statutory instrument. Therefore, it was central to the work of that committee that every regulation or statutory instrument stand automatically referred to it.

This kind of clause has also been used—and quite appropriately—with respect to the annual report of the Auditor General to ensure that this report, once filed, will stand automatically referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. That is quite appropriate.

With regard to other measures such as the Export Development Act, the Air Canada Act, the Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee Act and other measures, similar clauses have been used to ensure that the annual reports of various Crown corporations, once filed with the House, are automatically referred to a standing committee. That is a slight extension of the original practice. Now the precedent is put forward with respect to Bill C-19, relating to a designation of certain petroleum products by a board authorized under that statute, so that every designation made by that board will be automatically referrred to an appropriate standing committee of the House without any action by the House. That is a further extension because it is not an annual report of a Crown corporation, and it does not require any intervening action by the House.

Now in this particular case we have taken the practice one step further. There is no order or designation as is required in Bill C-19. There is no annual report filed with the House. There is no intervening action. There is no statutory instrument or regulation. There is no Auditor General's report, and there is no intervening action required by the House under this particular clause. Therefore, after the fifth anniversary of this statute, by virtue of this clause, this statute will stand automatically referred, not for examination by parliament, but to a standing committee of parliament, and I defy any member of the House of Commons to determine which standing committee and whether any standing committee is seized of it as an order of reference by this House, because in fact it is referred to the first meeting of a standing committee to which ordinarily oil and gas matters are referred, the first meeting after the fifth anniversary, not the second or subsequent meetings.

Therefore, four or five committees may be involved. The Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs may be occupied with matters relating to the taxation of oil and gas. The Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works is always occupied with discovery and other dispostions of oil and gas matters. The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications may very well be occupied with other aspects of it, and heaven knows how many other committees may be occupied with different aspects of oil and gas matters. At their first meetings after the fifth anniversary of the coming into force of this statute they may all consider themselves properly seized by virtue of this order, and there is no particular order of reference and no direction as to what they are supposed to do, how they are supposed to do it, when they are supposed to report, and what powers they have.

I therefore point out to the House simply that while I may not be able to interfere with this practice on procedural grounds, I want to indicate how far the House has come from the original practice and how difficult it is going to be at some point in the future to deal with the proliferation of these kinds of clauses. There may not be a point of procedure today, but I certainly expect that there will be a very fascinating point of procedure five years from now, when some committee, several committees, or perhaps no committees consider themselves seized of this matter, to determine what happens as a result of this clause.

I only caution the House. While I have now decided that I cannot interfere on procedural grounds, I do caution the House that we are getting into a practice which will lead us into, if not a dangerous, certainly a very sloppy practice which will create problems for future parliaments.

I think the desire is that parliament keep some kind of control or a rein on any program which is introduced in legislation. That may be very desirable, but surely the sensible course is for parliament to enact a clause which will require, as in, for example, representation statutes, that a minister—in that case the Prime Minister—is required by the statute to move a reference at a certain time. Presuming that since the Prime Minister or a minister will move a reference, that reference will carry if there is an interest in having matters examined. That requires an intervening step by parliament, and that seems to me to be the kind of practice which is a good deal safer than the one we are moving to in a rapid and, I think, dangerous way.

Nevertheless, I indicated I would review it. I have reviewed it. I do not think I can interfere with it on procedural grounds. Therefore the report stage of this bill should go ahead.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-12, to require the reporting of certain financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of certain petroleum companies carrying on business in Canada, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Lang moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could open my brief remarks by notifying the Chair that concerns about procedural matters might be academic because, as soon as we form a government, we will change this legislation or get rid of it. The kindest thing to say about this legislation is that it is lousy. It is not necessary. At no time has the minister or any of his colleagues offered a sensible argument for the necessity of this legislation. No evidence or data has been presented which would in any way, shape or form, indicate any necessity for passing this legislation, the effect of which would be to impose upon 85 or 90 oil companies in Canada the necessity of supplying detailed, extensive financial information at a frequency to be determined by the minister.

Second, the government claims it needs to know this data. It claims it needs to know what the oil companies are doing with their money. We have not been told why the government needs to know this. Either it cannot establish why, or it does not know why it needs to know, but we have not been told. The government does not say why, but it says it does have this need. In that context it is now getting this information voluntarily. Right now the government is soliciting this information from the top 35 companies in the country which account for some 85 per cent to 90 per cent of the total cash flow of this industry. Not only have they not established why they need the information, but they are getting it anyway! So why is this bill brought in in the first place?

We are told by the minister that out of the 35 companies one company said, "Look, we think we may be in violation of the securities commission's provincial law if we supply the information to you and not to our stockholders. We are nervous about that and we would rather you passed a law enforcing us to do it." Apparently that is why the government is proceeding with this bill. They have not told us which company made the inquiry, whether any representations were made or any legal opinions offered to companies that such was not the case, or any assurances given that information which they provide would not be used in such a way that it would cause them legal difficulties.

The other aspect that I find offensive in this bill, and which I wish to draw to the attention of the House, is that while the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works was considering the bill, the government was announcing, through the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Abbott), that it is concerned about the paperwork governments impose on industry and it will reduce it. The government even appointed somebody called the controller of the paperwork burden, who has an office, and the minister sent members of parliament a letter saying that if we have any complaints from businesses in our constituencies regarding the paperwork burden imposed by governments, we should let the controller know and he will see what he can do about it. The very same day this letter was written by the Minister of State (Small Business), members of the committee heard government members demanding that we pass this bill which imposes extra paperwork on business. That is the sole effect of this bill.

The data that the government wants is obtainable from StatsCan, from the provincial conservation boards on oil and gas matters, and from the National Energy Board in a general sense, because to drill a well in this country you need a permit, to export oil and gas you need permits, and to do any sale of oil and gas, you need permits. All the information is available, but no, the government wants to impose additional paperwork on these industries to get the information more directly, at the same time as we have another minister boasting of how responsive the government is to complaints about extra paperwork and the cost involved.

The Minister of State for Small Business said that the cost of that paperwork, the red tape, is $10 billion. If it is such a serious problem then why in blazes does the minister say out of the other side of his mouth that he will introduce a bill which will require more paperwork? If somebody said that he does not trust the government which is deceiving us, which is insincere, and people in the government then said, "Gee, that is not fair," this would be understandable. But how can anybody trust the government when one minister says the government will cut down on the paperwork and another minister says the government will impose more? When we ask them why, they say it is because the information is important. If that is an excuse, they can use that excuse to wiretap everybody's phone, to open everybody's mail, to inspect everybody's income tax return, to break into any home and look in dresser drawers. If that is a sufficient rationale for the government to pass this kind of legislation, then it can pry into anybody's affairs.

The other reason that I find this bill so objectionable is the enforcement provisions. They were copied, word for word, from the Income Tax Act, sections 230 and 231, which I describe as Gestapo provisions, and this is not an inaccurate description. They would allow an official to tramp into somebody's office, seize their books, and keep them for 120 days. If somebody wants a copy of them, they have to apply to a court and pay for the cost of copying them.

Hon. members opposite laugh, but the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand) might be interested to hear the story of one of his officials who, while investigating the case of the sulphur combines in Calgary under the same provisions in the Combines Investigation Act, seized as well copies of an itinerary for an employee golf tournament with match-ups, schedules, and so on. So when an official of the company asked whether he could have this itinerary back because the golf tournament was coming up in a couple of days, he was told by the minister's official, "Sure, come to Ottawa and you can go through the books. If you want a copy of your own records, you can copy them and pay for it." That is a true story, and it is exactly what happens when you give officials the kind of authority that we are asked to grant in this bill.

Mr. Allmand: Give me his name.

Mr. Andre: I will. It is exactly what happened, and it will always happen so long as that kind of stupid law exists.

As a contrast to the stupidity of putting in that kind of enforcement provision, there are provisions in the Income Tax Act and the Statistics Act which require the gathering of important invoices. If an official has doubts about the validity of information which a company provides, he can look through the company's books, and that is fine, legitimate, and fair. But to put in a provision that an official can seize the books and you cannot get them back for 120 days, is stupid, it is power gone mad, demanded by stupid officials and stupid ministers who put forward such legislation.

There is a provision in here which says that a minister can demand from a director of a company the provision of information in these forms. In other words, if, for example, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) became angry because he lost a golf game to his old friend, Donald Macdonald, he could write him a letter saying, "I demand that you, a director of Shell Canada, supply all this information within 30 days". Under this bill it says he can do that. What kind of stupid idiot would write that into an act? What kind of stupid government would put forward something like that? This bill is full of that kind of stupidity.

The only reason I have not brought forward scads of amendments at report stage to remove this stupidity from the act was the existence of the five-year review. In five years a committee of the House can look at the bill and say it is stupid and recommend it be thrown out. Because of the potential of the five-year review, and the fact that in five years time most of the idiots over there will be gone, as well as the idiots who drafted it in the minister's department, so that we will be able to draft legislation which assumes that most Canadians are honest and trustworthy, and that one does not need a cannon when a flyswatter will do—

Mr. Allmand: This is a really intelligent speech.

Mr. Andre: It is for that reason alone that the bill has been allowed to come forward today and that we will see it through third reading. But I make the commitment that as soon as we form a government, we will get rid of this type of nonsense wherever it occurs in any piece of legislation.

• (1552)

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to take part in this debate. I thought there was general agreement in committee to pass this legislation speedily. Certainly I will not detain the House. However, I would not want silence to give an impression to those who follow the proceedings of this House that, as far as my colleagues and I are concerned, we share the view of the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre).

We have waited a long time for this piece of legislation. We have been impatient to see it brought forward, and certainly we will be very glad to see it passed. The hon. member for Calgary Centre said that he does not know why we need it. Any person who looks at what has happened over the past four or five years will know why we need this legislation. Ever since the OPEC countries began to push up the world price of oil, we have seen an increase in the price of well-head oil in this country of 400 per cent. The government has had to agree to increases in the prices of petroleum products far in excess of what the cost of producing those products warranted.

In 1973, 1974, and 1975 members of the New Democratic Party said continually that they opposed the increases in the price of oil. However, they indicated that they would be prepared to support them if we were assured that the extra revenues, which were going into the coffers of the oil industry—

Mr. Andre: And the government's.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Yes, the federal and provincial governments'. They said that they would support them if the extra revenues were used to carry on an exploration and development program so that the country would have increased oil and gas supplies in the future. The then minister of energy, mines and resources, the Hon. Donald Macdonald, assured us that that was exactly what the government wanted. The government, some of the producing provinces, and the oil industry were going to put some of their moneys back into development. At that time we said that we would like some proof that the oil industry was putting its money into Canadian exploration and development. In the last five years there has been a greater proportionate increase in the money spent on overseas and foreign exploration and development than on Canadian.

We wanted evidence. In 1974 the then minister of energy, mines and resources told the committee and the House of Commons that he would undertake to monitor these companies. We know the results.

Not all companies have responded. We have had great difficulties. We did not receive a report until the latter part of 1976, as well as a report for 1977. The information has been only partial. It has not been possible to obtain complete data. Now as many as five companies are refusing to comply. Therefore legislation making reporting mandatory is absolutely essential if the government is to know what the oil industry is doing with its exorbitant profits.

I do not think the government, or anyone who supports this bill, should apologize for mandatory reporting. The people of this country have put literally hundreds of millions of dollars of additional revenue into the pockets of the oil industry. If the oil industry claims that money will be used for exploration and development, we have a right to know whether that statement is true. We have a right to see the books. We have a right to all the data which will confirm the claims of the oil industry.

Even the very preliminary report of the monitoring agency in 1977 showed that from 1971 to 1976 the Canadian oil indusry had a total cash flow of $13.3 billion, of which $6.7 billion was after tax profits. In other words, 50.4 per cent of the total take of the Canadian oil industry was represented by after tax profits. We would have never known that if some monitoring did not take place. When we look at how the money has been allocated we find that while profits have zoomed, the amount of money spent on Canadian exploration has lagged behind. Therefore, rather than the government feeling very proud about bringing in this legislation, I say to them, "What has been keeping you? What have you been waiting for?" We should have had this legislation at least three or four years ago. Now that it is here, I am anxious to see it passed and I am proud to support it.

The basic weakness in this legislation is that while the government will get all the data from the oil companies to see whether they have put the money they received from Canadian consumers into exploration and development, there are no teeth in this legislation to compel the oil industry to put its extra revenues into development and exploration. What will the government do if it finds, as can be shown already, that the hundreds of millions of dollars Canadians are forking out are not going into exploration and development? Nothing in this legislation gives the government an iota of power to do anything about that. This process will continue.

Next Monday the price of oil will increase $1 a barrel. At the same time the price of gas will increase automatically by 17 cents per thousand cubic feet. It will go up again on January 1, 1979. Twice a year there is a $1 a barrel increase in the price of oil with a concomitant increase in the price of gas. This puts more money into the pockets of the major oil companies, practically all of which are foreign-owned and controlled. The government needs some power to be able to say to the industry that its monitoring of their financial situation indicates, in spite of the higher prices and swollen profits, that this money has not been ploughed back into exploration and development. The government should have the power to tell them that either it will let the prices go back to where they were, or some taxation method will be imposed by the federal and provincial governments in order for them to invest that money into developing Canadian resources.

Canadians have been ripped off, and they are continuing to be ripped off. There is no remedy in this legislation, except that it will give us an opportunity to get the facts. For that reason I support this legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I should now like the House to proceed with Bill C-54, An Act to provide a maritime code for Canada and to amend the Canada Shipping Act and other Acts in consequence thereof.

[English]

MARITIME CODE ACT

MEASURE TO CODIFY LAW

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-54, to provide a maritime code for Canada and to amend the Canada Shipping Act and other acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

• (1602)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, since I believe there is agreement to deal very quickly with this bill at all stages today, I would suggest we amend the motion in order that we may deal with the bill in the committee of the whole, report it back to the House, and give it third reading today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is that agreed?

An hon. Member: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Peters: No, Mr. Speaker, let it take the ordinary course, and when we come to that stage it can be asked that it go into committee.

An hon. Member: We have been waiting for five years.

Mr. Peters: I want it too, but we are not going to do it that way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question on the motion for second reading and reference to the committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the point my colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), was raising was not well understood. He wanted second reading to be disposed of first. Now that that has been done I think he will give consent, as the rest of us will, to changing the order and dealing with this bill in the committee of the whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is that agreed to by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon—Mr. Turner in the chair.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, there has been some discussion in respect of this bill. There are some 8 clauses together with numerous appropriate schedules, in turn containing over 100 clauses, and it might be expeditious if the minister or the acting House leader were to request unanimous consent in order to deal with all clauses together with the schedules at one time.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I very much appreciate the hon. member's comments. I would suggest that by agreement we deal with all clauses as a group at the same time. Let me point out that this somewhat extraordinary procedure results from discussions about a desire to move this bill forward quickly. It is a bill which has been dealt with, in essentially the same form, very thoroughly by the House of Commons and the Senate. We are simply confirming the work we have already done on a previous occasion, except for one change which I think is suitable to hon. members generally.

The Deputy Chairman: Is that agreed by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clauses 1 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

Schedules agreed to.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): When shall the report be received?

An hon. Member: Now, by consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is that agreed by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave, now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): By leave, now. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lang moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief in my observations regarding this bill. When I was going back over some of the history about the bringing together of those matters relating to the rewriting of the old Canada Shipping Act and the present form of the Maritime Code I was reminded of the activities of a former member of this House, now a judge of the family court in the province of New Brunswick, Judge Bell. I think it appropriate to remind hon. gentlemen of what that distinguished member said regarding this matter, a part of which is reported at page 4716 of Hansard for May 13, 1954, almost 25 years ago. That distinguished member for Saint John-Lancaster opened the debate on the question of the Maritime Merchant Marine when we were considering estimates. Members will recall that in those days estimates were considered on the floor of the House where we often asked interesting questions and had lively debates. It is of interest to note some of his remarks as reported at page 4716. He is reported as having said:

> It is obvious that the government is scrapping our merchant fleet. The thing that annoys me more than anything is that they are not even scrapping it in a businesslike way.

We have had 25 years to consider those words and the implications. It is long overdue, but we have reached this stage in the reorganization of the Canada Shipping Act and the Maritime Code. We have before us books 1 and 2 of approximately five books dealing with certain aspects of ships, ships registry, and the definition of ships, as well as arrest, detention, seizure of cargo and so on.

The consideration of this bill is appropriate at this time for a number of other reasons. We are spending approximately $3.5 billion to $4 billion annually for the movement of Canadian goods out of the country and the movement into Canada of imported goods from offshore. We are putting the profits from these movements into the hands of foreign owners. After the warnings some 25 years ago of Judge Bell, perhaps it is time we moved swiftly to books 3, 4 and 5, in the hope that the totality of these five books will lead to greater progress in the re-establishment of a Canadian fleet.

I must comment on the degree of flexibility shown by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). This is the first occasion that a minister has allowed a standing committee informal access to the regulations to be brought forward in support of a bill. This is a very useful step in the progress of a bill as complex as this, and the production of books Nos. 1 and 2. I hope the same will apply in respect to books Nos. 3, 4 and 5, and the book dealing with the legal protection of men and officers serving on Canadian registered ships.

It has been about five years since this review was actively in front of us, and about three years since we began the final form of books 1 and 2. We might already have had those books had it not been for the controversy surrounding the provisions that were originally in the act dealing with the closing of our coastal waters to other than Canadian registered ships. Those items have been removed from the bill, but notwithstanding that fact, I think it is quite proper to urge the minister to present to the House at the earliest possible time new suggestions for coastal provisions. If the House is to sit next fall, I think we should proceed to this matter almost immediately and treat it as having some priority and importance. We also want to have the first comprehensive examination of books Nos. 3, 4 and 5 in the fall as these will comprise the balance of the new maritime code.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, I want to make one or two observations which are related and interwoven. In consideration of matters of marine and maritime interest, this House should not proceed from the philosophy or policy that there is a difference between shipbuilding, ship repairing, and the establishment of a Canadian merchant marine service. The matters are too closely related for us to make the mistake of continuing to separate them. I say that because, as I look back at what I understand to be one of the principal reasons for the necessity to separate these two questions, that of the instability of labour, for example, I am reminded that in this transitory stage of the development of a new maritime code the SIU have not withdrawn their services from the shipping community in Canada for some 12 years. That is not entirely true with respect to marine matters as there has been a legal withdrawal of services by other unions. The SIU, seamen, merchant officers and marine engineers, however, have contributed to an atmosphere in which the government should and could go forward with the full co-operation of the opposition in developing plans for the re-establishment of a Canadian marine fleet capable of moving a significant amount of goods in and out of Canada.

We welcome the final stages of books Nos. 1 and 2 and look forward to the early introduction of the coasting provision and the introduction of books Nos. 3, 4 and 5 in the not too distant future. I think I must compliment the Minister of Transport. I rarely do that. Indeed, it might be much more pleasant to recite 101 reasons why he should resign because he has made such a mess of transport in this country. I think I will reduce it to 100 reasons, however, because in this case he has done a thoroughly good job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, as an ordinary Canadian—

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Peters: I should like to say a few words although I do not yet represent a maritime area of Canada. After the next election, however, I hope to represent the salt water port in northern Ontario.

As a country with very long coastlines and as a trading nation, we have a great need for ships and all things maritime which have been sadly lacking for many years. The SIU, pilots associations, engineers and other organizations have demanded over the years that we build ships capable of transporting Canadian goods across the world, but these demands fell on deaf ears.

I, too, must congratulate the Minister of Transport for the start he has made on this maritime code which will eventually comprise of five books. We are passing the first two now. In my opinion, when the code is completed it will be the best in the world, but we will have no navy. It is a code for nothing—a paper code. If it does not apply to anything then it is of no value.

The other stage in a maritime code must be the development of an industry. The Darling report indicated that Canada should have a shipbuilding industry and ships to haul Canadian goods all over the world as is done by many other nations less maritime than Canada. I hope the government will consider the development of drydocks such as are being asked for in St. John's and Halifax, and will ensure that if money is made available to build ships it will not be possible for the company three years later to put those ships under Panamanian registry, as has happened even with Canadian Pacific and Canadian National ships.

Most Canadians, whether from the prairies, inland areas of the country, or the coastal regions, are interested in a Canadian merchant navy that will use Canadian ships to haul Canadian goods around the world. I had the opportunity of sitting on the committee which discussed many of the clauses in this bill over the last couple of years.

I believe that we are developing a maritime code that will be useful. If it is applied it will mean that Canadian seamen will be plying the trade on the Canadian coasts and goods will be hauled in Canadian bottoms. This will only occur if the government is willing to undertake a massive shipbuilding industry to provide the means so that the industry can be viable. Then we will not only produce ships for the flags of convenience but we will provide ships for Canadians that will have Canadians working on those ships. We will be operating under one of the safest and more efficient codes in existence anywhere in the world. Canadians will have that pride again that they had during the war when they knew that their ships were as good as any on the sea, that they were built economically and operated as economically as any other fleet in the world.

We will hopefully regain in the future the loss we sustained by the selling out of the merchant navy, particularly of the liberty ships which created the great wealth that Onassis brought to Greece at the expense of the Canadian public and cashing in on one of the engineering feats of C. D. Howe.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council) moved that Bill C-63, to amend the Canada Elections Act (No. 2) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I understood there was some intention of handling this in the committee of the whole rather than putting it into the standing committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it agreed?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I object. I do not give unanimous consent to have this bill read the second time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): As there is no unanimous consent, this bill will be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I understand this bill was introduced today for the first reading and earlier today it was referred to the next sitting of this House. For this bill to be introduced for second reading today I believe it requires unanimous consent. I am not giving unanimous consent to have two stages in one day. I have relayed that information to the government House leader. The government is trying to do something by the back door, and I have said previously that I was not in agreement with it. I do not think it is appropriate to do two stages in one day.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member is saying about me is absolutely wrong. I did not receive from him any indication that he would not agree to the House proceeding with this bill today. Now, if he refuses to give his consent he alone wil bear the responsibility before the people of Canada. The next item we are prepared to deal with is Bill C-48.

[English]

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member who just spoke, and also the whip of his party, will recognize that I sat, perhaps improperly, in the Prime Minister's seat during question period, and had a lengthy discussion with the government House leader. I advised him of my position on this matter at that time. I asked him if he was willing to undertake to delete clauses 1 and 2 which go to the freedom of speech matter which has never been debated in the House. I advised him I would be glad to let this bill go through which would clear up the deal on the financing of the by-elections under 60 days. I put the question to him. I understood a week ago that that was the only thing that would be dealt with in a bill coming in. I understand the government now wants to broaden it into the Roach case.

I denied unanimous consent when it was brought through the back door on an amendment to Bill C-5 at the report stage last March. I am indicating now that I am not willing to give unanimous consent at this time. I believe it goes to the fundamental right of freedom of speech in this country and it should be given a full airing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is either unanimous consent or not. There is no unanimous consent at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the point of order that has been raised, may I draw your attention to the fact that there has been some reference to discussions among the parties. I would like to confirm that there have been discussions about this bill among all the parties. It was drafted and re-drafted. It was our understanding that the final draft met the wishes of all the parties and that we were going to proceed with it today. The hon. member who is objecting to taking second reading today because we had first reading today is standing on his rights under the rules, but it would be possible for this bill to be presented tomorrow for second reading and I hope the government will consider doing that. Perhaps in the meantime there might be further discussion so that once it is called for second reading tomorrow we will not run into any further snags.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I understood there was unanimous consent for it to be read the second time.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I have two things to say. As far as the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is concerned, we will take it into consideration; as to the comments of the hon. member who spoke before him, I will simply say that he was in a chair which was not meant for him and probably will never be since he said he made those suggestions to the government House leader. I ask that we proceed now with consideration of Bill C-48.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, May 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-48, to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend An Act to amend the Customs Tariff, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this most important subject I want to relate my concern, as I am sure I relate the concern of members of parliament on all sides of the House, that in talking about customs tariff bills we are talking about a bill that affects the jobs of Canadians from coast to coast.

There is one thing at the outset of my brief remarks that I want to make abundantly clear. I am not going to enter into the debate vis-à-vis protection or free trade. I am not in any way directly or indirectly coming down on the side of free trade or high protection in my remarks this afternoon. Whether one is looking at the European Economic Community, Japan, the third world, the United States or whatever, I recognize many of the obvious factors involving free trade that will occur in the years to come.

I want to point out in my remarks this afternoon some of the obvious pitfalls the government is leading us into in terms of Canadian jobs here at home. If we are going the free trade route, there are many ways I agree with the government that is desirable in the long term. If you look at the reports of the Economic Council of Canada and some of the Tariff Board conclusions, it is obvious, whether we like it or not, we have to be competitive in trade with countries all over the world.

If this is so, I ask the government during this debate, why so much secrecy involving our GATT discussions in particular, and our tariff negotiations in general? If the government is going the route it seems to be going, why has it not articulated in detail by this time an industrial strategy for Canada?

There is a third consideration I bring before the House this afternoon. I am not just saying this myself. I am basing my remarks on a thorough review of what the Economic Council of Canada has said, what the Tariff Board conclusions are, the task force report on the textile industry recently given to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), and the consultative task force report published last February.

If we are going the route the government seems to be going vis-à-vis GATT and tariff negotiations, and again I underline the fact that I am not talking about free trade versus protection, the old classical debate, what alternative plans does this government have? Since it has not articulated a policy, and it is not just me asking this, because the Economic Council of Canada warned the government about it, what alternative plans does the government have for the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who will be out of work because of its lack of preparedness and there being no industrial strategy?

We asked the minister in the House today if the government would adopt the consultative task force report vis-à-vis aid to the textile industry. The report has been in the hands of the government for a long time. The only answer we got was that he was not even aware of the report, let alone having read it.

We are not just talking about jobs. We often talk about jobs for low income workers who lack mobility. It is impractical to retrain them. We found that in the last few years when we were discussing some of the retraining possibilities for textile workers, particularly in the province of Quebec.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak this afternoon about our tariff negotiations. There is an employment problem for Canadians in the textile, clothing, furniture and footwear industries throughout Canada. More particularly, we are talking this afternoon about 150,000 jobs in the province of Quebec.

An hon. Member: Did I hear 150,000?

Mr. Grafftey: That is correct. If the hon. member read the report of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, he saw as I did that these six traditional employment sectors account for 270,000 jobs in Canada, including 150,000 in Quebec. I hope that as concerns our tariff negotiations and the policy that the present government has followed far too long, during the holidays, the ministers, and especially the Quebec ministers will visit Quebec to explain to these 150,000 workers affected by this government policy what alternatives they are considering if there is a loss of employment in those traditional sectors. I have the evidence right before me, Mr. Speaker, in two relevant quotations taken from a document published—and I believe the hon. member should listen to this—by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in February 1978 and entitled "Background Information for Advisory Tax Forces" which concerns our tariff negotiations. Here they are:

(a) Quebec has supported the major part of the recent loss of employment in Canada in the manufacturing sector. According to our data, this sector has lost, between October 1976 and October 1977, an average of 34,000 jobs including about 30,000 in Quebec alone——that is 30,000 jobs, and not a single government member has spoken in support of these workers—

—and mainly in the traditional sectors—

—which I have already mentioned, that is the textile, furniture, footwear and clothing industries—

—and the pulp and paper industry.

With regard to the other report, I should like to quote the second paragraph, Mr. Speaker:

(b) Efforts to encourage a recovery in the industrial sector, however, will continue to aim at a few industries, namely the traditional sectors of textiles, certain types of clothing, footwear and furniture, as well as some electronic industries.

And now, we come to the most important sentence in the government policy, Mr. Speaker, which I hope hon. members from Quebec will explain to Quebeckers during the parliamentary holidays, and I quote:

The policy to be adopted with regard to those industries—

—textile industries and the others—

—should be aimed at reducing the work force progressively through better rationalization of the industry while ensuring, during the transition period, the minimum indispensable protection.

Are government members going to explain this to our Quebec fellow citizens? This is government policy in spite of the statements made in the House of Commons by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner). I have here the actual policy of the government which concerns 150,000 Quebeckers, Mr. Speaker. These euphemisms do not really hide the fact that, according to the federal government, we might do without those traditional sectors in the province of Quebec. The minister can declare vehemently that he signed some rather advantageous bilateral agreements in this area but, Mr. Speaker, how can the government explain its policy to the 150,000 workers affected in the province of Quebec?

As I already mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate in Quebec has already reached 11.5 per cent but, as you know, in cities where those industries are established it often reaches almost 20 per cent. Unfortunately in that sector, manpower mobility is often very low and, as was demonstrated in the past, recycling is almost impossible particularly for older workers.

If the government is to follow such a policy in the future, as in the past, what alternative will it offer to city workers in Quebec? Hon. members on the government side will realize that it is impossible, but as I already said, according to the report, Mr. Speaker, we have already lost, in the last months, in the province of Quebec, more than 30,000 jobs in those traditional sectors. Motherhood statements made by Quebec members to protect the rights of our fellow citizens and discussions on the constitution are all very well from time to time but there are some people in my province who would rather have bread and butter on their table now and again. How will you explain that kind of policy not only to Quebeckers but to the 270,000 workers in Canada who are affected in those traditional sectors?

[Mr. Grafftey.]

Mr. Boulanger: You are an actor!

● (1642)

[English]

You don't even look serious when you talk.

Mr. Grafftey: I am very, very serious.

[Translation]

It is very interesting. The hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) says that I am an actor, but he has not made any speech lately to protect the economic rights of his fellow citizens. He may say that it is a comic subject but I do not think that Quebec workers will find the subject so comic.

[English]

In the task force report presented to the government, more particularly to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce by the task force members, they have warned time and time again, that while the minister announced in the House some days ago that an accord was signed with seven countries through bilateral agreements, some favourable to Canada in many ways—I could criticize the detail, but generally speaking it was good to see those seven countries reach bilateral accord. The Economic Council has put reports before the minister, the task force has spoken, but the government does not want to pay attention. Each one of those reports said there were 14 other countries involved and as long as they are not included in bilateral agreements there was a moving danger not only to the industries directly concerned but to jobs all across Canada, particularly in Quebec.

I am not an old-fashioned protectionist. I understand the long-term benefits of free trade in the world in which we live today. But any government that goes that route must do its homework. Why so much secrecy in these tariff negotiations? Why are we the only country in the western world without an industrial strategy? One of the central aspects of any industrial strategy involves our approach to tariff negotiations in general and to what is going on under GATT in particular.

I am told by some of my friends that compared with the delegations of other countries to the GATT negotiations we are a bunch of amateurs. We are the laughing stock of the western world. Are the ministers and bureaucrats who are proposing to sacrifice the jobs of Canadians on the altar of expediency planning to visit these towns in Quebec and explain what has been done at their expense?

I have one town in my riding, Cowansville, which has been badly affected. This is not just theory. A thousand jobs have been lost in one company alone. The government says it is inefficient. The Textile Institute says its productivity is among the best in Canada and North America. If they were inefficient they would ask for protection. They do not ask for special protection, they ask the government to do its homework in the same way as every government in the free world does. In one textile mill a thousand jobs have been lost. A furniture factory in my constituency is all but closed down with a loss of 500 jobs. Two shoe companies are right up against it. But the government just sits there, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) says we have to take it on the chin. Well, well! I ask you.

We talk about tariff negotiations. We talk about our general attitude. We review some of the obvious things the government will have to do vis-à-vis free trade in the medium term and the long term in the modern world. There has been a lot of general agreement. There is an obvious benefit in an ability to trade with every country in the world both in the medium and in the long term. But the government will have to do its homework more efficiently in terms of industrial strategy, sending out negotiators who know what they are about, and not surrounding the negotiations with their secrecy.

The board has warned the government that though there are bilateral agreements with seven countries there are still 14 others to be considered. Yet the government, so we are told, has not even read the report. We are in trouble, Mr. Speaker. It is all very well for the boys in the ivory tower here in Ottawa with their big, fat salaries to say that the shoe industry and the textile industry and the clothing industry and all these industries are dispensable. Sometimes, you know, they go down to James Street and get the financial and business community saying that too. It is a buzz word in the clubs. Will they go into the towns of this country where the low income workers who lack mobility live, and explain this dispensable theory to them? The minister smiles, but the fact is that a lot of these industries are disappearing, not just the weak ones but the strong ones.

Go to Geneva. Have your parties and do your work for an hour a day, but think of these workers before you adopt the free trade theory, one which is good in many ways. Do your homework, in the name of God! Let us have an industrial strategy. Lift the veil of secrecy from the negotiations and then, maybe, you will get a lot more support and confidence than is evident right now.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a few minutes in which to speak on this question of customs and tariffs. It is propitious I should have run across a newspaper article in the Vancouver Sun written by an associate editor based in Ottawa, and entitled, "Central Canada Needs Us—For Hosing." As an introduction I should like to read part of this article so that we might study this discussion in context as it affects the various regions of our country. The dateline is Montreal, and the article reads:

> Pierre Laurin, director of University of Montreal École des Hautes Étude Commerciales (HEC) and brother of Quebec cultural affairs minister Camille Laurin said at the close of HEC's conference on the economic implications of Quebec independence that he hoped the ideas that had been discussed would receive wide dissemination.
> So they should.
>
> In particular, some of the statistics produced by HEC's Professor Carmine Nappi should provoke a hum or two from Canadians who live outside both Quebec and Ontario.
> Those statistics show a protectionist, economic customs union called Canada existing primarily for the benefit of manufacturers in its two central provinces at the expense of consumers in the periphery regions and east and west. They also show a country whose outer regions are more concerned with international than interprovincial or interregional commerce—and which have, in fact, interregional trade deficits while only the two central provinces have interregional trade surpluses.
>
> Not just Quebecers might ask why are we all here.

● (1652)

The article goes on to mention some of the arguments and statistics centering around regional concerns. For example:

> —British Columbia, with its back to the country, 83.9 per cent of the value of shipments is related to international sales and only 16.1 per cent to sales in the rest of Canada . . . Nearly 45 per cent of all B.C. manufacturing jobs are related to foreign sales—far higher than in any other region. Another 42 per cent less than 14 per cent are related to interregional trade.

I believe that puts the discussion in perspective, and if any hon. members wonder why there is disenchantment in the regions of Canada about the trade policies of our country, all they need to do is read this report by an organization which ought to be considered to have some objectivity since it comes from the province of Quebec and is interested in the subject of unity within this country.

I want to cite two examples in support of this point of view. I have a constituent, in the broad sense of the word, who is concerned about the customs tariff policy of this government and the protectionism which centres around industry in Ontario. I refer to a company known as James Piano and Organ Limited of Vancouver. Part of the company's letter to me reads as follows:

> We understand the background is simply that a very minor organ manufacturer in the Toronto area has initiated this action to protect the very large market. It is a fact that for him to qualify for this action he must of necessity produce at least 10 per cent of the goods consumed in this church market. This of course is impossible and on this basis alone the decision should be reversed.

The fact is that at one time the Allen digital computer organ was brought into the country duty-free because it cannot be manufactured in Canada. It cannot be manufactured here for two reasons. First, it is protected by copyright. As a matter of fact, Allen won a $3.5 million lawsuit over its copyright, so that ought to be evidence enough that it cannot be made in Canada. Second, no company in Canada is equipped to build such an organ. While this organ was at one time allowed to come into this country duty free, after objections from Ontario the government slapped a customs tariff on it.

Because of that tariff, if a church or entertainer were to buy that organ, it would cost $2,000 to $3,000 extra to import. Why? Because of two companies in Ontario, one called Classic Organ Company in Markham, Ontario, and another, the Shaw Organ Company of Burlington, Ontario. It so happens that neither of these companies even manufacture organs. All they do is buy up used organs, reconstruct them, refurbish them and refinish their cabinets. They are doing a good service. Nobody is objecting to the work they are doing. I think they are performing a very necessary service, but the fact is that they are not in the business of competing with the Allen digital computer organ. All of a sudden this government decided those two companies should be protected by a heavy tariff which costs churches and entertainers an extra $2,000 or $3,000. That is like killing an ant with a steamroller.

If it is the object of this government to protect jobs in Ontario, it seems to me that it is going at it the wrong way, because these two companies each employ two people. To protect the jobs of from four to six people the government has reversed its previous policy and is now asking churches and entertainers to pay an extra $2,000 or $3,000 to import this one particular organ which cannot, by law or because of the nature of the industry in Canada, even be manufactured here.

I think that is a classic case of overkill. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) is here now. I hope he will take this under advisement, and that I have an opportunity during committee of the whole stage to make further representations on this matter. I will be asking him to reconsider the policy of his department and to withdraw that duty on these organs.

I am also concerned about the plastics industry in Canada. The plastics industry is the third largest employer in our manufacturing sector. Some 45,000 people are employed in the plastics industry, and I see nothing in Bill C-48 which does anything to enhance that industry. I am not asking for high protection barriers. I think we have to examine that policy very carefully. However, I would like to see some way of ensuring that this industry will enjoy prosperity while at the same time not making consumers pay extra for its products. The industry has taken the time and the trouble to bring some policy recommendations to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner). It did this some time ago in the hope that the minister would bring in policies to help the plastics industry. The subject of trade should be germane to this debate.

I note that that industry feels that the government should, and I quote:

> Recognize and negotiate a reduction in non-tariff barriers to export trade from Canada; such as, border harassment by customs officials.

The matter of non-tariff barriers is a matter of increasing concern to small industries and small business people in Canada. I think the government should consider that very seriously.

I notice that it is approaching five o'clock. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) is anxious to proceed with his private member's bill, so I would like now to call it five o'clock.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that they agreed to join the House of Commons to form a special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to consider and report on subjects concerning the constitution of the Senate.

[Mr. Friesen.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott)—Anti-Dumping Tribunal—Appointment of new chairman; the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert)—Manpower—Employment of immigrants; the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez)—Post Office—Suggested reduction of employees.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), and public bills.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, it seems there is unanimous consent to proceed this evening with consideration of Bill C-236, in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche)—

[English]

I want to take this opportunity to thank the hon. member very much for the consent he gave to the House last Friday so that we could adjourn at two o'clock and celebrate St. Jean Baptiste day. That is why today he has the consent of this House to proceed with his bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Does the House unanimously agree to waive notices of motions for the production of papers?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Does the House unanimously agree to stand all bills preceding Bill C-236?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO PROTECT THE RIGHTS OF UNBORN CHILDREN IN ABORTION APPLICATIONS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona) moved that Bill C-236, to amend the Criminal Code (abortion and the unborn infant), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my purpose in presenting this bill to parliament is to advance sincerely a solution to the abortion dilemma today. I am proposing a way to protect the rights of the unborn child when a therapeutic committee is considering an application for an abortion. It is not my intention to fan the flames of emotion in this most emotional and difficult subject. Rather, I offer my bill as a reasonable and constructive approach to the growing desire on all sides of the House to find a way to limit abortions to the proper application of the Criminal Code which permits abortions when a mother's life or health is endangered.

To put my bill in its proper context, we must look at how our present dilemma has developed. It is surely too much to hold parliamentarians responsible for the desensitivity to life that we see in the world condition today. But it is not asking too much to have us consider here—in the highest court in the land—the basic nature of man. This, in fact, is history's most recurrent debate. But it now has a new urgency because of scientific developments, unsuspected a generation ago, that enable us to choose life or death. These developments are hastening the erosion of a traditional ethic which placed great emphasis on the intrinsic worth and equal value of every human life, regardless of its stage of condition; and substituting a new ethic based on utilitarianism.

Deep problems of public morality have been opened up by the scientists. It is not only theologians and behaviourists who must respond, but also those who make the laws that will themselves reflect the prevailing values. The question is not whether values are going to determine the implementation of scientific development but which values—or whose values.

We now have biochemical knowledge about the human mind and new drugs and techniques for producing profound changes in the human personality. Psychologists and behaviourists are leading us into a world in which human beings can be moulded, manipulated, and virtually programmed to produce a computerized result. The skills of basic medicine itself are now so sophisticated that talk of "putting together" a human being using the parts of others is not science fiction.

The results are marvellous: children with physical defects are now saved from what formerly would have been certain death.

The results are baffling: the aging clocks in the body will be able to be controlled, adding many years to longevity and thereby changing the complexion of society.

The results are evil: the desire for human perfection has produced a mentality that would do away with life that cannot measure up to arbitrary standards.

In short, medicine and science have raced into the age of discontinuity. Ethics and the law straggle behind. Nothing is clear. We spend millions on medical research to cure fatal diseases, and pass laws that permit the destruction of unborn children.

Yet, at the root of our social and legal system is the shared conviction that each human life has a unique value that cannot be measured.

Only in the past decade or two has there been a countermovement against the accepted belief that a human life has a unique value. Those who advocate abortion on demand are prepared to refuse the life of the unborn child legal recognition and to have it disposed of, because it is immature. Their attitude reflects a disturbing hostility and callousness toward the weak and helpless. This mentality does not stop at excluding the unborn from the human family. Increasing numbers are proposing that the senile, the incurably ill, and the deformed should be able to be killed with or without their permission.

The position that our law takes on abortion indicates the position it will take on euthanasia, genetic engineering, cloning, and all of the different human life problems facing our society in the years ahead. Those who argue for the unborn child's right to life are arguing not only for the unborn child but for the civil right to life of every human being including the mentally ill, the aged, the genetically incompetent. If the law abandons the protection of the civil rights of the innocent child in the womb, it will one day abandon its protection of the civil right to life of the mentally incompetent, the senile, and the hopelessly ill.

Supporters of abortion often argue that the baby in the womb is not a human but merely a piece of tissue attached to the mother. If there were any scientific doubt of the humanity of the unborn—which there is not—surely the burden of proof would rest with those who would deny the humanity of the unborn. Even if there were doubt, it would have to be acknowledged that the wisest, most prudent policy would be to give the benefit of the doubt to those whose humanity is questioned.

Actually the development of the individual in the womb is extremely rapid. The heart begins beating within 21 days of conception; blood vessels and circulating blood, a backbone, skeletal system and brainwaves are traceable by 43 days; then over the next few weeks rudimentary organs, liver, kidneys and digestive tract, arms and legs, fingers and toes, eyes, ears and mouth are formed. At the very moment of fertilization all the unique genetic characteristics are determined: eye, skin and hair colouring, height and bone structure, intellectual potential and inherited emotional makeup. From the time of conception 46 chromosomes are present, 23 from each parent. This is the chromosomal development defined by biologists as that of a normal human being. This small individual requires only nutrition and normal conditions in order to develop in the full pattern of human life.

That there is rampant abuse of Canada's abortion law seems to me indisputable. In 1969 the Criminal Code was amended in an omnibus bill. Section 251 permitted an accredited hospital therapeutic abortion committee to allow an abortion when the continuation of a woman's pregnancy "would be likely to endanger her life or health". It is very clear from the debates in parliament, and from the reasons given by the government on introducing the bill, that the new law was meant to be restrictive, to be applied when there were genuine cases of medical need.

As an editor, I wrote at the time that the new law was so loosely written that it would open the door to abortion on demand. But in the climate of 1969, a time of questioning of old values, the abortion section of the omnibus bill passed easily.

What happened? In 1970, the year after the new law was passed, there were 11,152 recorded abortions in Canada. By 1976 the number had jumped to 54,536, resulting in an abortion rate of 14.9 per cent. In that seven year period, there were 276,112 abortions in Canada. I ask you to take note of that figure—more than an quarter of a million abortions in Canada since the present law came into effect. With shame and sadness I note that in certain hospitals today the number of abortions now equals or exceeds the number of live births.

It is ludicrous to suggest that the state of health of pregnant women in Canada was five times worse in 1976 than in 1970. Yet there were five times as many abotions. The law, strictly interpreted, permits abortions only when the mother's life or health is endangered. It is straining credibility to suggest that it is more dangerous to be pregnant in the three richest provinces of British Columbia, Ontario, and Alberta where the abortion rate is far higher than in any other province.

Obviously the interpretation of the word "health" is so wide as to throw the law into disrepute. Abortions are being performed because a growing number of women are deciding that they do not want to carry their child to term. An unwanted pregnancy has been interpreted by many hospital abortion committees as a threat to health. Thus, abortion in these hospitals has become a necessary medical service available on demand.

As the abortion rate escalates, abortion becomes more socially acceptable and even accepted. Thus an operation legalized, because there are genuine cases of conflict of rights between an unborn child and its seriously ill mother, has been seized upon by popular morality for social advancement. The more widespread the practice becomes, the more tolerant society becomes. This is a clear reflection of the lack of public commitment to human life as the highest priority.

Yet there is a strong and growing movement in Canada that wants the abortion spiral stopped. Who can forget that day just over three years ago when the Alliance for Life brought to parliament a petition with one million signatures of Canadians urging a tightening of the abortion law? It was the largest petition ever presented to parliament.

The only response of the government was to set up the Badgley committee to enquire into the administration of the law. It was a foregone conclusion that the committee would find inequitable administration, since only 258 of Canada's 783 hospitals have abortion committees. What ought to have been highlighted are the continuing abuses of the law. Badgley found that most women who had abortions in Canadian hospitals were considered by their physicians to be in good physical health. As for the mental health of the women being in jeopardy, a continuing travesty of justice is occurring. The Badgley report at page 212 reads as follows:

> Many physicians whom the committee met on its visits to hospitals across Canada openly acknowledged that their diagnoses for mental health were given for purposes of expediency and they could not be considered as a valid assessment of an abortion patient's state of mental health.

This situation is deeply disturbing. We have a law in place to protect women in cases of serious medical risk to pregnancy, yet the vast majority of abortions being performed are attempts to cope with social problems. In many cases the social problem is serious, but abortion is not the way to deal with it because abortion harms everyone involved and brutalizes society.

The Badgley report was presented to parliament. Thereupon the federal government tossed the ball to the provinces, which have the responsibility of administering the Criminal Code. It urged the province to set up women's clinics to counsel on a full range of health problems, including abortion. More services for women and families, including day care, certainly are needed. I urge the federal and provincial governments to put family well-being at the centre of their policies. Unfortunately, under the guise of making social services more equitable across Canada, the government is widening indirectly the access to abortions. Services by themselves are an insufficient answer to what is essentially a matter of law.

Abortion is not a private matter. The destruction of human life, even incipient or developing human life in the womb, can never be considered a private matter under our law. Abortion is nothing less than a question of civil rights. The unborn child has a civil right to life, and it is the duty of the state to protect the unborn child's civil rights.

What should now be done? The answer is found by going back to the Canadian Bill of Rights which was passed in 1960, wherein it reads:

> In Canada there have existed and shall continue to exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex, the following human rights and fundamental freedoms, namely (a) the right of the individual to life . . .

The bill of rights continues:

> —there shall be no cruel and unusual treatment or punishment, and no person shall be denied his rights without a fair hearing.

On the question of who is a person, the World Health Organization of the United Nations in 1948 urged respect for human life "from the moment of conception". In 1959 the United Nations adopted the Declaration of the Rights of the Child based on the following preamble:

> Whereas the child, by reason of his physical and mental immaturity needs special safeguards and care, including appropriate legal protection, before as well as after birth . . .

Let me underline that closing clause, "before as well as after birth".

Either we are serious about those declarations or we are not. In my mind, Section 251 of the Criminal Code simply is incompatible with the Canadian Bill of Rights. At the very least it should be amended to insist medical proof be established that the mother's life seriously is endangered before permission for abortion is given. When a therapeutic abortion committee considers an application for abortion, there should be a legally appointed guardian present to represent the rights of the unborn child. By instituting due process, the decision would not be left to doctors alone. In addition, the decisions of the abortion committee should be subject to federal review.

In essence, that is what my bill proposes. I believe there is a consensus in this House that abortions be limited to cases where there is a genuine health need. In no way does my bill deprive a woman of an abortion where there is a conflict of rights between her life and the child's. In fact, civil rights in our country would be improved by a device which weights the interests of the unborn infant alongside those of the mother.

The essence of the bill provides a spokesman for the infant's rights at a therapeutic abortion committee hearing. That spokesman could be the father of the child, if he is cohabiting with the mother; the parent or guardian of the mother, if she is under the age of 16; or the official guardian. The consent of the defender, who would in most cases be the official guardian, would be required before an abortion certificate could be issued. The defender could withhold consent by making out an affidavit affirming that he believes in good faith the danger to the health of the mother is not sufficiently grave as to warrant an abortion. Provision is made for an immediate appeal to a federal court which could allow the abortion, if the court finds the danger to health sufficiently grave.

I urge hon. members to give favourable consideration to this bill, or at the very least to have its subject matter sent to an appropriate committee for study. My bill is moderate, firm, and corrective in nature. It appeals to all fair-minded people and establishes a common ground on an issue which customarily divides us. It enhances civil rights and extends the progress of our civilization. Finally, as we prepare for the International Year of the Child in 1979, there can be no finer action by this parliament than a simple, clear measure of law aimed at protecting the most defenceless of all children, the unborn.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1722)

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche), through his private member's bill, an act to amend the Criminal Code (abortion and the unborn infant) has brought before the House of Commons a very important matter. As the hon. member knows, as do other hon. members, abortion is a very controversial matter. As the hon. member has said, it is a very emotional subject as well. In any event, it is my view, and I am sure that of others, that the present Criminal Code provisions should at least prevail. I would suggest to the hon. member that it is somewhat unfair to lump euthanasia, mental incompetence, senility and mortal illness together with abortion. They are all separate matters, and the hon. member is clouding the issue when he does that.

We know there are some abuses in respect of abortion laws, and this is something that definitely must be corrected. As the hon. member knows, it is not government policy to have abortion on demand, even though that may be the way it appears to the hon. member.

There have been many more abortions in the past few years. I would suggest to the hon. member that certainly the increase in part at least is the result of our permissive society and not because of the present law. In fact, the increase may be in spite of it. The hon. member has, however, made very serious representations which I know will receive every consideration.

Some background to the present perspective of the government in regard to abortion may be of interest to hon. members. It was in 1969 that parliament passed the omnibus justice bill, legislation which included an amendment to the Criminal Code to provide therapeutic abortion if, in the opinion of a hospital therapeutic committee, the health of the mother was at risk. This provision followed prolonged discussion in the standing committees of this House and representations from a very great number of professional and non-governmental organizations concerned with adapting Canadian law to Canadian contemporary circumstances. Hon. members should remember that the 1969 provision did not and does not require the setting up of therapeutic abortion committees in a hospital, it merely sets down a procedure in the instance the option is taken up.

It is useful to recall, as well, the passage in 1969 of what some hon. members called the "omnibus health bill". Included in this legislation, markedly less comprehensive than its counterpart omnibus justice bill, was a provision removing the restrictions on the sale of, and dissemination of information about birth control and family planning products. Subsequent amendment to the Food and Drugs Act and the Food and Drug Regulations permitted advertising to the general public and the sale of contraceptive drugs and contraceptive devices, excepting drugs which would be supplied only on prescription, and intrauterine devices which required medical administration. It is upon the foundation of these 1969 initiatives, the abortion provision in the omnibus justice bill and the family planning provision of the omnibus health bill, that the policy of the Government of Canada now rests.

In consideration of representations from many professional and non-governmental organizations, the government decided in 1975 to appoint the Committee on the Operation of the Abortion Law, an expert panel, with Dr. Robin F. Badgley as its chairman. We should note the terms of reference of this committee which are "to conduct a study to determine whether the procedure provided in the Criminal Code for obtaining therapeutic abortions is operating equitably across Canada".

The committee embarked on a wide ranging and comprehensive examination of its task, relying for its conclusions on, among other sources, hospital site visits, a national hospital survey, a survey of hospital staff, a national physician survey, a national population survey, and a study of out of country abortion services which have been utilized by some Canadian women. The report and its comprehensive information base are very impressive; hon. members should examine the report very carefully in light of the interest and concern expressed about the present abortion law, both in the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona's bill now before the House and by the public at large.

The findings of the Badgley committee merit consideration by all members of this House. Let me quote three of the major findings from the summary of the report prepared by the committee as follows:

> No consensus for major changes in the law. Most Canadians were neither in favour of removing abortion from the Criminal Code nor of refusing therapeutic abortions under any circumstances. Their complaint was with the way the law was working.
> Law not operating equitably. The procedure provided in the abortion law for obtaining therapeutic abortions is not operating equitably across Canada. There are sharp disparities in the distribution and accessibility of therapeutic abortion services and unreasonable pressure on some physicians and hospitals. The burden of the inequitable operation of the abortion law tends to fall on women who are less well educated, who have lower incomes, and who live in smaller centres or rural areas with no direct access to hospitals that provide abortion services.
> Abortion law itself not in equitable. The 1969 amendment to the abortion law resulted in a sharp reduction in illegal abortions. In addition, there was substantial reduction in deaths resulting from attempted self-induced or other illegal abortions. Provincial regulations and the practices of hospitals and the medical profession rather than the abortion law itself have lead to the inequities in its operation. The law is specific in setting out the procedure to be followed to obtain a therapeutic abortion and its definition of guidelines is broad enough to accommodate the circumstances under which it might be considered necessary to obtain an induced abortion.

In light of these and other findings of the Badgley committee the government has, in this House and elsewhere, stated its present policy in unequivocal terms. We on this side are not prepared to change the law at the present time. As the report makes clear, the major problems at present are not with the existing law but rather with its application by the provinces and the hospitals. Consonant with this position, discussions about equitable operation of the law took place at the federal-provincial conference of ministers of health last June. Some provinces indicated that they had established study groups to review this very question.

It should also be clear that the government, like the Badgley committee, can detect no consensus on proposed changes to the present Criminal Code provisions on abortion. Consonant with this realization, the government is willing and able to assist the provinces to become more active in establishing and nurturing effective family planning and family life education programs, to the end that recourse to the provisions of the Criminal Code will be minimized. The findings of Badgley should alert us, if no one else, to the needs and possibilities in the area of preventive governmental action: family planning, family life education, and sex education.

The Department of National Health and Welfare has been active in the area of family planning since 1970, and it is hoped resources will allow us to continue to present scale of activities. Since receipt of the Badgley report, and following upon last June's conference of health ministers, officials of the department have held discussions with representatives of the professional associations of doctors, nurses, social workers, pharmacists and teachers. These representatives have accepted the task of informing their colleagues on needs and possibilities for the training of health, education and welfare professionals in the preventive sphere.

Also recently, the family planning division of the Department of National Health and Welfare has granted subsidies for training sessions in family planning to the national voluntary associations active in this area of preventive health and welfare. In addition, the department's active information program directed to the public at large has increased its output of publications both in bulk quantities to associations and in response to individual requests.

The federal government has shown concern for the well-being of Canadian families and, in particular, children, by taking responsibility for a variety of social and economic programs including family allowances, unemployment insurance, survivor's benefits, veteran's benefits, services to native people, and a number of cost-shared programs with the provinces in the areas of health and welfare services. I am sure those are well known to the hon. member.

With reference to the involvment of the Department of National Health and Welfare, and as illustration of this concern, the Canada Assistance Plan Act, introduced in 1966, guaranteed an income support measure for persons in need, and a range of welfare services to those in need. One objective of the plan is to provide families with a variety of services such as personal counselling, including marriage and family counselling, and community development in order to stabilize and support them as a unit.

Federal contributions under the Canada Assistance Plan for welfare services totalled $168 million in 1976-77. An additional $65 million was contributed to child welfare costs. Over the years the largest proportion of these funds went toward the cost of maintaining persons including children in homes for special care; the next largest budget item being child welfare. The 1976-77 estimates approved by parliament have committed $3.3 million for family allowances and an additional $2 million for family assistance.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the provinces have recently been offered a block financing arrangement for social services in lieu of the conditional shared cost approach associated with the social services bill tabled on June 20. The block financing approach has been adopted and the provinces will have more latitude in deciding upon those services which may be funded with the assistance of the federal contribution. However, federal legislation, irrespective of which financial approach is adopted, will clearly specify that federal funds are intended to improve services to certain target groups in order to integrate them into the broader community. Under both financial approaches it will be the prerogative of the provinces to establish the criteria for eligibility as well as for the specific services which will actually be provided.

One of the specific purposes of increased federal financing would be to encourage expansion of children's services in Canada. For example, the new financing arrangement compared to the Canada Assistance Plan will include funds to share in the provincial costs of preventive and developmental services for children.

Preventive services are intended for both parents and children, to support parents in their parenting role, to help children who are at risk because they are living in a problematic situation creating the circumstances that could lead to a state of neglect or the need for protection.

Developmental services, on the other hand, are intended to assist parents who have children with extraordinary needs and lack the ability to function normally within their homes, schools and/or communities. Their needs cannot be reasonably met by their own families, and they may be living in or outside their own homes. Children with extraordinary needs are intended to include children such as the hyperactive child, and acting-out child, the withdrawn and antisocial child, the autistic child, the emotionally disturbed and socially retarded child, the handicapped, mentally retarded and socially disadvantaged child, the preschool child with learning disabilities, the disabled and handicapped children who have been rehabilitated to their maximum potential but still have a continuing need for residential care, and other children experiencing serious difficulty in functioning normally.

There are many other services under the new legislation that have an effect on the lives of children including day care services, rehabilitation services and services to communities.

The department is also involved in quality prenatal and infant care, it encourages poison control centres and monitors birth defects across Canada. A number of research projects have been supported and extensive information has been provided free of charge to the public at large. Currently, we are supporting projects ranging from research into genetics to evaluating the impact of psychiatric consultation on the education of emotionally disturbed children.

The department established in October 1975 the adoption desk at the request of the provinces which facilitates the placement of children across provincial boundaries through a central registry of children and potential adoptive parents. The desk also provides to the provinces a co-ordination and liaison service in international adoptions. To date 100 children have been placed interprovincially through the desk. Approximately 75 international adoptions are currently being co-ordinated by the desk.

The department also has an interest in the area of preventing child abuse and neglect. I am sure that hon. members are aware that the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs published its report to the House of Commons on child abuse and neglect in 1976. As a result of the findings of the committee, and as an illustration of its concern for the problems of child abuse and neglect, the department has undertaken a number of activities, including the insertion of a flyer on the subject of child abuse and neglect in the March 1977 family allowances cheques, and has purchased a number of audio-visual materials on child abuse which are co-sponsored in a series with the Challenge for Change program of the National Film Board of Canada and the Tree Foundation of Canada.

There is one more federal activity I would like to discuss today, the forthcoming Year of the Child slated for 1979. Canada participated in the consensus reached at the United Nations to establish a year set aside for children so that countries might focus on their own children and examine their status. The federal government has contributed $100,000 toward the maintaining of a secretariat at the United Nations for this purpose.

In recent years, with the increasing sensitization of the needs of women and working mothers in particular, a number of improvements were implemented. A major change was the granting of paid maternity leave, up to 15 weeks under the unemployment insurance program. Claimants must have 20 or more weeks of insured employment in the preceding year. The benefits are the same as for regular unemployment benefits.

A second important support to parents are day care services. In Canada, these are funded as a welfare service under the Canada Assistance Plan Act for persons in need. The federal government reimburses up to 50 per cent of the costs to the provinces of providing welfare services. The cost-sharing provisions for day care services have been made more generous than for some other welfare services.

The programs are designed to ensure that all residents of Canada have access to needed medical and hospital care on a prepaid basis. The Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Program, which started in 1958, has mandatory in-patient care as well as elective out-patient services, which vary somewhat from province to province. At this time, all provinces and the two territories are participating in the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Program.

Other services important to the family as a whole are health services and adequate housing. Adequate housing plays a most important part in the well-being of Canadians, particularly children. Under the National Housing Act the federal government promotes construction of new houses, repair and modernization of existing dwellings and improvement of Canadian housing and living conditions. The prime thrust of the federal legislation is to provide adequate accommodation for citizens on fixed or limited incomes.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member during private members' hour, but I find it very difficult, as I believe many other members do, to relate what he is saying to Bill C-236 which is before the House. Surely the rule of relevancy has to apply and I would ask Your Honour to so rule.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): When the hon. parliamentary secretary resumes his speech I would ask him to relate his remarks to Bill C-236.

Mr. Robinson: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I think my remarks are relevant. I do not have to refute everything the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona has stated. I am merely adding to his remarks and I think mine are relevant. In any event I was just finishing.

The fact remains that it is our belief that couples should have free access to information and services to enable them to have the children they want when they want them. The government's interest in supporting families on the one hand, and its recognition that couples have the right to decide the size of their families on the other, are seen as complementary policies that have as their end product the maintenance of a healthy society.

Mr. Roche: I rise on point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask whether the hon. parliamentary secretary will accept a question.

Mr. Robinson: Certainly.

Mr. Roche: I should like to ask the hon. member who has just given the government position on abortions whether he is prepared to recommend that the subject matter of Bill C-236 be sent to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have the authority to make such a recommendation to this House at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Aren't you a member of parliament?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp).

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) preceded me on the list of speakers on second reading of this bill. I wonder if Your Honour would care to recognize him before recognizing me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen).

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) taking the floor. He and I are of one spirit in this matter with the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche). I want to begin by complimenting the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona for bringing this measure forward. It is a subject that easily becomes very shrill and strident. He is seeking a solution to a problem that concerns a great many Canadians, one which I believe has been the subject of great abuse on both sides of the argument. I want to compliment him on his initiative.

There are two problems with the whole subject of abortion, abortion committees and abortion clinics. The first is that we ask abortion committees in our hospitals to make decisons that fundamentally they are not trained to make. These people are specialists. They may be trained gynecologists or obstetricians, the best in their field, but they are not necessarily trained to make some the non-technical decisions that frequently have to be made.

I might add parenthetically that, if we want to talk about therapeutic abortions and bring them into the perspective of statistics that are current nowadays, last year, for example, there were 60,000 therapeutic abortions. I cannot imagine that there are 60,000 seriously ill women walking around this country. And when we look at the 12,000 teenage abortions, we are thinking of 12,000 seriously ill teenagers walking around. Can we seriously consider that all of these have been therapeutic abortions? This simply supports the point that we are asking committees to make decisions that are outside their expertise. I am not taking away from their brilliance or their competence in their area. I am saying that the university medical schools are not training our doctors, gynecologists and specialists to ask questions relative to this whole area. The difficult questions are not ones of technique; rather the difficult questions of life today are questions of morality and ethics.

I would now like to illustrate another point. Some months ago I was travelling home on a plane. I sat beside a gentleman and soon after engaging in conversation with him I learned he was a brilliant man in the field of economics. So I am illustrating my point from two other disciplines. This gentleman had received his Ph.D. in economics from the University of Chicago. He had been a consultant in finance in some of the highest offices in that area. He has consulting offices in Vancouver, Ottawa and in the Middle East and obviously he is a very proficient person in his field. He said to me "You know, when it comes to the difficult questions in life, I have to turn to the church."

This was simply illustrating the point that the technical questions are not necessarily the difficult ones in life. The really difficult ones are those on ethics and morality. As I said before, I am not taking away from the brilliance or the expertise of the people who are sitting on the abortion committees. I am saying that they have been trained in an area which is not within their expertise.

We are moving in our society into a world of specialization, and specialization by definition means abstraction. As soon as one moves into the area of abstraction one necessarily by definition moves away from the area of universality. How can a person who abstracts be a specialist and be a universalist at the same time? That is beyond me. We are asking these Canadians to deal with problems that are very difficult.

In this last generation we have moved in an area of technology that has been totally anticipatory. By our technology we have put people in space and on the moon. We have moved them into an area where it is impossible to experience what these people would have to go through as they moved out in space. All of this has to be anticipated by science and technology, taking into account all the physical laws that would be brought into play. We have done this without flaw. These are not problems of technology. We have the technology. The questions we have to ask are the moral and ethical ones.

When we move into the area of rationalism, inevitably we move into a field that violates human rights. I will illustrate that point by reading a letter from a parent who wrote to me from Langley, British Columbia. If we take a totally rational view of abortion, we bring into play such things as cost, economics, statistics and population growth. These are all statistical, rational questions. But there are some other questions that have to be asked. This father wrote to me as follows:

> I had contact with the executive secretary of... in fall, 1975. It was in connection with the pregnancy of my 17 year old daughter who very much wanted an abortion. She was able to obtain it by attending a... clinic in North Vancouver who referred her to a gynecologist who performed in the Vancouver General, less than two weeks after the initial contact at the clinic. It is my view that my daughter was able to obtain an abortion simply because she wanted it. The abortion committee at VGH was a rubber stamp of the gynecologist's recommendation and no counselling was provided for this teenager regarding the drastic action she was taking aginst the new life inside her, either at the... Clinic nor at the VGH nor by the gynecologist.
> The interview I had with the... secretary was one of many I had with professionals and officials in the health & welfare community in Vancouver. I wanted the answer to the question "Why was it necessary to end the life of this fetus?" Of course I was told I had no right to interfere. One of the many to tell me this was the woman at... I brought up the matter of counselling and she gave me a very nice talk on what should have been said to her. I informed her my daughter told me no one had talked to her about anything except the arrangements, times, places etc., and about her condition—number of weeks of pregnancy, etc. The woman said it was strictly between this girl of minor years and her doctor. She then attempted to inquire about my religion. Apparently, from her attitude I think she assumed I was Roman Catholic. I told her I would not tell her my religion but that I wasn't R.C.
> I would say further that the people who were so interested in this girl and who supported her in this unnatural and inhuman act, when it was done, disappeared completely from her view and have never inquired of her wellbeing since. They ought to know her troubles were not solved by the "operation".

Here is a case where the father of a teenage girl had his legitimate legal rights overruled by somebody who took a totally rational approach to this very human problem. I illustrate further that rationalism becomes totally irrational. In the report of an agency that contacted all members of parliament on this subject was a quotation from the Badgley report. In this agency's report it said:

> The report also estimated that in 1974 Canadians spent 58 cents per capita on the costs of therapeutic abortions against $1.61 for normal childbirths and 24 cents earmarked for federal and provincial family planning programs.

I wonder if we are prepared as a people to regard this issue in dollars and cents terms and to highlight rationality of the whole approach. I put that in juxtaposition to the report I read in Time magazine of this week entitled "Fishy Reprieve—The snail darter wins—for now". This article deals with the supreme court decision in the United States. I quote:

> Last week the U.S. Supreme Court ruled 6 to 3 in favor of the snail darter's right to life.

