SOCIAL SECURITY

LEGISLATION RESPECTING SPOUSE'S ALLOWANCE AND GIS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the findings of the Toronto Social Planning Council, in the study just released on old age security for the metropolitan Toronto area, that people were living in poverty and that widows and single females were especially hard hit, confirming a survey by Statistics Canada that 61.7 per cent unattached pensioners were living below the poverty line as of 1976, I wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

That this House directs the Minister of National Health and Welfare to bring in legislation before the summer adjournment to provide for a continuation of the spouses' allowance after the death of the older spouse and, further, that the legislation provide for an adjustment in the guaranteed income supplements which would more adequately reflect real increases in the cost of living since the last increase was made prior to indexing.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POST OFFICE

NEGOTIATIONS WITH CUPW—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Considering that until the past weekend the Post Office had not made a single proposal which goes beyond the old contract with the Canadian Union of Postal Workers since that contract expired almost a year ago, and considering that such an attitude is most likely to produce a strike which neither the people of Canada nor the workers involved desire, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instructs the Postmaster General to assume his responsibilities and ensure that positive proposals are presented soon by the Post Office in its negotiations with CUPW.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION

SUBMISSION ON PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT AND MERIT PRINCIPLE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. On April 20 there were press reports that the Public Service Commission had decided not to make public its submission to the D'Avignon committee on personnel management and the merit principle in the public service because the impending election might turn the submission into a political football. Since the Prime Minister subsequently revealed that an election was not impending at all, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker):

That this House requests the Public Service Commission to publish forthwith its submission to the D'Avignon committee so that the public and members of parliament may have the opportunity to examine its proposals respecting the public service of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADA'S COMMITMENT TO NATO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity arising from the meeting of NATO in Washington this week. In light of the commitment Canada has made to its NATO allies and the dangers still facing the west from the Warsaw pact, and because of the evidence that the Warsaw pact nations have not ceased to upgrade their military stance in Europe and, either directly or using Cuba as a cat's paw, are threatening stability in Africa as well, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the Prime Minister stop posturing before an international audience and come forward with concrete and positive proposals as to the way Canada is prepared to improve NATO's conventional force posture, including improvements in Canada's back-up in both permanent and reserve forces.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion for debate at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIR TRANSPORT

SUBSIDIES TO EPA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of growing concern in Atlantic Canada that Eastern Provincial Airways, a major employer and regional air carrier, is experiencing difficulties because of inappropriate subsidy levels and other factors which have caused the airline to experience financial losses in recent years, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the Department of Transport and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce jointly take appropriate steps to provide realistic, greater subsidies and equitable financial arrangements for the purchase of Dash-7 equipment to expedite and improve the service capability and the financial position of Eastern Provincial Airways.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY MINISTER OF INTERNATIONAL CULTURAL RELATIONS

Mr. Speaker: Before beginning the question period, I know hon. members would want to join me in recognizing the presence in our gallery of a very distinguished visitor from the Bundestag of the Federal Republic of Germany in her official capacity as one of two ministers of state responsible for international cultural relations. Dr. Hildegard Hamm-Brueecher is here on an official visit in that capacity.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS AT UN ON PEACE AND SECURITY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, who is in Washington on other business today and tomorrow, I direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. On the basis of the evidence available to him, does the Deputy Prime Minister believe that proposals such as those made by the Prime Minister in New York last week will evoke a positive response from the U.S.S.R., that the U.S.S.R. will, in consequence, in order to promote detente, abandon its aggressive designs in Europe, Africa and Asia or make some other gesture, for example in the SALT talks, and that in the long run the prospects of peace and security in the world are being forwarded by these proposals?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will have read the text of the Prime Minister's speech at the United Nations' conference in New York in which he made a number of concrete proposals in respect of the general question of disarmament. The hon. member refers specifically to what response might be expected from the Soviet Union. I hope the support the Prime Minister gave to President Carter in respect of nuclear weapons, particularly battlefield nuclear weapons, might evoke a positive response from the Soviet Union and that they might realize the ball is now in their court. It is up to them to follow President Carter in deferring the production of this particular weapon.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in his usual way, I think the Deputy Prime Minister has stepped aside from the question I put to him. Therefore, can he explain to the House exactly what the government expects in the way of positive response from these proposals? Does he see any positive results at all? Is it simply a matter of the Prime Minister lecturing sanctimoniously to the rest of the world as to how the world should behave, delivering that lecture from the sheltered nuclear haven which has been provided to Canada by our close, friendly and concerned neighbour?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised the hon. member would have picked up the rather irresponsible criticism which was directed by certain elements of the press.

Mr. Gillies: The government of Great Britain?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: This was directed by certain elements of the press to the substance of the Prime Minister's speech. The Prime Minister has declared the position of Canada in respect of its renunciation of nuclear weapons. Even though at an early stage this country had the capacity to become a nuclear power, we have chosen consistently another route. It seems passing strange that that particular decision should be regarded as hypocrisy.

Mr. Fraser: You have forgotten about 1963.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Would he be prepared to comment on the notion that there is a distinction which ought to be made between posturing and practising in the awesome arena of international peace and security, and that in today's world and its realities, with the U.S.S.R. expanding its sphere of interest and military strength around the world, particularly into the unsettled areas of Africa, posturing could be more dangerous than practising readiness coupled with adequate response?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has referred to posturing as if the setting forward by the Prime Minister of Canada's position before the United Nations' disarmament conference its well known position on nuclear disarmament—

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about 1963 and the Liberal party?

Mr. MacEachen: —is posturing. It seems to me that he ought to describe statements made by other world leaders at the UN conference in precisely the same terms, because each of those who went to the podium in New York took the opportunity to put forward views on the question of disarmament.

There is no justification for the hon. member to slight Canada's contribution to our collective defence. We have continued our adherence to NATO, and 2½ years ago we restated that adherence by very substantial improvements in our contribution to NATO and NATO financing.

REDUCTION IN DEFENCE BUDGET

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. As the Deputy Prime Minister is aware, NATO's long-term defence program calls for improvement in ten areas, including reinforcement machinery and reserve mobilization, that is, improving the quality, quantity and availability of reserve units.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister explain how a decision to forgo $60 million in this year's defence budget at a time when Canada's reserves, especially militia units, are grossly underequipped is in any way compatible with the obvious need for all NATO members to make improvements in their commitments to the alliance's conventional forces?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know, two or three years ago there was a very extensive discussion within NATO itself in respect of Canada's continued adherence and continued contribution to NATO. At the NATO summit at that time, the Prime Minister stated that Canada would make an effective contribution that would be seen to be effective by our allies.

As a result of consultations with our allies within NATO, we took certain decisions in respect of replacement of aircraft and in respect of the selection of a tank. All of these decisions were taken in consultation with and the support of our allies in NATO. I believe our over-all financial contribution in that alliance, and our forward defence planning and defence budgeting, are very clear indications of our determination in that respect.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, after ten months, a statement on the very important question of the neutron bomb has finally been made, not to this House but last Friday to the United Nations' special session on disarmament. Members of parliament were denied the opportunity of participating in a discussion of this non-partisan subject affecting all Canadians and our stand in the international community.

The Prime Minister referred to President Carter's "farsighted postponement of a decision to produce" the weapon. Now that all danger of upstaging the Prime Minister has past, will the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House what that statement means in respect of Canadian policy on the desirability of ever deploying such a weapon in Europe? In other words, is the government irrevocably opposed to the use of this weapon, or is it merely temporizing?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister stated in his speech that the President of the United States had shown the way in recent weeks with his farsighted postponement of the decision to produce a special battlefield nuclear weapon. Of course, the Prime Minister went on to say that we all hope the response of the Soviet Union will be such as to make it possible to extend that postponement indefinitely.

As I said earlier in the question period, the ball is now clearly in the court of the Soviet Union, which in fact has been challenged by President Carter to exercise equivalent restraint with regard to its own deployment and force level. It seems to me it was highly constructive at this particular time for the Prime Minister to support the stance taken by the President of the United States.

POST OFFICE

NEGOTIATIONS WITH CUPW

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Will the Postmaster General confirm a report that was made on the weekend, that since the termination of their contract with the members of CUPW, which was almost a year ago today, the Post Office has not made, at least up to the weekend, a single new proposal in its negotiations with CUPW?

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, it is very easy to say that we have not made any propositions to CUPW up to now, but our situation and our stand was very clearly made at the opening of the discussions with the conciliation board in the form of a 30-page document which was also made public. Our position was made very clear on that occasion. Since then, conciliation has been going on, and as far as I am concerned it is progressing satisfactorily, considering that we are still discussing matters on which we have taken a firm stand. These are items of which I am sure hon. members would approve and would want us to stand behind. On other items, we are open for discussion while in the conciliation process.

For the hon. member's information, we are also carrying on discussions at the same time with the LCUC. These negotiations are progressing well and on time and there is a very good understanding between the union and the Post Office. As far as CUPW is concerned, I cannot say more: we are still in conciliation, which is going well, and I hope we will reach an agreement sooner or later.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will give the minister the benefit of the doubt if my first question was not perfectly clear to him. I will now repeat it in the hope of clarifying it. the position, as I understand it, of CUPW is that the proposition which the Post Office is now putting before them does not improve by one iota the working conditions which they have in terms of the existing contract which expired a year ago. In fact, among the new proposals in the government's package are those which, in the view of the union, take away certain benefits that they have.

Will the minister confirm that that is the case in terms of the proposals they are putting forward, that there are no new improvements at all for CUPW and, if so, does he think this is a responsible attitude for management to take, and is it likely to head off an anticipated postal strike?

[Translation]

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I think that in these conditions the Post Office Department must be responsible enough in such negotiations to take the interests of Canadians as regards the working conditions of its employees. I must say that the working conditions of postal employees can be favourably compared with those of most Canadian workers. I think that we are not ashamed to suggest how the new negotiations should be undertaken. There are four principles, for example, on which we are not prepared to negotiate and I think that Canadians would not accept it, if we did so; among others—

[English]

We intend to proceed with technological change. We want to have freedom to contract out some of our work. We want our casual and temporary employees to meet peak demands, and we want to be able to measure quantity and quality of employee output, which we do not have at the moment. The workers previously acquired certain rights and, with those rights, certain responsibilities: we would like to negotiate in that area.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister, in his answer, has confirmed the accusation that was made on the weekend by CUPW. He has, indeed, provided a list of new areas that the Post Office would like to get agreement on; but the minister should know that any trade union representing any body of workers and taking on the points that he has raised would not concede to themselves that these are concessions. What they are saying is that in terms of improvement, as the minister indicated in dealing with that part of my question, there has been no improvement over the existing circumstances; there is no new offer from the government at all: no new offer was made by the Post Office, which seems to confirm the fact that in the last dozen years there have been 18 studies showing the management of the Post Office is at fault. So if he wants to hold off a postal strike in July, surely the government must come up with positive proposals in addition to coming up with some changes that the workers will see are to their advantage.

• (1427)

[Translation]

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, since we are now in the process of conciliation, I think it does not rest with me to disclose the terms of the conciliation to the House of Commons. I would like to let the conciliation board perform its work and we will see later on.

SMALL BUSINESS

ADMINISTRATION OF TRAINEE PROGRAM

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration even though it relates to the policy announced by the Minister of State (Small Business) concerning a program of assistance to trainees in small businesses. This program will cost $5,400,-000. I would like to know if the choice of trainees eligible for that assistance will be made by the Department of Employment.

[English]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): What we will probably do, Mr. Speaker, is work in close co-operation with the Minister of State (Small Business); but at the same time, because training and education is in provincial jurisdiction, we will probably have to work under our Adult Occupational Training Act or one of the ongoing programs that we have with the various provinces.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would it be right to say that the public servants in our regional offices are not aware of the existence of that program, as they have stated themselves, and that they do not think they will be able to help those trainees who have already been accepted in small businesses?

[English]

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I believe the minister announced the program just this past week. I am surprised that has not filtered down to individuals at the level of responsibility for administering it. Most assuredly they are working on the employment tax credit program. This is going well now and there is an opportunity here for the small businessman, in addition to the announcements that my colleague made, to work in that particular arena. There are many opportunities for people who want to become new members of the work force or to take training under the new programs or the old ones under the Adult Occupational Training Act.

TRANSPORT

INCREASE IN GRAIN ELEVATOR CHARGES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns the recent announcement by the Canadian Grain Commission of increases in maximum service charges allowed for the grain industry. These changes could generate millions of dollars in new revenue for the grain companies, according to a report in the Western Producer of May 11, 1978. The article states that under the provisions, the companies may now levy against producers who deliver to country elevators, 9 per cent. It goes on to say:

Maximum elevation charges at terminal elevators will increase by close to 80 per cent and companies will be able to increase drying charges by 10 per cent.

I would ask the minister, what stand did the government take when the commission sat, relative to this matter? According to the same article in the Western Producer, the reason for the increase was that the grain companies needed higher revenues to fund upgrading and expansion of the grain handling system. Would the minister tell the House how much it is estimated will be taken from the farmer during the coming year by reason of these increases? That is the first question.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should make it clear to the right hon. gentleman that the Grain Commission is the primary responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture although, of course, my interest in it lies in the fact that the Wheat Board and grain farmers are very much affected by any such decision.

● (1432)

The Grain Commission made its decision after hearing representations in public forum from the grain companies about their increased costs and their future financial problems, as well as hearing from others representing farmers and farm organizations. It is important to note that these are maximum rates and that, in fact, the elevator companies have not been charging the maximum in recent time. The question of whether they will now is one involving their relative needs and perhaps the possibility of real competition among the elevator companies in order to keep the rates as low as possible. That is a good thing for the Grain Commission. On the other hand, the elevator companies, including the pools and others, will have to look at their over-all needs and costs to determine what their charges should be.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would need a microscope to understand that answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: These increases will run into many millions of dollars which will come out of the pockets of western farmers in particular who produce wheat. In view of the fact that the reason for the increases is, as already stated, that the companies are allowed to make these maximum charges so that they may be able to upgrade and expand the grain handling system, why should expenditures such as that for the benefit of all of Canada come out of the hide of the western farmers?

Will the minister recommend a suspension for the coming year? In addition, will he give the assurance that expenditures such as those for which this increase is required will come out of the pockets of all Canadians, and not out of the pockets of the western farmer who too often to the hon. gentleman is a forgotten man?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman refers to these as increases. Again I emphasize, as I did in my earlier answer, that they are increases in the maximums which the elevator companies may charge. The question of what it will cost the farmer really depends on what the individual elevator companies, including the pools and others, decide is required for their own elevator operations, including their elevator construction. That is a simple answer.

It is clear that the costs of upgrading the system, referred to by the right hon. gentleman, are the costs of building new and additional elevators, part of the ongoing elevator system which traditionally, under his regime, as at all times, have been part of the ongoing costs of operating the elevator system. I hope the right hon. gentleman is not trying to mislead the public into thinking that in any way any of these moneys cover the very important injections of cash by the Government of Canada into the rehabilitation and rebuilding of the rail system. That is totally falling upon the Government of Canada, the people of Canada and the taxpayer, and in no way is part of any of these cost increases. I hope he also would agree that this rebuilding program for rail lines is a most important advance and an important contribution by the people of Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman speaks of misleading. I am not going to try to compete with him in that regard.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I simply ask him this question. What justification is there to take out of the pockets of the western farmer, at a time when the farmer is having great difficulty to carry on, in many cases, more money to fund upgrading and expansion of the grain handling system? Is that not something that should fall on the people of Canada as a whole, and not on the western farmer?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, again I emphasize that any increase in charges will be an increase by the individual elevator companies including, for instance, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. The right hon. gentleman may make his representations to these companies if he thinks they should do with less money than they believe they need for the ongoing maintenance of the elevator system. These costs are designed to cover those very things which have always been covered by the charges of grain companies for grain handling facilities.

The right hon. gentleman made no different policy in that regard while he was prime minister. These things have always been part of the costs covered by the grain companies, and that is the situation today as well. The difference is that unlike the do-nothing approach during his regime, we are now buying hopper cars and rebuilding rail lines.

Mr. Paproski: Chippy!

FISHERIES

CANADA—U.S. AGREEMENT

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. In view of the fact that no agreement was reached with the United States fisheries officials on Friday, the deadline given by the minister regarding the opening of the Washington coast to Canadian fishermen, will the minister follow through with his threat given in the House on May 8 that "if the American side does not live up to the agreement, the Canadian side would not be bound to it either?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the negotiators met on Friday; they exchanged messages during the weekend, and I met with our team just before coming into the House. The Canadian negotiators will be meeting with the committee of advisers involving fishermen and processors, etc., tomorrow and I will probably also meet with them. We are keeping this matter under constant review, but at the moment I am unable to make a definitive statement on this subject.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister how long he expects the Swiftsure Bank to be closed to Canadian fishermen. Will any compensation be forthcoming from the federal government to Canadian fishermen affected by the needless closure of this bank? I would point out that this bank is entirely within Canadian waters, and the United States demanded that it be closed to further fishing despite the fact that Canadian conservationists have stated that it need not be closed.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, who is very familiar with these matters, will recognize that the problem of Swiftsure is mainly the interception of salmon either of American origin or heading for American rivers. Obviously, if the temporary agreement cannot be held together and if it cannot survive the present difficulties, then we will obviously reassess that closure.

AIR TRANSPORT

SUBSIDIES TO EPA

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport: it follows on questions put last week by the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria and the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys. It concerns the future of Eastern Provincial Airways, the major regional air carrier in Atlantic Canada.

Can the minister tell the House whether he has under review the present subsidy arrangements which appear to be inappropriate and are causing Eastern Provincial Airways to sustain yearly losses and menacing its ability to service Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will refer to the answers given to questions in the House, he will know that we have under consideration and discussion between Transport Canada and the several regional airlines the whole question of the various regional groups and the possibility of acquiring the Dash-7 aircraft and what the potential financial involvement of the government may be in any such solution. We are interested in providing good air service and in helping the regionals to give that service in some circumstances where they may find it difficult to do so on their own.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's answer, but could he go a little further and give the House some assurance that he has under immediate review the question of subsidies, which topic he did not answer? Is he also giving consideration to changes in the routes which could be utilized, provided Eastern Provincial Airways were given equitable consideration for the purchase of Dash-7 aircraft, which is something I believe will be of benefit not only to de Havilland corporation but to Eastern Provincial Airways as well? Is he giving consideration to serving the Halifax-Bangor run, something which has been a matter of concern for some time in eastern Canada?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, obviously, when I referred to the possible involvement of the government, it was very clear that I would include the possibility of subsidies which may be either in relation to the acquiring of aircraft or in relation to ongoing operations. I would not specify that one is better than the other, necessarily. Indeed, I would not say that either of those is necessary. The point of our discussions at this time is to determine whether any such help is required or, instead, whether good utilization of aircraft by a sensible arrangement of routes can provide all that is needed. That is what our discussions are about.

APPLICATION BY EPA FOR INCREASED SUBSIDIES

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister advise the House whether Eastern Provincial Airways has recently made application to the department for increased operating subsidies? If so, will these subsidies be used to provide the additional intraAtlantic service which the hon. member was referring to in his question?

● (1442)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the course of the discussions we have been having, the airlines, including EPA, have indicated their requirements in their view. We are analysing some of these requirements. We could label it as a request for increase, but we want to be sure of the over-all picture of requirement, knowing how many routes are involved.

I may say, in answer to the earlier question, that while we are looking at specific routes, I would not want, today, to particularly touch on one or another because very often applications to the Canadian Transport Commission are also involved.

REQUESTED INCREASE IN BENEFITS FOR ELDERLY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. She will not be surprised to learn that it is based on the report on old age insecurity produced a short while ago by the Social Planning Council of metropolitan Toronto. That report emphasized the very large number of senior citizens who are being required to live below the poverty line.

In view of the emphasis on the fact, which the government has not really yet recognized, that most senior citizens live on the pensions they receive and not on other income that the government thinks they may have, and in view of the fact that this parliament seems to be going to last a little while longer so that it can do some important business, can the minister tell us what the government's response will be to this serious situation?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that is a tough question for a Monday afternoon. It means that if hon. members agree to cut from other programs of my department about $630 million, we can have an income supplementation program for those in need aged 60 to 65. However, no one will want to do that. By answering in that way, I think I am showing the concern we all have with regard to trying to develop programs to meet that need but we are not ready to do so with the actual economic constraints.

In addition, I would like to mention the research work that is being done in evaluating what can be done in rearranging existing provisions like fiscal exemption based on age, which affects older people. I would be very interested in hearing the views of the opposition on that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I noted the statement by the minister that if we would propose cuts in some other areas, that money could be available. I can tell her that there are places, especially in some other departments, where cuts would be highly desirable.

Mr. Gillies: Name them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): National Defence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of her suggestion that a study is being made of a possible rearrangement of fiscal planning such as income tax credits, may I ask whether a serious attempt will be made to do something in this area in this parliament, bearing in mind it is not just those between 60 and 65 to whom she referred who are in trouble, but all senior citizens, particularly unattached women.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that questions touching fundamental changes in fiscal policy should be directed to the Minister of Finance. He also knows, because I have informed the House on a few occasions, of the research work being done in my department, exploring all tools that can eventually be used for redistribution and income supplementation program development. That, of course, touches upon the fiscal dimension of allowances to older people.

FINANCE

DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC ON SALES TAX

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. At his press conference last week, the Prime Minister indicated that he would be willing to meet with the premier of the province of Quebec to try and resolve the sales tax impasse, provided the government of Quebec put forward a proposal for discussion.

Now that the Quebec minister of finance, Mr. Parizeau, has put forward such a proposal, one similar to that put forward earlier in the week by Claude Ryan, the Liberal leader of the province of Quebec, is it the intention of the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance to modify their rigid position regarding the provincial sales tax and to meet with their counterparts in the province of Quebec to discuss the Parizeau proposal?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister has repeatedly stated that we were prepared to discuss with the provincial government. This is the first time it gives us any sign of life, and it did so through a press conference rather than through direct channels. We are still willing to meet with its representatives. This is the first time since budget night, that they have given us any sign of life; if they want to meet with us we will wait for their call or their communication. I read, like the hon. member, Mr. Parizeau's position and I am happy to see that people now realize that it was our right and prerogative to act as we did, that is to reduce the federal tax to compensate for the money which Quebec did not want to accept. Whether that would be in 1977 or 1978, as I said two weeks ago, it is a question of terms and we are quite ready to discuss them with anybody. In any event, our intention is to reduce federal income tax for Quebec taxpayers.

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Perhaps the minister would use the forum of the House of Commons to indicate whether he would be prepared to meet with his counterpart from the province of Quebec. Since the Parizeau proposal recognizes the provincial right to set its own priorities with regard to reductions in provincial sales tax, has the Minister of Finance contacted any of the provincial ministers of finance, particularly the minister of finance of the province of Manitoba to offer this same course of action rather than the one which was dictated to them on the night the budget was brought down?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, that is a very bad misrepresentation of the situation. For three weeks before the budget I had discussions with the ministers of finance. I told them I would like to hear from them, yes or no, the day of the budget. All of them complied. Every one of them had the plan approved by their own cabinet before calling me back. Only Quebec refused to go along with the gentlemen's agreement whereby we were to be contacted the night of the budget.

As far as talking with Quebec is concerned I said in French a minute ago that I have been waiting since April for the Quebec government to show some compromise. I have made three propositions to them. Never have they made any counter-proposition. All along I have respected the right of the provinces to do what they want in their budgets, just as I have kept the right to do what I want in my budget, and that is to cut federal income tax.

REQUESTED WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-56

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi) Mr. Speaker, at the risk of being labelled an unrepentant separatist bent on the whole destruction of my country—

—I should like to put a supplementary to the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement Mr. Ryan made last week, and that of Mr. Parizeau over the weekend, and the questions put in the House of Commons this afternoon by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, I should like to know whether the Minister of Finance is now willing to withdraw Bill C-56, on the sales tax, for a month, and accept the amendment suggested by the opposition in order to renegotiate a sales tax agreement with the province of Quebec?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can see how embarrassed the hon. member is, since on Thursday last, when the Progressive Conservative party said it was willing to send a cheque directly to the Quebec government, on the very same day the proposal made by Mr. Ryan said nothing of the kind. His proposal was to the effect that we were completely entitled to reduce our income tax, which is what we are now doing. The provincial government is perfectly entitled to do what it wishes with its sales tax, as Quebec did when it acted unilaterally according to its own priorities.

At this point, we want to reduce income tax, as we did in the other provinces; it is strictly a matter of ways of achieving this. But I can understand the embarrassment of the hon. member who made a proposal to the Parti Québécois. He cozied up to that party and on the same day they are told it is no longer a cheque they want, for they are willing to increase their own taxes, and that we have been saying for several weeks.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ERROR RATE IN CLASSIFICATIONS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board based on a memo in his department dated November 17, 1977. It reads as follows:

> The recent audit of personnel administration position classifications showed 262 positions of 1,176 positions reviewed were mis-classified, for an error rate of 22 per cent. This situation is serious as the relativity is threatened throughout the PE group if no corrective action is taken. Such action must be effective and immediate if the group is to retain its credibility within the public service.

What effective action has the President of the Treasury Board taken with respect to this very unacceptable situation? I ask this question because apparently many within this group who were overclassified, to the tune of 19.3 per cent, are responsible for classifications in the public service. What action has the minister taken in this regard?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there will have to be further action taken with respect to the establishment of the accuracy of the figures. I fully agree with the comments of the hon. member as far as they go. We are conscious of this situation. The diagnostic approach to that particular occupational group was the subject of a separate study. The overclassification is approximately as the hon. member has indicated. We want to do what we call a desk audit, which includes interviewing the people concerned, before we take final action in correcting the overclassification.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, the only figure the minister questioned is the 19.3 per cent. Is it the intention of the minister to rewrite the standards to make all those who were wrongly classified appear correctly classified? I ask this question because this, as well, is a procedure which is spelled out in the memo, which states:

Phase VI, Implementation of change—amendment of manual as required.

This is supposed to be in effect from May 15 until October 1. Is the minister contemplating rewriting the standards so that what looked bad at one time will now appear to look good? Is this where we are heading?

Mr. Andras: No, Mr. Speaker.

AIR TRANSPORT

INSURANCE FOR PASSENGERS OF COMMERCIAL CARRIERS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport: it relates to the tragic air crash at Cranbrook, British Columbia, which we were discussing in the House last week.

The Ministry of Transport has regulations in effect which make every commercial air carrier carry insurance on the lives of all passengers. Now that the Cranbrook air crash hearings are over and it is very clear that no passenger was to blame, would the minister follow up the regulations of his department and direct the insurance companies, which have been paid for this insurance, to make payments to all passengers so as to honour their contracts which the passengers paid for when buying their tickets?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would require a legal opinion as to whether the regulations and my powers go as far as the hon. member seems to indicate. I know that the matter is under very serious discussion at the moment among the various parties involved, and I am not at all sure that I have a right to interfere with those discussions at this point in time.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's statement of government policy that the government has no responsibility to see that its regulations are carried out, I would like to ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the lawyers in this case are advocating that the passengers be paid, in order to take the responsibility from the insurance companies, would the minister now reconsider the policy of the government and go back to the original purpose of the policy, which was that the insurance companies should meet their contractual obligations and pay the passengers when death, not negligence, is proved?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, obviously, I did not say that we had no responsibility with regard to our regulations. There can be no doubt about that. But the question is what those regulations require. That may well raise certain legal questions as to responsibility which are not answered by the existence of the regulations. I must have that legal opinion before I can take any further position.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PRESENCE OF SODIUM NITRITE IN BACON—CONNECTION WITH CANCER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns the recent announcement in the United States that the government there is going to move to lower the amount of sodium nitrite in bacon because of the possible connection of nitrites with cancer in laboratory testing.

I would like to ask the minister whether she is aware of the move in the United States and, if she is, why is the Canadian government not following suit by putting restrictions on the amount of sodium nitrite in bacon in this country?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear of any recent development in the United States on that question. The Americans do have a different approach from ours, and if the hon. member would permit, I would like to inquire and give a full answer in the coming days.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the United States will be moving to reduce the amount of sodium nitrite to 120 parts per million by June 15, and to 40 parts per million by next year. Meanwhile, in Canada the legislation allows 150 parts per million. I would like to know whether the minister will undertake to check with her officials to see whether Canadian officials can look into the issue in this country with a view to making the same move the Americans have already made, which is very important.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, we do not develop Canadian policy simply by copying the moves made by the United States. I would like to stress that, and also to speak of the particularly good work done by the health protection branch of my department. As I said in my first answer, I would want to look at the recent developments in the United States and to see if there is any need for change in Canada.

Business of the House

ENERGY

FUNDING OF MARITIME ENERGY CORPORATION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I would like to know if there has been a resolution of the previously unresolved question of a federal commitment to the Maritime Energy Corporation in terms of financing and funding. The premiers met in Annapolis Valley over the weekend. They enjoyed the apple blossoms and other natural beauties. I wonder, also, if they have requested a meeting with the minister so that this question can be resolved and so that Fundy tidal power or Pointe le Preau will not be held up?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received any communication from the premiers asking for a meeting. In reply to the pitch for tourism in the maritime provinces by the hon. member, I would be very pleased, however, to receive an invitation to join them down there and to try to advance the Maritime Energy Corporation and, of course, phase two of the Fundy tidal power project.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Relatively well-substantiated reports indicate that, while at some time in January the minister made a statement of principle regarding a federal commitment to the funding of this energy corporation, the Department of Finance now feels that this is not the time to make any further financial commitments.

Has this question been resolved between the Department of Finance and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources so that the premiers can have a meaningful meeting and come here and/or hear from one of the ministers regarding a fundamental commitment along the lines promised by the minister last January?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may be alluding to a press report which I believe was carried in some of the newspapers over the weekend. I have not seen this press report but I have been told about it. I am not sure on what it was based, because the Maritime Energy Corporation is moving forward. The articles of association in principle, in outline terms, were agreed among the three premiers and myself earlier this year. We agreed that we should form the corporation. Once the corporation is formed, then the money can be put in. But I am sure the hon. member would agree that the corporation should not be funded until it is set up.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order with respect to the business of the House concerning an exchange which took place on Friday dealing with the bill which was introduced that day by the Minister of Veterans Affairs, Bill C-58, which would increase pension benefits for veterans.

● (1502)

Just so the government House leader will have an opportunity to consider his position with respect to that bill, I want to inform him that the official opposition would be prepared, if this were acceptable to the government House leader, to allow that bill to proceed through all stages within a period of one hour. If that is not acceptable to the government House leader, let me point out to him that we would be prepared to deal with second reading in very short order this afternoon, or this evening, in order that it could go to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs which, I understand, is sitting tomorrow.

In any event, I want to assure him that it is not the intention of the official opposition to impede the proceedings with respect to that bill and the passage of that bill in any way that would impede the House in dealing with the tax bill about which my hon. friend is anxious. I am sure it is important for him to know that it is our intention to allow the government and the House to deal with this bill without in any way impeding the passage of the tax bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. May I say that I suggested a couple of times that we could deal with that bill in half an hour, so I am certainly prepared to agree to deal with it in an hour. As the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has said, perhaps we could put it through all stages at that time, but if there is any desire to send it to the standing committee let us give it second reading soon, because the committee meets tomorrow night. If the government House leader is not prepared to respond in the affirmative on that point right away, perhaps we could have an inter-party discussion about it some time in the next half hour.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments that have been made with respect to the veterans legislation. It would be difficult to call the bill today in the absence of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), but I will be pleased to discuss the matter with my friends in the opposition, and I hope that in dealing with that bill I will be able to secure some understanding on how we can deal with other major measures that I have put before the House with the view to terminating this part of the session by the end of June. I can understand the readiness with which my hon. friends will deal with the veterans legislation, but there is other legislation, including the tax bill, which must be dealt with.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 167, 349, 792, 1,279 and 1,307.

[Text]

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYEES

Question No. 167—Mr. Friesen:

1. What is the average salary level of all employees in the Public Service?

2. What is the average salary level for employees in each Crown corporation?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): 1. The average salary of all active employees in the public service under schedule 1, part 1 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act, as of December 31, 1977 is $14,774.

2. Air Canada, $17,700; Atomic Energy Control Board, $19,506; Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, $17,892; Atlantic Pilotage Authority, $23,022; Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, $14,000; Canadian Arsenals Limited, $15,968; Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, $17,011; Canadian Film Development Corporation, $14,955; Canadian National Railway, $15,606; Canadian Saltfish Corporation, $16,397; Canadian Wheat Board, $13,094; Cape Breton Development Corporation, $15,560; Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, $15,656; Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, $14,061; Defence Construction (1951) Ltd., $17,280; Economic Council of Canada, $19,113; Eldorado Nuclear Limited and Eldorado Aviation Limited, $17,275; Export Development Corporation: By tradition and as a matter of commercial principle Crown corporations have not been required by parliament to answer detailed questions on their administration and operation, and in the case of Export Development Corporation, the Export Development Act places the responsibility for such matters on its board of directors. Farm Credit Corporation, $17,572; Federal Business Development Bank, $14,262; Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, $13,950; Great Lakes Pilotage Authority Ltd., $30,852; Laurentian Pilotage Authority, $18,491; Loto Canada, $16,610; Medical Research Council, $18,200; National Battlefields Commission—Administrative Staff, $14,151; General Labour and Trade, $5.98/hr.; National Capital Commission, $15,061; National Harbours Board, $12,237; National Research Council of Canada, $20,136; Northern Canada Power Commission, $15,510; Northern Transportation Company Limited, $16,400; Pacific Pilotage Authority, $18,561; Petro-Canada, $19,000; Royal Canadian Mint, $14,000; St-Lawrence Seaway Authority, $15,650; Science Council of Canada, $22,000; Seaway International Bridge Corporation Ltd., $15,845; Teleglobe Canada, $16,125.

RCMP

Question No. 349—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. Did the RCMP pay witnesses to provide testimony in court cases during the period 1967 to 1977 and, if so, how many?

2. What was the total amount spent by the RCMP on payments for testimony?

3. Were such payments made with the knowledge and consent of the respective Ministers of Justice?

4. Were the presiding judges in the relevant court cases aware that witnesses were being paid by the RCMP to testify?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): 1. The RCMP does not "pay witnesses to provide testimony in court cases" per se. Witnesses are paid witness fees in accordance with statutory provisions with such payments normally being handled by clerks of the court. On occasion, however, these payments are made by the RCMP and the moneys recouped from the applicable level of government. In exceptional cases, where in the interests of the witness it is deemed necessary to do so, the RCMP has paid for relocation and living expenses in order to protect him and/or his family from recrimination. The RCMP does, of course, pay awards to informants for services rendered in the course of investigations which can and often do culminate in charges being laid. In some cases, although not the usual practice, the informant may be called upon to testify in court.

2, 3 and 4. Not applicable.

Question No. 792—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. Does the RCMP relocate its witnesses and is it normal practice to promise them the downpayment on a house and, if so, in what amount?

2. (a) Is it common or normal practice to give witnesses cash to relocate themselves (b) is their safety guaranteed and (i) if so, in what way (ii) if not, is the cash for relocation a payment for services?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): 1. Yes, on occasion and as required. (a) No. (b) Not applicable.

2. (a) No. (b) Yes, if considered necessary; (i) the procedures taken to ensure safety would be rendered less effective by public disclosure; (ii) not applicable.

PUBLIC WORKS

Question No. 1,279—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What amount was spent by the government in each of the past five years for the construction of government owned buildings, structures of any kind whatsoever, highways, etc., in the Province of Quebec and what was the total for the five years?

2. What is the budgeted or estimated amount that will be spent for such things in the fiscal year (a) 1978-79 (b) 1979-80?

3. What was the figure in each of the past five years for buildings, structures of any kind whatsoever, etc., rented by the government on a lease-back basis within the Province of Quebec and what was the total for the past five years?

4. What is the budgeted or estimated amount that will be spent for such things in the fiscal year (a) 1978-79 (b) 1979-80?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): 1. 1973-74, $36,405,000; 1974-75, 55,913,000; 1975-76, 97,695,000; 1976-77, 117,682,000; 1977-78, 173,241,000 (estimated); total, $480,936,000 (estimated).

2. (a) 1978-79 An estimated amount of $190 million will be spent on construction of government owned buildings, structures, highways, bridges, etc. This amount includes all new construction/acquisition costs including consultants costs and the cost of land purchases. (b) 1979-80 Figures not available at present time.

3. Public Works Canada is not involved in lease-back projects in the province of Quebec. The department has two lease purchase projects in the province of Quebec—Les Terrasses de la Chaudière and Place du Centre—and expenditures for these are as follows: Prior to 1976-77, nil; 1976-77, $2 million; 1977-78, $12 million (estimated); Total, $14 million (estimated).

4. The budgeted amount for the above projects for 1978-79 is $35 million; no budget has yet been established for 1979-80.

CHEMICAL WARFARE

Question No. 1,307—Mr. Jones:

1. Is the Canadian government aware that the Soviet Union's breeding of killer viruses and microbes, and if so, what are the specific names of these? What are the details of their effects?

2. Is the Canadian government aware that the Soviet Union stocks several kinds of chemical warfare agents, and if so, what do they include? What are the details of their effects?

3. How well prepared is Canada for any serious influx of dangerous diseases? What are the details of our operations in this regard?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Various bacteria and viruses are propagated in specialized laboratories in a number of countries. Some of these agents cause severe and frequently fatal disease in humans, as for example, smallpox (variola virus), viral encephalitis (western equine encephalitis, eastern equine encephalitis, St. Louis encephalitis), plague (Yersinia pestis), and viral hemorrhagic fevers (ebola and marburg viruses). One purpose of such laboratory propagation is in attempts to isolate and identify, from clinical specimens, the causative agent of disease in a human; another reason is for the preparation of the reagents required for the laboratory serological diagnosis of such diseases. We have no information that the Soviet Union is propagating these or similar agents for other purposes. The symptoms of these different diseases are varied but the clinical manifestations of some such as smallpox, viral encephalitis and plague are well known. The hemorrhagic fevers are associated with a variety of symptoms, predominantly severe headache, sore throat, muscle pain and internal bleeding.

2. It is probable that a number of countries have experimented with different kinds of chemical warfare agents. These range from agents such as lacrimators (tear gases), to those causing skin blisters and burns (vesicants), to those causing rapid death (nerve gases based on organo-phosphated).

3. It has been recognized that with increasing international travel there is also an increased risk of importation of dangerous diseases previously unknown in this country. A working party set up by the Department of National Health and Welfare has prepared a Canadian contingency plan for a co-ordinated response to national communicable disease emergencies. It is also known that the control of dangerous imported and domestic diseases depends upon the availability of a laboratory with facilities which permit accurate early diagnosis under conditions which provide maximum protection to the laboratory staff and to the general public and a hospital isolation facility. The federal government is committed to the construction of such a hospital isolation unit and a maximum security laboratory. In addition, there is extensive contact between federal and provincial governments to assure the required acquisition of associated portable isolation equipment.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, May 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole, and of the amendment (Mr. Broadbent) (p. 5548).

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in its editorial on May 20 the Winnipeg Free Press said the following of the federal budget:

It is now starkly clear that the federal government has bungled the sales tax announced in the April 10 budget.

That editorial comment is not exclusive to the Winnipeg Free Press or is it a viewpoint exclusive to western Canada. That viewpoint is one that is generally held by Canadians who have studied the debacle which has resulted from the April 10 budget, and the only defenders of the position and the counter-positions taken by the federal government have been the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and his government.

It has become clear that the budget was rushed. Now the government, I think quite justifiably, might say that the opposition and the various critics asked for a budget especially in view of the fact that we were approaching a spring or early summer election, and in order to overcome the fact that there was no economic package on the order paper the government came forward with a budget. I, as one member of the House, do not criticize that fact, but I believe that the government, in attempting to bring in the budget and to keep its options open so that an election could be called by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) by the end of June or the beginning of July, looked upon the budget as election bait. The Minister of Finance has gone to great lengths to explain that the budget was a responsible budget and that he had avoided the obvious attempt which might have been made to bring in election goodies on the eve of the calling of a federal election.

When one looks at the budget, and the machinations of the government subsequent to bringing in the budget, one comes to the conclusion that in fact it was election bait. I do not think so only because of the Quebec situation. I say that because of what happened in the province of Manitoba and also in the province of B.C. A point that has been lost in the public debate is that the province of Manitoba had scheduled its budget for the evening of April 10. Because of the time zone in which Manitoba finds itself, that province is one hour behind Ottawa, and the minister of finance of Manitoba when he was rising to make his budget address was not 100 per cent certain that the proposal which had been made to him by the federal finance minister was going to appear in the federal budget. Obviously, the tax room, and the economic activity which is generated in Manitoba with its population of one million people, must be husbanded very carefully by the minister of finance of that province. So when he rose to his feet in the Manitoba legislature that evening he was not 100 per cent sure how his budget would be affected by the federal budget, and I will speak about that a little later.

Things have gone so badly since the April 10 budget that the following article appeared in the Montreal Star of Wednesday, May 17, written by W. A. Wilson. I understand that in the past Mr. Wilson has written some favourable comments about the Liberal government. He wrote:

Mr. Chrétien goes from political naïvete to inconsistency. This has become theatre of the absurd.

I imagine that a fair amount of theatre always surrounds the House of Commons, but I suggest the Minister of Finance has taken the leading role and he is probably waiting for an Oscar award for the role he has played in further dividing this country.

There are positive points in this budget, and I want to mention some of them. One is the matter of capital gains. Let us go back to the budget of March, 1977. After representations from both sides of the House, and from farm groups and organizations concerned with small business in Canada, pressure was applied on the government to remove the capital gains tax so that when a farm or small business is sold, the money could be rolled over for the purchase of a larger unit, either a farming unit or a small business.

After listening to the former minister of finance, who was gone to his just reward in Toronto, at the time of the March, 1977, budget we came away with the understanding that what had been proposed was that a farmer could sell his farm and roll over the return of that farm into a larger unit and not pay capital gains. In fact he would be deferring capital gains until such time as that farm would be disposed of ultimately by him or his heirs. During the debate on the March, 1977, budget, at no time was it suggested that it was in any way different than I have just explained.

Then what happened? A regulation was drafted in the Department of National Revenue. It was approved by the only member which Manitoba had in the cabinet, who also went to his reward. The drafted regulation in fact made an absolute mess of the proposal. What the regulation said was this: for example, if a farmer was selling his dairy operation and buying a grain farm with the proceeds from that sale, in fact he was not involved in the same farming operation any longer.

Anyone who has lived on a farm, or anyone who represents a rural riding, especially those with mixed farming backgrounds, knows that farmers might sell their egg operations and buy more land with the proceeds. This government, in its wisdom, and to make sure no Canadian makes a profit from the farmers' hard work, brought in the regulation. The hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone) brought cases to the attention of the government, as well as myself. Those cases involved farmers who had sold their farms, bought larger units, and were assessed for capital gains. The government has a total and absolute misunderstanding of the farming community.

Thank goodness we now see the March, 1977, budget reflected in the April, 1978, budget in the manner in which it was presented a year ago. That is a breakthrough. Why it had to take another year I do not know. I implore the government to inform those farmers and small businessmen, who were assessed capital gains during the intervening months, that those capital gains will not be assessed.

Another positive proposal in the budget is in the area of research and development. Research and development have been a pet project of mine in the House for some time. I have talked about the tantalum mine in eastern Manitoba where tantalum, lithium and cesium are located. In fact the largest known supply of cesium is located there. A week or ten days ago the major shareholders in that mine sold their shares to Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting. Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting is a corporate citizen in Manitoba which we all respect. Its history in that province is a long standing one. Its corporate awareness of the needs and the services provided to people in its employ is second to none.

Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting has now bought that mine, and that sale must go before FIRA. I will be making representations this week to that agency in the hope that it will approve the sale and transfer of those shares. When the former minister of mines and resources in Manitoba, the honourable Sid Green, heard about Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting purchasing this mine, becoming involved in its operations, and creating new jobs, he said that the minute the NDP came back into power in Manitoba it would be nationalized.

We have the example of the potash industry in Saskatchewan and the flight of capital which resulted there. Frankly, we are deeply concerned that outbursts such as that should not affect us adversely, that the mine will operate once again, and that employment will be forthcoming. The Cesium operation needs much more than research and development.

The focal point of the budget is the federal government's proposal for reducing provincial sales tax and reimbursing the provinces for their lost revenues during that period of time. As every hon. member knows, generally the proposal was a 2 per cent reduction, to be reimbursed by the federal government, contingent upon the proviso that the provinces would reduce their sales tax by an additional 1 per cent for six months. This was modified in Saskatchewan and British Columbia to a 2 per cent over-all sales tax reduction which extended over a period of nine months rather than six months.

An interesting thing developed with this plan. Manitoba proposed to reduce its sales tax by 2 per cent. Then it would take an additional 1 per cent, which would amount to between $20 million and $21 million, and use that amount of revenue for the creation of direct jobs. That province has been greatly concerned, as a change of administration took place, about getting the productive capacity of Manitoba moving once again, bringing about the encouragement of industry and permanent job creation. As everyone knows, that 1 per cent was totally provincial revenue. It was a provincial contribution. There was to be no reimbursement from the federal government.

Last week the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and myself directed questions to the Minister of Finance. We found out that the Minister of Finance accepted a number of counter proposals from various provinces, and at least asked the other partners in Confederation whether these counter proposals would be acceptable. What did he do with Manitoba? He rejected it out of hand. This program was totally provincially funded. It was a program for job creation. Every person, regardless of political stripe, would admit that program was totally within provincial jurisdiction. He rejected it out of hand. He did not even have the decency to ask the other partners in Confederation whether that program would be acceptable.

Obviously the first difficulty is the encroachment on provincial jurisdiction. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands brought this point out clearly in the House. I do not believe it is necessary for me to repeat it, even though with this government perhaps I should change that view. The encroachment on provincial jurisdiction is another step toward dismantling Confederation as we know it. It was a blackmail of the provinces, especially the province of Manitoba which has only one million people. Manitoba is attempting to regenerate growth and investment confidence. This was a serious blow. If Manitoba, for example, did not accept the proposal, the taxpayers of that province would have been put in a position where they would have been paying federal taxes to reimburse other provinces for the proposal. I have referred to the taxpayers of Manitoba. I do not make a distinction between federal and provincial taxpayers because they are the same persons.

The Minister of Finance knew he had the provincial governments over the proverbial barrel. The proposal did not treat the provinces equally. I have already said that he rejected the Manitoba proposal out of hand. The Alberta case has been well documented, and I do not have to speak for the Alberta members here. They have done an excellent job of representing the wishes of their province, even though I must admit, after hearing the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) last week, I am not so sure any more.

Alberta went along with the proposal as long as it was a provincial sales tax rebate proposal. In the negotiations between the federal government and the government of Quebec this became a federal income tax rebate proposal. What is the difference between an Albertan and a Quebecer who are earning the same amount of money, have the same expenses, and the same needs to provide for and educate their families? Why should the Alberta family not get the same benefits? I do not see any reason why the Alberta family with the same income and needs should not be equally entitled to the rebate which the Quebec family will receive.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce attempted to defend the proposal in the House last week. He mentioned, for example, that other provinces had much higher tax rates than does the province of Alberta. In fact he pointed out that Alberta's provincial income tax rate was only 38 per cent of the federal rate, which is less than in other provinces. The only conclusion I can draw from his speech, and Albertans will, I am sure, correct me if I am wrong, is that Albertans can in fact afford to pay more. He was putting forward the proposition that they were not paying their equal share.

I understand, after speaking with Albertans, that there is a former member of this House who went to his reward in the other place. For a while he was the minister of agriculture for the Trudeau administration. He said to Albertans, before he crossed the floor, that he was going to Ottawa to present Alberta problems to the federal government. Before long he was not presenting Alberta problems to the federal government, but rather he was going back to Alberta telling Albertans how good the federal government was for them. Being the shrewd people they are, Albertans did not buy that and did not elect any Liberals. This gentleman, of whom I speak, received his reward in that other place.

What is needed in the budget is a return to an equitable position for all Canadians. Just to illustrate the inequity which has in fact taken place on an individual basis, the budget presented on April 10 would allow someone who was resident in the province of Quebec in 1977 a federal income tax rebate of $85 maximum, providing he paid income tax. If that person had moved to another province in 1978 he would also receive the benefit of the 3 per cent sales tax reduction in the province to which he or she had moved. However, the Albertan who might have moved since 1977 to the province of Quebec would not get the benefit of that rebate. That is just one of the inequities, and there are others.

I have already pointed out that everyone in Alberta is not rich. Not everyone in Alberta has an oil well in their backyard next to the swimming pool. That is just not realistic. They are ordinary Canadians like the rest of us. The Minister of Finance has created a special status for some people, and once you give special status to any group you give less than equal status to someone else.

Let me return to the Manitoba situation by reading from the budget statement of the hon. Don Craik. It was made approximately one hour after the federal budget was brought down in Ottawa. Perhaps this will clarify some of the questions in relation to consultation. Mr. Craik stated:

> It has been barely two weeks since the provinces were first advised that the federal government might be prepared to underwrite a portion of a provincial sales tax reduction . . . and confirmation that the plan would proceed only came late last week. As members will appreciate, negotiations were quite intense during that period, and, in fact, further discussions will have to take place to resolve a number of outstanding details. We would have preferred more time to negotiate possible variations in the size, term and selective application of the abatement.

I think that is very clear, and it comes from a province that accepted the proposal.

This is a federal country, a partnership of equals, so let us begin treating them like equals and not like individuals we can browbeat, blackmail, and put over the proverbial barrel. This type of victory is a hollow paper tiger, but the losers are the Canadian people.

What should have been in the budget? I for one would favour tax cuts, and in that sense I think the Minister of Finance took the right approach. However, in our tax cuts we must provide more room for the provinces. This would not be a dismantling of central government. Some critic of that statement might immediately suggest that we are trying to dismantle the central authority, but that is not what I am suggesting.

In my brief experience in municipal affairs I discovered that municipalities are being required to deliver more and more services to the local residents within their jurisdictions, but they do not have the ability to increase land taxes because such increases add to the cost of housing and the cost of doing business, so that enterprises become non-competitive. Municipalities receive per capita grants in aid from the provinces. The provincial governments have been strapped in respect of getting sufficient revenue to pass on to the municipalities while at the same time carrying on the provincial obligations of each province. What is needed is more tax room available to the provinces in order that money can be spent for projects of local concern.

One of our difficulties today stems from the fact that the average taxpayer does not identify with some of the grandiose programs that emanate from Ottawa. However, he does identify with local projects that improve the quality of life.

What has happened in the last ten years is that both the provinces and the municipalities have not had the tax room in which to provide and deliver services needed locally. The budget did not do anything to address itself to the deficit. This year the government projects a deficit of $11.5 billion, to be added to the deficit of roughly $8.5 billion of a year ago.

The federal government has said that it will reimburse the provinces with the lost revenue they would have received if the sales tax proposal had not taken effect. The fallacy here is that in dividing taxpayers into provincial taxpayers and federal taxpayers, when I pay my federal taxes the province does not say to me, "Look, you have already paid your federal taxes, you do not have to pay your provincial taxes." Municipalities also want their share, and here we are speaking about the same taxpayer.

If the federal government had reduced its amount of spending by the total amount of money it was reimbursing to the provinces, the program would have had more credibility. I notice that the parliamentary secretary thinks that that is passing strange, and in fact he thinks it is funny. However, we cannot continue with the amount of deficit spending this government is piling upon future generations. It cannot continue, because the cost of servicing the debt is becoming a major component in our federal public spending.

The nature of the beast is that governments do not want to cut back for they fear the wrath of the taxpayer. But what is our alternative? We can go back to the money markets and obtain money through foreign borrowing, which in turn increases the amount of servicing the debt, thus putting additional pressure on the dollar. This is where we are right now, and every Canadian is paying for the legacy of this government at this point in time.

I say to the government: rhetoric is no longer needed, show us action. Where is the government willing to cut back, or does it suggest that an $11.5 billion deficit for this year, on top of an $8.5 billion deficit last year, is keeping a good account of Canada's fiscal position? For too long the federal government has thought that it could spend money ad infinitum and reap the rewards politically. Now Canadians, not the government, are reaping the results of a government that has never put its financial house in order.

A lot of words have poured forth about the tax proposals in this budget, but there is another area of federal intrusion into provincial jurisdiction, and I would like to mention that briefly. That is the carrot in federal-provincial relations or negotiations, which has been that when the federal government puts forth a proposal to the provinces, the provinces can not reject it because the government is going to pay half the cost, or what is sometimes described as "the province is only going to pay 50 cent dollars." If one uses that criterion, then the proposal of the Minister of Finance is even better for the western provinces because he is giving 66 2/3-cent dollars instead of the traditional 50-cent dollar. In the Atlantic provinces, of course, it is a 100 per cent rebate.

What this situation has done is to allow the federal government further encroachment into the provincial field, because the provinces first have to meet priorities established by the federal government, and only after that can they consider their own. I ask the government today, whatever happened to cooperative federalism? Was it also just a myth?

Another situation that happens is that when the federal government has established a cost sharing plan, as we are seeing now, for instance, in medicare and post-secondary education, the federal government either threatens or, in fact, does cap the federal contribution, that is, it places a limit on the amount it will contribute. In speaking about the delivery of health care services or education, the ultimate bodies responsible are the provinces. They have made plans and given commitments on the basis of federal involvement, and when the federal government caps a program or threatens withdrawal, the provinces receive the political reaction. As I have already mentioned, the provinces have too little tax room in which to operate, and this is simply another intrusion into provincial jurisdictions.

There has been one other attitude to come forward in the debate on Bill C-56. I am speaking as an individual Canadian, but I hope my view is shared by many Canadians, and it refers to the term which the Prime Minister used in answering questions in this House. The Prime Minister used the phrase "the Canadian common market". I moved a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43 in which I pointed out that Canada is not a common market but a united country, with a national government for all Canadians, with ten equal provincial partners. It has been a partnership since the day the Fathers of Confederation formed and founded this country. In fact their negotiations would never have come to fruition had it been anything less. Anyone who has studied Canadian history can see, jumping at them from out of those pages of history, the attitude of the Fathers of Confederation to bring about a country based on cooperation and equal partnership. This is much more so than in the history of the United States.

My motion read:

> That this House affirm that Canada is a federal state comprising of a national government for all Canadians and ten equal provincial partners.

The response, Mr. Speaker, which I thought would be an obvious, resounding yes in affirmation of ourselves, was a meek and lonely no from the government benches. A common market is an association of sovereign states which have joined together for reasons of trade or whatever to advance their common cause. The fact must be stressed that they remain as sovereign states, and the European Common Market is such an example. The provinces are not sovereign states, but equal partners in this federal Confederation making up our country. I hope that the Prime Minister will clarify that statement and, if unity is to prevail in this country, that he will cease and desist from using that phrase. I hope also that the Prime Minister will take my plea to heart.

Lastly, the budget of April 10 brought out one other factor, and that is that when the Prime Minister, his cabinet, and supporters have no other argument, they wrap themselves in the Canadian flag and say that if we disagree with them we are against unity. Are the views of the Prime Minister—especially when he says we are a common market—the views that are to prevail? If we disagree, does that mean we are not Canadians? Just think of it, Mr. Speaker—if we do not agree with the government suddenly we become Canadians with dubious credentials.

When all is said and done the legacy of the budget of April 10 will not be the sales tax and who got what from whom; it will be that we had an inflexible federal government that rammed its way through, rather than a government interested in maintaining the unity of this country and building up its economic fibre.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to point out to my friend, the hon. member from Provencher (Mr. Epp), that I was a little late in arriving and so did not catch the beginning of his speech, but I understand that he quoted rather selectively from the Winnipeg Free Press. When that was brought to my attention I said that my friend from Provencher would not do a thing like that.

As I listened to his speech, however, I heard him explain that he was in favour of tax cuts and that if he were putting a budget together he would cut taxes. But then he said he opposed any form of deficit. It was as though he felt that a tax cut did not actually represent a cost to the treasury. He went on to say that the provinces have less room fiscally, yet we know that between them the provinces and the municipalities represent 60 per cent of the tax base in Canada.

I still thought the hon. member would not distort what appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press, but then he went on to explain about the federal-provincial partnership that was developed in 1867. I would recommend to my hon. friend that he read the Confederation debates that took place in Quebec city in 1865. They would give him a broader grasp of the concept of 1867. Hon. members from Upper Canada and Lower Canada debated long and hard, and I think the hon. member for Provencher would learn a great deal if he took the time to read this little volume put out by the New Canadian Library, published by McClelland and Stewart in Toronto.

At any rate, he was quoting somewhat selectively from the Winnipeg Free Press which, I understand, has taken a rather strong position in support of the government and recommends that we not make any more concessions on the sales tax question to Quebec or any other province. I believe three or four provinces are involved at this point.

It is a curious thing that in this Chamber as soon as you touch a raw nerve you get a reaction from the other side. They do not want to hear anything that might remotely resemble facts, but as long as you go off on a fictional tangent they will listen.

I should now like to make a few brief comments about the positive proposals in the budget as set out in the bill. I think it is important to explain to Canadians what is being done and what problem is being attacked by the budget measure to decrease sales tax. I often think that we are rather cut off from the rest of Canada as we sit here in Ottawa, particularly the manufacturing areas of Canada. Some hon. members are not as familiar with the manufacturing sector as those of us who come from central Canada and areas like Toronto which has a very active, efficient, and competitive manufacturing sector.

After World War II you could sell anything you could make. Now that the third world countries such as Taiwan, Korea, and Singapore have entered the market, with between one and two billion new industrial workers since 1965, our manufacturing sector finds itself in some difficulty. Of course the problem is not unique to Canada.

I always enjoy listening to members tell about the highly efficient performance of West Germany's industry. Statistics show, however, that since 1970 there is one per cent less people working in that fabulous economy. That is because they face the same difficulties that beset all the countries that developed the older manufacturing sectors, such as textiles.

I read an interesting item at the week end about the zipper market and its complexities. The Japanese have built about 400 zipper factories which now compete with the United States, as the zippers are sold there and not in Japan. The United States is trying to get the Japanese zipper manufacturers to accept voluntary controls, because if the Americans impose some kind of tariff or restraint on Japanese zippers it would also affect the Canadian manufacturers who export specialty zippers to the United States. To add another complication, the United States actually sells us more zippers in dollar terms than we sell to them. That is the kind of thing that the opposition not only over simplifies but sometimes does not even understand.

If we take steps to restrain trade in one area, it will affect trade in another area. Our representatives sit around, as they are doing in Geneva for most of this year, trying to work out this very complicated business. Just think of the complexities involved in such a small area of manufacturing as zippers when Japan has over 400 factories that sell only to the United States.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has been trying to solve one of our problems in Canada which we always face. It concerns economies of scale. Here we are in a country that has a small population in terms of density. In southern British Columbia, southern Ontario and southern Quebec, where there is the greatest density, we have to develop a manufacturing sector which can compete with countries such as Japan which not only has a large population, but has traditionally sold to South America, as well as the Far East. These countries have tremendous advantages over us in economies of scale; countries like Japan, the U.S., Germany, etc.

I was talking to one of my constituents the other day who works in a factory making steel pipe in Toronto. We were discussing the fact that we import different kinds of pipe and yet we only export two kinds of pipe. He explained to me the reason that we do not make 30 different kinds of steel pipe with certain stress characteristics is because we do not have a market for these 30 different sizes of steel pipe with certain stress factors so we make two kinds of steel pipe, and we undercut the opposition outside of Canada. We have a large export market in that particular type of pipe because we have a use for it in Canada and we have developed the expertise. If we try to manufacture 30 different types of steel pipe, with various stress factors, all of them will suffer and all of them will lose money. That particular sector that we have developed and are competitive in will just go down the drain, as well as the jobs that go with it. What do we have to do? We have tried a variety of things over the last year.

The hon. member for Provencher spoke previously about tax cuts. Not just my friend from Provencher but other hon. members in this House talk about tax cuts every three months or so. As soon as we have any tax cuts the opposition tell us that we have created too much of a deficit. If we do not have any tax cuts we are told there are no tax cuts, so therefore the government is no good. Whatever happens, the government is wrong.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Stollery: That is one of the great things about a democracy. Of course those members conveniently do not mention the fact that with a small population and tremendous obstacles, under this government our country has developed into one of the very sophisticated manufacturing economies in the world. That is the phenomenal thing. Canada's achievements with its small population and the difficulties of transportation; sending goods across an empty country; distances as far as from here to Europe—it's a Canadian miracle.

Then we turn to job creation. Imagine a country like Canada, with all of these problems, and yet for every year for the past ten years, except one I believe, we created more jobs in Canada than any country in the western world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stollery: That is an achievement. It is not something which should be treated as insignificant and that it does not matter. It is a positive thing.

The kinds of remarks we hear from across the way only cause Canadians to lose confidence in themselves. That is probably our national problem. We lose confidence in ourselves in spite of the fact that we do so well. We have two languages and, with all of the complexities hon. members on the other side would not understand—

Mr. Alexander: Go back to Toronto.

Mr. Stollery: —we have these achievements. I do not mind going back to Toronto. I like Toronto. It is a terrific place. I would rather be there right now than here.

Mr. Alexander: We will fix that up.

Mr. Stollery: I am trying to explain a few things to you that you obviously do not understand. We all know about Hamilton. Most of us would rather be home on this side than here in this House. But we have business to do, and so we are here.

As I say, we have the difficulties of trying to shift some of our manufacturing emphasis into the high technology area.

Over the past two or three budgets, ministers of finance have made tax cuts. I forget myself just exactly what they are and I have to look through the statistics to see how many tax cuts there have been. When the former member for Rosedale was minister of finance I believe there was $1 billion in economic stimulus given to business and consumers. Then there was another $1 billion given in additional purchasing power provided by the automatic indexing of family allowances and income tax and other social assistance measures, at the beginning of 1977. Automatic indexing did the same thing this year in January, and that was in excess of $1 billion, I believe. Right after the new year, when I was trying to get information from the Department of National Revenue on the base rates for 1978, they were not calculated at that time. They have to do their computation of the indexing and it takes them some time to do that.

In 1977 there was another $1 billion which went to consumers in the form of personal income tax, of up to $100 for low and middle income tax payers. This was directed to consumers in January and February, the most difficult months. It took the government five weeks to get that bill through parliament because of the opposition and filibustering that went on. I believe we have to apply time limits in order to give people $100 tax cuts—

An hon. Member: Same old speech.

Mr. Stollery: Here we have an hon. member saying we should have tax cuts. When we do propose tax cuts, there is a filibuster. When we propose sales tax cuts, there is a filibuster. This is the sort of so-called responsible opposition. Every time something is attempted to be done for the citizens of the country which is positive and will assist the economy, there is a filibuster. That is the opposition's set response around here.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

An hon. Member: You are misleading the Canadian people. You are less than honest.

Mr. Stollery: This is the way they carry on.

I would like to talk about the research and development aspect which is addressed in this bill and in this budget. Sometimes Canadians say that we are not doing any research and development. The first Canadair jet rolled off the assembly line last week. We sold 110 of those before the first one even came off the assembly line. This involved the highest technology there is, aerospace technology. It created 4,000 jobs. In spite of this, some Canadians say we are not doing enough research and development. And this is a government owned operation, as my friends explain.

We really have quite a large research and development sector in this country, despite the extraordinary problems this country faces with two languages, tremendous distances, and a small population. We are not only into the manufacturing high technology sector. A few moments ago, I spoke of economies of scale. If you have economies of scale and a large base, you dispense with a great many of the problems we have in Canada.

In the areas of fisheries, we are a world leader in technology and scientific research. As the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) pointed out when he made his speech on the budget, we are a world leader in agricultural research. I see the hon. member here who represents Guelph. The Guelph agricultural school is renowned for its agricultural research, having developed famous strains of wheat. I am not a specialist in agriculture. However, when I was a child I remember hearing about No. 1 winter wheat being developed in Canada in order to extend the growing season in the northern latitudes of this country. I did not want that to go by without comment.

As I stated earlier, the Minister of Finance has tried several ways to get Canadians to part with their cash. He has been modestly successful. Bank savings have never been so high. One problem with tax cuts is that instead of spending the money and thereby encouraging demand, some people have the tendency to put that money in the bank.

The average Canadian understands that various ways have been tried. There have been tax cuts which give Canadians a greater take home pay. In this regard, from 1968 to 1976, personal income in this country, that is to say wages, salaries, fringe benefits, pensions, investment incomes and so on, increased by 72.6 per cent, including inflation. There was a 72.6 per cent increase in personal average income.

Mr. Peters: For those who work.

Mr. Stollery: That is an across-the-board figure taking all factors into consideration, including unemployment. Average family income in Canada went from $7,688 in 1969 to $19,110 in 1976, a true increase of 35.2 per cent, including inflation. That takes in all of the members of the family.

Personal disposable income per capita advanced at an average rate of 13 per cent per year from 1970 to 1976. That is a rather enviable record in a time of severe economic world difficulties with the new industrial workers, the energy question, and the food shortages of the early seventies.

I remember listening to the Prime Minister of Jamaica, Mr. Manley, when he was addressing a group of Jamaican Canadians in Toronto. He stated that Canadians were upset about energy costs. He told them that about 1973, every time he went to bed at night, the price of wheat increased another few cents a bushel before he woke up in the morning. The price of bread increased in a country that has very little hard currency and is not able to grow wheat. Those are the kinds of problems that have overtaken the world. Therefore the figures I have quoted speak well of Canada over the past decade.

Canadians are putting money in the bank. Canadian bank accounts have never been so high. Therefore the Minister of Finance has tried the tack of making goods cheaper. By cutting the sales tax a couple of percentage points he felt that Canadians would be encouraged to buy more.

With ten provinces and ten provincial governments, we have many difficulties in this country. The provincial governments are not elected to take on the federal government. However, after being elected, they somehow adopt a mantle never given to them. Therefore, the Minister of Finance courageously—

Mr. Alexander: Leave that word out.

Mr. Stollery: —courageously decided to make goods cheaper for the constituents of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). The hon. member may be opposed to that, but the Ontario minister of finance is one of those who proposed it. Therefore, I do not know why he is complaining. If the hon. member wants goods to be 2 per cent or 3 per cent cheaper in Ontario, he had better think again about that. When buying a shirt or the various other goods they buy, hopefully my constituents will get them a little cheaper. I hope they will benefit by this courageous move by the Minister of Finance.

If I have a reservation, it is in the manufacturing sector. There have been different incentives. More money is available for research and development. There have been sales tax cuts as well as personal tax cuts. The announcement this past week to reduce the difficulties with regard to the capital gains tax on family businesses being passed on to the second generation is another incentive.

All of these are positive moves and should assist the manufacturing sector, the medium sized businesses and small businesses. I do not know how small is small any more. It is difficult to define.

Management now has a responsibility. A year ago some corporate tax cuts were announced. I hope that management puts these incentives to good use. I hope they are not used as an excuse to be inefficient, to not go ahead and look for areas in which they can be more competitive.

In Toronto we have a very aggressive small manufacturing sector which manufactures neckties, sportshirts and items like that. They usually are made in small quantities, and in the Spadina district, which I have the honour to represent, this is an extremely efficient business. It does well. It has adapted when it has had to.

I often wonder about the shoe business. People talk about the problems of the shoe business, and there are problems. On the other hand, I see signs advertising Roots shoes. I know very little about shoes, but I understand that the Roots Company was developed by young Toronto entrepreneurs. That company is not closing up. It seems to be opening new stores. If I am not mistaken, I think it has a store in New York.

I am concerned, however, because the management of business does not take some of the steps it should be taking. Management has a practice of starting a business and taking an unduly high salary, instead of putting more money into market research where it should be going. I have seen this happen time and time again.

My family in Toronto has been very successful in small business, but not by taking large salaries. I think we operated for 70 years. We weathered two depressions. The depression of 1922 was the one which really hit small business in this country. There was the depression in the thirties. My family was successful because it did not take too much out of the company. We did not form associations to restrict competition and trade. I have seen much of that in Canada. Instead of looking into market research individually and finding out how better to compete, companies spend too much time forming associations. Then, of course, they complain when the inevitable disaster overtakes them. However, the inevitable disaster does not overtake a business which takes proper steps.

I would like to finish by suggesting that when hon. members opposite go to Toronto, they should go to the industrial areas of North York and Mississauga. In those places they will see hundreds of small manufacturing and warehousing companies which are doing well. Seeing that makes one feel good. The trouble with hon. members opposite is that they spend too much time in the editorial offices of the Toronto Star. All they see there is Lake Ontario. Fellows, that is not the city; you have to look the other way.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I was not sure I would be speaking until the hon. member who just spoke made a number of comments. I do not want to participate along the same line as that used by many others because I think that problem will iron itself out. It was touched on briefly by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery). The problem I refer to is the sales tax argument between Quebec and the federal government. There will probably be an argument put up by some of the other provinces which did not realize that there was a possibility of negotiation. They are now learning about that. That problem will be solved, but it is one of the problems we have in this country.

Many of us sometimes think of the infallibility of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec. The Liberals were of the opinion that they would win a large number of seats in that province. I am sure most people did not think the Liberals could screw that up, but the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has gone a long way toward that, and now we have all the provincial parties in the province of Quebec on one side, and the federal government on the other. It reminds me very much of the days of Duplessis. Mr. Duplessis was in power for a long time, and he was very successful. I suppose most of us agree that this kind of bickering between the federal and provincial governments, and between the federal government and the people of the provinces, is not to our advantage because all it does is aggravate the problems we are facing.

When discussing Bill C-56 we should be concentrating on what we can do to end the problems we have. When the hon. member for Spadina spoke he, like many others, spoke about how good things are. Hon. members opposite never talk about the one million who are unemployed. They talk about the people who have been added to the work force. Canada is growing. It has not reached a zero population growth yet, so I presume the number joining the work force will continue to increase each year. Perhaps Quebec has a negative population growth, but that is not true of the country in general, and I think anyone can use figures to show that things are good.

The hon. member for Spadina also said that we have increased returns to the individual, but he did not mention that we have a 12 per cent per annum increase in the cost of living. For probably the last ten years that has been the rate. That makes an increase of 120 per cent, so it is to be expected that people will need more money to make ends meet. Even people on welfare need more money. Our unemployment rate is considerably higher than our welfare rate was ten years ago, but all that is really not important. What is important is that we are in serious trouble, and things are not getting any better. They are getting worse.

I will soon be facing my ninth election, and in all my years here I have never experienced the build-up to an election we saw this year. It was engineered with all the finesse the backroom boys could muster. Everything was built up, and then all of a sudden the polls said "no dice". The polls said that the Liberals could not win. Being an animal of power, the Liberal party decided not to go, and everything has been geared down. Perhaps this House should have been geared down. Perhaps we should have taken a recess and started fresh on a new session. However, that did not happen. The Gallup poll found out what many members of parliament already knew, that the country was in serious difficulty.

The average person feels offended and insecure when he finds himself out of a job, and when he finds his neighbour and two or three others on his street looking for work which is not available. When his children are educated and try to enter the labour force but cannot get jobs, the average person feels insecure.

I think one of the things which really upset the Canadian taxpayer was that the government decided to let our money find its own level in relation to United States currency. As the American dollar dropped—which it did drastically in relation to international currencies—the Canadian dollar dropped along with it. Then suddenly the Canadian dollar started dropping even lower than the American dollar. The government did the same stupid thing the Diefenbaker regime did a number of years ago. It started putting out money in dribs and drabs. Most of the people who had that experience were aware of the fact that the problem of the falling dollar cannot be solved by investing relatively small amounts of money.

If the Minister of Finance had said, "We are willing to go through the whole works, whatever we have in foreign exchange, and to put it into that fund", maybe the investors would have said, "That may stop it, so we better get out", and they would have stopped playing around with the dollar. I am not aware of who made any money on our dropping dollar—it may have been Liberals or it may have been Conservatives.

An hon. Member: How about the NDP?

Mr. Peters: I do not think it was anyone in the NDP. I was one of those who was interested in the fluctuating value of the dollar and in the relationship of the dollar to mining, particularly to gold, and I watched the dollar very carefully. I came to the conclusion that if one is playing around with one tenth of a cent in the Canadian dollar and one wishes to protect one's money by buying or selling futures in the dollar, one will have to invest somewhere in the neighbourhood of $1 million to get a return. I do not think any of my colleagues have that kind of money.

I play the market as if it were a game of Monopoly. It is make-believe playing on the market. In my limited experience, even with Monopoly money, I would not have been able to make much money on the Canadian dollar. One has to have a lot of money to pay the margin on the dollar, whether it goes up or down. But I am sure people did, and I am sure some money was made in this country on the Canadian dollar because, if people had not been buying or selling it, obviously its value would not have been fluctuating that much; it would have been more stable. I think that influenced very greatly the ordinary Canadian. I notice that at auctions in particular. If you go to an auction and you watch people bid, you find that money is of no value to some of them. They bid more money on used articles than they would spend in the local store on the same brand new article. When people get to the point where they almost throw away their money, they see no value to it, they will meet with disappointment. I think that that as well had a great effect on the Canadian public.

Where do we go from here? How do we handle the problem? The government in its budget did somewhat the same thing as it has always done. True, it added two or three other useful measures in the tax field. But what were most of the tax changes? They were mostly in development and exploration and, in a small way, in research and development.

The government has never really decided what it wants the economy to do, and it has never decided what area it wants to develop. If you want to see a true lack of planning, just look at how we apply our tariff laws when we are trying to develop an industry which perhaps should not exist in Canada in the first place. We have done this with textiles and with a number of other industries which will probably not be able to compete.

There are many other industries which are capable of competing, and one of them is communications. Fortunately there has been development in this country, much of it as a result of the work done by the National Research Council, and the government itself has promoted research. This reminds me of the difficulties which we encountered in the last war when we found that the Germans were controlling the patents on optical lenses. Research in that area in Canada developed in a short period of time by a totally different method which was better and cheaper. After the war we gave it to the German I.K. Faben Corporation which held the original patent.

We have also been innovative in the field of communications and have developed new technology which is now being sold to other countries. High speed urban transportation is another field which we should develop. We should develop it in our own interest since it is highly saleable in other countries. We have to pick a number of fields where we can become expert. We should probably develop forest product machinery.

Also, we are probably experts in diamond drilling. In fact two or three companies in my riding are supplying much of the diamond drilling equipment that is sold in many countries in Africa and in the Far East and in almost every drilling operation around the world. This is a field which we have been able to develop and where more money should be invested.

Sooner or later the government will have to make a decision as to where it wishes research and development to concentrate, and it will have to reward people for their work in that particular field. This can be done by several methods which are now being used in the tax field. It should only be done if some conclusive development is achieved by a company which will be beneficial to the industry and to the whole country. We should specifiy which industries we wish to develop, and then we should then put money into those developments.

What is being done now? I know some of my friends on the other side are very interested in financial matters. It is interesting to note what we have done in terms of tax concessions for development in various fields. It makes one wonder just what we are doing in the field of development, and the write-offs which we allow for development in such areas as oil and gas, for example. Surely all Canadians are confused about this. We have had a barometer in that respect that moves as if a major storm were to erupt every other day.

One day one reads in the financial pages that a number of natural gas companies are petitioning the general public and making propaganda so as to get contracts to sell the surplus gas they have, and a couple of weeks later the same thing is happening with oil companies. After the immense scare we had two or three years ago, there have been five or six applications for the sale of crude oil to the United States to export an additional amount because a company has suddenly found that it has more oil than it can use, and the same is true of gas. We think naively that when we need it we will get it back. In a pig's ear we will get it back! If the Americans need it, they will surely not give it back, and they will certainly not honour a contract which we allow some company to enter into.

We gave concessions in northern development and northern exploration, and we allow them a 100 per cent write-off. If it is frontier development, we add another sixty three and two thirds per cent to that. The result is the creation of such companies as the Beaufort Exploration Company, which is backed to some extent by Dome Petroleum. They have agreed to write off the liabilities, to carry the insurance, and to do the exploration for Beaufort Exploration Limited. What is Beaufort Exploration Limited? It is a company which is set up as a tax haven, a tax dodge. It is interesting to read what they say will happen under certain circumstances to people who invest a certain amount of money. We are not referring here to the guy with a minimal salary.

Anyone who is well off can become involved in investments. Members of parliament are getting into the category of the well off. The degree to which a person is well off depends on where he lives. He can be faced with a tax level of 50 per cent. In Manitoba the basic tax level of a person who is well off is 54 per cent, whereas in Ontario it is 43 per cent. A person in Manitoba with some money to spend could buy shares, for example, in Beaufort Exploration. These shares are being offered in units of 100 at $10,000, plus a $400 handling charge. Through certain arrangements a person can also purchase another $10,000 worth of preferred stock.

I should like to refer to a man in Manitoba who has an income of approximately $30,000 per annum. With that income he is required to pay income tax on approximately $24,000 of his income, amounting to $8,134. If he purchased one unit at $10,000 of Beaufort Exploration, with its tax exemptions and havens, he would experience a reduction in his tax payable of over $6,500. If he bought two units for $20,000, he would experience a reduction in his tax payable of over $8,000.

The person who has an income of $100,000 per annum is required to pay taxes on approximately $94,000, which would amount to $50,000. If he purchased one unit of Beaufort Exploration, his tax payable would be reduced to $39,000. For an investment of $10,000, and with an income of $100,000, that person would receive a reduction of approximately $11,000 in his tax payable. The after tax cost saving by the purchase of one unit of Beaufort Exploration would be $494. That $494 would come directly from other taxpayers. That is what is done for the rich of this country. If they make investments which cost $10,000, they receive almost $500 in their pockets.

If a person has a $200,000 income, it is projected that on an investment in one unit costing $10,000 he will receive from taxpayers almost $1,500. The other taxpayers pay for the full cost of the stock. With the present tax structure, he is allowed to write off the total investment and also benefit by receiving $1,500.

Much has been said about what is being done for the little guy by the reduction of sales taxes, but we must remember what is being done for the big guy as well. We must remember what the person who is making a fairly healthy income is allowed to write off, especially when he purchases $10,000 worth of Beaufort Exploration stock. Also he has the option to purchase another $10,000 or 100 units of preferred stock, as well as the rebate of $1,500 from the taxpayers because of his $200,000 income. This is what is being done with our present tax structure. It would be wise to scrap the whole thing.

At the present time we require development in the Arctic. That development should take place where, when, and how it is needed. The government went a little way toward encouraging development. It set up Panarctic and the Canada Development Corporation. It has gone into development in a limited way, sometimes more, sometimes less. The government has not decided that the end product is jobs and that incentive must be provided to industries for that purpose. The government has attempted to provide jobs with a shotgun approach in order to make everyone a little bit happy, the result of which is that nothing has been done for most people.

I am reminded of what the former hon. member for Sudbury talked about in the House years ago. He was referring to insurance companies. He called them parasites, he called us parasites, and he went on to say that people who live off the workers are parasites.

Not long ago I listened to a speech by Mr. Doug Fisher, a former colleague. He pointed out that, according to Statistics Canada, there are 700,000 people in Canada working for a living, producing the wealth of this nation. These figures refer to miners, forest product workers, fishermen and farmers. He went on to point out that we have 2.5 million sales people in Canada. There are only 700,000 workers, but there are 2.5 million listed as sales persons, as well as over one million clerks. It makes one wonder, if we have that few people doing all the work and the rest of us living off them. Are teachers, politicians, salesmen, and advertisers living off the workers because they are not producing our nation's basic wealth? If we are to go ahead in this country, it must be in highly modernized and technical fields. At the present time one farmer can farm 1,000 acres, whereas before his father was hard pressed to farm more than 160 acres. We are highly mechanized and can outproduce other countries in most of our basic resources.

If we are to develop jobs for people, they should be in the manufacturing field. We must make a choice of a limited number of areas in which we should concentrate our research and development. The entire direction of the government should be toward that end. Perhaps the government will make a mistake in the choice of industries requiring research and development, but we will have to bear with it. It will be necessary to choose what industries should be developed, and hopefully some of the natural assets of this country will be used. The industries will have to be developed to a point where they can compete with anyone in the world who is involved in those fields. We need a government which is prepared to market our products, form trading blocs to negotiate with other countries, and use that system so that we have an opportunity to sell.

When I was in Cuba a year ago I was shocked by the number of small Ford Cortina automobiles on the streets. I asked why those automobiles bore a Spanish name. One official pointed out that Cuba had approximately 20,000 of those cars. They had attempted to order those cars in Canada, but Canadian Ford indicated that they could not be sold to Cuba because of a law in the United States. Thus, those 20,000 cars were purchased from Argentina instead. In any event Ford receives the money, but because of different arrangements in Argentina it was necessary for Cuba to purchase the 20,000 Ford Cortina automobiles there rather than in Canada. Perhaps it was not such a good deal, but if Argentina did not lose on it, why should Canada be prevented from becoming involved?

I am sure it was a shock for all hon. members, particularly cabinet ministers who realize that it is necessary for Canada to move goods, to learn that we had expertise in fields at one time which we no longer have. Canada is a very large country with the largest coastline in the world. We have to move goods. I remember that during the war we had one of the largest fleets in the world. We had developed a very large merchant navy. We put it together with haywire and tin cans, and all the rest of it. It may not have been so good, and the government was sure as hell interested in getting rid of it after the war. Do not forget that a lot of those ships, Liberty ships in particular, went to Onassis. That is how Onassis built his fortune. That is how he got his multimillion dollar enterprise controlling a large part of the shipping world. He started it with our Liberty ships which he bought for almost nothing because we wanted to get rid of them.

I was interested in attending at NATO. I am not really interested in NATO. They are carrying out a paper war. They move papers around like we do here, I suppose. They have tanks and all those other things. They were suggesting that if we had difficulty in Europe and the Russian overran us, we would be able to hold them off for two weeks and by then reinforcements would arrive. How will those reinforcements get there? Will they get there by aircraft? We do not have any transport planes that will carry a sizeable number of troops, and certainly will not carry equipment. We do not have any ships. At NATO they suggested we will use United States ships. Hell, the Americans will be there and will be using every bottom they can find, rent or borrow across the country to move the stuff they have to move. They will not be lending ships to Canada.

We were the experts at building ships. We had a reputation which had been built up over three or four hundred years of shipbuilding in this country, building everything from tea clipper ships to Liberty ships. We were recognized and renowned as shipbuilders, the builders of fast, useful ships with good utility. We can build them, but the government got out of this enterprise because it decided we are not in that business. We were not interested in a merchant navy.

Norway did not say that. Norway did not have any ships. It decided it better get some because its people lived on the sea. Norway now has one of the largest merchant navies in the world. It seems to me if Canadians are going to move troops overseas, and everybody is talking about defence, then we better obtain some long range contracts with Norway in order that we can rent some of their ships, because we do not have any. We could build ships that would sell in other countries.

Canada is a real big country. What are we doing playing around with airplanes? We have played around with the Twin Otter, The Beaver, and now the Dash-7, of which we have not sold any. Perhaps we have done better with the Lear jet. I presume that is the one that Canadair has, or a modification of that Lear jet. We may have done better with it because there is a market elsewhere.

We had probably the best team of aeronautical engineers in the world. We had a team in the aeronautical field that you would not believe could be built up by a country like Canada. We did not raise those people; we brought them in from elsewhere. Most Most of them came from Europe. They are not here now because they left and went to NASA. They really are the basis of the whole NASSAU operation. They were the areonautical brains of the world. We had more than our share. We did not steal many from Germany, but we sure got a lot from the British when they decided to go out of the airplane business. We lost all that, not because of anything those people did, but because of the fiasco of the government in relation to our air program.

We could have developed one of the best aircraft industries in the world. It is my honest opinion we could have built a transport plane that would have been useful to Canada in meeting Canadian needs. This likely would have had a spin-off in the military field. We did not move in that direction because we really did not make up our minds what field we wanted to move in. We really did not decide what industry we wanted to develop. We developed a branch plant economy related to the United States. In many ways this was not a bad economy as long as things were going up. When they started to go down, the parent companies weighed jobs against transportation costs and found it easier to ship things in than to develop them here and sell them. They pulled back on development in our country. This has happened in respect of many industries, particularly those which have an up and down attitude in relation to the economy.

We could go on with a discussion about what we are doing in respect of transportation. We could develop in a number of other fields in which we are obviously competent. We could develop a car in this country to meet the northern parts of a number of countries. Our needs are not unlike those of Sweden, Norway, Finland, the north part of England and parts of Japan. We could develop a car, just as other countries have done, if we concentrated on one or two cars and put an industry together, saying, to hell with the Americans, if they want to take their industries back to the United States we will build our own." I do not think we have much of a future in the automobile industry, because every time I listen to people talking about that industry I learn of another truck or automobile plant that is moving back to the United States. Perhaps we should not eliminate those branch plants, but we should start to develop a Canadian industry of our own. We have to be selective, and this must be a government supported effort with the co-operation of the provinces and the people.

We have to make war on unemployment in this country. There are many highly trained young workers in this country who have never worked. Often girls come to the office looking for jobs. They are just out of school, and hold degrees. We want people with typing skills and experience. We need people who have dealt with people on a one to one basis, and who know how people react, and how to talk to them. These people have had no experience. This is a very limited field, but this situation is true in many areas.

I heard farmers talking the other day about having young people come to work on the farm in the summer. After a while one farmer allowed a young lad to drive his tractor. He said he had two loads of hay on the wagon behind the tractor. He also had one of those little four wheel drive jimmies. He asked the 17 or 18 year old lad from town whether he could drive it. The lad said that he could, and the farmer told him to stay behind the tractor and wagon. He did stay behind for a short distance, but as soon as they reached a wider part of the road he drove by and down the road like crazy. He had obsolutely no sense when driving it, not understanding how it worked. He was lucky to arrive at his destination. The lad told his mother he would not mind working there for nothing because the farmer let him drive this vehicle.

It is not the boy's fault he has no experience. He is no dumber than anyone else, but he has had no opportunity to be around machinery or to operate it. He has no living experience. There are many young people today in this category.

If things get much tougher we will soon see gangs of these young people on the street, and they will eventually start the type of activity that is occurring in other countries of the world. We certainly do not need that sort of thing in Canada. This will not be entirely the fault of these young people, it will be the result of our own failures.

There is one other field where the government must implement a national strategy, and that is for industrial development. We have to get the people in the civil service working instead of pushing paper. I was speaking to a man on the plane this morning who described a situation to me. The government had established an extra district office and the people in the district office felt they were doing things about which they had no knowledge. He went on to outline a situation where he had bid on a tender for a garbage pail pad in this particular community. The pad was to be approximately eight feet long and four feet wide. His bid was $184. The government insisted that he get an architect and drawings. He told them to use their own people and build it themselves because he was not going to do that. The cost would have been around $2,000, where his bid had only been $184, to pour a couple of yards of concrete and to put a small amount of aggregate under it. This kind of situation illustrates what is occurring all over the country because all we are doing is moving paper.

I feel that where people are competent and well trained, we should be giving them an opportunity to develop an industrial strategy. We are better at these things than a lot of people across the world. We are more competent, we have more initiative, and we certainly live in a colder climate where we have to do something at least to keep warm. We cannot just lie under the banana tree and get our food. We have shown our ability in the past, and we should give our young people an opportunity to participate in the future. This can only happen if the government puts forth an industrial strategy.

Recently I, along with other members, had discussions with the representative on tariffs who had returned from Geneva. Much of industry in Canada is involved with tariff protection, concessions, and subsidies. In listening to our representative, and I am sure the other members would come to the same conclusion, we are "babes in the woods". We do not know what we are doing and therefore we are obviously going to be taken advantage of by others. We are going to accept restrictions that we should not accept, and we are—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, he is doing such a great job, and since it is only three or four minutes before private members' hour, we would like him to carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall)—Transport—Replacement for S.S. "Carson"—Location of shipyard undertaking construction; the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—Transport—Hall Report—Request minister consult Mr. Justice Hall on recommendations.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole, and of the amendment (Mr. Broadbent) (p. 5548).

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, it is becoming a pattern where my comments on matters of this sort are being interrupted by the bell to call it five o'clock or four o'clock. However, I must say that I sat back and wondered at the verbosity, articulateness, and inventiveness of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) in skirting around this bill. In fact I do not know if he is even aware of the number of the bill we are discussing because he dealt with such matters as national strategy for industrial development, a need to develop the aircraft industry more fully, and the merchant marine.

The merchant marine is an area in which the hon. member and I see eye to eye, and we deplore its loss. He went on in that particular stream very, very effectively. Then he jumped to productivity in the public service. Finally, before you called him to order, Mr. Speaker, because his time had run out, he was on GATT and the discussions in Geneva.

I would like to draw to the attention of the hon. member that the bill before us today, aside from being numbered C-56, is described as:

An act to amend the statute law relating to income tax—

It refers to income tax, Mr. Speaker, and he may have overlooked that because I do not think income tax was mentioned. It goes on:

—and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions—

We have to congratulate the hon. member on his enormous ingenuity in being able to talk as though it were either a debate on the Speech from the Throne or on the budget, and his ability to cover all those areas and to avoid the two principal matters before the House, namely, income tax and sales tax reductions.

I see the hour is approaching five o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to call it five o'clock so that I might begin my comments at eight o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

OLD AGE SECURITY

SUGGESTION PENSION BE PAID TO PERSONS AT AGE 60 UNDER CERTAIN CONDITIONS

The House resumed from Monday, November 14, 1977, consideration of the motion of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the advisability of amending the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan to provide for the pensions payable under these two acts to be available at age 60 to all persons who meet the other requirements of the said acts and who are not in or are prepared to withdraw from the labour market, and also to provide for the basic amount of the pension payable under the Old Age Security Act, at age 60 for those not in the labour market and to everyone at age 65, to be increased to $300 per month, for this basic amount to be escalated each year by an amount that will enable pensioners not only to keep up with rising living costs but to share in rising living standards, and also to provide for the elimination of any means or income test from the Old Age Security Act, so that the full pension thereunder will be recognized as the established right of all our people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock I failed to ask for leave to proceed with the continuation of this debate of item 14. I just wanted to tell the Chair that since this is the first notice of motion on the order paper, that request, as I usually make it, was not needed today. Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, we are ready to proceed with the consideration of that motion and I think the hon. member is prepared to rise.

[English]

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to participate in this debate on the motion by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who has demonstrated his keen understanding and sensitivity on the issue of pensions. His concern is shared on this side of the House by Liberal members who have expressed their support for this particular issue, in caucus and in their own ridings. It was the thinking of this government back in the sixties, which has allowed Canada to have perhaps one of the finest social security systems that exist in the world today.

One goes back to the Pearson years when this was possible. It was a Liberal administration that introduced the Canada Pension Plan as we know it, as well as the Medicare system. These were two very important steps taken on a long road of Liberal measures which included the Old Age Security Pension, the Guaranteed Income Supplement, and Hospital Insurance back in the 1950s. It would be quite correct to say that Canadians today look to parliament for social security protection as a continuation of these fine traditions established by Liberal governments.

The motion recommends that the old age pension be increased to $300 per month. There are arguments that could be made about the effect of such an increase on retirement savings. I am sure every member of the House would be in favour of it, particularly if it did not cost the taxpayer anything. At this point the debate becomes somewhat controversial because we all have different notions about whether the taxpayer can stand an additional load. We hear the Conservative party say that government spending should be reduced, and that taxes should be reduced. It would therefore be consistent that anything pertaining to an increase in benefit payments would require a substantial change in the policies of the official opposition. On this side of the House we like to think that as wealth is created and generated in the country it will be distributed properly and find its way to those members of society who need basic protection, either because of age or disability.

While I support the basic thrust of the hon. member's motion which is to make the pension available at a lower age, I would prefer that rather than fixing an age—the hon. member recommends 60—the qualifying age for old age security be made flexible. I think of people working in industries that are physically demanding and which wear out the worker sooner than other industries. People working in mines or construction, for instance, often have to do heavy lifting. The jobs are demanding from a physical point of view, and there is often a desire to retire sooner than people engaged in activities not so physically demanding. Perhaps it should be left to the individual to decide on his retirement age. If someone wished to retire sooner, conceivably he could draw a smaller pension than the person who wished to retire later.

In a democracy, we could surely develop a system that would leave options open to the individual. A pension system seems to be a logical place to provide for this flexibility and these options. There may be those who would wish or would need to retire at age 49, 11 years earlier than the age of 60 provided in the motion. And, of course, there may be people who would wish to retire later than 60. There is a trend in certain occupations and professions these days for later retirement. I would link this trend to the kind of work an individual performs.

As we move into the eighties—and perhaps even sooner—we should conceive a system to allow the individual to make a decision on his own, depending on his personal circumstances and the conditions that prevail in his profession or occupation. A system of nailing future legislation to a fixed age level is not as desirable as a system that would allow individuals to retire sooner if they wished but, of course, at a lower level of pension.

I should like to deal also with one aspect of the Canada Pension Plan which deserves to be given consideration in this debate and I commend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for having put forward this comprehensive motion that permits us to debate this matter in its entirety.

In the past, some people have not qualified for a disability pension under the Canada Pension Plan because they had not made the necessary five years of contributions. A situation could conceivably arise where someone contributed for four years and nine months but was denied a disability pension because the magic figure of five years had not been reached. I can understand the need for certain minimum contributions, but I suggest a change should be made. At times we may come across a situation that is very serious where, as a result of a highway or other accident that is not compensated by provincial legislation such as workmen's compensation, a person does not qualify for disability pension. We should make a change so that such person would receive a disability pension in proportion to the number of years he contributed to the scheme. For instance, if he had contributed for three years instead of the prescribed five, he ought to be allowed to draw a partial or reduced pension. The same would apply to a contribution that would reflect a shorter period of time.

Even if this were very modest in substance, it would still be better than the complete denial that a contributor has to accept under the present legislation when the contribution falls short, even by one day, of the prescribed five years.

The Canada Pension Plan could also be a vehicle for new approaches to the whole idea of a basic social security system. It seems to me there are a number of occupations which are not covered right now but deserve at least the benefit of a study to determine how they could be covered. For instance, there are a number of individuals in this country who would be glad to contribute the employee's contribution plus the employer's contribution to the Canada Pension Plan. I suspect they would be willing to make the total contribution, namely, the employer-employee portions, even a larger monthly contribution than the present one if they were allowed to do so if eventually this would lead to qualifying under the Canada Pension Plan for retirement and other coverages that are envisaged under this plan.

At the present time women raising their children are not allowed to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan. In other words, if a spouse is raising children and is not in the labour force, this leads to an exclusion which one can perhaps understand within the narrow confines of the law. But in broader social terms I cannot understand why a citizen who is willing to make a full contribution, namely, that of an employee plus that of the employer, at his or her own expense, ought not to be allowed to do so and then be allowed eventually to draw some benefits.

Although I cannot prove it because I have not had an opportunity to do the necessary research, I suspect that the number of people wishing to enter the labour force would be lower, namely, the so-called participation rate. People entering the labour force would not be doing so quite so dramatically as they have done these past few years if they were allowed to contribute as do those presently in the labour force. It stands to reason that if a person is at home and wondering about his future and his retirement income and not in the labour force, that person would not be contributing to the Canada Pension Plan as it stands now. Then that person would begin to wonder if he or she should not enter the labour force—to contribute to the family income in the first place—but at the same time as a thought and as a possibility one must anticipate the time of retirement, and that thought goes together with the thought of being in the system and of being allowed to contribute among other things to the Canada Pension Plan. Otherwise this cannot be done and that person cannot qualify, let's say in this case, for the provision of the old age pension that comes from this particular plan which, added to the old age security pension, gives a greater degree of assurance about the time when one retires and has to depend on a fixed income for retirement years.

It seems to me that in a society as we know it in Canada there ought to be, in the total scheme of things having to do with pensions and social security, a greater degree of flexibility. This flexibility ought to be coupled with a greater number of options which can be given to the individual. Perhaps I will sum it up in this form.

If one wants to receive a pension earlier in life, one could choose that route, excepting of course that one would receive a smaller pension by drawing it sooner. Secondly, as to the possibility of being a contributor to an important scheme, such as Canada Pension Plan, one should be allowed to contribute and be part of the system even when one is not an employee and therefore not in the labour force. This could be done by creating a special category, or a category that simply permits one to make a full contribution, namely, the employer's plus that of the employee. This would allow a person to continue whatever important role that person performs in the home, which we all recognize.

Others are perhaps more qualified to make a better speech on this subject. People not in the labour force would get this sense of security when permitted to be part of the system, and allowed to contribute to it, enabling them to make plans for the future and for that day which will inevitably come of having to live on a fixed income.

I am grateful, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Winnipeg North Centre.

An hon. Member: I do not blame you for reacting to that.

Mr. Caccia: I apologize, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. It is an important distinction. I am grateful to him for having put forward his thoughts on this measure. We do perhaps disagree on the technicalities and on the ways of achieving the ends, but we on the Liberal side are certainly as sensitive and concerned as he is.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with the hon. member opposite in commending the hon. member who has put forward this motion. As is so often the case, he has taken an advanced position on many social measures and has earned a rightful reputation in this House for doing so.

At the outset I would like to state that from this side of the House we find much that is commendable in the motion put forward. Like the hon. member who has just spoken, and the hon. member who has proposed this motion, I am sure that every member in this House has had representations, generally and particularly from time to time, especially during the last two or three years of difficult economic conditions involving the younger segment of the population. Like hon. members on both sides of the House on many occasions I have received representations that it is too bad that so many older people are working when they really do not have to, and when there is such a high unemployment rate among young people. I agree with the proposition that there is an incredibly high unemployment rate among younger people, but I am not sure that this is a good argument in itself per se for reducing the pensionable age to, let us say, 60 years of age.

Let me repeat what I said. Based on the argument that it is the younger breadwinner who should be given precedence in terms of employment as against the older worker, I wish to put forward my opinion that this, per se, is not an entirely valid argument.

I agree with the hon. member who put forward this proposition vis-à-vis the means test. I had hoped and thought many years ago that in relation to most social policy, especially in the area of pensions, we had gotten away from most if not every consideration relating to the means test.

I listened with great interest to the hon. member who put forward his ideas in a very constructive way. He asked for flexibility as we approach this subject, especially in relation to the age of 60. I think we are going to need that kind of flexibility.

I am not sure that I have the answer. I certainly do not want to go back to the means test, and I am not sure the computer has the answer in terms of finding us some middle ground between universality and the means test in terms of selecting those who, at the age of 60, by need and by desire, as the hon. member who just spoke said, should be drawing a pension at that age. While I want to get away entirely from any consideration of a means test, especially in the area of pensions, I think we have to look at this age of 60 on another basis than universality.

I approach this whole debate with one thing in mind especially. At the turn of the century we had not developed a sophisticated pattern of humane and decent delivery of medical and health care services. In this part of the western world, largely because of infant mortality, and the international definition of infant mortality being the death of a child between birth and one year, the average life expectancy of both males and females in North America was somewhere around 43 years of age. Today, largely because of the advances in humane, decent, and civilized medical and health care services, we now have a life expectancy of somewhere around 70 for males and 76 for females. I could be wrong in terms of exact years, but I believe it is generally around 70 for males and 76 for females.

The life expectancy was somewhat higher during the sixties and possibly the early seventies. However, because we have not come to grips in terms of cleaning up our environment—soil, water and air—in the last 12 years life expectancy for both males an females has gone down somewhere in the neighbourhood of one year.

In approaching this general subject, all members on both sides of the House should stop, look, and listen. It is my firm conviction that between now and the twenty-first century, based on my optimistic presumption, we will continue to make large advances in the delivery of decent and humane medical and health care services.

I join with the hon. member who made this proposition. There are members of that party who are largely responsible for many of our advances to date. I obviously think of the ex-leader of that party who had a lot to do with medicare in Saskatchewan. There is no excuse why we in Canada should not be able to say why we are not delivering the most decent, civilized, and humane social welfare and medical and health care services. However, in this case we must stop, look, and listen.

This is the most important point I can put forward in debate today. I realize there has been a lag in the last two years, but if we continue to finance medical health care and research properly, not only in terms of pure research but in terms of delivering medical and health care services at the community level, we will continue to make large advances. Between now and the turn of the century, there will be great advances in the area of cardiovascular disease treatment. I do not say that between now and nine o'clock tomorrow morning we will come up with an over-all cure for cancer. However, in terms of treatment and cures for certain aspects of cancer, notably breast cancer, great advances will be made.

We must come to terms with the greatest killer of our youth under the age of 35. I refer to highway and automobile deaths and injuries. While cancer may be the biggest killer, and cardiovascular disease second, or it could be the other way around, the biggest killer of our youth under the age of 35 is in or by automobiles. It is our third biggest killer in our country. Dr. Wilder Penfield and many other neurosurgeons in the western world call this an uncontrolled epidemic which is compounding itself by 8 per cent every year.

It is my belief that between now and the beginning of the twenty-first century we are going to come to terms with cardiovascular disease, many aspects of cancer, and we are going to get a handle on highway and automobile deaths and injuries.

Without getting into the crystal ball and tossing irresponsible figures into the air, I believe that while life expectancy has gone from 43 to over 70 up until now, by the turn of the century it will be somewhere around 86 years of age. I know a lot of people joke and say they do not want to live that long, but the facts are that.

A bill like this should be analysed in terms of broad, social policy, realizing the advances that will be made in environmental medicine and preventive medicine, with a dramatic increase in life expectancy between now and the turn of the century.

I know the hon. member who put forward this bill is deeply sincere about it. He is very concerned about social and medical and health care policy. However, the bill should not only be analysed in terms of the fact that this government has messed up the economy of the country, that we have terrible youth unemployment and therefore terrible pressure is put on older Canadians to get out of the labour market. I sympathize with the decent spirit of the hon. member when he put forward this proposition, but it would be irresponsible for us to block ourselves rigidly into such a policy at this time without considering the long terms prospects of our aging population.

There are many charges on the treasury—federal, provincial and municipal—in terms of education costs. We are now educating a lot of our population past the age of 30. We are going to pension these same people off at age 60. In all fairness, without being ultra-conservative about it, I would ask the hon. member whether he has costed putting the retirement age of 60 under a universal program, because in terms of other priorities in the social and health field, one wonders where this priority would fit.

Because of the economic mess we are in at the present time, is there any money in the treasury for this kind of social thrust? I am not going to say that because this government has messed up the economy we should not take positive, creative and constructive steps in the social welfare and medical health care fields, but in terms of other priorities—preventive medicine, community medicine and all those things we should be doing in the social services bill which is soon to be brought before parliament in terms of day care centres, crisis intervention and that kind of thing—I wonder if the hon. member who proposed this measure has really thought about where this very costly measure should fit in the scheme of priorities. I wonder if he has thought about my deep conviction that, by the turn of the century, as I have said, the average Canadian and the average individual in the western world will be living to his or her mid-eighties. I reiterate that I quite agree with the hon. member that in many cases people could and should for many reasons retire at 60, but should this be a rigid, universal program? And I am not satisfied that we should go to a means test.

I would have preferred to have heard from the hon. member who proposed this measure debate about where he fits this measure in with the scheme of priorities I mentioned. I would have preferred if he had given us some detailed costing of the measure. When we are talking about proposals in the social, medical and health care sectors, I think it is very responsible to cost them out not only for our own use but—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is what the senators said about $20 a month 50 years ago.

Mr. Grafftey: The hon. member is often the conscience of the House.

Mr. Muir: As many others are.

Mr. Grafftey: He oftens feels he is the conscience of the House, but I put forward the proposition that when we are talking about billions of dollars, it is probably a good thing to cost these things out and consider priorities.

I say with firm and deep conviction that my party is dedicated—largely because members on both sides of the House have worked along these lines in a bipartisan spirit—to the proposition that many people in our society should not be getting an undeserved shafting through the system; and because there are hard working members in all parties in this House, there is no excuse for this. We have the infrastructure. There is no excuse for the fact that in Canada we should not be leading the world in terms of delivering at the community level decent, humane and civilized social services and medical and health care services.

Mr. McIsaac: We are.

Mr. Grafftey: I think a proposal such as this needs costing, but it also needs analysis in terms of other priorities in the social welfare and health fields. It needs to be seriously considered in terms of the proposition I put forward a few minutes ago relating to my firm conviction about life expectancy at the beginning of the 21st century. Today we are talking about universal pensions at 60 when life expectancy is 71 to 75. If we add ten years to that 20 years hence because of constructive advances in the delivery of medical and health care services, I think we owe it to future generations to stop, look and listen.

If we do talk about pensions at 60 while not going back to a means test, perhaps we should still not be talking about universality. Perhaps much of this is hypothetical now because of the state of the treasury.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Grafftey: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Since the hon. member so generously, out of the goodness of his heart, is raising life expectancy in the year 2000 to 86, I wonder if he would be good to me and raise it to 92. I would like to see that year too, and to see it right here.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the hon. member is being facetious or not.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am serious.

Mr. Grafftey: I base my projections on some pretty solid research work. I base my projection of a life expectancy at the turn of the century of 85 on the firm conviction that somewhere along the line we are going to recommence our major intervention in the delivery of medical and health care services.

Let us think of what is going on in the area of bacteriology and control of diseases which heretofore killed. We know that biologically man can live to be 120 years of age. That is an ideal, and there are many problems which intervene and which make it an ideal; but I bring these matters forward because I think they deserve discussion now. I know that the hon. member has a deserved reputation for being ahead of his time, but given contemporary conditions and the points I have brought out I think this proposition deserves further and more detailed discussion.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would of course like to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) whose motion is presented for the second time during the present session. On May 19, the Social Credit Party introduced a supply motion which contained a similar item, that is the lowering of the retirement age to age 60—

An hon. Member: Voluntary lowering.

Mr. Laprise: —the lowering of the voluntary retirement age to age 60, yes. This shows, Mr. Speaker, the importance of this matter not only for members of the New Democratic Party and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who, for many years, has kept hammering the nail on the head, and I congratulate him for his perseverance and determination. He will certainly win his point. We of the Social Credit Party of Canada have taken all the opportunities made available to us to defend this argument and we have introduced numerous motions on the issue.

My colleague from Bellechasse, my colleague from Roberval, myself as well as others, have often asked that the voluntary retirement age be lowered to 60 not only for wives or women, but also for men. As early as in 1966, I presented a motion for the spouse, who is not entitled to a pension when his wife or her husband gets it to be recognized as a pensioner of the state. Now, since that time, part of that has been recognized by our legislation. The latter does not, by far, meet the requirements I had made and which were supported by many hon. members in this House. But the fact remains that a step has been made in improving the law.

But today, bearing in mind the production facilities of the Canadian industry, and the needs of the people, I would not say the aging population but as the number of older persons increases constantly, I believe it is important to allow those who reach 60 to retire if they wish to do so. We all know that some people who are in very good health or who have a job where they can continue to work may find it difficult to leave the work force at 60. They should have the right to work if they want to. However, we know that for many people, it is difficult to continue working at 60 in a plant or in the woods of northern Abitibi and northern Quebec, or in the mines of Matagami, Joutel or the Noranda area. After 60, it is difficult for someone to continue to work if he has lost his health because of his work.

Mr. Speaker, we believe that we are right in saying that those people should be entitled to retire at 60 if they wish to do so and also to have a sufficient income to live comfortably. This is precisely the purpose of motion No. 14 proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Speaker, when such innovations or motions are discussed, members on the other side of the House, on your right, Mr. Speaker, on the side of the majority, always ask: "Where shall we take the money?" They are always concerned about money and not about needs. A while ago, the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) was still concerned and nervous and was not ready to take a position on the issue because he was wondering if he should place money before people. For him, the dollar sign is even more important than the Canadian citizen who has worked from the age of 14 or 15 until 60 to develop Canada. For him, the dollar sign is even more important than the Canadian citizen.

Mr. Speaker, I felt sorry the other day when I read in Hansard for April 14 statements made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) in answer to the hon. member for Bellechasse who had requested in his speech on the budget a more substantial pension for our senior citizens and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, if I have correctly understood the speeches and remarks of the two parties of the opposition I have heard so far during the budget debate, Canadians did and won almost nothing . . .

But, Mr. Speaker, Canadians—but we know and we recognized that they have done much to develop their country. We want it to be recognized in a legislation which will bring down the retirement age to 60. We do not want to be given it as a charity but as a right that would be recognized once and for all as a right should be. That is what we ask for when we propose or support such motions.

The funny Minister of Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) said about the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) that he blamed the government for an alleged terrible loss of money he called the debt system. Of course, our national debt amounts to $38 billion but we should not worry about it. If we worry about that debt they call us timid. Mr. Speaker, last year that debt cost us $5.350 billion in interests and will cost us this year $6.500 billion. For those who worship the golden calf and who would do anything for the owners of the golden calf it is alright to pay out $5.5 billion or $6.5 billion in interests, but when we ask for $2 billion more to allow senior citizens who built our country to have a more decent living they cry shame and ask where is the money coming from.

Mr. Speaker I think we should make a distinction between paying interest and paying tribute to the owners of the golden calf who did not raise a finger to develop Canada, we should make a distinction and allow those who developed their country to get a decent pension at the age of 60. I am shocked by this situation. What are the needs of older people? They need food like everybody, they need clothing like everybody and decent dwellings and they should have leisure activities like everybody. They are like other people. They have a right to those things. This is what we demand for them.

Mr. Speaker, is it not the desire of Canada to continue giving them those things they require and they need? I think that Canadian industry and Canadian agriculture, transportation means can move goods from one place to another. I think the services can meet the needs of all those people without depriving others since we have one million unemployed who only ask to replace those people who will be leaving their jobs. Those are the things we want to set in order.

Many young people join the labour market. We have teachers who do not know how to go about it right now. Young people come out of junior colleges and universities with degrees but cannot find work. They offer to do any kind of work. I know a young man in Ottawa who is now in the north working in the forest making fascine. It is a job for a labourer not a professional. You are not going to tell me that this is a young man who does not want to work. He is there with the flies at the risk of burning in the forest or faced with any other peril. But he wants to work, he needs money to continue his studies.

You have 60, 62, 63 or 64 year old people in that same forest at the same site who have to continue to work in the same conditions to earn their living because they cannot do anything else. I think it is in those things we want to put some order. I raised specific points to make sure the minister understood them well. If she is not here, I imagine she surely has serious reasons for being absent but she will have an opportunity of reading tonight's debate and to understand that the system in which we live needs to be changed also.

I was just handed a news appearing in today's Le Droit in which the Minister of National Health and Welfare stated in Longford Mills, Ontario, and I quote:

> Two million children live in poverty.

That is brand new, very recent. The minister just understood and realized that. She said, and I quote:

> The economic system must be amended to promote and not discourage work.

It looks like she has finally understood the situation and I hope that the measures she will take following tonight's debate will really be effective and bring about the necessary amendments to the Old Age Security Act so that the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre as well as all the recommendations that have been made from both sides of the House will be considered and that at last senior citizens will be allowed to retire a little bit sooner if they wish to and will be able to live a decent life since the country can provide them with that possibility.

● (1742)

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am becoming very intrigued—and I hope other members of the House are also becoming interested—with the motions being presented to the House on the subject of retirement. It is very clear that every member who has addressed the House recently on the subject of retirement has expressed different opinions. What is becoming increasingly important is that, while we are all striving to reach a common goal, namely, the well-being of Canadians, the objective is being approached by a great variety of seemingly contradictory routes.

It was recently that the House was debating the motion to consider the advisability of enacting legislation to raise the compulsory retirement age from 65 to 70 for any person aged 65 or more who does not wish to retire and is prepared to give up his or her entitlement to any private pension plan or annuity. Today we are asked in part to give consideration to the advisability of amending the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan to provide for pensions payable under these two acts to be available at age 60 to all persons who meet the requirements of the said acts and who are not in, or are prepared to withdraw from the labour market.

The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) asked a pertinent question about the cost of the program envisaged by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). In the time remaining in the hour allotted for private members' business, I think that is a good point for discussion.

Let us look at the proposed increase in old age security benefits. The old age security program expended close to $4.5 billion in the 1976-77 fiscal year, roughly $3.3 billion of which was spent on the basis OAS benefit program, $1 billion on the guaranteed income supplement and $0.1 billion on the spouse's allowance.

Since there are at present just over two million old age security recipients in Canada, a $1 increase in the OAS pension implies a cost increase of more than $24 million annually. The member's motion proposes that the Old Age Security basic benefit be raised to $300 per month from its present amount of $156.66, almost doubling the current rate. It was easy to calculate that two million pensioners each receiving $300 per month or $3,600 per year would be paid $7.2 billion per year altogether. It was noted that this would represent a rise in total program expenditures of roughly $3.8 billion, or 84 per cent greater than the present cost.

As well, the member proposes that the income test currently applied to the guaranteed income supplement be removed. It is not entirely clear from the motion whether the benefit would be incorporated in the $300 he proposes, or tacked on to this amount. If we make the latter assumption, all OAS pensioners over 65 would be entitled to the full GIS benefit in addition to the $300 per month basic pension. This was worked out to a total expenditure of roughly $2.4 billion at present rates, or $1.4 billion more than current GIS expenditures. The total OAS program expenditures would therefore rise by about $5.2 billion per year at current rates, if the benefit increases suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre are applied to the over 65 population, bringing the total program cost to $9.7 billion.

The hon. member suggests also that benefits under both the old age security program and the Canada Pension Plan should be made available at age 60 to those not in the labour market. This is, in effect, the reinstatement of the retirement test which the Canada Pension Plan formerly applied at age 65. However, it would apply at age 60. It is estimated that this measure alone would increase old age security costs by another $4 billion annually, making the total cost for this program $13.7 billion per year, or nearly treble the present total annual cost of the OAS program.

If legislation were introduced to allow CPP retirement pensions to be payable at age 60 in 1979, and if we assume that only half the eligible population takes advantage of early CPP retirement, we find that benefit payments would rise by $40 million in 1979 and would cost the Canada Pension Plan fund an extra $640 million by 1985.

If cost calculations are to reflect with any degree of accuracy the potential effect of these measures on the Canadian economy, they must go beyond a simple counting of increases in numbers of pensions and the dollar amount of benefits paid. We must bear in mind the rather obvious fact that an increase in the number of pensions means a corresponding decrease in the number of people in the labour force who must pay the taxes and contribute to support the larger population of pensioners. That is to say, we are not simply increasing by five the number of years for which the eventual pension must be paid; also we are lowering by five the number of years in which the individual contributes toward the benefits of others.

Then there are other hidden costs associated with lowering retirement ages and increasing benefits on which we can only speculate at this time. If income security benefits such as old age security are drastically increased, will this encourage people to be more dependent on public pensions and to decrease their personal retirement savings? Certainly the average private pension benefit will have to be smaller or the contribution rate much higher if we lower the average working career by five years and increase the average payment period by the same amount.

As far as they can be reasonably estimated, the costs of the hon. member's suggestions to change CPP and OAS benefits would require at least $7.7 billion extra in the first year after implementation. As was carefully detailed in an earlier speech, the annual amount to be expended only could be expected to increase rather than decrease over the long term.

I hardly think it is necessary to provide more details at this time on this particular proposal. It is abundantly evident that we are being asked to consider literally an increase of billions of taxpayers' dollars in very general and respected government expenditure terms. These figures force one to conclude that the hon. member's motion, however well motivated, is not very realistic in terms of what the country can afford. I do not reflect upon the motivation of the hon. member, but I must say it is not very realistic at this particular time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That has been the argument for 50 years. It has been the same argument from the beginning.

Mr. Anderson: As far as I am aware, the hon. member has not come to the House of Commons and said that we have $7 billion, $10 billion or $13 billion extra. As I have said, the hon. member is well motivated, but at this particular time when we are carrying a deficit in the expenditures of the federal government of Canada it would not be fair or realistic to ask Canadians whether retirement ages should be lowered or raised.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being six o'clock, the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

● (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole, and of the amendment (Mr. Broadbent) (p. 5548).

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, when I called it five o'clock this afternoon I was expressing my wonderment over the facility with which my colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), could talk about the bill yet avoid its subject matter. I assure you I am going to talk about Bill C-56 which deals with income tax and provincial sales tax reductions.

I have been waiting for some time now to comment on the constitutional morass into which the government has stumbled, if, indeed, it has stumbled and not gone there of its own free will by design and where, as a matter of fact, it seems likely to sink or at least get itself frightfully mired down as a result of cooking up the $85 Quebec taxpayers deal that has so enraged not only Quebec but all the provinces of Canada. I will deal at length with this further blunder, the consequences of which can only be to drive a wedge more deeply between the federal government and the provinces.

It is tempting, Mr. Speaker, to ridicule the government for its apparent insensitivity in this area, a government made up of a party which has claimed for ten years now to be the only party capable of dealing with Quebec. Canada as a whole, however, is the principal casualty. Therefore, ridicule is just not the response that is called for by this particular issue.

Indeed, my approach is one of sorrow for Canada because of what this government is doing and seems bent on doing. The truth of the matter, of course, is that the vast majority of those making up this government are too close to Quebec to be in a position to take an unimpassioned approach to the problems contemporary Quebec has raised in Canada as a whole. This is not only in general constitutional terms but even in terms of this tax deal, which has become such an issue. They have convinced themselves that the proposal they have advanced in this legislation is compensatory in the sense that if, in a somewhat different way, it is doing in Quebec and for Quebeckers what it has already done for the other provinces and the inhabitants of those provinces, then it is right. There is no comparison. It is a completely new approach to the problem. It has to be, otherwise this legislation would not contain clause 59, which is the first subject of my comments.

This is a money raising bill with a clause providing for the outlay of funds. This matter has already been raised in the House, but it is a strange procedure that in a bill, primarily concerned with raising money, there is a provision, the last one, dealing with the spending of money. For all other provinces it was a matter of vacating part of the income tax field for each taxpayer, $100 worth to be exact, so that the province could occupy it. The taxpayer, of course, gains nothing out of that particular shift from one payee to another. This book transfer has been done in most of the provinces.

However, we must recall that the federal tax collecting agency, Revenue Canada, which at the moment is not represented in the House by a minister, does not collect income tax for the province of Quebec. Quebec assesses and collects its own income tax, and that is a distinguishing feature which we have to bear in mind. The federal government, however, was not going to allow the provinces to replenish their treasuries, generally speaking, leaving Quebec aside for the moment, without some quid pro quo on the part of the provinces that benefited thereby. The provinces were expected in return for that extra revenue which they were going to get to cut provincial sales tax levies by 3 per cent for six months. My own province of British Columbia opted to cut the levy by 2 per cent for nine months.

The provinces gain revenue, on the one hand, by getting into the income tax room vacated by the federal government, but they lose revenue on the other by collecting less in the way of sales tax. It looks pretty fair and sounds like a good deal, and it probably was until the "feds" started fiddling around with the Quebec situation because Quebec had said, "Not on your life" to the proposition put forward by the federal government. They did so on the ground that the sales tax was provincial jurisdiction and the "feds" had no right whatever to suggest how the province can impose or collect its sales tax, a simple constitutional reply. I would say it is fair constitutional ball. I remind the House that the federal income tax collecting agency, Revenue Canada, does not collect the provincial income tax assessed in Quebec.

Thus, we had on the one hand several provinces agreeing to lower their sale tax and, on the other hand, Quebec refusing to do so in the across the board manner as proposed by the federal government. Instead, Quebec eventually decided in its own budget and within its own jurisdiction to drop the sales tax entirely but only on certain classes of goods that are manufactured in Quebec so as to benefit the manufacturers in that province—shoes, clothing, textiles and furniture. Their object was to preserve employment in those industries. Having done this, the Quebec tax authority asked for its prorated portion of the income tax deduction from which the other provinces had benefited, a sum amounting to approximately $186 million.

By this time the situation had become really complicated. The federal government refused the Quebec counter-proposition and claimed that the province had failed to co-operate. Things went ding-dong from it, and then the federal government hit on the novel idea that is set forth in this bill—to return as direct payments to Quebec taxpayers the amount they might have otherwise had returned to them had the provincial government played ball like the other provinces.

To get the picture properly into perspective, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read into the record an excerpt from a letter which was sent by the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to the provincial minister of finance in Quebec. The Minister of Finance in his paragraph three starts out:

> In your letter of April 27, you indicated that you did not accept the federal counter-proposal . . . The federal government has therefore decided to pay the Government of Quebec, as it undertook to do on April 21, an amount equivalent to two percentage points of the selective eliminations of the sales tax that you announced, that is, about $40 million. In order to rebate the remaining $186 million, the federal government will temporarily withdraw from the personal income tax field by reducing the tax paid by Quebec taxpayers by a corresponding amount.
> For the Quebec taxpayer, this reduction will be equal to the lesser of $85 or the tax otherwise payable. The purpose of the rebate is to compensate Quebec taxpayers for the provincial sales tax which they will have to pay on all items not subject to a reduction from 8 to 6 per cent for six months.

This was the proposal made to the other provinces. Going to the next paragraph:

> The sum of the $40 million to be paid to the Quebec Treasury for the selective eliminations of the sales tax and the $186 million to be rebated to Quebec taxpayers corresponds to the $226 million allocated to Quebec in the Budget speech.

There we see the arrangements that were proposed, counter-proposed and finally laid down by the federal Minister of Finance.

There are several interesting features arising from this unusual proposal and they deserve mention. First of all, it provides a tax rebate to Quebeckers that was not provided to the citizens of the other provinces, $186 million worth if I read this correspondence correctly. In the case of the other provinces, hon. members will remember that the federal government vacated an area of income tax that was immediately reoccupied by the provinces. No citizens from the other provinces gained by this process; they were merely being taxed by a different authority at a different rate, sometimes higher, sometimes lower.

Second, the 3 per cent reduction of sales tax on purchases within a province benefits all citizens buying items subject to sales tax, from cars to stereos to building supplies to drug items. The elimination of the sales tax in Quebec benefits only those who buy shoes, clothing, furniture and textiles. But that is Quebec's decision and if Quebeckers do not like it as a long term thing they know what they can do—they can vote on it at the next general election in Quebec.

Third, the federal proposal will extend up to an $85 rebate to income tax payers only in Quebec. The Quebecker who pays no income tax will not benefit. That is an important point. It is favouritism of the worst sort. The revenue collected in other provinces as a result of the federal government vacating part of the income tax field will become part of the province's general revenue and as such will go to pay citizens in those provinces. No amount of casuistry can produce arguments to convince me that what is being done for Quebeckers is the same as was done under the tax vacating process for other provinces.

There are two jokers in this pack, Mr. Speaker. There are a lot more jokers than that with all the government members who are not over there! The first one is that on October 15, when the tax vacating deal plus the sales tax reduction notion comes to an end, the provinces will have to decide whether to continue with the sales tax reduction or suffer the political consequences of reimposing it. That is a nice way to deal with the provinces; it is a neat political trick to go through the motions of producing what looks like a favourable deal for the provinces with the full knowledge that the unfavourable consequences when the concession comes to an end will be borne by the provinces.

Is this the way to run a federation? Is this the way to treat federal-provincial relations—through Machiavellian trickery? Does the six-month deal and the October termination deal have anything to do with a general election? I think it is enough to make one wonder. One has every reason to ask why, if this government really wanted to do something positive to stimulate consumer buying, which presumably was at the bottom of this whole operation—the assumed reason for luring the provinces into dropping their sales tax—it did not reduce the federal sales tax. They are losing $100 per taxpayer to the provinces as a general thing, at no gain to the taxpayer. Federal revenue, therefore, has dropped. Could it not have dropped by the same amount by reducing the federal sales tax? What mischief is this government about, what tortuous reasoning takes place within its councils, are questions the Canadian people have to ask.

I said there were two jokers in the pack. The second one may take a few words of explanation but it produces a surprising result. Quebeckers are to receive an income tax rebate of up to $85 because it proved impossible for the federal government to work out an income tax and sales tax deal with Quebec similar to the one worked out with the other provinces. That is, $85 on a six month deal that in most provinces produced a reduction of 3 per cent in sales tax across the board. It means, for those who get the $85, that they would have to purchase $2,833 worth of taxable goods in six months, 3 per cent of $2,833 being $85. Are income tax paying Quebeckers likely to buy that amount of taxable goods in six months aside from clothes, textiles, shoes and furniture? Is anyone? On top of that, Quebeckers get the benefit of total sales tax exemption when buying those items on which the Quebec government decided to eliminate the sales tax. It is a great deal—a great way to promote harmony in a federation!

The distressing conclusion to be drawn from this sorry mess in which we find ourselves is that this government seems determined to look always for political profit in its dealings with Quebec, and this time has failed utterly. The approach of the provincial legislature, voting unanimously to reject the proposal, is evidence of that.

We are bound to ask ourselves, as we have asked often and will ask as long as this government is in power, is this any way to hold a federation together—by exploiting a national crisis for political advantage? The answer obviously is no, it is not. Error heaped on error heaped on error: that is the record of this government. Once again I ask, how long are we to endure this "reign of error"?

Enough, however, of criticism. Surely there is something commendable in the bill before us. There is, even if it is not wholly commendable. I want to turn to clause 34 of the bill which has 19 long and tortuous subsections, all dealing with RRSPs and all arising out of paragraph 16 of the ways and means motion tabled by the Minister of Finance on April 10, 1978.

The first thing I want to say about this is that the motion broadens considerably the options open to those who have decided to make provisions for their retirement years by investing in RRSPs. I think this is a good thing. Prior to the tabling of the motion those who followed this route had only one option open to them aside from cashing in the savings in one fell swoop and facing the income tax consequences of doing so. Those consequences could be fairly heavy. That option was to convert those savings at any time between ages 60 and 71 into an annuity on which, of course, the annual levy of income tax would be paid.

It is worth recalling for a moment or two what the RRSP is all about. When originally conceived about 20 years ago the plan was designed to provide the self-employed person—the small business operator, the doctor, the garage owner, the lawyer—with an advantage already within reach of the salaried worker and the daily wage earner, namely, a tax exempt reduction in take home pay in order to build up a pension fund that could be drawn on upon retirement. Self-employed entrepreneurs were unable at that time to make provision for their retiring years and get a tax benefit as well. The RRSP provided that facility.

Over the years the emphasis on RRSPs seems to have shifted somewhat, just as the principle underlying the unemployment insurance scheme has shifted under this government. Whereas unemployment insurance was originally devised as an insurance to provide against the day when a salaried worker or daily wage earner found he was temporarily out of work, it has since become a means of collecting welfare entitlements that contributors are more and more coming to feel are their due. Having paid, they have to collect, just as the man who has paid fire insurance on his house for, say, 20 years decides in the 21st year that he is going to get his money back and sets fire to his house.

Something of the same sort has happened to the RRSP facility. Whereas it was originally designed as a pension planning scheme—a temporary relief from income tax on the funds being put aside—it is now tending to become a tax shelter with an incidental pension benefit. Everybody is getting into the act because the tax shelter benefit is there, even those who already have pension plans prepared for them by their employers under salary or wage deduction schemes.

The reasons for this shift from the pension scheme idea to the tax shelter notion are easy enough to understand. First of all, inflation has gripped most of us with its long entwining finger and threatens to throttle us, meaning fear for economic security in the years ahead which in turn dictates additional pension revenue than that provided by employers. Furthermore, the income tax cut by the government has been biting deeper and deeper into current income. So why not run for the nearest tax shelter, that of the RRSP?

RRSPs have become a way of saving for the future as well as saving oneself from the full burden of current taxes, with special emphasis on the latter advantage.

In his budget provisions in April the Minister of Finance responded in a sort of way to many of the representations that had been made to him to broaden the options open to the owner of an RRSP. These representations, so far as I can make out, were made by individuals but also by trust companies who, until that time, were unable to retain the use of the RRSP funds that may have drifted their way during the savings period of a working man's life. All annuities up until now had to be provided by the insurance companies. Individuals could save in a trust company but when it came time to roll that money over into an annuity, it had to go into an insurance company. The April budget now opens the door for a type of annuity payment that can be handled by trust companies who will in future be offering competition to the insurance companies. I am assured by those to whom I have spoken that the insurance companies welcome this particular competition.

This broadening of the investment horizons comes about largely because of a new vehicle proposed in the budget that may be used by the retiree any time between age 60 and 71. This is the RRIF, the registered retirement income fund, into which the RRSP owner may roll his savings.

The options now open to the RRSP owner are as follows: Firstly, he may cash in his RRSP and meet his income tax obligations at one fell swoop if he wants to. That is option number one and it is not new.

Secondly, he may buy an annuity for life, a straight life annuity, or a term certain, say a 15-year or 20-year annuity. These he must still buy through an insurance company. That is option number two and it is not new.

Thirdly, he may buy an annuity equal to the number of years remaining between the age when he buys it and age 90. For example, if he buys it at age 60 he buys a 30-year fixed term annuity and it will be paid for as long as the annuitant lives. It will be paid certainly for 30 years, and if he should die, then it expires. That is option number three which extends the fixed term feature of annuities and it is new.

Fourthly, he may roll over his RRSP into a registered retirement investment fund which he himself can manage, if he so desires, or which he can have managed for him by any trust company, even the one in which he had invested the RRSP. The payments from that fund may be drawn down annually until age 90 in quantities determined in the law. It is an ingenious scheme that gradually works up in such a way to a good deal more at the end than at the beginning and finally sees the total extinction of the fund in the pensioner's 90th year. That is option number four and it is totally new.

One thing worth nothing about these options is that whichever option is selected it cannot be acted upon before the age of 60 and must be acted on by age 71. Comments on these limitations would appear to be in order. There is a third age at issue here and that is the age of 90 which deserves some comment.

In connection with age 60 the following remarks are warranted. Why is it not possible to get the RRSP, without loss, before 60 with the same options? Suppose a self-employed entrepreneur, the owner of a plumbing fitments business or of a garage, or a doctor or a lawyer, wants to retire at 55, or even 50 if he has made a good thing of it. Perhaps an individual has had an illness and had to retire earlier than age 60. If he has been laying RRSPs aside regularly during his working life, why should he be denied access to them except under penalty—that is, with some considerable loss? Is it because public servants who have devised these schemes are unwilling to see anyone retire before they do and set age 60 down as the earliest age at which contributors may gain access to their funds?

I think the arbitrary age of 60 is nonsense and that that limit might well be removed. The size of the fund will obviously be less because it will not have been invested as long. I can see no reason whatever why, with notice, the funds should not be available with the same or even more options whenever the investor wants it, whether it is before 60 or after.

At the other end of that 60 to 71 time limit why should anyone have to roll over his savings at age 71? I see no reason at all. Maybe an investor finds himself comfortable financially at age 71 and is prepared to let his money go on growing. Why should he not be able to do so? Why should he be obliged to roll over his RRSP into an annuity? At 75 he may feel like a world cruise or decide to cash in his RRSP. Why shouldn't he? Perhaps some of his other investments have not panned out as expected and at 75 or 78 he needs extra support. Maybe inflation has caught up with him. It could happen. In other words, why should he not be able to defer the roll over of his RRSP until he wishes? Or, as in the case of the lower end of that age bracket, why should he not get those funds without penalty when he wants them at age 55, 58 or even 50?

My other comment concerns age 71 and the fourth option, which is a self-managed fund. It is a pretty ridiculous proposal when you look at it. In 99 cases out of 100, who at 71 and over that age until reaching the age of 90 will be able to manage his own investment fund? It takes a very long life of studying the markets in order to be able to make a fund grow. If he does, can his trust company know with any certainty what the annual pay-outs will be? As one commentator in the Financial Post said on April 15:

> This is going to turn the industry on its ear. Can you imagine the absolute chaos caused by an RRIF owner being able to run his own account but the trustee (i.e. the Trust Company) having at the same time to liquidate the fund according to a strict formula year by year?

Self-administered RRIFs at any age sound to me to be self-defeating. At age 71 they would probably be self-liquidating in the majority of cases.

Now, this age 90 limit brings me to my final comment. Many people live beyond 90. Life expectancy at 71 is nearer 85, true. But some die before 85, and some obviously live to 90 and beyond. Figures available to me indicate that in 1976, for example, there were 52,160 Canadians living over the age of 90.

These options nearly all close at age 90. The only one that does not, of course, is the life annuity option. This is the first one, the payment of an annuity for the life of the annuitant, be that for one or for 40 years. But even under this option presumably—at least this is the way I read the bill—an individual can contract with an insurance company for a period certain plus a life annuity which could carry the annuitant beyond age 90 should he live beyond that age.

Options three and four, however, foreclose at age 90. Why? Not only why, but what happens after age 90, for those who live that long? Who chose the mystic 90 figure and what does it represent? At age 91 an annuitant could feel way out on a limb if he had opted for either plan three or plan four, because both terminate at 90. The choice of that age baffles me.

I would far rather see the 90, if it has to appear at all, as a "for example." Let the annuitant decide the length of time he wants to enjoy his RRSP, but he should have explained to him all the options open to him. This is basically the role the insurance companies play—life only, fixed term only, term certain plus life, and the terms can be ten, 15, 20 or even 30 years, of course, with corresponding changes in the size of the annuity payments. As variations on these, there are joint life and term certain plus joint life when man and wife are deciding on working out their annuity as a joint operation.

I say again, in conclusion, that the RRSP owner ought to be able to get his RRSP without penalty, at least after leaving it invested for five or ten years, whenever he wants. He should be allowed to defer if he so chooses, even beyond 71. He should not be limited by the mystic age 90 either, only to find at 91 he is completely dependent on others for his everyday care.

Besides the individual criticisms, I find the broadening choice offered by the RRSP in this bill commendable. For that reason, I suppose we must commend the Minister of Finance for having such a brilliant group of public servants to bring forth these items for him, because I am sure it would not be on his own volition.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, during the past ten days we have had two special debates in the House when two opposition parties, first the Creditistes and second the Progressive Conservatives, choose a subject having to do with the economy to be debated for the day. It illustrates the importance which the opposition parties place on the fact that the economy of Canada is indeed in difficulty. The present government is doing very little to correct it and shows little concern about doing much in the future.

We have before us tonight, and have had for a number of days and, I suppose, a number of weeks, Bill C-56 which in a sense deals with the economy. This bill deals with amendments to income tax law, and sales tax in particular.

For the past several days we have heard a lot in this debate about the ridiculous proposal encompassed in this amendment involving the sales tax. I do not want to spend more time tonight on that aspect of this bill. Rather, I would like to summarize what in my view has been the general feeling around the country as to the effectiveness of Bill C-56. In particular, I want to discuss it in relation to the aspect dealing with the amendment of the sales tax.

People across this country realize that the government has shown itself to be very incompetent in the way it presented this particular cut in tax via the sales tax. Further, people realize that the government has once again shown a special status for one or more parts of this country which most of us feel is unwise. Third, there is no question but that the way they have implemented the tax with the province of Quebec is an attack on the poor which, again, the people of Canada do not appreciate seeing. Fourth, but not a bit surprising, this bill has shown itself to be an encroachment upon the provincial rights of one or more provinces in this country. Again, we abhor that.

In summary, most Canadians disapprove of those four aspects of this bill intensely. When the next election comes, the government will realize that is the feeling of the people of Canada with regard to this bill.

I do not want to devote more time to that aspect. I would rather talk about an income tax component of this bill which I think is largely missing. What I want to say about it has to do with what might be called new thoughts or ideas on income tax and corporation tax. They are not new, but certainly are new as far as implementation of them in Canada is concerned.

I would like to put in a little brief tonight mainly on my behalf and not necessarily that of my party, because we have not discussed it at length as party policy.

It is incumbent upon all of us as legislators to play a more active role in looking at the income tax system in Canada, both at the personal and corporate level. We must try and find in that area of the economy a solution to a problem which is probably very basic to the troubles we now have with inflation, low productivity, low trade and so on. It will be found that a lot of those problems stem from our ineffective tax system.

As one looks at the total problem of taxation, one has to go back in perspective a bit. When taxes first became popular, and that is not too far back, they were levied to pay for essential services. Those taxes were levied against both corporations and individuals. As far as the individuals were concerned, the taxes were levied primarily to support functions of government such as immigration, national defence, foreign policy and other such areas where it was necessary to have a corporate body such as government look after them on behalf of the citizens.

We have gone a long way from there. We now have a government, particularly the one across the way in this House, which is no longer content with assuming that kind of control of power. They want to increase that power. They have extended their power into all sorts of other areas of involvement, into the personal life of yourself, Mr. Speaker, and that of every Canadian.

The government has shown its intense desire to take over the control and responsiblity that should reside in 90 to 95 per cent of Canadians who are quite capable of looking after themselves and do not have to be told by government how their money will be spent. We should be able to decide for ourselves rather than have a government do it.

This increasing encroachment is not only at the federal level. Many provincial and municipal governments are encroaching further and further into the power that they have to raise taxes and spend money. I want to express my personal disapproval of this and suggest, as I go along, how it can be corrected. The real role of government in this day and age should be to provide a climate for businesses which operate in this country, not to provide a very detailed, controlling influence over the Canadian people.

[Mr. Halliday.]

What is the current status of taxation in Canada? I have alluded to the fact that it is a real mess. We have all kinds of problems. I do not have to give a lot of quotations to convince hon. members of that. However, there are two or three I would like to refer to which will be supporting evidence of the difficulty we are in now as a country vis-à-vis our tax system.

Something that came out recently—and this will not be new to the parliamentary secretary whom I am pleased to see here this evening—is the report of the Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration. In its 400 pages, they do not deal mainly with taxation. However, on pages 274 and 275 the report of the Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration discusses taxation. I want to read just a few sentences to illustrate how this royal commission felt about our present tax situation.

It is abundantly clear from what we have said in this chapter that savings over the next few years will be inadequate to finance the necessary business investment and that current and expected risk-return ratios will be inadequate to induce risk capital investment. This and the other serious problems of the Canadian economy which we reviewed briefly in Chapter I concern us deeply.

The royal commission is concerned about investment in the future and that there might not be risk capital available, and I think we can supply a solution to that problem through a different tax system. The report continues as follows:

We think there must be more questioning of things that have heretofore been accepted as unchangeable. If the problems we face are as deep-seated as we think, then their solutions probably require equally fundamental changes in some of our economic arrangements. Mere tinkering with effects will not come to grips with basic underlying causes. All of us must be prepared to think about the unthinkable.

I suggest that this has been our problem with respect to taxation. We do not have any committee on either side of the House which is really concerned about taxation. We do not have any committee whose title has the word "tax" in it. I do not think any party in the House has that, which shows what little importance we attach to taxation. Nevertheless, it affects all of us in this country. The report of this royal commission says that we are going to have to have very fundamental and radical changes if we are going to get anywhere with our economy, and those changes have to be in our taxation system.

I want to read two or three more sentences which are very important because they deal directly with taxation.

It is appropriate to discuss the tax system in this chapter because a healthy, small business sector is one of the most realistic antidotes to the economic concentration that is inevitable in the Canadian economy, and which is a constant threat to competition.

I wish the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) was here tonight so that he could see some of the real challenges which exist for small business and how he might do something about them. The report continues:

The health of small business depends, more than anything else, on a vigorous economy. In addition, the measurement of taxable income and the system to collect tax on it are particularly severe problems for smaller businesses. A tax on profits is disproportionately burdensome—

I want to emphasize this because this will be the crux of my argument.

—on a small business because retained earnings are often its principal source of capital. Finally, the complexity of the tax system creates a compliance cost that the small business is least able to afford.

I do not suggest that I agree with everything in that report, but there are comments on taxation as it exists today which are indeed very apropos.

Let me quote from a speech made only two or three days ago by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke). His remarks are recorded at page 5807 of Hansard.

—I am a chartered accountant who understands, probably better than most in the House who are not chartered accountants, some of the complications in the income tax and accounting laws and I have an idea of the huge costs involved in the legal advice needed in dealing with the income tax laws.

The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra was suggesting that we have indeed a very complicated tax system which is causing everybody difficulty. He was implying, I am sure, that there need to be some changes in that.

Finally, in support of my argument that we have a very unwieldy tax system I want to quote two very short quotations from a Mr. Peter Drucker. I understand that Mr. Drucker is a world renowned expert in management consulting, and he writes on business matters. In the appendix of a book written about Mr. Drucker there are two quotations from his work. The first is: "The corporate income tax is the most asinine of taxes". The other quotation is the following: "We are dedicated to the preservation and strengthening of small business, and our tax policy is designated to destroy small business." I hope the Minister of State (Small Business) will read these little quotations because they are very apropos. This quotation continues: "Small businesses are selling out because of tax laws designed for IT & T"; that is, International Telephone and Telegraph. Here again is another quotation illustrating how ridiculous our present tax system is and the very urgent need there is to do something about it.

What is the history of taxation in Canada, and how did we get into the mess we are in now? A year or two ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that the free market system was not working. He seemed to think, for one reason or another, that the economic mess we were in then was due to the fact that the free market system did not work. He did not attempt to analyze whether it was because there was too little government involvement in the free market system or perhaps too much, but I suggest that if he had chosen to be honest with us and with everybody else, he would have told us in addition that the reason it did not work was because there had been too much government interference.

I think something has to be done along that line. The Prime Minister did his usual trick. Within a few months of his making that statement he saw fit to take the most reactionary Conservative on this side of the House over to his side of the House in order to give the impression that he was having a second thought and that perhaps the private sector needed to be encouraged a little. He brought the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) to his side to give the impression that an arch small "c", reactionary conservative could be part of the Liberal Party of Canada.

We know that the hon. member, who is now the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, has no weight over there at all and that he is not having any effect. I suppose he will find that out too when the next election comes around.

If we are to look at what has happened in our tax system, we should start back at the end of the second world war. At about that time there was a great need for fresh capital to start our industry moving again. There seemed to be a need for industry to get working more and to become more effective, and there was an apparent need for capital. A former minister who is now deceased, the Right Hon. C. D. Howe, saw that in the United Kingdom there was a system known as accelerated depreciation which seemed to have an effective result as far as getting industry going again after the war. He brought this back to Canada and integrated it into our tax system. Accelerated depreciation is a form of tax relief which is nothing more than a manipulation of the tax system. As a result of that manipulation we soon developed a system in which savings were being accumulated by industry and by business because of so-called "tax incentives", and I put those words in quotation marks because there is no such thing as a tax incentive. A tax, by its very definition, is a disincentive. In any event, it was called a tax incentive, and I suppose we will have to accept that.

However, it soon became evident that companies were able to accumulate a lot of money in the way of savings, so much so that the time soon came that in its search for money to spend the government was able to auction off treasury bills and get its supply of money from what the private sector was accumulating by way of these accelerated depreciations and other tax incentives.