In this case there are 10,000 three-inch fish who live in the reservoir area of a dam. They have been given the right to life by the Supreme Court decision. This dam costing $116 million woud have provided sustenance for thousands of people throughout its irrigation and drainage area. This project was shelved because of 10,000 three-inch fish. The report goes on to say:

> Indeed, the decision could affect at least eleven other projects, including the proposed $690 million Dickey-Lincoln Dam in Maine, which would endanger the Furbish lousewort, a rare plant that resembles the snapdragon.

It seems to me that this country is getting completely out of whack. When we consider in dollars and cents terms that a therapeutic abortion and information about therapeutic abortions costs only 58 cents per capita whereas a live birth costs $1.61, I cannot help but believe we are getting into a world of absurdity with human life being determined in that sense.

I commend the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona for looking for an answer to this problem which affects the morality of all of us. There were 60,000 abortions performed last year and the projection is for an equal number this year. I compliment the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona on looking for a solution to provide for the protection of human life of the yet unborn child.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, may I thank you or your indulgence previously when you recognized the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen). I will be very brief. I commend the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) and the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock for their contributions.

I had an opportunity at previous times in this House to speak on this issue. Those of us in this House who believe so deeply in the issue of the right to life have been silent too long. Hopefully we will speak out more boldly in this forum and every other forum available to us.

I have again read the debate of 1969, the debate on the change to the Criminal Code in the omnibus bill. The spirit that prevailed was that abortions could be granted where the health or life of the mother was seriously in danger. No member of this House, some nine years later, can argue that 60,000 therapeutic abortions fits the definition of 1969 and the law passed by this House at that time.

The fact remains that abortions in many areas have become abortions on demand. Why? I shudder to think that in our society, with the economic well-being that we have, that we can suddenly trundle out the argument that, economically speaking, the unwanted child will be such an economic drain on the family that the child's life must be destroyed.

All of us have had experience where people in much poorer circumstances than the average person today took children who were not their own, adopted them and made them their own. Today they are citizens. While there were economic hardships, the joy of helping someone along the path of life surely outweighs any decision to destroy life. Therefore, the economic argument just is not valid. I do not see how any person in this House can argue the economic concept.

The hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) argued that we should not tie in abortions in the large numbers which we see in our society today with social engineering, the removal of the aged and the infirm. Why is he so sure that society that can rationalize removing the life of the unborn person, having determined it has the right to remove that life, will never make the decision to remove life at the other end of the age spectrum? How can he make the assertion that that will not happen?

What it comes down to is that it is a moral issue. If we believe that life is sacred and comes from God, how come the state has the right through its agents, members of parliament, to determine that we can remove that sacred life? I ask the hon. member how he can guarantee that, in a society which is recklessly hurtling down the immoral road, life will not become so cheap that it will in fact become worthless?

Next year we will have the International Year of the Child in commemoration of the twentieth anniversary of the signing of the Charter of Children's Rights at the United Nations. What greater gift can we make than to re-examine the abortion law and give the hope of life to 60,000 Canadians so that they may not be added to the one quarter million who have died since 1969?

I thank the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona for bringing this topic before the House. More important, I plead with the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore to take this question back to his government to see whether they will have the subject matter go to the committee where we can discuss it further.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I will take only one or two minutes so as not to run the risk of talking out this important bill. I willingly add my voice in support of the bill. I compliment and congratulate the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) on bringing in this bill.

We as a parliament should concern ourselves with the most basic human right of all; that is, the right to life. Last year alone in Canada 60,000 human beings were denied this right through the abuse of the present law. It is inadequate. In my humble opinion, this is nothing short of a national disgrace. We should not base our moral standards in this country on those of any other country of the world. We should establish our own moral standards based upon the Judeo-Christian ethic. There can be no other way to measure the moral standards of a society. I commend the hon. member and urge hon. members to have the subject matter of this bill referred to committee so that it can be studied further.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Savard).

[Mr. Epp.]

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact there is only one minute remaining, I think you should put the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. An hon. member stood to be recognized and I recognized him.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Savard (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, I think that legislation on abortion is proposing cumbersome measures on a procedure which appears to me to be within the medical jurisdiction. In view of the restrictions now provided in the Criminal Code, it seems to be unthinkable that in 1977 the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) is trying to limit the definition of the word health to an absence of physical indisposition whereas we all know that social and familial effects are recognized—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-48, to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend An act to amend the Customs Tariff, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have some comments to make on this bill. I wrote a letter recently to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) indicating I would have some observations to make. I have received considerable correspondence from people in my constituency who are seeking assistance from the federal government but are not getting any. There seems to be something missing in this bill. Perhaps hon. members will allow me to supply some background.

In 1973, the chief executive officer of a company in Perth, Ontario, known as International Silver was, along with some other entrepreneurs, considering setting up a new company. At that time about five million pairs of scissors were being imported into Canada each year. When I was first given this information I was surprised; I thought the number was greatly exaggerated. What did people use all those scissors for? Yet the statistics are there. Six million pairs of scissors are presently being imported, one million of which are of high quality, made of hot-forged steel, the rest a cold-stamped product, some of them used by children in kindergarten to cut things out. I suppose they break them all the time which is one of the reasons we import so many. Yet despite the size of the home market—every home, every office, every industry uses scissors—never in our history have scissors been manufactured in this country.

In December, 1973 a study was completed by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The tariff on imported scissors was 20 per cent. The department analysed the market and concluded it was a pretty good idea to manufacture scissors in this country. This study showed how much we were bringing in. There was no established domestic market.

The import analysis referred to the 20 per cent tariff. So in January of 1974, a month after they got this information, they were then far enough along the way, and they decided to go ahead. They incorporated the company, and between January of 1974 and March of 1974 they set out to raise capital. They spoke to the Eastern Ontario Development Corporation. With their shareholders they arranged for a line of credit at the banks. I want to emphasize that this is not a fly by night firm. It is not coming in as some of those we have supported under DREE with 20 per cent shareholder equity and so forth. These people arranged for shareholders to commit $450,000. The Eastern Ontario Development Corporation, an agency of the Ontario government, gave them an incentive loan of $497,000. They had a bank line of credit of $300,000. Over $1 million was being committed for the setting up of a plant.

In April of 1974 the building was started. Contracts were let to instal machinery. Things were going along very nicely through April, May and June, when boom, in July of 1974, just at the end of the election campaign of that year, it was announced that the Privy Council had passed Order in Council P.C. 1974-1416. That order in council was actually passed on June 20, 1974, but it was not promulgated in the press and in the Canada Gazette until July of that year. The order in council knocked down the most favoured nation tariff from 20 per cent to 15 per cent, thus allowing Italian, German and Finnish scissors to come in at 15 per cent.

Included at that time was the general preferential tariff for developing and underdeveloped countries. That was introduced as a result of the passage of Bill C-179 in the closing days of the 29th Parliament. I think that bill was passed in March of 1974. The tariff on Brazilian scissors coming into Canada was lowered to zero. In July of that year, just after hearing about this and before production started, the president and general manager of the company, Mr. Christopher, wrote to the government to complain.

Mr. Christopher indicated that a large volume of Brazilian scissors were imported into Canada and that they were made in a factory which is one of the largest scissors manufacturing plants in the world. It has some of the best technology, and it is very efficient. Assistance was requested starting from that time, and I will deal with that later. It was indicated that perhaps for three years that tariff would be helpful until the company got established and got costs down as the plant worked out its wrinkles. Since then it has been drawn down to two years, and there has been correspondence to the effect that it would be desirable to have that tariff back to 20 per cent for two years.

In September of 1974, just about eight weeks after the announcement of the tariff change, the plant was opened, the building was occupied and it was ready for production by January of 1975. The company was writing and pleading what I think is a very reasonable case for a new industry owned by Canadians, using Canadian capital, raw materials and workers, not for a tariff barrier which is more than we have had in the past or anything high, but just the barrier which was there when the report from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce was made in December of 1973.

The report contains some 20 pages. It deals with scissors, shears and trimmers, and at page 7, in section 3, it refers to production. It says that there are no Canadian manufacturers of scissors or shears, that imports can be equated with apparent domestic consumption, that one of the largest purchasers of scissors and shears for its own use is the federal government through the Department of Supply and Services, and that some of the department's foreign suppliers are experiencing difficulty in meeting promised delivery dates.

The report assesses the number of scissors coming into Canada in the year 1972. On page 8 it indicates the quantity to be 5,404,752 scissors. It indicates that in 1968 the number was 4,358,976. The report deals with quantities and dollar values for 1968, 1969, 1970 and 1971 and it ends up with the 12-month figure of 5,404,752 for 1972. At that time there had been a most favoured nation tariff of 20 per cent on scissors and shears, but it was free under the British preferential tariff. However, the company felt that there was no problem because of the quality and type of scissors which were coming from England. They were of the cold-stamped variety, and this company did not want to go into that production. It has never mass produced cold-stamped scissors. It produces high-quality hot-forged scissors, a quality product. The company felt that it could compete with that kind of product.

In July of 1974 the president of International Scissor indicated in a letter that he contacted people in Mexico and they told him that the operation was an extremely large one which produced cutlery, scissors and many other products. This was with reference to the Brazilian company. That company was started by the Germans after World War II under the name Hercules S.A. That company employs about 7,000 people, and it produces cutlery and things of that nature as well as scissors. On page 2 of a letter from Mr. Christopher we find the following:

> By breaking out the 15 per cent duty, it shows that a landed cost of $1.63 for a pair of scissors under the present set-up with the 15 per cent duty, 12 per cent sales tax, 40 per cent mark-up on selling price for the importer and a 50 per cent mark-up on the selling price for the retailer would make that pair of scissors go from $1.63 to $7.00. Conversely if the duty were removed and the importing price the same, that is $1.63, it would then make the selling price $6.05, so that you can see by removing the duty makes a difference of 95 cents in the selling price.

One must recognize however, that per unit the importer will make less profit, the retailer will make less profit by the very fact that the duty was not there and they certainly take a mark-up on that as well, and I am sure that the consumer will not benefit by the reduction of duty. This money will go into profits for the importer and retailer and all it does is make the imported product look more attractive than what the domestic product would look if we had the 15 per cent duty.

I don't think we're asking too much to have this duty maintained as we most definitely are going to need it, particularly in our start-up years, that is for the next couple of years.

● (2022)

That was a letter of July 15, 1974, urging the continuation of the tariff of 15 per cent, or recognizing it was down to 15 per cent under the most favoured nation tariff.

On January 22, 1975, writing to Mr. J. G. McEntyre, Mr. Christopher writes in part in the third paragraph:

Construction was started in April and concluded in October 1974.

He indicated that they were well along the way when the announcement came in July of 1974. He goes on to write:

When the initial investigation to set up this company was made, the duty on scissors was at that time 20 per cent, however, in mid-1974 changes were made that put severe pressure on this company that we had unfortunately not anticipated. The duty rate was reduced to 15 per cent making our ability to compete with off-shore products that much more difficult and also duty was removed completely on a long list of nations, particularly Brazil.

That country has one of the most advanced and largest scissor producing companies in the world, now they are allowed to send scissors to Canada without duty. Since this product is labour intensive it is easy to understand the difficulty we will encounter from that source.

In the next paragraph he goes on to say:

Obviously we would request any consideration that you could give this company in at least maintaining the existing duty rates until such time as we have had the opportunity of reaching a reasonable degree of efficiency. We also feel that products coming in from Brazil, a country that is in such an advanced state of productive capacity, duty free is certainly very detrimental to our ethics.

They continued with their process, and in March of 1975, writing to Mr. L. Loomer, director of tariffs, Department of Finance, Mr. Christopher said in part in paragraph 2:

In our approach to importers and distributors of scissors in Canada, we are running into virtually the same comments from all.

In the next paragraph, he says they are too high priced in comparison with the low price of the product brought in from off-shore. In the third paragraph of the letter he says:

Again, I wish to stress it is not our intention to endeavour to hide behind tariffs, however, we do recognize the absolute necessity of some form of protection until such time as we can develop this company into a viable operation. For the first time scissors will be made in Canada from Canadian raw materials, by Canadian workmen, using Canadian capital.

A copy of the letter was sent to the following officials: R. E. Foster, W. H. Chander, J. H. O'Connell, J. Stewart, and R. Catellier. At that time they enclosed an indication of what was happening in the scissor market. Whereas in the government import analysis done in December of 1973, Brazil was not included because that country was not a major factor at that time, the analysis shows that between 1969 and 1974, Brazil had increased its exports from 119,000 pairs to 262,000 pairs, an over 100 per cent increase. Italy, which has a cheaper model, has increased its exports from 639,000 pairs to 1,040,-000 pairs.

In a memo dated May 6, 1975 it is pointed out that Brazil has the largest and most up to date manufacturing industry of scissors in the world. It reads:

A company called Zivi was formed by German scissor technicians after the war, presumed to be Henckels of Solingen, however, there is no proof of any degree of ownership . . . distributed in Canada by Henckels (Canada) of Toronto.

International Scissor Limited goes on to state in the memo:

Quality of Brazil is very good. Quality of Italy is poor and they do not have a good reputation in the trade.

Apparently they have difficulties meeting some of their commitment dates, and their scissors are not as good. The memo goes on to read:

German scissors are comparable in quality and price to Canadian scissors. England produces more "cold formed" scissors and delivery of quality scissors from England is poor.

This was their assessment of the market at the time. They go on to say:

Singer Company which is probably the largest sales organization of scissors in Canada sell Henckels manufactured in Brazil. We have just been informed that Eaton's of Canada will in future feature only scissors purchased from Henckels of Canada imported from Brazil.

On May 14, 1975 International Scissor Limited received a letter from an importer named Lamplough Cutlery Ltd., in Montreal, which says the following in part in the second paragraph:

The idea of setting up manufacturing facilities to provide scissors in Canada is commendable. It is a household product used in every household in Canada as well as every office and industry.

In the third paragraph they say:

We intend to support your entry into the Canadian market to the fullest extent. As I pointed out to you this will be difficult as a result of the federal government decision in July of 1974 to reduce the tariff from 20 to 15 per cent and also to remove the duty completely from a long list of "Emerging Nations" . . .

The laid down cost of scissors from Brazil, without duty, is much lower than that from Italy with 15 per cent duty and the quality is superior.

They go on to say a little farther down in the paragraph:

I am sure you can see the unfair competitive position you are being forced into.

The last three paragraphs in that letter bear reading. They read as follows:

A lower duty structure than that which obtained when there was no scissor manufacturing facility in this country appears illogical. The free entry of scissors from a country boasting the largest and most modern scissor and cutlery facility in the world, appears ludicrous.

The lower level of duty will make your job difficult. The elimination of duty on cutlery from a low labour cost-high technology country such as Brazil will serve to retard the development of the industry in Canada.

I find it difficult to believe that our representatives in Ottawa had this as their goal.

On July 4, 1975, in a letter to Mr. R. E. Foster of Ottawa, the following is to be found in the fourth paragraph:

The more we look into this matter of imports and the reduction of tariffs the more I am becoming convinced that our only salvation for the establishment of an effective Canadian operation is to have all duties revert to the 20 per cent including Brazil. This represents somewhat of a change in my point of view since previously I thought we would be interested in just having Brazil removed from the emerging nation list.

However, imports from Italy seem to be on the increase as well as imports from Japan in the cushion handle scissor. This naturally will have a dramatic effect on our market if it continues its popularity as it has in the past 12 months.

We were scheduled to be represented in the Eaton's catalogue for spring and summer of 1976, however, this week we were advised by telephone they would not be featuring our product since they had decided to feature Brazilian merchandise supplied by Henckels. This naturally is a bitter disappointment for us especially when one is helpless in being unable to compete with the low prices from Brazil which are allowed into this country duty free.

On July 18, 1975, Mr. D. P. Messing, director of tariffs in the Department of Finance, stated as follows:

—we have written to J. A. Henckels Canada Limited requesting its views on your request to have the general preferential tariff removed on scissors imported from Brazil.

That admission is rather as if you were telling someone you were going to war against him and you will attack his flank. Of course they are going to object—this means half their profits. They are importers and naturally they would object. It would be unreasonable if they did not.

On August 6, 1975, Mr. Christopher, in writing to Mr. O'Connell, chief of the service industries machinery division of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, wrote the following:

While I have stressed repeatedly in my communications with various departments of the federal government that we do not intend to hide behind a duty but ask only consideration for the reimposition of the duties to 20 per cent until such time as we can get our feet on the ground and penetrate the Canadian market. This might take a very few years.

● (2032)

Subsequently I indicated in letters to the department that it would take two years. The letter of August 6, 1975 continued as follows:

An example of the problems we face is that we were scheduled to be represented in the 1976 spring and summer Eaton's catalogue but unfortunately we have now been informed we will not be represented in that catalogue as they have been able to buy scissors from Brazil at a more attractive price than we can offer them the Canadian product.

Continually they have attempted to approach the government. On August 12, 1975 Mr. Christopher wrote another letter which read as follows:

Unfortunately in the area of manufacturing Canada is the emerging nation relative to scissors not Brazil.

I personally feel this is a terrific blow to us as that would have been a sizeable portion of our production and to lose that right at the beginning was very disheartening. The prices that we had quoted Eaton's were extremely low, however, we were underbid by a company who could import from a nation that did not have to pay duty on their products coming into Canada. Not only is it harmful that there is no duty, but unfortunately, we as a Canadian manufacturer have to pay a much greater sales tax on our product than does the Brazilian importer. I can't see any fairness in that whatsoever.

Then he referred to two major accounts, Singer and Eaton's. Subsequently on page 3 the letter continued:

As a matter of interest below listed you will find the imports from Brazil from 1970 through April 1975 which does show a modest increase in the selling price of the product until 1975 when there was an $.08 per piece drop, taking it back to the 1973 level.

The letter contains a list of units from 1970 at 112,000 to 1974 at 261,707. The 1970 price is shown as 83 cents; 1971, 88 cents; 1972, 91 cents; 1973, $1.06; 1974, $1.15; and 1975, $1.07. At about this same time other concerns began to develop. On August 21, 1975, a letter from Mr. Messing, the director of tariffs for the Department of Finance, was directed to Mr. Sandford. In part it read as follows:

As we discussed in previous telephone conversations, the information received to date would lead us to believe that importations of scissors from Brazil in the forthcoming year would be about in line with those of previous years. However, I wish to advise you that we have since written to both Eaton's and Singer for their views on your request.

That was a request to have the tariff rejected. Henckels are making a bigger profit because they are making scissors cheaply, and are able to sell the product at a few cents cheaper than the Canadian product is available to consumers. Singer and Eaton's are also making a bigger percentage of profit.

On November 24, 1975 Mr. Christopher directed a letter to Mr. J. P. Connell, Deputy Minister of National Revenue, which read in part as follows:

Imports from some countries, particularly Italy, are seriously damaging our entry on the Canadian market. As a result of the extremely low prices of Italian scissors, I would request your assurance they are paying the duty on a valuation in accordance with the Canadian Customs Act.

The reason for this concern is that although there are difficulties on the production line, which is known by Canadian authorities in Italy, and although Italy has had a greater inflation rate, is required to pay more for its steel and labour wages are higher than those in Perth, according to the American Scissors Manufacturing Association after three years their scissors ended up being offered to consumers at approximately the same prices of 90, 91, 92 and 93 cents per unit. How that company could maintain those prices with Italy's inflation rate and higher wages is beyond imagination.

On December 5, 1975 a letter was directed to Mr. J. Loomer of the Department of Finance which read as follows:

Unfortunately for us, this has not happened and in our efforts to penetrate the Canadian market, we are continually discouraged by negative answers from buyers, resulting from adequate stocks of lower priced merchandise coming in from particularly Brazil and Italy.

The letter continued:

Very recently, we had the opportunity of quoting on scissors being purchased by an American distributor, however, we were more than surprised on learning the duty of scissors going into the United States was 22½ per cent plus ten cents per pair on scissors valued at over $1.75 per dozen.

The duty on American scissors coming to Canada is 20 per cent. In 1975 it was approximately 15 percent. The Americans have a much more protective tariff than Canadians. The difference in tariffs is hardly fair for Canadian industry.

On December 24, 1975, a letter was written to Mr. D. P. Messing, Tariff Division, Department of Finance which read as follows:

We had the opportunity of quoting on an order for export to the United States very recently, however, on investigation the duty just completely killed us. Believe it or not, exporting scissors to the United States commands a duty of 22½ per cent plus ten cents per pair. Protection like that we would love to have to get this company started.

The Americans protect their businesses, which results in the creation of jobs. The letter continued:

We recently received an export price list of product from Brazil, at the same time we're informed unofficially and verbally the Brazilian government was subsidizing their industry to the extent of 50 per cent of all sales made to the North American market. We can assume this would assist the Brazilian manufacturer in overcoming the high rate of duty going into the United States but would certainly be a windfall for any product shipped into Canada.

On December 24, 1975 this concern about the subsidization of the Brazilian low price was expressed. Continually this company has attempted to receive some recognition. On May 28, 1976, Mr. Christopher directed a letter to me which read in part as follows:

In the recent budget brought down by Mr. Macdonald, he did recognize our problem and the duty will go back on most-favoured nations from 15 per cent to 20 per cent effective June 30. This will be a help.

That assisted them in coping with the problems arising from Italian manufacturers. The Canadian manufacturer is more competitive than English, Finnish, German and Japanese manufacturers. They are not concerned about the scissors from Pakistan, Taiwan or Hong Kong. They are concerned about the high quality scissors from Brazil and Italy. The Italian quality is less than the Brazilian quality. Their main concern was really with Brazilian scissors, which were coming into the country duty free. The letter continued as follows:

The most damaging one to us is the free entry of scissors from Brazil and again since I talked to you on the phone we have had heartening discussions and I do expect a review of our situation by cabinet at a very early date.

I should like to refer to an inter-office memo of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce dated July 23, 1976. It was directed to the Chief, Latin America Division, Western Hemisphere Bureau. It was from the commercial officer and was in respect of anti-dumping. According to that document, import tariffs on scissors from Canada to Brazil are 155 per cent. In practice this means very little, because scissors are on the banned commodities list, and the government will not grant import licences even if they could be imported at 155 per cent. Also we find that there are local taxes on scissors in Brazil. There is an industrial products tax of 12 per cent and a mercantile circulation tax of 14 per cent. These are paid by the customer, and one by the manufacturer in respect of exports from these countries coming into Canada. They can claim a greater credit, to the extent of 26 per cent.

On August 17, 1976 he received a communication from Brazil indicating there was a tax problem there. In that letter we found out that the government was willing to investigate anti-dumping. There was an indication on September 3, 1976 that the information available would suggest there was not sufficient evidence to warrant initiating anti-dumping proceedings at that time. That letter ends up by stating that in the circumstances they are closing their file on this matter. This is a matter in respect of which they had just indicated they had knowledge that the Brazilian government was paying a subsidy of 26 per cent on these exports to Canada at a time when Canada was already allowing them to enter the country duty free.

There was some hope in December of 1976 when, through an error, the Minister of Finance issued a memo which was prepared in anticipation of a return to the 20 per cent level. It suggested that scissors from Brazil were to be returned to the 20 per cent duty classification and the preferential tariff would no longer be applicable. That was revoked by a subsequent press release one day later saying that one had been issued in error. Although they had anticipated this return to that level the cabinet ruled against it. Naturally this was a big blow to the company.

A letter from the then minister of industry, trade and commerce, the present Minister of Finance, explained the problem that the scissor company in Canada had in going to Brazil. He said this:

The present tariff on scissors exported to Brazil from Canada is 155 per cent plus a 100 per cent prior deposit of the F.O.B. value of the shipment at the point of export to be held for 360 days without interest and monetary corrections. In addition, due to Brazil's balance of payments difficulties, scissors are on the list of banned imports.

Let me point out that on April 21, 1977, in a letter to Mr. Connell, the Deputy Minister of National Revenue, in paragraph 3, Mr. Christopher, President of International Scissors, states:

We are being materially injured by these subsidized imports from Brazil which are allowed into this country duty free.

In the next paragraph he stated:

It had been brought to our attention by a government official that in addition to the elimination of domestic taxes, the Brazilian scissor industry was subsidized in the amount of 26 per cent by the Brazilian government. We do feel that this is very unfair competition and as a result Countervailing Duties should be imposed.

The next paragraph in the same letter states:

Another source of injury is the result of Italian imports coming into this country in hot forged scissors and the amount of 977,786 pair at an average value of 90 cents. Obviously the difference in price between the Brazilian scissors, which we understand are subsidized, and the Italian scissors surely indicates some degree of subsidizing by some form in Italy.

Perhaps this is speculation, but surely there is reason for some belief that this is in fact the case.

On May 3, 1977, in a letter to the Assistant Deputy Minister of the Department of Finance, Mr. R. Joyce, Mr. Christopher in the third paragraph asks for countervailing duties to be applied to the Italian scissors. He pointed out:

It will be noted the total imports of scissors dropped in 1976 from 5,142,000 to 4,573,000 pair. While the total market was down Italy increased from 884,512 to 977,786 pair and the average price dropped from .93 cents to .90 cents per pair. It is amazing this was possible in view of the increased cost of labour and material in 1976. How can this be possible without either selling at a much reduced value or subsidization of some form.

The final letter which I want to quote at this point is dated November 24, 1977. It is from Mr. Christopher and he states:

—I'm still being slaughtered by Italian imports whose price has not changed even though the dollar has been depressed and inflation runs rampant in Italy. Also the Brazilian situation is getting worse since Singer are selling more and naturally that means they are importing more.

I do feel that the United States certainly know how to protect their industry and that is very evident by the countervailing duties they have imposed on the Brazilians. Also another pill that is pretty hard to swallow is the fact that I have been trying to get in the U.S. market but the extra duties going into that country certainly hurt.

Those are extra duties as compared to the duties the United States companies pay on goods coming into our market.

Let me point out briefly that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, in a letter over the signature of "Alastair Gillespie," then the minister of industry, trade and commerce, dated July 16, 1975, stated:

We have provided financial assistance under the Machinery Program—

That amounted to about $8,000. The letter continues:

—and the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act.

That amounted to about $38,000. It goes on to state:

In addition, we undertook a comprehensive breakdown of scissor imports which helped them in assessing the Canadian market.

I have already referred to that. The federal government contributed money trying to help.

On another sheet I have here which was printed by the American Scissors Association it is indicated that in 1976 the hourly rates for workers in scissors factories in Monza, Italy, was $5.31, and the companies were having persistent assembly operation problems, whereas in Canada the hourly labour cost in Perth is $3.85 to $4.25. In spite of this the Italian scissors come in at a much lower rate, which certainly leads to speculation that in fact there may be subsidization by that government and that perhaps countervailing duties should be imposed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must inform him that his allotted him has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent? Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Dick: Thank you; I will try to be as brief as possible in wrapping up this matter.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I do hear some no's, so I cannot permit the hon. member to continue.

Mr. Dick: Perhaps I will finish this at a later stage. I regret that I was not given unanimous consent by members on the government side.

An hon. Member: You are the ones that withhold unanimous consent. You have to play the game.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Ethier in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Schedules 1 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

[English]

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will not take as much time as I did on second reading as I try to complete this matter. I know the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) will be very happy about that but I hope he does not mind that I tried to present the case. For four years small business has pleaded at every door it could and I have undertaken to try at this juncture as well.

It has been established that there was a possibility that countervailing duties could be imposed by Canada. On October 15, 1976, however, the Department of National Revenue, in a letter to Mr. Christopher, stated as follows:

I refer to your letter of September 16, 1976 in which you refer to the possibility that tax credits provided to manufacturers in Brazil might be subject to countervailing duties in Canada.

There is provision under Section 7 of the Customs Tariff Act for the Governor in Council to impose additional duty on imports that have been subsidized by the government of another country where the goods in question are of a class or kind made in Canada. However, to date, Canada has not invoked this legislation and no regulations to implement the law currently exist.

That section has been in existence for almost 20 years and we have never passed regulations nor promulgated it. This company by its persistence helped to bring about at least the implementation of section 7 and some provisions for countervailing duties in this country. It was as a result of that that in the first part of April, 1977, section 7 was proclaimed. A press release was issued and countervailing duty regulations were put into effect.

On May 11, 1977, a letter was sent to Mr. Christopher from the Deputy Minister of Revenue acknowledging receipt of his letter and continuing:

—concerning the alleged injurious subsidization of hot forged scissors originating in Brazil and Italy and imported into Canada.

Your request for an investigation pursuant to the recently promulgated countervailing duty regulations is presently under consideration—

The letter did not say they were going to make an investigation, just that it was under consideration. They then asked him to fill in 13 pages of forms which were very complicated compared with the simplicity of the forms required in the United States. On July 28, 1977, the deputy minister again wrote to Mr. Christopher as follows:

No evidence has been disclosed which would indicate that Italy is subsidizing its scissor industry.

There is some evidence of subsidization with respect to scissors originating in Brazil.

However, it has been noted that that country's share of the Canadian market is relatively small—

It had just about doubled in four years, Mr. Speaker, and the share was very large at the high quality end; in fact, it was the greatest competitor in the high quality end. The letter continued:

—and that there is a significantly larger volume of considerably lower priced Italian scissors entering Canada.

No doubt the quality is not the same. Later the letter stated:

Given these facts, I do not believe that there are sufficient grounds for me to cause a countervailing duty investigation to be initiated—

They did not even bother to investigate, Mr. Speaker. If they had investigated they would have seen a memorandum from the Department of the Treasury in Washington to the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject of the Brazilian export incentive programs, reviewing the fact that there were export incentives in terms of tax that put on a 17½ per cent countervailing charge plus the American tariffs for Brazilian scissors which were now 22½ per cent, plus ten cents per pair. For the same Brazilian scissors to come to Canada the tariff was zero. That just invites a flood of Brazilian scissors into this country.

Even the anti-dumping countervailing duty notices were published in the Federal Register on November 2, 1977. I have a copy of the Federal Register, volume 41; the relevant page is page 8634. If they had investigated they would have found as well the petition for countervailing duties on scissors and shears imported from Brazil submitted by the National Association of Scissors and Shears Manufacturers.

It is unfortunate that they did not have an investigation and did not impose countervailing duties on the excuse that the United States legislation was in effect and they could impose countervailing duties where Canada could not. That argument can easily be answered by the fact that Canadian legislation was in effect at the same time as the legislation in the United States. It was on our statute books, whether it was promulgated or not and whether we introduced the regulations at that time or not. I think we have an arguable case, yet this country is continually flooded with Brazilian scissors of exactly the same quality as Canadian scissors.

I note that the government did cancel a tariff reduction on March 21, 1975 on bicycles entering this country because of their adverse effect on Canadian production and employment. These manufacturers may go bankrupt if they continue to lose money every month, but they are persistent and want to get into this market and so keep trying. If they go bankrupt we will not have any such industry in Canada.

The preferential tariff on rubber footwear was suspended. This commodity again was imported in large measure from Brazil. The footwear industry was somewhat concerned and in order to protect jobs and capital invested in Canada the government acted. So we now have two precedents, cases where the government acted.

There was also a reintroduction of tariff on certain tires, so we have two and perhaps three examples of where, because of the potential loss of jobs and capital investment as well as the breakdown of industry in Canada, the government has assisted large companies. The ones I speak of are small entrepreneurs, however, having only about 20 to 40 employees. They cannot work to capacity because they cannot get government assistance.

An article in the Globe and Mail of June 24, 1977, read as follows:

Japanese producers of ball bearings and tapered roller bearings have told the European Economic Community that they are willing to make substantial price increases on all their EEC exports equal to the duty on the bearings, an EEC spokesman says.

● (2102)

So because of the effect that countervailing duties had there, this was to correspond with the dumping margins the EEC claims it found before introducing a 20 per cent countervailing duty on February 4.

This company has asked only for the assistance of the 20 per cent tariff in Brazil. They have asked for a thorough investigation of anti-dumping or possible countervailing duties from Italy. This action has not been taken as yet. They are a small company and they have been stretched to their maximum. This company has begged, it has pleaded, it has done everything except come here with all of its workers, kneel on its knees before parliament and ask for some assistance. What does small industry have to do in this country? The government has been paying it lip service. We have a Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) but what do small business have to do to get assistance? They do not want a 30 per cent, 40 per cent or 50 per cent tariff; they have asked for a return to the 20 per cent tariff which was the tariff they were told was in existence by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

This bill does not call for the reintroduction of that tariff, and I think this bill is lacking in that regard. I wish the minister had amended the bill to bring in this 20 per cent tariff. Without it we will probably lose more jobs in an area which already has 15 per cent unemployment. We will lose Canadian capital. We will lose technology which is being built up at quite a price. Small business is not being helped. The minister looks at me sort of askance. I would remind him that I sent a letter to him on June 19; I know he received it because he was kind enough to reply. I asked for the minister's assistance within cabinet to try to get the customs tariff reinstated. I wanted to plead this case and I felt that perhaps under Bill C-48 it would be the appropriate time to expose this matter. I hope the minister will help small business, and especially this particular one.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

INCOME TAX ACT AND EXCISE TAX ACT

OWNERSHIP AND OPERATION OF SMALL BUSINESSES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-59, to amend the Income Tax Act and the Excise Tax Act in matters relating to the ownership and operation of small businesses, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

[English]

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is unusual for a Minister of Finance to have one tax bill follow another as closely as is the case tonight. But I believe it indicates this government's sensitivity towards the need to encourage and preserve Canadian entrepreneurship.

The bill introduces a series of tax relief measures for small businesses to be added to the broad range of concessions already accorded to such enterprises through our federal tax structure.

Before I touch on the new measures I would like to outline some of the existing provisions that encourage small business development. The most important of the measures already in place is the low income tax rate for small Canadian-controlled private corporations. The tax rate on the first $150,000 of small business income is some 20 percentage points lower than that for large businesses. This preferential treatment is available as long as retained business income accumulated after 1971 does not exceed $750,000.

At current ratios of sales to taxable income, the low tax rate is typically available on the business income of firms with up to $1.5 million in sales and so benefits a large group of Canadian enterprises. Taken in conjunction with the recently enriched dividend tax credit of 50 per cent of dividends received, this measure provides three advantages.

First, the federal revenue forgone due to the low rate of corporate tax is estimated to be some $900 million in 1978. This is thus one of the richest and perhaps the single most significant incentive provided through the Income Tax Act. The reduced rate significantly enhances the after-tax cash flow available to these businesses to aid their expansion.

Second, as a result of the new dividend credit, the total corporate and personal income tax on small business income is approximately 10 percentage points lower than that applicable to other types of income, such as employment income or investment income, received directly by individuals.

Third, high income taxpayers enjoy a significant tax deferral on their income from incorporated small business. As long as the income is retained in the corporation it bears the low corporate rate of roughly 25 per cent, or 20 per cent in the case of manufacturing and processing profits. Only upon eventual distribution is tax payable at the higher individual rates. Even these eventual distributions now bear a much lower tax rate due to the new enriched dividend tax credit.

Another important provision of benefit to small business is the guaranteed capital gains treatment. As a result of the 1977 budget, venture investment-type companies which generally invest in the shares of small and medium-sized concerns can elect to have guaranteed capital gains treatment on their investments. This removes a significant degree of uncertainty that existed concerning the gains on the eventual sale of their shares, and thus removes an impediment to venture funding operations.

The 1977 budget removed or greatly simplified a large body of complex tax rules governing corporate distributions. These simplifications removed impediments to useful and constructive business reorganizations, which is an important element in many venture investment situations, and to the expansion of smaller businesses.

Yet another generous small business tax measure is the treatment of employee stock options. With the 1977 budget, the taxation of stock option benefits granted to arm's length employees of Canadian-controlled private corporations is deferred until eventual sale of the shares by the employee and the tax is made payable at capital gains rather than full income rates. This measure directly attacks one of the problems of smaller businesses by making it easier for small, newer companies adequately to reimburse executive and other key personnel without inordinately lowering the firm's working capital.

Turning now to the bill which is before us, it includes two measures amending the Income Tax Act. The first is the introduction of a deferral, for an individual, of capital gains on the transfer of his shares of a "small business corporation" to his children or grandchildren. This deferral would be available only in respect of shares of Canadian-controlled private corporations where all, or substantially all, of the assets are used in certain kinds of business activities. The maximum amount of deferral of capital gains that would qualify would be $200,000 over the lifetime of the individual.

The rollover applies to the shares of corporations that carry on certain specified entrepreneurial activities in Canada. The qualifying categories of business activity include manufacturing, processing, farming, fishing, mining, logging, construction, wholesaling and retailing.

The legislation also provides the authority to add other categories of qualifying business activity. Consideration was given to the extension of this concession to any company that had active business income that qualifies for the small business deduction. However, this would extend the rollover to those individuals able to incorporate a company into which their income from professional and other personal services may be channelled.

● (2112)

In addition, the courts have interpreted the expression "active business income" in such a way as to extend the low corporate tax rate to a broader range of activities, including investments, than was the original policy intention. I think it would be difficult to justify the extension of this new rollover to the shares of professional or personal service corporations or to the shares of those corporations whose activities are essentially of an investment rather than of a business nature.

The second tax measure introduced in this bill relates to capital losses. Under the existing Income Tax Act, a corporation may only deduct allowable capital losses from taxable capital gains. Deductions that cannot be used in the current year may be carried back one year and forward indefinitely.

An individual is subject to the same rule except that he may, in any year, deduct a further $2,000 of his allowable capital losses from any other income. The amendment removed the limitation on the deduction for capital losses on shares and debts of Canadian-controlled private corporations. These "allowable business investment losses" are now to be deductible against income from any source. To the extent that the deduction exceeds the income for the year, the loss could be carried over in the same way as non-capital losses under the present act. To prevent abuse, the loss offset will not apply in certain transactions between related persons.

To provide an additional measure of relief, this bill also extends the period during which the capital gains tax arising on the death of an individual may be paid. Under existing law, payment may be made in equal instalments over a six-year period, together with interest. The bill extends the period to ten years.

This bill also includes two important changes to the Excise Tax Act. Current provisions relating to filing of monthly returns by licensed taxpayers are being amended to provide authority for the Minister of National Revenue (Senator Guay) to alter the period for which returns are required to be filed and tax remitted. It is estimated that more than 20,000 taxpayers who normally pay less than $200 of tax monthly will benefit from this change.

I would remind hon. members that the Minister of National Revenue has also announced that the small manufacturers' regulation will be altered in such a way as to raise the exemption from federal sales tax from $10,000 to $50,000 of annual sales. It is estimated that 11,000 taxpayers who have annual sales of less than $50,000 will no longer be required to account for federal sales tax. This bill will also provide relief from the federal sales tax on machinery and apparatus for use by small manufacturers directly in the manufacture or production of goods.

These new measures, added to those already in place, demonstrate clearly that our federal tax system is highly favourable to the small businessman. It is probably the most generous among industrial countries in this regard. As an example, let me point out that in the United States the low corporate tax rate applies only to the first $50,000 of income. The limit in Canada for the low rate is $150,000. We go even further by providing a dividend tax credit of 50 per cent of dividends received. The U.S. law provides no such credit. This is indicative of our generally favourable tax treatment of corporations when compared to U.S. tax law.

Whenever one group in our community is helped by a tax incentive, it means that other taxpayers take on a greater share of the burden of financing public services of this country. It is the task of the government to ensure that tax incentives get results and go to the taxpayers they are intended to reach. I believe that the measures in this bill, which will be of significant benefit to small business, are timely and deserving of support.

In conclusion, I wish sincerely to thank my colleague the Minister of State (Small Business) for his help and the continual pressure that he applied to me in order to achieve this measure.

I thought it important that we dissociate these measures from the budget. We had to make a special effort to meet the pressing problem of giving the entrepreneurs of this land a break. The Minister of State (Small Business) and his predecessor, the Minister of State (Environment) (Mr. Marchand), who was in the chamber a few minutes ago, worked very hard at that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I am very pleased to have been associated with the creation of the post of Minister of State (Small Business). It was created when I became Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. This Minister of State has worked in close relationship with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner). In the present case, he has been of great help to me in persuading my cabinet colleagues to proceed with measures that would be well received by small businesses in Canada. I thank hon. members for their attention.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, we are very pleased to see this bill. Many of the features in it have been asked for by my colleagues and myself over the years. It is good that someone on the other side was listening and that the government have put the various recommendations we have made into a statute.

There is no doubt that the stability that will come in time to our economy will be brought about by reactivation, encouragement and stimulation of the small business sector. We still have a long way to go, but this is a good first step in aiding our small businessmen.

The rollover feature is good. The only comment I have in that regard is that it seems to leave out the service industries. I suppose when we move into committee of the whole, if that is the intention, we can determine whether service businesses are covered under qualifying small business corporations. They may well be.

The rollover feature, the transfer of share capital of a small business corporation from father to son, mother to daughter, or whatever the case may be—the children of the owner of the corporation—is a good move on the part of the government. I commend them for accepting our recommendation and putting it into this statute.

The small business community generally is very receptive to any encouragement it can be given. I again ask the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott), as I have on numerous occasions, to look into the Small Businesses Loans Act. I believe we can make some improvement there. Since he is also in charge of the paper burden, I would ask the minister to look into the possibility of putting together a pamphlet for the small businessman telling him how to apply for and obtain a loan under the Small Businesses Loans Act. One of the difficulties businessmen encounter is the preparation of the correct information for the banks. I would be pleased to talk to the minister privately at any time to explain what I am getting at.

This bill will go a long way to help the small business sector. We had hoped something more would have been done to stimulate research and development. The small business sector finds it hard to accumulate the funds needed to carry research and development forward. I know from my own experience that many times after a program has been put into operation one finds the treasurer or the comptroller advising that it should be brought to an end because funds for its continuance are not available. I had hoped there would be provision to allow small business to accumulate a reserve for research and development; this would have gone a long way to stimulate development in this important sector.

Small business employs in the order of 60 per cent of the work force of this country and such employment is usually stable. I know from my own experience that we rarely lay people off. When business is slack, when the economy slows down, we usually find some slot for them. This creates a great deal of stability in the labour market and I believe should be recognized.

One would like to have seen something more definite with regard to capital gains. This whole area needs to be looked at carefully. At present there is a great deal of confusion attached to it, particularly in the small business field, and the situation will have to be cleared up the next time a budget is presented.

There is really not much more one can say about this bill. We can deal with individual sections when we consider the measure clause by clause. We are generally of a mind that we would agree to the legislation being completed and given third reading before ten o'clock, if other hon. members share this view.

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up the time of the House unduly. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has outlined effectively and comprehensively the contents of this bill which he is sponsoring. I simply want to thank the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) for his positive comments. He and I, along with members on all sides, share the general view that for too many years the concentration of government, parliament and the media has been least on the unsung heroes of the economy—the businessmen who represent the truly dynamic force of the community. This is the sector of the economy from which new ideas come forward; small companies become great enterprises or, in any event, influence the communities in which they are active. And as we have discovered, they need help.

I do not suggest that the measures in this bill or elsewhere in this small business package represent everything which must be done for small business. We recognize that government has a major role to play but that role must be regarded as a limited one. Government alone cannot create prosperity. It cannot create skilled management or an entrepreneurial spirit in the economy if it is lacking. What government can do is make certain there is a dynamic economy in which business generally can survive.

Further, it can limit the impact of regulations and paperwork falling on the business world. These are, perhaps, small steps but I think they will lead to major accomplishments. We know there is a problem. There is not a government department today which is not much more cautious than it was even a few months ago about inflicting a paper burden on the business community.

Finally, government must ensure that its tax policies and purchasing policies are tuned not solely to the needs of government but to making sure that the system does not deaden entrepreneurship but stimulate it. I believe the tax measures which the Minister of Finance has introduced in this bill go a long way in this direction.

I might mention one of the more important aspects of this bill, one which I believe has received too little attention. I refer to allowable capital losses being deductible in unlimited amount from other income. We have a tax on capital gains and now we have capital losses which are treated in similar fashion. Instead of simply $2,000 a year being deductible, half of any losses sustained by a businessman or someone who invests in the shares of a small business, if the worst happens, can be recouped to a substantial extent through a rebate of income tax.

All across the country there are people who are employed or who have substantial incomes and who dream of the day they cango into business for themselves. What has prevented many of them from doing so is the idea that going into business for themselves is attended by high risk. Anything we can do to encourage them by tax measures which do not take all their money when a business makes money, and also provide a cushion in the event of business failure, is surely welcome. Should the venture fail, those engaged in it can take up other work, earn money and write off a substantial amount of their losses against income. The idea is not to support losers but to give an added incentive to those who want to get into business.

I thank hon. members on both sides for the positive attitude they have taken toward this measure and I hope that, as we draw to the end of this session, at least one substantial group in the economy will be happier; that is, the small businessmen.

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised to find myself rising to speak at second reading of Bill C-59, to assist small business. I cannot help but reflect that the need for this type of legislation goes back to the very complicated tax measures which came in under this government in 1972, supported again by the NDP. I think the reason we have this type of legislation before us, which is to give relief and aid, falls right back on those very sad days for Canada when we took a relatively simple tax act and turned it into a very complicated monster which we have been trying to fix, monkey wrench and ratchet ever since.

I am from the small business community. I am one of the people who have spent their lives—and it was not easy—in that community. I started from nothing. I have failed, had to pay off debt, and I have started again. I know the hazards. I know about the 16-hour days and the seven-day weeks which are involved in coming through the preriods of trial and error which an entrepreneur has to go through in order to become successful in the world of business.

The world of business is very exciting. You start to master it only when you gain control over many aspects and components of life. You deal with lawyers and tax auditors. You balance many inputs and conditions. You struggle on matters of supply. Of course, you cannot produce anything unless you have a market to sell it in. Fundamental to it all is an understanding of the marketplace and an ability to handle the data of the marketplace in order to make better decisions, to produce better products and to be competitive in the marketplace.

In the world of small business there is true competition. Small businesses grow, and they fight, and that is where they really have to struggle. That is where the free enterprise system really works. As you come through the limits and parameters of small business, you then begin get into the bigger and heavier leagues where scales of production are necessary and where your marketing becomes more sophisticated and the costs of operating higher. I have seen pre-1972 audit bills in the $3,000 to $4,000 range become an $18,000 to $22,000 wasteful exercise in trying to control an operation in order to be accountable to the tax collector.

One of the reasons I find myself in this House tonight is that I have been through these costs and exercises, and when I come here knowing the sweat it takes to produce a tax dollar in the private sector and that it is being squandered down here in a careless way, I feel that I have to make my input in order to bring some standard of accountability into the system.

One of the things lately—and particularly since the 1972 Income Tax Act—which has troubled me has been the capital gains tax. I think this is turning out to be an absolute tragedy. I speak from some personal experience. Growth since 1971 has been helped by a very serious inflation component in our economy. Our capital gains tax is not indexed against that inflationary component, and we find that as companies finally latch on to the marketplace and become successful, growth in equity against shares has been very rapid, particularly since December, 1971. So we find that the entrepreneurs who have created much of the new wealth and worth which is being put to work in the Canadian economy employing people and creating new jobs is being locked up in a liquidity which I think is a tragedy for this country.

I think that is one of the causes of the lack of incentive which exists in Canada today. What is the point of becoming successful if you find yourself with $200,000, $300,000 or $400,000 in capital gains which you cannot invest in machinery and physical plant to create new jobs and to create new worth if you have to keep a portion of your capital liquid in order to preserve an estate on death?

I frankly welcome that part of this bill which allows one to roll over to family or defer a capital gain in the amount of $200,000, but what will happen to the family down the road? In the Canadian economy now we have registered retirement savings plans, which are just a mechanism for turning a citizen of this country into a debtor of the Government of Canada. The capital gains tax has turned entrepreneurs and shareholders of successful Canadian corporations into debtors of the Government of Canada. We are playing right into the hands of insurance companies. Because if we are active in life at all and if we start to create this kind of liability for our estates, as we are doing under the present Income Tax Act through capital gains, we are just getting into a situation where more income from corporations and more personal incomes are going into insurance policies to afford some measure of liquidity for our estates or those of our corporations.

I predict that many successful family businesses will be wiped out on the deaths of their successful entrepreneurial owners if they do not have substantial insurance policies or a substantial degree of liquidity in order to handle the capital gains tax.

I think the present law is very harmful to the cash flow needs of small business and is interfering with the investment of capital into new activity and new research. I would like to see the government give serious consideration to turning equity in the small, successful business component over to employees. I do not think this should be limited just to members of families. Many people who are not blood relatives of owners of businesses who have worked long and hard and dedicated their lives to the success of the owners' enterprises should have an entitlement to some kind of rollover formula, such as a share ownership trust, and should be able to purchase the equity in these companies with pre-tax dollars.

If we really want to do something useful for the business community, which includes small businesses and large businesses, I think that is where this bill fails. I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and this government should be ashamed of themselves. They have not introduced measures to roll over with pre-tax dollars ownership and equity to key employees or employees at large in Canadian corporations.

I am glad to see this bill coming forward. It is too bad that bills of this nature are necessary to fix up a very complicated and cumbersome taxation system which is stifling the incentive out of the Canadian economy.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Turner in the chair.

Clauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Debts established to be bad debts and shares of bankrupt corporation.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Chairman, one does not even have a chance to straighten one's tie before finding the committee is already on clause 4.

Mr. Huntington: There is an engine driver in the chair.

Mr. Kempling: First I will ask the minister to explain clause 4.

Mr. Chrétien: This is an important technical amendment of a relieving nature to enable a capital loss to be triggered in respect of shares of the capital stock of a bankrupt corporation in the year in which the corporation becomes bankrupt.

At present, a taxpayer is forced to dispose of his shares in a bankrupt corporation in order to recognize a capital loss. In the case of a bankrupt corporation its shares would not have any value. This amendment eliminates the disposition requirement by simply deeming the shares to have been disposed of for no proceeds in the year in which the corporation becomes bankrupt. This amendment is particularly relevant for the purpose of the new rules introduced in this bill for the deduction of "allowable business investment loans" on shares of a bankrupt Canadian-controlled private corporation. But the rule is not restricted to such corporations—it will apply to the shares of any corporation that becomes bankrupt.

Mr. Kempling: The minister said initially in his remarks that the provision applied to the shares of a small private corporation. Then he said it would apply to any incorporated business that goes bankrupt.

Mr. Chrétien: I did not say it applied only to small businesses. I said it applied to the shares of any corporation, big or small.

Mr. Kempling: How does the minister differentiate between them? Is this to apply to a public company as well as a private company?

Mr. Chrétien: It is to apply to every private and public company that goes bankrupt.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 5—Transfer of share of capital stock of small business corporation.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Finance to explain clause 5, the deferment of capital gains and the rollover provisions, and why the government found it necessary.

Mr. Chrétien: With pleasure, Mr. Chairman. The government believes it is important to encourage family businesses. It does not want the capital gains tax system to impede the orderly transfer of small, family-owned businesses to succeeding generations. Family businesses are an important part of our society. The government believes it should be possible for the owner of a small business to pass it on to his children without incurring an immediate tax liability.

This clause and clause 6 will provide an important new deferral of tax on up to $200,000 of capital gain where a taxpayer transfers the shares of a qualifying "small business corporation" to his children or grandchildren after May 25, 1978.

A qualifying "small business corporation" is a Canadian-controlled private corporation whose property consists substantially of assets used in manufacturing, processing, mining, construction, logging, farming, fishing, wholesaling, retailing, or other prescribed qualifying businesses, or shares and debts of another qualifying business corporation.

The rollover will not apply to the shares of a company that carries on a service business, such as a company formed for the purpose of rendering personal, administrative or professional services. It will not apply to a business whose income is "passive", for example, consisting of real estate rentals or income from investments.

Is that all right?

Mr. Huntington: I think the minister is doing fine, but I wonder if he could explain to me why service businesses and passive businesses have been excluded from this provision.

Mr. Chrétien: It is a complex problem, as the hon. member can understand. There are all sorts of corporations that are not of an entrepreneurial nature. I called them passive in my description. For example, there are some professionals who incorporate into service corporations. Part of their income is transferred into that corporation, but in fact their earnings are their own, not those of a business activity. We want to encourage entrepreneurs and we do not want to create a loophole for what we call passive investments. That is why we make a distinction between an entrepreneurial type of business and the passive type of business in this provision.

Mr. Huntington: I thank the minister for his explanation but I should like to point out to him that if he wants to encourage entrepreneurial talent in this country he will find that these are usually people who start without capital. When they want to borrow, they deal with a banker who puts a $5,000 limit on them, so they need someone to come along with risk capital, and this bill seems to take care of that in part.

Most manufacturing businesses and successful entrepreneurial enterprises which grow to employ people in good, productive work start a service business. I would like to know why service businesses have been excluded from this rollover. There are probably some successful businessmen with substantial equity whose progeny deserve the same type of privilege that is being extended to the other businesses classified here.

Mr. Chrétien: The type of person to whom the hon. member referred would qualify under this provision. We are trying to restrict passive corporations—for example, lawyers, accountants, or medical doctors who incorporate and then rent premises from the corporation and pay a big rent to their own corporation so as to get a better tax rate. That is the kind of loophole we want to avoid. But in the case which the hon. member described of a small business with a spirit for risking money and developing, such a business would qualify.

Of course, in the schedule in the regulations we try to make a distinction to cover the type of case mentioned by the hon. member. In the case of a passive service company which incorporates to protect itself against higher taxes, we do not want to encourage them. The hon. member wants to encourage exactly the same thing as I, namely risk-taking ventures by small businesses. These situations will be covered.

Mr. Huntington: This area will require work in order to clean up the regulations. The last thing I want to see created is another bureaucracy, along with the Minister of State (Small Business). That area will cause various problems if the regulations are not worked on and cleaned up.

A rollover of up to $200,000 in capital gains into the second generation is being allowed. If a business continues to grow and is successful, and, as every man hopes, if the son is smarter than his father, a capital gains debt situation will be created which could wipe out the estate of that second generation. This type of legislation puts the entrepreneurial energy of Canada and Canadians into a continuing debt load which will have to be handled down the road. Is there any planning involved? I am grateful for the rollover and so are many people in my generation, but what about the generation to follow? Has this been thought about?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: An exemption of $200,000 is being allowed for the rollover to the family. If there is a larger capital gain than that at death, an extension to ten years has been provided in the time for the second generation to pay taxes over the $200,000. That period of time has been extended from six years to ten years. They have ten years in which to pay the required taxes. We are not forcing them to sell. If there is a large capital gain, the first $200,000 is exempt. For the remainder, they will be provided with ten years in order to pay the government. That was to ensure that the next generation was not burdened with a heavy debt load upon the death of their fathers. There are provisions to cope with the situation described by the hon. member. I do not know what will happen in the distant future. I hope I will not be Minister of Finance 15 years from now.

Mr. Huntington: If the Minister of Finance had removed capital gains taxes, I am sure he would have overcome all the troubles he has faced since taking on his portfolio.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, what is the relationship of this tax measure compared to the one passed in Bill C-56 which relates to farming? Does the minister have a comment to make on that?

Mr. Chrétien: It is exactly the same, but in farming we have not imposed a ceiling of $200,000.

Mr. Towers: Did the minister say that in the case of farming a ceiling of $200,000 is not being imposed?

Mr. Chrétien: That is right.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 6 to 10 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 11—Commencement and application.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, what is the significance of the two exemptions in clause 11? Why are they separated?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to extend the same relief from federal sales tax for machinery and apparatus currently available to licensed manufacturers to persons and firms classed as small manufacturers.

Under the current provisions of the Excise Tax Act, small manufacturers are not required to account for tax on their sales. However, small manufacturers are specifically excluded from the benefits of the exemptions for machinery and apparatus used directly in the manufacture or production of goods which are available to licensed manufacturers.

This amendment will permit small manufacturers to purchase most machinery and apparatus for use directly in their manufacturing operations exempt from federal sales tax, and thus provides additional benefits to small businesses.

Mr. Peters: Does this bill leave in the old category things such as the acquisition of property, buildings and other assets which are not directly related to production?

Mr. Chrétien: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Peters: Does that mean they are exempted, or are they in the same category as production machinery?

Mr. Chrétien: Production machinery does not apply.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Once this bill has carried, will the Minister of Finance resign?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): When shall the bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chrétien moved that the bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) if this is an inter vivos transfer which we have completed tonight.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I stopped studying Latin 25 years ago.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I realize the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) wants to be recognized, but he has already spoken and he cannot speak again.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has appointed certain hon. senators to act on a Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada.

Is the House disposed to attempt consideration of Bill S-2?

Some hon. Members: No.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL—APPOINTMENT OF NEW CHAIRMAN

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on February 13 last I asked certain questions about the reason the government passed over the highly qualified vice-chairman of the Anti-dumping Tribunal, Dr. Marguerite Ritchie, and appointed as chairman a man with no experience of any kind with the tribunal. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) complimented Dr. Ritchie, stating that she had a distinguished career in the public service and a well established reputation as a lawyer. The only part of his reply which could be related to my question was the following:

> In this particular case, because of the tribunal's requirements in relation to international trading concerns it was felt that the present appointee would be best qualified. There is no tradition in the public service, to my knowledge, that the vice-chairman automatically proceeds to the post of chairman.

This reply, like many from the government to repeated questions about this appointment, contains statements which are obviously senseless. The man appointed as chairman of the tribunal obviously has no recent experience with international trading concerns as he has spent the last five and half years with the Department of Transport and the Department of National Defence. The government was clearly not being factual in this reply. I have nothing against the chairman and I am certain he is competent in his field, but having worked under the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) one wonders.

When we speak of the Anti-dumping Tribunal, we are speaking of a court of record. Let me refer to the act for a moment. It states that the tribunal is a court of record and shall have an official seal which shall have judicial notice. The five members who make up this tribunal must be skilled in international trading, have trained legal minds, and must understand how to operate a court of record. Having unskilled people in this area is just not adequate.

I have appeared before this tribunal and such appearances are costly because of legal fees, but what is more important is the time it takes. Very often an industry or a business is up against the wall because of dumping, and the preparation of a case requires time and a high degree of legal and accounting skills. Can you imagine the frustration of an industry which takes its case before the Federal Court of Appeal, which upsets the finding of the Anti-dumping Tribunal and has to start all over again? I have a reference before me of a case before the Federal Court of Appeal on June 9. In the judgment the application was allowed, and the decision which dated back to December 31, 1976 was set aside. Can you imagine the consternation of this industry when it found that the Federal Court of Appeal sent it back to the drawing board?

Again I suggest that the chairman, the vice-chairman and other members of this tribunal must come from a highly skilled background, particularly in these days when the business community has many concerns about the present economic climate. They want to be certain that the tribunal is being run competently.

● (2207)

I was disturbed at the way the appointment took place. A letter from the Prime Minister's office says that the only reply to questions on Dr. Marguerite Ritchie is the one given in the House. It points out that different qualifications were required by the organization at this time, that the demands of various government organizations change with the times and that the government must be aware of this and responsive to it in order that they be effective in their work. The letter pointed out that the appointment in no way reflected on Dr. Ritchie's qualifications, as her work is well known by the government, and that there was no discrimination on the basis of sex in this case.

I worry about the government wanting to change things, Mr. Speaker. I am all for change in the corridors of power in this country, but it worries me when this government wants to change things that only parliament can change. Parliament is the instrument of change, not the cabinet or the Privy Council office.

The Anti-dumping Tribunal is a court, Mr. Speaker. It has power to assess witnesses. It is referred to in the act as a court of justice; there is provision for a report to the tribunal and an annual report must be made to parliament. It is a court and I think it is very important that the most highly skilled people be put in place there. Interference in the courts is never permitted and we must be very certain that at no time could a telephone call from high places in this government make the Anti-dumping Tribunal perhaps change its findings. This is a very critical matter.

There is one other area that I think I should comment on and that is the D'Avignon committee which is looking into employment practices regarding women. There is no woman on this committee, Mr. Speaker. Considering that the percentage of women in the ghetto that is called the administrative support area has risen over 10 per cent, the most important thing to remember is that women in the senior executive category have risen from zero per cent to 2.9 per cent. It is almost inconceivable that a committee looking into injustices in the public service would not be represented by a member of a group that seems to be suffering the greatest injustice.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please, I regret to interrupt the hon. member but her allotted time has expired.

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to add to the good and honest answer given by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) on February 13, 1978 to a question from the hon. member dealing with the non-appointment of Miss Ritchie, vice-chairman of the Anti-dumping Tribunal, to the position of chairman and the appointment of Dr. Kirkwood, formerly the senior assistant deputy minister of transport, who was appointed chairman effective January 15, 1978. Let me insist on making four short but complete and clear points.

First, there was no element of discrimination whatsoever in this case and the government is committed to the promotion of women based on merit.

Second, Miss Ritchie has had a distinguished career in the public service and has a well established reputation as a lawyer.

Third, in making the appointment of Dr. Kirkwood the government wanted to place in the position of chairman a person with a strong background in economics, taking into account current international trading circumstances. This is very important.

Fourth, there is no tradition in the public service of promoting the vice-chairman to the position of chairman when it becomes vacant. Sylvia Ostry was appointed chairman of the Economic Council of Canada and Pamela McDougall was appointed chairman of the Tariff Board when these agencies already had vice-chairmen on staff.

MANPOWER—EMPLOYMENT OF IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, the constituency of Vaudreuil which I have the privilege of representing includes a very large rural area. Also included is the western part of the island of Montreal, an urban area which contains a large number of businesses, many of them multinational, foreign-owned, and businesses which deal with all provinces and which in some cases are distribution centres and manufacturing centres for export business to the United States.

● (2212)

In the constituency of Vaudreuil the latest unemployment figures which I received recently from the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) indicate the level is presently at 5.6 per cent. I suggest 5.6 per cent unemployment today is a very low rate. It includes those people changing jobs, and others who for various reasons are listed as unemployed.

The problem with that low rate of unemployment is that it is proving extremely and increasingly difficult for companies to find the calibre of employee which they need in large companies; for example, pharmaceutical companies, electronics and aerospace groups which all require a fairly high level of technology. The problem is made worse by the fact that the repressive legislation of the separatist government in Quebec is effectively keeping out Canadians from other provinces who, because they are unable to send their children to English schools, are no longer willing to come to the province of Quebec.

There has always been a turnover of personnel in the west island of Montreal, which is mainly the English area. This is where the company executives live, and executives are always on the move. In fact, in one area of my riding the turnover has been in the order of every four or five years. This means that under present circumstances people are leaving and they are not being replaced by newcomers, resulting in the fact that today companies can only draw on a market of Quebec personnel. Unfortunately, that market is not able to satisfy the demand. More and more we are finding representatives of these large companies are coming to their member of parliament and saying that something has to be done. The problem is aggravated by the fact that we have closed our doors to immigrants. Even the American owned companies are no longer able to bring in American immigrants to fill positions that Canadians are unwilling to take.

I listened to a question put by my colleague, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook), and it seems that in the west end of Toronto a somewhat similar situation exists. Companies there are also finding it difficult to fill vacancies for positions that require a reasonably high level of experience and knowledge.

I put my question to the minister last Friday on the basis of one particular job where the salary offered was $38,000. The position required some medical knowledge. The reply I received in writing from the minister disappointed me because he pointed out that there are 150 doctors unemployed in the province of Quebec at the present time and these doctors have a right to expect a salary of between $60,000 and $80,000. Personally, if an individual has such a high expectation and is not willing to accept a position paying $38,000, I do not consider that person an unemployed worker. Nevertheless, the point is, whether or not these doctors are prepared to work for a salary of $38,000, that we do have many positions with fairly high levels of pay that we are not presently able to fill, despite the fact that, theoretically at least, we have almost one million unemployed, and also despite the fact that we have programs which are supposed to transfer people from one region to another.

Unemployment is supposed to be high in Quebec and particularly high in Montreal. To travel from the centre of Montreal to the west island of Montreal takes half an hour by public conveyance and even less by automobile.

The situation, then, is quite serious. If we are not able to get a change in attitude from the minister to at least permit immigrants to come in and fill the jobs that Canadians are not willing to fill, we are going to see more and more of these international companies moving out of the province of Quebec. Already three pharmaceutical companies have decided to move. Other pharmaceutical companies are experiencing the same kind of staffing problem that has been referred to previously and reported to the media by the Sun Life Company.

It is true, and I agree, that we should give preference to Canadian workers. However, if the expectation of Canadians today is such that they are not prepared to accept positions with salaries—and I use as a talking point salaries in excess of $20,000 or $25,000—as far as I am concerned they should not even be listed statistically among the unemployed.

I think the situation is serious enough that the minister is going to have to take another look at the position, not only in Toronto where the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook) referred to difficulties, but especially in the province of Quebec where the language problem has made even more difficult the finding of suitable personnel.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) has presented a question which he put to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) and also referred to a question put by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook). His concern relates to a problem on the west island of Montreal where potential immigrants have been refused entry into Canada to fill positions which employers have not been able to fill with Canadian workers.

When the hon. member raised the question on June 23 concerning the employment of foreign doctors in Quebec, it was stated that a review of the matter would be considered. I understand that a Montreal pharmaceutical company had recruited an American doctor to fill the position of assistant medical director. This position had been vacant since June 1977. The commission was not contacted until October 1977 and by that time the American doctor had been offered and had accepted the position, although the job offer had not been validated by Canada Employment Centre.

Six Canadian candidates meeting all the requirements of the original job description were referred to the company. Reportedly none of the candidates were interviewed in person. Nevertheless the company decided that these candidates could not fill the position.

The company informed the Canada Employment Centre that they required the candidate to understand German. Some of the candidates referred, all members of the Corporation of Surgeons and Physicians of the province of Quebec, were neo-Canadian and did understand German, but they were refused just the same.

The officials in Quebec region felt that the company was not complying with the guidelines on hiring Canadian residents first and recommended that the job offer not be validated. This recommendation was accepted and I understand every indication was given that everything possible will be done to protect jobs for Canadians. However, it would appear that this decision would be reviewed if the company were to examine and consider the candidates referred by the commission and were able to give sound rationale as to why the candidates were not suitable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary but his time has expired.

POST OFFICE—SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is not often that we can expect to get a straight answer from the government concerning the Post Office, but last Friday the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) did give a direct and unequivocal answer to a question.

At that time I had in my possession a document entitled "Ontario Postal Region Business Plan Summary, 1978-1982", which indicated it was the intention of the Post Office to eliminate 269 jobs. The minister told me the report was incorrect. He said, in fact, that it was "very wrong". He told the House that such reports were only studies and that he could not stop management from—and I quote—"supplying me with studies on ways they could maybe save some money in the Post Office." He added that even if such plans did exist they would not be implemented in the absence of consultation with the unions. He made this very clear. "These cutbacks, if any, will be made", he said, "with the collaboration of the unions." He emphasized that point in response to a question asked yesterday, when he said: "Manpower reduction will be brought about through attrition in consultation with the unions."

Mr. Speaker, if you look at all those statements you will find that at first glance they appear to be direct and emphatic. But a closer look reveals that there are some problems. The first concerns just which reports accurately reflect the state of the Post Office. Many of us have seen the Hay report, issued in 1975, which was a damning indictment of Post Office management. But the minister asks us to ignore that because it is too old. He does not want us to be concerned with the past.

Then we discover reports which say that Post Office manpower is being reduced in the absence of any discussion with the unions. The Postmaster General asks us to ignore them because they are too new. He says they are only studies. These comments strengthen my suspicion that the minister has simply no idea what is going on in his department.

I now have in my possession another document entitled "London Post Office Business Plan, 1978-1979". This is not a study. This is not a report containing suggestions for the minister. It is the business plan for the London post office. It is being implemented. It is signed by Ray Jones, the district director for southwestern Ontario, and it states very clearly on page 1 that unless otherwise specified the starting date for all action plans is April 1, 1978. This document talks about a reduction of staff in the processing end of the operation. It talks about modifications in letters of understanding between management and the Letter Carriers Union. It also talks about eliminating certain walks and about transferring people into the letter carrier division.

I repeat that this is not a management study but a business plan which is in the process of being implemented. Yet in spite of the minister's assurances that unions will be included in the discussion of any such plans, the unions were not contacted.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

I am not just referring to the Canadian Union of Postal Workers. Yesterday in the House the minister said there were problems in discussing matters with CUPW. He inferred it was the fault of the union that management had not informed the workers of changes. But he also said that with the LCUC, consultations are very easy, and he told us that before any change is made LCUC would be consulted.

I wonder if the minister was saying he had no intention of consulting with CUPW before changes are made. I wonder where the minister gets his information. I spoke to the Letter Carriers Union representative at their head office here yesterday and they contacted their office in London. The people there had not even heard of the study or of the plan which is being implemented. Obviously the Post Office has not bothered to discuss it with them. And this is a union with which the department has such a great relationship, according to the minister.

If the minister wants us to believe he knows what he is doing, it is time he issued clear policy directives and insisted that they are followed. We have been going on for too long discovering a new management study or a new program being put into operation every week. If the minister does not now know what is going on in the department perhaps the only way for him to find out is to issue firm directives and insist that they are followed. That way he might eliminate once and for all the need to deny the significance of a new report every week.

● (2227)

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, first of all, let us not get excited or emotional about this subject. I have tried to give the hon. member the most direct answer I could give him. On June 23 and again on June 28 the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) asked the same question. Again tonight in a different style he has asked it again. However, I bring to the attention of the House the title of an article in the Globe and Mail this morning, and I quote: "CLC to put all its resources behind the NDP in next federal election".

I quite understand the intervention of the hon. member for Nickel Belt. The hon. member seems to be representing the Canadian Union of Postal Workers. To me and this government all workers, without exception, have the same merit, and I will do my utmost to provide all workers with good working conditions and fair collective bargaining. Even if they do not put all their resources behind the Liberal party, the welfare of the workers is to me beyond any political consideration.

In order to avoid any confusion, which seems to be the reason for the questions and documents mentioned by the hon. member, I will give him my answer in English first.

No permanent postal employees will lose their jobs as a result of departmental or technological changes, but manpower reduction, if any, will be handled through attrition with consultation with the union.

Just in case the hon. member did not understand that in English, I will repeat it in French.

[Translation]

No permanent postal employees will lose their jobs as a result of departmental or technological changes, but manpower reduction, if any, will be handled through attrition with consultation with the union, if it is prepared to discuss this matter.

If I have added this last part to my sentence, Mr. Speaker, it is to indicate that it is not always easy to deal with unions, and as evidence of this I should like to quote from three letters between the managers in Calgary and the president of the local of the Union of Postal Workers in Calgary. On June 6—

[English]

On June 6, Mr. Wilde, manager of the Calgary plant, wrote to Mr. Hall, president of the Calgary Local of CUPW, telling him that some changes were needed and that he would like to meet with him to discuss those changes. Mr. Wilde fixed the date of June 28 at 10 a.m. Mr. James Hall, president of CUPW in Calgary, responded as follows:

I agree with Mr. Wilde that meaningful consultation is always appropriate. I must note, however—

He asked what the agenda would be, and he agreed to discuss the matter. However, here is the end of the story. On June 21 Mr. Hall, president of CUPW at Calgary, sent a letter to Mr. Hyde, our manager, and I quote:

Immediately after mailing my letter of acceptance to your invitation to consultation, I received instructions from my national president on the matter.

I am informed that the changes you propose fall within the area governed by article 29 of the collective agreement.

So, no more communication. The hon. member for Nickel Belt received a copy of one of these letters because that is indicated on the letter. However, communication with some of the unions is not always easy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 10.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

URBAN AFFAIRS

ROBERT CAMPEAU REAL ESTATE DEVELOPMENTS IN HULL, QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The affair of les Terrasses de la Chaudière has reached the stage where only a public inquiry can search out the answers to the questions that must be on the public's mind and which ministers have refused to deal with in the House. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott):

That the committee of the Privy Council, by order, instruct the Chief Justice of Canada to appoint three justices from among the justices of the provincial superior courts, the Federal Court of Canada and the Supreme Court of Canada, who shall be constituted by the committee of the Privy Council to be commissioners under part I of the Inquiries Act to inquire fully into any allegations, made or to be made, respecting the acquisition of land for the construction in Hull by Robert Campeau Corporation of les Terrasses de la Chaudière, the construction thereof, and the arrangements for the occupation of the said premises by the Government of Canada, and any matter bearing upon the above, and if the said commissioners consider that there is prima facie evidence of an offence in relation to any matter inquired into, to consider such other matters as may appear to the commissioners to be relevant and to report fully thereon.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion can be introduced for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PRORATA PENSIONS FOR WIDOWS OF VETERANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the urgency of this matter increases as time goes on; sooner or later it must be resolved, and I hope it will be resolved soon. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House calls on the Minister of Veterans Affairs, during the forthcoming summer recess, to prepare a bill that will provide pro rata pensions for widows of veterans where the veteran's pension was below 48 per cent, and to introduce the said bill immediately when parliament next meets, it being the view of this House that there should be no further delay in granting a pension to all widows of disabled veterans as a matter of right.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ACTION TO AVOID POSSIBLE STRIKE OF NURSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that some 2,000 overworked and underpaid federal nurses will be in a position to strike on July 4 of this year, and in view of the fact that negotiations for a new contract have been under way for 18 months and a conciliation board report has supported the nurses' wage demands as being reasonable, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the President of the Treasury Board take steps to immediately bring both parties back to the bargaining table and, failing that, that he explain on motions what contingency plans he has for providing nursing services required in places such as veterans hospitals, and so on, if the strike does go on.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRANSPORT

OPERATION OF CN MARINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity affecting the livelihood of CN marine stevedores, CN vessel crews and CN employees in general as a result of continuing drastic cutbacks in shipments of goods and freight through the port of North Sydney to the province of Newfoundland.

Despite continuous representations which I have been making to the Minister of Transport and the government on this subject over a long period, unemployment at the port of North Sydney continues to increase, due in part to the granting of subsidies by the government to private shipping firms resulting in competition with a government-owned corporation. I would, therefore, move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

That an immediate investigation be carried out to the end that public moneys not be provided to private shipping firms enabling them to compete against CN Marine and thus creating more employment because, as a result, goods are being shipped through the ports of Halifax and Montreal.

I have no doubt that if remedial action is not taken by the government, North Sydney will become a ghost-town—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will, I am sure, realize he has now gone beyond presenting the motion: he has started to argue it.

Presentation of such a motion, under the provisions of the Standing Order, can be done only by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RIGHT OF SOVIET NATIONALS TO EMIGRATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on June 23 this House passed a motion under Standing Order 43 conveying its deep concern to the government of the Soviet Union with respect to the severe sentences imposed on Ida Nudel and Vladimir Slepak for expressing their belief in the preservation of human rights in that country and, specifically, for expressing their desire for free emigration.

In view of the information now received that Mrs. Nudel is ill and is about to be moved by train in conditions which could have serious repercussions on her health, and in view of the fact that the wife of Vladimir Slepak is also in hospital, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson):

That the Parliament of Canada urges the government of the Soviet Union, a co-signatory with Canada of the Helsinki Final Act, to take into account the humanitarian factors involved in these cases and allow Mrs. Nudel and the Slepak family to emigrate to Israel.

Mr. Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, presentation of this motion can be made only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

DUMPING DUTY ON WIDE-FLANGE STEEL BEAMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the terms of Standing Order 43. Since this is the eve of remission for wide-flange steel beam importers, since Algoma Steel cannot supply the needs of B.C. steel fabricators within practical time limits, in light of the fact that a just society would allow all steel fabricators in Canada to purchase steel at the same price, since the $377 formula announced by the Minister of National Revenue will injure and discriminate against B.C. steel fabricators, and since the records of exporting steel countries are now closed to the Canadian government, I ask leave to move, for the sake of regional equity, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen):

That ministerial prescription under section 11 of the anti-dumping legislation sets the Algoma-Toronto delivery price as the basis upon which the margin of dump will be determined.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed under Standing Order 43. Presentation of such a motion can be made only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MACKAY—COMMENT BY MINISTER OF STATE FOR URBAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday a question of privilege was raised by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) concerning a statement made by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). Perhaps I might deal with it now, since both parties are in the House and it seems to me there is some chance that questions might be put by the hon. member and answered by the minister. I will make the necessary adjustments in the length of the question period later, but I thought it proper to take up this matter at the beginning rather than at the end of the question period.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Central Nova (M. MacKay) rose on a question of privilege stemming from some of the observations made by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), as reported on page 6859 of yesterday's Hansard.

The hon. member objected most specifically to the fact that the Minister had accused him of being somehow hostile to the interests of Canadians of French descent. First of all, I want to point out that, traditionally, such incidents are not considered questions of privilege. They are rather remarks that are not germane to the matter before the House at the time.

• (1117)

[English]

The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) made reference to citation 155(1) of Beauschesne's in support of his question of privilege. That citation is well known to hon. members. Again I say that this has not traditionally been dealt with by way of question of privilege but, rather, if it is a valid point, in my opinion it is a point of disorder or a point of order with respect to the proceedings of the chamber, because for one member to accuse another of motives in the carrying out of work, or to say something which has an overtone of a bigoted attitude toward any one group of people in the country is either unparliamentary and, therefore, out of order or, of course, an imputation of motives which is equally out of order.

Having regard to the words which were spoken by the minister yesterday—of course, in the heat of the exchange—I cannot come to any other conclusion than that the words had, as their effect, an imputation of motives of the hon. member for Central Nova and that in his questions about Les Terrasses de la Chaudière he was aiming some criticism at a group of Canadians of French origin. I, therefore, feel that in the heat of the moment the minister overstepped the line and was out of order in making that imputation against the hon. member for Central Nova, and I am sure that the minister would want, before proceeding further with the question period this morning, to withdraw that allegation.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, you yourself mentioned that during the debate I may have said certain things, on the spur of the moment, which went beyond what I really meant, giving those remarks a connotation that was not parliamentary.

I should like to recall exactly what I said yesterday, that is, that it seemed obvious to me, first, that the hon. member was trying to discover scandals where none exist, and secondly, that in so doing he was slinging mud in the face of French Canadians. That is what is reported word for word on page 6855 of yesterday's Hansard. That is what I said. And you are now asking me to withdraw what I said, which resulted in imputing motives to the hon. member which he does not have.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of attributing these motives to the hon. member if he says he did not want to launch a deliberate attack against French Canadians.

I am referring to his own words, to what he said in his question of privilege in spite of the fact that he states he never meant, in his various interventions in the House, to attack anybody, whatever his origin may be. He also mentioned a number of persons of various origins, as we can read at page 6859.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: This is pretty shabby, Ouellet.

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker made a ruling.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister may have occasion at other times to argue whether any member of the House of Commons has done anything at any time which in any way is out of order. The minister has spoken some words. He said yesterday that the hon. member for Central Nova finds scandal where none exists. There is nothing wrong with saying that. However, the minister went on to say that that was in some way a criticism directed at French Canadians. That remark has to be withdrawn. If there are other arguments about what other members have done at other times, they will have to be raised by other ministers or other members at the specific times they occur, and in that context.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, you are asking me to say that the hon. member did not want to attack French Canadians and to withdraw my remarks. I am prepared to do it, but I submit to the House that the hon. member questions the actions of people, whatever their origin may be, be it Polish or Lithuanian or whatever. Their origin has no importance whatsoever. Of course, the fact that in reading again the hon. member's numerous interventions in Hansard in recent months—

[English]

Some hon. Members: Order.

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

Mr. Trudeau: You don't like to hear the truth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I want to remind the minister that yesterday, when argument was made on this question of privilege, he was in the House and did not take that occasion to argue the merits of the case. Now that the Chair has made a ruling on the language and on the arguments that were made yesterday, it is no longer open to debate or discussion. It seems to me that the minister must either obey the direction of the Chair to withdraw the offending remark and allow us to get on to other business, or presumably some other course will have to be taken. The minister has said to me that he is ready to withdraw the remark: that is different from withdrawing it. I want the remark withdrawn before we proceed with any other business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1122)

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, if it is only accidentally that the hon. member asks questions about people such as Gauthier, Perrier, Marchand, Lapointe, Giguère, Pratte, Ménard, Campeau, Joanisse—

[English]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Andre: Give us a talk about unity.

An hon. Member: Sick Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will see the minister one more time to withdraw his remark, as the Chair has directed, and permit us to get on to other business. Otherwise, I have to follow another course.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, if it is true that the hon. member did so accidentally, then I of course withdraw my remarks because he is the most inconsequential and petty individual this parliament has ever known. It is without realizing it that the hon. member discredits and casts doubt on French Canadians. So I am forced to withdraw my remarks but I think he is a petty individual whose actions are dangerous.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has clearly and unequivocally withdrawn the remark that he made about the hon. member for Central Nova. Therefore, I am required, in parliamentary terms, to accept that withdrawal. However, I cannot overlook the fact that repeatedly the minister rose to his feet to continue to argue a point when I had indicated that the only reason he had the floor at the time was to withdraw that remark.

I want to remind the minister and hon. members that on previous occasions when members have used unparliamentary language, they have understood that if they wished to argue the merits of what they had to say, they have had always an opportunity, then and at other times, to do so in parliamentary language. Therefore, at this moment it is not open to the minister to carry this argument forward. If he wishes to do so, he will do so at the proper time and in proper parliamentary terms. At the moment, he has withdrawn the remark that was offending the order of the House and we may now proceed to the question period.

It now being 11.25 a.m., the question period will terminate at 12.10 p.m.

[Mr. Speaker.]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

FORMER MINISTER SERVING ON BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF PRIVATE CORPORATION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. It also involves individuals with questionable practices who are part of the Prime Minister's cabinet. This time it relates to the activities of Mr. Donald Macdonald, formerly minister of finance, who, as everyone knows, is now on the board of directors of the McDonnell-Douglas Aircraft Corporation.

• (1127)

Will the Prime Minister tell the House whether it is the practice of the government to allow backbench members of parliament to chair meetings involving senior officials and ministers concerning industrial assistance? If it is not, will he tell the House why the Hon. Donald Macdonald, while still a backbench member of parliament, was allowed to chair meetings involving the minister of industry, trade and commerce, the minister of state for small business, as well as senior officials and executives of Douglas Aircraft, the subject of which was an appeal for industrial assistance of that company?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I regret missing the beginning of the hon. member's question. If my answer is not relevant, I will apologize and ask the hon. member to repeat his question. If the question was whether a backbencher can chair a committee, the answer is, sure, they are welcome to. I hope they chair many committees.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, that was not my question. I was not asking whether backbenchers could chair committee meetings. My question was, can a backbencher of the government chair meetings behind closed doors involving industrial assistance to companies in Canada where other cabinet ministers and senior officials are included?

My supplementary question is as follows. Based on government documents, my information is that until Mr. Macdonald became director of Douglas Aircraft last May, the company's bid for assistance received a predominantly negative response from Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce officials. Will the Prime Minister tell the House why the written advice of officials to consider assistance only up to a maximum of 20 per cent was overruled, as shown by Treasury Board document IT and C No. 53/513c-120-1, wherein a full 30 per cent, or over $16 million, was approved by the department only after Mr. Macdonald's appointment to the board of directors of that company?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I know nothing of these documents or the facts supposedly alleged by the hon. member.

An hon. Member: They are not supposedly alleged; they are alleged.

Mr. Trudeau: Since he has quoted the names of the companies, I will look into it and attempt to find that out. Very frequently there are applications made by companies for something and we say. "No." Then they improve their offer and we improve our answer. This is a process which goes down constantly in front of FIRA and DREE agencies. Naturally, the government attempts to get the best possible deal for the Canadian public in any series of negotiations. If McDonnell-Douglas has done something which permits Canadians to get a better deal, that is good.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, it seems strange to me that the bid by McDonnell-Douglas lasted over a year, received a negative response and was not approved until after Mr. Macdonald became a director. Can the Prime Minister explain the change in the attitude of the government toward Douglas Aircraft following Mr. Macdonald's appointment to the board, as compared to a statement implicit in a memorandum of December 19, 1977, from Mr. H. P. Horne, a senior official of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to his superiors which stressed the following:

> We should impress on the company that the Canadian government does not respond to threats by McDonnell-Douglas.

Will the Prime Minister tell the House whether Mr. Macdonald, who obviously knew of this relationship between the company and the government, complied with the ethical standards of the government when he accepted the appointment to the board of McDonnell-Douglas?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the hon. member, by way of his question, is suggesting there must be something wrong here. If he has a case to make, I would appreciate his making it.

An hon. Member: He has made it.

Mr. Trudeau: Then we will look into it. I know of no wrongdoing. I am not surprised that Mr. Macdonald's presence on the board has improved the quality of that board. He is a very intelligent human being and also a very honest person. What is wrong with that?

An hon. Member: He did not do much for the government.

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. member has a justified suspicion, he can tell me, tell the government or tell the police. We would be happy to look into it.

Mr. Paproski: We would not tell you.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: May I be recognized later, Mr. Speaker?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO CURB INFLATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. The Anti-Inflation Board report on food prices which was released yesterday revealed an additional 1 per cent increase in food prices which, when added to the 1 per cent increase that will come with tomorrow's increase in the price of gas and oil, will mean that Canadians this month will be confronted with an inflation rate of 11 per cent.

● (1132)

Considering that when the Prime Minister announced last month we would not have an election, he said in that context the government would busy itself with bringing forward new economic policies to deal with such things as inflation, will he tell us what the government is doing to head off this re-emergence of double-digit inflation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in terms of government policy—perhaps the hon. member has not been listening—in the past five or six weeks we have made many policy announcements which will have the effect of creating jobs in Canada relating to small business and science and technology. A whole series of proposals has been put before this House, including legislation which was passed yesterday that I am sure escaped the notice of the Leader of the NDP. In so far as the specific area of food is concerned, there is to be a meeting of the federal and provincial ministers of agriculture late next week or the week after. They will be attempting, together, to come to grips with the very difficult problem of increasing food prices without penalizing the producer. In some areas the producer is merely catching up with the fallback he has suffered in the past two years—as in the case of beef, for instance. There are indications that the price of food products will ease in the next few weeks and that any advances during the balance of 1978 will be moderate, relative to trends since the start of the year. Beef prices appear to have peaked for the—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Are you interested?

An hon. Member: Give us the facts.

Mr. Trudeau: Fresh produce prices are—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I thought they might like to have the facts.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister is reading from a two-year old script. Considering that an all-party committee of the Ontario legislature, which includes members of the Liberal party in that province, reported that as a result of discounting and rebate purchase policies there may be substantial profiteering by major supermarket chains, and considering that this report comes on top of a similar one produced in British Columbia, will the Prime Minister undertake right away to have this aspect of food chain operations investigated?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member suggests that I am reading from a two-year old script. I tell him I am reading from an AIB report dated yesterday, June 29.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The trouble is that he bases his question on the AIB release except, as usual, he just looks for the bad things. I would not impute motives to the hon. member, but it is strange that he can always find only the bad things. That is why he is sitting where he is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I see that the Prime Minister's miasma is bothering him again today. I would like him now, aside from his rhetoric, to take the time to answer the question. I pointed out to him that an all-party committee of the Ontario legislature found good evidence to believe there is profiteering among food chains, which comes on top of a similar finding in the province of British Columbia. Increasing food prices may not bother the Prime Minister, but they bother a lot of Canadians. Will he now undertake to have these practices investigated?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, rather than looking only at what his party is doing at Queen's Park, the hon. member should listen to what the minister has been telling him in the House.

Mr. Broadbent: And your party.

Mr. Trudeau: And my party, of course. We set up the AIB some years ago to control inflation, but it never received the support of the hon. member's party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: It never received the support of the hon. member's party. The Minister of Finance asked that board to look into this very matter, I think last week, regarding accusations of possible profiteering. We will probably have a report on it before the friends of the hon. member in Toronto get theirs.

URBAN AFFAIRS

INVOLVEMENT OF CMHC IN PROVIDING ACCOMMODATION FOR VICTIMS OF BUCKINGHAM, QUEBEC, TORNADO

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Following his reply this week concerning the tornado which struck in Buckingham, can the minister tell us when the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation staff in Hull will be able to publish its final report on the extent of damages, and in practical terms what the CMHC will do to relocate the victims under its policies?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I think the hon. member is a bit late. If he had listened to the Outaouais regional news last night he would know that the CMHC officer who was sent to the scene met with the Buckingham mayor and confirmed to him that 40 housing units would be put at the disposal of the victims of this tornado.

Concrete and positive action has therefore been taken to make 40 housing units available to these victims for an indefinite period of time.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact that most of those houses were financed and insured by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, has a policy been established for reconstruction of those houses at a reasonable cost to the owners?

Mr. Ouellet: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that question is under study. The hon. member for Gatineau is representing me on those discussions. He himself has undertaken a series of consultations with the concerned citizens to examine what the Government of Canada could do to bring about additional assistance, and the hon. member for Gatineau in the House of Commons is to report to me in the next few days on the measures we could take in addition to those the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has already confirmed having taken.

[English]

STUDY OF RATE OF INFLATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question supplementary to the one put to the Prime Minister by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. We now have the matter of food prices under study by the AIB or, at least, charges of profiteering and price gouging. We have a study under way by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Minister of Agriculture with regard to alleviating some of the consequences of increasing food prices—at least, that is what the minister said a couple of days ago in the House—in addition to which we have the study undertaken by the Economic Council of Canada.

Are these three separate studies being carried on in concert, one with another, and who is taking the over-all co-ordinating responsibility? While I am on my feet I should like to ask the Prime Minister when we can expect an announcement in respect of the studies of the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, co-ordination will be done at the moment the report is handed to the government: that is where co-ordination will take place. The study of the AIB is not under the direction of the government. It is doing the study at the request of the Minister of Finance. Of course, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is having, as I understand it, a departmental study made and we will be anxious to make the facts known to the House as soon as possible. Obviously, if there is a finding of profiteering, that will involve action by the government to prevent such profiteering.

EFFECT OF INFLATION ON LOW INCOME EARNERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if she will undertake a study, having regard to her responsibilities and because of the impact food price inflation is having on people of fixed and low incomes. I am thinking especially of the plight of old age pensioners in Canada who are finding it very difficult to afford an adequately nutritious diet. Is she taking a look at this problem, in light of the current round of food price inflation?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I said in the House some weeks ago that the department had started, not really a study in the scientific sense but a gathering of the facts and an exploration to determine whether a more systematic study is required to assess the allegation of the hon. member. We have put the emphasis on northern regions of the country where I have a direct responsibility and where we want to see the people provided with a proper diet.

NATIONAL REVENUE

INQUIRY INTO TAX AFFAIRS OF JOHN C. DOYLE

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. It has to do with a Panamanian citizen, so I hope I will not be accused of being anti-Panamanian. On May 19, 42 days or six weeks ago, I wrote the Prime Minister, sent him a memorandum and asked him to hold a public inquiry into whether the tax laws were fairly and equitably administered in this country, particularly with reference to the case of Mr. John C. Doyle. Since writing to the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Revenue confirmed that for the years 1950, 1953 and 1954 Mr. Doyle owes the government $5,014,000 in income tax and interest, that the government has no adequate security and is having great difficulty collecting, despite judgments of the Supreme Court of Canada. The minister will not give me information on what else he owes for other years since 1950 and 1954.

● (1142)

My question to the Prime Minister is: Will he order a public Inquiry, under the Inquiries Act, into this particular case and the administration of the tax laws with reference to this case, since the taxpayers of Canada have to pay up? What went wrong, who is responsible, and can we have a full, public inquiry?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there must be many dozens, if not hundreds, of cases of uncollected taxes by National Revenue.

An hon. Member: Five million dollars?

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure that in each and every case the department is doing its best to collect the money. I do not know what the hon. member suggests should be inquired into. If he could be more precise and indicate that he suspects negligence or some desire on the part of the government not to collect the money, I would very much like to hear it.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister will get briefed, he will discover that these tax years were reassessed in 1959 and that this taxpayer was not made to put up adequate security or to pay the taxes, as is the normal method of dealing with taxpayers who dispute their income tax. He did not have to put up a guarantee or a bond: he has had to put up nothing. He controls a major Canadian company and owns 18.4 per cent of the shares of Canadian Javelin Limited, from which he has taken hundreds of thousands of dollars—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: My question to the Prime Minister, and I could fill him in on much more detail if he would give me the time to see him, and my allegations are that there is something very, very wrong, something very corrupt, about this situation. My question again to the Prime Minister is, will he order a public inquiry as my memorandum requests, and as I now request, having given him these other details?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member refers to 1959. He will remember that the Liberal party did not form the government then, and it is a rule that I cannot look into the papers of previous administrations; nor will I attempt to do so. Perhaps if he asks the right hon. gentleman for Prince Albert—

Mr. Paproski: Stop playing games.

Mr. Trudeau: —what happened in 1959, he might get the beginning of an answer.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, in 1959 the reassessment took place for the years 1950 and 1954 by the Diefenbaker government. In 1963, during the hon. gentleman's government—which did nothing from then on—there was an income tax appeal—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member have a question?

Mr. Crosbie: Would the hon. Prime Minister tell me why the government was so courageous in its activities to get these taxes that it allowed eight years to go by before it pursued the matter to the Income Tax Appeal Board, and allowed another eight years to go by before they drove the appeal on to the Supreme Court of Canada? Why did the government wait 16 years before attempting to take any measures until I brought it up in this House? It has nothing to do with the previous government.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, presumably because of the difficulty in collecting the money it took some time. If I understand the situation correctly, it began in 1959. I wonder why the government of the day did not ask for securities, rather than wait until he had thrown them off.

Mr. Crosbie: Read my memorandum.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

STATUS OF COMMISSIONER OF THE YUKON

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. The Yukon Territory Council has voted by a six to five margin to request Arthur Pearson's removal as Yukon territorial commissioner. In view of these circumstances, and in the absence of the minister of northern affairs, I wonder whether it is the intention of the government to request or to obtain the resignation of Mr. Pearson as commissioner of the Yukon territory?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the facts alleged by the hon. member. I will take note of them, for the minister's benefit, and he will provide a reply. I seem to recollect that the commissioner of the Yukon, like the commissioner of the territories, is named by orders in council and it probably is at pleasure. I would want to see if, indeed, the suggestion made by the hon. member is borne out by the facts.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there was a resignation a few days ago—I am sure it must have come to the attention of the Prime Minister, who pays some attention to domestic matters—of Mr. Lang, the minister of education, on the basis of the activities of the commissioner of the Yukon, would the Prime Minister tell us whether it is the policy of this government to disregard the wishes of the elected representatives of the Yukon territory, or whether he is in a position to say that the government will support the decision of the elected representatives of the people of the Yukon territory?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I just told the House that I was not aware of the fact alleged by the hon. member. I took note of it, for the benefit of the minister. If the hon. member wanted an answer today, he might have given me notice and I would have tried to find out what happened. I did not know, either, that Mr. Lang had resigned. I see that he is not in his seat, but I would be very surprised if he has.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MEDAL FOR NATO SERVICE

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In the three years since the government agreed with my motion to establish a military medal for recognizing NATO service, I have asked in the House three times about the progress of this bill and the establishment of the medal. I would like to ask the minister, for the fourth time, when will this medal, to which the government is committed, see the light of day?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I expect it will be very soon. I will be making recommendations on this, not in the form of a NATO medal but in the form of a general service medal to recognize service in NATO, NORAD and other service in the armed forces. I should have all the information, because our criteria for medals is serious and is to be treated seriously, within the next month or so.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ACTION TO AVOID POSSIBLE STRIKE OF NURSES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to address to the President of the Treasury Board with reference to the status of nurses in the federal employ. Would the minister indicate the response the government has taken or intends to take with respect to the request of the Professional Institute of the Public Service to come back to the negotiating table, if not the bargaining table?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I answered questions on this matter yesterday. I cannot add very much except to confirm publicly in the House that we would welcome and would respond immediately to a request for consultation with the professional institute or representatives of the bargaining agent. In fact, such discussions have been taking place.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand the reply of the minister, but it may be that my information is not correct. I will put the question in this form. It is my understanding that PIPS has in fact directed to Treasury Board a request for further negotiations and my understanding from the minister is that he has not had this request. I wonder if he would have his officials double-check this because, quite clearly, the nurses are seeking to come back at least to a table where they can talk. Also, would the minister take appropriate steps to respond to what I understand to be a very formal and proper request to Treasury Board for further negotiations?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I said that discussions are taking place. We will most certainly confirm, formally, a response to any new or later requests from the professional institute. We would like to get back to the bargaining table, too.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WORLD DISARMAMENT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. I call to his attention what I am sure he knows already, that is, that the disarmament conference, after a special session of the United Nations which took place in New York and after 5½ weeks of study and speeches, has made a declaration of principle calling for a radically new approach to the elimination of the $400 billion a year world expenditure on armaments, giving new emphasis to development and calling for reorganization of the disarmament committee so that France may take a full part in the plans for disarmament.

I ask the Prime Minister—I am sure he will give a positive answer—whether he will undertake, on behalf of the Government of Canada, that the government will do all within its power to have this declaration carried into effect so that the world may survive.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have been busy with domestic affairs since I was at the United Nations conference on disarmament.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Not in the Yukon.

● (1152)

Mr. Trudeau: I have not followed the details of the debate. Certainly, several of the points that I made in my statement there are in line with the wishes expressed by the hon. member, including France rejoining the debate. As to the position which the government has been instructed to take at this particular time, I would have to refer the question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, if the hon. member would allow.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question, then, to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I add the question whether it would be the policy of the government to approve the committee on external affairs and national defence of this House taking a special reference to study the question of disarmament.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as to the original part of the hon. member's question, I can say that Canada and, I am sure, this House, welcomes the outcome of the UNSSOD—United Nations special session on disarmament. All of the initiatives were ones which, as the Prime Minister has said, we supported, and indeed some which he advocated in his speech. In addition to that, I think we were particularly happy to note that France, as the hon. member mentioned, is prepared now to rejoin the discussions. In that connection, I have started a new mechanism within Canada and the department to deal with disarmament questions.

In addition to that, the hon. member has asked about a reference to the committee. I see absolutely no reason why that should not be done at the appropriate time. We would welcome the support of members on both sides of the House for pressing on with this very crucial and key matter.

AIR TRANSPORT

MECHANICAL PROBLEMS WITH DC-9s

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I will direct my question to the acting minister. I would like to bring to the attention of the minister another Air Canada mechanical problem which occurred on flight 176 out of Winnipeg on June 20. In this connection, the plane had to return twice to the Winnipeg airport due to a malfunction of the oil indicator light. After the second return, Air Canada had to transfer the passengers to a CP Air flight.

I ask the acting minister or the parliamentary secretary whether they will personally contact the president of Air Canada to find out if these DC-9s are being properly serviced and maintained and, as well, will they inquire why these incidents are not being reported to the proper authorities within MOT?

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, of course the Minister of Transport, like all members of the House, regrets all the air incidents which may happen like the one in Toronto. Yesterday, however, the hon. member informed us of an accident which occurred in Winnipeg on Monday June 19, so we contacted the authorities of Air Canada, who have never heard anything about it. Today he is talking about another incident, and we shall inquire with the authorities of Air Canada again, but it seems to me that members should refrain from arousing unfounded fears and check their sources of information carefully before mentioning air accidents.

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the parliamentary secretary that these incidents have been confirmed to the CBC in Winnipeg, which is an indication—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKenzie: —that there is an internal problem. I suggest you ask for further—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Mackenzie.

Oral Questions

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

AGREEMENT WITH SASKATCHEWAN ON PROJECT COSTS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Can the minister indicate why his department is withholding the signing of an agreement with the province of Saskatchewan so that projects can be undertaken during ideal weather conditions instead of waiting, as I understand it, to sign the agreement some time in the fall when weather conditions make it unfavourable and the costs invariably increase, not only because of the rain and snow but due to other factors as well?

The province of Saskatchewan has already expended its intended share and is now withholding further development of any projects, awaiting some kind of an agreement with the federal government. Is it due to lack of funds, or is there some other reason?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to tell the hon. member that it is true that in the coming weeks we should sign and ratify that agreement which follows, I think, the one that was under negotiation to continue the development of the northern lands of northern Saskatchewan. The delays have been caused by the need to consult further certain groups concerned by the contents of that agreement, particularly the native people, and to make sure that the necessary mechanisms will be put in place so that the projects that will be implemented under the agreement to be signed are those that meet the needs and recommendations of the groups representing those people.

[English]

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, is the minister confirming that he has had consultations with the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians or the Metis Association of Saskatchewan and that because of the negotiations he is holding his position regarding certain funds being directed to these organizations, disregarding the province of Saskatchewan, the department of Northern Saskatchewan, that the funds will be funnelled to these particular organizations? Is this the new policy that is being followed by the government?

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard: No, Mr. Speaker, that is not exactly the situation, but we did have meetings and discussions with the various groups representing the natives, the Metis and the Indians who live within or outside reserves. Having listened to their representations and their claims we had to make some concessions regarding certain delays. In fact, to some extent, we are going to take their interests and their recommendations into account, but I can assure the hon. member that we should now proceed as soon as possible to the signature of that agreement.

[Mr. Speaker.]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

BROADCASTING OF HOCKEY GAMES

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the WHA and the NHL have not merged, I would like to put my question to the Secretary of State, who is in charge of the CBC. Would the minister see to it that the CBC at least broadcasts some WHA hockey games, particularly the games played by the Edmonton Oilers and the Quebec Nordiques, to show national unity and at least show us some games that are worthy of watching, instead of those played by the Washington Capitals and the Colorado Rockies?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: I realize this is a representation, but I hope the Secretary of State will do something about the situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am flattered that the hon. member has recognized the vast array of sports expertise that I have which enables me to make that kind of judgment to be directed to the CBC. I find that extremely flattering. Apart from that, all I can say is that I will transfer his representation to the proper authorities.

Mr. Paproski: You can do it much better than Iona.

AIRPORTS

DEVELOPMENT OF HAMILTON, ONT., AIRPORT

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Transport, but I will refer it to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that the Minister of Transport has committed his department to developments at Hamilton airport for a regional airport, can he inform me whether we can expect any announcement in the summer concerning the time-frame within which he will bring about these developments?

An hon. Member: Only if an election is called.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the minister and department officials are very much aware of the continuing representations made by the hon. member and the great interest he has in the development of this airport.

The minister has committed himself to ensure the developmen of a regional airport. This commitment is still valid; however, at this time, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the precise dates when the next announcements will be made on this matter.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

GRANTS IN LIEU OF TAXES

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister: it relates to the threat by the city of Ottawa to cut off water to the federal government if it does not pay fair taxes—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Right on.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: 24 Sussex.

An hon. Member: Drain the pool.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Lots of hot air, but no water.

Mrs. Pigott: —instead of the puny sums referred to as grants in lieu thereof. Will the Prime Minister tell the House the contingency plans he has in the event that this September the entire public service is cut off from city water supplies?

• (1202)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would not consider this a matter of urgent necessity. This discussion about taxes and grants in lieu of taxes has been going on with the city of Ottawa for many years. Indeed, every city in which there are federal buildings would like to have more grants. The Minister of Finance, and other ministers, have been in discussion with Ottawa in particular and have improved the situation there. I am sure the mayor would like to have more money. So would we, Mr. Speaker. I can say that discussions will go on during the course of the summer on a courteous basis. I do not think the citizens have to fill their bathtubs yet.

ENERGY

TAKEOVER OF HUSKY OIL COMPANY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister regarding the shenanigans going on with Husky Oil shares? In view of the fact that the stock has been parlayed up to an increase of nearly $200 million which Canadian consumers and taxpayers will have to pay, and in view of the fact that Alberta Gas Trunk Line, which was not a declared group desirous of becoming principal shareholders, has become so, I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has asked the Toronto Stock Exchange to look into the events that have taken place over the last two weeks. If they have not done so, is the government giving any consideration to so doing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes some allegation, which I cannot see substantiated, to the effect that Canadian taxpayers will have to pay $200 million more because of something going on in the stock market. I do not understand on what basis I could accept that statement and on what basis it would permit the government to go to the Toronto Stock Exchange. If there are some complaints of irregularities, I hope they will be made, and I will make sure they are heard by the proper authorities.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Prime Minister is aware that if $200 million more is paid for Husky than it is worth, the people who buy the oil will have to foot the bill. Some ten days ago the energy minister for Alberta, Mr. Getty, said on television that in view of his government's political philosophy they do not want Petro-Canada in the oil business.

In view of the fact that Alberta Gas Trunk Line, in which the Alberta government has a direct interest, has representatives on the board of directors, I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether quarterback Don Getty has passed the ball to Alberta Gas Trunk Line to make an end run around Petro-Canada in order to keep the Canadian government out of its declared intention of having some public participation in oil development. If that is the case, does the federal government intend to do anything about it?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question, once again I do not think the hon. member really believes that the price of oil on international markets is determined by stock transactions between companies which exploit that oil. Unfortunately, the price is not set on the international markets by Canada or Canadian stock market actions. The suspicion which lurks behind the hon. member's question is one which catches me by surprise and gives me some concern. Indeed, it seems illogical, if the Alberta government has members on the board of Alberta Gas Trunk Line, that it should condone interference in some way of their directors in an operation such as this—if they do, indeed, object to Petro-Canada.

However, it seems to me this is at least one area where the hon. member and this government—and, indeed, the Saskatchewan government—are in agreement that it would have been good if Petro-Canada had been successful in taking over. If it is not successful, at least it is important that the aim which is ours and that of the Saskatchewan government, of getting heavy oils into exploitation, will be reached in some other way. In so far as asking us if we can do anything about a resource which exists in two provinces, this is an interesting suggestion but I do not think the provinces, in the constitutional debate, will want to transfer to the federal government jurisdiction over their resources.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLITICAL ASYLUM FOR FOREIGN NATIONALS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, with whom I have briefly discussed the case of Mr. Yung Man Yang, vice-consul of the Korean Consulate General in Toronto who defected and applied for political asylum and then was granted political status in Canada on completely different grounds than those applied for.

In his application, as the minister knows, Mr. Yang made some very serious allegations about subverting and disunity being sown in the Canadian-Korean community, utilizing agents of the Korean CIA disguised as diplomats or consular officials and, as well, the payment of fairly large sums of Korean government money in Canada. This is a matter which has been the subject of very serious consideration by an American congressional committee in the United States over the last year.

My question to the minister is simply this. The subcommittee of the United States Congress investing Korean-American relations has applied, through the State Department of the United States to the Department of External Affairs, to interview Mr. Yang. This request was made some weeks ago. For the first time in living memory, that request was denied. My question to the minister is, why was the request denied by the Department of External Affairs?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me, in all candour, tell the hon. member that with regard to the last part of his question, I was not aware of it. If there was a denial, it must have been on some grounds that did not require to be brought to my attention. I will look into that part of it. I think he will agree that it was the other parts of the issue that he consulted me on, and I am grateful for that. I will look into that last part. I suspect we had good grounds for doing so, but I do not wish to go beyond that at this time.

On the general question, we have looked into the allegations and claims of Mr. Yang. At the same time, we have provided for him sanctuary in Canada under appropriate circumstances. In a general way, without taking the time of the House for a very detailed answer, the situation is that it is obvious there are certain tensions between various groups in the Korean community in Canada. The RCMP and others who have looked into this have advised that there is no basis on which legal action can be taken or nothing that is unmistakably and without qualification beyond what would be acceptable or diplomatically proper.

I repeat now what I said to the party before and to others who have made these claims: we will be glad to look into any other further allegations or charges. However, the very detailed analysis which has been made so far in the course of the investigation made reveals that there are tensions, but not of a nature that would permit or justify government action at this moment.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

MAIL INTERCEPTION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General, who I am sure monitored the deliberations of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs considering the mail interception bill. He will be aware that the deliberations, or the wisdom thereof, would be inhibited if the evidence before the McDonald commission on this issue—some 2,000 pages of testimony—was withheld from that standing committee on this House.

In order to assist the standing committee to reach the very best available legislation in this very important area, and in view of the fact that some weeks now are available before the committee will resume its deliberations, will the Solicitor General reconsider his position and, through his counsel on the McDonald commission, request that that commission on that one issue of postal interception provide the committee with an interim report?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will recognize, of course, that the evidence being brought before the McDonald inquiry was brought before the inquiry at its behest and for its purposes. Therefore, they have individual purposes which they are addressing.

• (1212)

As for the use the committee might make of that evidence, I have done everything in my power to make available to the hon. gentleman evidence the committee felt was relevant to the study of the bill. I am disappointed that the bill did not progress further, though I recognize—and the hon. gentleman seemed to recognize in his question—that the work has been very constructive and that the witnesses have been very helpful. It is to be hoped we shall make more substantial progress after the resumption of the sitting in the fall.

PRIVILEGE

MR. OUELLET—ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES IN ADJUDICATION OF CONTRACTS BY NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of State for Urban Affairs on a question of privilege.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, on page 6859 of Hansard for Thursday, June 29, the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) asked me the following question:

I would move that if the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has any tangible evidence whatsoever that I have ever been adverse to the interests of Quebeckers or Canadians of French descent, he should bring it forward . . .

I take this first opportunity provided to me to rise on a question of privilege since the hon member put a question to me yesterday and I wanted before giving him specific examples to take a few hours to check copies of Hansard—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister may wish to pursue that matter in other ways. I know he will realize, upon reflection, that it would be against all our procedures to allow him to proceed as he is doing at this time on a question of privilege. With proper notice, or at some other time, his purpose might be accomplished but I cannot allow him to continue now.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. PINARD—STATEMENTS BY CERTAIN MEMBERS

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to discuss your ruling, but I think that yesterday you opened the door to our point of order or question of privilege, whatever may be the proper remedy, in connection with the comments made yesterday by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) about the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Mr. Speaker, on page 6860 of Hansard, you mentioned—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps I can clarify this situation. If matters of privilege which arise from yesterday's discussion are to be raised today, they will have to be raised upon notice. I have received no notice from any member of any intention to raise questions of privilege today as a result of events which took place yesterday. In addition, as far as the merits of the events of yesterday are concerned, interventions were made yesterday with respect to the question of privilege, and completed. There were no arguments raised in opposition to the suggestion that the matter was one of privilege. Therefore, on the basis of the arguments put forward, I had to look at the precedents and make my determination.

If there are other matters which are to be raised they will have to be dealt with in accordance with our normal procedures as they arise. If questions arose yesterday which relate to any matters of order or privilege, they can be taken up in the ordinary way. But I have no authority to take up matters of privilege on a Friday resulting from Thursday's proceedings unless I have first been given notice in accordance with the standing orders. Again, I say I have received no notice.

Tabling of Documents

MR. McKENZIE—AIR CANADA

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I want to inform the House that a member of this House, the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk), was on that Air Canada flight on June 19 and has explained all the details of the accident which occurred on that date.

Mr. Speaker: That, of course, is not a point of order.

[Translation]

MR. PINARD—COMMENT BY HON. MEMBER FOR CENTRAL NOVA

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I had clearly understood yesterday that you had reserved the rights of hon. members to make sound interventions in full knowledge of the facts. Your decision which I have not commented on has taken us a little by surprise, for you have made it known in a somewhat unusual fashion before the question period. With your permission, we should like to comment on this, not for the purpose of trying to convince you to reverse your decision, but on the basis of a precise point of order raised by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) concerning remarks which the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) and the Leader of the Opposition have made in the House, and this is what we should like to deal with today—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The parliamentary secretary is mistaken. What I said yesterday was that when arguments have been raised on the subject of whether an unparliamentary remark has been made, I listen to the arguments and examine the transcript. After I examine the transcript I can make a decision. That is what I said I would do yesterday. I made it clear I would reserve my decision until after I had examined the transcript. I have finalized the matter and it should now remain closed.

Northern Pipeline Agency

PRIVILEGE

MR. CROSBIE—ANSWER GIVEN BY PRIME MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It has to do with the question I addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) today as head of the government and head of the administration of justice.

On May 19 I sent him a six-page memorandum bringing to his attention some alarming matters in connection with the administration of the income tax law. The taxpayer I have in mind owes the government more than $5 million at this time, after appeals to the supreme court and after 25 years have expired. Today we see in the papers that the same taxpayer, who controls a Canadian company, is having that company pay him $2.7 million in reimbursement for disbursements he said he made in retaining control of the company. He is a former Canadian citizen now living in Panama and this money is coming from a Canadian company and will be paid to him, although he owes the government $5 million—money which the government has spent ten years doing nothing to collect.

I brought this matter to the attention of the Prime Minister six weeks ago by way of a memorandum, and I have also done so by way of questions in this House. His response has been to laugh it off, to pretend he knows nothing about it, and to pretend it is a matter of no interest to the taxpayers of this country, to the 10 million or 12 million people who pay their taxes every year.

You might be wondering what my question of privilege is, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: My submission is that the Prime Minister is infringing on the privilege of this House by not having an investigation conducted into a scandalous matter brought to his attention concerning the administration of the tax laws.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) wishes to be critical of the action or inaction of any other hon. member of the House, avenues are open to him, but he surely understands that he cannot proceed on a question of privilege in this way.

NORTHERN PIPELINE AGENCY

MEMBERSHIP OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): With consent, Mr. Speaker, and referring to the questions which were raised earlier in the week about the Northern Pipeline Agency, I should like to move:

That the members of the Standing Committee on the Northern Pipeline Agency be Messrs. Allard, Breau, Dawson, Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands), Foster, Goodale, Lawrence, Lee, Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich), Neil, Nielsen, Oberle, Penner, Railton and Watson.

[Mr. Lumley.]

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires consent if it is to be introduced at this time. Does the House give consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: Then I so move.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION RESPECTING SUMMER RECESS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council) moved:

That when the House adjourns on Friday, June 30, 1978, it shall stand adjourned until Tuesday, October 10, 1978, provided that at any time prior to that date, if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time; and

That, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for all purposes of this order.

● (1222)

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on rising to speak on this motion for a few moments I am bound to say that, judging by what occurred in the House yesterday and today, perhaps there comes a time when parliament should close and that to keep parliament here might do the institution damage. I see that Your Honour is nodding in agreement. I am happy to see that, because notwithstanding that from time to time there can be difficulties and feelings that perhaps all sides of the House might not agree with Your Honour's rulings, I am going to say to you, sir, that I think you have endeavoured to be fair. This institution demands that of you, but it also demands fairness from all hon. members in terms not only of how they behave but also of what they say.

If the adjournment could mean anything at all, it could mean that perhaps the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), who was involved in an incident yesterday which I could charitably describe only as disgraceful, would go home. Perhaps the minister might be better to stay there, for the purposes of this institution, until he has cooled off and understands that, as we approach a holiday to celebrate our country tomorrow, it might be better if certain things were not said, let alone thought, especially in this institution.

I can only attribute the concern of the parliamentary secretary to the fact that he is overtired from a long session. I want to be as charitable as I can with respect to the parliamentary secretary, with whom it is my pleasure to deal regarding the intricacies of the House of Commons. There is no place in this institution, which has evolved and which has been strengthened over the course of 500 years, for the kind of incident which occurred yesterday and which there seemed to be some desire to pursue today, because this institution will suffer and the country will suffer. Therefore I say to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) that there comes a time when parliament should adjourn, and perhaps this is the time. It is in this context that I want to reflect back for a few moments on why we are here in the first place.

Your Honour will recall that as a result of the actions of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) some time ago, in the month of May, the whole country was gripped with the expectation of an election. That was the expectation, and that expectation was fueled not only by statements uttered by the Prime Minister from his place here but also by his activities. Appointments were made. Statements were made at his press conferences, and the country fully expected that there would be an election.

The Prime Minister conducts himself and makes his decisions based on a number of gospels. I am sure of at least two—the gospels of Goldfarb and Gallup. Having conferred with those characters—and I use that term in its most charitable sense—the Prime Minister decided that perhaps it would be better to switch than fight. So parliament stayed on for a while. But why? What was the reason the Prime Minister gave? The House will recall that the Prime Minister was asked by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) whether he intended to dissolve parliament and call an immediate election. I think I am paraphrasing that question correctly. The answer of the Prime Minister was as it appears at page 5307 of Hansard. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, I think it has been apparent in the House that we are all concerned with the issues with which the Canadian people are concerned, and they want solutions to these problems at this time.

That was an indication that we were staying for some purpose. The purpose was to find solutions to some of the problems affecting the country. What kinds of problems was the Prime Minister talking about at that time? The Leader of the Opposition asked if the Prime Minister would be introducing a new package of economic measures. The Prime Minister's answer was as it appears at page 5307 of Hansard, as follows:

> I do not take it that the Leader of the Opposition is suggesting another budget, but other types of economic measures. I can assure him that they will be forthcoming—

Notwithstanding the words of the Prime Minister, since that time there has not been one item of legislation which would give Canadians any reason to believe that the problems referred to by the Prime Minister would be addressed, let alone solved.

The government introduced Bank Act revisions. That legislation was about three years late. Every ten years there is a revision of the Bank Act. The government knew that as early as 1967, when the Bank Act was last revised, yet it could not plan its affairs to have the revisions presented to this House on time to pass them into law by 1977.

The Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) introduced a package of measures for small business. That package was passed perfunctorily last night by the House of Commons. It was passed perfunctorily, not because we are at the end of a session but because the measures were so much of motherhood that there was very little difficulty passing them. The hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) made suggestions as to how the measures could be improved. Those suggestions had been made before by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek).

Hon. members will recall that at the press conference of the Minister of State (Small Business) the minister sat beside the leader of his party in the National Press Building as he announced those small business measures. The members of the press, who are not businessmen, regarded the announcement as a great yawn. That was their reaction. I looked into the face of the Prime Minister that day on my television tube, and I saw embarrassment over such picayune, minuscule measures being presented to address such a real problem in this country. There has been nothing else since the Prime Minister declined to face up to the electorate. He and his advisers had to face the reality that all Canadians now realize that this is the most inept, the most incompetent, and there are suspicions abroad that it is the most corrupt government in the history of Canada.

Our country has some severe economic problems, and the Prime Minister refuses to recognize that fact. He blithely continues to tinker with the Constitution, on the premise that economic problems will take care of themselves if they are left alone. I have something to say to the Prime Minister with respect to that. Those economic problems will not go away unless there is some affirmative action by this government, which is now here for however long. Unless there is some economic action and some initiatives taken by this government, those economic problems which plague this country, concern its people, affect its future and can alienate its young people, will not be taken away.

Hon. members opposite who shout across this chamber had better take that into account when they go back later today to their ridings because the people of this country want some answers from the government, and those answers are not forthcoming. Our economic malaise can only become worse if no answers are given and if there is no leadership on the part of the government of the day. This government continues to ignore the realities, and one of those realities is that we have become, to the distress of our citizens, business people and working men and women, a second class economy among western economies, and perhaps that is a reflection of the fact that we have a second class government.

The Prime Minister and his cabinet ministers like to use international comparisons to explain away the country's economic problems. Here are some facts that the Prime Minister does not like to quote. For the past two years Canada has had the highest unemployment rate among the industrialized countries and the worst inflation rate in the world. The Economic Council of Canada says that our economy is capable of growing by at least 5 per cent a year. Under this government we have only obtained that 5 per cent rate once in the last five years. When the Prime Minister took office, Canada had the second highest standard of living in the world. Today, under his leadership, it has fallen to the seventh in the world. During the time the Prime Minister has led his government, the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar has fallen to 50 cents. Last year, the government collected $33 billion in taxes, an increase of 350 per cent since the Prime Minister took office.

An hon. Member: What did they spend?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): When the Prime Minister took office, the federal government was spending $10 billion a year. That is now the size of our deficit in Canada. It is an indication of the spending of this government. If it were not wasted, if we had not pursued the Les Terrasses de la Chaudière project, which is a symbol of waste and mismanagement in this country—

Mr. Ouellet: That is totally untrue.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —that would be one thing. If we had not built the white elephant at Mirabel, that would be one thing. If we had addressed the problems of senior citizens in this country, who are fighting inflation, and used that money appropriately, that would be one thing. But this government has piled waste upon waste, poor management upon poor management, until now it is not only the distress of its citizens it is becoming the laughing stock of every thinking Canadian.

The unemployment rate is over 8 per cent. Over one million Canadians are out of work. Ten years ago the unemployment rate among young people was 7.4 per cent. Now the rate among young people is 14 per cent.

Mr. Philbrook: It is the same all over the world.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The backbencher of the Liberal party, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook)—

Mr. Beatty: Today is his last day in parliament.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —says it is the same all over the world. This government is inclined to take credit when things are going well. But let things go badly, and the ministers scuttle for cover and blame world conditions, they blame the provinces, they blame the weather, or indeed they even blame the opposition.

Those are the facts. If backbenchers of the Liberal party are speaking up, it is because I think I am beginning to get to them. They are reacting to my comments.

Over the past year Canada lost 100,000 jobs in its manufacturing sector. Yet, in real terms, during the past five years our imports have been growing twice as fast as our exports. In the last three years our trade deficit totalled $13 billion. That is more than our total trade deficit for the previous 20 years. I am trying to put the figures on the record so hon. members on the other side, from whose comments it is apparent they do not understand the dilemma facing our country and therefore the challenge facing the government, will understand them. I am having some difficulty in getting through to some of them, but I can tell you that there is not much difficulty outside this place, and if any member over there, particularly the hon. member for Halton who is so outspoken from his seat in the backbenches of his party, thinks his constituents do not understand the record of his government, he has another think coming.

A moment ago I said this government was incompetent. Incompetence has become their hallmark. They used to pride themselves on being the great technocrats in the days of C. D. Howe, Gardiner, the lion of Saskatchewan—I see the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) sitting over there—Stuart Garson, the giants of Canadian liberalism, and the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, in times when that party stood for something. I did not agree with what they stood for then as I watched them from the gallery of the House of Commons, but I agreed more with what they stood for then than I agree with what they stand for today. That party stood for something, and one of the things they were supposed to stand for was competence, the ability to manage, the ability to get things done in a reasonable sort of way. All was not perfect, and they would admit that, but they prided themselves on their competence.

Well, in terms of competence, the bottom line expectation of people for their government, how else could one describe the ability of this cabinet when one has to acknowledge that it cannot even deliver the mail? The hon. member for Halton knows that too.

Mr. Ouellet: It is one of the best services in the world.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): During the past ten years the cost of mailing a first class letter has increased from 6 cents to 14 cents. The government has invested several hundred million dollars in automated equipment for the Post Office to make it more efficient, and yet the number of employees in the Post Office has risen from 36,000 to 61,000, and a letter posted in the west end of Toronto has to be sent to Cornwall for processing before it can be delivered to the east end of Toronto.

What has been the government's answer to the Post Office problems? Their answer has been to appoint seven postmasters general in ten years. One of them has become the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Blais). He sits in the House today and he is as distinguished in that post as he was as postmaster general.

The federal government now spends $6 million on telegrams. That just shows how reliable they find the mail. Last night I was trying to find the statistics to point out to the government just how much they have spent on courier service, but I must confess I did not find them. The amounts are tremendous, including the cost of courier service used by the Post Office. This is the measure of confidence that even the casual observer understands. The public is no longer the casual observer with respect to the competence of this government.

The government has about 400 Crown corporations. I say "about 400" because nobody knows for sure. There may have been 387 two months ago, and I do not know how many Crown agencies have been created since that time, so I think it is fair to say there are about 400. The list of statistics could go on and on. Surely it must be apparent to the Prime Minister and to everyone that the Prime Minister can no longer ignore reality. The country's economy is in dreadful shape and it requires immediate medicine in order to avoid making the problems even more dangerous, and perhaps in some sectors incurable.

Now I come back to the first point that I made. The Prime Minister has kept parliament here and has stayed away from meeting the people. But the people expected to meet their government on the hustings. The Prime Minister did it because he promised economic legislation on May 11. He has not kept that promise.

An hon. Member: Has he kept any promise?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is a judgment that will be made by the public of Canada fairly soon.

• (1242)

Since parliament is in its last day, I will be charitable in my comments respecting the government. Hon. members opposite are beginning to realize that the government, with all its incompetence and questionable practices, is being led by an aging Prime Minister who has lost the confidence of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The Prime Minister has a government to match him—aging, spiritless, tired, and directionless.

Mr. Beatty: And on its way out.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Yes, on its way out. In the Speech from the Throne the government gave lip service to tremendous principles and indicated that great things were to happen. It has given lip service to aiding the private sector. Really it has done more to damage the private sector than any other government in our history.

The government said that it would grapple with and solve the problems of regional disparity. It has done nothing of the kind. If anything, it has exacerbated the problems of regional disparity. The government said that it would make efforts to develop the secondary manufacturing sector of our community where jobs can be found. Instead, we received short-term, make-work programs in place of long-term, permanent jobs. It told the agricultural community that they would be provided with a real opportunity. Despite the rising prices of food, the closing of cheese factories and other things, the farmers who work the land still receive a static amount for their produce.

I see the hon. member for Assiniboia is shaking his head. I would like to hear him participate in the debate later. I suppose he can put his case from behind the curtains, if he wants to, but I would prefer to hear him rise and participate at that time. If he feels that milk, pork, lamb, strawberry, apple and tender fruit producers have received a fair shake, in terms of the rising cost of food, then let him present his facts and statistics. They would not be in accordance with the actual facts.

Since 1974, whatever the government has put its hand to, including integrity, has been a failure. During the election campaign in 1974 the government said that it would not touch wage and price controls with a ten-foot pole. Then the government decided otherwise, and that it might be advantageous to do exactly what it said it would not do. That was the beginning of the end of the government's credibility. The government has failed the traditions of its party. It has failed the people it represents, this parliament, in terms of things which are important, and this country. The sooner hon. members opposite are removed from office, the better this country and the world will be.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on rising to speak to this adjournment motion, I cannot but note that it is time members of parliament took a well-deserved rest. It is obvious that the work of a member of parliament has become through the years a full-time job and in many respects a most thankless one for those who have to cover long distances to come each week to sit in the Canadian parliament. It is also a thankless job as it is enormously demanding physically for the elected representatives of the Canadian people. It seems obvious to me that in these times of great disruption it would be essential to amend extensively our obsolete parliamentary procedures which were perhaps adequate at the beginning of the Canadian parliament but which no longer meet our present needs nor allow the members of this House to perform as effectively as they would like.

It is obvious that the advent of television in the House has brought to some extent the people closer to what is going on in parliament, since they can see for themselves parliamentarians in action. However when the Canadian people are asked or surveyed about the performance of parliamentarians, at least their performance as seen on television, it is really quite a small part of the daily life of a member. It is unfortunately in many cases a mutilated and unreal image of the enormous responsibilities assumed by parliamentarians, especially on the government side. The question period is telecast mostly throughout the country. Now, you are well aware, Mr. Speaker, to what extent the oral question period enables members of parliament to ask questions and get information on the activities of the government, and especially on the responsibilities of the various government departments. In principle, under our rules, this oral question period should be at the disposal of all parliamentarians on both sides of the House.

Often, for practical, acceptable and understandable reasons, members of the opposition have a much greater share of the oral question period than government members, and in my opinion, this gives a deformed picture of parliamentary life to the Canadian people who are not aware of our parliamentary practice. This is unfair in many respects to the members on this side of the House who cannot ask questions in the House as often as they would like. Second, the duties of a member of parliament go far beyond what happens in the House. For those who work with parliamentarians, and I say this for members of the opposition as well as for the government members, this work goes on for hours and hours in parliamentary committees, in the members' offices, on Parliament Hill, in phone calls to constituents in the various regions of the country, in daily correspondence with many Canadians who ask members of parliament for advice, and of course, in the duty of parliamentarians to return frequently, every week, to their own constituency to meet their constituents, to work at their riding office and better serve the people who have sent us to parliament. Of course, none of this work is shown during the televising of our proceedings. Unfortunately, the Canadian public is not aware of this work, even though it is very important. Now that we are on the point of adjourning for the summer, I feel it is important that the men and women of good will who sit in this parliament take on the responsibility of upgrading our parliamentary procedures and make once and for all parliamentary procedure truly effective.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) would have the people believe that there was not much parliamentary work done in the House and that the government did not proceed as expeditiously as it should with its bills. The facts are quite simple. The truth is that in many cases our procedures are much too slow, we progress at a snail's pace when considering the bills that are introduced and take weeks and even months to pass the bills needed by the people to provide them with immediate services. Parliamentary procedures are such that we can spend many days discussing the principle of a bill. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the second reading stage should be drastically shortened as it is in the British parliament. A bill simply tabled in the House of Commons to determine whether or not it should be further considered by a parliamentary committee should not give rise to more than two or three speeches by each political party represented in the House. There is no need for dozens of opposition members to repeat the same speech. To know if a bill is good or not, if it should be referred to a committee for a clause-by-clause study and to be amended if needed, our procedure should be changed. But the fact that we spend days, months in some cases, on the second reading of a bill is unacceptable in our modern context. I listened to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) who used the adjournment motion to indulge in rhetoric and blame the government for its performance. Of course, I agree that this adjournment motion might give us the opportunity to raise a general discussion on parliamentary activities and particularly on what happens in the House of Commons.

I wish to point out to hon. members a trend that coincides curiously with the advent of television in the House where more and more hon. members feel free to season their questions with lengthy gratuitous statements, half-truths and ludicrous allegations in some cases. And through an abusive use of motions under Standing Order 43, a member can rise at the beginning of the business of the House to make a long statement asking for unanimous consent, to say anything that pops into his mind knowing perfectly well that the motion will not be accepted and that the government will have no opportunity to reply immediately to those gratuitous allegations.

I think that the summer recess should give us the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to review that issue so that hon. members will not be allowed to abuse systematically the parliamentary procedure. I believe it is essential that hon. members on both sides of the House rise only with regard for objectivity and truth which is essential not only for the orderly operation of the House of Commons but also for the people who have now the opportunity to follow our parliamentary proceedings via television and who often hear gratuitous statements that cannot get a forthright answer because of a weakness in our parliamentary procedure. And I believe it is essential in the best interest of public information that we should have a parliamentary procedure ensuring a principle considered essential by the British parliament at the time of its creation, that is fair and equal balance. That check and balance concept is essential in a good parliamentary system. And the check and balance was obviously introduced in the British parliamentary system to encourage to some extent the smaller number of opposition members who, in some cases, at the beginning of British parliamentarianism might have been the victims of an abuse of power by the parliamentary majority. Obviously that check and balance system was established at a time when there were only two political parties. The initiators of that system had in mind the government made up of a political formation and the opposition gathered in another political formation.

Now, with the evolution of the political situation and customs in Canada, there is a proliferation of political parties, so that the checks and balances designed to help the official opposition is also helping the third parties unduly, in my opinion, the small parties which benefit from the same advantages as the official opposition and cumulatively hold an undue and unacceptable margin which had not been intended by those who brought in the checks and balances in parliamentary practice. That is why, as I was saying earlier, our parliamentary procedures must be reviewed at all costs, because they are now clearly detrimental to government backbenchers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1.02 p.m., the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed the following bills without any amendment.

Bill C-36, an act to amend the Export Development Act;

Bill C-54, an act to provide a maritime code for Canada and to amend the Canada Shipping Act and other Acts in consequence thereof; and

Bill C-59, an act to amend the Income Tax Act and the Excise Tax Act in matters relating to the ownership and operation of small businesses.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION RESPECTING SUMMER RECESS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen:

That when the House adjourns on Friday, June 30, 1978, it shall stand adjourned until Tuesday, October 10, 1978, provided that at any time prior to that date, if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, at the time of adjournment I recalled the necessity for a reform in the parliamentary procedure, such a reform being necessary not only to enable the backbenchers on the government side to play a greater role in the House of Commons but to reorganize working hours of parliament.

As you know, those working hours are distributed over small time periods in the afternoon and scarcely a few hours in the evening five days a week whereas they could be reorganized and concentrated over four days a week only so that we could work longer hours in a four-day week whereas presently we have a five-day week. Of course, this would enable hon. members who come from the ends of the country to go back to their constituency every weekend, they would not be forced, as is now the case for some hon. members from British Columbia, to travel all day long on Saturday to arrive late in the evening in their constituency and to leave on Sunday to come back for Monday for parliamentary business. This is an unacceptable situation which should be revised as soon as possible. Parliamentary procedure should also be amended in order to limit the length of speeches in certain debates.

There is no question of preventing members from expressing their views in this House when they feel they should do so, but in the U.S. Congress there is provision for congressmen, where they are prevented by certain procedures there from delivering their speeches, for tabling them with the clerk of the House, and they are printed in the U.S. congressional record. Such an approach, such a procedure of course would have clear benefits in this House.