It was at this stage that we had the beginning of the decline in the role of profits in our basic economic system, which had functioned relatively well up until then. There was a decline in the role of the functioning of profits due to the fact that no longer did business have to borrow on the money markets, because money was then available through various types of tax incentives, accelerated depreciations, write-offs, and so forth.

One could arbitrarily say that there are two economic systems. One is based on a profit incentive. Under that type of system success in business in determined by reducing costs and by increasing productivity. I submit that it would be very difficult to find a system better than that.

Unfortunately, we have moved out of that system because of what C. D. Howe did back in the late forties or early fifties. We moved away from the profit motive being the incentive to produce and manufacture products. We got into the so-called tax incentive, which is the other type of economic system. However, under the tax incentive system the incentives do not encourage production or efficiency. Incentives are there to inflate costs. The greater the costs, the more successful a business can be.

We have the anomalous situation in our economy where presumably we are trying to produce more, put more people to work, have more goods to trade and thereby increase our economic effectiveness, and as a result our success depends upon increasing our costs, not upon increasing our efficiency. As a result of that, business becomes subservient to government, and I suggest that the present government—and, I suspect, other governments in this country—enjoys the feeling of power it has over the corporate sector. That is what they have been able to achieve by interfering more and more in the tax structure in the country by introducing more so-called tax incentives.

It is by no means only experts who think this is the thing to do. By 1975-76 the then president of the Institute of Chartered Accountants, Mr. Marcel Belanger, came out very strongly against this type of incentive system based on tax incentives to inflate costs. That was the way you succeeded, not by becoming more efficient or by trying to make a profit. There are still many economists in Canada and the U.S. who seem to think that that is the way our economy should be growing, with greater and greater incentives and more interference by the government.

That is one of the examples of further intrusion into the economy, but there are two or three others. We see now a real demand by companies, as they do their accounting, to allow depreciation on the replacement value with our inflation, which has been aggravated by our change in the tax structure. We now find that it is unrealistic to have depreciation on a provisional cost basis, so companies are trying for depreciation on the replacement value basis because we have shifted from what was originally a healthy tax system to the unhealthy one we are now supporting. We also have a demand for accounting inventories on a last-in-first-out basis for much the same reason owing to inflation. All these are designed to increase the cost of a company's operation rather than to increase its efficiency or productivity.

When we have a system which cries out for more and more inflation of costs, we have to hire two types of individuals who are non-productive: we hire more tax lawyers and we hire more tax accountants, both of whom are non-productive, and thus we aggravate our inflationary spiral.

What are some of the results of this type of change which we have seen in our tax system? What we have seen happening in the last 25 years in this country is a shift in taxation from the corporate sector to the private personal income tax sector. This has had a serious effect on our economy, and, if I may, I want to document the extent of this shift in taxation.

A recent publication of the Economic Council of Canada entitled "The Tax Structure and Canadian Trade" written by J. R. Melvin has some interesting figures. He compares 1951, shortly after the change in concept introduced by C. D. Howe, with 1971. In 1951 corporation taxes were greater than personal income taxes so far as total tax revenue was concerned. Corporation taxes were more than 50 per cent of total government tax revenue. In 1971, just 20 years later, corporation taxes were about one quarter of personal income taxes. We can put this in another way. In 1951, corporation taxes were 6.6 per cent of the g.n.p., and in 1971, 20 years later, they had dropped down to being 3.7 per cent of the g.n.p. They dropped from 6.6 per cent to 3.7 per cent of the g.n.p.

What happened to personal income taxes? In 1951, they were 5.9 per cent of the g.n.p; 20 years later they had climbed to 13.9 per cent, almost two and a half times as much. There is a third way of looking at what happened in the period of roughly 20 or 25 years. The Canadian Tax Foundation in its annual publication entitled "The National Finances" had some interesting figures. They took the financial year 1950-51 and compared it to the year 1976-77, a 26 year difference. In 1950-51, the personal income tax revenue of the Government of Canada was $652.3 million. By 1976, 26 years later, that had jumped to over $16 billion for an annual rate of increase of 13.1 per cent. What happened to corporation taxes in the same 26 year period? They climbed from $809 million to $5,860 million. That was an annual increase of 7.9 per cent. So there, Mr. Speaker, you have an illustration of what happened to our taxation structure. In 26 years there was an annual increase in personal taxes of 13.1 per cent, and in corporation taxes of only 7.9 per cent.

Are there any examples of what this has meant in dollars and cents in Canada? There is one large U.S. oil company operating in Canada—I will not mention its name but it is no secret. In the ten years between the early 60s and the early 70s, that big company did not pay one cent in Canadian corporation tax. Can you imagine a large U.S. oil company operating in Canada not paying one cent of corporation tax for ten consecutive years? That same oil company turned around a very few years later and bought out the remaining existing Canadian oil company, the one that used to go under the white rose banner. It was bought out by the very company that paid not one cent of corporation tax in Canada in ten years of very active business in this country.

How do we stack up as a country vis-à-vis other countries? In the last few months some interesting figures came out from the U.K. statistical office. They compared a number of countries with reference to the amount of taxes that were raised in the country in relation to the g.n.p. in that country. I used to think that Great Britain was a country where you had to pay a lot in taxes, but I suppose that we in Canada have taken over that role. Those figures show the following results. If you take the total taxes raised at all levels in Canada, you find they represent 40.5 per cent of the g.n.p. In the United Kingdom it is only 40.3 per cent. But what is more remarkable is that other countries which are much better off economically than we are, such as the United States, have taxes totalling 31.4 per cent of the g.n.p. What is even more interesting is Japan, which is one of the booming countries at present. Their taxes are one half of Canada's. The taxes raised in Japan are 21.1 per cent of their g.n.p., while ours in Canada are 40.5 per cent.

This brings to my mind a comment I heard recently when I had occasion to be in Japan a month or two ago. We were talking about the unemployment situation here and in Japan and they told us that over there they were having some tough times with their industry keeping the workers busy. We mentioned our unemployment rate being somewhere around 8.5 per cent, but to our astonishment we learned that their rate of unemployment is only 2 per cent. We could not understand how they maintain such a low rate of unemployment, but they told us they had a philosophy in Japan according to which if you want to eat you must work. We seem to have lost track of that here in Canada. The concept certainly seems to be paying off in Japan, and they do not seem to have that requirement for taxation. As I said, they raise about half the taxes we raise in proportion to our g.n.p.

There are people here in Canada who think that the high taxation from which we suffer is a good idea. Only last week, on May 23, the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), speaking on behalf of the NDP, agreed wholeheartedly with the government that our high taxes are quite justified. He thought they should be encouraged and that we in the Conservative party were out of our minds to think that taxes should come down. The hon. member thought it good that they should be so high. This is hard to believe.

The idea of heavy taxation is not only this government's idea, I do not want to give credit to this government for being the source of this concept of high taxation. We have to go back to the time of Marx, Lenin and Engels when they wrote the communist manifesto. All three men argued very strongly that, if a government wanted to destroy private property and the private enterprise system, it would be necessary to tax it. That is what this government is doing. We have not been told by the government that it wants to destroy the private enterprise system, but it is embarked on that. Certainly I cannot accuse the government of being communist, but it is implementing the communist system as far as taxation is concerned. There is no more powerful a method for destroying the economy of a private enterprise system than a system of very high taxation.

What is the solution? The Carter commission was set up in 1966 by the present government to look at taxation and see if it could come up with a more rational approach to it. The commission had enough insight to recognize the fact that there are two basic concepts of taxation as it applies to the corporate sector. One approach is the benefits approach and the other approach is the ability to pay approach. It remains unexplained why our lifelong system in Canada has been to tax corporations and people on their ability to pay. Obviously that does not work. There are various examples to show that it has not worked. The mess we are in now is proof of its being an inefficient system.

There are people in Canada who realize that the system of taxation based on the ability to pay is a lot of nonsense, just does not work, and that there are systems which work better. The system which works better is the benefits approach. If one wants to look at it from the point of view of corporations, it can be called a tax based on net business costs. The person in Canada who has done the most to push and propagate this concept is Mr. John R. Ferguson of Ottawa. Unfortunately he has not been listened to by the present government. The government does not seem to be interested in a more reasonable approach to taxation, which approach is available.

In the time remaining, it is difficult to go into a lot of detail explaining exactly what the benefits approach to taxation is as opposed to the ability to pay approach. In essence, if one wants a successful economy, profit and productivity must be encouraged. As soon as the approach to taxation is based on ability to pay, those two areas are being condemned. In the ability to pay system, the more one makes, the more tax he is required to pay. That discourages any kind of incentive, productivity and efficiency.

It has been well known that if something is not liked, it is taxed. The British found that if they wanted to tax chimneys, the result would be fewer chimneys. When they started to tax windows, people would start doing away with windows. Canadians cover up windows because if their windows are boarded up they pay less tax. In the last year or so, the government decided that it was necessary to conserve fuel and gasoline. By increasing the tax on gasoline, the government thought that would discourage its use. It is a well known fact that if the government wants to discourage something, it is taxed. We want to encourage efficiency, productivity and profits. Yet, the government turns around and taxes profits which discourages productivity and efficiency. It is hard to believe.

What are some of the differences between the ability to pay and the benefits approaches to taxation? Without going into great detail, I should like to mention the 11 different contrasts between these two types of taxation. These differences were enunciated by Mr. John Ferguson of Ottawa. I think they deserve a lot of consideration by the government, as well as all members of the House, if we want a real turnaround in our economy.

The first contrast is this: a tax on profit penalizes efficient companies and subsidizes marginal and inefficient companies. If the tax is based on net business costs, it will bear evenly on all businesses and thus would not penalize efficient nor subsidize inefficient companies, as does the current tax on profits.

A second harmful effect of the tax on business profits is: it results in many marginal expenditures being made for tax reasons rather than for sound business reasons. For instance, if a company decides that it has $10,000 to spend on advertising, $5,000 of it will be paid by the taxpayers of Canada because the companies are not required to pay any tax on that amount. It means Canadian taxpayers are subsidizing that inefficient component of the cost structure of that particular company. If the tax on net business costs system is implemented, the tax on costs would result in reducing or eliminating those expenditures, which are often made for tax reasons rather than for normal business reasons.

The third contrast is: it results in many businesses being tempted to inflate their non-cash charges in order to reduce their taxes. Of course, these are the harmful effects. A tax on net business costs would result in businesses being encouraged to reduce their costs in order to increase their profits and reduce their taxes.

The fourth harmful effect is: it has not provided an adequate source of government revenues mainly because of the provision by the government of tax concessions. The contrast of that is that a tax on costs would permit the government to eliminate the many tax concessions and reduce the effectiveness of the profits tax as a source of government revenue.

The fifth harmful effect is: it has resulted in the larger capital intensive corporations becoming relatively independent of the financial markets for the financing of their expansion projects and thus has inhibited the development of the financial markets. On the other hand, if there was a tax on net business costs, the result would be that the largest businesses in Canada would once again become more dependent on the financial markets for financing their expansion projects. At the same time, the removal of the tax on corporate profits would facilitate such market financing.

The sixth harmful effect is: by inhibiting the efficiency of the financial markets, it has reduced the effectiveness of monetary policy. On the contrary, with major businesses becoming more dependent, as they would under a tax on net business costs system, the financial markets and the monetary policy, through its influence on costs and the availability of credit, would become a more effective tool for combating inflation.

The seventh harmful effect is: it has resulted in pressure on accountants to stray from sound accounting principles in order to permit costs to be inflated for tax reduction purposes. If a tax on net business costs were implemented, it would permit accountants to spend more time on ways and means of assisting businesses in the reduction of their costs, rather than in the minimization of their taxes.

The eighth harmful effect is: it has led to inaccurate profit and loss statements and has generally clouded the economic picture of many corporations. On the other hand, the implementation of a tax on net business costs would lead to greater accuracy in profit and loss statements and present a clearer picture of business results.

The ninth adverse effect is: because of its complexity, it has resulted in an excessive administrative burden at both government and business levels. If a tax on net business costs were put into effect, it would eliminate the complexity of the present profits tax, and it could reduce considerably the administrative costs at both government and business levels.

The tenth adverse effect is: it has resulted in businessmen devoting an excessive amount of time and effort to the minimization of taxes, rather than the lowering of costs and the maximization of business profits. With a tax based on net business costs, the temptation for many businesses to spend time attempting to obtain from the government the maximum tax concessions possible would be reduced, and they would be permitted to concentrate on the maximization of profits.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, in number 11 the contrast here is that the tax on business profits has resulted in a misallocation of financial and other economic resources in Canada, and has contributed to a higher cost economy. You could avoid that through the tax on net business cost, because this would result in a better allocation of economic resources and, therefore, would result in a more efficient and lower cost economy.

There are many arguments there as to why we should reconsider in a very serious manner our taxation system both at the corporate and at the personal income tax levels. Taxation has now reached a very high degree. The level of personal income taxes now has reached the point that those of us who should have money to spend no longer do so because the money is being taken away from us. Corporations are no longer in the position of being able to provide money to the government for the kind of services they obtain from the government.

One could go through all the arguments which bring one to the natural conclusion that if we are to have an upturn in our economy we will require to take a very serious look at our whole tax structure, a look that was not taken adequately by the Carter commission. That commission acknowledged that there were two kinds of taxation. It identified the two kinds, tax on profits and the ability to pay approach, and pointed out that there was a tax on net business costs; but it completely omitted to consider the latter. It dealt only with the tax and the ability to pay. We have ended up some twelve years later with the kind of mess in which we now find ourselves.

As I indicated in my earlier remarks, there are enough real experts in the field of economics and taxation who now agree that, if we are going to have an economy which will begin to flourish, we must adopt a different taxation structure. I recommend that this government, in its attempt to create an upturn in the economy, take a serious look at taxation, particularly at the corporate and personal levels, to determine if there is a way around the impasse which we now face, and in this way hopefully lead this country out of this present morass.

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on Bill C-56, that all-inclusive bill covering many tax measures. Most of these measures are welcomed by this party as they are proposals which, over the past few months and years, we have put forward as changes that should be made in our tax structure. My main intervention will be in respect of the clause in this bill which deals once again with the rollover of capital gains.

On December 13 last we passed a tax bill which included this rollover on capital gains. It meant that you could sell one farm and buy another without having to pay capital gains tax. When we discussed that measure, Bill C-11, we felt we were really doing something concrete and conclusive in this field. However, because of an interpretation by the Department of National Revenue we discovered that we really had not done what we thought we were doing. The spirit of the discussion about the legislation was such that we felt we had put this feature into place. We now find that the Department of National Revenue has changed the whole concept, and in effect has ruled or interpreted that a farm is not a farm.

This sort of thing has been going on for the fair length of time I have been in Ottawa. We have bills before us, we discuss them and we think we have done something, only to find that because of some interpretation we really have not done anything at all. The people of Canada become disenchanted with this sort of thing. They believe they have something in place which is really not in place at all. They blame the politicians when the politicians are not really at fault. It is the bureaucrats in the departments, usually supported by the ministers, who cause all this trouble. What I am referring to is real and not imagined.

On December 13 we passed this bill which stated that if you sold a farm you could buy another without having to pay capital gains tax because there was a rollover feature. At that time we were considering how this would help those farmers around cities who were being squeezed off their land for the purpose of establishing subdivisions. When the land was sold they obtained large capital gains, but if they were being squeezed off in this way and purchased replacement farm land they would not have to pay the capital gains tax.

Let me point out what happened to one of my constituents. He sold his orchard, having been squeezed out by a developer for the purpose of subdividing. He went to Alberta where he found a grain farm he wanted to buy. He wanted to take advantage of this rollover provision in order to buy this grain farm, but it was interpreted by the Department of National Revenue as being not the same kind of business. In other words, the orchard was not a farm, or the grain farm was not a farm. That was the interpretation in this particular case. The man was told he could not take advantage of the rollover provision. When I questioned the minister about this at the committee he said they had obtained a legal opinion from their lawyers to the effect that grain farming was not the same type of business. I just wonder how many different types of lawyers there are, and how they can justify splitting hairs in this way.

I referred to the interpretation section of the Income Tax Act to find out what the interpretation of a farm was in so far as that act is concerned. That act states that farming includes tillage of the soil, livestock raising or exhibiting, the maintaining of horses for racing, the raising of poultry, fur farming, dairy farming, fruit growing and the keeping of bees, but does not include an office or employment under a person engaged in the business of farming.

Why is that interpretation not sufficient? Why do we require a different interpretation by the Department of Revenue in respect of another bill? I suggest this only confuses the people and the issue, and this is exactly what has happened. I know that the Department of Finance is embarrassed because of this interpretation. The government brought in Bill C-56 with a clause that is supposed to fix this interpretation up. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, what is going on in this government that, almost immediately after they have put one bill down, they come back with another clause in another bill to correct an interpretation by the Department of National Revenue, which in my opinion is a legal interpretation that is splitting hairs.

We know that there are a lot of things done by this government through regulations and orders in council after we pass a bill. Here is an example of where the cabinet should have come down and said to the department of revenue, "Take a look at what the Income Tax Act says; take a look at the interpretation of farms; what is going on here; why are we causing more confusion; why is it costing more money and why isn't it more timely?"

We are lucky to have this Bill C-56 so soon afterwards in one sense, but in another sense we do not know whether it is going to be passed or not. It certainly would never have been talked about if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had not picked up a case of cold feet and put his running shoes on. We are lucky in the sense that he did get cold feet and did not call an election because this situation would have taken years to be straightened out, and as I say we do not know whether Bill C-56 will be passed or not.

My main argument this evening is that this government does not need to bring in an act with these clauses to straighten out what has occurred in an interpretation by the department of revenue. All they need do is tell those "legal beagles" to take a good look at it and get with it. I wonder what their interpretation of a lawyer would be and how many different types of interpretations they would have.

In the clause which the government has brought in to straighten out this error and embarrassment to the Department of Finance, they use two words, "or similar". Here we are speaking on this bill and we do not know the interpretation the Department of National Revenue is going to put on "or similar". I asked the question in committee, and what the minister told me was that he backed up his people in the department for what they had done and in the interpretation they had made. He did not tell me, however, and neither are they telling us, what the interpretation is going to be of "or similar". Is it going to mean an orchard or a farm raising grain? A farm is a farm is a farm, and I do not believe that the people who made this interpretation know what they are talking about.

I was raised on a grain farm in the late thirties before I went into the armed services, and for two years I operated my father's grain farm, a section of land in Alberta. I now own an orchard, and have owned one for the last 28 years. It is farming and I call myself a farmer. When I came to this place I was asked about my occupation and I said it is farming. That is my occupation as a member of this House.

However, look at the kind of interpretation these people are putting on this because we had a simple little bill to do something. We as parliamentarians and legislators never dreamt that we were going to have these kinds of interpretations. My argument is that these should not be in the bill, and neither does it need to be there. With all the regulations, interpretations and orders in council that we have coming out of this place and that are never brought to this House, the cabinet could have told these people exactly the kind of interpretation that we should have.

A farm is a farm. When you are tilling the soil or growing trees in an orchard it is farming, and there is no other interpretation for it. I still do not know what is going to happen when this or similar legislation comes down. I only hope that there is some measure of reality in the interpretation and that what we are talking about here is going to happen. I hope that some bureaucrat, somebody on the staff of national revenue, does not upset the meaning of what we are really talking about.

I come now to the main thrust of Bill C-56, which of course in the sales tax clause. We find that we now have a double standard in Canada as a result of this situation. It is really a clouding of issues. What we have is a confrontation between the provinces and the government, a divide and conquer situation which this government seems to enjoy. If this government wishes to do something concrete without getting involved in somebody else's business, they should be looking at this old, outmoded outdated federal sales tax. This is their field. It is the most outdated and outmoded tax that we have and ever will have. It is not fair. It hits the poor harder than any other sector, and it hits the business people, causing confusion and paperwork. In fact, in some instances it has been one of the highest costs of doing business that they have.

When I first came to this House I started to talk about this 12 per cent tax, and one of my arguments was with regard to the situation that if you manufactured $3,000 worth of business, you did not have to pay the federal sales tax. Well, $3,000 worth of business might have been all right 50 years ago or even 30 years ago when they dreamt this innocuous tax up, but it is not good today. It is absolutely no good, and it was no good to the former minister of finance twice removed. He did not think that it was an area to change, but we finally convinced him to change the figure from $3,000 to $10,000. At the time I spoke in this House I pleaded with him to make it more realistic, even as high as $15,000. We now know that this government is beginning to see the light, and it is mainly because of the opposition pointing out what should be done. They are now going to $50,000, a more realistic figure. But we still have a 12 per cent sales tax. This is where they should have been cutting—not getting into the provincial jurisdiction, not dividing Canada, not giving a different deal to Quebec.

We hear hon. members opposite trying to justify this tax. By giving this $85 rebate to taxpayers in Quebec they are not doing anything for the poor or the people who pay the sales tax in Quebec. The government was trying to buy time for an election. Thank goodness the province of Quebec extended that period to two years. I think they were going to drop it anyway. They did not buy this concept just because they thought they were going to get six months' help from the federal government—and that would be another plum for them. But they did not drop it for six months, they have dropped it for two years, and I would not be surprised if it is dropped for longer than that and perhaps by even more than the 2 or 3 per cent. These are not the kind of taxes that are good for growth in Canada. The 12 per cent federal sales tax has caused more trouble and has done more to inhibit growth than any tax system in the country. They do not have it in the United States or in any other country.

A manufacturer of pipes told me that his biggest cost was the 12 per cent sales tax. He showed me letters asking him to set up his pipe manufacturing company in the United States. If he did that he could export his pipes to Canada and make more money, as he would not have to pay the 12 per cent federal sales tax. This is the area the government should be working on.

We hear hon. members opposite talk about employment. They claim that because the opposition talk about unemployment they cause more unemployment. They should look at natural growth, which is going to create employment. Members of the opposition talking about unemployment is not what creates the biggest unemployment record we have had in Canada. That was done by the Prime Minister years ago when he told the people of Canada: "Do your own thing; you don't have to work if you don't want to. You can go on welfare or unemployment insurance." That is where the basic problem is.

Instead of coming to this House and doing something about our tax system that would give the people in the private sector an opportunity to work and create jobs, this is the sort of thing we have had. What we need is for this government to get out of provincial fields and do something that will create employment for this country.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker). In this own way he described the illness of this democratic system to a "T".

The basic problem faced by any party that becomes the government in this country is the question of how to bring some common sense into the decisions taken by cabinet ministers and their staff. He gave the example of a simple act passed in good faith by all parties last December which was abrogated by a legal decision emanating, I suppose, not only from the Department of National Revenue but the Department of Justice and which made a farce of what we are doing here.

Now the government has brought forward this new section to correct it. I think the hon. member deserves congratulations for bringing this practical, earthy story to the House as a reminder that what Canada expects is a little bit of common sense on the part of the elected representatives who sit in cabinet and who should take control of this nonsense.

I had many experiences when I was a minister. Horrible recommendations would come forward and when you questioned them you would find it was the legal interpretation of the law officers of the Crown of what parliament intended years ago with a particular statute. A minister with common sense would say "phooey" to such recommendations. That is what ministers are for—to put in an interpretation that makes sense.

Many years have passed since I held a portfolio but some civil servants still remind me of incidents that happened where common sense was applied. We have a cabinet that for two or three parliaments now has degenerated into a group of yes men to their civil servants. When you consider the frustrations of honest, hardworking civil servants who bring forward proposals that are ruled out by this group of nit-wits, you see that is the real test of democracy in Canada. Conservatives are not prefect but the great majority that I see in this House are determined that, when we take possession of the benches opposite, that will be one of our major objectives.

Earlier in this debate the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) brought to the attention of the House the section of the bill dealing with registered retirement savings plans. He did a thoughtful job of analysing the history of the plan and the various options available now in the act. There are positive things in this act and he pointed them out.

I should like to make a few comments on his remarks. He could not understand why the people who drafted this legislation were so careful to say that you had not the right to take your money out of an RRSP until you reached the age of 60. He could not understand why the government chose the age of 60 and not 55 or even 50. After all, the money belongs to the person who saved it. What the hon. gentleman should have known, with his long experience of the civil service, is that the civil service has grown up with the mentality at the top level that they have to show the people of Canada that they are not free. They do not honestly believe that the citizens of this country, whether working men or self-employed, have the native wit to make their own decisions and are willing to bear the consequences of their mistakes.

The belief that there is a lack of ability in the ordinary person to cope with problems is one of the weaknesses that has developed in the civil service in all countries over the last 30 or 40 years. This concept of elitism—that only those who get into the civil service know what God wants—faces the civil service in all countries. It also exists in large corporations, in large groups of people like the church, and so on.

When a person gets to the top level of a company or government there is a place for common sense. I think that is the lesson we learned today from the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary, and it is the answer to the mystery that the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich could not resolve about the age of 60. The civil service has to have the power to say this is the cut-off date. They will not accept the fact that this money does not belong to them but belongs to the guy who saved it.

The other age of 71 is simple to explain. One must take out the RRSP at age 71 for a very simple reason. Civil servants in the Department of National Revenue believe there is an article of faith that all money earned belongs to them. It is only by the grace of God and a lot of fast footwork that the taxpayer ever gets off with anything. They systematically search out every louse in this country to see if there is any fat and tallow they can skim off. That is their philosophy. They subvert the RCMP to join them in this. This attitude of the Department of National Revenue means that they think that all the money in this country belongs to them and an individual must prove that his money is his own money. Too many times the courts of this land have accepted that doctrine.

This age 90 bit is somewhat hilarious. The insurance companies for years have always assumed that a person is dead at age 90. As a matter of fact, many of the insurance companies used to pay the full face value of the contract on ordinary life at age 90. If a guy made it to age 90 he was simply an aberration. If he had a $1,000 insurance policy, they paid him the whole thing and said "You are dead, enjoy it."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): The actuarial people who run these insurance companies work everything on averages. If a person is supposed to die at age 71 and lives to age 90, he is an aberration. The mathematics of insurance companies is all based on so many people dying. Then they double the figure to give themselves a little profit. They are quite happy with their actuarial approach. This bill and the RRSP has given quite a jolt to the insurance companies. It will not kill them; there will still be lots of business for them. However, under this act people can still take a life annuity and a great majority will.

The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich did the right thing in pointing out that the government had made positive steps forward in allowing a few more options in taking money out of savings through RRSPs. In addition to the life annuity that one could take out, he mentioned a fixed term, but the term is for no longer than up to 90 years of age. He then mentioned this new device, the registered retirement income fund, to give control of investments of the annuity. But one still must take the RRIF out in fixed payments.

There is one point I would like to make before I disagree with the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich. He took the view that people at age 71 should not be worrying about investing any more money. My God, does he not know what is happening? A lot of people are living beyond age 71. They do not think they have lost their marbles at all. In fact, a lot of people at age 71 are just beginning to realize that they know something. When all this experience comes at age 71, or whatever age it is that it comes, they do not believe they will die when they are 72, and they want to get out and use all that experience to make some money. These people want the right to invest their money and make their funds bigger and bigger. As far as I am concerned, I say "God bless them."

I would like now to suggest additional options to this particular piece of legislation, which I have done before. Why did they not keep it simple? Accept the fact that this money belongs to the individual. Let him put it in a bank at any age he likes when he wants to use it, or let him put it into a credit union, a caisse populaire, any place that can be trusted to look after it. If he takes out any money at any time in any amount that he likes, let him fill out a simple T-4—and send it into the Department of National Revenue. The guy then pays income tax on it. If that occurred there would not be all these fixed terms which must be calculated every year and which necessitates the employment of a lot of nitwits doing something which is not even necessary. Let a man or woman take the money out as they see fit at any time they like. If the individual wants to go on a spending spree in the first five years of retirement, let it be, that is his money. He will pay tax on it when he takes it out. If he wants to hold it back, thinking he will live to 150, let him do so. Let the individual choice be the common sense approach. Get rid of all these control techniques. As long as the tax collector gets his money when the guy takes his money out, that is all the tax collector has a right to.

I would like to conclude this part of my remarks by saying there is a big difference in philosophy now than when the RRSPs started. When the RRSPs started they were purely a device to help a person save until he died, to add additional money to whatever his pension or pensions were or, if he did not have pensions, to look after his own future. That was the original philosophy and it was a good philosophy.

As the years have rolled on a new philosophy has developed. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich mentioned the tax-haven concept, but I go on and mention another more important philosophy. At this particular moment in Canada's history, facing as we do heavy commitments by the nation in a capital intensive enterprise for the next 20 to 30 years, one of the first functions of a good citizen is to save money not only for himself but to provide a capital pool for the benefit of all the people of Canada. Everything we can do in the tax system to encourage people to put aside what they do not need into savings builds up that capital pool, lowers interest rates and provides us with an amount of money that we need to undertake these great enterprises we have to face in the next 20 to 30 years.

I would like to see this philosophy pushed. I know in the last 15 years the RRSPs increased from a few hundred thousand up to two million. I would like to see that two million figure go up to six million or eight million. By age 60, 80 per cent of the work force of Canada have money of their own on top of their pensions, whether these pensions are in their business or are pensions provided by the state, but the individual is still encouraged to look after himself in his old age. This is the one thing that helps this nation and it helps the individual too.

The reason is very simple. As money circulates through the economy there is the principle of the multiplier effect. The multiplier effect means that whenever a person spends all the money he gets it goes into the system. If the multiplier is, say, three and one puts $1,000 into the system, $3,000 goes into the gross national product. Governments take out 40 per cent of that $1,000, which is about $400, and governments get their money back very quickly. So in addition to getting the $200 tax from the guy who takes the money out, the money goes through the system and they get another $400 from the tax of other people. This multiplier effect is what keeps the system going. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—REPLACEMENT FOR S.S. "CARSON"—LOCATION OF SHIPYARD UNDERTAKING CONSTRUCTION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening in the usual manner to pursue further a question which I raised in this chamber on February 1, virtually four months ago. I am not complaining about my order of priority among things that are important in this House, but inasmuch as it had to do with a question I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) respecting the government's intentions for the purchase or rental, offshore, of a vessel for Canadian National Marine to carry out ferry and related services on the east coast of Canada, it seems a little bit passing strange to myself and most Canadians that it is virtually four months later that I get around to debating it.

That is not necessarily a criticism of the Chair or of the orderly conduct of the business of this House; it is just a sad comment on the capacity of this House within its present procedures to deal with matters of concern to private members and, in turn, to many thousands of Canadians.

My question to the minister on that occasion was:

Would the minister indicate whether, in fact, officials of his department are now outside Canada seeking to place an order for replacement of the CN ferry Carson which sank off the Labrador coast late last year?

The minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, no firm position has been taken at this point in time for a replacement for the Carson. Officials of my department and of CN Marine are always alert in an effort to find out which vessels may be available for additional service in the ferry systems in the eastern part of the country. I have no doubt they are interested at all times to know at what prices they might be able to acquire vessels of various configurations.

The fact is he had no answer. He did not know whether his departmental people and CN Marine were in fact offshore actively pursuing the lease of purchase of ships built in countries other than Canada for use by a government agency in the ferry system of this country.

On May 16, under the byline of Kendal Windeyer, in the Montreal Gazette, there is an article headed "Shipyards lack work but ship lines charter vessels". The ship line referred to is CN Marine. The battle is quite clearly over who should build the ships which ply Canadian waters. CN Marine, a division of Canadian National Railways, decided it would charter two Swedish vessels on five leases for service between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland earlier this year. That article was written in the middle of May. Some time between the end of March and the middle of May, the minister decided covertly to permit CN Marine and departmental officials to go offshore for the purchase or lease of two vessels.

My question to the minister is, why does the government persist in letting this policy continue? We have had over 1,000 men laid off from the Halifax shipyards, and 800 or 900 men have been served notice by Marine Industries of Sorel, a shipyard owned by the government of Quebec. If the information I have is correct, we will see that government closing that yard. That will virtually throw these men out of work permanently. They are going offshore to France to purchase the requirements of the government of Quebec for ferry services in that province.

Canadian policy in this regard is not complicated. After deciding that you need a new ship, it takes a long time to design, award the contract, have the building take place, put the ship in the water and get it into service. You will not be ready to do that type of thing in 1983 unless you make the determination today, not in 1980 or 1981. You cannot have a ship ready in two years.

My question to the government is very serious. When is this government going publicly to indicate to the Canadian people that this policy will be for the government account, that it will identify the requirements, do the design work and build the ships in Canada, and put them to sea in Canada under Canadian registry? The ships must be built to Canadian standards with regard to pollution, operations north of 60 degrees or whatever else. They should be operated by Canadians, be subject to Canadian laws and pay Canadian income tax.

The leasing of two Swedish vessels returns nothing to our coffers whatsoever. It is immoral for this government to continue to posture with respect to Canadian shipbuilding policy in the way it has done in recent years. It has made no conscious effort to enunciate a clear policy. It has waffled, beat around the bush and avoided its responsibility.

The minister says that it is a good idea. He says, "By golly, that is something we have to get around to doing." What he should be doing is standing up and saying to Canadians and to the men who work in the shipyards of this country that we will build our requirements in our own shipyards using our own men and, to the extent possible, using our own material. We should not go offshore unless there is an extreme emergency, and there is no such emergency.

However, for CN marine not to have identified a continuing and ongoing need for ferry services in eastern Canada and to leave the matter in such a state that we had to go offshore to meet immediate needs is simply not acceptable. It is unjustified, and now is the time for the government to correct that. In responding this evening I hope the parliamentary secretary will be prepared to do something other than read a document prepared for him earlier today. I hope the parliamentary secretary will stand up as an easterner and address himself to the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to respond to this question. I want to comment first, however, that it is more than passing strange—it is astonishing—that the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) should be bringing questions to the late show when earlier this very evening he refused to give unanimous consent to allow the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to answer questions about the main estimates.

Mr. Forrestall: You are deliberately misleading the House.

Mr. Harquail: I am pleased that the hon. member consistently raises matters which show the government's continuing high priority regarding the needs of Atlantic transportation.

With regard to the replacement of the m. v. William Carson the Minister of Transport announced on April 26, 1978 that the 443 foot long stern loading vessel Sir Robert Bond will be converted for Labrador service this summer. The Sir Robert Bond is being converted at a cost of $3.6 million by Davie Shipbuilding, and it is expected that the vessel will be ready for service early this summer. The Sir Robert Bond will be modified to carry passengers, including cabin accommodation, but will retain its capability to haul substantial freight.

All Newfoundlanders realize that the vagaries of the sea from time to time result in tragic losses such as that of the William Carson, but I am sure that all hon. members are grateful that, while the ship was lost, all 128 persons on board were rescued due to the brave efforts of the ship's crew and the efforts of land-based search and rescue forces.

After the sinking of the Carson the government moved swiftly by reconfiguring the fleet so that Labradorians had service last summer despite the loss of the Carson.

By taking these immediate interim measures which were followed by the decision of the Minister of Transport to convert the Sir Robert Bond for Labrador service this summer, the government has acted in a decisive and positive way.

Mr. Forrestall: We will deal with that tomorrow afternoon at three o'clock.

TRANSPORT—HALL REPORT—REQUEST MINISTER CONSULT MR. JUSTICE HALL ON RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I am moved to point out at the outset of my remarks that it has occurred to me that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) must be wondering day after day why he did not go to the people. It seems to me that ever since he made that fateful decision a few weeks ago everything he and the government has tried to do has turned to dust.

The question I want to raise tonight is another example of the bumbling, fumbling and incompetence demonstrated not only by the Prime Minister and his cabinet but now by the rank and file of the Liberal party as well.

I was going to raise this evening a question which I thought was one with which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) dealt in a very unusual and peremptory way on May 15. Your Honour will recall, as all hon. members of this House assembled tonight will recall, that on that day, I raised with the Minister of Transport the very simple proposition that, knowing his strong feelings about transportation policy and about western grain transportation, just possibly he would consult the chief architect of the royal commission appointed by him, Mr. Justice Emmett Hall.

The minister was mortified that I should make the radical suggestion to him that somehow a man who had spent two years as the head of a very worth-while study group on which something like $1.8 million has been spent should be consulted with respect to the implementation of the report. The minister at that time said that he was really surprised because he thought the report was quite clear and there was really nothing much to discuss with Mr. Justice Hall. I suppose that Mr. Justice Hall heard this kind of reaction on the part of the minister, this inflexible, unflinching attitude that the minister took with respect to the reasonable request put forward by myself and other members on this side, and is reported to have said in Regina on May 24, according to a CP story, that:

Lip service has been given to the report rather than being implemented.

The article points out the following:

One year after the release of his report on the prairie grain handling and transportation system, former Chief Justice Hall is a disappointed man.

The federal government has virtually ignored the recommendations in the report, Hall said in an interview.

This flies diametrically in the face of what the minister has said, and it seems to me, therefore, that we should have the expertise of Mr. Justice Hall before the committee. My colleagues and I have fought the good fight, but lo and behold, what has happened tonight is that a motion has been brought forward that Mr. Justice Hall and Mr. Fred Anderson, the chairman of the Prairie Rail Action Committee, be brought before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. This was fought tooth and nail by the Liberal members of that committee. They thought it was heresy and the worst thing that could be suggested, except for one backbencher, the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Flynn), who at the time of the vote screwed up his courage and stood together with the opposition members. I should point out that this man is not held in very high regard by his own party. He has been edged out of his seat, so no wonder he is thinking independently.

So we were able to carry this motion tonight by nine votes to eight. The parliamentary secretary might want to report on what happened at that meeting because he must be chagrined at the fact that the very worth-while suggestion of the opposition members was accepted by the committee. That committee, with only one member from western Canada on the Liberal side, fought tooth and nail to prevent Mr. Justice Hall from appearing before the committee. I say it is not acceptable that this government should move in an area which is so important to western Canada when it does not take every opportunity of utilizing the expertise that Mr. Justice Hall brings to the particular topic of grain transportation; and second, that when the government does act, its actions fly in the face of the many recommendations contained in the Hall commission report, while the government is saying that it is accepting the recommendations in the report.

It will be interesting to cross-examine Mr. Fred Anderson of the new Prairie Rail Action Committee to find out what is the rationale for their decision. It seems to me that one of the problems in determining whether certain rail lines will be brought into the permanent network and others abandoned is that we do not as yet know what will be the position of the grain and elevator companies with respect to their own plans. I say we are opening a very large can of worms in western Canada when the grain companies have not yet decided what they will do as far as elevators are concerned, and we are making decisions as to which lines should be abandoned and which should not.

I will be interested to hear the parliamentary secretary try to justify the rather insane attitude taken by the government in refusing to discuss matters with Mr. Justice Hall and fighting tooth and nail to prevent him from coming before the committee.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member has invited me to report my observations about the meeting of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications this evening, let me tell the House and the country of the obstructionist tactics of the official opposition, which were also clearly observed at the previous meeting of the committee when the opposition members refused to allow the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to answer questions and thus we were unable to question the minister on the main estimates. They followed the same negative tack this evening in not allowing him to answer questions in respect of the Hall commission report. We witnessed this for many days when we were considering Bill C-17 for the recapitalization of Canadian National.

To anyone who pays attention to the meetings of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, the strategy of the official opposition is not a surprise. I should like to indicate to the hon. member that I deferred my time in order to answer these questions.

The hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) was able to put some very good questions to the Minister of Transport. The minister was able to enlighten the committee at length about the position of the government regarding the Hall report. Also the minister has had meetings with farm groups and individual farmers about the Hall commission report. Hon. members opposite should not lose sight of the fact that it was the Minister of Transport who instituted this commission and who has stated repeatedly that it is his intention to implement the main recommendations of the report. The Hall commission report is clearly written. The Government of Canada has had no difficulty in understanding its intent, which can readily be determined from the actions we have taken during the past year to implement its recommendations.

The actions the federal government has taken are well recognized in western Canada, but it would be useful to outline them again here. Eleven days after the Hall commission report was tabled in the House of Commons, the most important recommendation in the Hall report was implemented when some 1,800 miles of prairie rail line was added to the basic network guaranteed to the year 2000. This increased the total guaranteed package to 14,226 miles, which now make up three-quarters of all prairie trackage.

The creation of the Prairie Rail Action Committee is another extremely important initiative by the government. It distresses me that certain parties choose to downgrade the time and effort that four westerners are putting into the work of this committee. It has already made a valuable contribution to the evolution of our grain handling system by quickly relieving the uncertainty in several communities concerning the future of their rail lines, and promises to do the same for many more communities before its term is up.

But perhaps the most beneficial program the Government of Canada has implemented is its program to upgrade prairie branch lines. This process began last fall and its effect is visible for all to see on the Conquest subdivision. The government has committed $175 million for the first three years of what will be a ten-year program. When it is completed, all branch lines will be capable of carrying hopper cars at higher speeds than is generally the case now. This will sharply increase the volume of grain which can be moved by our transportation system. Due to the rapid deterioration of the system, we had to move quickly to prevent it from breaking down completely, and this the Government of Canada has done.

The recent decision to invest in improvements in Prince Rupert is yet another example of carrying out a Hall report recommendation.

If I had more time, I would be able to tell the House more about transportation, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

ENERGY

FORMATION AND FUNDING OF MARITIME ENERGY CORPORATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. My motion concerns the critically high electricity rates now being paid by residents of the province of Nova Scotia. The Nova Scotia Board of Public Utilities has received an application from the Nova Scotia Power Corporation for a rate increase of 25 per cent which, if approved, would take effect this July and make the cost of electricity in that province the highest in Canada. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That this government take immediate steps to expedite the formation and funding of the Maritime Energy Corporation; and that this government consult with provincial governments in Atlantic Canada on an urgent basis to get construction started on a power grid to utilize the resources of Newfoundland and Labrador for hard-pressed Nova Scotia.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The introduction of such a motion for debate at this time requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT

CALL FOR AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT SECRET TRIALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion under Standing Order 43 which I earnestly hope will receive the unanimous support of this House. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House associates itself with the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) in his insistence that the trial of a public servant in secret is intolerable and that the Official Secrets Act should be amended forthwith to make secret trials thereunder impossible.

QUEBEC SALES TAX—REQUESTED DEFERRAL OF SECOND READING OF BILL C-56—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Considering that all political parties in the Quebec legislature, all members of the opposition as well as several Liberal members strongly object to the formula suggested by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) concerning the provincial sales tax, and considering that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has stated that he was prepared to meet his provincial counterpart to find a fair solution to that dispute, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House urge the government to accept the amendment moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, namely that Bill C-56 be not now read a second time, but that it be read a second time this day one month hence, so as to pave the way for a solution between both governments concerning that dispute about the provincial sales tax.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ILLEGAL ACTION OF PEIGAN BAND IN ALBERTA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In light of the fact that the Peigan Indians are denying the Lethbridge Northern Irrigation District access to the head gates of a southern Alberta irrigation system, that as a result 800 farmers on 114,000 acres of land in the area do not have the water they desperately need, and that the Peigan Indians have broken the law by defying an Alberta Supreme Court injunction forbidding the band from interfering with, obstructing or molesting employees of the Lethbridge Northern Irrigation District, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes):

That the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner) notify Chief Nelson Small Legs, Sr., immediately that under no condition can he condone the actions of the Peigan band in defying the law, but that he is willing to participate in negotiations aimed at settling the dispute to ensure that the band's claims are given fair consideration.

BUS FARE INCREASES IN NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask for unanimous consent for the following. In view of the fact that since the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) kidnapped the CN buses in Newfoundland and brought them under federal regulatory jurisdiction, the CN immediately received a fare increase of 8 per cent, followed by a second increase last November 1 and a further 15 per cent on a so-called interim basis until the Canadian Transport Commission made a decision on the fare increase application, and in view of the fact that the CTC held its last hearing on the fare increase on May 2, 1977, at St. John's—seven months ago—while bus users are paying the 15 per cent increase under the Otto user-pay principle and interim, like demand, may be forever, I move, seconded by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse):

That the Canadian Transport Commission be awarded the "Rip Van Winkle, Sleepy Hollow Award" for turtle-like slowness in decision-making at Ottawa, that the bus users of Newfoundland remember that while "interim" bus fare increases may be for ever, Ottawa is not, and will not be if Liberal candidates are discarded as a result of—

REQUESTED REINSTATEMENT OF CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urge the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) to direct CMHC to reinstate the old co-operative housing program with capital mortgage funds and operating subsidies at least equivalent to the 1977 level until such time as the co-operative sector is satisfied with the new program.

That the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and CMHC meet with co-operative housing and non-profit housing organizations in order to discuss necessary revisions in his proposed programs.

GARRISON DIVERSION—REFERENCE OF STUDIES TO COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Garrison diversion project has serious environmental implications for Manitoba's rivers and lakes, and in light of the undue delay by the Minister of State (Environment) (Mr. Marchand) to refer the IJC's final recommendations to the appropriate committee, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That this House direct the Minister of State (Environment) (Mr. Marchand) to refer the Andras plan, the IJC's recommendations, all studies and related correspondence to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry for its immediate consideration.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON SOVIET THREAT TO NATO

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It relates to a contradiction between the policy of the Government of Canada and the policy of the government of the United States concerning NATO, policies apparently in each case based upon different interpretations of the same NATO document regarding growth of the Soviet threat.

President Carter, on the basis of that document, has said that the military lead the west once enjoyed has been reduced, whereas the Prime Minister, presumably on the basis of the same document, said that he does not think worry about the threat is supported by documents before NATO. Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain that contradiction?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not have either document before me, but I did attempt to reconcile what the hon. member regards as a contradiction. In the one case, obviously, the President of the United States was referring to the growth in the military capability of the Soviet Union. NATO itself has undertaken a study of the long-term trends in that respect.

I believe what the Prime Minister was talking about—which is quite a different matter—was the political atmosphere, or whether there would be a return to the atmosphere of the cold war. I think there is quite a difference between those two points. That is the distinction I draw between the threat in terms of military capability and the threat in terms of political atmosphere or the cold war atmosphere, and I believe it is to the latter the Prime Minister was addressing himself.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, that is a nice attempt at a distinction. The Deputy Prime Minister spoke of two documents. There are not two documents, as nearly as we can gather; there is only one. The difference does not occur in the documents; the difference is between the interpretations of the significance of those documents by the government of the United States and the Government of Canada.

Just to clarify to the House, can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether it is the official position of the Government of Canada that the Soviet arms build-up in central Europe does not indicate that the Soviet Union is moving toward a harder line in its dealings with the west? Is it the government's position that there is nothing in the Soviet build-up for Canada to be concerned about?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, that would not be the position of the Government of Canada. The position of the Government of Canada would be that any build-up in Soviet strength would be a very serious matter indeed, and it is for that reason that Canada has within the past several years taken a number of important decisions in order to maintain its contribution to NATO at a very high level.

Mr. Hees: You mean, like half of what we promised originally.

Mr. MacEachen: At the present time, there is before the summit leaders in Washington a long-term review which was previously put before a meeting of the defence ministers, and that military analysis is one with which Canada will concur in a statement to be made by the Prime Minister in Washington today.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, that leaves open why the Prime Minister is saying one thing in television interviews and another thing in official statements. The advantage of that is that it is getting the international community accustomed to what we have had to put up with in Canada for a long time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Deputy Prime Minister spoke about the build-up which the Soviets have established not only in Europe but also a build-up of Soviet activity, directly and through the intermediary of Cuba, in Africa. What we want to know in this House of Commons, because the Deputy Prime Minister characterizes this as very serious—

An hon. Member: You are speaking for yourself.

Mr. Clark: A member on the Liberal side says I speak for myself. It may well be that Liberals on that side are not worried about Canada and its role in NATO, but we on this side of the House are.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: What we want to know, here in this House of Commons, from the Deputy Prime Minister is, what does the Government of Canada intend to do? What steps does it intend to take in face of this very serious, to use the Deputy Prime Minister's words, build-up of the Soviet threat in Europe and in Africa? Will he tell the House of Commons what steps Canada intends to take, or do we have to wait again for word from Washington where the Prime Minister is speaking?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary to wait for word from Washington, either directly or indirectly.

Mr. Hees: You will make up a story here.

Mr. MacEachen: Canada has continued to give its support to the NATO alliance as an absolutely indispensable deterrent and an absolutely indispensable assurance of our security. That view will be reiterated today by the Prime Minister and his colleagues in Washington. My hon. friend will realize that over the last several years we have taken some very important steps in order to strengthen our participation in the NATO alliance. At the NATO summit, which I attended with the Prime Minister two or three years ago, a declaration was made by the Prime Minister that our contribution would be effective and it would be in accordance with the obligations which our allies expected of us. It is because of that, for example, that we have purchased the new battle tank and undertaken our commitments with respect to the long-range patrol aircraft.

● (1422)

At the present time, of course, whatever the new military long-term plan is, Canada will play its part, as each and every member of the NATO alliance will be expected to play its part.

POLICY RESPECTING NUCLEAR WEAPONS ON CANADIAN SOIL

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council: it concerns the Prime Minister's speech to the United Nations in New York. The Prime Minister left the impression, at least with UPI, that Canada was in the middle of a nuclear disarmament program right now.

Could the minister correct the false impression left by the Prime Minister, and confirm that none of the nuclear missiles in Canada will be leaving in less than five years and that it will be at least three years before the program is completed?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe the situation with respect to Canada's nuclear position is very clear. We do not produce nuclear weapons. In so far as our participation in Europe is concerned, we do not have nuclear weapons. At the present time, nuclear weapons are installed or are available for use on the Voodoo aircraft.

As my hon. friend knows, it is our intention to move out of that field with the acquisition of new aircraft which will not be equipped with nuclear weapons of any kind. There is no ambiguity. The Prime Minister, in fact, stated the situation which was fairly well known and which I am glad is now clearly and generally known.

Mr. McKinnon: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In New York, the Prime Minister heaped fulsome praise on President Carter for postponing the development of the neutron bomb. This morning, the Chief of Canada's Defence Staff supported the deployment of the neutron bomb, stating that it was less ominous than the alternatives and, further, that it would raise the nuclear threshold, that is, make nuclear war less likely. As this opinion is clearly divergent from that of the Prime Minister, could the Deputy Prime Minister clarify the confusion?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have not examined the testimony of the Chief of the General Staff before the committee. I have been told, however, that the press reports of his statement do not reflect accurately what the Chief of the General Staff said before the committee. Quite apart from his statement, I can repeat what I said earlier in the week, that is, that Canada supports the decision of the United States in postponing the production of a special battlefield nuclear weapon.

I believe that decision by the President of the United States was a right one, and it is supported by the Government of Canada. It is hoped that the Soviet Union, about which the Leader of the Opposition spoke earlier, will show equivalent restraint in its own deployment of forces and its own force levels. In this case, the action of the President of the United States has put the Soviet Union clearly on the defensive.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could put a very simple question that has been asked in this House before. Would the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House if Canada is in favour of, or against, the use and deployment of the neutron bomb?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the policy statement made last Friday by the Prime Minister is the policy of the Government of Canada.

INDUSTRY

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—INVESTMENT IN CANADA TO REDRESS LOSS OF JOBS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Considering that the number of permanent jobs lost to Canada because we do not have our share of investment out of the auto pact is in the neighbourhood of 20,000, or enough to support a community of 60,000 Canadians, and considering that the Canadian ambassador in the United States has now joined the critics of the government in pointing out that our deficit in automobile parts "far outweighs the Canadian surplus" in automotive vehicles, could the minister, now, at long last, tell the House if he has managed to obtain from the automotive companies investment commitments which will redress this deplorable loss of Canadian jobs?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in answering that question I would like to point out that I certainly do not agree with the preamble of the hon. member's question. We are not losing 20,000 jobs. I have said repeatedly that we have a deficit of probably 5,000 jobs in the total automotive industry which applies to the automotive agreement.

We are negotiating with the three major companies and I hope to be able to make an announcement some time in June with regard to one, if not all three, of the major companies and their plant investments in Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister not only disagrees with the Canadian Automotive Parts Association, a business group, the United Auto Workers, a trade union, the government of the province of Ontario, which is a Tory government, but he also disagrees with the Canadian ambassador in Washington. I do not know who supports him on that side of the House—

Mr. Clark: It is pretty lonely over there.

Mr. Broadbent: —but if he has their support, they are the only Canadians that are on his side. He told us a few days ago—in fact, a few weeks ago—that he will be announcing soon some commitment by one or more companies.

Could he tell us specifically, considering the last time we got new investment proportionate to our share on this side of the border was in 1965, when we got written commitments from the three companies, that what he will produce for the House will be the written commitments for the next three years by the leading companies, to make sure we get the compensation and investment that will produce the jobs we are entitled to?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, in attempting to negotiate with the automotive companies the building of parts plants in Canada, we run into—as the House is aware—a great deal of competition from some of the southern states where there is a difference in wage rates of perhaps $1, $2 or $3 an hour from wages in Canada. If one took a look at a plant employing something like 3,000 people, by calculating wage rates at over $1 an hour less it would come to, relatively speaking, in the neighbourhood of $12 million a year difference.

That is a real bargaining power through which the companies are trying to negotiate assistance from all levels of government to counteract the advantages in locating their plants in the United States, particularly in some of the southern states. These are the conditions under which we are attempting to negotiate. When I make the announcement, I hope to have written confirmation of plants to be built in Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I know the minister has only had that portfolio for about eight months now, but I ask him, is he not aware that clause 1 of the pact—near the end of the clause, the last sentence—prohibits governments on either side of the border from using a variety of means, among which would be tax incentives, because the principle of the pact is to get a fair share of growth on both sides of the border? The hon. member for Windsor West has pointed that out to the minister a number of times. If he is aware of that, has the Government of Canada objected to the United States in terms of the pact being violated in this regard?

I come back to the commitment point. Will the minister tell the House that he will have for us, in the next two or three weeks, commitments from the industry for investment to redress the loss of jobs? Failing that, will he finally acknowledge what the rest of us have recognized, that he has failed to do the job, and will he submit his resignation?

An hon. Member: They need him in the cabinet.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, in 1970 there was a great deal of confusion with regard to the figures being used concerning the automotive agreement. In 1970, Canada and the United States agreed upon a specific set of figures. So the hon. member can use any kind of figures he wants, but Canada and the United States are attempting to use comparable figures.

The job loss, as I have said, is in the neighbourhood of about 5,000 in this country today: that is in the total automotive trade. The unique thing is that we have a surplus of $2 billion in vehicle assembly. In assembling these vehicles, we need parts. Therefore, if one cut back on assembly, one would automatically cut back on parts; and we have to really increase our parts production in Canada.

I have said repeatedly that nothing would make me happier than to be able to announce three or four more plants to be built in Canada. I hope to be able to do that some time in June. I cannot say anything more than that.

QUEBEC SALES TAX—INQUIRY AS TO ADVANTAGES OF GOVERNMENT'S PROPOSED SOLUTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last week, in reply to the question put to him by an hon. member of the opposition, the right hon. Prime Minister said that the problem posed by the retail sales tax was not understood by hon. members, and he indicated that only the right hon. Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance understood the problem. Referring to an article published in today's Le Droit, I have a feeling that hon. members of the opposition are not the only ones who understand nothing: there are others as well. Speaking of the Minister of Finance, this is what the article says, and I quote:

> We want to reduce our taxes and Quebec is willing to increase theirs. That is what we have been telling them to do for several weeks.

Here is my question: can the minister explain very clearly to this House what the advantages are for the Quebec taxpayer if, on the one hand, the federal government reduces its taxes, while on the other hand the provincial government increases its taxes by a comparable amount?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have explained repeatedly that that is precisely the technique we followed on budget night. In the other provinces, federal taxes were reduced for every taxpayer. At the same time, the provincial governments of those provinces increased their personal income tax. With the profits thus made, it was decided to reduce the sales tax.

Here is what we did, which is very clear in my mind: on budget night, we reduced the federal income tax in the case of the other provinces which then increased their own income tax; this is what Quebec refused to do, like the other provinces.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

In terms of money, what advantage does the taxpayer have if the federal government cuts its taxes while the provincial governments raise theirs at the same moment? What difference does it make to the taxpayer? That is what we would like to understand.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, on budget night all provinces except Quebec agreed with the federal government. They increased their provincial income tax, an increase which was offset by a corresponding cut in federal income tax, and they used the profits they made with their increase to cut the provincial sales tax following the proposal I had put forward. In other words, the taxpayers of these provinces have benefited from a cut in the provincial tax which is called sales tax in the provinces.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask another supplementary question.

To conclude this debate, which I believe has lasted long enough, would the Minister of Finance be willing to act as negotiator between the Prime Minister and the premier of Quebec in order to come to a final agreement on this matter? I understand that Bill C-56 places him in a certain dilemma, everybody understands that. But I think that everybody would also accept that two responsible men meet in order to bring this dispute to an end. Would the minister be prepared to act as a go-between to organize such a meeting?

Mr. Chrétien: Two weeks ago I believe, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister and myself stated in the House that we hoped the Quebec government would make us a counter proposal. The Prime Minister said that he would be ready to meet with Quebec representatives if progress were to come about. The day after the budget, when the Quebec government reduced its sales tax in a different way, we made some counter proposals, as the hon. member is well aware. The only replies that the Quebec government gave to our counterproposals were categorical noes, and last Friday the Quebec minister of finance said that he was beginning to change his position. As I said yesterday in the House, and I repeat today, if he wants to meet me I am at his disposal to try and come to a solution, but in the meantime we must continue with our own parliamentary procedures to pass this budget. I must add, Mr. Speaker, that I repeatedly contacted the Quebec minister of finance, and exactly two weeks ago last Monday I spoke to him over the phone. He told me that he might phone back. I am still waiting for his call.

RESULTS OF ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As it is now 31 months since the government announced its anti-inflation program which it stated was designed to ensure that we would be down to 4 per cent inflation in this country by October, will the Minister of Finance now indicate what went wrong with this program, bearing in mind that, year over year, we are now at an inflation level of 8.4 per cent? Judging from current price increases, our inflation is flourishing, rather than going down to the 4 per cent level we were told it would reach in October of this year.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have stated in this House many times that the controls program was very useful in reducing the level of inflation in Canada. When we started the program, we were faced with 11 per cent inflation. We have reduced it to 6 per cent. Unfortunately, it has moved back to 8 per cent, due to food prices and the fact that the Canadian dollar is not at the same level as it was at that time. However, our costs in Canada are much more in line with our competitors.

Generally speaking, the export performance in Canada, in relation to the situation we were in during 1975, is much better. I think the program has been useful. When it was not needed any more, we phased it out: the program began to be phased out last month, on April 15. I am very surprised that the hon. member asks this question when we phased out the program only a month ago.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly surprised, as are members of this House, by the minister's reversal of the question. In the first year's report of the Anti-Inflation Board, they pointed out:

> The essential element of the program is gradual monetary and fiscal restraint. Without some moderation in the growth of the money supply and a somewhat more restrictive fiscal policy, the program could not be a success.

With that warning in mind, will the minister now indicate to the House if, in fact, the fiscal policy of this government which allowed a growth in federal spending of 12½ per cent in the last four years, including the current year, has been a contributing factor to the inflation levels we are now living with?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, in 1974-75 the increases from year to year in the spending programs of the government were 25 per cent a year. We have reduced it since that time to around 10 per cent. That has been a very significant change in the policy of the government in terms of monetary policy. As everyone knows, the governor of the Bank of Canada has very significantly reduced the increase in the money supply. He is within the target he set for himself last fall when this matter was discussed in this House.

Mr. Stevens: Will the Minister of Finance indicate to the House if the 25 per cent spending spree he referred to in 1974 was a contributing factor with respect to the inflation we felt in Canada? Can he advise why we should anticipate 3½ per cent inflation in 1981, when the 4 per cent target for this year has been so badly missed?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is a question. The hon. member is making a commentary. He is talking about a program that was dismantled a month ago. That is not really the purpose of the question period as I understand it.

IMPACT OF INFLATION ON THE POOR AND ELDERLY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Certainly, nobody expects the government to exercise restraint at the expense of the poor and the pensioners of this country. For example, the Canada Pension Plan has so far this year fallen behind by almost $4 a month, in real terms, and OAS payments continue to fall behind in spite of indexing. The current round of inflation is leaning very heavily on these people, as evidenced by surveys in Toronto by Statistics Canada and other sources showing that half the old age pensioners of this country are falling below the poverty line.

● (1442)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): We have a system in Canada whereby pensions increase in line with the CPI. There is a formula in the legislation. This is a system we have used for some years, and I do not intend to change it at this time.

Mr. McGrath: I regret the minister does not seem to be aware that in spite of indexing, old age pensioners and people receiving pensions under the Canada Pension Plan are falling behind. Does the government intend to bring in a measure prior to the adjournment for the summer recess to provide for a continuation of spouses' allowances to make provision for those who are hardest hit, female pensioners, and to provide for an adjustment in the income supplement which obviously is inadequate since indexing does not seem to meet the demand?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have to deal with two different lines by opposition spokesmen: a few minutes ago the hon. member for York-Simcoe said we were spending too much, and now the hon. member for St. John's East wants us to spend even more.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

McDONALD COMMISSION—EXAMINATION OF CABINET MEMBERS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister: it relates to the activities of the McDonald commission and the investigation it is carrying out. In light of the statements made last week by the Deputy Prime Minister, and in view of the fact that the scheduling of the commission apparently parallels the vacillation of the Prime Minister in the calling of an election, can we have a definite assurance that the ministers of the Crown will be examined by the McDonald royal commission this September, and that there will be no further delay regardless of whether or not the Prime Minister gets up the nerve to call an election?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): I am sure the commission has not rearranged its schedule to take into account the possibility of an election. As I have indicated, as the Prime Minister has indicated and as the interested ministers have already stated, the ministers are prepared to appear before the commission when the commission decides to call them as witnesses. That is entirely up to the commission. If they had called the ministers this week, they would gladly have gone; and that will be the case in September. We shall make no effort to influence the timing of the appearance of ministers one way or another.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The fact is that the delay has not been commented upon by the minister. They have not shown any indication that they want to be examined by this commission. In light of a statement made by a former cabinet minister, the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, in which he indicated that deputy ministers should be held accountable, in the parliamentary sense, for their actions, and in view of the sorry record of this government of ministers not taking responsibility for any actions which may have been taken by themselves or their deputy ministers, I ask the Deputy Prime Minister one simple supplementary question, whether the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the former solicitor general, is legally responsible for the actions he and his department took following the warning that the former minister of national revenue had given that these actions may be illegal? Is it the position of the government that he is legally responsible, in view of that warning by the minister of national revenue?

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member is laying on the table, so to speak, a whole series of allegations and I have no intention of commenting on the accuracy or otherwise of several of them. All I know is that the matter is before the McDonald commission, which has very wide terms of reference, that ministers are ready to appear when called, that the matters which are of interest to the hon. members will obviously be brought forward, that questions will be asked of them, and that ultimately the commission will reach a conclusion.

TRADE

JAPANESE TARIFFS ON IMPORTS

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of a continuing policy by Japan of protectionism and the erection of trade barriers, many blatant examples of which could be provided, and the stated interest of the hon. gentleman's department in Canadian trading companies, will the minister inform us whether any new measures are being taken by the government to persuade Japan to truly open its markets to Canadian businesses, especially small business?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, only recently Japan reduced its tariff barriers on a whole host of articles and has expressed an intention at Geneva and in the MTM agreements to continue to reduce its trade barriers and its tariffs so as to better assist the realignment of the trading world. At this time, especially, our currency having depreciated by some 35 per cent in relation to the Japanese yen, we are in a position to do a considerable amount of business with that country.

The House might be interested to learn that one of the items upon which Japan has reduced its tariff is Canadian maple syrup. They have reduced their tariffs on 318 articles in all.

FORECAST OF REAL GROWTH

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As the real domestic product for the first quarter advanced at a disappointing annual rate of 2.4 per cent, does the minister still hold to his forecast of 5 per cent real growth for the year, especially as many competent observers consider the economic performance will be weaker in the latter half of the year than in the first half?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I make a regular review of these forecasts with the officials of my department, and I do not have any reason to change those we made to the effect that we are going to achieve an economic growth of close to 5 per cent for the year 1978.

[English]

Mr. Ritchie: The $100 tax cut of January-February having failed to accomplish its purpose of restoring consumer confidence, as evidenced from poor retail sales figures and the sharp decline in manufacturing output, is the minister now ready to admit the failure of this cut?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN PRICE OF SKIM MILK POWDER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It concerns the price increase of skim milk powder partially brought about by the Scrooge-like personality of the Minister of Agriculture—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Nystrom: —who on April 1 removed the 34 cents a pound subsidy from this product, adversely affecting consumers. We have now seen that the average price increase is around 45 cents to 46 cents per pound, not 34 cents per pound. Is the minister aware of this and, if so, what steps does he plan to take in the face of what appears to be blatant profiteering by some of the companies? Does he intend to demand a rollback? Will he inquire into the reason for this price increase?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am continually working with the Minister of Agriculture to provide better food for Canadians at lower prices. He is a very co-operative minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: I shall be pleased to look into the allegation which the hon. member has made, and to consult with my colleague.

Mr. Nystrom: I want to know whether the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will demand that the companies roll back this increase, rather that profiteer at the expense of the ordinary people of this country. At the same time, as the minister representing consumers in cabinet, will he demand of his colleagues that they reinstate the subsidy on skim milk powder which is so badly needed by the poor, by children and by older people?

Mr. Allmand: I shall be pleased to examine this subject, and if there is profiteering we shall take appropriate action. I might say that my officials and I are continually making representations on behalf of consumers before cabinet and committees.

QUEBEC ATTITUDE CONCERNING SALES TAX

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In a report published recently, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce states that 122,000 of the 262,000 workers in the four industries of textiles, clothing, footwear and furniture work outside Quebec and that the proposal to abolish the sales tax on those four products in this province will increase employment and stimulate purchases throughout Canada. The question I want to ask the Minister of Finance is this: how can the minister and the right hon. Prime Minister maintain that the proposal made by the National Assembly helps only the province of Quebec?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in this respect we are only echoing the claims of the Parti Québécois. When Mr. Parizeau announced that measure, he said he was concerned only with the interests of Quebec. In the advertising sent out by members of his party, the premier quoted part of a publication to the effect that all that has been done was with the single purpose of stimulating only the Quebec economy and not the Canadian economy.

EFFECT OF QUEBEC SALES TAX PROPOSALS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since a report emanating from his ministry states that 122,000 of the 270,000 jobs in textiles, shoes, clothing and furniture are outside the province of Quebec, and that the policy announced by the national assembly in the province of Quebec to abolish the sales tax in these four sectors will aid employment and stimulate consumption all over Canada, has the minister informed the Minister of Finance of these facts and, if so, how can he possibly support the policy of the federal government which is refusing to negotiate this proposition with the province of Quebec?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is well aware of the number of measures taken by this government to help the textile and the shoe industries all over Canada, and if the provincial government of Quebec wants in its own way to help those industries, certainly we appreciate that as well.

McDONALD COMMISSION—EVIDENCE ON SECURITY AND TAX IMPROPRIETIES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister: it relates to a statement made last Friday that the government was reluctant to table information which consisted of fragments of matters before the McDonald royal commission. In view of the fact that the government has tabled on several occasions matters such as the allegedly secret memo from late superintendent "Larry" Forest to former security director, John Starnes, a letter concerning Warren Hart from Mr. Justice McDonald to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and for that matter the controversial agreement of the 1972 understanding about matters of national revenue and the RCMP, what is the reason for the apparently illogical conclusion, now, that no further information of this type will be tabled?

Will the Deputy Prime Minister reconsider and on reflection table this letter between these two cabinet ministers which has such an important bearing upon matters of illegality or impropriety affecting tax and security matters?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe there is no lack of logic in the decision taken by the government. It has to do with the fact that there is a royal commission before which witnesses appear and evidence is being produced, and it seems to me that it would be very illogical to begin the process of feeding into the House of Commons or to the media bits and pieces of the over-all evidence that will have to be examined by the McDonald royal commission.

If the House of Commons or a committee of the House had established itself as the body to undertake the inquiry that is being conducted by Mr. Justice McDonald, then I would take a different attitude; but at the request of members of the opposition we established the McDonald inquiry and it seems to me that we should make use of it in the proper way. In my view, it would be improper to select one piece of evidence and table it, to the neglect of all the other oral and written testimony that has to be considered.

LEGALITY OF USING INFORMATION CONTAINED IN TAX FILES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I will not give in to the temptation of reminding the Deputy Prime Minister how illogical his position is. I will ask the Solicitor General if he now knows, having had the benefit of checking his files and checking with his predecessor, why, in view of the doubts expressed on one occasion or another about the propriety, if not the legality, of this arrangement in 1972 between National Revenue and the RCMP, this matter was allowed to proceed, and if at any time the government obtained a legal opinion sanctioning this affair. If that is the case, would the Solicitor General consider tabling this legal opinion, for the benefit of the House?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the question was aired fully on Friday and the Deputy Prime Minister made the position quite clear with reference to the proceedings before the McDonald inquiry. The Deputy Prime Minister has indicated quite clearly that the matter is to be dealt with in that particular form. As to the other aspect of the hon. member's question, perhaps he might repeat it; I have forgotten what it was.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me, I will address a very brief question to the former solicitor general, now the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Does the minister acknowledge now, having had a chance to check his files, receipt of the letter which was referred to on Friday from his former cabinet colleague expressing doubts as to the legality of what was going on?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Answer the question.

Some hon. Members: Cover-up.

CABINET REPRESENTATION OF TORONTO AREA

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister arising from the televised interview on Sunday given by the Minister of State for Small Business. In view of the fact that the minister said he felt the growing dissatisfaction with the Trudeau government in the Toronto area resulted from the public's feeling that their part of the country is not adequately represented in the cabinet, may I ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether the Prime Minister has been made aware of the minister's statement, and does he intend to take appropriate action?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Prime Minister is always interested in hearing about political comment.

QUEBEC SALES TAX—REQUESTED WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-56

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to ask another question but I will restrict myself to putting a question to the Minister of Finance on whose shoulders so much blame has been laid in connection with this tax bill, although apparently he is just a boy who has to produce what the Prime Minister and the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations require.

In view of the divisions in this country, certainly unequalled since the days of the war, and having regard to the fact that in the province of Quebec there is almost unanimity against this tax bill and in other parts of Canada there is uncertainty in the hearts of people as to what is happening to this country, is the government giving consideration to making a respectable retreat and withdrawing this bill which, if it is carried out, will divide this country irreparably?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have established very clearly that I am open to discussions, but to have a discussion there must be two people and the other party is not interested in talking to me.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, according to the press, even though the government generally does not admit the press is ever right, when the Prime Minister returns from Washington he will meet the Premier of Quebec or the Quebec minister of finance to determine what alterations might be made in this bill in order to bring about agreement. Is such a meeting to take place and, if so, how far will the federal government go in its desire to remove the strong criticism from the province of Quebec which covers all areas, including the newly-elected leader of the Liberal party in that province? Will there be a meeting and, if so, what are the terms of the Government of Canada in order to bring about agreement with the province of Quebec?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat what I said previously, that more than two weeks ago the Prime Minister said that if a meeting would be useful, he would be willing to talk. But since that time we have not heard from the Quebec government except at the press conference on Friday when Mr. Parizeau said that he could perhaps begin to change his opinion. We have been waiting since that time to receive a formal proposition from him. I called him two weeks ago asking whether it would be useful to meet, and he said he would call me back. I have to inform the right hon. gentleman that he has not called me back as yet.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—STATEMENT ISSUED BY JUDGE MAYRAND OF MONTREAL

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I gave Your Honour notice. I indicated that in fact I would be raising this at the appropriate time today. My question of privilege is in connection with a public statement issued by Acting Chief Court Sessions Judge Mayrand of Montreal. I understand this public statement was issued yesterday.

I do not have the statement, but I have copies of some of the wire, press, and radio comments. Included in those are several statements. One of the most repugnant to me is the statement by Acting Chief Court Sessions Judge Mayrand indicating that he "cannot tolerate criticism of the trial of Alexander Peter Treu made in the Commons last week by Alberta M. P. Gerald Baldwin".

Some of the radio comments suggest that not only will he not tolerate, but his court will not permit criticism, apparently in this House, of the trial of Mr. Treu. He bases this on statements made by myself in the House. His reference is to statements I have made in the House.

I made statements on three occasions. On Friday, May 12, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I moved the following motion:

> That this House, as the elected branch of the ultimate and highest tribunal in the country, concerned that justice should not only be done but be seen to be done, and that judicial and bureaucratic officials shall not make improper or unexpected use of laws enacted in parliament, requests that the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General inquire into and report to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on certain facts relating to the case of Peter Treu who, after being under charge and trial for approximately four years under the Official Secrets Act, behind a strict curtain of secrecy, was recently convicted and sentenced to imprisonment and, in particular, the allegation that Treu was commanded not to discuss the case even after the conviction and was granted bail on appeal only on the same basis, and that the committee be required to consider the provisions of the Official Secrets Act which permit this kind of Star Chamber proceedings, with a view to recommending suitable changes.

Of course that proposal received the same attention from government members opposite as most good proposals do under Standing Order 43.

On May 15 I asked a question of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), which read as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for either the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General, whoever has the ultimate responsibility. It deals with the case of one Alexander Peter Treu recently convicted after a secret trial under the Official Secrets Act and sentenced to two years' imprisonment.

Can the hon. gentleman advise of the nature of the restrictions placed on Mr. Treu to prevent him from discussing any aspects of the facts of this case, this having taken place at the time of the conviction, the sentence and the application for bail on leave to appeal? Were such instructions given by the government to counsel to press for such restrictions? Would these restrictions have the effect of prohibiting myself or any other member of parliament from discussing the facts of the case with Mr. Treu?

Following the answer of the Minister of Justice I posed a supplementary question, which read as follows:

I suppose the latter part of that answer might properly mean inquiring what facilities might be available to members of parliament. I would like to ask this supplementary. At the time of the conviction, the judge stated that Mr. Treu was not a criminal in the regular sense of the word. After the investigation commenced, Dr. Treu was continuing to receive the documents. After the trial commenced, NATO awarded to Dr. Treu and/or his company a contract dealing with classified communications sytems.

Will the minister obtain and table in this House a transcript of the comments of the trial judge at the time of the conviction and at the time of the sentencing, so that we can determine whether there was a case of security or whether there was an element of bureaucratic bungling?

As far as I know, there has been no tabling of those documents. My instructions are that they have not been tabled.

Finally, on May 23, I rose to present another motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I was encouraged to do so by the fact that the House gave unanimous consent to a motion moved by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) dealing with the kind of proceedings in a case in the Soviet Union. It was not a question of fundamental law, but it was a question of the type of proceedings which were taken in respect of certain dissidents in the Soviet Union. Then I moved the following motion:

That this House deplores the dangerous form of secret trial and the continuing restrictions involved in the case of Alexander Peter Treu which are contrary to the usual practice of Canadian justice.

That motion also was rejected. Acting Chief Sessions Court Justice Mayrand was critical of myself, because I made comments about the manner in which this trial was conducted under the provisions of the Official Secrets Act.

I have practised law for nearly 50 years. During part of that time I have had the honour of being a bencher of the Law Society. It is the right of every barrister, if he is going to appeal, to be critical within the terms of the law and the convention and conduct of a trial. I am sure the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) had occasion to study some of the appeals in which he was involved. I used them as precedents in my own trials. Any competent lawyer going to appeal, from time to time has the necessity of being critical of the conduct of a trial, doing so within the limits of convention and custom.

The examination of a witness by a judge, and the manner in which the judge presents the case to the jury, are subjects of logical criticism by a member of the bar. That has been my experience over the years. What I have read and what I have said outside the House were not in any sense personal criticisms of the trial judge.

I should like to refer to a decision of the Quebec Court of Appeal which affects this House. It deals with the case of the present Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). At that time Quebec Chief Justice Tremblay, as indicated at page 97 of the Dominion Law Reports, Volume 72, third edition, said the following:

Certainly, the decisions of judges are subject to criticism as are the decisions of all other public men.

Then he went on to indicate that there must be some moderation of criticism. It would be monstrous if members of the House were not entitled to be engaged in reasonable criticism of the conduct of judges in the carrying on of judicial proceedings.

What I have read indicates that I did not exceed what I believe to be fair and reasonable comment. As a member of this House I would be in dereliction of my duty if, upon finding those facts, I failed to do anything. I would count myself as having failed to discharge my responsibility if I did not call attention to what could be an injustice because of improper, unusual or unexpected use of the laws of this land.

Judge Mayrand went on to make further comments. He said:

He also complained that even the judgment is secret because it refers to trial proceedings.

Well, I am in good company. A number of newspapers made the same comment. I have before me a copy of the Friday, March 17, 1978, edition of the Globe and Mail. Its headline reads: "Even verdict will be given secretly at Montreal trial". If the Globe and Mail can say it, even I can repeat it. Also Judge Mayrand indicated the following:

Baldwin should not set himself up as a court of appeal, all the more so because he is in complete ignorance of the facts placed before the court.

Of course I am in ignorance of the facts, as are 99.9 per cent of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That includes the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford).

Mr. Baldwin: I would be perfectly willing to take the chance of talking to Dr. Treu. But as I understand the situation, if I was to talk to him he might well forfeit his bond and be sent back to jail. For that reason I have never talked to him. All the information I have is from instructions given to me by people who, I hope, know something about the situation.

● (1512)

The Acting Chief Judge went on to say, speaking of myself:

We advise him respectfully to be satisfied with doing his work; namely the improvement of the Official Secrets Act if it appears unjust and abusive.

For some four years, Mr. Speaker, that is just what I have been trying to do. At a meeting of the Standing Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments and Other Regulations that was dealt with when we had before us the Secretary of State in connection with the question of freedom of information. This Act is notorious not only in this country but in Britain where a case tried against Jonathan Aitkens of the Sunday Telegraph and Colonel Cairns was thrown out by Mr. Justice Coulfield who said it was about time Section 2, which corresponds to Section 4 of our Act, was pensioned off. I, and other members of my party in this House, have for years been trying to do exactly that in respect of the Official Secrets Act.

Finally, the judge went on to say he deplored the use of parliamentary immunity by members of parliament to question and criticize the manner in which Judge Luc Trudel handled the trial. I never mentioned Judge Luc Trudel's name. I have not taken advantage of parliamentary immunity. I have spoken outside this House, and I intend to keep on speaking outside this House when I see injustices of this kind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I spoke about being a barrister. I am not here as a barrister but as a member of parliament with duties and responsibilities to mark injustices, no matter in what form they come. I can only seek to improve bad laws by calling attention to the application in individual instances of those laws. I, and any member of this House and of the other place, ought not to be frustrated or inhibited by threats or other similar action on the part of anybody, whether he be a justice of the courts, an individual, the Prime Minister—no matter who, barring only yourself, Mr. Speaker.

My problem here, of course, is that I do not have the actual written statement issued by the trial judge who, I understand, is a provincial judge. If I did I might move a motion, and I reserve the right to do so. When I receive that document, if it appears to constitute a direct threat of intimidation as far as I and other members of this House are concerned, to refrain from being critical of or dealing in any way with this particular trial, I will see fit to bring in a motion, if your Honour should hold there is a prima facie case, which might well seek the appearance of the judge before a committee of this House, or even before the Bar of the House, if necessary.

If, on the other hand, there seems to be simply a misapprehension on the part of the judge as to what are our responsibilities, as Your Honour knows, there is a special committee considering this issue, and I would ask in my motion that the matter be referred to that committee.

I would hope that I and other members of this House, of the other place, and of the press, and the people of Canada will not sit quietly by allowing proceedings of this kind to take place without public remonstrance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I know there are other hon. members, including the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), who have indicated a willingness to participate in this discussion. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has indicated he is holding open his rights and wants to get a transcript of the exact language to see whether in its actuality or its potential it raises a threat or intimidation against him in the carrying out of his duties as an elected member. That would seem to me to invite comment when that step has been taken, rather than now when the exact text of the pronouncement by the Acting Chief Judge is not known. I would recognize the rights of those hon. members to participate at that time. However, I will not refuse them the right now to speak, but it would seem to me to be preferable to have the text in our hands before carrying the matter further.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I completely agree with Your Honour that the time for us to speak in greater detail on this matter is after we have, in our hands the text of what the judge has said. Even so, I should like at this moment, if I may do so without losing my right to speak again when the matter arises later on, to indicate my full support of the position taken by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). Of course I indicated that at two o'clock today by attempting to move a motion under Standing Order 43.

I would also say that I dare to hope, from the preliminary comments you have made from the chair, that you may be persuaded in this instance that we could be very close to a classic case of privilege. It is true that we shall have to wait to see what the judge actually said, but if it turns out to be the fact that he has said something which inhibits or intimidates a member of this House from pursuing what he believes to be his duty, that would be pretty close to, if not dead on, a classic case of privilege.

Before I presented my motion today under Standing Order 43 I went back and read the motions under Standing Order 43 and the questions which the hon. member for Peace River had posed earlier this month. It seemed to me they were all in very careful and restrained language. It seemed to me that what he was seeking was an inquiry as to what is in the Official Secrets Act which makes this secret trial possible, and that in fact he was doing what the judge in one of the quotations attributed to him says he ought to do, namely, try to win improvements to the Official Secrets Act. However, for the judge to go on and say that the hon. member's comments are intolerable, that he does not know what he is talking about and so on, is, I suggest, an intimidation of a respected and distinguished member of this House, which this House ought not to tolerate.

I hope, therefore, you will agree to hear a few comments now, and allow this subject to be reopened when we have the text of what the judge said. At this point I hope I am expressing the views of all members of this House when I say we are on the side of the hon. member for Peace River.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to intervene, because I think one of the issues involved is not only the independence of members of parliament but obviously also the question involving the independence of the members of the judiciary. While they are not accountable to this House or to me, I feel I should make some comment, if even very brief. Beauchesne's and other authorities have comments and citations in respect of reflections on the judiciary which are not to be made in the House, except by way of substantive motion. While I, obviously, as Minister of Justice, am accountable to this House for the conduct of the Crown and the conduct of any prosecution, I am not accountable to this House for the conduct of judges.

I only have press reports of the Acting Chief Sessions Judge's comments and, like the hon. member, I would want to read them before being extensive in my comments. I take it, even on the basis of press comments, that there is some exception taken to the reference or suggestion that we are back in the days of the Star Chamber of King Charles I. I would caution hon. members, and point out to your Honour, that to accuse or suggest a judge of this country is running a Star Chamber is a reflection on members of the judiciary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: If one goes back into the history of the Star Chamber he will find it was an administrative court established by Henry VIII which ran for a number of years. It was a meeting of the Privy Council, a meeting of the court; it was a government court in effect, an appearance without written argument. There was no appeal from its decision, and there was no right to appear before the court. That, Mr. Speaker, is not the situation in this country, and therefore I would caution members that there is, while also obviously a need for members of parliament to maintain their privileges and their right to speak freely, the equally important right that members of the judiciary retain their independence from parliament and from me, and be free to comment also.

● (1522)

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, very briefly in follow-up to what the minister has said, and I intervene because I was one of the members in this House who directed questions to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) some time ago as to the disposition of the Treu case, just as the minister said that the judiciary is independent of the House of Commons, in that respect so are members of the House of Commons independent of the judiciary in exercising their parliamentary immunity, and I suggest there is a very good reason for that.

Again, referring to the reported comments by Judge Mayrand who reportedly deplored the way that other members of the House have used their parliamentary immunity to question and criticize the manner in which Judge Luc Trudel handled the Treu trial, I suggest to you, with respect, and by way of brief comment to support the position taken by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the distinguished member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), that it would be appropriate for this distinguished jurist to use his position as did another distinguished colleague in the Quebec judiciary, Chief Justice Jules Deschênes, to speak out on some of the inequities of the Official Secrets Act, as Chief Justice Deschênes did when he had some very scathing things to say about section 41(2) of the Federal Court Act which was used to inhibit the efforts of the Quebec Civil Liberties Association to press the case of Sylvia Roche and Cathy Curtin. These two girls were discharged from their positions on Olympic preparations, and it was used by the government to withhold information that would have assisted in their case.

I suggest, sir, in closing, that it would be very appropriate for Mr. Justice Mayrand to adopt a position in defence of civil liberties and the court system in the same way as Chief Justice Deschênes did on that occasion.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some amazement to what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) said. I believe everyone can agree with his general proposition with respect to his position vis-à-vis the judiciary and its independence. These are platitudes and statements that have been with us since the first lawyer came off the ark.

The fact of the matter is, and on careful reading of what the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said, and in his motions and questions that he has advanced on previous occasions, and what he said in the House today, it indicates one thing, if it indicates anything at all, that the hon. member for Peace River was not casting reflections on any judge or any court. He was casting some serious reflections on a form of trial which this parliament enacted many years ago, which allows that which he described as a Star Chamber tactic to take place. That is the important thing.

When this matter is concluded later on there ought to be the message that in this day and age we cannot abide in a free society an act that is as oppressive as is the Official Secrets Act. Rather than casting aspersions on the hon. member for Peace River, I would like to hear the Minister of Justice come forward and suggest some changes that would bring that statute in line with the principles of freedom of speech and freedom of association, while still protecting the state in matters of national security. To that end I would commend to you, sir, and to the Minister of Justice, who may have forgotten about it, that there is a private member's bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Peace River on the order paper today, which incidentally I have had the honour of seconding the motion with respect thereto, that perhaps the Minister of Justice might look to, so there will never again be an occasion for a minister of the Crown to stand up and utter the platitudes that the Minister of Justice uttered just a moment ago with respect to an honest submission made by a courageous member of the bar and a member of this House of Commons.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). One must conclude that it will be his final song in the House. He is leaving now because he does not like any suggestion of criticism.

Mr. Paproski: He can't stand the heat.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes if you can't stand the heat, then leave the kitchen.

The doctrine as enunciated a few minutes ago by the Minister of Justice is the antithesis of jurisprudence and of freedom. I have appeared before many judges over the years. I am a member of my own bar of Saskatchewan, the bars of Alberta, British Columbia and Ontario, and an honorary bencher of Gray's Inn, and I have had some experience. I have known some judges who fully place themselves in the position, and I believe the Minister of Justice now occupies the same, that "there but for the grace of God goes God". That is the attitude that dictates.

There was nothing in what the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said that in any way casts aspersions at the judge himself. The judge should not have rushed into print, and he should not have made the statements he did. In doing so, he departed from the independence of the bench which is expected of judges everywhere within our country.

As far as the hon. member for Peace River is concerned, I have listened to him over the years and the expression of his views, and they are singularly objective at all times. If I had been in his position I could not have restrained myself to the extent that he did, because in the law the pathways of today become the highways of tomorrow.

My mind goes back to 1945, the time of the Gouzenko investigation, when every principle of jurisprudence—the right of individuals to freedom under law,—habeas corpus was ended—was swept aside. When I raised this with the distinguished former president of the Canadian Bar and subsequent prime minister, Mr. St. Laurent, who was president of the Canadian Bar when I was one of the vice-presidents, I said, "You have abolished habeas corpus", and he said, "We haven't." The section that abolished it was simply this; that no one imprisoned could challenge his imprisonment. With that section man after man was imprisoned, night and day with lights on to keep them awake. Of those individuals, two or three were convicted and the rest were acquitted. At that time we said this has all the earmarks of the Star Chamber to the "nth" degree, and it had.

What has been said here, if the judge is permitted to regard what he says as the basis for the interpretation of parliament, would mean you cannot say anything about anything that happens in the courts. As the hon. member for Peace River said, in the courts he has appeared in on appeals the language is far stronger than anything used here. Indeed, this is remarkable for its clarity and simplicity when you go into a court of appeal and say, "This judge was wrong on this, this and this." There is no complaint surely in the supreme court at Ottawa, parliament, that the denial of the right of members of parliament to point out what they believe to have been wrong and unjust is something intolerable, something that cannot be accepted.

Parliament is supreme. Members are responsible. If they go beyond the field of responsibility they become liable. There was nothing in what the hon. member for Peace River said that went beyond responsibility and reasonable comment. It is the judge who should be apologizing to parliament for having intruded his immodest view that because he is now a judge any mention concerning a trial that took place before him should not be made in parliament.

As a matter of fact, the Official Secrets Act is wrong in many of its sections. It permits tyranny to be enthroned. Changes must be made, but that is not the problem today. The problem here is, did a judge not himself exceed those realms of responsible observation that, in the case of judges, should always be silence?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, the eloquence we have just heard has, I think, put in perspective precisely what is the issue. I want to make a modest contribution with respect to the statement made by the judge about the activities of my colleague, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), regarding the Peter Treu case.

I think it is important for us to recall, as the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) pointed out, that we have had many trials in Canada under the Official Secrets Act. Some of the trials referred to were precipitated by the disclosures of Igor Gouzenko. The hon. member for Peace River has pointed out, in questions in the House of Commons and references outside this House, the aspect of secrecy in this particular instance. It is interesting to recall that in the Gouzenko trials, as important as those were occurring immediately after the second world war when there was great concern about Russian activity in Canada and about spy activities, that each and every trial that arose out of those disclosures was open to the public, and every trial was heard and understood by every person in Canada interested in following the proceedings. That is an important consideration when we think of the way the law is and of ways in which it should be changed.

I was incredulous when the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), who in the parliamentary tradition is the chief legal officer in the executive, stood up and put forward what I consider to be a misinterpretation of what the hon. member for Peace River has done in the course of his questioning of the particular trial proceedings. After listening carefully to what he has put on the record, and after reading what has happened over the last few weeks, it is evident that there has never been any suggestion of a personal attack on the competence of the judge in any way. It has clearly and simply been a question of the inadequacy of the law as it stands, and a plea for some changes that are long overdue in the Official Secrets Act.

I think it would be helpful to Your Honour to recall your own decision in the case that was raised with respect to the House of Commons and Chief Justice Evans. He made comments outside the House with respect to deliberations going on concerning the uranium cartel. If Your Honour looks back at your own remarks in that instance, I think you will be reinforced in taking a strong stand on behalf of parliament with respect to any attempted interference in the deliberations of this Chamber.

I want to make one final point, Mr. Speaker, about one of the pieces of information that has come our way with respect to Mr. Treu. Mr. Treu was tried by a secret trial—the kind of trial for which we have all indicated our abhorrence in this House. It is the kind of thing that takes place in other countries. After the charge was brought against Mr. Treu he was offered another contract in the same area of endeavour that he had been pursuing, by NATO. The trial was so onerous it bankrupted him so that he was not in a position to accept the contract. It is that kind of pressure and that kind of secrecy that make it quite legitimate for any member of this House to make reference, by analogy, to Star Chamber proceedings. In doing that we are not being critical of any judge. The judge has his duties to perform, and that is quite separate and apart from any allegation of impropriety on the part of any individual judge.

I stand in my place today in strong support of my colleague, the hon. member for Peace River, who has done a service to the improvement of laws in this country, particularly the laws governing secrecy, the laws pertaining to disclosure on the part of government, and in this case with respect to the provisions of the Official Secrets Act. I am proud to do so.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As I indicated earlier, the matter will be pursued further when the precise text of the judge's remarks is available to us.

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 126, 127 and 782.

[Text]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Question No. 126—Mr. Herbert:

Has the government considered the suggestion of the Official Languages Commissioner that aid to second-language teaching in the provinces might best be implemented through the Council of Ministers of Education and, if so, have any negotiations been commenced with the provinces?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): The council of ministers of education is already actively involved in two federal-provincial programs designed to promote a knowledge of both official languages. They are the summer language bursary and second-language monitor programs. Both these programs are funded by the federal government and administered by the council of ministers of education, in collaboration with the provincial departments of education. At the request of the council of ministers of education, the federal government has agreed to fund in 1977-78, two pilot projects under these two programs. The pilot projects will: (a) offer 100 bursaries to enable Francophone students from minority milieus to take a six-week immersion program to perfect their knowledge of French; and (b) provide 40 Francophone monitors to French-language schools in minority milieus to assist teachers of French as a first language and teachers of other subjects in French. In 1976, for the first time, a special project was submitted by the council of ministers of education and accepted for shared-cost funding. This project provided for short courses for school administrators and other educators involved in the teaching of English or French as a second language and for the compilation of a handbook for school administrators, outlining the administrative implications of the teaching of English or French as a second language. The project is intended to cover fiscal years 1976-77 and 1977-78. The present agreement concerning the federal-provincial program for bilingualism in education will expire on March 31, 1979. Discussions have already begun between the Secretary of State and the council of ministers of education as a preliminary stage to the negotiation of a new agreement. This is the first time that the council of ministers of education has taken an active role in the formulation of a federal-provincial agreement for bilingualism in education. Negotiations for the original agreement, which came into effect in 1969, and its renewal in 1974 took place on a bilateral basis between the federal and the ten provincial governments.

LAND TASK FORCE

Question No. 127—Mr. Herbert:

Were the governments of Alberta and Quebec invited to participate in the land task force to study the supply and cost of serviced residential land in Canada and, if so, did they participate and, if not, for what reason in each case?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised as follows by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation: the governments of Alberta and Quebec were invited to participate in the land task force to study the supply and cost of serviced residential land in Canada. Alberta has not participated and Quebec participated until the provincial election of November 15, 1976. Alberta wished to include in the study all cost components of housing.

ALLOWANCES FOR INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCES

Question No. 782—Mr. Joyal:

Since 1970, did Quebec provincial ministers participate in any international conferences as members of a Canadian delegation and, if so (a) how many (b) in what conferences (c) in each case, what amount of (i) living (ii) travel (iii) representation allowances were paid by the government?

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): (a) Twenty-four. (b) Conférence des ministres de l'éducation, from 1970 to 1977. Conférence des ministres de la jeunesse et des sports, from 1972 to 1977. Conférence constitutive de l'Agence de coopération culturelle et technique (ACCT), 1970. Conférence générale de l'ACCT, 1971 and 1975. Réunion des ministres de l'Artisanat (ACCT), 1977. Conférence des ministres de la Fonction publique (ACCT), 1971. United Nations Food Conference 1974. Habitat Conference, 1976. United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, 1972. Commonwealth Law Ministers Conference, 1977. United Nations Water Conference, 1977. (c) (i) and (ii)—Provincial ministers attending international conferences are entitled to a fixed allotment for meal allowances, which is based on the cost of living in the city where the conference is held. The federal government also pays for transport, hotel and other incidental expenses. For example, at the U.N. Water Conference at Mar del Plata, which lasted 11 days from March 11 to 25, 1977, the air ticket Ottawa/Mar del Plata/Ottawa was $1,159; the hotel $28.37 per day; the meal daily allowance $13.04. All in all, the average cost of a delegate amounted to $1,750. The Quebec government did not accept that the federal government pay the cost of its minister's participation in conformity with its policy of assuming itself the travel expenses of its participants who are members of a Canadian delegation. (c) (iii)—Representational allowances are not for the members of a delegation, but for the delegation itself. Therefore, representational expenses are accounted against the delegation.

EDUCATION

Question No. 357—Mr. Orlikow:

1. For each year 1971 to 1976, what amount did the government contribute to each province for post-secondary education?

2. For the same years, what amount did the government contribute to post-graduate studies in Canada or foreign universities?

Return tabled.

Question No. 469—Mr. Schellenberger:

1. Is the government, in conjunction with the provincial authorities, considering the establishment of a Canadian Council on Education to co-ordinate the education activities of the various government authorities and, if so, what steps have been taken to date?

2. What programmes has the government undertaken with respect to assisting elementary and secondary education and, in each case, what was the (a) cost, by province, in each of the past five years (b) basis for the programme being initiated and funds allocated?

Return tabled.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Monday, May 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole, and of the amendment (Mr. Broadbent) (page 5548).

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, last night in closing the debate I had been dealing with what I consider to be some of the worth-while clauses of Bill C-56, namely, those dealing with Registered Retirement Savings Plans. I think I have given due credit to the government for those changes, as did the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) and others on this side of the House who have been trying to get these changes for the last several years. I went on to discuss the philosophy of the RRSP and how it was changing now due to the needs of the nation to collect larger pools of capital, and to hope that individuals could share in this capital pooling and use the benefits from it to enhance their economic situation in their declining years.

Now I should like to move to what I think is the lost opportunity in Bill C-56 to do what would have helped the nation immensely at this particular time. The subject I am referring to is potential budgeting.

Our advisers to the ministers of finance for the last 30 years have held to a theory of fiscal budgeting that has now been demonstrated to be wrong in quantity and wrong in principle. There is a religious, fervent, stubborn inflexibility on the part of the people in the Department of Finance to send minister after minister into this House to bring in budgets which they know, before they bring them in, are wrong both in theory and in quantity.

We have been in a state of stagflation now for four years. Everyone in Canada knows that this country is strong in every way. People keep asking why, with all our strength of resources of the material sort, and resources of the human sort, should this nation be dragging behind when it should be leading the world in growth and in individual wealth accumulation and enjoying that wealth. Because of the people's need to have that question answered, I make the statement again that this budget, particularly the resolution in the budget dealing with income tax, failed to grab an opportunity to use the device of potential budgeting, which I think would have helped the country. It certainly would have helped the personal political fortunes of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien).

The Minister of Finance is aware that I suggested proposals to him in the mini-budget debate of last November. To be fair, he was extremely interested in a favourable, constructive way. As a result I wrote a letter to him and put some of these ideas into written form so that he could take them before his officials, so they could look them over. The general sense of these proposals was that if he could pick certain items that the people of this country needed and wanted, and were not being produced and used in Canada, and if he reduced the tax on these particular items—and I am referring to the income tax tax—then there would be no loss to his balance of ways and means in his budget. In other words, since the tax collector is not collecting anything on these particular items, there is no loss of taxes if the tax is reduced, because there is no tax collected now.

On the contrary, if the income tax is reduced on the utilization of these particular objects, a large number would be purchased, which would mean a large number of people would go to work and a large number of people would be earning money. In turn these people would be off the social welfare list, and certainly off the unemployment insurance list. Because of the phenomenon of not having to reduce income from existing taxes, by reducing the taxes on these items that have a potential for the development of the nation and in bringing benefits to the people, this is called potential budgeting.

Last fall I pointed out that the only country I know of that has ever tried this method was the United States in 1964-1965. At that time the United States reduced taxes on a number of items, amounting roughly to $10 billion. They expected a drop in the income to the tax collector of the $10 billion. But because these were items not being utilized a great deal, and because people then bought them in great numbers, when the year was over the tax revenue had not dropped $10 billion, as was expected, but had gone up $19 billion.

I pointed out at that time that this technique of potential budgeting will only work if there is unused plant capacity and unused labour supply. Those are the two conditions that are needed. Of all nations in the world Canada has those two things in abundance. We have over a million unemployed and we have 18 per cent to 20 per cent of our plant capacity lying unused. All the items I listed can be manufactured in Canada.

To make absolutely clear that the record shows what those proposals were, I will list them. In a letter which I wrote to the Minister of Finance dated November 30, 1977, I suggested that a 100 per cent write-off under the Income Tax Act be given for proven hardware in the production of renewable resources. That means those types of energy sources that could be renewed each year, such as the wind, the sun and so on, and thereby encourage people to buy this type of hardware—to use the renewable sources of energy rather than the non-renewable sources such as natural gas and oil.

I will now list the items for which I propose a 100 per cent write-off. First of all is insulation. I do not think there is any argument about that. Insulation can save 20 per cent, 25 per cent or 30 per cent of the heating costs of the homes and buildings of this nation. Secondly, flat-plate collectors, air or liquid. There items are coming on to the market. They are expensive and make the shift over to flat-plate collectors marginal, but they still are proven items. Therefore they would only qualify under the proposal which I made of 100 per cent write-off. Thirdly, solar furnaces. Fourthly, sealed stoves, fireplaces and furnaces.

If one takes a drive around the country near Ottawa one would see almost one place in ten in the rural areas with wood piles in the yard. This would indicate that individuals on their own are going ahead with the new type of efficient sealed stoves, fireplaces and furnaces to get this form of renewable energy.

The fifth item was heat exchangers. These are a vital part of the utilization of solar energy, whether it is directly assisted solar energy forms or whether it is indirect.

The sixth item is a solar designed greenhouse. These are showing up all across the country. I would think that there is hardly any question that these six items which I have listed can be qualified as proven hardware. They help the individual to shift from non-renewable types of energy to renewable.

The eleven points which I put forward and which I suggested should receive a grant of 150 per cent are items which are not only marginal in cost in the sense of the amount of money a person will save is hardly worth the expenditure, but because they are still in an uncertain stage of proof I say they should have a 150 per cent write-off. This percentage figure which I have taken of 150 per cent is roughly equivalent to what private industry or business gets when they are trying to go into new research operations. I know it is roughly 160 per cent for business, but I have picked 150 per cent for this list of 11 items. I have suggested that this type of deduction only be possible to the year 1985 on the grounds that by that time there will be proven equipment and a return should be made to the 100 per cent write-off.

I will read these 11 items into the record, which will make sense to most people. First of all, heat pumps, whether they are from an air source or a water source. Secondly, concentrator collectors, solar thermal energy conversion, or STEC for short. Thirdly, heat storage facilities. This is vital in northern climates where storage must take place for a few cloudy days or for long periods of cold weather. Fourth, methane production. Fifth, vertical axis windmills. Sixth, solar absorption air conditioning. Seventh, residential photovoltaics. Eighth, individual water recycling and conversion of waste to energy. Ninth, conversion of cow manure to protein. Tenth, energy plantation; and eleventh, production of hydrogen.

That is a first draft. I could add quite a number to it. I think I have made my point, first that any individual in Canada who spends his own money to buy any proven hardware should have a 100 per cent write-off under the Income Tax Act. Secondly, any individual who buys something in the experimental stage and tries to make it work should get 150 per cent write-off. That was the essence of that proposal.

I cannot give with assurance the amount of business that would arise from this. I know the projections made by various associations and societies in Canada run as high as $1 billion a year on this type of transaction. A billion dollars worth of new items produced in Canada each year would yield a very sizeable income increase to the government, not to mention the wages and all the other benefits that would go through the system.

I think, and I think I am right in this, that the Minister of Finance is in agreement with that proposal. His letter came back to me dated March 2, 1978, four months later. I am not going to read it all. It is a very sad letter. Hon. members will see why in a moment. I am just going to quote the key parts. I quote:

> In your memorandum you suggest that any type of capital expenditure to reduce utilization of traditional energy sources by an individual, be accorded a fast write-off under the capital cost allowance system. The capital cost allowance system permits a taxpayer to deduct the cost of a depreciable asset in computing income where that asset is used to produce income from a business or property. Your proposal would represent a major departure from the general policy of only permitting deductions with respect to assets used for the purpose of gaining or producing income.

I might read one more line because I think it illustrates the type of thing the civil servants write for ministers.

> In my view, allowing deductions for such personal expenditures would create a dangerous precedent and might seriously erode the tax base.

Translated into plain terms, the Minister of Finance signed a document, written by civil servants, which states that you must not give to the individual in Canada the same tax rights and privileges that business gets. If business spends money to make money, they get a 100 per cent write-off. If they spend money on experimental equipment and research, they get a 160 per cent write-off. However, to do that for the individual to make money by reducing his heating costs or electrical energy costs is a dangerous precedent and would erode the tax base.

Such a statement in the last sentence is completely false. Under the tax laws of parliament which have been put through in the last three years, we give individuals the right to get 166 2/3 per cent write-off if they invest in Canadian exploration or if they invest in Arctic exploration combined. That means if an individual taxpayer in this country wants to get a write-off against his income tax under the law passed in parliament, he can get 166 2/3 per cent write-off against any form of income as long as he puts it into helping to find more non-renewable oil or gas resources. However, he does not get one cent write-off if he puts even one dollar into trying to get some utilization of renewable energy resources.

That is the crime this government has committed. It is the crime to which the Minister of Finance signed his name when he signed that letter. It is an issue which the people of Canada have to make very clear to future governments, namely, that they want to make use of these renewable energy resources, particularly when they are going to save themselves a great deal of money, when it will make money for the government and when it will help the nation by not having to buy so much energy from offshore.

That issue destroys the whole budget presentation of the minister. He brought in a neutral budget with a few changes like RRSPs, the question of rollover for capital gains tax for farmers, small business people and so on, all of which are good. However, why ruin a budget containing a few good things like that with a decision to turn down something substantially bigger, something that would help the minister balance his budget and get this country out of the stagflation that now exists?

This issue of letting civil servants who have been consistently wrong for 30 years or more run every minister of finance has to be the main issue in all our democratic forms of government. I do not mind confessing, and I have said this before, that no person was better liked for his essential honesty than the present Minister of Finance. He has been around this House for 13 years now.

Mr. Paproski: He should know better.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): He should know that even if you are honest yourself, when you take over the job as Minister of Finance you have a job to do, that is, to face up to the fact which everyone knows, that the advice civil servants have been giving their ministers for 30 odd years has been consistently wrong, because it is based on a theory not supported by quantitive evidence. We have found a failure in the theories for the past 15 years, particularly for the past five.

The government resists many new ideas when it deals with advice given to it where it affects the Department of Finance. I am not the only one putting forward this concept of potential budgeting. The Economic Council of Canada, which was set up to give alternative advice to the government, over and over again has appealed to the government to use some form of potential budgeting. It is not the answer to everything, but it is a help.

We have been in a classic situation for the past four years with rising unemployment, rising inflation, and rising deficits in the budget. The minister could have helped balance his budget, helped people get jobs, and helped get the country going again, but the civil servants in that department forced this minister, well liked and honest as he has been, into a position where he is down on his knees exactly the same as his predecessors. He walked into this House with a neutral budget which ignored this principle to move forward.

Coming from Shawinigan in Quebec where people are known for their common sense and their disregard for experts, I had hoped he would stand up for his proposal that he was personally in support of and say, "I am the Minister of Finance. I want this done. Get me the details and make it work".

Whether he had the support of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or not, I do not know. However, that poor Minister of Finance has been forced to come into this House in the two or three weeks since his budget to defend himself on a hopeless issue of trying to start a political fight with the province of Quebec. This is the tragedy we have witnessed here.

A fine person, a nice person, has been forced to accept the will of the civil servants on this question, not taking advantage of the opportunity to balance the budget and to use a better idea, namely, potential budgeting and, second, to fight on the grounds that he was not going to do anything to help the country economically, but going to start a political fight with the province of Quebec, hoping to create a division between Quebec and the rest of Canada, then walk around and pretend he is the only person who can get us out of the mess the Prime Minister got us into.

It is a tragedy to see a very fine human being destroyed, not only by civil servants but by the Prime Minister who seems to have only one motive for being in this House, to keep a glorious fight going between various parts of this country. With all this opportunity to help the country economically and to get people working again, the Prime Minister chooses this particular time to start a political science fight with his old friend and buddy, the premier of Quebec. When you get down to it, they will end up the same buddies they have always been, running that phony fight on both sides, all in the name of keeping in the headlines.

The province of Quebec is part of Canada. The province of Quebec wants to be part of Canada. The province of Quebec is suffering more than most parts of Canada in this present stagflation. They would give anything if the government in Ottawa would grapple with the problems of agriculture and industry in the province of Quebec and get at the great development opportunities which exist in that province.

Resource wise, that province is one of the richest places in Canada. They are hard working people with great resources and great opportunities for markets, and all they get from their politicians in that province is a fight, and name calling, or something that does not even count.

This pretence that our country is disunited because people speak a different language in Quebec is as phony as a three-dollar bill and worth as much. The people in Quebec are united with us in believing we have a good country, and they would like to make it even better. But the minister did not take the opportunity of the budget to use the income tax provisions to get the country rolling again.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could comment on the remarks made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). By the end of his speech I felt that the only thing he left out was that Mr. Levesque had become a Father of Confederation. It seems the premier of Quebec has become a folk hero to the conservative opposition.

Mr. Paproski: That is what you would like people to believe.

Mr. Anderson: This is an historic budget. It is historic because it is the first time since Confederation that the federal government has brought in a budget in co-operation with the provinces of Canada, the first in which a common approach was taken in deciding the best means to stimulate the economy. This is sometimes overlooked, perhaps for political reasons, but as I say, I believe the budget will be marked by historians as a turning point in federal-provincial relations very similar to what happened earlier this year when the provinces sat down with the federal government, not in a spirit of confrontation but regardless of party, realizing they were engaged in an attempt as leaders of the country to chart a course which would benefit the people of Canada.

It is, indeed, a turning point when politicians can forget political grandstanding and look at the good of the electorate rather than at their personal fortunes; when they can make speeches not on behalf of their own parties or of themselves but in the interest of providing a better economic life for the people. In this context the February conference will be a historic turning point in Canadian life, as will the April 10 budget. It shows that, contrary to what Mr. Lévesque, Mr. Parizeau and others say, Confederation can work if we have leaders who are interested in the electorate rather than in their own political fortunes.

The April 10 budget will be assessed by future generations of Canadians not on the issue of who is right and who is wrong in the context of the two or three cents at issue for Quebec. They will look at the April 10 budget in the light of the fact that an agreement was reached with nine provincial premiers in the course of a further evolution of the federal concept. Future historians will note that this evolution occurred during a time of crisis. But do you sincerely believe, Mr. Speaker, that anyone could now take a step backward and argue that the provinces and the federal government do not have an interlocking goal? Do you think that in future years when the subject is brought up at conferences between the federal and provincial governments, or discussions on the budget, people will not realize that a historic step has been taken in the development of Confederation?

There are some—and they should know better—who say this was a bumbling effort on the part of the federal government. They say this because, obviously, Quebec has not accepted the proposal contained in the budget. What they do not admit, though, is that nine other provinces agreed to it and that the tenth province did not make it known whether it was for or against the proposal advanced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). I can only compliment the Minister of Finance for risking federal prestige knowing very well that Quebec under its present leadership is not one of the strong backers of co-operation—that the province at this point in its history would surely not be the first to approve of the federal government's position in this area.

No one in this country or in the House was so naive as to expect Mr. Parizeau and others like him to compliment the federal government on its initiative in assisting the provinces to reduce their sales taxes.

Does anyone in this House feel surprise if this issue, like others in the past, is used to the advantage of a party which is, to say the least, not devoted to the idea of one nation based on equal partners? Would it be fair to say that what happened after the April 10 budget might have been predicted? But the way events have turned out is not the fault of the Minister of Finance who took the initiative. It is better to have taken this step forward in the development of joint federal-provincial relations, risking what has happened as a result of the reaction in the province of Quebec, than to have done nothing.

What was not so unexpected was the reaction of some of the members of the opposition to use this issue to cudgel the federal government, blaming the Minister of Finance rather than the failure of one province to make up its mind on the issue until the day of the budget. That was the surprising thing. Surely at this point, when a referendum cannot be many months away, we as federalists should not be sticking knives in each other's backs for political gain.

When honest mistakes are made, criticize us. But in the circumstances I have outlined there ought to be more integrity than to lay the blame upon the federal government and claim that nice chaps in Quebec have been raped and walked over. That is not the case. If a rape occurred, it was a rape with consent. But I suggest that rape did not occur. Advances might have been made, but no consent was arrived at with the province of Quebec.

I said this legislation was historic. It was historic in another sense also, and I am surprised that members from British Columbia have not brought out the fact that in the April 10 budget one of the most contentious issues, in the last four years at least, has been resolved, a point that we have discussed with various ministers of revenue and ministers of finance over a period of four years. It is a point on which reports, briefs, and submissions have been made by the International Woodworkers of America and the Forest Council of British Columbia over a period of four years. Now it has been resolved, but very little has been said about it. I have seen very little in the media, in the press, and on television advising people in British Columbia of the fact that this matter has been resolved. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote from a brief presented to the Government of Canada by the International Woodworkers of America, Regional Council No. 1, and the Forest Industrial Relations Board Limited. It states:

> On April 22, 1977, Revenue Canada taxation officially confirmed in letters to Forest Industrial Relations Limited and to the International Woodworkers of America that effective January 1, 1977, the minimum valuation on board and lodging in the British Columbia forest industry is $6 per day... The letters established that where room and board are not supplied free, there is a benefit equal to the difference between the amount charged the employee and a reasonable valuation. In addition, the letters point out that there may be reason to review the minimum valuation of $6 per day from time to time as changes occur in "fair market value" or "cost to employer". The effect of this ruling has been to increase the taxable income of logging camp residents in the amount of $3.50 per day since the cost per day assessed employees by employers has been $2.50 per day under the Coast Master Agreement.
> This recent ruling will generate considerable uncertainty, unrest and apprehension in the minds of logging camp residents. Moreover, it will seriously affect their morale as employees and as taxpayers. The basic reason for this situation is the fact that the Canadian tax system has never included as taxable income for logging camp residents the difference between the cost paid by the employee and the reasonable valuation of the benefit. Historically, the Canadian tax system has recognized the social realities of life in isolated logging camps, and in practice has not applied the "none shall escape" philosophy to this important segment of the work force in British Columbia's primary resource industry. The significance of the recent ruling cannot be assessed in economic terms alone. It must be measured in historical, psychological and sociological terms because of the unique nature of life and work in logging camps. In short, what may appear as a loophole and an inequity, may in fact be an equitable situation which recognizes social reality and social needs and which would create an inequity if it were rescinded.

I should like to continue with a short quotation again from the same submission to the Government of Canada, in full realization of the fact that this submission was made prior to the October 10 budget. It reads:

Forest Industrial Relations Limited represents 122 companies engaged in logging and the manufacture of forest products in the coast area of British Columbia . . . In addition, there are many companies in other parts of the province who are also obliged to operate cookhouse and bunkhouse facilities. There are approximately 40,000 members of the IWA in British Columbia of which 5,000 reside in remote camp sites . . . The impact of the ruling in economic terms must be evaluated from several standpoints.

From the standpoint of each individual affected, the increased taxation will be in the order of $335 per annum. In order for camp employees to maintain their take-home pay, an inflationary increase of 35 cents per hour will be necessary. As we have stressed earlier, the impact of the ruling would be a reduction in take-home pay for loggers, who amongst other things have uncertain work years, work under changing and often adverse weather conditions, spend time travelling to and from remote locations, and often are required to maintain another residence for family. These are but a few of the additional factors that compound the problem.

I said in my opening remarks that it was an historical budget in several respects. The second historical aspect of the budget is the fact that on April 10, 1978, the Minister of Finance announced that it is expedient to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide, among other things—this is the part I consider to be important—that for 1978 and the subsequent taxation year an individual be entitled to exclude from income the value of board and lodging received in respect of employment at remote work sites at which he could not reasonably be expected to maintain a self-contained domestic establishment.

As a result of the April 10 budget there will be no requirement for an inflationary escalation in the wage rate in the forest industry in British Columbia. We will recognize by law that individuals at work in remote camp sites, those who are engaged in what is sometimes a dangerous occupation, those who are employed in an occupation which demands rigorous physical standards, those who work in mud and rain and other equally hard circumstances, will be exempt from taxation on those parts that the employer contributes to the room and board of those who cannot be expected to maintain a residence in a remote area. I say to that, hallelujah.

Many of us from British Columbia have worked hard to have this exemption made into law. A year ago at this time we were discussing this with the forest industry, with the IWA, with MacMillan Bloedel and with various other companies, and there was great concern that those people who were working at remote camp sites, if charged additional taxes, would ask themselves why they should not go to work in cities like Nanaimo, Vancouver or Victoria if they cannot have this exemption, and why they should be separated from their families and not even be able to watch television. It sounds strange, but many of those areas do not have radio or television, so that the loggers, apart from being separated from their families, cannot even listen to radio or watch television. We as members of parliament cannot do much so far as their love life is concerned, we cannot provide some of the amenities because of the isolated location, but we have recognized that their situation was unique and we have given it some credit. For that reason I thank the government, members of the cabinet, and especially the Minister of Finance, for listening to the pleas of these people.

Also I should like to thank two people with whom I worked very closely. I am referring to Mr. Earl Foxcroft, the President of International Woodworkers of America, Local 1-85, who lives in Port Alberni, and Mr. Joe Standell, who is on the management side of MacMillan Bloedel in Port Alberni. Their recommendations, support, and pressure were appreciated greatly by myself. The decision by Mr. Guay not to implement the policy in January, 1978, and the subsequent decision, were in no small way achieved because of the efforts of these two fine gentlemen. I thank them for their efforts.

There have been other comments regarding Bill C-56. Aside from having a very strong forest industry in my constituency of Comox-Alberni, there are many people engaged in the dairy business and truck garden fruit and vegetable operations. As a result of amendments to the act, I am pleased there will be a change regarding the transferring of property in family farm corporations. A family farm corporation can be transferred to a farmer's children without immediate tax on any capital gain.

Many hon. members of the House are to be congratulated, especially those from the prairie provinces who have worked very hard on that section. If we are to have a viable agricultural industry, concessions must be made regarding the transfer of family farms to sons, daughters, etc. It must be done in a manner which does not force sale in order to pay taxes on capital gains. Farmers in the dairy business in my constituency will find that section and another one which deals with transfers to children who have an interest in a family farm partnership will provide immediate relief in order for farms to remain in the family without a sale taking place to pay capital gains on the increase in the evaluation of the property.

Over a number of years a number of progressive budgetary measures have been taken. Sometimes it is forgotten, although at the present time there is a budgetary deficit, that one of the reasons for the deficit is that since 1974 it has been the policy of the federal government, through indexation of taxation, in fact to collect less than it would have normally collected. Since 1974 the federal government has given up approximately $5 billion in taxes which it would normally receive as a result of its indexation policy.

Sometimes it is difficult for Canadians to perceive what the solutions are if deficits are to be avoided. Obviously if a deficit occurs, one of two things can be done. The taxing power of the federal government can be raised in order to make up for those deficits, if it is felt that those expenditures are required. In the four years I have had the honour of being here, for very obvious reasons I have not heard anyone stand and demand that the government raise the taxes of the people of this country. What has been said is that the government should reduce its spending. I have no disagreement with that. It is a manner of solving partially a deficit situation. What I have never heard in the House or in committee is where these savings should take place.

It is a fact of life that 60 per cent of government spending is done by the municipalities and the provinces. Approximately 40 per cent of the spending by governments in Canada was done by this august body, the Government of Canada through the House of Commons. Out of the 40 per cent spent by the federal government, we pay it back to the provinces in the form of cost-sharing programs.

If one looks at the budget of Canada in a similar manner to a housewife looking at her budget, one would indicate that before a dollar is taken in, 40 per cent of income has gone out in the transfer of payments. Very few people on the government or opposition sides would say that 40 per cent should be renegotiated and cut down. Over the years we have seen greater and greater amounts of funds being transferred to the provinces. I have a strange sense of humour, but it gives me a considerable laugh that some of the provinces which are very rapacious in taking and demanding more in the form of transfer of payments, use the federal government as an example of a wasteful child. They use their own healthy, balanced economies as models for the federal government to follow.

If the federal government could decrease its spending overnight by 40 per cent, it would become a model of restraint also. But it would mean the provinces would have 40 per cent of their incomes decreased, which would result in them being in either deficit positions or having to raise their taxes. I am not criticizing the provinces in their financial matters. I bring this up because I do not think the issues concerning where money should be spent and how it should be spent in Canada has been debated adequately. It is no longer good enough to say the government and the federalists are always wrong.

Mr. McKenzie: But that is correct.

Mr. Anderson: It cannot be said any more. One must say what is wrong with the government. Solutions must be proposed, and the provinces and their spending should be taken into account. Anyone who does not do that is being a charlatan, or a person I would not trust too much. It is not enough to indicate that it is necessary to cut down on government spending. One must say where the spending can be cut down.

If the Public Service of Canada is abolished, would there be a large saving to the people of Canada? Would taxes be reduced by several billions of dollars? Would the budget be balanced? Of course not.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): What about cutting down the number of civil servants?

Mr. Anderson: If one civil servant was taken off the payroll, our problem would not be solved. Hon. members are aware of that. Are Canadians willing to have a cut in health and welfare benefits? Should there be a cut in the Department of National Defence? I have not seen many members jumping to their feet and proposing cuts in the Department of National Defence. Where can expenses be reduced?

Mr. Nystrom: The Senate.

Mr. Anderson: The people of Canada have the right to hear from opposition members not only that expenditures should be reduced. It is not enough to indicate that alone. Opposition members should make proposals which indicate the areas where expenses can be reduced by $2 bilion, $3 billion, or $4 billion. The people of Canada should be shown where reductions can be implemented, because they are not as dumb as hon. members opposite think they are. I have heard that story before.

• (1632)

Mr. McKenzie: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would point out that on February 2 of this year, on our opposition day, we presented a motion calling for a review of every government department and every government program.

An hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

Mr. McKenzie: This was intended to introduce sunset laws, and it was turned down by this Liberal government and the NDP. They are not the least bit interested in reviewing anything.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will agree, I am sure, that this is a difference of opinion. I notice he has not participated in the debate. He can make these points and even pursue them if he seeks the floor.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I can understand the reason for the hon. member standing to speak. He is right in one respect. He is one of the few members who has come up with a positive suggestion. He said what they would do would be cut off the deputy ministers. He was going to have a purge. The only problem is that the next day his House leader stood up and said that was not the case. I admire the hon. member for his intervention, but I must suggest there is a negative aspect to it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKenzie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing the hon. member for the island has proved, it is that he reads absolutely nothing. I would refer him to the May edition of the Argus Journal in which he can read what civil servants are saying about the government's policies and all its lay-offs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this is not a point of order but a point of dispute.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I respect the intervention of the hon. member and, as he knows, I respect him. I gave him credit for the fact that he made positive suggestions. The only difficulty we have arises from the fact that his House leader took the hon. member to task and told him to be quiet.

Mr. McKenzie: Obviously you do not read anything.

Mr. Anderson: I have no objection to the hon. member's statements. I am certainly not one who would attempt to increase the number of people in the civil service. However, this is not a simple matter. In the province of British Columbia we have a salmon enhancement program in respect of which the federal government will be spending $150 million over a five year period. We do have constraints in respect of manpower years in the Department of Fisheries. While it can be said that we should not be increasing the number of people in the service of the Government of Canada, how does one bring forward a program of this type without having additional people in the employ of the government?

Mr. Paproski: What has this to do with this bill?

Mr. Anderson: I agree that there should be extreme care taken in respect of the number of people we bring into the civil service. If there are ways of having work done on contract which will not affect the quality of the product, I would accept them. I use this as one example in the province of British Columbia of tremendous expansion. That is one of the growth areas of Canada, just as is the province of Alberta. We have had a number of government programs in conjunction with the budget which have made a difference in the last ten years. This has resulted in growth in the gross product of that province by leaps and bounds. It has been a growth of sixfold or sevenfold in the past ten years.

I commenced my remarks and will conclude them in the same vein. In this situation we are dealing with a budget that is historic. It is a budget that recognizes Canadian unity by innovation, in the sense that even at the risk of budgetary secrecy we have consulted with provincial ministers over a period of time. We brought them into discussions with the Minister of Finance in order that a stimulus might be provided in quick order. This required the co-operation of provincial premiers. I think it is of credit to the premiers and the Minister of Finance that this co-operation did occur.

There is no question but that when people look at this event in time, when they look at this portion of Canadian history they will see an advancement or evolution of the consultative process. Surprisingly enough, this required no regulation except the bill now under consideration to confirm the action. It required no administrative or bureaucratic apparatus. It required only consultation, people talking with each other. History will record this particular budget as a milestone on which to peg one's hat in the evolutionary process. Perhaps it started a few years ago, but this is one of the signposts that historians will look to as an example of the consultative process.

Instead of arguing about the powers that belong to the provinces or the federal government, and instead of tearing the country apart through debates which basically solve nothing, and only enhance a certain position, be it federal, provincial or party, this will be seen as an attempt by the leaders of this country to accomplish through negotiation, crossing boundaries of purely conceived constitutional matters, amendments, and articles. Regardless of whether a matter is within provincial or federal jurisdiction, as a result of this consultative process we will not require a federal-provincial conference on constitutional rights in order to resolve it. We will not require such a conference in order to make decisions on matters that may rest in the provincial area or within federal responsibilities. We will be able to cut through those responsibilities by negotiation with the provinces. This is important, regardless of budgetary measures brought forward.

Incidentally, those budgetary measures were welcomed. I suspect there are other areas in which we can do exactly the same thing without the formalization of a constitutional conference. I suggest that this may be one of the ways to resolve problems in Canada when we cannot obtain formal agreements among the federal and ten provincial governments. Perhaps situations of that kind can be resolved in exactly the same manner adopted in the budget on April 10. We can obtain a consensus on a short term basis, and will be able in this way to solve short term problems. This lesson will not be lost by the present leadership or any future leadership, be it of the Liberal or Conservative parties, because a model has been established.

We have proven with the aid of the provinces that this cooperation can exist, and through it we can accomplish many things in the future. If it has been done once, I suggest that it can be done in other areas, and that is why I say a milestone has been reached. With regard to the second subject which I brought up on the budget, I can only thank the Minister of Finance on behalf of the people of British Columbia, those especially in the forest industry who have had a long, outstanding grievance resolved, and who, I am sure, will reciprocate at some future date.

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening for about 40 minutes to the rather irrational remarks of my predecessor. To say in the House that lack of respect for the Canadian constitution should be a positive attitude towards the future and that it should be the corner stone of forthcoming discussions is, I think, reason enough to say that that person should not sit in this House and is wrong in using such arguments to justify a totally anticonstitutional attitude on the part of the government. I deeply regret that hon. members attempt to support such theories in the House. Concerning Bill C-56 generally, the proposed measures are positive; they result from the pressures exerted by intermediary bodies, by the opposition parties and, in some instances, by members of the government.

However, the bill in general reflects a little the attitude of the government which tends to encompass a variety of measures which are acceptable to the population as a whole, but we do find one which is not acceptable. For example, in clause 1 about deductions for board and lodging for workers in a remote location, I think that the opposition parties and some government members have been suggesting such a measure for a long time.

An hon. Member: We did too!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): But what the hon. member opposite neglects to say is that it is precisely the same party in power which created those taxation measures a few years ago.

But today the reaction sets in and they realize the time has come to bring about some changes.Clause 4 deals with corporation loans to enable an employee to buy corporate shares which are not to be included in income. While I was working in industry, I participated in the purchase of shares of the corporation capital stock, an indirect form of participation in company profits by the employee. At that time, this was not taxable but the present government has found a way to levy its share. Bowing to the pressures of some opposition members, of employees of corporations involved and, I must add honestly, of some government members, we see that the government goes back on decisions it has made a few years ago, but only after a lot of pressure, and particularly after having created the problems itself.

If one examines all the clauses in Bill C-56, one realizes that in every sector the present government itself has created the problems. It is now backtracking, due to opposition pressures for changes, trying to make people believe it is bringing about some changes while trying at the same time to make the same people forget that it should be held responsible for those problems.

Clause 6 talks about the 50 per cent allowance on the amount for research and development. How many years have Canadians been asking for better research and have we, of the Social Credit Party of Canada, suggested better or more direct assistance to our universities so as to have better research? It is not only a matter of helping the companies, but also of helping the research centers in our universities more adequately than at the present time. This is not mentioned in the bill. However, there is an acceptable concept which allows a tax deduction for research and development. Clause 13 concerns the revenue and the properties sold to the Crown. Clause 14 concerns farm transfers without capital gains.

Once again, this is an acceptable provision that the opposition has been requesting from the start. Here is another example: which government was it that implemented the capital gains tax if not the present one? At that time, representations were made to exclude the farming industry. It was included anyway. Perhaps because there is a possibility of elections, the Minister of Finance is now prepared to reverse the position of the government and to exempt farm corporations from the gains tax when the land is transferred to the children or the grand-children of the owner. This is certainly an acceptable provision, but it has resulted from the bad administration of the government which, after a few years, must now do something to correct the unfavourable effect of a provision that it implemented.

Clause 29 allows the Northwest Territories to instaure an income tax system so that in their present economic and financial system, the residents of the Northwest Territories will learn what public debt means, what it means to borrow from other countries and to pay interest on those loans in the form of income taxes. We are now showing the last area of the country which is still ignorant of all this how to get into debt by allowing it to collect income taxes.

Clause 30 is certainly the one which should not be included in Bill C-56. As I was saying at the beginning, generally speaking the provisions of the bill are indeed acceptable because these are corrections brought upon in the wake of the disastrous administration of this government mainly since 1974. Clause 34 deals with retirement savings which one will be able to collect between the age of 60 and 71, and again contains rather interesting features. Clause 36 deals with the premiums on life insurance, clause 59 deals with the tax rebate to the provinces and the deductions provided in clause 30, this is a provision designed to confirm them. Yet above all I would like to go back to deal with clause 30 and that part of it which has been so highly debated since the presentation of the April 10 budget. As I mentioned earlier we have heard everything when the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) suggests that the fact of criticizing the attitude of the government in its underhanded actions towards the rights of the provinces should be an acceptable pattern for future negotiations, and I find regrettable that such remarks can be made in this House.

I read the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and that part which deals with clause 30 of Bill C-56, about which the Minister of Finance takes pride in the speech he made on May 17 and which can be found at page 5519 of Hansard. With reference to the last quarter he said, and I quote:

> In real terms, the sales in those two months were 6.1 per cent higher at an annual rate than in the fourth quarter of 1977. This suggests that the $100 tax cut early this year has helped boost consumer demand.

It is obvious that a tax reduction favours consumption and the Socreds have been calling for several years for such exemptions and tax reductions in order to allow a rise in the purchasing power of the population. We have also suggested a consumer compensated discount so as to increase the purchasing powers of individuals. Meanwhile, the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the members of cabinet have always repeated that we did not understand anything and that the theories of the Social Credit did not make any sense; yet, when the decision is finally made to reduce the federal income tax by $100, they automatically start boasting that they have increased the consumption for the benefit of the people. And that is the solution to the problem of inflation we now have. Not measures like those advocated in clause 30 whereby the ball flies back and forth to the provinces and the federal government, no, but direct measures under federal and not provincial jurisdiction.

A little further in his speech, the Minister of Finance tells us he succeeded in establishing higher import tariffs to preserve and protect the Quebec clothing and footwear industries. Heaven knows how many years we have been urging higher tariffs to limit imports and protect our own industries. Here again this government had reduced import tariffs and so destroyed our industries in Canada, only to realize their mistake today after representations by opposition parties, particularly in Quebec by the Social Credit Party of Canada which indeed clamoured for stricter import controls to boost our production.

Today the minister is boasting about this. But what did he say? He said that the sales tax cut will increase consumer spending. It is a fact. But instead of acting directly under its powers the federal government reduces its taxes by forcing the provinces to increase theirs to pay for the sales tax cut which amounts to 8 per cent in the case of the province of Quebec or two or three points in other provinces.

In fact, as an electoral ploy at the federal level the Minister of Finance announced he was giving a sales tax cut to the people but he forces the provinces to pay for it, as the four premiers of the western provinces pointed out. The Minister of Finance has recognized this fact in his May 17 speech. He said himself on page 5524, that in spite of the answers he gave in this House, at the time of the negotiations he made that proposal but he never came to an agreement with Mr. Parizeau. Even before his budget he admits in his May 17 speech that he never came to an agreement with Mr. Parizeau.

I wish to raise a touchy issue concerning the statements made by the western premiers after that measure. Later they declared that this proposal had been forced upon them when there was an agreement and their cabinet had given its approval except for Alberta. The Minister of Finance recognizes that they never came to an agreement with the province of Quebec and that the four western provinces had been forced to accept an anticonstitutional measure which infringes on provincial rights. So we suggested that instead of asking the provinces to pay for the sales tax cut the federal government should issue a consumer discount, particularly on Canadian products. This would avoid the constitutional issue we are now creating. That example will be used in future to justify breaches of constitutional rights. I wonder what the federal government would do if overnight the province of Quebec were to encroach upon the federal government tax jurisdiction and levy custom duties at Quebec boundaries. I am not sure what the federal government would say. It would complain and scream blue murder. Quebec would be accused of eroding federal rights; yet the Minister of Finance does so directly in forcing the provinces' hand in an underhanded, hypocritical way. The provinces are forced to reduce or raise taxation to pay for the sales tax. The Minister of Finance says himself that he is acting hypocritically. On page 5524, he is recorded as saying, and I quote:

> Each time I send a cheque, I consider it as an expense. To avoid any increase in government spending, since everybody complains about the level of spending, we decided to leave some tax room—

Further on he said, and I quote:

> —I wanted to do without creating the false impression that we are spending money—

And further on he said, and I quote:

> As we are collecting taxes, nobody has noticed what is happening.

That is acting hypocritically to force the provincial governments and make people believe that the government is giving them something.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis)—Public Service; the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga)—Post Office; the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek)—Transport.

It being 5 o'clock p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, and notices of motions.

May I remind hon. members that the 40-hour limit for private members' business has now been reached, pursuant to section 6 of Standing Order 15, and that there will be no private members' business on Mondays and Tuesdays for the balance of the session.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, all parties have agreed to set aside all bills and proceed tonight with consideration of Bill C-223 in the name of the hon member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It has been suggested that we set aside all preceding bills by unanimous consent and proceed to Bill C-223. Is that agreed?

Mr. Paproski: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING CERTIFICATION OF UNIONS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved that Bill C-223, to amend the Canada Labour Code (certification of union), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

● (1702)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I suppose in these times, when inflation is as high as it is, that Canadians have been exposed to considerable propaganda that the contributing factor to high inflation in Canada has been the demands of the trade unionists in this country, the workers in Canada. One is left with the impression that indeed the vast majority of Canadian workers are unionized. The impression is left that in every work place, in every nook and cranny across this country, workers are organized into collectives and that, somehow or another, there is a juggernaut of big trade unions sweeping the country and engulfing workers, whether they are waitresses in restaurants or those people in the highest technological jobs. Maybe we ought to correct the record and set it straight with respect to the whole question of the extent of unionization in Canada.

In 1967 in Canada the percentage of workers organized into trade unions, excluding agricultural workers, was 32.3 per cent. In 1976 that figure rose to 37.3 per cent of the non-agricultural work force. As at the beginning of 1977, the latest figure indicates that 38.2 per cent of non-agricultural workers in Canada are indeed organized. So we see that the latest figures indicate a little over one third of the non-agricultural work force in this country organized into trade unions.

How does that compare with the European community? If we take 1972 figures, and remember that in 1972 34.6 per cent of non-agricultural workers in Canada were organized into trade unions, we find, for example, that Belgium had 71 per cent of its workers organized into unions; Denmark, 50 per cent; Luxembourg, 50 per cent; Great Britain, 48 per cent; Ireland, 43 per cent; The Netherlands, 41 per cent; Italy, 35 per cent; Israel, 80 per cent; Sweden, 70 per cent; and Austria and Norway over 60 per cent. So when we compare Canada to the other industrialized countries of the world we find that we are far short of the extent and development of trade union organization within those other countries.

What then should be the purpose of a federal labour code? Surely a federal labour code belongs to the workers of Canada? Surely the federal labour code ought to be for the benefit of workers, not for the benefit of employers? Employers have other statutes which provide them with certain protections in this country. A federal labour code therefore should speak of enshrining the rights of Canadian workers in law. One of the first rights is the right to organize. That is a fundamental right of a worker in this country. Indeed, it is the very basic ingredient of democracy, the right of a worker to give his labour. That is really the only thing over which he has any control.

There are countries, of course, where workers are forced to work practically at the end of a gun. But that in a free society has never been the practice. The collectivity of Canadian workers is a fundamental democratic right. It seems to me that if we allow Canadian trade unionism to be destroyed, so can the basic rights on which this truly democratic system relies be destroyed.

What does this Bill C-223 intend to do? What is the purpose of the bill? At the present moment if the workers in a work place want to organize into a trade union, cards must be signed first of all. In the present code it requires at least 35 per cent of the workers within a local work place to sign cards. Those cards must then be submitted to the Canada Labour Relations Board, the CLRB. On receipt of those cards the CLRB decides a date for a vote on whether there will or will not be a trade union in that work place. That has been a serious drawback with respect to organizing workers into collectives for the purpose of protecting workers and extending the rights and improving the quality of life for workers.

In effect because of the requirement that 35 per cent sign the cards, a considerable amount of time elapses in an effort to have this requirement fulfilled. During that period of time much anti-organizing effort is put out by the employer. That is the historical fact in this country. We have a perfect example of that today, that of the Canadian banks. I will deal with that in some detail later. But we have a case in point where the employers, the Canadian banks, and in particular the local managers, the minute these managers sense that someone is organizing within a branch, the anti-union organizing forces come into effect. It is therefore very difficult to obtain 35 per cent.

In this bill we are saying that to expedite, to assist, to encourage the organizing of Canadian workers into collectives, the minimum number required to sign the cards ought to be 20 per cent. On the basis of 20 per cent of the workers in a work place signing those cards and having those cards submitted to the Canadian Labour Relations Board, a vote of certification can be called.

In this bill we go on to say that if, in the opinion of the Canadian Labour Relations Board, there are 50 per cent or more workers signed to cards, then in effect the board may waive a certification vote for the union within that work place. Furthermore, we say within the bill that there ought to be no decertification process in the Canada Labour Code. That is extremely important.

I can think offhand of three examples of precedents in the Canadian experience where no decertification vote is allowed. I go particularly to the schools administration act of Ontario and the teaching profession act of Ontario. When a teacher is certified and obtains a job, that teacher is a member of the Ontario Teachers' Federation and belongs to one of the five affiliates of the Ontario Teachers' Federation. There is no decertification process allowed in the teaching profession act of Ontario. Therefore teachers as a group do not have a decertification process. It is recognized that once you organize and are collective, you stay organized. If the teachers do not like who is running the outfit, they vote them out.

● (1712)

Another precedent in Canadian experience is the medical profession. Once you begin to practice in the province of Ontario or some other provinces in Canada, you become a member of the medical association within that province. There is no process for decertifying the Ontario Medical Association.

The same is true in the legal profession. If they do not like who is at the top, they can vote them out of office. However, they cannot abandon the professional organization.

We provide a tool within the Canada Labour Code for those who are opposed to collective action by workers. They are provided with the tool to destroy, to waste the time of the trade union and tie up the trade unions' resources, both human and financial, for lengthy processes of fighting decertification and going back in later years to certify a work place that had been decertified.

There is no doubt, in my mind, that the Canada Labour Code leaves all the loopholes for any employer or owner of a business who is determined to destroy the collective in that workplace to do that. The process is there. It is permissible. Our bill aims to speed up, encourage, and facilitate the organization of trade unions in Canada within the federal jurisdiction.

No one can say that somehow or other it is a myth that employers attempt to block the formation of a trade union. I mentioned previously the case of the banks. At the present time the banks have undertaken a program to fight the unionization of their branches within Canada.

Some time ago in committee we were dealing with Bill C-8, amendments to the Federal Labour Code. Representatives of the banks appeared before the committee. They were emphatic about their support for the organizing of workers within the banks. I quote some of their comments:

> Despite our general support for the principle of the bill, namely, justice in the work place and improved working conditions, there are several clauses of the bill which we believe should be amended before the bill is passed back to the House by the Committee.

They agreed with the principle of Bill C-8. That was Mr. MacIntosh, vice-president of the Canadian Bankers' Association. Later on he said:

> It is our sincere belief that the objective of any amendments to the legislation should be to promote free collective bargaining and not to subsitute for it.

Later on he talked about the need for a ballot to verify the signatures of all persons purporting to be members of the applicant trade union.

Throughout the hearing the witnesses supported the principle of trade union organizing within the banks. However, when it comes to the practical application, we find there is a contradiction. What they said in committee is not practised in the work place.

The latest example has to be a most fantastic situation at a branch of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce in Gibsons, B.C. SORWUC, the Service, Office and Retail Workers Union of Canada, attempted to organize that particular branch. Mrs. Dulyk, one of the workers in the Gibsons branch, attempted to get members to sign cards so that there could be a certification vote in that branch.

The minute the manager found out that Mrs. Dulyk was trying to sign staff to cards, she was called in and offered a transfer to Vancouver. Here is a married woman with a family. Gibsons is only accessible by water from Vancouver. The management offered her a transfer to Vancouver, an offer he knew she could not accept. She could not accept it and was fired.

The union approached Mrs. Quigley, another employee in that branch. Mrs. Quigley then attempted to sign workers in that branch to cards. Again the manager found out, called in Mrs. Quigley and guess what? Right. He offered her a transfer to Vancouver. It was fairly obvious that Mrs. Quigley could not accept the position, and she too was fired. That is not an isolated incident.

The committee also had before it the Tweed branch case. In that case the manager found out the workers were signing cards to form a union. He called in the employees one by one and told them, "We are one great family here. We do not have to form unions to get anything. How can you do this to me? You are putting a knife in my back."

Everyone in that branch became extremely tense. There was fear in the minds of the workers, and the union was never organized. Because obtaining 35 per cent took considerable time, the employer was able to launch a counter-attack.

The Canada Labour Code is not for the employers. It is for the workers. The Corporations Act is for the corporations of this country. The Canada Labour Code should be a progressive document which facilitates the organizing of workers into collectives in order to improve the quality of life and the quality of environment in the work place.

To finish the story of the SORWUC incident, they took it to the Canada Labour Relations Board, accusing the employer of unfair labour practice. In the worst judgment in labour relations history that I have read, the Canada Labour Relations Board said in their finding that the union did not prove that there was an anti-union bias in the mind of the employer. How does anyone prove anti-union bias in anybody's mind? One has to judge the actions, and in the two cases in the Gibsons branch, Mr. Speaker, it was fairly obvious that the actions of the employer would by no stretch of the imagination be seen as divorced from the activities of the two workers in trying to organize the Gibsons branch of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce.

That has been the sad history of union organizing in this country. I might mention, Mr. Speaker, that on Saturday a very historic event took place in my riding. At Laurentian University they honoured the man who was largely responsible for organizing the trade union movement in the Sudbury Basin, Mr. Robert Carlin. He was honoured on Saturday by having bestowed upon him an honorary doctor of laws degree. Mr. Carlin was the man who, in 1942, organized the workers of the Sudbury Basin in the Mine Mill Union. Mr. Speaker, our history is one of anti-union bias on the part of Inco and Falconbridge in the Sudbury Basin, the CIA participation in trying to use the red scare to paint everyone organizing workers in the Sudbury Basin as Communists or pro-Communists, and this history has pervaded the trade union movement in this country since the 1880s. There has been a concerted effort to try to prevent workers from organizing their collective strength in order to improve the quality of their lives, not only in the work place—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. The hon. member may continue if he has unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rodriguez: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank hon. members for their generosity, and I will not take long to complete my remarks. I recognize today the shift to the right which society is taking. I recognize that it is in times like these that governments—and this government is no exception—tend to look for bogeymen upon whom to place the blame for the problems facing society, never willing to bear responsibility for their own actions or inaction. So we find in our country a move to the right, one which has pinpointed the trade union movement as being something of a big monster. Indeed, in national polls we see the majority of Canadians expressing the thought that big labour is more dangerous to Canada's economic health than big government or big business.