Further, parliamentary procedure should be reorganized to establish a reasonable legislative timetable under which the government could have its legislation go through within a justifiable and adequate time frame. It is totally unacceptable that we should live with the current parliamentary procedure wherein legislation sometimes takes two or three years to go through parliament. Such a situation cannot be tolerated. It is mostly, if not entirely, due to the opposition constantly abusing parliamentary procedure to cause undue delays. In my view, Mr. Speaker, it should be provided under a legislative timetable that a bill could not be debated for periods over four months, whether in this House or in committee. Once that period was over we, as legislators charged with the clear duty of enacting statutes, should stop discussing, divide on and pass them.

Finally, I would like to say that apart from and beyond parliamentary reform, the parliamentary spirit needs to be improved. There is matter for concern in the attitude of some members in terms of parliamentary spirit. It will be remembered that some years ago, when I was an hon. member's assistant rather than a member in this House, because I worked in Canadian parliament not on the floor but for a minister of the Crown, I remember very well what happened. I remember the insidious, reviling and malicious attacks against two ministers from Quebec, the hon. Mr. Tremblay and the hon. Mr. Favreau, and I must say that most certainly those cowardly, invidious and unfair attacks mainly contributed to the premature deaths of those two former French-Canadian ministers, highly competent and perfectly honest men. I thought that time was over and that we would not hear any more of that kind of insidious, mischievous and unacceptable attacks in the House of Commons.

Yet I cannot help but deplore the fact that we have seen reappearing some kind of Don Quixote who, mischievously and insidiously . . . Perhaps not in certain cases, because we are not supposed to impute motives to members in the House, and this I do not want to do, but I am wondering very seriously about the attitude shown by some hon. members who are trying to spot big black clouds in the Canadian political sky and who, by coincidence, launch unfortunate attacks against certain senior officials, certain cabinet ministers and certain Canadian businessmen in a systematic and deplorable way in my opinion; under the guise of questions, they make gratuitous statements, uttering half truths and odious insinuations in trying to prove that there has been or could have been scandals surrounding the government. Again a few moments ago, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) rose to make a speech: he is the one who, before the lunch break, spoke and said that this government was, and I quote, a corrupt government. That is a gratuitous statement without any substance—

Mr. Boulanger: Shame!

Mr. Ouellet: This government in power under the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for ten years has had none of its senior members convicted of corruption or involved in scandals. An attempt was made to have us believe there were scandals in certains cases; all sorts of questions were put in an effort to stir doubts in the minds of the people. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the ruling given yesterday by a Quebec court acquitting Senator Giguère was an eloquent example of the unfortunate insinuations made by some hon. member of this House of Commons against the authorities of the Canadian government, to try and destroy them in the public opinion, and that without basis, without reason.

I cannot imagine what torment Mr. Louis Lapointe, a Montreal businessman, went through; he was held in high esteem and respected by his peers and he died suddenly as a result of the backwash of the Sky Shop incident. I have no idea to what extent his health was affected by it, but obviously no parliamentarian can or must at any time use his parliamentary immunity to make insinuations or statements lightly, without basis then to hide behind his parliamentary immunity, the privilege of members of parliament, and argue his good faith and simple wish to know a bit more about government operations. That is hypocrisy or irresponsibility of the most serious nature. And I think that as members of this House of Commons, we have a duty to have the highest standard of integrity and the deepest concern for objectivity and impartiality when we are asked insidious questions which may eventually endanger people's reputations and reflects adversely upon their integrity.

Mr. Speaker, earlier the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has charged the government with bad management or incompetence. Well, I shall tell him this: I listened to him very carefully and when he was asked to bring in facts, the only two cases which came to his mind were les Terrasses de la Chaudière and the Mirabel Airport, those are the only two cases he mentioned, and they are, through coincidence of course, both located in the province of Quebec.

I know that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton does not like the fact that the Canadian governmnt has erected federal buildings on the Hull side, that the Canadian government is respectably and honorably present on both sides of the Ottawa river, that the National Capital Commission, for the sake of Canadian unity, made sure that federal civil servants would work on both sides of the river, on the Ottawa as well as the Hull side, whatever objections the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton may have, that decision of the Canadian government is irrefutable, it is there and we shall stay on both sides. What is at stake is the unity of the country and an equitable representation of federal civil servants who may work in the national capital and who may serve the Canadian government as well if they work in Hull as if they work in Ottawa. I am not impressed by the big eyeglasses or the big artificial smile of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, his comments cannot be erased, they are very clear and they do not deceive us. He does not like the fact that les Terrasses de la Chaudière are built on the Hull side, he does not like the fact that there are federal buildings in Hull and he is nit-picking to try to find a so-called scandal which does not exist. And yesterday, when the hon. member for Central Nova asked questions about this matter, les Terrasses de la Chaudière, he once again, as he has often done in this House, quoted papers he had in his possession heaven knows why, internal confidential papers of departments, government bodies, confidential documents he uses in this House by referring to only a very small portion and leaving the impression that improper transactions took place between the Campeau corporation and the government of Canada.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that those transactions were duly examined and approved by the National Capital Commission on August 12, 1975, and if the hon. member had not quoted those papers only in part, if he had quoted them in their totality, he would see that the design committee of the National Capital Commission approved that project in a letter dated August 12, 1975. The hon. member is wrong in suggesting, as he did, that this project was rejected on several occasions in the months of May, June, July, September and November 1975. The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) is wrong, and it is also untrue, as some opposition members seemed to suggest, that the chairman of the National Capital Commission threatened to resign if that project was accepted. That is absolutely false. I personally telephoned the former chairman, Mr. Gallant, to check up on that story and he confirmed that at no time had he threatened to resign, on the contrary, that the Government of Canada had considered that project, recognized the usefulness of having another federal building on the present site of les Terrasses de la Chaudière and that private contractor had been asked to submit bids that were acceptable and competitive, which was done.

It is rather odd to see, Mr. Speaker, that when the hon. member for Central Nova or other opposition members talk about federal buildings in the national capital they do not talk about those that are already in existence, that were built by other private contractors—Olympia York, for example, or Cadillac Fairview—who like Campeau corporation have what is called a lease purchase plan which was negotiated in all good faith, all honesty, with the government of Canada, just like Campeau corporation negotiated with the government of Canada. And I do not accept that members should under the cover of parliamentary immunity try to imply that there was an injustice, that there was a scandal in that business. It is absolutely unacceptable.

Mr. Chrétien: Repeat it in English so they will understand!

● (1422)

[English]

Say it to them in English.

Mr. Ouellet: Yes, I think I should repeat this in English. It is an unacceptable situation when members on the other side are not responsible enough to lay a charge and completely explain their accusations. Instead, they take advantage of the immunity of this House to make irresponsible charges and allegations, citing unrelated events, telling half truths, presenting only portions of documents, and distorting the real facts.

It is unacceptable that in some cases they endeavour to fabricate scandals not in existence. In so doing they are not only being extremely unfair to those directly involved, but to the Canadian people who get a distorted view of the facts. This unacceptable situation has been going on for too long with some members of the opposition. It should cease.

If we take an adjournment period this summer, we should take advantage of it to redraft our parliamentary procedures no longer to allow those members who have no courage to abuse the rules of this House and its immunity to make all kind of unfounded charges and accusations.

[Translation]

I think that the Terrasses de la Chaudière issue, which was raised earlier in today's debate by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) was dealt with extensively by a Senate committee which examined all transactions. Moreover, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that representatives of both the Progressive Conservative and Liberal parties participated in these Senate discussions and it was clearly established by the Senate committee that nothing improper was done in that situation, that it was a 100 per cent regular transaction which did not deserve the kind of muck-raking that some members of this House enjoy doing to arouse the interest of the population by raising inappropriate questions on this issue. I would like to conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by going over some of the criticisms voiced against the efficiency of this government by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, who says that the government has a poor economic record to show. It seems obvious to me that his speech was written along the lines of a certain electoral platform that the Progressive Conservative party could defend during an election campaign. To me, it sounded more like an electoral speech than a speech on an adjournment motion.

I think some of my colleagues in this House who will be dealing more thoroughly with those issues after me this afternoon will elaborate on the exceptional achievements of this government in recent years. There is no doubt that this government took whatever steps were necessary to curb the kind of galloping inflation we had in this country. There is no doubt that this government through its Minister of Employment and Immigration, the hon. Jack Sydney George Cullen, created a considerable number of jobs in Canada in recent years, a record number of job opportunities well above the number of jobs created in any industrialized country in the world. The government introduced in recent weeks a series of measures dealing with the support the Government of Canada wants to give small businesses in this country.

We know how necessary and essential small businesses are to the smooth operation of this country's economy, to the creation of jobs not only in large centres but especially in the more isolated areas of Canada. And small businesses are undoubtedly the way to ensure that constant reserve of job opportunities that the people of this country need in order to keep on living even in the remotest areas of this country, and to stem that continuing shift towards larger cities. The government has managed to introduce a whole series of measures to help small and medium-size businesses. We also recently announced a series of measures to help research in Canada, to help industries and universities, particularly those doing scientific research in Canada, create jobs for researchers in this country, to allow our society to progress in the area of research and allow the people of this country to have an even better standard of living.

And, finally, one cannot help but point out the recent efforts made by the Canadian government to have a Canadian constitution written by Canadians for Canadians and a constitution that would truly be ours, that would be patriated and would be a truly Canadian constitution that would fully meet the aspirations of the people of this country. So there you have in the little time I have at my disposal what the government has done as we get ready to adjourn for the summer. We have an extremely enviable record and the people of this country, in spite of the difficulties they might come up against, have one of the highest standards of living in the world. And the people of this country, despite the sombre, negative, pessimistic feelings of the opposition, are very happy to have the opportunity to live in a country called Canada.

Mr. Speaker, during the present session, we have witnessed a pitiful performance by the official opposition, a performance totally inacceptable and unqualifiable by the Progressive Conservative party, a party which has associated itself with phony bugging, with the appointment of private detectives to keep the activities of members and ministers of the government under watch. It is an attitude absolutely intolerable from a supposedly responsible Canadian party. When by-elections were held in the province of Quebec, that party also attempted to make a cozy deal with the Parti Québécois in order to beat the liberals in Quebec province.

The Progressive Conservative party, which represents the official opposition, has, through its irresponsible actions done more for the destruction of Canada than its unity. Their attitude is wrong, Mr. Speaker, since, as I have said before, the abuse the parliamentary procedure to make allegations and declarations of all kinds, which are not even always correct, hoping through this strategy to cast doubt and confusion in the public mind, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that despite all the sordid stories made up by the official opposition, the Canadian people will make the right assessment when the time comes, of the positive and practical measures toward national unity and prosperity taken by this government, headed by the right hon. Prime Minister Trudeau, leader of the Liberal Party of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of trying to match the oratory or the rhetoric we have listened to for the last little while. I must say I marvel at the latitude which seems to be provided by a simple motion calling for the adjournment of the House from June 30 to October 10. I would think that this was what we should be discussing, but the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) apparently feels he can raise any matter he wishes to deal with.

Mr. Chrétien: What about Baker's speech?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have no intention of getting into this quarrel between the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and members of the official opposition, but I suspect we have not heard the last of this discussion. In fact I begin to wonder whether we shall adjourn today after all.

Neither do I intend to use this motion as an occasion for discussing parliamentary procedure but I should like to make a few brief comments on what the minister had to say in this area. I take second place to no one in being concerned about reforming the procedures of this House. I have taken part in many of those reforms, some of which I am proud but others of which we cannot be so proud. There are still improvements which we must make, but I reject completely the suggestion that reform of parliament means reducing debate and reducing the amount of time we spend here so that members will not lose their health serving their constituents for so long in Ottawa.

At election time every candidate promises he will give all he has got to serve the people. Then we hear speeches here such as we just heard suggesting we should limit the amount of time we spend here. There are reforms in our procedure which must be achieved, and we must take this question seriously, but I suggest the speech we have just heard is no blueprint for proper reform.

Having said that I deplore this time being used to discuss matters which are far from the terms of the motion, I shall use the few minutes I wish to take to say something about that motion. The proposal is that we adjourn today, Friday, June 30, until Tuesday, October 10. I quite agree that it is time for this House to adjourn.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That has been true for quite a while, particularly since May 11. The debates which have gone on in the House since that date have not been a credit to the institution. Indeed, the things which have gone on during the last few days make it clear we ought to get out of here. I think we should do so not only because of the tone of debate in the last little while but because it does make sense for us to have a break from work here, for personal reasons, and so that we can do some thinking about what we ought to put our minds to when we come back. But though I support the idea of a recess I say quite frankly that a recess of 100 days is unreasonable.

We were told on May 11 by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that there are many problems which must be resolved—that is the reason the election was put off; it was because parliament could serve the country better by staying here and dealing with legislation. I find it quite inconsistent for the government of the same Prime Minister to propose now that we take a recess of three months and 10 days, or a total of something over 100 days. I believe that at the very least we should be coming back in September to try to cope with the problems facing this country.

I realize we do not know what is in the mind of the Prime Minister. There are all sorts of rumours and guesses about an election. I suspect he has not made up his own mind yet. I realize that the proposal that we come back on October 10 might be set aside by the calling of an election. Then again, the Prime Minister might put off calling an election until some time in 1979.

Mr. Baldwin: He might invoke the War Measures Act and not have an election.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Well, that is a suspicion not to be dismissed out of hand. One of the rules of this House is that we are supposed to take each other's word. On the assumption that this motion means what it says and that we shall be coming back on October 10, I should like to make a few suggestions as to what I think the government should be putting its mind to while we are away.

I assume that if we carry out the terms of this motion and come back on October 10, that will probably be the date upon which the third session of this Thirtieth Parliament will be prorogued, with the new one being commenced later that day or on Wednesday, October 11.

I shall not take the time of the House to review the past session. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) did a bit of that this morning, and if my leader had not got involved in something else this afternoon he might be doing it right now. But I must say I find the accomplishments of this parliament under the government in the past session very disappointing. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs blames this on the length of time it takes to debate certain matters. He says there are services which the government is prepared to offer to the people which the people are not getting because we debate legislation for so long. What services, Mr. Speaker? The things the people are not getting from this parliament are the things which are not placed before parliament by the government which has the authority to bring in the appropriate legislation.

No one will be surprised by the kind of legislation about which I am concerned. I mentioned one aspect this morning in a motion I sought to move under Standing Order 43. I say seriously to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) and to the government: resolve this problem during the 100 days of the recess. I refer to the pension rights of veterans' widows especially in cases where the veteran's pension was below 48 per cent. This issue has been around long enough. The number of those who might have benefited from proper legislation and who have died, is considerable, and as time goes by more and more veterans whose pensions are below 48 per cent must face the fact that they are growing older and that if they die first there will be no pension for their widows. As a matter of fact, the vast majority of our veterans on disability pensions have pensions below 48 per cent, and they are affected by this rule.

This may not be a subject for the kind of rhetoric and oratory we have had thus far, but I suggest it is a serious issue, and I plead that in this 100-day recess which we are being asked to agree to this afternoon the government give its attention to the problem of providing pro rata pensions for the widows of veterans where the veterans' pensions were below 48 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We have also had assurance of the Minister of Veterans Affairs that a thorough study is being made of the War Veterans Allowance Act. This is a piece of legislation which has done a lot of good. It has been around for 47 or 48 years, but times have changed. It was introduced in the days when the old age pension was payable only at age 70—a very small amount and on a means test—and the war veterans allowance was something a little better than that for veterans. Surely the same principle should apply now. There should be something a little better for veterans than is available generally under old age legislation today.

I find it difficult to accept the proposition that this kind of study takes months and months and years and years. The matter has been studied already in the department, says the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Now there is this 100-day period. I think that in the fall the minister should bring in not only a report of that study but also revisions to the War Veterans Allowance Act, making it something much closer to a guaranteed annual income for our older veterans.

I want also to urge that serious attention be given by the government during the next 100 days to a number of other pension matters. I find it unacceptable, to use a word we heard a while ago a number of times, for the government to think that it has done all it should for our senior citizens simply because it has the pension up to a certain point and indexes it in accordance with the rise in the consumer price index. The fact is that with that rise always behind, with the base not having been high enough to begin with, and other conditions which I need not take the time to spell out, the conditions faced by our senior citizens are getting relatively more difficult.

We have watched with interest the sittings of the Royal Commission on Pensions which have been held in the province of Ontario, and I think the interesting thing has been the number of briefs which have been presented to that commission pointing to the difficulties and problems being faced by older people. It is not enough for the government to sit there, complacently saying it has done this and that and that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre should hold his peace. Not so. I plead that something be done and that it be done during this 100-day period particularly about the position of persons between 60 and 65 years of age, particularly women in that age bracket.

It becomes more and more clear that one of the most cruel and unfair pieces of legislation we ever passed was the spouse's allowance. It is fine for those who get it, a limited number, but in terms of discriminating against women and men, but mostly women, of single status, whether they be widows, spinsters, divorced or separated, I know of nothing which has been worse. The government is finally admitting—the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has said this in public speeches—that it does seem unfair where a person is getting the spouse's allowance—because she is a spouse—and loses her husband before she is 65, that her allowance and her pension are cut off.

I gather from things which have been attributed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in her speeches outside this House that the government is disposed to correct that situation. That is not enough. The whole position of persons between 60 and 65 who are out of the labour market, who do not meet the marital test and so forth, is a difficult one, and this is not something to be left to a campaign issue for the next election. This is not something to be left for the government which takes over after the next election. This is something to be dealt with now.

I am taking this motion at its face value. I am taking it for what it says, namely, that we are coming back on October 10, and if we are coming back on October 10 that means there will be another session of this thirtieth parliament. I say that the time to deal with this problem which faces women in particular between the ages of 60 and 65 is early in that fourth session of this thirtieth parliament.

Having made reference to the spouse's allowance and its unfairness to women of single status between the ages of 60 and 65, I want to stress, as I have tried to do on every possible occasion, the unfairness of our pension rules generally as they affect women. There is discrimination against veterans' widows where the 48 per cent rule applies. There is discrimination under the spouse's allowance. There is discrimination under the Canada Pension Plan in that the woman who works outside the home can be part of the Canada Pension Plan and get the benefits of it, but the woman who works in the home gets no such benefit, even though we received a report from Statistics Canada a few days ago which told us that the work which is done in the homes of Canada by the housewives of this nation is worth $80 billion a year, roughly 40 per cent of the gross national product. Yet for most of them there is nothing in terms of the Canada Pension Plan. They get old age security the same as others, but we keep hearing talk about equality.

We get into the question of regions. We get into the question of languages. There are two languages in this country, so we have to treat them equally, and I agree, but there are also two sexes in this country, and I think there should be equality of treatment. If we are not yet prepared to establish that equality all along the line, at least we should establish it when it comes time for retirement and pension.

I am making this short speech directly in relation to the motion. The motion calls for a 100-day recess. I think 60 or 70 days would be plenty. It would be better for us to come back in September, but just as we are being given 100 days to think about these things and to attend to our responsibilities here, in our constituencies and about the country, I contend that the government has a responsibility to look at the things which ought to be done in the next session of parliament.

I think that this last session has been a failure. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs can argue this and take opposite views and all the rest of it. I think the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton is much closer to the facts than the Minister of State for Urban Affairs because this has been a disappointing session. Let us not have another one before an election.

I do not think that parliaments which go five years are very successful. I was here in one of them some years ago, and I remember how useless that fifth year was. After four years have gone by it is time to get a fresh mandate, but let us not be hamstrung by that tradition and by that convention. If we are going to come back and have a new session, let us deal with some of these urgent problems.

I press very strongly that the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the Minister of National Health and Welfare use these 100 days to the best possible advantage, and that when we come back in October and start a new session they bring in legislation to provide better conditions for our veterans, their families and all our older people, but especially for the section of our older community which suffers the most, namely, our older women.

There are many other issues which must be of concern to us in the new session which, supposedly, we will have when we come back. My leader, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), and others of my colleagues have been pressing these points time and time again. These other issues underline the pension issues I am talking about. Something must be done soon to cope with the serious problem of the unemployment of over one million of our people who are not able to find jobs. Unless something is done about this problem, as well as about rising prices which now give us figures of 10 per cent, 11 per cent or 12 per cent a year, the possibility of this country maintaining its unity, its integrity, and the confidence of our people becomes very slim. So, as I have called on the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the Minister of National Health and Welfare to use these 100 days to advantage in their areas, I call on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras), and others who have to do with economic policy, and ultimately on the Prime Minister, to regard these 100 days not just as a holiday, not just as a time when they are rid of parliament and all the nasty questions and debates they have to face here, but as a time to do something about creating jobs and coping with inflation so that the economy of this country does not get completely out of hand.

I say again, sir, that we are prepared to support the motion in the sense that it says parliament should take a recess. There is just no argument about that, and the debate today is probably proving the point, but I insist that it ought not to be for 100 days, it ought to be until some time in September after the school term commences. I think that might be a good time for us to come back. But since that is not the case, and if it has to be the 100 days, let the government come back in the fall ready to go into a session on a serious-minded basis, and in particular to have legislation ready to cope with the problems of our veterans, the problems of our senior citizens, the problem of unemployment, and the problem of runaway prices. These things must be done.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to mention that, in spite of the undue length of certain debates which took place in the course of the current session, we were still able to pass several bills. We can indeed look at the relatively positive record of this session and realize that nearly 40 bills were adopted over the last nine months. Some of them of course were of social and judicial nature, for instance the important legislation which will allow every Canadian to be judged before the courts of this country in the language of his choice, whichever official language he uses. We need only to remind hon. members of the legislation we have passed, to promote the basic right of Canadians to work in sanitary conditions, and the many amendments we have brought to the Criminal Code, in particular those which clarify the definition of rape and sexual assault in order to prevent abuses in these kinds of crime.

However, Mr. Speaker, hon. members will remember that in the Speech from the Throne last October, the government established two main lines of priorities, economic and constitutional. As far as economic priorities are concerned, we have of course taken an approach which is different from the one we took on constitutional issues. We have taken several economic measures by passing a large number of bills. I am thinking more particularly of Bills C-11, C-15, C-16, C-18, C-19, C-23, C-25, C-29, C-30, C-31, C-38 and C-56, to name only a few, which related to economic measures and which have been considered, passed and received royal assent.

When we discussed constitutional matters, the government showed its leadership in a different way. The government has tabled two bills and a white paper and has set up a Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, in the hope of meeting two specific objectives. First, to allow for a complete, valid and serious consultation of all interested parties, and second to proceed with a constitutional reform, which would lead to a new federalism within a predetermined and reasonable period. The government's approach on constitutional matters as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, is to tabling the bill respecting referendums, which provides for public consultation of Canadians on constitutional matters. Still more recently, we have tabled a momentous bill, Bill C-60, which aims at a major reform of our federal institutions such as the Senate, which would become a House of the Federation, the Supreme Court of Canada, the authority of the Governor General of Canada and so on.

Moreover, we have tabled a white paper entitled A Time for Action, which contains the major principles for the renewal of the constitution, the real milestones for a renewed federation with a well defined time frame: July 1, 1979 for reforms dealing with strictly federal matters. Of course, this will not prevent consultations with the provinces or other interested parties. We all know that the ministers for federal-provincial relations will have the opportunity to meet during the summer and that subsequently the provincial premiers will meet with the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada for an important conference on constitutional matters. As far as the second term, July 1, 1981, is concerned that is the time we shall need to enter into agreements on distribution of powers, and on the patriation of the constitution and the amendment formula thereto.

That is in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, a very reasonable approach taken by the government during this session to deal with constitutional priorities. Whereas on the one hand, we have on the economic level, adopted a very large number of programs to boost the economy in this country, we have on the other hand, on the constitutional level, tabled legislation and a white paper to ensure that this reform be made by way of valid and serious consultation and within a specific and reasonable time. And this summer, this joint committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons will seek the views of the public and all those concerned and look fully into the proposals contained in Bill C-60 as well as in the white paper, A Time for Action, and hopefully, report to parliament as early as next fall so that we can bring about the constitutional reform and provide Canadians with a renewed federalism within the time-frame specified in the white paper.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, as can be seen, this is a positive record for a session that has lasted for some nine months and during which, as I said earlier, about 40 bills were passed. What I find unfortunate is that bills which were introduced before Christmas, including at least eight which were very important, and other bills introduced before Easter, of which seven were very important in our opinion, could not go through the three readings and receive royal assent. I am thinking particularly about Bill C-6, concerning Canadian ports, Bill C-7, which would have removed a lot of bothersome red tape for small businesses, Bill C-13, concerning combines investigations, Bill C-14, which concerns nuclear controls, Bill C-20, concerning the disposition and development of oil and gas rights, Bill C-24, concerning telecommunications in Canada, and there are many more, Mr. Speaker. I find it unfortunate that the present parliamentary system, under our present rules, has not allowed us to pass bills such as those I have just listed and, which could have been very useful to the Canadian people. I fully agree with the previous speaker, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), when he advocated an early parliamentary reform.

Mr. Speaker, when we see the grievances of hon. members, and I am referring not only to government members but also to members of the opposition, I believe that the main grievances can be summarized in seven particular areas. Members generally complain about the unwarranted repetition in the House of the same arguments; they complain about speeches that often smack of political partisanship instead of being valid or constructive criticism, which results in too many speakers straying from the main subject; the third most frequent grievance, Mr. Speaker, concerns the abusive use made by the opposition of the time and the means at its disposal during the various stages of the bill in an often admitted attempt to prevent or delay unduly the passage of these bills by the government even though it has a majority. The fourth grievance, Mr. Speaker, is the aberrant constraint of a constant attendance which is too often useless in the House of Commons and which prevents the sound planning and carrying out of the various duties of a member of parliament.

The fifth most frequent grievance is that we have an unmanageable and overly extensive parliamentary program which actually prevents a member from spending valuable time with his constituents and family. Mr. Speaker, we could list other grievances, but I believe that those I have mentioned give a good idea of the state of mind of most members who seek some changes in order to make this House more efficient, more relevant and better able to meet the aspirations of Canadians.

Under the type of reform that we favour, we are of course willing to respect certain principles which boil down to three points that are fundamental in my opinion. Obviously, the opposition has the right to express its views fully but without filibustering, Mr. Speaker. Filibustering has no place in the Canadian parliament. The opposition should be entitled to put forward its views fully without resorting to filibustering tactics, which would remove any opportunity for repetition at the various stages of the legislative process and make for relevant and better speeches. The second principle to be recognized in any parliamentary reform would be to rationalize the attendance of the member in the House of Commons so as to enable him to plan his work and use his time more sensibly. And finally, the third principle to follow in any parliamentary reform would be to set up an orderly parliamentary schedule which would allow a member more time to attend to his parliamentary duties outside Parliament Hill and lead a more normal family life.

Mr. Speaker, if we want to deal with the grievances voiced by most members about parliamentary procedure while abiding by the above-mentioned principles, it would be possible to amend our rules to the satisfaction of all parties.

Of course, it is very difficult to effect major changes with the unanimous consent of all members of a House such as ours, and at times we have to be realistic and make important changes through government bills. I make no secret of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that for my part, I am willing to continue negotiating those necessary changes, to modernize our parliament and make it more efficient with members of the opposition, but I am also willing, if needs be, if such negotiations fail after a reasonable period of time, to urge the government, after recommending and suggesting it, to legislate the matter and allow a reasonable debate in the House of Commons and so allow the Canadian people who, through television, can now watch us, to see a production that is far more decent than that we have been giving them for the last nine months, when we discuss bills and various other topics. A while ago, we heard remarks concerning the attitude of opposition members towards the motions presented pursuant to Standing Order 43, for instance; in that case, the procedure is abused, as we have seen during this session; an attempt is made, above all else, to put forth long partisan and political preambles rather than to bring the government to state its views on serious matters for the benefit of the Canadian public.

Well, Mr. Speaker, such abuses should be checked and stopped. During the question period, we often see members of the opposition—who indeed have the right to inquire and criticize the government on its administration—abuse this right and attempt to disparage others constantly and systematically, whether parliamentarians, high officials or ordinary citizens involved in public affairs. I suggest that they should not take advantage of their immunity to attack Anglophone or Francophone ministers, members of parliament, businessmen, judges and so on.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that such abuses are unacceptable. The atmosphere of this House must change if we want to set an example for the Canadian people. We have been saying for many years that attitudes should be changed in this country in order to promote a better understanding between our two main linguistic and cultural communities and true equality between our two communities, and I feel that the best example we can set is by changing our own attitude here in the House of Commons. If hon. members showed one another more mutual respect, Mr. Speaker, if they were more honest, if their speeches were not so partisan, if their criticisms were aimed more at policies than at individuals, I think we would be setting for the rest of Canada a fine example of a possible understanding between people of different opinion.

This would be a great change to show through television to our Canadian fellow citizens who watch us and who very often think, and rightly so, that we act like buffoons in this House, Mr. Speaker. We have 40 minutes to talk about various subjects. Most often members have 40 minutes to talk about a bill, and this for nearly all stages of consideration of a bill. This is unacceptable. It is a ridiculous loss of time in 1978. If we have something intelligent to say, if we have a point to make, it seems to me that we could very well do so in 15 or 20 minutes, Mr. Speaker, and the first major change that I would suggest for practical purposes would be to limit the length of speeches to 15 or 20 minutes. Even this would help restrict the debates to the subjects being discussed and ensure more effectiveness in parliament, and it would also be fairer and more equitable. A greater number of the 285 members that we will have after the next election would have the opportunity to speak about various subjects and express their views.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to place my intervention on parliamentary reform in the context of Canadian unity. I have talked about the constitutional legislation that we have presented during this session. I have just talked about the need to set an example by our attitude to promote better understanding and true equality between our two major communities, and I believe that it is important and timely to emphasize this aspect during the debate on a motion to adjourn the House.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that, in general, my experience as parliamentary secretary to the government House leader has been interesting. It has enabled me to see to what extent I was right to complain about our rules and it is urgent to make these changes. It has enabled me to see also to what extent in negotiations to expedite the proceedings of the House, certain people can sometimes be petty and prevent us hypocritically to reach valid and honest objectives for the people of Canada. I cannot congratulate everyone with whom I have discussed or negotiated. However, several of them, and I want to make this clear, have acted in good faith and in a climate of honest co-operation. In the same spirit, I want to thank sincerely—I shall name only one so that some people do not feel uncomfortable—but I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who, given his knowledge of our Standing Orders, has always been frank and honest with me and has helped us go forward in a progressive way. I think his advice has been judicious and we should pay tribute to him in this debate. I would like it if in the future, when we schedule the legislative program of a session, we were able to depend on and believe in the word we are given.

I would be happy if we were always in a position to plan our legislative work in such a way that, when we go back to the people during recess, we do not have anything to say about our opponents' parliamentary spirit. I complained about our Standing Orders, my colleague the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) complained about the parliamentary spirit in this House. Unfortunately in some cases I have witnessed, I must also regret that certain members of the opposition abused, as I said earlier, some procedures. I do not intend, Mr. Speaker, to rise on a question of privilege in my concluding remarks, but comments like those made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), who just came into the House, are in my opinion unacceptable in a place like this. It seems to me that the House leader of the official opposition could have refrained today from describing this government as the most corrupt he and Canada have ever seen. He said absolutely nothing to prove his statement which is, obviously, not only unparliamentary but unworthy of a good citizen.

Mr. Speaker, the greatest authority in parliamentary procedure, Erskine May, mentions in the 19th edition, at page 445, that among the most unparliamentary terms, and he lists about thirty, are the words "corrupt" and "corruption". Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, also a well known authority in the matter, states in the fourth edition, at page 130, citation 155 of the English version, that the term "corrupt" is also quite unparliamentary. And again yesterday, when the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) was saying, and I quote from page 6860 of Hansard:

[English]

Mr. Speaker, the acts of the minister and the words of the minister have been described as despicable. They could be described as being beneath contempt, they could be described as being vicious and vulgar—

This expression is forbidden also by Beauchesne's and it is clearly established that "vicious" and "vulgar" are unparliamentary words.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, these words of despicable government, of vicious and vulgar words, were spoken by the House leader of the official opposition and are a poor example for the Canadian people who are observing us on television, of the attitude which should prevail in this chamber where we should not criticize individuals and tarnish reputations but rather criticize specific measures and discuss ideas. We should bring the debates in this House to a respectable level, Mr. Speaker, and I think that the attitude of the House leader of the official opposition has not contributed to raising the level of debates during the present session, and I truly regret it. That is the saddest aspect of my experiences as Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council, Mr. Speaker, and it is unfortunate that I should have to say it, and I purposely waited for the hon. House leader of the opposition to be present so that I could tell him to his face.

I noticed that when the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) was laying blame on him that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton left the chamber. I waited for his return to tell him to his face that I am saddened by his attitude. I regret that kind of attitude and I hope that in the future we will be able to work in a more professional way for the good of all Canadians, in a renewed parliament, in a parliament whose procedure will have been amended in good faith in order to be more dignified, more efficient and more adapted to our 1979 life style.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, having listened to most of the speeches made since noon today, I have come to the conclusion that we should have adjourned as early as last night. I see that everything that has been said today was not very useful. Usually we wait until much later in the summer before adjourning for the recess, and I think that June 30 is either too soon or too late.

I noticed while listening to the speech of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs that he was very agitated, probably because he has been considerably irritated by the incidents of a few moments before, but whatever the reason, I think that his remarks were somewhat out of place. The minister complained about the proliferation of third parties or of political parties in Canada.

Well, for the minister's information, this is no novel thing in this House, and if third parties sprung up in Canada, it was precisely because of the failure of the older political parties. If they had given Canadians the kind of administration they were expecting from a good government, there would have been no need to create new political parties.

The hon. member also suggested that third parties enjoy the same privileges in this House as does the official opposition. I submit this is totally untrue. Time allocations for debates in this House afford much ampler scope to the official opposition, with their greater number of members, than to third parties. On this also I therefore feel the minister twisted the facts when he indicated that third parties enjoyed the same privileges as opposition parties to make their views known. My feeling is that this proportion is "maintained", if not overly "maintained".

The minister also complained that government back-benchers do ask too few questions during question periods, before orders of the day. What he meant in my view was that government members did not participate as much as the opposition parties in that period, considering we are now on television. And my answer to the minister is this: when an opposition member asks a question, he or she gets an answer forthwith or at least the minister tries to answer, and therefore suggest that the ratio is very well maintained because as many government members appear on the screen as opposition members. I note that before TV came into this House, no government members ever rose to ask questions. So, Mr. Speaker, my feeling is the Minister of State for Urban Affairs in his remarks showed much more anger at what happened earlier today than a positive attitude toward improving the debates in this House.

Mr. Speaker, like other hon. members, I have had the opportunity of working under our able Speaker of the House of Commons within a committee which set up the organization for broadcasting and telecasting our debates in the House. This is a new experience which we lived through during this past session, and after having observed the public at least in the area I am representing, and the persons I chanced to meet, I clearly have the impression that this undertaking is well taken by public. It creates a closer relationship between the Parliament of Canada and the public it represents. It also enables the Canadian public to better understand what goes on in its national parliament.

However, that does not mean that any improvement in the administration is necessarily visible. The performance of the government during the past session is not so much laudable, and I think that the concerns expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that there were possibilities of an election in the fall are unjustified because at that time the government would have to go before the people empty-handed. Personally, I rather think that they will try to restore their fortunes during the coming winter months in order to be able to go before the people of Canada with a better image of their administration.

What we have particularly deplored in the last few months is the devaluation of the dollar. In my opinion, this is detrimental for business in Canada, for industry, trade, employment and the cost of living. The whole Canadian economic system has suffered from the devaluation of the Canadian dollar. And when I look at the present situation in Canada, that is the devaluation of the dollar, an employment level lower than we have seen in a long time, unemployment around 9 or 10 per cent, and even higher in certain areas of the country, a rate of inflation that the government has not succeeded in controlling in spite of all its efforts, when I see these things, Mr. Speaker, this reminds me of the situation which existed in 1960 and 1961 when another administration governed Canada and was defeated because of this. I am talking about the Progressive Conservative government of 1958 to 1962. The same situation existed in 1962 at the time of the general election. The dollar had been devaluated. There was very high unemployment and uncontrollable inflation. We now have the same situation, and perhaps even worse this year, after about 15 years of a Liberal administration.

The government talks about taking all sorts of initiatives to fight against inflation while it takes action which increases the cost of living. It has also taken action to increase every six months, for instance, the cost of oil, gasoline and heating oil in Canada. This increases significantly production and transportation costs and has disastrous effects right down to the level of the distribution of goods and services, and the Canadian consumer must pay for it. The oil price increase serves only to fill the pockets of the multinational companies.

Mr. Speaker, when the government claims it is taking steps to fight inflation, I feel it takes them to increase the cost of living. There is also widespread discontent in the field of agriculture. Dairy producers, be it industrial or raw milk, are clearly dissatisfied with the policy of our government. Nothing has been done to improve and stabilize the Canadian dairy industry. That is sadly lacking and the government should bring forward a long-term policy to stabilize production and especially farm incomes.

In the beef industry, we have erratic fluctuations between highs and lows. Farmers always have a hard time to follow those fluctuations when beef goes through crises such as those we have witnessed in the last two or three years. Instead of suffering terrible losses, farmers get rid of their herds. The herds having been decimated, we see the higher prices we are now experiencing. Now, Mr. Speaker, I feel that once again the government has failed to give leadership by not introducing a policy to stabilize production in those sectors.

Another area on which I want to dwell before concluding my comments—and on this I entirely agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—is that of senior citizens. We have been working and fighting for a long time to obtain from the government more satisfactory pensions for older persons and I refuse to admit more particularly what happens in the case of persons from 60 to 65 years of age, for example, whether they are widows or unmarried persons, but especially widows. Again recently there was in my riding a couple of senior citizens, the wife being under 65 when her husband died. She lost her pension because she was not 65 years old. She became a widow and consequently, under the legislation, she lost her pension. I think it is at that time that a person between 60 and 65 badly needs the assistance of the government, because at her age she cannot go back to work. I think that the legislation should be amended as quickly as possible to give justice in such specific cases. I think that the same goes for unmarried persons between 60 and 65 years of age.

Another point too is that of the unfinished business. We might come back in October to continue this session but it might be a new one. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we will have to consider a draft constitution this summer and parliament will be asked to debate that draft when we come back in the fall.

I think this draft constitution was prepared in a bad approach by the budget debate, mainly as regards the debate on the sales tax. I think the verbal row between the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and the Quebec minister of finance in particular and other ministers at both levels of government did not help at all that attempt at constitutional amendment. I think that instead of trying to pick a fight all the time, we should try to negotiate in good faith on both sides with a view to arriving at a real constitution that will give satisfaction not only to the province of Quebec, not only to the federal government but also to any and all provinces and nationalities in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, during this holiday period, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggested, I think we should rather try to find ways of coming back in the fall better prepared to introduce and pass legislation more in line with the requirements of the people of Canada. As far as I am concerned, I believe, like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that this holiday period could have been shorter. We could come back in early September but adjourn a little more often. Instead of adjourning for long periods of three and one third months as is the case now we should adjourn for shorter periods but more often so members would have more opportunities to visit their ridings, meet their voters and know their opinions to be able to represent them better in this House.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I wish all my colleagues of every political party in this House a good holiday and I hope after listening to certain speeches that during that summer period they will be able to have a healthy rest and come back in a better disposition toward agreement than is the case today as we prepare to part.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Young).

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, there has only been one member of this party who has been allowed to participate in this debate—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The Chair recognized the Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice. I thought he was rising on a point of order. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I was prepared to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Leeds.

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, it is very tempting, after sitting here and listening to the sanctimonious twaddle that originated from the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) and also to the remark made by the Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) that this has been a positive session—in other words, that we have accomplished something—to take them up on their remarks. But rather than fall for their red herrings that they have tried to place before this House today, it is better to deal with the real issues that face this country.

It is a sad day indeed that we are adjourning this House at a time when the Canadian people need help more than they ever needed it before. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) drew to the attention of the House this morning, and I think it bears repetition, this fact in the form of a question asked of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Would the member from somewhere out west, I think it is Vancouver-Kingsway, who I hear in the background, cool down? The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) had asked the Prime Minister whether he could tell us when he will announce significant new economic measures to deal with the serious economic problems facing this country. The reply is well worth repeating because nothing has happened. It is obvious nothing will happen and it is obvious that this government is incapable of making anything happen. The Prime Minister made this reply at page 5307 of Hansard:

> —the Canadian people are concerned, and they want solutions to these problems at this time. The question arises as to whether these issues can best be dealt with during a general election, or by continuing the work in the House. I have reached the conclusion, because, I must say, of the co-operation of hon. members opposite and their anxiety to get on with the work, that we should stay in this House and deal with these issues.

We stayed and we did not deal with any of these issues.

Mrs. Holt: You should deal with them.

Mr. Cossitt: We still have one million people unemployed in this country. We still have the highest inflation that we have ever had in the history of Canada. On top of that, Mr. Speaker, we have the saddest dollar that Canada has ever seen. It reflects on the opinion that others in this world have of this country when the Canadian dollar, even though it has been propped up by billions of dollars by this government over a period of time, still cannot stay at a proper level.

It seems to me that the Prime Minister and the government do not care. The backbenchers on the other side obviously do not care either, or they are too scared to do anything about it. The government do not care about the person who is on a pension who goes to the grocery store and cannot afford to pay the prices asked for food today. They do not care about the man without a job who is sitting at home and going out and looking for things that are not there in the way of work, and they do not care about the dollar and the fact that it is a joke in the eyes of the world.

In 1968 we had all of these problems to some extent. Ten years have now gone by since this Prime Minister and this government have been in office, and we still have the same problems. We were told in 1968 that we were going to get a "just society".

An hon. Member: Just for Grits.

Mr. Cossitt: Our problems became worse. And as has just been said by an hon. member, it is "just for Grits". That is about what it became. Instead of a just society, it has become an unjust society. We were told we would have participatory democracy. What have we had? We have had a Prime Minister who in effect says to this country: "I will allow you to kiss the emperor's feet". We remember too that the Prime Minister said, "Inflation has been licked". At another time he said, "I will wrestle inflation to the ground". It has been a darn poor wrestling match without any results in the interests of the Canadian people. I believe the Prime Minister has been the worst forecaster and the worst prophet in the history of Canada. He has been followed by a bunch of derelict cabinet disciples who do not have the guts to stand up to him and do something about it.

Thank goodness for men like James Richardson—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I would like to remind the hon. member that he should refer to a member of this House by his riding and not by his name.

Mr. Cossitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank goodness for men like the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Richardson), for those who came before him and for those who I hope will come after him, who have enough sense to get away from a disintegrating, bumbling bunch of people who are incapable of running this country and are apparently interested in putting ahead of the welfare of this country—

An hon. Member: It is despicable.

Mr. Cossitt: It is despicable, an hon. member says. The truth hurts, does it not? These people are prepared to put their own political skins ahead of running this country properly.

I remember the Prime Minister making a speech somewhere in western Ontario not many months ago in which he said that Canadians are too concerned with two cars in the yard and a house in the country, and they should pull in their belts. I say what about the two $85,000 Cadillacs and the summer home at Harrington Lake that the taxpayers of this country are paying for? Is the Prime Minister pulling in his belt as an example? Is he doing away with one of his two Cadillacs? Is he closing Harrington Lake for the duration of the economic crisis of this country? No, he is carrying on saying "Do what I say, but I will do what I want for myself". What concern for the Canadian people and what an example of practising what is preached. The emperor and his court jesters must go. They must go while there is at least time for something to be left of this country. This heartless piece of stone and his puppets must be and will be disposed of by the Canadian people at the ballot box as soon as there is an opportunity.

Mrs. Holt: Phony.

Mr. Cossitt: We have had ten years of failure. Phony, the hon. member says. I reply to her, Mr. Speaker, that the whole record of the government has been phony; it has done nothing for this country in ten years of failure. They deserve a very final reward and that is the judgment of banishment from the treasury benches of this country by the Canadian people.

• (1542)

Speaking of this would-be emperor, for two years he has wiggled and waggled with regard to questions on the order paper, using citations from Beauchesne as though he were the Speaker of the House of Commons. Some of his ministers have taken up the same practice with the result that we get back an answer saying, "See Beauchesne citation number" this or that.

In actual fact, he has no right to usurp the functions of the Speaker, as he is doing. I know he thinks he is important and that he is everything. Once he did say that he was very close to the Almighty. I cannot judge that because none of us is in the position to be that high up the ladder to know whether that is true or not. However, I certainly can say that the Prime Minister is not the Speaker of this House of Commons. The Speaker of the House of Commons is to be commended on the fact that questions are being allowed to be returned to the order paper where the Prime Minister has used Beauchesne's citations to get out of giving an answer.

I do not need to go into the arrogance and disdain for parliament shown by the government. That has often been pointed out by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) in such adequate fashion that it would be redundant for me today to go any further in that direction.

I would like to say a word about the Quebec language legislation and the lack of federal government response in a responsible way to such legislation. Next Monday, businesses in Quebec must have French only signs and names. What has our Messiah of the House of Commons, the self-proclaimed protector of minorities, done about it all? He stood in the shadows and whimpered like a scared goat instead of standing up and saying with more than just a few brief words to René Lévesque that any Canadian has the right to use the language of his choice. He has roared with a whisper. He has wielded nothing but a feather.

Why did he not refer bill 101 to the Supreme Court of Canada for judgment as to whether it was within the rights of the province of Quebec to pass certain sections of that act? Why has he not considered disallowance of such an act? We know why. The obvious answer is a political answer. The answer is politics and votes, which mean more to this government than the supposed protection of the minority rights of any group in this country, whether they be French, English or some other ethnic minority.

Recently the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) spoke across the river in Hull at the opening of a new building. As someone pointed out earlier, they are moving all the departments over there. In any event, he said that when public servants are over there, they should always be sure and speak French. He was telling English Canadians who work in Hull they should not use their own language when they are over there. We do not say to people over there that when they come here they cannot use their language. That would be utterly ridiculous, abominable and a disgrace. Likewise, the words of the Minister of Supply and Services were reprehensible, disgraceful and disgusting. He sounded more like René Lévesque than a federal member of parliament. He completely illustrated the farce of this government's bilingual program.

When we are told to co-operate, to bend over for the unity of this country, that is what we must do. However, how do the government expect to get an enthusiastic response from the rest of Canada to these sorts of statements when they do not stand up to a government which seeks to separate this country, the government of one particular province which thumbs its nose at the Government of Canada and the Canadian people and everyone who does not speak one particular language? I say that bilingualism "Trudeau style" has become nothing more than two-faced idiocy.

Personally, I am sick and tired of the anti-British and anti-American attitude of this government. Britain gave us our House of Commons. We are modelled on the British parliamentary system.

I found it a bit sickening to listen to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) a while ago saying some things about the British parliamentary tradition. After all, the Prime Minister certainly does not indicate very often that he has very much belief in it. However, when things looked rough in 1972, he rushed over to have tea with the Queen. That was because he almost lost an election, and it looked good to sit on her coat-tails in order to save his own political hide. He has always found time for disrespect for British institutions. He found time to slide down a bannister some years ago. More recently he did a little pirouette behind the Queen, that disrespectful little dance that we saw in all the papers.

This government and the Prime Minister are the greatest manipulators of the century. They are the Houdini of all Houdinis. When it comes to being a Houdini, they attempt to intimidate and manage the press. The Prime Minister managed to grab one of the press members by the coat or the neck a few months ago and started to shake him. He does not want to have much to do with the press until he needs them. When things look a bit shaky for him, they are called in for drinks and interviews. Everything is on the House. He says to himself that he needs them and their publicity for election purposes.

I spoke of anti-Americanism. In this regard I wish to refer to a book which I think is well worth reading for all Canadians, "Trudeau Revealed" by David Sommerville. In particular, I refer to page 208. It contains a statement which I recall being made at the time. It was well publicized, although perhaps not well enough. I think it bears repetition now. This is what he said when speaking in the Soviet Union:

> We have a great deal to learn from the Soviet Union, a country from which we have a great deal to benefit.

He went on to refer to the United States of America, which purchases more of our goods than any country in the world, which means more to us economically than any country in the world. He said that we should be friendly with the Soviet Union—and this is an exact quote:

> —to protect our identity from the cultural, economic and perhaps even military point of view.

Is he trying to insinuate to this country that the Americans are coming over the border with military forces? That is absolutely ridiculous. There were also the words in 1977 of the famous Russian dissident, Vladimir Bukovsky:

> I was in prison when Mr. Trudeau arrived in Moscow. He declared that we would like to have an exchange of experience, to use Soviet experience of development in northern territories. It was awful for us, for everybody in the Soviet Union. Everybody knew quite well how many millions of prisoners perished when developing those territories. It was awful.

When he was in London, a student asked him: "What society would you choose to make Canada, socialist or capitalist?" He replied—and this appeared at the time in the British press—"Labour party socialism or Cuban socialism or Chinese socialism, socialism from each according to his means." That is the man who talks about maintaining—supposedly—the British parliamentary system. He talks about maintaining the rights of parliament.

I find it very hard to follow when men like the Prime Minister say things like that. It illustrates the complete hypocrisy of this government when it comes to the statements they make about Russian dissidents and the problems from which they suffer. There was the famous "Viva Castro" statement. I suggest to this government it is about time someone on the other side of the House said "Viva Canada" and did something about it.

Recently the Prime Minister and the government introduced a proposed new constitution for Canada. Just the other day some person in the gallery—I do not know who it was, but that is irrelevant—held one of these booklets aloft and yelled "This is a lot of bunk".

Truer words were never spoken even though they may have been uttered from a place from which no one is supposed to speak. Mr. Speaker, in many ways it is nothing but a load of bunk. It might be called a horrendous monster, an election red herring which the Prime Minister feels he can use to benefit his campaign—everyone will forget about inflation and the decline in the value of the dollar. But I do not think the Canadian people are so much worried about where the British North America Act is. They are worried about putting food into their stomachs, about unemployment and about the economy.

I see the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt), who kept saying something about national security, has left the House. I will say something on that subject now. I will refer specifically to the Peter Worthington case which is now before the courts in Toronto. Mr. Speaker, I find it strange that this government chose to prosecute the Toronto Sun while ignoring the CTV. Mind you, I do not think the CTV should have been prosecuted either—

Mr. Roberts: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I understand the hon. member for Leeds is proposing to comment now on a case which is sub judice. Is it in order for him to refer to matters which are the subject of court proceedings?

Mr. Speaker: There are, obviously, things which the hon. member might say which would be out of order. Equally, there are some things which would be in order. Perhaps, with the indulgence of hon. members, I might read a communication to the House.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication:

Government House
Ottawa

June 30, 1978

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Wishart F. Spence, O.B.E., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-day, the 30th day of June, at 3.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary
to the Governor General

I might also indicate to the House that we were rapidly, during the course of the hon. member's remarks, approaching four o'clock, which is a critical time, and I think we should settle the course our proceedings should take before he concludes his remarks.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. At this stage, I think I can say there is unanimous consent to cancel private members' hour from four to five and to continue the discussion on the motion until five o'clock. After that we shall see what step we may have to take.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered that the private members' hour be suspended so that the House may continue addressing itself to this motion until five o'clock this evening.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but this may be somewhat important. I seek the unanimous consent of the House to revert to the presentation of reports, in order to table a report from the standing and special committees. If I obtain the unanimous consent of the House, I should like to table the first report of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada.

● (1602)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I suggest the hon. member wait until the hon. member for Leeds has finished his speech.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION RESPECTING SUMMER RECESS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen:

That when the House adjourns on Friday, June 30, 1978, it shall stand adjourned until Tuesday, October 10, 1978, provided that at any time prior to that date, if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time; and

That, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for all purposes of this order.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, these various interruptions have left me somewhat confused about how much time remains to me. Is it in order to inquire?

An hon. Member: Three minutes.

Mr. Cossitt: I was not asking hon. members opposite, I was asking the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: According to our records there are two minutes left.

Mr. Cossitt: Two minutes? I shall have to cut short my remarks on national unity. I will merely say I find it inconceivable that the Sun should have been picked upon—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I am told now that he began his speech at 3.35 p.m. He would therefore be entitled to continue until 4.15 p.m.

Mr. Cossitt: Thank you. In regard to the Worthington case, I am not referring to any aspect of that case which is before the courts but to the fact that he was charged, that the Sun was charged, but CTV and several other columnists were not charged for doing substantially the same thing as Worthington was accused of. One can only draw the conclusion, as many Canadians have, that because the Toronto Sun continually criticizes the government in its editorials it has been singled out for prosecution. To my mind this is truly reprehensible. It interferes with freedom of the press. When any member of the House or any news service or branch of the media finds something wrong—in this case it concerns matters of national security of which the government is aware and with regard to which the government is taking no action—it becomes the duty of those concerned to do something about it.

That is why, as an individual member of parliament, I said what I did say about national security and was prepared to take the consequences, whatever they might have been. I think the Toronto Sun is to be commended for having stood up for Canada. I find it strange that a man like Patrick O'Callaghan, publisher of the Edmonton Journal, should write articles as recently as June of this year showing a complete lack of knowledge of the case.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member should continue his remarks after we have returned from the other place.

● (1612)

ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the honourable the Deputy Governor General requires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable The Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

[Translation]

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills.

Summer Recess

Bill C-61, An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1979—Chapter 31.

Bill C-56, An act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions—Chapter 32.

Bill C-10, An act to amend the Financial Administration Act—Chapter 33.

Bill C-17, An act to amend the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act and the Railway Act and to amend and repeal certain other statutes in consequence thereof—Chapter 34.

Bill C-39, An act to amend the Currency and Exchange Act—Chapter 35.

Bill C-42, An act to amend the Criminal Code—Chapter 36.

Bill C-58, An act to amend the Pension Act and the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act—Chapter 37.

Bill C-36, An act to amend the Export Development Act—Chapter 38.

Bill C-12, An act to require the reporting of certain financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of certain petroleum companies carrying on business in Canada—Chapter 39.

Bill C-48, An act to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend An Act to amend the Customs Tariff—Chapter 40.

Bill C-54, An act to provide a maritime code for Canada and to amend the Canada Shipping Act and other Acts in consequence thereof—Chapter 41.

Bill C-59, An act to amend the Income Tax Act and the Excise Tax Act in matters relating to the ownership and operation of small businesses—Chapter 42.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION RESPECTING SUMMER RECESS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen:

That when the House adjourns on Friday, June 30, 1978, it shall stand adjourned until Tuesday, October 10, 1978, provided that at any time prior to that date, if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time; and

That, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for all purposes of this order.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, when we took our short break for royal assent I was talking about Patrick O'Callaghan, the publisher of the Edmonton Journal, and his comments on the matter of the Toronto Sun and the Peter Worthington case. All that remains to be said in this regard is that his article of June 28 was, to me, a classic example of irresponsible journalism. He showed complete lack of knowledge of the facts and he certainly showed no interest in discovering what really happened before he wrote what he did.

I would like to refer to only two parts of that article where he deals with certain remarks about myself that are not accurate and not true, and I believe he should stand corrected. He said that I hid behind parliamentary privilege. Mr. Speaker, I hide behind nothing on the matter of national security. I was not aware whether or not I had privilege. That was a matter that was judged by the law officers of the Crown and subsequently announced in the House by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). I had no advance knowledge of what that judgment would be, and I made up my mind that I would go ahead in the interests of what I thought was right for Canada, regardless of what the judgment might be, and in that regard Mr. O'Callaghan is quite incorrect. Then he says:

Mr. Basford chose not to notice that Mr. Cossitt had also referred to the information in his possession outside the Commons where he has no such protection.

The Minister of Justice did not ignore that fact, and while I do not have his statement in front of me, I recall his saying that he or his law officers had examined what had been said outside the House, that it was substantially and exactly the same as what had been said inside the House. Therefore, again the remarks made by the publisher of the Edmonton Journal are incorrect.

Of course, there are many, many other things in this article that are incorrect, and I suggest that a responsible journalist and publisher should act more in keeping with the position he holds than this man has done, not only in this article but in another one reprinted by the Canadian Daily Newspapers Publishers' Association a few weeks ago.

A few days ago a question put by me on the order paper was answered. It dealt with the Canadian National Railways. I was refused an answer on the grounds "it was not the practice of CN to reveal . . ." CNR is owned by the people of Canada. The CBC is owned by the people of Canada. The Canada Council is owned by the people of Canada. As the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) pointed out this morning, there might be around 400 Crown corporations owned by the people of Canada. Why does this parliament not have the right to ask questions about the activities of those corporations and receive answers to them? We are being continually blocked with the expression "it is not the practice to reveal".

Whoever set up these practices should withdraw them and allow democracy to flourish in this country, and freedom of information, which is being so eloquently espoused by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), should be first and foremost before this parliament. Because when the day comes that a member is not allowed to ask questions as to why we spend, for example, $60,000 of the taxpayers' money on the Factory Theatre Lab in Toronto where they staged a play in which Adolf Eichmann spends some time wiping human excrement on his face, there is something wrong; when we cannot get an answer to a question like that, there is something wrong. When we give public money to people who publish Strike, the tabloid in Toronto, and the Pulp Press of Vancouver who support groups in Italy, such as the terrorists who have been so prominent recently, or those who published a manual called The Urban Guerilla, as was done in Vancouver, there is something wrong. When public money goes to institutions which advocate murder, kidnapping and other acts of a similar nature, and we wish to question that in this parliament but cannot get an answer from the minister responsible for the Crown corporation involved, then something is seriously amiss.

Today we will be going home with the country in a mess, and I think it is shameful. I recall the words spoken by the right hon. member for Prince Albert at the nomination meeting held in my constituency some months ago for the coming election. The theme of his address was, "Where are we going?" That is what every Canadian is asking today. Where are we going? We have not gone anywhere for ten years under this government; our problems have been getting continually worse. The government promised to do something about them before we went home, but it has done nothing, and today all the ministers, with one or two exceptions, have left the House and have probably already gone home. Undoubtedly the Prime Minister has climbed aboard a jet somewhere to fly to some exotic, far-off country, leaving far behind one million unemployed, the poor who suffer from inflation, and the sagging dollar.

The hon. gentleman opposite shakes his head. I know that in all sincerity he must be trying to restrain himself from admitting the truth. But in any event the truth is apparent to the Canadian people. The Prime Minister and his government, who have given us the highest unemployment since the great depression, must go. The Prime Minister and his government, who have permitted the highest inflation in our history, must go. The Prime Minister and his government, whose actions have destroyed the values of the Canadian dollar, must go. Canada needs a breath of fresh air, and if this government calls an election—if it dares or has the nerve to call an election—Canada will get a new government. I am sure no one on the Progressive Conservative side of the House is prepared to say that we will solve all problems, because that would be ridiculous. But at least we know that we will try, and that is more than the government can say. It has not tried for the past ten years.

I am glad the hon. member for Vancouver South has come back. Now she is going out again. She is having a hard time to contain herself.

Mrs. Holt: It is Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. MacFarlane: You have referred to the wrong hon. member, the wrong constituency, and you are using the wrong words.

Mrs. Holt: You have not been right once today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cossitt: I meant to refer to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). While we will not be able to solve all the problems, we will attempt to, and I am sure we will succeed in many ways.

Successive polls which have been taken indicate that Canadians are fed up. Hon. members opposite know this, when they feel fire on the seats of their pants in their constituencies. The Trudeau era is over in this country. The curtain has to fall for the good of the country. Let him as quickly as possible call a general election so that this sad chapter in Canadian history will be closed, and a brighter day will dawn for Canada and the future of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in participating in this motion to adjourn the House today, at the beginning I should like to indicate that I am dismayed, but certainly not surprised, at the type of comments which have been voiced by the Tory opposition today, particularly by its House leader and the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt).

In as short a fashion as I can, and in the small amount of time which they deserve, I should like to deal with the remarks made by the hon. member for Leeds. I can refer back to a statement made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) in this House and in public, which fully explained the reasons that charges were proceeded with against the Toronto Sun, its editor and publisher. That was completely and fully explained in the House. At the same time, the reasons for not proceeding with the charges against other parties were explained. The hon. member for Leeds was one of those people.

The hon. member for Leeds, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) and several others on that side of the House, have expressed from time to time in this place an interest in the welfare of the RCMP and the security of this nation. At the very least one would expect one of those members might have appeared recently at the sittings of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, which investigated the estimates of the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais), the RCMP and the security directorate of this country. In the year I have sat on that committee as Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice, I have not seen the right hon. member for Prince Albert or the hon. member for Leeds.

Mr. Dick: Because they could not receive answers to their questions.

Mr. Young: Perhaps once or twice in 30 or 40 sittings of that committee I have seen the hon. member for Central Nova. If there is this professed interest in the RCMP and the security of this nation, why did we not see some of these members present at public and in camera hearings of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs? They are never there. One begins to wonder whether their interest is more in pandering to television cameras and hit and run headline gathering than it is in the real essence of the questions about what the RCMP is doing and the security of this nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Young: The kinds of comments we have heard today coming from the Tory opposition are typical of the innuendo, unsubstantiated allegation, distortion and subterfuge which we have become all too accustomed to expect from the Conservative ranks of late.

A few days ago a time allocation measure was described by them as being a guillotine, closure, and a throttling of debate. This throttling or preventing of debate apparently occurred in relation to the budget and its associated measures, which debate occurred over four weeks, and upon which many members of the House had spoken. After that passage of time and who knows how many words, the leader of the Tory opposition had the effrontery to attempt to make the case that they had been muzzled and not allowed full comment. Those arguments and the ones we have heard today are about as worthy of credibility as the allegation that certain offices around here had been bugged. They are about as worthy of belief as the unsubstantiated rumours and stories which were floated around the House by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) indicating that members on this side had participated and engaged in a speculation against the dollar.

Mr. Dick: How about the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner)?

An hon. Member: Yes, how about that hon. member?

Mr. Young: We all know that those words could not be backed up.

Mr. Dick: He did not even apologize.

Mr. Young: I suggest hon. members opposite should relax and sit back. They will not enjoy what I have to say, but I can assure them that we will be here for a few minutes yet.

Mr. Dick: The truth would be interesting.

Mr. Young: We know that the allegations by the hon. member for York-Simcoe could not be substantiated. We know how much those people who bugged offices were known on that side of the House. Those comments were about as genuine as the rest of the rumours and bad mouthings on numerous occasions by people of that ilk. As it turned out later, none of them could be substantiated. Similarly I suggest the comments in the vein the Tory opposition have made today cannot be substantiated.

I should like to refer back to the budget for a moment. My information is that something over 40 members participated in that debate. We on this side of the House, as the government, were accused of throttling debate when we brought in a time allocation measure in order to get on with the business of the House. There were a goodly number of other speakers, mainly opposition members, who spoke on another item, Bill C-48, the measure respecting amendments to the Customs Tariff. That was not the case painted by the Tory party. That was not the case they would have Canadians believe. It was not the case painted by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). Continually they make these allegations and indulge in innuendos which are unsubstantiated by fact.

Recently, I am sure by mistake, a pamphlet was delivered to my office. It was a broadsheet entitled: "Leader's Report, Some News From Joe Clark". It was dated May 26, 1978. It referred to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) being "obliged to get on with the governing of the country". It accused the Prime Minister of "political manoeuvring". Also it indicated that the hon. Leader of the Opposition exacted from the Prime Minister a "promise that the government would immediately bring forward specific proposals to deal with the very serious problems now affecting us". In fact, that was repeated by the Tory House leader today.

I should like to continue referring to this despicable little broadsheet. It suggested that the promise was unfulfilled. Supposedly it reprinted the order paper for the House of Commons of May 16. The statement referring to that reads as follows:

"The order paper for the House of Commons of May 16 speaks for itself."

Then it contained the following heading: "Business Disposed of this Week". Following that was a reprint of the portion of the order paper showing specific subject headings and the business conducted. That little pamphlet, which I so despise, conveniently left out the fact that May 16 was a Tuesday. No matter what the Tory opposition attempts to do, it cannot change the fact that May 16, 1978 was a Tuesday. In the pamphlet they attempted to make the case that no business was disposed of that week, according to the order paper. They conveniently left out the fact that the business disposed of that "week" does not refer to a five-day week but to a Monday. They very conveniently dropped the fact from that little pamphlet that the statement which is printed in the order paper on May 16 could refer to one day and one day only, Monday. They are trying to sell Monday as the whole of the week, and trying to sell the idea that the government had conducted no business that week because it had done nothing on Monday.

● (1632)

Let us look a little further, Mr. Speaker. It would seem to some that the dropping of the reference to Tuesday, and thus giving the impression that the word "week" meant the whole week rather than just one day, might have been an oversight. That could have been an oversight, but others might just as easily feel that such a slip was more coolly calculated to deceive. That latter impression might be given some substance by a closer look at the facts.

When one turns to Hansard of May 15 one finds that on that day this House began second reading consideration of Bill C-48. When one looks a little further and makes a little closer examination, one finds there were nine speakers that day on that measure, and of those nine speakers there was one from this side of the House, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), there were six Tories, one NDP member and one Creditiste. We have this case of the Tory opposition in their leader's pamphlet trying to sell to the Canadian public and those who buy this sort of garbage that there was nothing done all week, when that reference was to one day. When you look at what was done that one day you find that six Tories spoke, one Liberal, one New Democrat and one Creditiste. One finds in essence, if you look at the facts, that they conveniently overlooked that if there was nothing completed that day, and nothing done in finality, it was not because the government did not put forward any measures, but because the Tories would not or could not stop talking.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Young: Based on all the facts, when everything is looked at, the comments in this report of the Leader of the Opposition fall nothing short of being misleading, distorted and deceiving. One might hope that the Leader of the Opposition would feel some capacity for embarrassment by that happening; that he might stand and withdraw or retract that kind of statement, or at the very least might come clean and correct the erroneous impression that it creates. After all, let us be frank, the Leader of the Opposition in Canada is presumed to have a somewhat higher station in life, and one would not expect from him the kind of statement that is more akin to the kind of thing one expects from some fly by night, door to door huckster.

The reprint from Hansard is, of course, accurate as far as it goes, but the deception arises in what is not said and what is conveniently left out. The Leader of the Opposition acts like a salesman who tells an unsuspecting purchaser of his goods that they are written up in Consumer Affairs, or in Good Housekeeping magazine. That unsuspecting purchaser relies on that statement and buys those goods only to find out that the article in the magazine was a warning not to buy, or that it was one pointing out defects in the product. I hope the people of this country will look hard and long at the kind of statements opposition members have made over the past few months in debate in this House, and at the kind of things being sent to them through the mails. One might ask whether that kind of distorted impression of what goes on in the House went out under the frank of the Leader of the Opposition.

One would hope that the Leader of the Opposition, since he is expected to be an honourable man, is not responsible for that kind of report as it is written. Yet I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is his report and that in fact at the bottom on the reverse side it is personally signed by him. One presumes, therefore, that the Leader of the Opposition accepts and subscribes to that kind of shabby practice and deceit. If one came to expect nothing more, one is getting nothing more from that kind of cavilling cabal that puts these things together in the Tory back rooms, but one at least would expect something better from the Leader of the Opposition himself.

One expects better today from the House Leader of the Opposition who voiced the empty platitudes of respect for parliament, who decried violations of parliament and who spoke about competence, the ability to manage, and his allegations of corruption. Let him and his fellow members exercise some planning. Let them do some time allocation of their own and try not to stall and drag out interminably the measures and programs put forward by this government before parliament and this country. Let them go home at this adjournment time, let them look to themselves and start to clean up some of their own acts before making the unsubstantiated allegations they have made. Let the opposition House leader, the Leader of the Opposition and his members learn to speak with one face rather than two or three, with one policy rather than the duplicity we have seen recently.

Last week we saw and heard their claims of support for Bill C-42, to amend the Criminal Code in respect of the choice of language at trial. We heard them claiming that they were in support and wanted to pass that bill. We on this side know of the delays we went through waiting for them to get their act together so we could get on with that bill. I know personally of the three or four days I sat here ready, willing and able to proceed with that debate while opposition members could not make up their minds and get their party together on the approach they were going to take.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You mislead the House, as usual.

Mr. Young: I do not mislead the House. The hon. House leader for the opposition has my invitation to stand up and make an allegation if he wants to do that.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is misleading the House. I do not suggest it is deliberate, I think it is inadvertent, but the parliamentary secretary is misleading the House, as usual, in respect of that piece of legislation.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, that is not a point of order. Rather, it is an affirmation or a point of debate by the House leader of the Tory party. I know, and a lot of my colleagues on this side know, that as a result of an intimation from that side of the House I was here present on a Thursday afternoon, a Thursday evening, a Friday, a Monday afternoon, a Monday evening and a Tuesday. I gave up four days of events and functions in my own constituency waiting to begin that debate which we finally got to after a four or five day wait. I have not quite forgotten about that, and neither have some of the folks back in my constituency.

Let me return to the duplicity I spoke of that occurred last week when we had Tory spokesmen claiming they were in support of this choice of language at trial measure. At the time those words were being said in this House we find it reported in the press that they were privately boasting and bragging among themselves that they had put one over on the government; that they had emasculated the bill and the bill was ineffectual. This was reported in the Ottawa papers this past week. The opposition party House leader shakes his head.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): They were wrong too.

Mr. Young: The opposition House leader can take that up with the press if he wants. He can tell members of the press they were wrong and that the memo they supposedly got their hands on was not correct. That is an argument between that hon. member and the press. I am taking from the press what I have read, in the same way as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) put forward comments appearing in the press as a statement of fact. If it can be done on that side it can be done on this side.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.I am sure the parliamentary secretary is giving the House his interpretation of the press report. I am merely stating that the story in the press was quite misleading. However, I defend the right of the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Young) to be wrong, if he wishes.

An hon. Member: And he frequently is.

Mr. Young: All I am saying is that last week we heard opposition members claim support for Bill C-42 regarding the choice of language at trial, while at the same time there was rampant duplicity and deception going on. At the same time that they were saying they were in support of that bill, they were patting themselves on the back because they had supposedly scuppered and emasculated the bill and made it ineffectual. They were privately boasting about this among themselves.

● (1642)

Mr. Jarvis: That's absolute garbage.

Mr. Young: All I want to say, Mr. Speaker, is that if they are embarrassed about that they are going to be more embarrassed about the fact—

Mr. Jarvis: That is absolute garbage.

Mr. Young: If the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis) would be polite enough—

Mr. Jarvis: I am not going to get up on my feet for that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. parliamentary secretary has the floor. We can stay here all night if you are prepared to sit.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, back where I come from they say "If the shoe fits you know where it pinches", and all the rest of it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Young: If the hon. members opposite would be polite enough to allow me to continue my speech, I would appreciate it because I did not interrupt them. Could I just have a little courtesy from the other side, please?

Mr. Jarvis: You don't deserve it, it is such a bad speech.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, they were privately congratulating themselves, but what is going to embarrass them—

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, we have had memos from members on the opposite side preaching to us about the decorum of this House, and yet today we have had disruption after disruption whenever one of our members has risen to speak. I just wish that they would sit back, relax and listen to a darned good speech.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, if hon. members opposite are hurt by what I am saying, if they are stung by some of my criticisms, if they are embarrassed by what happened with regard to the memo which got loose on that side of the House, let me embarrass them just a little bit more. It is our firm belief on this side that the advice given in that memo was totally useless and incorrect, and we are really not hurt or worried about it at all. However, they may be doubly embarrassed over the private boasting that went on about our being ineffectual when they find out that it was rather ineffectual and incorrect on their own part.

I suggest that that is proof adequate for anyone that the Tory party speaks with two faces, if not three.

An hon. Member: Two tongues.

Mr. Young: Or it speaks, as my hon. friend says, with two tongues, so long as they are not bilingual ones.

The opposition House leader today painted a picture of gloom and doom in Canada and how disastrous things are. We have not gone from riches to rags in this country; we are rich. We are not as rich as we hoped we might be at this time, but we are richer than we were. We have had a recession in this country as has almost every other country in the world of late, but the effect of that recession has not been felt in Canada as hard as it has been felt elsewhere. We have managed to cushion the effect of the shock of the recession in this country better than any other country.

No one is going to deny that we have high unemployment in this country today and that it is too high. However, we have not had a decline in the number of people working in this country, as has been seen in the United States, West Germany and Japan. The growth rates in Canada are among the highest of any country in the world and the inflation rates are among the lowest. Canada stands thirty-first in population among the countries of the world. There are only a handful of countries that are more powerful than we are, but they all have twice the population we have. We are an under-populated country yet we have that same power which is relative to those countries that are twice as densely populated as we are.

The most recent World Bank atlas states that Canada has the eighth largest economy in the world and that we are the seventh most productive in the world. It is true that there are some nations like Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates and Qatar that are ahead of us on this scale, but when people ask why, they find out that those three countries hold that position because they pump a great deal of oil out of the ground. That is the totality of their economy. We stand seventh on that list of countries which are most productive in this world, and the sixth country in the United States. While the attempt on the part of the Tory opposition today was to paint a bad, black and gloomy picture, we are still in good stead as far as the World Bank atlas is concerned.

In the first five months of this year we have created new jobs at an annual rate of 439,000. The profit picture in Canada is improving substantially, as reported to the Conference Board of Canada recently. Our merchandise trade balance is now rolling up healthy surpluses, largely due to the fact that we have a devalued dollar. I do not know any businessman in this country today that is objecting too much to the fact that we have a devalued dollar.

What we have sitting opposite in the House is not an opposition, a group which provides healthy and constructive criticism, but a random cluster of individualists, a cabal of hit and run headline hunters, slippery-tongued salesmen who would be more fitted to selling snake oil medicine at a fly-by-night show. Their talk is all bark and no substance. The fog they throw out to confuse and disillusion the Canadian public disperses with sunlight and a close inspection and examination of the true facts.

I welcome this break. I hope that the opposition will go home, review their mistakes of this past year and come back with an improved performance. I am sure that if we had an improved performance from the opposition, we could also hope to have an improved performance from the government. But let us see it come from that side. We on this side are not afraid of criticism. A good, strong opposition that has something constructive to say will be of benefit to us. We do not mind being prodded or told that we have got work to do; that is fair game and fair comment in this House. Instead of the carping and constant criticism which comes from that side of the House, let us have something of substance, something concrete, something that moves forward and that gets on with doing the job in this House.

Before I close I would like to move—and I understand that this motion may be seconded by a member opposite:

> That this sitting continue beyond the ordinary hour of adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of the motion of adjournment before the House in the name of the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council.

Mr. Paproski: That is seconded by me, sir.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Will those members who object please rise in their places.

Less than ten members having risen to object pursuant to Standing Order 6(5)(a), the motion is adopted.

Motion agreed to.

THE CONSTITUTION

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier) presented the first report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION RESPECTING SUMMER RECESS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen:

That when the House adjourns on Friday, June 30, 1978, it shall stand adjourned until Tuesday, October 10, 1978, provided that at any time prior to that date, if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time; and

That, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for all purposes of this order.

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak on this adjournment debate because I have a grievance. Before getting to my grievance I want to say that it has been a cruel and an unusual punishment to have to listen to some of the speeches I have listened to here today since 12 o'clock. As far as the last speaker is concerned, I am not going to bother taking up any of the points he intended to make, because as the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) said some years ago when listening to a member of the Liberal party, "When a big game hunter is out after big game, he does not get distracted by rabbit tracks". And that is what the hon. gentleman is. While I was listening to him, I was looking at the Newfoundland paper which says "Still no explanation for slub in the fishing nets". I thought to myself that there is no explanation for slub in the House either.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, this may be our last session. I thought it was to be our last sitting some months ago. Perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will get the courage to put his government to the test, to go to meet his maker, the Canadian voter, in the next several months before we reassemble on October 10. I certainly hope he does because it is time for him and gentlemen opposite to meet their makers and they have been avoiding that long enough. The last election was four years ago. Since it may be my last speech in this House—

Mr. MacFarlane: You won't be back.

Mr. Crosbie: I promise you I will be back for the next one.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are not going to the other place, are you?

Mr. Crosbie: I am not going to any other place. But I want to say this, Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Speaker on the fine job he has done during the months I have been in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I think he has done a masterful job and I admire the way in which he has conducted himself and I wanted to say that before getting on to the other things in my remarks.

I want to point out another grievance that I have. I was told something a few days ago by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner). In the last 18 months since I came to this House I have been attempting to get some progress made in the drydock owned by the government of Canada and operated by the CN, in St. John's, Newfoundland. For 18 months I have been working, first to get the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) to agree to allow our ports to be used by foreign fishing vessels for repair purposes, and secondly, now that we are on the verge of obtaining a contract with the U.S.S.R. to repair up to 60 Russian fishing vessels a year, that some $8 million be spent to put in a synchrolift in that federally owned dockyard so that they will have the capacity to do the work. We have been waiting now since March for a decision. The minister told me three or four days ago that that matter was before the Treasury Board and he expected an answer from the Treasury Board this Thursday. Not today, yesterday he expected the answer. And do you know, Mr. Speaker, that when I checked with one of his executive assistants today I found out that the minister's story was complete poppycock, that the matter was not before Treasury Board, that the matter has never gone to the Treasury Board, that there is some question of security for Russian crewmen. If the Russian ships are being repaired in those numbers there is some question being raised by some department as to security with the transfer of crews in St. John's harbour, and that this is holding them up and that no decision will be made until July 31. There is a grievance, Mr. Speaker, that I want to expand on this afternoon. When you cannot believe what a minister tells you, what are you to believe? Someone is wrong there. Either that matter is before the Treasury Board this Thursday and has been before them for the last several weeks, or it has not been before them. Either we are going to have a decision this week as the minister intimated, or we are not going to have one until the end of July. It is despicable, Mr. Speaker, and there should be an explanation from the minister. There is more to parliament than passing legislation, Mr. Speaker. One of the main purposes of parliament is to try to get information from the government, to try to keep the government on its toes and to try to expose what the government is doing wrong. Yet, we have heard the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) suggest here today that there is something deficient in this parliament because we have not passed a huge barrel of legislation. That hon. minister was braying like a quagga, Mr. Speaker, here today in his speech. A quagga, for those who do not know what it is, is a wild jackass.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: He had the audacity and the gall to suggest yesterday to the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) that when he questioned this minister about something that had gone on in his ministry, he was, and I quote "continuing to sling mud in the face of the French Canadians". This, on the eve of the great July 1 Canada Day holiday, and on which millions are being spent outside of this building. The great celebration of the French-English partnership in Canada tomorrow led by this great government that are such great nationalists and national unity proponents. And one of their members stands in this House and makes that kind of racist remark yesterday, Mr. Speaker. His implication was that if we asked a question of any of the ministers of French-Canadian descent, if we question any of them or doubt that everything they have done is on the up and up or suggest that some mistake has been made in their department or that something is wrong in their department that we are racist and anti-French because we dare question them. If that thesis is to be accepted, Mr. Speaker, the government is immune—

Mr. MacFarlane: It is your thesis.

Mr. Crosbie: Our Prime Minister is a Canadian of French descent, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) is a minister of French descent and so is the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Lalonde), the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer), the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc), the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé). Is the opposition to stop questioning the Prime Minister and all those ministers because some people opposite are going to suggest that when we question them it is anti-French or that we are throwing or slinging mud in the faces of French-Canadians? Are not the English-speaking ministers also entitled to say that if we question them that by golly we are racist and throwing mud in the faces of the English-speaking Canadians? Have you ever heard the like of the depravity and lowness and the utter inappropriateness of any suggestion by a minister of that kind on the eve of July 1, Mr. Speaker? Just to analyse it is to show how low that gentleman has sunk and how low his government has sunk that they will go to those means to try to stay in power. I can assure you that we will not be put off by those kinds of suggestions or the kind of act that we saw here from the minister today. He is going to be questioned if this government comes back without going to an election, he is going to be questioned, he is going to be grilled, we are going to find out what went on in Hull and we are going to find out what went on in the Campeau heap. The Campeau heap is what it is, Mr. Speaker. It is boiling and steaming and we are going to find out, no matter if it is a French-Canadian, an English-Canadian, a Ukrainian-Canadian, a Lithuanian-Canadian, we do not care what kind of a Canadian it is. The government is responsible and the minister is responsible for everything that happens in their departments. We have that obligation and we are going to carry it out.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: If patriotism was the last refuge of the scoundrel, that kind of defence of racial tendency or racial suggestion is certainly the last refuge of a scoundrel. It is not only a red herring, it is a Liberal herring, it is a rouge herring. It is a herring that is not going to work. This government does not deserve to be in power a day more. I wish they would call the election now and get it over with. Do not think that the government is going to be back here on the government side after the next election when it is called.

And the minister suggests there should not be parliamentary immunity. Why should there not be, Mr. Speaker? It was found necessary 400 years ago to protect members from being harassed by scoundrels and rascals and no-goods who had lots of money and if you opened your mouth they could slap you with slander and libel suits.

Mr. Muir: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The whip of the Liberal party who is now hiding behind newspapers is interjecting every few moments, loud enough for the Hansard reporter to hear but for no one else in the House to hear exactly what he is saying. It he does not have the intestinal fortitude to rise to his feet and reply to the hon. member who is speaking, or criticize him or say something about him, would Your Honour ask him to remain seated on what little brains he has and then later if he has anything to say, let him say it.

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, I thought we were enjoying a very fine exchange, my close brother from Newfoundland and I. I do not know why anyone from Cape Breton would interject into a good Scottish exchange. We were having a very good time until he appeared on the scene.

Mr. Muir: I love a good fight but I have guts enough—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's West has the floor. I suggest we all listen to him.

● (1702)

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to be deterred by any gusts from the honourable Gus. He may as well subside. Come down from the mountain and subside. I want to get on with my real grievance, the reason I stayed here all day.

My grievance is this. It is on behalf of nine million to ten million taxpayers. In my younger days I had the mistaken and foolish belief that the tax laws of Canada were administered impartially, with equality to all, fairly, and that we were all treated alike in the administration of the tax laws of Canada. In the last two years I have discovered that is not the case.

I have unearthed a scandal of gigantic dimensions involving income tax in Canada. I have managed to piece it together. On May 19 I wrote the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a six page memorandum outlining the situation in connection with John Christopher Doyle. He was a Canadian citizen up to two years ago, when he became a Panamanian citizen in order to avoid extradition to Canada. I sent that memorandum to the Prime Minister on May 19. It sets out what happened in the income tax treatment of Mr. Doyle. It points out that for 1950, 1953 and 1954, the only years made public, that gentleman was re-assessed in the years 1955 and 1959. The Crown added income to his income. In one case, 1950, it was $200,000. In the second case, 1959, it was $1,800,000 and some odd dollars. He was re-assessed like taxpayers are from time to time.

In the normal course of events, as set out in the manuals of the Department of National Revenue, when you are re-assessed and tax is found against you in the re-assessment, you have to pay your tax within so many days. Before you appeal, you either have to pay the tax or put up satisfactory security such as a bank guarantee or a bond. In the case of Mr. Doyle, this was not insisted upon. He did not have to put up any security. Because of that, it did not matter to him whether he ever paid the income tax or whether the case ever went to court.

Mr. Doyle put in his notice of appeal. These two cases where he was re-assessed, in 1954 and 1959, were not heard by the Income Tax Appeal Board until 1967, eight years after the re-assessment in the case of the major re-assessment. The Crown did not do anything to move it forward. Therefore it was heard in 1967. An ordinary taxpayer's appeal would have been heard long before that because he would have paid the tax or put up security which was costing him money. It was not costing Doyle anything, and the Crown did not do anything.

Eight years later, the Income Tax Appeal Board heard his appeal. It dismissed the appeal. He appealed to the Exchequer Court of Canada on June 29, 1970. Mr. Justice Gibson dismissed his appeal and reaffirmed the re-assessment for millions of dollars.

On October 15, 1970, Mr. Doyle gave notice of appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. The Crown did nothing for the next seven years to bring that appeal before the Supreme Court of Canada. Naturally Doyle did nothing, because he did not pay his tax. Doyle was not paying for a bond or a bank guarantee. They had not even received any satisfactory security from Doyle. He did not care if it was ever heard.

This man was treated better than all the other taxpayers of Canada. When I raised this matter in the House of Commons a year and a half ago, action finally commenced. One appeal was heard in the fall of 1977. It was dismissed from the bench by the Supreme Court of Canada. They did not have to consider their judgment.

The second appeal, a major appeal, was heard May 3 and 4, 1978. Twenty-four years after the income tax year in question, it was heard by the Supreme Court of Canada, and dismissed from the bench. They did not hold back their judgment one second. As soon as the lawyers finished, they dismissed the appeal, involving several millions of dollars, with costs to the Crown. There were no unusual points of law involved. There was no unusual difficulty. Why this kind of treatment?

We now discover that $5,014,281.13 is owed by Mr. Doyle for the years 1950, 1953, and 1954. It has not been paid 28 years after 1950, and 24 years after 1954. These amounts still have not been paid. The Crown has not got security. The Crown is now unable to collect on the few shares and share certificates it has because Mr. Doyle and his lawyers are challenging their security. They have not been able to sell or realize a cent.

Mr. Doyle no longer lives in Canada. The same Mr. Doyle has control of 18.4 per cent of the shares of Canadian Javelin Limited, a Canadian company incorporated under the Canadian Companies Act. There are 12,000 shareholders, 75 per cent of them American, and he is denuding that company of its assets without anyone apparently being able to do anything about it.

The Canadian government claims it cannot collect the taxes. When we look at today's paper, what do we see? Canadian Javelin Limited had a meeting yesterday to elect directors. The notice of meeting said that Mr. Doyle had a significant role in the company's management in forming its policies and selecting nominees for election as directors. He controls it because his 18.4 per cent gives him control, there being widely scattered shareholders.

It said that Javelin has offered Mr. Doyle $2.7 million in reimbursement for disbursements he spent in maintaining control of the company. Imagine, his personal expenses of $2.7 million for trying to keep that company under his control are coming out of the assets of that company under this plan of Mr. Doyle and his captive board of directors.

Mr. Doyle is attempting to get an option on 4.2 million shares at $1 each, and they are going to pay him interest on the money he spends to take up the option. In other words, Mr. Speaker, that is the same as a rape victim advancing the person who raped her money to cover his expenses, and giving him a chance to do it over again! It is the most extraordinary proposal ever put to a company. This company is controlled by Mr. Doyle and his tame board. That is what this Canadian company is doing. And this government stands by and does nothing.

Not only is that going ahead, but on January 26 of this year Canadian Javelin announced that it was turning over control of four of its subsidiaries to Pavonia SA, a wholly-owned subsidiary based in Panama City, Panama, where Mr. Doyle lives and has control of the situation.

Javelin is to cancel $17.9 million owed to it by its subsidiaries in exchange for further shares in Pavonia, already a wholly-owned subsidiary of Javelin. This is fraud. Pavonia is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Javelin, and Javelin is going to cancel $17.9 million in debts owed to it by Pavonia and other subsidiaries in exchange for more shares of Pavonia.

If you own 100 per cent of the company, you cannot own any more of it. How can you cancel what the company owes you in exchange for more shares in that company? However, that is what is happening to Canadian Javelin Limited to get the assets of that company in a company in Panama where Mr. Doyle and his cohorts can complete the despoilation of the company.

Since late 1977, in response to pressure from me, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand) has had the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission appoint an investigator into fraudulent acts in Canadian Javelin Limited. On May 17, 1977, an order was obtained from the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission appointing Mr. Fred Sparling as an inspector to inquire into allegations of fraud in connection with the operations of Javelin. There is still no report from Mr. Sparling, mainly because Mr. Doyle and his cohorts in Canadian Javelin Limited are taking legal action to attempt to stop Mr. Sparling from completing his work.

Are the Canadian government and Canadian law helpless? Will the government stand by helpless while this company and its shareholders are despoiled of their assets like this? There have been no dividends paid by that company in the last ten years despite various substantial revenues going into it from Wabash mines royalties. Millions of dollars a year are being taken out for the benefit of Mr. Doyle, and the shareholders receive nothing. This is the person with whom we are dealing.

Some people might say that perhaps Mr. Doyle was such an exemplary citizen that the government wanted to give him every chance in connection with his tax problem, that he was such a great builder of Canada, such a man of character and probity, that the government wanted to bend over backwards to treat him better than all the other taxpayers of Canada. That is not so, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Doyle has been a fugitive from justice in the United States since 1965. He fled the United States because he was convicted of wrongfully sending share certificates through the mails there. The judge sentenced him to three months in jail. He fled the country and has not been back there since.

Since 1965 the government has known that this man was a fugitive from justice in the United States. That year he left Canada. He was on bail, having been charged with certain fraudulent acts, he has since been charged on 408 other counts of wash-trading, and he is now in Panama. He will not come back to Canada. He has changed his citizenship and is now a Panamanian citizen.

The government knew that this taxpayer is not an exemplary Canadian citizen. I have been bringing this matter for a year and a half, now, to the attention of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), the Minister of National Revenue, and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Finally I wrote to the Prime Minister, the head of the government, a man who had been minister of justice, and I drew all these facts to his attention and asked him to establish a commission of inquiry. Forty-two days ago I wrote to him. It was on May 19—six weeks ago today. I had a perfunctory acknowledgment from someone in his office, and today I asked the right hon. gentleman a question in this House. I was treated with contempt. The Canadian people were treated with contempt. He did not care whether there was a scandal going on in connection with the administration of the tax laws in Canada. He attempted to pass it off as a mere nothing.

Why should I pay my taxes? Why should the other ten million taxpayers in Canada pay taxes, when people like John C. Doyle do not have to pay, simply because they have influence with the government? What is the explanation for that? The Prime Minister was minister of justice in 1967 and 1968 and this matter was not pursued then, either. There have been seven or eight other ministers in that portfolio since then and still nothing has been done. I have now brought the matter directly to the right hon. gentleman's attention.

Any head of government interested in the equal, impartial and fair administration of the tax laws, any prime minister interested in doing away with any hint or breath of scandal connected with the administration of the tax laws, would appoint a commission immediately to get to the bottom of the affair. At least he would authorize the public accounts committee to investigate the matter, or would authorize some other authority to do it. It is necessary to call witnesses to delve into the matter to find out what has happened and why it happened.

Shares of the Canadian Javelin Company held as security by the Crown were worth $18 in September of 1973. Now they are worth $1.70. The stock of that company is off the Montreal Exchange. It is not allowed on the American exchanges. It has been delisted all over the world. There has been action after action taken against it. It has been scandalously used and misused by Mr. Doyle and his cohorts for 20 years. And the Canadian government appears to be powerless. No one raises a voice against it, except myself and a few others. When we do so we are ignored.

What is wrong with Canada, with the administrators of the law in Canada, and the public conscience of Canada, Mr. Speaker? Something like this goes on, and you cannot even get anyone to take an interest. The press is not interested, the media are not interested, the Prime Minister, the head of the country, is not interested. What is wrong? There is $5 million owed by this one taxpayer, it has been owed since 1954, and nobody gives a hoot. Why should the ladies and gentlemen listening to me now pay their taxes? I suggest we all go on a tax strike if the government fails to act with the utmost rigour.

Another thing I want to know, Mr. Speaker, is about the other tax years. The years I refer to are 1954 to 1977. The Minister of National Revenue refuses to give me any information on these years. I am told that is privileged information. What about the fact that in 1964 an attachment was put against Canadian Javelin, the effect of which was to have anything owed to Mr. Doyle paid over to the government?

Then they stood by until the fall of 1977, and ignored the fact that Canadian Javelin failed to comply with the attachment and paid out to Mr. Doyle a million and a half dollars through a company in the Bahamas. They paid the money to Javelin Exports Limited in the Bahamas and Javelin Exports would pay Doyle—all the money coming from Canadian Javelin. This was done in defiance of the government's attachment of 1964, and nothing was done about it. Nothing was done in the ensuing 13 years until I got after them.

The whole thing reeks of influence, of political skullduggery and corruption. We want to see an inquiry established and to know how this happened. What instructions were given to ministers? When were reports of these matters made to ministers? What did those ministers say when it was reported to them down through the years?

As I say, I wrote the Prime Minister a memorandum. It was six pages in length, and I do not have time to read it all into the record. To put this matter in its best light, Mr. Speaker, is to call it willful and wanton misconduct. But I suspect it is really much worse than that. Mr. Doyle has been a Liberal and has been involved on the fringes of the Liberal party for many, many years. He was an intimate of Premier Smallwood of Newfoundland who interceded on his behalf in Ottawa many times. If we ever get a look at those files we shall see that Doyle was an intimate of Mr. Smallwood, an intimate of Mr. Pickersgill. I believe even the Prime Minister knows him. He was involved in Quebec politics for years.

Some books—and I might mention volume III of the memoirs of the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert—referred to certain activities which took place in 1963 when a change of government took place in this country. There is a lot under the surface in connection with this matter, Mr. Speaker. We will never know, of course, just what is behind it until the government agrees to hold a proper investigation. I really hope that if an investigation is held it will find there is no corruption, that there is nothing to be discovered and that it is all above board. But I must say that, even if there is no corruption, there is monumental incompetence, the worst kind of negligence, and the worst kind of malfeasance in office.

I asked a question of the Minister of National Revenue the other day and in his reply he told me that there are 14 people in Canada who owe over one million dollars in income tax, as at March 31. One of them owes over $5 million. That is brother Doyle. I am told that the average amount owed by some 613,000 taxpayers is $846. I guess Mr. Doyle really brings that average up with his debt of over $5 million. That is the kind of information I can get from the department, but no information is available to me for the years 1954 to 1977.

Other information I have been unable to obtain concerns how many people put up bank guarantees when they appeal, how many have to pay their taxes, and so on. But in the annual report which comes before this House it is said that the taxpayer has to pay up every time he is reassessed. I quote from that report:

> It has been the practice of National Revenue that taxes assessed against a taxpayer must be paid whether or not there is an objection or an appeal by the taxpayer.

In this connection I refer to the Annual Report of the Department of National Revenue entitled "Inside Taxation", page 40. It states:

> During appeal periods the amount assessed must be paid whether or not there is an objection or appeal outstanding. In certain circumstances the department may accept collateral security for the amount of the debt until the issue is resolved.

As a member of this House, I brought this matter to the attention of the Prime Minister thinking, in my foolish innocence, that the Prime Minister of the country would be interested in the fair and proper administration of the tax laws. I thought he would be interested in making sure that any allegation I have set out in my memorandum is wrong. As can be seen from a glance at the right hon. gentleman's answers in Hansard today, he does not care, just as he does not care, in my opinion, about national unity except in a partisan sense; just as the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) does not care about national unity but will use any kind of skullduggery, thuggery and skuggery to try to keep in office, even to the extent of suggesting that members of this House are racially biased.

Are the people of Canada prepared to tolerate this kind of stinking mess the government will not make any attempt to find out about? If there was one thing I always thought, Mr. Speaker, it was that taxpayers were always treated alike. Yet here we have definite proof, beyond any doubt, that taxpayers are not treated equally. One powerful taxpayer with dozens of lawyers in his employ has been able to go for 28 years without paying his taxes. For the last 15 of those years the party opposite has been in power, and for the last ten of them the government has been headed by the Prime Minister. Why is this so? The whole matter cries for a complete public investigation of our tax system, how our taxes are imposed, how they are collected, what security is taken when the Crown reassesses you. The whole thing has to come under the most open kind of scrutiny. There is something wrong with our laws when a company such as Javelin can be raped and raped again, its assets taken out of the country and given over to Mr. John C. Doyle in the Bahamas, in Panama, in Costa Rica, and its shareholders helpless to do anything about it. Twelve thousand shareholders own a few hundred shares each, and there are no major shareholders. It has a captive and subservient board.

● (1722)

Our laws have got to be changed, Mr. Speaker. We can do better than this. A year ago last May the inspector was appointed, and Mr. Doyle has him tied up in court. I have one of the judgments here today, and Mr. Doyle has got other actions going on in Montreal to prevent the government from selling the few scrawny shares they have got in Canadian Javelin, that he owns, to try to collect some of the tax that he owes. Mr. Speaker, that's why I wanted to speak on the adjournment debate, because when we adjourn this is the time to bring forward grievances, and I would like the parliamentary secretary or whoever is there from the government to get on to the Prime Minister and say to him, whether this gets much publicity now or doesn't get much publicity now, that the member who is speaking here today is going to keep at it for the next 50 years, if necessary. So it is going to get publicity.

It is going to be in the history books. It is going to be on the record. It is going to come out, and it is better for the Prime Minister to get at it now and appoint an investigation and cut out this canker and this sore.

I am surprised that the national press and media care nothing about it. I sent them copies of all this stuff, and there wasn't a word. The crusading press, the investigatory press, they don't care. They don't care about something like this. Nobody has taken the time and effort to try to go further. I haven't got the resources, Mr. Speaker, to go any further than I have gone. I have done all I can with the resources I have at my command.

And then there is the suggestion about parliamentary immunity. That is a silly argument that was brought forward that we shouldn't have parliamentary immunity. Why, Mr. Speaker, do you think I would dare say anything about these things if we didn't have parliamentary immunity? The people I am dealing with would have me sued from one end of the country to the other. They would be throwing suits—false ones—but I would have to defend myself. I would have to pay hundreds of thousands of dollars in legal fees even to mention these things. That is what they are doing now with the government. It is going to cost the government hundreds of thousands of dollars to deal with Doyle and his lawyers, preventing them from selling the bit of security they've got, preventing this Mr. Sparling from doing his job. They have got suit after suit.

They are appealing the judgment they just lost against Mr. Sparling in Montreal, now. Lask week the judge found in favour of the government, and the Javelin forces are now appealing that. There is a second case they have taken. Harassment after harassment! He is taking the money from Canadian Javelin, from the other shareholders, from the other 82 per cent. Their money is being used to finance these suits in the hundreds of thousands and millions all over the world, and we are powerless to do anything. So I am glad I have parliamentary immunity, Mr. Speaker. I need it, or I would be frightened to death to open my mouth about this because it would be costing me hundreds of thousands in legal fees.

Don't say that we should take away parliamentary immunity. How are we going to raise the things, Mr. Speaker, if we do not have some kind of immunity? It is not whether you can prove it or not. It is whether you have got the financial assets to go into court on the harassing lawsuits that they would have against you all over the world. I know whereof I am speaking with this gentleman, and I know the tactics they are capable of, and I know the lengths to which they will stoop. But I am dedicated, Mr. Speaker, to getting this resolved one way or the other.

[Mr. Crosbie.]

I have lots of other things I am going to do, too, but I have been in this now for the last two years, and as long as I am returned to this House, if we don't have the government—if we have the government there will be a fantastic investigation, you can bet your bottom dollar—if we don't have the government, I will be back at it next year and the year after that, and the year after that. I will be at it as long as I am returned, and that may be a long time. And then if I am not returned, I will still be at it some other way, because, Mr. Speaker, this cries out for investigation.

Why should the little taxpayer of Canada, the man who pays the thousand, the man who pays five thousand, the man who pays ten—and as a lawyer I have come across many cases where they have reassessed you, and they have come in without any compunction, and you pay up what they have reassessed or they put the sheriff right on your assets. They grab your bank account. They put attachments with your employer. Yet there is this rogue and scoundrel, not only despoiling a Canadian company and its 12,000 shareholders, Mr. Speaker, but being treated with kid gloves. He doesn't have to pay the tax, doesn't have to put up adequate security, yet everybody else does. I have seen cases myself where there are tens of thousands of dollars involved, and you had to get a bank guarantee and pay the bank a fee to get the bank guarantee before you were allowed to put in your appeal.

So, Mr. Speaker, there is something wrong here, and I wouldn't be speaking on the adjournment today if the Prime Minister hadn't tried to treat this so lightly. If he knew nothing about it he should have said, "I know nothing about this." Well, it is a serious question here of our income tax, and I am certainly going to get to the bottom of this.

This is the kind of thing you would expect. This is a man I voted for in 1968 to become leader of the Liberal party. My God, how I have been disillusioned, Mr. Speaker. When I first got elected here 20 months ago, I still had a good regard for the man, but from what I have seen in here in the last few months, my regard for him is diminishing quickly, and today put the kibosh on it all together. I thought he was using this national unity bit and so on in a non-partisan manner. I now have got other observations on that, and when we get into the constitutional debate, you bet I am going to lay on the line what I think about that grabbag of constitutional proposals that the Prime Minister has put before us, what I think of them, and what he is up to there. I could give him the benefit of the doubt on that, but now, Mr. Speaker, on this I can't give him the benefit of the doubt.

The man knows better than that. The man has to know better, if he is the Prime Minister. He has been minister of justice of this country, but he tries to cover up and slough me off with his foolish comments on a question like this. So I just leave, Mr. Speaker, and I hope this is the last session of this House. I hope we get to the electorate in the fall or whenever, before we come back here on October 10, but if we don't, I'll be back to ask the Prime Minister about this case, in case my letter is not answered. It is six weeks now. October 10 will be another three or four months, but on October 11, I'll be here putting down an order 43, asking a question, getting down to the finance committee. I am not going to let it drop, so the Prime Minister better get on the job and find out just why, for the last ten years, this case has been treated so partially and why one John Christopher Doyle, now a Panamanian citizen, has been given every possible leeway that the human mind could imagine while the rest of the Canadian taxpayers are being bled to death, and stamped on, and seized in the tax, and their assets taken to pay for the debts of this government.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in this adjournment debate. I do not know that I have enjoyed the last year or so as much as I would have hoped. There has been much discussion about the RCMP and the Official Secrets Act. There have been scandals here and there, but they all seemed to amount to rather small things. I do not think the public is particularly taken. I think the public has faith in its institutions and will continue to do so.

I was rather pleased today when at the beginning of this debate the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) spoke about economic matters. I do not feel that these matters have been given the attention they should be given. I do not find myself in agreement with the substance of the remarks of the hon. member, but I am certainly pleased that he raised the matter of our economic problems.

One of our economic problems has to do with unemployment. I do not think there is any question that in Canada we have a serious unemployment problem. The hon. member stated that we have the worst unemployment rate of any of the industrial countries. This may be true. I am not sure that I entirely agree with him, but it is probably true on the basis of some of the figures we have, although I have seen some work done about Sweden and other countries and I saw a report last year, which I think was seriously done, which showed that the Swedish unemployment rate at the end of last year was something in the order of 11 per cent.

This comes about partly because people do different things with their unemployed. I am told, for example, that the Japanese unemployment rate, if the Japanese dealt with their unemployed the way we do, would also be very high. Apparently in Japan you do not fire redundant employees, you keep them on. These are some of the things we have to take into consideration. So I do not agree entirely with what the hon. member said. I think the unemployment rate is far too high, but I think we should go into it in a little more depth than did the hon. member, and this is what I would like to do for the next three or four minutes. I will keep my remarks very short.

The basic reason we have such a high unemployment rate in this country, maybe higher than in many other countries, has to do with the growth of the labour force. I have a chart here prepared by Statistics Canada which was produced in the last couple of weeks in a publication on this matter. I would like to refer to this chart to give some indication of the increase in the labour force in Canada which has given rise to this very high unemployment rate. If you take the base figure of 100 in 1965, we see that in West Germany for every 100 people employed in 1965 there are now only 96 people employed. If we look at Italy, for every 100 people employed in 1965, there are still 100 employed. If we go to the United Kingdom, the figure is now 104 people. In France it is 110, in Sweden it is about 112, in Japan it is about 114. If we go to the United States, for every 100 people on the labour force in 1965 there are now 129. In Australia the number is 130. If we go to Canada, on the other hand, for every 100 people in the labour force in 1965, in 1977 there were 146. This is a very significant figure. Our labour force has grown at a much faster rate than anyone else's.

This is a selection of countries, but I do not know of any other country which would change this picture in the industrialized world. I am giving all of the countries that were listed in this chart; I am not taking one out and adding another one. This is the way this information is produced by Statistics Canada. I think it is extremely important to note that we have 146 people in the labour force today for every 100 we had in 1965, and nobody else comes close to that, not even Australia with 130.

Let us compare Canada with the United States. This is a comparison which we should be looking at partly because 70 per cent of our imports come from the United States and the United States is our major trading nation, so what happens in the United States also happens to us. I think it is important that we look at the United States to see how they fare in this situation. As I indicated, they had 128 people in the labour force in 1977 as opposed to 100 in 1965. If we had the same growth in the labour force as the United States has had, we would have far more jobs than we have people to fill the jobs. I think that is a very important point to remember.

I have other figures which I do not have here, but I would like to give some indication of why this came about. From 1951 to 1971—these are the only figures I have—the school population from grade one to university increased by 240 per cent, two and a half times. At the same time, the population of this country went up by only 30 per cent. There is a factor of eight; the school population grew eight times as fast as the general population. Part of the reason is that people stay in school longer, but one of the other major factors is that we have far more people going into school. I do not have the figures for the United States, but they are much lower than this.

When one condemns the economic situation in this country, it is important to understand how extremely difficult it has been to solve this problem. Admittedly, at a growth rate of 8.5 per cent, an unemployment rate of 8.6 per cent is not desirable; it is far too much. But on the other hand, there are some very strong reasons why we have this problem and we have done a remarkable job in job creation. As one hon. member mentioned earlier, in the first five months of this year the rate was over 450,000 jobs created put on a yearly basis. So we have done a superb job in this situation though we still have a major job to do.

I would like to indicate that I think this is a global situation, it cannot just be seen as the Canadian situation. I will conclude by listing the three factors involved. The first one is that, globally, there has been a quantum leap in the problems that all governments have had to face, such as inflation, unemployment, foreign exchange problems, et cetera. Second, there has been a massive shift in terms of energy problems. We now have a unique notion, that is scarcity, which has created a series of other problems. Third, the techniques that we have traditionally used to solve these problems, Keynesian types of techniques, do not work either because the problems are too large for that kind of solution.

I should like to say in conclusion that we have many problems in this country, but if we are going to solve them, we will have to work together over the next several years as a nation to eliminate them.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of matters that I would like to raise on a point of order before the question is put on the motion. The first one has to do with questions on the order paper. I understand that there will be willingness to allow us to deal with questions on the order paper prior to the adjournment motion coming into effect. That is certainly agreeable to us.

The second matter is the discussion which has been going on between the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) with respect to the report of the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments to the effect that the report be allowed to stand rather than be proceeded with in any other way. I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary to consider whether we could do that before we close.

Finally, I understand that today is the last day on which parliament will be served by pages. I have come to know those pages—the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has known them for many years before me—and they have served us so well. I understand we may well be proceeding to another system which you, sir, mentioned a few weeks ago.

I thought it might be appropriate if, before we rose—in the event that we will not be back in this parliament—I called the attention of the House to this day being the termination of a particular kind of service by a devoted section of the staff of the House of Commons, and to compliment them on behalf of all members of the House for the work they have done and the devoted service they have rendered to each one of us, sometimes far beyond that which we would normally ask anyone to do except in their most unusual form of service to a most unusual institution.

I would like to say that on behalf of my own party certainly and, I hope, on behalf of all of us in parliament, and to thank those who are here, and those who have gone before them who are represented by those who are here, for their years of devoted service to this parliament, to making it a much better place in which all of us can function.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. McRae.]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has raised this point about the change that is being made with respect to the service being provided to us in this chamber. I am sure that I speak as he does for all members of parliament in saying we want to pay tribute to the service that the boys have given us. They are a fine bunch. I know that they are hoping—if they hear what we are saying—that it does not mean that their jobs are in jeopardy. Their jobs are protected under the new system, and I am glad to see some affirmative nods from the table. I hope the page boys see those nods as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton said, I have seen quite a few generations of these boys come and go. In fact, sometimes when I travel across the country I meet some man who speaks to me who looks almost as old as I do and he says: "I remember you well from the time when I was a page boy in the House of Commons back in the 1940s or 1950s". They have rendered a great service over the years, and we have had no better bunch of boys than we have at the present time; I join in the tribute to them.

• (1742)

With regard to the other two points raised by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, I see no difficulty about one of them, namely the motion in the name of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). It is on the order paper. We will not reach it today, so it will stand, and it will be there when we return on October 10, if we come back.

As for the suggestion that we stay a moment longer in order for the Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) to give us any answers which he has to written questions, that would be desirable, and certainly we agree to it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should like to make a few comments respecting the pages who were mentioned in glowing terms, quite appropriately. We will commence the implementation of a new system in the fall, but at this point I should like to reiterate the kind words which have been said about the work done by the pages, and indeed all of the staff of the House of Commons. We are proud of our staff at all times. In case I was not clear enough when I referred to this matter the last time, I should like to indicate formally that any introduction of a new page service in the House of Commons will be done without any risk whatsoever to the safety of employment of the pages who have been here for a considerable period of time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: At first we will draw on the experience of the boys who are here now. In turn, certainly we will find places for them in the service of the House of Commons elsewhere than as pages. Perhaps it is not widely known, but this is something which has happened with great regularity in the past. Those who come here after they have left school at 16 and 17 years of age serve for a year or two as pages. Many of them have been able to find a place in the service of the House of Commons, and many of those who serve in very senior capacities in the service of the House began as pages. Certainly I want to repeat that assurance. In whatever changes are made, there will be places for the boys who are here now. I echo my comments that they deserve it.

In respect of receiving answers to questions on the order paper, obviously if answers are prepared it would be a shame to leave for a break without having those answers filed. Before putting the question, we need an indication that unanimous consent would be given for that purpose and that purpose only.

In respect to the motion of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), since it was not reached today, it stands protected on the order paper and will reappear when the House resumes.

Therefore the question is on the motion of Mr. MacEachen. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. MacEachen) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) is seeking the floor to answer questions on the order paper, and for that purpose only. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 2 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker, obviously I join in for the customary expressions of congratulations and thanks.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 2 shall be deemed to have been an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

COST OF GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

Question No. 2—Mr. Balfour:

For the fiscal year ended March 31 (a) 1975 (b) 1976 (c) 1977, what was the total cost of advertising in Canada for all government departments and agencies (i) in newspapers (ii) on television (iii) on radio (iv) in magazines (v) in all other forms?

Return tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being after five o'clock, pursuant to order made earlier this day, the House stands adjourned until Tuesday, October 10, 1978, at two o'clock p.m.

Before taking the mace from the House, I invite all hon. members present, and the usual guests to whom we have always extended some hospitality on these occasions in the past, to join us in Room 16.

At 5.48 p.m. the House adjourned until October 10, 1978, pursuant to Special Order made this day.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BY-ELECTIONS—BROADCASTING OF PROCEEDINGS—PAGE STAFF

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I take this occasion to indicate to members of the House that, in accordance with the representation made by the government under the provisions of Standing Order 42(2), I have caused to be published a special order paper giving notice of a bill entitled "An act to provide for an additional advance poll in respect of certain by-elections." I now lay on the table a letter dated October 7, 1978, from the government House leader concerning that bill.

May I also just take a moment to inform members of the House very briefly of two important developments, the first of a more routine nature and the second, I think, of an historic nature. The first, by way of a more routine nature, is to point out that in the regular process of the installation of equipment for the televising and broadcasting of the proceedings of the House we have taken advantage of the vacation period to make further adjustments to the sound systems by way of some improved microphones, and we hope members will find that to their advantage in the work that lies ahead of us.

We have also been able to complete the moving of the control unit for television and radio broadcasting of the proceedings into the premises that were provided during the vacation last summer and out of their temporary quarters. The equipment for the total remote operation of the cameras is not installed now, but we hope to install it fairly soon. For the moment, the cameras on both sides of the House will be manned manually as they have been in the past, but we expect very shortly to have that done by totally remote and automated equipment.

May I also now take just a moment—I will, of course, allow approximately ten minutes which would have been provided for applications under Standing Order 43, and then the proper question period—before entering into any business of the House today, to point out to members of the House that there is an obvious historic development in the proceedings of the House today; that is, that for the first time in the history of the House of Commons of Canada we are being served by both male and female pages.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: That has come about not just as a result of some successful aggression on the part of the women's liberation movement in the country but, rather, by way of a far more comprehensive program to which I made reference last spring. After some very diligent work by the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services and some of the staff of the House, we found a formula whereby we could invite 36 young, first year university students from all across the country to serve here as pages. We have an equal representation from all the provinces and territories in the country. So for the first time we have been able to find a program whereby these young students could journey here and, still maintaining their academic standing in their own home region, find a schedule of work which would allow them to fully serve the House of Commons.

We know we will benefit greatly from their presence here and we hope they will as well and, indeed, that in future years the entire country will benefit from having these citizens back in the country, better equipped through education and through their exposure here to a practical knowledge of the Canadian House of Commons. I am sure all members of the House will want to join me in welcoming here this great group of young Canadians in the service of their country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the House would agree to receive applications under Standing Order 43 until 2.20 p.m., and then questions until 3.05 p.m. In that way we would regularize the proceedings for today. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCE

REQUEST BUDGET BE PRESENTED BEFORE END OF OCTOBER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on an important and urgent matter.

S.O. 43

One of the main causes of the economic crisis in Canada is the persistent refusal by the present government to tell the whole truth to Canadians about the country's accounts and about its economic plans. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That the Minister of Finance table a new budget before the end of this month and that this budget include complete and accurate estimates on the real economic growth and on revenues and expenditures of the federal government for the current financial year as well as for the following ones, and that he indicate the source of these estimates.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PUBLIC SERVICE

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I wish to present a motion on a matter of urgency. Therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), I move:

That this House registers its strong objection to those elements of Bill C-28 that negate the principle of free collective bargaining in the federal public service, and therefore calls on the government to let Bill C-28 drop with the ending of this session and to pledge itself not to introduce such an unfair piece of legislation in the new session that will begin tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

URBAN AFFAIRS

HOUSING SITUATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. As the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) knows, there are 155,000 households living in substandard, crowded accommodation and 438,000 households are paying more than 30 per cent for shelter, yet under his leadership the national housing authority production, addressed especially to these problems, has declined from approximately 21, 000 units in 1971 to under 12,000 in 1977.

[Mr. Clark.]

I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the Minister of State for Urban Affairs resign from his other two posts as acting minister of labour and co-chairman of the Quebec election team and concentrate his time on this serious and tragic human problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN IMPLEMENTING STAFF REDUCTIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I rise to move a motion of pressing and urgent necessity for the Canadian Francophone nation.

In view of the importance the present government gives to the maintenance of a reasonable level of employment; in view of the systematic exodus of Francophones from the federal civil service, and the formal promise of the government, on August 18 last, that no cuts would be made in the number of jobs in the languages branch before 1983, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House request the government to postpone the heavy lay-off of 477 teachers in the language programs branch until the next federal election or better still till 1983.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, presenting of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Unanimous consent having been denied, the motion cannot therefore be put.

POST OFFICE

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE STUDY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity dealing with the damaging and continuing unrest within the Post Office, unrest which adversely affects the over-all economy of our nation and specifically jeopardizes the small business sector whose very existence depends on regular mail delivery, not to mention the fact that all Canadians suffer as a result of this unrest.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

That a special parliamentary committee be formed forthwith in order to consider postal problems where mechanization and labour management is concerned and report to this parliament with specific and realistic long-range solutions.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PENDING STRIKE OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Considering that a postal strike deadline has been set for October 16, a situation which no one desires, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urges the Minister of Labour to intervene immediately as the principal negotiator for the government with the postal workers, as was done successfully earlier with the letter carriers, in order to use the remaining time to achieve a settlement without a disruption of such an important service.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED CLOSING OF WEATHER FORECASTING STATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the decision of the Department of the Environment to close the weather forecasting station in Regina and to move the staff to Winnipeg, leaving only one staff member, known as a briefer, in Regina, effecting no budgetary saving, and that many departments of the provincial government, including environment, for flood forecasting, Saskatchewan Power Corporation, forestry, highways, the farmer and all others involved in agriculture, and more particularly the Moose Jaw air base, which is the most active airport in Canada, require accurate weather forecasting on a continuing basis, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That the Minister of State (Environment) reverse his decision and undertake to maintain the service which is so vital to the region.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL SECURITY

FOREIGN SUBVERSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity with regard to national security. It concerns an alleged 25-year French security service project known as Operation Ascott, commenced in 1958 to assist in the separation of Quebec from Canada, and also an RCMP security operation code named Carte Blanche involving surveillance of French diplomats among other things, particularly a certain Phillippe Bey, during the late sixties and early seventies and still being carried on in other ways.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick):

● (1417)

That the government advise the time that it first became aware of these matters, what action, if any, it took, and if no action was taken, that the Prime Minister explain his obvious complete and utter failure to deal with attempts at foreign subversion designed to split this country apart, in contrast to his public statements on behalf of national unity.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for discussion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

GRAIN ELEVATORS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, one of the federal government's announced cuts to save taxpayers' money is the sale of five federal grain elevators in western Canada to private interests. In view of the fact that these elevators made a profit of $1.3 million last year, and projections show a profit of $4 million in this fiscal year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House directs the Minister of Agriculture to reserve his decision to sell the Canadian government elevators, and that this House further directs the President of the Treasury Board to immediately provide a seminar for his staff on the difference between profit and loss, since there seems to be so much confusion over this distinction in his department.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate, in accordance with the terms of Standing Order 43, at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PRESENTATION OF BUDGET—REVENUE FORECAST

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Would the minister tell the House of Commons whether his department is now working on the preparation of a new budget, and if that budget will be presented to parliament this month?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, my department is working on a new budget at this time. After my visit to Washington I entered into consultation with the provinces. I have been in Toronto and in Winnipeg so far, where I had discussions with the ministers of finance, labour leaders and people from the business community. I intend to have a meeting with the ministers of finance at the end of the month, and I hope to have a budget before the House by mid-November.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, since the minister has begun consultations secretly with business leaders—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I do not quite understand the disquiet on the other side, Mr. Speaker, but since the minister has indicated he has begun discussions secretly with business leaders, whom he will not identify and, quite properly, with the provinces, I wonder whether he would be interested in bringing the House of Commons and all the people of Canada into the picture as to just what is going on in respect of our budgetary preparation matters.

Would he also make available to the House of Commons, in advance of the presentation of a budget, some of the information on which that budget is being based? To be specific, I wonder if the Minister of Finance can tell us whether he stands by the forecast of federal government revenue that he made in his April budget of this year, and would he also tell us whether he has any forecasts prepared by his department which suggest that the revenues for the present fiscal year of the Government of Canada will be below the $36 billion he forecast in April?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, in a statement I made at the end of the month of August I made it very clear that the cash requirements of the government for the fiscal year 1978-79 would be $11.8 billion. We have included everything in that figure and I think we have been very clear. This will be reaffirmed when I present the budget by mid-November.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, that is an evasion. I am asking for the forecast in respect of revenues. I am asking the minister whether the story he gave us in April is the story he stands by now. If there is an anticipated shortfall in revenues of the Government of Canada, will the minister tell the House of Commons and the people of Canada about this; and if not, why not?

To put this question a little more generally, may I remind the minister that his officials have prepared five-year projections of revenue for the Government of Canada. Given the minister's interest in telling the whole truth to the Canadian people and not keeping part of the budget process shrouded in secrecy, would the minister undertake to table here in this House of Commons the most recent five-year projection prepared by his department and allow those figures to be referred to the House of Commons committee on finance, trade and economic affairs for detailed study in order that parliament and the people of Canada may have all the facts, and not just those that the minister may selectively issue, before the budget is presented to this House?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I stated when I presented the budget on April 10 that the cash requirements were to be $11.5 billion. I made a revision to that figure and increased it to $11.8 billion. This figure was provided by my experts and I stand by it. I do not think the hon. Leader of the Opposition understands these figures, because he is throwing out figures that are far from the truth and create uncertainty in the minds of the people.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the minister, who regularly blames the Arabs, or the weather, or René Lévesque or me for the economic difficulties of the country, has once again evaded the question. He has these five-year projections; they are the basis of policy. This House of Commons and the people we represent have a right to seek that information. Will the minister make available to the standing committee that considers these matters, now, those five-year projections which he has, so we can judge for ourselves who is telling the whole truth in this matter?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the figures were tabled on April 10 at the time of the budget speech, along with all the forecasts of the government. There is the one adjustment which we made in the month of August, and there is nothing that I can add. I stand by my declaration of late August, when I said that the cash requirement would be $11.8 billion.

The Leader of the Opposition is merely taking revenues from the first part of the year and arriving at a forecast of $18 billion. The hon. member does not realize, of course, that the revenue has been somewhat lower than was expected in the presentation because there were tax cuts in January, because in the months of April, May, June, July, August and September we reimbursed the provinces sums of money in accordance with the sales tax agreement, and he has not kept in mind the fact that in May one payment was made to cover unemployment insurance payments. We do this once a year. These are the reasons why in the first few months of the year there was a bigger deficit. However, we have kept this in mind. I still stand by the figure set out on April 10.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB VACANCY SURVEY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary, to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the very disturbing employment figures issued today, and the importance of adequate forecasting for all sectors of our economy, I ask the minister if it is his intention to recommend to his colleagues the retention of the job vacancy survey, notwithstanding the fact that these monthly figures may in fact be embarrassing to the minister?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the only people who should be embarrassed by those figures are those who are constantly misinterpreting them on the other side. It was Statistics Canada who indicated that there was limited use made of that particular statistic, and on that basis they saw fit, on their own, to take the decision not to have that particular statistic available.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, surely the minister is not suggesting that this was done without their consultation. Given the fact that the minister will need this kind of forecasting in order to carry out his responsibilities in the field of immigration and with regard to manpower training and job creation, I ask the minister if he intends to replace it with a survey of his own and if he intends to release the results of that survey monthly so that economic forecasting will at least have some idea of the full extent of this government's mismanagement of the economy.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I wondered when the hon. member would get into his usual hyperbole. The fact of the matter is that there is adequate statistical information available for our projects. We make the labour force surplus information available on a constituency basis so people will have that information from across the country and may make comparisons. We have a most equitable application of the Canada Works funding, and the hon. member from Newfoundland, of all people, should recognize that it is heavily weighted in favour of his province. Perhaps he is suggesting that we bring forth statistics which will not do that.

LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I point out to the minister who referred just now to the opposition as being embarrassed that it was his official who a few months ago said that he, the minister, was embarrassed by the real level of unemployment in the country, not the opposition.

I have a question for the Prime Minister. According to the figures which were released today, unemployment remains at a dangerous and unfortunately high level, in excess of one million in real numbers. In particular, the figures released today show that the province of Manitoba had an astronomical increase in unemployment of 35 per cent, year over year—by far the largest increase in any province. Since the policies that were implemented in Manitoba have been stolen by his government from the official opposition in this House and implemented by the President of the Treasury Board, will the Prime Minister confirm that a document exists in the government which indicates we will have 100,000 fewer jobs in Canada as a whole as a result of the announcement made a month ago by the President of the Treasury Board?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the entire question seems fanciful and probably invented by a maker of rhetoric. I want to point out that the policies to which the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party alluded were not stolen by anybody from anybody; they were elaborated on by all premiers sitting down together last February in the particular area he is talking about including the Premier of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, as usual and as the country has come to learn very well, the Prime Minister mistakes reality; I will put it that way. He knows the premier of Saskatchewan has been the one premier who has increased public sector investment in the last year and has achieved the lowest level of unemployment in the country. I should like to ask whether he or the Minister of Finance have done a study of the more than $2 billion in cutbacks announced by the President of the Treasury Board, seeing that 100,000 jobs in Canada will be lost as a result of those cutbacks that were announced.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I must point out to the leader of the New Democratic Party that a communiqué was issued after the February conference. That communiqué, which was subscribed to by all the premiers, indicated that we felt collectively that the private sector should lead the public sector in creating jobs. We felt, secondly, that the public sector should not grow faster than the g.n.p., but slower. These are the two policies that our August announcements, which the hon. member criticizes, tended to implement.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, that is to misstate reality. Considering that the Prime Minister promised, in his co-opting of the television network on August 1, that we would have tax cuts soon, presumably because he attached a great sense of priority suddenly, by mid-summer, to the problems of the economy, since he promised a tax cut and since the urgency for jobs is very much upon us right now, will the Prime Minister not only bring in tax cuts but other measures to stimulate the economy, bring them forward in a budget next week and cancel the remaining days of the throne speech debate, which will get us nothing except further talk and distortion coming from this government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we would be very happy to cancel some days of the throne speech debate. I would suggest that the House leaders get together to consider this matter, because we, too, want to get down to the business of legislating.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Will you bring in a budget?

Mr. Trudeau: So far as job-creation measures are concerned, if the hon. member had looked at and listened to what was announced in August by the government, he would see we have budgeted several hundred million dollars, $710 million, to create jobs in the next fiscal year and in this particular year a very sizeable amount actually has been set aside to create jobs, particularly amongst the young unemployed.

POST OFFICE

NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING PENDING STRIKE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Postmaster General who is now facing quite a number of problems.

Considering that news reports this morning indicate that a majority of postal workers have rejected the latest proposals made to them, is the Postmaster General in a position to tell the House whether the discussions are carried on with the union and whether he hopes that they will achieve an agreement to avoid a strike which could eventually begin, according to reports, on October 16 next?

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention that the first objective of negotiations is to reach an agreement. This is what we did with the Letter Carriers' Union and we obviously succeeded in avoiding a general strike and made them return to work. At present, the democratic arbitration process has been completed and the report of the arbitration board has been tabled. As the hon. member stated so well, the Union of Postal Workers has apparently rejected the report of the chairman of the board. However, I think that some points in that report should be mentioned and the three members of the board suggested that bargaining should be resumed so I think that there is some hope. Every possible step will be taken, Mr. Speaker, to recall the parties to the bargaining table and avoid a strike but if it is impossible, the government will assume its responsibilities.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

CAUSE OF LABOUR DISPUTE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Postmaster General for his answer. Is he in a position to tell the House whether the dispute between the postal employees and the Post Office is related to either working hours or to current wages and employee demands, and whether the negotiators have made concrete proposals which could reasonably be disclosed to the public in order that it may ascertain objectively the causes of this dispute?

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that it is any secret that the gap which exists between union demands and government offers is enormous; one need only think of one item, for example that the union is asking for 30 hours of work for a 40-hour salary. I do think it is pretty hard to come to an agreement on something like that. So that Canadians may be well informed of union demands, we have published in the major newspapers of the country a very clear statement of what the union is asking and what the government is prepared to offer.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF FOREIGN MINISTER OF AUSTRALIA

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before continuing the question period, may I ask hon. members to join me in signalling the presence in our gallery of a very distinguished visitor, here on an official visit to Canada, in the person of the foreign minister of Australia, the Hon. Andrew S. Peacock.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. On the Prime Minister's return from Bonn, in a speech made on August 1 he said that one of the goals for Canada's policy was going to be, "... achieving greater stability in exchange markets." Since that time the dollar has continued to decline. Can the Minister of Finance tell us why?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian dollar, as I have said many times, fluctuates in the market. There was some downward pressure in the months of August and September. I hope the situation will stabilize. We have stated our policy since that time. One of the reasons is that the trade figures for the month of August were somewhat weaker than expected. We still expect that Canada will have a greater balance of trade this year than it had last year.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Finance. Given the fact that during the last year the interest rate was raised four times, the Minister of Finance has gone abroad twice to borrow, he has drawn down $2.1 million of this borrowing and he has used $4 billion of the reserves in the Canadian stabilization account, is it still the Minister of Finance's position and does he maintain that the government can have any credibility whatsoever by continuing to state that the policy of the government is to let the dollar float?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the intervention is to make sure the market operates in an orderly fashion. The same policies have been followed since I was appointed Minister of Finance as those which were followed before that. When a currency is floating, intervention by central banks is always done in the same fashion by every nation of the world.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Finance please explain to the people of Canada and to this House of Commons what it would take, in terms of intervention on the part of the government, to maintain a certain rate for the dollar? In other words, in Canadian history there has never been such intervention by the Bank of Canada in the foreign exchange markets as has occurred during the course of the last six months. Why does the minister still insist that the policy of the Canadian government is to let the dollar float?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, because it is the policy of the government to let the dollar float—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: —in both directions. I would like the hon. member to tell us if he favours a fixed rate for the Canadian dollar. Neither the Leader of the Opposition nor the member for Don Valley have ever said that they wanted a fixed rate. We would like them to say what they think about it, because they have never expressed any views on it.

EMPLOYMENT

UIC—SUGGESTED REDUCTION IN BUDGET IN ORDER TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the statistics made public this morning, surely the minister is aware that his government's administrative failure regarding unemployment is still going on. In view of the circumstances, I would like to ask him whether, with regard to the cuts he has announced recently concerning unemployment insurance, he would be prepared to have, as advocated by our party, employers benefit from the amounts saved as a result of these cuts in order to incite them to hire Canadians and thus reduce the number of unemployed? Is the minister prepared to recommend such a proposition to help reduce this rate of unemployment?

[English]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to read the report presented by the opposition task force and I must say I was singularly unimpressed, frankly bored by it, and surprised at some of its contents. So, certainly, the ideas which emanated from that particular task force will not be used.

We have put in place some 13 or 14 programs, some of them under the job experience training program where we work in co-operation with private enterprise, as well as the employment tax credit scheme where we encourage employers to augment their hiring procedures. We have a whole series of programs in place. I think the hon. member should also highlight, if he is going to talk about unemployment, the fact that there are 350,000 or 360,000 more people working this year than last year, and some two million more working than there were ten years ago. So the economy at least is creating jobs.

[Translation]

MEASURES TO INCREASE JOBS FOR YOUTH

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): The minister keeps reminding us of the programs his government has put forward. We nevertheless note today their monumental failure in this area. In view of the fact that 45 per cent of the million unemployed are now between 15 and 24 years of age and considering the dangers on the social level in keeping young people unemployed, can the minister tell us—besides his 13 or 14 programs which so far have proved to be near failures, considering the figures—can he tell us today whether he intends to come up with a new measure to help those young unemployed whom we are now spoiling because of the lack of satisfactory policy?

[English]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member does, I share the concern about the fact that the unemployment rate among youth in the category that he describes, being ages 15 to 24, is about 14 per cent. It is for that reason that I took the initiative to set up a national youth advisory group to get advice from outside the department as well as from inside. In addition to that, we have a series of programs, some seven or eight, that are directly connected with helping youth to secure employment, the money to be made available under our adult occupational training act. This is used almost exclusively by young people. Maybe the hon. member would like to talk to his House leader and I will send him a list of all the great programs we have in place to help the young people of this country.

Oral Questions

GRAIN

PAYMENTS UNDER GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I intended to ask a question respecting unemployment. I am amazed to hear that there is unemployment, in view of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture said, when he spoke to a nutrition group in Washington, "We have none in Canada".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice: it concerns the grain stabilization fund to which farmers make their contribution. All over the west today there is a demand among the farmers that the payments should be made. Last May, when a general election was expected for June, the minister, and also the Minister of Agriculture, said that the payment of approximately $140 million, or $2,000 per farmer, would be made shortly. With the postponement of the election, the payments, of course, remain in abeyance.

I ask the minister, will he give the assurance to the House that in view of the rather serious situation in certain areas of the prairies because of rain and the like, and also the need of funds being available to the farmers, this payment of approximately $2,000 per farmer will be made at once?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman once again rather clearly misstates the anticipations of last spring. At that time it was indicated that it was impossible to make the whole payment at once. We indicated that payment by way of an interim payment in the spring of $60 million would be made, that we expected by some time in October to be able to make the final payment, and that it was most likely to be in the same order of magnitude as the initial one. That continues to be the case. In fact, I expect tomorrow to be able to give the final figure, which will be close to the $55 million mark, for a total of $115 million, in the stabilization payment for the calendar year 1977.

This, of course, means that every producer participating in the stabilization plan will have received many times his total two years' contribution to the fund, and the fund will have indeed demonstrated its great worth. The cheques should be in the mail toward the latter part of October.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have been pressing for weeks for action on this matter and I am glad the minister has finally decided to do something other than sleep.

[Mr. Cullen.]