An hon. Member: Right on!

Mr. Rodriguez: I see an hon. member over on the government side saying "Right on!" That is precisely the kind of example I am talking about. It paints an untrue picture of the true situation with respect to the conditions of our workers.

Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, that it was only this year that workers have had the right to refuse to work in places which are dangerous to their health and safety? A very timid step, in my opinion, and one which should have been taken a long time ago! Think of what happened up in Baie Vert. One has only to stop and think, to see just how powerful the trade union movement really is in this country. The Labour Code should be the centrepiece of trade union rights, workers' rights, and the ability of workers to facilitate their own organizations ought to be enshrined in the Canada Labour Code. That is what the bill before us sets out to do, Mr. Speaker. It is to facilitate the organizing of Canadian workers into collectives, to remove the decertification process, and to give to the CLRB the right to judge, in cases where there are 50 per cent or more signed to cards, that there ought to be no certification vote.

Mr. Raymond Dupont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on Bill C-223, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, and particularly and more specifically union certification.

On April 7 last the House of Commons passed an act amending the Labour Code and when I refer to Bill C-223 introduced by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) who would like to see a union certified by 20 per cent of its membership, Mr. Speaker, let me say that we are talking about motivation and I would have liked him to say so, and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) agreed earlier when he said that labour participation was clearly necessary to the proper management of the Canadian economy. However, when you talk of certification by 20 per cent of the membership, that makes you think twice.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to the explanatory notes concerning clauses 127 to 129 which read as follows, and I quote:

127. (1) The Board may, in any case, for the purpose of satisfying itself as to whether employees in a unit wish to have a particular trade union represent them as their bargaining agent, order that a representation vote be taken among the employees in the unit.

(2) Where

(a) a trade union applies for certification as the bargaining agent for a unit in respect of which no other trade union is the bargaining agent, and

(b) the Board is satisfied that not less than thirty-five per cent and not more than fifty per cent of the employees in the unit are members of the trade union, the Board shall order that a representation vote be taken among the employees in the unit.

(3) Where the Board is satisfied that a trade union has an established practice of admitting persons to membership without regard to the eligibility requirements of its charter, constitution or by-laws, the Board may disregard such requirements in determining whether a person is a member of a trade union.

Clause 129 reads:

129. (1) Subject to subsection (2), the Board shall determine the result of a representation vote on the basis of the ballots cast by the majority of employees voting.

● (1732)

(2) Where, on considering the result of a representation vote, the Board determines that less than thirty-five per cent of the employees who are eligible to vote have voted, the Board shall determine that the representation vote is void.

(3) A vote by the majority of the employees voting in a representation vote is evidence that a majority of employees in the unit in respect of which the vote was ordered are of the opinion expressed in the vote of the majority of employees voting."

Mr. Speaker, I find the amendment to the Canadian Labour Code very liberal. In the bill introduced by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), when a union applying for certification as the bargaining agent for a unit in respect of which no other trade union is the bargaining agent and when the Canada Labour Relations Board is satisfied that more than 50 per cent of the employees in the unit are members of the trade union, the Board can certify the trade union as the bargaining agent without ordering a representation vote. Sections 118(1), 120.1 and 126(c) give more freedom to the Board concerning representation votes; they allow it to make temporary decisions to settle certain matters and postpone its decisions as concerns the other matters and they protect the right of the employees by providing that the computation of the number of employees must be made on the date of the application for certification. On the whole, these amendments give the Board the power to issue an order if it feels that the circumstances of the application justify it.

The amendment which would require the Canada Labour Relations Board to order a representation vote when it is convinced that at least 20 per cent and less than 50 per cent of the employees in the unit are members of the trade union seems hard to justify. First of all, it should be noted that the Board does not reject automatically the application for accreditation of a trade union which does not include at least 35 per cent of the employees in a bargaining unit. The board studies and judges each application for accreditation on its merits, and in certain cases, it has ordered a representation vote even though less than 35 per cent of the employees in the bargaining unit were members of the applying trade union. Also, CLRB representatives have pointed out that approximately 57 per cent of the certification applications submitted to the Board involve bargaining units of less than 20 members. If the percentage required for a certification vote were lowered to 20 per cent for any 20-member unit, a certification vote would be compulsory if four were members of the union, which seems a rather dubious procedure in labour relations. On this point, Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat that motivation is extremely important. When we talk about the democratic process and give as an example the certification of 20 members, how would it be possible for the Board to certify a union if four members within the same union applied? We know for sure—

The hon. member for Nickel Belt may well talk back. However, the fact is what would happen then to the active participation of the union and the workers?

Obviously, it is possible to make unionization easier, as evidenced by Bill C-8 passed by the House of Commons last April. I should like also to point out one thing to the hon. member. It is not enough, let us say, to sign a membership card to set up a union, and come what may, for the simple reason that if there is certification with no employee participation, it will be of little avail, and the employer will be able to take advantage of and abuse the same employees if a union were not effective.

So, Mr. Speaker, I should also like to mention that the report of the Woods task force on labour relations deals with certification and the percentage of employees who must belong to the union before its application is considered and a certificate granted to it. The task force recommends that an application for certification be turned down when the union which submits it cannot prove that it represents at least 35 per cent but less than 65 per cent of the employees.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious from what I have said that if we want to have a participatory trade unionism, a trade unionism which stands up to the employers, the only way is to constitute a majority before applying for certification.

I wish to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to express my views on Bill C-223. It is quite obvious that the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) considers that the certification of a union makes it easier for the workers to function and join together, and I cannot disagree with the bill introduced by the member simply because of the percentage of representation at the level of the certification or of the application for certification which could be granted to them by the Board.

The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) had an opportunity to express his views which I understand quite well. However, I would like to express my opinion on Bill C-223 and, as I said earlier, I do not disagree with the member for Nickel Belt, but it is strictly a matter of logic when one talks about participation at the level of a union or of an employer, and of the efficiency both of the economy and the employees.

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to thank the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) for giving us the opportunity of discussing Bill C-223, and particularly for trying to promote a greater unionization through the amendments he is proposing. I believe that through his bill the member for Nickel Belt is about to succeed in doing what we, on this side of the House, have been trying to do for years, that is to show that our labour relations legislation is progressive in Canada, especially the latest amendments to the Canada Labour Code.

If we consider the principles contained in Bill C-223, and it might be advisable to quote the explanatory note:

"127. (1) The Board may, in any case, for the purpose of satisfying itself as to whether employees in a unit wish to have a particular trade union represent them as their bargaining agent, order that a representation vote be taken among the employees in the unit.

(2) Where

the Board shall order that a representation vote be taken among the employees in the unit.

I stop here, Mr. Speaker, then I would like to quote section 118.1 of the present act, the new Canada Labour Code.

● (1742)

Where the Board is required, in connection with any application made under this Part, to determine the wishes of the majority of the employees in a unit, it shall determine those wishes as of the date of the making of the application or as of such other date as the Board considers appropriate.

I fail to grasp the purpose of that section and I must say this in defence of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) who was very active in the examination of the amendments to the Canada Labour Code. But I have the impression, Mr. Speaker, that something must have escaped him. The new Canada Labour Code significantly promotes unionization and the hon. member himself stated that earlier. Unfortunately there are many people who have not yet caught up with our times and find that the new Canada Labour code practically allows 100 per cent of people to be organized into trade unions. That is not the purpose of the Canada Labour Code. What is the purpose of the Canada Labour Code? It is to try to have orderly industrial relations because there are not strictly only unions and employers. There are not only bad employers; there can be bad unions.

You just have to look at the amendments which have been made and the hon. member for Nickel Belt is well aware of this. A year and a half ago we introduced a 14-point program to improve relations between unions and employers and to educate employees and employers so that they would stop tearing at each other. It was decided, Mr. Speaker, to create a committee where everyone would have his figures, which means data from the union and data from the employer, so that they might be compared, and that committee would help improve relations.

What has been done for the education of Canadian workers? What has been done about grants to labour bodies without any requirement on the educational program they should provide? I think the program which has been established has considerably improved the knowledge of labour issues and therefore paved the way for better and wider acceptance of unionization.

Mr. Speaker, we have just passed those amendments. There were and still are disputes. Very shortly, a large portion of the bill will be proclaimed and we were not afraid, Mr. Speaker, to deal in the Labour Code with the problem of the first collective agreement. It was decided that once and for all the problem should be solved. So what happened, Mr. Speaker? We said: when the Canada Labour Relations Board certifies a union, when a union negotiates in good faith and an employer also negotiates in good faith and it ends up with a lockout or a strike, we simply say, Mr. Speaker, that the minister may intervene to ask the Canada Labour Relations Board to appoint an arbitrator to settle the dispute. That, Mr. Speaker, increases both the strength of a union and the extent of unionization, which is the purpose of Bill C-223.

I fail to understand the philosophy behind Bill C-223 where it speaks specifically of 20 per cent of employees. Is that being militant? It is all well and good to have a union, but members must take an active part in their union.

[Mr. Olivier.]

Mr. Speaker, I spent nine years in the labour world. I was president of a union for eight years. I was treasurer of a federation representing 95,000 union members. But officers must try and help members to participate in the management of their federation.

The problem with the hon. member for Nickel Belt, Mr. Speaker, is that he thinks he speaks the whole truth and nothing but, and that everybody else is wrong.

Mr. Speaker, he is always long-winded in the House. He would like to speak day after day to say what? That is the problem.

On the other hand, if there laws are in effect, by what party were they brought before the House? Who is responsible for the structures within which central labour congresses are powerful in the country? Which party did that? It is surely not the New Democratic Party, because it has never been in power. It is a highbrow party, but the problem is that the workers must foot the bill.

Mr. Speaker, it is easy for the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) to try to blast the amendments which constitute, and rightly so, a renewal in union circles nowadays.

Mr. Speaker, I heard a while ago the hon. member for Nickel Belt tell us that a right-wing wind was blowing among the unions. Well, I fail to understand that. Either he has not stepped out of the House of Commons for a long long time or he has not taken part for ages in a union meeting. He will realize that unions are not going to take it lying down, that they are much more active than they used to be and that they are far from encouraging a shift towards the right.

The hon. member for Nickel Belt is telling us that our trade unions are too far to the right but I suggest he is insulting them. I think that the hon. member for Nickel Belt does not like to be told the truth. He does not like to be told what to do on subjects he deals with or interprets in his own way. As usual!

Mr. Speaker, trade unions in Canada have no lesson to take from the hon. member for Nickel Belt on how to manage their unions. If he finds they lean too much to the right, he could tell them so but I have the impression that the president of the CLC will tell him to mind his own business. I suspect that the president of the CNTU would tell him also to mind his own business.

I find that really amusing. He speaks to us of unionism and does not seem to know anything at all about it. Had he attended a union meeting, he would have learned something about it, at least at the meetings of the Confederation of National Trade Unions. I was reading again articles in La Presse which made front page headlines after a major conflict where, on the contrary, unions were called groups of communists. I cannot understand what is going on. Either the hon. member for Nickel Belt has a hard time understanding the situation, or else he does not want to understand.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, the purpose, the aim of his bill, Bill C-223, we understood way before he did through all the changes made in the Canadian Labour Code. A while ago he was telling us again that as far as we are concerned, job security and health hazards on the job are not important. Mr. Speaker, I think he did not really read the new legislation. I do not understand how such a brilliant member can venture to say such things.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote a study mentioned by my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Dupont), who told us about the Woods task Force on the problems and the percentage of trade unionism, which bears a direct relationship to Bill C-223. Mr. Speaker, I will read some of the recommendations made in the Woods report:

(1) Unless a union can demonstrate at least 35 per cent membership, its application for certification should not be entertained.

These people have studied it well.

Where a union can demonstrate 65 per cent membership, it should be entitled to a certificate without a representation vote.

Where a union can show at least 35 per cent membership but less than 65 per cent membership, it should be entitled to a representation vote.

The hon. member wants to reduce that to 20 per cent. They took the time to consider things, Mr. Speaker, they took the time to diagnose the problem. He selected some figure at random, it could have been 15, or 12, or 10 per cent, or 25 per cent for that matter, I wonder. Unfortunately, he picked up 20 per cent. And although I try hard to read through his explanations, this is not consistent at all with his views.

Certainly I share his view on greater unionization, but I do not agree that where one individual wishes to have an union out of 20 working in a shop, everyone should have to join. I still believe in democracy. There will be the kind of employer tactics he referred to, and he is right as far as certain aspects are concerned, when he indicates there are employers wilfully preventing workers from joining a union, arbitrarily using legislation that may be improperly drafted. But this has just been amended, although there are continuous law suits to block further unionization. We should not generalize however.

I have known hundreds of unions, 99 per cent of which are excellent. There could have been the odd one less perfect than others, but this is by no means suggesting the whole group is bad. What I cannot understand is the hon. member for Nickel Belt's (Mr. Rodriguez) rationale.

And coming back to the definition given by Woods, the Woods group, to refute the points made by the hon. member for Nickel Belt:

Where at least 50 per cent of the employees voting, as distinct from 50 per cent of employees eligible to vote, vote in favour of the union, it should be entitled to a certificate; we considered recomending a minimum percentage of the work force that must cast ballots before the election would be considered valid, but decided against it on the ground that it runs contrary to normal electoral practice and would constitute an invasion of the free franchise inasmuch as it would operate to the advantage of the employer or a rival union to discourage employees from entering the polling booth.

I believe that those arguments are valid, Mr. Speaker, and that we should take the time to study them. Consider now the fifth recommendation of the Woods task force:

A representation vote be conducted by the Canada Labour Relations Board at the place or places of employment.

Where there is no employment situs, Mr. Speaker, or if the vote is by mail, there is no problem. This has been checked so those provisions help. And I continue to quote:

There be provision for taking a pre-hearing ballot of employees at the request of the applicant to determine the wishes of the employees close to the time of application for certification should the results of a representation vote become relevant as the application is processed.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I refer to section 118.1 dealing with that problem in the amendments that have been made.

The Canada Labour Relations Board have power to determine whether a ballot should be taken with a show of less than 35 per cent support, and whether a union should be certified without the required demonstration of support by ballot on a consideration of the impact of any employer unfair labour practice.

Where a union can show over 65 per cent membership but there is evidence that the membership was obtained by misrepresentation or there is evidence of misrepresentation in the records, such as to cast doubt on the union's degree of support, the board should have discretion to order a vote or to deny a certificate.

Mr. Speaker, for many years the party I represent has tried to improve labour relations and to establish a Canadian Labour Code more adequate and more relevant to the present situation. What was the result of the latest amendments? Very simple. Earlier I heard the hon. member speak against the Bankers' Association. That is his right. However he knows that with the new provisions in the code, his arguments no longer stand. I always have the impression that he and I do not read the same thing. He is entitled to his own interpretation, but I still hope he will be able to look into this.

Mr. Speaker, even though Bill C-223 essentially aims at wider unionization I must say that it does not go far enough. We have a code which goes even further. Why change it? Why restrict the problem? I can hardly understand the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). We have succeeded in greatly improving labour relations this year, a 150 per cent improvement compared with the situation which prevailed last year as regards strikes and lockouts. What is the reason for that? As I said earlier, it is because the government took its responsibilities when it set up a 14-point program a year and a half ago. But it seems that my colleague opposite is not aware of these things.

The problem with opposition members is that all government actions are bad from the start. I do not want to have to give a definition of the conception the opposition members have on that matter, but I presume that from time to time we must certainly do a few things that make sense. I suppose that all those changes that have been made—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. parliamentary secretary but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was hoping that my two colleagues, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Olivier) and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Dupont) would leave me enough time to express my views about Bill C-223 in the name of our colleague the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). But first I would like to congratulate my two colleagues for the expertise they have shown in explaining to the House the loopholes of this bill, even its vices, shall we say, since this bill does not respond to the needs which have been really identified by the unions themselves. I trust the sound judgment of my two colleagues, in view of the great number of years they have given to trade unionism in the province of Quebec, of the role they have played in these unions and of their repeated contribution to get the government to improve the life of our workers throughout the country. I have had the privilege to witness their activities and to see the way they brought pressure to bear on the government, as is shown by the measures which my colleague the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour mentioned and by the 14 points on which the government agreed to better the life of workers. I think, Mr. Speaker, that these measures are positive and valuable and that they will contribute to improve the future of workers.

But I cannot understand how Bill C-223 might improve the life of those who are already unionized. If we have only 35 or 40 per cent of workers holding a union card compared to—I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the member for Nickel Belt is going to let me finish—compared to the workers in Denmark, France, Germany, Austria and in other countries which he mentioned, there might be some reasons for that. It may be that trade unionism in those countries is not cut off from authority but rather that unions work with the established powers, without being militant to the extent of seeking to break the system and create fear and apprehension among employers. And this negative trade unionism, which unfortunately is a little too common in our country, may contribute to keep away the investments that are so much needed, especially in the province of Quebec. I cannot see, Mr. Speaker, how such a measure could help create jobs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. It being six o'clock, the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

[Mr. Olivier.]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole, and the amendment of Mr. Broadbent (p. 5548).

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to be very brief and make a few remarks about one of the issues which is constantly raised in connection with the Income Tax Act and with budgets when they come up, namely, the allegation largely made by the business community, and small business in particular, that there are not enough incentives provided in the Canadian system to encourage business and investment. I want to make the point, giving some very specific examples, that there are indeed a tremendous number of very warm and very attractive incentives in our income tax system which at least compare with the incentives in the American system.

Before I come to them, it is worth making the point, because it is sometimes overlooked, that the purpose of the tax system is to raise revenue for public purposes. When it comes to raising tax revenue, it has to be borne in mind by everybody that the only place where we can raise taxes in this society is from those people and corporations that have the means. It should not be surprising that taxes are levied on those with means. One of the things we can take particular pride in in this country, and that I believe all Canadians do, is that we have a progressive system of income tax; that is, the higher your income is, the more taxes you pay.

The Income Tax Act contains a schedule with rates in it. Those rates can be somewhat misleading because they do not take into account the various deductions, exemptions and tax credits that are available. A recent analysis done on the subject by the Canadian Tax Foundation showed that even taking into consideration all those various benefits—the exemptions, deductions and credits—the Canadian tax system is still a progressive one. I sometimes think when we are being urged to consider a greater variety of so-called incentives that those who put forward the various proposals are tending to forget the importance in a democratic society of maintaining the "progressivity" of the income tax system.

I do not think we can ask the Canadian people to put up with a system that is not a progressive one, to put up with the system in which those who are very well to do and those who have very large incomes are able, because of devices in the act not available to the person of ordinary means, to reduce their incomes unduly. We want to encourage saving. We want to encourage risk taking, encourage people to build up businesses and to develop a stake in Canadian society, but at the same time to maintain as a fundamental principle a progressive tax system, one in which the more you earn the more taxes you will pay.

Having said that, I would like now to look over a few very specific incentives. I am not going to touch on the ones that have been announced in the last few days in the House that directly affect small business—the exemption of small manufacturing enterprises from the federal sales tax, the right to pass through without taxation the capital gain on a small family business, an incentive that matches the incentive that has existed for family farms being passed on from one generation to another. I am not going to refer to the proposals to encourage the formation of venture capital by further incentives. These will be brought forward and there will be legislation in due course, and we can take a look at them then.

I would like to talk about some of the existing incentives which are presently in the Income Tax Act. The first one I would like to look at is the general small business tax rate. I wonder if it is adequately recognized that the small businessman earning the same income as, for example, a doctor or a lawyer pays substantially less tax on it. This is also the case when comparing the small businessman to the working person who works for a firm and draws a salary. Small business, on the first $150,000 a year of income for a number of years up to a maximum of $750,000 in earnings, pays an income tax rate of about 25 per cent. I say "about" because the rate can vary from province to province, but it is approximately 25 per cent on the first $150,000 of income. That is half the rate that large businesses with over $150,000 of income pay on their income tax.

I should note that in the United States the benefit of a rate of about 25 per cent applies only to the first $50,000 of income. In Canada, therefore, small business gets three times the break on a tax rate of their United States counterpart.

If a business is incorporated it has the benefit of the 50 per cent tax credit in paying through the dividends to stockholders. I did a calculation out of the income tax rates grossing up a dividend. It looks to me as if a doctor earning $30,000 will actually pay $5,000 more in income tax than a small businessman who takes full advantage of earnings in his corporation and passes through to himself through the tax credit with the grossing up of the dividend. That $5,000 difference, which is an extra incentive in small business, is not very often discussed in this country. I think it is time that the availability of that tax incentive to small business was acknowledged.

I noted another incentive which has nothing to do with small business but rather with very big business. It is a particular incentive to encourage the development of northern energy resources. A prospectus was issued recently by Dome Petroleum to raise $62 million for exploration work in the Beaufort Sea. The only fair way of characterizing the extremely generous incentive provided in that proposal is that it represents a transfer of funds from the public sector to the private sector.

Depending on a person's income and the province he lives in, it is possible for someone in the right tax situation, in the right province, to make that investment not only without having to put up any money of his own, but to come out ahead.

The incentive provided is very generous. For example, if an individual in Newfoundland buys a $10,400 participation, which is a mixture of common and preferred shares, in this project, that money can be deducted from his income tax in the year of investment. It is entirely paid for by a transfer of taxes that he would have paid to the federal and provincial governments to the Dome Petroleum Company, in return for which he gets the shares. Not only does the tax pay 100 per cent of his investment, but by making the $10,400 investment he actually has his taxes reduced by more than $10,400. The individual in Newfoundland can make that $10,400 investment and end up with his tax being reduced by $924 more than the $10,400 he needs to make that investment. That is the benefit and the result of the very generous exploration allowances provided in the Income Tax Act.

In Prince Edward Island, in addition to getting all of the investment made out of taxes, you get a refund of $350. In Nova Scotia the refund is $525, in New Brunswick $625. Ironically, in Alberta it costs the investor something to make that $10,400 investment. It is not entirely paid by taxes but still it costs only $474. Saskatchewan is similar to Newfoundland; by buying one of these Dome Petroleum participation units your income tax is reduced by the amount of the investment plus an additional $945.

I will conclude, Mr. Speaker, with one other reference to the impact of the tax credit which is available on inter-corporate payment of dividends. I have noted in the banking community a growing trend to establish relationships with customers in such a way that in cases of very large borrowings they can take advantage of the tax-free nature of an intercompany dividend. Instead of collecting interest from the company to whom they would otherwise be lending the money, they invest the money in term or preferred shares or some other form of security so that the payment they receive gets enormously favoured income tax treatment. Several companies in my riding have been able to take advantage of this.

When people talk about our income tax system and allege that there are not enough incentives, I think it ought to be borne in mind that when one compares our situation with the situation in the United States, one finds that we have very generous incentives which in many cases exceed those available in the United States.

I am not saying that small business should not constantly be making its case to government. We depend on the private sector basically for job creation and economic growth. I cannot accept at face value, however, the criticism that is constantly being made of government that incentive has been taken away or that there are not enough incentives in Canadian society for small business.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying a few words about the tax agreement with which one of Canada's largest provinces did not agree. It is a failure but I am not going to go into great detail on that. Members of this House know that every member of the Quebec National Assembly representing every spectrum of political opinion in that province—the Parti Québécois, the Union Nationale, the Liberal party of the official opposition and the Social Credit member—opposed the deal imposed on the people of Quebec by this government.

We have heard it said by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that they gave the people of Quebec the same tax concessions that were accepted by all the other provinces. Nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker, for two reasons.

First of all, in the other eight provinces, for the six-month period for which the sales tax reduction will be in effect—of course, Alberta has no sales tax—the people will benefit to the extent to which they purchase goods on which there is sales tax. In the province of Quebec, where the sales tax has not been reduced, the bulk of income tax payers will get a tax rebate but people who do not pay income tax will receive no benefit at all from the proposal made by the federal government. I would remind hon. members it is precisely those people who need any kind of tax concession, any kind of rebate, any kind of break, the most—people who have so little income that they pay no tax at all. It is precisely these people who will not benefit from the deal being imposed on the province of Quebec.

The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have said that it works out in the same way. The people in the other eight provinces are getting the same amount of money in the form of a reduction in the sales tax. That may be technically true, Mr. Speaker. I suggest, however, that if the people of the other provinces had been offered a choice—because that is what people of Quebec have had; they have had one of two choices foisted upon them—in many cases they would have chosen to have a tax rebate rather than what they are getting. I say that the proposal made by the Minister of Finance is an unfair one, one which was made only for the political advantage of the federal government.

I want to spend most of my time discussing the economic situation this country is in and the lack of effect which these income tax changes will have on the sorry plight of this country. For the first time ever we now have more than one million unemployed. The last figures we have for the month of April, released by Statistics Canada, indicate that there were 999,000 people unemployed. That is 85,000 more than were unemployed in the same month of 1977. The rate of unemployment on an unadjusted basis is 9.3 per cent. That is not only the highest number ever unemployed, it is the highest percentage of the labour force which has been unemployed since before World War II.

That unemployment is prevalent right across the country. It is, of course, as usual in this country of ours, heaviest in numbers and percentage in the Atlantic provinces. The percentage in Newfoundland is almost 20 per cent. In New Brunswick it is over 16 per cent. In Nova Scotia it is over 12 per cent and almost 12 per cent in Quebec.

Those are the official figures. Those of us who have given any thought to the situation know that there are probably another 400,000 to 500,000 unemployed who are not counted because they are not actively looking for work. If a person lives in Cape Breton Islands, or some parts of Newfoundland or in some parts of eastern Quebec and does not have a job, he or she knows that there is virtually no use looking for work because there is simply no work to be found.

For the first time since World War II the unemployed are not just people who are poorly educated, who have not finished high school, or who have not gone to university or community colleges. They include substantial numbers of our young people who are unable to find work. These people include the best educated and best trained, the most expensively trained this country has ever had. It does not matter whether they are teachers, social workers or civil engineers, there is no work for them in this country.

Many people who got their training and did what they were urged to do by the Economic Council, the Conference Board and provincial and federal governments as well as the universities did so at great expense and after many years of study. These people took training in fields not only that they liked but in fields which governments told them there would be interesting work at relatively reasonable pay. They now find there is no work at all. I am told, for example, in my province that 50 of the graduate students in education last year have been unable to find teaching jobs. This year's class sees nothing but disaster ahead for them. And yet, what does the government, say? Here is what the Minister of Finance said in April as quoted in the Winnipeg Tribune:

> Finance Minister Jean Chréien said Tuesday the economy cannot provide jobs for all those who want work.
> "We're doing the best that we can do," he told opposition MPs—

I am here to tell him that the best he can do simply is not good enough.

My province and my city has a relatively low rate of unemployment. We do not have the booms that they have in some parts of Canada and that they have had on occasion in Toronto and Vancouver. We do not have the severe busts which they have experienced either. But, Mr. Speaker, the prospects in Winnipeg and Manitoba are indeed very dim. The prospects in my province, to put it mildly, have not been improved by a provincial Progressive Conservative government which believes that now is the time for governments to show restraint, that the best government is the government that does the least. So we find that summer job opportunities which the provincial government offers to students who are between study years in universities, community colleges and high schools, have been cut by 37 per cent.

We find as well that the hospitals have been told that they will have to manage in the coming year with a mere 2.9 per cent more money than they had in the last fiscal year. This means they will have a cut of about 6 per cent to 8 per cent in real dollars. They are doing the only thing they can do given the circumstances; they are either laying people off or they are not replacing people who retire. Hospital estimates indicate that by the end of the year there will be 1,000 fewer people working in the Winnipeg hospitals than worked up to this year.

We also have the situation that, up to the end of last month, according to an executive vice-president of the Winnipeg Construction Association in Manitoba, 49.8 per cent of the building trade workers in Manitoba were unemployed. The Association adds a note which says this number does not include many design professionals laid off or transferred out of the province, such as estimators, foremen, supervisors, office staff, or tradesmen including those in woodwork, tile and terrazzo, glass and glazing and acoustic tile workers. That is the situation in which we find ourselves.

Some people, including editorial writers, and some people in this House who should know better, like the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen), who have on occasion lectured those less fortunate than themselves by trying to suggest the unemployment situation in this country is not really as bad as the figures indicate. What does the minister say? "It is not the primary earner who is unemployed". I wonder in what cocoon the Minister of Employment and Immigration has been living? Where has he been hiding? Does he not know that these days there are tens of thousands, particularly young people and newly married couples, who have learned to live in our consumer society in a relatively comfortable way? They have been influenced by the barrage of ads which appear daily, hourly, in fact almost every minute over television and radio and in the voluminous pages of our newspapers. Canadians are constantly being told to own their own homes, have two cars, own a summer home or take a vacation in Vancouver, England, Mexico or Hawaii. For people to own their own home, especially young people, it is almost essential that there be two wage earners in the family. However, we find that many of our best educated young people simply cannot find work.

On occasion, our new graduates have been told by the Prime Minister that if they are not happy being unemployed in Canada, they should go to another country. Which countries will accept them when they have their own problems with unemployment?

Every day that we have one million unemployed we lose one million man-days of productive work. Every three and a half days we lose more production through unemployment than we lost through all strikes in Canada last year. I do not see many newspaper editorials criticizing the government, the state, business or anyone else about the tremendous losses which occur to this country because of unemployment. However, let a group of workers go on strike for more than a few days and virtually every daily newspaper in this country will publish editorials condemning the strikers, pointing out the damage they create for our country when they are on strike.

Let me go back to the question of who are the unemployed and how serious it is when they are not the primary earners. The vast majority of the unemployed are not teenagers. They are adults. Of the one million unemployed, almost 800,000 are 20 years of age and older. The majority of these adults are men, about 464,000. More than half of them are married.

Compare the more than one million unemployed to the less than 50,000 job vacancies in this country and it will be clearly seen that the problem is serious. If every job vacancy were filled tomorrow, we would still have more than 900,000 people unemployed. The argument that our supposedly overly generous unemployment insurance has persuaded people not to look for work simply does not add up. As I indicated, even if every job vacancy were filled, we would still have more than 90 per cent of the unemployed looking for work.

The burden of unemployment is felt most by those who are unemployed. However, we all suffer as a result of unemployment. Dian Cohen, who writes a column which appears once a week in many Canadian newspapers, estimated that if the government had kept unemployment, not at 4 per cent unemployment which the Economic Council considered as full employment, but at 5 per cent instead of the average 8 per cent which we had in 1976, tax revenues would have increased by $4½ billion. Unemployment insurance benefits for 1976 would have cost $1 billion less than they did.

A Toronto economic consultant, Arthur Donner, who writes a column for the Toronto Globe and Mail, using a 4.5 per cent rate for 1974 to 1976 calculated that this country lost in production from unemployment $25 billion and 600,000 man-years of employment.

The Minister of Finance and the government have told us that the government really cannot do anything more than it is doing about unemployment because we have to wrestle inflation to the ground. Every year since 1975 we have been told that we were succeeding. We were told that in the first year of controls inflation would be at 8 per cent, the next year at 6 per cent and this year at 4 per cent. The government was lucky. The first year of the anti-inflation program, inflation was down to just over 6 per cent. What do we find now? As many of us predicted, both inside and outside this parliament, anything which the anti-inflation program could do to control prices would be of a very temporary nature.

According to calculations made at the time the program was implemented, the cost of living was only supposed to rise this year by 4 per cent. According to the Minister of Finance, as late as March this year we were only to have an increase of 6 per cent in the cost of living. According to figures released on May 16 of this year, the increase for the 12 months from April 1977 to March 1978 was 8.4 per cent.

This is not surprising to anyone who has the not so pleasant task of doing the family shopping for food. In the last year the cost of food increased by 14.7 per cent. Beef increased by 44.3 per cent. The cost of housing increased 7.7 per cent and fuel and utilities by 12.5 per cent.

Even the Minister of Finance has stopped predicting that the cost of living will only increase by 6 per cent this year. He knows that in April food prices jumped by 2.6 per cent in that one month. He knows that as part of government policy we will have another increase of $1 a barrel in the price of oil on July 1 and a further increase of $1 a barrel on January 1, 1979. Those two increases alone will mean an increase of between 2 per cent and 2½ per cent in the cost of living.

In my own city we have been fortunate to have had provincial and municipal governments which tried very hard to keep down the cost of urban transit. Until recently, a bus ticket cost 25 cents. This has been increased by 40 per cent and the cost is now 35 cents per ticket. This is a very sharp increase for those who use the bus, but it is one small illustration of what is happening to the cost of living.

The policies of this government have had the dubious distinction of giving us one of the highest, if not the highest, rates of unemployment and rates of inflation in any of the industrialized countries in the western world. But the minister tells us he expects the economy to improve. I recall his replying to a question during the question period to the effect that he expects a 5 per cent increase in the gross national product this year. The minister has put forth arguments which have not been accepted to my knowledge by a single economic analyst in this country. All of them—the Economic Council, the Conference Board, the C.D. Howe Institute, the University of Toronto Institute—are predicting increases between 3 and 3.5 per cent. Don McGillivray, who has been pretty accurate in his analyses and predictions, had this to say in the Montreal Gazette yesterday:

The real domestic product (RDP) is a pretty good measure of how the economy is growing . . . It dropped a smidgeon in March, instead of rising, And on the average, in the first three months, it was only up by six-tenths of one percentage point as compared with the previous six months. If that is the pattern of the year, growth will be a little slower in 1978 than it was in 1977. The economy will only show half as much growth as the federal government had been predicting.

The writer then goes on to look at an aspect of the economy in which the government has been taking a great deal of pleasure, that is, trade. He said:

Canada managed to export about $1.4 billion more in goods than it imported. But April's trade news, just released, is not so good. Exports rose by about 10 per cent but imports surged by nearly 30 per cent so the trade surplus was the poorest in five months.

That is the situation. Unemployment is up. The cost of living is rising very quickly. The government's anti-inflation program which limited wage and salary increases means that for most Canadians the increases they will get in 1978 will not permit them to live as well as they did in 1977. In this situation, what we need is not phony, cosmetic tinkering with the tax structure, not a $100 cut in income tax such as we saw in January or February, not a six months' reduction of 3 per cent in the sales tax, but a sharp stimulus to benefit people in the low and middle income brackets. What we are getting are more tax gimmicks affecting people who are already doing quite well; more encouragement to people in the private sector to go into housing, to invest money in building and so on; more encouragement to industry in the form of accelerated depreciation allowances and tax write-offs for scientific research, which most of them do not use anyway because the multinationals find it more advantageous to pull their research efforts back to the head office, which is usually in the United States.

More has been given to corporations which have already done very well. Corporation taxes which have not been paid because the money was put into reserve now total in the neighbourhood of $9 billion. This, really, is a form of interest-free loan. Yet according to Statistics Canada there were more than 300 people in this country in 1976 with incomes of $50,000 or more who paid no income tax at all, and this at a time when the government says it cannot afford to cut income tax, or to put more money into job creation, or to finance the building of more than about 30,000 homes for use by people who cannot afford to buy or rent homes and pay commercial rates.

I say, as has been said by many including the Financial Times, that the budget and the tax resolution we are now being asked to vote have been a failure and will be a failure. They will not meet the requirements of the country, will not change the rate of unemployment, which is likely to get worse, and will not substantially change the rate of inflation we are experiencing.

So what the people have to look forward to is more unemployment and more inflation created largely by a government which has lost its will, a government which never had an understanding of the nature of the problems facing us or of the steps required to change direction and begin reducing the number of the unemployed and halting the rapid escalation in the cost of living. For these reasons I intend to vote against this budget resolution and continue to call on the government to take measures which are capable of meeting the problems before us in the form of unemployment and inflation, measures which it has so far declined to take.

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my participation in the debate tonight will be brief. I rise not simply to support the amendment of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) but to urge the government to support the amendment, and to do so very quickly in order that parliament can get on with the other urgent business which needs to be dealt with and the government can proceed with the changes it now knows it will be forced to make in Bill C-56 before it will be accepted by its own caucus, by the House and by the province of Quebec.

The situation is simple. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) made a very serious mistake in proposing a budget measure which required the agreement of the provinces without having that agreement. That was a particularly foolish error since the one province that did not agree was the one that the Minister of Finance knew was looking for every available opportunity to embarrass the federal government and to undermine the cause of federalism.

• (2052)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: What happened here is that the Minister of Finance led with his chin, and the province of Quebec hit him. Then, having been caught in a trap, a trap that any normally observant minister would have foreseen and avoided, this government was too proud to admit that it had made a mistake. Instead, it acted in a way which violates the spirit of the constitution of Canada, violates the nature of the federal system, and violates the principle of equal treatment for all provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: This bill provides a special deal for Quebec, a deal which Quebec does not want and which the other provinces were not offered. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) pretends he is treating everybody equally, but the truth is that he intends to send a cheque to every taxpayer in Quebec and not send a cheque to taxpayers in other provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: If you, Mr. Speaker, are a taxpayer who lives in Quebec, you get a cheque; if you live in Ontario or British Columbia, you do not. That is not equal treatment. The offer made to nine provinces was confined to the sales tax. The offer made to Quebec in this bill deals with the sales tax and an income tax rebate. That is unjust to other provinces, particularly to Alberta whose citizens are not eligible for a sales tax cut but are eligible for an income tax rebate. No matter how the government may twist and turn, the fact is that it has introduced a double standard into the relations of the provinces with the central government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Just as this bill is inequitable to provinces, so is it inequitable to people. It penalizes the poor in Quebec, sending a cheque to those Quebecers rich enough to pay income tax but denying to low income Quebecers the full benefit extended to lower income residents of eight other provinces.

Finally, this bill violates the spirit of federalism by denying a province the right to decide what the province will do with its own power. Ontario was not denied that right; Ontario agreed to a certain proposition and British Columbia agreed to that proposition. So, reluctantly, did Manitoba and other provinces. But there is no way to mask the fact that Quebec did not agree, and everything that Ottawa has done since budget night has been designed to force Quebec to use its taxing power in a way it does not want to and did not agree to.

Mr. Speaker, the government could not care less about provincial jurisdictions. It will not accept that the provinces should fight tooth and nail for what belongs to them. It would have them fill the role of mere administrative agencies of the federal government, entrusted at the most with the care of applying unilateral decisions coming from Ottawa. It refuses to recognize in the provinces legitimate partners, sovereign in their own jurisdictions, and given the mandate, just like the federal government, of implementing authentic federalism.

For us in the Progressive Conservative Party, what moved us to support Quebec in the sales tax conflict is our historic concept of the nature of Canadian federalism, our traditional respect for provincial jurisdictions, and finally, a feeling of equity towards the thousands of workers in the industrial sectors of Quebec most severely affected by the slump in the sales of their products.

[English]

That measure is not directed against Quebec. It is directed instead against the idea of a federal state. If the central government today can ignore Quebec's right concerning sales tax, then what is to stop them tomorrow from using federal funds to dictate how urban communities should be developed in Ontario, despite Ontario's clear jurisdiction over that matter? What is to stop them from using federal tax dollars to dictate the kind of industrial development in Atlantic Canada, despite the constitutional right of those provinces to set those priorities themselves? What is to stop them from using federal taxing power—as they did four years ago—to dictate the pace and emphasis of resource development in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan or Manitoba, despite the jurisdiction of the provinces over those resources?

The Minister of Finance claims he has made a major breakthrough in getting federal-provincial agreement on federal policies in the budget. That is not the way the other partners see it. The four western premiers were so enraged at the way they were treated that they took the unprecedented step of issuing a unanimous communiqué of condemnation.

The Atlantic provinces were told about it on the telephone. As my colleague the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) recounted to the House, the so-called consultation with the provinces was so casual and incomplete that the Manitoba minister of finance did not know until he had begun his own budget speech just what the details of the federal proposition were.

But that speaks only of the federal government's lack of courtesy and lack of competence. The provinces have become accustomed to that. What is extraordinary about this bill is the federal government's lack of respect for the constitution. If that can happen to Quebec today, then it can happen to British Columbia tomorrow, and it can destroy the trust which is the basis of our survival as a nation.

That is why we oppose the sales tax portions of this bill, and I say to the government now that we will use every legitimate means at our disposal to stop this stubborn government from taking an action which breaks the trust which is the basis of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The government knows that this defence of the constitution is not limited to the House, and indeed not limited to this side of the House. The Government's proposal has been unanimously rejected by the National Assembly of Quebec. It is opposed by members with a sense of conscience in the government's own caucus—and this debate will last long enough for this House of Commons to hear from the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal), from the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané), from the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier) and from other hon. members on the Liberal side who know that they cannot in conscience support an invasion of provincial jurisdiction. We will assure them that so long as the rules of the House of Commons allow, we will provide a debate long enough to allow them the chance to stand up and speak in defence of provincial rights.

● (2102)

Mr. Clark: The other thing that this government knows which causes government members maximum discomfort now is that before very long they will have to back down on this bill. The question is: how much of the time of the House of Commons does the government intend to waste debating a bill it intends to change before it backs down?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I repeat, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

This bill will not disappear as if by magic. The rights of the provinces have been flouted by the government, and we will see to it that the situation is remedied. Consequently, I advise the government formally of our intention of using all means at our disposal to force it to reverse its position and respect the fundamental rights of the provinces.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I suspect that the government already has begun to prepare its retreat and is looking for ways to amend this bill. I hope it is. If the government does not change the bill, then we will introduce amendments to remove the rebate proposal and to respect the right of the province to use the jurisdiction of the province as it chooses. That amendment will come when we are at committee of the whole stage in two, three or four weeks' time.

I suggest that the government not cause that long delay. There is other urgent business before the House of Commons. The Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) the other day read off a list of matters which he considers urgent. The amendment now before the House of Commons, the amendment of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, gives the government the opportunity to buy the time it needs to amend the bill, and at the same time to let the House of Commons get on with other urgent business. If this government has its changes ready before a month has passed, I am sure that there will be unanimous agreement in this House to bring the changed bill back early. The ball is very much in the hands and in the court of the government side. If the government acts now and takes the opportunity to take this bill back for consideration, back for the amendment its own members want to see, the government can save the time of the House of Commons and perhaps help to save the future of the country. Thus the choice is with the government. I hope we might have the vote on the amendment very soon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The question is on the amendment (Mr. Broadbent) to the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Broadbent), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

It being ten o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to put a motion for the adjournment. The questions to be raised are three in number; the Chair will call upon the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) and the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek).

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—PROPOSED CHANGES IN JOB CLASSIFICATIONS

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of measures which have caused concern to public servants in Canada recently. I want to refer to the latest, the matter which was raised by my good friend on the other side of the House, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), concerning a study which allegedly showed that 16 per cent of public servants in a sample of some 2,000 in the Ottawa-Hull area were overclassified and that 4 per cent were underclassified.

This study has been projected by some people and in the press to suggest that nationally a massive program of red-circling is about to be undertaken. Mr. Speaker, the country will be ill-served if the public service is subject to consistent attacks which are not soundly based and whose purpose is misconstrued in many circles. I want to make it abundantly clear that no one is objecting to measures to improve efficiency in the public service, least of all public servants themselves. But in the case of this particular study I want to call attention to some of the considerations which will have to be borne in mind before any deductions are drawn concerning the public service as a whole.

I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) whether these findings were based on internal data or whether they were based upon outside comparisons. The answer was that the data considered was basically internal. Mr. Speaker, there are more than 300,000 people in the public service. The suggestion that all these positions can be measured with scientific accuracy in a framework of job classification to produce such fine results is one which defies logical analysis. There is no way in which the public service can be run by the yardstick of purely internal consistency. Think, for example, of the difficulty attached to the hiring of medical doctors. In order to meet the salaries which such people command in outside employment the public service has to be competitive. The system is as internally consistent as possible but must of necessity reflect market realities.

I note that this study was conducted in the national capital region. Within that region there are only slightly over one quarter of all the public service positions in Canada. But over 40 per cent of the higher classifications in the various categories are to be found in this area, as was noted by Frank Howard in the Ottawa Citizen the other day. As one looks higher up the executive ladder, something like 60 per cent of the higher positions are found in the national capital region; the closer one is to the boss, the easier it is to get to the highest grades, perhaps. But if this sample was based upon the higher positions in the public service in the national capital region then it is most unreliable as a basis of projection to the nation as a whole and the 75 per cent of public servant who are to be found outside Ottawa.

I know that in testimony before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates officials of Treasury Board told us a little more about the staff who were doing this job. There are five in full-time positions engaged in job classification and the audit. There are perhaps 30 part-time employees involved—this to deal with 300,000 people in the public service. When I asked the President of Treasury Board what his intentions were, he said he would conduct more studies and I was pleased to hear him say he would enter into discussion with the staff associations before embarking on any program of red-circling.

I said at the beginning and I repeat, the public service of Canada will support all measures to improve efficiency. It is in their interest to see that classifications reflect internal consistency and market requirements, as much as it is in the interest of anybody in the nation. But it is in the interest of all Canadians that the morale of people who serve Canada be high, that they feel they can be proud of their jobs, proud of their responsibilities and proud of what they do, and they do not want to be subject to abuse, which in many cases is ill-founded. I am suggesting that this particular sample cannot be projected simply on a national basis. It will have to be fortified, re-examined and looked at again from many angles and with a substantially improved staff within the Treasury Board.

I noted in the questions raised by the hon. member for Hamilton West—who seems to have his own secret sources that leak information to him—that the very people who are responsible for the audit appear to be misclassified. Surely this is a matter crying for the attention of the Treasury Board and of senior public servants. Surely this kind of study has to be completed in a responsible way before there can be any public position taken with regard to overclassification of jobs and possible red-circling.

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, once again the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) has brought a subject of importance to the attention of members of this House. I would like to outline a few of the articles that went into the study pertaining to the question that he has brought forward tonight.

During 1976, the personnel policy branch of Treasury Board secretariat undertook a sample classification audit of approximately 2,000 positions in the national capital area. The positions were selected using a sampling methodology covering all departments, agencies and occupational groups in the national capital area. For some very small agencies the population size resulted in no sample selection being made. Similarly, certain employee-oriented groups were also excluded.

[Mr. Francis.]

For each position selected, a written statement of duties was obtained from departments. Each employee was then interviewed and a determination made as to whether the duties actually performed corresponded to the written statement. The resultant evaluation process for each individual sample selection consisted of three aspects: first, a comparison of performed duties with the classification standard; second, a comparison of the written position description with the classification standard; and third, a comparison of the performed duties with the written position description.

The study report, dated October 1976, indicated that approximately 20 per cent of the incumbents were performing duties which were misclassified—16 per cent overclassified and 4 per cent underclassified or allocated to the wrong occupational group.

The study was experimental in respect to the sampling methodology. Each individual evaluation was completely consistent with normal classification evaluation procedures. The study was extended to the public service outside the national capital during 1977 using the same sampling methodology.

Follow-up action on the results of the audit for the national capital area has been delayed pending clarification, through the court, of the question of red-circling. When the Supreme Court denied leave to appeal in a test case in March of this year, it, in effect, confirmed the right of the employer to red-circle. As a result, the Treasury Board secretariat is in a position to proceed in this area as follows: continue the renegotiation of a memorandum of understanding respecting red-circling with the Public Service Alliance of Canada; raise the question of similar memoranda of understanding with the other unions; and proceed to discuss with departments specific cases of overclassification brought to our attention through the two audits, or through any ad hoc audits.

It is the government's intention to consider various options for improving the over-all administration of the classification system. Consideration is being given to such matters as early warning mechanisms which will assist in the identification of potential problems, and the development of control mechanisms to improve accountability in the administration of the classification system.

POST OFFICE—POSTAL CARRIERS—CONSIDERATION BY GOVERNMENT OF ALTERNATIVE SERVICE

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, on March 10 I asked the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) in the House of Commons whether there were any plans to lift the present freeze on hiring additional postal carriers. The Postmaster General replied by indicating that, in line with federal policy, expanded letter carrier service and the extension of existing service has been deferred for an indefinite period of time. Many of the rapidly growing areas of my constituency are presently without door to door mail service. Since the people in my constituency are now paying for such postal service, they are entitled to receive it.

Postal service in Canada has been going downhill steadily for the past ten years. Immediate steps must be taken to restore the system to its former efficiency. If I were the head of a Canadian government and wanted by one single act to win back public confidence in parliament and the government, I would take every step necessary to restore the postal system to its former efficiency.

Complaints about inefficiency of the post office are too numerous to be dismissed as normal weeping and wailing. Each of us has a list of examples of horror stories. Because of the frustration surrounding the delivery of weekly papers in my constituency via second class mail, my office sends a supply of first class envelopes to the circulation departments of the newspapers which kindly print my column regularly. This is a convenience which is available to me as a member of parliament. Mailing privileges ensure that communication is maintained with my constituents. The parliamentary reading room subscribes to an airmail copy of the Edmonton Journal, and reasonably good service usually is available. But even so, the papers occasionally arrive at least four or five days late.

This is not an attack on the efficiency and dedication of smaller post offices and rural carriers in Pembina and other parts of Canada. I can testify to many acts of kindness and neighbourliness which are performed without fanfare by numerous rural mail drivers.

What bothers me is that, despite increased mechanization and increased rates of all classes of mail, the delays are getting longer. Many people have dropped subscriptions to magazines because they are stale before they reach their destination. In addition to public frustration, many business people are taking drastic action and have stopped using post office facilities. They are transferring their patronage to the new private courier service which has sprung up to fill the vacuum. A front page story in the Financial Post indicated that millions of dollars of potential post office revenue is being diverted to private parcel and letter carriers because these companies can offer the one thing the post office apparently cannot—reliability. What a sad abdication of responsibility by a once proud service which 50 years ago inaugurated airmail service down the mighty Mackenzie River delta because the horses and dog sleds took too long.

The post office used to rank with the armed forces and the Department of Transport as a basic function of government, a visible and tangible return for our taxes. Although breaking even was a goal of the post office, it was never a primary obligation. As citizens we expected service paid for in part when we bought postage stamps, with the balance coming from the general revenues of the government. I cannot believe there are not thousands of dedicated postal employees who have a sense of duty to get the mail to its destination. Unhappily, their ethic is not shared by all of their colleagues.

It is both sad and paradoxical that, in an age when almost anything seems possible, a basic right of citizenship—an efficient postal system—is beyond the competence of this government. The Progressive Conservative party is dedicated, in the event that we form the government after the next election, to offering the Canadian people an efficient postal system.

A chap who is running for our party during the next election, Mr. Ron Ritchie, recently conducted an inquiry into Canada's postal service. I wish to share with the House at this time recommendations brought forward by Mr. Ritchie. Among them there was recommended a return to purchasing services from the private sector for the pick-up and distribution of mail in major urban centres and consideration of the cost and advantages of other private sector contract operations.

A second recommendation was that the responsibilities and authority for providing mail services to the Canadian public should be given to a Crown corporation.

He recommended that the package of wage, salary and other benefits for Canada Post employees should not exceed those in the private sector so that appropriate comparisons might be made.

His next recommendation was that strikes by Canada Post employees should be illegal and we should provide conciliation and arbitration mechanisms and procedures for settlement of normally bargainable issues. He also suggested that maximum postal rates should be approved by a regulatory authority designated for this purpose.

It should be remembered that these recommendations were brought before our party for discussion and are not necessarily representative of policy.

When one considers the situation as it has been in the post office over the past ten years, one will find we have had seven different postmasters general. Is it any wonder that the individuals who are employed in this department of government are not concerned about the directions they are receiving? They have gone through four deputy ministers, and the post office deficit has undergone a 750 per cent increase in the ten-year period from 1968 to 1978. The deficit has risen from $67 million in 1968 to $567 million in 1978. Next year it is expected to go to some $650 million. This is not very comforting to the Canadian taxpayers.

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have already replied, on March 10, to the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) on the subject of the letter carrier freeze. I will be pleased, however, to expand upon my remarks at this time but avoid getting drawn into a debate on the efficiency of our post office, which is improving constantly despite our numerous problems.

I am very conscious of the fact that I have a great responsibility to provide Canadians with a high standard of mail delivery service. I am also very conscious of the fact that door to door delivery has existed for a long time and the public has grown to accept this service as a matter of course. Furthermore, I believe that every member of the House will agree that the letter carrier has a very high reputation and is recognized as a friend in every neighbourhood, and we have great collaboration and understanding from their union, the LCUC.

At the same time I must be very conscious of the fact that in 1972 the post office had a $90 million deficit. In 1978 the projected estimated deficit was to be $717 million. Our decision to increase the rate to 14 cents, still the lowest rate in the world, has enabled us to lower that projected deficit for the current year to $505 million.

Always keeping in mind sound business administration principles, this action was taken in order to share more equitably our portion of the deficit among postal users and the general taxpayers. This is why we decided in 1976 to put a freeze on the extension of letter carrier door to door delivery services, and on the inauguration of the letter carrier delivery service in new towns.

In place of new door to door service it was decided then to provide alternative delivery service through the use of group mail boxes located on the side of the streets adjacent to the new houses. Under these circumstances no Canadians were deprived of an adequate delivery service.

However, I am sure members will agree that this level of service to new suburbs had to be viewed in light of the then financial situation. Naturally, this policy is under constant review and we must always keep under consideration the financial situation and service objectives of the post office.

Our past policy on this subject has always been a responsible one in view of our budgetary restraint and the will of our government to prevent any undue growth in our work force. If in the unforeseen future these two prerequisites can be reasonably attained, we will be only too happy to review our present policy and give our postal users still a better service by giving them door to door delivery. Let us hope we can do this soon.

TRANSPORT—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR URBAN TRANSIT SYSTEMS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my comments this evening are based on a series of urban transit questions I put in this House, the latest being May 2 when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) was his usual evasive self, while the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at least said he would look into the matter to see if I had a point. The point is not whether the government is prepared to further a much needed urban expansion program in our nation's growing urban communities, but rather whether it would reconsider its position and abide by its 1974 election promise of $290 million for urban transit, a promise that was assumed to have been made in good faith and then quickly withdrawn once the Liberals were returned to power.

There are many such examples of election promises which turn out to be outright political lies. The most famous, of course, is the government's vehement opposition to wage and price controls, also made during the 1974 election campaign—and we all know the history of that broken promise since it was made to the unsuspecting public.

The example I would like to deal with this evening, however, is the promised urban transit funds. It was during the last couple of weeks in that 1974 campaign that the Prime Minister, a clutch of his cabinet ministers and a veritable array of executive assistants and hangers-on gathered in Toronto in order to beguile residents of that city with a promise of $290 million to support urban transit. The Ontario government naturally welcomed that initiative.

As a result of that promise, the Ontario government, for example, ordered 80 double-decker railway cars for its GO commuter system in the metropolitan Toronto area. The cost of the contract with Hawker Siddeley for the cars was $40 million. About one half of the $40 million was to be paid by the federal government.

Unfortunately, as we have learned far too often with this government, it is not above bribing voters with their own money, because once the Liberal administration was returned to power in Ottawa, it began to renege on the promises made during the heat of an election campaign by announcing that the urban transit money proposed was no longer available. As a result, the Ontario government was forced to pay the whole shot itself so that the residents of southwestern Ontario would not have to go without a vital improvement to an important facility.

Another quick example, Mr. Speaker, as a result of this same promise, is the much needed alteration to Toronto's Union Station as part of a package to improve the over-all surface transportation facilities in and around Toronto. The federal government promised to provide $100 million of the total cost of $258 million. For Union Station, the federal share would have been $26.5 million. Unfortunately, once again this Liberal government reneged on its promise and the government of Ontario just last month was forced to begin alterations to Union Station on its own, alterations that cannot be as far reaching as originally proposed because of the backdown of federal funds.

The promises, of course, prompted other improvements, including the possibility of improving and extending the GO system to various parts within the reaches of metropolitan Toronto. Quite clearly, promises should not be made if there is a chance they cannot be kept. Because without those promises the Ontario government could possibly have created plans of their own which may have gone beyond the efforts which they are now trying to achieve on their own. If this government is going to back down from promises made, then perhaps it should not involve itself beyond the reaches of federal jurisdiction in the first place and let provincial governments deal with provincial matters on their own.

Help is naturally welcomed at all times, but not when it cannot be depended on. In this instance of urban transit support, the government's excuse for reneging on its promise was fiscal restraint. But it is quite obvious that the priorities are somewhat confused because we still have a government which continues to hand out taxpayers' money in the form of grants for such things as the following. There was well over $6,000 to investigate uses of the translation of human bio-electrical signals into music. There was a study on the fertility of families in Quebec which cost $48,000. There was $5,000 to study the role of the harmonica in the social culture of each region of Canada. The list goes on and on and includes hundreds of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money.

These are the wrong priorities, Mr. Speaker. It is bad enough to be deceived by a government that bribes you with your own money, but it is calumny of the worst sort to promise money that it has no intention of giving out in the first place. That tactic will only work once. Like the little boy who cried wolf once too often, the whole thing comes back to haunt.

Now that the Prime Minister has backed down calling the expected election, and because an improved and expanded rapid transit system is all important to Toronto and surrounding communities like Oakville, Oshawa, Milton, Burlington, Hamilton and many other places, I urge that the government change its priorities by curbing many of its disgraceful and wasteful expenditures, some of which I have quickly pointed out this evening. The minister knows that there are many others. The government should at least fulfil the promises made during the last election campaign so that they will have a thread of credibility left once the election is called and so they can start making promises again. They should keep the last promises first, however.

Mr. Alan G. Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the $290 million election promise of 1974 referred to by the hon. member, in addition to the $100 million of new money already made available on the commuter side I am pleased to draw to his attention that on October 26, 1977, the government established a $230 million urban transportation assistance program to provide funds to provinces and municipalities for improvements to the urban transportation infrastructure and for railway relocations and grade separations.

This is a five-year program which has received approval by the governor in council. The $230 million will be distributed to the provinces on the basis of $10 per capita. That means, for example, Mr. Speaker, that the province of Ontario will receive a five-year allocation of $82,646,000.

The program has four main objectives: first, to improve the efficiency of the urban transportation system; second, to improve the standards of the urban environmental quality and land use efficiency; third, to conserve energy; and fourth, to improve safety at railway crossings, including construction of grade separations.

A few words are perhaps necessary on the selection of projects for urban transportation assistance program funding. It was decided early on that the best people to decide on what sort of projects should be funded were the more local transportation people who understood local needs and priorities. Accordingly, the main responsibility for the selection of projects put forward by the municipalities was given to the provinces. Under the administrative processes which will govern the program, the provinces will determine their priorities and will submit a list of the proposed projects which will be considered for acceptability.

Most provinces are still working on their submissions but I am pleased to report that Ontario has been fast off the mark and has submitted an extensive list of grade separation projects and two railway relocation studies for which it has requested funding under the program. Twelve of these grade separation projects chosen by Ontario have already been approved and an announcement to this effect was made on May 24. I am pleased to note that four of these are slated for metro Toronto at Runnymede Road, Pape Avenue, Kingston Road and Main Street. One of them, I am more particularly pleased to note, is scheduled for my own borough of Scarborough where open level crossings continue to constitute a major community issue in spite of continuous federal approval and funding of numerous such grade separation projects over each of the last several years.

To expedite the construction schedule the minister has indicated to the government of Ontario that he has asked the Canadian Transport Commission to issue preliminary construction orders. This would temporarily leave in abeyance the allocation of project costs while allowing for the preparation of final cost estimates and for calling tenders for approved projects without further delay.

In closing, I should like to suggest that this program indicates to the extent possible, given the fiscal restraints that we are now operating under, the concern of this government for the urban transportation needs of Canadian municipalities and for the election promises made in 1974.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

At 10:32 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC DENOUNCEMENT OF CUBA'S WARLIKE ACTIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, that in view of the UN conference of western leaders in Washington, and the UN General Assembly in New York on disarmament indicating the deep concern of the United States, although Canada has been virtually silent both in parliament and outside with respect thereto, regarding Cuba's warring intervention in Africa, with Soviet inspiration, by which the U.S.S.R. has taken over Angola and now threatens other countries, I move:

This House, recognizing that the Prime Minister of Canada is an intimate friend of President Castro, believes that if the Prime Minister were to make a public condemnation of Cuba's military operations it could be most influential in causing Castro to desist in his course of warlike action that may lead to a third world war, calls on the Prime Minister publicly to demand that Castro desist from his war operations and return the Cuban troops to their homeland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CAREERS FOR WOMEN IN ARMED FORCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that women are still being discriminated against in making career choices with the Canadian armed forces, and whereas the minister undertook some time ago to review his department's policies regarding women who wish to apply for training as pilots but who are now rejected solely because of their sex, and whereas the chief human rights commissioner has expressed an opinion that this could be in violation of section 2 of the Human Rights Act, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instruct the minister to make a statement to this House on policy changes and steps he is taking, or intends to take, to ensure that our daughters, as well as our sons, may train for whatever career they desire.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, the introduction of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GOVERNMENT INFORMATION

PUBLIC ACCESS THERETO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent necessity concerning remarks made to a joint Senate-House of Commons committee yesterday by the Secretary of State on the subject of freer access to government information, and particularly widely-published press reports today that the Secretary of State advised the committee that he was generally in favour of such a thing "rather than on the side of holding back". I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the Secretary of State immediately qualify the gross inconsistency between his statement of yesterday and his remarks in an address to the Toronto Liberal forum on May 10, 1978, in which he vowed that as long as he is Secretary of State, members of parliament will not be allowed information on the reasons for awarding Canada Council grants. Specifically, this House deplores what appears to be a two-faced policy by the Secretary of State, and also requests an immediate statement from the minister as to whether he was speaking for the government when he said, in regard to making information public, "In a literal sense there is not a government policy".

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

CRIMINAL CODE

GUN CONTROL REGULATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas farmers and responsible members of reputable gun clubs have reported difficulty in acquiring permits to transport firearms for legitimate purposes, and whereas there appears to be confusion in the interpretation and administration of firearms control regulations, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling):

That firearms control regulations be suspended until they can be administered fairly and efficiently so that responsible Canadians will not be deprived of legitimate use of their firearms.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

OLD AGE SECURITY

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN PENSIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), I move:

That this House notes the many occasions when delegations appearing before the Ontario Royal Commission on the Status of Pensions insist that the time has come for a substantial increase in the pensions paid under the Old Age Security Act and under the Canada Pension Plan, and this House calls on the government to bring in legislation to this effect at an early date.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HEALTH

REASON FOR MIGRATION OF DOCTORS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity which affects the health care delivery system at its grass-roots. In view of the fact that a record number of doctors left Canada in the first quarter of 1978, and that the Department of National Health and Welfare estimates that 1,500 doctors will have left by the end of 1978, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare take adequate steps to determine the reasons for the annual doctor migration which could reach an all-time high in 1978 and, with her provincial counterparts, work toward creating a better atmosphere for job satisfaction for the medical profession wherein this skilled group can regain a sense of identity in Canada and will not be forced to seek a less hostile work environment outside the country.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

QUOTA FOR INDUSTRIAL MILK PRODUCTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

That this House authorize the Department of Agriculture to increase the national quota for industrial milk production in order to assist the Canadian cheddar cheese industry in increasing its production of cheddar cheese, as this industry is now in a very precarious position due to an insufficient supply of milk for its waiting markets.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion for debate can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a motion relating to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Given the fact that poverty is still a very cruel plague in Canada and that current social measures are just not enough to improve the plight of the poor, and given the fact that the new negotiations concerning a guaranteed annual income program are not yet under way, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the House order the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to introduce as soon as possible legislation creating a guaranteed annual income program geared to the gross national product and to undertake immediate negotiations with the various provincial governments in order to implement that program.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion cannot be presented for debate without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

FINANCE

QUEBEC SALES TAX—INQUIRY WHETHER SELECTIVE PRINCIPLE WILL BE OBSERVED

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the communiqué issued yesterday by the Quebec finance department announcing that its deputy minister would contact his federal counterpart today—needless to say we are happy to see the resumption of communications—could the Minister of Finance tell the House, in light of today's talks on the possible financial arrangements regarding the sales tax, if the compromise he has in mind will respect the selective principle on which the National Assembly insists?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have no comment to make.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I think that Quebeckers are quite anxious to have answers to those questions. Given the circumstances and this communication, would the Minister of Finance tell us if he is aware of the visit of Mr. Caron in a few days and if his officials will meet him or if he himself intends to have a meeting with Mr. Parizeau?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Caron is already in Ottawa; so it is not a matter of a few days.

Mr. La Salle: The minister is telling us that Mr. Caron is already in Ottawa. Would he have at least the decency to assure the House that he will make a statement tomorrow about this meeting to clarify the situation about this legislation which we cannot support as long as the minister is not more talkative than he is today?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am quite surprised to hear the word decency from the hon. member but I will certainly report to the House as soon as progress is made.

QUEBEC SALES TAX—GOVERNMENT FORMULA FOR COMPENSATION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to continue the questions asked by the hon. member for Joliette. Because this sales tax dispute resulted from the federal government's direct intrusion into a field of provincial jurisdiction, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance, now that he has had a chance to reconsider and reflect, if it is his intention to withdraw the federal government's formula of direct tax rebates to individual taxpayers in the province of Quebec, in favour of a limited income tax collection agreement with the government of that province?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, after five weeks of explanation, the hon. member does not understand yet that what we did in the budget was reduce the federal income tax for all taxpayers across the land, with an agreement with the provinces, except Quebec, that they were to increase their provincial income tax and with the proceeds were to cut their sales tax, on an agreed formula. We had no agreement with Quebec, but we had with the rest of the nation.

There is no intrusion into a provincial field. When we cut our income tax, we are in our own field and the provinces can do whatever they want in the provincial field. Eight provinces agreed that my scheme to stimulate the economy by cutting income tax was acceptable, and on the night of the budget they signed the agreement. They did it on a voluntary basis. Quebec did not want to sign an agreement. That was up to them. I am still free to cut federal income tax.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, what the minister fails to recognize, after two months of supposed negotiation, is that there is a great difference between an $85 individual cheque by way of rebate and an agreement with the governments of other provinces. That is the difference.

I should like to ask the minister if he will guarantee that any agreed upon mechanism reached between his deputy minister and the deputy minister in Quebec, or between himself and the minister in Quebec for provincial compensation will recognize and respect the right of the provinces to adjust their provincial sales tax according to the priorities they establish, as has been done in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member does not realize that when you are cutting taxes, you rebate money to the payer of taxes. It is pretty simple. The provincial government can cut its sales tax any way and any time, and that is exactly what the province of Quebec has done. But they have not accepted doing it like the other provincial governments. They did it with their own money; they were completely free to do what they have done.

Miss MacDonald: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister tell this House that he is willing to apply the same mechanism that is being used in section 30 of Bill C-56 with regard to one province, to every other province?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the principle of this article is that I am reducing the income tax and giving the opportunity for all provinces to raise their income taxes. We have agreed that in the case of Quebec having conformed with my scheme for $40 million it was not necessary to have a special collection agreement for these $40 million. We have accepted to pay directly for the part they have complied with the scheme and that was accepted by the other provinces.

BELL CANADA CONTRACT WITH SAUDI ARABIA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I put my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The minister's predecessor, the Minister of Finance, visited Israel when he held that post. At that time he expressed interest in having a Canadian company facilitate the Israelis in modernizing their telephone system.

As the minister is aware, Bell Canada is the only company in Canada that, to my knowledge, is capable of doing this kind of work. It has signed a contract with Saudi Arabia which stipulates it will not do business with Israel. Given the circumstances, can the minister tell the House what will happen to the hundreds of potential jobs that would have been created in Canada by Bell had it participated in and obtained the contract for the work in Israel?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think the onus implicit in the question really rests with the State of Israel. Whether or not they want Canadian firms to bid on the installation of a new telephone system in that country has not come up to my knowledge.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister is being naive or is demonstrating lack of information—one or the other. Is he not aware that a Bell Canada senior official has acknowledged they have not submitted a bid? I do not have the precise wording, but after they entered the contract with Saudi Arabia, Bell Canada indicated they were unlikely to submit a bid for the Israeli project.

If that is the case, will the minister not recognize the reality, which is that in effect there is a boycott under way because Saudi Arabia has effectively stopped Bell Canada from obtaining a work project of some significance in the State of Israel which could have provided jobs for Canadians?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, Bell Canada, in signing a contract with Saudi Arabia, met the requirements of the government. No discriminatory clauses were accepted in signing that contract. Whether or not Bell Canada bids on a similar contract in the State of Israel depends upon the State of Israel and Bell Canada. We cannot force them to enter into a contract with another country.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, is the minister not aware that the kind of contract Bell Canada signed with Saudi Arabia would not be permitted in the United States? For example, there is a clause in the contract which states that Bell Canada is not doing business with Israel. That clause is in there for one purpose, and one purpose only that the minister should recognize, which is discrimination. If he does recognize that, why would the Government of Canada not take more definitive and concrete action to remove this discrimination which is costly both in terms of civil liberties and in terms of Canadian jobs?

An hon. Member: What about the Human Rights Commission?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, with regard to United States boycott policies, in my opinion their policies have many loopholes. All one has to do is set up a head office of one of the multinationals inside Saudi Arabia and then they can go ahead and sign any contract they want. So our policy is working far more effectively than theirs.

HOUSING

NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC ON RRAP

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

According to my information, an agreement on RRAP was entered into last March by the federal and the Quebec governments. Can the minister tell the House whether, following this agreement, his departmental officials or CMHC officials have issued regulations to allow municipalities to submit their application directly to the federal government, as this alleged agreement allowed the federal government to negotiate directly with the provinces? Has this agreement been finalized? Are the municipalities aware of it and what criteria are applied?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I confirm that an agreement has been entered into by the two levels of government with a view to extending the housing renovation program. However, the process does not necessarily involve officials of the various levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal. It is a program financed solely by the Canadian government and especially designed for rural areas. So those who wish to avail themselves of this program must apply directly to local CMHC offices in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question. In light of the rules drafted by his officials, could the minister tell the House whether a quota for applications from taxpayers has been set or if any taxpayer who has a dwelling to restore can file his application and expect a favourable reply?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the funds will be shared by the Canadian provinces and allocated within each province to the regional or local offices of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In other words, a citizen who wants to benefit from this housing renewal program must apply as soon as possible at his local office to obtain the assistance to which he is entitled.

We have agreed that the national budget could not immediately cover all applications. However, it is a long-term program. We will not restore all Canadian dwellings which could qualify under this program. We will give priority to those who have the lowest income or who live in the oldest houses in Canada, but progressively over the next seven or eight years we hope to accept all applications in the best interests of Canadians.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a last supplementary question.

It relates to the fact that last week a regional weekly paper reported that the council of a certain riding held a meeting between its officials and the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the Quebec City area. Is it consistent with the terms of the agreement that riding councils be involved in this program, or should it not be dealt with, as in the past, at the municipality level?

Mr. Ouellet: It can be done at both levels, Mr. Speaker. In this case, it is an initiative exclusively taken by a number of officials of the Quebec City area. Having grasped particularly the advantages of this program, they set about, on their own authority, to make their fellow citizens aware of those advantages and to persuade them to draw full benefits from the program.

TRADE

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC BOYCOTTS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the very weak statement tabled yesterday by the minister concerning international economic boycotts, will the minister be bringing forward legislation to deal with this very serious matter, or is it his position that he will continue to give lip service to this problem by changing the guidelines to suit the situation?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we are finding that the policy announced in October, 1976, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs is working very effectively in curtailing Canadian business from adhering to the discriminatory factors of the Arab boycott question.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, the guidelines referred to by the minister, issued by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in October, 1976, and the guidelines issued by the deputy minister in January, 1977, indicated that Canadian companies which complied with the boycott would be named. When the first report was issued, they moved away from that position. In the second report, tabled yesterday, they again moved, saying they will name them in some future report.

In this shifting position of the government on this serious matter, is the minister going to depend solely on the withdrawal of government service and the sanction of public opinion, as he says in his report, by naming companies? Is that the only clout he has in this matter?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it is becoming very evident to the department that companies attempting to do business with the Arab world have to use the assistance of the department and, in most cases, the assistance of the Export Development Corporation. Withdrawing that assistance is a tremendous clout. I am certain it has worked and will continue to work very effectively.

Mr. Kempling: Certain countries in the Middle East rely on Export Development Corporation financing, but many of the rich oil countries do not need financing. Certain countries are endeavouring to blackmail Canadian companies, and in order to counter this the government is going to blackmail them by naming them. That is a very serious matter. Would it not be simpler to bring in a straightforward piece of legislation prohibiting this sort of thing, so that Canadian companies can say to the Arab countries which request such an undertaking, "We cannot comply because of the provisions of Canadian law"?

• (1432)

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we are doing a tremendous amount of business with the countries of the Middle East, and we expect our trade to grow considerably. With regard to the question of legislation, I notice that some time ago the government of Ontario announced its intention to bring in legislation but since then they have dropped the idea completely. Perhaps they, too, do not believe legislation is necessary and are of the opinion that our policy is working.

URBAN AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST RESPECTING DEPUTY MINISTER OF URBAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. It has to do with one, Mr. William Teron, who is, of course, that minister's deputy minister as well as being chairman of CMHC. Can the minister assure us that the leave of absence granted to his deputy minister in order to give him a chance to rearrange his blind trust as well as other personal business, most of which has to do with housing, is not an obvious and blatant conflict of interest situation?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that question was asked, in the presence of the hon. member, by another member of the opposition party in committee. We have already given an answer to this question. I do not know what the hon. member is trying to get at. We have indicated there is no conflict of interest in this arrangement.

Mr. Whiteway: I ask this question again in the House because it was not answered satisfactorily in committee. Is this not an obvious conflict of interest? Would the minister reconsider allowing his deputy minister to take a four-month leave of absence before returning as deputy minister and chairman of the CMHC?

Mr. Speaker: Order. With all due respect, that is precisely the same question as was just answered.

Mr. Clark: It was not answered.

NEGOTIATIONS ON PURCHASE OF HALIFAX, N.S., SHIPYARD

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It arises from the growing sense of urgency concerning the turnover of the Halifax shipyard to one of the groups negotiating for its purchase. Could the minister bring us up to date with respect to the status of these negotiations and tell us the name of the group with which his officials are negotiating? Is more than one group concerned?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I really do not think any comment of mine on the negotiations at this stage would be helpful to their successful conclusion. I would be glad to talk to the hon. member privately about the matter, but I would prefer to refrain from intervening now during the negotiating stage.

Mr. Forrestall: I appreciate that observation, though I will not draw any conclusions from it. Does the minister feel free to bring the House up to date with respect to the department's thinking with regard to the construction of the "Panmax" floating drydock to improve the capacity to do the work required on the east coast?

Mr. Horner: We are studying the drydock facilities on the east coast right now. No decision has yet been made with regard to specific assistance in the provision of drydock facilities at Halifax.

URBAN AFFAIRS

WATER PURIFICATION PLANT AT OUTAOUAIS, QUEBEC

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Is the minister in a position to advise hon. members of the House of the latest developments concerning the construction, under the terms of the agreement between the Canadian government and the province of Quebec, of a sewage treatment plant on the Quebec side of the Ottawa River? That plant is supposed to be built in the former municipality of Templeton.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, I sent a letter to the provincial minister, Mr. Léonard, confirming the acceptance of the Canadian government, its acceptance in principle of the points contained in the overall proposal described in the letter of Mr. Léonard. I trust the construction of that sewage treatment plant will start as soon as possible. So, I told Mr. Léonard that our representatives on the technical committee were authorized to make the various changes in the main agreement before going ahead as soon as possible with the construction of the treatment plant.

NATIONAL REVENUE

LEGALITY OF RCMP USE OF TAX FILES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in her capacity as Acting Minister of National Revenue.

[English]

These follow the questions the Leader of the Opposition and I put to sundry ministers on Friday. I am asking the minister whether she is aware of a letter written by a predecessor of hers in the portfolio of minister of Revenue Canada in which that minister doubted the legality of a certain agreement signed between the deputy minister and the solicitor general and the deputy minister of Revenue Canada (Taxation)concerning the right of search and examination of income tax files by members of the criminal investigation bureau of the RCMP.

Does she agree with the contents of that letter, or does she agree with the view expressed in this House last year by the then minister of national revenue who said that all the actions of the Department of National Revenue under this accord were legal?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not remember the exact terms of the mandate of the McDonald commission of inquiry, but it seems to me that the question the hon. member put to me as Acting Minister of National Revenue in the House, at this time, deals precisely with what the commissioners are doing. I therefore have nothing to add. I read the official report of the questions put in the House Friday, and the leader of the government answered them very well.

[English]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would refer the hon. minister to a news release attaching a copy of the agreement dated September 29, 1977, issued by the present minister for whom she responds in this House. In that letter, the present minister for whom she replies indicated that everything done under this agreement has been legal. I am not referring to the McDonald commission. I would refer the hon. lady to depositions—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —before the Laycraft commission, and I warn the hon. lady—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will repeat what I said on Friday and suggest the hon. lady consider the Laycraft report due in late June, which will have a good deal to say about this matter. Will the hon. lady answer my question? Will she say whether she approves of the letter, since she was minister of national revenue, signed by her predecessor which is in direct contradiction to the views expressed by the minister she represents in the House today?

● (1442)

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Leader of the Opposition could explain to his colleague how he may call me if he has difficulties when referring to our titles.

As for the question about the substance and legality of some actions by the RCMP, that is the mandate of the McDonald royal commission. As to the findings of the Laycraft inquiry, I will examine the report with interest and seriousness as soon as it is made public.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF NATIVE ORGANIZATIONS FOR LAND CLAIMS NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It has come to my attention that the native organizations in the Northwest Territories have not received funding for the purpose of land claims research and negotiations for the new fiscal year.

In view of the fact that the native organizations require funding in order to hire competent staff to conduct research, formulate proposals and above all, pursue land claims negotiations in good faith, will the minister please tell this House why there has been a delay in funding, and would he also indicate when the native organizations will receive notification of their funding?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I should clarify an important point. The hon. member refers to native organizations in the Northwest Territories. In fact, he is talking about two native organizations in the Mackenzie Valley. The native organization, COPE, in the Delta is being funded. I just recently had a luncheon with the president of ITC and discussed an important meeting in Repulse Bay regarding the ITC claim. So we are talking about two organizations.

I think the hon. member understands as well as I do why I proposed, about a month ago, instituting a moratorium. The answer is very simple. We all agree that there should be one settlement in the Mackenzie Valley. There are two political organizations. I have said I am prepared to start negotiations with either the two of them together or a third one representing both. However, if we are aiming for one settlement in the Mackenzie Valley, there must be a negotiating team representing all the people in the valley: that is the reason for the moratorium.

Mr. Firth: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Metis Association of the Northwest Territories will be forced to lay off its land claims staff this coming Friday unless funds are forthcoming, and in view of the fact that this turn of events will negate several years of hard work done by this organization, I would ask the minister if he will take it upon himself to meet with this organization in good faith and see that the native organizations are provided with the means to bring the land claims question to a just settlement.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, I will be prepared to do anything to ensure that a just settlement in the Mackenzie Valley is achieved. That is my wish, the hon. member's wish and, I think, the wish of the people in the valley. I am also prepared to meet with the political organizations if a meeting with me would in any way facilitate the setting up of a negotiating forum which would allow for a single settlement in the valley, which is the type of settlement everyone is anxious to have.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

MANDATE OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport). While participating in the federal-provincial conference of ministers responsible for sport, fitness and recreation, held in Montreal on April 13, the minister was reported to have said, "My clear mandate in sport and fitness does not in any way deal with recreation".

Was the minister's rather bold statement reflecting a change in government policy based on a new and recent order in council which countermands an order in council of 1962 made under the leadership of the right hon. member for Prince Albert in which both fitness and amateur sport were defined individually as being directly related to recreation?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that there has been no change in my mandate; simply a change in the way it is described.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Campagnolo: The provinces have requested that the Government of Canada no longer participate in recreation at the provincial level. The right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, I think very temporally, foresaw that the real mandate of fitness and amateur sport in this country contained the words "physical recreation", so therefore we are continuing physical recreation but not recreation per se. Therefore, the Government of Canada will not be in the business of making macrame hangers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Speaker, that was a very interesting circumlocution. When does the minister anticipate that the green paper on recreation and fitness will be available? Will it contain any options and alternatives? Why has the minister decided to change the definition of "recreation" before issuing the green paper?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I am amazed that a member of the opposition should be urging me to go against something which the provinces so devoutly desire as to have it written into their request for our federal-provincial meeting. The federal government is merely acquiescing in the request of the provinces to remove itself from this sphere by gradually diminishing services so that the provinces take them up. The provinces are prepared to move into this field as we gradually move out. I expect the fitness and recreation green paper to be into the process of public participation some time early this fall.

CLOSING OF SWIFTSURE BANKS ON WEST COAST

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. Today the minister received a telegram from some very irate fishermen in British Columbia because the minister made a very major concession to the United States by closing the Swiftsure Bank without getting anything in return. How much longer will the fishermen have to wait for an agreement, and what are they going to get in return for all their losses?

[Mr. Halliday.]

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the telegram to which the hon. member refers. I met a group of advisers—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: With a commissionaire.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Instead of shouting across the way, perhaps the hon. member might want to address the facts before he closes his mind. However, that is not usually his distinction.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am for the commissionaire.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): As to how long the resolution of this issue will take, I can tell the hon. member that it will not take very long.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the minister that the losses the fishermen are enduring amount to much more than parking fines in Ottawa. I want to point out that many fishermen are wondering whether the salmon enhancement program is designed to replace the concessions the minister has made, and I remind the minister of the losses the fishermen are incurring as a result of the agreement he has made. The agreement was supposed to have been reached last Friday. How long do we have to wait?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member really does not understand the agreement which was signed. The agreement foresaw the possibility of Swiftsure being closed for conservation reasons. We did not agree with those conservation reasons and we said that was not an excuse for the other side not to honour its commitment to increase access to Canadian fishermen off the state of Washington. I can tell the hon. member again that he will not have to wait very long. This issue will be resolved one way or the other very soon.

INDUSTRY

CUSTOMS DUTIES ON CARS IMPORTED FROM OTHER THAN NORTH AMERICA

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Some weeks ago the minister said that the government had approved in principle an extension of its program of remitting customs duties on cars imported into Canada from outside North America up to the total value of all parts exported to their manufacturers and not just the value of the parts used in these imported cars, but the government was still discussing the terms of the necessary orders with the auto parts manufacturers here.

Has the government as yet issued any such orders to implement this desirable new program? If so, do they cover the entire auto parts industry and, if not, when will orders be issued to have this new program fully in effect so that the entire Canadian auto parts manufacturing industry and all its workers can take advantage of it?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Would you repeat the question?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we recently signed an agreement with Volkswagen which allows Volkswagen to claim remission on duties paid for parts manufactured in Canada for their plants in Germany and in the United States. We hope to proceed with a similar agreement with manufacturers of automobiles which are not on the North American continent, in the hope that we will enhance parts production in Canada for some of the cars purchased and used in Canada.

PENITENTIARIES

ESCAPE OF CONVICTED MURDERER

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, if we could get back to the question of physical recreation for a moment, my question is for the Solicitor General and it relates to the escape from federal custody of convicted murderer Albert Marinello, who managed to beat his sentence on Monday night while Montreal's Expos were beating the Chicago Cubs at the Olympic Stadium. This gentleman escaped from custody while at the ball game with one guard and four other prisoners. In the belief that the Solicitor General does not want the prisoners under his care to adopt as their theme, "Take me out to the ball game"—

● (1452)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: —especially the punch line, which goes, "I won't care if I ever get back"—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: —can the Solicitor General tell us how this convicted murderer, whom the Quebec police force describe as being dangerous, was permitted to be in a type of situation from which he could so easily escape?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, all the prisoners were cheering for the Expos at the time. With reference to Mr. Marinello, he was coming up for parole next week and the application was to be heard at that time. Therefore, as is usual in order to prepare inmates who may be released on parole, there was a temporary absence permitted under custody. In order to permit him to reintegrate into society, he was taken to this ball game. Unfortunately, the events the hon. member has described are relatively accurate: he did absent himself, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister is aware that this convicted murderer escaped on three previous occasions, the last time being as recently as last year and, more notably, on Mother's Day of 1974 when he took the occasion to convert a pass home into a home run.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: I wonder if there is any sports program in federal institutions which would teach the inmates, for instance, that rather than three strikes and you are out the rule appears to be three outs and then you take a walk.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the House appreciates the fact that the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham has hired a new joke writer. Indeed, I am glad he has taken a rather positive attitude in terms of this particular event. It explains the difficulty we have in terms of attempting to reintegrate convicts within society. If the hon. member is not aware, he can be made aware very easily with a briefing from my officials within the National Parole Board or, indeed, the Canadian Correctional Services. There is a judgment which has to be made relating to people who are up for parole. In this instance, this judgment was made. Mr. Marinello progressed from a maximum security to a medium security, and finally to a minimum security institution.

Mr. Gillies: To escape.

Mr. Blais: This was based on the judgment that he was not a dangerous inmate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: I point to the fact that during those other three absences to which the hon. member referred, there was no indication of any misbehaviour on the part of Mr. Marinello. Undoubtedly, the application which was to be heard next week is going to be negatively affected by Mr. Marinello's absence.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You hope.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, there was no negative activity except that he failed to come back on all occasions. Will the Solicitor General confirm the understatement of the year as being National Parole Board policy when prisoner warden Real Benoit, after being contacted by the press on this matter, said:

> I think he had a good chance to get out on parole before he escaped. Now, I don't know what will happen. His escape certainly won't help his chances of getting parole.

Is that a statement of National Parole Board policy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Battle River.

Oral Questions

FINANCE

CAPITAL GAINS TAX AS APPLIED TO FAMILY CORPORATIONS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, in this unique season of seasonally adjusted legislation for seasonally adjusted elections, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It makes reference to his April 10 budget which had one very fine clause indicating that shares of family corporations are now eligible for rollover negotiations. Was it the minister's intention, in family corporations including farm corporations, that if a sibling was to go out on his own and apart from the incorporated structure he would have to pay capital gains tax—the corporation would have to pay capital gains tax if a sibling went on his own?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the question asked by the hon. member concerns the interpretation of the legislation. When the House goes into committee of the whole, if the opposition lets us get to that point, I will be able to explain each one of the budget items.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CUTBACKS IN EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS IN NORTHERN MANITOBA

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Approximately ten days ago I brought to his attention the very sharp cutbacks in programs in northern Manitoba in the fields of education and employment instituted by the provincial government. To a large extent, these programs were funded jointly by his department and the provincial government.

I asked whether the minister was aware of the size of the cutbacks and what action his department had taken to monitor the cutbacks to see that the department was not continuing to pay its share of the money as if the cutbacks had not taken place. Can the minister tell us now what steps he has taken? What has he found as a result of his inquiries?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, what I would like to point out once again to the hon. member is that the cuts made by the Manitoba government in the programs considered will not substantially affect the program as a whole. But I can say again to the hon. member that if there are substantial cuts in the expenditures considered, those sums will not be reallocated to other programs not provided under the agreement entered into. But negotiations are going on with the government of Manitoba in an attempt to convince them of the soundness of the programs developed and agreed to by the federal and the Manitoba governments. We are still hopeful that we shall manage to convince the government to reinstate, if not completely, at least to a large extent, some aspects of the program that they have cut so far.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether, in the inquiries his department has made, it found cutbacks in programs that were financed in part by that department? If so, has his department moved to reduce the amount of money which it was recommended to pay?

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Speaker, yes, definitely. If some cutbacks have been made, obviously the result will be a reduction of our total expenditures. As we are paying, after expenditures have been made obviously we will be reducing by that portion our contribution to that part of the program which might have been reduced.

For the time being it is a little too early in the game to judge precisely the amount of money we might be called upon to withdraw from these programs. As I have said, we hope to convince the government to reinstate at least some part of the programs, in the hope that people in the northern part of Manitoba will benefit from them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

EXTRADITION PROVISIONS IN BILL S-8

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I like the applause. I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice with reference to Bill S-8 which came before the committee. Clauses 18 and 23 indicate that the minister may not return a fugitive or a person who has an order for extradition against him either to the Commonwealth, the United States or other countries if the death penalty applies and that is the penalty the person would have to undergo. I ask this question in light of the fact that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore were on the committee. Both those Liberals agreed with my position.

My position is that the bill provides that pursuant to subsection (1), the minister may refuse to order the surrender of a fugitive offender, who may be somebody charged with treason or murder, but must release such person. In light of that fact, will the minister bring the bill back in order to amend this clause, or does he intend to create a haven for people such as Charles Manson, the terrorists in Italy, and others like the Son of Sam who would have to be released by the minister? That is the position. How is he dealing with members of his own party on that committee?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, It was my intention to have the bill recalled before the committee in order to explain those clauses which seem to have been grossly misunderstood in the committee. The clause makes it very clear that this matter is discretionary. It is drawn in line with modern extradition arrangements and with the wording that prevails in the Commonwealth, which is standard practice in the European community in respect of extradition and is embodied in a number of our treaties. It has also been in the British extradition and rendition law since 1945. None of those countries has, because of these provisions, become a haven for terrorists, as far as I am aware.

The hon. member and some members of the committee misinterpreted the clause as meaning that the minister would not deliver prisoners to other countries if capital punishment prevailed. That is not the meaning or the intent of the provision at all.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure hon. members who have contributed to this point will realize that this discussion is one which ought not to take place during the question period but, rather, before the committee when the bill is there.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TABLING OF EXTRACT OF MINUTES OF MEETING OF COMMISSIONERS OF INTERNAL ECONOMY RESPECTING SALARY REVISIONS

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before moving to routine proceedings I should like to state that the matter of salaries for the staff of the House of Commons has been one which has been in my hands for quite some time. Ordinarily in each year we have endeavoured to bring forward the Minute of the Commissioners of Internal Economy, who bear ultimate responsibility for salary changes, by April 1.

This year we endeavoured to address ourselves to the continuing problem arising from disparities between positions in the House of Commons and those in the public service. It was generally agreed that disparity ought not to occur and that, in fact, as much as possible, uniformity ought to exist between relative positions in the service of the House of Commons and in the public service.

The House will understand and recall that the House is autonomous in this regard and, therefore, approval of Treasury Board has not been sought on this or on previous occasions. However, there has always been a desire on the part of the House to conform as much as possible with the general ambitions and aims of the salary program in the public service, and to attempt to ensure that equivalent positions in the service of the House of Commons were maintained on a salary level either equivalent to or slightly ahead of those in the public service.

In attempting to do this we have, over the years, allowed some positions to get further ahead of equivalent positions in the public service than was desirable, and for this reason it has always been an ambition in respect of salary amendment arrangements each year to try to bring them closer into line. On the other hand, to attempt to do that in one year would always, it would seem to me and, I am sure, to all hon. members, unfairly burden those incumbents of positions in the service of the House of Commons.

I think all of us are generally agreed that the service rendered to the House of Commons by our staff at every level, by some 2,500 employees, is absolutely first-class and of top quality.

To take an approach in any one year which would place all the burden of this on any one incumbent or group of incumbents in our service of the House of Commons would mean an unfair program. Therefore an effort was made, and this is the reason the discussions have been rather longer and more complex than in other years, to find a formula which would at one and the same time recognize the need for fair salary treatment for those in incumbent positions, and yet draw closer into line those positions in the service of the House of Commons which have gone too far ahead of equivalent positions in the public service.

Accordingly, the opening of discussions related to the possibility of combining for the first time a percentage revision in respect of the positions themselves and a cash contribution to those incumbents who might, because of the necessity of a low percentage increase in their own classifications, be unfairly burdened. This is a new and rather complex approach, and it has taken some time to finalize it.

I am pleased to report to the House today, where a number of members have inquired, both on the floor of the House, through correspondence and in contact with me, on the progress, that the matter has been finalized. I have, of course, endeavoured to maintain a flow of information to the extent that was permitted, to the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services.

This matter has been finalized to my satisfaction, and I am, therefore, able also to say to the House that the Commissioners of Internal Economy have come to the same agreement. Therefore, I am able to table the minute of the Commissioners of Internal Economy touching upon salary revisions which, for the first time, and we hope this is a one and only time, include not only a percentage increase to the classifications of the salary groups in the House of Commons service, but also a once and for all cash payment which we hope very much reduces the burden on those who are present incumbents, yet recognizes the need to draw the general classifications closer in line with those in the public service. That minute is now final and official, and I table it forthwith.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. WOOLLIAMS—PROCEEDINGS IN STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would agree with your earlier suggestion if the bill were still before the committee, but what has happened is that Bill S-8 has silently died. The committee held one meeting at which Liberal members, and I mentioned them as being the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) and the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson), agreed with my point of view.

I want to read this clause because I think it is very important. If someone was guilty of murder or treason in Britain for shooting the monarch and had come here, they would be released, because the clause states:

(2) Where, pursuant to subsection (1), the minister refuses to order the surrender of a fugitive offender, he shall order the discharge of the fugitive offender—

This does not say "may", it says "shall". I am not suggesting for one moment that those Liberal members on the committee are wrong, but I am saying that when the minister suggests members of the committee did not understand the clause, he is not correct. The measure is very clear. But with the greatest respect to you, sir, that bill died in committee and we do not know where it is. I hope that the minister will see his way clear to proposing the amendment suggested by his own members when I put the problem to the committee. It is those Liberal members who opposed the minister after I brought this anomaly to the floor of the committee. The minister says they do not understand the law. I am sure the minister knows what "shall" means. In this case it means "shall surrender the offender." Do we want Charlie Mason or the Son of Sam, if either of them escaped and came here, to be released in our communities? This does not say "may", but rather says "the minister . . . shall". I ask the minister very seriously to consider this.

I referred a very serious problem to his attention and he did not explain. He said we misunderstood the clause. There can be no misunderstanding of that wording, and the minister knows that. He also knows that his own members believe this is a complete anomaly in the law, and I would hope that if the minister brings this bill back to the committee he will amend, change, or delete that clause. It does not matter how he tries to slide over the words, or what he suggests; this is what it says very clearly, and what is spelled out in the bill.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, without entering the debate on the matter may I just say that subsection (1) contains the word "may". Someone such as Charlie Manson would be returned to the United States. The bill has been before the committee and has been dealt with. The scheduling of business is undoubtedly a responsibility of the chairman and the steering committee, and that is where the matter is now.

MR. MALONE—SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTIONS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I reluctantly rise on a point of order, not to challenge your ruling, but rather to seek clarification regarding supplementary questions during the question period. I had a question for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) today which was of considerable importance. My supplementary would have been directed to the Acting Minister of National Revenue. My supplementary question is related to the fact that the Commerce Clearing House of Canada Limited is at present giving rulings across Canada which say that people who operate outside a family corporation, through a sale from a sibling, end up in a situation in which they are in fact unable to collect the tax supposed to be relieved by the minister's budget of April 10.

I would like to have clarification of what makes a supplementary question out of order. Is it simply the statement that the minister makes when that statement is yet unclear, or is there some automatic rule that means a person does not get a supplementary when asking a preliminary question?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member raises a very valid point of concern and one that gives the Chair great difficulty. In the question period today, and on many other days, there were and are occasions on which I grant members supplementary questions, and some which I do not. In the hon. member's case a question was put which clearly sought an opinion on an interpretation of a section of the law, and it is very difficult to permit such a matter to be followed up when in fact the minister recognizes and indicates that advice will have to be taken before an answer can be given.

It is very difficult for the Chair to grant a supplementary question on an answer that is to be deferred until some other time. On occasions where a minister has said it is a matter of investigation, not so much legal advice but merely investigation, I extend the benefit of the doubt to the member because I know that the member will want to say, "While the minister is undertaking the investigation which he has promised to the House, will he please pursue certain specifics that I have in mind?" Even at that point I will allow it to be pursued, but in today's case the hon. member put a question which clearly sought an opinion from the minister, and the minister's response was that he would have to obtain advice for the opinion. It is very difficult for me to permit that matter to be followed.

If the hon. member, in fact, had had a specific question about a particular bulletin—and I do say this to members generally—often members are tempted to try to set up a question of a specific nature with a question of a general nature. That may be a temptation for some purposes which members have in mind. In fact, in terms of the limited time available in the question period, it is a very counter productive practice.

If the hon. member's main concern today was a bulletin of a specific nature in the authority of the hon. minister for revenue, it might have been more advisable to make that the preliminary question which clearly would have been the subject of a supplementary. However, he began with a question seeking an opinion, and the minister indicated he would have to take advice before giving the opinion. Therefore, it seemed to me I did not have the choice to permit him to pursue it in that particular way.

ESTIMATES

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR CONSIDERATION BY COMMITTEES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have been giving some consideration to whether it might be desirable to extend the period for examination of estimates, and certain committees, through their chairmen, have suggested that they might profitably spend some more sessions on the examination of the estimates. If it is the wish of the House, and with the approval of the House, I would like to make a motion to provide that for certain committees the period of examination of estimates be extended. I would therefore move:

That, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 58, the Main Estimates, 1978-79, that were referred to the Standing Committees on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts; External Affairs and National Defence; Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; Health, Welfare and Social Affairs; Indian Affairs and Northern Development; Miscellaneous Estimates; National Resources and Public Works; Privileges and Elections; Regional Development; Transport and Communications; and Veterans Affairs shall not be deemed to have been reported from the said Standing Committees until the third sitting day before the final allotted day in the present supply period.

I would make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a command to the committees; it is permissive. It is up to the committees to determine their own pace of work, and it is at the request of the particular committees that this motion is being made.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it may have escaped the government House leader's mind that this whole matter came about because of a request of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) made to the House, and one which I supported, with respect to the very short period that evolved in the over-all work of the House of Commons because of the "off again, on again, off again, Finnigan" attitude of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with respect to an election. That is where the request originally came from and having said that, sir, I want to say we welcome the extension of time. Of course it follows that the committees will decide themselves what they should do.

The situation, however, points up once again the complete inadequacy of our rules in this House with respect to the examination of the expenditures of government and the examination of programs and policies of this government, which is the job of parliament. It is long past due that this aspect of our rules be looked at very, very carefully.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we agree that this is a reasonable resolution to the problem that has arisen. In fact, we feel to have extended the time of all the committees dealing with estimates would have created as many problems as might have been solved. I gather that the 11 committees listed are all the committees the chairmen of which have requested an extension of the time.

While I am on my feet, I should like to join the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) in saying that I hope some day, and some day in the not too distant future, we will find a better way than we have at the present time for handling the expenditures that must be approved by parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to signify our agreement with the motion put by the President of Privy Council and thank also—that is a rare event—the Minister of Finance who took it upon himself to translate the motion from English to French and to bring it to my seat. He certainly deserves an expression of gratitude and I do so publicly because it is so much nicer to hear that than to hear unpleasant things.

In any event, I think the time has come for us to amend our procedures, and I truly hope, as all the speakers before me said, that in a near future procedural amendments will be brought in so that we can operate in a regular fashion without having to resort to temporary expedients.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the House leaders in respect to the consent that is required to introduce the motion. The motion, of course, will be debatable and subject to comment. The motion is that of the President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) which requires consent to be introduced at this time.

Is there unanimous consent? Order. I am not in a position to hear commentary. In terms of consent I heard the party leaders to determine if there was agreement. Is there consent for the introduction of the motion at the present time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the words of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) when he introduced the motion this afternoon. However, I regret I did not hear him state that one of the committees of which the activities would be extended would be the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. If he has so stated, I stand to be corrected.

I say this because it was only yesterday that our committee met at the request of the minister and the government, and we were told that it was not possible to hold our regular meeting as scheduled on Tuesday evening, at which time we were to have before the committee the negotiators on the boundary dispute, Mr. Cadieux and Mr. Clark. We were informed that they were holding serious negotiations with the United States over the boundary dispute which applies to both Atlantic and Pacific Canada.

We did not wish to create a situation whereby discussions in committee would in any way interfere with the serious negotiations that are going on and which are of vital importance to the citizens of Atlantic Canada and the west coast, so we unanimously agreed to defer the meeting on Tuesday evening with the officials, with the expressed understanding given by the government officials that, upon conclusion of these negotiations, Mr. Cadieux and Mr. Clark would appear before our committee. It was with that understanding that we agreed to defer our hearings Tuesday evening.

My question to the minister is this: will he indicate when these meetings will be held, and will additional time be given to members of the House who are members of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry in order that there can be further examination, discussion, and debate of these urgent matters which apply to our boundary problems? If he cannot do that, can he guarantee us a special reference at a later date when discussions have been concluded?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the hon. member I have described the process which has been followed, namely, to consult with the chairmen of the committees and, at their request, to bring forward this motion. I am not aware of what the deliberations have been of the committee to which the hon. member refers. I agree that it is an important committee and that there are important questions relating to fisheries and boundaries, but I would prefer to consider that matter with the chairman to see if a way can be devised to accommodate the needs of the committee.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief, but I just wanted to ask the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) about the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. As the minister is aware, that committee did not meet for a long time—until I used various parliamentary techniques to get the chairman to call a meeting. In the steering committee of that committee, as well as in the committee itself, I asked the chairman for an extension of time, but there was no quorum at the time and he said he would report back saying that the committee had decided that we did not need extra time. I challenged him on the fact that there was not a quorum and that no decision could be taken. I would therefore ask the minister whether the chairman of that committee reported that no decision was taken but that a view had been expressed that additional time should be given to the committee.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I do not have before me the precise reports received from each chairman. They were collated by a member of my staff. I cannot describe to the hon. member exactly what each chairman has requested. All I know is that this is the motion based upon consultation, and if the House wishes to give these committees further opportunity it can do so through this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the motion in the name of the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), seconded by Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

[Mr. Crouse.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed to.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 805, 806 and 1086. I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

MR. IGOR GOUZENKO

Question No. 805—Mr. Cossitt:

Is the government aware of the public statement by Mr. Igor Gouzenko carried by news media on Sunday, November 27, 1977 that he disclosed information to the government on nine Soviet espionage rings operating in Canada and that the government had only followed up by investigating one of these and, if so (a) is Mr. Gouzenko's information accurate (b) what are all the details (c) for what reason did the government fail to act (d) will the government investigate the statement and inform the House as to any action it intends to take in this connection?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): 1. Yes. (a) It is true that Mr. Gouzenko claims that there were several espionage rings operating in Canada, however, it is not true that the RCMP only pursued the investigation of one network. (b) It is not the policy of the government to comment publicly on individual police and security investigations. All information relative to Mr. Gouzenko's testimony and the documentation he brought with him on his defection which the government felt could be publicly disclosed is contained in the report of the royal commission (27 June 1946). (c) and (d) The government is satisfied that all leads flowing from Mr. Gouzenko's information have been exhaustively pursued and that no further action is required.

MACKENZIE KING DIARIES

Question No. 806—Mr. Cossitt:

Are any pages or sections of the Mackenzie King Diaries dealing with the Igor Gouzenko case missing from the Public Archives and, if so (a) what are the exact pages or sections (b) on what date did the government become aware they were missing (c) does anyone in government service or formerly in government service have knowledge of the contents of the missing pages or sections (d) has the government taken steps to investigate all aspects of the situation specifically as to what became of the missing pages or sections and (i) if so, what are all details of the results (ii) if not, for what reason?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Archives Canada as follows: yes, there is a gap in the regular Mackenzie King diaries preserved in the Public Archives. (a) It is for the period from November 10, to December 31, 1945. (b) The literary executors discovered the gap when they gathered the diaries after Mr. King's death in 1950, and they notified the Public Archives at the time. (c) Not to our knowledge. (d) Extensive searches were made by the literary executors and the staff of the Public Archives when the gap was noticed.

TASCHEREAU PAPERS

Question No. 1,086—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Were the so-called Taschereau papers on national security taken from the National Archives to the Privy Council office—Prime Minister's office and, if so (a) on what date (b) under whose authorization (c) for what reason?

2. Are the Taschereau papers in the possession of the PCO-PMO and (a) if so, for what reason (b) if not, where are they?

3. With reference to the answer by the President of Privy Council to a question by the hon. member for Leeds on November 29, 1977, page 1355 of Hansard, to the effect that he would take the question as notice and answer it as soon as possible, what are all the reasons that he has not followed up with any further statement on the matter?

4. Will the President of Privy Council or the Prime Minister make known immediately when a decision will be made as to whether or not the Taschereau papers will be made public and, if not, for what reason?

5. If the papers are to be made public, on what date will this occur?

6. Is it the government's intention to permit the documents to become public as is permitted by law after thirty years in the National Archives and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): In so far as the Prime Minister's and Privy Council offices are concerned: 1. Yes, to the Privy Council office: (a) January 21, 1976; (b) secretary to the cabinet; (c) routine review of 30 year-old records (see Hansard of May 1, 1969, pages 8199 and 8200).

2. (a) No; (b) returned to Public Archives.

3. This answer fulfils that commitment.

4. Public access to the transcripts of in-camera hearings is not authorized. The release of these papers may violate the right of privacy of many persons who testified before the commission and who are still alive (see reference to Hansard in 1(c) above).

5. The papers will be reviewed in 1986.

6. See 4 above.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, we would like to have a copy of the questions.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to provide the hon. member with a copy of the answers if he wishes to look at them.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions or the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the notices of motions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSE TO VIOLATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS BY SOVIET UNION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

That this House deeply regrets the inadequate response of the government to the persistent violation of international human rights, and in particular the violation by the Soviet Union and the Communist bloc of the Helsinki Accords.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to initiate this debate on a subject of very real and direct concern to the people of Canada. I am sure, even though this is a short sitting day in the House of Commons, that my motion will draw an active response from members on all sides of the House.

I am particularly honoured and pleased that this motion has been seconded by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I think that no member of this House, and indeed no citizen of this country, has been more steadfast in his dedication to the cause of human rights in this country and throughout the world. That dedication was recognized last month by the extraordinary award of an honorary degree by the Ukrainian Free University in Munich to the right hon. member for Prince Albert, and it is symbolized further by the Canadian Bill of Rights which that member brought to parliament as Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: It is well for us to start the debate on human rights in Canada with reference fo the Canadian Bill of Rights. One of the basic principles enunciated in that bill is as follows:

Men and institutions remain free only when freedom is founded upon respect for moral and spiritual values and the rule of law.

That is a statement of principle for Canada in a bill that applies to Canada. Our first responsibility as legislators in this country is to strive to ensure its respect and application in our own country. Indeed, the degree to which we succeed in this regard will, in a very real measure, speak to our capacity to pursue the cause of human rights in the world.

That principle is not limited to Canada—it is a declaration for mankind—and we in this House, we in this country should never be reticent or apologetic in our effort to have these principles accepted and respected by all nations and all peoples throughout the world. Certainly we have made some progress in that regard, but it is slow progress and it is uneven. There remain far too many countries and far too many governments for whom respect for individual freedoms is a meaningless phrase and for whom terror and suppression are the daily tools of their power. That is particularly true of countries of the Soviet bloc. The evidence of that fact is no further removed than today's press reports of the arbitrary arrest of Czech citizens prominent in the field of human rights, for no nobler purpose than to avoid any potential embarrassment for the visiting Soviet leader, Mr. Brezhnev. The fact is very much alive, too, in the hearts and minds of thousands of Canadians who themselves suffered in the past under these repressive regimes, and whose relatives and friends continue today to be denied even the most elementary rights and freedoms.

I do not want to enter a long catalogue, but I think there are some of these restrictions, limitations and suppression of freedom to which it is important we give specific attention in this House today.

Not long ago I raised in this House, as did other members, including the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), the case of Mr. Danylo Shumuk, who at 62 years of age had spent almost 35 years in prison for an assortment of crimes, mostly political, against the Soviet Union. That definition can cover almost anything. Relatives of Mr. Shumuk in Canada enlisted my support to see if Mr. Shumuk could leave the Soviet Union to emigrate to Canada. We were told that the Soviet Union does not view Mr. Shumuk's case as viable under the family unification provisions of the Helsinki Accord because his relatives in Canada are not sons and daughters but, rather, cousins. This is a narrow, legalistic interpretation designed to suit the purposes of the Soviet Union and not the humanitarian goals of the countries signatory to the Helsinki Accord.

We are seeing an easing of religious persecution in some countries within the Soviet bloc—Poland is the best example. But there is still a long way to go. Other countries in the Soviet bloc, Czechoslovakia is the most prominent, take active measures to prevent the free worship by its citizens in the religion of their choice.

There is also, as we know, the problem of emigration of Soviet Jews to Israel. The record of the government of the Soviet Union in one of harassment of those seeking to leave—of putting in place unnecessary road blocks. It is one where the doctrine of fairness is not allowed to exist, where families are separated, because one member is allowed to emigrate but another is not.

[Translation]

What makes these violations of human rights so awful is the fact that Soviet Union authorities are not willing to respect the provisions of the Helsinki Agreement. The Secretary of State for External Affairs says that this agreement as well as others signed by the Soviet Union have no legal authority and that they cannot therefore be forcibly enforced. This is true, but it is also true that no country, including the Soviet Union, was forced to sign a single agreement ensuring the respect of human rights. When they signed these agreements, countries like the Soviet Union committed themselves in principle. Mr. Speaker, countries such as Canada must constantly remind violators of the contents of agreements such as that of Helsinki. This is the mistake that is being made in the foreign policy of Canada: there is too much reluctance and unwillingness to speak plainly.

• (1532)

It is always easier for us to turn our attention away from violations of freedom and dignity, particularly when those violations occur in other lands. If we in Canada indulge in that luxury we leave those who are victims of oppression in the world without defenders, because there are other countries, including other countries in the west, which rely more exclusively on Soviet trade or whose populations might be subject to unusual pressures, and are consequently less free than Canada is to speak up.

We in this parliament must face the fact that if countries like Canada and the United States of America do not play a leading role in speaking up for human rights in this world, then no one else will.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The reticence of the Government of Canada in accepting that obligation is often justified by reference to so-called quiet diplomacy; the claim that human rights issues are best pursued quietly and privately with other governments. That may well be the proper case in negotiations on individual cases, particularly concerning the reunification of families. But we on this side of the House of Commons reject any notion that the Government of Canada should be quiet in its commitment to the principles of human rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: That commitment does not belong in the back rooms of diplomacy. It should be set forth clearly and publicly by this government so that the people of Canada, and the nations of the world, know exactly where this country stands.

Without that kind of public evidence of the government's commitment to human rights Canadians will be entitled to suspect that quiet diplomacy is just some kind of evasion, some kind of a cop-out. Particularly will that be the case when we have a government, as we have today, which has shown so little concern for the fundamental rights and freedoms of its own citizens.

It is important for us to turn some attention for a moment as we discuss our impact upon human rights in the world to consider the impact of the example of Canada in terms of respect for rights in this country. In this country we have a government that tried to gag a member of this House with threats, and having failed there, is now harassing a newspaper editor whom it does not happen to like. This is a government, and we heard the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) on this subject only yesterday, that condones secret trials. This is a government that continues to use writs of assistance 200 years after they were abolished in England. This is a government that, as we saw again today, is all too ready to take away from parliament and hide, with a royal commission, responsibility for looking into the illegal use of the private tax and medical files of individual Canadians.

This is a government which wants to inhibit the basic freedoms of charitable organizations by limiting their right to petition their government and their parliament. This is a government that finds no fault with the systematic surveillance of political parties and candidates. This is a government that passed an order in council making it illegal for any Canadian even to discuss the activities of a uranium cartel, of which the Government of Canada was a part. This is a government which, under the Immigration Act, claims the right to give foreign workers in Canada a special social insurance number so they can be singled out.

This is a government which increases postal rates by executive fiat, in defiance of the law and in defiance of parliamentary principle. When Canadians look at a record like that we are entitled to ask ourselves: is this government so committed to quiet diplomacy in the defence of human rights internationally because quiet diplomacy works, or because it is a convenient way to evade action and avoid scrutiny?

If this government has been too silent in asserting Canada's commitment to human rights, it most certainly has been inconsistent and hypocritical in applying those principles to its own policies. On occasion we hear lofty statements of principle on this matter by government ministers. We heard one in the House of Commons last December made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) when he was talking about commercial relations with South Africa. We noted, to give him credit—and he is in the House now—the strong statement of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Cafik) in summing up the tragic failure of the Belgrade Conference. We heard a statement in recent days from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in respect of our aid policy toward Cuba. The rhetoric in these statements is fine. The record unfortunately, does not measure up.

To take some of those examples, we are told that the government is ending its support of commercial dealings with South Africa. But the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) sees nothing wrong with the Export Development Corporation continuing to support activity in that country. Indeed, he gives us to understand that his concern for human rights begins and ends with credit ratings. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), when he finally understood the arrangement he had made, was happy to have South African banks participate in propping up the Canadian dollar. The Prime Minister's statement in regard to Cuba was just as empty. He made the grandiose gesture of cutting off aid that in fact had already stopped. Even after that statement in relation to CIDA, the fact is the Export Development Corporation continues to finance sales to the Castro regime.

The government would have us believe that it is concerned about the massive repression of civil liberties in Chile, and yet it continues to support commercial dealings with that regime. An all-party group of members from this House, as you will recall, reported evidence of terror and suppression in Argentina, and the government sold that country one Candu reactor and tries to sell it another.

Even though the resolutions introduced in the House concerning Mr. Shcharansky and Mr. Orlov received unanimous consent, it is obvious that the government does not take these matters seriously. Even though there was agreement to give unanimous consent, we are not doing enough to follow up on the statements made in parliament. It seems that we are not using these statements. Moreover, the government does not express steadfastly enough its concern about cases such as those I have mentioned. They are usually put aside and quickly forgotten.

Canada should take the initiative and raise at the United Nations the obvious cases of violation of human rights. A few weeks ago, the House of Commons agreed unanimously to a motion by the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané), supported by my colleague from Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), about the Shcharansky case. I then proposed that this motion serve as a starting point for a Canadian initiative at the United Nations. Nothing has been done in this regard, but the proposal is still valid and I hope it will receive serious consideration.

Canada should also reveal and publicize the violations of human rights in other countries. We should not allow the continuation of current repressions in Chile, in Latin America, in Indonesia and in South Africa without objecting to them.

● (1542)

[English]

In sum, this is a government whose commitment is doubtful and whose record is shabby. The people of Canada expect better of their government in support of human rights. I say to this House and to the people of Canada that the government we form after the next election will provide a better example and a better quality of life.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: First, we will put our own domestic house in better order. A government which believed in freedom of information for its own citizens would have more credibility in asserting the rights of citizens of other countries. A government prepared to rewrite an outdated and frighteningly vague Official Secrets Act, and to end the use of ill-defined procedures like writs of assistance, will be a stronger voice for human rights in the world. We will take those initiatives.

Second, we will never be quiet about our commitment to the principles of fundamental liberties for all mankind. We will assert that commitment at every opportunity, and back it up with concrete international action. Our government, for example, will be an active, not a passive, supporter of the appointment of a United Nations Commissioner of Human Rights.

Third, we will apply the principles to which all Canadians are committed, openly and consistently. We will not provide Canadian aid to governments guilty of gross violation of human rights, and we will not use agencies like the EDC to do by the back door what we condemn at the front door.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Fourth, we will be both forthright and realistic in our recognition of the motives of the Soviet Union. The kindest thing one can say about this government in relation to the Soviet Union is that it is remarkably naive about the motives of that country.

The Prime Minister's external affairs adviser confesses he would have liked to have kept the lid on the most recent example of Soviet espionage in Canada because he was worried how the Soviet government might react if the people of Canada were told about it. When that same case came to light, the Prime Minister sought to downplay it because he said he was concerned about its impact on our trade with the Soviet Union. And now this week we have our Prime Minister virtually isolated among NATO leaders in his apparent lack of any serious concern about the continuing build-up of Warsaw Pact forces in central Europe.

Canada's national interest is ill-served by such naivete. The Soviet Union will continue to buy our grain and other products because it needs them, and because we are able to supply them at the right time and right price. That is the essence of Soviet commercial policy, and no amount of pussy-footing around on spies or human rights will change it. As for the Soviet build-up in central Europe and its expanding activity in Africa, what is required of Canada and all NATO countries is not to turn a blind eye, but to respond forcefully and effectively, as proposed by President Carter and President Giscard d'Estaing.

Finally, and most important, we will make our commitment to human rights a legitimate priority in formulating Canadian foreign policy, as is the case in the United States.

I began with references to the Bill of Rights. The principles set forth so eloquently by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert in the Bill of Rights are real. They embody the most essential beliefs of our society, of our very raison d'être as a nation, and Canadians have a right to expect that these real principles have real meaning in the policies of their government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) for his generous words concerning myself. At the same time, I express my fear at the number of ministers who are here this afternoon of a government as multitudinous as the sands of the sea, a cabinet that has been multiplied in numbers.

A matter is before the House of transcendent interest to all who believe in freedom, and the total number of ministers present is three. That indicates the attitude of this government and the degree to which fundamental freedoms have been undermined, to an extent never before known in my day, and I have been here for a long while. A number of examples were set forth by the Leader of the Opposition.

Where is Canada going? That question is in the hearts and minds of Canadians everywhere today. What about human rights and fundamental freedoms? What about international rights set out in agreements solemnly entered into by the U.S.S.R., and as solemnly disregarded? It is that I am going to speak about in particular today.

I simply want to make a general reference to an honour that came to me. The Leader of the Opposition made reference to an honorary degree from the Ukrainian Free University in Munich, Germany, a university composed of men and women who, in the interests of freedom, have been forced out of their own countries and are endeavouring to keep alive the fire of freedom.

I want to mention particularly Dr. W. Yaniw, the Rector, and Dr. Sakaluk, the Pro-Rector, who came to Saskatoon for the purpose of joining in that award which, of the many I have received throughout the years, none has touched me more deeply.

From the time that we went to western Canada to the Northwest Territories, in 1903, to Carlton, I saw something of the injustice being done to those of racial origin other than the two basic races. I saw shocking examples of discrimination on the basis of race and colour. I determined when I was only ten or 11 that I would devote my life to bringing an end in this nation to discrimination on the basis of race, colour, or otherwise.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I saw the Indian ill treated. We lived on the old Carlton-Edmonton Swan River-Winnipeg trail. The Red River carts were still moving by, not in large caravans, but five or six in line. We saw people who came from Continental Europe being treated in a way that was as unjust as it was unChristian.

Each one of us has in his or her heart something that no one else has, something placed there by the Almighty, it must be. They will be a minority who follow that something. Ultimately the minority will become a majority if what is being undertaken and tried is for the welfare of people in general.

The Leader of the Opposition mentioned that this government is noted for its quiet diplomacy. I certainly agree with the quietness. As far as the diplomacy is concerned, it has been a government that has refused to stand internationally and nationally.

When I first brought before parliament the question of a bill of rights for Canadians, members of the government paid lip service to the objectives which I had in mind. Beyond that, nothing. It took years and years before any advance could be made. If there had not been a change of government in 1957, Canadians today would not enjoy the freedom which is inherent in the legislation passed by parliament in the Bill of Rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: They gave vocal support to the idea, and that was all. Mr. Speaker, I am not here for the purpose of advertising myself, but over the years—and I was at the bar scores of days every year—I never charged an Indian if he had a just case, and where there was injustice on the part of those of different racial origin inherent in what had taken place with regard to them, I took the case.

As far as the French language is concerned, it is sometimes forgotten that I had the largest support in the province of Quebec any Conservative leader had received since the days of Macdonald. It was on the basis of the stand I had taken in 1921. As a young lawyer I was asked whether I would take an appeal order which was made in the trial of two French Canadian trustees, Boutin and Ethier, who had been convicted of permitting the teaching of French beyond the extent contemplated by the law. Everybody knew my objective was parliament. My friends came to me and said, "If you take that case you can never hope to be in parliament." And they almost proved it. Four times in succession they proved it. The case of Boutin and Ethier is not a figment of my imagination, Mr. Speaker. It can be found in the law reports of 1921. I went ahead with the case and, as things turned out, the appeal was allowed. Since then, throughout the years, French Canadians in Western Canada have not forgotten than when they had no friends in the law to take their appeal it was a lawyer in the small town of Wellkum who did so. In other words, believing in freedom and the maintenance of those principles in the constitution without which Canada cannot survive, I took trial after trial when it was not popular to do so.

The Leader of the Opposition mentioned parliament in a passing way. Mr. Speaker, this is no parliament such as I saw, first, in 1940 in the dark days of war. Mackenzie King was prime minister. It is of interest that my dad taught him in the primer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think my dad was the only person in Canada who asked Mackenzie King when he was prime minister, "What shall I call you now?" And he said, "Willie". But I want to tell you that the "Willie" did not apply to Willie's son—my father's first name was Willie. Mackenzie King insisted upon parliament being upheld. We didn't have cooling apparatus then. We had a slight attempt at it. And by this time, the latter part of May and the early days of June, when Mr. Mackenzie King had decided that parliament had sat long enough, even that cooling apparatus was turned down to nothing and the temperature was greatly added to. He knew how to act in order to achieve results.

Mr. MacEachen: I will make a note of that!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not passing this on to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), because he is astute, I listened to his motion today and I was convinced that he has inherited some of Mr. King's unusual political acumen.

For some reason the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) seems to have an aversion to having consideration given by parliament to the diabolical cruelties which have been perpetrated and which are being perpetrated today on captive peoples in Europe.

Where do I get the affection I have for people of Ukrainian origin? It goes back to those early days on the homestead when we were surrounded by Ukrainians, Hungarians, Polish immigrants. I formed for them an affection which the years have not eradicated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: You talk about international freedom. Well, I intend to give you some examples of that. In connection with the conference in 1975 to which the Leader of the Opposition has referred, the Helsinki conference, I wanted parliament to take a stand. Will parliament take a stand? So long as there is a Liberal government of the kind which exists today, regardless of injustice, whenever motions are moved under Standing Order 43 there are one or two members opposite who are, apparently, personna designata. The hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Lefebvre) is one of them, I think. He sits back there behind the whip of the Liberal party and in that squeaky voice says "No". And that ends the discussion. A gramophone record, I suggest to the whip of the Liberal party, would be more effective.

What I am saying is this: parliament has been emasculated. Look at the order paper. There are a thousand questions left unanswered. That is my estimate in round figures. Ask a question this government doesn't want to have answered, and it simply dies on the order paper regardless of whether the election is to be on October 26 or on some other occasion when the Prime Minister finally determines that the people should have the right to make known their views.

What about this Helsinki conference? I was a pariah. I said: This is all wrong. It means nothing. It is dangerous. It will enable the U.S.S.R. to surround by boundaries, gained as a result of conquest, freedom-loving people such as the Ukrainians and the Baltic peoples and others whose only crime is that they dare to believe in freedom.

● (1602)

Mr. Diefenbaker: I suggest that the Government of Canada take a stand. In the last few days the Prime Minister has been taking stands both in Washington and in New York which have been so uncertain that nobody can possibly conclude what Canada stands for. Indeed, some of the observations indicate that he rather supports the attitude of the U.S.S.R. with respect to NATO.

Where are we going? I brought a question before parliament just before Helsinki. I will not read it in detail. I asked the question on July 24, 1975. I said:

Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Next week there will be a meeting of 35 nations in Helsinki. We in this House have no idea whatsoever as to the stand that the Prime Minister will take on behalf of Canada, there having been no day set aside for the purpose of discussion and ascertaining the feelings of members of this House with regard to the tremendous problems affecting the peace of not only Europe, but of the world, which will come up. I therefore ask him whether he has received representations from organizations such as the Ukarainian Canadian Committee—

That committee is dedicated to freedom, stands for freedom, and maintains courage at all times in that connection.

I specifically ask the Prime Minister . . . whether any treaty signed by Canada should include a definite commitment by all signatories, including the U.S.S.R., to implement within their jurisdictions the principles embodied in the universal declaration of human rights and, second, that in the establishment of boundaries in eastern Europe which are the result of conquest, that such establishment should be conditional on the principle of self-determination being accepted by the U.S.S.R. and the other nations. I ask what stand Canada is going to take on this matter. I speak on behalf of representations made to me for hundreds of thousands of Canadians of Ukrainian origin and also Latvian, Estonian and Lithuanian origin. They are very concerned—

They wanted to know what was going to take place. That is a summary of what I asked. The Prime Minister answered, with the usual clarity which characterizes him when he endeavours to conceal completely what this House wants to know. He said:

Mr. Speaker, as to the matter of representations, I do not believe I have received any specific representations about this conference I am attending next week. Of course, I have heard from Canadian groups of various origins about the subject many times. I have always responded to them and given them my views on it. They are well known.

All he meant by that is that they were well known to him and no one else.

MR. DIEFENBAKER: What are they?

MR. TRUDEAU: As to the conference itself, it has been in preparation for about two years. It has been discussed many times. I have answered many questions and I have had a press conference on it.

MR. DIEFENBAKER: We are talking about parliament, not press conferences.

MR. TRUDEAU: Parliament never deigned to ask me any questions on this.

MR. STANFIELD: I deigned to ask you a question.

MR. TRUDEAU: Every time I have been asked questions on foreign affairs, I have attempted to deal with them as best I could. I have no recollection of having been asked specific details about this particular conference. However, I have said in various places that Canada's role in this conference has been a very constructive one indeed.

Constructive in what regard? Silence? The Prime Minister went on:

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

We are the ones who insisted on doing the most on what is known as the third basket, the principle of free movement of people's ideas and exchange of information . . . It is not a negotiating conference. There has been agreement reached by the various governments on the document which will be proposed in Helsinki next week. I will, of course, be pleased to table that document in the House when I return.

I then said that that was not what we wanted to know. We wanted to know what the Prime Minister was going to say. Hon. members all know what the answer was, about 200 words of complete innocuity, ambiguity or nonsense.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. Perhaps the right hon. member will allow me to inform him that his time has expired. However, with the unanimous consent of the House he could continue. Is there consent to allow the right hon. member to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not seem to be unanimous consent.

An hon. Member: Who said no?

Mr. Clark: The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) said no.

An hon. Member: So did MacFarlane.

Mr. MacFarlane: You asked us to put him on in that position. We did not think he would exceed his time.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, there is complete agreement, because hon. members opposite would not say no at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hope hon members do not expect the Chair to put the question three times. I can ask it once more, but I think that will be the last time. Is there unanimous consent to allow the right hon. member to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Paproski: Charlie Caccia, Davenport. Caccia said no.

Hon. Norman A. Cafik (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I noted that in his remarks the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) attacked this government on a number of accounts in connection with human rights, and I would like to spend a few moments, before going into the body of my remarks, talking about that. We are accused of not really taking a lead role regarding human rights. I was present at Belgrade on behalf of the Government of Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And said nothing.

Mr. Cafik: There was very broad support for the position we took, and which I took on behalf of the government. There was considerable praise by the communities in Canada whose origins rest in eastern Europe for the strong position we took. I know of no government at the Belgrade follow-up conference which took a harder or more direct position regarding human rights than this government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What was that stand?

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I did not interrupt the right hon. gentleman while he was speaking because of my respect for him as a human being. I will deal with his question if the right hon. gentleman will exercise a little patience.

The second point I want to make is in relation to a comment made by the Leader of the Opposition, who seems to feel that members of this government or of this party have a naive attitude toward the Soviet Union and perhaps other countries which violate human rights. I certainly do not have any naive impression as to the motivation or the idealogical differences in regime between some of those countries and others in the world, including Canada. Canada is a democratic society with a very strong base, historically and presently, of respect for human rights. It is evident that other regimes of this world do not have such an attitude or disposition, and we suffer no naivete about that whatsoever.

The other suggestion which was made by the Leader of the Opposition, which I felt hit a little below the belt and which, to my knowledge, has no foundation in fact, related to the expulsion of Soviet spies from Canada. If I interpreted the hon. member's remarks correctly, he seemed to want to leave the implication that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would rather have dealt with that quietly.

That is a strange, anomalous position to be taken by the Leader of the Opposition who, on the other hand, often seems to think that the Prime Minister makes all the decisions. In this particular case the Leader of the Opposition seems to think that the Prime Minister was overruled. The fact is that the decision to expel Soviet spies was made by the cabinet of Canada. The Prime Minister, myself, all other cabinet ministers and members on this side of the House unanimously support that decision, in spite of ramifications which may result regarding Soviet-Canadian relations. We do not want spies of any country in this country, and we took steps which any self-respecting government would take. We are not naive in this respect either.

The right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, for whom I have a great deal of respect, wanted to know what happened regarding numerous motions under Standing Order 43. I would like to say that my respect for the House of Commons, to my knowledge, has not been challenged very often, if at all. When I was in Belgrade, in my speech on behalf of the Government of Canada, I referred to unanimous resolutions of the House of Commons, in order to substantiate the strong position we were taking, and to indicate that all Canadians, through their elected representatives, unanimously supported that strong, hard stand in relation to human rights. Also I delivered personally to Ambassador Veronsof the resolution which was passed in the House of Commons in respect of the human rights issue. Just prior to my departure, I had that delivered directly to him.

Mr. Cafik: There is no question whatsoever as to our position in relation to this. I draw the attention of hon. members opposite and the people of Canada to the fact that unanimous resolutions have been passed by the House on a variety of human rights issues. Some of them have been brought forward by hon. members of the opposition, some of them have been brought forward by hon. members of the government. All of the resolutions relating to this subject, to my knowledge, have been supported unanimously. There is more to unite us on this issue of human rights, if we were to set aside the partisan political considerations which perhaps motivate some people in their comments.

The other point which was made by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) relates to the Helsinki Final Act itself. He seems to feel that it was a bad thing to enter into. He may well adopt whatever position he likes. When the agreement was originally signed, there were some who felt, as he apparently does, that the signing of the Final Act solidified existing boundaries in Europe.

On December 19, 1977 in my speech in the House of Commons, I dealt with this question in a similar debate. I indicated, as is the fact, that there is no solidification or moral sanction of the existing boundaries in eastern Europe. There is nothing in the Final Act which in fact does that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is simply not correct.

Mr. Cafik: It does indicate that the signatory countries will not use force to change the existing boundaries. That is altogether different than giving moral sanction to those boundaries, or to say that we, as a government, or any other signatory government, support that particular position.

I should like to refer to the motion directly. I am the first to agree that it is unfortunately true that there still exist all too many serious violations of human rights in many countries, violations which are a proper cause of concern to many Canadians. However, I find it difficult to understand, let alone accept, how this government can be accused of inadequacy in its response to these situations. For the record, I shall now outline what positive actions this government has taken in the international human rights field. In this context, I will deal with the more specific issue of the U.S.S.R., the Helsinki accords, the Belgrade conference and its aftermath.

Whether at the United Nations General Assembly, in multilateral fora such as the United Nations Commission on Human Rights and the recent Belgrade meeting, as well as in our bilateral relationships with a number of countries, Canada has expressed clearly and vigorously its concern with violations of human rights, and has acted positively to resolve such issues.

At the United Nations we have joined with other like-minded countries in developing and sponsoring a series of resolutions which expressed the condemnation of the international community with regard to the persistent and often appalling violation of human rights in countries such as South Africa and Chile. As well, we have been involved at the United Nations in efforts to eliminate all forms of racial discrimination, torture, other cruel, inhumane and degrading treatment of persons, and of religious intolerance. In all, over 30 different aspects of human rights are currently being dealt with by the United Nations General Assembly, and Canada has played a prominent role in this important forum.

At the most recent thirty-fourth session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in February, Canada's delegation to that 34-member body was active in having the commission deal with a variety of human rights situations throughout the world, including Cambodia. As hon. members will recall, the commission's call upon Cambodia to explain its human rights record was cited in the resolution of April 7 of this House which condemned Cambodia. As well, the United Nations Commission dealt with the human rights situation in South Africa, Chile, Argentina, Uganda, Uruguay, Indonesia, Paraguay, Bolivia, the Republics of Korea, and Ethiopia. The human rights situation in the U.S.S.R. was raised by several delegations, including that of Canada. Our delegation brought to the commission's attention the unanimous resolution of the House with regard to the Shcharansky case.

Although the work of the United Nations does not always make the headlines and has no enforcement machinery, it is nevertheless a principal channel for bringing the weight of international opinion to bear on countries which persistently violate human rights. After an active campaign following the thirty-fourth session of the commission, Canada was recently re-elected by the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations to another three-year term on the commission in an open election, the results of which clearly reflected the high regard for Canada among the international community for our work on that important body. It is now our intention to continue to work to broaden the commission's scope and to improve its methods of work so as to ensure that it is made as effective an international instrument as possible.

Unfortunately there is no international consensus in the United Nations on many human rights subjects or situations, and no effective enforcement machinery. However, this does not mean that Canada will slacken its efforts at the United Nations, since that body does express considerable public opinion which in many areas, and for some violations, can be effective.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did a public servant write that?

Mr. Cafik: With regard to Cambodia and the April 7 unanimous resolution of the House, the government presented the text to the Secretariat of the United Nations and to its subcommission on the prevention of discrimination and protection of minorities. Also it was presented to all countries in the Asia-Pacific region with which Canada has relations, to Cambodia through its embassy in Peking, to the United States of America, and to a number of western European countries which, with Canada, had brought the Cambodian situation to the attention of the Commission on Human Rights. However, Cambodia's position of isolation makes it very difficult to have an effective impact on that country, whether it be through public opinion or any other form of United Nations or other pressures.

The situations in Cambodia, Chile, Uganda, South Africa, and the cases of Shcharansky and Orlov, are only a few of those which have been of concern to the government. That concern has been reinforced by many members on both sides of the House, particularly those members involved in the human rights work of the joint parliamentary committee. Also it reflects the interests of Amnesty International, other non-governmental organizations, and individual Canadians who have written to the government, ministers, and other members, to express their concerns and views.

In my own particular case I have received representations from the ethnocultural communities across Canada. I have met with them by the hundreds and thousands to deal with our human rights' stance and position. Without fear of contradiction, the position I have taken in respect of this particular equation and very central human question has drawn enormous support in this country. I am deeply grateful for that support of my expression of the views of Canadians on these very important issues.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: Having dealt with the question of Canada's responses to violations of human rights in a number of countries, both through multilateral and bilateral channels, now I should like to turn to the specific aspect of the motion before us which deals with the Soviet Union, the communist bloc countries, and the Helsinki Final Act.

• (1622)

The response of the government regarding the way the human rights provisions of the Helsinki Final Act are being implemented by the U.S.S.R. and the Eastern European participants is based on two main considerations: first, the constraints imposed on us by the nature of the Final Act itself. It is a set of guidelines without any deadlines or any hard and fast rules as to how its provisions are to be implemented. There is no doubt there is a moral and political commitment rather than a legal one, and in my view an international commitment according to a very sacred document. The second is in respect of what action will be most effective in achieving our main objective, which is to improve the situation of those who suffer as a result of deficiencies in the respect being shown to the human rights provision of that Act.

Those who have taken the time to read the booklet "Canada at Belgrade", that was recently published by the Department of External Affairs, and which has been distributed to all members of this House, will be well aware of the firm position of the Canada delegation at Belgrade.

I think our position was the envy of many countries of the world. There is no doubt whatsoever that it has evoked considerable concern on the part of the Soviet Union and many countries of Eastern Europe. I am not sure I am unique in this respect, and I certainly know that a former Prime Minister of this country, the right hon. member for Prince Albert, in his days as Prime Minister had the distinction and the honour of being attacked by the Soviet Union for some of his very tough stands, but I was very pleased the other day to note that in Kiev, in an official communist organ, a whole page was devoted to what I think was a slanderous attack, but quite accurate in some respects, on my position regarding human rights. If I can be attacked in that substantive way, I must be doing something right.

It is very difficult to end up building a case that this government has been weak on this issue, if in fact those countries are very much concerned with the tough stand we have taken and go to the trouble in a foreign country of attacking myself, particularly, because of the strong stance I have taken.

There is more than just words, of course, in relation to the human rights equation. We have to do more than just talk. We have to try to realize some positive achievements. There is talk here in this House and in the country as to the virtues of quiet diplomacy versus the virtues of taking an open, hard line stance in order to focus public opinion on these violations of human rights.

There is no question but that in individual cases the quiet approach is often the more successful. The statistics would indicate that this government, through the approach it has taken on individual human rights violations, has indeed achieved some marked success. I do not think we should take the risk of losing those opportunites to be successful simply for the polemics of the thing. Perhaps from time to time we have to move in both directions. The stance I have personally taken as the minister of multiculturalism could perhaps be categorized as less than quiet diplomacy. Quiet diplomacy has a valid position as well in order that we can maximize our opportunity of achieving success.

In Belgrade our position was strong. There the final document that emanated from Belgrade was a considerable disappointment to all the participants. It was a disappointment, I think, to all Canadians and all freedom loving people in the world. The fact is it was a consensus document. It does provide some hope that in two years down the line in Madrid, where there will be a second follow up conference, this government and other like-minded governments will be able to zero in again on human rights violations that still remain.

I am very hopeful that as long as we continue to conduct dialogue and talk between the two ideological camps of this world, dealing with these questions in an open and frank way, and continuing to insist that the application and implementation of the Final Act is a matter of public concern to this government, and a matter of international right for us to express our views in respect of it, there is the possibility that change will come.

Change cannot come quickly, not because we would not want it so but because the simple fact is that the question of human rights within the Soviet Union and other countries in that part of the world boils down to a very basic and fundamental thing. It is felt perhaps by many of those countries in positions of authority that the giving of the kind of freedom that we enjoy and take for granted would destroy the very nature of their countries. I think they may well be right. It is for that reason it is difficult to move them to the kind of respect for human rights that is so inherent within our society. We must understand that, we must have patience, and we must never be reluctant to speak out powerfully and forcefully on behalf of all people anywhere in the world whose rights have been violated. That is my position and the position of this government, and it will continue to be the position of this government on behalf of all people all over the world.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Cafik: Has my time expired, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, the hon. minister has a few minutes left, so if he wants to entertain the question I will recognize the hon. member for that purpose.

Mr. Cafik: If I have two or three minutes left I would like to make one more point, and then I will be delighted to entertain the question.

The last point I would like to make, and I think it is very serious, is that two years down the road there will be a second follow up conference at Madrid on security and co-operation in Europe. The position that Canada has taken, a position that many other free nations of the world have taken at the conference at Belgrade, has indicated in a very forceful way to those who are not prepared to live up to the provisions of the Final Act of Helsinki that we do not intend to sit back and not deal with the matter again. There is enormous pressure now for those countries within the next two years to try, at least on the surface, to put themselves in a better light.

My last point relating to this is that we as a government have an obligation to deal with the work, between now and the conference that is to take place in Madrid, of encouraging all members of parliament and all Canadians who have a special interest in the human rights question to participate, provide information, to have input, and to assist the government in determining the stance that ought to be taken. As minister of multiculturalism I have already begun to encourage those communities, of eastern European background in particular, to share with me and the government their views, their attitudes and concerns in order that they may be taken into account in forming our policies and approach at the next conference to take place in Madrid.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Assuming the minister consents to a question, I will recognize the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack).

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I have been quite impressed with the minister's attempt to outline the championing of human rights by this government abroad. The minister has outlined the government's interest in promoting and maintaining these human rights in many countries in the world. Why then does the government neglect human rights right here at home? For example, circular number 78-3 issued by Revenue Canada warned that churches and charities risk losing their tax exempt status if they engage in political activity, and such activity is defined as trying to change any legislation, or even maintaining existing legislation, or soliciting support for their aims through public meetings, or attempting to influence policy decisions. Why does the government adopt that posture vis-à-vis human rights here at home?

● (1632)

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I thought that that cow would have been milked to death by now. In any event, there is no doubt whatsoever that charitable organizations, in my view, have a right to indulge in any number of things. The real question that needs to be addressed is, to what extent. For example, should we be funding as a charitable group some organization that may be a purely political operation?

However, I do not need to deal with that, but I would like to say that I believe it is just short of scandalous, and this is the second point that has been made today in a different context, that here we are dealing with human rights and human rights violations in parts of the world that are neither democratic nor free. They do not have even the semblance of our kind of freedom, and here we find two people—one a leader of a party and one a member of that same party—who are trying to draw the parallel that we in Canada are suffering from the same kind of human rights violations. That is absolute garbage. It is nonsense, and if that is the kind of freedom that those hon. members think we have in Canada, then I say, "God help this country if it ever falls into the hands of people with such a distorted view of the nature of our country."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party I would like to say at the outset that the subject matter of this motion, which expresses regret, according to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), that the government's response to the persistent violations of human rights, particularly violations of the Helsinki Agreement by countries within the Soviet bloc, is a matter of very real importance. This subject touches upon, quite correctly, the issue of human liberty, and it is one that a demoncratic assembly, whether in Canada or anywhere else in the world, ought to regard as being of great importance, because liberty is not something that ought to be restricted as a value to a particular country in which one happens to live as a matter of moral concern.

Human liberty is a matter not only of concern for Canadians but for all men and women throughout the world. It may have been preferable to include in the motion a reference to the denial of liberties in non-Soviet bloc countries, and I am thinking of Chile and Argentina. I was pleased to see the opposition leader make reference to authoritarian regimes of a kind other than those found in the Soviet bloc. I merely say in passing that it might have been useful in other circumstances to have a motion that pertains to human liberty universal in its application to all those regimes in the world where human liberties are denied, whether it is the Soviet bloc or somewhere else.

However, the issue before us today is the Soviet bloc, its denial of liberty, and the response that this government has or has not given to that question. I am in a bit of a dilemma, Mr. Speaker, and I say this candidly as a democrat, socialist, and Canadian, in coming to grips directly with this question. It is one thing to talk about what one can do within one's own state or one's society at a given time in order to achieve human liberty for one's own people or one's own community. The question we are really debating today, if I understand it correctly, is really what can one nation state do about influencing the development of liberty in another nation state. It is a difficult question, and anyone who is concerned about war and peace, and about civilized relationships between nations, as well as human liberty for people within a nation, has to come to grips with it.

We cannot simply rely on rhetoric or eloquent phrases about the need to promote liberty in other nation states. One has to come to grips with this serious question, when talking about national politics, of the limitations, if they exist, and the course of action that is open to one nation state believing in liberty, in terms of its effect on achieving liberty for individuals in other states where that liberty is being denied. This is the basic concern that we should be facing in this debate.

One of the elementary ways that a country, whether it is Canada or any other country, can demonstrate its concern about liberty and basic rights is to demonstrate, with unequivocal commitment, with unequivocal day to day action, its own demonstrable belief in liberty by practising that at home and by preserving and ensuring that the practices of freedom where they exist are maintained.

I have not been impressed by the present government's commitment to the basic principles of civil liberty as reflected in our systems, as they pertain directly to the principle of the rule of law. The minister who just sat down coined one of the great abominations in terms of language of politics in this decade not many months ago when he said, "From time to time in Canada the rule of reason ought to replace the rule of law." Anyone who knows about the rule of law and what it means in this country would shudder, I am sure, when they heard that abomination coming from that minister in the context of a serious debate about the limitations of the actions of the RCMP and the appropriate response of ministers of the Crown in exercising control over the RCMP. That whole issue has, in the view of myself and every person in this country who is concerned with liberties—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The Minister of State (Multiculturalism). (Mr. Cafik) on a point of order.

Mr. Broadbent: I would debate—

Mr. Cafik: It is a point of order, not a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member rose on a point of order. The Minister of State (Multiculturalism).

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take away from the time allotted to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), but he said that I said that the rule of reason ought to replace the rule of law. If I recall the context of my remarks and my remarks, I was really saying that the rule of reason is the rule of law. It is defined in many legal corners historically that law is the rule of reason, and that was what I was talking about. I would have thought the hon. member was intelligent enough to know that.

An hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Broadbent: The hon. member has certainly demonstrated in the clearest possible way his attitude of having the rule of reason replace the rule of law, for if ever there was a non-point of order, that was it. There is no one, Mr. Speaker, who misunderstood the minister's remarks at the time, and I say that not as a cheap shot to a particular minister in this instance, but the whole ministry, as at the time—the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais), the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and the minister for multiculturalism (Mr. Cafik)—it showed at the peak period of the debate about the mishandling of internal security matters by this government a shoddy respect for the whole principle of the rule of law, a shoddy neglect of the importance of preserving civil liberties. I have no intention of documenting that today, because we are on another matter.

I am saying that in any democracy one way of demonstrating clearly your own commitment to the principles of liberty is to practise that at home, and that is not what we have had in an unequivocal fashion from this government.

I would like now to shift to the other part of the motion which makes specific reference to the Soviet bloc countries. Mr. Speaker, at the end of my remarks I will deal with what I think are severe limitations in a nation state having an effect on the liberty of other countries. One of the things that we can do and should do from time to time, not in any state of self righteousness but hopefully because it reflects our commitment to the age old notion of human liberty, is bear witness to what is actually going on in other countries in the world.

Every speech about freedom should not merely be political rhetoric of a self-serving nature. From time to time world leaders, prime ministers and others, have an obligation—as I think President Carter has demonstrated in the past couple of years—to speak out about liberty beyond the borders of their own nations and to give visible evidence of its denial, to show visible concern to the people within other states and to say that the situation ought to be rectified.

There is no doubt in my mind that the Helsinki Accord, which was ratified by the heads of 35 states three years ago, has been violated in a serious way by countries in the Soviet bloc. The expectations that were generated at the outset of the revolution in the Soviet Union at the conclusion of the first world war were for the emancipation of people in that part of the world in the fullest possible way. What we have seen is a regime, from Lenin on, that has imposed perhaps the most restrictive and coercive set of bureaucratic, to use a euphemism, practices which have denied human liberty.

There has been vivid demonstration of that in the works of Solzhenitsyn, and recently vivid and disturbing evidence has been brought forward that psychiatric practice even in the Soviet Union today is being used and perverted to equate discontent and criticism of the Soviet regime as visible demonstration of schizophrenia. It is being actively pursued by people who call themselves psychiatrists in the Soviet Union. It is a clear and utter abuse of the principles of human health sciences if there ever was one, Mr. Speaker.

There has been in the Soviet Union, of course, the persistent repression of cultural minorities. The Ukrainians stand out, perhaps, in our country as the largest group numerically. Many of us have been involved in individual cases of men and women who have dared to speak out simply for the right to emphasize their own cultural distinctiveness, their own uniqueness as part of the Soviet bloc. There is the case of Valentyn Moroz which is an outstanding example, but there have been many others. The reality is that the Soviet Union, preceding the Helsinki Agreement and post Helsinki, violates human rights in a way that is not acceptable to men and women anywhere who believe in the principles of freedom.

In the context of this motion I want to do what I think politicians in free societies ought to do from time to time, and that is to talk about a particular event that is going on that demonstrates the perversion of the principles of human liberty. In this particular instance I want to talk about that beautiful, exciting, creative country on the one hand, but also sad and deeply disturbing country on the other, namely, Czechoslovakia.

There have been few countries in modern history that have had the opportunity for the complete flowering of human liberty in all its aspects, including human equality, that compare with Czechoslovakia. It is a small country in the heart of Europe, highly industrialized, highly creative in the arts, highly developed in all the early principles of liberal democracy. In cycles beginning in 1938, then 1968—and I think in 1978 we are going to witness it again—it has had experiences of a particular cataclysmic nature that have denied the flowering of human liberty in that country. This is what a lot of us, experiencing and watching the development of mankind in this century, had hoped would not take place. We had hoped to see a more positive and creative society emerge.

Just over a year ago in that remarkable country an 1,800-word statement was signed. It was a terse statement, relatively devoid of rhetoric, but moving because of that. It was signed initially by about 200 people in Czechoslovakia, and in it an appeal was made to the Czechoslovakian government, and beyond that to all the people of the world, to look at what was happening in the denial of basic human liberties in that land—the denial of free speech, of the right to worship, the right to privacy, and the right to due process of law.

In signing that the participants were making two claims, first, that the Helsinki Accord was being violated, and second, in terms of the principles allegedly maintained in the constitution of their own country, their rights were not being adhered to but were being denied. Signing that petition were liberals, socialists, communists, religious, and artistic people of no particular political persuasion. It represented a cross-section of the Czech community who wanted nothing more than basic human liberty. The statement itself was neither anti-state nor anti-socialist. It was produced by a group of people who were primarily fighting for the liberty of their fellow citizens.

Interestingly enough, the document was not written as an appeal for the freedom of that particular category usually described as intellectuals—novelists, musicians, university professors, lawyers and so on. It was concerned that the freedom that is being denied in Czechoslovakia, that is being denied today, is having its most regressive effects on the ordinary working people of that country.

One of the signers of that charter was a distinguished historian by the name of Karel Bartosek. In signing this document he drew attention to the fact that what was of particular concern to him and his friends was that ordinary disasters such as a mining disaster that had taken place in Czechoslovakia were not reported in the news because of censorship.

That is the point I want to make in my remarks today, Mr. Speaker, about the effects of the denial of freedom of expression in a country like Czechoslovakia, Romania, the Soviet Union, or any other country that denies freedom of expression. What they are doing is not simply curtailing the right of a handful of intellectuals to express their views, much more important in numerical terms is the fact that they are denying the right to have the problems of ordinary people, whether they be industrial workers or farmers, discussed and debated. That, basically, is what the charter of 1977 was all about.

Perhaps the most distinguished signatory of that charter was Professor Jan Patocka of Czechoslovakia, who is considered by many to be among the two or three outstanding philosophers in the history of that country. He was 69 when he signed it a year and four months ago, so it was a matter of considerable courage on his part. We can make speeches about other countries, but it takes no particular courage to do that. It took a lot of courage for this man to sign this document at the age of 69.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

I want to quote what he said about the importance of liberty in a country like Czechoslovakia. He said:

● (1652)

> Without a moral basis, without a conviction which does not stem from opportunity, circumstances or expected advantages, no society can function, regardless of how advanced it is technically . . . (but) it is not man who defines a moral order according to arbitrary needs, wishes, tendencies and desires. On the contrary, it is morality which defines the man . . . the notion of an international pact regarding human rights—

He was talking about the Helsinki Accord.

> —means only this: societies place themselves under the sovereignty of a moral belief . . . It is to this conviction that Charter 77 is responding.

Just shortly after he signed that petition, within a matter of weeks, in part because of harassment that he received in the Czechoslovakian state, he died.

I notice that my time is just about up, but the point I want to make in this all too brief allusion to Czechoslovakia is that there are certain things we can do in a nation state that is apart from another nation state in which liberties are being denied. One is that from time to time we should describe that reality. I say in all seriousness that the Prime Minister has not been among world leaders in that respect, in my view. I do not recall the Prime Minister making a speech, either in the House of Commons or outside, on basic liberties, giving concrete examples where they are being denied in other states, where he has made an appeal to the international community to bring its moral force to bear in showing those people in other states that we care about their freedom. I would fault the Prime Minister on that score, because he should do more about it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure if the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) were to seek unanimous consent of the House for an extension of time, there would be a willingness in the House to grant him that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): If there is unanimous consent in the House, the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party may continue.

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, it would not be the purpose of this side of the House to inhibit anyone speaking. But I would like members to remember that there was an actual agreement, with two speakers allotted 30 minutes, one of them being the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the other a speaker from the government side. Other speakers are allotted 20 minutes each. If we continue too much longer there will be some hon. members who will be knocked off the bottom of the list. I caution hon. members in that regard. That is why we heard a "no" from this side of the House in regard to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), whom we normally respect and give unlimited time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I would like to suggest that we have four more speakers and there is one hour and five minutes at our disposal. Hon. members may divide this time up among themselves. The Chair is in your hands.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will continue. I want to thank my colleagues in the House for giving me extra time. I will not abuse that privilege and I will conclude my remarks very quickly.

I said that there was one area in which the nation state and politicians in that nation state can have an influence from time to time. It cannot be abused, but from time to time we have an obligation to speak out about the denial of liberty in other countries.

A second point I wanted to emphasize is that our best way of influencing liberty in other countries, without exaggerating our role and capacity to act on what happens in another state, is to practise those principles at home in order to give a visible demonstration that we intend to implement, within our own country, the principles of liberty about which we talk.

My final point concerns an issue touched upon by both the minister who spoke and the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). It was not fully developed, and it seems to me that it would be worth while pursuing it at another stage of this debate. In a world of nation states, what kinds of limited action can we take from the point of view of state power vis-à-vis another state? One suggestion which has been made in terms of other states that clearly violate human rights in an unequivocal way, pertains to aid programs. We should have nothing to do with aid programs for states in that kind of position. I agree with that. Beyond that minimal point, what can we do?

Can we close our doors to trade completely? Can we close our doors to other forms of human communication? I think not. We have to maintain some connection and communication. At least at the state to state level we can maintain some modicum of civilized existence, with the ultimate hope that the free societies, by demonstration of their freedom at home, will thus influence the development of freedom in other states.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it is rather refreshing to hear and follow the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) in this debate. He has evidently proven that it is possible to speak on this topic refraining from narrow partisan consideration and from exercising the kind of synthetic rage that was displayed earlier, at the beginning of the debate, by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark), followed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). Both hon. members did not even take the trouble to attend the Belgrade conference and one really does not know whether they are in agreement or not.

If one looks for a moment at the wording of the motion before us today, which regrets "the inadequate response" of the Canadian government and criticizes it particularly in relation to violation by the Soviet Union and the communist bloc of the Helsinki Accord, one inevitably concludes that the Progressive Conservative party supports and agrees with the concept of the Helsinki Accord. Otherwise they would not mention that Accord in their motion. Having done so, in the speech given by the right hon. member for Prince Albert, he comes pretty close to a rejection of the content and spirit and the objective of the Helsinki Accord. So we have the Leader of the Opposition using the Helsinki Agreement as a document against which we should measure our performance, and criticizing us for not having lived up to it, followed by one of his frontbenchers, perhaps not openly criticizing, but coming pretty close to expressing the thought that he has no time and no support for that very same agreement. If that is a display of unity in that party on a fundamental issue like this—

An hon. Member: You are sucking lemons, Charlie.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Caccia: —on the sales tax we will be distracted on another occasion to demonstrate division on the other side as well. I would like to stick to the subject in the limited time available.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert displayed one of his old chestnuts which has been raised since the signing of the Helsinki Agreement, namely, saying this document in a way finalizes frontiers in Europe as inevitable, a conclusion about which nothing can be done. Nothing is further from the truth.

From the Helsinki Agreement Final Act at page 4, the second paragraph under the section headed "I. Sovereign equality, respect for the rights inherent in sovereignty" reads:

> Within the framework of international law, all the participating States have equal rights and duties. They will respect each other's right to define and conduct as it wishes its relations with other States in accordance with international law and in the spirit of the present Declaration. They consider that their frontiers can be changed,—

And I repeat "can be changed".

It continues:

> —in accordance with international law, by peaceful means and by agreement.

This is the point that does not seem to have been recognized, accepted, and perhaps even understood by the critics of the Helsinki Agreement.

Another criticism which was raised in the course of the debate earlier in the afternoon was one that related to the question that somehow, as a result of the Helsinki Agreement, free worship—I believe it was the Leader of the Official Opposition who made the criticism—has not been the subject of concern and has not been the subject of improvements in the ensuing years since 1975. I have news for the official opposition leader. If he had researched the subject matter before making his speech this afternoon, he would have learned that the representative of the Holy See made a speech in Belgrade on October 7, 1977. Monsignor Silvestrini made an intervention on behalf of the Holy See. I have a report of what he said about religious freedoms. It is only from one page that I will quote:

● (1702)

> As regards religious freedoms it is an undeniable fact that the Final Act said "go" to this positive process although it is still at the start. This is, in particular, sufficiently clear as regards circulation and meetings of persons and communications from country to country.

Indeed there have been confirmed encouraging developments in this field as far as we are concerned, by the various churches and various denominational groups. But in particular, as regards the Catholic church, of which I am particularly competent to speak, it is satisfying to note that a certain number of positive facts without doubt have been proved. Above all, there has been recorded a broader flow, a fairly steady one, of travel facilities for religious motives. Travel for bishops to come to Rome for their visit "ad limina" (as we know this is a visit which should be made every five years to the Pope by the bishops, and this year indeed it includes the turn of the European countries), or also for travel for bishops and other ecclesiastics to attend important meetings of the Holy See, or participation by monks and nuns in the general chapter of their order, or other conventions in Rome, or other places in Europe and America; or again, participation of bishops, priests, groups of the laiety in major international manifestations of a religious nature; like the Holy Year which took place at Rome in 1975, and the International Eucharistic Congress of Philadelphia in 1976—or for pilgrimages to European sanctuaries, both east and west. Furthermore we can note more frequent meetings and exchanges of visits among representatives of the Episcopy of various countries, more numerous concessions for priests who have emigrated to visit their own families at home, and a certain number of young ecclesiastics who have been sent to take study courses in cultural, theological university institutes in Rome and elsewhere.

In the same way in the field of means of communication and information, we can record the concessions given to religious communities to print locally a certain number of prayer books and catechisms, the authorization given to send some thousand religious publications (gospels, bibles, catechisms) or liturgical publications (missals, ritual for the administration of the sacraments, brevaries for priests and religious works of piety), to Catholic communities who previously could neither print nor import; furthermore, the now unhindered reception without interference for some radio religious programs, like the Radio Vatican broadcasts.

These measures, which we stress with satisfaction, correspond to commitments in the Final Act and have begun to modify—even though it is but partially so far, and not to the same extent everywhere, a previous situation which in the field of communications and relations from one country to another, was previously one of rigid and discouraging frustration.

These words are from one of the top diplomats at the Holy See who commented in October, 1977, at Belgrade about the progress being made there in terms of religious freedom. They are by an individual who certainly has a much greater understanding than the one displayed by the spokesmen for the official opposition this afternoon on the complexity of this issue and the slowness with which this progress has to take place.

One would imagine that the Leader of the Opposition or the right hon. member for Prince Albert expected the day after the signing of the Helsinki Agreement an immediate change, from night to day, in the conditions prevailing in the countries in eastern Europe. That is naive. I will comment later on our present approach of exercising quiet diplomacy. However, they expect there ought to be an immediate, radical, and profound change to bring about a society in those eastern countries which would adopt the same kind of values, communications and general freedoms as we know them in Canada. That is simply absurd and unreal.

I do not think the Leader of the Opposition or the right hon. member for Prince Albert achieved anything useful or substantial except increasing their electoral support in Canada by making the kind of statements they made this afternoon. That is cheap politics, catering to the vote at home. It certainly will not earn them one bit of respect, recognition or influence in the international fora in the world outside this building and away from this Hill where we have to operate, and deal with those groups of nations of competing ideologies and competing systems.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert tried to treat us to a great performance of his own, allowing his ego to be expanded all over the place. He really did not do much service to the cause of human rights in which we definitely share. The Progressive Conservative party has no monopoly by expounding the view it has.

In concluding the first part of my remarks, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby is to be commended for approaching the matter in a cool, substantial and broad sense, not dealing with human rights in a narrow, partisan political consideration.

The Leader of the Opposition in his very excellent French made reference to le manque de volonté des dirigeants Soviétiques in the sense there is a lack of will on the part of the Soviet leadership in implementing the Helsinki Agreement. In that reference he also said trop de reticence de la part du gouvernement Canadien, too much reluctance on the part of the Canadian government to deal with them.

I cannot comment about the attitudes of the Soviet leaders. However, I can certainly tell hon. members, some of whom will participate in this debate, who were in Belgrade, that there was certainly no reticence on the part of the Canadian delegation and Canadian government in giving direction and inspiration from Ottawa, to our officials in Belgrade. Daily they expressed forcefully and openly our deep concern about the question of human rights and the slowness of implementation contained in the Helsinki Agreement on the part of some of the Eastern European countries.

I spent five weeks in Belgrade on the Third Basket committee which dealt with the question of human context, human exchanges, religious freedoms and all of that subject. There was not one day when the representatives of the Canadian government, through officials of External Affairs, did not hammer away at representatives of the Soviet Union, sometimes to a degree almost unusual by standards of Canadian performance in the past, persisting, protesting, and making the point about the high degree of discontent expressed by the western communities and the Canadian people about their slowness of performance, a slowness on the part of the Soviet Union and other eastern countries in coming closer to achieving the objectives contained in the Final Act.

It is easy for us to point the finger and expect more from countries which are not under our control, countries which have their own sovereignty and jurisdiction. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby stated earlier it is easy to make great speeches until one has to face the reality of an international forum.

One of the basic achievements of the Helsinki Agreement is that it is possible to bring to discussion around the bargaining table those countries with which we evidentally have ideological disagreements, to express our criticism of their shortcomings in implementing some parts of the Act which ought to be implemented. It offers them the same opportunity. We are ourselves not entirely free of blame when it comes to the issue of human rights. We were criticized while we were there for our treatment of our native people—our shortcomings in this area were exploited to the full—and our critics were able to refer to other social shortcomings in western society. So there is an exchange of views and, at the same time, I believe, there is a slow but progressive move toward liberalization and the implementation of some of the basic freedoms in which the world of public opinion so largely believes.

One thing became evident in those days in Belgrade. It is that the eastern European countries are not wholly insensitive to world opinion, as may sometimes seem to be the case from here. They are concerned about it and they try, either by cover-up tactics, to answer criticism or, at least, to give the impression that they are above criticism. Whether we can bring them to our standards and to the implementation of the basic principles in which we believe, in a matter of years or decades, is a big question. I believe it is a matter of decades, because it is hard to expect that monolithic systems which for centuries have been based on a different theory of government can quickly accept an entirely different approach to the role of the citizen, of the judiciary, and of the state.

We have been accused of lack of will to play a leading role in securing human rights. This view was expressed by the Leader of the Opposition. If the hon. gentleman wants proof of the kind of role we played in Belgrade I would urge him to read extracts from the speeches and interventions made by Canadian representatives between October, 1977, and March, 1978. They are in print. They have been published by the Department of External Affairs, and they give a wide-ranging sample of major interventions on the part of Canada. These extracts should be enough to show that we did, in fact, play a leading role, making our views known at every opportunity. The booklet to which I have just referred contains only excerpts from speeches and contributions made during plenary sessions; it contains no record of Canadian interventions during meetings of the committees which were held every day—it would take an encyclopedia to incorporate all of those. Nevertheless, it was in committee we were most vocal and determined to play precisely the kind of role the opposition accuses us of failing to play.

Critics of Canada's diplomacy should ask themselves which is likely to be the more productive, the quiet diplomacy or the strident kind, the kind of diplomacy which attempts to get the best possible deal from other countries or that which is designed to go down well at home. Anyone who has had experience of the United Nations, or the Belgrade meetings, or any other international forum must conclude—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Human Rights

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to join in this debate on the motion introduced by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark). The motion of the hon. member deals with a very touchy subject in which I have been interested for quite some time. The violations of human rights in the world are a major obstacle to the harmonious development of the nations and co-operation between them. A long time before the conclusion of the Helsinki Final Act came the UN Universal Charter of Human Rights.

When looking briefly at the tense situation which is developing today just about everywhere in the world and where on a daily basis individuals are denied their fundamental liberties, we realize that these beautiful resolutions still have to be implemented. People had hoped that after the signing of the Final Act of Helsinki detente between the two blocs would become a reality for all their citizens. The final act is rather clear on that issue. All participating states are bound to respect human rights and fundamental liberties such as freedom of thought, of conscience, of religion and of political persuasion. The signatory states are also supposed to favour and encourage the effective practice of civil and political rights, as well as economic, social and cultural rights as well as others which pertain to human dignity. What have the Soviet bloc nations done to implement this act to which they have subscribed? Newspapers keep reporting violations of the Helsinki accords by the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia. And there are still many cases that will never be known to the press.

The Belgrade conference which followed the Helsinki conference and which was to consider the progress made since the final agreement was signed was a monumental farce. It became quite obvious that that conference was going nowhere. Every intervention in favour of the upholding of human rights in the Soviet Union was seen by Moscow representatives as interference in their internal affairs. Mr. Speaker, must we remain insensitive to citizens being denied their basic rights simply because they do not live here? Should we close our eyes to the massacres in Uganda, the military regimes in Africa and Latin America, the racist regime in South Africa? No, Mr. Speaker. Human rights are the responsibility of all conscious citizens in the whole world. There is in Czechoslovakia a movement called Charter 77 which was formed by individuals concerned with the indifference of their government vis-à-vis the Helsinki Accords.

Those individuals monitor the implementation of the principles in the final act in their country. It is through that association that the foreign press can get information on the situation with respect to human rights in eastern countries. In a recent document, the spokesmen for Charter 77 show that in that country which is signatory to the Helsinki agreement, nearly 30,000 persons are placed in preventive custody every year. And I did say, Mr. Speaker, in preventive custody. They are locked up before they criticize the regime out loud. A recent piece of news informed us that many known signatories to that charter are arrested without any other form of trial and bullied during questionings.

Another recent event took place in the Soviet Union. Physicist Youri Orlov was sentenced to seven years in labour camp and five years in exile. The only thing they could find against Mr. Orlov was being the leader of the Helsinki group which was trying to monitor the implementation of the Helsinki agreements in the U.S.S.R. Mr. Orlov is only the last of several Soviet dissidents who cherish human rights and have all been sentenced to maximum penalties. Earlier this month, in Rostov, 2,000 Baptists were detained following a religious demonstration. And what about the inhuman situations that Soviet Jews must endure before emigrating to Israel? Those people must wait years, lose all their rights and belongings before being able to leave that country in very small numbers.

In light of that situation and the obvious repression that exists in the U.S.S.R. and Czechoslovakia there is no protest from this government. Can we accept, Mr. Speaker, that our government should remain quiet in face of those flagrant violations of human rights and the brutality to which dissidents are submitted?

It is true that lately, given such bills as the legislation on mail interception, the performance of the government concerning human rights is rather inadequate. In the introduction of a booklet entitled "Canada at Belgrade," the Secretary of State for External Affairs said about the preliminary steps to the conclusion of the Helsinki Final Act and I quote:

> Canada was particularly active in promoting the practical down-to-earth expressions of human rights, such as the freer movement of people and the freer flow of ideas.

In the present situation, Mr. Speaker, the minister should have said instead that Canada was particularly passive in promoting the practical down-to-earth expressions of human rights. Apparently the government is not overly concerned about those rights. It is true that with the sales tax issue we forgot some very important problems. We must recognize that if some freedoms are endangered in the world, they are our owns.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, let me repeat the advice I gave to the people of the Dominion of Canada English Speaking Association who sent me a document in which they asked for the abolition of French language rights in Canada. In a letter published by the newspaper Le Droit, two weeks ago I said:

> As long as there are language barriers and as long as any one of us suffers from discrimination because his language is not that of the majority or because he is different from those who consider themselves as the sole depositaries of truth and right, none of us can really be sure about his already limited freedoms.

The government should implement the principle that man is there to be loved. Dignity is to be the object of unconditional love.

• (1722)

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I realize that the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) would like to contribute to this debate, and I will cut my remarks short so that he will have at least half the time which might be available to both of us before the end of this debate.

I want to say at the outset that in a debate as important as this it is only natural for those of us who live in political life to become involved in a political way, but the reason of a person such as myself for trying to insist on the timing of speeches in this debate was to ensure that it might be possible that the two final speakers, in this case the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe and myself, might be able to speak.

I remember as a young Canadian considering the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) to be an outstanding Prime Minister in the area of human rights. I also remember that in his day the late Right Hon. Lester Pearson was also considered to be a man who made great contributions at the United Nations regarding human rights. I think it is rather unfortunate and unexpected that in a matter as important as this, regardless of political feelings—and we may disagree on methods—that some do not recognize that in his speeches in the last few days on disarmament and NATO, which are not unrelated to this matter, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) put Canada in the forefront, and Canadian policy in the forefront, regarding human rights. I think that should be accepted and understood clearly.

In his speech on disarmament at the United Nations the Prime Minister said, and I quote:

> I believe world security would be seriously diminished by the further spread of nuclear weapons and that it is the responsible course for governments to pursue policies based on the presumption that proliferation can be stopped.

There have been innuendoes today that the Prime Minister has not said anything against the neutron bomb. He has indicated clearly his desire that this kind of build-up should not occur. This is closely associated with human rights, because if a neutron bomb were dropped here today, the desks would be here, the lights would be here, the cameras would be here, and the building would be here, but we would not. Not even a fly would be here. The neutron bomb is an attack on life itself. It is not a simple war weapon, and therefore when we deal with disarmament we are dealing with something which vitally involves human rights. When we deal with NATO, we are involved with the same thing.

The Prime Minister has also pointed out that when we talk about security and security of individuals and nations, we have to realize that those nations in the so-called atomic pact feel the necessity to create balances for their security. Others who are involved with conventional arms feel the necessity of having 30,000 tanks for security. Others feel they need 20,000 aircraft for security. Those of us who want disarmament are apprehensive about the security of all those who live on this planet, and therefore we want a reduction in arms.

We cannot achieve security by telling others that they should not have concern about their security. Sometimes our stand in NATO should be that we must together be certain that we are adequately armed for security purposes, but our stance in the United Nations must sometimes also be that we should achieve some methods whereby we can stop further development of weapons and then begin to disarm. It was a dream after the first world war. It was a dream at Geneva. This is the first time someone has tried to revive that dream in the presence of all nations. It is an important dream. If we remember that it is a political dream, then we can move into the arena of civil rights. We must understand that the armed forces and those matters of defence and security are arms of political policy which do not in themselves make political policy.

Perhaps the Prime Minister does not speak in the same manner as members of the opposition parties or other members of parliament. But he is speaking as most Canadians and most members of parliament want him to speak. We speak for disarmament. We speak for security for ourselves. We speak and have concern for the human rights of others. The first time the Prime Minister spoke at the United Nations, he brought forth a concrete suggestion as to how we might proceed with concern. He brought forth the so-called strategy of suffocation.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacFarlane: I should like to remind the hon. member that this is not something to laugh at. At least it is a starting point. Referring to the neutron bomb and its attack on life, we say that there should be a completely agreed upon test ban. Why? Because we cannot stop minds from thinking, scientists from working, or laboratory work. If we have a test ban, the work of scientists is confined to laboratories. They cannot go out and do repeated tests in an attempt to discover a weapon greater than the neutron bomb. The test ban is very important. At least it will keep the control of new developments in the laboratories.

A second area involved in the strategy of suffocation, or putting the lid on the jar, is to place a ban on the flight testing of vehicles which deliver weapons. Both of these points are terribly important to the world. That fact can be verified. We must be honest about it. It is a fact that we trust each other and we love each other. All God's children love each other, but all God's children usually check on each other. We must attempt to do these things together. We can check flight testing of vehicles and flight delivery systems. Those two things are possible in this world.

Also we should check the distribution of material for war use. We can check the actual production and development of new weapons. If we check those three areas, the further production of war instruments which would be an attack on life itself can be suffocated.

The fourth proposition is an interesting one. We must look at the actual expenses each country puts into the production of nuclear devices for war. If an institution were set up in order to study matters in a world-like manner, we would be aware of what each country puts into that segment known as its so-called security. Then we would be placed in a position where we could say: is this reasonable for the Soviet Union, for the United States, or for Canada?

Canada is a country of many capabilities. It has had a series of governments. I have respect for hon. members opposite. All Canadians are the same. Canada has not developed atomic warfare weapons on its soil. We made that choice. I doubt whether any political party would come forward and indicate that we should. Through the expense strategy, we could suffocate further the greater development of atomic weapons. That is the first step. It must be followed by a more major step which is closer to the area of civil rights.

Civil rights seem to be impinged on by more conventional ideas. They are dealt with by people with conventional weapons. They come in the midst of the night and knock on doors. They take people to prisons and torture them. They do not allow people to speak out concerning their opinions. If we can arrive at some agreement in the first area, then we could reach the conventional area.

Since 1945 there have been 135 or 138 conflicts. Approximately 80 countries have been involved in these conflicts. As a result of them, 25 million people have died. Not one atomic bomb has been dropped. Thus, those people have been killed by conventional weapons, or perhaps they have been secreted away somewhere.

At this time we are involved in a debate which I hope will continue. I hope the young are attracted to this issue. I hope it is discussed in our schools. It is at the very root of Canada's destiny. They should listen to the attitude we portray to the world, as well as what is said of import.

During the great days of the Japanese they developed printed circuits, small radios, and technical equipment which became so important to us. At the same time, the Americans and Russians sent people to the moon. Because of our attitudes and the kind of people we are, perhaps we will solve our own differences of opinion. Perhaps we will bring forth new fathers of confederation and a new constitution. Perhaps we will bring forth new ideas on disarmament, civil rights and attitudes. Perhaps attitude is the great export Canada has to offer to the world. This is an important chance for us.

We must remember the time when Portia White was turned away from places in Canada. She was a beautiful contralto, a beautiful singer from Halifax. She was a beautiful negro woman who was turned away. We must remember Marian Anderson who was not allowed to stay at the Royal York Hotel when she was speaking at a Canadian Club luncheon. We must remember North Hatley in Quebec with its signs which read: "Dogs and Jews not admitted, Christians only". Those of us who lived in Canada and were required to face those things understand what human rights are all about. We have a right to change such attitudes. We are far ahead in our own freedoms, but we must not forget that Belgrade is far more important to the mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters and relatives in Canada who have families elsewhere in the world who are much more maligned than us.

The motion before us is an important one. Although it tends to be critical of the government, its aim is to get at the fact that something must be done about human rights in the world. Are we going to do something? We must have good discussions on this. We should remember that we have a good Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson). He is capable of speaking well, logically, solidly, and honestly on this subject. He would have participated in this debate if it had not been necessary for him to go to Washington. He is in Washington facing another phase of civil rights in the NATO meetings. We should remember that we have a Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Cafik). By taking on that portfolio, he stands for all the ethno-cultural groups in Canada. Automatically he must associate himself with the hopes, aspirations, and loves of those people for their loved ones in other countries.

All of us should remember that we can make our lives sublime, as great men in history have done. The footprints of Canada in the sands of time must be strong. We must be prepared to put our lives forward for the lives of brothers and sisters in Europe, Asia, Russia or Africa. Canada must play its role in the world. We must come forward to be counted.

The Prime Minister, the cabinet, government members, opposition members and senators, as a federation must guarantee the human rights and the dignity of individuals. Human rights are important. We must support disarmament, because the newest development is an attack on life itself. We should do something to improve this planet for our existence, and then move on to social and political problems which will be even more difficult.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane) for being courteous by allowing me some of his allotted time in order to participate in this very important subject this afternoon.

● (1742)

I think, Mr. Speaker, as others have already said, that the subject of human rights and the concern that all of us in this House I am sure have regarding this important issue, are far too important to be the subject of political partisanship, but instead should be an all embracing concern for all of us in parliament if we are ever to be successful is not only guaranteeing and upholding the human rights of every individual in Canada but, equally important, in our universal fight to uphold the sacred human rights of all human beings in every corner of the world as well.

Having said that, I have to say I was greatly disappointed and dismayed by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) who, instead of trying to make a contribution to this very important discussion here this afternoon, chose to use most of his time in berating and highly criticizing the contributions of others members of the House who participated in this debate in good faith and with an earnest desire to seek progress in our constant fight to improve the progress of human rights throughout the globe. I am sure this type of diplomacy, as exhibited here this afternoon, would have a very low priority in discussions of human rights, or in any other discussions, for that matter.

Canadians as a race, I think, are inclined to be complacent about human rights. We are even more inclined to forget that we have some responsibility for what is happening in other parts of the world and that what is happening in other parts of the world can and does affect the kind of life we can live here in Canada.

At times we take for granted our basic human rights; freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom to worship, and even a right to a certain standard of living. These are accepted without question. It is not always easy for Canadians to comprehend the harsh realities of life in Eastern Europe where about 300 million people languish under an oppressive police rule, their families are held hostage, their freedom of movement is curtailed, and no aspect of their lives is without surveillance of some sort.

Several years ago the Helsinki conferences were convened in an attempt to promote détente in Europe and to reach some sort of international consensus on the recognition of human liberties and rights. The rights of individuals, families and cultures were explicitly recognized by the 35 signatories to the Helsinki Agreement.

The recent review of the implementation of the Helsinki pact has made clear that the Soviet Union and its satellites are not living up to their promise to observe in practice those principles set out at Helsinki.

Anxious to secure the legitimization of its post-war boundaries, the Soviet Union was perfectly willing to give voice to its support for human rights. In action, however, it deliberately and systematically falls short. Numerous violations of the Helsinki accords are now coming to light, the most recent involving the sentencing of Yuri Orlov, who was tried and convicted for the so-called crime of monitoring the Soviet Union's human rights performance against the pledge made in Helsinki.

The Nobel prize winner Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, Amnesty International, the Samizdat Sources, the ever increasing number of dissidents in the Soviet Union, and various publications in the west, have well documented the suppression of liberty and the gross violation of human rights within the U.S.S.R. and its controlled satellite countries. All along, the Soviets have insisted upon their right to do as they please on their own home territory. However, the gross and systematic violation of human rights must be regarded as an international concern and no longer as the exclusive preserve of the domestic jurisdiction of the country concerned.

The approach of the government with respect to this issue has been, on the whole, one of quiet diplomacy. Apparently the government hopes that by means of behind the scenes negotiations it will be able to influence the policies of the Eastern bloc countries on such issues as family reunification, freedom of movement, and the unjust imprisonment of Soviet dissidents. The over-all results have been less than satisfactory.

Yuri Orlov is only one of several dissidents who have been harassed or imprisoned this past year for attempting to monitor the Soviet government's performance under the Helsinki Accord. Though it has become somewhat easier for a westerner to travel in the Soviet Union, the movement of Soviet citizens is still severely restricted, and the whole question of family reunification is far from resolved.

The Canadian Ukrainian Immigrant Aid Society, in cooperation with the Department of External Affairs, recently undertook a project of conducting a Canada-wide compilation and analysis of the reunification problem. The results indicated that in the majority of cases there has not been settlement for periods of over 30 years and, in many instances, for over 50 years. Most tragic of all is the length of time involved. Many have been attempting to reunify immediate families for over a quarter of a century, and some for half a century.

It is time our government took a more vocal and outspoken position. It is apparent that the situation will not be solved through the use of regular bureaucratic channels, or by so-called quiet diplomacy.

To effect change, the violations of the Helsinki Accord must be brought to public awareness, for in the present state of international law on human rights the most effective sanction is the force of international public opinion, which is something to which even the most authoritarian governments are sensitive.

"Public opinion is the most powerful medium of all. Like religion it penetrates into the darkest corners." That is from a letter written over 150 years ago by Metternich, the authoritarian Austrian foreign minister.

I have another quotation also from a source not usually associated with concern for human rights. It is from the Wall Street Journal and states:

There is little question that the dissidents have been able to survive as they have because people abroad were listening to them.

That was in reference to Soviet dissidents.

The point is that an outspoken and vocal condemnation of the violation of human rights will have more effect than a policy of quiet diplomacy in arousing public opinion and putting pressure on Soviet authorities.

Undoubtedly, Canadians have a lot to be thankful for. Canada is a far cry from being a police state. However, can we really settle back in our chairs secure in the knowledge that Canada is a true democracy where social, economic, political, and cultural rights are fully respected? I would suggest that we cannot afford to get too complacent. One has only to read the daily press to realize that Canada has its own problems in the area of human rights.

Of course infringements on civil and human liberties in Canada are not nearly as severe as in the Soviet bloc countries. However, our own failings will have to be faced and dealt with if we are going to accept the task of acting as watchdogs over human rights in the rest of the world.

Canadians have achieved equality before the law, but in reality we fall far short of reaching the ideal of democratic freedoms. Incidents of racism and discrimination are growing at an alarming rate. It was for this reason the House felt compelled to pass a human rights act setting out the prohibited grounds of discrimination. The House also passed legislation to establish a commission to monitor the implementation of the Human Rights Act.

Unfortunately, no government can legislate away racism or discrimination. Human rights and human dignity in Canada, as elsewhere in the world, have not been and are not likely to be realized by lofty rhetoric even when enshrined in a constitution. The only way they can be achieved is by those relentless forces of social change, and by our timely response to them. It is a question of giving substance to words, by taking positive and constructive action in order to attempt to create a climate in which racism and discrimination will not flourish.

In Canada a concept of cultural pluralism and human rights is being encouraged and actively pursued in the belief that our society will become stronger and more enriched. There is no doubt about the realism of the concept. However, to attain that goal we have to translate that concept into practice. Action, not empty words or empty promises, is the course we have to take if we are really sincere in the building of our nation. It is for this reason that I support a multiculturalism policy for Canada.

I have no hesitation in stating that multiculturalism is the most suitable way of assuring not only cultural freedom but all our basic human liberties in every corner of our country. A recognition of multiculturalism in Canada assures that ethnic groups in Canada will be guaranteed their right and desire to practise and keep their traditions, language, and culture.

The universal acceptance of multiculturalism in Canada by all its citizens will mean, as well, greater respect and understanding of each other. It will also mean the disappearance of personal and institutional prejudices and the creation of a more friendly and open climate. Without the eradication of the disease of prejudice and racism, no basic human rights will ever be a reality in Canada and we will never earn the title of a truly great nation.

Because I feel so strongly about the value of a multiculturalism policy as a means to enhance human rights and human dignity, I cannot help but be very concerned about the manner in which it is being implemented by this government. It is apparent that the government is far from committed to a multicultural Canadian society, despite any outcry to the contrary. The government's hesitation to commit itself has been illustrated on a number of occasions. For instance, since the announcement of the policy in October, 1971, there have been only two full time ministers for multiculturalism, and both of these appointments were made when an election appeared imminent. That alone should indicate the lack of priority that this government gives to multiculturalism in Canada.

The recent announcement of an increase in the multiculturalism budget is undoubtedly another attempt on the part of the government to endear itself to the ethnocultural communities just prior to an election. The government has announced that the multiculturalism budget will amount to $50 million over the next five years. This sum sounds like a lot of money until it is broken down by year. The government is telling us that the multiculturalism budget will now be $10 million per year, an actual increase of slightly less than $2 million per year over the present budget.

It was something like four years ago that this government first promised to increase the multiculturalism budget to $10 million annually. It has taken the government four years, and the possibility of another election, to reiterate this promise, and from the experiences of four years ago we know there is no guarantee the government will keep this promise.

In view of the present spending practices of the multiculturalism directorate, we can expect at least 40 per cent, or $4 million, to be used on advertising and administrative expenses. A further $3 million will be spent by the cultural agencies such as the National Film Board and the Museum of Man. That leaves roughly $3 million to be used directly by the ethno-cultural communities for language and culture retention, not a very large sum when you consider that the government plans to spend $4.5 million alone in one week of Canada Day celebrations. When you consider that our ethno-cultural communities—and I am referring to those who have neither French nor English as their background—represent more than one third of the population of Canada, a budget of $10 million annually is an effrontery of the first magnitude.

Last summer the government had an opportunity to make a positive contribution to the development of the multicultural ideal in Canada, an opportunity which it failed to take advantage of. At that time a motion was introduced to amend the Immigration Act so that it could take into consideration not only the bilingual character of Canadian society but also its multicultural nature. We on this side of the House supported the motion which gave recognition to the fact that Canada is composed of many different ethnocultural groups which want to cherish their different cultures without penalty, and which want to feel they are co-equals in the building and development of Canadian society. The motion, however, was defeated by government members in the House, raising serious doubts about the sincerity of the government's intentions with respect to multiculturalism.

In view of the government's noncommital attitude, it is not surprising that many Canadians are still unfamiliar with the goals of multiculturalism policy. A recently published majority attitudes study revealed that most Canadians were really unaware of a multiculturalism policy in Canada, and those who were aware of such a policy perceived it only in the context of allowing immigrants to maintain their customs and folk traditions. It is apparent that a great deal more effort must be made before a policy of multiculturalism moves beyond indifferent acceptance to understanding and use by all Canadians regardless of their ethnic origin.

It is the belief of our party that the key to a more dynamic multiculturalism policy lies in placing more decision making responsibility with the ethnocultural communities in Canada. A first step in this direction could be achieved by changing the method of selection of the representatives to the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism. At present the members of the council are political appointments of the government. In our opinion, this is wrong. These people should be elected from the ethno-cultural communities they represent.

It is also our belief that more of an effort has to be made to try to follow through on the recommendations of the Consultative Council on Multiculturalism. Up until now the recommendations of the council have frequently been ignored, probably gathering dust in some obscure corner of the directorate. For instance, the council has repeatedly stressed the pivotal relationship of language to culture retention, recommending on several occasions that the government initiate federal-provincial agreements to introduce third language instruction in the public schools system. Needless to say, these recommendations have been largely ignored by the government.

From its inception, the council has also recommended that the mandate of the CBC be revised so as to allow for the introduction of multilingual broadcasting, but so far the results have not been very encouraging. The council further recommended that all federal cultural agencies include qualified persons of various ethno-cultural backgrounds on their governing boards.

A multiculturalism policy, to be successful, must take into consideration a broad spectrum of society, including education, the broadcasting media, newspapers and literature, the performing arts, museum programs, community cultural centres, government services, youth programs, and relations with other countries. Above all, if we are concerned with changing attitudes in Canada, then multiculturalism must be a predominant theme in the education system. From the beginning of Confederation, Mr. Speaker, cultural and linguistic questions have always been central to Canada's existence as a unified and civilized nation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being six o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 58(11), proceedings on the motion have expired. I do now leave the chair and this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

DELAY IN LOADING GRAIN SHIPS AT VANCOUVER, B.C.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of serious and pressing necessity. In light of the fact that as of May 31, 26 ships are at the port of Vancouver, of which 19 are waiting while only seven are loading because of insufficient supplies of grain due to the shortage of railway hopper and boxcars, and as of April 1 some 23,000 Canadian boxcars are in the United States being utilized for the movement of goods by the United States railways, which represents some 13,000 more boxcars than is the normal and, further, since the railways have reduced their grain-carrying fleet to 13,300 boxcars, with projections to reduce this amount to 6,300 by 1981, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn), that:

This House instruct the Minister of Transport to take immediate action to resolve this very serious economic emergency which has resulted in the loss of our reputation as a reliable grain supplier, plus a further deterioration in our balance of trade position, and also to take immediate steps to alleviate the producer of the mounting demurrage costs due to our inadequate grain handling and transportation system.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

APPOINTMENT OF FORMER MINISTER TO BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF PRIVATE INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It has been announced that Donald S. Macdonald has been elected to the board of directors of McDonnell-Douglas Corporation. Considering that this corporation is one of the front-runners for the $2.3 billion fighter aircraft contract with the federal government, and considering that Mr. Macdonald's former position as minister of finance and minister of national defence puts him in a position of special advantage to the company and is contrary to the public interest, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House request the Prime Minister to urge Mr. Macdonald to resign forthwith from his position as a member of the board of directors of the McDonnell-Douglas Corporation.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

SUGGESTED DISCOUNTING SYSTEM FOR CANADIAN-MADE PRODUCTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on an urgent and important matter.

Considering that prices go up much faster than salaries and that low income people are therefore affected by a decrease in their purchasing power, and given the obvious dissatisfaction of House of Commons employees following the review of their salary scale which was announced on May 31 last, as a partial solution to their problem I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the House urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to introduce legislation which would apply a discounting system on retail prices on all Canadian-made products to bring back consumer prices to the level of the current purchasing power of consumers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

PIPELINES

GUIDELINES AND REGULATIONS FOR ALASKA HIGHWAY PIPELINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. Having regard to the tabling of preliminary documents outlining the government's position with respect to environmental and socioeconomic guidelines in connection with the proposed Alaska Highway pipeline, and in light of the many inconsistencies, omissions and contradictions contained in the discussion paper and, further, regarding the fact that there has never been a study of the impact in socioeconomic or environmental terms in most areas touched by the pipeline, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

That the committee of the House known as the special pipeline committee be reactivated immediately with a mandate to conduct hearings and call witnesses for the purpose of establishing clear guidelines and regulations designed to safeguard the legitimate interests of all affected.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented to the House for debate only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

POST OFFICE

DELAYED DELIVERY OF MAIL IN TORONTO AREA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the inability of the Post Office to deliver the mail. I refer specifically to the situation in the Toronto post office, where the backlog of mail and parcels is so great that the post office is storing large quantities of mail and packages in an armoury instead of processing and delivering them. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles):

That this House direct the Postmaster General to acquire the necessary personnel and initiate action immediately to clear the backlog of mail in the Toronto post office and ensure a reasonable level of mail delivery in that area in the future.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING FOR EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of urgency, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), I move:

That this House recommends the immediate introduction of legislation to provide for collective bargaining for employees of the House of Commons, the Library of Parliament and the Senate, as recommended by a special joint committee on the public service as long ago as February 3, 1967, it being the view of this House that this parliament having granted the right of collective bargaining to public servants and to employees in the private sector who come under federal labour jurisdiction, we should, by comparable legislation, grant this same right to our own employees.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

SEWAGE TREATMENT PLANT FOR OUTAOUAIS, QUEBEC, REGION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) has confirmed in a letter to me dated May 26, 1978, that the planned sewage treatment plant for the Outaouais region will not control phosphate or viral pollution of the effluent, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard):

That this serious matter be referred to the appropriate standing committee for further study so that experts can be heard and recommendations made.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INCREASED CAPITAL BUDGET—COMMITMENTS TO NATO

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister will know, Canada's capital budget for our defence program will increase during the current fiscal year by $100 million, or 2.8 per cent in real terms. All of that increase, as the Prime Minister also knows, is going to replace equipment in the Canadian armed forces and is not at all the result of any increased commitment to NATO.

Can the Prime Minister tell the House of Commons whether supplementary estimates will be brought down for increased expenditures by the Department of National Defence as a result of any commitments made by Canada at the NATO summit conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is, of course, not correct in implying or even in stating that money spent by the government in national defence is not for NATO purposes. On the contrary, a great deal of the commitments made to NATO will be commitments which will be followed up through this expenditure and through this federal budget of, presently, some $4.1 billion, to be increased as the Leader of the Opposition says. There is no plan for supplementary budgets.

I would explain to the Leader of the Opposition that the commitments we have taken are the same as those of the other 14 NATO countries—13, I think, because in this particular case France has not subscribed to the commitment—and it is to adhere to the conclusions of the long-term defence planning program put forth by NATO which had been discussed by our Minister of National Defence with other ministers about ten days ago. Every leader, including myself, indicated their acceptance of these conclusions. It does not call for new expenditures beyond the ones to which the hon. Leader of the Opposition just referred. I would point out to him that these are very substantial new commitments and they are going to proceed at an increased rate of something around 3 per cent in real terms for the next several years.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, so that I clearly understand that answer and the country understands it, the Prime Minister is saying that Canada entered into no new commitments to NATO at the meeting just concluded.

My supplementary question will deal with another aspect of the Prime Minister's recent activities outside of the House of Commons. It deals with the discussion of Soviet-Cuban involvement in Africa. The conference is to take place next Monday in Paris. Would the Prime Minister tell the House of Commons whether Canada was invited to attend that conference and to participate, as a natural extension of Canada's role in the UN Security Council and, if we were invited, why did we decline to attend?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, once again the preamble to the question gives an incorrect impression. There are increased expenditures; indeed, 12 per cent in real terms to capital expenditures in the armed forces and about 3 per cent over-all. Many of these new expenditures will be for NATO purposes. On the question, Mr. Speaker, the answer is that we have not been invited.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister could tell us whether the Government of Canada sought or intends to seek the opportunity, as an extension of its Security Council responsibilities, to participate in that meeting in Paris.

Perhaps while he is answering that question the Prime Minister could also indicate to us whether it is his intention, as the leader of the government who went to the United Nations and Washington and made statements that were not discussed previously in the House of Commons, to come before the House of Commons, as is the normal practice, and to make a report in a statement on motions to the House indicating exactly what new undertakings were made by himself on behalf of Canada, and to allow some discussion of that matter in this House.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there are two or three unrelated questions in that particular question. I will try and remember them. Dealing with the last one, on the NATO side I have just given an answer to the Leader of the Opposition and I do not know what further statement he needs beyond that.

In so far as the position I took in New York on disarmament is concerned, I would point out to the Leader of the Opposition that it is contained in the white paper on defence policy that we made public in 1971. The Leader of the Opposition's predecessor would perhaps be able to hand him his copy, and he could see what was stated in it.

In so far as the Paris conference is concerned we have not been invited and we have not sought to be invited. As far as I am concerned, there is no need to be invited. We are involved in Africa in very constructive ways. The Secretary of State for External Affairs answered questions in this House the other week about our role in Namibia. The House knows that the preference of this government is to be involved in peaceful pursuits in Africa and in establishing political and social conditions on that continent which will create better conditions and prevent destabilization, rather than to come in after and try to correct the situation once it has been destabilized.

Mr. Clark: Again in the interests of clarification, is it the intention of the Prime Minister and the Government of Canada to break the practice of previous governments and, indeed, to break the practice of the previous secretary of state for external affairs, and to exclude parliament from the opportunity to discuss these undertakings or policies that Canada adopts internationally; or, instead, will the Prime Minister follow the practice and his responsibilities and report to the House of Commons, in a statement on motions, the decisions to which he has been party during the last few days in the United States?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs answered last week in the House, he has appeared before standing committees of this House and answered all questions and discussed all issues put to him. The opposition apparently was not interested in asking questions on the particular subject that the Leader of the Opposition discovered over the weekend. As far as I am concerned, I am happy to answer each and every question put to me by the opposition. I see no need for a statement, Mr. Speaker. I doubt whether the Leader of the Opposition really sees a need for a statement: he would then have to hand the floor over to one of his members to learn what his policy is on defence.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN APPROACH TO AFRICAN QUESTION

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I think it should be made clear right away that at the last external affairs committee meeting neither the minister nor his undersecretary came to answer questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roche: Returning to the question of Canada's non-involvement in the Paris Conference for African Security, I ask the minister why it is that Canada is involved in presenting the western proposal for Namibian independence, Canada is involved in trade sanctions against South Africa, and yet we are not involved and the Prime Minister is casting disdain on the security conference, which is brought about by the presence of 40,000 Cuban troops which is severely threatening security in Africa. I wish to know what standard the government applies to the security conference and is it, in fact, a double standard that we have in Africa?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since there has been some comment, perhaps I can be permitted to say that I will go back to the committee at any time. The hon. member knows that. If he would like to set it up for any time in the next month, or as long as we will be here, I will be glad to do it.

An hon. Member: Next week?

Mr. Jamieson: Next week is fine with me. I think it is important, in answering the hon. member, to make the point at the beginning that the question with regard to the conference on Zaire, if that is an appropriate name for it, and Canada's involvement in it stems from an error which was made in Paris and since has been corrected. The question stemmed from a totally false comment made by the Quai d'Orsay which they have conceded since was in error, saying in fact that we had been invited. We were never asked to involve ourselves in the first place.

It has also been described as a security conference by the hon. member. It is a quite informal grouping of Belgium, France, I believe, the United States and perhaps the United Kingdom, on the basis of asking what can be done with regard to their nationals in Zaire, and also with regard to the very specific investments which they have in that country. It is very informal. It is not being held under the auspices of any international organization. If it were held under the United Nations, then perhaps we might have been involved as members of the Security Council. It is exploratory.

Following the meetings which are to be held in Europe next week, it is conceivable that a more formal conference will be held. However, at the moment it is just a matter of these countries getting together to discuss their particular interests. As the Prime Minister has said, there is no real reason at this moment why we should seek to be involved. Indeed, it would be rather difficult to see what kind of contribution we could make in that particular situation at the moment.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, once again the government and this minister in particular have sidestepped the question of Cuban involvement in Africa which is such a serious threat to security in that country. If Canada will not take an interest in a security conference for Africa, and if Canada will not raise its voice at the Security Council of the United Nations, where we are still a member, what steps will Canada take to get Cuba out of Africa?

● (1427)

Mr. Clark: Tell us about the EDC.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, in the first place, if we are going to have this kind of discussion, I am delighted to participate. But I ask the hon. member to get the facts of the matter straight. None of the members in the NATO discussions or at the United Nations has made any direct suggestion or claim that there are, indeed, Cubans involved in the Zaire situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: Let me add in that connection that Canada made comments both in the NATO context and previously, indicating that we clearly and unmistakably deplore the involvement of both the Soviet Union and Cuba anywhere in Africa. That is on the record of this House as well as elsewhere.

The hon. member asks what we can do to get Cuba or any other foreign involvement out of Africa. With regard to Cuban involvement or any other country seeking the same kinds of incursions into Africa, we will, of course, support any initiatives which are taken within the Security Council or within the General Assembly. I come back to the point that to this moment, in any event, neither the United States nor any other country has put forward any proposals which could be considered in that forum. However, we will be quite prepared to do so and to support vigorously and without qualification a demand that Cuba get out of Africa now, without any further delay.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Why don't you be a leader and take the initiative?

Mr. Paproski: Send them a couple of DC-8s.

Mr. Roche: We will continue this next week.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

APPOINTMENT OF FORMER MINISTER TO BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF PRIVATE INDUSTRY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister on a very different subject. Considering that Donald Macdonald, former minister of finance and a former minister of national defence, has been elected to the board of directors of the McDonnell-Douglas Corporation, which corporation is one of the front-runners for the $2.3 billion fighter aircraft contract with the federal government, would the Prime Minister not agree that this action violates the principle of his own guidelines which were tabled in the House in December of 1976 and which state, in part, that a former government official should not take a position in the private sector in which he would be giving advice for commercial purposes on programs or policies of his former department?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the position of Mr. Macdonald, the former minister of finance in this government, is one which he has taken after studying the guidelines and making sure that he did adhere to them. We all know that Mr. Macdonald is an honest and scrupulous person. He did give some consideration to his position as a former minister, and I can state that the guidelines which, as the hon. member says, were tabled in this House in December of 1976, along with a letter which I wrote to ministers explaining what their duty was, have not been contravened in any way, despite what the Leader of the New Democratic Party says.

The guidelines explain a position which has to be adhered to by former officials and ministers who have privileged knowledge, during a period of one year and during a period of two years, in relation to former portfolios. I know of no contact between the McDonnell-Douglas Corporation and the Department of Finance. If the hon. member has any information to the contrary, I wish he would make it public.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I took care in my question to say that in my understanding of the guidelines, what was involved in this particular case was a violation of the principle or spirit, and I want to make it clear that I am not questioning Mr. Macdonald's personal integrity. The Prime Minister knows, and we all know, that a conflict of interest position has nothing to do with the individual integrity of a person.

The former minister of finance has himself publicly admitted that as a member of the cabinet he was involved in the discussion of the question of the purchase of fighter aircraft—which can only pertain, I think, to a future major purchase—on matters "dealing with guidance to bidders". Since Mr. Macdonald has acknowledged that as minister of finance he was involved in such negotiations, and since the corporation has submitted a bid, now that he is a member of the board of directors, surely the Prime Minister would admit that he is in a preferred position to help the corporation get a contract with the federal government.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, he is not in a preferred position, nor will his corporation be in a preferred position. I know the leader of the NDP understands the importance of what he calls the principles or the spirit of the guidelines. They were enunciated in order to give some guidance to members of any government after they had left the government, much in the same way they were given for the guidance of civil servants, particularly those in higher positions, after they had left government service.

We felt, I think, it would have the support of the House generally, and certainly of public opinion, that we should not attempt to penalize or prevent the men and women who had served their country in either the civil service or in government from ever again working at their trade, and we set a period of one and two years which was meant to create a distance between them and their former employment. We were very specific about the ethics of changing sides and advocating one case after you had defended the contrary case in the government's interest. We were specific in the guidelines in spelling out a certain number of rules which should not be broken.

My examination of the guidelines, without the benefit of talking to Mr. Macdonald since the news came out, has shown that he has not broken the letter or the spirit of the guidelines unless, of course, the spirit is meant to imply that no person who serves in government, either as a political person or as a civil servant, should thereafter be able to work in private enterprise; and this is not the spirit of the guidelines as we see it. The hon. member has in his own party a House leader who, after having left—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: As the Prime Minister will recall, the guidelines were not debated in the House but were issued by fiat of the Prime Minister himself. One of the guidelines would have pertained very directly to Mr. Macdonald if he had been a former official as opposed to being a former minister of the Crown. One of them says that for one year former officials are not to give counsel for commercial purposes on programs or policies of the government department with which they were employed during the preceding year.

If this guideline is relevant for a former official for a period of a year, why is not the same guideline strictly relevant, in principle, to a former minister of the Crown whose position of authority or power is much greater than that of an official? If it is relevant, then surely it applies in principle to the case of Mr. Macdonald.

Mr. Trudeau: The principle applies to a former department. If Mr. Macdonald had accepted a directorship in a corporation or business which had dealings with the minister of finance or the Department of Finance, then the leader of the NDP would be right. But he has not. If he had accepted the directorship of a bank—obviously, the Department of Finance and banking are closely connected—again the leader of the NDP would be correct. But there is no direct relationship between the Department of Finance and the McDonnell-Douglas Corporation which builds airplanes. It seems to me the guidelines are applicable in a fair way, and the leader of the NDP should understand it.

INQUIRY WHETHER QUESTION OF DÉTENTE RAISED WITH NATO COUNTRIES

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Further to a reply the Prime Minister just gave the Leader of the Opposition to the effect that the Canadian government has accepted to spend for NATO, or under the treaty of the NATO countries, from 12 to 30 per cent all told, can he tell us whether détente was discussed with the representatives of the members of NATO, seeing détente is so dear to the Soviet bloc? In addition, were ways and means discussed of coming to an agreement over the long term with regard to the arms race?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we discussed those matters very much indeed and I thank the hon. member for his interest. I shall see to it that he gets a copy of the news release published yesterday; it should reach him probably later today or tomorrow. He will see that the matter of détente was discussed at length and that the subject proved to be of great interest to all the participants, including myself, with a view to contributing to the progress of the discussions on disarmament as a contributing factor to détente, as well as at the Vienna negotiations on the limitation of conventional armament and the discussions under SALT with regard to the limitation of nuclear weapons. So, we were very much concerned about the matter and we share the concern of the hon. member. We are striving toward a balance of power not only in the increase of expenditures but also in helping to reduce them equitably on both sides.

REASON CANADA DOES NOT BENEFIT FROM FUNDS FOR EXTERNAL DEFENCE

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Canada has committed itself to raise its NATO expenditures by 12 to 30 per cent and that, from what I understand, every time we have raised our expenditures in NATO countries, because we have invested in other countries, for example in Lahr, Germany, and elsewhere, we have not benefited from our expenditures in this security program like other countries do, could the Prime Minister tell us whether he discussed this matter with his counterparts, with the people responsible for this question which in my view is a fundamental matter. If we use taxpayers' money to guarantee our security or to defend ourselves eventually, how come none of this money comes back to this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have also discussed this matter, and Canada and other countries share the hon. member's concern, namely that much of the money they spend for their defence is spent in other countries, including the United States, England, France and Germany, rather than in their own country. We have established a committee of officials and eventually of ministers to try to find means to make this sharing more equitable. As the hon. member knows, we already have a defence-sharing agreement with the United States, but this concern is shared by all NATO countries.

ESTABLISHMENT OF LIAISON GROUP BETWEEN NATO AND WARSAW PACT BLOCS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, here is my last question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Could he tell us whether he had time to set some bases in their discussions about further disarmament especially to achieve the détente sought by the Soviet bloc?

Could the Prime Minister tell us whether they reached an agreement to set up a liaison group which could commute between the two blocs, i.e. namely NATO and the Warsaw pact blocs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for the moment there is no question of commuting, as the hon. member put it, but of course the Vienna meeting includes representatives from the two blocs. What I have suggested at the NATO meeting, as it had also been suggested indeed by other heads of state, is that at some time we should see to it that the Vienna negotiations be conducted at the ministerial level rather than at the official level and then hopefully there could be a positive breakthrough, and we are ready to take that decision if necessary.

FINANCE

REASON FOR DECLINE IN VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As the dollar shows renewed instability now and it is hovering again in the 89-cent range, would the minister indicate to the House and to the Canadian people why it appears to be dropping once again, notwithstanding the fact that he has arranged $7 billion in loans and credit, presumably to try to shore-up the dollar?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): I think probably one of the reasons is that the hon. member is back in town.

● (1442)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, of course, the dollar is a floating dollar, as I have said a few times in this House: that means it can go up and it can go down. This morning it has recuperated somewhat, and at 1.45 p.m. it was at 89.43 cents.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has indicated that the dollar might go up or down. In the event the dollar continues to go down, would the minister indicate whether he is content to see it fall even further as long as this is done in an orderly way?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not reply to that kind of hypothetical question because it leads to speculation, and that is also a factor that influences the dollar. For example, when the minister of finance for Quebec said he was going to have his own currency, that stopped the upward movement of the dollar. That is the kind of intervention made off the cuff that influences the dollar, and that is why I said earlier—in a half joking way, although with some seriousness—that the Canadian dollar does not gain anything when members of the opposition, like the hon. member for York-Simcoe, try to speculate in respect of the value of the dollar by asking that kind of question.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is again to the Minister of Finance. Surely he does not expect members of this opposition to stop asking appropriate questions, even though they are embarrassing to the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: My question centres, really, on the basic reason our dollar has deteriorated in value, and that is the chronic current account balance position of this nation, which is running at a deficit double that of the United States in relation to our gross national product. Will the minister indicate whether any steps of a concrete nature are being taken to narrow this deficit so there will not be this continuing pressure on the dollar?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the best way to correct that situation lies in the performance of the economy since the beginning of this year. As for the balance of payments in respect of trade, the performance of Canada has been very good for the first four months of this year. Last year we had a trade surplus of $3 billion and if the present trend goes on the surplus could reach $5 billion this year. That is the best way to correct our balance of payments problem.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ORGANIZED REBATE PROGRAM BETWEEN FOOD RETAILERS AND PRODUCERS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Will the minister advise whether there is an investigation under way by the director of combines investigations into the organized rebate program between some large food retailers and certain producers?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, there is no formal investigation, although we are keeping a close watch on the investigation being carried out by the Ontario legislature. Let me say that the opinion of the director of investigations is that such rebates to a retailer would be legal as long as they were offered to all retailers who purchase in the same amounts. In other words, if they were not discriminatory they would be legal, but at this point it is difficult to say whether that is presently the case because all the evidence is not in.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, would the minister indicate whether his director of combines investigations has indicated the impact these rebates may have in lowering farm profits and increasing prices to consumers, or does he believe that this is a normal cost recovery program, as large retailers have stated it is?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the director and officials of our department are not yet ready to make a judgment on this and will not be ready until they have observed all the evidence. These possibilities must be examined, but we cannot make a report on the matter as yet.

INCREASED FUNDING FOR MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In light of representations made to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs concerning the need for increased funding for the Medical Research Council, has the minister given further consideration to this matter in order that Canada's medical research capability can be properly sustained?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Oui, monsieur l'Orateur. Yes, Mr. Speaker. If they did not understand "oui", I will put it in English. I would like to take this opportunity to confirm that the budget of the MRC, which had an increase of 5.8 per cent over last year's estimate, will now enjoy an increase of 11.8 per cent.

COMMITMENT OF FUNDS TO MEDICAL RESEARCH

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether the 11.8 per cent increase of which she has spoken will be applied to the current year, or to next year; and could she also tell the House whether it represents any kind of long-term commitment to medical research?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we have a long-term commitment to research, of course. If the hon. member is talking about the acute problem of arriving at some form of stability in respect of longer term funds, namely, over a period of three to five years, Dr. René Simard, who started today as the new president of MRC, has already presented me with a first document, which I am studying at the time, which deals with this matter. As to the first question the hon. member raised, let me say that this increase will be in the current fiscal year.

DEPLOYMENT OF NEUTRON BOMB

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. It has to do with the neutron bomb and the fact that one of his chiefs of staff took the stand that without the neutron bomb, the overwhelming power of the U.S.S.R. would place the western world in a serious position in terms of defence.

One has only to go back to the debates of 1938-39, both in this parliament and in the parliament in Britain, to realize that the same discussions were taking place then in respect of up-to-the-minute technological developments.

In view of the fact that this senior officer has taken that position, and with the knowledge he has, which is not possessed by the rest of us, will he give consideration, before the summer adjournment takes place, to having a day set aside for discussion of defence in order that members generally, and the people as a whole, can come to their own conclusions in respect of this matter—a matter which is one of survival, if one accepts the defence point of view, or a situation that places us in an extremely vulnerable position if one adopts the disarmament view of others?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman raises a very interesting point. I would welcome the opportunity, if the opposition would choose one of its allotted days, to debate this subject.

As to the other points, I think the right hon. gentleman raises the point that the Chief of Defence Staff, Admiral Falls, gave a military appreciation, which is not uncommon, on the utility of the weapon. He did not question its battlefield utility. He was not making a recommendation with reference to maintaining a credible deterrence.

This government, through the Prime Minister, in the last few days has reaffirmed our commitment to the alliance as well as our continuing co-operation and co-ordination. Knowing full well the lessons of the past, one must be in a position to deter aggression. The best way, we all feel, including my colleagues, the defence ministers of NORAD, to do this would be to reduce the level of armament rather than to escalate it. In the meantime, we have confirmed and reconfirmed our position to increase our readiness so we can deal from a position of strength.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is very interesting, Mr. Speaker. The same arguments were made in 1938 and 1939 when so many countries in the western world failed to realize or to accept the realization of the serious strength of Germany of that day and followed the course of the ostrich with its head in the sand.

● (1452)

It would be worth having a day set aside by the government to discuss this matter fully and completely, so that at least parliament would know exactly the position; because it could be too late if appropriate action is not taken. If, on the other hand, such an open discussion—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, the best place for this debate to take place in a reasonable fashion would be before the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, where I have appeared whenever I have been asked. It would be very helpful, as guidance to me, to have the right hon. gentleman there, whose position is obviously different from that of the defence critic of his party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HOUSE OF COMMONS

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the fact that following the tabling of the report of the special committee on the public service in February, 1967, ministers from time to time assured us that consideration was being given to the recommendation that there be collective bargaining for employees on Parliament Hill, can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us the stage of that consideration at the present time? Will there soon be legislation granting to these employees the same rights that we have granted to so many others?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there will not be legislation on that subject, certainly not in this session of parliament. It is my expectation that possibly at the next session or, indeed, in the new parliament, I will be bringing in an over-all measure.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FISHERIES

DISCUSSION OF FISHING BOUNDARIES WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if, by any chance, when he was in Washington he thought to raise with the President of the United States a very important question regarding the defence of Canadian fishing interests, namely, negotiations on the extension of our boundaries out to 200 miles and the related fishing question. If he did raise this question, would he give us some indication of the response?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had occasion to talk briefly to President Carter on this subject, although, as the hon. member would suspect, there was not a lot of time on the agenda for this type of discussion. For that reason, we agreed to defer to our ministers of external affairs, Mr. Vance and Mr. Jamieson, who did discuss the matter at greater length. There was a report in cabinet this morning in the presence of the Minister of Fisheries and the Deputy Prime Minister, and the Minister of Fisheries is now taking under advisement the information we brought back.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in view of that report, which could be encouraging and which could not be encouraging because we do not know what the results were, and without asking anyone to reveal what was passed around in cabinet, I wonder if the Secretary of State for External Affairs took the opportunity when he was in Washington to discuss with another important influence in Washington, namely, some of his parliamentary colleagues in Congress—those key people who are expected to ratify the agreement—the same matter, and whether he had any concrete results.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not speak with any congressional leaders on this question.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Shame on you.

Mr. Jamieson: The hon. member said, "Shame on you." I am not sure if he would feel the same way if the American cabinet ministers were to come up here and lobby some of our people. That is one consideration. But I have to say, at the same time, there was nothing lost in that regard. The conversations with Secretary of State Vance were very comprehensive. I undertake to indicate to the House at the earliest possible moment the outcome of those conversations and what steps will be taken.

PROGRESS REPORT ON CANADA-U.S. NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING FISHING BOUNDARIES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is related to the question that has been asked and I direct it to the hon. Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. In view of the fact that in 1977 the United States set the total allowable catch for cod and haddock at 20,000 and 6,000 metric tonnes, respectively, in Georges Bank—a 40 per cent increase, in effect, on both species—which contravenes section 8 of the 1977 interim agreement, and they also increased their pollock catch by 3,000 metric tonnes and the scallop catch by 180 per cent in one year, would the Minister of Fisheries, since neither the Prime Minister nor the minister for external affairs seem to have the answer, give the House an up to date report on the progress being made in resolving the Canada-U.S. boundary dispute? If agreement is not reached, for example, on a quota for scallops in 1978, can he inform the House what will happen to the interim fisheries agreement which presently exists between our two countries?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in case there is some misunderstanding, I must remind the hon. member that some of the quotas he has alluded to are, either in total or in part, taken on the American side of what would be an eventual boundary. These are transboundary stocks in which we have an interest and for this reason, of course, we do not agree with the American position with regard to the conservation measures we have recommended.

As to the final outcome, the hon. member will have to bear with me a little longer. I have expressed the hope that we will have by the end of this week knowledge of whether the agreement is, or is not, possible.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

EFFECT OF GUIDELINES ON FORMER MINISTERS AND DEPUTY MINISTERS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I address my question to the Prime Minister. It relates to the question first raised this afternoon by the Leader of the New Democratic Party concerning the appointment of Donald S. Macdonald to the board of directors of the MacDonnell-Douglas Corporation.

My question to the Prime Minister is this: Does he not concede that the position of a former cabinet minister is quite distinct from that of a former deputy minister of a particular department, in the concept of collective agreement within cabinet and collective decision-making, particularly when the minister was the former minister of finance who will be very much concerned about an expenditure of $2.3 billion for the acquisition of military aircraft?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member is now arguing contrary to the position taken by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, who was arguing that they should be guided by the same guidelines. Now the hon. member is suggesting that they should be different. The position of the government was put before the House in December of 1976.

An hon. Member: Tabled.

Mr. Trudeau: It has been tabled. It has been made public and is known. If it had been unfair in some way, I would have expected members opposite to so state. They are not reticent in telling the government that it is too lenient with its former members and former officials. It was done at the time of a rather hotly debated issue raised in this House on the occasion of a former deputy minister being engaged in other business in Ottawa. We responded at the time with guidelines that seemed to be fair in the sense that they did put a distance between a former position and the next successive position. They spelled out that there could be no serving of two masters simultaneously or in immediate succession, and they were accepted then, I believe, as reasonable. I repeat that Mr. Macdonald has adhered to these guidelines in their strictest sense.

If hon. members opposite want to propose stricter guidelines for the future which would apply to all members of the House and in a particular sense to former cabinet ministers and former civil servants, we are anxious to have their views.

Mr. Clark: We would like to do away with frozen trusts, for example.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is beginning to speak. You will note that it is three o'clock.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have one supplementary, Mr. Speaker. It may not have occurred to the Prime Minister, who is very tired after his long trip, that that is precisely what we are trying to do: we are trying to improve the guidelines which he made, for they are not engraved in granite.

Is the Prime Minister aware of the fact that Mr. Macdonald has also been appointed to the board of directors of Shell Canada Limited, which has substantial interests in Syncrude and other federal projects, and does he not think that in light of this kind of development, where a minister in the cabinet, recently retired, was involved in energy policy decisions, he should at least reconsider his guidelines to make more stringent rules for cabinet ministers and former cabinet ministers?

Mr. Clark: Tell us about frozen trusts.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the important issue now is that I state—and the statement has not been challenged by the opposition—that the former minister of finance has respected the guidelines. If the hon. member opposite wants to argue that they should be stronger and that they should apply in future with some stringency, we are prepared to hear suggestions. I am just telling the opposition that those guidelines have been known to the House and the Canadian people since December, 1976, and the former minister has respected them.

● (1502)

We know it is a question which will always cause problems. If you say the distance will be two years, people will ask, "Why not five?" If you say there will be a conflict which must be resolved in one year, they will ask, "Why not two years?" It is very important not to put former citizens who served the Canadian public from the particular vantage point of parliament, whether as members of parliament and members of a government or, for that matter, members of the public service, in a position where they have to retire into nothingness. That is not the position we want to take.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—STATEMENT ISSUED BY JUDGE MAYRAND OF MONTREAL

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, before I begin I wonder if I might ask if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) is prepared to indicate anything regarding the government's position. He may have had an opportunity to discuss the matter with his colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer), under whose auspices it would appear much of the alleged bungling with respect to this matter took place.

I see no indication of a willingness on the other side to stand and deal with the matter, so I shall proceed.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the hon. member wishes me to respond to. He raised a question of privilege the other day to which, I take it, he wants to speak again. At that time he did not indicate the precise nature of the motion he wants to move, so I am unable to respond to it at this time.

The question he asked me the other day was about tabling certain documents and I undertook to table that which I could. I am in the process of doing that. I have three documents ready for tabling, and another one is being worked on presently.

Mr. Baldwin: I will take that at face value, Mr. Speaker, and hope that the documents will be tabled because they are very, very important to this particular issue. I really and sincerely hope that the aura of secrecy which appears to be around the trial in this matter does not surround this House.

I have obtained and sent to the Minister of Justice, and to all those other hon. members who were good enough to intervene in this debate the other day, copies of an English translation of the statement issued in Montreal on May 29 by Acting Chief Judge Mayrand. I must say that the copy which came to us is not very legible and I was only able to produce as good an English translation as possible under the circumstances, so if there is any challenge as to its terms I shall, of course, consider that.

I am not going to read all of the statement, which is three pages long and, of course, as a private member I am not permitted to table it. It may be that when the Minister of Justice speaks he will be able to table the document in its entirety if he accepts it.

In part, some of the comments which appear in the statement are as follows:

> Some members of parliament, under the protection of parliamentary privilege, have taken the liberty—

I underline the word "liberty".

> —of questioning and critizing the way in which the trial was conducted before Justice Luc Trudel of the Sessions Court.

Then he said:

> It is up to the citizens to place pressure on the legislators in order to change the law or on the cabinet in order to change its attitude.

And later he said:

> In the name of the respect of judicial independence, we cannot tolerate—

I repeat those words, Mr. Speaker.

> —we cannot tolerate the remarks of Mr. Gerald Baldwin, M.P., who was wondering whether the law had not been well understood or had been wrongfully applied by the judges. We respectfully advise him to content himself with doing his own work, that is, with the drafting of a better Official Secrets Act, if he feels the present one is unjust and abusive. The member of parliament, Mr. Baldwin, should not pose as an appeal court to study the conduct of the judge of this trial, especially since he is totally ignorant of the facts presented as evidence—

Finally he said:

> It seems to us that it would be preferable to leave to the courts the delicate task of drawing the line between the rights of the individual and the rights of a nation in the application of the law.

I have underlined vocally some of the statements made by the Acting Chief Judge and I will relate my comments to some of the remarks in the statement, later.

To start with, I want to say that I have never been happy about the use of the word "privilege." I have never maintained that members of this House, of parliament, have rights and privileges higher than those of others, but I think, and I would insist, and I am sure my colleagues on both sides of the House would insist, that members of this House must be guaranteed, must be assured that there are no inhibitions, or any suggestion of intimidation to prevent every one of us from carrying out our duties as we see fit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: This is especially so today when so many challenges exist to the strength and the capacity of this House and this parliament to carry out its responsibilities. I suggest we must be ever vigilant to correct what appears to be limitations on our rights as members to do the job we were sent here to do.

I hold no brief for Mr. Treu, Mr. Speaker, but I am concerned about the circumstances under which the legislation in question, the Official Secrets Act, was applied, and which permit the taking of proceedings such as the trial, conviction, and sentence of Dr. Alexander Peter Treu.

Like courts or judges, or even prime ministers, we must be prepared to accept and live with criticism, but not with threats or statements designed or calculated or intended to fence us in and to limit our capacity to discharge our responsibilities. We must be in a position where we have full immunity in this regard, and that is what I complain of in this case. That, Mr. Speaker, is something which concerns this House, and I suggest it is not a matter just of myself as a member of the opposition or of my friends in the New Democratic Party and the Social Credit party. I would hope this would apply to members on both sides of the House who have concern about the capacity of this House and of every member of this House to discharge their duties without being threatened or intimidated, or without any inhibitions.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that in this particular case it would seem to me that the statement and the language of the Acting Chief Judge have transgressed the boundary line and, in my opinion, they constitute a threat or intimidation by their context.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: The words "some members of parliament under the protection of parliamentary privilege" are certainly more than reasonable criticism. Then he said "have taken the liberty". I consider that to be an affront to myself and every member of parliament. If I had not considered, and if other hon. members who spoke in this debate the other day had not considered they were justified in doing that, they would not have done so. To be accused in doing so, in the original comments I made in this House on three occasions, that I am taking a liberty in discussing the matter in the way I did, constitutes to my mind far more than any judge is justified in bringing to my attention in the form of the statement which was issued by Judge Mayrand.

We must couple the following statements:

It is up to the citizens to place pressure on the legislators in order to change the law or on the cabinet in order to change its attitude . . .

—we cannot tolerate the remarks of Mr. Gerald Baldwin, M.P.—

Mr. Speaker, this is not an ordinary citizen speaking; this is a judge, with power to summon people before him, peremptorily, and to sentence them on the basis of an allegation of contempt. This is a person who has, as a member of the judiciary, whose independence I and all members of this House will always respect, the power to call myself or the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), or the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), or any member before him on a question of laying a charge, punishable by imprisonment or otherwise, of contempt. I underline the wording, "We cannot tolerate the remarks of Mr. Baldwin," coupled with what has been said before, coupled with a subsequent statement, we advise him—

● (1512)

—and he means we are telling him; cautioning him—

—to content himself with doing his own work, that is with the drafting of a better Official Secrets Act, if he feels the present one is unjust and abusive.

I have already commented on that. I have been trying to do it for four years with a notable lack of success so far.

Miss MacDonald: Wrong government.

Mr. Baldwin: I resent the right of any judge to tell me that I have no right to be critical of the way in which a trial is conducted when in doing so there was no mention of the trial judge, no mention of his name. What I was doing was what any member of this House would do and has done, saying trials of this nature and character take us far beyond what is permissible in this particular day and age.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: There is an obligation upon us, by calling attention to trials of this nature, to seek corrective action. If we did not do that, I would not be doing my job as a member, nor would other members of this House.

I have looked at the possibilities of what this House can do. I have looked at some of the precedents, and I have looked at the hearings of the committee which Your Honour has the privilege to chair, that is, the committee on rights and immunities. We have dealt with this issue, particularly in a report made on April 29, 1977. This House received a report from the special committee, which says in part:

3. The freedom of speech accorded to members of parliament is a fundamental right without which they would be hampered in the performance of their duties. It permits them to speak in the House without inhibition, to refer to any matter or express any opinion as they see fit, and to say what they feel needs to be said in the furtherance of the national interest and the aspirations of their constituents.

We were at the time dealing with the question of sub judice, but the words which were uttered by that committee and tabled in this House have not been challenged. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, and to members of this House, that these words must be taken to represent the considered opinion of all members of this House and that they are wise and essential words in the kind of world in which we live today.

Later on, dealing with the question of the convention of sub judice and privilege, the committee went on to say:

Your committee believes, however, that any modification of the practice—

And that is the practice of sub judice and privilege.

—should be in the direction of greater flexibility rather than stricter application. It is not possible to determine whether or to what extent comments made in parliament might affect the outcome of a trial or an inquiry.

It went on to say the option should be left with the Chair.

We have also had some illustrations of questions of privilege in this House. One of the very earliest ones deals with a case in 1879, when Mr. Alexander Mackenzie stated in the House that one of his colleagues had been called "a cheat and a swindler" by a certain John A. Macdonell who came into the House to profess those words. The culprit was expelled from the House by the Sergeant-at-Arms while still insisting that L. S. Huntington was a cheat and a swindler. On February 16, 1880, Macdonell was again summoned to the Bar. He appeared on the day ordered and apologized, but only to the House and not to Huntington. He was nonetheless discharged after a motion was passed declaring his actions a breach of the privileges of the House.

There is another interesting case which has some similarity. In 1874 the House ordered that H. J. Clarke, the Attorney General of Manitoba, be called to the Bar of the House to answer some questions. Clarke was seeking to execute a warrant for the arrest of Louis Riel for the murder of Thomas Scott. As Riel had been recently elected to the House as the hon. member for Provencher, the warrant was considered by some as a contempt of parliament.

There are other cases. However, I think it would be wise to say that in issues of this kind we should consider each one on its own particular merits, to examine to what extent, and that is an issue upon which you, Your Honour, as guardian and as the repository of the privileges of this House may be called upon to make a decision, whether in your view there has been a prima facie case of privilege. It is not for Your Honour to make a decision that there has or has not been but to say whether, in your opinion, enough facts have been put before this House to justify the House being given the motion for the purpose of coming to a decision, if it becomes essential to go that far.

I will not go any further with this. Other members may want to participate. I would like to think that I have put sufficient facts before the House which would warrant some concern, not only on the part of members on this side of the House but members on the other side as well, who surely must be alarmed at the extent of the threat posed within the four corners of the statement made by Chief Judge Mayrand.

Maybe the Minister of Justice can deal with this next point because I think this is relevant to the whole issue. It deals with what has been established to be a very serious threat to the freedoms and liberties of people in this country. Has the minister given any consideration to instructing counsel to appear before the appeal tribunal to have them seek to have the bail order rectified so as to permit Dr. Treu to be able to speak to myself and other people in regard to this issue? Is the Minister of Justice prepared to instruct counsel to appear before the appellate tribunal and ask that the appeal be held publicly? There is always the saving right of any court when issues come up which may be pertinent to national defence, or in cases of espionage, to urge that documents not be disclosed.

I would also like to ask if the minister is prepared to walk the full mile and instruct counsel to appear in appellate court and agree that because this trial was held in secret, the conviction and sentence be quashed and that an order be sought to include a provision that a new trial be held publicly, also saving the right of the Crown to insist or to ask at any time that certain evidence or documents which may be inimical to the security and the defence of the country be kept in camera. I suggest that would be a fair and reasonable thing to do under the circumstances.

I am prepared to move a motion and my motion would be: That the matters consisting of the statement made by the Chief Judge, Mayrand, dealing with the statements I made in this House, a statement made by the chief judge on May 29, and all related issues be referred to the Standing Committee on Right and Immunities.

I suggest that committee because that committee has already had experience and has dealt in considerable detail with these particular issues. I am prepared to relinquish the rights I have, in observance of the belief that we might secure a measure of justice for a man who, while he may have breached technically an act in the remarks of the judge who sentenced him, seems at the moment, according to the limited facts we have, to have been the subject of a grave miscarriage of justice. That is the issue which should concern us all primarily. I am reserving the right to move that motion. I would first like to hear what the Minister of Justice and others may have to say.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure there are others who wish to participate. I am anxious to hear the comments of other members. I see the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) anxious to participate. But there is one thought I want to put forward before inviting the participation of other members.

There are two or three matters that are tied together in the subject raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). The first is that aspect he was touching on at the conclusion of his remarks, that is, some suggestion in respect to the merit of the case before the courts and some positions to be taken with regard to the actual legal matter that is before the courts. That is one which will be ongoing and one that I am sure he, and other members, will pursue with great interest. I am certain all hon. members will want to do that.

The matter which is of a more particular nature from the procedural point of view is that of the question of privilege, because the hon. member for Peace River has based his action in the House on privilege. Of course my obligation may be to find whether the matter does in fact come within the strict and classic definition of privilege that we have followed in the past, whether there has been an affront or contempt of parliament, or whether there has been a molestation or interference in some way with the hon. member in carrying out his duty.

It occurs to me that if I make that fundamental decision, then I give the matter priority and put the question to the House as to whether it should be sent to the committee on rights and immunities, which the hon. member has suggested. While other members are participating, I would want them to bear this in mind. In the end, it seems to me that with the mandate that that committee has already, it would be most unlikely that that committee would complete the work of its present mandate without in some way turning its attention to this entire matter, whether it gets a specific reference or not.

That is something which is quite important to remember, because the subject which is before that committee, the rights and immunities of members, can hardly be looked at in full without a reference to that particular matter. That leads me to the area I would want hon. members to think about during their participation in this discussion, that is, that it may be possible to accommodate the position the House seeks to achieve without making a basic decision on the question of privilege, if the House, instead of insisting on a decision on privilege first, agrees that the matter ought to be referred to the committee on rights and immunities. If the House is in unanimous agreement that the matter ought to be referred to the Standing Committee on Rights and Immunities of Members for examination there, then it is not necessary that it be confined within the strict definition of privilege.

Since the matter relates to language and, therefore, somewhat to the potential rather than the actual interference by the courts in the actions of this member or any other hon. member, and since language has often been set aside as an actual molestation and interference, and since obviously the hon. member and other hon. members are not in the slightest intimidated in their desire to pursue this matter, by whatever language was used—and I am not saying this because I have not heard all the arguments and I have not examined them, but it may be difficult to fit them into the specific and classific definition of privilege—if that is so, it may be that hon. members would want to think about the possibility of saying we can obviate the decision on privilege by simply agreeing that the matter ought to be referred to the committee in any case.

If that does become possible during the discussion, or during the time that I have it under reserve, it is something on which I would want to take some guidance from the House before coming to a final decision. If there is no consent and no accord in that respect, then of course I will carry on and make the basic decision that it is my responsibility to make on the matter of privilege.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your position of endeavouring to make a suggestion that might be helpful. Obviously it has to be considered carefully. However, as I understand the suggestion, I would have some difficulty with it.

As Your Honour pointed out, there are several aspects to this whole matter. One is the obvious concern of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), a concern which I suspect is shared by all members of the House, including myself, as to the wording of the Official Secrets Act and its application. That is a matter of substance, not of privilege.

There is the second matter, the question of the Crown's case, which is related to a number of questions the hon. member has asked me and for which I, as Minister of Justice, obviously as a political officer of the House am accountable to the House. It seems to me there is a procedure where the Crown, through its Minister of Justice, is accountable for the conduct of the case, is accountable to the House in the daily question period or in the examination of the departmental estimates in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

During the handling of estimates, as the chief law officer, I am subject to examination by any member who wishes to come to the committee, on how I or my officials are conducting a Crown's case.

An hon. Member: You do not have to answer.

Mr. Basford: The hon. member yells out that I do not have to answer. That, as Your Honour knows, is a rule. The fact is that I have never been asked any question in the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee, so the question of whether or not I would answer has never arisen.

The third aspect is the question of privilege, or the alleged question of privilege, which arises, or allegedly arises, out of the remarks of the Acting Chief Sessions Judge in Quebec. I suggest, with respect, it is that latter part on which we have to concentrate.

I might go back to the question of Your Honour's suggestion of referring the whole matter to some committee. I recall the hon. member for Peace River suggesting the other day that that would be desirable so that the committee could call the judge before it. With the greatest of respect, that is something that parliament should undertake only under the most serious of circumstances.

I want to make very sure what my role is in this debate. I am not here to defend a judge. These statements, or alleged statements, were made by a provincially appointed judge. Even if he were a federally appointed judge, he is not accountable to me for his remarks, nor am I accountable to parliament for his remarks.

It would be unwise, and in fact dangerous, if one is going to consider the independence both of parliament and the judiciary for parliament to pass motions summoning judges, particularly provincially appointed judges, before our committee. If the judiciary has committed an error or a wrong, this parliament has set up through amendments to the Judges Act, through the Judicial Council of Canada, a mechanism for dealing with those types of complaints about members of the judiciary. In the province of Quebec there is a similar kind of mechanism for dealing with complaints about the conduct, behaviour or actions of the judiciary.

As I made very clear in this House a while ago in my statement relative to the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt), it is up to this parliament and its members to determine our rights, privileges, and freedoms. Equally, the independence of this institution and the independence of the judiciary, from each other, depend on our not being called to court for them to determine our privileges, and on judges not being called before this court to determine their rights and privileges.

Therefore, while Your Honour's suggestion to refer the whole matter to a committee is, I know, made in a spirit of helpfulness, I resist it because I think that would create a very dangerous precedent.

On the substance of whether the remarks constitute a question of privilege or a prima facie case of privilege, the hon. member was not able to table the remarks. I would be happy, although in this matter I have no official capacity whatsoever, to table, if the hon. member will supply me with a copy of it, a copy of his letter to me of June 1 to which are attached what purports to be a transcript of the judge's remarks. I will be quite happy to accommodate the hon. member in tabling it if he will give me the copy to table. In no way can I authenticate the correctness of the transcript or the translation, but I am happy to accommodate the hon. member in that way.

Whether the statement which has been given to Your Honour is a wise statement or an unwise statement is a question which I am not going to debate. One could argue that it may not be a wise statement, and that a judge should not have made comments on a matter which really is highly political. However, we are not here to debate whether the statement was wise. We are here to debate whether it constitutes a question of privilege.

I think I will make just three short points. First, whether the statement is well founded or not, it clearly acknowledges in the second paragraph the privileges of parliament—"Some members of parliament, under the protection of parliamentary privilege, have taken the liberty—". The hon. member takes issue with the words "taken the liberty" and so forth, but it seems to me that there is a very clear acknowledgement that whatever the hon. member did, or whatever any hon. members did in this House in commenting on the case, they were acting within the privileges of the House of Commons and acting within their own privileges.

Mr. Fraser: It is just exactly the opposite.

Mr. Basford: There is a clear acknowledgement that that privilege to comment exists. There is a clear acknowledgement that there is a freedom in this House and among hon. members to comment in the way they want.

Second, the statement is not an instrument of the court. The hon. member feels he has been threatened or intimidated. As Your Honour has said, quite obviously hon. members are not threatened or intimidated. The comments have engendered this very debate, and for the hon. member for Peace River, whom I have known for a long time, to suggest that he has been threatened by these comments or in any way intimidated, or is likely to be intimidated is, with all due respect, carrying it somewhat too far.

Third, I point out that the statement is not an instrument of the court. It is not a court order. It has no status or stature. In no way can it affect the privileges or the rights of members of this House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Ron, you may have to run again because you are not going to make a good lawyer.

Mr. Beatty: If I get into trouble, will you promise to be the Crown attorney?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to comment on the issue of how the statement in question gets before us. I suggest that whether or not the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) tables the letter from the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), and the copy of the translation of the statement which the hon. member sent him, the House could, by unanimous consent, agree to have anything it wishes made an appendix to today's Hansard, and I suggest that since we are discussing a statement made by the judge, at some point Your Honour might ask if there is such consent. My suggestion is that the consent be to the making of an appendix to today's Hansard of the letter which the hon. member for Peace River wrote to the Minister of Justice—he wrote the same one to me—together with the enclosure, namely, a translation of the judge's statement. Is it Your Honour's disposition to settle that matter now?

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) made reference to the letter and, I think, quoted from it. At least I hope he did. The House is obviously generally interested in having the letter tabled, either under our practice whereby a minister of the Crown participating in discussion, who quotes from a document, is asked by the House or compelled by the House to table it or, in any case, upon the unanimous consent of the House which, I assume, is now forthcoming.

I take it that the minister has the consent of the House at this time—just to keep it perfectly clear that we are proceeding with consent—to table the letter referred to, and the enclosure. It can be done in that way, and the matter then becomes at least a part of our proceedings. If the hon. member is suggesting now that it ought also to be made an appendix to Hansard, I will now ask if there is unanimous consent that that document be printed in Hansard as an appendix. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: So ordered.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is one other matter which has been referred to, mainly by the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Basford: I do not have a copy to table.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a copy. The other matter which has been referred to, mainly by the Minister of Justice, is the question of whether this House or one of its committees should call the judge to appear before such a committee.

Mr. Peters: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My good friend and chief counsel, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), is expressing his view. I suggest that that not be part of the discussion here in the House. If we refer this matter to a committee, let the committee decide on that question. There are angles which are involved, and I think they should be looked at, but I do not think the question of whether Your Honour decides that there is a prima facie case of privilege should be conditioned upon whether that means calling the judge before the committee.

In any case, the only request in the motion which the hon. member for Peace River proposes to make is that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Rights and Immunities of Members. It is a bit unusual to refer a matter of privilege to a committee other than the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, but I think in this case the point is well taken.

I gathered that Your Honour rather favoured the idea of having the whole matter simply referred as a reference to that committee if there was unanimous consent. But if the Minister of Justice is not prepared to give that unanimous consent, Your Honour may yet have to rule on whether there is a question of privilege, and it is to that that I address myself today, as I did when we discussed this matter a couple of days ago.

There are three sentences in May's nineteenth edition which I would like to read. They are short and to the point. On page 150 there is this sentence:

To attempt to influence members in their conduct by threats is also a breach of privilege.

Another sentence is found on page 151.

It is a breach of privilege to molest any member of either House on account of his conduct in parliament.

Then on page 153 there is another sentence which I think has some relevance.

Wilful misrepresentation of the proceedings of members is an offence of the same character as a libel.

Despite what the Minister of Justice has said about members not being intimidated by the comments of the judge, which of course is demonstrated by the fact that we are discussing the matter in full freedom here on the floor of the House, the fact is that the gentleman who has offered this criticism is not an editorial writer in the employ of some newspaper, and not an ordinary citizen of Canada saying he will not vote for the hon. member for Peace River at the next election. He is a judge who has the power to summon persons to his court, or to charge the hon. member for Peace River with contempt. I suggest that when a judge in that position makes the statements that he has made in the translation which is now before us, he is in effect saying to the hon. member for Peace River: desist or something can happen to you. Indeed, he is saying it to all of us. I put that down as a threat, as noted on page 150 of May's nineteenth edition, or as molestation.

There is also, in my view, some misrepresentation of what the hon. member for Peace River was trying to do. I realize that the hon. member for Peace River has read the offending sentences and that the document is now part of today's record, but I think it should be noted again that the first sentence which was read is as follows:

Some members of parliament, under the protection of parliamentary privilege, have taken the liberty of questioning and criticizing the way in which the trial was conducted by Mr. Justice Luc Trudel of the Sessions Court.

The Minister of Justice says that is a statement of our rights. If that is what he meant, he could have said that we have exercised the right to question and criticize, but when he says that a member of parliament has taken a liberty, it means that in his view the member is trifling with our rights and that that in effect is a warning that, in the view of the judge, he has gone too far.

Then for that same judge to say later in very clear language—at least as far as the English translation goes—

In the name of the respect of judicial independence, we cannot tolerate the remarks of Mr. Gerald Baldwin, M.P. who was wondering whether the law had not been well understood or had been wrongfully applied by the judges.

—as I have already said, if this were an editorial writer saying this in the Globe and Mail, in the Montreal Gazette, or in the Winnipeg Free Press—so what, the hon. member for Peace River would not worry at all.

If this were an ordinary citizen writing letters to an editor, or writing to members of parliament saying "we cannot tolerate that sort of thing, we will not support the member in the next election", that would not be cause for concern. But when a judge, with the power to charge a person with contempt, says that sort of thing, in my view he is attempting to influence a member in his conduct in the House, he is molesting a member on account of his conduct in parliament, and I suggest that, whether or not we have the right to call the judge, or decide that we have that right, the hon. member for Peace River has been wronged by that kind of statement.

The judge goes on to say:

We respectfully advise him to content himself with doing his own work . . . The member of parliament, Mr. Baldwin, should not pose as an appeal court to study the conduct of the judge of this trial—

Then the final paragraph is of the same character. It reads:

It seems to us that it would be preferable to leave to the courts the delicate task of drawing the line between the rights of the individual and the rights of a nation—

Editorial writers may tell us that until they are blue in the face and we do not worry about it, but when a judge says that we do not have the right in this high court of parliament to discuss the question of drawing the line between the rights of the individual and the rights of a nation, in my view that is going too far. I say "going too far" because the effect of that is to attempt to influence members in the conduct of their duties in parliament, and it is a case of molesting a member of parliament on account of his conduct in parliament.

I have read again today, as I did before I presented a motion some days ago under Standing Order 43, the words of the hon. member for Peace River on this whole question. They were contained in a motion under Standing Order 43 on Friday, May 12, in questions to the Minister of Justice on Monday, May 15, and in another motion under Standing Order 43 on Tuesday, May 23, and I find in all those statements nothing that is offensive, nothing that goes beyond his concern that we have on our statute books an Official Secrets Act which is thoroughly out of date and should be looked at and revised so that the kind of trial which took place in the case of Dr. Treu could not take place at all. Because, in my view, the hon. member for Peace River has not offended the rights of the courts not to be criticized, because he has exercised restraint, because he has pursued his duty in trying to get this parliament to bring up to date an outdated and antiquated law, I believe that for the judge to molest and interfere with the member's rights is a classic case of privilege.

I must say that I come back to my feeling that Your Honour's suggestion was a good one and, if it can be negotiated, I would go along with it, namely, that this matter be gone into thoroughly by the Standing Committee on Rights and Immunities of Members. But if the Minister of Justice is not prepared to give unanimous consent to pursuing that course, then of course Your Honour will have to decide whether or not there is an actual case of privilege, bearing in mind that the classic definition of privilege is an attempt by anyone, especially outside of the House, to interfere with the right of a member to do his duty in the House. I suggest that that is what the judge has done. Whatever may be our rights of redress, at least we have the right to declare that the privileges of the hon. member for Peace River, the privileges of this House, have been offended, and we have the right to have that matter discussed in an appropriate committee, and to issue a statement which, I trust, will be completely on the side of our distinguished colleague, the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) will have the floor in just a moment.

In examining the transcript of the remarks which the hon. member was good enough to provide to the Chair in giving notice of his intention to raise this today, there is one matter I should mention, that is, that some argument has centred around the second paragraph which reads:

Some members of parliament, under the protection of parliamentary privilege, have taken the liberty of questioning—

The phrase "taken the liberty of questioning" has come under considerable attention until the present time.

The French text is as follows:

—certains députés, sous le couvert de leur immunité parlementaire, se sont permis de questionner—

[English]

I think most hon. members would agree that a possible translation of that would be "have taken the liberty", but another translation of it would be that members, under the protection of parliamentary privilege, have allowed themselves to question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): La même chose.

Mr. Speaker: It is not quite the same thing, because there was some argument as to whether or not this could be described as a liberty when in fact it may be not only the right of a member but his duty. I only put that on the record because so much has been made of it. If privilege is going to be found—and, as I have indicated earlier, it will not be without some difficulty—it seems to me that the far more serious words are those which are translated very accurately. Those are the ones that say:

In the name of the respect of judicial independence, we cannot tolerate the remarks of Mr. Gerald Baldwin, M.P.,—

That was a direct translation, and those words are far more serious than the oblique references as to whether we are doing it by liberty or by right. I would think there would be further discussion and consideration of that language, and other hon. members are free to comment on the other language as well, but I thought I should correct the record.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in looking at the statement—and I am not unhappy you interjected—I should like to say, first of all, that frankly I am just a little disturbed that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) decided today he does not agree to what I thought was a perfectly reasonable and perfectly acceptable suggestion that the matter go to committee where it can be dealt with. Frankly, I think that upon reflection, as he looks back upon his career in parliament, the Minister of Justice is going to count that decision among the most regrettable he has made in the exercise of his duties, because it would have been an appropriate, quiet, and dignified way of handling the matter, to look at it from the point of view of the position of the House of Commons, on the one hand, and the question of the importance and integrity of the judiciary on the other, to which he directed himself on Tuesday. It was a regrettable decision. I commend you, sir, for having advanced it, and I condemn the Minister of Justice for having rejected it.

The second matter is with respect to the translation of the words you brought forward. I think it is a very dangerous thing, and I say this with respect, if we look at the document paragraph for paragraph, word for word, or phrase for phrase. We have to look at the whole tenor of the document.

The tenor of the document, while it did not intimidate the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), or the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), is the main point. The point is in respect of the nature of the words that appear in the document, and the tone of that document. The point is, could the document be considered to intimidate anyone, not specifically hon. members, but rather the position of parliament in the scheme of things and its relationship to the courts? If there ever was any doubt about the whole purport of the document, that doubt should be resolved in favour of parliament. I do not think there can be any doubt, and there is certainly no doubt in my mind, and I say that with respect. The doubt ought to be resolved in favour of what you must decide at this point, sir, and that is whether there is a prima facie case.

This does not mean, Mr. Speaker, that you have to try the issue and decide whether there was a breach of privilege, and whether that has been proved to the degree required. What you have to decide is whether there is a prima facie case, and whether there is enough in the document itself, taken as a whole, bearing in mind what the authorities have said, to warrant sending the matter to the committee in order that the committee can deal with it, following an appropriate motion having been dealt with by the House.

I suggest, with the greatest respect to that learned judge in Quebec who made the statement, that this is far more than merely an unwise statement. I suggest to you, sir, with respect, that the matter has to be resolved by this House in favour of protection of the privileges of the members of this place. I am not suggesting that they were threatened, per se, but rather whether they could be threatened by this statement. That is the issue which has to be dealt with in respect to a prima facie case. I think that prima facie case has amply been made out by the hon. member for Peace River.

It is important that we consider the position of the judiciary, but it is equally important that this House considers it own traditions, its own privileges, and its own place in the scheme of things. If we do not deal with the matter, then what will happen is something the right hon. member for Prince Albert suggested the other day; a travelled part can become a highway. All of these little things begin to build up, and we may find the traditions and privileges of this House, in the sense the hon. member for Peace River spoke about them, gradually whittled and eroded away. If that should happen, it is not just members of the House of Commons who will suffer. This institution itself will suffer, as will the force of this institution in the scheme of our national affairs. We do have certain privileges—I guess you could call them immunities or rights—to be used responsibly for the protection of people, causes, and institutions.

This is why it is important, if Your Honour has any doubt in respect of the matter, that the doubt ought to be resolved in favour of deciding that a prima facie case has been made. I must suggest, sir, that the facts should lead you far beyond that point. However, if the facts have left Your Honour's feelings in balance, then any doubt should be resolved in favour of this institution and its privileges, and I ask you to rule in that way, sir.

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): I will attempt to be brief, Mr. Speaker. It would seem to me that the real question at issue here is one of conflicting privileges, perhaps, and the necessity that parliament has its rights, freedoms, immunities and privileges. So, equally, does the judiciary. I think some of the words of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) were very well chosen, but I think, in terms of the way he applied them to the rights of members of parliament, they could equally and equitably be applied to members of the judiciary. There must be rights, freedoms, and immunities which are afforded members in order that they may do their job. Concomitantly, there must be rights and privileges afforded members of the judiciary to do their job.

What the hon. membr for Grenville Carleton (Mr. Baker) has said, to the ffect that it was the nature or the tenor of the words that is important, is quite true. With respect, sir, I do not see in the words, as I read this translation, any of the same reflections. I do not see the same tenor in those words.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Young: Perhaps the hon. lady would permit me to complete my remarks. I do not see that same tenor in the words. I see a difference of opinion between a member of parliament and a judicial official; a difference of opinion between a member of parliament and a judicial official; a difference of reflection of one upon the other. One has to be a little bit thin-skinned to find the reflections in those words that have been attached to them thus far.

To begin with, there is a very important issue in respect of the nuance of the language within which the words were spoken. They do not translate quite so directly into the English language as they appear from the translation we apparently have before us. Mr. Speaker has made a point already on one particular passage.

There is a very important issue here in respect of the nuance to be attached to the words spoken in the language in which they were spoken. A translation, rough or as accurate as one may get, may not contain the same nuances.

I said that I did not see the same flavour, the same tenor, and the same nature of feeling in the words as seen by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. I wish to refer to one or two passages. I hope this translation is a as accurate as it possibly can be, because I am working from the English in the translation and not from the original.

There are a couple of very important passages in this translation. At one point the judge was saying that the Official Secrets Act places a judge in a real dilemma. He went on to explain how a judge would find himself in a dilemma when conducting a trial under the Official Secrets Act. Some time later in this translation the judge was saying:

> In the name of the respect of judicial independence, we cannot tolerate the remarks—

The sentence goes on to state:

> —who was wondering whether the law had not been well understood or had been wrongfully applied by the judges.

I think those two phrases explain the context in which the judge received the remarks and the nature of the state of his mind at the time he made his comments in reply. I do not think one can overlook that.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said, and I hope that I am not taking him out of context, that the judge had said something about members of parliament not having the right to draw the line, although I do not see that in here. The passage I see, and again this is from a translation, but the judge is saying "It seems to us that it would be preferable to leave to the courts the delicate task of drawing the line between rights of individuals and rights of a nation in the application of the law." That in no way, Mr. Speaker, could be interpreted to say that the judge was saying what rights parliament has and what rights parliament does not have.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is precisely what he is saying.

Mr. Young: It seems to me that the man is saying, "It would be preferable." You would have to be very thin-skinned to read into the remarks the nature of which is understood by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

An hon. Member: He is trying not to see it.

Mr. Young: There are, evidently, a lot of members from the other side, Mr. Speaker, who wish to speak from their seats. If they wish to get up and participate in the debate, they are quite welcome to do so.

An hon. Member: Sit down; I will do so.

Mr. Young: All right, if the hon. member would be decent enough first to allow me to conclude my remarks. I will be a few more seconds.

To read that as a threat to parliament when the man is saying, "that it seems to us that it would be preferable", overblows quite dramatically the meaning of the words and their context. I would suggest that one—and again I would stress I have to read from a translation because I have not seen the original in the language in which it was spoken, and you, Mr. Speaker, have pointed out a difference, a nuance in the language in which it was originally spoken from what appears in the translation—one has to be thin-skinned to put the character into the words that has been put. I think it is tempest which has been overblown at this time.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker. My concern is with the attitude taken by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and his parliamentary assistant. In a sense, I am almost more concerned about their attitude than I am about the original question that was raised.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The argument raised by the Minister of Justice was entirely spurious and substantially irrelevant. His suggestion, Mr. Speaker, that your very reasonable proposal should not be accepted, because someone has suggested in the House that the judge might be called before a committee of the House, is surely no reason why the Minister of Justice and the members on the other side of the House could not have accepted it. It is for the committee to decide how they would proceed, and I am sure a committee of this House would be quite capable of making that decision in a way consistent with the traditions of this House and of this country. For the Minister of Justice to make such a spurious argument and use that as a basis for refusing his consent, does not engender very much respect from me at least.

The minister also had something to say about his accountability to the House with respect to the conduct of trials and possible miscarriages of justice. I wonder why he introduced that at all, unless it was to infer that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) ought to have proceeded in some other way. We all know that there is no way in which the Minister of Justice can be held accountable in any specific way to an appropriate committee, or any other way, because he does not have to answer questions even in committee.

The point the minister was trying to make, whatever it was, had nothing to do with the case. The distance the hon. gentleman has gone to try to suggest that we on this side of the House are thin-skinned to have taken offence at the remarks of the chief justice is a surprise to me. I asked myself as I listened to them: why are they taking this position? Why is the Minister of Justice and his parliamentary secretary taking this position? Surely, the whole purpose of this statement by the chief justice was to cause the hon. member for Peace River to desist in this kind of comment in this House. I suggest, with respect, that there is no other possible interpretation.

You, sir, may be quite right in suggesting that the hon. member for Peace River is not in fact intimidated, but I suggest to you that that is not a relevant consideration. I suggest the question is, what was this comment calculated to do? The only reason it was made by the chief judge was to cause the hon. member for Peace River and other members of parliament to desist from this kind of remark in the House.

As for the comments of the parliamentary secretary, there is some kind of conflict of privilege here that is a bit beyond me. I do not understand why both sides of the House could not have co-operated in getting this matter before a committee for consideration by an all-party standing committee. That would be the place to consider it, but that does not seem to be acceptable to the government, and I, therefore, suspect that you will have to make the decision, sir.

Without repeating myself unnecessarily, there has been an attempt made by the chief justice of this court to silence a member of parliament.

Mr. Young: Nonsense!

Mr. Stanfield: What nonsense? It is open to no other reasonable interpretation. It may be, on the pretence that you have indicated in a preliminary way, that you may have difficulty finding that on the traditions and on the concept of privilege it does constitute a violation of our privileges, but I suggest with all sincerity there is no other reasonable interpretation of these comments. They were intended to silence a member of parliament, and the fact that they have not, and will not silence him, is irrelevant. I am very disturbed by the attitude taken by the Minister of Justice and his parliamentary secretary.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to draw your attention to the fact that we are now discussing a comment made in French by a judge from Quebec, and on the fact that we are discussing a translation. A moment ago, Your Honour took the precaution of referring us to the French version, that is the original version of the hon. judge's comment, and you made a distinction which, in my view, is quite right and timely, pointing out that the statement made by the judge has a clearly different meaning than it seems to have in the English translation.

I do not wish to argue at this moment, Mr. Speaker, on the merits of the question raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). My point is that, realizing we were discussing the translation of a statement made in French by a francophone judge, I tried to get and did obtain from the clerk of the House or his assistant the French original of the statement. Mr. Speaker, that copy is practically illegible. It is impossible for me, as I can show you, and it comes from you because I had photocopies made of it, as I said, it is impossible to read it, to all practical purposes and intents, in an intelligent way and to comment on it today. I presume that someone must have had a legible version since we are now discussing the English translation. But it certainly is not the document I now have in my possession and which was given to me through your assistants and was used for that translation, Mr. Speaker.

What I am asking is that we be given the chance to study the original version of the comments made by the learned judge so that we can, in an enlightened way, basing ourselves on the original text, comment on a topic that is very serious in my opinion. I am not asking that the debate be postponed indefinitely. I am asking for a short postponement, possibly until tomorrow at the least, to allow those who want to see the original statement to get a copy that is legible and understandable and can be understood and then discuss the matter advisedly. My request is therefore that I at least might be allowed to come back to the subject at the earliest opportunity, but that I be given a legible copy of the French original of the statement made by the learned judge.

● (1612)

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on the very day that statement made by the judge came to my attention, we got in touch with his office. An undertaking was given by his office that a letter would be sent by special delivery. It should have reached my office the next day, according to their calculations.

An hon. Member: They don't know the Post Office the way we do.

Mr. Baldwin: I say this with due respect, Mr. Speaker. That document did not reach my office, has not reached my office, and I do not know whether it ever will. My instructions were that it was a special delivery letter containing a copy of the comments of the chief judge and it would be in my possession immediately. That has not happened. I did all I could, and I was only able to obtain the same kind of barely legible copy as the hon. member, from a member of the press gallery who got it from the office of the clerk in Montreal.

I had people in our organization who are good at this, and who are reputable, make as careful and detailed a copy as possible under the circumstances. I would have preferred the other way, but I was put in this impossible position. Now I understand that the chief judge departed yesterday for Greece for two or three weeks, and so we may not be able to get another copy as he is not available.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The parliamentary secretary has requested that he be given some time to examine the text. I think that is a reasonable request. In any event, I would intend to take some time for study of the matters I have to decide, so there certainly will be an opportunity for him to examine the text. If he seeks an opportunity to make an intervention as the result of that study, I certainly think the House ought to accord it to him.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I suppose we could ask the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) if we have extradition privileges with Greece!

[Mr. Pinard.]

Many of the people who spoke today have commented on the wording, the legality, the lawyer's position in terms of this privilege. I think consideration should also be given to those of us who are not lawyers and who may not know the niceties of the law and so may be intimidated.

I am very pleased that the hon. member for Peace River brought this forth. He is one of the most honourable members of this House. He is certainly one of those dedicated to law in a very general sense, and to law as it specifically affects parliament.

I think it reflects badly on some members of this House that they have continually neglected to take full advantage of the suggestions of Your Honour with regard to solving some of the problems of the House. As I understand it, Your Honour made the suggestion today on behalf of all members—without making the decision whether or not the judge was in contempt of parliament and whether he had in fact intimidated a member of parliament to a point where he could not conduct his business—of an alternative course that would allow this matter to be discussed, and might eliminate the threat that would be inherent in a very definite decision of the House in finding there was a prima facie case of intimidation.

I would question the legalistic ability of some members who participated, and would certainly question their ability in other senses in making this argument, who have disagreed with you for, I think, partisan and very selfish reasons. It is not the first time. We had a situation of a similar nature not too long ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but I think we ought to be careful here. What I asked the House to do was—while other contributions were being made, and while I had the matter under reserve—to consider whether a reference to the Standing Committee on Rights and Immunities of Members might be a matter of consent. That is a departure for the Chair to take at the beginning of a procedural discussion. I would not want that to be taken as a suggestion that it be done. That is unfair. What I did was to say that it ought to be considered.

There may be all kinds of reasons why people want to take positions, but I think we should be careful to say that the Chair put forward a matter that might be considered on this occasion or any other occasion. I would not want it to be said that I simply observed to the House that the matter might be resolved that way, that in fact it was the way that I preferred or that I suggested. That puts too strong an interpretation on what I was endeavouring to do. I thought that while contributions were being made, and while I had it under reserve, members might want to discuss the possibility of an agreed reference. I do not want that to be taken as a suggestion that I would prefer it that way, however. In fact, if the matter rests with me officially and I have to make a decision on the grounds of privilege, I am quite happy to do so.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I listened to your suggestion and found it to be excellent. I accepted it, as I think many members did, and I think there would have been agreement. I have no legal training, but not long ago I received a letter from a legal firm. It had about 20 names on fancy notepaper, and it threatened to sue me for a number of things that I had said about pensions, not necessarily in this House, but certainly those things have been said in this House as well.

I am not easily intimidated, Mr. Speaker, but I am not very wealthy either. I am not sure that I want to face that battery of lawyers in Toronto, so I have pretty well ceased and desisted from talking about that particular problem. While I would not say I have backed down, I certainly have been cautious.

I am sure that if many of us not trained in the law received a letter of that sort, or an indication in a press release that a judge said, "If you say those things outside the House of Commons I will have you in contempt of court and put you in jail", we would feel intimidated. That is really what happened in this case. Judges do not normally go around explaining why they make a certain decision. Questions were asked why the judge had made a decision in relation to bail and had prevented members of parliament from asking questions about it even in this House. They certainly could not talk to the person who could give a first-hand account of it, even privately outside this chamber, and get the information without the person who asked the question and the person who had the information being in contempt of court. To me, that is intimidation.

It often amazes those of us who are uninformed when we hear one lawyer address another as "my honourable friend", when you can see the knife about six inches long going into the back. It is "my honourable friend", "my honourable associate", "my honourable colleague", and that sort of thing—just mumbo-jumbo.

As a person who is not legally trained, it seemed to me that when the judge made that statement he was only making it in order to intimidate. He does not do that every time. Certainly ever time he makes a judgment he does not give a press release saying why he did certain things, and telling members of parliament that if they refer to it then they could be in contempt of court. I might suggest to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that if he should take a train to Montreal and say it out of court—

Mr. Baldwin: I cancelled one this week end.

Mr. Peters: —he would now have to wait for that judge to come back from his extended holiday in Greece. I am not suggesting that, Mr. Speaker, because I am damned sure the judge would put him in jail if he did it, if he has the power to do it. Therefore, he is intimidating him. I think for that reason your suggestion, Mr. Speaker, was an ideal one.

I am shocked at these government members trying to defend something that is indefensible, on behalf of the judiciary over which they have no control. They cannot answer questions in this House, they did not appoint these people for whom they are not responsible. It would seem to me they should start worrying a little more about members of parliament who may be intimidated by a judge.

Certainly one of the cabinet ministers, in my opinion, was intimidated by a judge. They damn well think that that cabinet minister had the right to say that the guy needed a pair of glasses, that he certainly did not see a judicial situation very clearly. I think the minister was right. Certainly when he let those companies off, he was wrong. I do not think it is right for them to get up and go to the committee and defend the right of the RCMP to bug a member of parliament and say there is no privilege in that. He really did not get hurt. He did not say anything that incriminated him with his wife so, therefore, it is not a matter of privilege.

I would like the Liberal members of this House to show a little more concern for the individual member who may find himself in a position of being intimidated. While I know the member for Peace River is not being intimidated by this judge, I know he knows that he is making this case on our behalf because it may happen to someone else who may feel just as strongly about the law. I would suggest that it will be a member from Quebec who is being threatened by that same judiciary who will be the next on the list if we do not stand up for the limited privilege that we have in this House which, to me, is only the privilege of being protected against libel in this House. Sometimes we are allowed on behalf of our constituents to say what we think on their behalf, and assume that privilege on their behalf where it is not available to us as ordinary members of parliament on the street.

Mr. Speaker: Members who have contributed to this discussion have all put forward some very helpful views. As I indicated earlier, I want to give them careful consideration. If the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), after examination of the original text in French, wants to make a further contribution, he ought to have the opportunity to do it, although I would hope he would do it very soon.

I want to reiterate that while I have the matter under reserve, the matter of any kind of agreed reference, as always in matters of this sort, remains open. Maybe some discussion can take place on that. If they do not, I would like to make it clear that when I put that idea forward it is an idea that can be taken under consideration really in every matter of privilege, I suppose. If it materializes, the Chair can be advised, and that is a happy resolution of the matter. If it does not materialize, I think it would be most inappropriate to consider that the mention of it by the Chair would be a preference expressed by the Chair for the resolution of the matter. That, I think, would be most improper. And in that atmosphere it is one that I would not want to contribute to in any way.

To close this matter from discussion at this time we ought to be clear on the documents we have ordered appended. Such as the quality of the copies that are available, I have the notice which the hon. member gave to me. It includes a French text and the translation to which reference has been made. For the sake of accuracy these will be the set of documents to be appended to today's Hansard and printed as a part of it. This clarifies the order that we made earlier, because there was some confusion about what text we were printing, particularly since the original text may be different from the documents we have tabled here today. Nevertheless, for the purposes of today's discussion we agreed to table the document which I now have in my hand and which was part of the notice given to me on this matter by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

I will take the matter under reserve, subject only to a further contribution and any other debate that might be provoked by the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask a question, in the absence of the government House leader, with respect to the business of the House. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) will be able to answer. I assume, in asking the question, that the list of legislation given last week at this time continues to be the list of the government's priorities. If it has not already been done, can there be a designation by him or someone who has the power to so designate that Monday, June 5, and Friday, June 9, be allotted days in accordance with the informal arrangement that exists?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right in saying that the priority list as established last week by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) still holds; we will continue the debate on Bill C-56, and next Monday as well as next Friday will be allotted days.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the government House leader is not here because there are a couple of matters which came up today that are important. However, I will put them on the record, and he can read them. One was the matter that was raised in the question period about the time which might be set aside for a debate on the matters involving NATO, the Prime Minister's visit to the United Nations, our position with respect to South Africa, and all of those matters that were encompassed within the question period. There was some question as to the time that might be available.

In accordance with this informal arrangement, we have an opposition day, it is a short day but it is a day that is designated for us, on June 14, if my recollection is correct. Would the government be agreeable to giving us a day ahead for the purposes of discussing those matters? I would suggest the day before, June 13, for example, and an appropriate motion could be put on the order paper. We would be prepared to contribute that opposition day for the purpose of making up a two-day debate on foreign affairs, because we take the position there has not been sufficient discussion on that topic. We can discuss whether it will be the day after, but we make that offer to the government concerning a debate on foreign affairs.

In our judgment the question period is inadequate for the kind of examination that we want and similarly the standing committee is inadequate for the kind of participation we want. I hope the government will be forthcoming in granting us a day so that we can have a two-day debate. I leave that with the parliamentary secretary.

The other matter concerns the veterans legislation. I am glad to see that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) is in the House. I know he is anxious to bring forward that bill. It is unfortunate that the Deputy Prime Minister is holding that bill to ransom until the tax bill is finished. I do not think the veterans of the country, who have been anxious for that particular bill for some time, should be held to ransom for the tax bill. I repeat the undertaking with regard to that legislation. We will deal with all stages of that bill in one hour on a parliamentary day, all three readings and committee of the whole.

I suggest to the government that we would take part of the Progressive Conservative party's allotted day on Friday, June 9, between four and five in the afternoon, so that bill can be put through just prior to the time the minister goes to Edmonton to attend the convention of the Royal Canadian Legion. I am, of course, prepared to suggest that we might break off debate now on the tax bill to allow it to go through all stages. That is an offer for the minister. I am glad he is in the House. I hope he takes the position he cannot refuse such a generous offer.

I do not know who is in the position to answer for the government today. I do not know whether the government has taken note of the fact that the holiday for French-speaking Canadians, Saint Jean Baptiste Day, falls on Saturday, June 24, when parliament is not sitting. I understand it is to be celebrated on Friday, June 23. Indeed, federal public servants who work in Hull will, I understand, have that day as a holiday.

There is some confusion in the Standing Orders with regard to the celebration of that day. Interestingly enough, the same confusion occurs with regard to July 1 which also falls on a Saturday. I understand the celebrations are to take place on the Monday. The Standing Orders do make reference to the day upon which those holidays are to be celebrated.

The reason I rise is that the balance of the public servants will have the Dominion Day holiday on the following Monday. It is important that there be some clarification by the government as to the position of the government, not only for members of the House of Commons, but for the staff of the House of Commons. I would appreciate it if the parliamentary secretary would convey that message, because it is appropriate that the government make that clarification soon.

Finally, can the parliamentary secretary tell us when the bill following upon the ways and means motion relating to the small business changes will be introduced?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that with regard to two or three matters raised by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), the parliamentary secretary will have to consult his minister. It may be that we should have some joint discussions, particularly with regard to sorting out the holiday week ends.

I rise mainly to say two things. First, I welcome the fact that Monday, June 5, has been or will be designated as an opposition day. I believe it is agreed on this side of the House that that will be our day, and there will be a motion in the name of the leader of this party.

I now come to the question of the bill respecting the basic rate of the War Disability Pension. I may say that in the meetings of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs this week when we were on estimates, we had enough discussion on this bill that I can say we would be very satisfied to put it through the House quickly. Certainly an hour will be sufficient time.

Since the business of the day has already been upset, and there is more to come, I suggest that we deal with that bill tonight. We are not going to have much time today for Bill C-56 anyway. I would suggest we deal with it now, only the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Buchanan) has a statement to make and we will be tied up with that. Then there will be private members' hour.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) will be here tonight. The hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles), who speaks for his party on this issue as I do for my party, and I have discussed the matter and we are certainly in agreement on a very short debate. I do not think we need a House order. Surely our word is good on this, that it will not take more than an hour to put that bill through second reading, committee of the whole, and third reading so that it can be passed and sent to the other place where I believe they can deal with it very quickly.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, concerning the Tory House leader's comments about a special debate on external affairs, he was told this afternoon that the question period provided opposition members with sufficient opportunity to ask questions about it. A few moments ago I read the motion moved by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) to allow certain committees to sit during the month of June. I find that the committee on External Affairs and National Defence is included in the motion and thus will be allowed to sit during June, providing opposition members with another opportunity to ask questions on the subject, and finally there are still many days allocated to the opposition. However, I take notice of the hon. member's suggestion about a two-day debate where the opposition would sacrifice one day and the government would give up one day of its business. I will transmit that suggestion to the President of the Privy Council.

As for Bill C-58, we disagree that we should wait as long as the Progressive Conservative House leader suggests. We want to proceed with this bill on the conditions he specified, that is to pass the bill through all stages within an hour. We do not wish to consider the bill on an opposition day next week, or in two or three weeks, as he suggested. We would rather go ahead with this bill today and, if necessary, tonight at eight o'clock when the minister will be here. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) is available and as soon as we are finished with another minister's statement on motions, we will proceed with the bill, as long as we have at least an hour, that is as long as there is one working hour left to discuss, for a maximum of one hour, and pass this piece of legislation at all stages.

Finally, as regards the Saint-Jean-Baptiste, we on this side of the House have a deep respect for the French Canadians' feast day and hon. members of the opposition can be assured that we will advise all members of the House at what time exactly the House may adjourn to celebrate with dignity the feast day of our fellow citizens. Finally, concerning bills relating to small businesses, I have been asked when we will proceed to their consideration. I will refer this request to the President of Privy Council, but I want to point out to the hon. member that several of these fiscal measures have already been implemented so that it is far from being as urgent as one might believe at first sight. Mr. Speaker, besides the comments I just made, I will be pleased to convey to the Deputy Prime Minister the suggestions which have been made and I will inform the opposition parties as soon as possible.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HNATYSHYN—ANSWER BY PRIME MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It has its basis in the question period today. I intend to be very brief. My point of order relates to an answer given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during the course of the question period today in response to a question I put to him. I submit to Your Honour that the Prime Minister misled the House, perhaps inadvertently, by putting words in my mouth with regard to the question I put to him.

● (1642)

During the course of his response the Prime Minister suggested that the position I had put to him was that the actions of Hon. Donald S. Macdonald with regard to his appointment as a director of one or another commercial corporations in Canada did not contravene the guidelines set out by the Prime Minister on two separate occasions. That position is not the position I have submitted to the Prime Minister. I think there are more substantial questions than whether the action of Mr. Macdonald breaches the guidelines or not, and my question to the Prime Minister asked for a review of those guidelines, not whether, in fact, Mr. Macdonald's activities breached the guidelines in question.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, after discussion on the consideration of Bill C-58 relating to the Department of Veterans Affairs, it seems that we could go through consideration of the whole bill between five and six o'clock tonight during the time usually reserved for private members' business. Having discussed with the leader of the official opposition, I would like to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to cancel private members' business between five and six o'clock today in order to dispose of all stages of Bill C-58.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a proposition which will undoubtedly be considered between now and five o'clock. In the meantime we have other matters with which to occupy the House.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 41(2) I should like to table two documents in each of the official languages dealing with the state of research and development in Canada.

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the two documents which were just tabled, may I say that one of them is a discussion paper dealing with research and development in Canada in which a number of long term issues and policies are presented. It is intended to stimulate an exchange of views among the research sectors prior to the proposed federal-provincial ministers' conference on industrial research and development in the fall of 1978. The other is a document informing the House of a number of specific objectives and immediate measures the government is adopting to increase the level of research and development in this country.

The objectives are:

1. As a new national policy, to reach a target of 1.5 per cent of the gross domestic product for research and development expenditure in Canada by 1983.

2. To use federal government procurement to stimulate industrial research and industrial development in Canada.

3. To encourage greater private sector spending on research and development and to create more job opportunities in, and through, science and technology.

4. To open federal laboratories to the private sector in order to encourage greater technology transfer between government and business.

5. To create industrial research and innovation centres to assist industry, particularly small business and private inventors, in the development of new products and technology.

6. To assist in the development of centres of excellence on a regional basis, both to build upon the diverse strength of Canada and to ensure local expertise and initiative.

7. To increase funding for university research in areas of national concern.

[Translation]

If we are to secure the future that Canadians expect, the attainment of these objectives is essential. A healthy R and D effort in Canadian industry is a necessary component of success in an international trading environment which is becoming increasingly competitive. At present, the level of industrial R and D in Canada is significantly lower than it should be. A number of measures have already been taken by the Government to correct the situation. They include: increased tax incentives for industrial research announced in recent budgets; increased funding of a number of direct assistance programs in 1978-79; extension of the contracting-out policy; increased efforts at transferring technology from government laboratories to industry; and introduction of an employment program in industry for highly-qualified manpower.

[English]

Further steps are to be taken as follows:

1. The procurement practices of the federal government will be changed to ensure their effective use in support of industrial research and industrial development in Canada.

2. The government is expanding its contracting-out program by adding $1.5 million in each of the next two years to the unsolicited proposals fund of the Department of Supply and Services which is designed to allow industry to meet government research needs.

3. As a further stimulus to employment in research and development, an additional program involving $3 million this year will be instituted for highly qualified manpower under Canada Works. It will create jobs for unemployed scientific and technical personnel in the performance of research projects in universities at the request of Canadian firms. It complements the science and technology employment program in industry which I announced in April, and is directed especially at small businesses which do not have an R and D capacity of their own.

4. Increased co-operation between government and industry and between universities and industry will be fostered through the establishment of institutions and the reinforcement of other mechanisms specifically devoted to the transfer of ideas, innovations, information, skills, manpower and technical capacity; by the addition of $5 million to the Program of Industry-Laboratory Projects (PILP) of the National Research Council and the extension of the program to other government departments, and by the expansion of the National Research Council's technical information service for small businesses through the employment of senior students in science and engineering. An amount of $350,000 will be directed to this program in the current year.

Increased co-operation will also be fostered by the establishment of a clearing-house role for Canadian Patents and Development Limited to facilitate the transfer of information between industry and government laboratories; by further emphasis on the transfer of technology to industry as an objective of all government research activities; by the establishment, in consultation with the provinces, of up to five regional university-based industrial research and innovation centres over the next few years. An amount of $2 million will be made available for the purpose this year.

5. The establishment of centres of excellence across Canada responsive to national needs. One of the main objectives of the centres will be to achieve better integration of government, university, and industrial research activities. They will be based on the natural and human resources of each area so as to assist in the further development of the industrial capacity of each region. As one illustration, the new ice tank of the National Research Council will be located in St. John's, Newfoundland, within the developing complex of facilities for cold water engineering. The government will spend $6.8 million this year toward the establishment of such centres. Their successful establishment and operation will require the closest co-operation between the provinces, industry and the universities.

6. The budget of the three granting councils for funding research will be increased by $10 million each year. This increase will be for research efforts in areas of national concern and will supplement the funds provided to the councils for this purpose in 1977-78.

● (1652)

The details of the foregoing measures can be found in the document entitled "Measures to Strengthen and Encourage Research and Development in Canada".

In addition to the measures already announced, very important initiatives will be taken by other departments in the area of research and development. For example, the Department of Fisheries and the Environment, the Department of National Defence, and the Ministry of Transport all have major interests in these areas. In particular, my colleague, the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé), has significant proposals which she will be announcing in the near future.

In addition, I believe these measures will complement and support the initiatives to strengthen small business in Canada proposed last week by my colleague, the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott).

In view of the increasing evidence that research and development intensive companies grow more quickly, have higher productivity, better price performance, and are competitive in international markets, these policies and measures I have announced will help to strengthen our economy and provide jobs now and well into the future. I believe also that the policies and measures lay a good foundation for a new spirit of co-operation among government, universities, and industry.

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, in terms of our gross national product we have the worst record of any western nation when it comes to investing in research and development. We invest less than 1 per cent of our gross national product, while our objective, as set out by the Senate Committee on Science Policy, should be 2.5 per cent, and our goal must be to achieve that level by the mid-1980s. This is the fraction of the gross national product now spent in the United States, the United Kingdom, and West Germany, and achieving this goal will require a major commitment of our natural resources and significant new directions in science policy. Even then we shall arrive only at the same commitment now enjoyed by our competitors.

The minister's identification of 1.5 per cent of gross national product—the written release refers to gross domestic product—for our research and development expenditure in Canada by 1983 is like the awakening of wisdom, but the limited objective and his shotgun approach in announcing a number of recycled old policies—some of them unrelated—cause me to be concerned that the wisdom is shortlived.

Most certainly, we hope for the success of every single program the minister has announced, and only time will tell whether the statement, which is more general than specific, is more cosmetic than real.

It is important for us to refer to the ministry of state summary of federal science activities for 1978-79 and refer to figure 6, federal government expenditures by type of science and performer, to see the effect of the federal government commitment to the make or buy policy, and to contracting out to industry functions which otherwise would be performed in government laboratories. Intramural activities in 1976-77 are shown at $460.8 million. In 1977-78 they rise to $511.1 million. In 1978-79 they increase to $567.1 million. At the same time the research and development expenditures for industry in 1976-77 were $222.3 million, in 1977-78 $214.8 million, and in 1978-79 $217.6 million. With the make or buy policy we still have an increase in intramural activity and a decrease in industrial research and development expenditures by this government.

Another amazing feature of this same report is that the government has spent over $1 billion on research and development. Where are the results, and what is the direction?

So, how do we stimulate research and development in the private sector of our economy? The Science Council suggests a 25 per cent tax credit on all current and capital expenditures, with carry-forward provisions, in addition to the current shared-cost programs.

The Senate committee suggested that we restore the tax incentive for industrial research and development based solely on incremental research and development expenditures over a base period.

Another representation from the scientific community supported the 25 per cent investment tax credit, increased at the rate of 5 per cent per year until a satisfactory national level of industrial research and development is attained. This body also recommended a moratorium on the capital gains tax for new technology-based ventures for the initial five years of operation. A reduced corporation tax rate for new technology-based industry based on employment growth was also suggested.

The president of Northern Telecom supported a 25 per cent investment tax credit with a ten-year commitment, and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association supported the same 25 per cent tax credit, but with the asset value not reduced for depreciation purposes.

In its great wisdom the government rejected all these recommendations and chose the additional allowance scheme of 1962, featuring the 50 per cent special allowance of a three-year moving average base involving both capital and current expenditures lumped together.

This special 50 per cent allowance was replaced about ten years ago because it was alleged by the government to be of no benefit to new firms and those not in a taxable position which needed the assistance most. Small firms receive less of the benefit than larger ones, because the larger the rate of tax applied to the pre-tax allowance, the greater is the benefit. The tax credit eliminates this type of discrimination by the tax rate against small firms.

It is not enough to point to the failures of the government without offering suggestions, and I do have some proposals to make. The government must be convinced and clearly indicate to all segments of our economy that it is convinced of the importance of research and development as an essential base for economic advancement, and that it will encourage the transfer of scientific knowledge and technology in a co-operative effort between universities, governments, and industries. It is not convincing when it comes out with a series of ad hoc policies, recycled proposals, and rejected tax schemes. Neither is it convincing when every few days we get another announcement of a new program. What we really need is a coherent, clearly stated national policy underlining a serious commitment to development.

The government must increase its support for basic and applied research and development in Canada, and with our present facilities—starved and dehydrated by government policies—reaching the level of 2.5 per cent of our gross national product that will not be easy, but it should be our goal, and it has been expressed as the goal of this party in this House by our leader.

Some hon. Members: Who?

Mr. Howie: While government has an important continuing role in research and development funding, especially in areas like agriculture, we need a special effort to increase investment in innovation by Canadian industry. The sad fact is that General Motors, IBM, and Ford each spend more on research and development in the United States than do all Canadian companies taken together. A significant increase in the research and development tax deduction must be a first priority.

Since our ability to produce food is a precious national asset and we own one third of the world's fresh water supply, we must give particular priority to strengthening our agricultural research and development program. The federal government spends about one tenth of its research and development funding on agriculture. The Agricultural Institute of Canada has warned us that this situation threatens Canada's position as a major world producer and supplier of food.

As the Science Council of Canada has pointed out, the key to innovation is to build and maintain an effective team of human talent. This involves our universities in an expanded role, and it means developing a special incentive for new employment in industrial research, design, and development.

Our policies too must be more than passive or responsive. They must be geared to promote innovation where Canada is best equipped to compete with the rest of the world and by companies which have a clear and unfettered commitment to Canada's interests. The creative talent is there. What is not there and what must be there is national leadership to match that creative potential with our economic objectives. What we need is a focus of all departments of government on the problem of research and development, and not a cosmetic shotgun approach of recycled ideas.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock, I must at this time interrupt the proceedings to proceed to the consideration of private members' business. However, by unanimous consent the House may agree not to see the clock so that we can complete proceedings under statements by ministers. If hon. members feel we can complete the business in a short time, we could come back to private members' business following that. I will invite the parliamentary secretary to move a motion reflecting whatever agreement has been reached. Is that agreed?

● (1702)

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to state clearly that consideration of Bill C-58 will have to end at six o'clock and that by that time the bill must have gone through all stages so that at eight o'clock tonight we can proceed to consideration of Bill C-56 as previously agreed.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The parliamentary secretary requests the Chair to put his proposal before the House. This means that we would not see the clock but complete the proceedings under statements by ministers, following which we would forgo private members' business and proceed directly to Bill C-58, on the understanding that all stages of the bill will be completed by six o'clock.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that represents the agreement amongst us. I think that part of the agreement is that if precisely at six o'clock we have not finished because we have lost more time, we will not see the clock, any more than we have seen it at five o'clock.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is certainly agreeable Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the statement by the minister a little while ago, and the announcement by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) earlier today during the question period that the amount of money to be allocated for medical research has been increased by 11 per cent rather than the 5.5 per cent indicated in the estimates, demonstrate that even this government listens to representations if they are made loud enough and often enough, and when an election is coming up.

I must admit that again I was amazed by the statement made by the minister because he succeeded in doing something I did not think he could do. He succeeded in making a statement which sounded very good but which, when the fine print was looked at, proved again that the government really does not understand the needs with regard to scientific research. The reason it sounded very well was obviously that the minister's speech writers have read documents such as the May issue of the bulletin published by the Canadian Association of University Teachers, which concentrates on the problems of scientific research, and the resolution passed by the 1977 convention of the NDP which went into detail about scientific research and what needed doing. That was in the general things they said, but when it comes to doing things, we find that the minister and the government propose to do very little more than they have already done.

The minister states that the government's target for the next five years is to raise the percentage of the gross domestic product from the present less than 1 per cent to 1.5 per cent expenditure on scientific research by 1983. The fact is that at present countries such as the United States, the United Kingdom, West Germany, and the Netherlands are already spending 2 per cent or more of their g.n.p. on scientific research. So the minister is proposing that five years from now we will still be spending less of our g.n.p. than those countries are already spending.

I point out to the minister that our 1977 convention stated as follows:

> Increased financial support for basic and applied research and development to a level of at least 2.5 per cent of the g.n.p. within three years.

That is 1 per cent more than the minister is proposing, and in three years rather than five.

Mr. Buchanan: That is impractical.

Mr. Orlikow: That is what I expected from the minister. The government proposes more tax incentives, increased assistance to direct assistance programs, extension of the contracting out policy, and transfer from government laboratories to industry of technology. All of these have been tried before and they have obviously failed to meet the needs of this country for increased emphasis on scientific research.

The government proposes to increase funding for university research, but the amount indicated in the background papers of $20 million is so small that I consider it to be an insult to the university scientists of this country.

The government proposes the creation of industrial research and innovation centres, financial support for employment of scientific research personnel, and a number of other proposals, all which are small steps in the right direction, which we support. But the proposals to encourage greater private sector spending on research and development through increased tax incentives have been complete failures. Those failures go at least as far back as when scientific research came under the jurisdiction of the former member for Westmount, Mr. Drury, and I think even this minister knows how the scientific community assesses that minister's regime with regard to scientific research.

Between 1968-69 and 1975-76, research and development expenditures fell from 5 per cent of federal expenditures to less than half of that, to 2.4 per cent of federal expenditures. By 1976 actual government expenditures on research and development had fallen to less than .5 per cent of the g.n.p. Just compare that with what other countries are doing. The proportion of the g.n.p. spent by the federal government for basic research has steadily decreased since 1969. In 1976 it was an appalling 0.07 per cent, while in Belgium it was 0.3 per cent, in Germany 0.3 per cent, in France 0.4 per cent, in Japan 0.4 per cent, and in the Netherlands 0.6 per cent of the g.n.p. In other words, Canada spent about one quarter of the average support level of these western European countries and Japan.

The Lamontagne committee, which looked into the whole question of science, reported that Canada and Scandinavia, which have comparable populations, have about the same number of researchers in universities, yet Canada has 9,000 more people than Scanadinavia in government laboratories and 20,000 fewer in industry. What the minister is proposing is more concessions to the industrial community which has failed thus far.

The minister says I have it backwards. I do not. I said that we have 20,000 fewer people in industry than Scandinavia.

Mr. Buchanan: That is our problem.

Mr. Orlikow: What the minister is proposing simply will not do. The background papers tabled by the minister indicate that Canadian research and development effort over-all is "low compared to other industrialized countries". Later on in the same paper it is stated "An important component of the problem in industry is the high degree of foreign ownership". Yet we get proposals for more incentives to these corporations which have failed so miserably until now in fulfilling their responsibilities.

● (1712)

Why has this happened? I think the reasons include the following:

(1) The fact that so much of Canadian industry is in the resources area which requires little R and D. Canada has one of the lowest percentage of workers, in the manufacturing area (23 per cent) as compared to West Germany's 38 per cent, the U.K.'s 36 per cent and the U.S.A.'s 34 per cent.

(2) Canada has the highest degree of foreign ownership and control of its industry among the OECD countries. The major part of the R and D efforts of these companies increasingly takes place in the head office country. A classic example of this situation is Ford of Canada which had sales of $4.8 billion, a profit of $126 million, yet carries out no R and D in Canada and employs not one science Ph.D. in all its Canadian operations.

If we are going to deal with this matter of scientific research seriously, we must deal with the situation involving multi-national foreign owned corporations. Legisl ation is required to ensure that these companies invest a significant percentage of their profits earned in Canada in research and development conducted in Canada.