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

NATIONAL REFERENDUM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As four out of five Canadians, including the Minister of Justice, have clearly indicated that they are in favour of a referendum to be held on the question of the return of capital punishment as a deterrent to first degree murder, is it the intention of the government to settle this question once and for all and have it placed on the ballot paper at the time of the next election, so whatever government is elected may then take immediate action according to the directly expressed will of the majority of the people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: In view of the fact that the vote of the House of Commons was one in which there was considerable pressure brought to bear—the Prime Minister is well aware of this—does the Prime Minister believe, therefore, that government of the people should be carried out according to the will of the majority of the people, clearly expressed, or simply according to the will of a government which believes that its views are far more important than those of the majority of the people?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the question seems to be based on a whole lot of erroneous assumptions. It was not pressure of the government which got the leader of the hon. member's party to vote along the same line as I did.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member knows that it was put to what is called a free vote and that parties on both sides of the House voted differently and not monolithically on it. That was the situation then.

I understand the hon. member is introducing some concept of direct democracy. Perhaps if he has some ideas along that line, they could be added to the policy paper on the constitution which has been published by that side. They might want to introduce this interesting idea, and we could discuss it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEASURES TO END SITUATION IN LEBANON

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

An hon. Member: He is here.

Mr. Gray: Oh, I am sorry. I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if the government will take such steps as are open to it, either through direct contacts or through the United Nations, to do what it properly can to help ensure the ending of the tragic destruction of the Christian community in Lebanon and to help ensure the preserving of that community there. Also, will the government provide further humanitarian aid to that community and facilitate those of its members who wish to do so being reunited with relatives in Canada?

I ask this question since the present situation in Lebanon is a matter of concern to the many Canadians of Lebanese Christian origin and, I think, to many other Canadians as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me assure the hon. member that on this one occasion I do not mind being at least modestly overlooked.

On the substance of this most serious question, I will be meeting—indeed, within a minute or two—with representatives of the Lebanese community. We will be discussing all these matters. I have already said on the record—and I am sure it has the support of all members of the House—that we in Canada will take every action possible in order to bring a permanent end to this most tragic situation. I issued a call last week to that effect, and we so supported a motion in the Security Council. Later this day, or tomorrow, it may be possible for me to report on the outcome of my meeting with the Lebanese community, which meeting, I repeat, is five minutes overdue at the present time.

EMPLOYMENT

PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PROGRAM—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In light of the announced proposed changes and cutbacks in the unemployment insurance program, in view of the fact that such cutbacks and changes could specifically affect 75 per cent of the seasonal fishermen of Newfoundland who would be disqualified from receiving benefits, and in view of the fact that this particular change would result in an $11 million loss to the Newfoundland economy, can the minister unequivocally state in this House that those changes will not be proceeded with?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, thanks to the very responsible attitude of Liberal members from Newfoundland—in fact, all the Atlantic provinces—I have had a look at the particular change we are going to make. We shall make some amendments which I think will be found satisfactory. On that basis, thanks, as I have said, to the very eloquent response I received from my colleagues, we were able to make appropriate changes.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, keeping in mind the fact that Newfoundland is a province with, officially, over 16 per cent unemployment, with little opportunity for seasonal fishermen to find work, and in view of the pattern shown in light of previous UIC changes—and not only in Newfoundland—that these workers will be thrown on to the welfare rolls of the province and municipalities, can the minister, instead of giving assurances to Liberal backbenchers, give assurance to the House that before any changes are made affecting not only fishermen but other seasonal workers across Canada, a thorough study will be undertaken by the Manpower department on the social and economic effects on those workers, and that such a study will be made public?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is really interested in results, he could make his representations as my Liberal colleagues have done. That is why I decided to make certain changes. There will be adequate opportunity, both on second reading and at the committee stage, for him to make his representations and comments. However, he is misleading the general public when he quotes the kind of figures he has quoted today.

POST OFFICE

REASON FOR PENDING STRIKE OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. In view of the unfortunate breakdown in the negotiating process designed to resolve the deepening labour crisis in the Post Office, which now leads to the inevitability of a nationwide strike by postal workers in the next few days, and taking notice that an exhaustive 16-month negotiating process has left most of the 264 clauses of dispute unresolved—and, surprisingly, most of these unresolved matters are of a non-monetary nature—I would like to see some show of concern on the part of the Postmaster General and request him to inform the House the reason Canadians find themselves faced with the possibility of another nationwide strike.

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I remind the hon. member that I have all the concern possible for this situation. During the summer I worked very hard to try to get a settlement with the LCUC. With regard to the present situation, we are trying everything we can to reach a negotiated agreement. We will do everything possible in order to achieve that. However, hon. members can appreciate the difficulty we have with the present attitude of the CUPW, which is not easy to deal with in view of its principle of no fraternizing with management, and so on. However, I think we can go beyond that and try to come to a negotiated settlement. If not, as I said earlier, this government will accept its responsibilities.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Postmaster General. Considering the fact that a large number of small businesses will be severely affected, in financial terms—for instance, in the direct mailing industry the cost will be $5 million per working day and the potential lay-off in supporting industries will amount to 4,000 workers—and that hundreds of thousands of Canadians will be inconvenienced by this impending strike, what measures will the Postmaster General take in order to begin negotiating in serious faith? Has he given consideration, together with his cabinet colleagues, to appointing a new negotiating team, and will he pledge to keep the Canadian people informed of the progress of these negotiations?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I spent three days in Toronto at the postal users' conference. I listened; I questioned some people. I know the hon. member was there too, and I am very aware of all the misery and difficulties a strike could cause for small businesses and other businesses across Canada. We have been negotiating for many months. We are still trying to find a negotiated solution. Again I say that if this cannot be resolved by negotiation, my cabinet colleagues and I will see what we can do. We will accept our responsibilities.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

McDONALD INQUIRY—TESTIMONY OF CABINET MEMBERS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General. I ask the Solicitor General to explain to the House why he instructed his lawyer to advocate, last Thursday, before the McDonald commission—some two weeks before cabinet ministers were to give their evidence before that commission—that from now on it shall be the cabinet, and not the McDonald commission, which will determine what evidence will be given in public and what evidence will be given in secret, paying particular regard to the description of the Solicitor General's immediate predecessor of the McDonald commission as a forum through which the sun would shine.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to the hon. gentleman for raising this question at this time. There is absolutely no change from the position which has been taken by this government vis-à-vis the McDonald inquiry. We indicated that the government would co-operate; the government fully intends to continue the co-operation.

All documents have been made available to the McDonald inquiry. The commission is proceeding with its inquiry, unhindered. As previously indicated by counsel, an arrangement had to be reached regarding the way in which the evidence would be introduced when cabinet ministers were to be testifying before that commission.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that lower ranks of the security service gave evidence in public and were cross-examined in public, that full reports of those hearings were made, and that now, 14 days before cabinet ministers are to appear, the Solicitor General's lawyer has asked to vest in cabinet the power to decide what is to be held in camera, would the Solicitor General explain why, all of a sudden, the cabinet wants the power to determine what shall be public and what shall be private, when ten months ago the commission specifically invited argument from the Solicitor General's lawyer and others as to the interpretation of its terms of reference and rules of practice and, as Mr. Justice McDonald pointed out quite accurately, not a peep was heard from them, or are we to assume that the cabinet's total change of position—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Jarvis: Are we to assume—

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member has put his question rather clearly and at some length.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I reiterate that there is no change in the position of the government. Judging by the premise of the hon. member's question, he evidently does not understand the process of confidentiality. The hon. gentleman indicates that he has read the transcript. I ask him to review that transcript again, and I will be pleased to discuss the matter with him further.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that for ten months there have been open hearings so that the commission could determine what documents to exclude and what evidence to exclude on the basis of national security, why did the Solicitor General's lawyer, last Thursday, presumably on the instructions of the Solicitor General, ask for a 180-degree change so that from now on it will be the cabinet and not the commission which will make this determination?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, there has not been, as the hon. gentleman suggests, a 180-degree turn. There is no change in terms of what is being made available to the commission and what is not. As I indicated, all documents have been transmitted to the commission. However, if the hon. member would read a letter from Mr. Howard, which is referred to in the transcript, he would find that those documents were transmitted to the commission with very strict reservations in terms of what representations we would want to make, as well as what responsibilities we have vis-à-vis the confidentiality of those documents.

The hon. gentleman refers specifically to the question of national security. He will see from the transcript that the basic documents which are identified are internal government documents.

CRIMINAL CODE

DEFINITIONS OF RAPE AND PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice, and in doing so I congratulate him on his new post. I hope he does a better job in that post than he does in the Wheat Board, because there is much dissatisfaction.

My question is very simple and to the point. Left on the order paper will be Bill C-51 and Bill C-52. I will not go into details, but one redefines rape as aggravated indecent assault, and the other deals with the definition of pornography under the Criminal Code as recommended by all parties in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. Will those bills be reintroduced in the new session following the Speech from the Throne?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is our intention, of course, to proceed with those important matters. The exact timing of reintroduction may depend upon our own estimate as to when they might be proceeded with because, in the nature of things, legal amendments and legal change might always be improved by further study and work. However, we will be considering at an early date the exact method of proceeding with those two matters.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I take it that the minister is really denouncing the policy of the former minister of justice. Is that really what the minister has said?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker, and I am surprised that the hon. member could get it so wrong. I indicated that even my distinguished predecessor's work may be improved upon, and if there is time we may look at it from that point of view; but in the alternative I would be delighted to proceed with it as it is.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

EFFECT OF REDUCED VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It deals with an improvement in the performance of the manufacturing sector in this country, which I am given to understand is operating at 87 per cent capacity today as opposed to 81 per cent capacity earlier this year. Can the minister give a breakdown of how much this increase is attributable to export sales due to the reduced value of the dollar, and what amount is attributable to domestic sales in competition with higher priced imports, again due to the reduced value of the dollar?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind that we have a dollar which is somewhat weaker, but it is very helpful in our balance of trade. As the hon. member said, it is helping us to sell our goods abroad. It is making our products much more competitive, and at the same time it is increasing the demand for Canadian goods in the Canadian market because of the high price of imported goods. I am very pleased to see that utilization of Canadian capacity in manufacturing production has increased to 86.4 per cent from its lower point at the beginning of the year.

FISHERIES

FISHING VESSELS INSURANCE PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION—WEATHER FORECASTING SERVICES

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. In view of the fact that we have had a successful, 25-year program of insurance for fishing vessels in the Atlantic region which, as I understand it, has brought the government some $8 million in revenue—it is not a loss operation—and that many thousand fishermen in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and various other parts of the Atlantic region have been assisted, why did the minister cancel this program which was so helpful to fishermen?

● (1502)

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make clear to the hon. member that the program was not cancelled. We gave notice that the program would be returned to private insurance companies if and when a program could be put together which would protect the interests of the fishermen. Also, I have had conversations with some representatives of fishermen's organizations who are working with my own department. I can assure the hon. member that no fisherman will be left by this government without insurance for his fishing boat.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to understand why the government should turn a proposition which is making a profit for the government over to private enterprise which refused to take it in the first place, and why the minister says that fishermen will be protected. The question is, at what rates they will be protected?

In that connection I should like to put a further question to the minister by way of a final supplementary regarding this matter of fishing. Can the minister explain to the House why the federal government has reduced weather forecasting services in Newfoundland and Labrador, a decision which is ill-advised from the economic point of view and will result in seriously risking the lives and safety of thousands of fishermen who operate off the Newfoundland coast?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's statement is not in accordance with the facts. I have been subjected to a considerable lobby by the insurance industry, asking the government to move out of the field of insurance of fishermen's vessels.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): If the hon. member's leader listened, perhaps he would learn something. The fact is that the reason which militated in favour of trying to move away from this sector was to liberate man-years, of which we are extremely short in my department, to do all the things which I have not been able to do in the fisheries. If we can have a good plan in which fishermen's organizations can be involved, and which protects the interests of those whom the companies will not insure, then I think there will be a good investment of manpower in other areas of the government and of the department.

PORTS

TENDERS FOR PORT DEVELOPMENT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I should like to address to the Minister of Transport—the one-armed paper hanger, I think—and ask why, or under what legislative authority, the minister authorized the National Ports Council to award tenders for port development to the tune of $1 million. I ask this question because it affects major ports in eight provinces in Canada and thousands of employees who worked heretofore under the National Harbours Board authority.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I understand the hon. member's question, or that he is in fact alleging something which is a fact. I should like the opportunity to look at the "blues", and will respond to him tommorow.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a further supplementary to the minister. I draw his attention to the press releases which attribute to him the statement that the National Ports Council is now awarding tenders, not the National Harbours Board, for redevelopment and development programs in existing National Harbours Board ports. It is to that statement that I direct his attention. I ask him, by way of a supplementary question, when he intends to resolve the dilemma of the employees of the National Harbours Board and potential employees of Ports Canada and resolve the tremendous conflict which exists between the two pieces of legislation.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the contracts in the National Harbours Board area are still being awarded by the National Harbours Board. There is, of course, a period of uncertainty, as we have committed ourselves to a new ports act and wish to come forward with it to produce a new structure and a new arrangement. We have tried to minimize the uncertainty in the transitional period. I would certainly welcome discussions with the hon. gentleman, if he is suggesting that by co-operation we could come forward with that legislation and put it into effect rather quickly.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER—STATEMENT MADE BY MR. LANG DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. A few moments ago, the minister in charge of the various departments made the statement that I had misled the House concerning the amount of payment that might be expected under the stabilization scheme. I wish to refer to the answer given by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) last April 5. The following exchange appeared in Hansard of April 5 at page 4168:

MR. MURTA: The minister can take away any charge of political skullduggery by answering this last question. He indicated that he knows the amount of the total payment; if he checks Hansard he will see that. We have seen $60 million at the present time. What will be the final payment, within $5 million or $10 million if he likes? Can the minister answer that in order to clear up this matter?

MR. WHELAN: No, Mr. Speaker, not at this time. The figures we have been given go all the way from a final payment of around $100 million to $120 million to $140 million. The computers have not fed out any better information than that, according to information we have received at this time from the trade. We have to make doubly sure we have that so that we do not make an error in favour of the government or against the farmer.

In other words, in the month of April the minister said that the amount would be from $100 million to $140 million, and today the balance to be received is only $55 million to $60 million. Farmers are again being taken for a ride.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman is referring to one particular set of words which are certainly misleading in the context in which they are put. If he would refer to the many other statements which were made at the same time he would find that obviously the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), when he used the words "final payments", was referring to the total payment between the initial and the final one, and the $115 million which I indicated today as being the total, with the concluding payment of $55 million, is clearly within the range to which the Minister of Agriculture was referring.

Mr. Speaker: The question which was raised by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) is essentially a disagreement to which the minister responsible for the Wheat Board has contributed. I think the matter is one of disagreement and interpretation, not one of privilege.

MR. FRIESEN—ALLEGED CENSORING BY CBC

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I have given Your Honour notice. It is on a matter which I believe affects my ability to speak freely as a member of parliament, and it relates to what appears at the present to be a case of censoring by the CBC. Since I have not had time to complete a study of the case, I wish to reserve the right to rise on this question of privilege at a later date, after I have completed my investigation.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise under the provisions of the standing order relating to the procedure in the House. During the present session, which ends this afternoon, the House has passed a motion recommending that the public be admitted into the galleries at the opening of the House, even at the moment of the prayer, so that the public can join hon. members in asking Providence for assistance in order to accomplish their duties and serve their country in the best possible way.

I would respectfully submit to the Chair the following request: given the fact that some time has elapsed since this motion was passed, would it be reasonable to ask the Chair that measures be taken to put this motion in effect and realize the wish of parliament in a very democratic way at the opening of the next session which will begin tomorrow or in the next few days?

This is, Mr. Speaker, the main issue of this point of order and I raise it very respectfully.

BY-ELECTION ADVANCE POLLING ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE ADDITIONAL VOTING DAY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-66, to provide for an additional advance poll in respect of certain by-elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at this point I should like to ask for the consent of the House not only to give first reading to this bill, but to call the second reading, committe stage and third reading, so that the bill could proceed to the Senate. I seek the consent of the House to advance the bill at this stage and to have it sent to the other place, so that we may deal with any other business which arises.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the genesis of this bill came as a result of the statement and the position taken by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) on September 9, 1978, when he indicated, if the government did not move, that he would move himself. In view of the fact that at this late date the government had decided to move, even though it had information concerning this long before from the Jewish community, we are prepared to give consent to introduce the bill today, proceed to second reading forthwith, committee of the whole, third reading, and to do it all within the next little while if that is the desire of the government House leader. This is one of those occasions when Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition is very pleased to bail out the government from its own difficulties.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the proposed introduction of this bill was discussed with us in advance. We are prepared to give the necessary consent so that it can be dealt with through all stages in the House of Commons this afternoon.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, coming from my residence to Ottawa, I learned on the five o'clock news on the radio that the government had secured the agreement of all political parties to introduce a bill under the provisions of Standing Order 42. I was surprised to hear that because I, for one, had not been consulted but I understood the reasons for the government's decision. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments. If I am not granted leave to do so, I will wait until we reach second reading. In any case, I would like to say this: When the government set October 16 as the date for the by-elections it knew that there was a Jewish community in Canada and that the Jewish community has principles. We Christians have principles too. We are sometimes asked to vote in an election on a Sunday. We do not make a drama out of it. In any case, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Unanimous consent may be given or refused at this time. If the debate begins in a few minutes it goes without saying that there will be an opportunity this afternoon to present arguments with respect to the merits of the bill. For the time being, I absolutely need the unanimous consent of the House to proceed now or later this afternoon. However, in the circumstances, the unanimous consent is required to proceed with this bill.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): With the good will of hon. members, Mr. Speaker, I consulted with my colleagues and they unanimously decided to give their consent. So, there is no problem there. As you can realize, there is lot of good will.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Therefore at this time the bill can be proceeded with at any stage, and certainly as other stages are required, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent to introduce the bill for first reading at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should correct that statement. Obviously, under the regular introduction of bills, the bill can be introduced for first reading at this time, as the minister has already done. But in order to proceed with it through other stages, consent is required. Is that consent given?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

By-elections

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have had some discussion with the House leader of my party. There is a motion appearing on the order paper in my name. It is left over from the end of June when it might have been debated, but unfortunately we became involved in the interesting debate as to adjournment and did not reach it.

I am perfectly prepared to give unanimous consent, but it should be a term of the order that this particular motion be fixed for debate and debated briefly, or at least put to the question. It is quite important. I am not speaking as a member of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, but as chairman of the committee which presented the report and on instructions from the committee asking for concurrence. That is the motion in my name. If the government House leader is prepared to indicate that a term of the order for unanimous consent will be discussed, there may be a short debate, the question will be put, and I will be prepared to give unanimous consent.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have consulted with all parties and no conditions have been attached to unanimous consent. At this stage the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) is requesting that a particular condition be attached to the unanimous consent. I cannot give any undertaking to the hon. member because I have absolutely no control over what attitude may be taken by other members, and I have had no opportunity to consult.

Mr. Baldwin: When we reach the motion I would ask that that be included in the debate. Then there will be a short bell and the motion will be put.

Mr. Speaker: The House ought to understand the nature of the proceedings. The bill has been introduced regularly at this time. Whether to proceed with it now or later in the day through any further stages would require unanimous consent. At whatever time any stage is to be entered upon, other than first reading, it will require unanimous consent, and at whatever time that is taken, whether it be now or later in the day as a government order after routine proceedings are completed, I have no control over that.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that there is an application now for unanimous consent to be given to proceed with second reading of the bill. Is there unanimous consent to proceed to second reading stage at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: By leave of the House, second reading is to be proceeded with forthwith.

Mr. MacEachen moved that Bill C-66, to provide for an additional advance poll in respect of certain by-elections, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole House.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

[Mr. Speaker.]

On clause 1—Words and expressions

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, this is the only opportunity I have to bring to the attention of the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council the very difficult situation in the riding of Eglinton in Toronto. It involves a problem which was created as a result of the government's failure to recognize a long time ago the advice given to it by Jewish organizations in Canada and the leadership thereof, that the October 16 by-election created greater difficulties for them and members of that community because of their holy days.

● (1522)

As a result of that difficulty there are 420 people, many of whom are bedridden, in the Baycrest Hospital on Bathurst Street in Toronto, who would normally vote at an advance poll held in the hospital. I am advised that the returning officer for that constituency has been told by the administrators of that hospital that there is, indeed, some considerable ethnic difficulty in having advance polls there on the days on which they were originally scheduled, and that the returning officer has said to officials of the hospital that if the polls cannot be held to suit those patients on all of the days, then the advance polls will not be held on the one day as set forth in this bill.

I do not intend to hold up the passage of this bill, but I think it is important at the committee stage of discussions on this bill that this House have an undertaking from the minister in charge of the bill to the effect that he will deal directly with the Chief Electoral Officer to assure that the polls will in fact be held on the one day they can appropriately be held, that is, Thursday, October 12, by way of advance polls. I understand this involves poll No. 210 and one other in the riding of Eglinton.

This is not the first indication the authorities have had in respect of this very important problem relating to the danger of disenfranchisement of those people who, because of their physical health, cannot get out to any other poll. I understand a telegram has been sent to the Chief Electoral Officer by people who are most vitally concerned in this constituency. I would like an undertaking from the minister that he will bring this matter to the attention of the returning officer in the federal constituency of Eglinton so that we can be assured, as well as the people there, that those who are resident in the Baycrest Hospital will have the same access to all the polls as anyone else under this particular bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words about Bill C-66 which has just been introduced. As I understand it, this bill was first prepared following recommendations or pressures made by a Canadian ethnic group. Since Canada is a truly democratic country where democracy seems to be applied even more rigorously than usual during an election period, I do not see why we should not want to allow the government to use this bill to add a special voting day and advance polls so that a certain group may use its right to vote.

Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, there is a weakness in all this. On the preliminary voters' list, it is clearly stated that there will be a vote in advance polls that will be opened on October 7, 9 and 10. However, and I hope the minister will be able to give us this assurance, it will be necessary to make some arrangement to notify, tomorrow at the latest, the people in all constituencies where there will be an election on October 16, so that the voters who will wish to use their right to vote on Thursday, as provided in this bill, may do so.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that this bill provides for an exception. It aims at enabling an ethnic group to follow its religious beliefs. If, in the future, such a situation should occur for other ethnic groups, I hope that the government will show as much understanding for these groups as it has done for the Jewish community.

I consider that these people are Canadians. They have the same rights as all other Canadians, and I would not like my comments to be misunderstood, but I want to be sure that the minister will promise the House that tomorrow all electoral officers will be able to notify all the voters of the constituencies concerned that they can go to an advance poll on Thursday to take advantage of their right to vote as stipulated in this bill.

[English]

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief in my remarks on this bill. First let me say that on principle I am not opposed to the bill, but I find it rather strange, almost incomprehensible, that we find ourselves in this situation this afternoon. We in this chamber all know that the Prime Minister's office has a total staff of something in the neighbourhood of 500 so-called experts, who advise the Prime Minister on a daily basis. It is my understanding that the information is distilled down to two or three of his top aides and passed on, yet no one in that office of 500 people across the street in the Langevin Building was able to advise the Prime Minister, who announced October 16 as the by-election date, that this in fact was a Jewish religious holiday. That says something obvious about the Prime Minister's office across the street.

The other point I want to make is that we ought to be very careful when considering election days in relation to religious holidays, and let me repeat that I am not opposed to this bill. In this country we have many people of varying religious backgrounds, including Jewish, Christian, Moslem and Hindu. We should be very careful, particularly when we are promoting multiculturalism, when considering election days in relation to religious holidays.

It is a well-known fact that in most European countries elections are held on Sundays. Sunday is a Christian day of worship. It might be very dangerous if we try to set election days in relation to the religious days of Moslems, Jews, Christians, Hindus and those of other religions. Perhaps we should come to the conclusion, although not today because of the terms of reference of this particular bill, that we should address ourselves to the idea of fixing election dates regardless of religious persuasion. Obviously as the number of religious denominations increases in size in this country, we are going to run into more and more conflicts with religious holidays and elections.

Once again I want to reiterate what I said at the outset: where you have 500 experts advising one man, the Prime Minister, why is it that not one person in the Prime Minister's office was able to advise him or the Deputy Prime Minister that October 16 was a Jewish religious holiday? I regret that very much.

Mr. Peters: I would like to comment on two things, Mr. Chairman. For a long time we have had elections where we have had two advance polls prior to election day. This has meant that we have had five days to conduct all our elections. With the change in the election act as proposed by this bill, we will not only have those five days; election day itself and the two advance polling days; we will also have the proposition that you may vote on any day you want for a whole week in the returning office. This means that in a riding, particularly in an urban riding, that there will be the normal four or five advance polls already established and an extra five days for voters.

Considering the religious basis on which this bill was proposed, I am wondering why we are making it a Thursday when you can already vote on a Thursday in one of these weeks if the voter wishes to go down to the returning office. Why do we not have this new day added on Sunday? Obviously the Jewish people will not object to voting that day, and the Christian people will probably not use it anyway. This will make available the polling booths on a Sunday just for Jewish people to vote.

If we worry about all the religious people in Canada and all the "kooky" religions we have in our urban centres, it will make it very difficult for those 500 people in the Prime Minister's office to decide when it is possible to vote to give everybody a chance.

We have added a lot of days now for the convenience of voters to the extent where some returning officers—and I have talked to several of them about this—are considering that they may have to set up a polling booth in a part of their office for the duration of an election because of the days which will now be made available to voters.

I have another point that I wish to make. We have all been out in the country in the last number of weeks talking to many people. There has been much discussion about when an election will be called, and there is a growing belief on the part of my constituents that there will be no more elections and that we are going to find some legal technicality to keep extending the day.

By-elections

Clause 2 in this bill says:

—this act applies to every by-election conducted prior to the first dissolution of Parliament occurring after the coming into force of this Act.

If King Trudeau is still around we may not have elections for a considerable period of time. It will be very difficult and dangerous if we have this clause, considering all those by-elections that are in store for Canadians for the next four or five years. Clause 2 is really a dangerous clause and perhaps it should not be left in the act.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2—Application

Mr. Peters: On clause 2, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the President of Privy Council if he would give an indication as to why it should be included. Under normal circumstances where we have an election, as may be the case in July next year, this would not apply because it has not been the practice of this government to rush by-elections, and six months is not a long period of time and thus it is not necessary. It is my understanding that the only requirement for an election is to have a session of parliament every year and, therefore, you could call the election next July for two or three years hence or whatever you wanted, which would make this a dangerous policy.

Under normal circumstances this clause is not necessary because when a by-election is called it normally does not take place for a year, and only in unusual circumstances would this clause ever apply.

Mr. MacEachen: In reply to the question asked by the hon. member, it has been my desire to make a bill of general application rather than of specific application to a particular group in the community, even though in this particular case the provision of an additional advance poll may meet the concerns of a particular group in the community. Nevertheless, it provides an additional opportunity for all electors in all by-elections, regardless of their religious views, to vote. That is the sole purpose of this clause.

It may be that in the meantime the House of Commons may want to deal with the general question of advance polls and whether we ought to make the changes along the lines proposed here, or other changes. This specifically applies to the by-elections coming before us and those which will occur before the dissolution of this parliament. The purpose is to make the bill of general application to provide additional opportunity for all electors to vote. I should say, in order to remove any suggestion that might arise, that even under the present advance polls there is an opportunity for Jewish electors on these days to exercise their franchise. Indeed, according to the news reports of yesterday, areas in which there is a very high Jewish population had a big turnout in the advance polls, so in the absence of this bill it would still be possible.

It may be inconvenient in some cases for all electors to cast their ballots, but in order to ensure that a maximum opportunity is available, and to take into account the legitimate concerns that have been expressed, this bill was suggested by members of the opposition and agreed to. Indeed, it had been brought to our attention very early by the hon. Leader of the Opposition in a letter addressed to the Prime Minister, and we were pleased to pick up the suggestion as it had been our intention to move along those lines. The hon. Leader of the Opposition included a draft bill which was carried forward in this bill, with the addition of the application to all advance polls before the next dissolution. There is nothing sinister behind it. It seems to me that it is better to bring in a bill which would be of a general application and provide an opportunity for all electors.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, the explanations just given by the President of Privy Council are throwing some light on the government's intentions. I only wish to ask him to be more precise so that the public is aware of the situation. It is an additional poll day allowing voters to exercise their voting rights considering the reason they may have to vote at an advance poll. I wish the President of Privy Council would make it very clear so that we may be able to give explanations to those who will ask for them.

● (1542)

Mr. MacEachen: Exactly.

Mr. Jones: I should like to ask what steps are going to be taken to inform the public of this additional day. I know there is not much time. Is it through the news media, or is it by advertising or what? Ordinarily there has to be advertising and notices posted publicly with respect to advance poll days and indeed any polling day.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, in answer to that question I should like to advise the hon. member that the Chief Electoral Officer has sent material in advance to all returning officers in the constituencies involved in the coming by-elections. The returning officers have made provisional arrangements for the holding of the polls. It would be difficult, prior to the passage of the bill, to advertise that such an advance poll would take place. You can imagine the flack I would get if advertising had taken place saying there would be an advance poll on Thursday, before the House of Commons had an opportunity to consider the matter.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Obviously you thought of doing that.

Mr. MacEachen: To be frank with the hon. member, I did not think of doing it, but if I had, this particular reason would have occurred to me immediately. Maybe the Chief Electoral Officer has taken some steps to advertise, but if he has it is on his own responsibility.

I think the country will be informed through the news media and, if it is possible, through the Chief Electoral Officer doing some special advertising, but I doubt he could at this stage. I am sure that voters who have an interest and are concerned about casting their ballot will be aware of this additional day on Thursday that is available to them.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): One question, Mr. Chairman. The minister has been very forthcoming with all members of the House with respect to questions raised by them. I did make a special request with respect to a particular problem involving the Baycrest Nursing Home on Bathurst Street in Toronto, however. Do I have an undertaking from the minister that he will read what I said and inform the returning officer with respect to the provisions of this bill that it is his duty to ensure that on the coming Thursday some 420 people in that place have access to the polls in the normal course?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I did take note of the hon. member's suggestion and I did intend to respond to him that I will draw the matter to the attention of the Chief Electoral Officer. I am sure he will take whatever steps he can to ensure that the voters in this particular hospital will have whatever opportunity is provided under the law for them to exercise their franchise. I am sure I can speak for the Chief Electoral Officer on this point and that he will do everything possible to carry out the will of parliament, which is to provide for maximum participation. We cannot go beyond that.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will dispense me from giving the long list of numbers corresponding to the questions to be answered. And with your permission I shall table the list of numbers of the answers to the questions on the order paper.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Question No. 48—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Minister of Agriculture address a Liberal party meeting in Brighton, Ontario and, if so (a) on what date (b) was government transportation to and from the meeting used and, if so (i) what is a full description of the type of transportation (ii) what was the cost to the taxpayer?

2. Did the minister state in his speech "I use DND planes quite a bit because I'm an honourary colonel" and, if not, is he aware that he was so quoted by the Canadian Press?

3. (a) How many honorary colonels are there (b) are they permitted the same privilege as the minister with regard to DND aircraft and (i) if so, how many have used such a privilege in the past year (ii) if not, for what reason is the minister an exception to the rule?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Agriculture and National Defence as follows: 1. Yes. (a) April 6, 1977. (b) No. On the minister's return from an official business trip to Winnipeg, the aircraft had a stopover in Trenton to allow for an address to the Hastings Federation of Agriculture and to visit the Riverside Cheese Factory, both in Trenton.

The trip to the Liberal Association meeting in Brighton followed this and was made at no cost to the taxpayer.

2. See Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition, citation 171 (e) and (z).

3. (a) 105. (b)(i) and (ii). Honorary colonels may travel by service aircraft to attend official duty functions related to Canadian forces activities. The number of journeys for this nature of duty is not statistically separated from other Canadian forces duty travel and hence is not readily available. The provision of such data would entail a detailed search of every manifest during the past year for which the department does not have the extra resources required.

MR. TONY MERCHANT

Question No. 54—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Mr. Tony Merchant recently represent the Crown in a court case in Regina, Saskatchewan involving charges against radio station CKRM and, if so, what was the total amount of legal fees he received?

2. Since the present Minister of Transport became a member of the Cabinet, how many times and on what dates has Mr. Tony Merchant, conducted any legal business for the government and, in each case, what was the (a) nature of the business (b) legal fee paid (c) total of all legal fees paid for all work performed?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Communications and Justice as follows: 1. Mr. Tony Merchant was instructed by the CRTC to act on its behalf in order to prosecute CKRM Buffalo Broadcasting Co. for breach of section 5(1)(b) of the AM radio regulations. The law firm of Pederson, Norman, McLeod and Todd, with which Mr. Merchant is associated, was paid a total of $2,400 for legal fees and $206 for disbursements. The decision of the provincial court in that case is presently being appealed to the Saskatchewan court of appeal and Mr. Merchant is continuing to represent the commission in the case. Mr. Merchant has not been retained to conduct any other legal business for the CRTC. Mr. Merchant was not engaged as an agent of the Minister of Justice on this case.

2. Mr. Merchant was not engaged as a legal agent for the government. (a), (b) and (c) Not applicable.

SUBSIDIES TO CAF BASES

Question No. 137—Mr. McKinnon:

Do DREE or any other departments pay direct or indirect subsidies towards the operation or maintenance of CAF bases in Canada and, if so (a) which departments and what is the amount of the subsidy (b) which bases are subsidized (c) what is the purpose of each subsidy?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and National Defence as follows: no.

REFITTING OF TRAWLERS

Question No. 142—Mr. Jones:

Are four trawlers being towed to Quebec for refitting and are they to be taken back to the maritimes to be put into service and, if so (a) for what reason (b) could the trawlers be refitted in one of the four major ports in the Maritimes and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Details were provided in response to question No. 468 in the third session of the thirtieth parliament and were published in Hansard No. 29, page 1359 dated November 29, 1977.

MR. PHILIP BEINHACKER

Question No. 152—Mr. MacKay:

1. Has any money been paid to Mr. Philip Beinhacker, his consulting firm, I.B.I. Group or any other company or group in which he may have an interest or is associated with in relation to the Mirabel and Pickering Airports and, if so, in what amount?

2. Has any money been paid to the law firm McTaggart, Potts, Stone & Herridge in connection with legal work carried out regarding the Pickering Airport site and, if so, in what amount?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Public Works and Transport as follows: 1. During the period April 1, 1971 to September 30, 1977, the Department of Public Works made the following payments to I.B.I. group. Mirabel Airport—$58,445 (for work on the peripheral lands). Pickering Airport (proposed)—$120,740 (funded by the Ministry of Transport). The Department of Transport made the following payments to the I.B.I. Group: April, 1975 to March 31, 1976: $903,530; April, 1976 to March 31, 1977: $469,843.

2. During the period April 1, 1971 to September 30, 1977, the Department of Public Works made payments, funded by the Ministry of Transport totalling $204,943 to the law firm of McTaggart, Potts, Stone and Herridge in connection with legal work carried out regarding the proposed Pickering Airport site. The firm of McTaggart, Potts, Stone and Herridge was previously known as McKinnon, McTaggart and payments totalling $23,907 were made by public works to the latter firm during the 1974-75 and 1975-76 fiscal years. These payments were funded by the Ministry of Transport for work on the (proposed) Pickering Airport site.

EXCESSIVE HEAT IN PLACE OF WORK

Question No. 163—Mr. Friesen:

1. In (a) 1974 (b) 1975 (c) 1976, by department, how much time was lost in (i) manyears (ii) mandays, in the public service as a result of employees being sent home due to excessive heat in their place of work?

2. For the same years, by department, what was the total amount of salaries paid to employees during the time that they were unable to work due to the excessive heat?

3. What temperature does the government consider to be excessive?

4. When staff are sent home due to the excessive heat in their offices, do their seniors who occupy air conditioned offices, leave as well because they lack support staff?

5. (a) In buildings where the wiring is considered inadequate to handle air conditioning, what provisions are made to moderate the climate of the work environment (b) is the wiring sufficient to handle an adequate number of fans?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by Treasury Board and the Department of Public Works as follows: 1 and 2. Records do not exist to permit a reply to these parts. Deputy ministers have discretion in this area and have generally delegated to appropriate officials in their departments the authority to dismiss staff when conditions so dictate. They are not compelled to maintain records of such early closures, nor are records kept of staff members who remain at work although they have been given permission to leave.

3. The degree of discomfort experienced by employees in hot and humid conditions will depend upon the nature of their work and work conditions. For this reason there is no over-all policy. It is currently the practice in many government departments to consider the release or temporary relocation of employees in hot and humid weather when the HUMIDEX reading in their accommodation exceeds 41 on the Celsius scale. This reading represents the combined discomforting effects of temperature and humidity. According to the Department of National Health and Welfare, although most people become uncomfortable when the HUMIDEX level exceeds 38, it is not until the HUMIDEX exceeds 46 on the Celsius scale that any type of labour must be restricted. A HUMIDEX reading of 41 would be equivalent, for example, to a combined temperature of 30 Celsius at a relative humidity of 70 per cent.

4. No.

5. (a) Fans are provided and where possible windows are opened. (b) The Department of Public Works has no knowledge of any Crown-owned or leased accommodation in which the wiring is inadequate for an adequate number of fans.

CMHC—EMPLOYEES FROM PRIVATE EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES

Question No. 294—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Has the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation obtained (a) part-time (b) full-time employees from private employment agencies in (i) British Columbia (ii) Alberta (iii) Saskatchewan (iv) Manitoba (v) Ontario (vi) Quebec (vii) New Brunswick (viii) Nova Scotia (ix) Prince Edward Island (x) Newfoundland and, if so, in each case, how many?

2. Are such employees paid from supplementary estimates and, if not, from what estimates are they paid?

3. By province, what was the (a) average hourly rate paid to employment agencies (b) average hourly rate paid to employees (c) total amount paid by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in (i) 1975 (ii) 1976?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised as follows by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation: 1. (a) CMHC has obtained part-time personnel from private employment agencies to help out during peak work-load periods, to replace regular employees on sick leave or vacation leave. Such part-time employees have been obtained in all provinces with the exception of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Alberta. Such part-time personnel are not paid from CMHC's payroll account, and head office does not have a record of the numbers of such part-time staff. (b) No.

2. Employees from private employment agencies are paid from CMHC's operating budget, and not from estimates.

3. The principle has been established, and is accepted, that Parliament does not require CMHC to supply certain details of its internal management and administration, in answering parliamentary questions. Information requested by members is made available, except where publication would be inconsistent with the mandate of CMHC.

USE OF PRIVATE EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES

Question No. 301—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Has Defence Construction (1951) Ltd. obtained (a) part-time (b) full-time employees from private employment agencies in (i) British Columbia (ii) Alberta (iii) Saskatchewan (iv) Manitoba (v) Ontario (vi) Quebec (vii) New Brunswick (viii) Nova Scotia (ix) Prince Edward Island (x) Newfoundland and, if so, in each case, how many?

2. Are such employees paid from supplementary estimates and, if not, from what estimates are they paid?

3. By province, what was the (a) average hourly rate paid to employment agencies (b) average hourly rate paid to employees (c) total amount paid by Defence Construction (1951) Ltd. in (i) 1975 (ii) 1976?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. No.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

Question No. 302—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Has the Defence Research Board obtained (a) part-time (b) full-time employees from private employment agencies in (i) British Columbia (ii) Alberta (iii) Saskatchewan (iv) Manitoba (v) Ontario (vi) Quebec (vii) New Brunswick (viii) Nova Scotia (ix) Prince Edward Island (x) Newfoundland and, if so, in each case, how many?

2. Are such employees paid from supplementary estimates and, if not, from what estimates are they paid?

3. By province, what was the (a) average hourly rate paid to employment agencies (b) average hourly rate paid to employees (c) total amount paid by the Defence Research Board in (i) 1975 (ii) 1976?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. No.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

EMPLOYMENT OF RETIRED PUBLIC SERVANTS

Question No. 391—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What is the total number of persons under contract to the International Joint Commission and how many are retired public servants?

2. What was the total amount in (a) 1975 (b) 1976 paid to those under contract and how much of this was to retired public servants?

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. At the present time there are two persons under contract to the Canadian section of the International Joint Commission.

2. (a) $12,644 of which $11,175 was to retired Canadian public servants (b) $21,553 of which $8,144 was to retired Canadian public servants.

Question No. 392—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What is the total number of persons under contract to the Great Lakes Water Quality Board and how many are retired public servants?

2. What was the total amount in (a) 1975 (b) 1976 paid to those under contract and how much of this was to retired public servants?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The Great Lakes Water Quality Board does not enter into contracts. This is accomplished through the Great Lakes regional office in Windsor.

2. (a) $916 was paid to retired Canadian public servants. (b) $52,144 was paid to retired Canadian public servants.

Question No. 394—Mr. McKenzie

1. What is the total number of persons under contract to the Great Lakes Research Advisory Board and how many are retired public servants?

2. What was the total amount in (a) 1975 (b) 1976 paid to those under contract and how much of this was to retired public servants?

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The Great Lakes Research Advisory Board does not enter into contracts. This is accomplished through the Great Lakes regional office in Windsor.

2. (a) Nil. (b) Nil.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD—PORT OF VANCOUVER

Question No. 432—Mr. Huntington:

1. Has a sine die option to lease berths 3 and 4 at Roberts Bank been given to a company without payment and, if so, for what reason?

2. Will the Minister of Transport take steps to have the option cancelled?

3. Are the terms of the option agreement kept as a secret document which is not available to the public and, if so, for what reason?

4. Are the terms of a document giving first refusal to lease a dock area on Ridley Island kept as a secret document not available to the public and, if so, for what reason?

5. When bids are called to operate, under the National Harbours Board, various docks in Vancouver, are the tenders treated as public and, if not (a) for what reason (b) which federal body decides on what operator is to be used and (i) on what basis (ii) for what reason is this process kept secret?

6. Is one of the terms of bidding that the contractor should not have an affiliated or associated company operating a port facility deemed to be in competition with the port's operation and, if so, for what reason was a contractor chosen whose parent company and provider of most of his other work was also the operator of a competing dock handling similar products?

7. Are the land and waterlot rents paid by various docks to the National Harbours Board available to the public and, if not, for what reason?

8. On what basis are large sums spent on new National Harbours Board docks dealt with when setting rates for their use, i.e. years of depreciation, interest on money, etc.?

9. Is the National Harbours Board openly competing with private enterprise docks in view of the claim that they are the operators of docks in Vancouver Harbour and, if so, for what reason is the Board permitted to spend public monies on studies of the financial impact of the port and then keep it secret, thus giving them some advantage in competition?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. Under the existing lease agreement covering the first site, the lessee has the right of first refusal on the next two sites. Another company has an option on the first available site under heads of agreement.

2. The agreements do not provide for cancellation by the Minister of Transport at this time.

3. The terms of the agreements are treated as confidential to protect the competitive positions of the companies involved.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

4. A licence to survey property at Ridley Island has expired. The document was confidential to protect the competitive position of the company.

5. Proposals for terminal services were requested by public advertisement to ensure maximum response. The replies were treated as confidential. (a) Proposals contained confidential information concerning competing companies. (b) Proposed contractors recommended by the Vancouver Port manager and the Vancouver Port Authority were approved by the National Harbours Board, Treasury Board and the Governor in Council. (i) Selection was based on such factors as operating and marketing organization, personnel, experience and demonstrated capability, financial strength and potential impact on port revenues. (ii) Supporting documents contain considerable information provided in confidence which must be respected.

6. A shareholder, without majority, of one of the selected contractors is operating a facility in competition with a board facility. The National Harbours Board is satisfied that no conflict of interest exists between the selected contractor and the board, nor is it in any way detrimental to the operation of the board facility in question.

7. No, to protect the competitive position of lessees.

8. In establishing rates for the use of facilities, such factors as outside competition, traffic forecasts, economic impact, anti-inflation guidelines, rate of return on investment, operating and maintenance costs, loan interest and principal repayments are considered.

9. An economic impact study was conducted as one phase of a study related to long range planning of the port. A public document entitled "The Port of Vancouver and its impact on the economy of the greater Vancouver region" includes all of the major findings of this report. To make public detailed information which forms the basis for the conclusions reached in the report would be to divulge data provided in confidence by the various companies involved.

THUNDERBIRD LODGE, MANITOBA

Question No. 500—Mr. Epp:

1. Was Thunderbird Lodge, Manitoba, placed under receivership and, if so (a) on what date (b) who is the principal party involved?

2. Did the government place the Lodge under receivership and, if so, in what manner does it intend to dispose of the holding?

3. Does the government intend to take legal action against the former owners/directors of the Lodge?

4. What other loans, claims, legal action etc., are being brought against the Lodge at the present time?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Regional Economic Expansion as follows: 1. Yes. (a) August 12, 1977. (b) A Receiver and manager was appointed on August 2, 1977 under the terms of a debenture in favour of Communities Economic Development Fund. The principal creditors are: The Indian Economic Development Fund (Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development). The province of Manitoba's Communities Economic Development Fund.

2. The government did not place the lodge under receivership. The lodge was petitioned into receivership by Manitoba's Communities Economic Development Fund with the concurrence of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The assets, under the authority of the Court of Queen's Bench, have been placed in the hands of a realtor for multiple listing and sale.

3. The government does not have plans to take legal action against the former owners/directors of the lodge.

4. The following claims have been listed with the receiver in addition to those mentioned in 1 above. (i) Unpaid wages; (ii) Shareholders loans; (iii) Unsecured creditors.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD ADVERTISING

Question No. 674—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the government place the advertisement "Inflation Isn't Someone Else's Problem" in various publications and, if so (a) what was the total number of publications carrying the advertisement and what is the breakdown, by province (b) what was the total cost of the advertisement and what is the breakdown, by province (c) did it contain a clipping asking readers to send to the Anti-Inflation Board for a copy of "Kick the Inflation Habit" and, if so, how many requests were received as a direct result of the advertisement for the (i) English (ii) French version?

2. (a) What has been the total amount spent on advertising by the Anti-Inflation Board from its inception to the date that latest figures are available and what is the date (b) how much is budgeted for advertising during the present fiscal year (c) what are the names of all advertising agencies used and, in each case, what was the amount expended through them?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Anti-Inflation Board:

DSS—OUTSIDE CONSULTANTS

Question No. 692—Mr. Howie:

From January 1, 1977 to date, did the Department of Supply and Services hire outside consultants and, if so, how many?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Ninety.

LABRADOR LINERBOARD LTD.

Question No. 714—Mr. Crosbie:

Did the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the Department of Regional Economic Expansion investigate the potential costs and benefits of giving financial assistance to Labrador Linerboard Limited of Stephenville, Newfoundland and, if so, what disincentives offset the potential benefits of (a) job preservation for about 1,500 persons (b) maintenance of the disposable income of the plant's employees and their families (c) the preservation of the community in which the plant operated and in wood cutting areas (d) the maintenance of revenues of the federal and provincial governments through income and other taxes and the avoidance of unemployment insurance, welfare and other direct costs to government of the loss of some 1,500 jobs?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has provided all possible assistance compatible with its mission to Labrador Linerboard Limited before the closure of its mill at Stephenville on August 26, 1977. Since that date, this department has worked closely with the consultant retained by the government of Newfoundland to identify parties who may be interested in acquiring and re-activating the facility. It does not fall within the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce's mandate to undertake overall cost/benefit and social economic studies to determine whether financial assistance should be provided to help prevent mill closures. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion has maintained a monitoring role regarding the implications of the closure of the linerboard mill in Stephenville and the earlier phase-down of related wood-cutting operations based in Happy Valley-Goose Bay, Labrador. The department has not been approached by the government of Newfoundland, owners of the mill, for financial assistance to maintain the mill's operation and therefore has not conducted any cost/benefit analysis associated with providing such public assistance through any program vehicle within the department's mandate. For assistance provided by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission, see House of Commons Debates, December 15, 1977, pages 1934-35.

GRANTS AND LOANS PROGRAMS

Question No. 716—Mr. Crosbie:

Are government expenditures directed by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion allocated to different regions of Canada, in whole or in part, on the basis of (a) a quota system or other system of allocation specifying the (i) number (ii) amount in dollars, of grants or loans to be received by each region and, if so, in each case, what are the specifics of the system (b) a quota system or other system of allocation related to (i) gross provincial product per capita (ii) per capita disposable income (iii) provincial rate of unemployment (iv) regional or area rate of unemployment and, if so, what are the specifics of the system (c) an effort by the government to be perceived by members of the English-speaking community and French-speaking community as treating each linguistic community equitably in both economic and human terms by the apportionment of government expenditure in some ratio to regions or provinces where either of the groups constitute (i) a majority of the population (ii) in some specified percentage a minority of the population and, if so, what is the ratio (d) considerations directed to the question of (i) national unity (ii) the future of Confederation and, if so, what are such considerations (e) political considerations and, if so, what are such considerations (f) other considerations and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned in administering the various industrial development programs, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce does not allocate funds to funds going to individual firms which meet the criteria for program support (i.e. project and company viability). However, in order to ensure that there is regional balance, the Enterprise Development Program (EDP) which is the largest of the departmental programs, is administered on a decentralized basis with an Enterprise Development Board in each province. The EDP is intended to help smaller and medium-sized companies to become more viable and internationally competitive. Its decentralized administration and decision-making makes the program more accessible to smaller and medium-sized businesses in all parts of Canada. As for the rest of the programs the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, every effort is made to ensure that firms in all provinces have equal access to program funding. An examination of the data on program funding by Industry, Trade and Commerce over the 1966-76 period indicates that the distribution of spending was closely related to the distribution of industry across the country.

In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned: (a) no (i) not applicable (ii) not applicable (b) no (i) not applicable (ii) not applicable (iii) not applicable (iv) not applicable (c) no (i) not applicable (ii) not applicable (d) no (i) not applicable (ii) not applicable (e) no (f) while expenditures are not directed to regions on the basis of fixed allocations or quotas of any kind, given regions on the basis of fixed allocations or quotas of any kind, given the department's objectives, attention is clearly focused on areas of persistently weaker economic performance. This emphasis is achieved through the design of programs and a concentration of analytical effort. In particular, the Regional Development Incentives Program operates only within designated areas, using incentives formulae which vary between areas, and under general development agreements, cost-sharing maxima and levels of programming vary considerably between provinces. The result of these variations in emphasis is that the regional distribution of DREE expenditures generally reflects the relative economic need of the regions. However, as it is DREE policy to seek out and encourage viable development opportunities, specific amounts or shares for each region cannot be precisely predetermined.

CANADA EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION ADVERTISING

Question No. 763—Mr. Epp:

1. Are Canadian TV stations airing the information campaign conducted by UIC regarding eligibility for benefits and, if so, which stations are doing so?

2. (a) What is the cost of the advertising campaign (b) who is the advertising agency (c) were tenders called and, if not, how was the agency chosen?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. See answer to question No. 369 tabled this day.

2. (a) and (b) See answer to question No. 369 tabled this day. (c) The advertising agency is appointed under Treasury Board authority and it is the prerogative of the minister to select the advertising agency in accordance with Treasury Board regulations.

MR. LESLIE J. BENNETT—RCMP

Question No. 772—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is Mr. Leslie John Bennett a member of the RCMP and, if so (a) since what date (b) what is his complete history with the force including ranks held, salaries, dates, etc?

2. Is he connected with counter intelligence work and, if so (a) to what extent (b) what are his qualifications for this type of work and did he serve with British Intelligence prior to coming to Canada or any other intelligence service?

3. Did Mr. Bennett state in Australia on November 23, 1977, that he was interrogated by the RCMP at the time of his retirement and, if so, for what reason did such interrogation take place and what was the subject matter?

4. To the knowledge of the government, was Mr. Bennett interrogated by the United States Central Intelligence Agency and, if so (a) in what locations (b) on what dates (c) with whose permission, in Canada?

5. Did the RCMP investigate on their own volition or on the recommendation of the Central Intelligence Agency or Branch M.1-6, that Mr. Bennett was in any way connected with representatives of a foreign power and, if so, what are the details?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): 1. Assuming Mr. Cossitt is referring to Leslie James Bennett, the answer is that Leslie James Bennett is not now a member of the RCMP but was a civilian member of the RCMP having joined the security service on July 2, 1954. Until February 1970, he was employed as Assistant Officer in charge of counter-espionage and from February 1970, until his retirement to medical pension on July 28, 1972, he was employed within the RCMP security service on other duties. He was engaged in 1954 in the salary range of $3,480—$4,500 and at the time of retirement was in the salary range of $19,380—$21,060.

2. He is not now connected with counter-intelligence work having retired as previously indicated. As for his qualifications for this type of work, Mr. Bennett joined the security service having come from the United Kingdom where he had been employed in the British intelligence community since 1946.

3. In a telephone interview on November 23, 1977 Mr. Bennett did state to Barbara Frum of the CBC radio program "As It Happens" that he had been questioned by his own people, his Canadian colleagues. Prior to his retirement to medical pension, Mr. Bennett was questioned by the RCMP in line with the normal concerns by all western intelligence services in accepting the possibility of high level penetration by Soviet Intelligence Services. The RCMP are satisfied that there is no evidence that Mr. Bennett is not or was not a loyal and dedicated Canadian public servant.

4. Mr. Bennett was not interrogated by the United States Central Intelligence Agency.

5. The RCMP investigated on their own volition.

CALGARY FRENCH SCHOOL

Question No. 894—Mr. Jones:

Does the Calgary French School receive government aid in any form?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): The Calgary French school does not receive aid directly from the federal government. Under the federal-provincial program for bilingualism in education, formula contributions are paid to all provinces. These funds are intended to assist provinces in meeting costs associated with the teaching of the second official language and with providing instruction in the language of the official language minority. Given the provincial constitutional responsibility for education, the actual distribution of these funds, under the terms of the current agreement, is at the discretion of the provincial governments.

SURVEY OF SASKATCHEWAN FARMERS

Question No. 1,076—Mr. Benjamin:

Did any department or agency retain Foster Advertising Ltd., or Continental Public Relations to make a survey by questionnaire of some Saskatchewan farmers and, if so, at what cost?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): No.

CARS PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT

Question No. 1,103—Mr. Howie:

Does the government have any regulations covering the size of cars it purchases and, if so, what are they?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Yes. The following directives are contained in the policy and standards on motor vehicles (TB 744685 of October, 1976): "9. The conservation of energy shall be a primary consideration when acquiring motor vehicles. 10. All vehicles purchased or leased for 30 days or more shall conform to the Government Motor Vehicle Specifications and shall be of the types that consume the least amount of energy possible. In all cases, the load/task factor shall be given absolute priority over comfort or convenience, and any deviations from the specifications shall require the prior approval of the Treasury Board. 11. To the fullest practical degree, this policy shall also be applied to vehicles acquired by short-term lease and to the use of privately-owned passenger cars on government business . . . 12. Government-owned or leased passenger cars shall be sub-compact or compact models, unless these cannot meet the requirements of the normal load/task. In the latter case, the smallest size vehicle able to meet those requirements shall be selected, and Treasury Board approval shall be obtained before acquisition. 28. Unless otherwise approved by the Treasury Board . . . new passenger cars shall be of the sub-compact or compact categories. Exceptions will be allowed by Treasury Board only where the load normally to be carried or the task normally to be performed, such as certain police and emergency health service duties, preclude the acquisition of these categories of vehicles. In these cases the smallest type of vehicle capable of satisfying the need shall be selected."

CROWN'S INTEREST IN CAL

Question No. 1,171—Mr. Andre:

1. What is the Crown's precise financial interest in Canadian Arsenals Limited as administered by the Department of Supply and Services and on what date was such interest acquired, at what cost and for what reason?

2. What was the book value of the Crown's equity on the date of acquisition and what is its latest estimated book value?

3. To date, what is the Crown's total investment, including equity costs, contributions to operating funds, debt forgiveness and what is the Crown's total realized profit from such investment?

4. In what manner is the Crown's interest represented (a) on the Board of Directors (b) in its senior management?

5. Did the government make a policy decision in regard to the future disposition of its interest?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The company was incorporated on September 20, 1945, under the name of Canadian Arsenals Limited with terms of reference generally as follows: "To act as the organized national establishment for maintaining industrial preparedness in collaboration with industry and the services in the matter of manufacture procurement industrial planning and development of and for basic weapons of warfare established for defence of Canada" (See first annual report March 31, 1947). At the beginning the financial interests transferred from the Crown, at no charge, through the Department of Reconstruction and Supply were as follows:

Capital Assets (original cost value not established until March 31, 1949).
Land	$ 3,027,021
Buildings	28,902,599
Machinery and equipment	58,641,493
Total	$90,571,113
Sundry Assets
Cash advances	2,675,111
Inventories (estimated original cash (value)	18,000,000
Total	20,675,111
Total	$111,246,246

2. The book value of the Crown's equity was a follows:

(a) On the date of acquisition as per March 31, 1949, annual report:
Capital stock	$ 22
Capital assets	90,571,113
Sundry assets	20,675,111
Total	$111,246,246

[Mr. Lumley.]

(b) Book value of the Crown's equity on March 31, 1977:
Capital stock	$ 30
Capital assets	22,643,013
Loans from the Government of Canada	3,500,000
Deficit non recoverable from appropriations	(1,233,020)
Other sundry items	249,423
Total	$25,159,446

NOTE: The difference in book value comes mostly from the sale of assets to industry or other disposal in general e.g. Valcartier Industries Inc., Canadian Industries Limited, etc.

3. Total Crown investment to date:

(a)	Equity cost as per 2. (a) above:		$111,246,246
(b)	Contribution to operating fund (1946-1977):
	Operating loss (net)	$ 11,308,884
	Capital expenditures	24,281,250
	Sub total		35,590,134
(c)	Special expenditures, e.g. plant rehabilitation, plant closure, fire, and other minor items:
	Operating loss	$ 14,838,743
	Capital expenditures	11,604,425
			26,443,168
Total Crown investments			$173,279,548

Please note that the figures referred to above are for all the divisions of Canadian Arsenals Limited whereas now only the filling division in St-Paul l'Ermite is left.

4. (a) The Minister of Supply and Services is the minister responsible to parliament for Canadian Arsenals Limited and he holds the majority of the shares of the company in trust for the Crown. The board of directors of Canadian Arsenals Limited is elected by its shareholders pursuant to the by-laws of the company. (b) The senior management of the corporation elected by the board of directors, exercise and perform such of the powers conferred or the duties imposed upon the Minister of Supply and Services as may from time to time be delegated to the company by the minister or by the governor in council.

5. The government intends to divest itself of its interests in Canadian Arsenals Limited as soon as it is conveniently possible to do so, and an action plan has been developed for this purpose and is already on way of executive.

207 QUEENS QUAY WEST LIMITED

Question No. 1,174—Mr. Andre:

1. What is the Crown's precise financial interest in 207 Queens Quay West Limited as administered by the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs and on what date was such interest acquired, at what cost and for what reason?

2. What was the book value of the Crown's equity on the date of acquisition and what is its latest estimated book value?

3. To date, what is the Crown's total investment, including equity costs, contributions to operating funds, debt forgiveness and what is the Crown's total realized profit from such investment?

4. In what manner is the Crown's interest represented (a) on the Board of Directors (b) in its senior management?

5. Did the government make a policy decision in regard to the future disposition of its interest?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): For the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs: 1. 207 Queens Quay West Limited is a corporation, incorporated under the Ontario Business Corporations Act, whose shares are held by Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada as represented by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. The common shares of the company were purchased on January 22, 1973, by Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada. The Crown, however, has no financial interest in the company other than one fixed asset purchased at $1. 207 Queen's Quay West Limited is a corporate shell company acquired to act as an agent of the Crown to manage the harbourfront site in Toronto.

2. After January 22, 1973, the Company was dormant until July 1, 1976. All assets were transferred to the Crown at that time creating a book value deficit of $215,500. The latest estimated book value is zero other than one fixed asset of $1. All other financial matters relate to operating costs.

3. The Crown's total investment in 207 Queen's Quay West Limited in terms of equity costs is zero and zero in terms of debt forgiveness. There are no realized profits. Operating funds provided to date are: 1974-75, $1,985,655; 1975-76, $1,976,416; 1976-77, $2,550,000; 1977-78, $3,049,000.

4. (a) The Crown's interest is represented on the board of directors by five members of the board who are federal appointments. They are Mr. Ben Orenstein (chairman of the board), L. L. Odette, R. J. Butler, K. Jaffary and W. B. Bremner. On the recommendation of Metro Toronto, B. McCormick and Julian Porter were appointed. On the recommendation of the city of Toronto, two representatives were appointed. They are J. Stinson and S. G. McLaughlin. D. M. Orange, special assistant to the Honourable André Ouellet, is the minister's representative on the board but has no voting privilege. (b) The Crown has no representation on the senior management of the company.

5. No policy decision has been made on the future disposition of the Crown's interest. The board of directors, pursuant to the management agreement entered into between MSUA and 207 Queen's Quay West, have presented to MSUA, policy recommendations and a financial plan for the next calendar year which is currently being analyzed.

AIR JAMAICA

Question No. 1,181—Mr. Andre:

1. What is the Crown's precise financial interest in Air Jamaica as administered by the Department of Transport through Canadian National Railways and on what date was such interest acquired, at what cost and for what reason?

2. What was the book value of the Crown's equity on the date of acquisition and what is its latest estimated book value?

3. To date, what is the Crown's total investment, including equity costs, contributions to operating funds, debt forgiveness and what is the Crown's total realized profit from such investment?

4. In what manner is the Crown's interest represented (a) on the Board of Directors (b) in its senior management?

5. Did the government make a policy decision in regard to the future disposition of its interest?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): 1. The Crown's precise interest through Air Canada in Air Jamaica as of December 31, 1977 is: ordinary (common) voting shares $1,534,000 preferred shares $2,474,-000. The ordinary shares were acquired during the years 1969, 1971 and 1975. Their cost was $1,534,000. The preferred shares were purchased in 1969 at a cost of $7,992,000. Air Canada was requested to examine any possible relationship with Air Jamaica by the government as part of a government sponsored Caribbean assistance program. On investigation, Air Canada found that there could be some mutual benefits to be derived from investing in Air Jamaica and made the above purchases.

2. The book value at the date of acquisition was: ordinary (common) shares, $1,534,000; preferred shares $7,992,000. The latest estimated book value is: ordinary (common) shares, $1,534,000; preferred shares, $2,474,000. The reduction in value of the holdings of preferred shares results from the arrangement with the Jamaican government, who are buying back the preferred shares on an agreed basis.

3. The Crown's total investment through Air Canada is as indicated above. There has been no profit realized from this transaction.

4. (a) Air Canada has three directors on the board of Air Jamaica, and (b) the present chief executive officer is an Air Canada employee on loan to Air Jamaica.

5. As indicated by the above, the Crown through Air Canada has agreed to sell its interest in the preferred shares by the end of 1979 to the Jamaican government but has not made any decision on the future disposition of its common stock holdings.

Order Paper Questions

CROWN'S INTEREST IN ALLIED INNKEEPERS (BERMUDA) LIMITED

Question No. 1,182—Mr. Andre:

1. What is the Crown's precise financial interest in Allied Innkeepers (Bermuda) Limited as administered by the Department of Transport through Canadian National Railways and on what date was such interest acquired, at what cost and for what reason?

2. What was the book value of the Crown's equity on the date of acquisition and what is its latest estimated book value?

3. To date, what is the Crown's total investment, including equity costs, contributions to operating funds, debt forgiveness and what is the Crown's total realized profit from such investment?

4. In what manner is the Crown's interest represented (a) on the Board of Directors, (b) in its senior management?

5. Did the government make a policy decision in regard to the future disposition of its interest?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. Nil. However, in 1972 Air Canada advanced $240,000 to CN Realties to acquire and hold, on its behalf, one-third of the controlling stock of Allied Innkeepers (Bermuda) Limited, a company created to own and operate eight properties in the Caribbean. This interest was acquired as a business opportunity to become more closely associated with the hotel industry and to ensure a supply of quality hotel space in the Caribbean.

2. Book value of Air Canada's equity on the date of acquisition was $240,000. Current book value is nil as the equity was disposed of in September 1976.

3. Air Canada's only investment was the original investment. There were no working capital advances, no debt forgiveness and no profit realized from the investment.

4. Air Canada had six representatives on the company's board of directors; none in senior management.

5. This is not applicable as the equity in this company was disposed of in September 1976.

CROWN'S FINANCIAL INTEREST IN COMPUTER SCIENCES CANADA LIMITED

Question No. 1,184—Mr. Andre:

1. What is the Crown's precise financial interest in Computer Sciences Canada Limited as administered by the Department of Transport through the Canadian National Railways and on what date was such interest acquired, at what cost and for what reason?

2. What was the book value of the Crown's equity on the date of acquisition and what is its latest estimated book value?

3. To date, what is the Crown's total investment, including equity costs, contributions to operating funds, debt forgiveness and what is the Crown's total realized profit from such investment?

4. In what manner is the Crown's interest represented (a) on the Board of Directors (b) in its senior management?

5. Did the government make a policy decision in regard to the future disposition of its interest?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: In 1969, Canadian National Railway Company, with the approval of the Governor in Council, acquired a minority interest in Computer Sciences Canada Limited, the remaining shares being owned by private interests. That company is engaged in the highly competitive business of providing computer service and technology and it would be prejudicial to the interests of the private shareholders to disclose the cost of the investment, or details of the management operation or financial results of the company. Canadian National Railway Company appoints one person to the five-man Board of Directors.

CARS PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT

Question No. 1,213—Mr. Alexander:

For each department, what was the total expenditure on the purchase of motor vehicles during the (a) last year for which figures are available (b) 12 month period immediately (i) preceding (ii) following the implementation of Treasury Board directive T.B. No. 740686 dated January 22, 1976 regarding motor vehicle aquisitions?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): For practical purposes the implementation of Treasury Board directive T.B. No. 740686 was considered to be February 1, 1976. "Motor vehicles" includes passenger cars and station wagons.

STEVE SUSKI

Question No. 1,234—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is Mr. Steve Suski employed by the government and working for the Minister of Employment and Immigration in his Parliamentary Office and, if so (a) on what date did he commence employment (b) what is his annual salary (c) what is a complete description of his duties?