The ability of this country to function as an independent nation will depend on our capacity to develop a strong secondary manufacturing industry based on products and ideas developed from heavy investment in research and development by industry. If we are to do that we must make scientific research by governments, universities, and industry a must, not just a choice that can be ignored at will as it has been in the past, largely by multi-national controlled industry.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the statement the minister just made which is a small step in the right direction, but a rather timid one when one considers the need for research and development in Canada.

Indeed, during a debate on March 7 last several members told the government about the needs of universities in research and development. On that occasion, I said to the minister and to the government that for several years Canada had been lagging behind in the field of research and development when compared with OECD countries and that for several years Canada had even been behind Italy which, in 1975, spent more than 1.1 per cent of its gross national product on R and D whereas Canada was content with spending 0.8 per cent only of its gross national product. Mr. Speaker, obviously we have lagged behind in research and development, and the increase proposed tonight by the minister, however interesting it may be, is not enough to make up for lost time. I think we should do better than that if we are to reach the level of industrialized countries, since we do consider ourselves members of that great family. This is not the first time that we take position in this regard and I would like to remind the minister that last year, in November 1977, during a Social Credit party convention in Drummondville, Quebec, a resolution in that vein was passed, and if I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read this resolution once again, and I quote:

That a Social Credit Party of Canada government would stimulate private (university) research by establishing a five-year science policy in line with the three following basic principles: (1) the necessity of an adequate budget; (2) the urgency of a long term, that is three to nine year, science policy for Canada; and (3) the presence of a researchers' representative on the grants committees.

I think that this third point is also extremely important. Only recently, a few weeks ago as a matter of fact, during the distribution of allocated votes, there were some pretty fierce confrontations and I believe that the presence of researchers' representatives on the grants committee is indispensable to ensure that the grants be given out properly and the money go where it should.

Mr. Speaker, the minister also said that some departments would be spending more than others for research and development in their own field of endeavour. That is well and good, but I think that if we want to help small business, that can only and most easily be done through departments. But I also believe that by entrusting the research to our universities, which have the proper equipment and the qualified staff, we will be able to make interesting discoveries, which will put Canada on an equal footing with any other country in the world and we will no longer need to borrow from other countries the innovations we need. We will be able to do so ourselves and we will help the expansion of research throughout the world.

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,159, 1,498, 1,592 and 1,607.

[Text]

CBC OMBUDSMAN

Question No. 1,159—Mr. Marshall:

1. What is the budget of the CBC "Ombudsman"?

2. What is the number of staff of the CBC "Ombudsman"?

3. (a) How many cases per month are received by the CBC "Ombudsman" (b) how many are (i) accepted (ii) rejected?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. It has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration as the budgets of its programs. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530, May 22, 1975.

2. 21.

3. (a) and (b) A varying number of potential cases are received each month, ranging from an average of 700 a week in peak season to an average of 50 a week in late summer. Since "Ombudsman" began in January, 1974, approximately 38,000 pieces of mail of all kinds have been received. A portion of that total consists of audience comments on the program. Of the total pieces of mail received, more than 11,000 were cases and, of these, 208, or 1.8 per cent, were telecast on the weekly 30 minute television program. From the outset of program it was felt that "Ombudsman" could not offer to help people who wrote and then help only those whose cases were chosen for television, discarding the rest. "Ombudsman" has, therefore, been a television program, telecast from October to April, as well as a service carried on throughout the year. All mail is acknowledged and all cases are logged and filed under a numerical-alphabetical system. The federal Law Reform Commission's 1975 report on "Ombudsman's" case files broke down the process of disposition and showed that "Ombudsman" was able to be helpful in 68.24 per cent of all cases. This help was provided by referring the complainant to an agency competent to handle the complaint, by clarifying the complainant's rights, by speeding up the government process, or by sometimes leading to a reversal of an official decision.

ADMINISTRATOR, CANADIAN SURFACE TRANSPORTATION ADMINISTRATION

Question No. 1,498—Mr. Jones:

1. Who was recently appointed to the position of Administrator, Canadian Surface Transportation Administration?

2. What are the duties and responsibilities of this position?

3. What are the recent appointee's qualifications for this position?

4. Does the previous work experience of the recent appointee in any way relate to his/her new position?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. Mr. R. J. Giroux.

2. Under the general direction of the deputy minister and the senior assistant deputy minister, the administrator, Canadian Surface Transportation Administration, directs the formulation and implementation of the surface transportation policies and programs and the management of all operational, developmental and regulatory activities of the Department of Transport in support of surface transportation. In discharging these duties he consults with other administrators and assistant deputy ministers in the department and is assisted by subordinate directors general responsible for planning and coordination, highway, railway, and water transportation.

3. Mr. Giroux has a Bachelor in Commerce (Economics) and a Masters degree (Labour Economics) from the University of Ottawa. He has research and line management experience gained through progressively more senior positions in the Public Service, including director general Ontario region, DREE, and assistant deputy minister, Department of Fitness and Amateur Sport and Department of National Health and Welfare.

4. Yes.

KOOTENAY RIVER DIVERSION—B.C. HYDRO

Question No. 1,592—Mr. Brisco:

Has an application been made to the Minister of Transport under the Navigable Waters Protection Act for a licence or permit to obstruct the Kootenay River at or near Canal Flats, British Columbia to construct the Kootenay River Diversion by B.C. Hydro?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The Minister of Transport is not in receipt of an application by British Columbia Hydro for approval under the Navigable Waters Protection Act to undertake works in the Kootenay River at or near Canal Flats, province of British Columbia.

ADVERTISEMENT—POST OFFICE

Question No. 1,607—Mr. Elzinga:

Was a newspaper advertisement published by the Marketing Division of the Post Office Department entitled "What advertising medium allows you to reach 98 per cent of your prospects with a single message? Direct Mail!" and, if so (a) by province, what are the names of the newspapers which published it (b) how often did it appear in each newspaper (c) what was the cost per advertisement (d) what was the total cost of publishing the advertisement?

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): "What advertising medium allows you to reach 98 per cent of your prospects with a single message? Direct Mail!"—was not strictly a newspaper advertisement as the question would indicate. This advertisement, and one other of the same direct mail campaign were placed in national publications and subsequently placed in the business sections of daily newspapers where it was felt the national papers lacked market penetration. The media was scheduled as follows: all insertions carried in the month of March, 1978. (a) and (b) Ontario: Financial Times (1,000 li), 4 insertions; Financial Post (1,200 li), 3 insertions; Stimulus, 1 insertion; Marketing, 3 insertions;

Globe and Mail, 4 insertions. Quebec: Les Affaires (830 li), 3 insertions; Publicitaire, 1 insertion; Le Devoir, 4 insertions. DOT RAIL EQUIPMENT

Question No. 520—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. What are the names of all the companies who placed bids on the ten train options as a result of a tender call by DOT for new rail equipment on July 4, 1976?

2. (a) What are all the factors, including cost, that were taken into consideration in the awarding of the tenders (b) what was the weighted-average or similar type of quantification that was given to each factor in each bid?

3. What was the (a) amount (b) date (c) purpose of any grant or loan or similar kind of offer, if any, that has been given to Bombardier-MLW Ltd. of Montreal, since 1970 by any department, agency or Crown corporation?

4. What was the (a) amount (b) date (c) purpose of any grant or kind of offer, if any, that was given to the companies listed in Part 1 since 1970 by any department, agency or Crown corporation?

5. (a) Of the 1500 man-years of work to be spread over a three year period arising from the $90 million contract to Bombardier-MLW Ltd. of Montreal, what are the job locations and number of man-years assigned to each location that will serve this contract (b) are any of the job locations in a DREE "designated area" and, if so, what is the area and what is the annual unemployment rate for each area?

Return tabled.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Does the House agree that question No. 520 be made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pinard: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PENSION ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE PAYMENTS

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that Bill C-58, to amend the Pension Act and the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion as it appears on the Order Paper states that the bill is to be referred to the standing committee. Is it agreed, by unanimous consent, to conform with an agreement already made, that the motion be amended in order that the bill will be referred to a committee of the whole?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The amended motion is then as follows:

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved:

That Bill C-58, to amend the Pension Act and the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act, be read the second time and referred to a committee of the whole.

● (1722)

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, this bill receiving second reading today has been a major concern of Canadian veterans for some time. However, it has been an issue that had to be considered from every aspect.

We all realize that legislation which affects veterans does not remain static. It requires frequent re-examination and constructive review. This procedure has been a prime concern for many people in the Canadian Pension Commission, the Department of Veterans Affairs, and in this House. I am pleased this bill will receive quick passage, and I reiterate the fact that this increase is significant at a time when we must guard against overspending, and demonstrate to the people of Canada our concern in the area of financial restraint. Our Canadian veterans are deserving of this addition to the automatic increases provided under the Pension Act each January in accordance with the consumer price index.

Bill C-58 is a recognition of the service rendered by our Canadian veterans for their country, and a recognition by the Government of Canada of the sacrifice made by, not only the soldiers, sailors, airmen and women of Canada's wartime forces but also by the wives, widows, dependants and orphans of those who gave so much for this nation.

Earlier this year increased benefits were provided for first world war veterans who were prisoners of war, and a smaller group, mostly members of the wartime RCAF who evaded capture after finding themselves in enemy territory. We also improved the situation for some of our servicemen who escaped from prisoner of war camps. Compensation for these first world war prisoners, evaders and escapees now is provided under the same basic terms as for the second world war POWs of Germany and Italy. The fact that parliament acted so quickly on this bill indicates our continued awareness of the debt of gratitude owed to this group of very special Canadians.

I would like to mention at this point the support and advice my department has received in the past on this subject and on others from the veterans' associations of Canada. The Royal Canadian Legion, for instance, through its representations to me by way of briefs and resolutions, has influenced the care and well-being of Canadian veterans down through the years. The National Council of Veterans Associations through its concern for its members, our veterans, has been a valuable source of information and guidance for me in pursuing the goal of better and more appropriate legislation in the best interest of veterans. Their organizations speak with a powerful voice that always makes itself heard.

This legislation, Mr. Speaker, marks another indication of the responsibility we have as Canadians to realize the wants and needs of a segment of our population, the survivors, the maimed, the bereaved of world wars and the people of our nation who will be marked by the devastation of war to the end of their lives. Widows and orphans are as much victims of war as our soldiers, sailors, and airmen. Over the past years we have attempted to assist these men and women who gave so much in a time of need, but we must not sit back and congratulate ourselves for what we have accomplished. Rather we must constantly review and update what we have accepted as our responsibility, our debt.

Successive Canadian parliaments have shown, and this one is no exception, that party lines evaporate when the veteran is involved. The success I have on behalf of veterans' legislation depends, not on opposition to their demands, not on political differences, but on the available resources of the Canadian people which are allocated on a priority basis. Happily the Canadian people have placed the veterans' needs at a reasonably high level.

There has been tremendous growth in veterans' benefits over the past few years. I am proud of this fact, and grateful at the same time for the recognition by this government of its responsibilities along this line. The nature and direction of programs and legislation designed and administered by this government demonstrate that our efforts are rightly directed toward those we seek to serve, the Canadian people, and, in this particular case, the Canadian veterans.

When they speak, our veterans do so eloquently and responsibly, certainly not from a politically partisan viewpoint, but more in the role of advisers and guides to those who frame and administer legislation. They have always kept the welfare of Canada in the forefront of their aims, while working for the proper care of all who served their country in time of war. Their knowledgeable expression of the hopes and aspirations of veterans has been met, by way of return, by willingness on the part of this government to listen and to assist whenever possible. As a Canadian I feel this is the way it should be. I know also that my colleagues have this same sense of responsibility, all share this firm desire to provide a tangible expression of national gratitude tempered only by our country's ability to pay. The effect of representations to my department, and the efforts of the dedicated men and women of my portfolio have resulted in a comprehensive program of legislation for veterans that not only equals but surpasses in a number of cases any country in the world.

This bill will enhance the lifestyle, augment the income, and generally improve the situation of a great number of deserving Canadians. We have many responsibilities. Some of these deal with the economy, others with the preservation of our Confederation. The one before us today is our responsibility for the well-being of a very special segment of our society. I am pleased that parliament so readily accepts that responsibility toward Canada's veterans.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): This is a moment in the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, that we have awaited for two, almost three years. We have been pressing the minister and the cabinet to give us this moment in the House of Commons, to give speedy passage to the bill before us, Bill C-58.

I want to compliment the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) and his staff for producing the legislation we are about to pass here in the House. This gives me an opportunity to say a special word about those loyal public servants in the Department of Veterans Affairs who labour hard and long to help those who have given so much of themselves, who kicked great holes in their lives when they volunteered for the service of their country. Some came back, as the minister said, broken men, and certainly broken lives, and this is only a small way that we have of recognizing their great contribution to this country.

As I began to say a moment ago, the staff in the department have always been most co-operative with all members of this House when they have brought to them specific problems related to their department. I think I can say on behalf of those members that we certainly appreciate that. I also echo the sentiments of the minister when he praised the men who gave so much for their country, and I pay tribute to the people on this side of the House who have pressed the minister and his government to get this legislation in the form in which we have it. I pay tribute to my predecessor as the critic here on our side of the House, the former member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, who gave a great deal of his time and effort to do this, and to my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who joined often with the member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe to press the minister to do this.

Personally, I know that the minister has wanted to see this legislation passed for a long time. He is a veteran who gave a lot of himself in the cause of Canada, and it is not always his fault that we do not have the legislation when we want it. We hope, however, we have helped him in persuading his cabinet to see the light of day and put us where we are now.

There are one or two concerns I would like to express about this bill. One is the fact that there is no provision in it for an annual review of the right to a disability pension. When the legislation was first introduced it was thought that indexing according to the consumer price index would keep the basic rate of pension in line with the five categories of unskilled labour in the public service, but as experience has shown, that has not happened. There is a very distinct possibility that in the years ahead we will find ourselves in the same situation we are in today. I would have thought it not beyond human ingenuity to include a clause to ensure that the basic rate of pension could be reviewed perhaps on an annual basis, and certainly on a biennial basis, to see that it keeps up with the categories I have mentioned.

Mr. Speaker, this gives me an opportunity to express concern and hope that the government in their review, which the minister assures us is always before them, will find some means of giving the survivor's pension to widows of pensioners who received a pension of less than 48 per cent. I know there are a few who receive benefits if the death resulted directly from war injury, but there are a great number who, when the veteran dies, if his disability pension was less than 48 per cent, are simply cut off.

We have asked for this over and over again. In committee yesterday and this morning the minister assured us that the matter was under review. He cited the cost to the Canadian taxpayer as one of the reasons why it is not being done. Mr. Speaker, when you look at some of the frivolous grants that are sanctioned by this government, it is hard not to believe that some of the money could be passed on to more worthy causes such as those I have mentioned here. I know the minister has this matter well in mind and we give him our pledge of support if in the next few months or in the next year he brings in a bill to correct the situation, which will get the same speedy passage as the bill before us this afternoon.

[Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand).]

There are many other issues we could talk about today, Mr. Speaker, but on this side of the House we have given an undertaking that the bill will be passed within the hour. I wish to see that happen so I will not take up the other issues at this time.

The convention of the Dominion Command of the Canadian Legion will take place soon in Edmonton. I know that the minister will go to the convention and tell them what we have done for the veterans by passing this bill. I hope he will give some credit to the opposition for this because we have worked very hard to get it through. We will support him if he says that!

That is all I have to say, Mr. Speaker, and we hope for very speedy passage of this bill.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there are times when in a particular way this parliament speaks in the name of the Canadian people. I suggest this is one of those occasions. It is good that we do not forget the sacrifices made by our veterans and the suffering that many of them still endure. I am glad that despite the passage of time we do not forget our veterans, and that today we are responding to the request to restore the basic rate of war disability pension to the level calculated by the formula agreed to in 1973.

Like my colleague and namesake who has just spoken, we in this party have been very anxious to get this bill and we are pleased to get it, so we have no intention of taking up time at this stage. We are prepared to go through second reading very quickly, put it through committee of the whole and give it third reading before we rise for the dinner hour.

The minister has paid tribute to those who helped him get this legislation—to members of parliament of all parties. We are aware that he has needed a good deal of help because of some of those he has to deal with in cabinet. Even though we attack him and criticize him at times because things seem to move so slowly, I think he deserves our commendation for having got out of his cabinet colleagues additional money to bring pensions up to the amount indicated in this bill.

I join with the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles) in commending also the Royal Canadian Legion and all the organizations that are part of the National Council of Veterans Associations of Canada for their persistent campaign, particularly since last fall. I know they are delighted that the campaign has been successful.

Like the hon. member who just spoke, one or two things about the bill leave me less than satisfied but not to the point of wanting to hold it up. I still say that in 1973, when it was agreed to put the basic rate of the war disability pension at a level equal to the average take home pay of five categories in the public service, that provision should have been written into the bill so that each year, as that average take home pay increased, the basic rate of pension would have increased accordingly. The government did not see fit to do that in 1973.

Instead, it put the proper figures in for 1973 but left in the bill the provision that the increases for the following years would be governed only by the rise in the consumer price index. As we all know, a gap developed which at times was as high as $500 per year—in fact, more than that.

What the minister is doing by this bill is establishing again the actual dollar figure that represents the average take home pay of those five categories at the present time. We are back where we were in 1973; indeed, we are back where we were in 1920 or 1921 in terms of principle. Because the escalation clause in the act has not been changed by this bill, it means that next year and the year after the escalation will again just be the rise in the consumer price index. That will not create a problem for a year or two but three or four years ahead we will have to go through this all over again.

I hope we can do away with the necessity for doing this every four or five years by writing into the act the provision that the basic rate of the war disability pension shall be the average take home pay of those five categories, whatever that average may be. As I say, I hope we will get there some time soon, but for 1978 and 1979 the problem has been solved. We welcome this and we congratulate the minister.

As I said earlier, we had quite a bit of discussion about this in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs even though we did not have the bill before us. I made one particular plea to the minister which I repeat now, and I know he will do his best about it. The way this legislation is set up, if a veteran is receiving a small disability pension so that he also gets something under the War Veterans Allowance Act, the bill will not benefit him. He will get an increase in his disability pension but the means test ceiling on the war veterans' allowance will cause that to be cut back and he will end up with the same total.

There are a few items which the War Veterans Allowance Board has found it can ignore for purposes of that means test ceiling, such as certain increases in old age security and the guaranteed income supplement. I urge the minister to take this up with the War Veterans Allowance Board and find a way whereby, in the case of veterans receiving the disability pension and war veterans allowance, they get the benefit of the increase instead of having it given to them with one hand and taken away with the other.

That will also apply to widows on war veterans allowance as opposed to widows on pension under the Pension Act. It strikes me that we do not need to do this by legislation; there is sufficient authority in the War Veterans Allowance Act. I urge the minister to do his best to resolve this issue and to do it before the increased payments come into effect on July 1.

The other thing I want to say has already been said by the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand. I repeat it, I underline it and I press it on the minister with every bit of parliamentary experience that I have. This business of a cut-off, such that a widow whose husband had only a 47 per cent pension gets no pension whereas the widow of the husband who had a 48 per cent gets full pension, is for the birds. There is no justification for continuing that provision, that 48 per cent cut-off rule. The minister knows how strongly all of us in this House feel about it. We know the attention that has been given to it in his department. I realize that he has done well to get this much money out of the cabinet this session; we cannot look for the other measure next week. But I urge him to give everything he can to resolve this matter in favour of all veterans' widows.

My friend said that at the Legion convention in Edmonton the minister will boast about this and he will be thanked for doing it; but I can tell the minister that as sure as I am standing here at the Edmonton convention he will also be asked "What have you done for us lately?". They will start to say to him "Fine, you have done it with respect to the basic rate; it is time to solve this question with respect to the widows." I call upon the minister to put the same fight and determination into that battle that he put into this one. It is unfinished business that will not go away. We will stay with it until we win the fight. In the meantime we congratulate the minister on getting this bill approved by the cabinet. He will soon discover that, just as with the bill a little while ago concerning compensation for prisoners of war, this one will be passed by parliament very quickly.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I am also happy to participate in this short debate on consideration of Bill C-58, all the more so because it was remarkable indeed that the House has agreed to pass all stages of the bill so quickly. But it is a pity that the minister and his department officials took so long to draft such a simple and non complicated bill which will go through so rapidly. We want to suggest in saying so that all veterans as well as all members of this House were looking forward to such legislation. So, I think that the co-operation we have offered to the minister tonight should encourage the government and other ministers to follow the example set by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) to introduce the legislation we ask for a lot faster than is usually the case.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that disabled veterans have been waiting for the increases contained in this bill because these people are suffering as well as their fellow Canadians from the impact of inflation. As most of them are in no position to earn any income, they must keep pace with price increases and inflation, and I think that the increase contemplated in this bill will be welcomed and that we should not stop there because unfortunately I am afraid that inflation is not about to stop.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will not dwell any longer on this subject but there is another point which I would still like to expand on and my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre has also dealt with it and it is the one with respect to veterans' widows. Recently I explained to the minister a problem which had been submitted to me by a widow in my riding who during one year—the year which followed the death of her husband—received a pension which was paid to her according to the law.

But once that year was over she was denied the continued payment of this pension because she is not yet 55, in fact she is 44 and does not suffer from any physical disability and is in good health.

So far, Mr. Speaker, I believe everything meets with the requirements of the act. Yet as in all laws, I think that sometimes exceptions must be made and in the case of Mrs. Paradis which I submitted to the minister, I think that an exception could very well have been granted because even if that lady is not 55 years old and is in good health, she cannot work outside for the very good reason that she is the mother of ten children who all live with her, including eight who still go to school. So it is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that for this reason this lady cannot work outside to earn a living as others could. For these reasons, I think that the act should provide for exceptions and that it should provide for the continued payment of a pension to a widow who finds herself in such a position.

Once again I ask the minister to look very carefully into such cases as that of Mrs. Paradis, which I submitted to him, to see whether it might not be possible to help people like her. I imagine there are not thousands of such cases in Canada, they must be isolated cases; but the fact remains that, to my mind, they are almost appalling since that lady can do nothing other than resort to welfare allowances which represent about 50 per cent of what she got until then as a veteran's widow. Mr. Speaker, I believe those are important points and I urge the minister to look into them again to see if it might not be possible to make exceptions to the law from time to time to help people who are in such dire need.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this debate indefinitely, but coming from a province that has contributed much during the two last world conflicts, that contributed much in human capital, and specially coming from an area which, in terms of its population, did more than its share in the two conflicts that cast a gloom over our history, I feel that it is proper for me to stand here and thank the government, and especially the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), for this legislation which is welcomed, as he knows, not only by hon. members in this House but by all veterans and by those he had an opportunity to meet in my riding and told him how happy they were with that new legislation for them.

As the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles) suggested earlier, it is of course only part of what Canada, what Canadians owe to those who went overseas to protect our rights and freedoms.

We are also sure that it is not the end of measures to help veterans and that we would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the minister personally for the work he has done for veterans since he has taken over that portfolio. His own personal services were praised and I believe it is also appropriate to pay tribute to his courage and his determination as a Canadian for the part he took in the last world conflict.

Mr. Speaker, as was suggested by those who spoke before me, the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise), the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles) as well as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who is a champion in this area, and as I already suggested some two weeks ago and I repeat, like my colleagues I want to ask for better treatment of veterans' widows—I was recently told that the word "widow" is no longer used but rather veteran's survivor—so as to do away with that pension maximum of 48 per cent now required under the law so that when a veteran dies, his widow, whatever the pension her husband was receiving, can have a pension so as to avoid being placed in a situation such as that suggested by the hon. member for Abitibi.

I would also like to mention what he referred to, but unfortunately he has left. It is always the same thing; he mentioned that it was coming too late, that it should have been done two or three years ago. I believe it is quite easy to say that but since this government does not have the magical financial resources which the Social Credit party has, we must go with the budget, with the finances of this country and the present system.

Mr. Speaker, once again I want to thank the Minister of Veterans Affairs on behalf of the veterans of my riding as well as all veterans across Canada for that legislation which is welcomed with great happiness.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 4 agreed to.

On Clause 5—Coming into force.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, may I ask just one question about clause 5 which provides for this amending legislation to come into effect on July 1, 1978. May we assume that the offices which write and send out the cheques are geared up for this legislation and that the increases provided in this bill will be reflected in the cheques which veterans receive in July?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Chairman, the answer to the hon. member's question is that this is what we anticipate in our department at this time.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At 5:58 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HORNER—CORRECTION OF OFFICIAL REPORT

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a correction in Hansard for May 31, 1978. I might say I wanted to attend to this matter earlier in the afternoon but I was unable to do so because of the lengthy question of privilege before the House, discussion of which continued until I was called to a committee meeting.

On page 5915 at line eight I am reported to have said and I did in fact say the following:

> Mr. Speaker, we recently signed an agreement with Volkswagen which allows Volkswagen to claim remission on duties—

What I intended to say was:

> —we recently signed an agreement for cabinet approval which allows Volkswagen to claim remission on duties—

The rest of the paragraph remains the same. I guess I could add that I have no doubt the agreement will receive cabinet approval; I thought it would have been given last week but it was not. It is a very good agreement and I have no doubt approval will be given.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Tuesday, May 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-56, to amend the statute relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) had the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. On Tuesday night the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) spoke and a vote was taken. He made the last speech and I am therefore going to the Liberal side.

Mr. Paproski: I am surprised you would do that.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think your judgment on that matter was very sound. I am glad to have an opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-56.

Some hon. Members: Filibuster!

Mr. Foster: This bill makes provision for implementation of many aspects of the budget which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) presented a few weeks ago. The bill continues the stimulus which the Minister of Finance has been pursuing for the past several months, including the reduction of sales tax for the citizens of Ontario from 7 per cent to 4 per cent, or, in other terms, to the tune of $1 billion worth of incentive to the Canadian economy. This incentive is an important one, Mr. Speaker, and adds to those provided in the economic statement made by the minister last fall when a tax cut of approximately $100 per taxpayer was provided in January and February of this year. This was in addition to the indexation of income tax which reduced taxes by another $900 million. It has been the strategy of the government to overcome our unemployment difficulties by providing stimulus to the economy in the form of cuts in the income tax and, now, in the sales tax.

There are several features involved in the stimulus to which I have referred. There are the incentives in the form of tax cuts and incentives to industry by reduction of corporation taxes. The employment tax credit will create some 50,000 jobs in the next two years and provide some $200 million worth of incentive to industry. As well, there are incentives to the private sector in respect to oil and gas exploration, research and development and transportation.

Equally important in this strategy of creating jobs, Mr. Speaker, is the direct employment program which will be putting almost a billion dollars into the economy in the form of direct job creation as well as job training programs under the department of employment.

Many constituencies throughout the country which have high unemployment have benefited from the Canada Works Program. The Algoma riding certainly has had a great stimulus during this past winter. Some $1.8 million worth of Canada Works projects were approved. In the last few weeks $345,000 worth of Young Canada Works projects were approved. That will provide about 250 jobs. Fifty-three projects have now been approved and are being implemented by young people across the constituency. These programs are related to recreation, community clean-up, hospital auxiliaries, dock improvement and other kinds of community improvement.

Equally important this fall will be the Canada Works Program under which the government will be spending $175 million across Canada for the coming winter and some $50 million for the economic component aspect of the employment strategy. Some $26 million of this will be spent, I understand, in reforestation projects. I think that is an excellent approach because communities are sometimes unable to come up with good projects, and reforestation is an ongoing need in many areas of our country.

Companion to the direct employment program has been the expediting of major capital projects like the northern gas pipeline project which has been approved by this House. We are now waiting for approval by authorities in Washington so that the project can get under way. It will pour some $4 billion into the economy of Canada and create some 100,000 man-years of work during the next few years.

We hear a great deal of gloom and doom in this place. I suppose it is the nature of the House of Commons that some bad-mouth the Canadian economy and the difficulties we have in this country. However, there are many positive aspects to our economy, and perhaps from time to time we should look at them. For instance, the Minister of Finance has indicated that we probably will round out the year with a 4 per cent to 5 per cent growth in the Canadian economy. Our exports over our imports are moving ahead. During the first quarter alone there was a $1.4 billion surplus of exports over imports. That compares with a total export surplus last year of $2.9 billion. The figures for this year look very promising in that regard.

In February of this year some 280,000 more people were employed in Canada than in February of 1977. I thought an article in last Saturday's Toronto Star by Anthony Westell summed up many of the positive aspects of our economy. In his article he mentioned that the House of Commons often plays down all the positive aspects of the Canadian economy, and he spelled out several of the very positive aspects of the economy, and I quote:

> For example, we could take pride in the fact that our gross national product—the value of all goods and services produced—has increased in every year of the past quarter-century, except in 1954. That's a record few of our competitors can match.
> We could also look at the fact that in the period 1967-72 the number of Canadians employed increased by 912,000, while from 1972-77, the increase was 1,391,000.
> Instead of whining about high taxes and hard times, we might boast about the rapid rise in personal incomes per capita, for example, from $3,129 in 1970 to $6,741 in 1976.
> The ratio of personal savings to disposable income has more than doubled, from 5.3 per cent in 1970 to 10.7 per cent last year . . . We've done so well over the past quarter-century that our expectations are high and any setback seems like a crisis.
> But the problems are soluble—indeed, we are already making progress. Constantly telling each other that the situation is much worse than it really is just makes it harder to solve the problems.

Those are the words of a reporter, and some reporters do not always have complimentary things to say about the Canadian economy.

[Mr. Foster.]

Reviewing the aspects of our economy, one of the most controversial factors has been the fall in the Canadian dollar. Of course, it has rallied now to 89 cents or almost 90 cents. I suppose the value of the Canadian dollar compared with that of the United States dollar is always a matter of great concern and a matter of national pride to Canadians, but if we look at some of the resource areas like northern Ontario, having a 90-cent dollar is not always disadvantageous. Granted, when we buy orange juice, it is more expensive. That has been so in the last year because of the fact that it is imported from the United States. That is a disadvantage.

However, if we look at many of our resource industries, we see great advantages. Let us consider the beef industry. The reason for part of the recovery in that industry is that the Canadian dollar is worth about 90 cents compared with the United States dollar. That is a very positive aspect when we consider that the beef industry has been in decline for the last three of four years. Indeed, beef producers have gone through one of the most difficult times in our history. This is especially true for cow-calf operators.

When we consider the mining industry, and especially uranium mining where that product is being sold on world markets, we gain a 10 per cent advantage with our lower dollar. In the forest products industry pulp has not been at a favourable price, but the demand for lumber and for paper products is very strong, and a 10 per cent advantage is very beneficial to the producers of northern Ontario. Likewise in the steel industry, for many producers like Algoma Steel 1977 was a turn-around year. Our steel industry is now in a competitive position abroad because our steel products sell for less. We can also be competitive with products coming in from outside the country, so we have an advantage there as well.

The 90 cent dollar has been a great advantage for the industries I have mentioned, but particularly for producers who sell in the United States market and overseas. The advantage is even greater for products like uranium, which is sold in the Japanese market or the German market where the devaluation of the Canadian dollar vis-à-vis the mark or the yen is even greater than it is in relation to the American dollar.

Perhaps no industry is looking at a better prospect this year than the tourist industry because of the devalued Canadian dollar. That, coupled with the removal of the sales tax for hotel rooms, is making success in that industry very promising this year. After some very bleak times it is very encouraging to find that many tourist operators in many areas of our country are looking forward this year to one of the best years they have had in the past several years.

I think Bill C-56 would provide some important benefits throughout our economy. It certainly would for the farm operator who is incorporated and who wants to pass his farm on to his son. The provisions of this bill deferring the capital gains tax make it possible for the property to be passed on without a capital gains tax initially. Thus, the very unfair and undesirable situation we have had in the past where some large family farms which were incorporated had to be sold in order to pay the capital gains tax can now be avoided.

Likewise, the provisions relating to research and development are very important, coupled with the announcement this afternoon by the Minister of Public Works responsible for science and technology (Mr. Buchanan). Now Canadian companies which want to make expenditures and carry out important R and D will be able to spend their dollar, which will cost them 20 cents net because of the 150 per cent write off provision in this bill. This program will continue for a ten year period. I understand it is one of the most generous of any in the world. Surely now, at a time when our whole economy and our industry are restructuring to meet the competitive situation in the world, we should be offering that kind of incentive, whether it is to the automobile industry or to any other industry which is competing abroad as well as in the domestic market, for which R and D is essential.

The investment tax credit which was extended last year for R and D and which was made 7.5 per cent higher in areas like Ontario and 10 per cent in the maritimes, coupled with the provisions in this bill and the recent announcements made today by the Minister of State for Science and Technology, are important moves forward.

Another very important provision in this bill which I support is changes to the registered retirement savings program which provide a more flexible means of retirement savings for people so that those who retire do not have to withdraw the funds in such a short time; and if they continue to have other sources of income, they can be spun out over a longer period of time while the taxes of senior citizens are essentially reduced.

Equally important are the provisions for oil and gas production in the west. We have had a remarkable turnaround in exploration and development of natural gas in the past four or five years. A few years ago we were receiving reports that there could be shortfalls in natural gas by 1978-79. In fact, the policies that were introduced at that time to produce natural gas to the BTU equivalent with crude oil have brought on important suplies of natural gas in Alberta so that we have not had to resort to the more expensive gas in the Arctic islands at this point.

The provisions in this bill move in three directions: first, to provide a depletion allowance of $1 for each $2 spent on enhanced recovery. Some 65 per cent of the oil in the ground is not recovered with the present level of technology. This incentive to the oil industry will mean that more R and D can take place for enhanced recovery. Likewise in the case of nonconventional oil, the tarsands and heavy oils, the depletion allowance will be increased from 25 per cent to 50 per cent. Also the heavy oil plants will be taxed as a manufacturing facility.

Recently in the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) outlined the prospects for new tarsands plants and heavy oil upgrading facilities for the tremendous reserves in Alberta and Saskatchewan, and he indicated that with the possible upgrading of the two existing plants of Syncrude and GCOS, combined with the new tarsands and heavy oil plants, we could expect in the next eight to ten years some 750,000 barrels of oil a day extracted from those areas in Alberta and Saskatchewan. When we look at the resource of some 200 billion barrels of oil or some 37 billion or 38 billion which are available with the present technology, the incentives provided to utilize this resource are appropriate at this time because such companies as Shell and Imperial Oil as well as the Saskatchewan and Alberta governments are considering making investments to develop these resources.

If we look at the Syncrude project, which is a production scale sized plant in which both the federal and provincial governments of Alberta and Ontario invested some $600 million, we see a very good return to the governments because the three governments involved hold an equity of some 37 per cent in that plant, and yet some 77 per cent of the revenues from the production scale plant will be accruing to these governments. The revenues over the next 25 years are estimated to be some $25 billion. The federal government will collect some $3.5 billion in taxes towards the end of the production life of that plant. The Alberta government royalties will amount to some $13 billion, and the equity of the three governments' return on their investment will amount to some $2.5 billion, giving a total amount of revenue to the three governments involved of $19 billion, which amounts to about 77 per cent.

But obviously the policy of the government is not to do all of this itself but rather to have private enterprise invest in this kind of project, both the tarsands and the heavy oil production. In that regard, a considerable amount of research funds of the federal government are being poured in together with those of the province of Saskatchewan in developing the technology for heavy oil production.

Perhaps the most important part of Bill C-56 is, of course, the 3 per cent reduction in the sales tax which, I believe, is already having a very positive effect on provinces such as Ontario where, I am told, retail sales of automobiles have increased dramatically. On a $6,000 car, you get a reduction in the sales tax of $180. I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) is to be congratulated on having had the courage to make this new departure in budget making and for having consulted with the provinces with a view to coming up with a direct stimulus by providing sales tax reductions which will have a stimulating effect. The direct encouragement which this provision represents to purchase a major appliance or an automobile because of a reduction of $100 or $150 is a great stimulus.

Of course, under our constitution sales taxes are the prerogative of the provincial governments and therefore such provisions require a great deal of consultation and co-operation with the provinces. The Minister of Finance went to great lengths to try to carry out that kind of consultation and at the same time to retain the confidentiality of the budget. It was a very tricky procedure, and I understand that during the Easter break when many members were enjoying a holiday the Minister of Finance was spending time in consultation with his provincial colleagues, those ministers of finance, on this very important and innovative procedure. The fact that he did not get co-operation from the province of Quebec and its separatist

P.Q. government is most unfortunate. When you have a government that is dedicated to breaking up the country by taking one province out of Canada, perhaps it is not surprising that it did not co-operate fully in this regard.

Nevertheless, I have great confidence in the minister's abilities to consult, negotiate and work out a very equitable and fair arrangement with the province, at least fair to the people of Quebec. The surprise to me is that opposition parties would support the separatist government in this approach, because it is obvious that the federal government were to allow that province these selective cuts for products that are produced primarily in that province, this would be a very disruptive factor across the country.

It has been made very clear that when consultation took place with the other provincial governments none of them were agreeable to selective tax cuts such as proposed by the province of Quebec. I am really surprised that opposition parties would support that government in this regard. Obviously this would have been unfair to the other provinces when they did not have that opportunity and had not agreed to such a proposal. It would have been a very disruptive force to have a sales tax for the province of Quebec that was not an across the board cut but singled in on textiles, footwear and furniture, many of which items are produced in that province. However, even that might have been possible had there been agreement with the other provinces; but the first three provincial governments the Minister of Finance discussed this proposal with all turned thumbs down, so it is obvious it would not have been acceptable to a majority of the provinces.

I believe the minister's proposal to return an equivalent amount of money to the taxpayers of the province of Quebec, whether this is done by way of direct payment or otherwise, is obviously the most fair way of handling the situation. It could and has been argued that if the province of Quebec was not willing to reduce its sales tax across the board in a non-discriminatory way, it should not be eligible for the tax reduction. I personally think the proposal the minister is making to return an equivalent amount to the taxpayers in the province of Quebec is most fair.

During the past several months leading up to this period we have witnessed a concerted attack by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) on the Minister of Finance, an attack often abusive, unreasonable and completely unfair. This culminated a couple of weeks ago in the charge that Liberal members, and even cabinet ministers, were speculating in the Canadian dollar. The Minister of Finance answered that very succinctly when he said simply to the hon. member for York-Simcoe to put up or shut up; to name names and spell out those people, or withdraw.

A week ago yesterday we had the opportunity of seeing that hon. member eat humble crow in the House, completely withdrawing his allegation. He had very little credibility before that episode, but he had even less when he finished. I do not think many hon. members over there stayed in the House that day, but whatever credibility that hon. member had left was stripped away by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), who spoke immediately after and laid bare all the facts about the Bank of Western Canada and the unsavoury mess in that regard. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce laid out all the facts for everyone to see. I do not think it will be long, following this incident, before we see the shadow cabinet over there shuffled around.

An hon. Member: It will be shuffled from this side to that side.

Mr. Foster: Perhaps we will see the hon. member for York-Simcoe moved to another position.

The Leader of the Opposition likes to refer in very derogatory terms to the Minister of Finance as "that guy from Shawinigan Falls; that street fighter". I am sure everyone on this side of the House and most Canadians would rather have that street fighter from Shawinigan Falls than one of the Bay Street millionaires. I am sure everyone will not only want him to an even greater degree as Minister of Finance, but will trust him a darned sight more.

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, when listening to the comments of the last hon. member I had to check my Order Paper to make sure we were talking about Bill C-56. In fact, I even wondered if the hon. member was speaking about the same country I know something about and intend to speak about in my remarks.

The arguments in respect of Bill C-56 are becoming well known, not only in this chamber where they are repeated often enough, but as well among a growing number of Canadians who are demanding that the bill be withdrawn, the measure renegotiated and the bill redrafted.

This bill is a very special status bill. In fact, it is also a special, special status bill, a special status bill, a non-special status bill, and a very non-special status bill. If you live in the province of British Columbia it has very, very special status because not only do you receive the tax cut for six months, you receive it permanently courtesy of the B.C. government.

This bill has special status in Quebec because there the taxpayers are to get a cheque for $100 in the mail.

An hon. Member: If they are rich enough.

Mr. Wenman: The bill has a non-special status in the province of Ontario and other provinces where the residents will receive only a temporary six-month tax cut; and it is a very, non-special status bill in the province of Alberta where the taxpayers in fact will receive nothing from this bill.

The capacity and the weight of a province's bargaining power has become the new criterion for federal-provincial relations. This is probably one of the most divisive pieces of legislation that I or any member of this House has seen during the last four years. It has been unanimously condemned by every governmental jurisdiction and agency in Canada, and I would ask the government: Who in fact, in addition to the Liberal government, shows any support for this bill? I have not heard any support from any parties in opposition; I have not heard any support from any province in Canada; I have not heard any support from labour groups; I have not heard any support from the business sector; and I have not heard support for this bill from anywhere except from a few cabinet ministers and backbenchers on the other side. Perhaps the next speaker will tell us about the great support for this tax measure that is coming in from across Canada, because I am certainly not aware of any.

To say that everything is wrong with this bill would be an overstatement. We must recognize that in some ways it is successful. The government has been successful in respect of this bill, and that success can be measured by the fact that through this bill the government has successfully encroached on provincial rights. It has been successful in undermining a long standing tradition, the partnership concept of confederation. It has also been successful in demonstrating its incompetence and confusion in economic matters and now, through the bill, not only economic matters, but also its grasp of the unity issue. This government has been successful in these ways, but it has also been very successful in building a civil service of 640,000 employees.

In previous speeches I have talked about the government becoming the biggest employer in Canada, hiring 640,000 civil servants; but now one department of the government has become even larger than the whole civil service of Canada, and that, of course, is the UIC. In fact, the unemployed are the biggest group of employees in the country. When you add to the 640,000 civil servants the provincial government civil servants and the municipal government civil servants, and on top of that you add those receiving assistance from various government levels, then rather than self support you wonder who is doing all the work. You wonder where in Canada is that minority that is working hard and producing the tremendous income support that it takes to support this bureaucracy and agencies at all levels of government in Canada.

So far the debate has centred, and rightly so, on the problems with the bill, but what of the broader principle which is the principle of a tax cut for the Canadian economy? In my opinion, the bill fails even in that category because, firstly, the bill does not provide more than a token tax cut. Secondly, it is not accompanied by equivalent cutbacks in government expenditures. In Canada today we are taxing work, taxing growth, taxing investment, taxing savings, taxing productivity. On the other hand, we are subsidizing non-work consumption, welfare and debt. Is it any wonder we are getting less and less of the first category and more and more of the latter?

The real problem with our Canadian economy today is that incentive is being taxed away. Taxes at all levels now consume more than 43 per cent of our gross national income, and, coupled with steeply graduated tax rates, our private enterprise economy's ability to create jobs and generate higher real incomes is being strangled. In face of this situation, what does the government do? It refuses to make permanent tax cuts and continues to increase government spending on new and exotic give-away programs. At the same time inflation increases everyone's taxes daily as people are pushed up into higher tax brackets, thereby discouraging incentives for both workers and investors.

Remember, when we talk about a major tax cut, we are not talking just about a tax cut for investors; we are talking about a tax cut for labour—a labour incentive as well as a business incentive. In order to increase the after tax income of all Canadians and restore incentive in the Canadian economy, the government should look to bold programs like the ones that are being discussed in the United States, programs that would reduce all individual income tax rates by about 33 per cent; not 2 per cent or 1 per cent or just an inflationary coverage, but an individual income tax cut of 33 per cent. A reduction of corporate tax rates by 3 percentage points, complete write-off of all capital losses—these are the types of bolder stimulants that are needed in our economy at this time.

This type of bold attack on the economic woes of our country would stimulate an immediate growth of economic output, employment and investment. This would expand the nation's tax base, thereby increasing tax revenues for all levels of government. A corresponding reduction in government expenditures for welfare and unemployment compensation will prevent any increase in the budget deficit.

This is not a new proposal and was in fact demonstrated in the United States by President Kennedy in 1963. As a result of that massive tax cut in 1963, the United States experienced the highest real investment growth in modern history. Inflation was the lowest in modern history, real industrial output growth was the greatest in any period, and real disposable income grew the fastest. This is not a program they merely talked about; this is a program that was in fact implemented, a 25 per cent income tax cut across the board.

Substantive rather than token and temporary tax cuts are not a new remedy and have, in fact, been proven highly successful in many nations in the past. In Great Britain, for example, the income tax was first imposed in 1799. Thereafter, under the pressure of the Napoleonic wars, the rates rose rapidly as did the national debt. Despite the fact that the income tax was producing one fifth of Britain's tax revenue in 1815, about 15 million pounds, and its debt had risen to the astronomical sum of 900 million pounds, parliament abolished the income tax in 1815. Can you imagine that, a country actually abolishing income tax!

Then, as now, the cries of the fiscal experts were loud. It was said that the debt would crush the economy and that the tax rates must remain high in order to pay it off. What happened, however, was that the abolition of the income tax set off a 60 year economic expansion in Great Britain which, by the end of the century, had significantly reduced the debt in both absolute and relative terms. Over the same period the interest rate on government bonds dropped steadily, attesting to the wealth of savings created by the low taxes and greater prosperity raising the real standard of everyone's income.

The British empire ultimately waned, not by the devastation of World War I, but by a reversal of its traditional low tax and free trade policies of the 19th century. Since 1914 high taxes, socialism and protectionism have been the hallmarks of British economic policy, and the tax rates today are essentially what they were in 1914-15; that is, 83 per cent on ordinary income and 98 per cent on investment at about $40,000.

A similar experience can be traced in the economic history of France. In 1920 France imposed a steeply progressive income tax in the name of tax reform. It was so steeply progressive that it became known as the "sucker's tax", to be paid only by those who could not escape it. That sounds familiar, and I do believe I have heard that kind of talk in Canada today. As the government became more adept at enforcing the tax, the French economy contracted steady inflation, culminating in the 1924 financial crisis. Total government revenues, measured in pre-war francs, were only a bit higher between 1920 and 1925 than they had been in 1913 when there was no income tax. The crisis ended in 1926 when the left wing Herriot government fell and was replaced by the centre right Poincare government, which announced a new tax law just one week after taking power.

The highest rate of general income tax was cut from 60 per cent to 30 per cent. That is the type of income tax that is being talked about in the United States today, and it is the type of income tax cut which we should be talking about in Canada. The rates of inheritance and estate taxes were cut, and at the same time made less steeply graduated. The annual transmission tax on securities was lowered by about 40 per cent. The franc stabilized, the economy revived, and in the first year of the reform, tax revenues jumped dramatically from 5.4 billion pre-war francs to 7 billion. In the six months from July to the end of 1926, the franc soared on the foreign exchange market from two cents to four cents on the dollar. That substantial tax reduction stimulated the economy for a good number of years.

Germany, too, has experienced a somewhat historical background in its economy. If we look to the time when taxes were cut we find similar action. Following World War II tax rates in Germany were extremely high. The 50 per cent marginal tax rate began at only $600 of income and the highest tax rate, 95 per cent, began at $15,000. By 1948 these high tax rates, combined with massive inflation and price controls, had led to a severe economic crisis in Germany.

Into this crisis stepped Ludwig Erhard, one of the great economic leaders of all times. Not only did he abandon all wage and price controls with a single stroke, but he began a process of tax reduction that continued for a quarter of a century. He did so by steadily raising the income level at which high marginal tax rates began.

In 1948 he increased the threshold for the 50 per cent bracket from $600 to $2,000 and the threshold for the 90 per cent bracket from $15,000 to $63,000. A year later the 50 per cent bracket was pushed up another $5,000. In 1953 it was pushed up to $9,000 and the top rate of income tax was reduced to 82 per cent. By 1955, the highest rate had been reduced to 63 per cent on incomes above $250,000 and the 50 per cent bracket did not begin until earnings of $42,000.

This systematic reduction in tax rates yielded a massive economic boom which increased the revenues so much that Germany was able to establish a system of social insurance for both the unemployed and the aged which is among the most generous in the world. It was all done without inflation and in direct contrast to the Keynesian advice West Germany received from the state department of the United States.

The situation in Japan after World War II was very similar to that in Germany: high tax rates and a destroyed economy. Beginning in 1950 the Japanese began to adopt a program of tax rates reduction. Marginal tax rates on both individuals and businesses have been cut almost every year since 1950. As each of these tax cuts generated new economic activity and higher revenues to the government, they fuelled new tax cuts. The process has continued until Japan's economy has become one of the most fierce competitions in the world.

In the United States, long before the Kennedy tax cuts of the 1960s there was ample evidence from American history that tax rate reductions would lead to higher tax revenues. The most important example is from the 1920s. The republican party took control of the White House and the congress in 1920 by promising a return to normalcy. A primary aspect of this return to normalcy was a reduction in high wartime tax rates, which went as high as 63 per cent.

Thereafter the congress reduced tax rates every year from 1921 to 1925, lowering the highest tax rate from 63 to 25 per cent and the lowest tax rate from 4 to 1½ per cent. This led to an enormous economic boom in the United States, no inflation and a reduction of the national debt.

This brief survey, I believe, shows quite clearly that sound tax rate reductions have led to enormous economic growth and an accompanying increase in revenue to government without inflation. Getting people into private enterprise jobs and producing new goods and services is not inflationary and we should start a major reduction now.

The academics of the economic proposal I am supporting is explained by what is becoming known as the Laffer curve. The curve shows the relationship between tax rates and tax revenues. In the normal range, the higher tax rates bring higher revenues. But there is a maximum revenue point beyond which higher rates result in lower revenues, because the impairing of incentives severely contracts the tax base. When tax rates are in this counterproductive, prohibitive range, a general tax cut is well worth trying.

What this means is that you can tax the public at 10 per cent, receive a 10 per cent taxation revenue and people continue to work in the same way. You can tax them at 20 per cent and they will still give you full output. You can tax at 30 per cent or 40 per cent, but somewhere about 40 per cent there starts to be a resistance to taxation. We have all heard it said in this House that people start saying it just is not worth while to work overtime, or indeed it is not worth going to work. In fact, we have reached the point in Canada where people are saying not only is it not worth while to work, but they can make money by going on unemployment insurance. Last summer I hired a student, Mr. Speaker, and it cost him $30 a month to take the job. He was making slightly above minimum wage but it was $30 a month less than he would collect if he did not work.

Around the 40 per cent mark people lose the incentive to work, so instead of receiving more taxes we find that more and more people go on unemployment insurance or welfare or do not work overtime. They do not have the incentive to produce more, to work harder and longer.

We have reached that point in Canada now. To increase taxes, let alone maintain the current rate, is counter-productive. The more we raise taxes, in fact, the less taxes will come to us. This is an economic reality that has been recognized throughout history and is now being recognized in the United States. Senator Kemp of the United States—a potential candidate for the presidency—has recognized this. Forces are now rallying to his side, recognizing that a major tax cut would help the economy of the United States as it would any of the western industrialized countries.

The key is to let producers keep more of what they produce, and the biggest effect will come from cutting rates where they are the highest. If the tax cuts reduce rather than improve rewards for the economy's most gifted, talented and skilled producers, they will be worse than nothing at all.

The middle class is being squeezed by high taxes and inflation to the point where it fears for its own survival. Simple desires, which up until recently seemed easily within reach of any middle class family, now seem out of reach. We all tend to expect in Canadian society that some day we will be able to provide a house for ourselves and our families. This is a basic, minimum expectation of Canadians which many have accomplished. All of a sudden, however, in this economy of overtaxation, people are finding that they cannot afford a house. Some people will say that is not so and that more people are buying houses; but actually more people who bought houses are losing them, and with their investment goes their incentive and everything else.

Recent statistics show that 850,000 people in Canada who should be able to afford a house actually cannot. The key to our economy is the fact that unemployment is hurting. It hurts to be on unemployment and on welfare. Foreclosures in Canada are accelerating at an alarming rate. Statistics that I received just today show that foreclosures on NHA houses only are 150 per cent higher in 1977 than in 1976. If that trend continues, 1978 foreclosures will be up by 200 per cent over 1977. From 1975 to 1978 the percentage of foreclosures will rise 1400 per cent. In other words, in the last three years there has been something drastically wrong with our economy because people have seen the basic ideal of owning their own home quashed.

It has been quashed because the government decided they would subsidize homeownership through AHOP, and AHOP has become a very hopping program. People bought houses on the predication that the value of the house would continue to rise, and with it their disposable income, so they could afford higher payments later. This is a situation that has not happened. An AHOP house in Vancouver that sold just two years ago for $47,000 can now be bought for $43,000. In other words, the value of the house did not increase, it dropped.

At the same time, while that person's wages went up through wage controls, in fact his disposable income went down. It is from his disposable income that he makes his payments. Therefore, when the amount he had to pay on his mortgage increased, there was nothing left of his salary to pay his increased mortgage. His mortgage jumped from perhaps $370 a month $500 a month. When it jumped to $500 a month, he could not pay that amount. Even if he could pay the $500 he found that because he was not paying the interest—his payments did not even meet all of the interest—the house he bought for $47,000 three years ago is now a liability of $50,000. He now owes $50,000 on a house which if he sold it would be worth only $43,000.

What has happened to this man? He is paying $500 a month on a $50,000 investment which is only worth $43,000. What does he do? He does as the program suggests, "a hop". He does an "a hop" into another municipality; he "a hops" out of that house. Instead of paying $500 a month he walks out and pays $43,000 for a new house. His payments, instead of jumping from $370 to $500 a month, have now dropped to $330 because his initial investment was $43,000. Who picks up the difference? The mortgage insurance corporations of Canada. And who is that? That is you and I who helped to buy the house in the beginning. Homeowners who have their homes are paying for them two and three times over.

This problem of foreclosure is serious. In 1975 there were 139 foreclosures. In 1976 the number jumped from 139 to 246. In 1977 the number increased to 630. In the first two months of this year there were already 244 foreclosures. That is through NHA alone. If one multiplies that number by four to get what this year's jump will be, and if the rate continues as it is, from 630 foreclosures last year it will probably be in the neighbourhood of 1,200 to 1,500 foreclosures this year.

That is unacceptable, but it is the reality that is brought home in Bill C-56. The reality is that Canadians who had these very modest desires are finding that they are getting to the point of being beyond their reach. People thought they could afford a university education for their children. At one time a person could pull $1,000 from his income and support his child at university. Then it became $2,000 and then $3,000. Now that $3,000 is not in the pocketbook to support that child at university. As a result people are now having to drop their sights of providing a higher education for their children. That was a basic element in Canadian society that we came to expect; that young people should be able to have a higher education and that we should be able to provide it for our children.

Now I come to the subject of a dignified retirement. Many people thought when they retired ten or 15 years ago that they had worked for their society which they had helped to build, that it had become strong and they could count on a dignified retirement. That hope of a dignified retirement has now gone or is disappearing. We are finding a cynical and a discouraged attitude among those who worked and saved and now find that their savings are gone. These things are now out of reach for people.

Rising unemployment and inflation in Canada today are unacceptably high, while real investment and after-tax incomes of Canadians are lagging. Perhaps even more disturbing is the weakness of capital spending by business for modernization of plant and equipment, which creates the jobs Canadians need for the future, leads to higher real wages, and leads to the possibility that these very basic goals of a house, an education, a dignified retirement are brought back into reality.

Over the past several years the rate of capacity growth in manufacturing has slowed considerably. Canada is lagging behind nearly all OECD countries in the rate of investment and is not keeping pace with our need to create jobs, combat pollution and fight inflation as well. This bill is not a solution in the short or long-term. It is not a solution to the economic problems of Canada. It is a temporary token, a confused and inequitable bandaid. The government has failed the country economically and this bill, with its useless, half attempt to try to make an economic correction not only does not make an economic correction but is a disaster as far as the national unity of this country is concerned.

This bill should be withdrawn, renegotiated and replaced with a bill that makes not a token, temporary tax cut, but a substantive tax cut which will provide a new incentive for Canadians to work, thereby through their work reviving their aspirations toward the very basic needs that all of us in this House hold for Canada and Canadians.

Mr. Alan Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to have the opportunity to participate in this debate on Bill C-56. I think we all recognize it as being an important aspect of the budget proposals that were brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) on April 10 last.

As one of four chartered accountants in this House of Commons—the only one from Ontario—three, I believe, on our side and one on the official opposition side—from time to time I feel it somewhat of a responsibility and indeed a privilege to participate regularly in the debates of this House where we are dealing with fiscal and economic matters.

Many of us have found much satisfaction in the work in committees, myself included, where there is a great opportunity for backbenchers to make important and meaningful contributions to various issues that come before committees with which we are associated. However, it has to be borne in mind that here in this central forum of our national governing process is where the real action is, not because of any greater cut of thrust that might occur here than in committees—in fact, I think it is probably the reverse—but because this is basically the heart of our over-all parliamentary institution. For that reason it is important for us, during a debate of this nature, to put facts on the table and to dispel notions that are being conveyed across this land by people who profit from this kind of thing and whose objective in life is to make Canadians look at themselves and say "Gosh, I think I am far worse off than I am". I have never been a member of the opposition, but I suppose they look upon that as part of their official function and their main job in life.

Mr. Paproski: You sure will be, or you will be defeated.

Mr. Martin: I do not anticipate being a member of any opposition party in this House in the foreseeable future, and I fully plan on being back here after the next election.

Again I say, not having been a member of the opposition, I find it hard to rationalize just what their function is or how they see their function. I listen to the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark), and to the leader of the unofficial opposition and the finance critic of the official opposition, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). At times I shake my head in astonishment, not so much at the details of what I hear—although for the most part they are rather incredulous, and, as recent events tended to indicate, often at best wishful thinking with no foundation in fact—but at the general approach they take. They take a very negative gloom and doom approach toward all the very many positive accomplishments of the Canadian economy over the past ten years and currently.

What I find rather incredible is really two factors. First, these distinguished members, the leaders of the two major opposition parties and the finance critic for the opposition from York-Simcoe, are, first and foremost, members of parliament. That seems to say their initial task is to represent at the federal level, each of them, many thousands of hard working Canadians who reside in their individual areas, whether it is Rocky Mountain, Oshawa-Whitby or York-Simcoe.

Those Canadians, not unlike Canadians residing in my constituency of Scarborough West or the constituencies of other members in this House, are for the most part reasonably well employed people, reasonably content and reasonably confident in the ability of themselves and their fellow Canadians across this country to continue to improve their collective economic situation and ultimately overcome those identified problems which we all acknowledge continue to plague us and for which this government is constantly seeking meaningful solutions.

This extreme attitude of negativism in the face of positive accomplishments in the past and in the present appal and really disturb me. This is true whether it comes from members opposite or the media, although in fairness I frankly blame the media to a somewhat less extent. After all, their job is to sell papers and make a profit. From what I understand, in Toronto some of them are doing not too bad a job at that right now.

Naturally the gloom and doom produces headlines. The papers understand that. No news is good news. The government of this country has to accept the fact that the media is not able to peddle their wares to the same extent with headlines when things are going well or if the government are making positive accomplishments, as they are doing. However, they can put in blatant headlines problems pointed out to them by the official opposition in the course of their meanderings as well as those they manage to dig up themselves. This they bring to the opposition to have brought forward during question period. The opposition spend their mornings going over the latest headlines to see what they can dig up to use during one hour of the parliamentary process.

We on this side take a more positive approach. We are proud of our position. In my view, it is much more representative of the real mood of Canadians. It is a positive and forward planning attitude toward our country, its potential and, indeed, its problems.

The bill before us at this time makes a landmark in Canadian budgetary and fiscal planning.

Mr. Whiteway: You are right about that.

Mr. Martin: The official opposition acknowledges this, Mr. Speaker. For the first time, the federal Minister of Finance has gone out, at great expense and risk to his own position, to consult with the individual provinces as to the details of some of the important points that he was considering in his budget. This was unheard of before but long sought after by economic experts, specialists across the country and, of course, by the individual provinces.

It was a first try, undertaken by a courageous and sincere Minister of Finance in the face of all kinds of parliamentary background to the contrary. It was a bold step undertaken by a bold man, and, Mr. Speaker, it has basically worked. Unfortunately one province out of ten, or I suppose one province out of nine because the province of Alberta was not directly involved, chose to screw up the works.

Miss Bégin: That is not parliamentary.

Mr. Martin: Is it really any wonder, Mr. Speaker? After all, we are looking at a situation that could arise somewhere else in the country in the future. We are a very diverse and regional type of country. At the present time one province in this country is led by a premier who makes no bones about the fact—and I respect him for his frankness and candour—that his objective while in power is to lead the 28 per cent of Canadians who live within the borders of Quebec out of confederation, out of their country and out of our country, which for 111 years we have jointly enjoyed as Canadians one and all. It is disappointing, but hardly surprising.

My hope is that the current discussions now going on at the deputy minister level will help to resolve this impasse which is all too reminiscent of a similar situation over revenue sharing which occurred in 1953 under another government in Quebec. It happended to be the same province. It was a situation that the official opposition might well note today. It did them and their leader no good in their vain attempts at the time to capitalize on the situation in a political way during the then forthcoming general election which, interestingly enough, came within months of the height of the impasse.

Canadians in all provinces then recognized, and will once again recognize, the craftiness, the devilry, the crass political opportunity of such a move. They will again return to power the national leader who represents the best interests of all sections of this country and continues to maintain a solid position in support of one Canada from coast to coast, made up of diverse regions and provinces, with local culture, linguistic and economic interests, but united in one solid determination to remain together in the larger aim of protecting their national accomplishments and identity, geographic and economic, above all else. This is the kind of objective the leader of this party and the members on this side of the House will pursue, a positive and meaningful objective of which all Canadians can be proud.

We continue to hear in the course of comments coming from members on the other side of the House indications of gloom and doom in the country. We do not hear of anything positive. They assume it is not in their interest. I would question that because, when the chips are down, I wonder how many Canadians would solidly support a bunch of people traversing this country from coast to coast telling them how bad their situation is. It will not happen. It has not happened over the last 15 years and it will not happen the next time either.

I now wish to talk about one or two other areas. The first is the anti-inflation program. Millions of workers recognized the need for such measures and, indeed, supported them. Admittedly, the leadership of organized labour tended to oppose the program, but the millions of workers involved did recognize the need and supported it throughout.

• (2122)

One result of the program—

An hon. Member: What about inflation?

Mr. Martin: I shall speak about the inflation rate in a few moments.

An hon. Member: What about the unemployed?

Mr. Martin: I do not intend to talk about unemployment. On this side we talk about positive aspects. We intend to increase the employment rate from the level of 92 per cent which presently exists in the country. I might note that the hooting and hollering on the part of the opposition is an indication of nervousness on their side.

As I was saying, one result of the program has been that increases in wage settlements have declined from an average of 17 per cent in 1975 to about 7 per cent currently. The anti-inflation program has done much to help relieve Canada's competitive situation. Productivity figures are similarly worth noting. We have seen 40 per cent growth over the past ten years, a considerably better record than that achieved in the United States, a country often held up as a country we might follow. Here is an indication that we have performed singificantly better than our neighbours to the south. Yes, there are soft spots in the economy, but the important thing is that Canadians under this government have not lost their will to work and are sharing the benefits.

It is this positive approach to the problem confronting us which will receive, ultimately, the support of voters across the land. There are other like items in this list of achievements and I shall turn to them later.

From 1969 to 1976, the average income of Canadians increased 25 per cent in real terms. Personal disposable income per capita increased by 118 per cent in that period, during the Trudeau years. Real per capita disposable income—that is, what is left after allowing for inflation and other relative factors—rose by nearly 52 per cent, more than double the increase in the United States. Even when the same test is applied on a "per employee" basis, disposable income rose by 23 per cent as against 12.3 per cent in the United States. Mr. Speaker, we do not hear these figures which Canadians ought to hear about. Hopefully the media will be sufficiently responsible to make sure they do.

The conclusion is clear. By working together—the federal government and the provinces, the public and the private sectors—we have coped with inflation and with the world economic crisis, not painlessly but with greater success than most other countries. Canadians have not only kept pace but are better off than they were ten, five or even one year ago. During the decade to which I have referred, the number of Canadians living below the poverty line has been cut dramatically to less than half the figure in 1968 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took over the leadership of the party. Mr. Speaker, these are not unsubstantiated claims. This is not wishful thinking on the part of representatives on this side. They are facts, and I believe it is important they should be put into the record.

There are so many examples I could use in accentuating the positive that it is necessary to be selective. Reference was made by the previous speaker to the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development. I wonder if he realizes that between 1973 and 1976, the peak period of crisis, Canada had the third highest rate of growth in the western world—not a bad accomplishment in a difficult period. The OECD has forecast that this year Canada's economic performance will again outstrip that of such countries as Germany. We shall outstrip France and Britain but lag somewhat behind the United States and Japan. The OECD goes on to say that Canada's real economic growth will be second only to that of Japan and our inflation rate the third lowest after Japan and Germany.

Unfortunately, this is not the way we hear the story from the other side of the House. And very often this is not the way the media present the picture, though there are responsible articles written quite frequently in the papers paying attention to the positive side of our achievements. Needless to say, they are not picked up by members across the way—I doubt whether they ever get beyond the front pages. All their concentration each morning is centred upon scanning those pages to determine what their program is to be for the crucial hour between two and three o'clock.

According to the most recent figures available to OECD, Canada with a per capita income of $8,400 comes third among the major industrialized countries. The U.S. is in fourth place, some $500 behind. Again, this is not wishful thinking, not speculation, but fact reported by an independent organization. This is in sharp contrast to the wild and woeful meandering of the groups opposite.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude my remarks by summarizing a few of the areas in which perhaps we have failed as a government. Perhaps we have been so preoccupied with governing the country, looking ahead and coming up with positive solutions, that we may have failed adequately to report the kinds of accomplishments which have indeed been achieved. If, indeed, that is our failure, it is not a bad place at which to have failed. We have done the job, but perhaps our communication back to the people has not been as good as it might have been. It is obvious, of course, that we cannot count upon people opposite to help us in this regard. We have seen enough of their doom and gloom attitude to have the distinct feeling that members on this side are going to be much more conscious of our accomplishments in the weeks to come and will make a greater effort to get the message across this great country.

Here are some points I would like to make. We have the largest number of people working than we ever have had before. This, in itself, is not a bad statistic. It is a very important statistic. We have a larger percentage of population employed than at any previous time.

An hon. Member: What about the unemployed?

Mr. Martin: There you are, Mr. Speaker. I talk about the employed—a figure in the region of 90 per cent—and yet we hear the question: What about the unemployed? Of course we are concerned about the unemployed. Why do we have unemployment insurance programs? Why have they been constantly revised by this government in order to make them more meaningful? It is because we care. But we also care about the opportunities for the 92 per cent and more who are employed. I think they are very important as well.

We have the largest ever growth of income. We have the largest ever real income. We have the largest ever average income. More new jobs are created annually than ever before. More students are inclined to seek employment. There are more people in the average family unit who are employed. Certainly we can wish to do better. Our aim is to continue to do better.

I am delighted that the Minister of Finance is in the House tonight. I wish he had been here earlier when I spoke about what a bold and positive step he had taken this first time ever to consult the provinces in a very worthwhile effort to make the budget system much more meaningful and representative across this country. He was responsive to the thinking and to the advice of many people across the country. I think that kind of responsiveness is indicative of this government as we move along day by day, week by week and month by month. That story will be told because we on this side are going to make a point of telling it.

In conclusion, I would like again to say that the effort the official opposition and other opposition parties are undertaking at the present time is a very poor reflection on the hard working attitudes of most Canadians. I say honestly that as they re-examine their position over the coming months when, presumably, they will also be getting ready for an election—although one would never know it—they should consider coming to the people as a responsible group.

Members of opposition parties should not be saying that the country is in bad shape and that people should be putting them in power. They should not be telling people that the country is in horrible shape and that people should understand that, if they do not already. That kind of talk has never worked in the past, and it certainly will not work this time around.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, tonight we have the opportunity to talk about taxation in Canada and about the general economic policies of the government. The bill before us is a result of the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) which was supposed to attack the economic crisis facing Canadians today of record unemployment, inflation, a falling dollar and so forth.

The major innovation in the budget was the temporary reduction of provincial sales taxes with the federal government making up the difference for the provinces. It was indeed a bold and new idea. Unfortunately, this measure has served to bring the whole problem of national unity into greater focus and to disrupt attempts to calm bad feelings between the provinces. Quebec seems very much opposed to this provision. It feels the provision is an intrusion on provincial jurisdiction. This has been discussed at length.

Tonight I want to deal with what I see happening to our income tax system both at the personal income tax level and at the corporate income tax level. I think it is important that we discuss the rather negative trends which I see developing and about which constituents from all walks of life constantly complain to me.

There is the old adage that there are two things in this world which are certain, death and taxes. We all realize that we will have to continue to pay taxes because we receive something in return by way of government services, whether they be old age pensions, medical care, unemployment insurance, airports, railways and so forth. We cannot get rid of them, but I think we can do something about seeing that the taxes we all pay are fair.

When we look at our tax system, budgets which have been introduced and tax laws which have been passed under this Trudeau government, two very important conclusions strike us in the face. First, the tax system is becoming more and more regressive. The burden of taxation is being shifted down the income ladder. Low and middle income earners are paying more in taxes, and high income earners are paying less. Second, the burden is being shifted from corporate taxation to taxation of individuals. We have all accepted—or I thought so—the idea of a progressive income tax system and the concept that people should pay taxes based on their ability to pay. People at lower income levels should not be burdened with heavy tax loads, but as people move up the income ladder they can afford to pay more taxes.

We do not levy the same amount of tax on every person regardless of his income. We graduate taxation on a progressive scale. That is the theory. That is what we assume is happening. But when we examine the situation, we find that the contrary is the case.

I would like to illustrate what I mean. Anyone who fills out an income tax form knows that there are various exemptions. There is the basic exemption, the child exemption, the marriage exemption and other exemptions. These exemptions reduce income subject to tax. However, unfortunately, according to the way the system works the value of exemptions increases with a taxpayer's tax rate. In other words, the maximum advantage goes to those at the top end of the income scale rather than to those at the middle and lower parts of the scale whom one would think a progressive income tax system should benefit.

For example, let us consider the value of an additional $1,000 tax exemption. Let us assume that a taxpayer is married and has two children under 16 years of age to support. If that taxpayer's gross income is $10,000, that $1,000 exemption would have a tax saving value of $266. Let us climb the income ladder and consider a person who earns $25,000. For him that same exemption is worth $300. Let us consider the taxpayer who earns $50,000 a year. The value of his exemption jumps to $510. In other words, the more a person earns, the more his tax exemptions are worth in dollars.

The same thing happens with exemptions for the aged, the blind and the disabled. All the deductions which can be taken are worth more to people with high incomes. For example, a person who earns $30,000 a year has a tax saving of $62 because of the Canada Pension Plan deduction, but a person who earns only $9,000 a year saves only $37 as a result of the CPP deduction.

If we are going to have a fair and progressive tax system, we should replace the whole idea of tax exemptions with the concept of tax credits. In other words, every taxpayer should be given the same tax credit in dollar terms and then we should either apply a surtax to people at higher income levels or provide a cut-off point at which a tax credit is not given to someone at a certain higher income level. The whole concept of exemptions tends to negate the idea of a progressive tax system.

There is another feature in our income tax system which, I submit, is very regressive and very negative, and that is the concept of indexing taxes. This began in 1974 as protection against inflation. Our taxes were adjusted each year to take into account the rise in the consumer price index so that we would not be pushed into a higher tax bracket and have to pay more taxes.

● (2142)

This idea was first proposed by the Conservative party and later adopted by the Liberals. The idea of indexing seems logical, a way to protect the taxpayer from inflation. But again when you examine how it works, you find the result is that greater benefits go to upper income earners. Then one has to ask oneself: Where is the fairness in that kind of procedure if we believe in a progressive tax system?

For example, if you take the total tax savings from 1973 to 1977 of different income groups—and this includes income tax—this is the result of indexing: if your total income was $10,000, because of indexing you get a cumulative tax saving over those years of $671. If your income is $25,000 a year, your tax saving jumps to $1,663. If your income is $50,000, your tax saving increases to $2,573. In other words, the more you make, the more you save in taxes because of indexing. The cumulative annual cost of indexing by 1977 was some $5 billion. That is $5 billion less revenue for the federal treasury to carry on the programs that we as Canadians want and need.

I submit that indexing is justified to protect taxpayers against inflation, but to make it fair we should apply indexing to a system of tax credits, not to the current system which I have just described.

There are other tax shelters which again indicate that our tax system is very unfair. Let us take, for example, the investment income deduction. The first $1,000 of investment income or interest income from a bank deposit is, of course, tax free under our system. If your income was $10,000 a year, the value to that typical taxpayer, married with two children, is $266 in tax saving; but if your income is $25,000, that value jumps to $379. If your income is $50,000, you save $510 because of that provision.

Consider, for example, the registered retirement savings plan. In 1974, the cost of this program to the federal treasury was $513 million, and it has been in effect ever since. If your income is between $10,000 and $15,000 a year, your average saving is only $9.81, and that group of taxpayers represents 18.7 per cent of all taxpayers in Canada. But if your income is $15,000 to $20,000 a year, under the RRSP provision you are able to save $125 a year, but that income group represents only 6.8 per cent of the taxpayers. If your income is over $20,000, you have an average saving of $551.88, yet that income group represents only 4.6 per cent of all taxpayers. Therefore, we see that just under 5 per cent in the over $20,000 a year bracket had just over 57 per cent of the tax savings in 1974 from the RRSP. Again, the income tax system favours the wealthy and allows them to avoid more and more in taxes.

The same thing could be said of the registered pension plans. Again we see the same kind of trend in the registered home-ownership savings plan. Consider child care deduction, of which so many taxpayers take advantage. If you have a two child family in the $10,000 income range, you would save about $210 in taxes, while a family in the $50,000 and over range would save $430 under the child care deduction scheme. We hear the Minister of Finance say, whenever he talks about this in budgets, that the child care deduction was supposed to help lower and middle income families who need help most. In reality, when we examine how the tax system works, we find that it helps the upper income level more. If you go through our tax system, you begin to see the unfairness developing.

What is fair about the situation that occurred in 1975 when, according to official statistics, we had 305 people earning over $50,000 a year, and quite legitimately under our income tax system they did not have to pay one cent in income tax because of all these deductions? Something is very, very wrong and I think the average wage earner knows it when he looks at the way the tax system works.

Surely we need a progressive income tax system that is fair. Yet when we look at the evidence, we see that the personal tax system as it is presently structured is not fair. Indeed, I should like to put on the record a quotation from a study done by the Economic Council of Canada in 1972 which found the following:

> While government expenditure programs may contribute to the redistribution of income, the tax system as a whole does nothing to contribute to this goal. Indeed, over the lower portion of the income scale the system tends to contradict the ability to pay principle by taxing the poor at a higher rate than those who are better off. The effect of the few taxes that are progressive is completely offset by the remainder of the taxes in the system.

That study is just as valid today in 1978. Indeed, the National Council of Welfare published a report in November of 1976 which estimated that the cost of just 17 of these 60 tax subsidies and tax breaks in our system was some $6.4 billion. That is an incredible sum. We find that taxpayers earning over $50,000 a year received an average $4,000 in annual tax break benefits, but taxpayers earning less than $10,000 received less than $500 from the same tax break provisions. Yet the Minister of Finance is trying to argue that we have a progressive, fair and just tax system.

So if you look at the personal income tax side of the equation, you see that the burden of taxes is falling on the lower and middle income group and that the upper income group is taking advantage of all these exemptions, thereby undermining the whole concept of ability to pay and of taxation being progressive.

The second phenomenon that is happening with our tax system is on the corporate income tax side. Here we find that the tax burden is also being shifted, but it is being shifted away from the corporate sector of our society to the backs of individual taxpayers. I have done some studying and I find that tax incentives to big business—not to small business because under this government the small businessman has to beg for funds and is usually turned down—is in excess of some $6 billion a year, when you average it out over the past few years of this government's budgets. I am including here the direct tax deductions and also the various tax deferrals.

The theory of all these corporate income tax breaks is that they will help stimulate jobs. Indeed, in the last budget or mini budget of the Minister of Finance we found that companies like Inco were given tax breaks in the millions of dollars. What was the result? There were layoffs by the thousands. The same kind of thing happened in respect of companies like Northern Telecom which has laid off over a thousand workers, and Alcan in Newfoundland.

I could go on and on indicating how these tax cuts, which were supposed to benefit the economy through stimulation and job creation, are not working. Indeed, this is money down the drain. It is less money for the federal treasury, and if corporations are paying less in taxes you know who has to make it up. It is made up by you and me as individual taxpayers, Mr. Speaker.

We have this phenomenon of corporate taxes declining while corporation profits increase. These tax breaks are not creating the jobs we were promised. We also find that the effective tax rate of corporations was 29.6 per cent in 1970 and that it declined to 26.6 per cent in 1975. Corporations are contributing less proportionately to the federal treasury than ever before. If we look back a few years we find that in 1950 personal income taxes contributed about 20 per cent of total federal revenues, and in the same year corporate income taxes contributed 28 per cent. By 1974, the last year for which statistics are available, personal income taxes contributed 38 per cent of federal revenue whereas corporate taxes contributed only 16 per cent. Indeed, we see quite clearly that corporate contributions as a percentage have been declining.

The tax breaks to large corporations are costing Canadian taxpayers more each year than federal spending on health care, old age pensions or other programs the government argues it must cut back on because it does not have the money.

I submit that we need drastic reform of the whole tax system. We will not get it from Liberal or Conservative members. Both those parties oppose the Carter royal commission recommendations on taxation. They argued for the idea of a progressive income tax system, that a buck is a buck and that you cannot get around this idea of progressive taxes by implementing all these exemptions and tax deductions which benefit the upper income Canadians. That is what the Carter Royal Commission recommended, and the opposition from big business and a number of Conservative and Liberal members was immense indeed. Thus the main recommendations of that commission have not been implemented. We as taxpayers, certainly as individual taxpayers in the middle and low income levels, have been paying for that ever since.

If we cleared our personal and corporate tax systems of these unfair subsidies, especially for the wealthy and for the large corporations, then taxes for ordinary Canadians, workers, small businessmen and farmers could be cut substantially. At the same time, our federal government would have new revenues to supplement existing social and economic programs.

Surely we have the opportunity to use our tax system to bring about fairness, to try to help end the anomalies and injustices that burden so many of our citizens who are trying to make ends meet, facing horrendous mortgage payments or rents, seeing the cost of the necessities of life increasing every day, and who want some economic justice but do not get it from this government, especially in the field of taxation. Instead they find that the system comes down hard on those who can least afford to bear the burden.

Surely if we consider ourselves a civilized country we should end this discrimination in our income tax system. We should be moving toward the concepts advocated by the Carter royal commission on taxation. We should be closing the loopholes and making the very wealthy sector of our economy, in terms of the large corporations who have received from this government since the Prime Minister took office some $10 billion in deferred taxes, pay its share. This $10 billion deferral has been allowed without interest. If you or I, Mr.Speaker, happen to be late in our income tax payment, we have to pay interest; but not these corporations with $10 billion in deferred taxes.

We should begin to collect some of that money and put conditions on the other tax breaks we give. I am not suggesting we should never have tax breaks, but we must put some iron-clad conditions on them in respect of job creation and economic expansion, instead of just signing a blank cheque for these corporations to bank the money.

We have to get our economy back on the road. We cannot tolerate much longer the horrendous cost of over one million unemployed. This is a cost in terms of less tax revenue coming into the federal treasury and in terms of unemployment insurance payouts. Canadians want to work. They do not want welfare. When I look at the economic policies of this government I become very, very discouraged and disheartened. There are opportunities to bring about reform, and one of the areas where we can start is in respect of the income tax system, so as to lessen the burden on those Canadians who work so hard only to see their earnings dissipated because of an unfair tax system.

We need a government that will use these new found revenues by implementing a fair tax system to institute economic programs that will get Canadians back to work and this country on the road to prosperity again.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in light of the hour I wonder if I might call it ten o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Paproski: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to know whether there is a minister or a member on that side who could tell us what bill we will be debating tomorrow. If there is someone who would be so kind as to let us know, it would be appreciated.

Mr. Harquail: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is the government's intention to continue with the debate on the finance bill, Bill C-56.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—FUNDING OF NATIVE ORGANIZATIONS FOR LAND CLAIMS NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner) concerning funding for the Dene nation and Metis Association in the Northwest Territories. I understand the association has not yet received funding for what I believe is referred to as the first quarter of this fiscal year. The association is in the sad circumstance now that it will have to layoff staff soon if funding is not forthcoming. This would not do much good for those people the association represents. The association will have to let go trained staff who have learned to work in the area of research, and so on, into land claims for the native people of the Northwest Territories, a rather specialized field. There are not many people who work in that area, and should the Metis Association be forced to lay their trained staff off and funding is resumed further down the road, the association will then have to find other staff. It is very likely that those people now working for the association will take other jobs because they have to pay the rent, feed their children and put bread and butter on the table like anyone else.

The minister made mention of a moratorium. I understand that he has communicated with the Dene nation and the Metis Association on this matter. Unfortunately, that will not be of much benefit to the people of the Northwest Territories at this time. However, the situation may come up further down the road and perhaps at that time I may be in a position to support the minister should that happen. I certainly hope that it will not.

I raised this question about funding because the organizations are very concerned about it. I would like the minister or his parliamentary secretary to elaborate a bit more on the reply which I received yesterday in this House, at which time the minister mentioned again the idea of moratorium. Perhaps the minister or his parliamentary secretary could let me know what the intentions are regarding the funding of these organizations. It is my sincere hope and belief that the two organizations will soon be co-operating and working together toward a fair and just settlement claim for the native people along the Mackenzie Valley, but they certainly will not be able to do this without funds.

I want to make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that it is indeed a very serious matter, and I wish to hear what the parliamentary secretary has to say on this.

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the concern raised by the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) and to elaborate on the comments made by the minister in this House yesterday, Wednesday, May 31, in question period respecting the funding of native organizations in the territories.

I would like first to recap briefly that two of the native organizations in the Northwest Territories, the Committee for Original Peoples Entitlement and the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada, have received loans totalling $903,395 and $3,239,-607 respectively to the end of the fiscal year 1977-78. In the current fiscal year, funding will be going forward to both COPE and ITC in the amount of approximately $1 million to each organization. Although funding has not yet been advanced this fiscal year for the two native organizations in the Mackenzie Valley, the Dene nation or Indian Brotherhood of the Northwest Territories, and the Métis Association of the Northwest Territories, the fact of the matter is that no decision has been made to impose a moratorium to date.

All members should be aware, as is the hon. member who put the question, that the government has funded both these organizations, in the past for claims research, proposals formulation and negotiations, to a total of $2,509,489; $1,405,000 of this has gone to the Indian Brotherhood of the Northwest Territories since 1975-76, with the remaining $1,104,489 to the Métis Association of the Northwest Territories since 1976-77.

I would like to elaborate on why the government has accepted separate claims from the two organizations, yet has taken the position that there must be only one settlement for all native people in the Mackenzie Valley. Prior to pronouncement of the Dene declaration in 1975, all native people in the Mackenzie Valley were united behind a common cause. When the Métis Association in 1976 announced its non-acceptance of the Dene declaration as a basis for a claim proposal, the government considered it important that the aspirations of the Métis Association of the Northwest Territories membership be known before negotiations began. Consequently, the Métis Association of the Northwest Territories was funded separately to research and develop its own claim.

● (2207)

The government's position has been constant since submission of the Métis Association of the Northwest Territories claim in September 1977, now that both claims are in, that a mechanism must be established to have the views of all native people in the Mackenzie Valley represented at the negotiating table, as the Indians and Métis live together in the same communities, share the same resources, and are regarded by everyone as one people.

I might just make two additional brief comments, Mr. Speaker. Given the present situation, there is a need for both groups to reach agreement on a process for joint negotiations. This could mean, for example, an umbrella structure, or alternatively, both groups could come to the same table as separate entities. The Mackenzie Valley chiefs have stated that they intend to deal with this matter at a leadership meeting later this month. In the meantime, a decision on first quarter funding will be made within the next few days.

Given the need for a single settlement, further claims research and negotiations funding is entirely dependent on both organizations coming together. Hopefully, an understanding between the organizations can be reached after the Dene leadership meeting in June so that the negotiations can proceed and the necessary supportive funding be continued.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—APPOINTMENT OF AMBASSADORS TO AND BY FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on February 22 I asked the minister about the prospects of the establishment of embassies in Amman and Damascus. While congratulating him on his announcement of the opening of a Canadian embassy in Kuwait, I questioned him as to when the Kuwaiti government would be sending an ambassador solely accredited to this country.

As my learned and most respected friend the parliamentary secretary knows, I have urged repeatedly the improvement of contacts between Canada and the peoples of the Arab world. Commercial, social, cultural and diplomatic ties could be strengthened with a group of nations with which there are no reasons for anything but cordial relations with Canada. The economies of many of the countries of the Arab Middle East are developing in such a way as to offer major opportunities for Canadian investment and technical co-operation. It is my experience from frequent visits to these countries that Canada often lags behind other more alert and aggressive trading countries. Considering the slack state of our own economy I think it would be shocking neglect to miss opportunities in the outside world.

While much can be done and must be done by the private sector, the government can assist in strengthening government-to-government contacts, in obtaining information, and by using agencies such as the Canadian Export Development Corporation in reference to those Arab countries not wealthy through an abundance of petro-dollars. Not all Arab countries are facing grave problems of what to do with their money! Some need assistance in infrastructure and especially technical aid.

I fear we have not taken advantage of an opportunity offered by the Kuwaiti fund for development whose director I met here in Ottawa a few years ago. It was his suggestion that, through a marriage of the fund's finances and CIDA's technical know-how, much could be done. I believe it was a most useful suggestion and I would have been happier had the Canadian response been more fulsome and interested.

If I recall aright, when I came to the House of Commons in 1957 we had embassies in the Middle East only in Lebanon, Israel and Egypt. I many times called for exchange of diplomatic missions with other areas of the Arab world, notably Iraq, Saudi Arabia and the Gulf Emirates. Over the years this has been done and one can see clearly that improved trade and investment contacts have followed. Canadian businessmen are involved in major projects in Saudi Arabia. One of these is the construction of what will be one of the most splendid and costliest universities in the world. I am happy that we have missions in those beautiful Magreb countries, Tunisia, Algeria and Morocco.

But there are two countries whose importance in the Middle East, and more specifically in Middle East tensions, cannot be overestimated. These are Syria and Jordan. They are confrontation states vitally concerned with the future of the Palestinians whose status, as is now almost universally agreed, is the core of the Middle East problem.

As a founding member of the United Nations which created Israel, as a member of the Security Council and as the provider of peacekeeping forces in the area, Canada must and should be vitally interested in the establishment of a just and durable peace in the area. I do not think we can do our job or play our part without close contact with Jordan and Syria. We need a presence, a listening post, a place for regular dialogue with those pivotal countries. For the immediate and urgent requirement of the current troubles and tension we should be there. Beyond that exist many reasons for strengthening our ties with those two countries who are working out their destiny under different forms of government but to whom peace today and prosperity today and tommorow are vital.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend my hon. colleague and friend, the distinguished member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), for his great interest in the Arab countries, more particularly Jordan and Kuwait. Since we are going to establish a new embassy in Kuwait it goes without saying that we would be delighted if Kuwait would create a mission in Ottawa. Nevertheless, nothing at present indicates that Kuwait intends to open a mission in Ottawa in the immediate future.

[Translation]

Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, no state has unlimited funds for the purposes of diplomatic representation. Still I am sure that the presence of the resident mission of Canada in Kuwait would improve our bilateral relations in our best respective interests and it is not unreasonable to hope that as a result of closer relations, the government of Kuwait will one day open an embassy in Canada.

As for Amman and Damascus, I agree that it would be most desirable to have an embassy in one or even both those very important capitals. We do not have the necessary resources to do so now or in the near future. It was possible to do it in Kuwait following the closing of our mission in Johannesburg. As we do not anticipate the closing of other missions, we must be satisfied with multiple accreditations from Beyrouth which is fortunately well located to deal with those two important cities of Amman and Damascus. I regret to disappoint my hon. colleague.

INDUSTRY—CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—EQUITABLE SHARING OF BENEFITS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago I directed a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) concerning the government's plan to subsidize the construction of two new auto parts plants by General Motors and Ford Motor Company of Canada to the tune of $116 million. I asked how the government could contemplate subsidizing these two multinational conglomerates when, according to the spirit of the 1965 Auto Pact between Canada and the United States, these firms are already committed to investing in Canada.

The minister was evasive. He quoted from the Auto Pact and he also replied that we had a surplus of $2 billion in automobile manufacturing in Canada last year. What the minister forgot to mention is that Canada had an auto parts deficit of more than $3 billion last year, which completely erases our surplus in assembled vehicles shipped to the United States and leave us with a deficit of over $1 billion.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that Canada is not getting its fair share of the automotive trade. The Auto Pact has become a joke. Canada has had a deficit in ten out of the 13 years since the Auto Pact was signed, a deficit that has totalled more than $7.5 billion. The deficit in our auto parts trade is even worse. Since 1965 we have had a deficit on parts trade with the U.S. of just under $19 billion. At the present time there is a shortfall of about 25,000 jobs between what we should have as a fair share of the total employment in the auto industry and what we actually have.

The auto industry is now planning for its biggest re-tooling since the 1920's. Ford and GM have announced they will be spending at least $20 billion each between now and 1985 to re-tool for new emission and fuel economy standards. Within the spirit of the Auto Pact, this commits each of them to a level of investment in Canada in the range of $275 million each and every year for the foreseeable future.

Canada cannot hope to get a large share of the investment in the auto industry that is going to be made over the next few years, and the jobs that go with that investment, unless the federal government exerts pressure on the auto manufacturers to spend more of their investment budget in Canada. The major auto manufacturers have been remarkably reluctant to spend a fair share of new investment in plant and equipment in Canada. Just looking at the past few years, our share of the new car market has been between 9 per cent and 10 per cent. Our share of new investment funds has been down around 5 per cent.

Pressure must be put on the auto industry right now to make sure the auto manufacturers live up to their investment commitments in Canada. I would like to know what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is doing to ensure this, besides offering $116 million of the taxpayers' money to Ford and GM to invest in Canada when they are bound by the Auto Pact to invest anyway.

The government must immediately begin negotiations with the auto industry regarding the Auto Pact. We must have guarantees that the number of jobs, the amount of new investment, and the research and development expenditures will be commensurate with Canada's share of the auto market.

The government has so far failed to offer a credible response to our growing auto trade deficit. Most of the planning for the conversions to smaller, more energy efficient cars is being made now. I would like to impress upon the government that we are running out of time. Decisions will be taken in the next two years that will affect the auto industry for the rest of the century.

In Ontario, one in seven jobs is directly or indirectly related to the auto industry. These jobs must be protected. The former minister of industry, trade and commerce has admitted that our current auto trade deficit is "too big to swallow". I would agree with that. The only question that remains is, when will the government insist that the auto makers do something about it, and why has it not begun to insist already?

What we are looking for as far as the Auto Pact is concerned is a fair deal. We do not say we should have more than the American workers. The Canadian workers are agreed upon this. As far as the Auto Pact is concerned, auto workers in Canadian subsidiaries of American auto corporations, particularly in the parts manufacturing industry, are well aware of the fact we have been sold down the river since 1965. We have a tremendous deficit vis-à-vis the United States. It is time that jobs were created in the automotive industry in this country and that there is parity between the cost of cars made in this country and cars made in the United States. I see no reason why any model of car should cost $100, $200 or $300 more in Canada than in the United States if that car was made in Canada. I do not understand why consumers in Detroit can purchase an automobile manufactured in St. Thomas, Ontario, for $100, $200 or $300 less than someone in Canada.

The minister is not here this evening. I do not expect him to be here at this late hour. Not even his parliamentary secretary is here. It is a damned shame there is no one from his department here tonight for the last three minutes of this period to rebut what I have been debating. There is no one from the cabinet here to answer the question I have put forward regarding bringing the Auto Pact up to date, so that we have more investment and jobs in this country, jobs that will create more money, and so that Canadians can buy more cars. That is what it is all about. As I say, it is a damned shame there is no one here to reply. There is only one member of the entire Liberal party on the other side of the House tonight.

● (2222)

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish my distinguished colleague would not judge the interest of our party in the automobile pact question by the absence of most of my hon. friends. The minister and his parliamentary secretary have made a commitment which they could not break and they could not be here to speak tonight. Nevertheless, I shall attempt to answer the observations of the hon. member with regard to the automobile agreement.

[Translation]

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the main points mentioned in his presentation, namely a fair share of the auto production, the loss of 25,000 jobs in the automobile industry, and finally the payment of subsidies to the industries in that sector.

First, the fair share. Paragraph (c) of the Auto Pact reads as follows: Development of conditions allowing the market forces to interact efficiently for the most economic development of investments, production and trade. No mention is made of the automatic right to a "fair share" of jobs, production or investments. In fact, no mention is made in the agreement of jobs. The fact that one country or the other gets more or less than of its fair share should be determined, according to intent of the agreement as I understand it, by such factors as the relative cost of production in the two countries and the relative return of new investments.

[English]

The attainment of a "fair share" of production and investment is obviously the objective. We achieved and surpassed this objective in the early 1970's when production costs and returns on investment were in our favour. The route to reachieving this objective is not to require companies to invest in less than economic propositions in Canada. It is to recreate conditions in which it is in the interests of the industry itself to invest in Canada.

We are working with both the vehicle industry and the parts industry to demonstrate to them that, in large measure, these conditions have been recreated and that it is in their interests to invest in Canada.

The number of jobs that we are reputed to have been shortchanged under the automotive agreement keeps escalating. I assume that the 25,000 number has been taken from a report prepared by the treasurer of Ontario. We have trouble with the arithmetic contained within that report. Almost 6,000 of the 25,000 jobs we are reputed to be short are in vehicle assembly. Statistics Canada reports that we have a trade surplus with the United States of over $2 billion in completed vehicles and that we exported almost $600 million of North American vehicles to third countries. It is beyond me how the treasurer could conclude that we are short of jobs in vehicle assembly when in fact we have a substantial surplus. Were we to achieve automotive agreement trade balance, which would be my definition of fair share, we would have additional automotive employment of about 5,000.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are about to rise to tell me my time has expired. Perhaps I might simply add that I know the minister is about to make an important announcement in the field of automotive parts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m.

At 10:25 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX

A TRANSLATION OF STATEMENT PURPORTEDLY MADE BY JUDGE MAYRAND

On May 4th, engineer Alexander Treu was sentenced to two years in prison after a lengthy trial held in camera under the provisions of the Official Secrets Act.

Some members of parliament, under the protection of parliamentary privilege, have taken the liberty of questioning and criticizing the way in which the trial was conducted before Justice Luc Trudel of the Sessions Court.

Although it is admissible to make comments about a judicial decision and to disagree with the Official Secrets Act or with the fact that authorities do not use the notion of national security with enough reservation, the Judge himself cannot be blamed for his obligation is to apply such a law.

It is up to the citizens to place pressure on the legislators in order to change the law or on the cabinet in order to change its attitude.

This Official Secrets Act places the Judge in a real dilemma. Once he has ordered that the trial will be in camera, after the presentation of arguments and representations, since the evidence would constitute a hazard to the security of the state, it is not possible for him, in the name of national security, to publicly justify his decisions and to provide his reasons to the news media.

Once the "in camera status" has been ordered, the logic and the law force him to respect it to the limit. In fact, the Appeal Court has followed the same rationale by demanding that the accused refrain from making comments about this matter, for any consideration, while waiting for the final decision of the Appeal Court, as it had been also ordered by a judge of the Superior Court while he was revising the terms of bail during the trial.

In the name of the respect of judicial independence, we cannot tolerate the remarks of Mr. Gerald Baldwin, M.P., who was wondering whether the law had not been well understood or had been wrongfully applied by the judges.

We respectfully advise him to content himself with doing his own work, that is with the drafting of a better Official Secrets Act, if he feels the present one is unjust and abusive.

The Member of Parliament, Mr. Baldwin, should not pose as an Appeal Court to study the conduct of the Judge of this trial, especially since he is totally ignorant of the facts presented as evidence and of the consent of the lawyers, both for the defence and for the prosecution, since the trial as well as the preliminary hearing were held in camera.

In any circumstances, public interest and the preservation of individual liberties demand that we strictly adhere to the principle of separation of the three powers, that is the executive, the legislative and the judiciary; each citizen must respect their rights and privileges and especially those who hold a position with great responsibilities as is the case for a Member of Parliament.

It seems to us that it would be preferable to leave to the Courts the delicate task of drawing the line between the rights of the individual and the rights of a nation in the application of the law.

TEXT OF STATEMENT PURPORTEDLY MADE BY JUDGE MAYRAND

Le 4 mai dernier, l'ingénieur Alexander Treu était condamné à deux ans de pénitencier, au terme d'un long procès tenu à huis clos, sous le régime de la loi des secrets officiels.

Certains députés, sous le couvert de leur immunité parlementaire, se sont permis de questionner et critiquer la façon dont le procès s'est instruit devant le juge Léo Trudel de la Cour des sessions de la paix.

S'il est permis de commenter une décision judiciaire et de ne pas être d'accord avec la loi des secrets officiels ou avec le fait que les autorités recourent trop souvent à la notion de sécurité nationale, il ne saurait être question de blâmer le juge qui a l'obligation d'appliquer une telle loi.

Il appartient alors aux citoyens de faire pression sur le législateur pour qu'il modifie la loi ou sur le cabinet pour qu'il modifie son attitude.

Cette loi des secrets officiels place le juge dans une véritable impasse. Une fois qu'il a décrété le huis clos, à la suite d'arguments et de représentations, à l'effet que la révélation de la preuve constituerait un danger pour la sécurité de l'État, il ne lui est plus possible, au nom de cette même sécurité nationale, de justifier publiquement sa décision et d'en donner les raisons aux media d'information.

Une fois le huis clos décrété, la logique et la loi l'obligent à le maintenir jusqu'à la dernière limite. D'ailleurs, la Cour d'appel a suivi cette logique, en exigeant que le prévenu s'abstienne de discuter de cette affaire, sous aucune considération, en attendant le jugement final de la Cour d'appel, comme l'avait d'ailleurs décrété un juge de la Cour supérieure, en revision de ses conditions de cautionnement durant son procès.

Au nom du respect de l'indépendance judiciaire, nous ne pouvons tolérer les remarques du député Gerald Baldwin, qui s'inquiétait de voir la loi mal comprise et mal appliquée par les juges.

Nous lui conseillons respectueusement de se contenter de faire son travail, soit l'amélioration de la loi des secrets officiels, si cette loi lui apparaît injuste et abusive.

Le député Baldwin n'a pas à s'ériger en Cour d'appel pour étudier la conduite du juge présidant le procès, d'autant plus qu'il est dans la plus complète ignorance des faits mis en preuve et du consentement des avocats, tant de la défense que de la poursuite. A ce que le procès se rédoule à huis clos, comme le fut l'enquête préliminaire.

En toute circonstance, l'intérêt public et la sauvegarde des libertés individuelles exigent que soit rigoureusement observé le principe de la séparation des trois pouvoirs, soit l'exécutif, le législatif et le judiciaire; chaque citoyen devant en respecter leurs droits et privilèges et à plus forte raison, ceux qui occupent un poste de responsabilité comme un député.

Il nous apparaît souhaitable que demeure réservée à la magistrature la délicate tâche de tirer la ligne de démarcation entre les droits d'un individu et les droits d'une nation dans l'application de la loi.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SALARY REVISIONS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in the last two days I have heard a large number of complaints about the revised salary schedules which were tabled on Wednesday. There is a great deal of puzzlement, to say the least, over the fact that a member's principal secretary's salary has been frozen, while the top executive category, already paid over $40,000 per year, receives a full 6 per cent permanent increase.

While accepting that a readjustment in all salary levels is necessary to correct any overclassification which may have occurred, I think morale has been harmed by the selective and mysterious manner in which this occurred. I, therefore, ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this House requests the tabling of all documents, papers and memoranda on which House of Commons staff salary revisions, tabled in this House on May 31, were based, particularly those which compare House of Commons classifications with public service classifications and those which explain the differentials between positions within the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some hesitation about whether the motion put forward relates to any administrative responsibility of the government. It is the responsibility of parliament and, indeed, one in which I have a representative capacity. While not a government responsibility, it would be clearly a parliamentary responsibility, so I will ask if there is unanimous consent to put the motion.

Presentation of the motion for discussion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

COMMITTEE STUDY OF LAW ON SOLICITING, VAGRANCY AND PROSTITUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of serious and pressing necessity. For the law to be respected and obeyed, it must be clear, concise and free from ambiguity. Every Canadian, according to our system of jurisprudence, is entitled to know what the law is.

In light of the former changes in the law contained in the Criminal Code of Canada as to soliciting, vagrancy and prostitution, and in the words of one judge, persons will be tried for offences which are not contrary to the law but merely for publicity purposes, creating a false, unnatural, and unwarranted punishment, and in light of the fact that in some places certain police enforcement officers are used as decoys as a method of cracking down on activities that may or may not be illegal, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That the questions of soliciting, vagrancy and prostitution be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for study and recommendation, with the right of the committee to hear witnesses giving their views and opinions with reference to all matters pertaining to the same.

Mr. Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, unanimous consent of the House is required for the presentation of such a motion for debate. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

RATIFICATION OF CANADA-U.S. INTERIM AGREEMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the many problems and animosities stemming from the failure of the U.S. Senate to ratify the Canada-U.S. interim agreement on fisheries, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen):

That this House orders the Canadian section of the Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group to convene at the earliest possible moment a special meeting in Washington in order to explain to our congressional colleagues the need for ratification of the interim agreement, so that the fishermen of our two countries may gain their livelihood under this pro tem arrangement pending the conclusion of a more binding agreement between the two countries.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST FOR LOCALLY BASED FISH MARKETING BOARD IN NWT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that commercial fishermen in the Northwest Territories are most dissatisfied with the services provided to them by the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board, with headquarters in Winnipeg, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

● (1112)

That the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board be replaced in the Northwest Territories by a locally based marketing board which can more effectively meet the needs of the commercial fishing industry in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

GREETINGS TO HER MAJESTY ON TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF HER CORONATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that today is the twenty-fifth anniversary of the coronation of Her Majesty the Queen, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That this House extend to Her Majesty, on behalf of the people of Canada, warmest greetings and sincere best wishes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

HEALTH

INSPECTION PROCEDURES TO ENSURE MEAT AND LIVESTOCK FREE OF DES CHEMICAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In 1974, the Canadian government banned the use of diethylstilbestrol or DES, a carcinogenic growth hormone which was fed to cattle to promote weight gain. I have just learned that "Radio Noon", a CBC Toronto program, has tested ten samples of beef liver, five Canadian and five American, from four different stores. Despite the ban, nine of these samples were found to contain DES with a level as high as 3,720 parts per billion. Levels as low as two parts per billion have been shown to be toxic in tests of laboratory animals. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That this House call for an immediate investigation of the inspection procedures for meat and livestock products imported into Canada and produced in Canada to determine the reasons for the failure of the DES ban and to make recommendations for any changes necessary to avoid a repetition of this problem.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

QUEBEC SALES TAX—GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance, who telephoned me this morning to describe the position he had taken in the unsuccessful negotiations with the province of Quebec yesterday regarding the sales tax question. The minister confirmed in that telephone conversation that the federal government continues to refuse the kind of direct payment to the provinces, particularly to the province of Quebec, that is sought by the National Assembly of Quebec and is accorded to every other province. The House knows that there is no regular tax transfer agreement with Quebec. Why did the Minister of Finance of Canada not accept a one-time only tax transfer agreement covering the $100 abatement?

● (1117)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am responding exactly to the wish of the Leader of the Opposition as expressed in a speech he delivered Sunday last when he said: We demand that the equivalent of the amount represented by the tax cut, that is $226 million, be paid in full to the province of Quebec. And we have decided to transfer back to Quebec residents the equivalent of $226 million as requested by the Leader of the Opposition.

Of course, yesterday we tried to make two proposals to the Quebec government, the first one along the lines of Mr. Ryan's formula whereby the tax income reduction would be made in 1978 instead of 1977 but Mr. Parizeau rejected it. We tried to make a further proposal which would have caused me to accept some of his proposals if he were prepared to accept some of mine and he refused. I stated on many occasions yesterday that obviously Mr. Parizeau and the Quebec government have only one thing in mind, to prove that there is no way to deal with the federal government. What we are trying to do is to develop a national policy on economic incentives, and economic success for the Canadian government is certainly not something which meets the political purposes of the separatist government in the province of Quebec.

[English]

Mr. Clark: The minister was a little more clearcut in his attribution of this proposal to Mr. Ryan in his statement than he was in his communiqué. In his press communiqué, he said it was not the same as, but similar to, the proposal made by Mr. Ryan. I am sure Mr. Ryan will be quite prepared to clarify that difference himself.

I am pleased to know that the minister is now reading and quoting my excellent speeches: that might redound to the better governing of the country. He knows the difference between what we proposed and what he has done. We have proposed to let the government of Quebec, as with the governments of other provinces, have that money. He is proposing some form of payment via individual citizens. He is proposing to change the system with the province of Quebec.

My question is this: In the second proposal that the Minister of Finance made yesterday, according to his communiqué he proposed to make a one-time only transfer to the province of Quebec on condition that the Government of Canada is allowed to dictate the way a province uses a provincial jurisdiction. The minister knows that that condition is unacceptable to the government of Quebec. He knows it is unacceptable to Mr. Ryan. Indeed, it is unacceptable to anyone else who respects the constitution of Canada. The minister is prepared to make a one-time only tax transfer in a way that violates the constitution. My question is quite simple: Why will he not agree to make it in a way that respects the constitution of Canada?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am respecting the constitution all the way. Mr. Parizeau, or any government, can do what they want in their field. In fact, Mr. Parizeau has done it so much that he has selectively cut the sales tax for 12 months. It is done. I have not intervened. As there is no agreement with Mr. Parizeau, and he does not want an agreement, I do not want to penalize the citizens of Quebec. I am reducing the income tax of Quebeckers in exactly the same way as I have done for those in Ontario and New Brunswick. On the night of the budget I reduced the federal income tax by $100. They increased their provincial sales tax by $100 and followed a procedure of cutting the sales tax.

What I did on the night of the budget was reduce the income tax of the other provinces which have sales tax. I have no agreement with Quebec. I tried to get an agreement. I made five different proposals. There is no way I can get any agreement with them. I am doing now exactly what I did on the night of the budget with the other provinces in reducing the income tax.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Minister of Finance must, surely, by now recognize that it is not exactly the same when the citizens of one province receive a cheque from the federal government and the citizens of other provinces do not receive a cheque. That is not the same.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: One of the proposals that the federal government has put forward—it is one that we on this side of the House would like to see considered with some calm—has the serious disadvantage of delaying the economic stimulus in Quebec for at least a year. Indeed, it may have the consequence of forcing the Quebec government to raise taxes, which it is not in a position to do with ease before that time. Naturally, the chief victims of an arrangement like that will be the people of the province of Quebec.

I would like to ask the Minister of Finance this question: Assuming there is some progress affecting the tax year 1978—affecting that proposal—would the federal government be prepared to give the most serious consideration to including in any agreement that might be arrived at, some provision that might bring stimulus to the province, the economy and the people of Quebec this year, when it is needed, rather than causing the people of that province to suffer because of a determination to disagree on the part of two governments?

Mr. Chrétien: That is exactly why I decided to take the list of the taxpayers of 1977, to make sure that the money was available to assist the Quebec economy this summer. The one disadvantage of the Ryan formula would be that the money would be in the hands of the taxpayers of Quebec only in the spring of 1979. In order to stimulate the economy right now, I have decided to go with the taxpayers' list of 1977. If the hon. gentleman would prefer me to take the 1978 list, I could do that; but the money would be in the pockets of federal taxpayers only in the spring of 1979. That was the formula proposed by Mr. Ryan, and I am willing to go along even if, economically, it makes less sense than what I have proposed.

Mr. Clark: We all know what has been proposed by Mr. Ryan. His position is far clearer than that taken by the Government of Canada. Yesterday the minister apparently indicated some willingness to accept the 1978 base, something which would have delayed a certain economic stimulus to the economy of that province this year, when it is needed, as the hon. gentleman has just admitted. I hear that the former minister disagrees with the present minister. I know that the Liberal caucus is full of disagreement on this question. But let members opposite resolve their differences internally, and let the Minister of Finance address himself to the question I have asked.

Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal of talking and shouting going on over there. I know how nervous they are about this subject, but I ask the Minister of Finance to address himself to the question I put to him. If he does come back to that proposal to move to the 1978 base, will he undertake to enter into some arrangement with the province of Quebec? I do not know what it might be.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: We are quite prepared to propose a number of them. One would simply be to respect the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec and to end this attempt to interfere with provincial jurisdiction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: But the government refuses to do that.

An hon. Member: They want a confrontation.

Mr. Clark: I ask the minister, seriously, in the interests of the taxpayers of Quebec and in the interest of equity, to give us an undertaking in principle that if there is to be an agreement relating to 1978, he will ensure that the people of Quebec will not become victims, economically, of this dispute between two governments which appear to be increasingly stubborn?

Mr. Chrétien: I say, again, to make sure that the Quebec people will not suffer at all, that if the hon. member will vote on the bill today, the cheques will be in the mail next month.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I called the hon. member this morning because I thought he had some problem of understanding. It appears my call was not very useful. I repeat that I am not interfering in the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec. They have cut their sales taxes in the way they wished. They can cut all the taxes in their field they wish. They would go bankrupt very quickly—they are close to it—but there is nothing I can do about it. It is within their jurisdiction. I am reducing personal income tax for the federal taxpayers of the province of Quebec.

SELECTIVE SALES TAX CUTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): The minister has indicated that the Ryan proposal, as one way of extricating us from this mess, is not the best one in terms of stimulating the economy of the province. Upon reflection, I agree with him. In this respect the minister at least agrees with the government of Quebec. That government, too, rejected the Ryan formula as not providing the kind of stimulus needed this year.

• (1127)

If that is so, would the minister confirm that the second part of his so-called new proposal for selective sales tax cuts is, in its substance, precisely the same as his original proposal, in the sense that the federal government is still insisting that the Quebec government cut for some period of time all the sales taxes in that province as a condition of getting any federal payment at all?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, it is a condition that we have a collection agreement. Since Maurice Duplessis there has been no collection agreement between the federal government and the Quebec provincial government. If the hon. member now recognizes that the Ryan formula is not perfect, why did he move a motion in the House of Commons on Thursday, May 25, urging me to accept the Ryan formula?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I appreciated the minister's remarks earlier today regarding his proposals. I would have thought that he would at least do the courtesy of reciprocating an attitude which I have. As I said, on reflection—not just today, but previous to today—I have seen the implications of the Ryan formula. I am appealing to the federal government to show the same flexibility as some of the rest of us in this country are prepared to show in this matter.

As I understand the second part of the minister's proposal, that is, the selective sales tax proposal remaining in the province of Quebec, with some subsidization coming in direct payment from the federal government, it is still an insistence by the federal government that the province of Quebec impose a unive nuales tax on all commodities. If that is the case, would the minister not agree that he has come all the way back to his original proposal, which still amounts to his insisting that the federal government impose certain priorities on the provincial government which are within the constitutional right of that province?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, in my second proposition of yesterday I came a long way. I said that even if I did not agree with the selective sales tax system proposed by the Quebec government, I would pay part of it. Quebec could have it forever, if it wanted, but I would pay two-thirds for nine months, as I have agreed to do for Saskatchewan and British Columbia. There was some money left over on the table. I said that if Quebec wanted a tax agreement, with that money it could cut sales taxes across the board for the rest of the items until October.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, with all respect, I say that the minister is showing an inflexibility which simply is not required in the circumstances. Would the minister confirm that what the Quebec government wants is no more money than any other province?

Second, would the minister agree, because this has not been challenged in the debate, with the fact that I put on the record more than a week ago, that the job impact of the tax cut proposal coming from the province of Quebec would likely create more jobs in the province of Ontario than in the province of Quebec, and as such it is not a balkanization measure?

If the minister agrees with both those points, why can he not admit frankly that he was mistaken in his original judgment, and accept the proposal of the Quebec government?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, there are two reasons. Mr. Parizeau made his cut 48 hours after my budget. Before I rejected that, I took the liberty of calling some other ministers of finance in this land to ask them if the Quebec proposal was acceptable to them. They said no. I called three. We had previously had a unanimous agreement, so I did not have to call everybody. After I had called three, I knew there was no possibility of agreement, so I could not accept the proposal at that time.

Mr. Stevens: Who were the three?

Mr. Chrétien: In addition, Mr. Parizeau went for a full year. British Columbia cut its sales tax by two points for a full year although I recognized only nine months. Following that, they are on their own. I do not see why Quebec should not be on its own after nine months, like British Columbia.

• (1132)

SALES TAX—FURTHER DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, in fact, he reopened the discussions with the province of Quebec about changes in the sales tax issue. I should like to ask if he has undertaken to have similar discussions with the governments of the other provinces, notably the government of Manitoba, which had originally proposed to use 1 per cent of the sales tax reduction for direct job-creation programs, and also with the province of Alberta which had been ignored in any discussion of income tax rebates.

Has the minister, therefore, reopened discussions with the other provinces, now that he has proposed making changes on the whole sales tax issue with one province?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): It is very simple, Mr. Speaker. I discussed it with all finance ministers prior to the budget. I asked Alberta: Can I help you reduce your sales tax? The minister said: I do not have any. So that settled the matter. I told him: There will be other measures in the budget to help the economy of Alberta. That was settled. In Ontario, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and in all provinces, what I did was reduce the income tax on budget night so that they could increase theirs. What I propose today for Quebec is to reduce the income tax for Quebec residents. The Quebec minister of finance can do what he wants in his jurisdiction. He can cut the taxes he wants, that is his business. As for me, I am cutting the income tax of Quebec taxpayers.

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Given the fact that the Minister of Finance went into such detail this morning to explain that he had made different arrangements, or had proposed different arrangements, I would have thought he would have considered it courteous, at least, to have conveyed that information to his counterparts in the other provinces.

I should like to ask a supplementary question. Because of the uncertainty and confusion which now surrounds this entire sales tax issue, because of the fact that there would be real interest in the other provinces if any changes were contemplated to be put into effect, and because by its actions of yesterday the Government of Canada has indicated that it really has no clear idea as to where this issue will eventually take us, will the minister, in the interests of common sense and, more important, in the interests of national unity, agree to withdraw the bill from debate in the House at the present time until negotiations with the province of Quebec and, indeed, with the other provinces have been completed?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we are reducing the federal income tax for the federal taxpayers in Quebec. I am acting within my jurisdiction, and Mr. Parizeau can do whatever he wants in his own jurisdiction. But I want to tell the hon. member something, that it will not be the separatist government of Quebec which will run the economic affairs of this nation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBAN INVOLVEMENT IN AFRICAN HOSTILITIES—CESSATION OF AID TO CUBA

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday the minister denied that anyone had claimed that Cubans were involved in the Zaire situation. Today, the Carter administration, which is providing evidence that Cuban soldiers in Angola played a role in the Katangan invasion of Shaba province in Zaire, is preparing special broadcasts to tell the Cuban people how Cuban troops are being used as a surrogate force to advance Soviet strategic aims in Africa, and is further backing up its claim by considering the cancellation of U.S. charter flights to Cuba and the cancellation of athletic exchange programs.

Since there is a split between the American and Canadian view of Cuban involvement in Zaire, will the Canadian government now revise its view and take similar steps to those taken by the Carter administration to pressure Cuba to get out of Africa.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I have not seen the report to which the hon. member refers; however, I am sure it is an accurate assessment. I do not think it reflects any split. I said yesterday that there was no hard evidence; certainly, the impression I wanted to convey was that there was no hard evidence—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: I cannot answer and listen at the same time. Maybe the hon. member would give me the opportunity to answer him; then I will be glad to deal with a supplementary question.

I do not think there is any question that there are Cubans in Angola. Therefore, it is a reasonable assumption that there is some relationship between that and the activities in Zaire. I was simply stating the fact that it was not a proven situation and that a number of countries—among them, Great Britain, The Netherlands, Denmark and Belgium, to name just a few—at least five or six, made the point that it had not been specifically proven in the case of Zaire. That is not to say—I repeat—that anyone is condoning Cuban, Soviet or other interventions in Africa.

In terms of what the United States is now doing, I have had consultations with Secretary of State Vance. I repeat to the House what I said yesterday, that if there is any way, either through the Security Council or through other initiatives taken by the United States or other allies, whether they be in NATO or elsewhere, to end foreign interventions in Africa, we will be fully supportive of them and we will use whatever techniques appear to be most appropriate in our circumstances to reinforce that view.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, on the first point, Zbigniew Brzezinski, special adviser to the president, said:

Any sensible person who sees what is going on in Angola will reach a very obvious conclusion.

This relates to the Cuban involvement in Zaire. I want to ask the minister a supplementary question. Since Canada has provided $13.3 million in aid to Cuba in the last three years, will the minister now formally terminate that aid, as distinct from just letting it run down, to enable Canada to go before the UN Security Council with some credibility in urging that body to give immediate study to the grave implications of Cuba having a total of 43,000 troops in 14 African nations?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, in the first instance, the hon. member uses a highly selective technique. He quotes Mr. Brzezinski without acknowledging that, of course, there is quite a substantial difference of opinion even within the U.S. administration. There have been a number of spokesmen, including the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, who have expressed a quite different view. However, that is beside the point in this regard.

In so far as speeding-up or terminating what is happening with relation to CIDA in Cuba is concerned, I will be glad to take a look at that. I am told that the amounts now are absolutely minimal and that, in fact, there would be grave difficulties and problems in so far as Canadians are concerned if we were to terminate abruptly. But I will take a look at it. Frankly, I do not think it is all that substantive in terms of the much more important declaration that I have made and the Prime Minister has made that we are not contemplating, now, giving any additional assistance of this kind to Cuba.

Mr. Paproski: We want our DC-8s back.

SALARIED POSITION FOR CHAIRMAN OF SALTFISH CORPORATION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the report tabled in the House, in response to question No. 135, which stated that an assistant deputy minister of fisheries, now retired on full pension and appointed as chairman of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation, has been given $62,750 worth of consulting contracts by the government within the past two years as a means of providing some money to him, I ask the minister whether he would seriously consider designating the chairmanship of the corporation as a salaried position so that the fishermen can see directly whether they are getting value for their money.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): The fishermen might be happy to know that the salary paid to the chairman of the corporation is out of general funds, not out of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation's money which belongs to fishermen.

I recognize the difficulty of the position being unsalaried. Mr. Bradbury, having long-standing expertise in the area of saltfish, agreed to stay on as chairman at my request. He also undertook to work in the area of marketing, also at my request. In the future, I hope that if chairmen of corporations of this type are going to spend a great deal of time in that position, and not only preside at meetings, we might find a way to pay them out of the normal system.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, did Mr. Bradbury's predecessor also receive an indirect salary in this manner and, if not, why is Mr. Bradbury, his wife, his two sons and his daughter, who are all officers of W. & R. Bradbury Holdings Incorporated, considered a special case?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member would not want the implications of his question to be interpreted as he hints. The payments are made to the company of which Mr. Bradbury is, I believe, chairman or one of the senior partners. He functions as chairman and as an adviser to me in the area of saltfish marketing. I do not know what the other members of his family have to do with the hon. member's question.

FINANCE

QUEBEC SALES TAX—REQUEST GOVERNMENT FIND ACCOMMODATION WITHOUT REJECTING SELECTIVE REDUCTION PRINCIPLE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

I think there is a dilemma in addition to the question of the sales tax. I believe the minister knows that the National Assembly fought for a principle, that of selective sales tax cuts. So, can the minister say clearly that he is willing to come to an arrangement with the province of Quebec with regard to the reimbursement of funds, without rejecting the principle of selective sales tax cuts so that Quebec can use those funds according to the formula agreed upon by the minister and the Quebec government, without rejecting the principle of the selective cuts?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. I should like to repeat once again that the Quebec government can do what they want in their field of jurisdiction. They can cut the sales tax for 12 months; if they want to cut it for 20 months or three years, that is their business. As it is impossible to reach an agreement with them that can fit in with the national plan, I have decided, in order not to penalize Quebeckers, to reduce the income tax of Quebec citizens. If Mr. Parizeau needs more money from his taxpayers because he has spent too much by cancelling the sales tax, then he can increase his income tax. I cannot prevent him from doing so. But I do not see why I should collect the taxes Mr. Parizeau needs.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance understands my question quite well and his stubbornness concerns me. Can he say yes or no whether the Quebec government can rely on the federal generosity to meet its needs and cope with the Quebec facts? I would ask the minister not to beat around the bush. Is he willing to let Quebec use its millions without any cost to the federal treasury for the purposes already suggested and unanimously agreed to by the National Assembly?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, if the National Assembly think that the proposed selective tax cut—

Mr. La Salle: Yes or no, period!

Mr. Chrétien: —is good for Quebec all they need do is vote for it. I am doing for Quebec what I have been doing for Ontario and New Brunswick. I am reducing the income tax for the Quebec taxpayers, the federal tax. If Mr. Parizeau needs funds, he should levy his own taxes. I am not standing in his way. It is his jurisdiction. The money allotted to Quebec will be reimbursed to Quebeckers as soon as the opposition will vote with us on the bill now under consideration.

EMPLOYMENT

TRAINING OF YOUNG CANADIANS FOR SKILLED JOBS

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As reported recently by Mr. J. T. Kennedy, the incoming president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, Canada is faced with a serious shortage of skilled labour, especially in the metalworking trades, whereas fewer European tradesmen are coming to Canada.

Is the minister working with the provinces to provide more opportunities and incentives for young Canadians to train and apprentice as skilled craftsmen and provide more employment in a strong, growing manufacturing sector?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, given the fact that the field of education is within provincial jurisdiction, we work in very close co-operation with all of them under the Adult Occupational Training Act and our apprenticeship programs, with our emphasis being on the job-creation aspect. I am happy to say that the provinces are co-operating, particularly under the Adult Occupational Training Act.

We are entering into a new series of three-year agreements with the provinces. We are shifting our emphasis from simply the training aspect, where training seems to be needed, to training individuals for jobs which in fact will be available. The result of a recent study conducted in southern Ontario indicates that 75 per cent of the highly skilled jobs in the manufacturing industry were filled as a result of immigration rather than training of Canadians. I think that is an emphasis we have to change.

Oral Questions

HOUSING

NON-PROFIT, CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING PROGRAM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Co-operative housing organizations have made representations to him indicating their belief that his propoals regarding non-profit and co-operative housing for the next year are unworkable. The existing program will come to an end by July 1. They propose continuation of the present programs while discussions are continued.

Has the minister considered these representations by co-operative housing organizations? If so, what was his response? Will he arrange to meet with these organizations and discuss these questions, as they have requested?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have been in contact with these organizations. Officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation are to meet with these people. They have done so already, and will do so next week. The assumption is wrong. Basically, the aims of the program are to make the non-profit program even more attractive to users, to penetrate more deeply down the income range and to provide for an income mix in projects. I believe the assumptions of these people are wrong. We will attempt to study with them some adjustment to meet some of their concerns. By and large, the aims of the program should meet their objectives.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not indicate whether he would be prepared to meet with these organizations. The minister said in his earlier statements, and again today, that he would like to get away from the past system of large-scale public housing projects and integrate low income families into other developments such as co-operative and non-profit housing. Can the minister explain how he expects the non-profit sector to accommodate low income families when he proposes to take away rent supplement payments which have made this kind of mixing possible in the past?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, it is quite to the contrary. We do not want to do away with rent supplements; indeed, we want to expand them. One of the proposals made to the provinces was to expand this section of the program. I do not know where they got this impression from, but it is a wrong reading of the tentative program. In fact, we do not want to do away with rent supplements; we want to increase them.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

REINSTATEMENT OF DEATH PENALTY FOR TERRORISTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Recently, in Toronto, the Minister of National Defence stated that the death penalty should be restored for terrorists. He also cited the assassination of former Italian premier Aldo Moro as a classic example of why terrorists should be executed. Of course, we have seen terrorists in action in Zaire, France, Turkey, etc.

Is the government planning to restore the death penalty for terrorists, as a warning to terrorists not to start in Canada and also as a warning to keep them away from Canada?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Minister of National Defence is quoted correctly in the question.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): He is.

Mr. Basford: In the last round of Criminal Code amendments, and in the current ones, there are a number of measures designed to deal with terrorist threats. Fortunately, in this country we have not had instances of that occurring to any large degree.

Mr. Gillies: Oh, come on. Have you never heard of the FLQ?

Mr. Basford: Certainly, we have not had the experience of other countries. It is not the intention to amend the law in the manner indicated by the question.

CABINET DISCUSSION ON REINSTATEMENT OF DEATH PENALTY FOR TERRORISTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. He said that he had not discussed this with his cabinet colleagues. I ask him, has he discussed it in cabinet? Does he intend to pursue this matter in cabinet and call for the restoration of capital punishment for terrorists?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker. I think the report indicated that I was making this recommendation, if that is the way the question was put. It was not a recommendation; it was speculating on the things one could do to reduce terrorism.

● (1152)

When one looks at the situation in recent months, where most terrorist activities have been directed to the release of terrorists who are incarcerated, one must consider the alternatives to reduce terrorism which is aimed at the structures of our society and our democratic way of life.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LOCATION OF INTERCEPTOR SQUADRON IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. The Chief of the Defence Staff indicated during the estimates of the department that there could be a change in location because of the operating capability of the new fighter interceptors under consideration for purchase, the range being shorter than the present interceptor, the Voodoo.

Is it the government's intention, in order to maximize the operating capacity of these aircraft, to locate one squadron in the province of Newfoundland where there are at least three sites readily available which have been developed by the Americans for fighter interceptor squadrons?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Chief of Staff said, "all options are open".

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the minister that the province of Newfoundland does not have a major defence establishment within it, notwithstanding the undertaking by Canada in terms of union. I ask him this question: In view of the importance of surveillance because of the 200-mile economic zone and the limited capacity of our aircraft operating out of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, is it the intention of the government to locate at least one squadron of surveillance aircraft in eastern Newfoundland in order to increase their range and operating capability?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, that is not the intention. The long-range patrol aircraft which are used primarily for that purpose at Summerside and Greenwood at the present time will be moved totally to Greenwood, although other units will be moved into Summerside to compensate. Other units have been moved into Gander, which is becoming a very important base for us.

I understand the concern in Newfoundland and I have a deep concern that we have a presence in Newfoundland. My staff and I are looking at this seriously because of the great contribution Newfoundland has made not only to confederation but to the armed forces of Canada, which is very considerable indeed.

Mr. McGrath: You have left me speechless.

Mr. Danson: Then it is a rare occasion.

FISHERIES

CANADA-U.S. NEGOTIATIONS ON FISHING BOUNDARIES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. Will he confirm the recent report to the effect that the agreement between Canada and the United States has been suspended and Canadian fishermen will no longer be able to fish in American waters, nor will American fishermen be able to fish in our waters?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I indicated earlier this week that we would have some information one way or the other by the end of this week, and this will certainly happen. The hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs will be making a statement in a few moments.

Mr. Speaker: Now that the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs will be making a statement, presumably questions will follow that statement.

THE MINISTRY

ALLEGED DEARTH OF TORONTO AREA MINISTERS WITH INFLUENTIAL PORTFOLIOS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. On the weekend, while the Prime Minister was out of the country, his cabinet colleague, the Minister of State (Small Business) gave a televised interview on CTV in which he made the following statement:

> I think that there is a certain number of people who feel that the jobs of consequence and heft are not, in the economic area particularly, in the hands of any of the Toronto ministers—

I would ask the Prime Minister whether the Minister of State (Small Business) has communicated to him this feeling that the portfolios held by him and his Toronto area colleagues are not, in the minister's words, "of consequence and heft", and what does the Prime Minister intend to do to rectify the situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that this question was asked in the House in my absence, perhaps in the absence of the hon. member as well, and it was answered satisfactorily by the Deputy Prime Minister, to my knowledge.

Mr. Clark: That was not the question, nor the answer.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister about another statement made in the same interview by the Minister of State (Small Business) wherein he said that there is a natural disposition to identify the government with its leader. He also said that he is not unprepared to believe that there may be dissatisfaction with the English-speaking ministers from Toronto. I ask the Prime Minister whether, when the minister made that statement, he was expressing the feelings of the government; or was he speaking strictly for himself?

Mr. Abbott: For myself.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, obviously he was speaking as an individual.

HEALTH

PRESENCE OF DES CHEMICAL IN BEEF LIVER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, because of the absence of the Minister of Agriculture. In 1974, the Canadian government banned DES—the short form for diethylstilbestrol—which is a growth stimulant put into cattle feed.

I have been informed that CBC Toronto took ten samples of beef liver, reportedly from stores, five Canadian and five American, and found evidence of DES in nine of the ten samples. Would the minister inquire how DES got into this meat, since the government has abolished the use of DES in Canadian cattle feed?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for advance notice of his question. I have been assured that our officials will look into this serious matter immediately.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, apparently the lab which tested the samples found the level of DES in some samples as high as 3,720 parts per billion, and laboratory tests on animals show that levels as low as two parts per billion are toxic.

In view of these startling revelations, and the fact the DES is banned in Canada, would the minister make representations to the appropriate officials to ensure that our meat inspection system is investigated and updated so that it will protect the Canadian consumer against this type of possible health hazard?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members agree that we should not create false anxiety in the public mind, but we will have a complete investigation since, as the hon. member said—and rightly so—DES is banned in Canada and has been since 1974.

PIPELINES

GUIDELINES AND REGULATIONS FOR ALASKA HIGHWAY PIPELINE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Privy Council. It is in connection with the role and jurisdiction he has assumed with respect to the northern pipeline.

In light of the tabling of documents which refer to regulations which the pipeline companies will have to follow, is it the minister's intention, in view of the fact that there are so many inconsistencies, omissions and even contradictions in those initial documents, to reactivate the pipeline committee?

Secondly, is it the intention of the minister to make a statement in the House about the negotiations he and his officials are carrying on with the province of British Columbia, since the omissions I have mentioned refer to the fact that there is not yet any kind of socioeconomic impact or environmental impact study under way in that province, where most or a great part of the pipeline will be located?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention at the moment to reactivate the committee on the northern pipeline. The guidelines to which the hon. member has referred have been circulated in a preliminary way and there are bound to be suggestions from many sources, with resultant changes to the guidelines. That is the whole purpose of putting them into the public domain. As I recollect, there will be an opportunity for hearings and evidence to be heard in northern British Columbia with respect to the impact of the pipeline. It would be premature to reactivate the committee at this stage.

On the second question, with respect to negotiations with British Columbia, these are continuing. I believe there was a meeting this week in Ottawa among officials of the government of British Columbia and officials of the Government of Canada. At least, that was the intention earlier in the week. I have not yet had a report on the results of that meeting.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister whether he would reconsider reactivating the committee on the pipeline before the final decision as to the regulations and criteria are laid out. In other words, is there going to be parliamentary scrutiny in respect to the firming-up of these guidelines and regulations and parliamentary input into the final document?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the order which provided for the committee on the northern pipeline and its terms of reference was the result of inter-party consultation. All the views received from the hon. member for Yukon, who was acting as lead-man for the official opposition on the committee, had been cleared, so that I believe the terms of reference were broad enough to cover the items in the bill that were of interest to members of parliament.

I will look at the terms of reference and see at what stage, if at all, these types of guidelines might come before the committee. If that is part of the terms of reference to which we all agreed, then of course I would have absolutely no objection to having that kind of scrutiny take place.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FISHERIES—STATUS OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FISHERIES RELATIONS

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in the past few weeks the government has encountered several difficulties with respect to the implementation of the 1978 Canada-U.S.A. interim fisheries agreement on both the Pacific and Atlantic coasts.

On the Pacific coast the problem relates to the terms under which Canadian fishermen would be allowed access to waters in Washington state to troll for salmon.

On the Atlantic coast the problem relates to unrestricted U.S. scallop and pollock fisheries in the Gulf of Maine-Georges Bank area, and what we view as excessive allowable U.S. catch levels for cod and haddock.

These difficulties were discussed at a meeting between Canada and U.S. officials in Washington on April 28, and at meetings between the Canadian and U.S.A. special negotiators for maritime boundaries in Ottawa on May 11 and 12, and again in Washington on May 26. At the May 26 meeting and during subsequent conversations, it has become clear that these problems cannot be resolved in a way that would protect Canadian interests.

My colleagues and I have come to the reluctant conclusion that the 1978 interim reciprocal fishery agreement cannot be implemented by the U.S. in a manner compatible with preserving and protecting our fisheries interests. Accordingly, I wish to announce that the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs has called in the United States ambassador and given him a diplomatic note stating that the Government of Canada is not prepared at this time to continue provisional implementation of the agreement. The note states that, consequently, U.S. fishing vessels will not be permitted to continue fishing operations in Canadian fisheries waters after 12 noon June 4. This means, of course, that the U.S. will take corresponding action against Canadian fishing vessels in U.S. waters.

The government has taken this action with great reluctance, but under the circumstances we believe it is the most appropriate means of maintaining a balance between the fishing interests of the two countries. I am confident that we can work out, on a co-operative basis, enforcement arrangements in the boundary regions that will avoid confrontation.

The problems we have experienced with the interim agreement demonstrate clearly the need for an early settlement of maritime boundaries and for a long term agreement on reciprocal fishing. My colleagues and I continue to believe that a comprehensive maritime boundaries-resources agreement, arrived at by negotiations, is the preferred means of providing for the effective and mutually beneficial management of maritime resources in Canada-U.S.A. boundary areas.

The government recognized that, in negotiating an over-all agreement of this kind, difficult problems remain for both sides in reconciling the various regional and industry interests. At the same time, it has become clear that a balanced and equitable agreement cannot be constructed on the basis of continued insistence by all concerned on their maximum demands. The difficulties which have led to the government's present decision are the best evidence of the need to replace a generalized interim agreement without institutional arrangements by a permanent, comprehensive agreement that places all the issues in an interrelated framework and includes effective mechanisms for interpreting the agreement and for the settlement of differences.

Ambassador Cadieux has been instructed to resume his negotiations and has been in touch with the U.S. negotiator, Ambassador Cutler, and they both agree that the suspension of the interim agreement need not and should not impede their negotiations which, as you know from the joint reports issued in October and March, have laid the basis for progress toward a comprehensive agreement. Thus, in an exchange of letters which is being released, the two negotiators have agreed to resume their negotiations on the long-term agreement. They have scheduled for June 19 and 20 the first of a series of meetings that are intended to lead to early recommendations on a comprehensive agreement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the statement by the Secretary of State for Exernal Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) on the present status of the Canada-United States fisheries relations. While agreeing with the action that has been taken, it is a matter of some regret that it has become impossible to implement the 1978 Canada-U.S.A. interim fisheries agreement on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts.

It is my understanding that the 1978 interim agreement, intended to redress the 1977 situation on the west coast by providing for Canadian salmon fishing three to 12 miles, for an additional 54 miles along the United States coast. The United States wanted Canada to agree, categorically, not to fish salmon returning to U.S. waters, namely, Swiftsure Bank, as a conservation measure. We agree to this proposal as long as there was a conservation problem, and the area was closed for at least the last two or three years. But there is no conservation problem today in this area, so Canada did not agree to close down salmon fishing operations and the United States withdrew concessions for the additional 54 miles.

In the meantime, while agreement was provisionally applied, United States fishermen went to court under the acts in the United States to force enforcement. I believe this injunction will apply to Washington, Oregon, and California, but I do not believe it will apply to Alaska halibut—the minister can correct me if I am wrong—nor will it apply on the Atlantic coast. With this precedent on the west coast, however, the door to further difficulties is wide open. For example, on the Atlantic coast the 1978 interim fisheries agreement calls for the 1976 allocations as made by ICNAF for Georges Bank. The total allowable catch for 1976 amounted to 20,000 metric tons of cod and 6,000 metric tons of haddock, of which Canada received 15,600 tons of cod and 4,730 tons of haddock, with the balance allocated to the United States.

In 1977, however, the United States set domestic total allowable catches for cod and haddock at 20,000 metric tons for codfish and 6,000 metric tons for haddock, in other words, a 40 per cent increase in their fishing effort. That is an effort which took the whole total quota allocation as set by the scientists and by the officials of ICNAF for this area.

To add to the problem, in November the United States unilaterally further raised its allocations of cod and haddock to 21,600 metric tons of cod and 10,500 metric tons of haddock simply by changing what is called their "by-catch" regulations, thus contravening section 8 of the 1977 agreement.

We must ask why the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) was silent when he knew this was happening. Why was the Secretary of State for External Affairs silent? Why did this matter not come up for discussion with U.S. officials over a year ago?

In the same area, in 1977, there was no management plan established by the United States for pollock or scallops. The U.S. overfished its pollock allocation by something like 3,000 metric tons on Georges Bank alone, and its allocation at that time was something like 6,000 metric tons. Why did the minister not raise his voice when he became aware of these facts?

● (1212)

We imposed quotas and restrictions on our scallop fishermen, for example, Mr. Speaker. We dragged them from Nova Scotia to a meeting here in Ottawa, and then in turn we had to drag the minister to Halifax in order to get a dispute settled that simply asked for the right of Nova Scotian fishermen to catch 850,000 pounds of scallops when the inshore ground fishery declined. This right was denied them by the minister, and he argued and fought over the matter for a period of some two months. While we did this to our own fishermen, the United States increased its scallop effort by 120 per cent in one year, and they increased their catch in one year by 180 per cent. Did this government complain? Well, if they did, where are the complaints on the record?

Overfishing of pollock and of scallops cannot help but result in lower total allowable catches for both species in future years. The United States will now most likely argue for a greater share in the future of all species based on their recent high percentages.

The situation to date in 1978 is obviously the same, with no plans, as far as I know, for total allowable catches of pollock or scallops by the United States, and with the United States claiming the "total" allocated for this area.

The 1977 fishing facts were known a long time ago. Steps should then have been taken to consult with the United States so that no further action would be taken without consultation. Unfortunately, public action has already prejudiced the situation. For example, how can the government expect Canadian fishermen to remain within their pollock quotas, in a fishery which comes under joint management between Canada and the United States, in the face of open quotas and in the face of open fishing effort by the United States fleet?

The action taken by the United States in ignoring the International Commission for North Atlantic Fisheries quotas is highly irrational in the face of joint scientific recommendations for this area. We obviously need a joint fisheries management plan for scallops. Canadian fishermen are now paying a very heavy price for the procrastinating policies of this government. Only yesterday, when asked whether this matter was discussed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he was in the United States, his response was—and I am paraphrasing—that there were too many other important things. There was no time for this fisheries problem. It seems there is only time for fisheries problems of this nature when there is an election on the agenda. But, in between, Mr. Speaker, there is no time for the fishermen and their problems.

In conclusion, I say to you that it is not helpful when the headlines scream "Canada Declares 'War' on U.S. fishermen". It is not helpful in any way whatsoever, because the U.S. buys some 70 per cent of our catch and is our most important customer. I hope that the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have learned a lesson from what has happened and that they will be more diligent in their activities in trying to secure a resolution to what could be a very serious economic problem, not only in Nova Scotia but throughout the entire length and breadth of Atlantic Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, the regrettable news that we have today, and I will elaborate on it in a moment, could not be a better symbol of the way in which the Government of Canada deals on the one hand with Canadian economic or job interest and, on the other hand, deals internally with our provincial governments.

Earlier today we saw the tough talking federal government in its response to a federal-provincial relationship issue. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is always ready to sort of loosen his tie, take off his jacket, and talk tough when it comes to dealing with other provinces in Canada, a sublimely inappropriate attitude in terms of federal-provincial relationships. But when it comes to dealing with economic interests of Canadians abroad, we get an entirely different attitude and response from the Prime Minister. It is a sort of quiet diplomacy that sees Canadian jobs and Canadian interests going down the drain. The problem in our fisheries is a perfect example. We have similar problems in the auto industry, with a loss of jobs, and similar problems in the electronics industry with the export of jobs to the United States. There is nothing done until a crisis is reached.

We have an announcement that there is a kind of war that will exist, or a no-man's land area, in the fisheries on both our coasts. A good part of the responsibility has to be directly attributed to the federal government's negotiating approach.

For over a year now there have been violations of the agreement on both coasts, and we have seen no public response coming from the federal government to redress the grievances of Canadian fishermen. The Minister of Fisheries and the Environment and, no doubt, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) will say, "Well, Canada lived up to its side of an interim agreement." The problem is that interim agreements with the United States, another federal system which operates somewhat differently from ours, in which the executive branch of the government is not able to enforce automatically an agreement in a way that can be done on this side of the border, are precisely the kind of agreements into which the Government of Canada should not enter.

We should not enter into an interim agreement if that means we enforce our side of it in advance of the United States side, in a way which is detrimental to the interests of Canadian workers, whether they are fishermen or any other group of Canadian workers. Surely that is what we have here. I hope that this is a warning to the government for future courses of action, that any agreement entered into between Canada and the United States in the fisheries should not be enforced one day earlier on the Canadian side of the border than it is enforced on the American side of the border.

The second point I would make concerns the negotiating position of the Canadian government on this matter. For the last few months it has not been something of which Canadians should be totally proud. They have taken one position in substance on the east coast, and they have taken another position on logic on the west coast, and a third, as I understand it, in terms of the Alaska region. We cannot have a whole series of conflicting arguments and get anywhere in serious bargaining with another nation.

In conclusion, I want to say that I hope that the government, with the United States, can reach an early agreement in this area and that the agreement will be one which will be enforceable simultaneously on the part of both countries which will then simultaneously bring benefits to those employed in the fisheries on both sides of the border.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, naturally a statement of this importance, which unfortunately did not reach me until just as the bells were ringing, requires a good number of questions. I have three or four here which I would like to put and which cover a variety of areas.

Is the minister prepared now to concede that this party has been right for a long time, that they ought to have more fisheries enforcement machinery in place in order to deal with the situation?

Because it seems to me we will now be faced with a matter of popgun diplomacy. Can the minister explain how he will enforce respect for Canadian waters, especially in the light of the flag-state enforcement principle which has been in existence, or whether he proposes to revert to the coastal state enforcement procedures? If so, how will he enforce this agreement and keep United States fishermen and other fishermen out of our waters?

● (1222)

Mr. Jamieson: On the specifics, regrettably under this system it is not possible to hand questions of this nature to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) who would know the size of the fleet and the specific intentions with regard to enforcement, but I think a statement will be made on that. May I just parenthetically tell the House I will be glad to table the document relating to this, if there is agreement for me to do so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there consent to allow the minister to table the document mentioned?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jamieson: On the substance of the hon. member's question, first I would hope that despite what the newspapers have said this morning, and I regret as much as the hon. member that these kinds of information leaks occur, we would not either employ the word "codwar" or "fishwar" or build this up as being a confrontation. I can assure the hon. member and the House that I had considerable discussions with the secretary of state in Washington on this matter. Both sides are most anxious. Having recognized there is genuine difficulty to avoid this type of thing, we will use common sense with regard to enforcement.

I am quite satisfied that in the case of the United States there will not be any escalation of the effort. We are beginning with a presumption which I think is reasonable, given two friendly countries, that there will not be a wide range of incidents requiring, I believe the hon. member said, gunboat diplomacy.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Popgun diplomacy.

Mr. Jamieson: Popgun diplomacy, or anything of that nature.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): On page three of that statement, the minister has suggested what he has in mind is a comprehensive agreement covering all unresolved maritime issues under the general heading of fisheries and boundaries. On page two he talks about the need for the early settlement of maritime boundaries on the one hand and, on the other, an agreement on fisheries rights, presumably in terms of maritime zones, and possibly a third on maximum catch levels. I wonder if the minister can dispel the confusion that naturally arises out of this apparent contradiction. Does he favour a single agreement covering all matters, or will it be a series of agreements covering the individual matters that are at issue?

Mr. Jamieson: Ideally, a comprehensive agreement, which would at one and the same time resolve all of the myriad issues that this new development has raised. That would be perfect, if it could be done. Certainly there is agreement not only between governments, but by fishermen and other interested parties, that the boundary question will be easier to resolve if there is clear evidence that satisfactory arrangements with regard to fishery sharing are also in prospect. I do not see that it is going to be possible to divorce these entirely.

Having said that, it is conceivable, of course, that in the round of negotiations that is to resume in the next few days many of the elements will be able to be brought together. However, there may be a few having to do with certain boundaries that are already, as hon. members know, of long standing in the nature of dispute, where it may be possible to put those to one side, or refer them in some other way for settlement, and not impede the fundamental problem which is to get a satisfactory agreement, particularly with regard to fisheries.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Will the minister agree that an early meeting of the Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group might be of assistance in this matter? In replying to a question I put yesterday, it was apparent that while there was a conference during this present week in Washington at the executive level between cabinet ministers, there is still a need, because of the congressional process in the United States, for contact between parliamentarians in order to impress upon our U.S. colleagues, particularly in the Senate, the particular point of view and the need for understanding of Canada's problems and ratification of the agreement when it is concluded.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I have no problem with this principle at all. I should explain to the hon. member, lest he fear that I was being negative today, that I was not opposed to his motion under Standing Order 43 when it was moved today. I merely wanted to point out to him, and it is relative to his question now, that my recollection is that the Canada-U.S. parliamentary committee operates outside the formal framework of the parliamentary process here. Therefore I am not sure that anything is necessary other than for the secretariat to move toward convening such a meeting.

However, if there is some step that needs to be taken here, I will be supportive of it. Obviously the only question is that we want to ensure that it was not a surrogate kind of negotiating session but for informational purposes and the like. In that context, it is immensely helpful. I hope the hon. member will note my comment with regard to the necessity for regional interests and the like to be seized of the magnitude of this problem and not in all cases to be asserting maximum claims which clearly do not provide any basis for maximum negotiation.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): My last question is to ask the minister whether on the basis of the information available to him he has any reason to believe that the failure of the United States Senate to ratify the interim agreement is related to the pipeline arrangements, the uncertainty that the United States has about an early beginning on the Canada-U.S. pipeline deal?

Mr. Jamieson: No, Mr. Speaker. In this connection it is appropriate, in light of the comments by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), to indicate that there were very comprehensive discussions in Washington. It was a slough-off. The leaders of government were obviously there to talk about NATO and did not have a great deal of time, for perfectly obvious reasons. Mr. Vance and I spent a great deal of time on this matter, as did myself and a number of officials. It is clear there is no relationship between this and any other difficulties or matters in relation to Canada-U.S. relations.

If I had to sum it up in a single sentence, the problem is essentially one that the hon. member has identified, that is, the regional interests in the United States and the structure they have which makes it all the more important that members be seized of and aware of Canada's interests. By the way, also in answer, I think it is not at all certain that the Senate have approved the treaty. It had gone through the House. It is not inconceivable that they may still do it.

The problem here, which the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) did not seem to understand, is that this is not a problem that has arisen because the agreement was what it is. The problem essentially this year, as I think the hon. member for South Shore has identified, is one of interpretation. Therefore, even if it had been ratified, it would not have resolved this particular problem in its entirety.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister will go down in history as the "codfather".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Friesen: I want to point out at the outset that when I raised the question during question period, I was not aware that the minister had sent a copy of his statement. As my colleague from South Shore indicated, he just received that statement as the bells were ringing. There was no time for him to circulate it. I did not try to pre-empt the minister's statement.

I have some questions that are of some import to the people of British Columbia. I notice that the statement makes no reference at all to the government of British Columbia which has taken a very active interest in the dilemma that the fishermen face. I recognize that the minister does not have responsibility for fisheries, but I would point out that the premier of British Columbia and his colleagues have taken an active interest in the problems that the fishermen are facing at this time. Has the minister even informed British Columbia of the action which has been taken?

Mr. Jamieson: The statement is obviously designed to refer to Canada-U.S. relations and is drafted with that in mind, but the hon. member need have no concern about the extent of the involvement of the interested provinces, not only British Columbia but the east coast provinces. My colleague, the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc), had a full meeting of his advisory council earlier this week, at which British Columbia and other provinces were represented. While I do not wish to put words into the mouth of the advisers—they are perfectly free to speak for themselves—I have every confidence that the action which has been taken projects their views. In that sense the provinces have been consulted, and as the negotiations continue they will continue to be consulted—the representatives of the fishing industry as well.

Mr. Friesen: I just wanted assurance that this action which had been taken reflects their views and is on all fours with what they consider should have been done. I want to build on the question raised by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro)—whether this agreement has been sacrificed on the altar of other agreements to make sure that other agreements will stay intact. The Minister of Fisheries may smile, but we in British Columbia are accustomed to negotiations of that kind. We recall the decision of the anti-dumping tribunal as a result of which the industry in British Columbia was sacrificed for the sake of the industry in Ontario. We recall the Skagit Valley agreement which has never been signed and under which there is no security at all—it seems no final decision can be reached with regard to it. There is a good deal of justification for our feelings on this matter; I could produce a fairly long list of examples such as I have mentioned. What happens in the Dixon Strait area? Our fishermen are already out there on the halibut grounds. Will they be obliged to leave on Sunday afternoon?

Mr. Jamieson: Obviously, a specific question of that kind can only be answered in a general way, because what I say will be interpreted properly and I want it to be done in accordance with whatever regulations are to be published. Perhaps the answer to the question about Dixon Strait and related matters can be found in my statement in the sense that, effective on June 4, no longer will there be American fishing in Canadian waters, and it is a natural assumption that there will no longer be Canadian fishing in American waters, except for the reference that was made by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) to halibut fishing. From our point of view the halibut fishery is governed by a long standing arrangement or treaty, and for our part we are prepared to treat it separately. As to the question the hon. member raises about the possible sacrificing of provincial interests in this case, I would suggest, with all due respect, that it was the opposite which was being argued, namely, that the agreement itself and the interpretation of it were sacrificing those interests. In this case, therefore, I repeat my view that British Columbia will be entirely in agreement with the suspension we have announced today.

Mr. Friesen: The statement refers to proposed meetings at the end of June—June 19 and 20. By that time the salmon will be running and the fishermen will be out. This affects fishermen in the Gulf of Georgia as the salmon enter the Fraser River run. Every year there is concern on the part of fishermen there that they are not getting their fair quota. As the Minister of Fisheries knows, there is disagreement each year regarding the count the Americans get vis-à-vis Canadian fishermen. How will today's decision affect the count under the agreement? Do we intend to do as the former minister of fisheries, Mr. Sinclair, did, and simply put our fishermen out at the entrance to the Strait of Juan de Fuca and allow them to catch all the fish they can? That would preclude any further arguments. My second question is this: if we can get no resolution of this agreement later on, it means dislocation of the activities of our fishermen. Maybe this will be temporary in nature, maybe it will be long term. Are there any plans in place to assist fishermen whose livelihood has been cut off because they cannot go into American waters?

Mr. Jamieson: There are a number of elements to that question, Mr. Speaker. I might say the hon. member has asked a number of questions. I will try to deal with them. As to provisions for taking care of dislocations, it would be necessary, first of all, to ascertain the extent and nature of a dislocation. This cannot be done in advance of the implementation of the new policy. My colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, has made it clear to the advisory committees and others that we are prepared to discuss with all concerned what steps may be necessary to ensure that hardship is not imposed on Canadian fishermen as a result of this decision.

I must add—I think we were all aware of this in advance—that one cannot move in this direction and seek a permanent solution without there being some disruption along the way. It is implicit in the arrangement. We shall therefore have to look at these difficulties on a pragmatic basis as they occur.

The question of salmon interception is one of long standing and is not directly related to this issue. There is, perhaps, only one direct application. It is that under the policy announced today the Swiftsure Bank will now be open and we will revert the situation which existed before the action taken some weeks ago.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask about three questions on the statement the minister gave. As the minister well knows, it is of pretty fundamental importance to those of us on both coasts. The first question may be just a little general but I would like the minister to amplify the subject if he can. Will he tell us how close he thinks we are to concluding a comprehensive maritime boundaries resources agreement? My next question is, really, supplementary to that. Are the differences between the Atlantic coast and/or the Pacific coast part of that, or the difference perhaps with that, and also between the fish stocks and the resources that may be on the coast? If he could answer that first, I would be obliged.

Mr. Jamieson: The hon. member, with his usual incisiveness, has gone directly to the heart of the matter.

I am sure the Minister of Fisheries would be glad to deal with all those matters at some appropriate time, perhaps in the fisheries committee.

There is no one particular issue that I could describe as being the most difficult. I answered the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, I think it was, by saying there was a clear linkage between the boundary definition and the management of the fish stock question. On the boundary question there are differences, obviously, between the east coast situation and that on the west coast. I hate to say this in his absence, but the Leader of the New Democratic Party displayed an appalling ignorance when he talked about the inconsistency of our position on the two coasts. That, in fact, is the very key to our whole attitude. We are taking up a consistent position in the sense of trying to get everything neat and tidy. We are seeking to get the best arrangement for ourselves that we can. For the hon. gentleman to take the approach he did at the present time is not very helpful to our negotiating posture.

We would like to get a permanent agreement in place very quickly and I have asked our ambassador, Mr. Cadieux, and I have asked Mr. Vance to instruct his ambassador, to find out in a definitive way within the next two or three months what areas of agreement there are and what issues may be in dispute. Some of these issues are of long standing. In the case of British Columbia there is the AB line which comes to mind and, of course, there are others. We shall try to obtain as clear a picture as possible as to the maximum level of agreement, after which we can decide whether that is worth going for as a package and whether to continue to negotiate on the other issues.

I might say that at the moment there is no disposition on the part of the east coast fishermen to cut and run from our fishermen on the west coast. In the advisory committee of the Minister of Fisheries a consistent view has been put forward, one which has been enormously helpful, that we ought not to get into a "divide and conquer" situation, and I believe this will continue to be the attitude taken.

Mr. Nowlan: I thank the minister for that answer which does cover a couple of the questions I had in mind. That leads me to my last supplementary.

● (1242)

In view of the fact that there are disputed areas and boundaries on the east coast—certainly regarding Georges Bank—and that the minister mentioned that as of June 4 Americans will not be fishing in our waters—presumably they will not be too happy to see us in their waters, and that is a logical conclusion—what about the situation when there is a dispute over, for example, Georges Bank and when different fishing vessels fish in the disputed area? Have we given instructions or do we intend to give instructions not to escalate a sensitive situation which, hopefully, can be resolved by negotiation, but to patrol, provide protection, or record just what happens? Are we going to increase our surveillance on the east coast, and particularly on Georges Bank where both the Americans and we think we own some of the water?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, once again that is a very basic question, and I am pleased to be able to answer it. I hope hon. members will realize that I do not have a firm commitment on this from the United States in the formal sense of a document, becase we presented our note formally to the United States only this morning.

However, following my discussions in Washington I have every reason to believe, as I said in my statement, that there will be no desire on the part of the United States to escalate this, or to engage in any actions which would be designed to inflame the situation. What I have suggested is that we agree to a non-prejudice approach during the negotiating period, that is, that whatever actions are taken by both sides would be non-prejudicial to the final outcome or the final positions the governments might take in negotiations.

Second, in the disputed zones or areas where there is no clarity as to ownership, each country will act against its own vessels or, in terms of surveillance, its own vessels only so that therefore the other side would in a sense impose its regulations against its vessels. We would not then, I hope, have the problem of having—and this again comes back to an attempt to answer the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich—Canadians imposing regulations against American fishermen and vice versa in the disputed zone only. However, that will be clearer by Monday, I hope, when we have a response from the United States.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I hope the governments will not provoke situations. However, in view of the dispute, especially in these particular areas, the specific part of the question was: does the minister think this approach would be an act of provocation? I would be interested in his answer, and that might answer the supplementary part of my question. Are we going to give instructions—particularly because Greenwood came into this earlier today when we were talking about long-range patrol aircraft, and Greenwood happens to be in my riding—to patrol this disputed area as discussions continue? Will there be instructions to increase surveillance in these disputed areas?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question, I can only say to the hon. member that neither the Government of Canada nor the government of the United States—and perhaps in the context of the question the latter is the more important—is going to see this as an act of provocation. The administration of the government of the United States has had full discussions with us. It understands the situation. It is as unhappy as we are, but it recognizes that we cannot allow this situation to go on.

We cannot go on interpreting differently on each side of the border. In that sense there will be no deliberate actions by the United States administration to escalate this situation. However, undoubtedly there will be either regional decisions, or individual fishermen of both countries, which may perhaps involve themselves in some way in minor provocations, so I am advised by my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment, that there will be some increase in patrol and surveillance, but I emphasize once again that I am most anxious that it be kept to the point where there is as little difficulty as possible.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I have one brief question. I noticed in the response which was forwarded to the minister by Ambassador Thomas Enders of the United States that he confirms that the negotiations should be considered as not prejudicing the position of either country in the negotiation of a long-term agreement. I also noted on page two of the minister's statement that he indicated that efforts to avoid confrontation in the boundary regions will be taken by adopting enforcement procedures. I wonder if the minister could elaborate on what those procedures will be. For example, if there is confrontation in the waters in dispute, will it be resolved by our own government if our own people are involved, or will it be resolved by the United States government, and will there be a report as to just what is happening? I know the minister is well aware of the tempers which flare among fishermen in Atlantic Canada. Some of them will say, "By golly, we are going after scallops—" and I do not like to use these words in the House, but this is the way it will come out— "come hell or high water".

Mr. Nowlan: Come fog or high water.

Mr. Crouse: "Come fog or high water" is perhaps better. I am just wondering what the minister means when he says that enforcement procedures will be adopted. How will this be carried out?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I can answer in a general way, and I am sure we can get and will provide a more detailed answer to the mechanics and the specifics. As I understand it, in the disputed area alone—and we should emphasize that that is what we are speaking about, the place in Georges Bank between where our line as drawn by ourselves and theirs as drawn by the Americans overlap—Canadian surveillance and Canadian patrols will exercise jurisdiction in relation to Canadian vessels and in terms of Canadian law or regulations, as the case might be. Americans will do the same with regard to their vessels and in precisely the same way, but only in that particular zone. Therefore in that way we assume—and I am sure there is much good will—that there will not be any serious confrontation. Given our past experiences, incidentally, things tend to work themselves out because both sides are anxious to avoid difficulty.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BAKER (GRENVILLE-CARLETON)—HOUSE OF COMMONS—SALARY REVISIONS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I assume there are no motions. I waited to rise on this point of order because I did not want to interrupt the minister with respect to his statement and the questions. I know he is busy.

I would like to raise a point of order now with respect to the motion under Standing Order 43 which I moved today. The motion read this way:

That this House requests the tabling of all documents, papers and memoranda on which the House of Commons staff salary revisions, tabled in this House on May 31, were based, particularly those which compare House of Commons classifications with public service classifications and those which explain the differentials between positions within the House of Commons.

The question on that motion was put by Mr. Speaker, and, unfortunately, some Liberal members said no. They have the right to do that. I regret it, but they have that right. My point of order is not with respect to that as much as it is to a statement which was made by Mr. Speaker in the midst of verbalizing his thought processes with respect to whether the motion was in order. It was not a ruling, because Mr. Speaker in fact allowed the motion to be put.

However, in the course of his remarks Mr. Speaker did say that there was some question as to whether there was jurisdiction for a member of parliament to raise such a matter. There was a question as to whether the jurisdiction lay within parliament or whether it was a matter between the government and the opposition. There was some question about whether there is a limitation of the rights of hon. members under Standing Order 43.

Point of Order—Mr. W. Baker

In the course of the question period which followed I looked into the matter to find out how far one may go and what one may cover in a motion under Standing Order 43. The relevant Standing Order reads as follows:

● (1252)

A motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the House without notice having been given under Standing Order 42.

I think the words of that order are quite plain. There is no question of jurisdiction, no question as to whether it is a matter between the opposition and the government in that regard. The question, the condition of the motion, and the condition which allows such a motion to be put, are purely and simply "in case of urgent and pressing necessity".

I have a caveat with regard to the verbalizing of the thought processes of Mr. Speaker leading to his decision to allow the motion to be put, because I think it is important that that right not be limited to any member. If there were any doubt about the question that we are dealing with, that is, the question as to whether or not there is a matter of urgent and pressing necessity involved, it is a fact that for the first time in living memory, I believe—perhaps I am wrong—the members of the staff of the House of Commons are picketing outside the building today.

I know nothing about the merits of the case or the rights of the case as yet, but I think I should say that it is important to the members of the House of Commons, to our relationship with the staff of the House of Commons, to our understanding of the situation, that the first step to be taken be the tabling of the documents. The House has decided that that is not so, but I hope that at some stage the House might consider changing its mind.

I rise to put that caveat with respect to the right of a member of parliament to use the provisions of Standing Order 43, its only limitation being that the matter be of urgent and pressing necessity, not the question of the jurisdiction under which the matter falls, whether it is the government's jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of Mr. Speaker, or of anyone else connected with the operation of government. Mr. Speaker found, by allowing me to put the motion, that that was the case today. But I want to make it very clear that it is important to the rights of all members of the House of Commons that there be no limitation on that jurisdiction. That was the purpose for which I rose. I wanted to make it very clear to the Chair and to my colleagues on all sides of the House.

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to pose as an expert but I would like to ask whether the hon. member, who is learned in the rules and practices of parliament, would not agree—and he need not answer this—that in considering motions under Standing Order 43 members should have a higher sense of obligation to recognize that the subject matter of the motions really be of urgent and pressing necessity, and that every time a frivolous, vexatious or trivial motion is proposed under that guise, it so debases the coinage that it makes a mockery of the whole procedure and thus makes valid interventions under this rule suffer the same fate as the trivial ones. Is there not a need for some informal reform of this ridiculous practice that we witness every day?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my friend is putting a question to me. I would be the first to agree that there are a number of practices of the House which should be reviewed, and I am glad to see the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) in the House today. He and I have discussed on many occasions the question of reviewing the practice of parliament in supervising and thereby involving itself in the control of government expenditures, the way programs are directed, and a host of other things. I think the same applies to the question raised by the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Abbott). There are practices that should be changed, and I am glad he put the question to me.

I want to make it clear that on this occasion Mr. Speaker did not say that I had no right to raise the matter, nor did the minister by his intervention indicate that he felt thatwhat I had to say was trivial—in fact, just the opposite. But I wanted to protect the rights of members with respect to what I thought were, to put it mildly, a disturbing thought process by Mr. Speaker in dealing with this matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member put his caveat to the House, and I am sure he does not expect me to pass judgment on what happened. His motion was allowed by the Chair. Not having presided over the question period or routine proceedings, and not having decided with regard to the presentation of this motion, I will refrain from passing judgment at this time.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,088 and 1,193.

[Text]

POSSIBLE MISUSE OF UIC COMPUTER, MONTREAL

Question No. 1,088—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has the investigation by the RCMP into possible misuse of the Unemployment Insurance Commission Computer Centre in Montreal, Quebec by persons employed by the government on behalf of outside interests been completed and (a) if so (i) on what date (ii) will charges be laid and on what date (iii) what are all the details of the results of the investigation and particularly, what is the part played in this case by Key Data Canada (b) if not, what is the anticipated date that it will be and is it the intention of the government to make all results available to the House of Commons at that time?

2. Did such investigation involve Mr. Robert Kingsley, Director of the Regional Payment Centre, Montreal, Quebec, at the time and/or Mr. D. Mainville, Chief of the Computer Section at the time and/or Mr. Gabriel Beland, Quebec Regional Director at the time and, if so (a) what part did these individuals play in the incident (b) has it been confirmed, or otherwise, whether or not an employee of UIC received a swimming pool in return for his co-operation and, if so, what is the name and job designation of the employee?

3. Did the investigation determine whether or not certain employees were given twenty dollars in plain envelopes in an attempt to associate them with the venture and, if so, what are the names of all persons who took such envelopes?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): 1. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) As the investigation is still ongoing, it would be inappropriate at this time to speculate on what findings may or may not be made public.

2 and 3. See answer to part 1(b).

MUNICIPAL DEVELOPMENT AND LOAN BOARD

Question No. 1,193—Mr. Andre:

1. What is the Crown's precise financial interest in the Municipal Development and Loan Board as administered by the Department of Finance and on what date was such interest acquired, at what cost and for what reason?

2. What was the book value of the Crown's equity on the date of acquisition and what is its latest estimated book value?

3. To date, what is the Crown's total investment, including equity costs, contributions to operating funds, debt forgiveness and what is the Crown's total realized profit from such investment?

4. In what manner is the Crown's interest represented (a) on the Board of Directors (b) in its senior management?

5. Did the government make a policy decision in regard to the future disposition of its interest?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): The questions that have been asked are not relevant to the operations of the Municipal Development and Loan Board. The board was established under the authority of the Municipal Development and Loan Act in August, 1963 to administer a $400 million loan program in accordance with the act, for purposes of promoting increased employment in Canada by providing financial assistance by way of loans to municipalities to enable municipalities to augment or accelerate municipal capital works programs. The salaries and expense incurred by the board and its staff were paid out of moneys appropriated annually by parliament. In June, 1969 the board had fulfilled all the responsibilities assigned to it under the act and accordingly terminated its activities as of that date. The board's last annual report was submitted as of March 31, 1969. Since 1969 the Department of Finance has been collecting interest and repayments of principal on the loans outstanding. The Crown's sole financial interest consists of the loans outstanding. As of December 31, 1977 the loans outstanding totaled $194,891,549.16.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 103 and 1,216 could be made orders for returns, these returns would be tabled immediately.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Does the House agree that questions Nos. 103 and 1,216 be deemed to have been made orders for returns?

[English]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CROWN CORPORATIONS—CASUAL EMPLOYEES

Question No. 103—Mr. Herbert:

What was the maximum number of casual or seasonal employees employed by each Crown corporation during the past twelve months and how many had been employed for a total period exceeding six months?

Return tabled.

DEPARTMENTAL AIR TRAVEL

Question No. 1,216—Mr. Alexander:

For each department, what was the total expenditure on air travel during the last year for which figures are available and, in each case, how much was for (a) domestic (b) overseas flights?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, it is agreed from this side, but we would appreciate it if more questions were answered.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. FRIESEN—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION NO. 1,306

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, on February 10 I placed question No. 1,306 on the order paper and since then I brought to the attention of the parliamentary secretary that it had not yet been answered. It is a fairly straightforward question and I cannot understand why it takes so long to answer it.

Furthermore, on October 19 I submitted question No. 167, which was answered in part a short time ago. I say "in part" because the second part of my question asked what was the average salary level of employees in each Crown corporation. The number of Crown corporations listed in the answer is 38, but if we go to public accounts we find that there are at least 42 Crown corporations. I find that organizations such as the Canada Council, the National Museums Corporation, and the National Film Board are not even listed in the answer, and there is a gap of at least four corporations, in addition to the 386 organizations which are controlled, partially or wholly by either departments, agencies or Crown corporations.

Point of Order—Mr. Mazankowski

I know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has become the champion of smothering.

Mr. Paproski: Suffocating.

Mr. Friesen: Maybe this is where he gets his practice. He can then advocate it when he goes to Washington or New York. But it would be nice if we could get answers in total rather than partial answers, and I would ask the parliamentary secretary to make sure that we get a complete answer to question No. 167.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, about the first point raised by the hon. member concerning his question No. 1,306, a glance at the order paper reveals that this question covers two full pages and has 21 subquestions, each one including several subdivisions. I want to assure the hon. member that we are now dissecting his question and trying to answer it to the fullest extent possible.

As for the second part of his comments, I want to tell the hon. member that we are constantly seeking to give the fullest answers possible, but we cannot guarantee that politically the answers will always suit opposition members.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, since there were some complaints about the number of questions answered, allow me to remind the House briefly that as of May 30, which is actually quite recent, we had answered 72.8 per cent of the questions on the order paper. That means there are only 468 left. We have answered 1,229 questions out of 1,697. This is an excellent average and it runs counter to what the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) said two days ago, followed by the whip of the Progressive Conservative party, who is facing me and now seems to want to yell the contrary.

I want to establish clearly that we are making a sustained effort to give as many and as complete answers as possible, and our average figures prove that our attitude is not only a good one, but an excellent one.

MR. MAZANKOWSKI—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION NO. 1,074

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the parliamentary secretary to question No. 1,074 which has been on the order paper since December 20.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I take note of the representations made by the hon. member and I will see what exactly is the situation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are the other questions allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Thursday, June 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-56, to amend the statute relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, perhaps this is a record. I called it ten o'clock last night, and today perhaps I can call it one o'clock. We can resume debate at two o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is agreed. It being after one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1.04 p.m. the House took recess.

● (1412)

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate I must say that it has been rather interesting to observe the cross-fire which has been going on in the House, in the media, and in other areas. I know that the expressions on both sides of this issue are made with great feeling, because there is strong feeling, and the issue crosses all political lines. At the same time there has been some games playing, some jockeying for position and what not, but it seems that the minister's only defence in trying to explain this particular proposal is that if members oppose this bill they are deemed to be in bed with the separatists. Of course that is absolutely wrong. If the minister were correct it would certainly be well to observe that there are a lot of people in this country who are sympathetic to the separatist cause. That off the cuff defence must be dispelled, and it really is a weak defence as far as the minister is concerned.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Not only weak, it is contemptible.

Mr. Mazankowski: In spite of the all-out effort which has been made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and his colleagues on the government side to drum up support for this legislation, and in spite of his attempts to explain it, along with the kind of drama that has unfolded, as well as the war of words which is being waged between the Minister of Finance and his counterpart in Quebec, one cannot help but observe that the positions are indeed solidified, and in fact there is a major confrontation developing. Throughout, the federal government continues in its mission to attempt to divide and conquer. In the process, I submit to you, sir, that it is not attracting any new wave of support.

One might sympathize with the Minister of Finance. I think it would be fair to say that he is simply a front man in this particular battle for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Lalonde). I repeat, the stand that the government has taken on this particular issue is not gaining any support. As a matter of fact the Globe and Mail of May 18, 1978, said as follows:

> The federal government has made itself look like a dictatorial central government and it hasn't a defender in sight.

That pretty well summarizes the position of the support this piece of legislation has across the country.

The April 10 budget and this particular bill provide a classic demonstration of how this government has floundered over the past ten years. During that ten years it has battered the economy and has created a state of political instability. The budget and this legislation, in my view, should have served as a major catalyst toward creating a climate of stability and confidence. Instead, they have created a climate of confusion and uncertainty and have placed further strains upon Confederation.

I believe that the provinces quite correctly consider this to be another major intrusion into the provincial domain, without adequate consultation. I am sure all members of the House recall the western premiers' task force on constitutional trends. As a result of that meeting in Brandon in 1977 a report was published. At that time the western premiers documented some 50 examples of federal intrusion into the provincial domain. This year in Yorkton, during a similar conference held in April, the premiers again noted with regret nine further examples of federal government intrusion into the provincial domain. The governments that are representative of these provinces are not all of one political stripe. One needs only remind hon. members that there are two Progressive Conservative governments, one Social Credit government, and one New Democratic government involved.

An hon. Member: There is a great dearth of Liberals.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Liberals are not there, and they will not be there for a long time as far as western Canada is concerned. There will be no question about that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A lost species.

Mr. Mazankowski: They are a lost species, that is right.

The initiative by this government in the sales tax field was heralded by the Minister of Finance as a major breakthrough in the area of federal-provincial cooperation. For all intents and purposes it was an extension of that new found spirit of cooperative federalism which was supposed to have emanated from the federal-provincial conference in Ottawa in February. However, this is what the western premiers had to say about that new found spirit of cooperation after the Minister of Finance brought down his budget in April. Again, in the communiqué which the western premiers submitted after their April 13 meeting, they said this:

The federal budget had directly contradicted the spirit of federal-provincial co-operation and consultation which the February conference had been intended to foster and could be prejudicial to ongoing discussions on national unity.

We all remember those very pious words and that profound proclamation about this new spirit and new generation of cooperative federalism. We can now only conclude that those statements were empty, hollow gestures. All they were doing at that time was tuning the machine for an expected spring election. After the budget, the Minister of Finance changed the rules of this scheme after it was introduced, but only for one province. Alberta was excluded originally and was not allowed to benefit from the rule change. The Manitoba government, as has been pointed out by other speakers, wished to use its share of the program used for purposes which it felt was best for the provincial economy, just as Quebec had done with its selective sales tax cuts. In the process, Manitoba was turned down.

The western premiers had further comments to make about this. I quote again from their communiqué arising out of the April 13 western provincial premiers' conference:

The premiers stressed that they were not debating the principle of the sales tax cut as a fiscal measure, but they were sharply critical of the unilateral and intrusive way in which it had been put forward.

That hardly resembles a spirit of cooperation in consultation. It is more like confrontation. It is more like arrogance and an insensitivity toward the powers of the provincial governments. They took very grave exception, and rightly so. The fact that the provinces did not participate in the decision concerning the federal compensation formula which has the effect of treating Canadian taxpayers differently, depending on the region in which they live, is certainly an issue that we find bothersome and irritating. This gets to the very heart of this whole fiasco.

● (1422)

The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) highlighted the problem when he said that in Bill C-56 the government has divided Canada into three distinct regions: Alberta is treated as an outcast with no benefits; Quebec is given unique and special treatment; and the other eight provinces are given varying degrees of benefit. We have a precedent whereby we deal with one province differently than with the others. We have a situation in which Alberta is not included as a legitimate participant in this whole proposal.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), who is supposed to be representing the interests of Albertans in cabinet, gave what I believe to be a somewhat incredible speech in which he seemed to scold Albertans for their prosperity. It reminded me of a modified version of a former minister of agriculture from that province, Senator Bud Olson. He continually attempted to defend the government of the day, trying to sell it to the people of Alberta, rather than selling the problems of the people of Alberta to the government. After listening to the hon. minister's speech I have to say that he was much more effective in opposition than he was when attempting to defend this proposal. After listening to, or reading his speech, I think one will find that the defence seems to knock holes in the argument that Albertans need to have someone in cabinet.

The minister spoke of the discrepancy between the rich and the poor provinces and of how Albertans should be ashamed of themselves in requesting a better deal. He attempted to justify the government's treatment of Alberta in the provisions of the budget and of this bill. I should like to quote a passage from his speech at page 5696 of Hansard for May 24, where he said:

There is a logical reason why the Minister of Finance in his attempt to bring and hold our country together should address himself to the problem that exists in Canada, a huge tax rate in some provinces and a lower tax rate in other provinces. Similarly, in some provinces there is a high sales tax rate, and in another province there is no sales tax rate at all. The Minister of Finance, in my opinion, was quite right in addressing himself to that problem.

No one is denying the concept of and the need for equalization between the provinces; quite the opposite is true. It is something that is supported by this party, and indeed it was created under the leadership of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). The concept of equalization was valid then and it is valid today. There is certainly no argument about that fact. The problem which the minister states, is already being addressed under the concept and formula of equalization. We already have a very large equalization scheme which cost the provinces of Alberta, British Columbia, and Ontario something in the order of $2.5 billion in 1977-78, and will cost something in the order of $2.7 billion in this fiscal year. It is a costly program, there is no question about that, but it is worth while. It is the price we pay to maintain some semblance of balance in Confederation from a financial and economic point of view.

Another point which seems to have been overlooked in this debate—I am surprised that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce failed to make reference to it—is that it should be noted and not be forgotten that since 1973 Albertans had not been receiving world prices for gas and oil. Because of this, something in excess of $10.4 billion in revenue has been forfeited by the people of Alberta toward equalizing the price of oil and gas across the country. In effect, this amounts to a direct subsidy to the rest of the country at the expense of Alberta. Further, it should be recognized that the maintenance of the artificially low prices has had and will have some effect upon investment and upon the advancement of our technology in the area of further development of our energy resources.

Let us not forget as well the days when there was a major confrontation between the former minister of finance, the hon. Don Macdonald, and the government of the province of Alberta. During that period the climate did not augur well for the development of energy resources. As a matter of fact the actions of that minister and of the Prime Minister against the province of Alberta bordered on a hate campaign. I can remember him describing the minister of energy of the province of Alberta as "dripping with venom", and other vindictive descriptions of that nature.

I do not believe there is any other major, important, natural resource that is extracted and sold in this country that does not command a world price. This must be looked upon as a benefit to Canada given by the people of Alberta. I should say one more thing, Mr. Speaker, and that is that you do not hear Albertans complaining about this situation and reminding Canadians of it every day. It is a matter that I bring up today only to balance some of the misstatements and half truths that have been expounded in this House by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

The minister spoke of the tremendous benefits the Syncrude project has brought to the people of Alberta, and there is no question about that. It should not be overlooked, however, the benefit that has accrued and that will accrue is not confined to the people of Alberta but is affecting all Canadians in terms of security of supply and in terms of attainment of self sufficiency in energy.

It should not be overlooked, either, that over $200 million worth of contracts for equipment and machinery was let to enterprises in the province of Ontario, nor that in excess of 500 contracts were awarded to 176 Canadian contractors worth close to $400 million, that is, contractors not only in Alberta but in British Columbia, Ontario, and Quebec. The spin-off effect to the people of Canada has been enormous.

Let it not be forgotten that it was not only Albertans who were employed on this massive project; literally people from every corner of Canada worked on it and shared in the benefits. Of course that is as it should be, and no one is arguing about it. If further projects of this magnitude are undertaken I am sure the same conditions will apply.

Recently I had occasion to visit one of the CanMar drilling ships working in the Beaufort Sea on one of the Dome Petroleum projects. It was very interesting to me that almost the total marine crew came from Nova Scotia. Other people who were working on the rigs were from other parts of the country. When you have a resource that is being developed in one part of the country, one province, the benefit of that resource accrues not only to that province but to the whole of Canada.

The federal government has not been favourable to Alberta. It has been favourable and it has done what is necessary only when it was absolutely required for it to do so in terms of the national interest.

I am glad the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) is here because I want to make reference to a project that has irritated the provincial government of Alberta. That is the Petrosar project. Just last week the premier of the province of Alberta again made a comment about that project. He pointed out that this project takes some 16 per cent of the Canadian oil supply from Alberta and ships it to Sarnia below the world price, and with it a number of Alberta jobs.

Mr. Cullen: Did he mention all the other jobs being created by Syncrude?

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, that has been mentioned. Yes, the Ontario government and the federal government did participate in that venture. I also point out that before the ink was dry, some $200 million worth of contracts were let into Ontario for the supply of equipment and materials. It has been quid pro quo. There is no question about that.

Alberta is interested in broadening its economic base. It is vital that it establish a manufacturing base, given the fact that the resources which are the subject of the wealth of Alberta today are depleting resources. Certainly the economy has to be diversified. The premier of the province of Alberta said that the Petrosar project set the Alberta petrochemical industry back some five to ten years. He described it as one of the worst decisions ever made in Canada. As a national project, the premier indicated that Petrosar is a disaster.

As I said earlier, there is a genuine desire, and I must admit there is a need, for Alberta to diversify, to broaden its economic base, to do further processing of its natural resources and products of agriculture. The Petrosar project certainly stymied Alberta's efforts toward further expanding the petrochemical industry.

This House should be reminded of the fact that today, in terms of manufacturing activity, Alberta only accounts for some 5.3 per cent of the manufacturing activity in Canada. Ontario accounts for some 51 per cent, and Quebec 26 per cent. Between the two central Canadian provinces, they command some 77 per cent of the manufacturing activity of this country. It is difficult to overcome that reality. Nevertheless, every effort should be made to ensure that we can diversify and that we can establish an effective and efficient economic manufacturing base in the province of Alberta.

This is why members of the Conservative party feel so strongly about the Hall report. In the Hall report we have, in addition to a transportation charter, an economic blueprint which, if followed, should assist western Canada in furthering its manufacturing and processing activities, particularly as they relate to agricultural products. We believe it is important that we build upon our natural strengths.

I wish to quote from the May 15 edition of Maclean's in which Andy Snaddon, chief editor of the Edmonton Journal, commented on this very subject. I quote from page 12:

> What Albertans really want is to develop their province so that when the oil and gas is gone they'll still have a strong economy. That means just input into tariff hearings, it means a national system where each province has better representation at the decision making level . . .
> As for Albertans, we kind of like being able to sit in on the game and play with the other fellows, now we've got some chips of our own. We don't have to hope the nice players from Ottawa and Toronto will give us a piece of their winnings if we're good boys. We kind of like it. And it makes for a better game.

What he is saying is that, in spite of it all, we have done reasonably well. No thanks to the efforts of the federal government, we have progressed and will continue to progress.

Another area that I as a westerner should not overlook is the high level of tariffs which the federal government has established over the years to protect central Canadian industry. It has been estimated, and this again has emanated from the western premiers' conference, that it costs western Canadian consumers an estimated $1 billion a year. This represents something in the order of $500 for every household in the western provinces in any given single year.

I simply put these things on record at this time so that this whole question might be put into perspective and all this might he taken into consideration. I suggest that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce did a disservice to Canada in failing to tell the whole story about Alberta's real role in Confederation and its commitment to the unity and economic viability of this nation.

I also wish to comment on an assessment provided by the head of the C. D. Howe Institute, Carl Beigie, who in Calgary last month had this to say, and I quote from a CP story in the May 5 Globe and Mail:

> Alberta will be the only so-called 'have' province in Canada within two months.
> Mr. Beigie told a conference on economic and social trends in western Canada that under current government definitions, Ontario will move in the have-not range with the pending natural gas price increase. Unless the federal government changes its definitions, Alberta will be paying a large part of the Confederation bill.

● (1442)

Mr. Beigie went on to say:

> Alberta cannot be a long purse to finance federalism. The people are getting tired of it and I don't blame them.

I am not sure whether that comment reflects accurately the opinions of the people of Alberta. Nevertheless, the obligations and commitments of Alberta to the rest of the nation are very clear. We do not often hear the kind of complaint Mr. Beigie has raised, but if Alberta is to be excluded from federal programs and from tax benefits such as the one we are debating today, I suggest their generosity and patience will run out.

The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce have only one crutch upon which to rely in justifying Alberta's exclusion from the purchase tax measure. It is the new tax incentives for heavy oil and tar sands development, and I should like to deal with that aspect for a few moments.

First of all, there can be no question but that the development of new energy resources is for the benefit of Canadians as a whole. As for the government's concern for heavy oil, I must point out that ministers opposite discovered heavy oil only a couple of years ago. It is surprising, really, that we should still have a heavy oil industry in this country after all the discouragement it has received. It has only survived thanks to the efforts of various companies which have tenaciously held on through difficult times.

Throughout the debate, speakers on the government side have referred to this bonus which Alberta will receive. I think we ought to look at it from the point of view of the effect on the whole country if this source of energy is not developed. Based on National Energy Board demand predictions, Canada's oil imports will by 1985 be costing anywhere from $6.8 billion to $8 billion a year depending on the world price of oil. Payment on this scale will have a direct impact on our already precarious balance of payments position and further weaken the economy.

Jack Gallagher, president of Dome Petroleum, has outlined the effect which large foreign oil imports will have on the Canadian economy, in a speech made to the Canadian Institute of Strategic Studies last October. He stated:

> The economic impact of importing one million barrels per day of foreign oil at $15 per barrel has a negative effect on the economy of $5.5 billion per year. In contrast, using one million barrels per day of domestically produced oil at the same cost delivered in Toronto creates a positive annual economic benefit of $15.6 billion which includes payments to the various levels of government of $6.2 billion . . . In addition to the economic benefit of $15.6 billion from domestic oil . . . (Canada would realize) a saving in foreign exchange of $5.2 billion per year."

Those are astounding figures. The calculations are based upon 1977 dollars, and $15 is used to represent the price of a barrel of oil up to and including 1985. If that price is adjusted to $20 the impact would, of course, be considerably magnified.

Against this background, the need to develop our non-conventional oil reserves readily becomes apparent. Yet the government has, I suggest, been dragging its feet in promoting the development of heavy oil upgrading plants. We all remember that five years ago there was an oil crisis affecting this country. It was a signal the government should have heeded. At the present time our first synthetic oil plant is coming on stream. Unfortunately, we have not made very much progress in the development of our resources in the heavy oil field or in furthering another Syncrude project.

It is true that a lot of bold and exotic promises have been made. The federal-provincial conference ended with a whole series of announcements concerning energy projects which were being considered. But that is about all. The provisions in the budget are a help, there is no question about that, but we must establish the priorities clearly. Do we want the oil to be produced, or are we mainly interested in obtaining a high level of return from royalties and taxation, in which case we shall get neither?

I have received a letter from the president of the Husky Oil Company which is interested in the establishment of a heavy oil upgrading plant in the locality of Lloydminster, Saskatchewan. He recognizes the initiative which has been taken by the government, but adds that unless the actual numbers which the taxation people come up with are somewhat unexpected, the provisions in the budget will not make that particular plant a viable entity. So the trade-off we were supposed to have been given in this budget as citizens of Alberta is, transparently, not too advantageous. I contend we ought to embark on an aggressive program to develop our heavy oil resources. Governments must reduce their take if they really want production to expand. Royalties and taxes must be reduced.

According to a recent study undertaken by the Canada West Foundation, taxes and payments to all levels of government now represent approximately 70 per cent of the pre-tax profits of the mineral resource industries. This compares with 53 per cent only five years ago. Backing off on taxes and royalties imposed on the development of non-conventional oil reserves in no way represents a give-away to the industry. The "corporate welfare bums" charge certainly does not apply in this case.

Consider, for example, the proposal by a consortium of 21 companies, including Petro-Canada, to build a heavy oil upgrading plant in eastern Alberta. It has been pointed out that this $600 million plant cannot become viable under the existing royalty and tax structure. Before the proposal can move from the negotiating table to the drawing board, royalties payable to Alberta will have to be reduced by some $500 million, and federal taxes by the amount of $400 million. We have to ask ourselves: would the remission of taxation to this extent really represent a loss of revenue? The answer is, no. If the appropriate fiscal regime is not provided, the upgrader will not be built, the heavy oil will stay in the ground, and the government concerned would get no revenue at all. If, however, the plant is constructed under a revised royalty and tax structure, royalty and tax benefits alone will, over a 20-year period, yield $2.675 billion to the Alberta government and $2.05 billion to the federal government. Moreover, these figures do not even begin to take account of the spin-off benefits which such large energy projects would naturally produce, more particularly in terms of the impact upon the balance of payments and the security of oil supplies.

I might mention a project which is proposed by the Husky Oil Company for an upgrader in the Lloydminster area. This has been an "off again, on again" type of project. Quite frankly, the government of the province of Saskatchewan and the Government of Canada have failed to provide the leadership necessary to get this project off the negotiating table and on to the drawing board.

Summing up, I reiterate my concern about the way in which the government has divided the country by this ill-considered measure. I protest strongly the terms Alberta is receiving under Bill C-56 and the rather shameful way in which government spokesmen have attempted to make Albertans feel they are something less than good Canadian citizens. As to the claim made by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that the provisions in the budget relating to the heavy oil industry will make up for the unfair tax treatment given to Alberta under the sales tax program, I do not believe it can be sustained.

Be that as it may, I believe that in spite of this government, Alberta will continue to shoulder its load and to do well. I know that Albertans will continue to be good Canadian citizens. If Bill C-56 has served no other purpose, it has done one useful thing. I believe it has laid to rest once and for all the myth that is being spread around Alberta that the province needs a representative in this cabinet. If the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) suggests that Bill C-56 is an example of how Alberta's interests are looked after, I can only conclude that this government has not learned very much since the period 1968 to 1972. During that period of time there were two ministers representing the province of Alberta and two government members of parliament. Subsequently all went down to defeat in the 1972 election simply because this government chose to ignore the concerns and wishes of Albertans.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, in the customary way I would like to be in a position this afternoon to begin my remarks on Bill C-56 by saying that I am glad to have an opportunity to participate in a discussion of this kind. However, participation at this particular moment is obviously with mixed emotions because I had hoped that the bill before us could have been read the second time some time ago, so that it could now be well on its way to becoming law in this country. Such progress with the legislation has not been possible because members of the opposition have been determined to stall it. Their actions, which I suggest have not been consistent with the best interests of Canadian federalism, have painted them, and particularly the Tories, into a tight and rather peculiar corner with the PQ separatist party in the province of Quebec.

An hon. Member: And with the Liberal party of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Goodale: That is even more true today after the developments of yesterday. I hear that hon. gentlemen opposite are not sitting too comfortably with that suggestion.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We do not like to hear a member mislead the House.

Mr. Goodale: I will get to that matter in just a moment and deal with the catcalls and heckling of hon. members opposite in some detail.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Don't mislead the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) has the floor.

Mr. Dick: Speak the truth, Ralph.

Mr. Goodale: As I said, the point about the opposition parties being in a peculiar corner on this issue will be dealt with a little later in my remarks in considerable detail. However, I submit that that point was made, if it needed to be made any clearer, quite graphically when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and this government made two more proposals to the government of the province of Quebec in an effort to try to resolve the difficulty. The proposals demonstrated once again that this government is determined to be fair, reasonable, and flexible.

Once again the Parti Québécois said no to those proposals, and once again, as we heard this afternoon, that party in the province of Quebec has received the sympathy of the Conservative party in the House of Commons.

Before I get to the substance of that particular issue I would like to deal with some other measures contained in the April 10 budget. To my mind that budget was essentially a "good news" budget from the western Canadian point of view. It obviously did not allay all our concerns and deal with all our aspirations, but it did convey to western Canada a lot of encouraging news.

In this connection, and quite in contrast to some of the quotations read into the record by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) who spoke just before me, I would like to quote from an editorial which appeared in the Regina Leader-Post on April 12 of this year relating to the federal budget. The editorial is quite lengthy, and ends in this fashion:

> It was not a throw-away budget, a cosmetic pre-election gambit or a copout. It was an exercise in realism giving full weight to the inherent discernment, intelligence and self-discipline all Canadians should have and use.

Nearly every major provision in this budget will have a positive impact in my part of the country, the prairie region. While the opposition political parties have been primarily negative about the budget, independent economic observers such as the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, which has a tremendous constituency across western Canada, and other groups like the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Globe and Mail, the Financial Post, the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix in my province, and the Regina Leader-Post, the newspaper from which I just quoted, have all responded essentially positively to the proposals contained in the budget. They have described the budget as being responsible and realistic, and they seem to be looking forward to the economic stimulation which is expected to flow from it. According to the most recent economic figures published not long ago, that stimulation seems to be growing.

Obviously, the measures announced by the Minister of Finance are not in themselves a complete blueprint for instant economic recovery, and they will not in themselves meet all of the economic challenges facing this country, but they will help to create the proper set of conditions for this strong and prosperous economy toward which this government is building.

It is important to note that we are succeeding in that work far more effectively than virtually every other country in the western industrialized world.

Mr. Gillies: Nonsense.

Mr. Goodale: The first major thrust in the budget is the one which has been much debated on the floor of this House and across the country, the attempt to strengthen consumer buying power, to get more goods and services moving, and to create more jobs by cutting retail sales taxes. All economists agree that that is the most effective level at which to make a cut because it has a direct, immediate, and obvious impact upon the price of goods on retail shelves. Since those taxes are imposed essentially by the province, a unique federal-provincial taxation arrangement was obviously required to make the cuts possible. The net result of this taxation arrangement, if it can be successfully concluded, will be a very significant saving for Canadian consumers, more than $1 billion altogether over the next six to nine month period.

I would like to refer again to some local commentary about that particular measure. If hon. members are curious about what this proposal will mean to a large rural constituency like mine in western Canada, or to communities like Weyburn and Estevan in the southeastern corner of my constituency, I refer them to a newspaper published in my constituency, called the Weyburn Review. Not long ago, in the April 27 edition of that newspaper, the newspaper undertook to survey a group of businessmen in that particular community to get their reactions to the sales tax proposal. The headline on the story in "Sales Tax Reduction Encourages Major Buys," and the subheading is "General Reaction Positive".

The survey of the business community in the Weyburn area done by this newspaper revealed a generally positive reaction. The chamber of commerce in that community, as quoted in this story, pointed out that this one measure in the budget alone could have the impact of saving half a million dollars or more for the consumers in that one community. When we extrapolate those figures across a constituency like Assiniboia, and include other communities across the province of Saskatchewan and across Canada, the magnitude of the saving for consumers and the importance of this measure become obvious.

Apart from the question of the economic impact of that proposal to cut sales taxes, the measure is also significant for at least two other reasons. First, it demonstrates that federal-provincial conferences, like the one held earlier this year—they began last fall and carried on throughout the winter and into the early spring, but I refer particularly to the conference held in February and the others which led up to it—can in fact work to the positive advantage of Canadians.

Second, I think the measure demonstrates once again that it is important in this day and age for us to have in Ottawa the kind of determined national leadership required to cope effectively with the threat of separatism in this country.

● (1502)

After we have dealt with the sales tax measure, the second major thrust in the budget consists of a series of enriched tax incentives in three key areas to strengthen the private sector of our economy without government interference. The areas affected include, first of all, the field of energy development, which has been discussed in the House this afternoon. While these measures in the budget are not, admittedly, a complete answer to the energy development challenges that we have in this country, they will provide a significant encouragement, particularly for the development of heavy oil reserves in western Canada.

The second area affected by the tax incentives is the transportation system, again with special emphasis on encouraging rail improvements on the prairies and through the mountains to the west coast to try to alleviate one of the problems that has occupied a lot of time and attention in the House in the last couple of weeks with respect to grain movement to export positions. The tax incentives provided in the budget to assist the railways should help us to resolve the difficult bottleneck which exists from time to time on the lines through the Rockies.

The third area is with respect to incentives for industrial research activities which could be important, for example, for such western manufacturing firms as those producing short line farm equipment.

I think it is obvious from the points I have mentioned that this budget does have special significance for western Canada because virtually every one of its major provisions has a positive impact on the prairies. But there are two other measures contained in the budget which even add to that case. First of all, there is the provision which will allow two million Canadians owning registered retirement savings plans to have more flexibility in the way in which they cash in those plans and use the proceeds. As everyone knows, the law requires that RRSPs be wound up before the age of 71 and that the proceeds must either be used to buy a life annuity or be taken into income as a taxable lump sum.

With the new budget there are now two more options that are available, the purchase of a fixed term annuity until the age of 90, or the use of a new investment vehicle which has been created by the budget called the registered retirement income fund. For retiring Canadians and those who are planning now for their eventual retirement by purchasing a registered retirement savings plan, those changes will be welcome indeed; they recognize the kinds of representations that have been made on this point by Canadians across the country, including many in the constituency of Assiniboia.

Finally, as a special western emphasis in this budget I would mention the provisions regarding capital gains taxes. The existing rollover provisions exempting family farms from the capital gains tax have been widened by this budget to allow the same tax advantages for incorporated family farms. That is a move which, I am sure, many westerners have been suggesting for quite some time, and I am pleased to see that the Minister of Finance has responded to the representations we have been making on that point. Obviously we must keep working with respect to the capital gains tax matter because more changes are yet required, but I think it is obvious that we are moving in the right direction.

It is instructive to take a look at the history of the development of the capital gains tax in this country. The capital gains tax theory or principle was first developed in the late 1960's and early 1970s in the ongoing process of tax review and tax reform. When the idea was first presented, particularly in the House of Commons, it seemed that once you had established the principle, there could not be many important exceptions to it. But over the course of time it has been demonstrated that substantial and important dents have been put in the idea that there cannot be any exceptions or changes to the fundamental theory or principle.

The first major deviation from the principle had to do with the family farm rollover which I mentioned a moment ago. It was a justifiable exception and one that has served reasonably well the farming community in this country, although I do not think it has yet been extended far enough. In the most recent budget, the extension of that special condition will apply to incorporated family farms as well as unincorporated family farms. Last year the tax law was changed in relation to capital gains taxes so that a farmer or a small businessman, for example, could dispose of a particular asset in order to reinvest in another capital asset of a similar nature. Previously that transaction was subject to the capital gains tax. Because of the change last year, that transaction is no longer subject to the capital gains tax in so far as the proceeds of the sale of the first capital asset are used to reinvest in acquiring replacement or similar property that the taxpayer intends to purchase. That is an important and useful change in the law and one that I most certainly support.

I think that additional changes in the field of the capital gains tax are most certainly needed, and I would like to suggest three ideas that I hope the government will seriously consider over the course of time because they are justifiable, particularly in their application to farmers and small businessmen in this country. First, I think of the valuation day problem which existed in 1970, 1971 and 1972. Everyone recognizes that in that period of time in western Canada capital values, for farmers and small businessmen especially, were artificially low because of the depressed economic conditions affecting agriculture, and in particular the grains industry. The problem with the capital gains tax now is that capital values have risen to more reasonable levels. Some would argue that the levels are excessively high, but they are considerably higher than they were in 1971-72. The fact of the matter is that that capital gain which is now taxable is artificially high because the valuation day value is artificially low, and this creates a particular burden upon farmers and small businessmen in my part of the country.

It could be alleviated to a certain extent by applying a formula of indexation to ease the burden of that low valuation day value. You could also take the other approach, if indexing is not technically possible to accomplish the job; you could apply an average over certain years, perhaps 1965, 1970 and 1975, and average the values together, taking those three years or a broader span of time, to get a more realistic base value upon which to base the capital gains tax law. But whether it is done by indexation, by the averaging formula or by some other method, we have to consider the problems created by that artificially low valuation day value across a great portion of western Canada.

Second, I should like the government to consider seriously the prospect of allowing farmers and small businessmen, because of their peculiar economic position, their importance to the economy of this country, and because they do not have much choice about making major capital investments which they have to make if they are going to be in the business of farming or if they are going to operate their business enterprise, to be in a position of making a capital gain which is tax free by restricting it to a once in a lifetime opportunity so as to eliminate virtually all the speculators.

The principle of a once in a lifetime option is not something that is peculiar or unhead of in our taxation laws; it is a well recognized principle that goes back a considerable number of years. I think that the same principle that has been established in the past in our tax laws in other connections can well be applied to this case in relation to capital gains taxes, and it would help to alleviate the burden which falls at present on small businessmen and farmers.

Obviously some terms and conditions would have to be applied to the exemption. A logical condition to be applied to it is that the farmer or small businessman would have to be engaged in that enterprise for a certain number of years in order to qualify for the exemption, so that one could not simply become a farmer one day and claim a capital gain the next. There should be some condition applied to ensure that one is dealing with a bona fide farmer or a bona fide small businessman. You might consider the application of an over-all limit on the amount of the capital gain which would be exempted. For example, you might take an average-sized Saskatchewan farm as the basic limit that would be exempted from the tax, or whatever terms or conditions are required in order to make the provision fair. I think it is an option that is justifiable and I would like the government to take a serious look at the possibility of providing that once in a lifetime exemption from capital gains taxes to farmers and small businessmen in this country.

I have another proposal which is tied in with the issue of a once-in-a-lifetime exemption. It is a somewhat useful suggestion. It would be an innovative approach to the manner in which farmers and small businessmen are being treated in the acquisition of capital assets. The large capital investments farmers and small businessmen have to make in their farming and business enterprises should be treated as if those investments were contributions to registered retirement savings plans.

In many cases farmers and small businessmen do not have a choice about the capital they are required to pour into their enterprises. If one looked at the list of their capital assets, one would assume that they are enormously wealthy. That is not true or realistic at all. That amount of cash is tied up in a way that is of little use to them in a cash sense until they retire and sell their farms and small businesses. They look upon the potential income from the sale of their capital assets as a large portion of their retirement incomes. To a large extent those expectations are frustrated by the fact that they are required to pay capital gains tax on those assets.

If we were to treat the investments which they made during their lives in capital assets as if they were contributions to registered retirement savings plans, two important tax advantages would be provided. For the young farmer acquiring the land, he would benefit from a special kind of tax deduction on the principal and not just the interest of his land payments. When it came to the point in time for retirement, as a retiring farmer he would benefit from the same tax rules which apply to a person who is cashing in an RRSP. That would be a considerable advantage over the normal tax rules which apply to those circumstances at the present time.

I hope the government will give serious attention to my ideas: the question of a realistic valuation day value; the possibility of a once-in-a-lifetime exemption from capital gains tax for farmers and small businessmen; and the proposition of treating the investments of farmers and small businessmen in capital assets as if they were contributions to registered retirement savings plans.

Apart from those initiatives which I should like the government to consider for the future, the April 10 budget was very much a "good news" budget for the people of western Canada. The same is largely true for the rest of the country as well. Some people, particularly hon. members of the opposition, like to depict the Canadian economy always in the gloomiest and most negative of terms. Any objective analysis would indicate that Canada has shown a steady pattern of economic recovery from the worldwide inflationary shock of the early 1970s which brought on a global recession. That recession affected Canadians less largely than our neighbours in virtually all western industrialized democracies.

The economic boom of the 1960s and the early 1970s tempted all of us—workers, management and governments—to live beyond our means and demand more from the economy than it could sustain. By 1974-75 inflation had been pushed to critical levels, pricing us out of world markets and bringing on a surge of unemployment. Since the fall of 1975, strong remedial action has been under way. The anti-inflation program was launched at that time, and that action is working. Despite all the warts, bumps and imperfections, it has shown results.

Growth of government spending at all levels now is coming down, with the Government of Canada leading that trend. It would be encouraging if the provinces would do as well. Wage and other income increases are beginning to return to more realistic levels. The basic trend of our inflation is declining toward that 7 per cent target which was set for the end of this year.

A lower exchange rate for the Canadian dollar is helping to restore our competitive position in vital world markets. Nowhere is that more evident than in the grain and beef industries of western Canada. The trade deficit of $500 million which we suffered in 1975 has been turned around to a $3 billion surplus in 1977.

With respect to employment, we have had to cope with an unprecedented number of new people seeking jobs, including the postwar baby boom, and with social and other desirable changes, a greater number of married women in the labour force. The actual job creation record of Canada is second to none in the world. Nearly 300,000 new jobs were available in this country in the past year. Our long-term average in job creation is in the range of 250,000 jobs per year.

There are sound, fundamental reasons for confidence and optimism as we tackle the economic challenges which still lie before us. Measures like those contained in the budget, and like those contained in the small business and research and development packages announced in the past week by government ministers, indicate that the government is meeting those challenges in a realistic and practical way. This will have a beneficial impact on all Canadians, and particularly in my constituency.

We have seen another rather amazing and unfortunate development in this debate on Bill C-56. We heard it reflected in some of the heckling by hon. members opposite at the beginning of my remarks this afternoon. Most of us who believe in federalism and one united Canada find it somewhat difficult to believe, but the evidence seems to be mounting that the Premier of Quebec and the Parti Québécois separatists in that province have found a certain number of vocal allies in Ottawa who seem to be aiding their separatist cause.

Som hon. Members: You have helped the separatists.

Mr. Goodale: Whether deliberately or unwittingly—and I don't know which is worse—both opposition parties seem to be playing directly into the hands of Mr. Lévesque.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Goodale: The latest focus of attention obviously is the sales tax provision in the budget which proposes a billion dollar reduction in provincial retail sales taxes with federal assistance. The basic idea was to bolster consumer spending power and to stimulate economic activity across the country. Since those taxes are provincially imposed, a special federal-provincial taxation arrangement was required to make immediate cuts possible. In essence, Ottawa offered to reimburse the provinces for most of their lost revenues if they in turn instituted a general sales tax reduction of 2 per cent or 3 per cent across the board.

The principle of that cut being a general one across the board is extremely important. The negotiations to set up that type of arrangement went on for three weeks or more prior to the presentation of the budget in the House of Commons on April 10. All of the provinces with the exception of Quebec agreed to the plan. For its own reasons, the Quebec provincial government declined to agree or disagree in the negotiations prior to the budget speech in the House of Commons. Essentially it refused to state a position one way or the other. Then two days after the federal budget speech, the Parti Québécois government came forward in full detail with its own complicated plan, obviously a plan which had been worked upon in secret and without comment for an extensive period of time. No mention was made of it during the negotiations with the federal minister or the other provincial ministers.

Essentially Quebec proposed to eliminate its sales tax entirely on a few selected products which would have largely a beneficial impact in the province of Quebec. Instead of participating in a national effort to encourage economic stimulation all across the country by a general sales tax reduction, the PQ wanted to draw the federal government into financing a scheme biased in favour of that one province. Obviously that scheme would interfere with the free flow of goods and services across the country. It would tend to fractue the Canadian market.

Quite rightly, the federal government said no to the Quebec proposal. While provinces may choose to impose different sales taxes on different goods, which is their right clearly and unequivocally within the constitution, the Government of Canada should not contribute directly to the financing of those differences.

That is the essential and important point in this debate. The general sales tax reduction would essentially be neutral in its impact as between provinces, and it would not of itself contribute to different rates of tax on different goods and services in different provinces. Surely, that principle of non-discrimination between provinces is fundamental to Canadian federalism and to the maintenance of one common national Canadian market which is the federal responsibility.

The startling thing in all of this is that the opposition political parties have sided consistently with the PQ argument on this issue. Over the past two or three weeks the Conservatives have argued essentially in support of the Quebec government's notion that federal funds should be used to help different provinces build a kind of discrimination into the marketing of goods and services across Canada depending upon the province in which you happen to live. If the Government of Canada ever allows such a thing to happen with federal funds, Mr. Speaker, you can imagine where that would leave a province like Saskatchewan, for example; we would suffer very badly and so would the over-all national economy.

The tactics of the Quebec separatists on this particular issue are easy to understand. They want to break up the country, and they make no secret about that. Obviously, from that standpoint, they are going to make federalism as awkward as possible and they are going to make confederation as difficult as possible. As I said before, that was graphically demonstrated as late as yesterday when the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) made two more proposals to the province of Quebec in an attempt to resolve the impasse, to try to find a way out so that the federal principles involved in this issue could be protected along with the provincial aspirations of Quebec. That adds up to approximately five proposals altogether which the federal government has put forward for consideration, and it is significant in this particular instance, as in the others, that it was the federal minister who had to take the initiative to call the provincial minister. The Parti Québécois once again rejected the proposals put forward, which clearly indicates their determination to make the federal system in this country difficult, awkward and hard to manage.

The Parti Québécois' position, however, is fairly clearcut and easy to understand. What is less easy to understand is the pro-separatist stance that has been taken on this issue by the opposition parties in this House. That such a stand would be taken by a supposedly federal political party is simply beyond comprehension, except perhaps for the political mileage they might hope to gain from taking that kind of posture.

Mr. Paproski: That is not true. It is dishonest.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, despite the braying across the way—and obviously I have touched upon a very sensitive point with members of the opposition, who do not like the facts of this case to be put before them—it is important to put their position in relation to this particular case in its proper context and to look at the position on important federal-provincial issues taken over the course of the last few years. Just after Mr. Levesque was elected premier of Quebec in the fall of 1976, there were a number of reports—

Mr. Paproski: Which you caused.

Mr. Goodale: —about federal Conservatives trying to woo his support within that province in an attempt to benefit from the political impact of the PQ electoral machine when a federal election might be called. The opposition denies that there was anything to those reports, but still, for some reason, those reports persisted then and persist yet today.

Then, Mr. Speaker, in the spring of 1977 a former member of that party decided that he had had enough, and he quit the Conservatives to become a Liberal. I am referring to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner). It is significant, and the minister repeated his point just a few days ago, that one of the main factors in his judgment in determining to leave the Conservative party was the instruction he received from his former party, whether it was expressed or implied, that he was not to criticize Mr. Lévesque, he was not to embarrass Mr. Lévesque, he was not to cause him any difficulty because perhaps the Conservatives could benefit from the PQ electoral machine in that province. Of course, the Conservatives denied that there was anything to that, but the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Goodale: —constantly reiterates that point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Assiniboia has the floor and I suggest we listen. You will all have your turn.

Mr. Goodale: The remarks I am making, Mr. Speaker, in relation to the Conservative record on federal-provincial issues have a very direct bearing on Bill C-56. They help to explain the posture they are taking on the sales tax issue.

Let me refer to a third instance of the Conservative party posturing with respect to federal-provincial relations. In the five federal by-elections in the various Quebec constituencies just one year ago last month, PQ organizers were said to be actively working for federal Conservative candidates. It is significant that all the Tories lost, but again they denied there was anything of substance or significance going on between the PCs and the PQs.

I invite you to recall, Mr. Speaker, that last summer and last fall the Conservatives, day after day in the House of Commons, were attacking the security services in this country and particularly the Mounties. They harped on that issue for literally months on end, and then two commissions of inquiry were established to investigate all the allegations. One was created by the Government of Canada and the other was created by the PQ in the province of Quebec. Predictably, the Tories have consistently criticized the federal commission, along with the RCMP, and they have supported the commission appointed by the PQ in Quebec. But the PCs were then and are still saying that they and the separatists have nothing in common.

Most recently, during the spring and early summer, we had the issue of the speculation on the Canadian dollar as the dollar was moving down earlier this year. Day after day the financial critics of the opposition would rise in their places and ask questions about why the dollar was declining, and part of the explanation given was the political instability in Canada caused by the existence of a separatist government in one very important province. The Tories said that that was not important and that it was not significant.

Then, Mr. Speaker, the dollar began to rise. It rose fairly steadily for a few days until the finance minister of that separatist government in the province of Quebec made a statement about the possible development of the Quebec dollar as opposed to the Canadian dollar, and the Canadian dollar began to dip again. You would think that the members of a party which is so concerned about the Canadian dollar, a party that pretends to be concerned about federalism, would be on their feet instantly asking questions in this House about the statement made by the finance minister in the province of Quebec that caused the most recent decline in the Canadian dollar. Did we hear a word from the Conservatives on that issue? There was not a peep from them, which really betrays where they are in trying to curry favour with that government in the province of Quebec.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have the sales tax issue, and where are the PCs? They are squarely in the corner with Mr. Lévesque and the finance minister, Mr. Parizeau.

An hon. Member: And Claude Ryan.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Ryan's proposal was rejected just yesterday.

The PQ recently indicated that perhaps they were going to get involved directly in the next federal election campaign. I wonder for whom. I doubt they will be working for the Liberal party in the province of Quebec, but I suspect they may be looking to some Tory allies to give them some comfort and some support in their quest to make confederation and federalism in this country as difficult as possible.

The posture of the Tories on the sales tax fits neatly into a rather important pattern, which we have seen over the last couple of years. The denials, the heckling and the catcalling are fairly transparent and pretty weak in trying to deny those allegations, in trying to indicate there is no connection between the Tories and the separatists. The denials look pretty transparent and pretty weak indeed.

Mr. Paproski: Boy, are you ever fighting for your seat in Assiniboia.

Mr. Goodale: In contrast to the position put forward by the Conservatives in the House of Commons, I am pleased and proud to stand with a party which is committed to Canadian unity in a clear and unequivocal way. I suggest that Bill C-56 demonstrates that, and I in fact support it.

● (1532)

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with some interest to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) who, I am told by all informed people, will not be back after the next election. Of course, it will be a great credit to this House if he is not. I think it disgraceful that a member will get up in this House and accuse loyal Canadians who have been elected by their constituents to represent them of being separatists. He should apologize. He should withdraw that remark.

For the first time in my life I understand why this country is separating: it is because of what we have just heard as a typical, true Liberal speech—if you do not agree with the Liberals, you are a separatist. I want the hon. member to withdraw that statement right now. Withdraw it right now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I want the hon. member to withdraw that statement against me and my party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that is not a point of order but a point of debate.

Mr. Gillies: A point of debate?

Mr. Kaplan: I listened carefully, Mr. Speaker, to the remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Assiniboia. He did not accuse members of the opposition of being separatists; what he argued was that the tactics they have been adopting have been helping the separatists. There is a considerable difference. There certainly was no assertion on which the hon. member for Don Valley claims a question of privilege.

Mr. Paproski: That is not right.

[Mr. Goodale.]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened to what my friend from Toronto just attempted to say to mollify the feelings of the House. Those feelings should be mollified all right but not for the reasons the hon. member put forward.

I listened to the speech made by the hon. member for Assiniboia. It is an insult to parliament. More than that, I would remind my friend as he considers whether he should withdraw it—and I think he should upon reflection—that the leader of his party, the Prime Minister of this country, not too long ago said that all parties in this House of Commons, all members of this House of Commons, supported the cause of unity and togetherness in Canada.

Mr. Campbell: Prove it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You are not helping anything, Mr. Campbell.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he refer to a member of this House by his riding.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I did not want to hurt the feelings of the people in the riding.

I think it borders on the reprehensible for a member of the House of Commons to rise in his place and accuse any member of this House of siding with and aiding and abetting those who would try to break this country apart. I have high regard for the hon. member for Assiniboia, although we have our partisan differences. I want that regard to remain at a reasonably high level within those partisan differences, but that will not be the case if this kind of idle accusation, cheap partisanship and meanness is allowed to flourish on the floor of this House of Commons.

I join my friend the hon. member for Don Valley and all members of this House in asking the hon. member to apologize for what, upon reflection, he must consider most unparliamentary language.

Mr. Neil: Insulting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I should like to suggest to all hon. members that the time to raise the point of order was when the hon. member for Assiniboia was speaking, not now.

Mr. Gillies: It is a disgraceful day in the House of Commons.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: I think that the point raised by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is not a valid reason to ask the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) to apologize to the House. I think that the question of privilege has been clearly defined by the Deputy Speaker, but in my opinion the member for Assiniboia has not used unparliamentary language. Possibly several members opposite do not agree with what he said.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I would suggest to the hon. member that the Chair has already ruled on the point of order and has gone to the hon. member for Don Valley.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to speak on this bill today after listening to the diatribe we have just heard, although it has been useful because it makes clear to the people of Canada that the debate on this bill is much more important than just a debate on the ways and means motion.

The action of the government, the nature of the statements of this gentleman from somewhere in Saskatchewan, Assiniboia—

Mr. Benjamin: We are not bragging about him.

Mr. Gillies: —shows that he has no understanding of what Canada is all about, no understanding of what parliament is about, no understanding of the division of responsibility under the constitution, no understanding of the democratic process, no understanding that reasonable people can disagree and still love their country, no understanding that there may be a different approach to a problem. Instead he throws vindictive and disgraceful remarks against other members of the House of Commons.

There was a time when the people of Canada thought the Liberal government under the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) could deal with the national problems of Canada. What has happened over the last few weeks, as this debate has demonstrated clearly to the vast majority of Canadians, is that the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, the Liberals, are shown to be out of touch with Quebec. They do not understand Quebec's problems or aspirations and are ill-equipped to deal with the most important problem to face Canada since confederation—whether this country is going to stay together or not.

The approach taken recently by the Minister of Finance indicates that the government does not understand what confederation is all about. It is quite clear, as far as the sales tax is concerned, that it is a matter of provincial jurisdiction. The federal government of this country obviously is not concerned about interfering in the jurisdiction of the provinces. When the Minister of Finance stands up and says he got agreement for his measure, his statement is patently false. He did not get agreement; he talked but he did not get agreement. To be so naive, as the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance were, as to push ahead under the circumstances boggles the mind.

With all the problems that we have in this country, with all the tensions we have in confederation, and all the things all of us, including those in the Progressive Conservative party, are trying to do to keep this country together, what could have been the reason for the Minister of Finance to take the position he did on sales tax in this budget? We can search our minds for an explanation, Mr. Speaker. What could it have been? Has he been so long away from Quebec in federal politics that he has no understanding of the aspirations of the people of that province? Surely, if he knew anything about the handling of dissent in the last 20 years on the North American continent and indeed all over the world, he would know that governments have had to learn to deal with dissent. He must have known that by doing what he did he was going to exacerbate separation in this country.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Maybe that was his reason.

Mr. Gillies: I do not suggest, as the hon. member for Assiniboia seemed to be trying to suggest, that the Minister of Finance is trying to bring separatism into Canada. I do not think that is true. I think it is outrageous that anyone would make that suggestion about any member of parliament. There is no question, however, that the lack of comprehension about how to deal with a dissent situation has led the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister to bring forward, to move forward, the cause of separation in Canada. They have done so because they do not understand the problem.

To move into Quebec, to move into a provincial jurisdiction, when the minister of finance of that province has said "We do not want you in that jurisdiction," to me is reprehensible. It was a mistake. Mr. Parizeau and Mr. Lévesque have made clear what they want to do with this country—they want to separate. There is no secret; that is their aim. The reason they want to separate is that confederation, they say, is not working. The reason they say confederation is not working is that the federal government is intruding too much into provincial jurisdiction. Why would a minister of finance move again into provincial jurisdiction? It does not make any sense. There is no explanation for it.

● (1542)

An hon. Member: You don't know the Parti Québécois politics.

Mr. Gillies: I know the Parti Québécois politics very clearly. The Parti Québécois politics are very simple.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Don Valley has the floor. We will be here for a long time if these interruptions continue. Hon. members will all have their time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: No one has to study very hard to know the politics of the Parti Québécois. Would anyone dispute that the politics of the Parti Québécois are to take Quebec out of confederation? That is their aim, and they have made it clear. Do hon. members not understand that is what they want to do? They have said it many times and they have tried to do it many times. They want to break up Canada. Before I was in parliament I never had any doubt about that in my conversations with members of the Parti Québécois, and I have no doubt about it now. They want to break up Canada. I want to keep it together. I think we are better off as a nation than we are separate. I am sorry, but it is quite clear to me that the action taken by the Minister of Finance led to an increase in the conflict between the people of the province of Quebec and the rest of this country. It was a devastating wrong move to make. Indeed it was reflected for the people of the province of Quebec when every single member of their legislature voted to condemn what was done here.

An hon. Member: And Claude Ryan outside.

Mr. Gillies: And Claude Ryan outside. So that there is a message from the province of Quebec, a message so clear and that says "Look, we object to this federal intrusion." Why would a federal government do it when we are trying to hold the country together? Probably the reason is reflected in the speech made by the hon. member for Assiniboia. He does not understand that the country is made up of regions and parts with different aspirations. It is a tenuous confederation that we pulled together. He does not know—he comes from western Canada—that the alienation of western Canada is tremendous. It started for a number of reasons. But what moved it ahead? It was John Turner, the former Minister of Finance, when he unilaterally refused to permit the deduction of royalties in the federal income tax calculations for oil producers, which was another intrusion by the federal government into the responsibilities of provincial governments. Here in debate for two or three weeks we have a measure put forward by the Minister of Finance that was a mistake to start with. There was no agreement. I do not care whether we are talking about the province of Newfoundland, the province of Nova Scotia or the province of Prince Edward Island—any province at all; this sort of intrusion is intolerable if we are to keep the country together. To intrude into a province's responsibilities from the federal level, that province's agreement must be obtained. The minister did not have that agreement, and he should have backed off and taken a different tack on the budget. It has done nothing for the economy. All it has done is exacerbate the relationship between Quebec and the rest of Canada. It has demonstrated, without any sort of doubt, to all the people that the federal government, this Liberal cabinet, obviously does not understand what this country is about. It obviously cannot keep the country together because of the approach which they use. Everything they touch goes wrong as far as dealing with federal-provincial relations is concerned.

There has been a decline of unity in this country under the leadership of the Prime Minister the like of which we have never seen. Having made a blunder of mammoth proportions in what he and the Minister of Finance decided to do, the means they have used to try to correct it have been ludicrous.

What we now have flowing from this blunder is the development at the federal level of a system of taxation that is different for the same people in the same income groups across the country. We have the denial of a fundamental principle of taxation that, in the same jurisdiction, people in the same taxable income position should be taxed the same. The machinations which the Minister of Finance has gone through trying to say his proposals are the same is foolish. He argues that all he is doing is giving room for the provinces to reduce their income tax. They will get the additional revenue that they need when they lose the sales tax. He says because he cannot get agreement in the province of Quebec, he will mail a cheque to the people of the province of Quebec for $85. Now there is some talk about $100, but the net result is the same.

Let us make it clear once and for all so we will not hear this come up again that there is no economist in the world who would support the proposition that the incidence or the burden of a sales tax is the same as the incidence or the burden of an income tax. They are not the same. No matter how often the Minister of Finance gets up and repeats this error, it does not make it true. The burden of taxation—and now I am talking precisely in terms of public finance administration—on a sales tax is different from the burden of taxation—using the term "burden" in the technical sense of an income tax—is different. So now we have two different tax situations developing in different parts of the country. They are not the same.

In addition, of course, for the people of Quebec, the way in which the Minister of Finance is approaching the problem is incredibly inequitable. His original plan was to give them a cheque, but the plans change day by day.

An hon. Member: You have changed.

Mr. Gillies: I have never changed on this issue. On this issue the minister talks about sending a cheque to taxpayers on the tax roll as at December 31, 1977, but the problem is that the people who pay income tax are not necessarily the same people who pay the sales tax. Putting it another way, the burden of sales tax on people who do not pay income tax is infinitely higher than the burden of the sales tax on people who do pay income tax. So it is unfair, unjust and inequitable.

The minister of finance for the province of Quebec is perfectly correct in saying this is an unfair, inequitable way to do this, just as he is totally correct in saying that the sales tax is in his jurisdiction and that the province can operate any way they want—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Abbott) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, could I be permitted to ask a question?

Mr. Gillies: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member, first of all, is he saying that the sales tax is exclusively within provincial jurisdiction? Secondly, with regard to the formula that was arrived at with the nine other provinces to give them income tax points credit to get back the moneys they lose on sales tax, is that not identical to what is proposed for the province of Quebec except that we do not have an agreement to collect taxes? I would like the hon. member to explain that if he can.

Mr. Gillies: I am saying that they are not precisely the same at all. Mr. Speaker, will this be deducted from my time limit?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): We will give the hon. member an extra minute.

Mr. Gillies: They are not the same. I am sure the hon. member understands that the burden of a sales tax paid by the people in the province of Ontario is different, from the burden of an income tax. There is a different rate, a different proportion. A sales tax is not progressive; in fact, it is regressive. It is different. So that if a person gets a cheque for $100 in Quebec and another person receives a $100 rebate on the sales tax in Ontario, the burden of those taxes on the individuals is quite different even though the $100 is the same. That is the point I am trying to make. That is the point which makes me squirm day after day in my chair as I listen to the Minister of Finance saying they are the same thing. They are not the same. The burden is different.

● (1552)

The second question, if I recall it correctly was: Where is the jurisdiction of the sales tax? There is a federal sales tax. My own view would have been that if the Minister of Finance wanted to move on the sales tax, he should have moved on the sales taxes under federal jurisdiction. He would not then have had this problem with any province.

If this argument is that the reason you want to move on the sales tax is because you want to have a direct attack on prices right away and stimulate consumer demand, he should have moved on the federal sales tax which has been an irritant in a variety of industries and a variety of places for a long time, particularly in the building industry. If he wanted to move in the sales tax field, he had a whole area to move on in the federal jurisdiction.

The question is often asked, is the cut going to be passed on? How do you make sure the provincial tax cut is going to be passed on? You don't. That is one of the difficulties with the sales tax. If the goal, as the Minister of Finance has said over and over, is to reduce prices and stimulate consumer demand as quickly as possible, and you want to act in the sales tax area, he had a large federal jurisdiction, a large amount of money to work with.

Mr. Benjamin: Four billion dollars in federal sales tax.

Mr. Gillies: That is correct. Again, it seems very peculiar. I am not sure why he would risk the danger, and I use the word carefully, of a confrontation, which you really had to know would come because of the position that has been put forth by the PQ so often. Why would he risk that danger when he was not going to achieve anything?

One can go back, if one is a student of budgets, to try and find out which is the worst budget that has ever been drawn. That is sometimes more interesting than trying to find out which was the most effective. Some people would argue that the budget drawn by Mr. Gordon some years ago was politically naive. However, I am sure history will say this most recent budget is the worst budget that has ever been presented to the people of Canada. This budget is the worst in the sense of what it does to the unity of the country. It is worst in terms of the fact that it will have no effect on the operation of the economy. It is worst in the fact that it is introducing the principle of a different burden of taxation on different people in the country who are within the same jurisdiction.

In addition, if one generalizes beyond that, did the Minister of Finance take the right approach to the economy in preparing his budget? One can make a very strong argument, and it has been made in many places, that the economy has changed so much from the way it was in the fifties, sixties and seventies that the traditional way of attacking economic problems, normally called the Keynesian method, the macro-economic method of government expenditure, sales tax and income tax and so on, is no longer proper.

I am one of those who said in this House a year or two ago, and I say it again, that the day has passed when you can really make significant changes in the way in which your economy operates with those particular tools. The way in which you make approaches to getting this economy working again is by dealing much more significantly with individual areas of the economy, looking at it sector by sector.

I must say I felt encouraged when we had the federal-provincial conference last January. I thought coming out of that conference was the idea that the way in which the economy was going to be moved ahead again was to look at the different segments of the economy and do something in order to stimulate them so they were effective. That is the type of budget making which we really need to have.

It is a long time since the government introduced the concept that we must do something about regional disparities in this country. The governments of those periods deserve credit for equalization payments and for the creation of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. However, 20 to 25 years after the start of these programs we should be moving to a situation in this nation where we do not have areas of low economic activity to the extent that we still have in the country.

If such programs were doing what they were supposed to do—and I use this area as an example—Atlantic Canada would no longer be an area of extremely high unemployment and slow economic growth. We should have been able to evolve policies to turn that area of the country around so that it would be a viable, strong, economic region.

If we had the right policies, there is no reason in the world why we should not have in this country one of the great fishing industries of the world. We have as much coastline as almost any country in the world.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): More.

Mr. Gillies: Some say more. However, we in this country do not have a fishing industry that is one of the greatest in the world. I say this with respect to my friends from Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada.

We have no shipbuilding to speak of. Now that we have the 200-mile limit, why have we not developed, and why did this budget not address itself to the problem of creating, a viable fishing industry? Along with it we should have a viable shipbuilding industry, not building mammoth ocean tankers but building the ships that are necessary for the fishing fleet. Why did the budget not go in that way?

It is only when the government tackles the various segments, sectors and problems of the economy in this way that the economy will start moving again. Whether you are looking at the fishing industry or shipbuilding in Atlantic Canada, the mining industry in northern Ontario or northern Manitoba, the manufacturing of automobile parts in southern Ontario, or the shipment of forest products out of British Columbia, you will see that what is patently needed is an examination of each of these sectors. When that is done the appropriate policies will make it possible for all areas of the nation to become viable and prosperous.

Most economists in the world are saying that the world ought to be on the verge of an enormous upswing. The day of the Club of Rome is drawing to a close. In fact, the general feeling by many is that we are on the verge, because of new technological change, new energy changes and so on, of starting on another great Kondratieff cycle. Kondratieff was a Russian economist who believed in long cycles, and his theory suggests that the world might now be on the verge of an upswing based upon great new amounts of investment. Prosperity from 1950 to 1975 was basically propelled by consumer spending and redistribution of income.

We have the opportunity now to cash in on the great new investment booms that are going on all over the world. How sad that in this country, which ought to do most in this area, nothing is happening. How sad that in 1978 a Minister of Finance should bring down a budget with not one scintilla of a new idea about how to get this country moving.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being four o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions, public bills, private bills.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like on behalf of members of parliament, and if necessary personally, to file a caveat with respect to the most unfortunate and unworthy remarks made by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) during the course of his speech, and to reserve, if that should become necessary on examination of the record, a question of privilege.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The hon. member asked me to look after his interest because he was obliged to catch a plane to the west. He heard something about being accused of being a coward by some member of the opposition. He, too, would like to see the record on that comment and perhaps review his own comments. Therefore, I join in asking to reserve on this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The Chair will take the matter under advisement.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Shame on both of them.

● (1602)

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we shall proceed, by unanimous consent, to the resumed debate on Notice of Motion No. 25. I ask unanimous consent for the preceding motions to be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it agreed that items Nos. 13, 3, 7, 9, 2, 18 and 12 stand by unanimous consent and that we proceed with item No. 25?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Agreed and so ordered.

SOCIAL SECURITY

MEASURE TO PROVIDE ALLOWANCES TO HOUSEWIVES

The House resumed from Monday, February 27, 1978, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of having parliament adopt a measure authorizing payment of an allowance to housewives who remain at home to take care of their family instead of joining the labour market, the purpose being to ensure a global income corresponding to the family's needs by providing an additional family income to that earned by the father.

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I was present in the House on February 27, 1978 when my colleague from Bellechasse listed the reasons which had prompted him to introduce the motion which reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of having parliament adopt a measure authorizing payment of an allowance to housewives who remain at home to take care of their family instead of joining the labour market, the purpose being to ensure a global income corresponding to the family's needs by providing an additional family income to that earned by the father.

Several members expressed their opinions on that occasion and generally they were in agreement, except for one hon. lady who expressed objections which I simply cannot endorse, particularly as those objections were voiced by a female member. However, I do not want to belabour those reactions we noted at the end of the debate on the motion. The important thing is to show the soundness of that motion and try to direct the legislation so that Canadian housewives will enjoy a decent allocation allowing them to provide an additional family income to complement the earnings of the father and, as I suggested earlier, corresponding to the family's needs. In this uncertain age in which we live, the home and everything it represents remain the focal point in our society. In Canada, the wife and mother remains the centre of family life even though her contribution to the development of her country from farming society to an industrial and urban society has greatly changed her way of life.

Studies have been made to determine the number of working married women and the reasons why they work. We should ask ourselves about the circumstances which have brought our society to create a female manpower of nearly two million in Canada.

Following seminars on this issue which were called "Women at Work", it was suggested that this situation was the result of automation, urbanization, social acceptance and changes in social needs. The unanimous opinion of working women is that no mother leaves her children needlessly and they generally admit that they would rather be at home, but they add that they must have another income to maintain a proper home for their children. Economic reasons are the most often mentioned by women workers, especially those whose husbands are low wage earners, that is who earn less than $6,000 a year. It is easy to conclude that the reasons why married women seek outside work are economic in nature. The great majority of women who work do so to improve the standard of living of their family.

At this time when our political leaders are looking for answers to the problem of unemployment that they do not seen to be able to solve, it would be a good idea to encourage housewives by giving them a fair income, which would make more jobs available for those who have a lower family income. Legislation which would provide a salary for housewives would give evidence of an understanding attitude on the part of the authorities towards all the wives, and especially those of the farmers who must work long hours to take care of their children and do their part of the farming chores. Jacqueline Lemay sings: "Half the world is a woman." Could it be that our society discriminates even against the disadvantaged women, who account for half of our female population? We seem to think that rural women still work only for the glory of God and not to earn a good living.

In the February 22, 1978 issue of the newspaper La Terre de Chez-Nous, I read a letter written by Mrs. Blandine Saint-Cyr, assistant at the rural commission AFEAS, Nicolet section. I think it might be indicated for me to quote that letter which describes well the work of women in rural areas. It is really very hard to describe the situation of women in an agricultural milieu. To be the wife of a farm producer is to work constantly in co-operation with one's husband, without ever getting a salary because one is not entitled to it. In the past, women did much more work on the farm and out in the fields. Today, because of mechanization, a rural wife takes a more active part in the decisions concerning the business and outside affairs. She is more interested in the farming techniques to better understand and participate in the fairly important investment decisions which farming involves. In many cases, the women are also the ones who take care of the accounting. For that, they have to get additional training, take courses and attend meetings dealing with farming. They also have to take care of the family and do the housework. Rural women are not indifferent to school problems; they have to see to it that their children get a good education to enable them at a later date to have skills or a profession. To do so, they have to attend meetings and learn about the new teaching methods.

In spite of her many obligations she is also a member of the school board or the recreational committee. She finds it necessary to join other women of the urban community and this is why she is a member of an association like AFEAS and others. Some years ago, the members of that association made a study on women working with their husbands. They realized that many of them were not aware of the provisions of their marriage contract. With that study women have been made more aware of their situation.

I believe that the farmer's wife really works in co-operation with her husband as she participates in the decisions of the business and its day to day operations and in certain cases she is even co-owner with her husband. This occupation is very close to nature and very pleasant but it does not allow you to take a few weeks' rest in the south. This was the conclusion of the letter from that lady.

I also had the occasion to read a release published some time ago in 1970 concerning the housewife and the labour force. The release said, and I quote:

> We should consider housewives as members of the labour force and the value of the services they render in their home should be part of the gross national product.
> Such action would improve the image of housewives and reduce the frustration of women in North America.
> In a speech at the North Amercian conference on labour statistics, in Houston, Texas, ... the Director of the Women's Bureau of the Department of Labour of Canada, Miss Sylvia Gelber said that women working at home should be considered as members of the labour force.

And I agree with this opinion. Further, she made a very timely remark that I wish to quote as I found it perfectly logical:

> Miss Gelber humorously pointed out that if a man hires a cleaning woman her services are included in the gross national product. However, if later he marries that woman she will continue to perform the same work, but the gross national product will be reduced since her work has no monetary value.

And yet there is not much difference as far as work is concerned. Whether or not he is married to the cleaning woman, she does the same work at home. I wanted to add those few words about the motion because, considering what is happening in various countries, the discussions on the matter and the inquiries made for several years I feel it would be normal that the wife or the mother be rewarded some way or another for her work. It would be quite normal in our modern world where we often hear about social security. Therefore well balanced wages should be paid to the mother and this is why I support the motion. I dare hope that the government will finally decide to do something to try and really improve the lot of the wife and mother.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to have an opportunity this afternoon to participate in this debate. The motion addresses itself to a very serious problem in our society which is growing in dimensions and which is demanding more and more attention. Unfortunately, the problem does not seem to be very high on the list of priorities of the government. I am talking about the problem of unattached females who are forced, because of inequities in our social welfare system, to live in poverty. We have the spouse's allowance, and there are currently about 75,000 Canadians who are availing themselves of this. However, that does not solve the problem of unattached female pensioners. The motion which has been introduced by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) gives us an opportunity to dwell on that problem for a few moments.

There are a number of reasons why I believe that the hon. member has addressed himself to this urgent problem. Let us look at the family in society. The family is the centre, the core and the keystone of our society, and it is under attack like never before. There are a number of factors which contribute to this situation. There is a trend toward urbanization. Most Canadian people live in cities, and our cities are growing. The majority of Canadians live in big cities. The problem of the single parent is a growing problem, and it is having an impact on family welfare. Then there is the problem, because of inflation and economic conditions, that spouses are being forced into the labour field. The result of all these things means that the family is under attack, and children are the ones who suffer most.

On the other hand, what about the traditional family situation where one spouse works and the female spouse stays at home and becomes the homemaker? What happens to her? What encouragement or incentive does society provide to carry on the traditional family situation? None. Indeed, we throw disincentives in the way by not permitting the homemaker to qualify under the Canada Pension Plan. If the homemaker could qualify under the Canada Pension Plan, that would solve many of our poverty problems among pensioners and, especially, unattached pensioners.

The statistics are frightening. According to Statistics Canada, over 50 per cent of unattached female pensioners in Canada are living below the poverty line because they have nothing to fall back on. They have no spouse's allowance and nothing to fall back on except old age assistance. If they are too young to qualify for that, they have to resort to provincial welfare. If we were to take the enlightened step of allowing the homemaker to qualify under the Canada Pension Plan, we would be satisfying two very important social objectives. On the one hand, we would be protecting the family unit because the family cannot survive without at least one parent being home as a homemaker. It cannot survive as a healthy family unit. On the other hand, we would be addressing the problem of poverty among unattached female pensioners.

My own family situation comes to me as an example. If my wife were to leave the family unit, I would have nobody to take care of my six children. The family would lose the maternal influence of the mother in the home, and I would lose the services of a qualified housekeeper. I could solve the latter problem by going to the labour market and paying out a substantial weekly or monthly amount for a housekeeper. That would not solve the other problem regarding maternal influence, but for the purposes of the Canada Pension Plan why can Canada not recognize the role of the homemaker? I say "homemaker" out of deference to the fact that not all homemakers are females. In Canada there are 10,000 males who are homemakers.

Homemakers could qualify under the Canada Pension Plan in a very simple way. The deductions which are made from the family income—and my family income is my salary—could cover both spouses for the purposes of the Canada Pension Plan. This would ensure that when my wife reaches the pensionable age and the children have gone off to raise their own families, my wife would not be forced into the humiliation of having to fall back on the means test welfare system we have and old age assistance.

It would ensure a certain amount of dignity for the retiring female spouse. It would ensure a reasonably adequate income for both spouses, if we take into account both Canada Pension Plan benefits coupled with old age assistance. Hence, we would be able to eliminate the spouse's allowance, which does not really satisfy the situation now in that it unjustly ceases after the death of the older spouse, a situation to which I hope this parliament will address itself before too long.

It would also ensure a reasonably adequate income, and you would be able to eliminate in the process the spouses' allowance, as I have said, as well as the guaranteed income supplement. The guaranteed income supplement, as we know, is obtained after a means test by a person who does not enjoy the benefits of the Canada Pension Plan and can only fall back on old age assistance and, by way of subjecting himself or herself to a means test, obtain the guaranteed income supplement which will give him or her an additional $109 a month. We can eliminate that procedure by making the homemaker eligible for the Canada Pension Plan.

Ultimately we will have to take steps to protect the family, and I would say that this should be the first step in that direction. The growth in the rate of marriage breakdown in Canada, the growth in the rate of divorce and the growth in the rate of malnutrition among Canadians is frightening, a fact that was revealed in this affluent society of ours in a study commissioned by this government on nutrition in Canada which is now gathering dust on the shelves of the bureaucracy. Malnutrition is a serious problem in this country, especially among our children, since we have a situation developing in this country of single parent families with inadequate income; of single parents having to remain home with the children, or perhaps even being forced out to work; or the situation which I have already identified where both spouses are forced into the labour market because of inflation and the economic condition of the country today. All these situations result in the innocent, the children, having to suffer.

So it follows that just as we introduced some time ago into this country a universal family allowance program, surely we should follow with the next logical step and introduce a program which would encourage one of the two spouses to remain at home to ensure that the family is properly looked after in terms of nutrition, in terms of health care, and in terms of the supervision and the responsibility that goes with raising children.

The situation today is such that we have the blot, the scandal, the disgrace on the face of Canadian society of women being forced to live in poverty because their life expectancy is considerably longer than that of their male spouse. The result is that when their male spouse dies, they have nothing else to fall back on except old age assistance. They do not have old age allowance because it dies with the older spouse. Surely we as a society, as the mover states in his motion, should recognize the importance of the family, and hence the importance of the homemaker to the family, and provide incentives whereby the homemaker would be able to remain with the family to provide for all these things that are necessary in raising a family today.

I would find it difficult to put a price on my wife. There is no way I can replace the maternal influence that she provides in our family. If I were to lose her, I would have to pay $10,000 to hire a housekeeper, and that housekeeper would be entitled to the Canada Pension Plan which I would have to pay and she would have to pay. Therein lies the anomaly of the whole situation. Surely it would follow logically that we as a society should recognize that the homemaker, usually the female spouse, is performing a very necessary function in society, one that can be measured in monetary terms, as I have indicated; and it would seem to me to be relatively simple to add a provision to the Canada Pension Plan whereby the principal income earner of the family would have deducted from his or her income the necessary amount to provide Canada Pension Plan benefits for the homemaking spouse. It is simple justice. It would address this scandalous problem of poverty in Canada with our older unattached people, most of whom are females.

What can we say for a society that does not take these necessary steps to protect the very keystone of society, the family? The greatest threat to the family unit today is the threat brought about by the economic conditions of world and domestic inflation which forces both spouses to go into the labour market, or the threat to the family brought about by the demands of modern society, the urbanization of society, resulting in marriage breakdown, again causing the family unit to be under direct attack and causing considerable suffering among the children. This is a situation which will reflect on our future society.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) shows great compassion when she makes speeches outside the House. Recently she made a speech to the National Conference of Canadian Pensioners in Nova Scotia. She made another speech recently to the Second International Congress of the World Federation for Public Health Associations. In all of these various public speaking engagements she expresses great compassion, and I am sure she is a very compassionate woman. I as one member of the House would like to see the Minister of National Health and Welfare express these same sentiments in the House, and I would like to see her translate these sentiments into legislative form. She could not make a better beginning than to bring amendments to the Canada Pension Plan to make it possible for benefits to be paid to the homemakers in this country.

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity of speaking in this debate on motion No. 25, a debate which I have been looking forward to joining for quite some time because I think this is an important aspect of our social considerations and one that tends to trouble me in certain aspects. Because of this it is important that, first of all, I review the wording of the motion as the initial background to my remarks. The motion reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of having parliament adopt a measure authorizing payment of an allowance to housewives who remain at home to take care of their family instead of joining the labour market, the purpose being to ensure a global income corresponding to the family's needs by providing an additional family income to that earned by the father.

I should like to congratulate the mover of the motion, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert). I have to say honestly that of all the people in the House whom we like and admire, he is certainly one of my favourite colleagues.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Philbrook: I think we can say that for a lot of us he reflects the character of his party. He is a man of rather old fashioned values and of gentle sentiments, except perhaps, like his party, in certain areas of justice, such as capital punishment. He is a man who would put forward this type of motion rather naturally because certainly he is a family man, a man with a large family, as we all well know. I do not mean that sarcastically, I mean it in a very real sense in regard to this motion. I am sure he has a great sense of value embedded in this motion. There is no question about the need for assistance, or at least understanding and support, in this area.

● (1632)

As the previous speaker stated, in our modern society with all its benefits one of the casualties or the fallouts is the family with its pressures, particularly those on the children. We are aware of new family problems these days which are costly to our society. There is a need for some adult to stay home and give support to the children a good part of the time. Traditionally that role has been fulfilled by the housewife, the female spouse.

In this day and age due to a change in participation rate in the employment situation, it is becoming increasingly questionable how many housewives wish to stay home. Also it is uncertain how many housewives expect to be reimbursed or compensated for staying at home and playing the role of homemaker. That role is very satisfying to many women. Generally it is agreed that marriage and families are partnerships, which is enough of a reward. Also it is agreed that financial arrangements can be worked out between family members.

We must consider what effect a measure such as this would have on the economy. An adjustment would be necessary if financial remuneration was paid to homemakers remaining in the home, especially on a full time basis. In strict but sincere mechanical and administrative terms, how would these duties be measured? What would be a fair remuneration and compensation for the economic value of homemakers?

Economic activity is only a part of human activity. Our social accounting procedures and rewards should have recognized this. An economic service has been defined as one which may be done by someone other than the person benefiting therefrom. One economist has estimated that the monetary value of the housewife to her family is equal to the sum of her income from work outside the home and the replacement cost of the services she provides in the house, less the value of her personal consumption. Obviously this is a rather complicated subject, especially when the necessary details are considered. Some economists are arguing that the allocation and efficiency of non-working time may be more important to economic welfare than working time. These economists are trying to deal more directly with the sources of utility or well-being by estimating the dollar value of non-market activities.

This is being done in various ways in different centres. As a proxy for the gross national product, one economist has applied the actual costs of domestics for a year to the number of families with two or more members. Some economists have carried out elaborate studies which included the mistaken assumption that full time female employees do no housework. The time budgets of some 30,000 persons on 99 items in 12 countries were studied in 1972. These showed that married women with paying jobs are overworked in comparison with employed men and housewives.

In Canada, Hawrylyshyn of Queen's University, Kingston, has been doing interesting work on evaluating household activities from an economist's perspective for Statistics Canada. From his review of international studies, he concludes in general that it is found that the value of household services is about one-third the size of the g.n.p. which, to say the least, is a very substantial amount. I believe that the current g.n.p. for Canada is approximately $200 billion a year. It may be ranked with agriculture, industry and services. He makes a good argument for including this substantial sector in a complete generalized input-output framework to assist us in understanding the whole system, of which the market is a part.

Walker and Gauger at Cornell University in the United States have studied the potential contribution to the g.n.p. of valuing household work through the market costs of functions, the work status of the wife, the number of children, and the age of the youngest child. Estimates of time use in specific household tasks were used for each category of the wife as noted above. The total annual values of the contribution of the wife were calculated with a value per family unit for their samples and an annual national estimate. Several years ago, Gauger calculated the value of the annual services of a wife whose only child is 12 to 17 years of age at $5,300; while for a wife with four children, the youngest under one year, the value was $8,400. Those facts are technical and complicated, but they are important background information.

I mention these studies to illustrate that recognition of housework in the calculation of national accounts can be done and should be considered. Society would then have better information on the quantity and the relative monetary value of unpaid work which indeed may constitute an important sector. People could make informed choices based on their economic, social and psychic costs and pay-offs. Canadians could learn not to take for granted the tasks performed by millions of unpaid persons who contribute so much to our collective well-being.

I remember a cartoon not so long ago in the New Yorker magazine. It showed a woman with curlers in her hair, sipping coffee and reading a magazine. The remains of breakfast were still on the table, the garbage was exposed, and the house was in utter chaos as the husband entered the door. The caption read: "Remember you were wondering what I do all day? Well, today I didn't". There is dirty as well as satisfying work being done by women in the home every day to make our lives pleasant and comfortable. We should not consign this work to women alone, and we should recognize what is being done when it is being done.

My own experience dictates that we are taking a much more enlightened view toward the home situation these days. Certainly husbands do not hesitate to pitch in more that they did in the past. I do not know which social problem the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) had in mind when he proposed payment of an allowance for housework. I agree with him that every help should be given, all recognition should be given, and security should be assured for persons who are not available to work outside the home because of family responsibilities.

Also I see the need for much greater variety in the organization of our work life. We have begun already successfully to utilize flexible time as an important part of our work arrangements. There are other areas which should be explored more thoroughly. We have not yet reached a stage where part time work has been rationalized as a good working practice which would combine high productivity and fair return to workers. It is difficult to reach a general public consensus on this. Obviously it is a challenge for our unions, businesses and governments.

Approximately one-quarter of the female labour force currently is employed part time, but many must give up the fringe benefits which the rest of the labour force enjoy simply because a system for part time work has not yet been agreed upon. Regularized part time employment could benefits parents and enable them to utilize their skills and contribute to the family income and activities. In this way they would no longer be part of the isolated, lonely group we are learning about who have few contacts during the day while at home with their children.

Here we are getting down to the nub of the problem in a very social sense, in a personal human sense. Many mental health experts are currently recommending part time work for young mothers to help them overcome the sense of deprivation of not using their education and prior training, and to cope with the lack of contact and stimulation which they experience when they become new mothers. Is it not said that western industrial society has made motherhood a lonely, isolated state? There are efforts that society can make to enhance community life and reduce that isolation and the problems that go along with it, such as the emotional upset, alcoholism, this litany of the social problems we are all familiar with and associate with the problems of mothers or homemakers.

I agree with the hon. member for Bellechasse that many families need more income than the father currently earns, although in many cases it is a question of whether they do need the income or they simply need to rearrange their concept of lifestyle to stay within that particular income. It is no secret that we have committed ourselves to exploring all avenues through our income security and taxation system to ensure that families, who despite their best efforts do not have enough income and experience hardship. We are concerned about the sole-support working mothers, two-fifths of whom have incomes which place them in hardship categories. This is another aspect of the problems posed by an increasingly affluent society, another aspect of the paradox of our present way of life.

It would be ironic for us, Mr. Speaker, to agree with a motion to send women back to that so-called "women's place" because we now have unemployment. This situation was not caused by women. We need women along with men to help solve the problem. We need women in our government as well as in all sectors of society in planning and decision making responsibilities. Women and men of all ages can contribute and benefit our society as responsible family members and workers as well as good citizens. The hon. member has stated that he believes in equal pay for equal work. It is very difficult to enforce that principle if one believes that women do not really belong in the work place.

Labours of love, devotion and care should be rewarded by society, but the question is how and by whom, by what method of transfer? These are important questions this House should debate further. I thank you again, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to debate these important matters in this House with my hon. colleagues.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this subject. It strikes me that it is a subject which is a great deal more important than some of those that have been raised in many of the debates we have had in this House. It seems to me we spend too much of our time dealing with alleged barn burnings and very little time dealing with basic, substantial matters which affect the homes, families and lives of most Canadians. I commend the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) for introducing this motion.

It is a motion which, of course, has within it an attempt to increase the equity in our Canadian society, and it is very timely in that respect. I believe that most western industrial nations have been moving fairly rapidly over the last 15 or 20 years toward this goal of equity, toward making sure that all members of society occupy a reasonable, equitable position and, generally speaking, toward some kind of guaranteed annual wage. This is a step in that particular direction.

Unfortunately, most countries, ourselves included, ran into some problems in the mid-1970s, from about 1973, 1974 on, whereby most of the western economies were badly affected by a very massive shift in dollars to the OPEC areas, and as a result most of these economies are in very weak shape. Canada at this particular point has a deficit of $11 billion. There has been much talk about this, and about having too many social security measures transferring too many dollars from one pocket to another. I do not support that particular contention. I believe that these kinds of transfers are extremely important and that this debate is important in that respect.

I am surprised to hear the opposition parties, particularly the Tories, talk of the need to cut back in some of these areas; for example, to cut back family allowances. I am also surprised, in dealing with this motion, that no one has mentioned the fact that the cost of this proposal is fairly substantial. However, the motion is certainly worth dealing with and I personally have believed all along that we should be moving toward some sort of guaranteed income.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for St. John's East on a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: I was just wondering if the hon. member would permit a question, Mr. Speaker. He is a very honourable and reasonable member of this House, and I do not think that he would want to mislead it. This party has never advocated cutting back the family allowance. Our party is firmly committed to the universal concept of the present family allowance program.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Buchanan) who wants to cut back the family allowance.

Mr. McRae: I do not think that I can be corrected on this because I believe in some of the speeches made in the leadership race within the Conservative party these particular issues were raised.

Mr. Paproski: Don't give us that kind of malarkey.

Mr. McRae: I think there are all kinds of people who have said this, but certainly this has been one of the things that has occurred. As a matter of fact, I think it was the subject of debate in this House in the past that some of the leadership candidates did make these proposals.

Mr. McGrath: That is not true.

Mr. McRae: That is to say, it was said by some of the leadership candidates in the Tory party.

Mr. Paproski: That is not true.

Mr. Dick: The Minister of Public Works in your party said it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Fort William has the floor for the purpose of making a speech, and I suggest we all listen.

Mr. McRae: I would be glad to look back at the references I have, because it did come up, as a matter of fact, before in the connection that there were references to reducing—

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East on a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, especially in private members' hour when there is the tradition here of non-partisanship which makes this hour so productive, but the hon. member is misleading the House. He has not accepted my word. I tell him now that this party has never advocated a cut-back of the family allowance program; we are firmly committed to the existing program and to the universal concept of it, and nothing to the contrary has ever been advocated in this House by any of my colleagues. He must accept that, but perhaps he is a little confused because his own colleague, the Minister of Public Works, has said just this very thing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member for St. John's East that that is not a point of order but a point of disagreement between two hon. members. The hon. member for Fort William.

Mr. McRae: At some particular point I would like to debate this point with the hon. member. I do not have the references here, but I do not accept the fact that nobody in the opposition party has advocated this particular position. However, I will be glad to debate the matter with the hon. member at a later date when I have looked up my references. In terms of the—

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Peace River on a point of order.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, in the confusion and shouting from the other side, perhaps I missed hearing the hon. member say that he accepts the word of the hon. member for St. John's East, which he must do under our rules. I missed hearing him say it, and I wonder if he would repeat it louder so that we could all hear it.

Mr. McRae: I accept the statement of the hon. member. However, I do not accept the notion that at no time has no one in the Tory party advocated, in some way or other, steps to reduce the family allowance. I cannot accept that as a statement. I would be very glad to discuss the matter in this House because I believe I can find some references in this respect.

In terms of this debate, I would like to focus on two separate areas in the very short time that is left. One of them has to do with the nature of the family, and this is a basic area that the hon. member raises in his motion. The other matter, concerns the employment of women and the need for employment. I think these are two relatively important areas.

As someone who spent 22 years in the education field as principal of high schools before coming to this House, I share the great concern about what is happening to the role of the family and the home in society. I think that for a long time schools were victims of society thinking they should take everything on. Family responsibilities tended to disappear into the schools. The schools tended to become bureaucratized to some extent and in many ways they simply were not able to carry out the functions society was loading on to them.

It seems to me there is a traditional role for the family in society but I think there have been some changes in thinking about housekeeping and the role of the mother which should be taken into account in the present day. One of the major changes is that more and more women are getting equal education with men. The level of education is rising and very often full time housekeeping duties are not adequate to meet the desires of a particular person. Due to new gadgets and more equipment, homekeeping is somewhat less onerous than formerly. Family size has decreased considerably since the introduction of the pill.

There is a whole series of reasons why women in the home are looking for some other kind of employment. I cannot accept the notion that the only reason women are working today is that they cannot afford not to work. I think a great many women are working because they enjoy the satisfaction of being independent and because they are able to become involved in activities in which they are interested and for which they are trained. I think it is wrong to assume that we can return to the kind of family structure we were involved in in the past.

We have to keep some of the foregoing in mind when looking for ways to solve the problem of remuneration for women in the home.

There has been a general feeling that if the participation rate of women in the work force were not so high, we would have many more jobs available for the young people coming into the labour market and therefore we would not have so much unemployment. There may be some truth in that but it is a relatively small factor.

School population in this country has increased from 2.7 million in 1951 to 6.3 million in 1971, or by 230 per cent. This is the shocking figure that leads to the one million people unemployed. It is not the fact that we are not creating jobs at a fast enough rate. In fact, we are creating jobs faster than any other country in the industrialized world. The fact is that there is a tremendous number of young people now in the work force. If you compare, Mr. Speaker, the 230 per cent increase in the number of people going to school with the 30 per cent or 35 per cent increase in the participation rate, you will see that we have a factor which is very serious. School growth in that period was seven times the rate of growth of the population.

I think we ought to consider the possibility of work-sharing, particularly for many married women in the work force who would like to spend more time in their homes and the many women at home who would like to spend time in the work force. Putting the two together you get the interesting notion of work-sharing and perhaps, more specifically, pairing.

There is a good reason why government should be looking at this method of solving some of our employment problems. We should be trying to match the people who want to do both those things. Some studies that have been done on pairing indicate that the productivity of a pair is far greater than that of one person doing the job. When I was a school principal I found that two people sharing a full teaching load did a great deal more marking. There was a great deal more work done and the quality was excellent.

I should like to speak about several other aspects of this problem but I see that time is running out. I think we should look carefully at the idea of some kind of guaranteed annual wage. An aspect that has a good deal to do with women in the home is the notion of a guaranteed annual role. There are people in our society, women at home and people doing voluntary work, who should be supported. The notion of a guaranteed annual role that would have attached to it a guaranteed annual wage is worth looking at.

In the long run I think we have to look more carefully at the whole question of work in our society, at the relationship of the family and—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And in the long run you talked it out.

Mr. McRae: I am sorry if I have run out of time, Mr. Speaker. There is another member who is ready to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has expired. The Chair would like to suggest that, since we had a very quiet Friday afternoon, all hon. members and all members of the staff have a nice quiet weekend.

It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PUBLIC WORKS

CONSTRUCTION OF LES TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the revelation in today's Ottawa Citizen that Douglas Fullerton, former head of the National Capital Commission, strongly opposed the construction of Les Terrasses de la Chaudière and accurately predicted that the construction would upset regional priorities and lead to a glut of office space, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

That a public inquiry, under the Inquiries Act, be set up to determine the manner in which a decision was reached to proceed with construction of Les Terrasses de la Chaudière and the extent to which the special relationship between the contractor and the Liberal party may have been a factor.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TOURISM

CONSULTATION WITH ONTARIO ON U.S. BAN ON SPORTS FISHING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, on a matter of most urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the chaos and confusion that currently reigns in the fisheries industry, the concern of many Canadians that a similar atmosphere is beginning to affect sports fishermen, taking into account that the fisheries' conflict has resulted in media reporting in the United States that is adversely affecting travel plans of U.S. tourists to Canada, and a retaliatory move by the Canadian government will have a devastating effect on numerous small businesses and may cost 30,000 jobs and untold millions of dollars in this area, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the federal government take immediate action and engage in consultations with the Ontario department of industry and tourism to clarify the situation and alleviate current uncertainty which could result in serious adverse economic consequences.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

LEGISLATION REQUIRING CORPORATIONS TO DISCLOSE EXECUTIVE SALARIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the federal government's Anti-Inflation Board held back wage increases for working Canadians, in view of the revelation by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission that a top Hudson Bay Oil Company executive had his wages increased by $38,000 last year, from $141,000 to $179,000, up 27 per cent, that a Hiram Walker executive had his wages increased by $23,000 last year, up 22 per cent, and in view of the fact that these companies are not required to disclose this information under Canadian law, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House calls upon the government to require the Anti-Inflation Board to roll back these wage increases to the supposed $2,400 annual maximum, and that this House urge the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to bring forward legislation requiring corporations doing business in Canada to disclose their executive salaries.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate would require unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

CONDEMNATION OF USE BY U.S.S.R. OF BUGGING DEVICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgency pertaining to the recent discovery and use by the Soviet Union of a tunnel and of electronic eavesdropping devices at the United States embassy in Moscow. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That the House deplores and condemns such actions by the Soviet Union which are not at all in keeping with the spirit of détente which that country advocates between the east and west; further, that the House calls upon the Soviet Union to desist from such practices against the United States or against any other country and supports any protest on the matter made to the Soviet Union by the United States; and, finally, the House strongly suggests that the Secretary of State for External Affairs take whatever steps may be necessary to guarantee that no similar situation exists at the Canadian embassy in Moscow, if indeed such steps have not been taken already.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN GRAIN SHIPMENTS THROUGH CHURCHILL, MAN.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent priority. No serious effort is being shown by this government to increase grain shipments through the port of Churchill this season. The reduced rail distance from Yorkton to Churchill, as opposed to Yorkton to Vancouver and Prince Rupert, would guarantee a quicker turnaround time on boxcars, Yorkton to Vancouver being 1,301 miles, Yorkton to Prince Rupert 1,493 miles, and Yorkton to Churchill 722 miles. Therefore, bearing in mind that the port of Churchill is underutilized and that this port is the most efficient grain handling port in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That the government direct the Wheat Board to increase grain shipments by a minimum of five million bushels this season through the port of Churchill to help relieve the intolerable tie-up at Vancouver.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

NATIONAL REVENUE

USE OF TAX FILES BY RCMP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the dubious legality and propriety of the 1972 memorandum of understanding between Revenue Canada and the Solicitor General's department, which has now embarrassed the RCMP to the extent that, as indicated by the Canadian press last week, quoting RCMP Sergeant Victor Pobran, the force has not yet found a way to close 993 files since special tax investigation units began compiling files in 1972, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That the government immediately use its resources to assist the RCMP in extricating the force from this embarrassing, if not downright ludicrous position, since it is becoming increasingly evident that whatever officials "dreamed up" this agreement did not foresee either the consequences or properly assess the legalities.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

RETURN OF OIL TAXES TO INDIAN BANDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact the federal government has refused to return the oil tax money to Indian bands in Alberta and Saskatchewan which totals approximately $4.5 million, in view of the fact the government's refusal to return these funds has prevented the Indian communities from developing the necessary infrastructure which is desperately needed to correct long-standing social economic problems, and in view of the fact the government policy increases the Indians' dependence on the public purse and a paternalistic government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith):

That the government immediately act on the suggestion of my colleague from Wetaskiwin and establish a tripartite meeting to resolve this important problem.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR RENEGOTIATION OF NEW POLICY

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. It has to do with his new housing program which now appears to be on the rocks, with the new sales tax proposals by the Minister of Finance. Now that another meeting has been called for June 12 and 13 by the provincial minister of housing for Ontario, will the minister advise whether he is prepared to renegotiate his new housing proposals; and, second, why did he not get agreement from the provinces before introducing them in the first place?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): The answer is very simple, Mr. Speaker. First, many of the announcements are exclusively within federal jurisdiction; therefore, the federal government took its responsibility in relation to its own specific programs. Second, in relation to a matter dealt with between the two levels of government, federal and provincial, like public housing, discussions were indeed initiated at a previous meeting in Edmonton and were carried through at the official level. Hopefully, they will be concluded at the ministerial meeting in Toronto next week.

Mr. Whiteway: I have a question for the same minister, Mr. Speaker. I would point out to him that, as he well knows, housing and urban affairs are within the jurisdiction of the provinces, not the federal government. It is clearly an intrusion into provincial rights for this government to initiate housing.

In view of the fact that the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, one of our major mortgage lenders, has indicated that it will not participate in the new guaranteed payment mortgage program of the government, and that the Royal Bank has said it will participate only to a limited degree, would the hon. gentleman tell the House why he proceeded with the program without first obtaining an agreement or assurance from the major mortgage lenders in this country that the program was satisfactory? Indeed, Mr. Speaker, since the Canadian Bankers' Association told the minister in February that the program was unacceptable, why did the hon. gentleman proceed with such a project?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the hon. member finds his foundation for the statement that housing is a matter of provincial jurisdiction. The federal government clearly has a national mandate to ensure that all people living in Canada, whether in one part or another, have a right to decent housing. Throughout the years the Canadian government has been fulfilling its obligation in this respect and will continue to do so despite what the hon. member says or what may be the view of the Conservative party.

In relation to the graduated payment mortgage, I wish to tell the hon. member that we do not ask that all lenders make such loans. We know that some lenders will participate and we expect that other lenders will not. I am not surprised by the conservative approach to the program taken by some of the banks, but I believe credit unions and caisses populaires will support the program—one which has proved very popular and which has been actively supported in the United States. We believe it could be beneficial to many young families in Canada.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, the new graduated payment mortgage program is a replacement of the AHOP program, a program which has already run into serious problems with respect to default of payments in the first two months of this year. Nobody denies the federal government has an interest in housing, but the jurisdiction is clearly the right of the provinces.

In view of the fact that on a $35,000 mortgage, under the new program, a participant would pay an additional $10,000 over the life of the contract—a matter which was of concern to the banks—could the minister explain why he insisted on proceeding with the program? It would now appear that the banks and Anne Murray have more of a social conscience than does the government.

Mr. Speaker: That is essentially the same question as the hon. member first asked. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka.

CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING PROGRAM

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Minister of State for Urban Affairs if he is aware of the concern being expressed by a number of Canadians about the new regulations affecting co-operative housing which will seriously affect the ability of low and medium income earners to gain access to low-cost co-operative housing.

The changes announced will reduce incentives for cost saving, increase rental and operating costs and increase red tape in connection with new projects. Further, income profile requirements may place some co-operatives in violation of co-op legislation requiring open membership. I would, therefore, ask the minister to make the necessary changes and indicate to the House and to the Canadian people whether, in fact, a major shift has occurred in our social housing policy.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

● (1422)

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, to date the minister has not acknowledged a request from the co-operative federation for a meeting and the officials of the federation were not consulted about the change. Why is the minister refusing to meet with co-operative federation officials on this important issue, and will he consider extending the current program to the end of 1978 so that the major drawbacks raised by the co-operative federation can be ironed out in order to have a more orderly transfer to the new program?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has the facts wrong. Indeed, I have agreed to meet the co-operative federation. There were discussions before the annoucement of the new program, and after the announcement of the new program because some of the clauses of the new program were misunderstood by the co-operative federation. After an explanation, the federation realized that the program is a proper step toward helping co-operative initiatives in Canada. We are looking forward to successful activities in this area.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell the House if the position he will take at the annual meeting of the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, in Edmonton, will be compatible with the position he will be forced to take when he meets his provincial counterparts in Toronto on June 12, in light of the fact that Quebec has indicated it will not go along with the program, and Ontario has expressed grave reservations?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, whatever may be the views of the two central provinces, I must say to the hon. members that it is essential that the Canadian government does not forget the interests of all provinces. I am not surprised at the attitude of the Quebec government which does not want the Canadian government to play a constructive and positive role on behalf of Canadians who live in Quebec. Then again the new Lévesque-Davis alliance strikes me as being rather surprising and even astonishing since in some respects Premier Davis has completely contradictory attitudes in the sense that they change according to whom he is speaking. I will go to that Toronto meeting in a spirit of sincere co-operation. I am prepared to hear the suggestions of the provinces about the program, but one thing remains clear, the Canadian government does not intend to abdicate its responsibilities and wants to continue to play a constructive role in municipal finances.

FISHERIES

U.S. BAN ON SPORT FISHING IN AMERICAN WATERS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. It concerns the decision of the United States to enforce its fisheries management and conservation act against all Canadian sport fishermen. I understand this will apply not only in the Great Lakes but also in the Pacific and Atlantic regions. Would the minister advise the House what reciprocal action he proposes to take with regard to this United States response?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we are seeking clarification. We have made it clear from the beginning that the suspension of the agreement was in relation to commercial fishery activities. I am not an international lawyer, nor a lawyer of any kind, but I understand that in the American legislation there is no flexibility comparable to ours. However, we are seeking clarification on this question.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, assuming there is clarification, and assuming the clarification is that the law will be applied as it stands, has the minister had carried out an economic impact study in terms of action by Canadian authorities to end sport fishing in Canada by Americans? Has the minister some figures with which he can demonstrate what the impact on our tourist industry will be in the event of such decision? Has he also had studies carried out in terms of the amount of salmon which would then become available to Canadian sport fishermen in the event that reciprocal action is needed?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have some information of the kind referred to by the hon. member. While the hon. member was asking me a second question, I was trying to make it clear to him that Canadian waters are, in fact, open to recreation and sport-fishermen at the moment and for the foreseeable future. We are seeking clarification.

REPRESENTATIONS TO U.S. ON HALIBUT FISHERY IN BERING SEA

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would clarify something else regarding the note which was sent to the American ambassador. There was an attempt to exempt the halibut fishery in the Bering Sea from the effect of the Canadian decision. Can the minister advise the House whether he has received any communication from the United States that the halibut fishery will be exempt at the end of the interim agreement? Will we still have a halibut fishery for Canadian fishermen and U.S. fishermen, following the action taken by the minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

● (1427)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I answer that question, purely by way of advising the House that I will be glad to table the note at three o'clock? Perhaps the answers will be contained in it at that time.

AIRPORTS

REQUEST FOR FUNDS FOR CONSTRUCTION OF AIRPORT IN CHIBOUGAMAU-CHAPAIS REGION

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns a question I put to him some time ago about a legitimate request from the isolated population of northwest Quebec, the Chibougamau-Chapais region, for the construction of a regional airport there. The minister then replied that this airport represented a priority for his department and that funds would probably be made available in his 1978-79 estimates. But in these estimates no funds have been provided for the construction of that airport. Would the minister tell the House whether he would consider the advisability of providing a certain amount, no matter how big, for the people of the Chibougamau region who have been waiting for years for the construction of that airport, so that we could at least proceed with the construction work?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will have to refresh my memory on the situation in relation to the proposals for this particular airport. I will do so and inform the hon. member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RATIFICATION OF FISHERIES AGREEMENT WITH U.S.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it concerns the fisheries dispute. Reports suggest that the next meeting of the negotiators on the fisheries boundaries delineation agreement will not be until June 19. In light of what happened over the weekend, can the minister say whether he has decided to have that meeting updated and called earlier; and if not, why not? Why is it necessary to wait for a fortnight, for example? Does he expect that the U.S. Congress might be forced, as a result of this delay, to ratify the agreement?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of elements in the question. Of course, there is nothing to prevent the Congress from proceeding, nor have we heard anything to the contrary, with ratification of the agreement. I said on Friday, in answer to questions here, that it is more the interpretation of the agreement than a willingness to actually endorse it that is at the root of the present problem. Therefore, it could proceed. Whether or not it will, I cannot anticipate.

On the second question of the time delay between the decision to act as we did on Friday and the first meeting, this was discussed prior to the actual introduction of the measures and the conclusion was that this was, first of all, I think, the earliest practical date on which the two negotiators could get together. I might suggest, without going too deeply into it, that it may be useful to let a little time go by before the negotiators get back to the table, so as to perhaps get some evidence of what the public reaction is going to be.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is related to the ratification procedure in the U.S. If, for example—this might sound hypothetical—the Congress were to ratify the agreement, would the agreement be in effect and would we be going back to the discussions on the long-term agreement; or is it a matter of implementation? I think the House and the country should have clarification on that point.

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is not at all hypothetical. There is, I repeat, some possibility that the U.S. Congress might wish to do so, if for no other reason than, for example, there were to be a permanent agreement put into place. As I understand it, there would be an interregnum period during which there would be no mechanism through which the U.S. authorities could act. It is complicated, and I would be glad to have a written answer given to the hon. member's question. If the written agreement were to be ratified by the United States, it would not be our intention, nor that of the United States, I suspect, to go back to negotiating the interpretation of that agreement for the next few months.

It is possible that something might be developed rather quickly, but it is the joint view of both countries that the negotiators should now proceed directly to negotiation of a long-term agreement and they will be concentrating their efforts on that. But if the agreement were in place in the U.S. and if there was a disposition, as a result of the actions of the past weekend, to put an end more formally to any tensions, then of course the means would be there by which it could be done.

● (1432)

TARIFFS ON FISHERY PRODUCTS EXPORTED TO U.S.

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As Senator Kennedy and some of his colleagues in Congress apparently were calling for retaliatory tariffs against the imports of Canadian fishery products into the United States because of this recent impasse, has any word reached the minister's department that such action might be contemplated by the United States which is raising tariffs on Canadian fish exported to the United States?

What steps are being taken to overcome any such threat, particularly considering that 80 per cent of our fishery exports go to the United States, or about $450 million a year? Can the minister let us know about that?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no evidence whatever that the administration in the United States would be in any way disposed to introduce or to contemplate tariffs as part and parcel of this particular disagreement which we are having over boundaries. I think they will wish, as we will, to keep it very much on the boundary issue and not to bring in what are essentially extraneous arguments.

However, there is an overhanging action in the United States, of about six months' standing now, under the trade act. This was as a result of action taken by some United States fishing interests on the west coast, but it was related to groundfish. Strong representations have been made to us under that particular action with regard to the subsidies which are now being paid on some east coast catches. There have been discussions on this matter. My colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment, and I are seeking a means through which we can arrange a satisfactory undertaking with the United States which will phase out these particular subsidies but will not invite countervailing in the foreseeable future.

GATT NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING TARIFFS ON FISHERY PRODUCTS

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council, the gentleman who is in charge of the GATT negotiations. Will he tell the House whether the government is taking steps to find other markets for our fish products in case this becomes an issue, in case this threat is made? For example, I am thinking of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce looking for other markets.

In that connection, can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us what progress is being made at the GATT negotiations, where Canada is supposed to be making special efforts to get tariffs on our fishery products reduced, particularly in the European Common Market which would be a very good market for us if we could get the 15 per cent tariff reduced or eliminated? What action is the government taking so that we will not be caught with our pants down if this threat is made or if this threat is carried out?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, quite apart from the current dispute with the United States on the boundaries, the Canadian delegation at the negotiations in Geneva is pressing forward the Canadian case for greater access, not only for our fishery products but for our agricultural products in the European Community and other markets in which we are interested, including Japan.

We have not yet had the results we would like, not because of any final decision taken by our partners but because the negotiations have not reached the stage where final decisions have been taken and offers have been settled upon. But we are still pressing ahead.

DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S. ON FISHERIES AGREEMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Given the influence of members of Congress, both House and Senate, who are calling for tariff retaliation respecting Canadian fishery products, and the potential they have to succeed not only with the United States Congress but with the United States administration, what steps has the minister or the government taken to meet with these congressmen and senators, at least to sit down and have some useful discussions before we are faced with a resolution of both Houses?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of course, there have been a number of both formal and informal representations made. Once again, the subject is complex in the sense that the trade act to which I referred enables any aggrieved party to take an action on which the administration must act. That is the situation I was referring to in relation to the question asked by the hon. member for St. John's West.

In connection with representations to congressional leaders, the hon. member's colleague, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, on Friday proposed, or suggested, that a meeting of the Canada-United States parliamentary association might be useful. I believe the chairman of the Canadian section of that association, the hon. member for Gloucester, now is making moves in that direction. I would welcome, for instance, having members of parliament from both sides discuss this matter specifically with the congressmen in question.

FISHERIES

PROTECTION FOR CANADIAN FISHERMEN OPERATING ON GEORGES BANK

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. Now that the interim agreement is out on Georges Bank, I should like to ask the minister what instructions have been given to Canadian fishermen and what degree of protection we are prepared to provide to our fishermen. Of course, this speaks to the very dangerous course which we have set out for ourselves in this regard.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the instructions are that nothing has changed in the sense that Canadian fishermen will continue to fish under Canadian regulations. They will be patrolled, and surveillance will be carried out by Canadian vessels. The Americans in the disputed area of Georges Bank will patrol and have surveillance of their own fleets. Nothing has changed, and that is what the notes which were exchanged set out very clearly.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

OBTAINING OF CONFIDENTIAL MEDICAL INFORMATION BY PRIVATE INVESTIGATORS

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In light of the fact that an Ontario provincial police officer has admitted that the force was aware of private investigators having obtained confidential medical information from hospitals and doctors' offices on false pretences, can the Minister of Justice prevail upon his provincial counterparts to crack down on such invasions of privacy of Canadian patients and protect the confidentiality of health records?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in so far as it is within federal jurisdiction, that aspect is being examined by the McDonald commission. In so far as it is within provincial jurisdiction, I think it is a matter which provincial attorneys general have in hand.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DEPLOYMENT OF NEUTRON BOMB

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, or perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council would like to answer it. In addressing the special session of the United Nations General Assembly on disarmament, the Prime Minister developed what he called a strategy of suffocation which he illustrated by commenting on the President's farsighted wisdom in the postponement of the decision to produce the neutrom bomb. Also, he expressed the hope that the Soviets would enable this postponement to become indefinite, thereby indicating his lack of support for the production of the neutron bomb.

Apparently a different opinion was expressed before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence by Admiral Falls, Chief of the Defence Staff. In view of these facts, will the appropriate minister state definitely where Canada stands on this question of the neutron bomb? Is it for, or against, in light of the widely held view that the bomb is not only the last word in inhumanity but that militarily the bomb is, at best, dubious and, at worst, dangerous to world peace?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect to the hon. member, my very good friend, I am afraid that I really cannot answer without looking at the long preamble to his question. Also, may I suggest to him that I have agreed to appear before the committee this week as a result of discussions in the House last week. Perhaps that would be a more appropriate occasion to give a reasoned answer to what I know is a very important problem. I am not sure if I understood the hon. member's question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DEPLOYMENT OF NEUTRON BOMB—STATEMENT OF CHIEF OF DEFENCE STAFF

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. If I may, in doing so, pass a comment, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will have no trouble whatever understanding my question if he looks at it, and I think the House wants an answer on this matter.

My supplementary question is this: Admiral Falls, Chief of the Defence Staff, has made statements of policy before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence with regard to the deployment of the neutron bomb. In view of the fact Canada has not expressed any position on the matter, will the Canadian government or the minister inform Admiral Falls that it is not his task to lay down policy for the Canadian government, but to carry out policies determined by that government?

● (1442)

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the hon. gentleman, knowing his sincere interest in matters of this nature, that Admiral Falls did not, indeed, express policy but I think went to great pains—I have read the transcript of the committee meeting—to indicate it was strictly a military opinion and not government policy. It is a military opinion which is held largely, but not unanimously, by military people about this particular weapon.

The hon. gentleman indicated that this was a particularly evil weapon. I agree with him that it is, as are all weapons. I wish the opposition here would consider the evil weapons that are being deployed at an even higher level by those who could potentially be our enemies, as they are far more destructive, in the view of any observer, than is the so-called neutron bomb. Unfortunately, the oppositions in their parliaments do not have a chance to raise this matter.

TOURISM

ADVERTISING IN U.S. TO ASSURE TOURISTS CANADIAN SPORT FISHING OPEN TO THEM

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to discuss a matter with the minister in respect of fisheries. I understand that the Minister of Fisheries, in reply to the hon. member for New Westminster, clearly indicated to the House and the Canadian people, as well as the tourist industry in Canada, that the federal government had not issued any directives, orders or anything of that kind, and does not plan to do so, banning American tourists from sport fishing in any waters under Canadian jurisdiction.

Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of Fisheries indicate, because of the great amount of media comment in the United States that is quite to the contrary, whether the federal government or the Canadian travel bureau, or perhaps together, in consultation with the provinces, will advertise in the United States to assure tourists that they are welcome in Canada and will be able to make full use of our normal sport fishing facilities as in the past?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Obviously, Mr. Speaker, if the situation were to develop to the point where that kind of ban was necessary, it would be considered. I am very hopeful, however, that within a matter of hours, and certainly within a day or two, that whole question will be resolved.

I have the impression—and it is purely that at the moment—that no one on either side wishes to seriously obstruct the tourist business, least of all we in Canada. I hope that statement on my part, coupled with that of the Minister of Fisheries, will be enough reassurance at the moment. The real answer is to eliminate this particular irritant, and I hope that will be the result.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that comment, which would again indicate that Canadian sport fishing is completely open to tourist fishermen from the United States. Could the minister confirm whether the United States ban on sport fishing is in respect of Great Lakes and salt water fishing for Canadian tourists going to the United States? Would they be prohibited from fishing off Florida, or perhaps even on the other side of Lake Ontario?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, it is to get answers to exactly that kind of question that our officials are now in touch with the United States. I will venture a speculative answer to the hon. member by saying that as I understand it, it has to do with licensed boats, not with fishermen. In other words, if a Canadian wished to go on a U.S. licensed boat to fish, there is no prohibition or anything of that nature.

As I understand it, neither does it apply to someone going across the border with his fishing pole, wanting to do some fishing. It is pegged squarely on the fishing vessels. There is even some question as to whether it is in respect of commercial fishing vessels or vessels for recreational purposes. These are some of the questions being considered, and I remind the hon. member of the statement of my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, that no such restriction is presently in force or is contemplated on our side of the border.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS IN CASE OF PETER TREU

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. On May 15, almost three weeks ago, I asked the hon. gentleman if he would look at the restrictions which appear to have been placed on the right of Dr. Alexander Peter Treu in respect of commenting on the matter on which he was tried, convicted and sentenced to two years, during the time he is awaiting appeal. The minister indicated he would look at this and also some other documents, and have them tabled. So far they have not been tabled and I understand they may not be until this fall.

Is the minister prepared to instruct counsel on his behalf to appear before the appeal tribunal or the judge who granted bail, requesting that the bail order be varied to permit Dr. Treu to discuss with myself or any other member of parliament those aspects of the case which appear to us at this time to be repugnant to human rights and natural justice?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there are two points involved. The first concerns tabling the documents. I indicated in the House the other day that I was endeavouring to table those documents which I could. Some of them are impressed with the order of the court that they be secret, and I am considering what application I might make in order to free myself to table them.

In answer to the second part of the question, I have examined the bail conditions involved in public documents, which I will table very quickly. As I read them, Dr. Treu is free, through counsel, to communicate with anyone he wishes. Therefore, if Dr. Treu, through his counsel, wants to raise any matter with the hon. member for Peace River or any other member, he is perfectly free to do so.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, do I, then, understand from the Minister of Justice that it is necessary for myself or any other member to go through counsel and that Dr. Treu is prohibited from discussing personally with myself, or with the minister, for that matter, those aspects of the trial which I have mentioned?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, as I read the bail conditions, the prohibition on Mr. Treu is that he is not to communicate with anyone in respect of the case except through counsel. Therefore, as I read it, if Mr. Treu wishes to communicate with the hon. member—and I have no evidence that he does—he is free to do so through counsel.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GARRISON DIVERSION—U.S. NOT PROCEEDING PENDING REPORT OF IJC

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Notice was sent to him earlier this day. President Carter has requested the United States Congress to postpone spending funds for the construction of the Garrison diversion unit until the report on the project by the International Joint Commission can be evaluated and potential modifications considered.

We have received word that if either the Senate or the House of Representatives refuses the request of the President, that government may be obliged to spend the funds appropriated for the construction of the Lonetree reservoir. Because of the urgency of the situation, and the potential damage that a continuation of the construction of the Lonetree reservoir could have on Manitoba waters, would the minister make every effort to alert the United States Congress of Canada's concerns in this matter, making sure that the U.S. Congress is aware of our strong objection to any further construction?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. The only hazard, as a result, is that I have a reply that is much longer than your Honour would permit me to make. I will read one paragraph, however, which I think will answer the question, and then transmit the remainder to the hon. member.

Our ambassador approached the State Department on Friday, under instructions. He reiterated Canada's concern over the potential dangers to Canada of the project as currently authorized, and expressed the hope that any decision taken by the United States government would not be of such a nature as to prejudice intergovernmental consultations on the question, Canadian interests, or the recommendations of the International Joint Commission. I repeat, I will send the remainder of the answer to the hon. member later.

POST OFFICE

UNFILLED ORDERS FOR OLYMPIC COINS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. With reference to the reply of the Postmaster General to my question concerning unfilled, prepaid Olympic coin orders, reported at page 3831 of Hansard, March 16, when he said he thought a way should be found to help those who seem to have been cheated, and to assist them, and in view of the fact that the Olympic coin program will continue until December this year, that a balance of $18 million is being reserved for committed and winding-down costs, that the customer relations group is in the final stages of resolving customer problems, although all cheated customers have not yet received coins, can the minister inform this House whether or not a decision has been made as to how unfilled coin orders are to be handled, especially since some of these orders are in the $500 bracket.

[Translation]

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we are very sympathetic towards those who do not seem to have been dealt with fairly as far as this Olympic program is concerned, but we are actually reviewing the whole question to try and find a way to do them justice, as the hon. member of the opposition requests. This question is exceedingly complex because of the legalities involved and because the Olympic coins corporation has no legal responsibility whatsoever towards its distributors. However, I can assure the hon. member that we are doing everything we can to do them justice, as he asks. As I indicated, it is a law issue, and I may contact the Treasury Board to try to get the necessary funds to solve this matter fairly.

FINANCE

SALES TAX LEGISLATION, BILL C-56—INTENTION OF GOVERNMENT TO TERMINATE DEBATE

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Last week the minister indicated that he intends to back down from the sales tax measure that is now before us in the form of Bill C-56 and that, indeed, he has discussed some of the particular changes he is prepared to consider with the government of Quebec.

We now understand that the minister is considering closure to force parliament to approve in principle a bill that the minister intends to amend fundamentally. I wonder if the minister would tell the House how he intends to amend this bill before he uses closure to try to force us to accept it.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will have the motion later on, not for closure but for time allocation. I said there are two possibilities in view of the so-called Ryan formula and what I have in the bill, and both are included in section 30. I can only operate within what is in front of the House already.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, this is a most extraordinary situation, probably—I say this quite sincerely—unparallelled in the use of closure in the whole parliamentary system.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh?

Mr. Clark: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre dissents. I certainly accept his knowledge in the matter and respect it more than the minister's.

What the minister is asking the House of Commons to do is to allow us to be forced to move through quickly, without adequate debate, a bill whose nature might be changed fundamentally. Surely, if he wants to force something through, he has an obligation to the House of Commons to tell us precisely what it is he is trying to shove down our throats.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we have already debated this bill for nine days in the House of Commons. The hon. member is always saying that he has an amendment, but he has not laid out any indication of it. I just explained to the hon. member some lessons in procedure—that, first, time allocation is not closure. Perhaps he should talk to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who will give him a little lesson. We are doing nothing that is not included in the bill so far.

Mr. Clark: To clarify this matter, Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Finance tell the House, absolutely clearly, without any kind of equivocation, precisely what he intends to have the House of Commons adopt; how he intends to amend Bill C-56, not giving us a choice of possible amendments, but telling us the amendment he intends, precisely, before he uses a form of closure to force that bill through the House of Commons?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think the best way to know will be for us to vote right away on second reading today and go right away, with the consent of the House, to clause 30. Then the hon. member will know.

ENERGY

SALE OF URANIUM BY CROWN CORPORATION—APPLICATION OF GOVERNMENT SAFEGUARDS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Recently, a new company was established, Eldor Resources Limited, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and was authorized by the federal cabinet to borrow four million pounds of uranium from another federal Crown corporation, Uranium Canada. Eldor was authorized to borrow up to four million pounds of uranium and to sell the uranium, which was to be replaced from the Key Lake project in Saskatchewan, by the year 2010.

Is it the intention of the minister to have the right to set the price and have a guarantee by the recipient country that all the safeguards are in place before approval is given to Eldor Resources Limited to sell?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I dealt with this question last week before the standing committee. If the hon. member would look over the transcript, he might find answers to some of the questions he has put. Generally speaking, this was a conditional agreement on the part of the federal government. It was conditional on the deal going through, which in turn is conditional upon the Bayda commission and the actions of the Saskatchewan government being conducive to the development of the Key Lake property.

It is also the kind of deal which I think hon. members would applaud, because it turns a non-revenue producing asset, that is to say, the stockpile of UCAN, into a revenue-producing asset.