2. Do any of his duties include political work in the Minister's constituency and other constituencies for purposes of electing Liberal candidates and, if so (a) what are the names of all the constituencies (b) what work has he performed other than that of a political nature since assuming his present position?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Yes. (a) May 24, 1977; (b) up to $24,850; (c) to assist the minister as directed.

2. See 1(c) above.

VIA RAIL CANADA

Question No. 1,262—Mr. Jones:

1. Was Bombardier-MLW Ltd. of Montreal awarded a contract for the construction of LRC trains for VIA Rail Canada and, if so (a) in what manner were they chosen (b) for what reason?

2. Were tenders called and, if so, was Bombardier-MLW Ltd. the lowest tenderer?

3. Are such trains first being introduced into service on the run between Ottawa, Montreal and Quebec City and, if so, for what reason?

4. Will such a service be extended to the Maritime region and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. (a) Bombardier-MLW Ltd. was awarded a contract for the construction of LRC trains for VIA Rail Canada Incorporated. The selection of Bombardier-MLW Ltd., was based on a thorough and extensive evaluation of four bids, jointly undertaken by senior officials from CN, CP and the government. (b) Approximately 800 factors were considered and each were given a weighting consistent with government contracting policies and railway industry practices. Over-all, Bombardier-MLW scored the highest in this evaluation process. See also reply to question 520 tabled June 1, 1978.

2. A tender call was issued by Transport Canada on July 4, 1976, for new railway passenger equipment. The selection of train was not based solely on price, but also on the total expected cost over the life of the equipment, its revenue generating capability, the firm's manufacturing expertise, the possible export potential and Canadian content of the bid. See also reply to question 520 tabled June 1, 1978.

3. The LRC trains will first be introduced on the Quebec-Montreal route in support of the Quebec-Montreal demonstration project.

4. At this time, no decision has been made as to what rail passenger services the LRC trains will be operating on, other than the Quebec-Montreal service. VIA Rail Canada is responsible for this decision and are contemplating all intercity services in the prairies, maritimes and Quebec-Windsor corridor.

CONTRACTING OUT POLICY

Question No. 1,267—Mr. Epp:

Did any departments impose a ban on hiring while awaiting the implementation of the government contracting out policy and, if so, which departments?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): If you are referring to the Policy and Guidelines on Contracting-Out the Government's Requirements in Science and Technology, I am not aware of any department having imposed a ban as such on hiring while awaiting the implementation of the policy. In this respect, it is important to note that although the policy has been issued by the Treasury Board, it is the responsibility of each department to implement it as effectively as possible within accepted and approved management practices.

PERCENTAGE OF GNP GENERATED BY THE PROVINCES OF MANITOBA, SASKATCHEWAN, ALBERTA

Question No. 1,270—Mr. Epp:

1. What percentage of Canada's GNP is generated by the Province of (a) Manitoba (b) Saskatchewan (c) Alberta?

2. What is the average farm income in the Province of (a) Manitoba (b) Saskatchewan (c) Alberta?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that following: 1. The Table below shows the percentage of Canadian production generated in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. It should be noted, however, that these values are based on the concept of "domestic" (GDP) rather than "national" (GNP) accounts. That is, the concept used refers to production according to the location of the productive factors rather than the place of residence of the owners of these factors. Also these data were published on an "experimental" basis and the most recent year for which values are available is 1974.

Percentage of Canada's GDP Generated by the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta

Province	Year
	1972	1973	1974
Manitoba	4.07	4.14	4.16
Saskatchewan	3.42	3.75	4.14
Alberta	8.29	8.80	10.23

Source: Statistics Canada, Provincial Economic Accounts, 1961-1974, Ottawa, June 1977.

2. The table below shows the average farm income in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

	Manitoba $	Saskatchewan $	Alberta $
1971	3,581	4,810	3,987
1972	6,339	8,254	2,516
1973	8,620	10,287	7,996
1974	12,056	16,051	13,179
1975	12,958	20,384	13,160
1976	10,364	16,184	10,694

The above averages for farm income were derived by dividing the provincial realized net farm income figures by the number of farms, based on the 1971 census of agriculture.

FM CHANNEL 279B, BROCKVILLE

Question No. 1,324—Mr. Cossitt:

1. (a) On what date was FM Channel 279B, frequency 103.7, cleared by the Department of Communications for Brockville and district (b) what are the names of all persons having a hand in the decision (c) did the Minister of Communications participate in any way in the decision and, if so, what instruction did she give in this regard (d) is the channel classified as what is known as a "drop-in frequency"?

2. (a) Did additional available frequencies for the Brockville area appear on the official list of the Department of Communications and, if not, for what reason (b) what brought about the change and what are all the reasons that it is considered there is room in the area for additional radio broadcast facilities?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): As far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the answer to the above question is as follows: 1. (a) FM Channel 279B has not yet been adopted by DOC for Brockville and district. (b) Not applicable. (c) Not applicable. (d) If the channel is adopted officially, it would be known as a drop-in frequency.

2. (a) Three channels were made available for Brockville in the Canadian FM allotment plan. CBC applications predicated on all three were approved by the CRTC. (b) In line with the department's continuing endeavours to provide sufficient channels for a national and private broadcast choice, and in response to a proposal by a potential applicant to drop in Channel 279B for Brockville, meetings were held in March, 1977 between DOC, CBC and the applicant concerned to discuss the proposal and its technical compatibility with the FM plan, and acceptability under international agreements. The department then left it up to the would-be applicant to carry out the necessary engineering studies and negotiations with potentially affected broadcasters. This does not prejudge the merits of a specific application in its aspects of concern to the CRTC. Adoption of Channel 279B would be subject to a favourable CRTC decision.

[Mr. Loiselle (Chambly).]

KOOTENAY RIVER DIVERSION PROJECT

Question No. 1,355—Mr. Brisco:

Has the hon. Len Marchand, Minister of State (Environment), publicly declared his opposition to the Kootenay River Diversion Project at Canal Flats in British Columbia and, if so, in what framework does the Minister believe that he can translate his vocal opposition into federal intervention?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Under the terms of the Columbia River Treaty, British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority, after 1984, has the right to divert the waters of the Kootenay River into the Columbia River system. At a meeting in Invermere, British Columbia, on January 29, 1978, the Minister of State (Environment) expressed his personal opposition, on environmental grounds, to the proposed Kootenay-Columbia diversion. The minister has communicated his concerns directly to the Honourable James Nielsen, minister of the environment for the province of British Columbia. Upon completion of the environmental assessment studies in 1979, the alternatives will be examined on the basis of economic, environmental and social factors by the British Columbia cabinet and by the federal government. Consideration of federal interests and legislative responsibilities under the Migratory Birds Convention Act and the International River Improvements Act can best be undertaken at that time.

MANUAL ON BARRIER TRAINING

Question No. 1,368—Mr. Jones:

1. Is the Manual on Barrier Training available to civilian health personnel and, if so, when will it be available?

2. Is the Department of National Defence preparing this bulletin?

3. Does the department feel that a core of barrier trained experts would be advisable in all provinces and territories and, if so, would periodic refresher courses not be required in this regard?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Details were provided in response to question No. 1,421 in the third session of the Thirtieth Parliament and were published in Hansard No. 93, page 4388 dated April 11, 1978.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE COMMAND

Question No. 1,369—Mr. Jones:

1. What were the dates of the Prime Minister's visit to the North American Air Defence Command Headquarters in Colorado Springs, U.S.A.?

2. Why did the Prime Minister choose to visit the Headquarters at this time?

3. Is the Department of National Defence aware of any missile in the hands of the United States which would be able to hit satellites either in orbit or in a position close to the earth, causing it to land on earth?

4. Is the Department of National Defence aware of any missile in the hands of the North American Air Defence Command which would be able to hit satellites either in orbit or in a position close to the earth, causing it to land on earth?

5. Was the Canadian government informed of the position of the satellite more than one time before its fall, and if so, what are the dates and contents of the reports?

6. Is the government aware of the possibility that American or North American Air Defence Command Headquarters shot down the satellite which landed in the Northwest Territories some few weeks ago?

7. What were the reasons for the 13 Russians being expelled from Canada?

8. Did the government feel that the Russians had any knowledge of the possible American action in the satellite fall, and if so was this the reason for deportation?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Prime Minister's and Privy Council Offices, the Department of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs as follows: 1. December 27 and 28, 1977.

2. As no previous Canadian prime minister had visited them, in order to establish a first-hand understanding of their operations, and in response to a long-standing invitation, the Prime Minister visited the NORAD headquarters at a time that was available in his schedule.

3 and 4. No.

5. The government and those departments and agencies with a direct interest were kept informed about the decaying orbit of Cosmos 954 during the weeks before its re-entry of January 24, 1978. The contents of the report were positional updates, and were provided in anticipation of the possibility that Canada could be one of the many possible impact areas around the earth.

6. The history of the satellite referred to in part 5 of this answer shows there is no possibility that American or North American Air Defence Command Headquarters shot it down.

7. On February 9 the government took action to expel eleven Soviet nationals for attempting to recruit a member of the RCMP in order to penetrate the RCMP Security Service. The government regarded these activities as inadmissible and in violation both of the Official Secrets Act and the status in Canada of the individuals concerned.

8. There is no relationship whatever between the government's action to expel eleven Soviet nationals and any events surrounding the fall of the Cosmos 954 satellite on Canadian territory.

KOOTENAY RIVER DIVERSION PROJECT

Question No. 1,371—Mr. Brisco:

Do any options or provisions for appeal processes, through the Cabinet, exist once the Water Controller for British Columbia has granted a licence for the diversion of the Kootenay River at Canal Flats and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Mike Landers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Environment)): The British Columbia Water Act provides for appeal through the British Columbia cabinet. The Migratory Birds Convention and the International River Improvements Act is legislation under which federal interests might be considered.

Order Paper Questions

ILLEGAL STRIKES IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE SINCE 1970

Question No. 1,387—Mr. Schumacher:

1. For each year since 1970 to date, how many illegal strikes have there been in the Public Service?

2. In each case (a) what group was involved (b) what was the duration of the strike (c) how many charges were laid as a result of the strikes?

3. How many of the charges (a) were dropped (b) went to trial, and what was the result in each case?

4. In each of the charges that were dropped, what were the reasons for disposing of them in this way?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): 1. 1970: 3; 1971: 5; 1972: 4; 1973: 14; 1974: 12; 1975: 7; 1976: 4; 1977: 50 (Total 99).

2. (a) 1970: Clerical and regulatory; clerical and regulatory; post office

1971: post office; post office; firefighters; post office; post office

1972: electronics; electronics; post office; post office

1974: Post office; firefighters; general labour and trades, General services; data processing; radio operations; clerical and regulatory; primary products inspection; most employees (Sept-Îles); education; general labour and trades; heating power and stationary plant operations, post office

1975: heating power and stationary plant operations; general labour and trades; post office; post office; post office; nursing; correctional

1976: Air traffic controllers; program administration, clerical & regulatory, secretarial, stenographic & typing, data processing, communications; postal operations; engineering & land survey, data processing, ship repair, general labour & trades, physical science, clerical & regulatory, postal operations

1977: post office (on all occasions except two); data processing; data processing, clerical and regulatory, secretarial, stenographic & typing, program administration.

b) 1970: 1 day; 3 days; 1 day

1971: 1 day; 2 days; 3 days; 1 day; 8 days

1972: 1 day; 24 days; 1 day; 12 days

1973: January through February; 1 day; 1 day; 2 days; 1 day; 1 day; 5 days; 1 day; 1 day; 2 days; 6 days; 3 days; 1 day; 1 day

1974: 17 days; 22 days; 1 day; 2 days; 2 days; 1 day; 2 days; 6 days; 2 days; 1 day; 1 day; 5 days

1975: 2 days; 1 day; February 17 to March 19; 4 days; April 14 to May 27; 3 days; 1 day

1976: 4 days; 1 day; 3 days; 1 day

1977: 37 strikes of 1 day; 5 strikes of 2 days; 1 strike of 5 days; 3 strikes of 6 days; 2 strikes of 8 days; 1 strike of 9 days; 1 strike of 11 days

c) Charges of participating in an unlawful work stoppage were laid against the following groups of employees: 65 radio operations employees (October 1974); 225 clerical and regulatory employees (air traffic control assistants, October 1974); 912 general labour and trades employees (December 19-23, 1974); 543 designated general labour and trades employees (February 17—March 19, 1975)

3. 396 employees were convicted of participating in an unlawful strike: 33 employees were acquitted. The balance of the charges were dropped.

4. In 1976, a Manitoba court found that the decisions of the Public Service Staff Relations Board granting consent to prosecute the employees who participated in an unlawful strike were defective. This judgment was later upheld by a superior court. Since under the Public Service Staff Relations Act the consent of the board is prerequisite to prosecuting employees before the courts, the employer was forced to withdraw all outstanding charges.

AIR CANADA—STEWARDS AND STEWARDESSES

Question No. 1,389—Mr. Schumacher:

1. In each year 1975 to date, how many applicants for positions as stewards and stewardesses, whose stated home address was (a) Manitoba (b) Saskatchewan (c) Alberta (d) British Columbia (e) Yukon (f) Northwest Territories were (i) interviewed (ii) hired by Air Canada?

2. In each year 1975 to date, by province and territory, how many of those hired as stewards and stewardesses stated their mother tongue was (a) English (b) French (c) other and, in each case, how many were (i) proficient in both official languages (ii) entered in either English or French language training programmes?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. (a) 1975 (i) 248 (ii) 0; 1976 (i) 78 (ii) 33; (b) 1975 (i) 52 (ii) 0; 1976 (i) 92 (ii) 0; (c) 1975 (i) 126 (ii) 0; 1976 (i) 0 (ii) 5; (d) 1975 (i) 0 (ii) 4; 1976 (i) 136 (ii) 23; (e) and (f) 1975 (i) 0 (ii) 0; 1976 (i) 0 (ii) 0. It should not be assumed there is relevance between interview numbers and hirings in a given year. For example, the four hirings of applicants with British Columbia home addresses in 1975 were interviewed the previous year. While there was no hiring in 1977, 31 candidates were interviewed in Manitoba and four in Saskatchewan for future possible employment.

2. The graphs below indicate the language information regarding flight attendants hired in 1975 and 1976. There were no hirings in 1977.

ADVERTISING—METRIC COMMISSION

Question No. 1,394—Mr. Schumacher:

1. For the period January 1, 1973 to date, by month, what amount was spent by the government in general and the Metric Commission in particular, on advertising all aspects of metric conversion?

2. In each case (a) by name and location, which individuals or companies handled such advertising (b) how was the money disbursed in (i) print (ii) radio (iii) television (iv) other?

3. For the same period, by month, name and location, which individuals, companies and/or departments were employed as consultants?

4. In each case, what was the (a) financial or other remuneration made for services (b) nature of such services (c) time involved in giving such services?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): The information as requested in its entirety is not readily available without excessive cost and time. For information on the cost of introducing and advertising metric measurement, see reply to question No. 1,698 tabled August 5, 1977. In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. Metric Commission Canada has a policy of not paying advertising time and space. On one occasion only, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Office of Information and Public Relations, on behalf of Metric Commission Canada did spend approximately $130,000 in 1975 on the "Say Goodnight Fahrenheit" newspaper advertising campaign.

2. Refer to question 1.

3. Not applicable.

4. Not applicable.

MINISTER'S PERMITS—IMMIGRATION

Question No. 1,395—Mr. Schumacher:

1. Since January 1, 1970, by year, how many persons have been granted ministerial permits for immigration and what was their country of origin?

2. For the same period, by year, how many were (a) employed in professional positions (b) employed in non-professional positions (c) employed in unskilled positions (d) unemployed, and what was the breakdown of ethnic origin in each group?

3. For the same period, by year, how many obtained landed immigrant status in Canada?

4. For the same period, by year, how many of the permits granted were (a) new applications (b) special extensions and what period of time was applied?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. 1970, 485; 1971, 642; 1972, 723; 1973, 4,392; 1974, 17,445; 1975, 21,198; 1976, 11,420; 1977, 10,555. We do not keep records of country of origin of those issued with permits. Yearly reports which are tabled and accessible through the Journal's Branch of the House, provide information such as the place of issue of a permit, its period of validity and the prohibiting section of the Immigration Act.

2. Permits are issued to overcome a disability in the case of a person who would not normally meet our admission requirements. Employment is not a factor in issuing a permit, therefore we do not record any statistics relating employment to Minister's permits.

3. Statistics on the numbers of people obtaining Minister's permits, who later obtain landed immigrant status in Canada, have not been kept.

4. The figures given in 1 are for all permits issued. Statistics have not been kept on how many were issued to people who obtained one for the first time, and how many to people who had one before.

PERSONS EMPLOYED BY CBC

Question No. 1,401—Mr. Schumacher:

1. For each year since 1970, how many persons were employed by CBC on a (a) full-time (b) part-time (c) contract (d) free-lance basis in (i) Halifax (ii) Montreal (iii) Toronto (iv) Ottawa (v) Winnipeg (vi) Edmonton (vii) Calgary (viii) Vancouver (ix) Victoria?

2. In each case, how many employed in (a) executive (b) administrative (c) policy planning, were (i) unilingual English (ii) unilingual French (iii) bilingual of French origin (iv) bilingual of English origin?

3. In each case, what was the annual amount paid in (a) salaries (b) expenses?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. (a) and (c) See chart below. (b) and (d) CBC records have not been maintained in a manner which would enable the corporation to extract the information requested without an inordinate amount of time, work and expense.

2. In order to answer the question, CBC would have to examine the employment records of every employee. This, too, would involve an inordinate amount of time, work and expense.

3. It has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration as salary and expense details for individual locations. The background to this custom is explained in the reply to question No. 2,530, May 22, 1975.

MULTICULTURALISM

Question No. 1,426—Mr. Mitges:

1. For the fiscal year ended March 31 (a) 1976 (b) 1977, what amount of the budget of the Multiculturalism Directorate was spent on professional and special services?

2. What is the Directorate's definition of (a) professional (b) special services?

3. For the fiscal year ended March 31 (a) 1976 (b) 1977, how many persons were hired to perform professional and/or special services for the Multiculturalism Directorate and in each case (i) what were their names, addresses, salaries and job designations (ii) for how long were they employed with the Directorate (iii) how many were from within the Public Service (iv) how many were from the private sector at the time that they accepted employment with the Directorate?

Hon. Norman A. Cafik (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): 1. (a) Fiscal year 1975-76: $758,457; (b) Fiscal year 1976-77: $656,720.

2. The directorate's definition of (a) professional services would be those services not readily available within the department and which necessitate an outside expertise (i.e. special research studies, the commissioning of special histories on ethno-cultural groups, literature projects, performing arts for special events and multicultural festivals); and (b) Special services would be those services of a short-term administrative nature (i.e. secretarial and clerical).

3. Aside from expenditures on items such as hospitality, agency help, seminars and meetings, the bulk of Professional and Special Services funds are used primarily for contracts with individuals or organizations for the above-mentioned purposes. Such contracts must not establish an employer-employee relationship hence no persons were hired, against professional and special services funds, at specific salaries and with specific job designations, either from within or without the Public Service.

INDUSTRIAL MILK PRODUCERS

Question No. 1,459—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. For each of the first eleven months of the 1977-78 fiscal year, how many industrial milk producers were registered with the Canadian Dairy Commission in each province?

2. For the same period, did the government subsidize producers and, if so, in what amount by month and producer?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture):

1. Province

Prince Edward Island	588
Nova Scotia	3
New Brunswick	13
Quebec	19,894
Ontario	4,723
Manitoba	47
Saskatchewan	333
Alberta	831
British Columbia	12

N.B.: An inordinate amount of time would be required and the cost factor exorbitant to provide a monthly breakdown of registered industrial milk producers for part 1 and a consolidated report by individual producers for part 2, representing approximately 500 typewritten pages, since it would involve the review of more than 26,000 producer records.

DPW FULL-TIME EMPLOYEES AND CAPITAL PROJECTS

Question No. 1,464—Mr. Alexander:

1. What was the number of full-time employees in the Department of Public Works in the fiscal years 1966 to date?

2. For the fiscal year (a) 1975 (b) 1976 (c) 1977 to date, how many of these employees were engaged in activities related to the design and construction of new accommodation?

3. What was the total annual budget for capital projects undertaken by the Department, including all forms of premises acquisition, in each fiscal year 1967 to date?

4. What proportion of new capital projects was designed by outside consultants in the fiscal years 1966 to date?

5. For the fiscal year (a) 1966 (b) 1976 (c) 1977 to date, what was the volume of new capital projects undertaken on the basis of (i) contract management or project management (ii) design-build system (proposal call) (iii) lease back or similar private sector projects?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology):

[Mr. Cafik.]

1. 1971-72 6,025
1972-73 5,836
1973-74 6,045
1974-75 6,769
1975-76 7,086
1976-77 7,812
1977-78 7,800 (as at February 28)

See note (1) for dates prior to 1971

2. (a), (b) and (c). The design and construction function provides support services to the accommodation, marine, transportation, other government departments (OGD) programs. Our records do not isolate employees engaged in the activities related to the design and construction of accommodation.

3. The total annual budget, as identified in main estimates, for capital projects including all forms of premises acquisition, for the years 1971-72 to 1976-77 and 1977-78 to February 28 was as follows:

This excludes all leasing costs

1971-72	$146,999,000
1972-73	$151,751,000
1973-74	$218,971,000
1974-75	$228,717,000
1975-76	$336,609,000
1976-77	$312,243,000
1977-78	$333,081,000
1978-79	$306,217,000

See note (1) for dates prior to 1971.

4. Facts and figures have not been retained in sufficient detail by the department during the fiscal year 1966-1978 to answer the query with any degree of accuracy. Assessments from details which are available indicate that roughly 80 per cent of the projects carried out by the department have been and are awarded to the private sector.

Order Paper Questions

GRANTS TO THE STE. ANNE COMMUNITY CENTER IN FREDERICTON

Question No. 1,481—Mr. Howie:

Did the government contribute to the Ste. Anne Community Center in Fredericton, New Brunswick and, if so, in what amount?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Grants from the Secretary of State to the Ste. Anne Community Center in Fredericton, New Brunswick:

			Fiscal Year
Bilingualism in Education Program (Special Projects)	$1,802,000	($400,000) ($1,402,000)	74-75 76-77
Community Program (for official language minority groups)	6,000
Total	$1,808,000

FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCIES

Question No. 1,486—Mr. Oberle:

1. During the period of Mr. Roger Tassé's service with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, what studies were undertaken by his branch dealing with fraudulent bankruptcies in the Province of Quebec?

2. In the course of such enquiries, were any public officials or persons, previously or to date, charged under the Criminal Code?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Mr. Tassé's service with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was during the years 1965 to 1972.

2. No study was even undertaken by the department dealing with fraudulent bankruptcies in the province of Quebec and consequently no public officials or persons were ever charged as a result thereof.

DSS—SECURITY BRANCH

Question No. 1,491—Mr. Oberle:

How large, in numerical terms, is the Department of Supply and Services Security Branch staff, including police staff and security personnel, as opposed to the Canadian Armed Forces security staff and the RCMP security and police staff in (a) Ontario (b) Quebec (c) the Western Provinces and the Territories (d) the Maritime Provinces?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Supply and Services is concerned: 1. The formal duties of the security branch of the Department of Supply and Services are to manage an industrial security program for protection of classified defence work on behalf of Canadian, NATO and other governments in accordance with national regulations and international agreements, including protection of related data in departmental facilities and normal loss prevention activities. Apart from these security responsibilities, the branch also administers an emergency supply planning division. In so far as private guard companies are concerned, the security branch provides a contract quality control function for all private security guard contracts issued by the Department of Supply and Services in the National Capital Region. The security branch of the Department of Supply and Services conducts no domestic intelligence gathering activities. Total strength—51. Fifty centrally located in the Department of Supply and Services, Place du Portage, Hull. One clerk located in the Department of Supply and Services, Washington D.C. office. (a), (c) and (d)—Nil; (b) Police staff—Nil; Security staff—32 involved in: (i) Industrial security program for classified defence work on behalf of Canada, NATO and other countries; (ii) Protective measures for departmental facilities.

NOTE: Balance of 18 staffs are involved in emergency supply planning, administration and training.

In so far as the Department of National Defence is concerned: Canadian forces police and security staff numbers by geographic regions are as follows: (a) Ontario—508; (b) Quebec—218; (c) Western provinces and the territories—456; (d) Maritime provinces—308.

In so far as the Ministry of the Solicitor General is concerned: As of April 1, 1978, the total number of RCMP on strength in the four geographic areas mentioned was as follows:

(a)	5,134
(b)	1,388
(c)	9,883
(d)	2,318
	18,723

While the actual strength varies from day to day, the authorized establishment, which includes regular members and special constables, is set at 19,502 for the same date.

SUPERINTENDENT COBB AND INSPECTOR SCHULTZ

Question No. 1,492—Mr. Oberle:

1. With regard to the first two executive assistants to the then Deputy Solicitor General, Mr. Roger Tassé, Superintendent Cobb and Inspector Schultz (a) what are the present RCMP ranks and duties of each today (b) was either one convicted of any offence under the Criminal Code (c) what positions have each held since 1965 and what were their duties?

2. What role did Inspector Schultz play in preparing or delivering "threat briefings" for business leaders?

3. What input did Inspector Schultz have in the circulation of RCMP information through the office of the Solicitor General to Federal Ministers on the "Extra Parliamentary Opposition"?

4. In the course of his work, did Inspector Schultz have documents or use copies of documents stolen from Praxis Corporation in Toronto?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): 1. (a) Donald Cobb is a Chief Superintendent and is currently employed at RCMP Headquarters, Ottawa, as Director of Official Languages. Siegfried Schultz is a Superintendent with the Security Service at RCMP Headquarters, Ottawa. Their duties are set out in part 1 (c). (b) Yes. C/Supt. Cobb was convicted under Section 115 of the Criminal Code and was given an absolute discharge. (c) C/Supt. Cobb:

SECURITY ADVISORY COUNCIL

Question No. 1,493—Mr. Oberle:

Has the government empowered the centralized Security Advisory Council to authorize and control security actions, investigations, clearances and data for the entire administration of government and, if so, in what way has the authority of the Deputy Minister of each department in security matters been changed in the past five years?

Mr. Rod Blaker (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): No.

IRISH MOSS PRODUCTION

Question No. 1,507—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. In the past five years, what has been the annual (a) volume (b) value of Irish Moss production in (i) Prince Edward Island (ii) Nova Scotia (iii) New Brunswick?

2. What steps have been taken to investigate the feasibility of establishing a carageen plant in Prince Edward Island?

3. What measures have been taken or representations made by the Government of Prince Edward Island in this connection?

4. Is it the government's intention to build such a plant in Prince Edward Island and, if so (a) on what date (b) in what location (c) at what cost?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Fisheries and the Environment and Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows:

Irish Moss Landings Values

		Nova Scotia	New Brunswick	P.E.I.
1973	M. Tons	10,652	1,032	22,282
	$'000	717	70	1,173
1974	M. Tons	20,675	4,687	34,489
	$'000	2,255	469	3,106
1975	M. Tons	14,528	3,266	18,287
	$'000	1,465	303	1,610
1976	M. Tons	10,726	564	13,083
	$'000	958	48	878
1977	M. Tons	11,262	1,008	9,854
	$'000	1,195	100	902

2. During the past two decades a number of large firms have studied the feasibility of establishing a carageen extraction plant in the Maritimes. The proposed investments have been delayed due primarily to concern that the Canadian market could consume only a small portion of the carageen production and that adequate processing capacity exists in the principal consuming countries.

3. The Government of Prince Edward Island has been actively supporting the private sector feasibility studies concerning the establishment of a carageenan extraction plant.

4. The federal government continues to collaborate with private industry in studying the potential for developing a carageen extraction plant. The government would consider appropriate support for any viable proposal to improve the utilization of the Irish moss resource in Prince Edward Island.

CN MARINE

Question No. 1,516—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What is the government's best estimate of the total (a) revenue (b) expenditure by Canadian National Railways/CN Marine during the years 1976 and 1977 accruing as a result of operating coastal freight services between (i) North Sydney and the South Coast of Newfoundland (excluding Port aux Basques) (ii) Port aux Basques and the South Coast of Newfoundland?

2. What is the government's best estimate of the total tonnage carried by the Canadian National Railways service between (a) North Sydney and the South Coast of Newfoundland (excluding Port aux Basques) (b) Port aux Basques and the South Coast of Newfoundland in (i) 1976 (ii) 1977?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1. (a) Revenue
(i) North Sydney — Southcoast
1976 – $84,739.
1977 – $80,635.
(ii) Port aux Basques — Southcoast
1976 – $73,393.
1977 – $80,912.

Order Paper Questions

(b) Expenditures
(i) North Sydney — Southcoast
1976 – $1,928,533.
1977 – $1,294,698.
(ii) Port aux Basques — Southcoast
1976 – $2,429,195.
1977 – $2,267,804.

2. (a) Tonnage North Sydney — Southcoast
(i) 1976 – 11,935
(ii) 1977 – 11,357

(b) Tonnage Port aux Basques — Southcoast
(i) 1976 – 10,337
(ii) 1977 – 11,396

CNR—CAST GROUP OF COMPANIES

Question No. 1,518—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Under what specific conditions is Canadian National Railways permitted to sell its shares in the Cast Group of Companies?

2. What return on its investment has CNR realized each year since investing in the Cast Group?

3. Will the government instruct CNR to divest itself of interest in the Cast Group as soon as possible and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. Canadian National Railways cannot dispose of its shares in the CAST group of companies without first offering such shares to the other shareholders of the holding company.

2. CN has not asked for, and CAST has not declared dividends. Although CN has not received a direct return on its investment, indirect benefits have accrued to the railway from the improvement of its equity and from the inland handling of CAST traffic.

Transport Canada advises as follows: 3. The CN originally invested in the CAST group on the basis that it was prudent investment in an enterprise that would complement CN's activities and could contribute directly and indirectly to CN's profitability. As these basic assumptions still appear to be valid, there is no reason for CN to divest itself of its holdings in CAST.

DAIRY QUOTAS

Question No. 1,527—Mr. Tessier:

Did Canadian dairy producers' individual quotas fluctuate during the fiscal year (a) 1974-75 (b) 1975-76 (c) 1976-77 (d) 1977-78 and, if so, to what degree, by province and federation?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Yes. By province:

Market Sharing Quota/Million Pounds of Butterfat

	1974-75	1975-76		1976-77		1977-78

GRANTS TO DAIRY PRODUCERS

Question No. 1,528—Mr. Tessier:

During the fiscal year (a) 1974-75 (b) 1975-76 (c) 1976-77 (d) 1977-78, did the government give individual grants to Canadian dairy producers and, if so, in what amounts, by province and federation?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The Canadian Dairy Commission does not make individual grants to the Canadian dairy producers. However, the Canadian Dairy Commission pays a subsidy to producers, presently at $2.66 per hundredweight of industrial milk, to keep dairy products at an affordable price for Canadian consumers.

REDUCTION IN DAIRY QUOTAS

Question No. 1,529—Mr. Tessier:

Between 1974-75 and 1977-78, did the government reduce the dairy producers' individual quotas and, if so, by what amount by (a) fiscal year (b) province (c) federation?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): No. The government did not reduce dairy producers' individual quotas because the administration of quotas at the individual level is the responsibility of the province and not the Canadian Dairy Commission. (a) and (b) However, between 1974 and 1978 the government did reduce the national market sharing quota and therefore automatically reduced the provincial quotas. See list below.

	Market Sharing Quota/Million Pounds of Butterfat

(c) The federation quotas are administered by the provinces and consequently any movement of quotas between them is unknown to the Canadian Dairy Commission.

INCREASE IN DAIRY QUOTAS

Question No. 1,530—Mr. Tessier:

Between 1974-75 and 1977-78, did the government raise the dairy producers' individual quotas and, if so, by what amount by (a) fiscal year (b) province (c) federation?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): No. The government did not raise dairy producers' individual quotas because the administration of quotas at the individual level is the responsibility of the province and not the Canadian Dairy Commission. However, in October, 1976, the government did raise the national market sharing quota by four million hundredweight. This increase was distributed to individual producers by the provinces according to criteria established by the government. (a) and (b) Between 1974 and 1978 the national market sharing quota fluctuated and therefore the provincial quotas fluctuated accordingly. See list below.

	Market Sharing Quota/Million Pounds of Butterfat
	1974-75	1975-76		1976-77		1977-78

DAIRY PRODUCTION AND QUOTAS

Question No. 1,531—Mr. Tessier:

1. Did any dairy producers stop producing during the fiscal years 1974-75 to 1977-78 and, if so, how many?

2. Were any quotas freed and, if so, what use has been made of these quotas by (a) province (b) producer federation?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The Canadian Dairy Commission advises: 1. Yes. Records maintained by the commission are not designed to provide the number of dairy producers who stopped producing during dairy years. However, the following statistics indicate the number of dairy producers from whom shipments were registered.

Dairy Year	Number of Producers
1974-75	84,078
1975-76	79,840
1976-77	72,495
1977-78	66,766

2. Yes. (a) and (b). Since the rules and regulations governing the provincial quotas differ from one province to another, the Canadian Dairy Commission is unable to advise on the utilization made of the quotas freed between 1974 and 1978.

TREATY NO. 9

Question No. 1,550—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Was any financial assistance given by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or any other department to the Treaty Number 9 Indians in Ontario since the Treaty was signed and, if so, by year, what was the amount?

2. How much was used to pay legal fees and/or other technical expert consultants?

3. How much money went to native people participating in the work of the Treaty?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): 1. Indian Affairs and Northern Development:

1973-74	Rights and Treaty Research	$ 57,500
1974-75	Rights and Treaty Research	66,310
1975-76	Rights and Treaty Research	130,500
1976-77	Specific Claims	107,714
1977-78	Specific Claims	140,000
Secretary of State:
1973-74	Core Funding Program	$ 75,000
1974-75	Core Funding Program	126,850
1975-76	Core Funding Program	128,180
1976-77	Core Funding Program	147,238
1977-78	Core Funding Program	138,180

2. The departments do not have a detailed breakdown of legal and consultant fees, nor can they estimate the amount of money used for this purpose on behalf of the Treaty 9 Indians.

3. All funds were paid directly to the Grand Treaty No. 9.

YUKON INDIANS

Question No. 1,551—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Was any financial assistance given by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or any other department to the Council for Yukon Indians since the Council was organized and, if so, by year, what was the amount?

2. How much was used to pay legal fees and/or other technical expert consultants?

3. How much money went to native people participating in the work of the Council?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Secretary of State as follows:

Indian Affairs and Northern Development:

1.
1974-75	Contributions	$85,000.00
	Contributions travel	1,277.05
	Total	$86,277.05
1975-76	Contributions	$100,000.00
	Loans	$700,000.00
	Consultation travel	70.00
	Total	$800,070.00
1976-77	Loans	$475,000.00
1977-78	Loans	$1,602,465.00
	Native Languages Project	68,700.00
	Pipeline Impact Study	145,988.00
	Total	$1,817,153.00

2. The department does not have a detailed breakdown of legal and consultant fees. However, the auditor's report on CYI claims funding lists the following expenditures for professional services:

	1975-76	$ 68,369.00
	1976-77	$107,898.00
(April 1—Dec. 31/77)	1977-78	$119,267.00 (unaudited financial statement)

3. The department does not have the records required to respond to this question. While the Council for Yukon Indians accounts to the department that funds are spent for the purposes for which they were requested, the accounting does not reflect whether a consultant, lawyer, or a supplier hired by the CYI is or is not a native person.

Secretary of State: 1. The council received a student community service program grant in the amount of $17,939.00 during fiscal year 1977-78. 2. No money was used to pay legal fees and/or other technical expert consultants. 3. $13,432.00 went to native people participating in the work of the council.

CANADA EMPLOYMENT TRAINING AGREEMENTS

Question No. 1,552—Miss Nicholson:

1. Has the government proposed three-year employment training agreements with the provinces and territories commencing April 1, 1978?

2. Has a minimum guaranteed level of funding for employment training been proposed?

3. How has the government proposed to allocate any additional funds available for employment training above this minimum among the provinces and territories?

4. What level of funding for employment training has the government proposed to offer each province and territory under any new agreement?

5. What level of funding for employment training has been identified in each province and territory by the joint federal/provincial Manpower Needs Committees in 1978-79?

6. What level of funding for employment training in 1978-79 is available to each province and territory which accepts the new training agreement proposed by the government?

Order Paper Questions

7. What level of funding for employment training in 1978-79 is available for provinces and territories which are not prepared to accept the proposed new three-year agreement?

8. Which provinces and territories have accepted the proposed new three-year employment training agreement as at the date of the reply to this question?

9. Have objections to the proposed agreement been voiced by any province and territory as at the date of the reply to this question and, if so, by province, what was the nature of such objections?

10. What portion of the funds to be allocated in 1978-79 under either a one-year extension to the present employment training agreements (Part 7) or under a new three-year agreement (Part 6) for each province and territory is to meet provincial administrative services rather than institutional training?

11. For each province and territory, what level of funding is available for industrial training and the Training Improvement Programme?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. The government's formula for allocating the additional funds available for institutional training above the minimum guarantee is as follows: (1) 50 per cent for employment growth. Each province receives a share on the basis of its employment growth over the years 1975-76 as a proportion of the national growth over the same period. (2) 40 per cent to reduce anomalies in its per capita labour force allocation to those provinces which in 1977-78 were below the national average. (3) For national priorities there is a contingency fund of approximately 10 per cent.

4. The government offered all provinces and territories a guaranteed level of funding for each year of a three-year agreement. For 1978-79 the proposed guarantee was the initial allocation made to the province or territory at the beginning of the 1977-78 fiscal year. For the second year of the agreement, the 1978-79 guarantee would be escalated to reflect the change in the consumer price index for the previous year, and for the third year this adjusted amount would again be escalated in relation to the CPI. For 1978-79 the additional funding available resulted in the provinces and territories being offered funding at the level shown in list below, column 2.

5. See list below, column 1.

6. See list below, column 2.

7. See list below, column 3.

8. To date, the following have accepted the proposed new three-year employment training agreement: Ontario; Nova Scotia; Manitoba; Northwest Territories.

9. Discussions with those provinces with which a new agreement has not yet been signed are continuing in respect of a variety of point and situations. Since areas of agreement and difference undergo continued change as the discussions proceed, a full and complete summary of provincial views is not now available.

10. This information is not presently available because it is in the process of being developed in conjunction with each province/territory as part of the negotiation of the agreements. The nature and extent of provincial administrative services are negotiated and agreed upon by both parties to the agreements in accordance with set guidelines. The costs are estimated in advance of their being incurred and are paid in monthly installments throughout the fiscal year. At the end of each fiscal year actual costs are certified and adjustments are made where necessary. The proportion of the institutional training allocation utilized to provide provincial administrative services varies from province to province.

11. See list below, columns 4 and 5.

GRANTS TO WEBER HOMES LTD.

Question No. 1,587—Mr. Firth:

What amount of funding, through such government departments as DREE, was awarded to Weber Homes Ltd., Yorkton, Saskatchewan, in (a) 1976, (b) 1977, (c) 1978 to date?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Regional Economic Expansion as follows: (a), (b) and (c) None.

CBC

Question No. 1,590—Mr. Friesen:

1. Has the CBC encoded any of its productions for future use in connection with the development of line 21 transmission and (a) if so, how many and on what subjects (b) if not, are there any plans to encode future productions and in what volume would these be produced?

2. Does the CBC have any plans to purchase encoded programming from other networks such as PBS or TV Ontario?

3. Does the CBC have any plans to televise even on a once a month basis encoded programmes which they have decoded so that the deaf taxpayer could have the benefit of at least this small amount of programming and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

4. Does the government have any plans to assist financially, the production and or purchase of encoded productions for television networks?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. (a) No.

1(b), 2 and 3. A representative is being appointed from each of the English and French television networks to study a possible pilot project. These representatives will submit their report to the CBC's senior operations committee within the next couple of months for further consideration.

4. The government has no plans for direct assistance. However, it continues to support the production of television programs through parliamentary appropriations to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and more recently, to the Canadian Film Development Corporation.

BANKRUPTCIES

Question No. 1,598—Mr. Beaudoin:

Were any bankruptcies reported in 1977 and, if so, how many in (a) Canada (b) the Province of Quebec?

Mr. Alan Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada, see list below:

During calendar year 1977, the following bankruptcies occurred:

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT LOANS

Question No. 1,603—Mr. Gauthier (Roberval):

Did the government grant export loans in the 1977-78 fiscal year and, if so, in each case (a) in what amount (b) to which countries (c) at what interest rate (d) for how many years?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Export Development Corporation is concerned: it did make or agree to make loans to foreign countries in the government's fiscal year 1977-78; (a) its loans were made to foreign countries and to foreign companies to finance the sale of Canadian capital goods and services. Details of each loan signed in the calendar year 1977 are shown in EDC's 1977 annual report, distributed to members of parliament, and that information is a matter of public record. For the period January 1 to March 31, 1978, it has announced the loans to the foreign buyers described in list below; (b) please refer to (a); (c) by tradition and as a matter of commercial principle Crown corporations have not been required by parliament to answer detailed questions on their administration and operation, and in the case of Export Development Corporation, the Export Development Act places the responsibility for such matters on its board of directors; (d) please refer to (a).

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy Mines and Resources reports as follows: (a) $634,225 (estimated), (b) $269,463 (estimated).

SUBSIDIES PAID FOR STEAMSHIP SERVICES

Question No. 1,688—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Are subsidies being paid for steamship services from the St. Lawrence River and Atlantic Ports to Newfoundland and, if so (a) to which companies and in what amount in each case, (b) have there been any increases or supplementary adjustments affected recently?

2. Will the subsidy programme be beneficial to traffic movements through Nova Scotia, for example, via North Sydney and Halifax?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1.

	Amount of Subsidy 1977/78
1. a) Newfoundland Steamships Ltd for service from Montreal to Corner Brook and St. John's	$3,781,000
In addition the federal government also pays the operating deficits incurred by CN Marine on the following services presently operated under entrustment:
(i) North Sydney—Port aux Basques	$48,603,000
(ii) North Sydney—Argentia	$ 2,221,000
b) No.

2. The subsidies paid to CN Marine for movements of passengers and goods through North Sydney to Newfoundland are beneficial to traffic moving through Nova Scotia.

CAUSAL AGENT OF SCRAPIE DISEASE

Question No. 1,690—Mr. Mazankowski:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,323 which states "in 1976-77 the causal agent of scrapie was isolated and classed as a virus which indicates that the disease is spread by contact, although certain herds, families and blood lines may be more susceptible to the disease than others . . ." (a) in what locality did the isolation take place (b) who were the persons who deduced such conclusion (c) what procedure was used to isolate the so-called virus and arrive at the conclusion?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): (a) It had been reported earlier that the causative agent of scrapie had been isolated by workers at the Animal Diseases Research Institute of Agriculture Canada at Lethbridge, Alberta. What had been found was virus-like particles which, when inoculated into mice and hamsters, produced the disease. See "c" below. (b) The major work in this study was conducted by Dr. H. J. Cho. Expertise in electron microscopy was provided by Dr.

Andrew Greig of the Animal Diseases Research Institute, Ottawa. (c) Dr. Cho conducted studies of brain tissues of mice and hamsters that were experimentally infected with scrapie. The brain material was extracted, and after selective centrifugation, the infectivity was found to be associated with the portion where virus-like particles were located. The infective agent itself has been extracted and concentrated, its infectivity measured, and certain biological characteristics ascertained. At Lethbridge, studies of the biochemical and immunological specificity of the virus-like particle and agent are in progress. Dr. Cho's work thus confirms the findings of others that there is an infectious scrapie agent.

TRANSPORT POLICY—ATLANTIC REGION

Question No. 1,691—Mr. Forrestall:

Is there a new transport policy for the Atlantic Region as announced in the Globe and Mail Report on Business of May 4, 1978 and, if so, what specific commodities produced in the provinces would be subject to rate increases on September 1, 1978?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): After extensive consultations with the Atlantic provinces, and regional carriers and shippers, a change in the current blanket 15 per cent intra-regional subsidy established under the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act was publicly announced on December 15, 1977 with further details released on February 8 and February 17, 1978. In essence, beginning September 1, 1978, a 15 per cent subsidy will be paid to carriers, including for the first time the marine and air modes, on a selected list of commodities that are regionally grown, harvested, mined or processed. In addition, in order to phase in the amended program, a reduced subsidy of 7½ per cent will be paid from September 1, 1978 until September 1, 1979, when the subsidy will be reduced to zero, on those commodities which will no longer be eligible for the subsidy. The list of commodities remaining eligible for subsidy, as contained in the December 19 press release, is listed below.

List of Goods Eligible for Special Shipper Assistance

Commodities referred to in this schedule are identified by standard transportation commodity code numbers as published in standard transportation commodity code tariff series No. 1 on file with the Canadian Transport Commission under the provisions of the Railway Act.

DREE SIGN POLICY

Question No. 1,696—Mr. Epp:

1. What will be the cost of implementing the new sign policy of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion?

2. Has the Department contracted out the project and, if so, to which firms and at what cost?

3. What is the cost of producing the signs?

4. What is the cost of the labour to produce the signs?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion erects and maintains site signs to identify the federal and, where applicable, provincial involvement in development projects. Under the new signs policy, only the specifications for design have changed. Because contracts will be let only as new signs are needed, it is not possible to determine in a precise way the cost of implementing the new policy. However, with the exception of permanent PFRA signs (see note below), no additional costs are anticipated.

2. Administration of contracts to erect and maintain signs does not constitute a project as such. Where contracts to erect signs are required, these will be arranged locally through the Department of Supply and Services as in the past.

3. Since the announcement of the new signs policy, only two provincial DREE offices, in Ontario and Saskatchewan, have renewed contracts for production and erection of site signs. Screen Print of Brantford, Ontario, has been contracted for incentives projects signs at $125 per sign, and general development agreement signs at $175—$200 per sign (cost shared equally between the Government of Canada and the province). Gebert Signs Ltd., of Regina and Modern Signs of Saskatoon have been contracted on a standing offer of up to $7,500 per year each for supply and erection of signs.

4. Labour cost of producing signs varies from one region to another, but approximates from 50 to 60 per cent of total costs.

NOTE: Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration uses permanent site signs to identify facilities such as community pastures, water conservation and irrigation installations and tree nurseries. Identification signs for these projects will need to be replaced to conform to the new signs policy. PFRA has estimated the changeover cost as $33,000.

CN TOWER

Question No. 1,697—Mr. Gillies:

1. For the past year, what was the monthly total number of visitors to the CN Tower in Toronto?

2. What is the current profit or loss of CN Tower Limited?

3. What is the revenue of CN Tower?

4. What are the operating expenses of CN Tower Limited?

5. What are the capital charges of debt against CN Tower Limited or debt held against Canadian National Railways that is associated with the Tower?

6. Has CN Tower Limited prepared any proposals to increase revenue or the number of visitors to the Tower and, if so (a) what are they (b) in each case, what is the expected amount of revenue and visitors that would accrue from such proposals?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. During the period June, 1977 to June, 1978 a total of 1,610,008 persons visited the Tower.

2. During the calendar year 1977 the operating profit was $1.8 million.

3. Approximately $6.6 million in the calendar year 1977.

4. Operating expenses in the year 1977 were $4.8 million.

5. Capital charges on the Tower amounted to $5.3 million.

6. Many projects have been developed and carried out to attract visitors to the Tower but it is not possible to relate to each the estimated visitors attracted.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX

Question No. 1,699—Mr. Cossitt:

What was the total amount of capital gains tax collected by the government for each year since the tax came into effect and what was the total collected for all such years combined?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Under the Income Tax Act, one-half of capital gains realized since 1971 are added to income for tax purposes. Capital gains, therefore, are not taxed under a separate capital gains tax. Because of this, it is difficult to determine precisely how much income tax is attributable to capital gains as compared to other components of income for tax purposes. Using available data, estimates can be made of the approximate amount of income tax attributable to the taxable portion of capital gains. Rough estimates for the years 1972-1976 are as follows:

Federal Income Tax on Capital Gains

	1972	1973	1974	1975	Total 1972-1975	1976
Individuals	40	70	80	100	290	160
Corporations	30	60	70	90	250	*
Total	70	130	150	190	540

* No estimates are yet available for 1976 for corporations.

It should be noted that capital gains are subject to provincial income tax in addition to the federal income tax. Provincial revenues from this source would be approximately one-third of the federal revenues.

HOCKEY CANADA

Question No. 1,701—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. Did the government subsidize Hockey Canada in (a) 1976-77 (b) 1977-78 and, if so, in what amount?

2. For the same years, what amount in subsidies was granted to minor hockey?

3. How many persons are connected with Hockey Canada and how many claim French as their mother tongue?

4. For the same years, what amount did Team Canada spend for the tournament in Vienna?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): 1. Yes; (a) 1976-77: $30,640. (b) 1977-78: $42,500.

2. Contributions to the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association were as follows: 1976-77: $277,225. 1977-78: $192,924.

3. Hockey Canada is comprised of 12 directors who represent all constituents of hockey and two paid office staff. Of these, one claims French as his mother tongue while three others are fluently bilingual.

4. The tournament was the responsibility of Hockey Canada and no federal funds were involved. Hockey Canada's total budget for this event was $656,500 and revenues totalled $636,700. These revenues were generated through the exhibition games played by Team Canada, and contributions provided by private corporations.

METROPOLITAN LIFE BUILDING

Question No. 1,702—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. What was the cost of acquiring the old Metropolitan Life Building?

2. To date, what have been the renovation costs?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as Public Works Canada is concerned: 1. The Metropolitan Life Building and the Orme Building were purchased together for a total price of $15,450,000. Approximate values of $12,000,000 for the Metropolitan Life land and building and $3,450,000 for the Orme land and building have been established.

2. The renovation costs to June, 1978 have been $260,920.

MURDERS

Question No. 1,705—Mr. Epp:

How many (a) policemen (b) custodial officers (c) other persons were murdered in (i) 1976 (ii) 1977 (iii) 1978 to date?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Law enforcement agencies in 1976 reported the following to Statistics Canada: (a) Three policemen were murdered; (b) no custodial officers were murdered; (c) the number of other persons murdered in 1976 totalled 612.

Law enforcement agencies in 1977* reported the following to Statistics Canada: (a) Five policemen were murdered; (b) no custodial officers were murdered; (c) the number of other persons murdered in 1977 totalled 616.

Figures for 1978 are not available.

---

* The figures for 1977 are preliminary and are subject to change.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX

Question No. 1,706—Mr. Cossitt:

What percentage of total taxes collected by the government did the capital gains tax constitute for each year since it was introduced and what is the average percentage it constituted for all the years combined?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Under the Income Tax Act, one-half of capital gains realized after 1971 are added to income for tax purposes. Capital gains, therefore, are not taxed under a separate capital gains tax. Because of this, it is difficult to determine precisely how much income tax is attributable to capital gains as compared to other components of income for tax purposes. Using available data, rough estimates can be made of the amount of income tax attributable to the taxable portion of capital gains for the taxation years 1972 through 1975. Total tax revenues can be obtained for fiscal years from the public accounts. The estimates are as follows:

	1972	1973	1974 ($)	1975	1972-1975 Total
1. Income tax revenue attributable to capital gains	$70	130	150	190	540
2. Total tax revenues	$14,704	17,133	22,328	26,297	80,462
3. Revenue from capital gains as a percentage of total tax revenues	0.5	0.8	0.7	0.7	0.7

It should be noted that the estimates for revenue from capital gains includes gains realized by both individuals and corporations. The estimates for revenue from capital gains refer to taxation years, while the figures for total tax revenues refer to fiscal years. While the two time concepts differ considerably, it is unlikely that this difference in time period significantly affects the percentage given in line three of the table. Total tax revenues include personal and corporate income tax, sales tax, excise taxes and duties and other miscellaneous taxes.

POSTAGE METERS

Question No. 1,707—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the government approach Pitney-Bowes, manufacturer of postage meters, suggesting that they make available to the public, slugs for Pitney-Bowes postage meters promoting national unity and, if so (a) on what date (b) who made the approach (c) who made the decision to do so?

2. To the knowledge of the government, what are the names of all the other manufacturers of postage meters in Canada and, in each case, were they approached in a similar fashion and, if not, for what reason?

3. Does the government favour one particular manufacturer of postage meters?

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): 1. The suggestion of using postage meter dies for promoting national unity was made by the representatives of the Canadian Unity Information Office, Secretary of State Department, during conversation with officials of the Post Office Department. Because it is the largest manufacturer of postage meters, Pitney Bowes of Canada Limited was asked by the assistant deputy postmaster general, marketing to assist in developing the idea. The program was developed over a two month period, and Pitney Bowes was supplied their allocation of promotional materials on May 11.

2. The other manufacturers of postage meters in Canada are Friden, Roneo Vickers, and Postalia. They were made aware of the national unity promotion on May 18 and asked if they wished to participate. They were supplied with materials on May 23. The reason they were not approached earlier was that they do not maintain an ongoing business contact with Post Office headquarters and they supply a relatively small portion of the market.

[Mr. Lumley.]

3. The government does not favour one particular manufacturer of postage meters. It has, in fact, encouraged the three smaller manufacturers to improve their communication and contact with Canada Post and has offered to give them thorough background briefings on areas of Post Office business that would be of interest to them.

AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 1,709—Mr. Brisco:

1. Is the Department of Agriculture or the Department of Fisheries and the Environment aware of the research being conducted by Mr. John Evans of Memorial University, St. John's, Newfoundland, into improving soil condition and the growth of vegetables, etc?

2. Has any department been asked to fund any of this research and, if so, was funding provided and (a) if so, in what amount (b) if not, for what reason?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): In so far as Agriculture Canada is concerned: 1. Yes.

2. No. (a) and (b) Not applicable.

In so far as the Department of Fisheries and the Environment is concerned: 1. No.

2. No. (a) and (b) Not applicable.

EXPORTATION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA SALMON EGGS

Question No. 1,713—Mr. Cossitt:

Did the government give permission to Union Carbide Limited, to export British Columbia salmon eggs to some of their subsidiaries abroad and, if so, on what date, under whose authority and what are all the other pertinent details?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): No.

CENTURION TANKS

Question No. 1,715—Mr. McKinnon:

1. (a) How many of the Department of National Defence's old centurion tanks are still in existence (b) how many have been sold and (i) to whom (ii) for what price (c) what does the government plan to do with the remainder?

2. What conditions, if any, has the government placed on the sale of the tanks already disposed of, and what conditions, if any, does the government intend to place on the sale of those not yet disposed of?

3. Has there been any agent acting for either the purchaser or the government in any way connected with the sales of the centurion tanks and, if so, who or what was the agent, and what was the total amount paid or payable in fees to such an agent?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence and Supply and Services as follows: 1. (1) 235. (b) 89 tanks (i) GLS/Gesellschaft für legistischen Service mbH, Germany (ii) average price is $12,025.00, based on revenues to date (c) Crown Assets Disposal Corporation will sell tanks as they are declared surplus. (c) 140 tanks have been declared surplus to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation with the remaining 95 being retained by the department for range targets and/or monuments.

2. Tanks are sold with an end-user certificate as a requisite to the agreement of sale. Same requisite will apply to future sales.

3. No.

MR. WALTER LUYENDYK

Question No. 1,720—Mr. Leggatt:

1. Did Mr. Walter Luyendyk of the Privy Council Office file between December 3, 1972 and March 20, 1973, any reports dealing in part or in total with the New Democratic Party and/or its members and staff and, if so, what were the dates of such reports and to whom were they addressed?

2. Did Mr. Luyendyk file between December 3, 1972 and March 20, 1973, any reports dealing in part or in total with the Public Service Alliance and/or any other Canadian union and its members or officers and, if so, what were the dates of such reports and to whom were they addressed?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): 1 and 2. There is no record in the Privy Council Office of reports concerning the New Democratic Party, the Public Service Alliance or other Canadian union and its members filed by Mr. Walter Luyendyk. Mr. Luyendyk, who has since retired from the public service, has been consulted, and cannot recall any reports of this nature.

CANADAIR CL-600 CHALLENGER

Question No. 1,788—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Did Canadair receive a $70 million Eurodollar issue to finance production of the Challenger and, if so (a) on what date was it arranged (b) for what reason was it taken out in lieu of the Canadian backing (c) what rate of interest will Canadair pay (d) what rate of interest was Canadair paying to the government for the $70 million loan backing?

2. Due to the date of the first flight being postponed from January by some six to eight months, is it likely that Canadair will need additional financing?

3. What are the reasons for the delay of this first flight from the January 1978 date promised by the former Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. A $70 million Eurodollar issue does now form a part of the Challenger program financing. (a) The issue was arranged May 23, 1978 and receipts were actually transferred at a closing meeting held on June 7. (b) These measures were taken in compliance with the terms of the original program approval at which time it was stated that efforts should be made to replace the Government guarantee with alternative commercial financing. The measure also has the effect of both reducing and fixing the cost to Canadair of borrowed funds. (c) The issue incorporates an 8½ per cent coupon, the yield of which, including a 1 per cent discount, is 8.76 per cent. (d) Canadair has hitherto been paying prime banking rates, currently 9¼ per cent, plus a fee to the government for the loan guarantee of 1 per cent.

2. The funding arrangements now in place respond directly to the current program and schedule and financing is therefore expected to be adequate. The timing of the first flight has not given rise to the need for additional financing.

3. The original target date for first flight, March 1978, assumed that selected airframe components would be designed and built in specialized prototyping facilities in the U.S. It was later decided largely from economic reasons to build the first flight test aircraft, entirely in Canada, and as a pre-production prototype rather than an engineering test vehicle. This means that the present configuration more closely resembles the eventual first production aircraft in that it has been built on production tooling. The current program schedule has been in existence for some time now and is universally accepted as being extremely ambitious. Performance to date against these severe targets has been most encouraging and should be construed as an achievement rather than otherwise.

CAF—LOSS OF WEAPONS, 1977

Question No. 1,789—Mr. Towers:

During the year 1977, were any weapons lost within the Canadian Armed Forces and, if so (a) how many (b) how many were recovered (c) how were they lost (d) what types?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Yes. (a) 51. (b) As of 21 June 1978—39. (c) Circumstances of loss were: (i) Theft/missing from inventory; (ii) Loss during training exercises; (iii) Fire; (iv) Loss/theft in transit. (d) The type of weapons still unaccounted for are: (i) Browning 9MM pistol; (ii) Stirling 9MM sub-machine gun; (iii) Lee-Enfield .22 calibre rifle; (iv) Lee-Enfield drill-purpose rifle.

LABOUR FORCE SURVEY

Question No. 1,835—Mr. McGrath:

Was a special study undertaken in March 1978 with the labour force survey to determine the level of hidden unemployment and, if so, for what reason has the study not yet been released and what was the result of the study?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports the following:

Supplementary surveys are carried out frequently in conjunction with the labour force survey.

In March, 1978, supplementary questions were added to obtain additional statistical information about persons who were not actively seeking work in that month. The survey questionnaires are now being tabulated and results are expected to be available early in September.

This supplementary survey was developmental in nature and was designed in large part to assess the feasibility of obtaining certain types of additional data on a regular basis in future years.

LOANS TO PARAGUAY

Question No. 1,838—Mr. Gillies:

1. Does the government have any evidence of violations of human rights occurring in Paraguay?

2. Does the government have any evidence of any violations of the rights of Indians who reside in Paraguay and, if so, what specific evidence is available?

Question No. 1,840—Mr. McKinnon:

Was Lorcon Inc., Milton, Ontario, awarded a contract for hand smoke grenades in the amount of $1,349,082 and, if so (a) how many grenades does this cover (b) what period of time does the contract cover (c) are the grenades for training purposes and, if not, for what purpose are they being bought (d) what is the present stock of this type of armament?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Yes. (a) 135,000 smoke grenades. (b) Training stocks for the time frame September, 1978 to August, 1980. (c) Training purposes. (d) 34,831 smoke grenades.

CONTRACT FOR HAND MINES

Question No. 1,841—Mr. McKinnon:

Was Lorcon Inc., 221 Nipissing Road, Milton, Ontario, awarded a contract for $1,752,389 for land mines and, if so (a) how many land mines are being purchased (b) are the land mines to be for training or deployment in Canada or overseas?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Yes. (a) Anti-personnel mines—59,328; land mines—422,668. (b) The above mines are non-lethal to be used for training both in Canada and in Europe.

CONTRACT FOR REPAIR AND OVERHAUL OF AIRCRAFT INSTRUMENTS

Question No. 1,842—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Was a contract awarded to Aviation Electric Limited, P.O. Box 2140, Montreal, Quebec, for the repair and overhaul of aircraft instruments and accessories in the amount of $11,750,000 and, if so (a) how long is the contract to run (b) was the price dependent on a number of instruments and accessories repaired and overhauled or is it on a monthly or annual retainer?

2. Was the contract awarded to the lowest bidder or were some socio-economic factors involved?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes. Three contracts totalling $11,750,000. were awarded to Aviation Electric Limited, Montreal, Quebec, covering repair and overhaul of miscellaneous aircraft instruments and accessories. (a) These contracts cover the period April 1, 1978 to March 31, 1979. (b) The contractor is to repair and overhaul, on demand, instruments and accessories at predetermined rates and prices. The contracts are not on a monthly or annual retainer basis.

2. The contracts were negotiated and awarded to Aviation Electric Limited on the basis that the company has the special skills, technical knowledge, engineering capability and facilities, including special tools and test equipment necessary to service this equipment. Bids were not solicited and socio-economic considerations were not a factor in this award.

CONTRACTS—GARBAGE DISPOSAL

Question No. 1,843—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Was a contract entered into with Tricil Limited, P.O. Box 8730, Edmonton, Alberta, in the amount of $200,000 for garbage removal and disposal and, if so (a) for what period of time does the contract run (b) does it cater to all the married quarters and DND buildings in the City of Edmonton or is it for any other purpose?

2. Was a contract entered into with Entreprises de Transport, Marcel Boivin Inc., P.O. Box 9, Val St. Michel, Quebec, in the amount of $10,908 for garbage removal and disposal at the Canadian Forces Base at Valcartier and, if so (a) for what period of time does the contract run (b) does it cater to all the married quarters and DND buildings in the City of Val St. Michel or is it for any other purpose?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes. (a) April 28, 1978 to March 31, 1980. (b) It does not cater to any married quarters or DND buildings in the city of Edmonton. It provides for garbage removal and disposal services at Lancaster Park, Cardiff and Riverbin, locations of regular force units outside the Edmonton city limits.

2. Yes. (a) April 1, 1977 to March 31, 1978. (b) The contract was limited to the DND buildings in La Citadelle, Quebec City.

ENGINEERING SERVICES CONTRACT

Question No. 1,844—Mr. McKinnon:

Are engineering services being provided by Davis Eryou and Associates, 2540 Sheffield Road, Ottawa, Ontario, in the amount of $119,000 and, if so, what are they?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Yes. The engineering services being provided consist of the following two contracts: (a) Engineering and technical support for new vehicle system developments; and (b) Operations and maintenance support to existing vehicle systems to provide better service to the Canadian force users.

CONTRACT FOR ELECTRONIC TRAINING DEVICES

Question No. 1,845—Mr. McKinnon:

Are electronic training devices being provided by Aviation Electric Limited, 200 Laurentien Blvd., Montreal, Quebec for DND in the amount of $1,082,942 and, if so (a) what are they (b) is the contract part of a larger contract?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Yes. (a) Simulator for the training of junior officers in the maritime surface and sub-surface classifications to bridge watchkeeping standards. (b) This contract is presently the only contract in a larger project. In addition to the production of the simulator there will be expenses for spares, documentation, initial instructor training and construction to house the simulator. The total project is estimated to be $2,569,000.

CONTRACT FOR REPAIR AND OVERHAUL OF AIRCRAFT

Question No. 1,846—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Was Pratt and Whitney Aircraft of Canada Ltd., P.O. Box 10, Longueuil, Quebec, awarded a contract for $5,651,000 for repair and overhaul of aircraft aero engines and, if so (a) what type of aircraft are involved (b) what socio-economic factors were considered, if any, before the contract was awarded?

2. Was the contract awarded to the lowest bidder?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes. Pratt and Whitney Aircraft of Canada, Ltd. was awarded contracts totalling $5,651,000.00 covering the repair and overhaul of DND owned Pratt and Whitney J57-P55 Aeroengines. (a) The Pratt and Whitney J57-P55 engine powers the CF 101 (Voodoo) aircraft employed by DND in support of its NORAD obligations. (b) Socio-economic factors were not a consideration.

2. Competition was not employed in this instance because Pratt and Whitney Aircraft of Canada, Ltd. is the only established facility in Canada possessing the necessary experience, technical knowledge, engineering expertise and test capabilities for their particular engine.

CANADAIR CL-600 CHALLENGER PROGRAM

Question No. 1,841—Mr. McKinnon:

Was some $70 million received by Canadair in the Eurodollar issue to finance production of the Challenger programme and, if so, is the government still obliged "not to sell or transfer its ownership in Canadair or change its shares in such a way that the government's voting rights associated with its Canadair shares are reduced to less than 66%, or that the government no longer elects all the members of the Canadair Board of Directors", these being the terms under which the government arranged $70 million of the financing of Canadair by Merril Lynch?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: The above statement is entirely correct and the Canadair Challenger program is proceeding on that basis. It should also be noted that the Crown does have the option to dispose of the shares if it sees its way clear to guaranteeing the notes, in place of the role of underwriter by Merril Lynch.

VICE-PRESIDENT OF CORPORATE COMMUNICATIONS

Question No. 1,848—Mr. Crosbie:

1. (a) What is the job classification level and salary range of the Vice-president of Corporate Communications of the Export Development Corporation (b) what are his terms of reference (c) what resources, in terms of staff and budget, are available to the Vice-president to assist him in carrying out his responsibilities?

2. (a) Did the EDC increase its advertising budget significantly in 1975 and, if so, for what reason (b) what are the specific objectives of the advertising programme, and what are the target audiences being sought (c) did EDC change the nature or objectives of any of its promotional or advertising programmes during 1978 and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as Export Development Corporation is concerned: 1. (a) By tradition and as a matter of commercial principle Crown corporations have not been required by parliament to answer detailed questions on their administration and operation, and in the case of Export Development Corporation, the Export Development Act places the responsibility for such matters on its board of directors. (b) Refer to 1 (a). (c) Refer to 1 (a).