Mr. Peters: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What safeguards is the minister putting on the borrowing by a government corporation or private enterprise for Uranium Canada of uranium stock in a similar manner, to protect the rights of workers who may find the company using this borrowing to supply their customers during the period of a labour dispute? What protection is he providing against that eventuality?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, it is not anticipated that any labour dispute will be involved in this question. The safeguard issue is addressed by government policy. There would be no export by Eldorado, for example, to foreign customers of Canadian uranium unless that customer fully met Canadian safeguards policy and the contract fully met Canadian exporting policy.

PUBLIC WORKS

CONSTRUCTION OF LES TERRACES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE—CALL FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Public Works, but I see he is not in the House so I shall address it to the government House leader. The question concerns a statement reported today and attributed to Douglas Fullerton, the former chairman of the National Capital Commission, that the project Les Terrasses de la Chaudière proceeded to tender without the usual competitive matters on development of land under federal policy and that it proceeded on the basis that someone had an "in" with the Liberal party, that someone being Campeau, the developer of Les Terrasses de la Chaudière. This charge has been around for some time: the former chairman of the National Capital Commission has made it publicly outside this House of Commons.

In face of this authoritative statement, will the government House leader arrange to have a public inquiry with respect to this matter, which is long overdue?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I understand that Mr. Fullerton stated the decision had been taken against the advice of the public service. That often happens, and will continue to happen. I am not aware that Mr. Fullerton has stated that the contract was awarded because Mr. Campeau had an "in" with the Liberal party. Mr. Fullerton is not an authority on the Liberal party, and I suggest his comments are quite unjustified.

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the Minister of Public Works. The comment of Mr. Fullerton with respect to the matter, as reported in today's Ottawa Citizen, is as follows:

> I have found that Mr. Campeau with his first-class political connections is a very persuasive fellow.

It has been common knowledge that, contrary to the advice of the public service, contrary to ordinary tender practices, contrary to a host of other things, this matter has proceeded. If the ministry will not agree to a public inquiry, will they agree to a reference of this whole matter to a standing committee of the House of Commons? As another approach, would the minister arrange to call in Mr. Fullerton to discuss with him the series of comments he has made as reported in the public press today, so that if the government has a case with respect to respectability in the matter, that case can be laid to rest?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to discuss the matter with Mr. Fullerton. Let us make it clear, however, that there were reasons why this arrangement was entered into. The land in question was partially owned by Mr. Campeau's corporation. The question really is, are you going to expropriate the land of a developer and then offer it to other developers? There was some question of ethics involved in the matter as well, since he owned part of the land which is in play and which is, in fact, being used for this development.

● (1502)

The matter was looked at extremely carefully when I first entered this portfolio. We compared it with the possibility of a Crown construction as opposed to a lease-purchase arrangement. We were satisfied that it was a judgment call and it was, in fact, a reasonable decision to take.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there has been an undertaking, now, by the Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology that he will call in the former chairman of the National Capital Commission, generally speaking. Can I have an undertaking from the minister that he will arrange for that meeting forthwith, and that if Mr. Fullerton is available the meeting will be held some time this week; and will the minister report to the House thereon?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to arrange to get together with Mr. Fullerton just as soon as it is convenient for both of us.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. D. MUNRO—FISHERIES—CANADA-UNITED STATES 1978 INTERIM AGREEMENT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order because of what happened last week in the fisheries area. The Standing Committee on Fisheries and the Environment was not one of those which was included last week in the statement made by the government House leader to extend the life of certain standing committees so that they might examine estimates. Can the government House leader see his way clear to providing a reference for that particular committee to meet? I do not know the exact wording, but I suggest something along the following lines: "To examine the implications of the decision to suspend the implementation of the 1978 Interim Reciprocity Agreement on Fisheries and Boundary Delineation" so that we can have several meetings to explore this whole matter and clarify it for everyone.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the relevant committee has already spoken to me about the desirability of providing such a reference. That is quite agreeable to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson). Just as soon as the motion is ready, I will be pleased to put it before the House so that the committee can meet at an early date.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—STATEMENT ISSUED BY JUDGE MAYRAND OF MONTREAL

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment shortly on the question of privilege raised last week by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). You have allowed me to wait until today to verify the French text of Judge Mayrand's statement. With your permission, I would be prepared to make a few comments.

As regards parliamentary procedure in this matter, the question consists in deciding whether, at first sight, the facts relating to the request of the hon. member for Peace River allow us to believe there was interference with the privileges of that hon. member or with those of all hon. members and whether, consequently, the Speaker must ask the House to refer the matter to the appropriate committee of the House, that is the Committee on the Rights and Immunities of Members. It is therefore important, Mr. Speaker, to scrutinize the facts which resulted from statements made in the House by the hon. member for Peace River as well as from Judge Mayrand's alleged statement.

Let us note first of all the discrepancy which you indicated during last Thursday's debate when you said that the original document in French indicated that "some members of parliament s'étaient permis of questioning . . .", which means "have allowed themselves to" and which was rendered by "have taken the liberty to". There is of course a significant difference which indicates that the tone of the statement made by Judge Mayrand was a lot more sober than that which the translation implies.

Mr. Speaker, while reading the original text of the judge's statement, I noticed a major difference between the French and English versions in connection with the following basic fact: in the French text, it seems that the lawyers had agreed to this trial and preliminary hearing in camera, while the English version does not give this impression at all. In the French version, in the third paragraph before the end of the statement purportedly made by Judge Mayrand, and which is appended to Hansard for Thursday, June 1, 1978, it is said, and I quote:

Le député Baldwin n'a pas à s'ériger en Cour d'appel pour étudier la conduite du juge présidant le procès, d'autant plus qu'il est dans la plus complète ignorance des faits mis en preuve et du consentement des avocats, tant de la défense que de la poursuite, à ce que le procès se déroule à huis clos, comme le fut l'enquête préliminaire.

That clearly means, Mr. Speaker, that there was—and it is contained in the judge's statement—consent from Mr. Treu's lawyer to have the preliminary hearing and the trial held in camera. If you read the English version of that statement, it does not say at all that there was consent from the lawyers to have the trial held in camera. Here is what the English version says, and I quote:

[English]

—since he is totally ignorant of the facts presented as evidence and of the consent of the lawyers, both for the defence and for the prosecution, since the trial as well as the preliminary hearing were held in camera.

It should have said:

—and the consent of the lawyers—to the effect that the trial be held in camera.

[Translation]

Now, the translation was extremely poor and did absolutely not convey the meaning of the French text which proves a fundamental fact, namely that the lawyer for Mr. Treu himself agreed that the trial be held in camera. Now, what the hon. member for Peace River in his motions under Standing Order 43 of May 12 and May 23, and his question of privilege, complains about is precisely the secret nature of the trial; he expresses doubts about the fashion in which the judge may have presided over that trial; when the hon. member for Peace River, on May 12, in his motion under Standing Order 43 says "... that judicial and bureaucratic officials shall not make improper or unexpected use of laws enacted by parliament", when he says in the same motion that "the committee be required to consider the provisions of the Official Secrets Act which permit this kind of Star Chamber proceedings"; and when the hon. member for Peace River, still under Standing Order 43, but on May 23 this time, refers to a motion of the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) who deplores the procedure followed for some trials in the U.S.S.R., which violate the principles of natural justice and the rules observed by Canadian courts of justice, and the fact that the hon. member for Peace River uses that motion to say, and I quote:

That this House deplores the dangerous form of secret trial and the continuing restrictions involved in the case of Alexander Peter Treu which are contrary to the usual practice of Canadian justice.

I have the conviction, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Peace River, with all his experience as a lawyer and parliamentarian, could not have made those statements had he known that Mr. Treu's lawyer had agreed to both the preliminary hearing and the trial being held in camera, which can be deduced from the statement issued by Judge Mayrand, and I cannot blame the hon. member for Peace River for not having understood it, since the translation of that part of Judge Mayrand is very poor.

● (1512)

Well, those facts I just summed up and which are alleged by the hon. member for Peace River are exactly reproduced in the statement made by Mr. Justice Mayrand, who merely criticize the way in which the trial has been conducted, and here I quote Mr. Justice Mayrand:

Some members of parliament, under the protection of parliamentary privilege, have taken the liberty of questioning and criticizing the way in which the trial was conducted before Justice Luc Trudel of the sessions court.

There is nothing reprehensible in this fact, Mr. Speaker; it simply confirms the remarks made previously in the House by the hon. member for Peace River.

There is a second fact in Judge Mayrand's statement. It says: "Mr. Gerald Baldwin, M.P., ... was wondering whether the law had not been well understood or had been wrongfully applied by the judges." Once again, it merely reflects the facts, it reflects the very words of the hon. member for Peace River.

Finally, the judge said that the hon. member for Peace River, and I quote,

... should not pose as an Appeal Court to study the conduct of the Judge of this trial, especially since he is totally ignorant of the facts presented as evidence and of the consent of the lawyers, ... since the trial was held in camera.

Mr. Speaker, those facts do not in themselves constitute prima facie evidence that allows you to conclude that the privileges of hon. members or the privileges of this House were affected or are in any way jeopardized. Those facts merely reflect reality, they only state things as they are, and judge the attitude of the hon. member according to his statements in the House.

That being the fact, one must also ask oneself, Mr. Speaker, if the principles contained in the judge's statement lend themselves to a question of privilege. Now, there are two of these principles which are unequivocal and which, I believe, contain nothing irregular or reprehensible. The first principle set out by the judge is as follows, and I quote:

Although it is admissible to make comments about a judicial decision and to disagree with the Official Secrets Act or with the fact that authorities do not use the notion of national security with enough reservation, the judge himself cannot be blamed for his obligation is to apply such a law.

That is the first of the two principles set out by the judge in his statement. It is a principle that is absolutely true, there is nothing wrong to that and it does not in any way interfere with the privileges of the hon. member.

The second and last principle set out by the judge in his statement is as follows, and I quote:

In any circumstances, public interest and the preservation of individual liberties demand that we strictly adhere to the principle of separation of the three powers, that is the executive, the legislative and the judiciary; each citizen must respect their rights and privileges and especially those who hold a position with great responsibilities as is the case for a Member of Parliament.

Here again, Mr. Speaker, this is a very valid principle which does not in any way interfere with the privileges of the hon. member and those of the House.

What I just summed up are the main facts contained in the statement purportedly made by Judge Mayrand and what I just summed up, in addition to the fact, are the principles set out by Judge Mayrand in the same statement and in both cases—the facts and the principles—one realizes obviously that they do not interfere in any way with the privileges of this House.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, the issue remains whether in its form that statement interferes with or could be a threat to the privileges or the rights of the hon. member for Peace River or, generally speaking, hon. members of this House. In that respect, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) referred to three sentences contained in Erskine May and I want here to refer to that allegation made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre last Thursday, as reported at page 5956 of Hansard, where he refers first to May's nineteenth edition, page 150, as follows:

> To attempt to influence members in their conduct by threats is also a breach of privilege.

Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely nothing in Judge Mayrand's comments that is a real threat to the hon. member's privileges or rights. There is no threat of steps to be taken against the hon. member, there is no threat that the judge adopt any behaviour or take any measure to limit the privileges or the rights of the hon. member or of members of this House.

So this fine principle of Erskine May could not be applied here because the facts do not justify it. Nor do the other two fine principles of Erskine May at pages 151 and 153, as referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The second principle was, and I quote:

> It is a breach of privilege to molest any member of either House on account of his conduct in Parliament.

What molestation is there in this statement by Judge Mayrand? Obviously, Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no molestation involved.

And the third principle raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, still based on Erskine May, was, and I quote:

> Wilful misrepresentation of the proceedings of members is an offence of the same character as a libel.

Here again, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the facts contained in this statement as well as the principles and their form do not constitute in any way a wilful misrepresentation of the proceedings of members of this House.

These worthy principles which do not have any reference to the facts contained in the statement of Judge Mayrand cannot be applied here and give ground to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Peace River. On the contrary, the only passages which might be interpreted as indicating to that member a line of conduct, these only passages, I repeat, are literally reverential. You just have to take a look at what is suggested by the judge: First he says

> We respectfully advise him to content himself with doing his own work,—

And the second passage where the judge might be interpreted as giving a piece of advice to the hon. member is, and I quote:

> It seems to us that it would be preferable to leave to the courts the delicate task of drawing the line between the rights of the individual and the rights of a nation in the application of the law.

So when the hon. member is respectfully being advised about something and when the judge says:

> It seems to us that it would be preferable . . .

I respectfully submit this was suggested in a reverent fashion, to say the least, and there is nothing in the nature of a threat to the hon. member, neither in the comments nor in the form of the statement by Judge Mayrand.

Mr. Speaker, I would note further that this is neither a judgment nor an order, but a mere comment, a mere criticism. Since there is nothing in the statement made by the sessions court deputy chief judge, either in fact, in principle or in form, that might be considered even a beginning of an infringement on our privileges, it would be surprising if the title or function of the originator justified the proposal made by the hon. member for Peace River. Whether he is a judge or a private citizen, because this has been raised, is not relevant in the circumstances. And therefore the distinction made by certain speakers, including the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, for the reason that a judge may or might hold the hon. member for Peace River for contempt is groundless. The hon. member for Peace River has enjoyed and still enjoys parliamentary immunity. Therefore, the danger that some high-tempered member of parliament be held in contempt by a judge he criticized is no greater than that of his being sprayed with water by some fireman he might criticize. Whether it be a judge or a fireman, or anyone for that matter that the hon. member may criticize under his parliamentary immunity, there is absolutely no danger for the member.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, the judge's statement is neither a judgment nor an order, but a mere comment included in a release. It is not even an obiter dictum in the body of a judicial decision. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, may I refer to a decision made by yourself on December 5, 1977, in the matter of a judgment by Mr. Justice Evans, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario, on the motion by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

> That the portions of the judgment of Chief Justice Evans of the Supreme Court of Ontario, given November 9, 1977, which appear to restrict the right of members of parliament to full and accurate reporting in the press, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker, you stated in your ruling, and I quote very briefly from that decision on page 1541 of Hansard for December 5, 1977:

I understand the reasoning of the Chief Justice in having to do so, and in the generalized way in which he dealt with matters outside Parliament. In my opinion, he created no addition to the law which in any way lessens the privileges of members of this House.

Finally, even if he had done so, his pronouncement is obiter dicta clearly, by any understanding of any lawyer who examines his reasoning and is entirely theoretical in nature.

Mr. Speaker, may I remind the House of the merits of your own remarks which were made before the House last Thursday, as shown at page 5953 of Hansard, and I understand that it was not a formal decision, but I want to conclude with the following remarks, Mr. Speaker, and I quote:

Of course my obligation may be to find whether the matter does in fact come within the strict and classic definition of privilege that we have followed in the past, whether there has been an affront or contempt of parliament, or whether there has been a molestation or interference in some way with the hon. member in carrying out his duty.

And you added further, and I quote:

. . . and since language has often been set aside as an actual molestation and interference, and since obviously the hon. member and other hon. members are not in the slightest intimidated in their desire to pursue this matter, by whatever language was used . . .

. . . but it may be difficult to fit them into the specific and classic definition of privilege . . .

Finally, I would to remind the limit of our privileges as it is very clearly prescribed in the fourth edition of Beauchesne's Parliament Rules and Forms, page 94, and I quote:

. . . the only privilege remaining to members beyond the walls of St. Stephen's were freedom from arrest, assault, insult or menace in their coming and going from the House, and inviolability, so far as the outside world was concerned, for their utterances within the Chamber; and these are the only privileges enjoyed to-day by the Canadian Parliament under section 18 of the B.N.A Act . . .

Therefore, if under the cover of parliamentary immunity a member of parliament can say anything or almost anything without running the risk of being sued, we cannot extend the present scope of our privileges to the censorship of what has been said by people from outside who comment honestly on the use which has been made of these privileges. As to knowing, Mr. Speaker, whether the statement issued by Judge Mayrand was timely or not, and whether judges should make declarations at all on highly political questions, to debate this matter here would not help whatsoever in solving the question of determining the privileges of hon. members.

● (1522)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The discussion on this matter is closed. I would not want to recognize other hon. members whose intention it might be to get into the argument on the general question of privilege. However, a somewhat unusual situation arises here in that the foundation for the question of privilege was a text, the best one available to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). He attempted to get a rapid translation of it; he admitted the translation was not necessarily an official translation, but it was the best he could obtain in the circumstances. The Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) asked for an opportunity to examine the original French text and to make his argument after he had done so, which was only reasonable.

I am not disposed to hear further argument, but I will hear the hon. member for Peace River in these circumstances if he has anything to add with respect only to the text. I will then take the matter under reserve and try to render a decision either tomorrow or Wednesday.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Obviously, Mr. Speaker, I should not comment on the views expressed by the parliamentary secretary; they will be the subject of discussion if we ever get into a committee or further consideration of the issue. I would, however, compliment him on his ingenuity in rewriting the words of the learned Acting Chief Judge. Now that the Acting Chief Judge is in Greece he may have had a chance to consult the oracle and wish he had written what the learned parliamentary secretary has suggested he did write.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Be that as it may, I have now had an opportunity to read the French. Judge Mayrand did ultimately comply with his undertaking, and I had an opportunity this morning to see the French text which came in very good form. I sent a copy to Your Honour which you should have by now. I have consulted those in my party who are experts in French—

Mr. Blais: That would not take very long!

Mr. Baldwin: The Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) says that would not take long. Well, it wouldn't take very long for him to tell us what his knowledge of justice is in this House.

An hon. Member: Or law!

Mr. Baldwin: Or law. I would make this point to Your Honour—it will not take me more than a few seconds to do so. Go to the deep wellsprings of the law of privilege which, of course, is the Bill of Rights of 1688. There, it is very simple. The freedom of speech of members of parliament in debates and proceedings of parliament "shall not be impeached or questioned." I draw attention to the words "or questioned".

I have read the French text as well. It is not all that different in what I consider to be the offensive parts of the English text which was tabled by agreement, and which Your Honour ordered to be appended to Hansard, I think it was June 1. I suggest that any ordinary individual with knowledge of the rights of parliament could not but say that it falls within the four corners of the statement of Judge Mayrand. He has, in fact, questioned my right to speak in this House. That is what I complain of.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. COSSITT—RECOGNITION DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I rose about a week ago on a point of order to request guidance from the Chair in regard to the manner in which members of this House are recognized during the question period.

I did so at that time because it was almost two months since I had been recognized for a question, and like many other members who do not sit on the front benches we are forced to indulge in the use of motions under Standing Order 43, points of order, questions of privilege and so on, in order to get our views before the House.

It is now two months today since I was last recognized by the Chair for a question, if my records are correct. If that date is wrong, I stand to be corrected, but I think it is not very far out. I would ask guidance of the Chair because—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cossitt: I have a right to finish my point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is not raising a point of order. The day after he raised this point the last time, he was in the House and was not seeking to be recognized. Since that time he has not been here. Or, if he has been here, he has not attempted to be recognized.

I am very conscientious in trying to share the question period equally. But I have no intention, regardless of how that distribution may work out on any given day, of accepting, by way of a point of order from any member who is not able to be recognized, questions with regard to it. I will be glad to send to the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) the list which I carefully maintain each day of the name of every one of his colleagues who is not able to be recognized—some of them are sitting around him right now; they were not able to be recognized yesterday or the day before. I carefully keep track of those who endeavour to be recognized and, when they are not recognized on any one day, I do everything to ensure they are recognized the following day, if they are here and if they are seeking the floor.

If the hon. member for Leeds wants to discuss this further in private I would be glad to show to him his own record of attendance and his own record of effort to be recognized, and he will have the opportunity to compare that record with the remarks he has made. However, I have no intention of allowing a point of order every time an hon. member cannot share in the question period. To do so, in my opinion, would grossly and unfairly hold up the proceedings of the House on matters over which the Chair has absolutely no control. I do not propose to hear further from the hon. member on this point, but if he wishes to discuss the matter privately I am prepared to do this with him.

Mr. Cossitt: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The tabling of documents.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Cossitt: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO LIMIT SECOND READING DEBATE ON INCOME TAX BILL

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 75C, I wish to advise the House that the representatives of parties have been unable to reach agreement under Standing Order 75A or 75B on the allotment of time on second reading of Bill C-56, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions.

Therefore I wish to give notice that the minister will move, at the next sitting of the House, that one additional day be allocated to the second reading stage of the said bill.

FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

1978 CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERIM AGREEMENT ON FISHERIES—REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like the consent of the House to move a motion authorizing the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry to hold two meetings this week on the interim fisheries agreement.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I would certainly give my agreement on condition that, should developments occur which would warrant more than two meetings, further meetings could be held. We have just heard we are to have one more day for the debate on Bill C-56. Now we are to be allowed just two meetings of the fisheries committee to deal with a most important matter. If circumstances warrant, I do hope that there will be flexibility on the government side too.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House give its consent for the presentation of the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to hold not more than two meetings on Tuesday, June 6, and Thursday, June 8, 1978, to hear witnesses on the subject of the 1978 United States-Canada interim agreement on fisheries.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEBT

Question No. 1,309—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. On July 1, 1867, was Canada in debt and, if so (a) in what amount (b) what did the debt consist of (c) who were the creditors?

2. What percentage of the Budget was appropriated to the service of the debt?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. As at July 1, 1867 the total liabilities of the federal government amounted to $93 million, the excess of liabilities over recorded assets amounted to $75.7 million. The first Public Accounts statement was for fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, at which time the debt consisted mainly of debentures of Canada and the provinces. The distribution of the debt outstanding is not available through the Public Accounts of Canada.

2. Not applicable.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Question No. 1,310—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. On March 31, 1914, was Canada in debt and, if so (a) in what amount (b) who were the creditors?

2. What was the amount owing to (a) chartered banks (b) taxpayers?

3. What percentage of the budget was appropriated to the debt?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. As of March 31, 1914 the total liabilities of the federal government amounted to $544.4 million, the excess of liabilities over recorded assets amounted to $336.0 million. The distribution of the debt outstanding is not available through the Public Accounts of Canada.

2. As noted above distribution of the debt outstanding is not available through the Public Accounts of Canada.

3. Gross public debt charges for fiscal year ending March 31, 1914 were equal to 7.0 per cent of budgetary expenditures, public debt charges net of return on investments were equal to 5.9 per cent of budgetary expenditures.

Question No. 1,311—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. On March 31, 1939, was Canada in debt and, if so (a) in what amount (b) who were the creditors (c) what was the average interest rate?

2. What percentage of the budget was appropriated to the debt?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. As at March 31, 1939 the total liabilities of the federal government amounted to $3,711 million, the excess of liabilities over recorded assets amounted to $3,153 million. The distribution of the debt outstanding is not available through the Public Accounts of Canada. The average interest rate on the unmatured debt was 3.52 per cent.

2. Public debt charges for fiscal year ending March 31, 1939 were equal to 24.1 per cent of budgetary expenditures.

Question No. 1,312—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. On March 31, 1968, was Canada in debt and, if so (a) in what amount (b) to whom (c) what was the average interest rate?

2. What percentage of the debt was owed to (a) taxpayers (b) chartered banks?

3. What percentage of the estimates was allocated to the debt?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. As at March 31, 1968 the total liabilities of the federal government amounted to $32,924 million, the excess of liabilities over recorded assets amcunted to $16,760 million. The average interest rate on the unmatured debt was 5.06 per cent.

2. The distribution of the debt outstanding is not available through the Public Accounts of Canada. However, the Bank of Canada Monthly Review (table 21) shows the following distribution of Government of Canada direct and guaranteed securities as of the end of 1967 and 1968:

	Distribution of Holdings
	Bank of Canada	Chartered Banks	General Public (Estimated) Residents	Non-Residents
	($ Millions)
1967	3,807	4,630	12,065	695
1968	3,942	5,573	12,099	958

3. Gross public debt charges for fiscal year ending March 31, 1968 were equal to 12.9 per cent of budgetary expenditures, public debt charges net of return on investments were equal to 6.7 per cent of budgetary expenditures.

Question No. 1,313—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. On March 31, 1977, was Canada in debt and, if so (a) in what amount (b) to whom (c) what was the average interest rate?

2. What percentage of the debt was owed to (a) taxpayers (b) chartered banks?

3. What percentage of the estimates was allocated to the debt?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. As at March 31, 1977 the total liabilities of the federal government amounted to $67,075 million, the excess of liabilities over recorded assets amounted to $29,586 million. The average interest rate on the unmatured debt was 7.53 per cent.

2. The distribution of the debt outstanding is not available through the Public Accounts of Canada. However, the Bank of Canada Monthly Review (Table 21) shows the following distribution of Government of Canada direct and guaranteed securities as of March 31, 1977:

	($ Millions)
Bank of Canada	8,665
Chartered Banks	8,603
General Public (Estimated)
Residents	22,670
Non-Residents	2,293

3. Gross public debt charges for fiscal year ending March 31, 1977 were equal to 12.1 per cent of budgetary expenditures, public debt charges net of return on investments were equal to 5.7 per cent of budgetary expenditures.

PSC—OFFICIAL LANGUAGES' TRAINING IN N.B.

Question No. 1,482—Mr. Howie:

Did the government make any payments to the province of New Brunswick for second language training of federal public servants and, if so, what was the amount?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: The Public Service Commission has up to now reimbursed the province of New Brunswick in the amount of $202,737.70 for the period between April 1, 1977 to February 28, 1978, for second language training of federal public servants under the terms of the existing contract, which was due to expire on March 31, 1978. The above sum is for services rendered between April, 1977 and February, 1978. Still to come under the same contract which has now been extended from March 31, 1978 to June 30, 1978, will be an estimated amount of $88,000 for the four months remaining (i.e. March, April, May and June, 1978).

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BAKER (GRENVILLE-CARLETON)—RECOGNITION OF HON. MEMBER FOR LEEDS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, just a few moments ago the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) attempted to get the floor on a question of privilege. He was not recognized by the Chair. That may have been in some anticipation of what the hon. member for Leeds intended to raise but, as I understand it, a member is entitled to rise on what he believes is a question of privilege. It is, of course, the responsibility of the Chair to say to the hon. member that what he raises is not a question of privilege or that he is mistaken, but I hope we are not adopting the practice of anticipating questions of privilege.

I merely rise to support the right of any hon. member—and I would do so whether it was the hon. member for Leeds or anyone else—to raise a question of privilege, even if it might be regarded in the eyes of some as a frivolous question of privilege. An hon. member still has the right, as I have always understood the rules—and I could be wrong—to raise a question of privilege, and this takes precedence over other matters. I merely want to raise this matter as a caveat. I suppose that is the best way to put it, sir.

Mr. Speaker: I made the assumption from the chair that the question of privilege to be raised by the hon. member was directly connected with his point of order, which I said was not a point of order. If I am mistaken in that, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) is welcome to the floor now.

PRIVILEGE

MR. COSSITT—ALLEGATION RESPECTING ATTITUDE OF CHAIR

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to do anything which would go beyond the rules of the House in raising a question of privilege. I intended to say that I felt that one aspect of this matter was a question of privilege, namely, that if my right to ask questions in the House is being interfered with, my privileges are being interfered with. I therefore accept Your Honour's suggestion that we confer on the matter but not having been permitted a question in the House for two months, I feel that that in some way reflects on my privileges as a member of parliament and makes me wonder what purpose might be served by continuing in this place if the attitude of the Chair continues to be exercised against me.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member is going to discuss the matter, he must put it on an accurate basis. To describe it accurately, what he should indicate is that on a number of occasions during whatever period it is in which he may have been in the House and attempting to be recognized, he was not. That is quite different from failing to be recognized for a two-month period. However, I keep a very careful record. When a member attempts to be recognized I carry it forward, and on a day on which a member who has for the second time not been recognized, under almost any circumstances and being given precedence over any of his colleagues, he is given the floor at some time or another during the question period. That is within certain limitations, of course, depending on the subject matter on any day.

However, the hon. member will want to address himself to the situation, for example, which arose today toward the end of the question period when, although the hon. member might have been scheduled for recognition toward the end of the question period, his leader and his House leader sought the floor. That is a situation which arises quite frequently. I do not say that in any prejudicial way, obviously, but when that happens, it is not easy to carry on with a plan I may have set out at the original part of the question period.

A priority must obviously be accorded to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and to the hon. member's House leader. I think that is only appropriate. Therefore, the mix between those who have been endeavouring to get recognized can be complicated when, on a day on which one who had been attempting to get recognized on a previous day is scheduled for recognition, something like that happens at the end of the question period.

In addition, I can say that some of the hon. member's colleagues who were recognized today were attempting to get recognized, yesterday or the day before, and that is a list which I do keep. Certainly the hon. member last day, which was Friday, was not among those who were here and endeavouring to get recognized. That is a factor which ought to be noted. I am prepared to discuss that with any hon. member at any time privately, as I think it ought to be done.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before we proceed to the main order of the day, I should like to indicate that there have been some discussions amongst the parties about speaking time today. In view of the fact that we have lost some time already and that many hon. members would like to take part in the debate, I believe Your Honour will find that there is agreement amongst all parties that no one should ask for or be given any extended time.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—MOVEMENT OF GRAIN

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government has failed to expand Canada's capacity to move grain to export position thereby jeopardizing the Canadian Wheat Board's ability to compete successfully for expanding grain sales opportunities, and has failed to implement fully the major recommendations of the Hall commission report, and this House therefore calls on the government to take the following action:

(a) to implement the Hall commission recommendations to maintain the statutory grain rates for producers and pay directly to the railroads the actual difference between statutory and compensatory rates for grain transport;

(b) to implement the Hall commission recommendations on economic development by extending the statutory freight rate to other commodities in the prairies and to other regions;

(c) to require the railways to purchase four thousand hopper cars and to repair and return a minimum of five thousand box cars to grain movement;

(d) to reimburse the Canadian Wheat Board for costs of demurrage charges on ships delayed in loading through no fault of the producers or grain companies;

(e) to increase immediately and substantially the amount of grain to be moved through the ports of Prince Rupert and Churchill; and

(f) to strengthen the principles of orderly marketing by returning the marketing of feed grains to the sole jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board and to include as well the marketing of flax, rye and rapeseed under the said board.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will recall that proceedings on this motion will expire at the ordinary hour of adjournment later this day, in accordance with Standing Order 58(11).

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I have tried to make this motion an all-encompassing one. Your Honour probably realized that when reading it. I will not belabour the House with that again. However, I want to deal with the motion section by section. I want to begin by saying, for the benefit of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), who is in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, that all sides of this House have always approved of the acquisition of hopper cars. It has received the support not just of members of parliament but also of grain organizations, grain producers and, I think, the public generally.

We recognize and applaud the amount of grain that is being moved, and that we may obtain a record grain movement, or close to it, this year. We say thank you. We will even give some credit to the minister. I hope he will not use up any time in his speech repeating what he has been saying to us in this House ad nauseam, and what we already know.

I want the minister and the government to address themselves, in spite of the fact that the taxpayers of Canada have provided 8,000 hopper cars since 1972, to the fact that our capacity to move grain by rail is less now than it was prior to the time we started providing hopper cars for the railroads.

The Minister of Transport, the government, this House, and the people of Canada have been misused and abused by the two national railway companies. In 1972 there were in excess of 26,000 railway cars available for grain movement. Since then we have provided 8,000 hopper cars, which is equivalent to 12,000 boxcars in grain movement; while the railways have taken 13,000 cars out of grain service; half of what there was in 1972. In other words, our capacity for moving grain by rail is not only no greater than what it was before we started supplying hopper cars but, I submit, our capacity is reduced. We have not increased the capacity of the grain handling system so far as rail transportation is concerned. We have not increased it to meet the expanded grain export objectives that the minister wants, the Wheat Board wants, and all of us want.

Why is there a backlog of 17 ships waiting to be loaded in Vancouver again this week? There is certainly no bottleneck in our country elevator system, and certainly our efficient farmers cannot be blamed for it. There is certainly no backlog in terms of the job which the Canadian Wheat Board is doing. It is doing the best job it can possibly do in the circumstances under which it has to operate, and the farmer-owned grain terminals are doing the best job they can, particularly on the west coast. In fact, west coast terminals could handle more grain to fill the boats than they are getting if the railroads were not dragging their feet.

I am sure the minister will tell us of the number of cars loaded and unloaded at Vancouver in March, April, and May. These are pretty good figures, but all they are doing is making up what they did not get done in November, December, January, and February. There are not enough railway cars to move the grain that we need in order to reduce, if not eliminate, the amount of time the ships wait in the ports. I do not suppose we could ever totally eliminate the waiting, but we could certainly substantially reduce it, this in spite of the fact that the taxpayers have provided the railways with 8,000 hopper cars.

As the federal government buys hopper cars for grain movement, the railways phase out their boxcars, so our capacity to move grain has not increased. We have "been had" by our two major railways, one publicly owned and one privately owned, and they are both guilty.

I will give you the exact figures, Mr. Speaker. Over 26,000 cars were available for grain movement at the end of 1972. By April of this year the number dropped to 15,200. By July 1 it will drop even further to 13,319 as a result of more cars which the railroads will remove from the grain service, which they are doing right at this moment.

By the end of this year the number of boxcars which the railroads have will be reduced to 12,083, and the projection of the railroads is that by 1981 they will only have 6,000 boxcars in grain movement. That might be a good deal for the railroads, but it is no bargain for the taxpayers, no bargain for the farmers, and certainly no bargain for the people who wish to buy our grain. What we need is a lot more control over the railroads to require them to provide adequate service.

The railroads cannot justify this, and I hope the minister will agree, because not only am I saying it but so are others outside of this place. The railways cannot justify refusing to supply adequate service to the grain industry because they claim to lose money on hauling grain. They, as utilities, are expected to provide service to all customers and to make money on an over-all basis. The valuable concessions and the large amounts of money, including the land grants that were given to the railroads at the beginning and the funds that have been given to them since then, are in exchange for the obligation that the railroads have to maintain sufficient rolling stock and locomotive power to meet the requirements of transportation in this country.

I hope the minister will not again try to make the excuse for the railroads that, because they are losing money on the movement of grain, they evade an obligation which they have to this country. It is not an excuse that we or anyone else can accept. We have provided tax write-off improvements in the last budget for the railroads, an additional 6 per cent on their rolling stock so that they can increase the amount of rolling stock they have.

What do the railroads do? Canadian Pacific Limited can spend $20 million on buying Syracuse China Corporation, in Syracuse, New York. Why did the minister or somebody else not direct them to put that $20 million into the purchase of more rolling stock? According to CPR's own statement, they are going to spend $50 million repairing 6,000 railway cars, but none of those cars are for grain movement. The minister is aware of this as much as I am or anyone else is.

I want to say that this does not apply to grain cars only. This is not a new problem. In 1947 there was a shortage of railway cars to move grain, but there was also, and there is still now, a shortage of stock cars. The hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) can tell you about that. The problem is chronic and continuous. In fact, when I attempted to move a motion under Standing Order 26, in ruling out the motion you said, Mr. Speaker, that the situation was chronic rather than acute, and you were perfectly right, sir.

Every year there are not enough cars to move potatoes out of the Atlantic provinces, not enough cars to move lumber out of British Columbia or northern Ontario, not enough stock cars to move livestock, and, most of all, not enough cars to move grain.

We say in our motion that the government has failed to expand Canada's capacity to move grain to export position, and while I recognize the contribution that the government and the people of Canada have made in their efforts to increase that capacity, it has been subverted and nullified by the actions of the railways, because the minister and his government have failed to prevent the railroads from taking the wrong actions, and the minister and the government have thereby failed to expand our capacity, and that jeopardizes the ability of the Canadian Wheat Board to compete successfully and to expand our grain sales opportunities.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture is predicting that China in particular, and possibly the Soviet Union, will want additional grain over and above their present contracts, and the U.S. questions Canada's capacity to apply for, and successfully get, additional contracts because of the record of our railroads in the movement of grain.

We say in our motion that the minister and the government have failed to implement fully the major recommendations of the Hall commission report. I hate to say this because I do not mean it personally about the minister, but he is giving failure a bad name. If he will act upon the six items that we list in our motion, and if he will act on two or three others that I know my colleagues in my party and my colleagues to my right in the official opposition will point out, he will have the full support of this House. It will cost money, it will not be easy, and it will certainly require the government and parliament to make the two railroads perform better.

First, the minister should implement the recommendations of the Hall commission to maintain the statutory grain rates for producers and to pay directly to the railroads the actual difference between statutory and compensatory rates for grain transport. The minister bandied around the figure of $200 million to $250 million a year in the debate on this subject which took place approximately two or three weeks ago. I imagine he arrived at those figures by basing them on what Mr. Snavely recommended.

● (1552)

On behalf of my colleagues, I should like to indicate that what Mr. Snavely recommended was ridiculous and overly generous. Mr. Snavely proposed to build into compensatory rates for the railroads a 30 per cent return on equity investment or 20 per cent on the cost of capital. No self-respecting businessman or banker would ever talk in terms of a return of that nature. Not only is it greedy, but it is unconscionable. It sounds like something Household Finance or the lovey-dovey finance company would want. It is not a compensatory rate, it is a gift. The minister does not need to rely on the recommendations of Mr. Snavely in that regard.

If the Snavely formula were adopted, the railroads would receive 15 per cent more for hauling grain on an average than they would for hauling non-competitive other bulk commodities in the west. They would receive 27 per cent more per ton mile for hauling grain than they would receive on the average for hauling all other commodities in western Canada. I hope the minister is not considering allowing a compensatory rate for the grain companies on the basis of what Mr. Snavely recommends.

In our motion we refer to the actual difference between statutory and compensatory rates for grain transport which should be paid directly to the railroads. Paragraph (b) reads as follows:

to implement the Hall commission recommendations on economic development by extending the statutory freight rate to other commodities in the prairies and to other regions;

Particularly we are referring to the Atlantic region. Then the same principle should apply. It takes into account our geography and climate. It takes into account where we can produce, manufacture, and process commodities in our respective regions. It takes into account the markets of the world and the need for an opportunity to compete in those markets.

Paragraph (c) is a follow up to paragraph (a). I hope the minister will take this paragraph into account. It reads as follows:

to require the railways to purchase 4,000 hopper cars and to repair and return a minimum of 5,000 box cars to grain movement;

We all know of the removal of thousands of boxcars from grain movement by the railroads, many of which were scrapped. Some of them were repaired and put into the movement of other kinds of merchandises such as furniture, newsprint or whatever. The minister was had. As and when hopper cars came on stream, railroads moved boxcars normally used for the movement of grain into the movement of other commodities. That was not good corporate citizenship on the part of CP or CN.

As the Premier of Saskatchewan and I have said, railroads cannot justify refusing to supply adequate service to the grain industry because they claim to be losing money. After the gifts, concessions, subsidies, funds and assistance from the federal government, as well as from the provinces and municipalities, they have no excuse.

Paragraph (d) reads as follows:

to reimburse the Canadian Wheat Board for costs of demurrage charges on ships delayed in loading through no fault of the producers or grain companies;

Since our grain exports, whether a record or a near record is set, are of benefit to the nation as a whole, and do wonders for our foreign exchange situation, our balance of payments, and our export situation, surely that paragraph in our motion is reasonable. Since grain exports are of benefit to the entire nation, surely the nation as a whole should pay this cost which is incurred through no fault of grain producers or grain companies. Not only are ships being delayed because of the inadequate number of railway cars, they are being delayed because of the inadequate use of facilities already in place. This morning I had a telephone conversation with the manager of a grain terminal in Vancouver. That terminal is cleaning and drying grain 24 hours a day. Also 16 hours a day are being spent unloading cars and loading ships.

The prairie provinces have five government elevators with a capacity of 17,100,000 bushels. As of today, slightly under four million bushels are stored in those terminals at Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Calgary, and Lethbridge. Those five government elevators could be drying 50 to 100 carloads of grain a day. That grain could be delivered to Vancouver and would be ready for onship loading, unless it had to be cleaned.

In any case, there are facilities in the prairies which are not being used.

Mr. Justice Hall and his commission recommended the abolition of stopoff charges. Grain companies are not anxious to pay extra charges to stop cars off at Moose Jaw, Saskatoon or Edmonton. These charges, of course, come out of the pockets of farmers. They are not anxious to unload the grain at those points, dry it and reload it. Thus the grain is sent on to their own terminals which have limited drying capacity. At the moment large volumes of tough grain are arriving in Vancouver where it has to be dried before being loaded on to ships. Approximately 10 per cent or 15 per cent can be mixed with dry grain, but the rest of it is delayed in the terminals for the purpose of drying. The capacity for drying at the government elevators is not being used. I hope the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will have something to say about that matter before this day is over.

Paragraph (e) of my motion reads as follows:

to increase immediately and substantially the amount of grain to be moved through the ports of Prince Rupert and Churchill;

For years we have known that the amount of grain going through Prince Rupert could be doubled with the existing facilities in trackage, storage space, loading and unloading capacities. The CN line to Prince Rupert is being used to about a 25 per cent capacity. Why are we not diverting some ships from Vancouver to Prince Rupert? Why are we not diverting rail cars of grain to Prince Rupert which are otherwise destined for Vancouver? A similar argument can be made in respect of Churchill. With the present facilities, the movement of grain through Churchill could be increased by at least five million bushels. The capacity at Prince Rupert could be increased by at least 20 million bushels with its existing facilities.

Why are not the Vancouver terminals operating three shifts a day, seven days a week? If that were done, those terminals would be faced with the same situation which occurred three or four years ago. The minister knows about that situation, as does the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and myself. If the terminals called in shifts to work at midnight, enough cars are spotted to keep them working two or three hours, and then the workers must be sent home. Three shifts a day for several days a week are not feasible, unless and until a sufficient number of railway cars are spotted to keep them working.

I give credit to the minister, the government, the grain companies, and the Canadian Wheat Board for the efforts which have been made to date. But we are not keeping up, and we will not be able to make further gains unless the government or the minister requires the railroads to carry out the responsibilities and obligations that belong to them and to no one else.

I never thought for one moment that the railroads would use the provision of hopper cars as a means of reducing their own efforts. It was my belief they would remain good corporate citizens and carry on to the capacity they had before we started providing hopper cars. I am not aware of any purchases by the railroads of rolling stock for grain movement as a result of the new budget provisions. I know of no railway funds that are to go into the purchase of cars for hauling grain.

When I mentioned this chronic shortage of rolling stock for a number of commodities, and the minister knows this as well as I, I had in mind that hopper cars for grain had helped the situation, but there was also a problem in respect of a shortage of hopper cars for the movement of potash. At one point in time the railways were running a thousand cars per month behind for the movement for potash.

On the other hand we have heard reports, and one or two of my colleagues will be going into this in greater detail, that hopper cars suitable for the movement of potash are sitting idly on sidings. They could be cleaned and used for grain. Many of these cars are owned by private companies for leasing. The minister should give the Canadian Wheat Board the money to clean these cars up and put them into the movement of grain. We have only one and a half months left of this crop year in which the minister can take further action.

If the projections of the United States Department of Agriculture are accurate, we are going to be in real trouble by November. That country will be picking up additional sales that we could otherwise have obtained if we had increased our capacity to move grain by rail.

I have tried not to harp at or nag the minister on the subject of arguments we have had on many other occasions. We have tried in this motion to make some positive proposals and suggestions. We have said to him that we support his efforts, the efforts of the government and of the Canadian Wheat Board, particularly in the provision of hopper cars and the job the Board has done in obtaining grain sales. Surely the minister should listen to and accept what we are saying in a positive manner about increasing our ability to transport grain to our export positions. This really should be done by the railroads.

The situation would improve if the minister implemented the Hall commission recommendations regarding rates. Never mind buying all the recommendations of Snavely. This would not cost much more, and perhaps not as much as it is presently costing the government in the purchase of hopper cars, as well as the funding for other purposes. By implementing the Hall recommendations the railroads would be required not only to purchase the rolling stock and repair what they now have, it would require them to do their own rebuilding of the branch lines, instead of the taxpayer having to put up the money in a different way. Given the difference between the statutory rate and a reasonable compensatory rate, they could be required to do the job which, after all, is theirs to do. It is not up to the minister or an agency such as the Canadian Wheat Board to bail the railroads out of trouble continually, while the railroads run off into other more lucrative fields, both in and outside this country.

It is time we required the railroads to accept their responsibilities and carry out their obligations. They have been unfair to the Minister of Transport, who is also in charge of the Wheat Board. They have misused and abused him, as well as the grain producers of this country. They have misused and abused the Canadian Wheat Board. They have placed our dealings with nations which are considering buying more grain from us in jeopardy. Surely it is time for the minister and the government to kick those two outfits around and make them produce. If the minister does that he will have the support of members on all sides of this House, as well as of the farmers, farm organizations, and the Canadian Wheat Board.

An hon. Member: And even the NFU.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, and even the NFU. They might even starting talking again.

I appreciate that the final paragraph of this motion contains a bone of contention so far as this party, the government, and the official opposition are concerned. However, if the minister would accept and implement the other points, this would improve the situation immensely.

I hope the minister will accept my suggestions to increase grain movement capacity. In this way the terminals in Vancouver would receive less tough grain because more of it would be dried in government elevators on the prairies. We could enable the terminals to go on three shifts a day, six or seven days a week, unloading grain cars and loading ships. Some of the ships could be diverted to Prince Rupert where they could be loaded. I am sure some of this would not make the Wheat Pools and the grain companies happy, but that is just too bad. We have to get the job done. I hope the minister will accept and consider these positive and objective proposals, and will act accordingly. He does not have much time. We have been arguing about this since last November.

The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) made an announcement last Friday that there is to be a special investigation into grain movement. I do not know why the minister did not make the announcement. Good God, how many more do we need? The minister has access to more figures than do I, and he knows the ones I have given him. He does not need another investigation. I hope he will take hold of this in a stronger way than he has in the past. He need not argue with myself or the hon. member for Vegreville. He can, if he wishes, and we will enjoy it. He should get into a winning fight with management, the board of directors and the operating personnel of the railroads so that we can accomplish what we are aiming for in the motion.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to begin by dealing with one of the last paragraphs included in the motion of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) because it does not really fit consistently with the picture created by the other parts of his recommendations dealing with transportation and the Hall commission report. I refer to his suggestion that marketing of certain feed grains rapeseed, flax, and rye, be placed under the board.

When referring to this paragraph the hon. member acknowledged that he was reaching a little beyond the scope of the rest of his motion. He said it probably would not sit very well with the government or the official opposition, at which point the critic of the official opposition across the floor was heard to say "nor with the farmers". This is because included in the motion is a reference to rapeseed, in respect of which a plebiscite was held among farmers to determine their wishes. In allowing rapeseed to be marketed as it had been marketed before the plebiscite, we are simply following the expressed wishes of the farmers. At the very most I might have thought the hon. member would suggest that the time was ripe for further consultation with the farmers, rather than simply to presume to override their wishes recently expressed in a plebiscite.

I was delighted to get the advice from the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre that I should not refer to the fact that we are having a record year for export, with improved prospects for meeting the transportation challenge with which we are faced at the present time. I am sure he would like me to avoid any reference to that, because for some days he and some of his negative friends have managed to leave the impression about the country that everything is in a disastrous state. The fact of a record being moved does not exactly fit into that picture, so he would prefer me to be silent about it.

● (1612)

In the same way, the second last paragraph of the motion contains the following suggestion:

to increase immediately and substantially the amount of grain to be moved through the ports of Prince Rupert and Churchill:

I presume he includes that paragraph by way of congratulations to the government for doing exactly that, although being in the New Democratic Party it would not be his ordinary practice to extend congratulations—so he puts it in the negative form.

Just today a telegram came to my hand from Dr. Hick, chairman of the grain co-ordinating committee in Prince Rupert containing congratulations for the government. He says that our continued commitment to the port is much appreciated, and he notes a tremendous volume of grain being moved through Prince Rupert this year.

In the same way I have said to the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith)—who continues to sound off negatively about that port when he asks questions with dismay—that once again this year, and likely for the third year in a row, we will notch up the amount of grain moving through Churchill. It may not seem to be a great deal when we just edge up the volume, but it means that in each of these last three years, and this year again, I predict, if things go at all half decently, we will set another record in Churchill. That will be the third record in a row.

In the case of Churchill, previous to this we have announced various expenditures of $5 million to $7 million for improving to capacity the state of the elevator and the state of the harbour, in our continued commitment to the port. We have also announced, as part of our rebuilding program of rail lines, the commitment of the money to add a couple of sidings to the Herchmer subdivision and, in effect, to increase greatly the capacity of that line to carry grain to Churchill. This would mean that we could go after a further record in the following years, although the construction itself will take some time.

There we have our commitment and our constant improvements in the way in which we use these two important northern ports.

In Prince Rupert, of course, in addition to setting very high levels of exports this year, we have indicated our willingness to support, financially, the improvements in the port. My colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), is at work on improvements to the existing grain terminal there to increase its capacity and ability to handle grain. Along with a variety of elevator companies, we are hoping to be in a position to ensure the construction of a major additional terminal facility in the port of Prince Rupert designed to handle the increased volume of grain which we see, in our optimism, in the years ahead.

I say in our optimism, Mr. Speaker, because when I say that this is a record year for the movement of grain into export, and that we expect to set another record and surpass the other two times in our history when we exceeded 800 million bushels of exports of grain and grain products, the significance is not just in the fact that it is a record on its own, but that in this volume of 810 million to 850 million bushels of grain—and with the lower figure plus grain products—we are moving into export effectively more than a mere record or record crop or the part of that crop which is available for export.

In 1976 and in 1977 prairie grain farmers produced the best two crops in our history, yet with the 1977 crop which is close to the record of 1976, when we export 800 to 850 million bushels, we will be moving the whole of the available grain from that crop plus a significant amount from the previous crop, and that was available because it also was such a record.

I am optimistic about the future, and about these production levels being repeated more frequently and not simply standing as records for a long time. For that reason we want to build and expand the system. We will be looking to every technique we know to improve the system and its capability of handling grain to export.

The development of Prince Rupert, eventually to be able to handle perhaps 150 million bushels of grain in a year by 1982, in my view is consistent with a target of perhaps one billion bushels of export within a year or so of that time.

The problem we have in finding enough equipment and terminal capacity to handle grain is the problem of finding that capacity when we are moving an amount we never moved before. How much capacity should we have on hand to move a crop or handle a product? I know that no one would be satisfied if we only had enough capacity to move an average crop in a year. That would mean that any year we were above average we would be restrained from seizing markets by moving that additional production.

It is also obvious that as you have capacity, whether in railway cars, freight lines or terminals, to move more than the average amount of grain being produced, then you have some of that equipment sitting idle in a certain and significant number of years. The economic question that always has to be asked is how much we should have on hand, and how much we should be able to move. The point is that in receiving from producers, perhaps for the first time in history, one billion bushels of grain, we are testing the system to the full.

As the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre said, a great deal of the credit for the fact that we are testing the system goes to the Canadian Wheat Board. I was happy that he gave some credit to the government. I think it is deserved in terms of the credit facilities provided and the encouragement given to the Wheat Board to go out and sell. Not long ago, Mr. Jarvis, the chief commissioner, said that one of the objectives, one of the ways of going about marketing, is to push the system to the full. The other way would have been to tailor sales to a comfortable margin of ability to handle. He said in effect they chose the route of pushing the system to the full.

I should like hon. members to know that last fall when the Canadian Wheat Board asked me about their willingness and desire to go in that direction, I was full of encouragement even though I knew there would likely be tightness in the system and problems of ships waiting, as there have been in years gone by when less grain was moved.

Not long ago I saw a clipping dated February, 1961, when the Conservative party was in power. In those years we never got close to 500 million bushels of exports, yet this clipping bemoaned the fact that great numbers of ships were in Vancouver waiting to load.

This negativism on the part of hon. members is unfortunate for the country as a whole. I am sure it sometimes leaves a bad impression in the minds of our buyers. Perhaps it should be put into the context that the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool put it in during a radio report not long ago. They pointed out that the fact of ships waiting is not an uncommon thing in the world of shipping. On May 19, according to their calculations, in the gulf and in the United States nine ships were loading, and 39 ships were waiting; in Argentina 45 ships were waiting in three separate ports. A waiting period of 15 to 20 days was common, according to the report. This is as long or longer than the few worst days in our recent period of ships being delayed.

Many others have explained that the world of shipping is not a regular one and that delays, and therefore demurrage, are an expected part of a rapid movement of product, particularly when we are, as now, setting a record.

We have done many things to improve the system and to improve our ability to handle grain. When those who want to be negative speak about the decline in the number of boxcars, ignoring the purchase of hopper cars which are worth one and one-half boxcars each, they are being misleading. They further ignore the fact that we have gained in efficiency by getting a better turn-around time for boxcars and hopper cars—that by appointing co-ordinators at Thunder Bay and Vancouver, by the introduction of the block shipping system, with the hopper cars themselves and their more efficient handling and breaking system, with the agreement we were finally able to work out between the railways so that cars no longer pass one another loaded, going north and south between Edmonton and Calgary but instead were exchanged by the railways at those points and went directly to port—that these things have created improvements and helped shorten the turn-around time, which means that we can handle more grain like the record we are doing this year with less equipment than would have been required a few years ago. We are not resting there.

We have a branch line rebuilding program. Obviously, in addition to creating certainty throughout the province about branch lines that will be there and in operation for many years to come, this will allow cars to be moved more quickly onto them and off them. Therefore it will again lower the amount of time to be spent by a car on that line.

● (1622)

We have mainline improvements which will likewise improve our system. Some of these are again the direct result of government action. I think particularly of the developments which are taking place on the mainline of the Canadian Pacific Railway through the Rockies. These were brought about because of budget changes which allowed faster write-off of those sorts of investments, because we could see on the analysis that was given to us that the cash flow of the railway would not have induced it to make those improvements without that change. Those changes will lower the incline of lines, improve capacity, double track the lines, and improve our chances of getting the better turnaround.

The improvements at Prince Rupert and in the Herchimer subdivision are other examples of what will expedite movement of cars.

So, the question is, how many cars should we have? There is no secret that we are looking now, as we did on three occasions in the past, at the question of when cars will be required, whether boxcars should be rehabilitated, more new hopper cars purchased, or whether we should go forward with some combination of those things.

We have the cars today to handle the 850 million-bushel record which was our target for this year. With the problems of delays during the winter, it became very tight to do that, and we may not quite achieve that total. We need more cars for the prospective movement, the prospective replacement of cars that are gradually dying because of their age, and the growth production, which I foresee and the Wheat Board and I believe in as a reality, and for which we want to provide for by investment in cars as well as terminal facilities to handle the needs of the future.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre said that we have failed to implement fully the major recommendations of the Hall commission report. Members opposite have said so many times too. I have asked them to give me a document, or to document in their speeches which recommendations it is they want us to implement faster than we have been doing, how they want them implemented and whether they want them implemented, even if the consensus of the Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta pools is against particular recommendations, and likewise the grain industry and farm organizations generally.

In that regard I refer to the question of whether to set up an operating rail authority called the prairie rail authority where we have the support of all of these organizations in not moving in that direction but instead seizing that part of the recommendation from the Hall commission report to create a western arm of the Canadian Transport Commission to deal with future branch lines and the conditions under which the railways will operate them. So far as I know, every significant farm organization in the west supports that course of action and supports the setting up of the prairie rail action committee because what the railways wanted, what the farm community needed was certainty about that remaining 2,000 miles of line which were left uncertain as to their long-term future by the Hall commission report.

We have implemented the major recommendations. We have transferred to the basic rail network the 1,813 miles recommended by the commission. Not a mile has been changed in that regard. We then moved immediately to begin the rebuilding of those lines.

Here I would like to refer to a few other recommendations, and the only ones to which the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre refers. He says that we have failed to implement the Hall commission report by—what does he say—not taking the following action: He wants us to take this action and says, "Implement the Hall commission report and the recommendation to maintain the statutory grain rates for producers". We have done so. We have maintained the statutory grain rate for producers. Then he says, "and pay directly to the railways the difference between the statutory and compensatory rates". In saying that we have one authority on what that difference was, and that was the Snavely report. He immediately rushes forward and says that he does not think we should rely on that. We presumably need another analysis and another report to satisfy him. I am not altogether sure that I would go along with the final figures of the Snavely report either, particularly because the Snavely report itself points out a couple of areas where serious judgment would have to be exercised.

I agree with the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre that the appropriate return on capital would have to be looked at very carefully in any final analysis. The member for Regina-Lake Centre wants us and urges us to pay the difference to the railways. He says that he does not know what the difference is, but we should pay it. If we did pay it and had paid it quickly, he would have screamed "gift" from one end of the country to the other. But he says pay the difference to the railways, if we can figure out what it is.

What did we do? We moved on two specific fronts first, in the purchase of hopper cars with the provision of $255 million worth of railway equipment for moving grain; secondly in a repair program for rebuilding cars a couple of years ago, which he may ignore; and now in the specific program of rebuilding branch lines where there can be no argument about whether this is too much or not enough for the railways. In 1977-1978 we put in $100 million for rebuilding. We had a full and detailed agreement which specified the equipment which was to be purchased with that money, $47 million worth. Why? Because the railways needed more ballast cars to carry the gravel and crushed rock. They needed more equipment such as the sleds to lift the lines, and more dump cars, in other words, more of the equipment than they had to rebuild the lines because of course the regular rebuilding and repair programs had to go on. As well there were $53 million dollars more for specific and on-line improvements such as you now see on the Conquest subdivision through Beechy and Lucky Lake in Saskatchewan which, in the next few years, we will see in terms of ballast and improved road beds and improved lines throughout the prairie region. Some $75 million a year has now been committed through the railways for that very specific purpose. Dollar for dollar we are getting value in improved rail lines.

Whether the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre could argue that we are giving the railways too much if we adopted the Snavely report, or not enough if we adopted another figure, I say to him that at least he should be able to accept that when we are buying hopper cars, which he agrees are needed—he, unlike Mr. Hall in a recent news report, agreed that buying hopper cars was a good thing and still is a good thing—whether we give the $100 million to the railways and then demand they buy hopper cars and make them available to the railway, this is not a matter of great fiscal moment nor a moment too soon in regard to the handling of our grain.

It is the purchasing and acquiring of that equipment which is important. At least when we put our money into the hopper cars and make sure that every dollar goes into them, and we put our money into the rebuilding of branch lines and make sure every dollar goes into them, there can hardly be an argument that a dollar is being misspent and benefiting the railways unduly.

I calculate that today even taking a fairly modest view of the Snavely figures, it would require, taking the 1974 figures and updating them, something over $100 million a year in addition to the branch line subsidy amount to compensate the railways for moving grain. We are providing $70 million this year and $75 million next year for cash for branch line rebuilding. Surely hon. members opposite would not want that program to go more slowly. Indeed, the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) said at one point it should go more quickly. The unions which were to be working on that repair program urged me to take just that kind of time over it. They do not want to see a great surge of building and then idle capacity while rebuilding lines, which would occur if you build and rebuild them in a hurry. It does not make economic sense to rush in that fashion.

● (1632)

What we have been doing is identifying lines. I could go through the lists of the hundreds of thousands of miles of line which are going to be improved throughout Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Manitoba during the course of 1978, and identify the additional schedules for the years to come.

Therefore, in effect we maintain the Crow rate. We have paid to the railways a very large part of the difference between that rate and the cost of carrying grain through our hopper car purchase programs, our rebuilding programs, and by our indication of our belief in going in that direction and making sure that the grain handling system is in order.

The hon. member says the next thing we should do in the Hall commission report is to implement the recommendation on economic development by extending the statutory freight rate to other commodities in the prairies. He does add "and to other regions".

The Crow rate is a traditional rate of the prairie farmer. I have always seen it as a classic offset against the tariff system, which has not helped him but hurt him in his costs, while he sells in an international world. I have said time and again that I would fight to maintain the benefit of the Crow rate for the prairie farmer so long at least as the tariff system exists.

I think, and farm leaders seem to agree with me, that if we can move toward freer trade, there would be a bargain one could strike, and the Crow rate would be thrown into that bargain because the farmer would be much better off by freer trade than he is from the benefit of the Crow. That aside, since we are a long way from that by any sign in the world and where it is going, the Crow rate is a traditional benefit. It now represents in today's cost terms approximately $200 million in this year, $200 million that has to be supplied, even according to Hall, and endorsed by members opposite, to the railways or through the railways by the government.

That is the $100 million I referred to earlier, plus the branch line subsidies, which is effectively part and parcel of the same program. That $200 million a year commitment will be ongoing from the people of Canada in relation to the Crow rate.

The Hall commission has said, "extend that to other products." I am not sure the commission said "in other regions". Perhaps that is a little addition by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. He acknowledges it is. I am glad to see his logic, at least in being bold enough to say this.

I would like the Conservatives in their turn to analyse how far they would go in this payment of compensation in lower rates on other products. I presume that while the Crow rate applies only on grain moving to Thunder Bay, Vancouver, or the west coast for export, it would be very difficult not to extend any rate that was lowered in relation to meat and other products to the domestic market on the west coast as well as to export. It would be very hard politically not to do that.

It would be very difficult not to extend the lower rate in some other form of subsidization to anything that moved by way of truck as well as by rail or, indeed, any other method of transportation. Therefore, we would extend it to the movement of all products, at least to Thunder Bay, Vancouver and the west coast generally.

Then I would ask about whether that rate would have to be applied in some system of justice to those products moving shorter distances within the country, stopping at Edmonton, Calgary, Thunder Bay or any place in the east.

I ask the opposition as well, would they extend that lower rate on truck and rail, and then water presumably, to every movement of product, such as grain, meat and other products, wherever it is in the country, or would they defend a lower rate on meat in one region of the country and for a similar distance in another region?

If I put all of those things together, by political calculation and by political analysis of what would be required eventually because of complaints from other regions, quite justified, I would not be surprised to come up with a figure of another $200 million a year for those lower freight rates. Indeed, it could be a good deal higher than that. Therefore, we would be asking the treasury to add to the $200 million a year, of which $100 million is a brand new commitment, another $200 million.

In addition, they would defeat another recommendation of the Hall commission report which is that production should occur according to natural advantage. In taking a real cost like the freight of moving a product, and either eliminating it or lowering it, you encourage the shipment of the more bulky form of that product farther than would be the case if you leave the rates at their natural or real cost level.

The very existence of such a subsidy program would make it less likely than the reflecting of real costs through to the person shipping the product, that he compacts his barley into meat before he moves it on any great distance. The over-riding question, of course, is the cost which would be involved in doing this and the burden upon the treasury which would be built into the system. I say it will be difficult to justify this burden upon the treasury.

I know there will be spokesmen from the Conservative party who are from the west, and also from the New Democratic Party, who will say quietly that this will be a great thing and not worry too much about the question of how far they would have to extend it into other regions. As a spokesman for the official opposition, I would like the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) to make clear it is the official policy of his party. I would like to see that said by his leader some time. His leader, of course, may want to backtrack on that at a later date. He has said that he would like to have the wheat board competed with in international markets by the international traders. I am not sure whether all of his colleagues go along with him on that. He may not have known what he said, although he is an Alberta boy. In any event, I would like to know whether that is the official policy of the party. I would like to see them spell out step by step what is included. Then I would like to see them explain whether it would be an advantage or not—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the minister at this time, but his time has expired. As he knows, an order of the House was made that no extensions be given. Before recognizing the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), I might inform the House of the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment.

[Mr. Lang.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Royal Canadian Mounted Police—Payment of legal costs of member of force; the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)—National Security—Right of ministers to know how security personnel operate—Government position; the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan)—Labour Conditions—Young Canada Works program—Funds to assist students.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—MOVEMENT OF GRAIN

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Benjamin:

—That, in the opinion of this House, the government has failed to expand Canada's capacity to move grain to export position thereby jeopardizing the Canadian Wheat Board's ability to compete successfully for expanding grain sales opportunities, and has failed to implement fully the major recommendations of the Hall commission report, and this House therefore calls on the government to take the following action:

(a) to implement the Hall commission recommendations to maintain the statutory grain rates for producers and pay directly to the railroads the actual difference between statutory and compensatory rates for grain transport;

(b) to implement the Hall commission recommendations on economic development by extending the statutory freight rate to other commodities in the prairies and to other regions;

(c) to require the railways to purchase four thousand hopper cars and to repair and return a minimum of five thousand box cars to grain movement;

(d) to reimburse the Canadian Wheat Board for costs of demurrage charges on ships delayed in loading through no fault of the producers or grain companies;

(e) to increase immediately and substantially the amount of grain to be moved through the ports of Prince Rupert and Churchill; and

(f) to strengthen the principles of orderly marketing by returning the marketing of feed grains to the sole jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board and to include as well the marketing of flax, rye and rapeseed under the said board.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, we in the Progressive Conservative party welcome debate on this motion at this time. As has been pointed out by previous speakers, the motion is fairly comprehensive. It has many facets.

I have to agree with the minister when he observes that paragraph (f), which has to do with the orderly marketing and returning of marketing of feed grains to the sole jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, is really not very compatible with the thrust of the motion. I can agree with the minister's summation in that regard, but that is about as far as I can go, because once again he is attempting to leave the impression that all is well, things could be worse.

Quite frankly, I find little reason to be optimistic in listening very carefully to what the minister had to say. In spite of what he said, this debate comes at the height of a very serious and major breakdown in our grain handling and transportation capacity. Right now in the port of Vancouver we have something like 20 or more ships waiting, and ten in Thunder Bay. Our country elevator system is plugged. Producers are up in arms. We have a 35 million or 36 million bushel shortfall in our anticipated target. There is a shortage of equipment. There are severe cutbacks in the available number of boxcars and hopper cars in the country elevator system. Demurrage costs are piling up.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) seemed to lay the total blame on the railroads. The grain carrying fleet is being reduced at a dramatic pace. In addition something like 23,000 CN cars are away in the United States compared with 13,000 as a normal average over the year. These figures were given to us by the president of the Transport Commission on Thursday last. He went on to say that these cars were being used on a no-charge basis for the transportation of goods in the United States. Surely the minister has some authority over an organization which is, after all, a Crown corporation. Surely there must be some means by which these boxcars can be brought back to Canada and used to transport our grain.

● (1642)

The appointment of a tribunal to inquire immediately into certain aspects of prairie grain handling facilities by the hon. gentleman's colleague, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), contradicts what the minister has been saying. It proves that a serious problem exists. Yet the minister has the audacity to stand up here and tell us everything is fine. It is a deplorable situation, and it is well summed up in the comments made by a couple of members of the unions involved. This is what a Canadian Press report on the subject had to say:

> Canada will lose its foreign grain markets if the federal government doesn't smarten up and make sure the grain is delivered to waiting ships, Henry Kancs, head of the Grain Workers Union said Friday . . .
> Dennis McDermott, president of the Canadian Labour Congress, said in a news release that the railways have failed to deliver grain to the ports for export and that "the credibility of Canada in world grain trade is endangered and demurrage fees on ships waiting to load grain in Vancouver could approach $17 million . . ."
>
> McDermott said the federal government should not have allowed the deterioration of railway boxcar fleets.
> "The government has known for a long time there would be heavy shipments but it has done nothing to increase capacity" McDermott said, following a meeting earlier in the week of a CLC grain-handling committee.
> Kancs and McDermott said if Canada loses its export markets for grain "major ports and other sections of the grain-handling system will face major lay-offs . . ."

Those are not statements by members of the opposition. Those are not statements by people engaging in a parade of negativism. These are views expressed by people who are deeply concerned about the ability of this country to discharge its responsibilities and meet its commitments. They are anxious Canada should maintain its credibility as a reliable supplier of grain.

This situation should be considered against the background of the Liberal election promises in 1974 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised that a Liberal government would "revamp the grain handling system from the granaries to the ships in the harbour."

Today's debate comes at a time when the government must make some serious decisions about the Hall report. It must decide either to put up or shut up. It cannot continue to say that it favours the report, while at the same time subverting, twisting, and undermining the central recommendations of the report.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hall report is not only a transportation charter, it is an economic manifesto for Western Canada. It is not enough to implement some of the recommendations, those which are easy to put in place, such as rail line abandonment, those which result in reduced services for customers and pressures upon the producer. The minister should not implement the less attractive features of the report without moving toward the adoption of the entire package. I listened very carefully to the minister and found him very defensive on this subject. I heard what he had to say about the basic network. He did not come clean on this issue. I say you cannot adopt one part of the report without the other, without adopting those recommendations which tend to compensate and offset those less attractive features. The Hall recommendations must be considered as a total package.

The minister has told us the government is moving in some areas. There is no doubt that with regard to certain of the recommendations it is moving quickly, indeed with indecent haste. In this process the interests of the producers are being forgotten though the interests of the railroads and the grain companies are being given consideration. As I have indicated, a number of the recommendations are very beneficial, and it is these which the government is implementing only very slowly when it is not ignoring them entirely. Yet I believe these latter recommendations are part of a catalyst which could revolutionize grain handling and transportation.

The continual conflict between the minister and Mr. Justice Emmett Hall must be resolved. I hope that the proceedings in our committee will help bring the two parties together. In spite of the minister's kicking and screaming because he did not want Mr. Justice Hall to appear before the committee—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: I understand that the minister met with Mr. Justice Emmett Hall for the first time last Saturday, for the first time, I suspect, since the report was released more than a year ago.

There is in this country a tremendous amount of confidence in Mr. Justice Hall. He has been appointed commissioner in a contract dispute involving the western grain industry. Those people have confidence in him. The farmers have confidence in him. The people of western Canada have confidence in him. The only person who does not have confidence in him is the minister. If the hon. gentleman did feel confidence in him, Mr. Justice Hall would be free to come before the committee and state his case.

Mr. Lang: He is coming before the committee.

Mr. Mazankowski: Against the minister's wishes.

Mr. Lang: I appointed the commission.

Mr. Mazankowski: I commend the minister for that. I commend the work the commission did. They did a thorough and comprehensive job. And I wish the minister would not treat the gentleman and his colleagues with the contempt he has shown them in the past.

Many of us feel the minister has failed to grasp the real significance of these recommendations. He has told us he set out immediately to transfer those 1,800 miles to the basic network. But there are other areas which are far more important to the future of transportation and economic development in western Canada. It is about time the minister got on to the same wavelength as the authors of this report.

Now we have another commission, with a new set of recommendations. Then we have the Snavely report which, in many cases, challenges the major recommendations of the Hall report. In fact, it challenges the major recommendation regarding payment to the railways by the public treasury of the difference between the statutory rate and a fair compensatory rate. Clearly, the government will have to make up its mind as to which royal commission it is going to follow. Whose recommendations will the government adopt? I think that is very important.

No doubt Snavely is an expert in the field of freight rates, and I would be the last to argue with his findings. I understand that his statistics and figures are reasonably accurate, but his conclusions are another matter. I would much rather accept the conclusions of Mr. Hall than those of Mr. Snavely. Quite frankly, I do not believe that anyone can measure with any degree of accuracy the social and economic impact of the Crow rate and the impact of extension of that Crow rate sitting in a board room in the city of Washington.

Quite frankly, I place my credence in the recommendations of Mr. Hall. He knows the west. He has visited practically every community in western Canada. He has talked to the people, to the grain companies and to the transportation companies, and he really understands not only the problems but also the social and economic impact of any major deviation or change in the transportation system.

What has been the response of the government to the Hall recommendations? The minister has said that the government has acted decisively and quickly. I agree that in some areas it has. It has done so where it has been advantageous to the government and probably to the railways and grain handling companies. However, our analysis suggests that less than ten recommendations have been fully or partially implemented. There are some 90 recommendations in the Hall report. Fifty-eight have not been implemented at all. There has been no action on them. Statements have been made on 24. Six have been fully implemented, and four partially. That is not a very good record.

I said earlier that the minister did designate 1,813 miles into the basic network. He is proceeding with 2,165 miles of abandonment. However, with respect to the 2,344 miles put into that uncertain category there is a major deviation from the Hall report in the method which the government has adopted. There is a major deviation in the method of the government and in its timing, because we find that the minister is insisting on proceeding on the category with undue haste. I say that time is required to determine the status of these lines. Time is required to determine what kind of rationalization or consolidation will take place as far as grain-handling companies are concerned. The requirements of 1977 might be quite different from the requirements of 1985, so Mr. Justice Emmett Hall recommended a prairie rail authority which could monitor and run these lines.

I am not suggesting that a prairie rail authority would be the be all and end all, but something like that certainly is necessary. I might say that this seemed to have widespread support from grain companies and from the railways. The government has proceeded with setting up a prairie rail action committee and, quite frankly, it is moving ahead very swiftly. The minister wants the committee to report back on the status of these lines by the end of this year. There does not seem to be the kind of consultation that is necessary. The producers are frustrated and very concerned.

I have in my hand a letter from Kelwood, Manitoba. It is from a Mr. George Carr, who is the secretary-treasurer of the Neepawa-McCreary Branch Lines Association. He indicates that an official report has been received from the Railway Transport Committee regarding applications for the abandonment of certain branch lines in Manitoba. This includes the line on which two of that association's elevators are situated, the Neepawa Junction to Rossburn Junction line, 32.8 miles. Should this be implemented there would be no elevator between Neepawa and McCreary, a distance of 40 miles. Mr. Carr felt that this decision was far too abrupt. The lines association wrote to the CTC in Ottawa last August regarding some of its concerns, and the reply it received stated that no line could be closed without a public hearing. It is now found that this line is finished, and much frustation has been created. To say the least, it has been very disconcerting to the producers who are affected.

Regarding rehabilitation, Mr. Hall said that an adequate network configuration will require capital funding of about $445 million for upgrading and rehabilitation. The government responded, first, by committing $200 million, but it backed off and said that because of fiscal restraint it had to cut that back to $100 million.

That has since been supplemented by $75 million which is part of an additional $600 million program over five or ten years, I am not sure which.

Mr. Lang: Eight.

Mr. Mazankowski: The minister says it is eight years. In the meantime the railways are committing additional expenditures. CN says it will commit at least $200 million over the next five years. It should. We just wrote off $808 million by way of a bill in this House. That bill will provide CN with a profit well in excess of $200 million by 1981. CP is also proposing expenditures to upgrade and rehabilitate its lines. The budget proposals should assist, but the $600 million seems to us to be more than generous, particularly when we consider that we do not seem to have adequate commitments and safeguards, when we see the railways reducing their grain-carrying fleet, and particularly when we see we have no control over the cars that go to the United States.

This ad hoc approach that we have bothers us very much, and I think that Justice Emmett Hall may have had the right idea: pay the railways a fair return for hauling grain, and charge them with the responsibility of maintaining their track and their infrastructure. Charge them with the responsibility of providing sufficient equipment and rolling stock.

I now turn to the Crow rate and the extension of the Crow rate. These two sections are very central to the thrust of the Hall report. They are very important to western Canada. Mr. Justice Emmett Hall said that the railways must be compensated for the cost of moving grain by rail and that the railways must in turn be responsible for maintenance and upgrading of lines in the basic network or those lines subsequently added to it. Mr. Justice Hall went on to say that the present statutory rates should be retained and that the shortfall between the cost of moving grain and the statutory rates should be paid directly to the railways. The belief that the Crow rate was in the national interest—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to take part in the discussion on the motion of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). Naturally, I will not repeat all the terms of the motion and I will simply say that it concerns the lack of co-ordination among various government agencies. They are the Canadian Wheat Board, the Canadian Transportation Commission and the Canadian National Railways. These various agencies simply do not have the same objectives as concerns the economic development of our country.

The motion of my colleague for Regina-Lake Centre notes first of all chaos which surrounds rail transport in Canada. And yet it took the railroads to save Confederation and achieve the Canadian union. The motion states with reason that the government has not seen fit to promote the expansion of Canada's capacity to move grain to export positions thereby reducing our foreign sales opportunities.

Everyone knows that our railway system has become somewhat outmoded. Indeed, on October 26, 1974, I proposed a motion in the House of Commons to study the need to institute a royal inquiry commission concerning the well known deficiency of the Canadian National Railways in relation with the many deficits and the high number of accidents in the Canadian National system. As concerns the deficits, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian National has accumulated each year for nearly 20 years phenomenal deficits that the Canadian people must pay with their taxes.

In this 20 year period, the deficits accumulated by the Canadian National have reached $675 million, while the Canadian Pacific, which provides services in nearly the same areas, has had benefits often in excess of $100 million a year. And, as far as I know, in relation with the high number of accidents in the CN system, both as concerns costly derailments and employee safety, nothing has been done to correct the situation.

Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for me to ignore the very stern comments of coroner Héroux about the CN following the death of a CN employee in disturbing circumstances. On that occasion, it had been impossible to submit a report drafted by CN policemen and I still maintain that it is essential to launch a public inquiry on the CN administration. The purpose of such inquiry would be to investigate promotions and expenditures in the CN.

It is sad, Mr. Speaker, to note how the CN has for some ten years neglected its passenger services, so that it was necessary to reorganize recently those services within the framework of VIA Rail. As for freight, the CN has never been an innovator. We should be looking at what has been done in European countries where immediately after the war modern and rapid railways were developed.

In short, our railroads are in a pitiful condition. Instead of indulging in second class operations like building communication towers and commercial centres and owning real estate like luxury hotels, railways should commit themselves to maintaining adequate facilities and services as well as an appropriate number of freight cars and engines and, particularly they should develop new lines where it is required for our economic welfare.

Mr. Speaker, in the last four years, many questions have been put and many motions have been presented to the effect that railways in western Canada were not maintaining decent services for grain and cattle transportation from west to east. In the last report of the Canadian Wheat Board the growth rate of operations is said to have increased by 11 per cent at Churchill and 12 per cent at Prince Rupert. Those figures are encouraging as concerns the development of our secondary harbours.

I am particularly interested in the third part of the motion. It requires that CN and CP buy 4,000 hopper cars and return a minimum of 5,000 boxcars to grain movement. I think this request tells much about the present situation. We must improve it immediately and see to the maintenance of the rolling stock and the building of additional cars as needed. The efforts made until now to modernize the system have been certainly inadequate. Let us take again as an example the passenger train service. The public has been complaining about it for several decades. Pressure groups have been formed. Following the establishment of VIA Rail not much has been done and the bus and airlines companies are getting the major part of that market. However, VIA Rail is a step in the right direction. The creation of that company has made possible the redirection of railways towards passenger services.

As far as freight is concerned, it might be more realistic to create a joint corporation similar to VIA Rail that would include freight services of both railway companies. Then we would make sure that the economic interest of our country override private interests. It would be easier to redirect railways development in Canada to facilitate better services throughout our country.

My colleague for Regina-Lake Centre has given us a great opportunity by presenting his motion. It allows us to reflect seriously on the future of our railways and the development of our economy.

● (1702)

[English]

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I also would like to participate in this very important debate. In the 1974 election campaign the Liberal government promised many times to overhaul the entire grain transportation system. In fact, it promised $1.5 billion to be spent on transportation. Since that time very little has happened. Our system of moving grain to export, which is one of the major revenue sources for this country, is in serious trouble.

What are the signs of trouble that we see at present? There are three main signs which we have been seeing in the past few months. The first sign was when China, one of our major customers, started complaining that they were not getting the proper kind of service. As a result they turned to the United States for the first time in a number of years for additional purchases of grain.

The second sign of trouble which was apparent to most people was when the Canadian Wheat Board wanted action taken on its request for hopper cars and asked for a program for rebuilding of boxcars. That does not happen very often, Mr. Speaker, but it happened some months ago.

The third sign of trouble, which was perhaps the most obvious sign, was given last Friday when a Liberal backbencher made a press statement in his home town stating that a special and immediate investigation will be carried out into the efficient use of the prairie grain handling and transportation facilities. That was a true sign of trouble for this government and for the hon. member who made the statement.

Why is the industry in trouble? The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in his speech glossed over the problems which the industry is having. What is the situation of the industry at present? As of June 1, last Friday to be exact, we had 7 ships on the west coast loading, 17 ships waiting, and 17 more ships due, for a total of 401,000 tons waiting to be loaded. In Thunder Bay, we had 6 ships loading, 18 ships waiting, and 8 more due, for a total of 185,000 tons. In the St. Lawrence ports, there were three ships loading and 14 ships waiting, for a total tonnage of 645,000. As of June 1, the total tonnage in all ports was 1.2 million. In effect, over one month of grain transportation and hauling is required to fill the ships which are there at the present time. Approximately ten days earlier, there were about one million tons.

What is happening is contrary to the press release put out by the Liberal backbencher, and to what the minister has stated. We are slipping behind in our grain transportation. We are not catching up with the system at the present time. For example, the terminals at Thunder Bay approximately ten day ago were being used to a 40 per cent capacity. At the present time, the utilization is under 40 per cent and is continually dropping.

What are the effects? I have mentioned three before. One can understand why an investigation will be undertaken by someone in western Canada into the entire question of the movement of grain in Canada. We are faced with a somewhat difficult situation. China has bought grain from the United States at new high prices, in the neighbourhood of $4.55 per bushel. Canada is locked into contracts until the end of this crop year. Canada's contracts are over $1 per bushel less than the price being paid by China. The effects of the grain backlog will be a loss of shipment from country elevators.

The Canadian Wheat Board has commenced to revise downward the various quotas it expected to fill. Barley is an example. On the weekend I believe it was revised downward from 15 bushels to 12 bushels. That is an indication of the situation in which we find ourselves. The Canadian Wheat Board had counted on moving over one billion bushels from country elevators. At the present time the board has indicated that this will not happen. Also we are looking at demurrage charges caused by the waiting of ships which the farmers have to pay. The demurrage charges will amount to between $17 million and $20 million, which is the highest on record.

Some months ago the minister indicated that a record would be broken in the area of total exports. The Canadian Wheat Board indicated that the exports will amount to approximately 800 million bushels, which certainly will not break any record.

Substantial demurrage is being paid at both west coast and St. Lawrence ports for the first time in our history.

Mr. Lang: That is not true.

Mr. Murta: I would like to indicate to the Minister of Transport that the Canadian Wheat Board indicated this is the first time it has happened. Furthermore, the total carryover will be much larger than anticipated.

All hon. members would urge the government to act on the Canadian Wheat Board request for some 4,000 additional hopper cars, and funds for refurnishing an extra 5,000 boxcars. One important factor which we tend to overlook, and to which the government has not addressed itself, is car turnaround time. In other words, I am referring to the amount of time necessary to ship a car of grain to one of our coastal ports, unload it, and return it to western Canada. According to the grain trade, the length of time required is approximately 20 days. That has not dropped significantly over the last 15 to 20 years.

The situation regarding grain export is so bad at the present time that an official of the Alberta Wheat Pool in Vancouver stated that the wheat pool is forced to write off Friday as a work day, because railways run out of cars on Thursday. The cars are available once again on Saturday, but the pools are forced to pay workers double time to load them on weekends.

In his speech before the Vancouver Board of Trade, the Minister of Transport stated that bad weather, late arriving ships, and the temporary loss of a rail bridge have delayed deliveries. He said, "We are only now inching back". According to the Canadian Wheat Board, that is not true. Also he said the following:

> We are looking this year at exporting 850 million bushels, which means a total delivery by the producers of one billion bushels.

Also that statement is not true. This statement was quoted in the Canadian Press on June 1, just a few days ago. In fact, it was on the same day when the startling figures regarding the amount of tonnage waiting in our various ports were made public.

How bad are the rail lines in western Canada? The rail system in the west has been neglected for such a long time that great sums of money will be needed to rehabilitate many lines. Certainly that statement does not have to be made in western Canada because everyone is aware of it. The Hall commission reported that branch line subsidies have not gone back to the branch lines. These subsidies have gone to the railways. In turn, the railways have taken this money and used it where they saw fit. Over the years the system has been neglected. We are paying the price of close to $20 million in demurrage this coming year. Also there are the international problems we are having with our customers. Carl Snavely, the Washington economist who conducted the studies on the cost of transporting grain by rail, indicated that the current state of branch lines is fairly bad. Also he suspected that without major repairs the system could start to break down within a very few years. Of course that is happening at the present time.

Mr. Jim McDonough who was the executive director of the Hall commission before going to the Canadian Transport Commission, has echoed the same concerns. When the Commission started its hearings, he reported that railway officials were asked to estimate the life expectancy of prairie rail lines. Those officials indicated that if no significant maintenance work was done the life expectancy of various lines would vary from one year to 15 years. That possibility is rearing its ugly head at the present time.

The report of the Hall commission is a central issue to this motion. The government announced that it was going to look into the entire question of western rail lines in April, 1975. Mr. Hall tabled his report on May 19, 1977. Thus, it has been well over a year since the results of the study were made known. Mr. Justice Hall made approximately 92 recommendations. Six of those recommendations have been implemented, three have been partially implemented, 25 apparently required further study, and 58 have not been commented upon at all.

It would be interesting to have a look at some of the recommendations brought out by the Hall Commission and compare them to the responses given by the government. We should be provided with an opportunity to view both the recommendations of the commission and the responses of the government in as impartial a light as possible.

● (1722)

The first recommendation of the Hall commission was the establishment of a prairie rail authority. The government has established the Prairie Rail Action Committee.

The second recommendation was in the area of compensating the railways for the cost of moving grain. The Hall commission recommended the actual cost of moving grain minus the Crow rate level. The government's response was that it would cost $200 million, which was too expensive, and it could not afford to do this at the present time.

Another recommendation had regard to the fact that it would cost some $35 million annually, including inflation, to close the discriminatory gap between raw and finished products. The minister's response to that was that he thinks the figures are wrong and does not believe them.

The commission recommended the establishment of a northern development railways department of the CNR. The minister has indicated he will review that.

The Hall commission recommended that we eliminate the railway stop-off charge for in transit grain, to which the government has said no.

The commission recommended the utilization of the Canadian government elevator at Saskatoon for cleaning, storage and shipment of grain to Churchill, to which the government has said no.

The Hall commission recommended the construction of a government elevator at Yorkton. There has been no construction started, so that represents the government's reply. In that regard perhaps the House would be interested in hearing a paragraph from the Western Producer report of April 20, 1978, where it is stated:

The report on the feasibility of the port of Churchill and the proposed terminal at Yorkton was solicited by the federal government after the Hall report was published.

Mr. Hall's report recommended that stop-off charges at inland terminals be eliminated so grain can be cleaned and reshipped from inland terminal points. He recommended a 25 to 30 million bushel terminal be built at Yorkton to provide surge capacity for the port of Churchill and the insurance rates be readjusted to allow for a longer shipping time.

With these and other recommendations the port of Churchill could realistically handle 55.5 million bushels, Mr. Hall says. Last year 30 million bushels were shipped from the Hudson Bay port.

The Bryden report—

That is the report that really cancelled the recommendation of Mr. Justice Hall. It states:

The Bryden report didn't share Mr. Hall's optimism for the Churchill facility.

The article goes on to state:

"From beginning to end it is loaded against not only the facility at Yorkton but also the feasiblity of the port of Churchill as an ongoing force in western Canada—"

The report concludes by stating:

"We have a report downgrading the Hudson Bay Route, downgrading the port of Churchill and negative to a grain handling facility at Yorkton. I might say this is a serious problem" Mr. Hall told the 75 Bay supporters.

Mr. Hall said it was strange that no one from the port of Churchill, the manager of the port of Churchill or the federal port authority was interviewed when the Bryden report was tabulated.

He goes on to be very critical of the government for its handling of what he considers to be certainly one of the commission's more central recommendations. That is the kind of stonewalling tactic that we have seen on this side of the House, and that Mr. Justice Hall has experienced.

As the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) has indicated, the government has to make a commitment to this report in its totality.

Another recommendation of the commission was to enlarge and modernize the terminal at Prince Rupert to a capacity of some 6 million bushels. The government has started in this regard and has allocated some money, but at the present time it is waiting to see whether or not the grain companies will utilize that facility.

Mr. Hall also recommended that we eliminate the additional charge by the railways of 14 cents per 100 pounds levied on rapeseed meal on hopper cars. The government's response to that was no.

The commission recommended that abandoned rights-of-way be returned to provincial Crown. The response to that was that it will go back to the federal authority and then to the municipalities.

The commission recommended the establishment of a Canadian Wheat Board regional liason office in Alberta and Saskatchewan, but certainly up to the present time the answer has been no.

There are many other areas and recommendations in the Hall commission report that have not been implemented. Mr. Justice Hall recommended that the Canadian Wheat Board should provide information to producers on rail car allocation to specified stations and blocks upon request, but to my knowledge that has not been implemented.

The commission recommended the establishment of an off-line elevator at the Fisher Branch, Manitoba. Of course, that has not been done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it may seem odd to some hon. members that a member of parliament from British Columbia should be involved in a debate basically dealing with the movement of grain in western Canada. Hon. members should recognize the fact that British Columbia, through the port of Vancouver and the port of Prince Rupert, plays a very important role in the movement of grain to our customers around the world.

There is no question but that the port of Vancouver has on occasion received odd knocks from people regarding the shipment of grain out of that port, but the facts indicate that the port of Vancouver is developing into the largest exporting port on North America's west coast. Vancouver leads every other port on the western seaboard, with 47 million tons being handled in 1977. Canadian Press reports indicate that port general manager, Fred Spoke, claims he can see the day when Vancouver will equal all the west coast ports combined.

It should be remembered that grain handlers are making major improvements in their handling capacity, and railways are also busy with substantial improvements to their west coast efforts. According to Mr. Spoke, Burrard Inlet, a major grain outlet, can handle ships up to 120,000 deadweight tons which, he notes, is something that almost no other harbour in North America can boast. In short, the port of Vancouver is doing its job well, and is gearing up to do even better in the future.

It has been estimated that in the calendar year 1978 shipments of grain out of the west coast will total approximately 300 million bushels. I understand the minister's target for the west coast in the early 1980s with the Prince Rupert and Vancouver facilities enlarged, is in the neighbourhood of 450 million bushels.

It may be that many residents of the province of British Columbia are not aware of the significance of the grain trade through our two major ports, or what this means to the economy of British Columbia. I do not have the figures before me, but I can assure hon. members of this House, as well as British Columbia, that with the expansion of port facilities, the trans-shipment of grain through the two ports will contribute more and more to the economy of British Columbia in future years.

● (1732)

In his remarks the minister stated that by the year 1982 over one billion bushels of grain will be shipped out of the Lakehead through Thunder Bay, Vancouver and Prince Rupert. At the present time there is an imbalance in the amount of grain shipped out of Thunder Bay compared to the ports of Vancouver and Prince Rupert. I understand that by 1982 the two areas of shipment will be almost equal with approximately 500 million bushels to be shipped out of British Columbia and approximately 500 million bushels to be shipped out of Thunder Bay.

There are plans for expansion of grain storage facilities in British Columbia. Hon. members will be aware that not too long ago an elevator burned down and destroyed part of our capacity for shipping out of the port of Vancouver. I understand the Alberta Wheat Pool is planning to expand storage facilities by 2.8 million bushels, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool is planning an expansion of 3 million bushels of storage, the United Grain Growers is planning an expansion of 2 million bushels and the Pioneer Grain Company an expansion of 2.6 million bushels. In the next few years we can foresee an additional 10.4 million bushels of storage capacity added to the existing 23 million bushels storage facilities in the port of Vancouver. At the present time we have 2.25 million bushels storage capacity which would give us a total of approximately 35 million bushels of storage capacity in Prince Rupert and the port of Vancouver. Storage in Prince Rupert will be increased also and I will touch on that later.

It seems to me that the government's position on the statutory grain rate issue is crystal clear. The railways are ordinarily expected to make the major move with regard to the provision of adequate capacity as movements are projected and foreseen. I think it would be fair to say that up to this time the railways have been doing a competent job. To assist them and to assure that they would do the job, in each of the last two budgets there have been significant changes and improvements in the capital cost allowance for the railways so that their cash flow may be improved. It would also be fair to say that they responded with plans to expand their capacity more rapidly where they foresaw increased freight.

The big exception in the railways' capability to do what is needed for freight has been in the area of grain. As the Snavely commission pointed out, the railways receive very little for grain movement compared to the cost of moving it. The Hall commission stated that there is a call upon government to do additional things in the way of financing, to ensure that the railways have the funds, notwithstanding the continued existence of the long standing statutory Crow rate on grain.

It is no secret, Mr. Speaker, that in this House on many occasions I have criticized the CPR, especially in British Columbia and on Vancouver Island, for their insensitivity to the travelling public in asking for cessation of passenger service. We have the situation in western Canada, however, that with the statutory Crow rate, funds are not generated to enable the railroads to maintain their road beds and to retire and purchase rolling stock in order that we can make the continued expansion of exports which, as I indicated earlier, it had been estimated by the year 1982 would reach one billion bushels shipped out of Canadian ports. The money has to come from somewhere, Mr. Speaker.

The government foresaw the Hall commission's recommendation regarding financing for the railways. In our 1975 policy statement we made clear that, where it is a matter of policy to maintain rates at a level below cost, the government should be willing to identify that policy and its cost and pay the amount of money to the transportation system expected to bear the burden. Therefore, it would not have to pass the costs of that transportation system on to other people or, indeed, need it be inadequately provided for.

The government responded to the spirit of that requirement for an additional infusion of cash with the provision of 8,000 hopper cars for the movement of grain, at a cost of $255 million. That was the first real, important move forward toward improving our grain handling system in some 40 years. The government also set up the Hall commission and the Snavely commission and have been dedicating themselves toward implementing their reports. In this moment of fiscal restraint we do not have the ability to move at once to pay to the railways what the Hall commission recommended, I think that point must be underlined: in this moment of fiscal restraint we do not have the ability to move at once to pay to the railways what the Hall commission recommended. There is no question that many of the recommendations are worthy of consideration. There are many other areas, however, that demand government attention.

If we had unlimited funds to enact the Hall commission's recommendations, we would still require additional funds for the enlargement of port facilities. It would be foolish to have one billion bushels of grain moved across the prairies through British Columbia only to find that the terminals could not handle one billion bushels of grain. I therefore believe that we have to look at the total transportation system and not just rely on certain sections of it. This is what I think the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has done by announcing funds to be allocated to the port of Vancouver and the port of Prince Rupert.

What the government and the minister did was immediate and of fundamental importance. The most important thing was to see that the railways went ahead with investment in grain lines on the prairies which had been neglected. Within a matter of a few weeks of the tabling of the Hall commission report, the government transferred to the basic rail network the additional 1,813 miles which the Hall commission identified for that purpose.

Likewise, the enormous additional expenditure required to extend the Crowsnest rates to processed grain products is beyond the capability of the federal government at this time. If this subsidy were extended to processed products, it would be very difficult to limit it just to the products that currently move by rail. Products presently moving by truck would quickly move by rail if this subsidy were not extended to truck movements of such products. It would also be argued that processed products in the east as well as those in the west should move under these rates; otherwise there would be a preferential rate which would not be accepted by other regions of the country. We would have to extend it to all modes of transportation and all regions of Canada, not limiting it to one carrier or one region.

If all such movements were included under the Crowsnest rate, the cost could conceivably be in excess of $200 million annually. This is in addition to the $200 million which would be required to compensate the railways for the full cost of moving the products currently covered by the Crowsnest rates. Day in and day out in this House we hear it argued that the government should spend wisely and be an example to provincial and municipal governments as well as to the individual. I suggest the additional funds required by the program I have just outlined would not be in the best interests of the country at this time. I am sure that further studies will have to be carried out to determine whether a policy of this type would ever be beneficial to the country.

I feel that the more you subsidize, the more you dislocate the natural patterns of transportation. One could get into an area where plants, whether they are manufacturing plants or otherwise, would be located in areas which would not normally be economically feasible for transportation reasons. As a result of subsidization further inequities are built in by locating plants and facilities in areas where they should never be located.

In his remarks the minister also included the embarkation by the federal government on a program to rehabilitate and upgrade the prairie rail network. I agree with this. The first phase is to cost $100 million and I understand will be completed by this summer. A second phase planned for 1979 and costing approximately $75 million has already been authorized by the Government of Canada. I would hope that the entire program costing over $700 million will be implemented during the expected eight to ten year period. I further hope that at the end of that period of time the basic rail network will be capable of handling hopper cars on a year-round basis.

I should mention a point that has been brought up in this House before, namely that we are in a record year of grain shipment at the Lakehead, the port of Churchill and also in the two B.C. ports. What has happened and what has not been recognized by some people is the fact that we experienced a very rough winter on the prairies. As a result of that we fell behind in the loading of ships at Vancouver and Prince Rupert and we are unable to catch up. There will always be problems in Canada with shipments of grain and other materials, for example potash, because of the climatic conditions. It does not matter what government is in power, climatic conditions will influence the transportation of goods and grain in this country. That is a fact of life that we have to look at.

We do not live or operate in a temperate climate, such as that in the southern United States. It is interesting to note that the port of New Orleans, which does not have the problems that we face in northern Canada, has approximately 30 ships waiting to load grain. And yet here we are in a record year in the shipping of grain, having had bad loading conditions during part of our winter, and not being able to utilize hopper cars that traditionally switch over from the shipment of potash back to the grain trade, because fortunately or unfortunately the potash business is also having a record year. We have not had either the fast turnaround or the availability of cars which we have had in other years. This point should be stressed because variances in weather affect transportation in Canada. A second problem is the immense distances we must ship our goods. This sometimes is a blessing, at other times it is not. But obviously these things do play a role in transportation in Canada.

As I have stated, with the upgrading of the rail lines during that eight to ten year period of time and, with the expenditure of $700 million, we will have a first-class rail system. But again variances in weather will be a factor. These variances, of course, do not fall in the hands of politicians. After years and years of neglect and years and years of nothing being done with regard to the grain handling system, we have not only had in the last few years 8,000 hopper cars, but we have also had the commitment of the full amount of money required to put the basic rail network into first-class shape. That is an improvement and I congratulate the Minister of Transport, who is not the only Minister of Transport, Liberal, Conservative or otherwise, who has faced this problem. However, he is the minister, I believe, who has initiated a solution to this problem, and we are far along from what we were five, ten, 15 or 20 years ago.

The Hall commission recommended action with respect to Churchill and Prince Rupert. In both cases action has been taken and I am extremely pleased to see it, especially in the case of Prince Rupert. There will be advocates for Churchill among members from the prairie provinces, but in Prince Rupert the potential to move grain has always been there. However, for a variety of reasons that potential has never been achieved. Those of us who live in the southern part of British Columbia, which includes approximately 90 per cent of the population, have ignored areas such as Prince Rupert.

I am most pleased to see that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of Transport are redressing the balance which has always been in favour of Vancouver. It is a bold concept to have two major grain facilities in the province of British Columbia. I hope the day will come when Prince Rupert will play its proper role as a transshipment point for Canadian goods, not only grain. We are all aware that Prince Rupert is closer to the Asiatic markets than is Vancouver. I hope that those people who make decisions as to where goods are shipped from will recognize the importance of Prince Rupert—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentlemen but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of things that could be said in a debate of this sort. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) has outlined in his motion some seven or eight specific items and I would like to cover two or three areas which I think are important. One is the question of rail line abandonment as it pertains to my riding and to some of the Hall commission's recommendations. Another point is the whole area of grain movement.

One of the things the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board failed to discuss was the whole question of government elevators in Canada and why those elevators are not being used to full capacity. We have five grain elevators owned by the Government of Canada, or inland terminals. Which are not being used to full capacity. If we were to use them to full capacity to dry the wet, the tough and the damp grain that is now being dried on the west coast, I maintain that we could be shipping much more grain and would be able to meet our commitments. As a result we would not be keeping ships waiting and paying demurrage fees.

Specifically, in this country we have five government elevators. There is one in Saskatoon with a capacity of some five and a half million bushels of grain. At the moment, according to our check, there is some 1,820,000 bushels of grain in that elevator. In Moose Jaw the capacity of that elevator is 5.5 million bushels of grain with some 955,000 bushels of grain presently stored there. In Calgary with an elevator capacity of some 2.5 million bushels some 625,000 bushels of grain are presently stored there. In Edmonton with an elevator capacity of some 2,350,000 bushels, only 378,000 bushels are in store. Lethbridge has an elevator with a capacity of 1,250,000 bushels but in store it has only 164,000 bushels. These five terminals owned by the Government of Canada, with a capacity of 17,100,000 bushels, at the moment have in store some 3,942,000 bushels.

I would like to ask, and perhaps the minister or someone else can reply later in the debate, why we are not utilizing more fully and efficiently government elevators on the prairies. Most of that tough and damp wheat that is now being cleaned and dried on the west coast comes from northern Saskatchewan and northern Alberta. If it does, why? Why do we not do as Hall recommends and drop these stop-off charges, and try and store some of that wheat on the prairies?

We have a capacity of 17 million bushels in those five government elevators. We could at least put 12 million bushels in them, but we now have slightly under four million bushels stored there. That means we are under-utilizing those facilities to a large degree. We have only about one third of the amount of grain in those elevators that we could have. That demonstrates a lack of leadership, a lack of efficient planning and a lack of seriousness in trying to move grain in this country on the part of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang).

There is something else I find rather strange, and the minister did not refer to this in his speech. The railways are not doing as well as they should be, particularly the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have before me the list of boxcars that have been hauled by the CPR and the CNR since the beginning of the current crop year until the end of May. As we all know, the CPR lines cover the area of the prairies where the majority of the grain is grown, hauled and marketed. Despite that, so far this crop year CP has hauled less grain than the CNR.

The CNR has delivered to the west coast, Vancouver and Prince Rupert together, 58,322 boxcars. CPR, which has the obligation to haul more because it services more communities with more grain, hauled to the west coast some 49,287 carloads of grain. That is not good enough. The Minister of Transport should use his influence and power to ensure that the CPR hauls more grain to the west coast.

I look at December, which is probably the best month to get a comparison, to show where the CPR is falling down on the job. In December, CP hauled 2,750 carloads while CN hauled 4,284. I say to the Minister of Transport that I believe there is a lot more he could be doing. He could use his influence with CP. In fact, he could use his influence with both railways to make sure they are repairing and purchasing more cars, that they are hauling in a more efficient way grain to the west coast. Those government terminals could be utilized to a larger degree. He should ensure that grain being dried on the prairies and stored on the prairies could be moved to an export position when the rush and the bottleneck is not as great as at this moment.

The second matter I want to refer to in my all too brief 20 minutes this afternoon and this evening is another aspect of the Hall commission report that we should be talking about more than we do. That is the whole area of rail line abandonment as it pertains to ordinary communities in this country. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) mentioned that Hall recommended the establishment of a prairie rail authority to make a decision on over 2,000 miles of rail line on which Hall could not make a decision. He wanted more time to study the available data. He suggested that the PRA be established to look at these facts and make the decision as to whether these lines should stay or go.

I want to make a case for three lines that lie within the boundaries of my constituency. They are absolutely vital, not just to the people but to the communities and everything that one would call a community in about ten, 20 or 25 towns in my constituency.

The first line goes from Thunderhill Junction in Manitoba, which is near the town of Swan River, right on through Kelvington in central Saskatchewan. Mr. Hall recommended that that line be placed under the PRA. The line is 113.6 miles in length. It has 12 delivery points, namely Kenville, Durban, Benito in Manitoba, Arran, Pelly, Norquay, Hyas, Stenen, Sturgis in the eastern part of Saskatchewan, the division of that line, and also Preeceville, Lintlaw, Nut Mountain and Kelvington on the western portion of that line in Saskatchewan. The ten year average of hauling grain has been some 8.3 million bushels per year, or an average haul of some 73,000 bushels per mile.

For some reason, the Hall commission divided that line into two parts. They took the eastern part, from Thunderhill Junction near Swan River to Sturgis, and recommended that it be placed under the basic rail authority. The minister agreed and put it there when the Hall commission report came down a while ago. The rest of the line, from the town of Sturgis out west, which is Preeceville, Lintlaw, Nut Mountain and Kelvington, was to be put under the auspices of the prairie rail authority.

As I said earlier, that does not make much sense. They are big communities, particularly Kelvington and Preeceville. They are centres for a whole series of farms and villages. They have good business sections and well over 1,000 people each. They are well established, progressive communities. They haul a lot of grain. It was a surprise to me, and I suspect from what he said privately to the minister himself, that that part of the line was not put under the basic network. The minister should take action at this time and place that line under the basic network and make sure that it is protected.

After the news came out, those communities decided to set up "save our rail line" committees. I was present at three public meetings in those communities, and at one meeting of the steering committee since then, to discuss ways and means of saving that rail line. I want to say as strongly as I can that it must be saved, not just for the farmers who haul their grain—although it is obvious that it must be saved for them because of cost and convenience—but for the business community and everyone who lives in those towns. If it is not, the towns will gradually dwindle in size and eventually disappear. While the whole thing is uncertain, it will be very difficult to persuade a new business to open or an existing business to expand because of the fear that the rail line will disappear.

As I said, under the leadership of some of the people in the areas, "save our rail line" committees have been set up and are working. The Minister of Transport should be in communication with those communities. May I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

● (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock I was presenting an argument to the effect that the minister should move to retain the Preeceville-Kelvington rail line in the northern part of my Saskatchewan constituency. I made that argument on behalf of the farmers and townspeople there and I would point out that they have established a save-our-rail-line committee under the chairmanship of George Derbyshire of Kelvington and the secretaryship of Nora Vansdal of Lintlaw.

The second line about which there is uncertainty in my constituency is the line which runs from Canora to MacNutt. Under the Hall report this Canora-MacNutt line is divided into two regions; there is the MacNutt-Wroxton portion which is 15.7 miles in length. There are three delivery points in that area, namely, MacNutt, Calder and Wroxton, and over the last ten years they have averaged some 1.7 million bushels of grain, which works out to about 105,000 bushels of grain per mile of track. The northern portion of that line runs from Ross Junction, which is right next to Canora, to the village of Wroxton and includes the delivery points of Hampton, Ryan and Stornoway.

There are ten elevators serving four different companies along that particular part of the line. It covers some 37.8 miles and over the last ten years the average amount of grain which moved over that line was 1.6 million bushels, or 42,000 bushels per mile. Once again, as in the case of the line, this line would serve six delivery points, and it is of keen interest to the people there that these rail communities are going to suffer and that the farmers will be spending a lot more money in transportation of their grain. Also, the towns and villages along the line will dwindle and so on. As in the case of the other line to which I have referred, the local people have also set up a save-our-line committee. It has been a very active committee; I have had a chance only to meet with them once at a meeting and once at the executive level. They are making progress, I think, in their fight to save the rail line. That committee is under the able chairmanship of Albert Zelaney of Wroxton and the secretary is Clarence Laidlaw of the town of Calder.

● (2012)

The third line in my area is a line which is slightly different from the first two. It was recommended by the Hall Commission that the first two go under the prairie rail authority. With a good fight I think there is good reason to be optimistic that they will be placed under the basic network, particularly if the Minister of Transport will listen with a positive attitude. I have always said there will be a tougher battle for the third line. It is the line that goes from the city of Yorkton to the little town of Willowbrook and to another little town called Jedburgh. That line includes some 26 miles of track. Over the last ten years an average of 900,000 bushels of grain per year have gone over that 26 miles of track, or about 34,000 bushels per mile. That line serves two very important communities in my riding which will be hurt if the rail line is abandoned, as it will be prior to 1981 unless something can be done to stop it. As in the other two areas a rail line committee has been established under the chairmanship of the reeve of that municipality, Mr. August Fenske, and the secretary of the rural municipality is also the secretary of the committee, Mr. Jerry Kuziak. Both of these men are from the Jedburgh-Theodore area.

I have before me a copy of an article which appeared very recently in the Yorkton newspaper This Week. The headline is: "Jedburgh starts fight to keep last elevator". I point this out because I think this is a new angle to use to help keep rail lines. The article says:

> Last fall, the residents of Jedburgh and area formed a committee to organize a fight to keep their rail line to Yorkton, which under the Hall Commission recommendations could be abandoned in 1981.
> But now the community and surrounding farmers find that even if they save the line, it might not be any good to them.

Three weeks ago, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool informed the local Pool committee and members that its elevator will close down at the end of the crop year, July 31.

With the United Grain Growers (UGG) elevator already closed, and being torn down this winter, that would leave the community without a delivery point for grain.

Save the Rail Committee chairman August Fenske told Yorkton This Week Saturday that the group has switched the emphasis of its efforts: right now it is working to keep the pool elevator open.

With the support of the local pool committee, the group has circulated petitions in the community and district demanding that the Pool keep its elevators open, and a meeting will be held this week to gather together the petitions and discuss the next course of action.

Wherever the petitions have been taken, they have received strong support, Fenske said.

"We'll either force them or convince them to keep it open," he added.

Here is a community which has to fight with the wheat pool itself to keep its elevator open. I encourage that community in that fight because back in 1974 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised that as long as there are elevators on a line, that line will not be abandoned. The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board also said something very similar back in 1974, and I want to put on the record one of his comments. He said, and I quote:

As long as the Liberal party forms the government and as long as producers wish to continue to deliver to the elevator of their choice, not one rail line will be abandoned.

That was the Minister of Transport speaking on June 11, 1974. If people in Jedburgh and in other communities get commitments from their elevators that those elevators will stay, then I want to make sure that the minister will remain true to the commitment he made. If the elevators stay, the lines should stay. If that happens, people will have their elevators and their lines to pull their communities closer together in the years to come.

I would like to make one other point about complaints we have been receiving in the last few weeks from the local level about the unorganized way of delivering grain to ships on the west coast, Thunder Bay or at the port of Churchill. This lack of organization affects many farmers in my area. Just today we completed a survey of some elevators in my constituency. A lot of grain is produced in the Melville area, and the Melville pool elevator is plugged. It cannot take any more wheat, and 25 per cent of the farmers in the area will not get their seed quotas in. Car orders this week are for numbers two or three wheat, oats and barley. Most of the other elevators, as well as Melville's, on this block are also plugged or will not get the seed quota hauling completed. I suggest that the time has come for the Minister of Transport himself to intervene to make sure that the seed quota is extended and that boxcars are available so that farmers can haul their grain and can get money to pay for their seeding expenses. The Carberry block is also in my area. It now overlaps with the part of my riding which goes into the riding of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). He is also having similar problems.

The Langenburg elevator is plugged, and 50 per cent of the farmers in the Langenburg area will not get their seed quotas in. Much of the same is happening in the Bredenbury block. The Wishart elevator toward the western fringes of my riding is plugged, and a substantial number of farmers in that area also will not get their seed quotas in. I think the minister should be making sure that the seed quotas are extended beyond the June termination date so that these farmers can deliver their grain. The minister should be saying to the railways that they have an obligation to provide boxcars so that farmers can deliver their grain and can have income to meet their spring seeding expenses.

That is one specific example of the problems farmers are having at the local level. They cannot deliver their grain, despite the fact that the minister boasts about tremendous sales this year and the fact that the price of wheat is to go up in the future. Farmers in my riding and in every other riding across the country cannot deliver their grain. The minister knows this, and I wish he would exercise some of the authority and power he has as Minister of Transport and minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. I wish he would crack the whip—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in the short time which is available in this debate I am not going to talk about the difficulties and the opportunities this Hall commission report gives to the government to get our rail systems working. Hon. members who have already spoken have made clear the difficulties farmers are now facing, particularly in the eastern half of the prairies. Farmers have a very violent type of feeling because all winter long they have been told how much grain the minister has been sending out of the country, but they know it is not going out of their districts because there is nothing moving to any great extent yet to the east.

I want to comment on the larger aspects of this problem. I see that the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) is back in his seat. Today we in western Canada received a news release from the hon. member which says:

Assiniboia M.P. Ralph Goodale says the Government of Canada will initiate a special, immediate investigation into the efficient use of prairie grain handling and transportation facilities.

The very moment this press release was going all over the prairies telling people the government would investigate the grain handling system, the minister was here in this House telling us how well the grain system is working. Either the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and the hon. member for Assiniboia have their wires crossed or the hon. member issued this statement without the permission of the government; but if the hon. member is correct and this is the view of the government, it proves the very basis for this motion of no confidence moved by the New Democratic Party. The NDP has moved this motion expressing no confidence in the government. I will quote from the opening part as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government has failed to expand Canada's capacity to move grain to export position thereby jeopardizing the Canadian Wheat Board's ability to compete successfully for expanding grain sales—

My comment on that is very blunt and to the point: where was the NDP this last ten years when this government systematically has been following a policy of trying to get rid of farmers on the ground that there were too many farmers and too much production? The NDP has supported this government and kept it in power for most of the last 15 years. Every time there has been a minority government the NDP has kept the Liberal party in power. It was the NDP which put the government into a minority position in 1963. Now the NDP at long last recognizes that its allies which it has been supporting all these years have not done the job they were supposed to do.

● (2022)

I want to quote into the record what the minister himself has said. A year ago when the commission's report came down, all members of parliament and, I suppose, all members of the news media received a report from the minister's office called "The Hall Report: An Inviting challenge for Prompt Action", a commentary by the Minister of Transport dated May 27, 1977. In it he uses the following phrases: "we will establish in western Canada a modern, top quality handling and transportation system for prairie grain". Boy, was that definite action! Another phrase reads: "we have had two years of study—we know the problems. Now we must move with solutions".

Where was the hon. member for Assiniboia yesterday and today when this press statement was issued? Has he heard about the solutions? The minister has gone up and down the prairies and has repeated in the House ad infinitum that they are building box cars, that they are rebuilding rail lines, they have done this, that and everything. But why, then, is there a tie up?

I know the reasons. One is that ten years ago the government decided, and has let the railways and the grain companies know, that we should get rid of a large number of grain farmers in western Canada and reduce the acreage by half. Program after program has been brought in, such as the program on supply management, the LIFT program, and the stabilization of income program which was brought in seven or eight years ago. All those programs which were brought in in 1970-1971 were designed to get rid of farmers and to reduce acreage by half. Now, it became clear in 1968 and 1969 that the world's grain markets were going up at a tremendous rate; this dawned on the minister only recently, so now he admits his policies have been wrong for ten years. That is why the government has failed. Why the NDP, which used to have an interest in farm problems, took so long to realize that this mess was occurring, I do not know, but I will come back to them in a moment.

An hon. Member: Better late than never.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): They have called for some parts of this program. Paragraph (f) was referred to by the mover of the motion. It reads:

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

To strengthen the principles of orderly marketing by returning the marketing of feed grains to the sole jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board and to include as well the marketing of flax, rye and rapeseed under the said board.

Mr. Nystrom: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): The provincial governments in the west put this before the farmers in the form of a referendum. What did the farmers say? They said that they did not want it. The farmers believe in the Canadian Wheat Board, but they want some part of their produce available through the alternative marketing system, and this the NDP has failed to recognize. They have failed to recognize that one cannot take the words of wisdom from the leaders of the grain companies. Whatever the grain companies' leaders say, that is what the NDP says. And who tells the grain companies what to think? The Minister of Transport in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board does. He has these boys in his pocket.

When I see the NDP going along with this, I am ashamed of them. They used to be a strong voice for agriculture. What are they now? Just the spokesmen of the grain companies. The Minister of Transport today nailed those grain companies when he said why he had not brought in the prairie rail authority. He said it was because it was not wanted by the head of the Alberta Wheat Pool and the head of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. Where are those two guys going to hide, because the great majority of farmers in Alberta and in Saskatchewan want the prairie rail authority? They look on it as the Magna Carta of the whole economics of western Canada. But he nailed their hides to the cross today when he said they did not want it. So he was glad they put in the Prairie Rail Action Committee which was designed to keep any action from occurring.

All we have heard from the minister so far is when one of his colleagues said that we must set up a committee to study the studies. We have been studying the railway problems in western Canada since the 1930's and every royal commission until now has reported that we should rationalize the railway operation. The last study was undertaken by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall. He said now is the time for action; let us set up a rail authority controlled by westerners in charge of running the railway system over its marginal 2,000 miles until it can be demonstrated that the lines can be run for a profit, at which time they should be turned back to the railways. But the minister did not want that. So we have the prairie grain companies and the minister saying they will set up a cover-up called the Prairie Rail Action Committee, which will set up hearings but whose primary and only purpose is to try to keep action from being taken.

Now I will come back to what I believe is the key question in this resolution. Why did the NDP put in paragraph (f)? It is a motherhood paragraph but the farmers do not want it, just the grain companies. Actually, it is quite simple why the farmers do not want it. If you are selling grain to your neighbour or to the local feed lot or feed mill, if it comes out of the Wheat Board under the present rules, you have to take the grain to the elevator and the person who buys it has to pay for the handling charges, the freight charges, the drying and cleaning charges, and all the other charges. If he has to ship that grain down to Thunder Bay, he takes it out to feed his stock and he is stuck with the 40 cent charge for services he did not get.

Because of that the farmers want the right to be able to deliver their grain to their neighbour or to the feed lot nearby. Many farmers have organized into co-operatives to do just that. That is why a great majority of the farmers in the west turned down the idea that all grain should be put into the Wheat Board by being put into the elevators. Everyone knows that the Hall commission report gave a lift to the livestock farmers in western Canada because it stated that now is the time to give livestock producers a fair break under the Crowsnest Pass rates. However, the report did not state how it should be done.

The commission wanted to end the discrimination which exists against farmers who have to buy their grain from the elevators and pay 40 cents for services they did not get. It wanted parliament and the government to come up with a way of handling this. As a matter of fact, the Conservative party has considered the recommendations of the Hall commission and looked for various ways in which this particular recommendation of Chief Justice Hall could be put into effect, and we have come up with three or four ways. All I will say is that these proposals, I think, try to meet the farmers' needs and still give them the benefits of the Crowsnest rates if they are livestock producers.

The first proposal I call the Devine proposal because it was thought up and first mentioned by Professor Devine of the University of Saskatchewan. I know he has been around to see the farm leaders and the heads of the governments of each of the provinces and he has made his ideas known far and wide, so I think he deserves the right to call his proposal his own. One of the Devine proposals to get around all these difficulties and come up with a workable solution to the problem of giving equal treatment to livestock producers and grain producers is that farmers haul their feed grain to the elevator, pay a service fee for the weighing and ticketing and let the buyer get his ticket as well.

As a result of this service, the seller of the grain gets the initial payment according to the daily reported price set by the Canadian Wheat Board, and in return for selling his grain through the system he becomes eligible not only for the initial payment of grain as set by the Canadian Wheat Board but also for the final payment, if there is one. On the other hand, when the grain has gone into the elevator and out, the buyer gets it at the going price of the day set by the Canadian Wheat Board, less the handling charges, less the storage charges, less the freight charges, less the cleaning and dockage charges and all the rest of it. Therefore, he gets the advantage of 40 cents a bushel, which puts him on a par with the eastern livestock feeder.

That proposal has both advantages and disadvantages, as do other proposals. I was interested in reading the other day about the government of Saskatchewan. At the present time the government of Saskatchewan is NDP. The policy of the NDP was strongly stated a year ago, namely, that all grain should come under the Canadian Wheat Board. That is what the motion before us tonight calls for as well. After the vote by the farmers, who indicated that they did not want it in the first place, the Saskatchewan minister of agriculture had a change of policy. Now he is coming up with a new feed grain policy.

I should like to refer to The Rural Councillor of May 1, 1978. I hope hon. members of the New Democratic Party listen to what I am about to read. The Hon. Edgar Kaeding, the minister of agriculture for Saskatchewan, on March 15 said the following:

> Under the proposal outlined by Mr. Kaeding, farmers would arrange farm to farm sales but such sales would be subject to quota restrictions and would be recorded in the sellers permit book. He would receive the initial payment and be eligible for any final payment that might be made. The elevator agent would weigh, grade, assess dockage and record the transaction on a fee-for-service basis. The purchaser would pay what Mr. Kaeding called a "revised corn competitive price for western Canada." This would be the lower of the Thunder Bay corn formula price or the Canadian Wheat Board asking price less the cost of getting the grain from Saskatchewan to Thunder Bay.

This is exactly the same system which I have just outlined called the Devine proposal. I gave credit to the author of the proposal. I am not stopping at Mr. Devine's proposal. The Conservative party is looking at several other proposals. I give credit for this proposal to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers). He was the first member I heard talk about that, but other people have talked about it since. He comes from the province of Alberta, which is the biggest beef producer in Canada, producing approximately six million head of beef cattle. This is a simple system as well. The proceeds from the feed grain sales could be used to pay farmers the equivalent of the Crow rate in the form of a pro rata amount on the finished beef. In other words, the livestock producer would be given an amount equal to the cost of grain which went into raising the animals shipped for export under the Crowsnest rates. This could be done simply. It could be payments based on the differentials in various cities such as Edmonton, Calgary, Saskatoon, Regina, Winnipeg, or any other market centre. These would be added to the agricultural price support payments on a quarterly basis when they became due. This would provide a reward for finishing the animal in the west and would make the western feed grain user equal to the eastern feeder. It would mean an end to seeing our livestock industry moving out of western Canada.

That proposal contains good, simple points as well as bad ones. We cannot see ourselves as a Conservative government coming in here on the basis of the proposal of the hon. member for Red Deer or on the basis of the proposal by Professor Devine of Saskatoon and saying that this is the program. These programs are to remedy injustice and discrimination. Farmers should be consulted in a real way, rather than going ahead and consulting with the grain companies. One does not consult a weasel to learn how to run a hen house. One does not consult the grain companies alone concerning the interests of farmers. I do not care what grain companies call themselves.

They can call themselves the Alberta Pool, the Saskatchewan Pool, UGG, Pioneer Grain or anything else. As far as farmers are concerned, they are the boys they have to get by.

Consultation does not mean only talking to one or two farm leaders and a grain company. There must be genuine consultation with the farmers. In that event agreements would be easier to reach. They would know that we are putting policy alternatives before them in order for them to express support or disagreement. Also they will know we have consulted them. This would take away the great anger and alienation on the part of farmers in western Canada. Some of these farmers feel that all the government does is meet with one or two of the grain companies and decide government policy on that basis. We would like to see genuine consultation.

With regard to the NDP motion before us, that party should be congratulated for realizing there has been a failure on the part of the government to provide infrastructure in order to move Canadian grain to market. The government is quite correct in saying that it cannot be stopped, and that the world will want at least one billion bushels long before 1982. In fact, the world wants that from us now, but it cannot be provided because the government sold all the 1976 and 1977 crops at $3 a bushel, which is below the current world price. With the current price of $4.50 at Vancouver, farmers are not very happy to see all their grain going out at low prices.

Therefore, our real job is to accept the Hall commission report. The guts of that report was the prairie rail authority. The prairie rail authority is a western board looking after western problems. For years the civil service took us through the hoops. The old transport board was in the hands of the railways. Then the Canadian Transport Commission was set up. That commission did not even wait to get out of the hands of the railways; it was there before the railways were. Now we have a bill to bring us back to the civil service again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, today the House is considering a very important subject. I believe it is totally appropriate for parliament to devote this time to the question of the prairie grain handling and transportation system. The value of the prairie grain economy to the over-all national economy of Canada cannot be overemphasized. It is important to the west, indeed to all of Canada, to ensure a healthy and vibrant grains industry. Anything parliament can do through discussion of this kind to bolster the industry and to augment grain handling and our transportation capacity certainly is a worth-while undertaking.

Today I noticed a very interesting argument between hon. members of the New Democratic and Conservative parties concerning their respective positions regarding the strength of the Canadian Wheat Board. The position of the New Democratic Party probably is spelled out reasonably well in the motion before us. Members of the Conservative party take a different view. We have the publicly reported comments of the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), who suggested that the Canadian Wheat Board should be open to international competition. As well, the Conservative premier of Alberta launched a variety of attacks in recent weeks upon the Canadian Wheat Board.

For the benefit of hon. members opposite, and perhaps as a way for them to resolve this dispute among themselves, I should like to quote an article which appeared in the Ottawa Journal dated June 3, 1978. It was written by a Saskatchewan journalist, Mr. Marc Lisac. He wrote a general commentary about the political scene in Saskatchewan. The article in part reads as follows:

> Saskatchewan New Democrats tend to paint the minister as a Professor Moriarty of the grain trade. They fear for the future of the board under Lang.
> At the same time, the board has been under attack recently by Premier Peter Lougheed. The Alberta government seems increasingly to view grain as a natural resource like any of the others now owned by the provinces. Lang has emerged as the federal agency's staunchest defender against Lougheed.

The conflict of opinion between the two opposition parties as expressed by Mr. Lisac is interesting. Perhaps he will assist opposition parties in sorting out their respective positions.

Our grain handling and transportation system is facing an enormous immediate challenge. Grain producers are concerned about it. They are concerned about keeping up with the ambitious shipping program of the Canadian Wheat Board for this season, and about keeping demurrage costs to the bare minimum. It is not uncommon for farmers to express worry about this kind of thing. Indeed, virtually every year when we get to about this point in the grain shipping season there is likely to be a good deal of concern about the allocation of quotas, the use of railway cars, the condition of branch lines, the cost of demurrage, and so on. For decades we westerners have grown rather accustomed to these sorts of worries, and to an almost constant flow of apparent bad news about our grain transportation system.

● (2042)

I suggest that in this year, 1978, the story is in fact fundamentally different. The immediate challenges are still there before us, but some basic initiatives are being advanced to cope with those challenges in an effective, long-term fashion. Major steps are now being taken to build toward a Canadian capacity to move one billion bushels of prairie grain to export markets each year.

If we must face a problem in the Canadian grains industry, the challenge of keeping up to our export opportunities is probably the best kind of problem. Surely the sort of situation we face this year, as troubling as it may be, is a far cry from the serious depression in grain incomes we had to face in the early 1970s when markets were tight, quotas were low and prices were painfully inadequate.

The fact that we are now facing a challenge in moving our grain fast enough means that market conditions are in fact good and that Canada occupies a strong position as a major world exporter. This has resulted from a number of factors over the last few years, including the market development programs of the federal government and of the Canadian Wheat Board, the credit terms made available to foreign buyers by the federal treasury, key diplomatic and trade missions by Canada to major importing nations such as China and Russia, and federal encouragement for diversification into export sales of grains and oilseeds like barley and rapeseed, which were not major selling items for Canada before about 1970.

Fundamentally, of course, there are two key elements in our strong marketing situation; first and foremost is the excellent quality of the grains and oilseeds produced so efficiently by Canadian farmers; and secondly, the superb, continuing work of the Canadian Wheat Board. The Wheat Board and its agents have obviously done an excellent job in winning sales contracts and, consequently, the board has had to develop a vigorous grain shipping schedule for this season, demanding that virtually each month we set a new all-time monthly record in terms of the grain volume moved.

When we hear news reports about our being behind in moving grain this year, it is useful to note that this really means behind the record breaking target levels being set by the board itself. In fact, we are a considerable distance ahead of most actual past performances, and even with the peculiar difficulties we have had to cope with this winter—heavy winter weather through the Rockies, a major derailment, a key bridge that was damaged in the Vancouver area, the severe February storms on the prairies, and so on—we are still likely to set a new annual record or near record by the end of this crop year.

Another factor to bear in mind is that since late last summer export prices have been consistently moving upward. At the moment the price for number one C.W. Red Spring wheat is well in excess of $4 per bushel. Naturally, when you shoot for an all-time volume record you are going to tax the transportation system to its absolute limits, and that is what has been happening this year. We expect to move nearly 850 million bushels of grain this year. That is about twice as much as would normally have been moved, say, 12 or 15 years ago, which means we are clearly within range of hitting the billion bushel mark in just a very few years from now.

In respect of the current situation this year, I think it is important to get our problems and our challenges in perspective. In this respect, Canada's largest and most vocal prairie grain handling firm has had quite a lot to say in recent weeks about the grain handling situation. I am referring specifically to the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, and for the record I would like to quote an important series of Saskatchewan Wheat Pool radio reports on this question. First of all, I would refer to the radio report published by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool for May 19. That radio report in part reads as follows:

> There has been a great deal said about shipping delays in Canada's grain industry this year but little, if anything, has been said about similar problems in competing countries. The result has been an impression that only Canada is the laggard while competing countries snap up the business that should be coming to this country. What are the facts?
> Reuters news agency reported that New Orleans, a major American grain outlet, had nine ships loading grain and 39 vessels backed up and waiting.
> During the first week of May, the United States Department of Agriculture set up emergency service in conjunction with the Interstate Commerce Commission with a view to sorting out the problem of an extreme shortage of rail grain cars. Apparently, the situation is a "mess". It should be remembered that U.S. grain is also moved down a less costly internal river system.
>
> In Argentina, the last report was that grain carriers were experiencing a 15 to 20 day delay in seeking loads. Buenos Aires reported 27 boats were waiting at Rosario Roads and nine at Santa Fe. In Buenos Aires itself, nine vessels were waiting. Argentine sources said delays of up to 30 days could be expected for vessels loading up river and completing cargo in Buenos Aires.
> In Australia, strikes have caused considerable congestion and shipping delays in grain shipments over the past month. Remember that Australian grain is grown near the coast of that country.
> Recognizing that there have been some problems in Canada, in mid April the Canadian Grain Commission reported total exports of Canadian grain were up by 17.5 per cent above those of a year ago. Producer deliveries to primary elevators were up by 10 per cent over the same 37 week period of a year ago. The commission reported that as of April 12th, Canadian bread wheat exports were 35 per cent higher than last year, durum was up 45 per cent, rapeseed 7.5 per cent and rye exports were running 75 per cent ahead of last year's comparable figure. It should also be noted that Canada has increased her percentage of world wheat sales, mainly at the expense of the United States.
> Quite naturally, we can't afford to take any comfort from or be complacent about grain shipping problems in Canada or the countries that we compete with. On the other hand, we need to keep things in perspective and not swallow the nonsensical impression that Canada is some sort of inefficient exception in the world of grain exports.

On May 24, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool in another radio report had this comment to make:

> Despite the difficulties encountered in moving grain from the prairies to export position on the west coast during the winter months, the Canadian Wheat Board reports its west coast shipping program is running well ahead of last year.
> Figures for the end of March, show 5.5 million tonnes shipped through the West Coast, as compared to 4.6 million tonnes at the same date in 1977. Total Canadian grain exports at the same date were 1.8 million tonnes ahead of last year, and the board says they will approach the all-time record set in 1972-73 by the end of the year.

Finally I would refer to the pool broadcast of May 26 of this year which reads in part as follows:

> With all that has been said about the cost of demurrage payments in recent weeks, it may be helpful to examine just what demurrage has cost over the past 10 years.
> An analysis of demurrage paid during the crop years from 1967-68 to 1976-77 shows the average cost of demurrage per bushel of wheat marketed was 0.54 cents per bushel. Even when calculated on the basis of cost per bushel of wheat exported, it was only 0.61 cents per bushel.
> The highest demurrage charges recorded were in 1973-74. Even then, they were only 2.14 cents per bushel of wheat marketed. The lowest demurrage was in 1967-68, a minuscule 0.002 cents per bushel of wheat marketed.
> A similar analysis of demurrage paid on barley over the same period shows average demurrage costs of 0.30 cents per bushel marketed, or 0.38 cents per bushel exported.
> Demurrage must be recognized as one of the normal and necessary costs incurred in the international grain marketing business. At a 10-year average of 0.54 cents per bushel of wheat marketed, it certainly is not out of line. Talking about lump sums can be very misleading. The objective should be to pay the least demurrage possible but again, it has to be kept in perspective. Remember that no demurrage is paid when grain isn't being sold.

I would make one more reference to the comments of this very large important grain handling organization across a good part of western Canada, particularly the province of Saskatchewan. I refer to a recent edition of the Regina Leader-Post where the Canadian Press was reporting on the general grain handling situation across the west. A part of the article reads as follows:

● (2052)

E. K. Turner, president of Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, said no one is ever satisfied with the way things go, and it is always a source of concern to see ships waiting for grain.

'But invariably, when you book heavily, it doesn't take much to disrupt the program,' he said.

'We are running at volumes comparable with last year and are in a position where we can set export records this year before the end of July.'

'Given that, things haven't been going as badly as people have painted. It also indicates our capacity for export is greater than it has been in the past.'

Obviously, if we now have the capacity to transport nearly twice as much export grain as could be handled by the system in the early 1960's, the grains system must have been subjected to some pretty important improvements in recent years.

In this connection we can think of the 8,000 grain hopper cars, the port co-ordinators, the rail cost disclosure legislation, the reciprocal railway routing agreements, the Mants report on boxcar allocations, the new quota system, the block shipping system, the Snavely investigation of railway costs, the special boxcar repair program, all the good work being done to implement the Hall report, and so on. These are all federal initiatives to help upgrade the system, taken during this past decade or so.

More modifications are obviously required and several key federal efforts are already under way. For example, there is the prairie branch line rebuilding program which will invest something in the range of $700 million of federal money to upgrade the prairie grain network to top notch condition in the next five to seven years. There is a major storage expansion now moving toward completion in Vancouver to boost our capacity and our flexibility in that port by something in the range of 40 per cent. There are the multi-million dollar development plans now in place of Prince Rupert and Churchill.

We have heard recent demands, of course, for more grain hopper cars and another grain boxcar repair program. Those demands in themselves demonstrate the success of those two federal initiatives which have been undertaken in past years. The federal government has been considering those ideas for some time and I would expect a positive response to both suggestions.

All of these measures will help, particularly in terms of our long-term prospects. But for the period immediately ahead we have to be certain we are getting the very most out of the facilities we already have. Efficiency in grain transportation and handling is extremely important in maximizing sales and minimizing demurrage—and that means dollars in the pockets of farmers.

That is why I was pleased to see this past weekend that the Government of Canada is initiating a special, immediate short-term investigation into the operations of the railways, the grain companies and the transportation section of the Canadian Wheat Board to ensure full co-operation among all agencies with grain moving responsibilities, and the most efficient possible use of all available equipment and facilities. We have got to get the very most out of the system we have now.

[Mr. Goodale.]

The investigation, to be undertaken by an independent analyst with proven experience and expertise in the railway industry, should have the active co-operation of the railways, the grain companies and the transportation section of the Canadian Wheat Board. The objective is to ensure that maximum advantage is taken of every Canadian grain selling opportunity and that demurrage costs are kept to the absolute minimum. Farmers on the prairies are concerned that we make the very most of every sales opportunity, and that we stay on target with the Wheat Board's delivery program to satisfy our customers and avoid demurrage. In addition to the long-term measures already initiated to build toward a billion bushel export target, we need immediate short-term measures too to assure that the existing rolling stock is being used to the best possible advantage and that we are getting the very most out of what we have now.

I applaud the efforts to add more hopper cars to our existing fleet of 8,000 of these ultra-modern, federally-financed grain cars. I also agree that another repair program to save additional boxcars for grain movement is a useful effort for the government to undertake.

These initiatives—along with the federal government's prairie rail rebuilding program, the storage expansion at Vancouver, the development plans for Prince Rupert and so on—will help enormously in meeting that billion bushel target that is just ahead of us. But for 1978, the rest of this crop year and the rest of this shipping season, we have to be sure that we are getting the very best out of the system that exists at the moment. That is why I believe a serious, independent and expeditious investigation of the current efficiency of the operations of the Wheat Board's transportation section, the railways and the grain companies can help to achieve the best short-term results for producers. That is obviously a priority concern. I hope that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) will get this effort under way quickly so that we can begin to see some benefits in time for the rest of this crop year and the balance of the 1978 shipping season.

Undoubtedly we have some significant challenges ahead of us in the short term and the long term, Mr. Speaker. We also have every reason to believe we will be able to meet those challenges effectively to the advantage of the grains industry, to the advantage of the Canadian grain producer in particular, and ultimately to the advantage of the national economy.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate on this motion. I feel it is a timely motion in that there is a great deal of concern in western Canada regarding the movement of grain, particularly in this season.

While the minister is still optimistic that grain exports will reach a record level, we are faced with the prospect of the inability to fulfil our export commitments on schedule. This, of course, could result in our customers losing faith in our delivery capabilities and looking elsewhere to fill their needs. In addition, we are faced with the possibility of demurrage charges estimated at between $17 and $20 million, possibly the highest we have ever seen. As the law now stands, this $17 to $20 million will be charged to the Canadian Wheat Board and taken out of the producer pools. In other words, this money will come out of the pocket of the producer.

It has been suggested by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) that we should not talk about bulk figures but, rather, that we should be relating this $17 to $20 million to the number of bushels involved so that we would end up with a fraction of a cent per bushel in demurrage charges. Whether we talk about cents per bushel or the over-all total, it is still dollars and cents out of the pocket of the western grain producer. A buck is a buck, Mr. Speaker, no matter how you look at it. Added up, this is a substantial sum.

If you consider the multiplier effect on our economy, which is usually estimated at three times the initial amount, then if we hit a $17 to $20 million demurrage charge this year it means an over-all loss to the western economy of between $50 and $60 million, a very substantial amount. In fact, if you consider the cost of a hopper car at $40,000 and look at a loss of $60 million, this means that with that money we could purchase another 1500 hopper cars.

It has been suggested on the government side of the House that there is little we can do to cut down on demurrage charges. Mr. Speaker, boats do not suddenly appear in port without warning. They move relatively slowly. They have continuous radio contact with the shore and Canadian Wheat Board officials must know well in advance what ships will be arriving, when, and the grade and quantities of wheat required. If this information is known, I find it difficult to understand why the scheduling of grain movement cannot be carried out in such a manner that the types, grades and quantities of grain are available for loading when the ships arrive.

I believe that the Canadian Wheat Board has done an excellent job under very difficult circumstances. As has been pointed out by previous speakers, despite the fact that the taxpayers of Canada have supplied the railways with some 8,000 hopper cars since 1972, our capacity is now less than it was when we started purchasing hopper cars.

In addition—and this was mentioned by a previous speaker—as a result of questions asked in the transport committee it was determined that 23,000 CNR boxcars are presently in use in the United States on a no-charge basis. While I appreciate there is always an interchange of grain cars between Canada and the United States, these 23,000 boxcars are some 10,000 cars more than normal. If these 10,000 cars were presently operating in our system, we could have moved a tremendous amount of grain to export positions and we would not be faced with the possibility of very high demurrage charges which the Wheat Board is now anticipating.

I am sure that the hon. minister in charge of the Wheat Board must have been aware for some months of the problems at the west coast. As minister in charge of transport, he must have been aware of the boxcar situation. It would seem to me that he personally, or his senior officials, should have been continuously monitoring the boxcar situation. They should have anticipated a problem and kept in touch with senior officials of both railways in an attempt to alleviate the problems we are now facing and have been facing for many months. Surely that is the responsibility of the minister, Mr. Speaker?

Over the past several years I have urged the further utilization of government inland terminals. I have asked questions and I have made recommendations without success. The five terminal elevators located at Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Calgary, Edmonton and Lethbridge have a storage capacity of some 17 million bushels. On a two-shift daily operation they have a cleaning capacity of some 440,000 bushels per day. On a five-day week operation these plants, working on a three-shift basis, have an annual cleaning capacity of 114 million bushels, or a six-day capacity of 205.9 million bushels. It is interesting to note that the terminal elevator at Moose Jaw which has a capacity of 5.5 million bushels can handle in a year a throughput of between 25 and 30 million bushels. That same elevator in a 24-hour period, using unit or solid trains, is able to load sufficient cars to fill a one million bushel boat. Yet, we are not using these facilities.

Mr. Justice Hall and his commission did a study of inland terminals. He had this to say, and I will read from page 235 of the report:

> The commission recommends the full use of the government elevators and the construction of another one at Yorkton.
> The commission does not look upon the government elevators as replacement for any of the current terminal capacity facilities, but as an addition to systems capability of handling grain.
> The commission recognizes that even with the elimination of the stop-off charges that there are going to be additional handling costs associated with the utilization of the government elevators. However, these should be more than offset by the ability to respond to market opportunities; to achieve such things as the elimination of demurrage of waiting ships, and the ability to use all the ports more effectively.

I am satisfied that the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) have little interest in the utilization of these facilities because to date they have taken no steps in that direction. Had they done so, we would have at least reduced the tremendous demurrage charges that the Canadian Wheat Board is now estimating. It must be remembered that these charges are incurred through no fault of producers. The producer has no control over them, yet he is expected to pay for them.

I concur with subparagraph (e) of the motion that is before us today which calls on the Canadian Wheat Board to be reimbursed by the treasury for the demurrage charges. As a matter of fact, on May 24 I put a question to the minister in the House. It is recorded in Hansard at page 5682. I asked the minister, without going into the preliminaries, the following:

> Will the minister give an undertaking that all or a portion of the demurrage charges will be borne by the public treasury for this year?

The minister, with his usual skill, sidestepped the question and accused me of using imaginary figures when I quoted $17 million to $20 million. The figures I used, Mr. Speaker, were figures that came from the Canadian Wheat Board, the board for which he is responsible as minister. He then went on to pat himself on the back and talked about the record movement of grain. He said this at page 5683 of Hansard:

We have a system that can handle twice as much as ever had to be handled during the regime of the right hon. gentleman for Prince Albert, because we are up to twice as much in our regular pattern.

A few minutes later the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) stood up on a question of privilege to clarify the situation at page 5687 of Hansard. This is what he said:

In 1963, the last year of the Diefenbaker administration, when wheat was still king, we exported wheat and flour to the tune of 592 million bushels, an all time record, representing 28.4 per cent of the world market. In 1976-77, the record year under the present minister, it was down to 494 million bushels, 21 per cent. This year so far 350 million bushels have been exported—below 20 per cent of the world market.

That is an interesting fact when one considers that 1963 was the record year for wheat and flour exports, and that record has not been exceeded since that time.

People on the prairies are extremely disappointed, as are members of the opposition, that the minister has shown such reluctance to implement the provisions of the Hall commission report. We are disappointed as well that it was more than a year after the report was tabled that the minister first met with Mr. Justice Hall. He has been reluctant—and I am being kind when I use that word—to have Mr. Justice Hall appear before the transport committee. Had it not been for a renegade member of his party who voted with the opposition in committee, Mr. Justice Hall would never appear before the committee. Yet what did the hon. minister say in May 1977, 11 days after the Hall commission report was handed down? He said in his news release before he spoke at a meeting of various farm associations in Regina, and I quote:

● (2112)

With the unanimous urging of westerners for prompt, decisive responses to the Hall report, I am determined to act as expeditiously as possible to deal with the commission's proposals.

We will establish in western Canada a modern, top quality handling and transportation system for prairie grain. We have had two years of study—we know the problems. Now we must move with solutions. Now is the time for action. I look forward to your active participation and co-operation in the task ahead.