2. (a) Refer to 1 (a); (b) Refer to 1 (a); (c) Refer to 1 (a).

PIC-NIC KITS

Question No. 1,849—Mr. Epp:

1. Is the government distributing Canada Week Pic-Nic Kits and, if so (a) who thought of the Pic-Nic Kit concept and for what reason (b) which firm designed and developed the Kit and how much were they paid?

2. How many were produced and (a) by which firm (b) at what cost per kit?

3. What items are included in the kit and are they all Canadian made?

4. Is the government charging for the kits and, if so, how much?

5. How many of the kits has the government sold and how many have been given away?

6. In order for Canada Week Committees to receive grants, must they order a proportionate number of the kits?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): 1. The government is not involved in distributing pic-nic kits. This is an activity approved by the Festival Canada Committee, and sub-committee of the Council for Canadian Unity. The Canada Week Committee is a voluntary organization receiving grants from Festival Canada to support community inspired celebration during Canada Week. (a) Miss Robin Daly, student of design in Winnipeg designed the kit. Her idea was to encourage families to think of Canada while picknicking or camping. (b) Daly Communications, Winnipeg. No payment made for design.

2. 15,000 kits were produced. (a) By Daly Communications and Bulman Bros. (b) $2.35 per kit.

3. Six plates; 1 table covering; Six knives—(all purchased locally); Six forks; Six spoons; Six napkins.

[Mr. Loiselle (Chambly).]

4. The government is not charging for the kits. The Canada Week Committee used 7,000 kits for 1978 and reserved 8,000 kits for the 1979 program.

5. Approximately 2,500 kits were given away as prizes and the remainder were sold for a total value of approximately $23,000.

6. This is a local initiative under the control and supporting the activities of the Provincial Canada Week Committee.

RCMP OFFICERS

Question No. 1,850—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the government aware that a "Fly-In-Breakfast" was held at the Smiths Falls Airport on Sunday, June 4, 1978?

2. Did a Beaver Aircraft land in the earlier part of the day at Smiths Falls carrying two RCMP officers in uniform and one in plain clothes and, if so (a) for what reason were they there and what are the details of their visit (b) did they state to Mr. Russell Beach, President of the Canadian Airline Private Pilot's Association, that they were off-duty (c) were they off-duty and (i) if so, for what reason did they use a government aircraft and for what reason were two of them in uniform (ii) if not, for what reasons did they claim that they were?

3. On how many occasions in the past two years have members of the RCMP flown into airports where such events were being held and demanded to inspect aircraft log books etc., and what is the exact purpose for doing such things on occasions of this kind?

Mr. Rod Blaker (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1. Yes.

2. The RCMP aircraft which landed at the Smiths Falls Airport at approximately 7:20 AM on Sunday, June 4, 1978 was a DHC-3 "Otter" aircraft. On board were two RCMP members, both in uniform, one being the NCO in charge of the RCMP Uplands "Air" Detachment, Ottawa and the other being a member undergoing training. There were no plain clothes personnel, RCMP or otherwise, aboard the aircarft. (a) The purpose of the flight was to combine a training session with a "public relations" stop at the Smiths Falls Airport. Following their arrival at the airport, the pilot and the trainee partook of the breakfast and, until approximately 11:00 AM, talked and mingled with the other people in attendance. The training portion of the flight was then resumed. (b) No, assuming that the Mr. Russell Beach referred to is the president of the Canadian Owners and Pilots Association rather than president of the association referred to. (c) No. (i) Not applicable. (ii) Inasmuch as Mr. Russell Beach is not known to either of the two RCMP members personally, and as both members were on duty, the assertion that they claimed to be off-duty is unfounded.

3. To determine the number of occasions RCMP members may have flown into airports across Canada on similar occasions would entail an exhaustive search of records held at a multitude of RCMP detachments. In view of the man-hours this would expend, and considering the cost factor involved, the government does not feel justified in undertaking such a search at this time.

MRS. BLUMA APPEL

Question No. 1,851—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does the Ministry of State for Federal-Provincial Relations maintain a staff who at times visit schools in Ontario to speak to students and, if so (a) how many are on such staff (b) is Mrs. Bluma Appel a member of such staff (c) what subjects are discussed with the students?

2. Did Mrs. Appel visit a school or schools in Smiths Falls, Ontario, and, if so (a) on what dates and what are the names of the schools (b) did she advocate bilingualism in her remarks to the students (c) was she in anyway critical, directly or indirectly, of the Government of Ontario's policies in regard to the Francophone minority in the Province?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): 1. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) Not applicable. (c) Not applicable.

2. Mrs. Appel has never visited Smiths Falls in her capacity as Liaison Officer to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. This question therefore does not fall under the administrative responsibility of the Government of Canada.

STAMPS AND SEALS

Question No. 1,853—Mr. Cossitt:

1. How many stamps or seals labelled "Top Secret", "Secret", "Confidential", "Most Secret" or in any other classified term, are (a) owned by the government (b) in the possession of each department?

2. What is the lowest ranking official in each department permitted to make use of such stamps or seals and what is his/her job description in layman terms rather than Public Service classification?

3. Are such stamps kept under lock and key at all times and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): 1. This information is not available as classification stamps and seals are commercially manufactured by most engraving companies and sold in most office supplies and stationery stores. Many departments utilize a typewritten classification rather than rubber stamps.

2. Clerks, typists, stenographers, secretaries may use any classification stamp or seal provided they have been properly cleared and are acting under the direction of a person authorized to classify information.

3. No, they do not require special protection.

NATIONAL DEFENCE CONTRACTS

Question No. 1,856—Mr. Howie:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 679, in how many cases (a) was the contract put to tender (b) were tenders called by public advertisement in a newspaper?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): In so far as the Department of National Defence and Defence Construction (1951) Ltd. are concerned: (a) and (b) Of the 20 contracts awarded by Defence Construction (1951) Ltd. all were put to tender by public advertisement in a newspaper. In so far as the Department of Supply and Services is concerned: (a) fifty-seven contracts were put to tender. (b) No.

DSS FURNITURE REFINISHING BRANCH

Question No. 1,857—Mr. Bawden:

1. Does the Department of Supply and Services operate a furniture refinishing branch for the re-issue of furniture declared surplus and, if so, does the branch make a profit?

2. If the branch does make a profit (a) what was the profit for (i) 1973 (ii) 1974 (iii) 1975 (iv) 1976 (v) 1977 (b) who receives the money?

3. Are such profits shown in government accounts and, if so, where?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): In so far as the Department of Supply and Services is concerned: 1. Yes; yes.

2.(a)	(i)	1973/74	$100,200.00
	(ii)	1974/75	$183,400.00
	(iii)	1975/76	$236,100.00
	(iv)	1976/77	$286,800.00

(b) The supply revolving fund.

CADC—BID EVALUATIONS

Question No. 1,858—Mr. Bawden:

1. What procedure is used by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation to relate value of merchandise to be sold with the price accepted?

2. Are bids refused if they are too low and, if so, who authorizes the refusal of such bids?

3. During the period 1973-77, how many bids were refused because they were below market level?

4. For the same period, what was the percentage of such refusals in relation to the total number of sales by the Corporation?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Merchandise is sold if bids received are commensurate with assessed value.

2. Yes. Authorization is delegated to the division or regional director as per internal procedures of the corporation.

3 and 4. To provide an accurate reply would entail a lengthy and costly research, which cost in manpower and time would be exorbitant and prohibitive.

CADC—BILINGUAL POSITIONS

Question No. 1,861—Mr. Bawden:

1. Who establishes job descriptions and the requirement for bilingual status in Crown Assets Disposal Corporation?

2. Is there an appeal procedure should employees disagree with the establishment of a bilingual position?

3. How many positions were reclassified as bilingual in (a) 1975 (b) 1976 (c) 1977?

4. How many (a) unilingual (b) bilingual persons have been dismissed or resigned from the Corporation during the 24 months up to and including April 1978?

5. Have only three employees been promoted from within the Corporation during the period 1973-76 when a total of 62 employees were hired from outside during the same period and, if so, for what reason?

6. Is it a policy to hire from outside the Corporation rather than to promote from within?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Management and the personnel division in accordance with those Treasury Board guidelines which are applicable to the corporation.

2. No.

3. None.

4. Records are not kept in such a manner as to provide this information.

5. No.

6. No.

MR. DOUGLAS ROWLAND

Question No. 1,863—Mr. Epp:

No. 1,863—Mr. Epp—June 15

1. Did the government hire Mr. Douglas Rowland in any capacity, for example, in the Public Service Commission and, if so, what is his annual salary?

2. Does he have an annual expense account and, if so, in what amount?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows:

1. Mr. Rowland was appointed to the following positions with the Public Service Commission.

Date of appointment	Title	Group Level	Salary Range
Sept. 3, 1974	Faculty Member: Bureau of Executive Education, Staff Development Branch.	PE-6	$20,200 - 28,800

Dec. 15, 1976	Associate Director General, (Acting) Staff Development Branch.	SX-2	31,500 - 43,900
July 1, 1977	Director General Staff Development Branch.	SX-2	33,300 - 46,300

2. No.

MR. J. V. GOODISON—CANADIAN ATTACHÉ IN WASHINGTON

Question No. 1,864—Mr. Epp:

1. Was Mr. Jim Goodison named Labour Attaché to the Canadian Embassy in Washington and, if so (a) what are his credentials for the position (b) for what reason was he given the position (c) what is his annual salary?

2. Does he have an annual expense account and, if so, in what amount?

3. What are the duties of the position?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): 1. Mr. James V. Goodison was appointed by the Public Service Commission as labour counsellor to the Canadian Embassy in Washington, after being interviewed by a board chaired by a member of the Public Service Commission and consisting of senior officials of the Departments of Labour and External Affairs. After going through the necessary security screening, he accepted the appointment and took up his duties on June 19, 1978. (a) As with all labour counsellor positions, the one in Washington requires a thorough knowledge of labour relations in Canada, which can only be obtained by practical experience as an international representative of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers from 1964 to 1976, in his employment prior to this as a draftsman and aircraft designer, when he was active in the IAM in a voluntary capacity, and in his capacity as the deputy minister of labour for Manitoba from 1976 to 1977. As international representative for the IAM, Mr. Goodison has considerable knowledge of a variety of industries and of problems in several regions in Canada. This has provided him with an essential knowledge of labour affairs in Canada. At various times he was the representative for the IAM for southern Ontario, Toronto, and the prairies. Apart from supervising staff in his region, he was also responsible for co-ordinating collective bargaining in the aerospace industry at an international level, and for co-ordinating collective bargaining for all trade unions involved in the pulp and paper industry in provinces from Manitoba to Newfoundland. He acted as pension adviser to negotiators from 1967 to 1976 and has also been active in vocational education. In his capacity as deputy minister, he broadened his experience and came in contact with the other deputy ministers in Canada at meetings of deputy ministers and the Canadian Association of Administrators of Labour Legislation. In these meetings, he gained important knowledge in the field of international labour which equipped him for the position in Washington. (b) He was given the position because he was highly qualified for it. (c) The position is classified at the PM 7 level with a salary range from $27,900 to $34,900.

2. He has no annual expense account as such, but reasonable expenses connected with his position are met under the Treasury Board Directives which are applicable to all foreign service assignments. These are paid out of the over-all budget of the Department of Labour against appropriate vouchers.

3. The labour counsellor is a regular member of the embassy's staff attached to the economic section of the embassy. He is responsible for contributing to advice given to the ambassador and through him to the Canadian government with particular reference to labour matters. He is expected to report to the government generally on matters of interest in the labour field including subjects of particular interest to Labour Canada such as industrial relations developments, labour legislation and wage employment policies and trends. Placed in a broad framework of economic and social policy these reports are of interest not only to Labour Canada but to various other government departments, as well as to provincial departments of labour. He may have to investigate, at the request of the ambassador, particular issues or the labour aspects of particular issues which are of interest or concern to the over-all relationship between Canada and the United States. At the same time on behalf of the Department of Labour he has to undertake specific assignments relating to the functioning of the department and to contribute to research and policy planning projects to be undertaken by the department. He is also expected to deal with specific enquiries to the embassy concerning labour organizations and labour-management relations in Canada and on Canadian labour legislation, statistics, developments and other information. He is expected to encourage the development of accurate information on Canadian labour conditions and legislation in the United States. He has to establish and maintain contact and good working relations with the Department of Labour, other United States departments and agencies concerned with social affairs, as well as with officials of the American labour movement and employer organizations. Under the guidance of the Head of Mission, he has also to maintain contact on matters of mutual interest with provincial officials appointed to Washington, provide such assistance as is required by provincial ministers and officials visiting Washington in their official capacities, as well as assisting representatives of Canadian labour and management in making arrangements for visits to their counterparts in the U.S.

CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Question No. 1,865—Mr. Alexander:

1. Which charitable organizations were consulted prior to or during the preparation of the circular from the Department of National Revenue documenting the limits to political activity of charitable organizations with registered tax exempt status, as stated by the Prime Minister in the House on May 1, 1978, House of Commons Debates, page 5008?

2. On what dates and by whom were they consulted?

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): 1 and 2. Discussions regarding political activity by charities and the devotion of all resources to charitable activities were held, over a period of years, with individual charities in regard to those aspects of their own application for registration or their entitlement to continued registration. As such discussions fall within the confidentiality provisions of the Income Tax Act, I am not permitted to disclose either the names of those charities or details of matters discussed.

EXPORT GRAINS—PORT OF VANCOUVER

Question No. 1,866—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Did Vancouver Wharves request authority to handle bulk grain for 3 to 6 months of the year at the Port of Vancouver and, if so, was authority granted and, if not, for what reason?

2. Did Neptune Terminals request authority to handle rapeseed, wheat or barley for export at the Port of Vancouver and, if so, was authority granted and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. To the board's knowledge, no such request was made.

2. Same as 1 above.

Question No. 1,872—Mr. Orlikow:

On April 30, 1978, how many persons were employed with an annual salary of more than $27,500 in each department at the ES 2 level?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): The ES Group was converted from levels 1-5 to 1-8 effective June 28, 1976. In order to equate with the same population selected to answer questions 2,656, 2,657, 2,658 and 2,684 of May 26, 1977 the following substitutions have been made: ES 5 for ES 2; ES 6 for ES 3; ES 7 for ES 4; ES 8 for ES 5. Due to the conversion, and the delays in reporting changes in the information system, the data reported might be at variance with the actual number of employees presently employed within each level. On April 30, 1978, the number of persons employed with an annual salary of more than $27,500 in each department at the ES 5 level is shown on the list below.

Question No. 1,899—Mr. Orlikow:

On April 30, 1978, how many persons were employed with an annual salary of more than $27,500 in each department at the ES -5 level?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): The ES group was converted from levels 1-5 to 1-8 effective June 28, 1976. In order to equate with the same population selected to answer questions 2,656, 2,657, 2,658 and 2,684 of May 26, 1977 the following substitutions have been made: ES 5 for ES 2; ES 6 for ES 3; ES 7 for ES 4; ES 8 for ES 5. Due to the conversion, and the delays in reporting changes in the information system, the data reported might be at variance with the actual number of employees presently employed within each level. On April 30, 1978, the number of persons employed with an annual salary of more than $27,500 in each department at the ES-8 level is shown on the list below.

DND—CONTRACT WITH HAWKER SIDDELEY OF CANADA LTD.

Question No. 1,937—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Did the Department of National Defence place a contract with Hawker Siddeley of Canada Ltd., Toronto, for the repair and overhaul of J 79 and J 85 aircraft engines for the sum of $17,642,000 and, if so (a) how many engines of each type were involved (b) in which planes would they be used?

2. Was the contract put out to tender and, if so, was it awarded to the lowest bidder?

3. Did political clearance or socio-economic factors play any part in the awarding of the contract and, if so, which Minister or Ministers cleared it and what were the socio-economic factors considered?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): In so far as the Department of Supply and Services is concerned: 1. Hawker Siddeley of Canada Ltd.; Orenda Division, Toronto was awarded contracts totalling $17,642,000. covering the repair and overhaul of DND owned J79 and J85 aero engines and associated components. (a) The estimated number of engines covered by these contracts is 50-J79 engines together with J79/J85 associated components. (b) The J79 engine is used in the CF104, the J85-CAN-15 in the CF5, and the J85-CAN-40 in the Tutor aircraft.

2. Competition was not employed in this instance because Orenda is the only established facility in Canada possessing the necessary experience, technical knowledge, engineering expertise and test facilities for these engines.

3. Political clearance and socio-economic factors were not a consideration.

PURCHASE OF BUILDINGS BY NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

Question No. 1,938—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Has the National Harbours Board considered purchasing Nova Scotia Department of Highways maintenance and office buildings adjacent to the Fairview Container Terminal to be incorporated as part of the Terminal and, if not, will this option be considered as one measure to reduce the cost of building this facility?

2. Did the NHB develop a work schedule for the construction of the second berth at Fairview Cove and (a) if so, what is its estimated completion date (b) if not, on what date does NHB contemplate completing the berth?

3. During construction of the next berth, can the dump site be incorporated as land fill or must this waste be removed?

Hon Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. The board has not considered purchasing Nova Scotia department of highways maintenance and office buildings adjacent to the container terminal. This area will be investigated to determine whether it has any potential for development related to the container terminal recognizing it is separated from the terminal by several railroad tracks.

2. The board has not developed a work schedule for the second berth because the timing of the construction depends on the build-up of traffic to the first berth now under construction. The first berth is scheduled to be completed by the end of December, 1980.

3. Preliminary engineering studies undertaken by the province of Nova Scotia indicate that most of the dump site can be incorporated as land fill, however it will be necessary to remove some materials, rehandle and stabilize other materials and pay particular attention to pavement design when developing the second berth.

WEATHER CHECK INSULATION COMPANY

Question No. 1,939—Mr. Epp:

1. Did the government give a LEAP grant to a native operated company called "Weather Check Insulation" and, if so (a) in what amount, (b) for how long, (c) at what rate of interest?

2. Have subsequent grants or monies been given to the Company by the government and, if so (a) in what amount, (b) for how long, (c) at what rate of interest?

3. For how long has the Company been incorporated?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Employment and Immigration Commission and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as follows: 1. Yes. (a) (i) $25,922 for developmental phase; (ii) $200,000 for operational phase; (b) (i) January 17, 1977 to July 15, 1977; (ii) August 2, 1977 to July 28, 1978; (c) Not applicable.

2. Yes. (a) $17,819 for a Young Canada Works project. (b) May 29, 1978 to September 1, 1978. (c) Not applicable.

2. (a) The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development gave a $10,000 Indian Economic Development Fund grant to this company. (b) A grant is given as a one-time amount for a specific purpose. (c) No interest is charged.

3. Since May 5, 1977.

In so far as the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion are concerned: None.

PARD ASSOCIATES LIMITED

Question No. 1,944—Mr. Clark:

1. (a) What was the estimated budget provided to PARD Associates Limited of Calgary, Alberta, to conduct their study in relation to the Jasper Townsite Master Plan (b) who are the principals of PARD Associates Limited (c) by which individuals was the contract negotiated (d) by whom and on what date was the contract signed?

2. Will the government table the contract and all attendent correspondence and memoranda?

3. (a) What are the incurred costs to June 16, 1978 for the work of PARD Associates Limited (b) what was the capital expenditure (c) itemized, what are the (i) operating (ii) administrative costs?

4. What have been the advertising costs to June 16, 1978 in PARD project(s) (a) in Jasper (b) elsewhere?

5. What is the projected cost of PARD Associates Limited for their work in Jasper?

6. For how long will the study by PARD Associates Limited continue?

7. (a) On what date will the report by PARD Associates Limited be released (b) will the report be available to the public in (i) whole (ii) part and (c) if in part, who will determine which part?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) The original estimated budget provided by PARD Associates for the preparation of the Jasper townsite master plan was $102,220.; (b) Harold Hanen, Dave Diver, Jim Jones, Ted Darch; (c) Harold Hanen and Dave Diver of PARD, and officials of Parks Canada's western regional office planning staff; (d) Contract signed by Harold Hanen of PARD on July 19, 1977 and the director of the western regional office, Parks Canada, on August 2, 1977.

2. No, these documents are of a commercially confidential and internal nature, the release of which would violate the established principle of confidentiality existing between the Department and PARD Associates.

3. (a) For the master plan $98,870. Additional consulting contracts: Visible action—approx. $8,000. Residential subdivision assessment $4,900. (b) and (c) This is a consulting contract and not a capital project so that a breakdown of capital expenditure, operating and administrative costs cannot be made. However, the $98,870 can be broken down as follows: Professional fees $88,617; Expenses $10,253 (e.g. travel, printing, food, motel).

4. In an effort to maintain an effective public participation program, PARD produced 5 newspaper flyers, with an average of 4 pages per flyer. A great deal of professional planning and graphic arts time was spent to keep the flyers as concise, accurate and understandable as possible. For preparation of flyers—$6,400, for printing and distribution—$2,926. These figures do not include printing and distribution of committee minutes to residents attending public meetings. (a) and (b) Advertising costs have been about $1,500 for meetings in Jasper and Edmonton.

5. For the preparation of a master plan approximately $128,000. hiring of visible action co-ordinator $8,000. approx. preparation of residential subdivision assessment—$4,950.

6. Completion date to be October 1978.

7. (a) Draft plan-August 1978; Final plan-October 1978; (b) Both draft and final plans will be available for public review; (c) All information generated by the Jasper Planning Program has been and will continue to be available for public scrutiny.

TERMS USED BY DEPUTY MINISTER OF COMMUNICATIONS IN DIRECTIVE D-17

Question No. 1,948—Mr. Jones:

1. Define the term "development" as used by the Deputy Minister of Communications in directive D-17 to all employees on the reimbursement of course expenses policy, issued May 19, 1978.

2. Define the term "training" as used by the Deputy Minister of Communications in directive D-17 to all employees on the reimbursement of course expenses policy, issued May 19, 1978.

3. Is there a conflict in these definitions and, if so, please explain?

4. Define the term "in the interest of the Department" as used by the Deputy Minister of Communications in directive D-17 to all employees on the reimbursement of course expenses policy, issued May 19, 1978.

5. What is the real basis for acceptance under the policy of reimbursement for course expenses?

Mr. C. Douglas (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): As far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the answer to the above question is as follows: 1. The term "development", as used by the Deputy Minister of Communications, is defined in directive D-17 issued May 19, 1978 as "the planned growth of the knowledge, skill and experience of an employee so that he or she may assume more responsible and complex duties at some future time and in accordance with the projected human resource needs of the Department".

2. The term "training", as used by the Deputy Minister of Communications, is defined in directive D-17 issued May 19, 1978 as "the process of combining instruction and practice to give an employee the skill, knowledge and experience necessary to perform his or her present job efficiently and effectively".

3. There is no conflict in these definitions and in fact they are based on those provided by the Treasury Board Secretariat in the Personnel Management Manual, Chapter 110, Subchapter 7.

4. "In the interest of the department", as used by the Deputy Minister of Communications in directive D-17 issued May 19, 1978 means "to meet departmental needs . . . employees should be encouraged to participate in training and education activities that will contribute to the improvement of their performance in organizational productivity" . . . "When the training can be done outside of working hours, this method is to be preferred" . . . "Educational activities pursued outside of an employee's normal hours of work are usually less costly and less disrupting to a department." These clarifying statements are excerpted from the Treasury Board Secretariat's Personnel Management Manual, Chapter 110, Subchapter 5.

5. The real basis for acceptance under the policy of reimbursement for training course expenses is a managerial recommendation that the specific training in question is required so that the employee can perform fully in the present job activities or upcoming new project activities.

DND—POSSIBLE PURCHASE OF EQUIPMENT

Question No. 1,965—Mr. Dick:

1. Has the Department of National Defence, now, or ever purchased computer or other electronic or data processing equipment from a company named "E Systems"?

2. Did "E Systems" rent 10 rooms at the Skyline Hotel in Ottawa on December 16, 1977 for the purpose of entertaining employees of the Department of National Defence and, if so, what were the names and ranks of the Departmental employees who attended the reception?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes.

2. The Department of National Defence has no detailed knowledge of "E Systems" rentals at the Skyline Hotel or the purpose of such rentals. However, the department is aware that a number of personnel from DND were invited to a reception at the Skyline Hotel on December 16, 1977.

DEPORTATION OF MARLEEN MIRVELYN CHANCE

Question No. 1,966—Mr. Dick:

1. Did Immigration officers order the deportation of Marleen Mirvelyn Chance, a citizen of Jamaica, from Toronto on February 4, 1978?

2. Was Marleen Mirvelyn Chance subsequently released on a cash bond and did she evade a Canada-wide warrant for her arrest until her apprehension by the City of Vanier police for shoplifting on November 28, 1977?

Order Paper Questions

3. Did Immigration officers order the deportation of Marleen Mirvelyn Chance for December 3, 1977 and did the Minister of Employment and Immigration stay the deportation order on December 2, 1977 pending the issuance of a special Minister's permit to Marleen Mirvelyn Chance and, if such a permit was issued for what reasons was it issued?

4. Did Marleen Mirvelyn Chance work in the Privy Council Office as a full-time employee for five months prior to her apprehension by City of Vanier police and, if so, did she work under the name Marleen Mirvelyn Chance and did she pass security clearance?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and the Prime Minister's and Privy Council offices as follows: 1. Marleen Mirvelyn Chance was ordered deported February 4, 1974.

2. Yes.

3. Deportation order was effected on December 3, 1977. The minister did not stay the deportation order and there was no special minister's permit issued to Marleen Mirvelyn Chance.

4. No. Marleen Mirvelyn Chance was employed by the Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration.

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

Question No. 1,968—Mr. Alexander:

1. For the years (a) 1976 (b) 1977 (c) 1978 to date, how many cases of racial discrimination involving Canadian immigration officials were registered?

2. How many cases have been investigated?

3. How many cases have been determined as unfounded?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. No register of such allegations is maintained.

2. All such complaints are investigated.

3. No substantiated cases have been identified.

METRIC COMMISSION MAILING LISTS

Question No. 1,969—Mr. Beatty:

1. For the current year, how many different mailing lists does the Metric Commission have and what is the nature of each list?

2. How many names are on each list?

3. How many names appear on more than one list?

4. How many names appear more than once on the same list?

5. How often are the lists updated?

6. How often are checks done to determine whether an individual on a list is from the same organization as other individuals on the same list?

7. How is it possible that in June 1978 the Kitchener-Waterloo Record in Kitchener, Ontario received 17 copies of the same booklet on international metric symbols?

8. In 1978, what was the cost to the taxpayer for other duplications by the Metric Commission?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. Metric Commission Canada (MCC) has a computerized mailing list that allows for multiple sorts, currently subdivided into 1,036 different sub-mailing lists. These consist of addresses of members of steering and sector committees, their sub-committees, working groups, task forces and other organizations part of metric conversion structure; national associations, members of parliament, major enterprises and officials thereof; metric conversion officers in federal, provincial and municipal governments and private enterprises, the media, and the Canadian public requesting MCC publications. These lists are required to carry on the various direct mailings in order to satisfy the various information needs of differing Canadian publics.

2. There are approximately 80,000 names on the MCC mailing list. Each sub-list consists of two to 2,000 names.

3. There are approximately 2,000 steering and sector committee members, approximately 30,000 companies, and 4,000 miscellaneous names on more than one sub-list, for meeting various mailing requirements. A person can be on more than one sub-mailing list up to a maximum of 10 different lists. The computer is programmed, however, to produce one label where the person belongs to several sub-lists.

4. Names do not appear on the same sub-list more than once. Before adding names to any sub-mailing list, the alphabetical file is checked to ensure names are not already on.

5. The sub-mailing lists are updated once a month.

6. There may be several individuals belonging to the same organization on the mailing list by their own request. Metric Commission Canada tries to encourage persons to receive bulk distributions within their organization.

7. The Kitchener-Waterloo Record received additional copies of a special mailing of "How to Write SI" due to a computer error which has since been corrected.

8. Metric Commission Canada's mailing list procedure is to avoid duplication. This has not recently lead to any other duplication errors or to additional costs.

BRIEFCASES

Question No. 1,977—Mr. Beatty:

What amount was spent by the government to supply briefcases to employees in (a) 1976 (b) 1977?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): (a) 1976-77: $69,843.00; (b) 1977-78: $33,728.00.

ANNUAL ELECTRICITY BILL

Question No. 1,983—Mr. Beatty:

What was the government's annual bill for electricity for (a) 1975-76 (b) 1976-77?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Public Works Canada pays electricity bills from one line object. In some cases electricity is included as part of a lease and a separate figure is not kept. The following expenditures were made from Public Works Canada appropriations in:

(a) 1975-76	$19,728
(b) 1976-77	$23,633

STEPS TO BYTOWN MUSEUM

Question No. 1,987—Mr. Stevens:

What is the estimated total cost of the steps to the Bytown Museum currently under construction?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is not building steps to the Bytown Museum. See reply to question No. 1,960 answered this day.

BANK OF CANADA BUILDING

Question No. 1,989—Mr. Stevens:

What is the total expenditure to date on the new Bank of Canada Building, including all architectural, consultants and inspection fees, and the cost of "fitting-up" the Building, including the cost of office furniture and special purpose facilities?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): To June 30, 1978, $53.5 million.

CN TOWER

Question No. 1,991—Mr. Stevens:

1. What is the total overall (all inclusive) cost of the CN Tower in Toronto to date?

2. What is the Tower's total profit or loss to date?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. Total cost of the CN Tower to date is $57.7 million.

2. Tower's total profit before interest during the period June, 1976 to June, 1978 is $3.5 million.

CHURCHILL RESEARCH RANGE

Question No. 1,996—Mr. Jones:

1. How long will the temporary satellite support facility at the Churchill Research Range, Manitoba be used for the purpose for which it is being established? Will the facility be converted to any other use after this project is complete?

2. How much money is Japan spending on this project? Give the ratio of construction funds to maintenance funds. How much money is Canada spending on this project? Give the ratio of construction funds to maintenance funds. What agency or agencies will be funding this project?

3. Will Canada use the information gathered by the temporary satellite support facility and if so, how? Does Canada have any projects currently in progress to study the aurora polaris and if so, give the agency and/or agencies who are involved with this.

4. How many Canadian scientists and technicians will be employed at this facility? How many Japanese scientists and technicians will be employed at this facility? Will other nations be sending scientists to this project, whether on a temporary or permanent assignment? How many new jobs will this create in the area?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned the answer is as follows: 1. (a) At least until February, 1979. (b) If the satellite and systems are still operating at that time, it will probably be continued for another year. (c) The station will be returned to Japan after the project is completed.

2. (a) Unknown (b) unknown (c) none (d) n/a (e) this project is funded by the University of Tokyo.

3. (a) The data gathered by the facility is available to Canadian scientists. (b) Canada does have projects to study the aurora borealis, and NRC has sponsored these studies for over 20 years.

4. (a) and (b) No Canadian scientists are employed at the facility. It is operated by one Japanese scientist, one Japanese technician and one Canadian technician. (c) No other nations are involved. (d) One new job was created at Churchill.

FOREIGN WORKERS

Question No. 1,997—Mr. Jones:

1. Who is responsible to ensure that the entry of foreign workers is closely related to the needs of the Canadian labour market?

2. How is the ratio between the entry of foreign workers and Canadians and permanent legal residents related to the needs of the Canadian labour market? What is the ratio of Canadian to non-Canadian in the current unemployment figures?

3. How does the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission become aware of discrepancies in employment of non-Canadians in positions for which Canadians and permanent legal residents are qualified?

4. Does each province have their own immigration quotas and if so, what is the current quota per province.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. The Canada Employment and Immigration Commission has this responsibility under the Immigration Act, 1976.

2. The "entry of foreign workers" falls into two categories:—immigrants who intend to enter the labour force, and—temporary workers granted employment authorizations to enable them to enter Canada to take up a particular position for a specified period of time. Independent or "other" immigrants are selected in accordance with criteria, specified in the Immigration Regulations, designed to ensure that immigrants and Canadian residents complement each other, rather than competing. In the case of temporary workers, the Commission seeks to ensure that no Canadian worker is available to take the job in question. Statistics Canada does not identify labour force member by citizenship, so it is impossible to identify the non-citizen/citizen ratio of the unemployed.

3. Normally, the commission will first become aware that an employer wishes to employ a foreign worker when that employer contacts a Canada Employment Centre or when the foreign worker approaches the immigration post abroad. The application is then dealt with according to the Immigration Act and Regulations. The Commission may become aware of a situation where employment of non-Canadians is concerned through the mass media, informal conversations, employer visits, etc. There is, however, no formal information gathering system to inform the Commission of such a situation.

4. Provinces do not have their own immigration quotas. The Immigration Act, 1976 does make provision for the establishment of levels of immigration in consultation with the provinces. This consultation is now under way.

REGULATIONS GOVERNING PROGRAMMING ON CBC

Question No. 1,998—Mr. Jones:

1. What are the regulations which govern programming aired on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation networks across Canada which have been locally produced? Who determines these regulations?

2. Do these regulations differ with each region or province in Canada?

3. Do the opinions voiced by the viewing public have an influence on the airing of programs over the CBC network?

4. Once a program meets the regulations, can it be aired anywhere in Canada without re-examination for suitability?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. The CBC has developed a set of policies which apply to all facets of programming, national and local. Some of these policies arise from the statutory requirements of the Broadcasting Act, some from the regulations of the CRTC, some from provisions of the Criminal Code, and others have been formulated by CBC management.

2. The policies apply at all CBC locations.

3. In both radio and television, the audience is welcome to make its views known to the CBC, and these are taken into consideration by producers and program planners in developing and improving programs. In addition, information is sought on the opinions of television audiences through audience surveys and the CBC's own audience panel, which studies the enjoyment of programs.

4. Since the regulations and policies governing programs are the same across Canada, regionally-produced programs may also be broadcast nationally or in other regional centres.

MR. VICTOR CHAPMAN

Question No. 2,000—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 2,441 of the Second Session of the 30th Parliament which stated that certain specific sums of money were received by Intertask Limited and/or Vic Chapman for certain services, is the government aware that a press statement was issued by Mr. Paul Akehurst of Intertask Limited stating that no such money was received and, if so, how does the government explain this discrepancy?

STARRED QUESTIONS

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Furthermore, there are four starred questions which will be answered. However, two of them are very long and would take a lot of the time of the House. I ask for leave to table them so that they can simply be printed in Hansard.

Order Paper Questions

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

[Editor's Note: The list above referred to is as follows:]

Nos. 1,361, 1,480, 1,855 and 1,936.

*"THE WESTERN GRAIN STORY"

Question No. 1,361—Mr. Cadieu:

Was the booklet The Western Grain Story paid for by the Wheat Board or by the Department of Agriculture and, if so, what was the cost?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The booklet "The Western Grain Story" was paid for by my department at a cost of $25,612.19. This amount includes the cost for mailing the publication.

*CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER'S STAFF

Question No. 1,480—Mr. Towers:

1. As of March 1, 1978, what was the total number on staff in the Chief Electoral Office, Ottawa?

2. Does the Chief Electoral Officer have personnel under his jurisdiction, other than at his Ottawa office and, if so, what is the number of persons and the location in each case?

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Chief Electoral Officer as follows: Part 1: Forty two permanent employees, including the Chief Electoral Officer, and two term employees. Part 2: No (see note).

NOTE: Pursuant to the Canada Elections Act a returning officer is appointed by the Governor in Council for each electoral district. While, pursuant to the act, they are subject to direction by the Chief Electoral Officer, they are not on his staff.

*Phase 3—Canada Works Program

*CANADIAN PHYSICIANS

Question No. 1,936—Mr. Rynard:

1. During the year 1977, how many physicians engaged in (a) general practice, (b) teaching and medical research, (c) specialty practice, have emigrated from Canada?

2. What is the percentage of graduating physicians over the attrition rate?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The number of Canadian physicians who emigrated from Canada in 1977 is not known precisely. Based upon preliminary Canadian records it is estimated that 733 active civilian physicians left Canada in 1977. Of these, 278 were general practitioners, 271 were specialists and 184 were interns or residents. The number in teaching or in medical research is not known. The 733 physicians who left the country may include not only permanent emigrants, but also physicians going abroad for further training, as exchange visitors, or for other "temporary" reasons. On the other hand, some additional physicians may have gone abroad, but no record of their departure could be identified.

2. The number of graduates of Canadian Medical Schools in 1977 was 1,704. The total number of physicians becoming "active" in 1977 was 2,136. The total number of physicians who ceased to be active was 1,930. The losses were more than offset not only by the new graduates, but also by immigrants and other new entrants into the system, as well as by physicians regaining active status. On the basis of preliminary data it is estimated that the total supply of active civilian physicians increased by about 1,000 in 1977.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. BEATTY—METHOD USED IN ANSWERING WRITTEN QUESTIONS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the parliamentary secretary did not follow the customary procedure which is to make available to the various parties a list of the questions which he intends to answer that day. I certainly give my consent to the questions being answered the way they have been but it leaves us in the difficult position that the questions which have not been answered in today's answers are not known to us and we will not know what they are until we see the list.

Traditionally it has been possible to draw the attention of the parliamentary secretary and of the House to the fact that the government has been tardy in responding to questions. The only way we can do that is if we know what questions have been answered. As it is, we cannot draw the attention of the parliamentary secretary to those questions beforehand because of the arrangement scheduled for today.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member's question is purely academic. Even if he had known in advance which questions would remain unanswered today nothing would have been changed. We intend to prorogue today and begin a new session tomorrow.

Anyhow, Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the following fact to the attention of the House: We have answered 1,761 of 2,003 questions, that is an 87.9 per cent ratio, which is excellent. And, Mr. Speaker, I will add that following the instruction which I gave to my staff this morning to answer as many questions as possible, I received the list of answers only some 20 minutes ago.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved that the Fifth Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, presented to the House on Wednesday, June 28, 1978, be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think it is a very good time at the end of this rather lackadasical session of parliament, where the government has staggered from crisis to crisis, to deal with an issue which might well precipitate some form of renewed activity so that the public, and particularly the media, will know what parliament is doing. I hasten to say that I am not being partisan in making that statement. I have the highest regard for the welfare of the country and the welfare of this parliament. If I say things that may sound biased it is entirely through my desire to see things improve in this country.

● (1552)

The first thing I want to bring to the attention of hon. members is a rather novel departure in procedure in connection with the committee hearing in question which produced its fifth report. As this was a committee charged with responsibility by this House to look at the question of freedom of information it was decided that our session, in drafting the report, would be held in public. This was not challenged. It was the view of members on all sides of this House and of the other place that the meeting was an open meeting. Members of the press were present. I recommend this suggestion to other committees dealing with issues involved in drafting reports.

In this House we sit in public in committee of the whole. We have just finished dealing with a bill in committee of the whole. I think it is important that the public know precisely what the views are of hon. members, whether they are voting for or against the bill in general, and on particular issues. However, I do say that there may be occasions when it is essential for hearings to be held in camera. It would be desirable, with the kind of climate that now exists, for more committees to follow the example which we have set. We did set it with some trepidation. However it worked out very well. As well it was quite an accommodation to members on all sides of the House. Their positions are public by the fact that their voting was public.

Members on both sides and from both Houses almost unanimously were in favour of this report, with one or two variations. It represents an attitude of the House of Commons and the Senate. Hopefully it may yet be the position of the government. I see the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) over there, sphynx-like. He is engaged in drafting legislation, I understand.

Subsequent to the passing of this fifth report, its tabling and filing, I and other members of the committee have received recommendations, and positions have been stated by some 40 or 50 organizations—I am sure the Secretary of State has received them as well—highly recommending the stand taken by this committee. I hope the Secretary of State and the government in drafting legislation, will largely follow the recommendations of the committee. I look forward to this being mentioned in the Speech from the Throne.

In bringing this report forward we are in a way complying with the urgings of the Secretary of State. He has had this matter under his responsibility for some time. He has been urging us to do something about it so that he might have the benefit of our advice. He now has that before him. It is virtually a unanimous report, and I hope that 99.9 per cent of those recommendations will find their way into the bill which is probably being considered by his experts at this time.

It is a particularly useful time to consider this. Recently a situation was brought to my attention and to the attention of this House by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis) where the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) made an obvious attempt to hobble, frustrate and inhibit the workings of the royal commission which is inquiring into the conduct of the Mounted Police at this very critical stage. The commission will now engage itself in finding out the extent to which the government and members of the government were aware of what was going on, were party to what was going on, may even have recommended some of the things that went on, and certainly were privy to the information shortly afterwards.

We are now looking sqarely at the government as to the question of whether there is culpability on its part. I think that the public are entitled to know this. Here we find a Solicitor General with unmitigated gall engaging in the very dangerous conduct of instructing his counsel to appear before the royal commission, not only as my hon. friend from Perth-Wilmot said, to make propositions which are entirely contrary to what we understood and what I think were quite plainly the original intentions of the course that the government was going to take with regard to the question of government information, but going even further, and I am now reading from the Ottawa Citizen of October 5. It refers to Mr. Joseph Nuss who represented the Solicitor General. The article reads:

> The lawyer cited the Human Rights Act, the bill now before parliament to establish the office of ombudsman, and the green paper on public access to government documents, now before a joint Commons-Senate committee, to show there are recognized exceptions to the disclosure principle.

This is the sort of conduct which we have been expecting from this mobile disaster who occupies the position of Solicitor General. He is suggesting that merely because there is a bill before the House, once the government has brought a bill down, as his counsel suggests about the ombudsman bill, that is then holy writ, that has all the earmarks of divine writ, it must be binding upon this House, and he wants it to be binding upon the McDonald royal commission.

We now turn to the green paper. Parts of the green paper were good, and I have already commended the Secretary of State in that respect. Parts are very bad and will have to be substantially altered. The green paper is simply a document put out by a government making certain proposals to be considered by parliament. I think it is just unmitigated gall for the Solicitor General to instruct his counsel to say that the material contained in this green paper must be accepted by the royal commission as being within the words used by his counsel, "a recognized exception to the disclosure principle".

I will not have time, Mr. Speaker, nor do I intend to even if I did have, to go into all the details of the recommendations made by the committee. The committee made it quite plain that they rejected a great many of the proposals for exemptions contained in the green paper. I am sure that that information must have been known to the Solicitor General.

The Solicitor General is a minister of the Crown charged with responsibility in matters of this kind. He must have been aware, or ought to have been aware, of what this committee, composed of members of the other place and members of this House, members who were representing both sides of the House, had said. Despite that, the Solicitor General instructs his counsel to say that what appears in the green paper must be foisted on the royal commission, and the royal commission has no alternative but to accept it. I have not had a chance to read the transcript so I do not know what Mr. Justice McDonald, the chairman, will do about it. However, I think he will be glad to hear from members of this House as to their views respecting the kind of conduct on the part of the Solicitor General concerning his view as to how limited the evidence ought to be that is presented to the royal commission. That is what freedom of information and disclosure is all about.

A suggestion has been made in the media, here and elsewhere, that despite protestations to the contrary members of the government, during the pertinent times of 1971, 1972 and later, were aware of and might even have been privy to some of the actions engaged in by the security forces. That is a moot point on which this commission has to hear evidence and come to a decision.

In addition to the royal commission, surely this House and members of the public are entitled to hear the evidence, unless that evidence goes right to the root of national defence or criminal investigation. Surely this House and the members of the public are entitled to know what evidence will be given by cabinet ministers or those close to them, so that they can form their own opinion as to whether or not members of this government were aware in 1971, 1972 or 1973 of what was going on. I say that because I, in company with a great many other thousands of Canadians, believe that what was done was done with a certain knowledge of government ministers at the time.

We are entitled to hear that evidence and come to a conclusion. If we are wrong, if the evidence is to the contrary, I will accept it and that will be the end of it. However, so long as that evidence is going to be given in camera, guarded from public view, suspicion will continue to lurk in the minds of tens of thousands of people that the government has been engaged in a gigantic game of cover-up. With the state of the political situtation in this country at the present time, that would be a disaster.

We read of proposition 13 and of governments being defeated. There is no doubt in the minds of those of us who travel around Canada and in other democratic countries that governments of today have engaged in such conduct over the last few years that they have thoroughly lost the confidence of the public they represent.

Even though I am in complete disagreement with my hon. friends opposite, I consider this to be a very dangerous situation. We cannot govern unless there is a measure of co-operation and confidence between the government and the governed. Credibility is essential. It is a condition precedent to good government. When that credibility is destroyed, it is a precious asset which cannot be easily regained.

The attempt by the Solicitor General in this particular matter to engage in what can only be construed as being further cover-up is something which must be mentioned in this

[Mr. Baldwin.]

House. I hope that other members of this House will pay attention to it before this matter is disposed of.

The other aspect which invites some attention in connection with this issue was the attempt by the Unemployment Insurance Commission recently to give instruction to its regional offices that statistical information which they were able to gather and amass on the question of unemployment in their regions must not be made public. The reason assigned was that this would be embarrassing to the minister. Ministers who are privy to this kind of instruction being given need to be embarrassed. They need to be embarrassed very much.

I now want to quote from a transcript of a letter from the deputy minister to the executive directors. Fortunately, I am protected by my privileges in this House and not subject to the Official Secrets Act which otherwise I might well be. As Your Honour and members of the House know, the Official Secrets Act is such a ridiculous, obscene monster that if I were to take this document and read it outside, I would be subject to the provisions of the Official Secrets Act. I consider I still have some more useful functions before I find a safe sojourn in a sunlit, southern exposed cell. The letter dated May 15, 1978, reads in part:

> There certainly would be no objection to the development of local area estimates of numbers of unemployed or employed, particularly by occupation or industry. These I agree are necessary to support regional planning. However, it is important that the estimates of unemployment number should be kept confidential and their circulation limited in the manner described in the policy. . . . As you know, these estimates have been a source of some embarrassment for the minister because of their potential conflict with the labour surplus rates in the Canada Works program. Since it is not clear to me why you need them, nor have any reasons per se been given for their development, I would suggest that we avoid producing them.

That is the stuff upon which members of parliament, the public, and the media are entitled to assess and evaluate the conduct and manner in which government carries on its operations. If there is, as there obviously was in this case, a clear conflict between the probably more favourable figures conceived after a very brief period of gestation and produced by the minister here and the figures gathered by the regional directors, the public is entitled to know.

Unemployment is too serious to be made the subject of a directive of that kind. I call that to the attention of members in the hope that when I come to deal very briefly with the contents of the report, there will be approval. I hope members opposite will approve.

As they may be aware, the national Liberal party, gathered together in session a year and a half ago, moved a motion seeking a freedom of information act with a review process to the courts and with reasonable exemptions. They followed the path which had been hewed by this party and had been one of our platforms for a number of years. I welcomed that in the national Liberal party.

Hon. members sitting here today who may be called upon to vote will have to make a very serious assessment. Are they going to approve a recommendation from an all-party committee from both Houses which recommends very strongly certain reasonable provisions to be contained in a bill and which follow generally along the lines which this party, my friends on my left, the social credit party, the Creditistes, and the National Liberal Federation have approved? Will hon. members follow along those lines; will they defy their own party and vote for the kind of legislation which will make provision for freedom of information?

Finally, may I just run through some of the provisions in the report which I think are worthy of being pointed out. We attempted to deal with the very difficult question of national security. The words national security have, ever since the days of the late Joseph McCarthy, been used by governments for the purpose of covering up information which has no real relation to the sensitive character of national defence or matters related to it. It has been used and abused too frequently.

With this in mind, we recommended that we should have an exemption along these lines covering documents the disclosure of which could be reasonably expected to be detrimental to the national defence. I think that makes the situation pretty plain.

We went on to provide for documents the disclosure of which could be reasonably expected to be detrimental to federal-provincial relations, something we would all expect, cabinet documents, policy advice, law enforcement, the disclosure of documents which would have a significant adverse effect on law enforcement activities, personal privacy, legal opinions, commercial or financial information on statutory exemptions.

Finally, we went on to make it quite plain that there should be a two-tier review. In the opinion of all members of the committee, from our experience in listening to a great many witnesses, we felt that when the act is passed and comes into effect, where there is an application by a member of the public for production of a document and that request is rejected, there should be an appeal in the first instance to a parliamentary commissioner with some knowledge of the proceedings and some knowledge of the act and the jurisprudence which would be built up. That officer, by use of the telephone, would be able in probably 95 per cent of the cases to telephone information officers in each department. There are many information officers and PR people whose present job is mainly to put wings and halos on their ministers, and I think they could be more usefully employed in providing information to the public. Probably 90 per cent of the documents requested would be covered in an appeal process in that way.

In a very small percentage of cases where the commissioner is unable to work out a deal with the information officers of each department there would be a simple procedure of an appeal to the federal court. That met the approval of all members of the committee.

The final issue, and I am glad to say that this was a matter raised by one of the hon. members on the other side, was the problem many of us have experienced sitting in committees faced with ministers and senior civil sevants who refuse to provide information on questioning, on the ground that it is subject to Crown privilege. They will now be compelled to answer. This was put forward in our last recommendation, and I am going to take the time to read it.

> Your committee is of the opinion that no claim to Crown privilege should prevail against a freedom of information statute and that members of parliament should have the right to receive documents without regard to Crown privilege. Your committee therefore recommends that the Standing Orders be amended accordingly.

The effect of that would be that any member of this House appearing before a committee would have the right to demand, subject to the exemptions which I have already mentioned, that the minister no longer hide behind the facade of Crown privilege, must answer questions which are put to him and must produce documents which are relevant to the issue. I think that would go a long way toward making the committees the adornment to the House which they ought to be.

I have recently been reading a book entitled "Your Disobedient Servant" written by a talented and patriotic English former civil sevant who held a very senior position in the public service of England. He was the regional director of PSA, Property Services Agency, for the five southern counties of England. He had developed a method of saving considerable money in co-ordination with the unions and in co-ordination with his employees. As a result of his inquiries over a period of three years he had been able to save, from a budget of 11.5 million pounds or 12 million pounds sterling directed entirely to property maintenance, 3.5 million pounds, which I take to be between 30 per cent and 35 per cent.

In attempting to put this information before the permanent secretary of his department and before his colleagues who were also directors, he met a very considerable measure of resistance. It was not from the members of the public service in the lower echelons; it was from those at the top who disliked very much having one of their colleagues being able to produce statistical information showing that he was making savings which they were unable to comprehend.

They challenged his assertion. The permanent secretary challenged his assertion, and ultimately the matter landed up before the public accounts committee. The public accounts committee examined the permanent secretary and the issues and came up with a very strong recommendation that savings were indeed possible in this way. However, the committee then attempted to call the civil servant, who had since resigned—Mr. Leslie Chapman—as a witness so that he could give greater detail as to the way in which he had been able to bring about these savings.

These were the simple, homely savings which we make with respect to our own homes or in our own businesses. This was not a matter of saying, "We are going to take 20 per cent off the estimates for this department". These were the simple, sensible savings which should have been engaged in by government some time before.

What happened? Mr. Chapman, attempting to appear before this committee to give evidence as to the extent to which savings could be made, was told that if he did appear and did produce facts and information to back up his statement, he would be prosecuted under the Official Secrets Act!

This is a situation which—let us not kid ourselves—exists in this country.

I talked to Mr. Walter Rudnicki not so long ago. We all know who he is. He told me that in many instances he had heard and had been present when civil servants had been threatened with the Official Secrets Act if they were to divulge information which this country, this House and the public needed.

This is the background to my motion on behalf of the committee that the House concur in this report so that when the government does come to bring in its legislation, it will take courage in its hands and bring in a bill which will work, not a bill which will be simply used to cover up government embarrassment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am a little puzzled as to the timing the hon. member has chosen to move the adoption of this report. I am a little puzzled because there has been ample opportunity over the past few months for various members and, indeed, for political parties, to put on record their positions in relation to freedom of information.

I tabled the green paper in the House in June of 1977. On that occasion both I and the hon. member spoke. I was glad that in his remarks today he mentioned that there were aspects of the green paper which he commended as well as, understandably, a finding that it contained aspects with which he could not agree. That, of course, is the purpose of the green paper procedure. It is a method by which a government can present to the public and to parliamentarians some of the background to a problem, often giving a range of solutions which are possible so that there can be a basis for discussion, for argument, and for debate over how perceived problems can be dealt with.

I was afraid that at some stage the green paper would be misinterpreted as being an indication of firm government policy positions. That, of course, is not the purpose of green papers. I hope that the initial reaction on that part of the public that the green paper contained, either explicitly or in some veiled fashion, a hard and fast determined government policy has now been dispelled. I think to some extent the hon. member's remarks recognized that the purpose of the green paper was for discussion and that in it there were things one would want to support and things which, on reflection, one would disagree.

Subsequent to the presentation of the green paper in June, 1977, there was a debate in the House in December of 1977 in which both I and the hon. member spoke. On May 30, when the green paper was discussed in the joint committee, I was present and responded to questions put by the hon. member. Then a very short time before the adjournment of the House last June, on June 9, 1978, we again debated the issue, and the hon. member, speaking for his side of the House, presented his point of view, and I gave the position of the government.

Within the last 15 months there have been several occasions on which this matter has been discussed in the House. Parliamentarians have had the opportunity to present their views. That is why there was a little puzzlement on my part today that the hon. member should return to this subject. He knows, as most hon. members know, that there is a firm commitment on the part of the government to bring forward legislation on this subject in the session which will start tomorrow.

Mr. Baldwin: If you accept my motion, I will withdraw my speech.

Mr. Roberts: The hon. member says that he would withdraw his speech if I were to accept his motion. I am glad that it is impossible for us to withdraw his speech. I am glad that is the case because I always enjoy listening to him speak, particularly when, as he did today, he protests that he is speaking in a completely non-partisan way. It is not always as evident to me as it is to the hon. gentleman that he speaks in a non-partisan way, but I always accept his remarks, I hope with the spirit with which they are intended, and it is indeed true that on occasion one finds interest and helpfulness in his comment.

● (1622)

In the first part of my remarks I wish to direct myself to the question as to why this should be discussed now and to reaffirm the commitment which has already been made and which hon. members have heard, namely that the House will be presented, in the session which starts tomorrow, with legislation on this issue. It gives me a chance to reaffirm the government's conviction that there must indeed be freedom of information legislation which gives a better guarantee to the public that there will be access to documents which are prepared on their behalf within the confines of government administration.

Since I have referred to the deliberations of the joint committee, I want to say as well that I have found those deliberations to be extremely useful. I welcome as well the endorsation which is contained in the report, presented to parliament earlier today, of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada, which appears in its recommendation No. 11 which reads as follows:

> Second, we believe there should be provision for reasonable access to government documents and records. We would not wish to attempt to spell out in a constitution precise requirements as to the ready availability of information, but we think that some obligation on the government to inform the people should be made explicit in a charter of rights. Without knowledge, there can be no democracy.

The principles and the spirit which inspired that recommendation are ones with which I and the government are totally in accord, so we welcome this further recommendation from other members as to the desirability of proceeding quickly with freedom of information legislation.

The hon. gentleman also referred to the recommendations which he had received since the publication of the interim report of the joint committee. I would be grateful if he could forward copies of those to me. Undoubtedly many people who have written to him have also written to me, but the work of the joint committee is not entirely terminated and I would still like to have further counsel. It is true, as the hon. member knows, that we are in the very process of drafting legislation to be presented to the House in the next session, but it is not too late for useful comment and advice to be received from the committee, from the hon. member, and from people who have written to him. I am sure he will give me the undertaking to communicate to me those views which he has most recently received.

The joint committee reported to parliament again in June. As I promised to the committee when I appeared before it, I sought and I received the agreement of my cabinet colleagues to begin drafting legislation on public access to government documents. That work is well under way, and I am committed to coming before the House in the coming session of parliament with legislation which would enshrine a more open government, greater access to government files, and freedom of information.

In his interjection the hon. member said that if I would simply support his motion, he need not give a speech—at least I think that is what he said. That brings me to the second reason why I cannot accept his motion, the first one being my selfish wish not to deny myself the pleasure of hearing him speak. The second reason is that I think the endorsation of the committee report would present some difficulties.

There are two reasons why I would counsel members of the House not to accept too quickly the recommendations of the joint committee. The first is that I believe in many areas the committee's recommendations are not sufficiently rigorous and that they do not impose a sufficiently strong obligation upon the government. I am referring particularly to the drafting of the list of exemptions. The committee agreed that there would be a necessity for having some areas, however rigorously defined, in which documents would not automatically be available to the public.

I think that all members of the House, although there might be one or two exceptions, would accept the principle that there are some areas, no matter how limited, in which there must be exemptions to the general principle, which the government certainly affirms and endorses, that information should be available to the public. So the question is how those limitations are to be drafted? How are the exemptions to the general principle of open access to be described? Obviously the narrower those exemptions are drafted, the greater will be the access to public documents.

One of my concerns is that if we were to adopt holus-bolus the wording that has been suggested to us by the committee, then the exemptions to the general principle of freedom of information would be too large and would exclude much which need not be kept from the public and which should be in the public domain. I believe that we on the government side will be able to present to the House a series of exemptions which are narrower in scope than those presented by the joint parliamentary committee and thus would better meet the objective, which is my objective and that of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), of having a narrowly confined area of limitation to the principle of openness in government. Of course, this may well be the subject of debate and it may be that the hon. member might feel we have not succeeded in that task, but I believe we will be able to present to the House a series of limitations which would be more effective in doing what the hon. member and I wish to do than are the exemptions listed in the joint committee's report. That is one reason why I would counsel my colleagues not to accept the hon. member's motion.

The second reason why I would resist such a step and urge hon. members not to take it is the whole question of referring appeals to the courts. I have a genuine concern regarding one of the comments which the hon. member made because it may be that I misunderstood him. Or perhaps he has misunderstood the committee's report and I would welcome hearing from him, if not now then later, on whether I have somehow misinterpreted the committee's report. The hon. member discussed the possibility of appeals from decision of the information commissioner to the court system. I believe he has suggested or implied that there would be a simple appeal to the federal court and that that would terminate the matter.

May I quote a paragraph from the committee report on page 7? It reads:

> Your committee also recommends that a decision of a trial judge of the federal court be appealable to the federal court of appeal and with leave to the Supreme Court of Canada. Your committee suggests that costs shall ordinarily follow the event unless the court otherwise directs.

It appears to me that the committee's recommendation was not that there be a simple and direct appeal to the federal court from a decision of the information commissioner, but there should be a possibility of an appeal to the court which would itself be appealable, not once but a second time. Therefore the whole structure of the appeal process to the court system could be invoked. It did not seem to me to be quite what he was saying earlier in the House. Perhaps there is misunderstanding on my part or perhaps I have misinterpreted the hon. member's wording, but it seemed to me that in his remarks, unintentionally of course, he distorted the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister has indicated, quite properly, what the committee stated. My intention was to advise the House of the fact that there was an appeal which initiated the usual process by coming into the federal court, and from the federal court, if necessary, into the further stage. The minister is right in his assumption and what I intended to say was that what the committee recommended was what had my approval, and it was with that I was dealing.

Mr. Roberts: I thank the hon. member for his clarification because otherwise there might have been an unintentional misunderstanding. I singled out the point, not to quibble with it but because I think it is of some importance. The concern which I have always expressed before the committee and before members of the House has been that the use of the court process as a review procedure would be cumbersome and expensive. Obviously if the use of the courts involves a system of appeals which the committee had indicated it felt was desirable, it would make the system of appeals from the decisions of the information commissioner all the more expensive and time consuming. This, to my mind, is something to be avoided. In the system which reviews ministerial decisions certain matters should be exempted; it should be a system which would be speedy and not costly. Indeed, there were groups which appeared before the committee which shared that point of view.

I remember particularly the anti-poverty organization which expressed concern or opposed appeals to the court system exactly on the grounds that such a costly and time consuming procedure would, in their belief, militate against the position of their group. In the past I have indicated to hon. members of the House my concern about reliance upon the courts to determine in all cases this question of public interest.

• (1632)

Mr. Baldwin: One group suggested that there should be an appeal from the courts to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Roberts: As the hon. member for Peace River has pointed out, some people have suggested that the proper way to deal with this question of who is to review ministerial decisions would be to have an appeal to the Prime Minister. I am sure the fairness of that suggestion will recommend itself to the hon. member, but perhaps he will wish to reflect longer before we unanimously endorse the recommendation to pursue that direction.

I wanted to say a few more words about the difficult question as to whether the review process should be in the hands of the courts. I am sure we all agree that there should be a review process. The question as to whether a matter falls within an exemption is not one which should be simply and exclusively within the hands of the minister. The demands of public credibility require a method for assuring that a minister's decision has not been taken frivolously or without due concern for all aspects which touch upon the question.

I have expressed my difficulties to the House previously concerning the idea that the courts, in all cases and in relation to all subjects, are the best method of reviewing that kind of decision. I am second to no one in the House in my admiration for our judges and their ability to interpret properly the will of parliament as expressed in the black letter law. However, it is another question to call upon them to make judgments of interpretation of the public interest as opposed simply to rendering the text of the law. Indeed there are many areas in which parliament, in its wisdom, has decided that the courts are not effective or able in such a task. For instance, one thinks of the development of various aspects of administrative law in which parliament has decided that those responsibilities should be exercised by those who are other than judges.

Indeed, I suspect that many judges would not like to have the responsibility of pronouncing upon what is in the public interest, rather than interpreting or applying black letter law. After all, it is our parliamentary and political institutions which are the way in which the community decides what social, moral, and political objectives are to be pursued by society. It is within the political process that the assessments of public interest are to be taken. Fallible or not, it is the ministers who are responsible to the House of Commons and parliament for the exercise of those responsibilities.

Certainly it is not clear that we could supplement the ministerial role by an appeal to the courts in all cases where it is necessary to reach a decision as to whether public interest is met by allowing an appeal within the context of an exemption. In many instances parliament has provided possibilities of review through an officer of parliament rather than an outside court, such as the case of the Auditor General. Perhaps parliament will wish to have an officer to perform the role of independent review, rather than having access to the courts, particularly in the cumbersome way recommended by the committee. When the legislation is delivered to the House in the next session, perhaps parliament would prefer to consider other mechanisms than that of judicial review embodied in the report of the committee.

It is for those reasons, recognizing the spirit which motivated the hon. member to make his motion, that I feel it would not be effective to urge my colleagues to support his resolution. At this particular time, I urge hon. members to regard objectively the legislation the government will present as soon as possible in the next session of parliament.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as Your Honour knows, because I so indicated to you approximately an hour ago, it was not my intention to take part in this debate.

Since the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod is seeking entrance, I am precluded from saying very much. However, I want to say that I am shocked by the statements of the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts). This report should be adopted. It comes from a committee which represented all parties in both Houses. On behalf of my party, let me say that this report should be adopted by the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill C-66, an act to provide for an additional advance poll in respect of certain by-elections, without any amendment.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that the following communication has been received:

Ottawa, October 6, 1978

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Ronald Martland, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber on Tuesday, the 10th day of October, at 4.30 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills and proroguing the Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament of Canada.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary
to the Governor General

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

In the Senate chamber, the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following bill:

Bill C-66, An Act to provide for an additional advance poll in respect of certain by-elections.—Chapter No. 43.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

[English]

After which the Deputy Governor General was pleased to close the third session of the thirtieth Parliament of Canada with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

The Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament was opened by Her Majesty the Queen, on October 18, 1977. Since then Canadians in many regions have been honoured by visits from several members of the Royal Family and Her Majesty visited Newfoundland and Saskatchewan as well as Edmonton, where she opened the Eleventh Commonwealth Games.

Members of the House of Commons:

This was the first session in which the House of Commons was broadcast on radio and television. In many parts of Canada, people may watch and listen to the deliberations of their elected representatives at the same time that they are occurring. In all parts of Canada, citizens may, on a regular basis, watch and listen to recorded segments of the more important proceedings.

As a result of these broadcasts, many more citizens have become aware of the issues that we face and are able to understand better the process of responsible parliamentary government.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

During this session Canadian unity has been a paramount issue. The government put before you a number of measures and you established a Special Joint Committee to consider these and other proposals on the constitution of Canada.

You have also, in this session, focussed on international affairs. During this session, the House of Commons held a major debate on our foreign relations for the first time in many years. The government has continued its efforts for peace among nations and the maintenance of basic human rights in all parts of the world.

The Canadian economy and, indeed, the world economy have been of great concern during this session. In July, the Prime Minister attended a meeting of the heads of government of the leading industrial nations and, since then, the government has announced a number of major economic initiatives, many of which you will consider in a future session.

Much of your time has been used for discussion of economic matters. You enacted five measures amending the Income Tax Act, the Excise Tax Act and the Customs Tariff. These amendments provided many incentives to economic growth. They also included special measures to assist small businesses.

You amended the Anti-inflation Act in order to facilitate the period of de-control and you extended the Bank Act so that your study of proposed revisions to this legislation may be complete. You enacted a measure to permit the Export Development Corporation to provide greater support to Canadian industry and for the Farm Credit Corporation to do more for Canadian farmers.

Matters relating to energy were of great importance in this session. You passed the Northern Pipeline Act which will govern the construction of one of the greatest projects undertaken on this continent. You also enacted measures to provide for the monitoring of the financial operations of petroleum corporations and to stimulate the development of the tar sands of Alberta.

The institutions and agencies of government were of great interest to you. A measure was enacted to create the Comptroller General of Canada and you passed two acts revising the structures of Air Canada and of Canadian National Railways.

You enacted important amendments to the Canada Labour Code and you established the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety.

Amendments were made to the Pension Act and, twice, improvements were made to the compensation of former prisoners of war.

A measure was enacted to control the discounting of tax rebates and important amendments were made to the Criminal Code to allow trials in the official language of the accused.

After many years of deliberation, you established a Maritime Code. You also passed a measure assisting the development of facilities in fishing and recreational harbours.

You twice amended the Canada Elections Act.

Many other actions of great importance were undertaken during this session.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for the public services in the previous and in the current fiscal year.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

May Divine Providence continue to bless our country.

This concluded the third session of the thirtieth Parliament.