Almost in the next breath in the same speech he shoved aside one of the major recommendations of the Hall commission, a recommendation which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) calls the backbone of the Hall commission report. That was the setting up of a Prairie Rail Action Committee. If one refers to the Hall report, one will find that the idea of the setting up of the authority was to study the rail lines that were in doubt. I quote from page 31 of the report:

This commission is not recommending the addition of another permanent branch to the already over-burdened bureaucratic tree. On the contrary, we believe that self-liquidation should be the ultimate goal of the Prairie Rail Authority, as will become apparent in what follows:

Time will not permit me to list the purposes of the organization, but the idea was that this prairie rail authority would monitor the lines that were in doubt, the lines that were being considered for abandonment. What happened? The minister set up what he calls the Prairie Rail Action Committee which is required to make decisions on rail lines by December 31 this year, decisions based primarily, I suspect, on some of the evidence which the Hall commission gleaned since the Prairie Rail Action Committee does not intend to hold any public hearings.

In my own area, I have a line, the Euston Junction-Colonsay line, made up of some 108.5 miles. This line carries annually over five million bushels of grain. Mr. Justice Hall and his committee made certain recommendations, one of which was to turn a portion of that line over to the prairie rail authority for consideration. The prairie rail authority, of course, would consider it over a period of three years.

What did the Prairie Rail Action Committee do? It arbitrarily decided against the recommendations of the Hall commission report and chopped off a substantial portion of the line that was to be studied. I will quote briefly from a letter I received from a gentleman in my district who, I believe, is secretary of an organization which is most concerned. He says this about the abandonment of that portion of the line from Liberty to Dilke:

The Prairie Rail Action Committee has given its recommendation without consulting anyone in this area and has done so in a very secretive manner. The pros and cons of abandonment are many and varied. We feel that the pros balance the cons and we need an explanation for the actions of the PRAC. This committee, we feel, is operating in a manner that can be described as approaching "total abandon".

That is the manner in which PRAC is operating. It will not listen to the people involved. In this instance, I understand that the elevator companies, the railways and the people in the districts were anxious that the line remain, yet the Prairie Rail Action Committee arbitrarily, without consultation, recommended the abandonment of a substantial portion of the line.

When I raised a question in the House, the minister suggested that the matter would be considered by the Canadian Transport Commission. A day or so ago I was at the transport committee meeting. Mr. Benson, chairman of the CTC, was in attendance. With regard to the lines which the PRAC is recommending for abandonment, he said his committee would not on its own take any action to hold hearings and it would only be on the basis of strong representations or recommendations from people in the various communities that they would hold hearings.

I see my time is up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to participate briefly in this debate to deal with three narrow aspects with regard to the motion before us. The first aspect, which has not been dealt with in any specific way by the minister, is item (d) which calls on the government:

—to reimburse the Canadian Wheat Board for costs of demurrage charges on ships delayed in loading through no fault of the producers or grain companies;

I hope the House will pay careful attention to that provision. Coming from the Pacific coast, I have some sympathy for western grain farmers who are continually forced to pay demurrage. This year it is estimated it will probably be between $17 million and $20 million. They are continually forced to pay demurrage through no fault of their own. The fault lies with the minister and his failure to pressure the railway companies to provide sufficient rolling stock to move the grain so that the 20 ships sitting in the harbour of Vancouver will not have to wait and wait while the farmer continues to pay and pay.

Inherent in that provision of the motion before us is that the minister be provided with some incentive to get to work and have the rail cars provided so that we can move our grain. It is not as though there are Canadians sitting idly by not wanting to build those rail cars. As the minister knows, there is in Squamish, B.C., a rail car plant that would be very anxious to get contracts to provide those kinds of railways cars.

What is the minister's basic response in terms of some incentive to get the railway companies to build those cars? Of course, there is the business of the 6 per cent. I quote from the Star Phoenix:

> The latest government incentive to the railways came in the April 10 budget when it was announced that railways can claim another 6 per cent a year depreciation allowance on equipment purchased between now and 1983.

That is a typical Liberal government response, not tying the 6 per cent to the kinds of cars needed to move grain. The railway companies are not going to throw in a whole pile of money to support the Crow rate, which we on this side continue to support. They will buy oil cars to move oil and other cars where there is some profit. Where there is a low profit margin, they are not going to buy the hopper cars.

The minister has failed to use the muscle he should in terms of such things as the budget. That 6 per cent should have specified hopper cars. They should have specified the kind of rolling stock that is necessary to move grain out of the prairies to the Pacific in order that we can satisfy some of our customers.

Since 1972 I have sat in this House listening to this government blame the grain handlers' union for failing to move the grain, and blaming the bridge in New Westminster, which always seems to be out somehow so that they cannot move the grain. That bridge is very rarely out. It is not often that a ship hits that bridge. So that approach is ruled out. But excuse after excuse continues to come from the other side of the House for failure on the government's part to deal with problems which have been apparent for years. The grain handlers cannot be blamed this time. I want to quote Mr. Henry Kancs, head of the grainworkers union:

● (2122)

> Canada will lose its foreign grain markets if the federal government doesn't smarten up and make sure the grain is delivered to waiting ships.

That is from a story in the Star-Phoenix. Mr. Dennis McDermott, president of the CLC, said the federal government should not have allowed the fleet of railway boxcars to deteriorate. Mr. Kancs further stated:

> The Americans are going to pick up the Chinese trade and now the Japanese are complaining about delays in delivery.

That is the opinion of the head of the grainhandlers union. The grain handlers want a chance to co-operate with prairie grain growers to move the crop but the minister has not taken the aggressive action necessary. I think the grain handlers are now prepared to work around the clock. The trouble is they cannot put in three shifts in 24 hours if there are not enough cars to carry the grain from the prairies to the coast. The blame lies on the minister's refusal to put pressure on the railway companies to provide the cars which are needed. It is no good offering an incentive in a general way; the 6 per cent depreciation allowance does not apply specifically to the railway companies or to the boxcar shortage. It is interesting to note that a shortage of cars always occurs where there is a fixed statutory rate. As long as there is free enterprise and managed rates a need for intervention arises if an appropriate supply of boxcars is to be maintained.

The motion says that the government has failed to expand Canada's capacity to move grain to export positions. The operative word there is "capacity". In 1972 we had 26,000 rail cars for grain movement. Now, six years later, we have 13,000 cars and 8,000 hopper cars. So there is less capacity than in 1972. Responsibility for this situation lies with the minister: it is the result of his failure to understand that we must maintain and improve the carrying capacity in order to move grain quickly into position so as to satisfy Canada's customers.

The port of Vancouver is not taking the blame for this one. The workers there are ready to do their all to move the grain. The government has failed to give the necessary instructions, or, if you like, the incentives. We would like to get some jobs in British Columbia. We have a rail plant under-employed at Squamish while the country is chronically short of rail cars. It boggles the mind that the management of our affairs should be so poor. Why cannot we put those two factors together—unused capacity to build rail cars and a shortage of cars not only to move wheat but lumber, cattle, potatoes and other products. This minister cannot piously wring his hands and suggest that difficulties of one kind or another are always with us and that, after all, we are moving more grain than ever before. Mr. Speaker, wheat sells itself. The Wheat Board sells wheat.

Mr. Alexander: Even the minister smiles at that!

Mr. Leggatt: The minister takes credit for what others have done. The world is starving for our wheat. The Canadian people know that credit for selling it does not belong to the minister.

Mr. Andras: That's a lot of bushels!

Mr. Leggatt: They don't need the minister taking credit for every bushel the Chinese people decide to buy. We could lose our markets as a direct result of the government's failure to plan for the provision of rolling stock.

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I see that the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith) is trying to catch your eye. I assure him my remarks will be brief and that he will have an opportunity to contribute to the debate before ten o'clock.

As I followed the discussion it seemed to me that most of the comments were related to the export of grain and wheat. Little was said about the importance of moving grain to eastern Canada where it is used in great quantities as feed for poultry and other livestock. I am pleased we have a minister who has done so much for the industry, particularly in connection with the transportation of grain. If the system had not been rationalized and if many difficult and expensive decisions had not been taken, much more of the market would have been supplied by grain from the United States. So we would not underestimate the importance of the efficient transport of grain from the west to eastern Canada.

I was introduced to the subject matter of this motion long before the hon. member tabled it. When I was a small boy, my father and cousin would go together in the winter time and buy a carload of grain. It was my job, along with my cousin, to bag the grain and we would team it back home. We have short memories but sometimes I remember those days not long ago, and the tremendous amount of labour involved in moving a relatively small amount of grain. I wish I could find time to go to the farm and look up some of the old waybills which are undoubtedly still there; in those days the loads were much smaller than they are today. When I am at the farm I sometimes see how the grain comes from the west now—the size of the cars and the ease with which their contents are unloaded and put through the milling process. I marvel at what has been achieved but I cannot help thinking back to the days when the work was all done by hand.

Earlier this year I had an opportunity to visit many farm communities in Saskatchewan while I was in western Canada. I listened to the comments of people in many farm communities on the subject of the rebuilding of rail lines and the movement of grain. I was much impressed by what I heard. There is no doubt that when we are thinking in terms of the best possible use of money available to the government a commitment to the western grain system of $600 million or $700 million is a very large one indeed.

I think for members of parliament from areas of Canada who are not in the prairie or grain growing regions, this is one of the things we most strongly support. Many times in this parliament people might get the impression that the country revolves around eastern Canada, and members from western Canada are asked to support many money items which are large and mainly for the benefit of people in the east; but in terms of national unity I think one of the most important aspects of a united country is that we share strengths as well as weaknesses. In terms of the over-all importance of the grain industry to Canada, this is the type of expenditure which permits the support of all members from all parts of the country.

Mr. Benjamin: It should be $1 billion.

[Mr. Milne.]

Mr. Milne: I would like to take issue, not with members of the official opposition but with whatever comes after that. Members of the NDP give much vocal muscle to whatever the problem of the moment is in this House, but if they were to read some of their own records, they would see much inconsistency.

I do not believe there can be much doubt that the business of railroading is extremely capital intensive. I believe that if someone was clairvoyant enough to predict three record crop years in succession, three successive record sales years, and a rail system built to move those crops within that short period of time, and then all that did not come about, the same people over there would be complaining about the tremendous growth in a transportation system which was not adequately used. They would be asking why so many rail cars had been purchased when there may or may not have been so much need.

I think anyone who has had experience in the past or responsibility for managing systems which are capital intensive must certainly understand that it is a judgment factor, and one of the things which has to be accomplished is to have a very high load factor or maximization of the use of capital. From the figures I have been able to read and from listening to speeches in the House, I feel that perhaps the railways and the government in concert have been able to predict fairly accurately. It may well be that the requirement to move the amount of grain which has been committed for export into eastern Canada will completely tax the system. In fact, it may not be able to deliver as quickly as one would hope. On the other hand, in terms of such tremendously capital-intensive industries as railroading perhaps investment decisions have not been all wrong and have come close to creating an optimum system.

I am quite interested in railroading. I have made it my business to learn a little about this industry. Hon. members who are contributing to this debate might be well advised to spend some time investigating the improvement in efficiency with which rolling stock is now used. I do not have any hard figures to illustrate the change in efficiency, but it has obviously improved very substantially. I suppose the introduction of computers and tracking systems by which railroads are able almost constantly to locate any rolling stock at any point in time has made a tremendous difference in terms of the effective use of the railway network. While railways are under severe criticism today by members of the New Democratic Party, I think the North American railways should at least be congratulated for operating one of the most effective networks I know.

Mr. Benjamin: It does not move enough wheat.

Mr. Milne: Members of the NDP very seldom if ever have the time or the interest to read business magazines. However, if they were to do that and if they were to read a number of American business magazines, they would find that one of the most often written about facts is the desperate state the U.S. railway system is in. As a matter of fact, in terms of investment in the state in which most of the U.S. railways have maintained their stock, there is concern about being able not only to meet commitments in terms of moving grain, but also about the vast opportunities they have for developing coal mines and delivering that coal for export to Ontario and to other places. The industry is in serious jeopardy. When we talk about operating railways, given roadbeds and cars I do not think either Canadian Pacific or Canadian National need take a back seat to anybody. In terms of the size of the network these companies are operating, they should be congratulated on running a good railway.

I certainly do not stand here as any authority on how rates are established or on how demurrage is charged, but when the grain crop and the corn crop were being planted in eastern Canada this past spring, there was very serious concern about the availability of potash. For a period of time there were a number of fertilizer-blending plants which did not have the necessary potash available. I made inquiries about this. I was concerned about the number of railway cars which were available. In spite of the fact that there was a late spring, orders were not placed as soon as they normally were and deliveries were not accepted. I think this has a bad effect on the grain industry as well.

We cannot overlook the fact that one of the major reasons was the large number of cars which were in the United States. I noticed a number of reports in the press about the large number of cars still in the United States and about why the United States takes so long to turn cars around in their system and return them. I suppose it may well be that we have better cars in our system than they have in theirs, and they like to hang on to them and use them as much as they can; but in terms of this whole question it seems to me that that might be one of the areas which might be improved.

In conclusion, I would like to point out that in terms of the economy it seems to me that rebuilding the western railway network at this point in time is a very good decision. It seems to me that the many programs always being proposed by members of the NDP for making work and for providing more funding are no more important than this type of expenditure which is in the national interest. This type of expenditure would have a long-term effect. It would expedite the movement of one of our largest renewable resources. Surely it should have some precedence over some of the other proposals put forward by hon. members opposite.

I just wanted to make these few comments in this debate on the question of wheat, grain and grain movement. Grain movement to eastern Canada is a very important part of this. In terms of improvement over the past years, the great majority of the livestock and poultry feeders in eastern Canada will want to join me in congratulating the minister on the many forward steps he has taken.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member who has just spoken has not used up his full 20 minutes, I wonder if he would permit a question.

Mr. Milne: Certainly.

Mr. Benjamin: In view of the hon. member's comment that we cannot expect railroads to maintain all this equipment just to use in peak periods, I would like to ask him if he would then follow that through. Is he saying that bus companies, city transit companies and companies which move people on rails should maintain surplus equipment to take care of peak periods? Would he apply that also to people as he would to grain or any other products?

Mr. Milne: Mr. Speaker, I come from an area which is very close to one of the largest cities in Canada, and I think it is just a plain fact that the same problem exists for moving people as for grain. There are a number of times in the peak requirement periods when a transit system does not have enough equipment to operate and they make the same judgment as the railways—the optimisation of their capital while providing the best level of service they can. I do not think either the railways or any of the other authorities moving people are able to invest economically in the kind of capital stock which would meet all needs at all times.

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to take part in the debate on this opposition motion. It seems to me, after listening to the speakers who took part in the debate today, that to say that the grain situation in Canada is critical is an understatement. That is what we have heard from almost every speaker who has spoken in this debate, and they say it is because of the bottlenecks that have occurred at the Pacific ports, the other problems we encounter in trying to get the grain to those ports, and the fact that this will probably reduce Canada's opportunities not only to deliver the grain that is now sold but to compete in any new wheat sales that may come about.

The Canadian Wheat Board has confirmed that there will be a carryover of about 350 million bushels at the end of the current year. At present, most estimates show a 35 million bushel lag in the government's grain delivery schedule. According to the Palliser Wheat Growers' Association, the carryover is about 200 million bushels greater than the ideal minimum, which means that the grain economy will lose approximately $800 million in cash receipts which would accrue if the grain was delivered. Over the past few weeks we have seen reports and read in the newspapers that there have been up to 35 ships anchored in Vancouver harbour, some of these ships waiting up to five weeks to be loaded. According to one report, of these ships only two were at the loading berths. Of course, we have grain overflowing the elevators at most of the prairie points, and there is still a lot of grain in storage on the farms. Also, we have ships crowding in at both the western and eastern ports, but we cannot deliver the grain because of the lack of boxcars.

This boxcar problem is the result of an inadequate turnaround time, and also the result of difficulties in getting cars back promptly from the United States. This does not only pertain to boxcars but also to hopper cars. Each ship that is laid over in the port costs the Wheat Board, the farmer, the consumer and the taxpayer demurrage costs amounting to some $5,000 a day. What we have is a minister who has not really taken any positive action to rectify the situation. He said in Winnipeg on May 11:

We may be getting close to what we can actually move out of the country during the course of a year.

In my estimation, that is not a very positive approach for the minister who is in charge of the Wheat Board to take. I should like to inform the minister and the federal government that there is more to Canada than the confederation-old transportation habits of moving goods inland east and west. There is also the north and the Hudson Bay Strait navigated by Hudson's Bay Company ships since 1668 and by grain ships through ports other than the port of Churchill since 1932.

The port of Churchill, as I have said in the House time and time again and as has been said by the Board of Grain Commissioners and the Wheat Board, is the most efficient grain handling port in Canada. Churchill's grain elevator operation has a turnover six times its storage capacity in less than the 100 days of the shipping season. That was the case in 1977. In the same year, the four dumpers allowed the elevator to unload slightly over 16,000 boxcars in 87 days of unloading. This gives an average of 184 cars per every eight hour working shift. This is what makes this port such an efficient grain handling operation. It handles no other commodity at present than grain and, believe me, it can handle grain without any problem. Thirty million bushels have been put through the port last year and 50 million bushels have been put through the elevator at a very small extra cost. I am glad to see the Chief Justice Emmett Hall has stated in his recommendations that the port should be upgraded to handle 55 million bushels a year. This would certainly take some of the pressure off the western ports.

Of course, the turnaround time on the boxcars is what must be considered. At present, the turnaround time out of Churchill is four days for a boxcar that goes up to Churchill, as compared to a five weeks waiting period for boxcars going to western or eastern ports. The travel distance from Yorkton, Saskatchewan is 722.5 miles. If you extend that to Moose Jaw, it is only a little over 100 miles more, which makes it only 822.5 miles as compared to the 1,301.7 miles to Vancouver from Yorkton or from Moose Jaw, give or take 75 to 100 miles. When you are shipping from Yorkton or Moose Jaw to Prince Rupert, it is 1,493.1 miles. The distance that has to be travelled to haul this grain to the west ports is twice that much, and when you consider the efficient turnaround time in Churchill, these cars could be back in service in one eighth of the time if more grain was moved out through Churchill instead of being hauled in these boxcars all the way out to the west coast.

I am not saying that the port of Churchill can compete with the western sea ports, but it would certainly relieve those sea ports if we only took the initiative to put on a double shift at the port of Churchill. CNR says it can handle more than 30 million bushels, and I want to compliment that company at this time because in 1977 they had a well co-ordinated season and shipped 30 million bushels up to Churchill with no problem. It was in the elevator by October 1. However, no one really knows why the last two ships did not arrive in Churchill. This meant that three million bushels were left in storage in Churchill where we have a five million bushel storage capacity. It means money in the pockets of the port authorities when we have some grain stored there.

On May 2, 1978 the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) told the House of Commons that modernization of the outmoded prairie rail system and expansion of Pacific port facilities will increase grain exports by another 100 million bushels. The Federal government must take the initiative now to improve our economic position, ensuring that our raw resources reach export positions on time and help our balance of trade deficit. If the government would take action now and just give Churchill the opportunity, I am positive that 55 million bushels could be moved through the port.

Chief Justice Emmett Hall backs this up in his report, and the Churchill Development Board certainly substantiates those figures. Shipping through Churchill has increased by 7 per cent in the past year, and Lloyd's Underwriters of London have indicated that they would be more flexible in setting dates for the Churchill shipping season. Last year that extra 7 per cent was certainly a big benefit for us. At present, cargo and hull insurance is available only for ships which pass through the straits no earlier that July 23 and clear Churchill by October 20, with high risk insurance premiums charged after October 15. So we only have an 88-day shipping season.

The National Research Council has published a study indicating that the Churchill shipping season could be extended by 24 days on the average, an increase of 27 per cent in the season. The province of Manitoba royal commission inquiry into northern transportation indicated that the close of the season could be extended by 13 to 28 days. Can one imagine such an extension? That would provide the port of Churchill with another 10 million to 14 million bushels. With little capital investment and an extended season to November 10, more than 50 million bushels could be shipped annually through the port.

In conjunction with the Hudson Bay Route Association and the Port of Churchill Development Board, I urge the government to disregard the Bryden report and studies by the National Harbours Board condemning the future of the port of Churchill. Certainly that is what the Bryden report did. The minister found someone whom he knew would come up with a written report speaking out against the port of Churchill.

After the government spent $1.7 million on the Hall Report and $50 million to upgrade the town and port of Churchill, surely the Minister of Transport will not allow the findings of one or more reports to jeopardize the future of the port of Churchill. There has been a series of studies dating back as early as 1811 when Lord Selkirk settled the Red River Valley on the recommendation of his report on the Hudson Bay route by his peers in England. In the near future we may have oil tanker traffic, uranium exports, increased grain shipment because of the world food crisis, sulphur from Alberta and potash from Saskatchewan.

Repeatedly I have asked the minister to consider shipping CIDA grain through Churchill. Those grains come under the direct control of the Canadian Wheat Board. When CIDA grain is being shipped through other ports, those ports are tied up, whereas Churchill could handle this additional grain. It could be scheduled not to interfere with the other grain shipping which goes through that port.

Must we wait for a second and third transportation foul-up before the minister takes action? In 1974 the government promised that the total grain handling system from the granary to the ship in the harbour would be revamped. Where is the long-term strategy? Why have western producers not been informed about it? Will the government tell the House why it is still unprepared to allow for greater provincial power-sharing in grain marketing?

The Hudson Bay Route Association unanimously passed a resolution this spring at its 35th annual meeting. The resolution cited increased operating costs of the St. Lawrence seaway, the political uncertainty of Quebec and the potential of the port of Churchill as being reasons for developing the northern port with provincial funds. It wants to see the three prairie governments taking a leading role in extending the shipping season out of the port of Churchill, expanding port traffic and enlarging port facilities.

If the federal government does not have the foresight to develop and utilize the port of Churchill to its full capacity, will the minister give that power to provincial governments? Will he turn that port over to provincial governments? Perhaps they can give the government $1 for that port. I am sure provincial governments would have that port working in no time. At this particular time, western premiers are prepared to take whatever action is necessary. If the minister would turn that port over, I am sure they would grab it.

The following resolutions were passed unanimously at the Hudson Bay Route Association annual convention: extension of the insurable shipping season out of Churchill; use of M.V. Arctic, a new semi-icebreaker bulk carrier, for grain shipments out of Churchill; construction of a new larger tug to assist ships when they arrive at Churchill; and the resumption of flour shipments through Churchill. The people in the Hudson Bay Route Association and the Port of Churchill Development Board are taking initiatives now to ensure the present and future success of Churchill. They have a commitment to the people of western Canada, the grain producers, the harbour people and overseas markets.

Where is the commitment of the federal government? Where is the commitment to fulfil the recommendations of the Hall report to meet the needs of people? We have been waiting a long time, and we are still waiting.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in the last few minutes available I should like to bring into perspective some of the remarks which have been made today concerning this particular motion.

I want to highlight one glaring weakness in the positions of the government and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in respect of a very important part of the policy governing grain delivery in western Canada, that is, the Crowsnest pass rates. On a number of occasions the minister stated that he has maintained the Crowsnest pass rates. No one is taking issue with that. We are concerned about the minister's and the government's intentions for the future of the Crowsnest pass rates.

During the 1974 election campaign I ran for the first time. I was very attentive as to what the government said in respect of grain transportation and matters relating to agriculture. During the course of that campaign, the Winnipeg Free Press of June 11, 1974, reported the following:

> Otto Lang said, "as long as the Liberal party forms the government and as long as producers wish to continue to deliver to the elevator of their choice, not one rail line will be abandoned.

Also, the Winnipeg Free Press of June 15, 1974 reported the following:

> He (Trudeau) also reiterated his party's pledge to end any freight discrimination on the movement of meat, livestock and feed grains across Canada. This would not affect the Crowsnest special rates to aid the movement of grains for export to the west coast.

No sooner was parliament in session than the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board in an address to the Canada Grains Council in Edmonton said the following:

> As part of the complete overhaul of the transportation system, we may have to examine the effect of the Crowsnest rates, particularly as they apply to domestic movements of grain.

Also he emphasized that the change was only a suggestion, and that the Crowsnest rates are a detriment to both rail carriers and producers.

In conclusion, the fact of the matter is that the minister has not given an unequivocal commitment to the Crowsnest pass rates in statutory form. In fact, Liberal candidates across western Canada are suggesting other methods of paying western Canadian farmers at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to declare, pursuant to Standing Order 58(11), that the proceedings on the motion have expired.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—PAYMENT OF LEGAL COSTS OF MEMBER OF FORCE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, on April 25 I asked the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) whether he would be prepared to pay the legal costs of a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who won a precedent-setting case. Perhaps I could have asked other ministers or members opposite if they were prepared to pay the legal costs of individuals who also won their cases against the government, such as Mr. Larry Stopforth and Mr. Walter Rudnicki.

I asked my question in the connotation as to whether the same consideration would be given to RCMP Corporal John Danch as was apparently being given to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer). I raised this matter previously in correspondence and verbally with the present Solicitor General and his predecessor, but so far RCMP Corporal John Danch has not had his legal costs paid. His counsel, a distinguished Ottawa barrister, put the matter this way:

● (2202)

The simple fact of the matter is, that this man was dismissed, and in order to put the record straight and by reason of significant lapses on the part of the officials in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, it became necessary for him to appeal. His appeal was successful, resulting in his reinstatement which has the effect, apart from anything else, of setting the record straight. He has since gracefully retired. It seems to me, that it was never the intention of those who drafted this appeal procedure, that a successful appellant should swallow the substantial legal fees involved in putting the matter right.

The House would perhaps be interested in knowing a bit more about the way Corporal Danch has been "looked after", after twenty years on the force, after winning his case, and so on. After he resigned he was raided by about half a dozen members of the force and his house was searched and even socks and children's colouring books were taken pursuant to the search warrant, which stipulated only that they were looking for a tape recording, a copy of an RCMP report dated July 15, 1977 and a typewriter. Despite this, the members took away a host of memorabilia and personal items, in my opinion exceeding the jurisdiction of the warrant for search. They have since, I am informed, returned most if not all of what they took.

In addition, Corporal Danch, because of the delay in processing his appeal, had to draw unemployment insurance, and when reinstated he ran into administrative problems in the arrangements to repay. The force deducted a larger sum than agreed upon, and when Danch sought clarification weeks passed without any response, without any answers to his letters. I understand this has now been rectified.

My point is that John Danch has not been treated very well. He finally wrote a letter to a Halifax newspaper after I raised the matter in the House. It was a very reasonable letter and I should like to read part of it into the record. It states in part:

When the recommendation for discharge was first made, I felt there were injustices implied and involved. I therefore pursued my rights through the proper channels, the courts, and did this not with the idea of personal material gain, but with a sense of obligation instilled in me through my many years of service.

From the events that have since transpired, whereby I have been harassed, and intimidated, I would have just cause for bitterness and animosity. This is not my stature as I continue to have a high regard for the force. Even now with all the adverse publicity that is being generated against the force, my sympathies go forth to all the dedicated field personnel. It is indeed unfortunate that the force's problems and troubles can in large part be attributed to the treatment of its own personnel. It is in essence a strange attitude they possess whereby it is more important to justify matters than to correct procedures;—

Corporal Danch's letter in this Halifax newspaper has drawn comment and one 20-year veteran of the force responded. I am not going to mention his name for obvious reasons. He also had some interesting things to say about this matter. He said:

I read with great interest your letter to the editor in Saturday's Chronicle-Herald and for what it's worth, I say a very hearty "Bravo" to you.

He goes on to state in the letter:

You mention in your letter that we have no way of knowing whether unfair processing has really been stopped. I rather suspect that you inserted that for the benefit of the reading public. You can bet your life that it has not and will not until some drastic changes are effected in force policy.

I omit language which you might find unparliamentary, if not unfamiliar, Mr. Speaker. The letter continues:

Hats off to you. Keep up your fight. You won't get anywhere in the force (I'm assuming you're still a member) but you'll have the satisfaction of knowing you stood up for what you knew was right and that's a heck of a lot more than far too many of those—

I would censor the next word, Mr. Speaker, concluding the quotation as follows:

—management types can honestly tell their mirrors.

In conclusion, I want to suggest to the minister that the field personnel of the RCMP, the real backbone of the force, are apprehensive about what is happening. They know a double standard exists. They know, too, that there is not very much aid or comfort for them just because they follow orders. This is something that they were always taught—that if they followed orders they would be looked after. Now they are beginning to realize that unfortunately this is not always the case.

● (2207)

I would urge the minister to be equitable in cases such as this which can be symbolic and to bring in improvements in the way lower ranking personnel are treated. I ask once more, knowing this is the right and equitable thing, that the minister consider seriously exercising the discretion he has to pay the legal costs of an RCMP corporal who had no recourse but to resort to the courts regarding what he justly felt was a grievance, who won his case and is now faced with a legal bill for several thousand dollars and a very vindictive attitude expressed toward himself as a result of his success.

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, Corporal J. Danch was discharged from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police by the commissioner under authority of RCMP regulation 173 on 15 December 1976. Subsequently, Corporal Danch made representation to the Federal Court of Appeal to review the matter of his dismissal. As a result of their review, the Federal Court, in a split decision, set aside the decision of the Commissioner due to a procedural error in the processing of Corporal Danch's recommendation for discharge. The court's decision then meant Corporal Danch had been and continued to be a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and he was notified accordingly.

Following the federal court decision, Corporal Danch was again notified that his discharge was being recommended and he was given an extended period of time in which to submit an appeal. At the conclusion of the appeal period, Corporal Danch advised that it was his wish to voluntarily retire to pension.

Before resigning, Corporal Danch made application to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for reimbursement of his costs in presenting his case to the federal court of Canada. His request was reviewed and the legal opinion expressed was that the federal court dealt with the subject of party and party costs in rule 1408, which states:

No costs shall be payable by any party to an application to another unless the court in its discretion for special reason, so orders.

In the circumstances of this case, the federal court of appeal did not see fit to exercise its discretion in favour of Corporal Danch regarding costs.

The matter of solicitor and client costs was also considered. Corporal Danch is not entitled to costs from the Crown and there is no liability, therefore, whatsoever either in fact or in law.

The matter of an ex-gratia payment to Corporal Danch for his costs also received careful consideration but in view of the fact the commissioner's decision was not set aside on the merits of this case, but rather on a technical issue, neither the commissioner nor the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) are prepared to support a submission to Treasury Board. However, Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the hon. member that while the Solicitor General is not supporting the payment of his legal fees, Corporal Danch's file is being reviewed with respect to the question he has raised concerning the payment of unemployment insurance benefits.

NATIONAL SECURITY—RIGHT OF MINISTERS TO KNOW HOW SECURITY PERSONNEL OPERATE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Through you, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to bring to the attention of all hon. members that on December 14, 1977, at page 1856 of Hansard, I asked the then solicitor general, who has since left that post, whether he agreed with the novel theory the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that the solicitor general should not have any knowledge of whether or not the security forces of our country are acting legally or illegally, and whether or not he also agreed with the right hon. gentleman's novel theory that where security forces act secretly and illegally, the courts will protect us.

The solicitor general did not answer, apparently because the right hon. gentleman interrupted. I had occasion to ask the same question of the present Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) on February 6, 1978, as recorded at page 2571 of Hansard. I just want to put the position so that there is no doubt. The Prime Minister's reasoning is very strange indeed. He says that protection against illegal police activity lies with the courts. It is of benefit to look at exactly what the Prime Minister said:

We have the protection of the courts. If you want to break into somebody's house, you get a warrant. A court decides if you have reasonable and probable cause to do it. If you break in without a warrant, a citizen lays a charge and the police are found guilty. So this is control on the criminal side—

The trouble with this notion is that, first of all, the control by the courts which the Prime Minister refers to in the example he gives is only there if the police act lawfully and apply for a warrant. It is true that the application may be refused, not because there is illegality, but because the court decides there are insufficient grounds for granting a warrant. But the example used to support the Prime Minister's argument stops way short of meeting the real problem which is in issue, and that is the case where the warrant is refused and the police break in anyway, or when the police may well know there are insufficient grounds for obtaining a warrant and decide to break in, not just illegally, but secretly, without reference to a court.

Suppose I return from a weekend away from my residence and find there has been a break-in. Trusting the police, I call them to investigate. If they are the ones who committed the illegal break-in, does the Prime Minister really believe they will tell me about it and lay charges against themselves? The court will never even find out who broke in, let alone "protect us" from such illegal action.

Assume further that because I have practised law for years, I get suspicious and I go over the head of the police and ask the Solicitor General to investigate, which surely I have a right to do because he is the elected person ultimately responsible for police action. What is the Solicitor General going to say? Acting on the Trudeau theory, I will be told that the Solicitor General "should be kept in ignorance of the way in which the police are doing it". So how can I expect the Solicitor General to know, or even find out, because, again quoting the Prime Minister, "the government should keep its nose out of the operations of the police force".

It does not take a great deal of intelligence to realize that the courts can only act if someone lays a charge, or if the police lay a charge. Let us remember that the courts cannot convict unless someone proves the case with evidence. As is usually the case, the police investigate and produce the evidence. If the police are acting illegally and secretly, there is not much chance of an individual citizen ever finding the evidence. The court, or a judge, has no power to order charges or commence proceedings. In the absence of any responsibility to know or to act on the part of the Solicitor General, it is foolishness talk of the courts protecting the citizen from illegal activity of security forces or any other police force.

The Prime Minister went on to say that the government does not "have the authority" to act "in so far as the operations are concerned on the criminal side". This is bunkum. The Solicitor General, to whom security services report, certainly has the authority to act.

The Prime Minister then remarked: "On the security side if you are fearful that this kind of thing is happening"—that is, illegal acts—"we have a royal commission of inquiry". Who orders the inquiry? Obviously, the government orders it. But can anyone believe that the only way the Solicitor General is to find out this is necessary is after some citizen, on his own, collects sufficient evidence, and, I suppose, makes it public, so that political considerations compel the government to act? The whole thesis of the Prime Minister has already been contradicted by former solicitor general Fox. It was because the then solicitor general finally decided to ask questions that caused him to act by setting up the present royal commission under Mr. Justice McDonald.

The entire argument of the Prime Minister is wrong. It is wrong because it contravenes the principle of ministerial responsibility which secures the rights of innocent people and is based on the premise that ultimately our elected representatives must ensure that those who report to them, and for whom they are responsible, exercise their functions within the law.

But it is also wrong because, when it comes to secret illegal activities of a police force, the courts cannot protect the citizen unless charges are laid, and it is highly unlikely that those who are breaking the law will investigate themselves and lay charges against themselves. The Prime Minister may not like our traditions of parliamentary democracy and responsibility under the rule of law, but he must not get away with changing them. I would like to know whether the present Solicitor General subscribes to the dangerous nonsense promulgated by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the question posed by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) on February 6, 1978 which is found at page 2571 of Hansard in which he refers to the theory of ministerial responsibility as advanced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at his press conference on December 9, 1977.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) agrees with the position as expressed by the Prime Minister during the course of his press conference. Surely the hon. member recognizes that in order to preserve the independence of the law enforcement agencies from political interference in their day to day operations, the politicians—and here I quote the Prime Minister—"who happen to form the government should be kept in ignorance of the day to day operations of the police force and even of the security force."

Mr. Fraser: Even in the way they are doing it?

Mr. Young: If the hon. member had read further the transcript—

Mr. Fraser: I have the whole thing.

Mr. Young: —of the Prime Minister's press conference, he would have found that the Prime Minister stated on the security side that the principle has been that the police do not tell their political superiors about daily operations, but they do have to act under the general directives and guidelines laid down by the government of the day. On the criminal side, members of the RCMP are accountable for their actions because of the necessity to present evidence in a court of law.

Theoretically, Mr. Speaker, an illegal act which remained secret could not be brought to the attention of any court. However, by the rigorous implementation of the RCMP commissioner's policy internally within the force and the safeguard, as proposed in the recently introduced act to amend the RCMP Act, of an independent third party review in the public domain as recommended by the Marin commission, illegal activities, if they occur, will certainly be brought to the attention of the courts.

• (2217)

In conclusion, it bears repeating that if the government finds any evidence of illegal activity, that evidence is turned over to the attorney general of the province in which the alleged illegal activity took place. This has been a long standing policy on the force and has been exemplified by the recent series of referrals to the provincial attorneys general as the result of the work of the commissions of inquiry.

The interest and concern of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) in this matter is certainly appreciated by the Solicitor General and I would like to thank the hon. gentleman for this opportunity to reply to his concerns this evening.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—YOUNG CANADA WORKS PROGRAM—FUNDS TO ASSIST STUDENTS

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, since I first raised this question of Young Canada Works with the minister in this House on April 3, 1978, I have raised it on three different occasions. In correspondence and conversation with the minister's special assistant, Mr. Matt Graham, he has assured me that if there was to be a redistribution of funds, my constituency, along with Gander-Twillingate, would be first and second.

What bothers me is that we meet now on June 5, and having recently returned from my riding after interviewing a good number of university students who have been idle for over a month, and seeing the numbers who are graduating from grade 12 in the various high schools in my area, I see a crisis situation developing.

On March 2, I sent to the minister a special study that we had done on the grade 11 and 12 students in the high schools of Cape Breton-East Richmond which revealed that last summer 59 per cent of them were unemployed. A study that was done during the previous summer for the Department of the Secretary of State showed that in the Glace Bay area itself there was approximately 72 per cent student unemployment, and 44 per cent unemployment of non-student youth.

On April 25 I finally received an answer from the minister. He replied that he apologized for the delay, and I quote:

—because your letter and brief contained a great deal of material that needed to be examined in detail.

The major criticism offered by the minister of the results of the questionnaire was, and I quote:

It only contained high school students and not university students.... In comparing your 1977 allocation with the current one, you said that last year you received $424,000, while this year you received only $283,000.... I should point out that these figures are not entirely comparable as the former includes an additional amount that was granted through the reallocation of those funds that some constituencies were unable to use, whereas the latter does not.... Of course I am unable at this time, to determine the amount that will be available for redistribution this year but you may be sure that your constituency will be given every consideration when the redistribution exercise is undertaken later this spring.

It is now well beyong spring and we are into the summer season for college, technical and university students and will soon be into summer for high school students too. May I ask the minister, or his representative here this evening, to tell me truthfully whether a redistribution exercise is going to take place at all, or have the constituencies been allotted the total amounts they are going to get for Young Canada Works? There are a lot of very concerned students who are involved.

Just recently, a high school teacher in my riding from the town of New Waterford did a study in even more depth, using a better methodology than we used last fall, called the opinion analysis group technique. They found projected summer unemployment rates for high school graduates in the town of New Waterford of 71.6 per cent, and of these only 17.1 per cent would work long enough to be eligible for Unemployment Insurance Commission benefits. The percentage of students who see any possibility of getting jobs by moving out of the area was 11.3 per cent. Mr. Hollohan and his group went on to extrapolate from their sample and estimated there are over 14,500 unemployed people on Cape Breton Island and that 71.6 per cent of these are in the age group 16 to 24.

We recently witnessed the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) postponing what was expected to be an election in June or July because of what he termed the economic message for the government which was revealed by the polls. I think the government, in taking away the $2.5 million from the Young Canada Works program this year, has done a major injustice to the young people of this country and their parents, especially to those who have the misfortune to live in the low income and low employment areas. It is a sad thing to see a government so callous about what happens to its young high school graduates and to its college and university graduates that it will not make money available even on a short-term basis, knowing how difficult it will be for these people to find longer term employment. I wonder how many of the sons and daughters of MPs will be without employment this summer.

The government's policy is creating cynicism and alienation among many young people in this country. Many grade 12 students will have to cut out further education or demand increasing loans which will make the whole situation more expensive or self-defeating in any case. As a member of parliament from an area of heavy unemployment I can say it is a sickening experience to face this situation, and one can hardly exaggerate its effect in creating an increasingly negative attitude toward the country on the part of our young adults.

The figures which follow show the amount of money allocated through the Young Canada Works program in each of the three constituencies in Cape Breton for 1977 and 1978. For Cape Breton-East Richmond the amount was $283,000; for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso it was $289,000, and for Cape Breton-The Sydneys, $316,000. Those were the figures for 1978. I should have read the 1977 figures first. They were, for those three constituencies respectively, $424,000, $365,000 and $438,000. The number of registered student clients at Canada Manpower centres without employment was 3,505 in May, 1977, 3,986 in June, 3,613 in July and 3,513 in August when the largest number should have been working. This gives us a rough idea of what we can expect. In fact, the situation will be worse this summer.

And still we have a Prime Minister who talks about a just society with equal opportunity. To that, I say baloney—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member.

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in responding on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) I want to say that the concern expressed by the hon. member is most certainly shared by the minister and by others on this side of the House. The hon. member's interest in employment opportunities for youth is well documented as the result of his many interventions in this chamber on their behalf. I want to assure him that he is joined not only by the minister but, I am sure, by all members in the House.

Might I comment that the commission is making every effort possible to alleviate the student unemployment situation with the amount of funds which are available to it. Should additional funds become available the minister gives the undertaking that he will immediately inform members. The minister realizes that the Young Canada Works program has received a reduction in its level of funding over last year. However, it is not as extreme as the hon. member has stated. Under the 1977 Young Canada Works program $46 million was allocated to constituencies across the country and for the summer of 1978 the sum of $43.5 million has been allocated.

Young Canada Works is only one of the elements of the government's 1978 Canada summer youth employment program which has been funded at $96.2 million. Other elements include such other activities as the Canada Student Employment Centres, the job exploration program and the summer job core program which had its level of funding increased from $10 million to $12 million last year. As I mentioned in the House on April 3, 40 per cent of those who participate in the Canada Works programs are young people.

As to the hon. member's question concerning the economic growth component, the minister forwarded a letter to all members of parliament on March 3, 1978 which explained this new initiative in detail. Some $50 million will be available to this program in 1978-79 for the funding of projects which will directly or indirectly result in the creation of continuing employment in the private sector. Available funds will be distributed on a provincial-territorial basis in approximately the same ratio as Canada Works funds are presently made available.

Projects are proposed by federal departments and agencies. In fact, the Treasury Board has approved some nine federal proposals involving approximately $27 million in economic growth component funds. Details as to the activities approved by the Treasury Board have been or will be announced by the ministers involved over the next few weeks. At that time the initial impact of this program on the Atlantic constituencies will be available. Further proposals are still under review, and the minister hopes to be able to recommend the best of these to the Treasury Board as soon as possible.

In conclusion, I would like to add that, in addition to the initiatives we are considering under the economic growth component, the commission is looking at a variety of schemes through which Canada Works funds can be made available for activities of major economic benefit to regions. The minister points out that many of these discussions have centred around potential activities in the Atlantic provinces, particularly in the area of forest management.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 10.28 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

TRANSPORT

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF HALL REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the fact that the Liberal backbench member of parliament for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) announced in his press release of Saturday, June 3, that the "Government of Canada will initiate a special, immediate investigation into the efficient use of prairie grain handling and transportation facilities" which "will be undertaken by an independent analyst with proven experience and expertise", and in light of the fact that the government has spent $1.7 million on the Hall report, long regarded as the blueprint for improving the transportation of grain by rail and the economic position of western Canada, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That this House immediately instruct the Minister of Transport to make a statement on motions explaining this new, so-called investigation as announced by the hon. member for Assiniboia, who to parliament's knowledge is not a member of the cabinet and, furthermore, if the silence of the Minister of Transport is an indication of approval of this press release, that the minister explain why he has added another nail in the coffin, burying the recommendations of the Hall report.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion can only be done by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CONTINGENCY PLANS RESPECTING CANADA-U.S. FISHERIES DISPUTE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the breakdown of diplomatic negotiations between Canada and the United States on fishery questions which could result in the U.S. imposing countervailing duties on Canadian fish marketed as to 80 per cent in that country, involving a value of some $450 million a year, and since this confrontation has occurred as a result of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) taking charge of the negotiations with the U.S. himself, in replacement of Mr. J. Allan Beesley who had headed the Canadian side, with the result that a botch has been made of the Canadian case, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the Prime Minister be requested to advise the House on motions as to contingency plans of the government in the event of the imposition of countervailing duties on Canadian fish products by the United States, and that the Prime Minister apply the principle of equidistance to the Secretary of State for External Affairs by insisting that he keep his distance from the negotiations between the U.S. and Canada, and that the Prime Minister direct the Secretary of State for External Affairs to bring J. Allan Beesley back to Ottawa to take charge of the Canadian side of the negotiations immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the proposed motion. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, such a motion would require unanimous consent before it could be put. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PRO RATA PENSIONS FOR WIDOWS OF VETERANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House applauds the Minister of Veterans Affairs for having introduced last week a bill to increase the basic rate of the war disability pension—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hope that applause has been noted.

—which the House was pleased to pass through all stages in less than an hour, and this House now calls on the same minister to expedite his review of the 48 per cent rule which applies to the pensions of the widows of disabled veterans, it being the view of the House that where the veteran's disability pension was below 48 per cent there should be a pro rata pension for his widow as a matter of right, it being clearly understood that this House would pass such legislation, also, in one hour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

S.O. 43

PROMOTION OF CAREER DIPLOMATS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgency as a result of a news report in today's Ottawa Journal to the effect that the government is considering the appointment of more persons from outside the regular foreign service as Canadian ambassadors and mentioning, also, the names of a number of those who are under consideration for such appointments and who are not members of the Department of External Affairs. I would, therefore, ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

● (1412)

That the Secretary of State for External Affairs advise the House whether this report is accurate and, if it is, what are all the reasons that the government is extending the policy of denying well-earned promotions to career diplomats who have faithfully served the Government of Canada for many years and have earned the right to such promotions by means of their loyalty, knowledge and ability, and that an immediate policy be introduced to recognize those many persons who have given so much in the service of their country as members of the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

FRENCH LANGUAGE SERVICES IN ONTARIO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Considering the overwhelming support from all sides of the Ontario legislature late last week at second reading of a private members' bill to enshrine French language services in law in Ontario, and considering this parliament's support for reasonable and just treatment of both official language groups across Canada, I moved, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House urges Premier Davis to proceed with the said legislation not only to bring justice to more than one-half million Franco-Ontarians but also to demonstrate at this time of national unity crisis support from Canada's largest English language province for fair and reasonable treatment of official language minorities.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Stuart Smith said no.

COMMUNICATIONS

DISPUTE BETWEEN SENATOR AND BROADCASTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the desirability of making certain that the power of the CRTC is not being used for partisan political purposes, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

That the Minister of Communications, after suitable investigation, inform the House, tabling any necessary documents or correspondence, that yesterday's request to radio station CJOR for 80 hours of the tape of Ed Murphy's reaction line show was not in any way caused directly or indirectly by a dispute between the government House leader in the Senate, Senator Ray Perrault, who is being sued by Mr. Murphy in the B.C. supreme court as a result of inflammatory remarks reportedly made by Senator Perrault over radio station CKNW with reference to Mr. Murphy and his best-selling book "A Legacy of Spending" which, as the House knows, documents in a factual way the waste and mismanagement of this government.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

CALL FOR RE-EXAMINATION OF SPORT FISHING REGULATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the fisheries dispute between Canada and the United States now appears to have expanded into recreational fisheries, and in view of the fact that new recreational fishing techniques, such as electronic fish-finders, sophisticated downriggers, etc., are being used in recreational fishing, particularly with regard to west coast salmon stocks, by U.S. boats, I move, seconded, by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That the federal Minister of Fisheries and the Environment re-examine the present fisheries regulations in the sport fishing area with a view to regulating the use of new sport fishing techniques and licensing of tourist fishing in ocean waters.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCE

TAX INCENTIVES TO REDUCE LAY-OFFS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In the context of the just released May lay-off figures showing that almost 4,000 Canadians were laid off in May in addition to those who were laid off in April, and also in the context of the rather strange speech given by the Minister of Finance to the CMA last evening in which the minister indicated that businessmen in Canada on many occasions are given a ten-point tax advantage compared with their counterparts in the United States, would the minister indicate to the House why we are having these continued lay-offs in Canada, and has he any particular suggestion as to how the situation can be corrected?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there are always some problems in certain areas of the economy. However, I think the hon. member could have mentioned that there was an increase of 12.6 per cent in car and truck sales in Canada from May to May. I said in my speech in Toronto that, contrary to the rumours spread around by the hon. member, when we do a thorough study of the comparison between the Canadian tax system and the American tax system, we find that our tax system for corporations is very competitive with the American system: it is even better.

● (1417)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In the May budget of four years ago, Mr. Turner, referring to the manufacturers' and processors' incentives that the government of the day had given to the various businessmen in Canada, said that he anticipated a great expansion in industry. Four years later, in April of this year, we find that we have 18,000 fewer people working in manufacturing in Canada.

Would the minister indicate if he feels that the incentives given the manufacturers and processors at that time have not worked; or, if he feels that they have worked, would he indicate why there appears to be a lack of confidence to which he referred last evening when he was speaking to the CMA?

Mr. Chrétien: There is always fluctuation in an open market economy like ours. Of course, the economy has changed its pattern and at this time there is more emphasis on services than on manufacturing. It is a phenomenon that is not only Canadian but one that we find all around the world.

Mr. Stevens: Would the minister indicate whether he is entirely happy with his budgetary stance at the present time and does not contemplate any changes, notwithstanding the fact that not only were there 4,000 persons laid off last month but 3,000 of them were laid off in Ontario alone?

Mr. Chrétien: We had a budget recently, and I just gave an example of provisions in the budget that are working very well. For example, the fact that we have cut the sales tax on cars has produced dramatic results, as well as the fact that we had an increase of 12.6 per cent from May to May.

TRADE

BILATERAL DISCUSSIONS ON GATT PROPOSALS

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last week the Prime Minister attended the NATO meetings in Washington and it was expected that he would be discussing with the other leaders at those meetings the questions of the GATT negotiations, particularly in view of the fact that the Americans have taken the position that there must be substantial agreement by July 15, that their authority to negotiate will run out at the end of the year and in view of our serious economic problems. Did the Prime Minister have any bilateral discussions on that subject last week and, if so, with what effect and with whom?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, there was no attempt, and no intention on the part of any of the participants, to discuss the matters in the context of the NATO summit held in Washington last week. I did have some bilateral meetings or discussions with other leaders, some of whom will be attending the summit in Bonn in the middle of July, and I did express views there about the importance of not only looking at short-term improvements but at medium and long-term improvements in our economies, including trading patterns.

Mr. Crosbie: In view of the fact that the government's figures show a loss of 80,000 manufacturing jobs between the end of 1974 and the end of 1977, and in view of the difficulties that we are having in the television industry, where the sale of Canadian TV sets has fallen almost 30 per cent and where 4,500 jobs have been lost in the last several years in that industry alone, as well as serious declines in furniture and other industries and, as the Science Council points out, deindustrialization is posing a real threat to Canada, can the Prime Minister tell the House what is his strategy at the GATT negotiations to protect Canada from further injury to the manufacturing industry and a further loss of jobs, particularly in view of the July 15 deadline? What is our strategy to avoid harm to ourselves and to our productive sector?

Mr. Trudeau: As the Minister of Finance just replied in answer to a previous question, within a free economy there are moving patterns of development. In the case of Canada, we like to see jobs created in all sectors, but the trend nowadays in most industrialized, advanced societies is to create more jobs in the service sector: this is happening in Canada. In so far as the rate of creation of jobs is concerned, we have told the hon. member before that between last year and the same time this year some 330,000 jobs were created in Canada. That is a faster job-creation rate than exists in any other industrialized society.

Mr. Crosbie: The 4,500 people who have lost their jobs in the television parts manufacturing industry would be interested to hear the Prime Minister's figure of the number of jobs being created. They have lost 4,500 jobs. Could the Prime Minister tell us, in relation to that particular industry, why the government has not taken action such as the successful action the United States has taken to reduce its imports from Japan in April by 60 per cent and the over-all importation of television sets by 30 per cent by using voluntary import quotas? That is the step the United States has taken. It is one of the great manufacturing countries of the world. Why has the Prime Minister's government not taken similar steps? When will he direct his minister to take some steps to save this industry?

● (1422)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had been following the debates on international trade, he would have seen that the government took various steps to get agreement from other countries trading with Canada on their export quotas to Canada. As a general direction in Canada, which is a trading nation to a much larger degree than the United States in the sense that a larger percentage of our wealth comes from trading than in the United States, it is important to maintain a general principle of free trade in every direction.

Rather than asking the economies of the world to go toward greater protectionism by quotas or by tariffs, we are going in the other direction. We have confidence that the Canadian economy, given a fair chance of competition with other nations, will meet that competition and will excel in it.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

VACANCY IN POSITION OF PERMANENT DIRECTOR OF WOMEN'S BUREAU

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Recently, the federal government produced a glossy and expensive booklet on the need for affirmative action programs for women in the private sector. God knows, it is badly needed, particularly when we see how women still are being treated in the work force in places like Fleck Industries.

Considering that the government has done virtually nothing about affirmative action programs at the federal level, can the minister explain what seems to me to be rather obvious hypocrisy in terms of the government's position on women, when we consider that the position of permanent director of the women's bureau of the Department of Labour has remained vacant for more than two years?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will check into that situation as to the precise reasons. I would advise the Leader of the New Democratic Party, however, that Dr. Sylva Gelber, of whom I am sure the hon. member and other members of the House are well aware, moved from that position and became a consultant to the deputy minister of labour. Thus, her services are still there. She is very active in terms of the contributions she is making to the women's bureau.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister really did not answer the question. He knows that Dr. Sylva Gelber, to whom he just referred, is the former permanent director. My understanding is that she is very concerned that a replacement has not been appointed for two years. If the government is serious about coming to grips with women's problems, particularly in places of work in Canada, can he give us some commitment that her replacement will be appointed soon?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I informed the hon. member that Dr. Gelber is still with us. I will check into that and advise the hon. member why the vacancy has lasted so long.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

APPLICATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS ACT IN LABOUR DISPUTES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, perhaps she is still with the government, but she is there in a consultative capacity. The minister knows full well that that position demands a permanent director.

My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice. On May 25, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked the minister to ensure that the government, under the provisions of section 19 of the Human Rights Act, issue a directive to the British American Bank Note Company to pay attention to the anti-discrimination provisions of the federal law in dealing with the 25 female members of the Ottawa Steel Plate Examiners' Union. Since the minister said that he would look into this matter, has he done so? What follow-up action has he taken?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have referred it to my officials. I regret I do not have a report from them today, but I will have it for the hon. member forthwith.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED DISCOUNTING SYSTEM FOR CANADIAN-MADE PRODUCTS

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the cost of beef, fresh fruits, vegetables and lodging—even under control—has gone up recently by as much as 28, 29, 16 and 7 per cent respectively, would the minister be willing to introduce legislation to counteract the effects these higher costs are having on a day to day basis on low and middle income families, and set up a discounting system for all Canadian-made products?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not feel it would be appropriate at this time to set up such a system which is favoured by the hon. member's party. I suggest that on April 15 last we returned indeed to a normal economy where opposing forces determine market prices, and it was the nearly unanimous desire of the House that we should put an end to the controls and return to the same market as in the pre-control years.

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO CURB INFLATION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister misunderstood my question. I have no intention of speaking of controls, but the fact remains that low-or medium-income families have to face those price increases almost daily. If my memory serves me right, and I imagine the minister remembers it as well, during World War II the government of the day adopted a compensated discount on several Canadian products; more recently, in 1972-73, the then minority government applied a compensated discount under the form of a 5-cent subsidy on each quart of milk, which both consumers and producers welcomed. So, I simply ask the minister, and I think the matter is urgent, that the government take steps to thwart inflation which is a constant threat to the economy of low- and medium-income families.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his remarks and suggestion. I do not think it would be realistic, at this time, to think that we can do now what we did for a short time a few years ago through a special milk program, but I take due note of the suggestion of the hon. member.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, the minister could be more realistic than to allow people to be hard up in a country where milk and other produce are just thrown away. I think it would be far more realistic to solve the problem.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we have all kinds of indexed programs throughout our Canadian economy which help low-income families protect themselves against unduly fast price increases.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC BOYCOTTS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the admitted weak position the government has taken in pursuing a clear policy on economic boycotts, which was evidenced in the Prime Minister's speech to the United Jewish Appeal, is it the Prime Minister's position that the only leadership he can bring to this serious problem is to focus the public spotlight on any company which is refused government trading support? In other words, are we to have legislation by press release now, and how does this affect a company which does not apply to the government for support through EDC for financing or insurance? How will this policy apply in that case?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is expressing his own view when he says the policy is weak. If he looks around the world, I believe he will find that Canada and the United States are the only two countries which have policies in this regard, and those policies are not considered weak by people who want to trade in the Middle East.

If the hon. member looks at the report tabled by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, he will find that a great many companies were forced to come around and respect the government's policies and not respect the boycott clauses. He will see that the policy has had effect in many cases. Beyond that, the hon. member is expressing an opinion. It is the opinion of the government that government assistance in some way is practically imperative in respect of trading in the middle East, and those companies which do not have assistance from the Government of Canada and its various agencies have a very difficult time trading there. That is why we believe our policy is effective, and the facts demonstrate that it is.

● (1432)

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, surely the Prime Minister realizes that Canadian companies which operate in this policy vacuum are subject to extraterritorial pressures, and that what they are crying out for, really, is a policy from this government that says: We cannot comply with your certificate requirements because it is contrary to Canadian law.

Why does the government not have a straightforward policy that says: It is contrary to Canadian law and we cannot comply because we will have serious sanctions brought against us if we do comply? That is what the companies want, and if they have that there will be more trade in the Middle East, not less.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is an argument made by the hon. member. It is obviously not an argument supported by his party as policy, otherwise it would be stated as policy.

Mr. Clark: It has been stated.

Mr. Fraser: Get the facts straight.

Mr. Trudeau: There are a lot of excited people on the other side, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Clark: Just because you misstate the facts.

Mr. Trudeau: I wish they would look at the report tabled by the minister: they would see what effect the policy has had and they would realize that the companies in Canada that want to trade with the Middle East do need the Canadian government's assistance, and we say they will not have it unless they do not adhere to boycott policies. We are having an effect.

An hon. Member: "Do not adhere"?

CANADA COUNCIL

GRANTS TO ALLEGED SUBVERSIVE ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. It concerns the fact that Canada Council grants have been given to such organizations as Pulp Press, of Vancouver, publishers of a book called "Minimanual for the Urban Guerrilla", and the tabloid "Strike", of Toronto which, incidentally was banned at the Bologna art fair in Italy two days ago. Will the minister tell the House what reasons justify the granting of public funds to organizations such as these which advocate terrorism, kidnapping, kneecapping, legshooting and murder?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think it is only fair to point out that when the grant to which the hon. member refers was issued, the publication "Strike" had not appeared and the organization concerned appeared to be devoting itself entirely to matters of cultural concern. As a result—

An hon. Member: What kind of culture?

Mr. Roberts: As a result of the change in the nature of the publication to which the hon. member has referred and as a result of representations which have been made in this House and outside the House, I have written to the Canada Council to draw to their attention the concerns of members and the concerns of the public, and I am waiting for further information.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary for the Secretary of State arises from remarks he is reported to have made a few days ago to the Senate and Commons committee concerning public access to government information, and specifically to reports stating that he said he was in favour of freer information, and I quote his words, "rather than on the side of holding back".

How does the minister reconcile such a statement with his utterance, widely quoted in the press, in a speech to the Toronto Liberal forum on May 10, 1978, to the effect that as long as he is Secretary of State, members of parliament will not be allowed information on the reasons for the giving or otherwise of Canada Council grants, a thing which, if done, would probably prevent such things as the incidence of "Strike", and so on?

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, the point that I was making in the speech in Toronto was that there is a distinction to be made between over-all policy considerations and the day to day administration of independent agencies such as Canada Council, particularly in relation to the granting process. Parliament has not given me the power to interfere in the day to day grant process. It is not a power which I wish to have. There is a considerable degree of difference between ranging through the files of the Canada Council in order to influence the way in which those decisions are taken, and access to information which is necessary for the conduct of public business.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, the minister says that he does not have the power to interfere with the Canada Council, yet a moment ago he said that he wrote to the Canada Council with regard to a specific grant. I ask him, is he prepared to conduct a full investigation of the Canada Council to determine how many other such instances there are like the Pulp Press and the tabloid "Strike" and a number of others that anyone in this House could mention, an investigation long overdue and long needed; and will he not allow input from members of parliament and others across the country as to how these decision-making processes are arrived at?

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I think that most members understand what my role is in relation to the Canada Council. It is not to give direction; it is to act as a means of communication between the House of Commons and the Canada Council. I, therefore, do bring to the council's attention representations which are made in this House. I do not direct it on the decisions which it takes.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GARRISON DIVERSION—UNACCEPTABILITY OF LONETREE RESERVOIR

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the fact the appropriations committee of the United States Congress has once again included the unacceptable Lonetree reservoir in its 1978 appropriations for the Garrison River diversion project, which would result in water from the Missouri River system entering the Hudson Bay river system, I would ask the minister if he and his officials are, first of all, cognizant of the Lonetree reservoir being reintroduced into the 1978 appropriations and whether the Canadian government is planning to make representations to the U.S. government indicating that the Lonetree reservoir is totally unacceptable to the Government of Canada and the citizens of Manitoba.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I understand the question correctly, I believe it is the same as the one addressed to me yesterday by the hon. member for Lisgar. I provided him an oral answer as well as a follow-up in writing. I can do the same thing, and if there is anything further that reflects on the hon. member's question, I would be glad to amplify later.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, the minister said previously that he does not intend to approach Congress directly at this time, arguing that it would be counterproductive and that the representations were simply too numerous. I would ask the minister, in view of the fact representations have been made through diplomatic notes by the Canadian embassy in Washington, and that once again Manitobans are faced with the Lonetree reservoir— which has been our major objection— whether, now that these avenues have simply not brought about the desired results, he will be making direct, personal representations to the authorities once again spelling out the disastrous effect the Lonetree reservoir would have on us.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I suppose one would have to ask what was involved in the word "authorities". I believe that we have, to the best of my knowledge, covered all the appropriate avenues within the administration itself. Earlier, the hon. member made some reference to direct representations to Congress. I am doubtful that that would be appropriate in the sense that I expect the hon. member is referring to. On the other hand, I have, on another subject, made reference to the appropriateness of the use of the interparliamentary committee where members may make representations. We would be glad to facilitate that if it was deemed to be an appropriate route to follow.

I can assure the hon. member that if there is a judgment that some further work should be done, or some further representations made, then we will be glad to do it. But I think the hon. member recognizes that there is a distinction between a government-to-government representation and representations directly to individuals in the Congress.

ENERGY

AECL NUCLEAR WASTE PROGRAM

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, my question was to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources but in his absence I will put it to his parliamentary secretary. It concerns an agreement that was made between Ontario Hydro and AECL where $90 million to $150 million was provided for a new nuclear waste program.

Given the fact that this matter was referred to the standing committee in December, and we have had 19 meetings, with two more to come, given the fact that the Hare report was severely challenged by the president of the Geological Association of Canada, and given the cynicism that exists as between many people in this country and AECL, would the minister consider delaying any further action until the standing committee has reported and, in the case of Ontario, until the Porter royal commission has reported?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will bring those representations to the minister's attention.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY INTO FATE OF CHILEANS WHO HAVE DISAPPEARED

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him if the government is aware of the hunger strike being conducted in Chile by the relatives of some 2,500 Chilean citizens who have disappeared since the overthrow of the Allende government.

In view of a similar hunger strike being conducted in a number of Canadian cities by Chilean refugees residing in Canada who are concerned about the fate of their relatives and friends, would the government consider directing the Canadian ambassador to Chile to make inquiries as to the fate of these 2,500 Chilean citizens?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider the hon. member's suggestion.

Oral Questions

PUBLIC SERVICE

PUBLICATION OF AUDIT REPORTS ON MISCLASSIFICATIONS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. We now know that there are audits, some of which are bench audits, with respect to personnel administration. We had an audit regarding the Ottawa-Hull area and now we are having an audit across the country with respect to classification and all that it means in terms of misclassification.

Would the President of the Treasury Board advise the House whether, in fact, the reports which will stem from these audits will be open for the public; and if not, why not? I ask this question because if they are not open to the public, I would say that the minister is dealing in cover-up and secrecy and depriving the Canadian people of the right to know—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Alexander: —how big a problem this country faces.

● (1442)

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has indicated, the examination of this problem is under way but is not yet complete. The first audit, which was conducted in 1976, was based on some experimental criteria which are now being examined as to their accuracy. The second audit, setting aside the personnel policy people, is being conducted outside of the national capital region. Until I get the results of that, I cannot make a commitment as to what action we will be taking. I will make a decision then as to how much of this can be released and how much cannot, in light of the fact that the original was an internal audit. I would not think it would be subject to disclosure because of its nature. The total policy will be dealt with openly, any recommendations will be announced and every opportunity will be given to explore their validity.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I think the premise of my question was quite correct: the minister is dealing in cover-up. He is talking about these reports being confidential and says he intends to see to it that there are recommendations. I am not interested in recommendations; I want to know the whole truth, and so do the Canadian people.

Apparently the minister is now discussing this whole matter with the Alliance in order to determine whether or not they will red-circle and how they will solve this particular problem. Is the minister telling me that following the discussions he is having with the Alliance and other representatives of the public service, they will not be allowed to see these reports. Is this what he is trying to say? If so, any consultation that he is having right now is nothing but a farce. I hope he can remove my fears in this regard. Will all these reports be made public to the Alliance and the unions which are interested in this very serious matter? If not, we are not holding any meaningful negotiations with them.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the reason not to release the internal audit memorandum report is simply because of the nature of the experimental criteria that were developed for it. It was never intended for that purpose. All the information, the results, the proposed action to be taken, is a matter of open discussion with the Public Service Alliance. Indeed, I have made known to the House the general thrust of that action with regard to the first report. As the hon. member knows, we were prevented from taking full red-circling action for quite some time because there was a case before the Federal Court about that which was not resolved until March. Subsequent to the resolution of that matter we were in consultation with the Public Service Alliance and, if necessary, consultations will take place with other unions. They are fully aware of the situation.

Mr. Alexander: They are not aware of the whole truth.

AIR TRANSPORT

CPA—CONSOLIDATION OF LICENCES

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It is with regard to an application presently before the CTC, by Canadian Pacific Airlines, respecting the consolidation of licences.

In view of the minister's announcement on behalf of the government, is it the government's policy or desire to use this approach respecting regional and transcontinental carriers? Can the minister inform the House today what the decision of the government is, and whether it is the government's position to intervene directly and allow this kind of licence application to proceed, or will the CTC act in this matter as they have in any other licence application?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that I do not interfere, and the government does not interfere, in matters before the CTC. These proceed in the ordinary way.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the minister has said publicly that he favours this kind of approach. Can he tell us whether he has conveyed the government's intention in this regard to the CTC, and has he asked them to proceed with the hearing? The application has been before the CTC for some time and they have been procrastinating because of the peculiarity and the nature of this licence application. Does the CTC know what the government's intention is with respect to this kind of licensing procedure in future?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member may be confused by the fact that there was some comment after the CTC made its decision on the acquisition of Transair shares by PWA. In commenting on that and on the question of whether I had any problem with this additional influence of PWA in the over-all western region, I did make a comment about the probable wisdom of strengthening our regionals. That has some general application and is part of an over-all policy that we are gradually putting in place. It was not in relation to any current application before the CTC.

INDUSTRY

U.S. COUNTERVAILING DUTIES ON MICHELIN TIRES MANUFACTURED IN CANADA

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce a question concerning the current situation with respect to the countervailing duties collected by the U.S. department of the treasury on Michelin tires manufactured, as the minister knows, in Nova Scotia.

Can the minister tell me if he has been negotiating an end to this unfair situation which has cost this vital industry nearly $7 million since it was first imposed? Can the minister tell us what he has done since he assumed this portfolio to try to bring an end to this unfair practice?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that that case is before the courts. We are supporting the Michelin argument before the courts in the United States at the present time.

GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO END U.S. PRACTICE OF IMPOSING COUNTERVAILING DUTIES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I direct my supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who I believe is also familiar with the Michelin tire situation. In connection with representations which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has mentioned, has the minister made any effort to inform the U.S. authorities that this unfair situation which they say is caused by inappropriate government aid, as the minister knows, to Michelin tire, is no more unfair, unique or different from some of the aid that is given to similar U.S. industries? Can he respond and give any further information about his efforts to end this practice which is reportedly inspired by the UAW and the United States rubber industry?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is asking, in the first instance, whether I have made recent representations specifically on this case, I have not done so personally. However, it may be that the department is drawing upon the standard position of the government which may have conveyed that to the United States authorities. In a general way, I have had frequent talks about the Michelin case with the United States authorities regarding non-tariff barriers and related questions, and I have made precisely the points which the hon. member has enunciated today.

I will be glad to take another look at the matter, and if something can be achieved by repeating these views more specifically, I will be glad to do it. In a more general way, the whole question of non-tariff barriers and the reaction to assistance for regional development is being considered in the GATT round as one of the matters on which Canada feels very strongly and on which we are trying to get considerable relief.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY WHETHER OFFICE BUILDING IN GASPÉ PENINSULA IS PART OF DECENTRALIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment tell the House whether his decentralization program still includes the erection of a building in the Gaspé Peninsula which would centralize the services that his department wants to provide for fishermen and fish producers in eastern Quebec and in the Magdalen Islands? Will he make his projects public in the near future?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, two years ago we started a decentralization program towards the regions where the fishermen live, in order to facilitate consultation and communication between them and the officials of my department. A few weeks ago, I announced a similar project for the Gaspé region. It is my hope that we will be able to implement it during the summer months.

LABOUR RELATIONS

TRIPARTITE FORM OF DISCUSSION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the hon. Minister of Labour. Yesterday, apparently, the minister stated to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association:

> We are now on the threshold of a major breakthrough to consultation at the national level, on an ongoing basis.

He was referring to a tripartite form of discussion among management, labour and government. Today, the head of the Canadian Labour Congress seems to be taking quite a different position and in fact intends to repudiate what the hon. minister said yesterday. I ask the minister, can he tell the House whether his statement of yesterday was made with the support of the Canadian Labour Congress, or was it just an expression of a pious hope on the part of the minister?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity yesterday afternoon to talk with the president of the CLC. He had received a copy of the speech and he had no objection to it at all. The hon. member may wish to check this, but I believe he was referring to a statement which was alleged to have been attributed to me with respect to tripartition. Although it is my personal feeling that as a concept it does not derogate from parliamentary democracy and is a worthy one, apparently the statement was attributed to me that I had met with him last week and we had discussed this concept. That, of course, really did not take place, nor did I say that, and that matter was clarified to his satisfaction.

Mr. Fraser: Might I ask the minister, then, about his optimism in this respect? I think he went on later in his speech to talk about the hope of setting up some kind of mechanism later this summer which would in fact be a tripartite form of mechanism. In his discussions with Mr. McDermott, or any other labour leaders, did he receive any particular support for this? Could I ask him, also, whether this is in any sense a moving away from the minister's former position, at least, that he hopes to establish a multipartite national forum?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I understand Mr. McDermott himself has said he will be happy to sit down with government at any time in the hope that something might be accomplished in terms of his membership, and would always be able to carry on in terms of consultative arrangements with the labour movement and, for that matter, with the business community. I still expect that to be true. Whether it will be formalized in some kind of structure to ensure continuity remains to be seen as a result of discussions. I think much of the controversy surrounds the word "tripartite", because some attribute characteristics to it which are really not justified in the circumstances. So I think the controversy could be undermined considerably if we just start to refer to consultative arrangements and consultative mechanisms. That is quite satisfactory as far as I am concerned.

CANADIAN CULTURE

REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State: it relates to the tabling this morning in the National Assembly of Quebec the long-awaited white paper on culture by the minister for cultural development.

In view of the fact that this is a very detailed and comprehensive survey of the present and future scene in Quebec, covering a wide area of cultural definition, can the minister inform us, because of his own internal study, the Selcock study, and the importance of a federal statement with respect to culture, whether or not thought is being given either to expanding the terms of reference and the opportunities for input into that internal study or whether, in view of the fact that it may well be near completion, that study will be made public by way of some kind of policy statement.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I can tell the hon. member that the internal study to which he has referred is not yet close to completion. I am still hopeful, though I do not necessarily expect, that it will be finished by September. We shall, of course, be looking closely at the Quebec white paper which, as the hon. member has indicated, is quite lengthy and comprehensive, containing some 400 to 500 pages. We shall assess it carefully in relation to the work that we ourselves are doing in the department.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): One of the recommendations favours a provincial copyright law which again raises the whole problem we have experienced in terms of the failure of the national copyright law to adequately protect authors and publishers in this country. The minister is well aware of this situation.

I ask whether he has had any success in persuading his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, either to enforce the copyright law more aggressively which does not seem to be acceptable to the legal officers, or whether amendments will be introduced on an immediate basis which will clear up at least some of the difficulties and offer real protection to Canadian authors and publishers.

Mr. Roberts: As the hon. gentleman knows, both my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and myself have been active in seeking ways to find a means of testing in the courts the present copyright provisions the effect of which is contested. I hope and expect that either he or I will be making some announcement about this in the near future.

FINANCE

INCENTIVES TO BUSINESS COMMUNITY

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's statement to the CMA in Toronto last night, in which he expressed disappointment with the reaction of the Canadian business community to changes favouring the private sector, would the minister tell us what indications he has that the private sector has failed to respond to any stimulus offered by the government and what he expected should have been done by this time?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that with all the incentives we have been offering the private sector over the past two years they would have rushed in to occupy the field we vacated for them, and I am somewhat disappointed by the level of investments in Canada in general at this time, but I hope they will understand—

[English]

I was very pleased last week, for example, that this thing I have just mentioned was taken up by the president of the Royal Bank, who said that if the private sector did not move quickly to fill the gap we have made for them to operate with much more room, perhaps it would be a lost cause for them in future.

Mr. Ritchie: Does the minister contemplate any further moves in the near future as far as the private sector is concerned?

Mr. Chrétien: I think we have made a lot of moves. If the hon. member would read my speech of yesterday, he would see, for example, that the level of taxes imposed on Canadian corporations is lower than in the United States.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

LINGUISTIC AND CULTURAL EQUITY

Mr. Chas L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State and it relates to the abysmal lack of leadership displayed last week by the government of Ontario when the premier said no to a bill on French language services after it had been approved on second reading. Will the Secretary of State discuss the matter with his counterpart in Ontario to help revive a sense of confidence in Ontario's will to participate with a positive attitude in the national effort to achieve linguistic and cultural equity?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I share the regret expressed by the hon. member at what I consider to be a rather cynical and shabby action on the part of the provincial premier last week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roberts: I have to tell the hon. member, also, that the discussions and relationships I have had with the provincial minister of education have been both cordial and helpful. We have, indeed, in the not too distant past expanded and accelerated our efforts in conjunction with the province of Ontario in relation to second language education in an important and significant way. I thought I had brought some figures with me in relation to that aspect, but I did not. I promise to communicate them to the hon. member as soon as possible.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

CHARGES AGAINST CROWN CORPORATION FOR VIOLATING CODE—INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS IN DEVCO

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. As the minister knows, his department has laid 24 charges of alleged violation under the Canada Labour Code safety provisions against a Crown corporation, the Cape Breton Development Corporation. What I am concerned about is a statement by Mr. Matheson, reported in Friday's paper, that the media were informed of this before he and the executives of the corporation were informed. Is Mr. Matheson's statement true, or false; and if it is true, why was this action made known to the media first?

I want to ask the minister whether it is true that Mr. Matheson, who is president of the corporation, did not find out about it except through the media. I find this statement disturbing. Mr. Matheson also said, "I find it very disturbing—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question to ask, will he please put it.

Mr. Hogan: Is it true that this information was given to the media before the charges were made known to Mr. Matheson, as he claims in the article in Friday's paper in Nova Scotia?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I am sorry; I did not grasp the first part of the hon. member's question.

Mr. Hogan: Over the weekend the minister's department swore out 24 violations under the Canada Labour Code against a Crown corporation, the Cape Breton Development Corporation. What I am concerned about is a statement by Mr. Matheson, reported in Friday's paper, that the media were informed of this before he and the executives of the corporation were informed. Is Mr. Matheson's statement true, or false; and if it is true, why was this information given to the media first?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I cannot account for the media being informed. I can say that to my knowledge no one in the department or in my office connected with the department had anything to do with informing the media of these charges.

Mr. Hogan: I have a supplementary question for the minister. The hon. gentleman knows that today he received a telegram from the district president of the United Mine Workers of America concerning the state of industrial relations in Devco. Will he do his best to bring about a meeting such as requested by the president of the district?

● (1502)

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have received a telegram from the president of the United Mine Workers. We have already been in touch with other ministries he is interested in meeting toward effecting that objective.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Fort William, on a question of privilege.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He has been standing up for 15 minutes.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar will want to correct that last remark. It is quite inaccurate.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McRAE—PROCEEDINGS OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL RESOURCES AND PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege as a member of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works. On December 1, 1977, that committee was given a reference from this House to report on the management of nuclear waste, the Hare report.

Since that time the committee has had 19 meetings. There have been many challenges to the report. A particularly strong challenge came from the president of the Geological Association of Canada, which we take very seriously since that particular challenge deals with the geological work that has to be done in order to bury the waste.

The committee made an interim report on March 15 because it felt there might have been an election, in which case the committee wanted the work to go on, if the session ended, into a new parliament. It is my understanding that in their report the committee indicated that, in the interim, the government should consider doing research on the matter. Two more meetings are scheduled for next week. The committee's work has been revived.

Yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) tabled in this House a document entitled "Canada—Ontario Radioactive Waste Management Program" which, in my opinion, completely upstages the work that the committee was doing. That document states that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Ontario Hydro have signed agreements to do work, research and otherwise, on the waste totalling between $90 million and $150 million.

Ontario Hydro has gone ahead in spite of the fact there is a Porter royal commission in Ontario looking at this very matter. AECL has gone ahead in spite of the fact the standing committee of this House is also looking into this matter.

As a member of that standing committee, I believe I have a question of privilege in the sense that I attended most of the 19 meetings where this was being very seriously considered. In fact we are still looking at it. The committee work is not finished, yet for all practical purposes decisions have been made. The contracts have been signed. Also, we must remember the approximately 150 people who wrote briefs, appeared before the committee, and so on. In my opinion, all that work is for naught.

If I have a question of privilege, I would be willing to move, seconded by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), that the action of AECL be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): I shall be very brief, Mr. Speaker. I think members on both sides of the House share the concern, anxiety, and feeling of the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) that perhaps the members of that committee have been duped into some façade or charade as far as coming up with meaningful answers is concerned. Even if we do, we do not know whether the government or its agencies will pay any attention to them.

I think the hon. member has a very real point. Certainly it will be up to you, sir, to decide whether it is a question of privilege. Whether it is or is not, under the block system set up to facilitate the meetings of the standing committees of this House, the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, which is looking at this matter, did have scheduled this afternoon a meeting which I understand has been unaccountably cancelled.

That committee could meet this afternoon, in 22 minutes, or at its scheduled time in any event. If it does, I hope that the members of the opposition will have the support of the government members on that committee to summon immediately the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) so that we can have an explanation of why that standing committee of this House is being bypassed.

I am certainly very pleased to receive the support of the Liberal member for Fort William on this matter. I hope he can convince some of his colleagues to do exactly that this afternoon.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I wish to respond to this question of privilege on behalf of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie). I do so briefly.

I do not see by any argument put forward that a case has been made for a question of privilege. I think at the outside the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) stated that it might be a grievance. I question whether there is even a grievance.

My argument is rather straightforward. I draw the attention of the House to the fact that the very committee being talked about, the committee it is alleged is being upstaged and bypassed, presented a report to the House of Commons on March 15 this year. Let me remind the House of one of its recommendations. I quote from the committee report:

> Your committee further recommends that the government, given the existence of radioactive waste materials in Canada, consider the advisability of having the appropriate governmental group or agency expedite a program of research and development in nuclear waste management.

That was the recommendation of the committee, that the government have suitable governmental groups or agencies expedite a program of research and development in nuclear waste management. That is precisely what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced yesterday. Therefore I have difficulty seeing there is a question of privilege or, indeed, a grievance.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the defence put up by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner) is very convincing. Here is a committee of this House which made an interim report in March, suggesting that further research be continued. That committee has not completed its work.

As has already been stated, a meeting of that committee was scheduled for this afternoon. When I inquired why it had been cancelled, I was told it was because the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) was out of town. If I were in his position, after the report he tabled yesterday, I would be out of town too.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Parliament of Canada and a committee of this House have been bypassed. The witnesses who appeared before the committee and those who are still to appear have been made to look ridiculous, because it is not merely now a matter of a contract with respect to some research. This is the first phase of a long term contract for the location of sites, setting forth the responsibility of the Government of Canada and the government of Ontario.

This is not merely talking about research. The first phase is research. The long term implications of this agreement into which AECL and the government of Ontario have entered commits us to a program which is under study by a committee of this House. That is making a farce of the committee and a farce of parliament. It is trying to convince the people of Canada that, before they took this extraordinary step, there was some democratic input into the decision. There has been none.

I think we are being fooled, and the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) has a definite case of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There seems to be a rather broad consensus that the members of the committee and perhaps parliament have a grievance to take up with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie). It has been very clearly and very forcefully expressed on the ground that it is a grievance, but surely it is not a question of privilege when in fact the minister has taken a step which he is entitled to do under the rules of the House.

• (1512)

Second, on the ground that it is a matter within the committee, the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) has suggested that the committee ask the minister to come before it and explain his action. That seems to me to be a useful interim step before the matter arrives here on the floor, perhaps as part of a committee report in which it may come up again. If indeed it turns out that, after this step has been taken, some further argument on privilege exists, I would be only too glad to hear it at that time, but I cannot find privilege at this point.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, may I seek the unanimous support of the House to revert to motions so that I could move a motion and so that the committee could meet this afternoon and summon the minister?

S.O. 75C

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I cannot very well give the hon. member permission to revert to motions. We have not got there yet.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOTMENT OF TIME TO CONSIDER BILL C-56 ON SECOND READING

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 75C I move, seconded by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald):

That, in relation to Bill C-56, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, one sitting day shall be allotted to the further consideration of the second reading stage of the said bill; and

That at fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business in such sitting, any proceeding before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the second reading stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion, it being moved in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 75C. Debate pursuant to this motion now begins and, under the rule, has a duration of two hours.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, on the evening of April 10, I made a budget speech in the House. Then there was a six-day debate on the budget. After several votes, the budget was passed by the House of Commons. I then introduced the bill now under consideration, Mr. Speaker, and we have now entered the tenth day of debate at the second reading stage. Under the terms of my motion, we will have had 11 days to debate the bill on second reading. There will then be the committee of the whole which will study each one of the 60 clauses in this bill. Then, we will have third reading. Here we are in June and we have already spent 16 days on this bill.

Moreover, we have other bills to introduce in the House of Commons, including Bill C-48 resulting from the budget and concerning customs and excise, a bill I will introduce tomorrow on orders of the day and through which we want to simplify the operations of small businesses by reducing their capital gains tax and also by allowing income tax deductions for people who invest in small businesses, and there is also a bill which the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) wants to introduce in the House and other legislation. Because of statements by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) that he would do a filibuster, the opposition has refused to co-operate with the government. I am making use of the Standing Orders to allot some of the time of the House to dispose of this bill. Moreover, this debate has gone on ad nauseam in the House. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and myself have replied to dozens of questions concerning this issue and there remains no problem of principle to settle.

First of all, the opposition asked us to send a cheque of $226 million to the Quebec government. Since then, the Quebec government has abandoned its friends in the opposition and no longer asks that the $226 million be sent directly. Then, it was suggested last week that a tax collection agreement could be entered into with the Quebec government but they never intended to give anything in exchange to the federal government. Considering that since 1954, the Quebec government, bent on upholding the principles of provincial autonomy, has always assumed its own responsibilities with regard to income tax collection, and considering that after reading the morning newspapers, it already becomes obvious that it no longer wants us to proceed with tax collection on its behalf, we will resolve the only remaining problem when we come to Clause 30 of the bill, that is devising a way to compensate Quebec citizens because we have been unable to come to an agreement with their government.

We did propose a formula which appears in Clause 30 of the bill. Instead of using the 1977 taxpayer rolls as a basis for proceeding with a tax reduction, I suggested at that time that income tax be lowered so that a $100 fiscal abatement could be granted to the taxpayers for the year 1978. Now, we will decide on that, following whatever direction the debate might take, when we get to clause 30 but it seems absolutely useless to pursue the matter now.

[English]

I would like to make a few points regarding the budget. Very few people have spoken about the measures we have put forward which must be made law. It was published today that, because of the present economic circumstances and the fact that we reduced by 3 per cent the sales tax on automobiles and trucks, there has been an increase of 12.6 per cent in the sales of automobiles and trucks this past year.

Many people have said over and over again that the way I have chosen to cut taxes across the board for all items is wrong. This morning I saw a report to the effect that retail sales in stores increased by 4.9 per cent in April. What is very amazing is that in B.C. the increase was 16 per cent. It was 4.6 in Ontario; and in Quebec, where the Quebec government chose to do things its own way, there was a decrease of .8 per cent in sales in the month of April. The truth will come out when all the figures are available.

The measure we have proposed is a first in the history of Canada. This is the first time a minister of finance has gone across the land and talked to all ministers of finance to try to develop a consensus.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Everyone agreed that on the afternoon of budget day I would call them, and they would say yes or no to my proposition. Every minister of finance complied with that gentleman's agreement, everyone but one. After that, Mr. Speaker, I had to proceed.

• (1522)

As there was no agreement with Quebec, the Prime Minister and I said that we did not want to penalize the citizens of Quebec who have to pay a very high sales tax, so we decided to find a way to return the money that we have set aside for them in the budget. Now the question will be debated and settled when we reach clause 30. I think that under the circumstances enough time was lost in the House by the people who do not care at all about what we are trying to do, to develop, for the first time in this land, economic policies in conjunction with the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: The opposition was very quick to jump in bed with the people who have only one goal in mind, namely, to destroy the Canadian Confederation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that there is no problem with the constitution. I recognized on the first day of the consultation that the sales tax was a provincial matter, because I consulted the provinces. I made a proposal to which eight of the provinces agreed and with which one has disagreed. They can do whatever they want in their jurisdictions, and in fact they have done what they wanted to do, and I have not intervened. But I have to do what I want to do in my own jurisdiction. What I did on the night of the budget was to reduce the income tax of all the citizens in the other provinces. I do not want to penalize the people of Quebec because Mr. Parizeau saw fit not to join the national scheme, because it was an occasion for all of us ministers of finance in this land to develop a new mechanism for participation by the provinces in the economic policies of this nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Of course, Mr. Parizeau wanted to maintain the status quo to try to prove a point, but I am not for the status quo. I tried, in the spirit of the meeting of first ministers in February, to develop co-operative policies among the ministers of finance, and today I would like to thank all the ministers of finance in the land who have agreed with me in the spirit of collaboration and co-operation following the first ministers' conference.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: But of course, as was the case at the first ministers' conference, after three days of debate the premier of Quebec saw fit to grandstand and to quit just to try to make his case for nothing. Why was he there if he did not agree to anything? The same thing happened with my proposal. I acted in good faith and in the best spirit of collaboration in trying to evolve new economic policies for this land, but of course Quebec, in a self-serving attitude, tried to throw a wrench into my scheme.

I am very sorry that members on the other side do not think at all about what it was all about. They are just preoccupied with trying to score some political points, but the people of Canada will judge them very severely for just playing politics.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we have just had another of those pitiable, shameful performances by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: When the Minister of Finance gets into trouble, he wraps himself in the Canadian flag and says that everybody who is criticizing him is criticizing the country. "What is wrong with that?", asks one deposed minister in the back row. What is wrong with that is that it is fundamentally dishonest and it badly serves the cause of federalism, when a minister of the Crown is wrong and when he is accused of being wrong, not to answer the accusations, not to deal with the evidence, but instead to dismiss all of his critics, ranging from Claude Ryan to the Toronto Globe and Mail, if you can think of a compass that large, as separatists.

What is of interest here is that the Minister of Finance by his actions, by his unparalleled incompetence as Minister of Finance, has set back severely the very process he celebrates of co-operation with the provinces. He admits his own incompetence. He stands up in the House of Commons and tells us once more that he went into an agreement which required the agreement of the provinces, knowing he did not have the agreement of the one province which he knew was going to stand up and hit him if he tried to bring in a measure to which they had not agreed. That is naiveté, it is simple incompetence, and it is a serious disservice to this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We will have an opportunity to discuss this matter at some length later on, unless the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his henchmen intend to introduce closure clause by clause, because what is of interest here is that this is not even normal closure. Normal closure applies when the government thinks it is right, when the opposition thinks it is wrong, and when the government uses its power to force its way through. In this case the government does not even pretend that it is right—the government knows that it is wrong. Yesterday the Minister of Finance in the House admitted that he knows he is wrong. He admitted that he is going to back away from the proposal to which we take exception.

Mr. Chrétien: That is flexibility.

Mr. Clark: He is certainly flexible. We oppose this measure for one major reason. I do appreciate hearing the Minister of Finance confirm that he knows he is wrong, confirm that he is going to back down on the proposal which has held up debate in the House.

We are opposing this measure for one major reason, that is, that it invades the jurisdiction of the provinces. The minister has said he will change that, and he just repeated it. But he will not tell us how he wants to use the most extreme power of parliament to force us to accept something the key contents of which we do not know. Is provincial jurisdiction going to be respected here? Is the government abandoning its proposal to pay a direct cheque to everyone in Quebec and not pay a direct cheque to the citizens in other provinces? Is the economic stimulus to the province of Quebec to be delayed for a year? The government will not say, yet, sir, those are the questions that the whole dispute is about. If the government answers those questions in a way that respects provincial rights, and in a way that treats Quebec as it treats the other provinces, then there would be no need for closure. But this government would rather abuse power than use simple common sense.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: This bill embarrasses the government. They made a serious mistake in acting as though they had agreement, when they did not have it. They made another mistake in the Prime Minister's stubborn refusal to admit he was wrong. Now they have to back down. They are discussing new arrangements with Quebec. They should have done that weeks ago and not delayed the business of parliament debating a bill which they knew they would have to change. Now that they are forced to back down, what they should do is to withdraw the bill for two or three days and to amend it. That is what they would do if they respected parliament. But they do not, so we have closure.

[Translation]

And why resort to closure? It is not because the debate has dragged on; on the main motion, there have been 10 speakers: four Liberals, four Progressive Conservatives and two NDP members; on the amendment, we heard 25 speakers, eight of whom were Liberals. The minister wants to close the debate before some other Liberals are compelled to speak. Most of all, he does not want parliament to hear the views of the hon. members for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal), Matane (Mr. De Bané) and Compton (Mr. Tessier) about the infringement of provincial rights.

[English]

The use of closure is just one more indication of the incompetence of the Minister of Finance. He talked about his record in bills. He has introduced six bills in this session and he has had to invoke closure on two of them. He promised an employment tax credit, then he took three months to write the bill and another three months to get the forms out. That proposal was supposed to generate 50,000 new jobs—it generated only 1,900. His inability to see the trap that Quebec set for him created this problem, which has seriously harmed the cause of federalism. It is this government, by its foolishness and stubbornness, that has set back the cause of federalism and given momentum to the Parti Québécois.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1532)

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, why not withdraw the bill temporarily, allow the minister to make whatever changes he can and let parliament deal with other matters in the meantime, and then bring forward an amended bill that parliament, the government and the provinces can accept? This government is too stubborn to admit to being mistaken. Closure is at times invoked on a matter of principle; but in this case its use is dictated by the stubbornness of the government.

[English]

A government is judged not only by the things it does but by the way it uses its power. This is a government which condones secret trials in Canada. I see the Prime Minister is smiling. This is because he was the author of the action. This is a government which imprisons innocent citizens without charge. It is a government which now uses a form of closure to force through parliament a measure which the government knows is wrong and knows it is going to change. That is an abuse of the rules of parliament. It is an abuse of the role of the provinces. It is an abuse of the rights of the citizens of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the motion introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). In so doing, I want to make it clear that there are times in debates in the House of Commons when a responsible government will introduce such a motion. It is in the rule book. It is there for use by the government to make a decision as to when a debate is over. If the opposition is still going on with what it regards as a relevant debate, and if the government can make a good case to end it, the government can decide to exercise that responsibility and bring the debate to a conclusion. But if there ever was a circumstance where closure was completely inappropriate, surely this is it.

The original proposal made by the government in principle was accepted by all of the other provinces. It was amended in detail to accord with the basic principle that it was satisfactory for the federal government. The province of Quebec came along and made a proposal which was fully in accordance with the principle of the bill and was fully in accordance with its constitutional responsibilities, but it consisted of a process which made the federal minister feel he was outmanoeuvred politically, and the federal government said no. Because the federal government wants a partisan battle is no reason to play games with the federal system in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That is exactly what is involved in this matter. A few minutes ago the minister indicated in the debate that the Quebec government made its proposal after the fact. With all due respect I say to the minister that it was not up to the government of the province of Quebec, or the governments of any other provinces, to reach an agreement according to the time table imposed by the federal government. In an area of jurisdictional authority which is within provincial domain, surely it is a right of the province of Quebec, or of any other province, to negotiate a deal which meets its legitimate constitutional interests.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I say that with all the emphasis I can. The province of Quebec was constitutionally right in its judgment. Also it was pragmatically right in terms of the details of its proposal and the ideas put forward. If any of the other provinces had wanted a delay, they would have been entitled to the same kind of delay. In a matter as fundamental to the federal system as this, I cannot understand how the Minister of Finance could have brought in a budget offering this type of deal to the provinces without all provinces being in agreement in advance, particularly considering the situation in the province of Quebec at this time.

At an earlier phase in this debate I gave credit to the minister. I repeat that credit now. I meant it earlier and I mean it now. I give him credit for involving the provinces. In a federal state when it is necessary to take stimulative measures involving fiscal policy, the time to start using this system imaginatively is long overdue. Indeed from time to time the federal government brings in a measure which has direct impact in an area of provincial jurisdiction, such as in this case. It is important for the minister to consult with the provinces and arrive at an agreement so that we can manage our federal state much more efficiently and competently from an economic point of view. To the extent that we have received some innovation from the Minister of Finance in these circumstances, I repeat that he deserves credit.

At the same time I cannot overemphasize my own view. Certainly it is one which is shared unanimously on this side of the House, as well as by many people outside the House who are not opposition party members. My view is that the Minister of Finance made a colossal political blunder and a colossal misjudgment of political reality in this country when he brought in this measure without the agreement of the province of Quebec. He should have recognized that this area is particularly sensitive to the province of Quebec, not simply with the present government but indeed with preceding governments such as Union Nationale governments and Liberal governments of that province. This is demonstrated by the fact that he sees himself in opposition not only to the existing provincial government of the province of Quebec but to all opposition parties as well. It was a colossal error in judgment on the part of the Minister of Finance when he brought in this measure.

The question we are dealing with is whether closure is legitimate now. Is it? I cannot think of a worse time to invoke closure. There is no pressing priority. The federal government indicated that an agreement has not been reached and that it is still discussing proposals with the province of Quebec. It is asking us to buy a pig in a poke, which is an old metaphor that is entirely appropriate, especially when one considers clause 30. We do not know what the amendment will be. Why could the government not accept the proposal I made in all sincerity two weeks ago when I moved a 30-day hoist, rather than the traditional six-month one? I moved that 30-day hoist to provide us with a cooling off period, perhaps to arrive at some agreement on this central matter.

Why could the government not accept the argument which has been made by all parties in the House? That argument was reasserted today by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). All we have to do is put this bill aside. We do not need to pass it in its present form. In fact, we should not pass it. The argument indicating that we in the opposition are holding up parliament is absurd. The people who are holding up progress in parliament now are the Government of Canada, not the opposition parties.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: All the government has to do is withdraw this bill.

I do not doubt that the Minister of Finance is sincere when he indicates that he is talking about it and that they are going to bring in an amendment. If he has some hope that it may yet be agreeable to the province of Quebec, why does he not use his common sense and put this bill aside? Then we could move on and discuss other measures, instead of the government invoking closure and using its majority to pass a bill which will be amended down the road. In fact, we do not even know what the substance of the amendment will be. I do not think a good argument could be made for invoking closure at this point. As I have said, we should simply stop debate and go on with other measures.

In conclusion, I want to say that my party still believes the legitimate constitutional position argued by the province of Quebec in this case is an acceptable one. The minister made special deals with British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and all the Atlantic provinces. He was prepared to be flexible with those regions. Why in God's name is he not prepared to be flexible with the government of Quebec?

When I say that we should give the government of Quebec every cent it is entitled to and not one penny more or less, just as every other province has received, I do not speak alone. The Saskatchewan minister of finance is prepared totally for the Minister of Finance to write out the cheque and send it to the government of the province of Quebec. The government of Saskatchewan realizes constitutionally that it negotiated one package which was acceptable to it. Also that province realizes that the package acceptable to Quebec is different in detail but similar in principle. The same constitutional point holds: Quebec should receive its fair share. I say to the minister, get busy, write the cheque, drop this bill for now, and let us get on with the other work.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I never expected that this action would be proposed to put an end to the debate on this very serious question. A short while ago, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) said in his remarks that this debate had lasted long enough since his budget was presented on April 10. I admit that the proceedings on this matter have been going on for some time, but we must admit that it is a very important issue and that it should not be dealt with lightly, if we want to avoid making a tremendous mistake that would further prejudice the harmony in our country.

In my opinion, the proposal put forward by the Minister of Finance, as I indicated earlier, flies in the face of our constitution. The fact that we most urgently need to draw up a new constitution does not mean that the Minister of Finance may well violate the present one. He must respect it pending a new one that will determine more precisely the rights and responsibilities of the provinces as well as the rights and responsibilities of the central government. Mr. Speaker, in my view, Bill C-56 is some kind of an all-encompassing bill. It is somewhat the government's habit, when it wants to get the House to pass an unacceptable measure to integrate it into a bill including other acceptable measures in order to embarrass the hon. members. I find these practices deplorable, and I cannot condone them. Again, I ask the Minister of Finance to amend clause 30 of the bill in order to respect provincial jurisdiction. The minister has repeated many times that through this measure he wants to increase consumer purchasing power.

I am very happy about that, everyone is, but he used means that violate the constitution; that is why the Quebec government and all parties represented in the National Assembly oppose this bill, as I do; as a member of the Canadian parliament coming from Quebec, I must oppose it—which I am doing in a positive way—I am convinced the Minister of Finance stepped out of line. If he only took one step back, he would fall in the right place. The whole country would be pleased and would say "There goes a great man, the Minister of Finance". He recognized that he took a step in the wrong direction but he stepped back and starting from there he introduced another measure. I suggested and discussed with him last week the possibility of decreasing or cancelling completely the tax at the manufacturers' level which falls within federal jurisdiction. When I put the question here in the House, even the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said it was an excellent idea. It might even be the ideal formula. However, we are afraid that wholesale dealers will take advantage of the situation to increase their profits.

Mr. Speaker, I say to the Minister of Finance that he is quite well supported by economists and competent officials who are surely able to prevent those who would try to take advantage of the situation from increasing their profits at the consumers' expense. I promised that I would bring him this week a bill which was prepared by a member of the U.S. House of Representatives a few years ago, a bill which explains fully how to implement the formula we advocate. I shall bring him that bill this week, perhaps tomorrow, if possible. The minister promised me he would give it serious consideration. Then, if that legislation can be implemented in Canada, and I am sure it can, the minister could not say that we have nothing to suggest to solve the problem and to prevent wholesale dealers from taking undue advantage of the tax cut at the manufacturers' level. For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret the government's decision to avail itself of the provisions of Standing Order 75C to end the debate and prevent hon. members from trying to convince the Minister of Finance to find a formula more flexible and respectful of the jurisdiction of the provinces and more specifically of the province of Quebec.

No matter what the minister may say, Mr. Speaker, the other finance ministers are in agreement, but this is not the first time it has been said in Canada that Quebec is not a province like the others. Quebec is the only French-speaking province in Canada and as such it is different from the other provinces. But it does not seek preferential treatment: from the economic point of view it wants to be treated by the central government just like all the other provinces. There is no doubt that the proposal the Minister of Finance has made is unacceptable because it flies in the face of the constitution; I therefore oppose this use of closure and we shall vote against this motion.

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, what I find disturbing about what I hear today is that we are forgetting the essence of the debate, and what the debate is all about, namely, the economy of our country. Our economy needs that boost, support, and confidence being offered by the imaginative and innovative budget, together with a co-operative approach that has never taken place before in the history of our country. This has been on the part of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) who has consulted with the provinces.

It is not an easy or simple thing to talk with ten premiers or ministers of finance and obtain unanimity. They all realize they are big boys. They know what is at stake and that it is important the economy move forward with some cohesion, and that is exactly what the Minister of Finance was endeavouring to achieve, and to a large extent has achieved, except in one case.

That one case did not really involve the economy or the matter of cohesion. Indeed, it involved something almost in the reverse; stalling, delaying, not giving answers, and not proceeding, not because there was fundamental disagreement or an unwillingness to co-operate, and I realize that everyone cannot think precisely in the same way, but rather because those involved took the opportunity to help build their policy in order to demonstrate that they could only work within a framework of sovereign association—a status that is quite different and does not depend on co-operation, courage, and innovation, such as shown by the Minister of Finance. That is something my friends opposite fail to understand.

We have here in the proposals of my colleague the makings of a way to maintain the momentum that is being built up in the economy. We have also the makings of the faith Canadians and people outside our country need, but which has been so badly shattered by the financial critic of the official opposition, in particular, and others from the other side. They have created a lack of confidence that has resulted in the lack of stability of our dollar. It has now returned to a reasonable state of stability, where it belongs. This is what has to be nurtured and preserved.

There are elements in the budget that will assist in providing impetus and the courage to exploit opportunities by the small business community across our country, a community which is so vital to our existence. The budget includes opportunities for research and development. The 150 per cent write off is not only a tax concession in itself for needed research and development, but is as well a signal to the businessmen and women of this country that this government has faith in them and in their ability to be innovative, and intends to back them up. It is an indication that this government wants them to be imaginative and get on with the job. This is followed of course by other announcements by the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Buchanan), which give further indications in that regard.

The important thing, Mr. Speaker, is to get on with the job—not to haggle amongst ourselves in what is a fragile world economy and one in which we have to compete desperately—to get on to other bills proposed by the Minister of Finance. For example, there is the provision for the write-off against future income of investment in small business, an extremely important element that I hope even the opposition can grasp. It is that which is called glove money in some cases, but I call it confidence money. It is money that brothers, parents, friends put up to invest in an entrepreneur's business, but cannot do so in many cases because it is hard earned money from people with small estates. This will at least give them the hope that if they are not successful they can write it off against future income. I mention that, not to take it out of context in this debate, but to put it in context, because these are all interrelated.

The monkey wrench is being thrown in not for reasons that the budget has been brought in and these new measures have been brought in, but for measures quite irrelevant to that, to demonstrate that provinces cannot co-operate with the federal government and with other provinces for the good of the entire country. That I find sad, and I think most people in the province of Quebec would find it sad too.

It is important, Mr. Speaker, that this bill be supported and that we get on with the business of the budget, that we move on to those other areas that need our attention, and that we deal very realistically with the issues that are at stake here, which are whether we can work in co-operation and harmony in controlling the economy of this country, particularly at a time when it needs every bit of co-operation and support it can get. It is important that we allocate our time sensibly, get on with the job, and run the economy as it should be run, to the best of our ability with the greatest spirit we have.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danson: I appreciate that perhaps the hon. members opposite do not understand, but the fact is that they are helping to destroy the confidence that we on this side of the House have in the people of this country, in the businessmen and women of this country, and in the potential of this country, which is very great indeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, the minister said as he began his remarks that what this debate was all about was the economy. Well, I would say to the minister that what this debate is about is the incompetence of this government, the incompetence of this government in the way in which it has handled the economy, the incompetence of this government in the way in which it approaches federal-provincial relations, the incompetence of this government in the way in which it runs the business of this parliament. That is what this debate is all about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: It is with a great deal of concern that I rise to speak on this motion today. I expressed my concern earlier in the debate when the bill was before the House, but I am doubly concerned today that we have a very unpopular bill, a tremendously unpopular bill that is about to be railroaded through the House by the motion of closure which we have before us.

What we have to remember, Mr. Speaker, is that closure is the ultimate weapon in parliament, a weapon to be brought in only in extreme situations. We have to ask ourselves is this such a situation? We have seen bills debated here for four, five six weeks, even months without closure being introduced. This is a bill which has been debated for a mere 25 hours, and now the government is imposing closure, imposing closure on a budget bill, a money bill, a bill dealing with the spending plans of the government. As such, it it a very important bill, one that it is the duty and role of parliament to examine and study extremely carefully.

It is the duty of the opposition, of those on this side of the House, to question how the government spends its money, and that is what we have been doing over these past days—questioning the government, asking for explanations, looking at the various measures in this bill. I might add we have been getting very little in the way of explanation from the government when we have raised these questions and doubts.

We have questioned in particular the one ludicrous measure in this bill that has received unanimous rejection from coast to coast, not only rejection by all members in the opposition parties in this parliament, but by people right across the country. It is clause 30 which has caused the government so much embarrassment, a measure designed to give direct tax rebates to the taxpayers of Quebec. That measure is the reason behind this closure motion being brought before us today. The government is invoking closure in order to get that embarrassing measure out of the way, and hopefully, so it thinks, out of the minds of the people, and out of the daily press where it is a continuing reminder, day after day, of the government's ineptitude and its lack of ability to handle the economy of the country.

This tax rebate which was conceived to replace a program that the government was unable to coerce the government of Quebec into accepting is an inept and clumsy solution to a problem that never should have arisen. It would never have arisen if the government truly understood the workings of the federal system. What the government has done in this debate and through this measure is to show that it fails to understand how a federal system should really work. As a result, what we have is closure, trying to sweep this ill-conceived measure under the rug.

This direct income tax rebate scheme is not only ill-conceived, it is modelled on an idea that is outdated and was outdated when it was first mentioned some ten years ago by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) but laid to rest at the Victoria conference and not resurrected since, until the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) put their heads together and brought about this disaster.

As I pointed out when I spoke on this matter earlier, the question of direct tax rebates to taxpayers in lieu of provincial participation in a federal-provincial agreement was raised during the period of the constitutional review between 1966 and 1971. The problem centred on what to do when a province did not want to join a federally initiated scheme upon which most of the other provinces had formally and officially agreed. At that time the Trudeau government proposed making payments directly to individuals. That proposal was attacked by every province in this country, including those which are strong supporters of a vigorous central government. It was seen to be completely unworkable and was unanimously rejected and, what is more, it was also rejected unanimously by the joint parliamentary committee on the constitution in 1972.

The Prime Minister accepted the overwhelming rejection that his proposal met with at that time, and he never tried to use it as a mechanism in federal-provincial programs. What I ask, sir, is what has changed now to cause this unwieldy proposal to be dusted off and put to the test at such a delicate time in our country's history, at a time when sensitivity is the most required ingredient in federal-provincial relations? Why did the Prime Minister think that he could do now, without consultation, what he could not do ten years ago, with consultation? I am at a loss to answer this, Mr. Speaker. I do know, and I want to repeat what a former premier of British Columbia, Mr. Bennett, said ten years ago about this proposal. They were prophetic words indeed. He said, "If you introduce such a proposal you are going to play provincial governments against the federal government and you are going to break up this country and not build up Canadian unity. You are going to make for disunity."

● (1602)

The seeds of disunity have been implanted and nurtured by the government's intrasigent policy of proceeding with a method, such as it is doing, which was rejected ten years ago by all provinces and which has been rejected now by all parties in the National Assembly in the province of Quebec, and indeed by all outlets of opinion in the province of Quebec. This is a method which seems designed by this government to push the province of Quebec further into isolation.

Not content to introduce this divisive measure, the government is compounding the matter by ramming it home through the mechanism of closure. It has thus, in one move, dealt a double blow. It has attacked the roots of parliament and it has attacked the roots of our federal system. In this way it is demeaning the rights of individual members of parliament, and it is demeaning the rights of the provinces. Not even this government, with its penchant for stepping on both parliament and the provinces, has pushed its arrogance so far before. Today is surely a watershed in the arrogant life of a tyrannical government.

I say to members on the government side of the House that they should realize that in voting in favour of this motion of closure they are voting not only against the basic tenets of our federal system, but they are voting against the total membership of the National Assembly of the province of Quebec, and indeed they are voting against the overwhelming wishes of the people of the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate as I support without any reservation that motion for closure, and I believe it is essential to place it in its proper background and recall the reasons why the government chose that course of action. Although I may not be as close to the Parti Québécois as the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), my past experience makes me very close to provincial Liberals and I shall explain to the hon. member for Joliette why they had to take that position. But first, Mr. Speaker, I wish to explain why we chose that course of action.

Last January and February, when the provincial premiers and the federal government met at their conference, several of my friends, officials of the Quebec government with whom I discussed, everybody agreed about the problem we had to face and, considering the uncertainty caused by the high unemployment level, we had to encourage consumer spending to facilitate our economic recovery. Of course the government had several means at its disposal. One of them was tried in January and February, that is a personal income tax reduction. Then there was the federal tax cut advocated by the Social Credit member for whom I have much respect. But the main beneficiaries of that measure would have been manufacturers and retailers rather than consumers. Yet all experts, including economists who are among the most ardent supporters of the Parti Québécois, told to the provincial ministers and the federal minister that, considering our objective, the best means at our disposal was a sales tax cut. That stand required a lot of guts and a sense of innovation on the part of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), considering the determination of the Parti Québécois to demonstrate that federalism cannot work.

The Minister of Finance had the guts to try that method. He consulted the ten provincial ministers. Obviously it was not easy, Mr. Speaker, and in our country where 75 per cent of manufactured goods are produced in Ontario and Quebec, where British Columbia's share is between 10 per cent and 13 per cent of the production particularly in the field of export plywood, there is consequently only 12 per cent left of the manufacturing production to be shared between seven other provinces and two territories. It then became unthinkable for the federal government to ask the provincial ministers to decide on a selective tax rebate. Where could Saskatchewan and Manitoba have effectively and efficiently applied such a selective measure?

The Ontario finance minister, Mr. Darcy McKeough, understood it and this is the reason why he accepted a tax rebate across the line. It is clear that with a selective measure, the two provinces which would have benefited most would be first Ontario and then Quebec. Yet the Ontario finance minister agreed to participate in a national scheme in order to serve the national interests. Those of our colleagues who are now talking about the constitution in this debate, I have to call them "constitutionalists." These are people who are playing some kind of a minuet without exactly knowing the tune to which they are dancing. In view of the fact that with the counter-proposal from the Canadian Minister of Finance, Quebec had the opportunity of spending that 1 percentage point which they were asked to inject, and spend precisely in those sectors which they chose, namely these four soft sectors.

As for the Quebec consumer, if we take for instance a family of 4 persons with a $10,000 income, we realize that with an overall reduction of 3 percentage points, and I am now adressing my remarks to the Progressive Conservative members who are changing their views just about every day, such a reduction of 3 percentage points on all items would increase the purchasing power of low-income people for more than a tax reduction applied only to four sectors. So, Mr. Speaker, the finance minister chose that method because, it is socially more equitable and economically more consistent with the over-all interests of the country. Mr. Parizeau has refused with his usual open-mindedness. Not only has he turned down our proposals and decided not to negotiate for the past three weeks, not only has he refused to come to us with a counter-proposal but he has played politics and applied a tax reduction of 8 percentage points on four sectors, Mr. Speaker and I am not convinced that the Quebec government is applying the right solution there.

Nobody, from Quebec in particular, has mentioned that since quotas were imposed on footwear and clothing we are having difficulty even supplying all retailers in British Columbia and Alberta, and I would like the Leader of the Opposition when he is in British Columbia and in his own province of Alberts, to tell the people, the retailers there who are making things tough for us in Ottawa, I would like him to tell them that he approves and encourages the decision made by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce under Mr. Jean Chrétien, to cut imports.

Mr. Speaker, the most important thing at this time in these four sectors—they have orders—is for the government of Quebec, if it is looking for effective action, to make available to them a little more risk capital. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has set a program whereby we finance, not only in Quebec but across the country, 90 per cent of the studies made by those industries with a view to analyse the problem in a given company. Following that grants and loans of up to $1.5 million will help the industry to make a recovery. Unfortunately some companies are still going bankrupt not for lack of orders but because they produce at a loss, for instance instead of selling a pair of pants with a $1 profit, they lose 50 cents. What is required is not necessarily more orders, but the rationalization of their means of production. Mr. Speaker, if, instead of playing partisan politics, members of the opposition wanted to fully discuss the problem of those four sectors, they should come to me and I will give them a few pointers which will help them to speak more intelligently in Quebec.

Here is another thing. Mr. Speaker, when we took on that economic problem of getting the economy going again I would remind members of the opposition who want to bring the constitution into the debate that they all agree up to now that the federal government should be the one mainly responsible for the economy in this country. Now, in spite of the extensive decentralization advocated by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) who does not know what he would decentralize, the fact is that the federal government collects only 40 per cent of taxes in this country, while 60 per cent are collected by provincial and municipal governments. Now, and here I shall follow the line of thought of the hon. member, if our government really wants to act in a responsible and effective way in a field where everybody agrees it should act, that is in the economic field, the hon. member should admit that with 40 per cent of taxes, he cannot speak of decentralization because with a little less money, the government will become inoperative to such an extent that it will no longer be able to play its role. I would understand then that he became a separatist, because it is better to cut out the dead wood and take a new approach. Mr. Speaker, we have compared apples with oranges in this debate. Obviously, the hon. member for Joliette enjoyed flirting with the Parti Québécois. He did not need the sales tax to do that; he had started long before. When the hon. member for Joliette who, after all, is still a Quebecker and the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) tell the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) that he should back down, I believe that the hon. member for Joliette should consider all the options that could be valid and truly helpful for Quebeckers instead of coming up with a new solution every day after reading the editorials in the morning newspapers.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain the position of the provincial Liberal party and of Mr. Ryan. Mr. Garneau, who was the economic adviser of the Liberal party up to the leadership convention, decided to support the federal government, and his new leader did not really examine Mr. Chrétien's counter proposal in which he asked that the federal reduction of 2 per cent be applied on all the products, after which the province would be allowed to apply its 1 per cent reduction in whatever area it wished, and unfortunately, he did not have time to consider the proposal made during the weekend on the Thursday before the leadership convention and he took the position that I would have taken myself if I had been in his place. However, Mr. Speaker, he took this position on the advice of the Liberal member for Bonaventure, Mr. Lévesque, who explained to him that when the Union Nationale, other good friends of the hon. member for Joliette, was in power and the Liberals made up the opposition in Quebec, on four different occasions, the provincial Liberals supported the federal Liberals, and after consultations, dialogues and negotiations between the Union Nationale and the government in Ottawa, the provincial Liberals looked as though they had adopted a holier-than-thou attitude and had been more federalist than the federalists in Ottawa.

Mr. Lévesque, and I want to explain this to Mr. La Salle who is a good politician, Mr. Lévesque explained to Mr. Ryan that it would be very dangerous to support openly the federal Liberals in case there was some sort of compromise which would give Quebeckers the impression that if the Liberals had been in power in Quebec rather than the Independentists, Quebec's share would have been less. However, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. member for Joliette should certainly recognize this, it remains that Mr. Ryan has effectively suggested a formula that the Minister of Finance accepted last week, whether or not it is a rebate, and the Leader of the Opposition is shaking his head in disagreement. That is why the government wants to implement this proposal this year rather than next year. The Leader of the Opposition says that those $85 cheques will not help the poor, but next year about 100,000 fewer would be helped. But the Leader of the Opposition will certainly understand that the Liberal government, always the champion of the underprivileged in this country, had to—

● (1612)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary, but his allotted time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the new Liberal leader in Quebec will not read the words of the hon. member for Chambly (Mr. Loiselle), because judging from what he said, you would think that Mr. Ryan is stupid rather than intelligent. Apparently, he had not understood the minister's proposal correctly, that is, Mr. Lévesque had apparently misled him and finally—No, frankly I think Mr. Ryan is more intelligent than that and I intend to trust Mr. Ryan more than the hon. member for Chambly who just tried to teach us a lesson at his government's prompting. Like all the others in front of me, he toes the party line.

I repeat today that because of this guillotine imposed by the government, this is a very sad day for the members of this House and particularly for the members from Quebec, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not believe in the arguments put forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and the hon. member for Chambly in his malicious comments, saying that we are yet more hon. members who want to please the Quebec separatists, refusing to recognize that the Minister of Finance faces a unanimous National Assembly and a unanimous official opposition proposals. Would it be then that the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister alone hold the truth in the matter?

Mr. Speaker, I think we have proof here of disconcerting and unbelievable treason with regard to the fundamental question. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the ten minutes allotted us will enable the hon. members of this House to reject this motion for closure, motion that is odious in a parliament such as ours, and on a debate that deserves some continuity.

The Minister of Finance has the gall to move a motion of closure, knowing full well that there is still unanimity in Quebec, at this very moment, and when he tries to make out a solution is forthcoming within hours, and asks us to support this motion of closure, on a bill which is inacceptable in principle, even less so for Quebeckers, I say, it takes nerve.

I also wonder how it is that the 60 Quebec members opposite are hiding behind the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I am well aware of the fact that they are usually elected on the Prime Minister's coattails. I think that in view of the present situation, they are panic-striken and are more worried than they care to admit. It would be timely to repeat what so many Quebeckers asked me over the weekend: "Where are those valiant Quebec MPs who are supposed to defend our rights in Ottawa? Let those gallant Liberals who had pledged to carry out the Prime Minister's promise of a just society stand up and be counted."

And what about the hope generated by the arrival of those three doves at the House of Commons, two of whom have already left for more secure havens and the third, according to the last Gallup poll, is in a bad way but would rather put up with anything than quit. Mr. Speaker, we know that the Minister of Finance had to make concessions in view of his colossal blunder, his clumsy negotiations and attitude. Of course, the government will boast of their flexibility, which they have not shown any sign of over the last ten years, and all of a sudden, on realizing they have painted themselves into a corner they will claim to be open-minded. We have been pressing the Minister of Finance, for the past two months, to consider and reply to Quebec's proposal.

Can anyone in this House argue that the Quebec government's proposal on behalf of those sectors where problems are the most acute was a bad one? As I said before, for the sake of the so-called unanimity in the National Assembly, they will keep manipulating people with comments of all kinds, such as the ones the hon. member for Chambly (Mr. Loiselle) made earlier. I do not want to give him more importance than he has. This debate started two months ago and I think it is the first time I have heard him say anything on this matter. Obviously, he has been well briefed and instructed by members of his party. Perhaps the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier) will make a few comments presently. I hope he does. I heard him say that this proposal of the Minister of Finance was a political catastrophy. The next day he almost clapped his desk to pieces after the Minister of Finance defended his stand. That worries me a little, but this afternoon he has another chance to shape up and I trust he will. Other members on the other side have also expressed their disapproval and they are absent today. I suppose they have other responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance referred to flexibility in connection with our unyielding and fierce position for the past two months, but he had to change his mind and alter his proposal, and thanks to us on this side of the House, the Quebec finance minister and the provinces will not be hoodwinked and forced to accept the dictatorial measures of the federal government. Today he speaks about flexibility, but it only proves his weakness and his ridiculous incompetence from which he is absolved by the Prime Minister each time he answers a question we put to him. I never thought the Prime Minister would go that far.

As a responsible head of state, we have been asking him for the past two weeks to take up the matter personally, since his Minister of Finance has shown his incompetence. Well aware that the Minister of Finance could no longer negotiate with his Quebec counterpart, the Prime Minister has declined to assume his responsibilities and call a meeting with the Quebec premier. He has not done so but encouraged his Minister of Finance in his colossal error; now they are telling us that no special arrangements are to be made whereas we know perfectly well that on the initial proposal there have been some arrangements with certain provinces. But in the case of Quebec, arrangements are alleged to divide the country and undermine federalism. This is the kind of comments some people conveniently forget. As soon as we opposed the bill, the Prime Minister charged all supporters of the Parizeau proposal with undermining federalism. The Minister of Finance stated that that proposal was likely to divide the country but when the provincial parties headed by Mr. Ryan and Mr. Biron and others and the unanimous opposition on this side and some other sectors of the economy joined the official opposition side, the Prime Minister did not dare repeat his charges in this House. He was less brave here than he was with the media at the time of his first press conference. The Minister of Finance also changed his attitude many times but he tried almost every week to make us believe that we just wanted to support a proposal by a government with very particular option.

Mr. Speaker, at no time have we supported the Quebec government for political reasons. We have supported what we felt were Quebec's interests, and we have fought for a basic principle whereby under a new federalism, the provinces should be allowed to discuss this issue freely and participate in a decision as important as the one proposed by the Minister of Finance. But these negotiations which are said—

Mr. Roy (Laval): That is exactly what they did—

Mr. La Salle: I have just heard the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) who will certainly vote for closure and put a gag on all members without hearing first about the forthcoming solution. Of course, we are all anxious to find such a solution, and a responsible government would certainly have dealt differently with hon. members who are as eager and willing to safeguard Quebec's interests. I suggest that we were entitled to expect a better performance than the one we have witnessed for the past two months.

I know full well, Mr. Speaker, that when the Prime Minister was facing an election call two weeks ago, the position of the Liberals influenced the decision he had to take in terms of an election call which was postponed to a later date, and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Quebeckers in this House will raise on this closure motion—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the motion moved by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) is based on a Standing Order which was passed by this parliament precisely to avoid any counter abuses. Under this standing order, a minister sponsoring a bill in the House can, by way of a motion, put an end to the debate at a given stage of the study of any bill when it is required by the interests of society and the state, when it seems obvious that the opposition parties are more interested in playing politics than in the subject matter of the bill at stake and that they ignore the well being of the collectivity. So the question arising out of this motion is whether or not the Minister of Finance is justified to resort to a rule which is part of the standing orders of the House of Commons of Canada to limit the debate on the second reading of a bill containing 59 clauses spread over 66 pages.

Now, what we have witnessed during the past ten days, when we were supposed to discuss the whole bill and when actually most interventions dealt only with clause 30 of the bill, is that about ten days have indeed been spent so far merely rising against and attempting to politicize a situation without even trying to suggest really concrete and useful proposals. In the course of that debate which has lasted for ten days now at the stage of second reading, I have never heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) or other members of other opposition parties concerned with that issue come forward with some useful suggestion in an attempt to solve what was at the beginning a problem, a matter of principle which is now settled and might have become a simple matter of finding the best way to transfer the money. Not a single constructive suggestion has been made, only destructive and negative criticism.

I find that unacceptable and irresponsible, Mr. Speaker, from people who suggest they want the good of Canadian citizens. I can see that the opposition leader is trying to tell me something. I will be happy to give him a briefing after I finish my short statement, Mr. Speaker, in order to correctly explain to him the principles which are contained in Bill C-56 and which he apparently missed completely. Instead of trying to support the cause of the Parti Québécois, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition should endeavour to demonstrate that right from the start of this controversy there was evidence of pettiness on the part of one of the provincial ministers of Finance, that there was a lack of honest cooperation on the part of one of the provincial ministers of finance while the nine others, who were consulted by the federal Minister of Finance, agreed on a helpful solution for the Canadian economy.

They allowed the Canadian government to intervene in a field of provincial jurisdiction, namely sales taxes. They allowed the Minister of Finance to reimburse them the equivalent of two out of three points of general sales tax cut in Canada. However, the Quebec minister of finance dozed through the three weeks of negotiations. He sent his officials. He came. He took part in the discussions. He did not take a stand, that, from the start, it must be pointed out and can never be stressed enough, Mr. Speaker. That was unacceptable meanness on the part of a provincial minister of finance, that can only be explained by the objectives pursued by the government of which this minister of finance is a member, that is, destroying our country and proving that federalism cannot work. I suggest it is irresponsible for a Leader of the Opposition of a Progressive Conservative member from Quebec to side with a Minister of Finance who resorted to such pettiness. Mr. Speaker, I hear the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), yelling from behind the curtains, that I should accuse Mr. Ryan. All Mr. Ryan did was to support a motion dealing with principles. As I said, this goes to show that the hon. member for Joliette is not aware of all the facts, or he does not fully understand the situation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the hon. member standing behind the curtains not to interrupt the hon. member who has the floor. If he wishes to speak, he may ask to be recognized.

Mr. Pinard: The unanimity in the Quebec National Assembly was on the principle that Quebec should not be prevented, notwithstanding Mr. Parizeau's meanness, from implementing selective tax cuts. And moreover, notwithstanding Mr. Parizeau's mean trick, the National Assembly supported the principle of requiring that the Canadian government compensate Quebec for up to $226 million. Those were the principles involved, and to all intents and purposes, those principles are now settled, because the Canadian Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) stated very clearly that he had no intention of meddling with the PQ's selective cuts, and that indeed his intention was to compensate Quebec for up to $226 million. Those were the only principles involved, those were the principles that were supported by all parties in the Quebec National Assembly.

But now the problem is totally different. It has become much less important. It is a mere problem of implementing a formula for rebating those $226 million. This is quite different, Mr. Speaker. It is no longer a matter of principle, since the principles have been dealt with. The battle for the principles has been waged. Notwithstanding Minister Parizeau's unacceptable meanness, the Minister of Finance showed plenty of flexibility. He finally said: Listen, you refused to agree as the other provinces did, and we will not intervene in the area of provincial sales taxes. We did so in other provinces, because the provincial ministers of finance were in agreement. Mr. Parizeau, you failed to inform us of your dissenting position, but nevertheless, we certainly realize today that you will not allow anybody to interfere with the provincial sales tax, so, do whatever you wish, Mr. Parizeau. Take it off on four items, suppress the tax on children's clothing which you enacted yourself a year ago, do away with taxes for an additional two years if that is what you want. It is your business, it is your privilege, do whatever you want.

[Mr. Pinard.]

In Ottawa, we accept to pay you back $226 million, but we will pay that back within the limits of our own jurisdiction. We will pay that back to you by way of a reduction in federal income tax paid by Quebeckers, which is exactly the formula used in the other provinces who accepted our intervention in reducing their provincial taxes while compensating them, because in the other provinces, a taxation area is simply liberated and that this is what we propose to do, either by sending a cheque to each and every taxpayer in Quebec or by compensating the province by way of a tax rebate which could be granted by the end of 1978. Those are only matters of procedures, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned it a while ago and, in my opinion, this implies no litigation as to principles.

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the mini-leader of the opposition who is smiling. What would have been his position if on budget night every province had accepted a general three per cent reduction of their sales taxes? Of course, Alberta would have accepted even if this province has no sales tax, as it has done. What would have been his position if every province had accepted, except Ontario, and if three days after the budget, Mr. McKeough had publicly declared: I did not accept this program from Ottawa even if Quebec and the other provinces accepted it. I do not want those three per cent across the board, I want to reduce my provincial sales tax on cars. I unilaterally decide to reduce my sales tax on cars and I am asking Ottawa to send me $226 million. What would have been the position of the mini-leader of the opposition in such circumstances? What would the hon. member for Joliette have been yelling in such circumstances? What would they have done with the principles which they claim to be advocating, Mr. Speaker? I would be curious to see their attitude. However, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that they are now resorting to politicking. But they should not deceive themselves. It is not by taking up the doctrine and causes of the Parti Québécois that they will stand up for the true interests of Quebeckers. And I insist on that, Mr. Speaker. I wish to say to the member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) and the opposition that Mr. Parizeau, the minister of finance, has acted shabbily because he wants to distort the system and prove that federalism is inefficient. I maintain that he is irresponsible.

[English]

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, this is a sad day for parliament. It is always a sad day for parliament when a government uses its majority to invoke closure. When this form of closure was introduced by this government ten years ago, we were told that Standing Order 75C would rarely be used because of the provisions of Standing Orders 75A and 75B. Yet we have seen no attempt on the part of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) or the Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) to explain to this House that attempts were made under 75A or 75B to get a sensible allocation of time for this bill, or to have any sensible negotiations in order to get on with this bill.

The hon. member who just took his seat has demonstrated one thing here today with his defence of the government—

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, precisely because I know the standing orders, I wish to remind the hon. member that Standing Order 75C provides for previous negotiations with the representatives of opposition parties. Those negotiations were held and failed and this is why we are justified in proceeding today under Standing Order 75C. Therefore, the alleged facts are not true.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is a matter of debate.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I hope that is not going to be taken off my time. The hon. gentleman who just made that intervention should know the rules because he is the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader. However, the fact of the matter is that Standing Order 75C is an arbitrary guillotine which is to be used rarely in this House, and certainly not the way it is being used in this case.

Nobody will question the right of the government majority to bring any question to a resolution after what it considers a reasonable time. We accept that, and we accept the fact that governments should rarely invoke the procedure of closure. However, by the same token, no sensible person would question the right of the opposition in the House to use every parliamentary device at its disposal to prevent a bill from going through when the government knows it will never be enforced and when in fact it is unenforceable.

We know this bill will have to be changed before it gets to third reading because it cannot be implemented without the advice and consent of the province of Quebec. Yet we are faced with this invocation of closure, knowing full well that within a few days the Minister of Finance will rise in his place in this House and say that there has been an agreement with the province of Quebec and that the bill will have to be changed.

Why not withdraw the bill now and sit down and negotiate sensibly with the province of Quebec toward an agreement which can then be incorporated in this bill and brought before this House? It would then receive expeditious passage. However, that is not the way this government operates. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lumley) talks about filibuster. Let me remind the hon. gentleman of a few facts.

We have had nine days on this very important bill. This bill has within it very divisive elements which will divide this country. It is the most divisive legislation we have had before us since this government came to power ten years ago. We have had nine days on this bill, and four of them have been short days, that is, Wednesdays and Fridays, when parliament sits only in the afternoons. During those nine days there have been 18 speakers from the official opposition and 15 from the government side of the House, and the parliamentary secretary talks about filibuster! The hon. parliamentary secretary, for whom I have the greatest respect, has demonstrated a unique capacity in this House to speak out of both sides of his mouth.

We as a parliament are faced with the invidious prospect of having before us a bill with 59 clauses and over 60 pages. It is a very important tax bill which is currently being negotiated in the public press and in the public media by the Government of Canada and the government of Quebec. Surely that has to be a situation which is unprecedented in the history of any parliamentary democracy.

This bill flies in the fact of a unanimous declaration of the National Assembly of the province of Quebec. The parliamentary secretary tried to stickhandle his way around that one. He made Guy Lafleur look like an amateur. He should get the award for being the most valuable player of the year for his performance in trying to skate around the fact that the newly elected leader of the Liberal party in Quebec has come out against this bill and against this government's high-handed and arbitrary manner of dealing with the provinces in an area of provincial jurisdiction.

Eighteen members of the official opposition have participated in this debate. If the government has its way—and it will, because of its majority—there will be many of us on both sides of the House who will be denied the opportunity to speak on this bill.

This is one of the most important bills to come before the House, with all its elements built in for disunity, for tearing this country apart, at a time when the government should be expressing great sensitivity. But it is pretty hard to demonstrate sensitivity and arrogance at the same time, and if this government has demonstrated its ability in one area, it is in the area of arrogance in dealing with the provinces.

We saw an example of this in the House a few days ago when the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) made a fundamental change in the housing policy of this country. He admits himself that it is a major shift in the social housing policy, and he admits it is a major change in the whole area of housing and urban affairs. So how does he treat the provinces? He lets them know of this change by a 15-page telex. That is the way this government treats the province of Quebec, that is the way it treats the province of Ontario, and that is the way it treats all the provinces of this country. Is it any wonder that this government has lost the confidence of the people of this country, as demonstrated by the Gallup poll?

I believe in this country, I believe in it with all my heart, and I worry about this government's propensity, this government's death wish, to divide and destroy this country, and we see the demonstrated not only in the high-handed, arrogant attitude of the Minister of Finance, but in the high-handed, arrogant attitude of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

We saw it today when a loyal member of the government party, a former parliamentary secretary, a former distinguished chairman of a committee, stood in his place in the House and raised a question of privilege vital to the rights of parliament when he questioned the right of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) to make a major policy statement on nuclear waste disposal at the very time when the committee on which the hon. member sits is still deliberating on this most important issue. What an arrogant government! The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made his statement yesterday while the committee was seized of this matter, and he presented to this House a fait accompli. Sir, the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) was quite right in rising in his place today, because that committee was given special terms of reference by the House to study that very matter.

This country will not survive if we have in office in Ottawa a government which shows such callous disregard for the rights of parliament and for the constitution of this country. The Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) in his speech yesterday asked rhetorically what would be the attitude of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) if the same thing were to happen in the province of Ontario. We say to the hon. member that it does not make any difference which province is having its constitutional rights transgressed. It is the solemn obligation and the responsibility of every member in the House to fight against such arrogance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: It is our solemn responsibility as members of parliament to uphold the constitution of this country, and if there is one thing that can be said for this government—and certainly not a great deal can be said for the competence of this government—it is that it does not uphold the constitution of this country. The government of Quebec, notwithstanding the fact that it is dedicated to separation, has shown that it is a great deal more competent than the present Minister of Finance, or anybody else who sits in the cabinet over there, because what they did was to present a bill which would have a great deal of sex appeal in an election which subsequently they did not have the guts to call. And that is why, sir, they find themselves in the mess they are in today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in case there are readers of today's Hansard who might wonder what we are debating, may I point out that we are debating a motion in the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to close off debate on the second reading of Bill C-56.

Most of the debate this afternoon seems to have been on the provisions of Bill C-56 itself, rather than on the motion before the House. In fact, during the speeches that were made by some of the Liberal members, I felt they were demonstrating that they would like more time to debate the bill because certainly they spent no time at all debating the issue of closure.

I realize that, on the other hand, they do not like to call this closure; they like to call it allocation of time. But I suggest that a skunk by any other name has the same odor. That is the way some of us feel about closure. Indeed, as I have said on a number of occasions, when closure under rule 75C or under rule 33 has been applied, what concerns me most about it is that the government's easy resort to these rules for ending debate precludes any serious study of ways of programming the work of this parliament.

When the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) referred to this motion yesterday in rather uncomplimentary terms as being unparalleled in the history of parliament, I am reported in Hansard as having asked "Oh?" What I meant by that was that I have known of other instances where the abuse of closure has been worse than we are experiencing today. But I will say, along with the Leader of the Opposition, that I know of no instance where closure has been applied in the circumstances that we face at the present time.

I suppose the worst abuse of closure that the Parliament of Canada ever saw was when we went into committee of the whole stage on the pipeline bill in 1956. We got down to the clauses and, lo and behold, Mr. Howe stood up on clause 2, read the marginal note telling us what was in it, and then asked us to move on to clause 3. He did the same thing on clause 3 and all the subsequent clauses. Then, all the clauses having had one sentence spoken on each by the then minister of trade and commerce, the government said we had had debate on these clauses, so closure under rule 33 could be applied. As I say, if any members today wonder why there was such an uproar in parliament in 1956, it was because of that kind of abuse of the government's right to impose closure.

But this, sir, is really an unprecedented and unparalleled situation. We have before us a bill which, as has been said, includes 59 clauses, at least one of which, clause 30, is in a form whih is to be changed. The Minsiter of Finance has told us that, but he will not tell us what the terms of the change will be. He has delayed introducing a new ways and means motion as required by the ruling from the Chair, because he is not going to go ahead with clause 30 in its present form, so he has to wait until he decides what clause 30 is going to say before he brings in a new ways and means motion to cover it. Yet the Parliament of Canada, 264 representatives—except for the 15 who have gone to their reward—is being asked to vote on a measure the key clause of which is not before us. If intelligent men and women could be asked to do anything more unintelligible than that, I do not kow what it is. For the government to impose this form of closure in this circumstance would even arouse the ire of C. D. Howe. He is probably saying that wherever he may be, for he was the master abuser of the closure rule.

Instead of imposing closure, instead of requiring the House to vote on this measure without further debate, what the government should be doing is suspending debate on this measure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Negotiations are still going on. The Minister of Finance says he is prepared to negotiate. Mr. Parizeau was quoted in the press this morning as saying he would be prepared to offer new propositions. In the light of all that, the minister stated the other day that he does not yet know what the terms of clause 30 will be. Then why should we be debating, day after day, a measure, the crux of which has not been determined? It is for this reason I feel that this bill should not be subjected to closure, nor should it be debated at all at this time.

● (1652)

What bothers me every time closure is introduced is that it is a case of putting off, time and time again, a sensible solution to the problem of lengthy debates in the House. I fully agree that the days of unending filibustering are over. I fully agree that the work of the House should be planned so that we do not take up so much time on one measure that we do not get to others which may be equally important, or even more important. I have seen times in sessions of this House when important measures did not get reached because so much time was taken on one measure.

I believe there is enough sense, intelligence, and good will in the House of Commons to attempt to devise a means of planning our work. There is no time in these ten minues at my disposal to spell out the ideas which I have. I have spelled them out on other occasions. Even as a member of the opposition I have proposed ways and means by which some debates on routine and housekeeping measures could be kept short or transferred to a committee so that there would be ample time for debate on important measures. As long as the government has the right to resort to closure, it does not feel any pressure to solve the problem of developing a program for the work of this House.

Rule 75C is there in the Standing Orders, and the government has the right to use it, according to the parliamentary secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister. As the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) just pointed out, it is there because in 1968 the Liberal government, with the Hon. Donald Macdonald as government House leader, brought it in. It used the old closure rule, rule 33, to force the House to vote on 75C. It is as out of place as the manner in which the original closure rule was introduced back in 1913. That was before I was here.

Some hon. Members: No!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): At that time the Liberals were debating at length a bill brought in by the Tories. Of course the present hon. Leader of the Opposition was not here then either. In fact, he was not anywhere! They stopped the debate on the naval aid bill to bring in a batch of changes in the rules, one of which was the closure rule of that day. The Liberals fought it, they opposed it. They thought it was a dastardly thing to do, to change the rules in the middle of the game. But the Liberals have used it over the years far more than the Tories. They used it in 1968 to put into effect this measure which not only creates havoc in the general running of parliament but puts off, time and time again, dealing with the issue of using our time in a sensible way.

For these reasons I am opposed to closure, and my colleagues and I will be voting against this motion. I agree with the words expressed yesterday by the hon. Leader of the Opposition. Considering the fact that we are being called upon to vote on a bill, the heart of which we do not yet know, this is a form of closure which is unparalleled. Even at this moment the government ought to have the sense, the decency, and the respect for democratic procedures, to withdraw this closure motion, and let the House get on with something else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has brought to our attention what we are debating, perhaps it would be worth while to remember that there is such a thing as a 79A, 79B and 79C.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You do not even know the number. It is Standing Order 75C.

Mr. MacFarlane: I am sorry. Being a football coach I made a mistake, because Standing Order 75 is on page 79. I should have indicated that I was talking about page 79, for the hon. member's edification.

In any case, Rule 79A indicates—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You mean Rule 75A.

Mr. Benjamin: Sit down. You blew it.

Mr. MacFarlane: Are you using closure on me?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacFarlane: Rule 75A indicates that all parties must agree. How many times have people seen that used? When it is used, opposition parties stand and make big speeches about using allocation of time unfairly. Then they tell us to go ahead, that we can have the three days, but that they do not agree. They vote against it so that they can receive the credit for doing something which is horrible and hideous. The same thing happens with regard to Rule 75B. In this case the two were investigated, and no one agreed to it. Then we went to Rule 75C.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Why should we agree?

Mr. MacFarlane: I did not say members opposite should agree, but they should not indicate that we should not use the rules. It is not a matter of the things members should do. It is a matter of the things we must do in the House in order to make it work.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

S.O. 75C

Mr. MacFarlane: That is the truth of it. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will remember that quite often the opposition in the British House lets governments muddle through what it considers to be mistakes, so that these mistakes are carried, put into effect, and then the populace votes them out. Governments over there are not so wont to delay so that nothing is done. That is the indictment the opposition faces.

For all of the time I have been here, the opposition has expressed a desire not only to disagree with what the government has done, but to stop the government from doing anything for anyone.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacFarlane: The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) mentioned seven days of debate.

Mr. McGrath: I mentioned nine.

Mr. MacFarlane: Did the hon. member say "nine"? In any event, he conveniently forgot to mention the budget debate which lasted for six days. Thus, all of us have been contributing to this for perhaps 14 or 15 days. When he referred to the number of speakers, conveniently he forgot to include the speakers who participated from the Social Credit and New Democratic parties. He counted only the speakers who participated from his own party. He did not say that 22 opposition members have spoken, and that 11 government members have participated. Twice as many on that side of the House participated. We have all had a say. That must be kept in mind. Hon. members opposite are not alone. We are in this parliament together.

Mr. McGrath: I mentioned the numbers 18 and 15, as well as 60.

Mr. MacFarlane: I do not agree with the hon. member's figures, in any event.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You do not even know what rule we are talking about.

Mr. MacFarlane: I have given my numbers, and the hon. member opposite has referred to his. Perhaps one of us is incorrect. I would have expected a more credible remark from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Rule No. 75A appears on page 81 of the Standing Orders.

Mr. MacFarlane: One must remember there were meetings of the finance ministers at the beginning. Quite some months ago there were further meetings of the finance ministers and of the first ministers. Then there were three weeks of negotiations and discussions concerning the budget of the Minister of Finance. All the provinces agreed, except one. One province said, "maybe". The other provinces agreed to what was done ultimately.

Mr. Clark: Check the record.

[Mr. MacFarlane.]

Mr. MacFarlane: That should be kept in mind. Now the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has indicated that Mr. Parizeau has new ideas. Only a few days ago reporters were talking about new negotiations, and there were press releases indicating how we were going to get together hopefully to work all this out. Then Mr. Parizeau had a special press conference and said that it was full of bunk.

How can we be expected to wait to hear what Mr. Parizeau has to say? He has proven what he has to say. He said without any doubt at all, "We do not intend to do anything that does not suit us. In the final analysis we intend to be separated. In the final analysis we do not intend to belong to you at all. We intend to negotiate a financial arrangement after we have separated." That is what he has said, without any doubt, and there is no question about that. That is the manner in which he proceeds. It is a guerrilla warfare type of thing.

After all, this is the government that must take responsibility. It is this government that has to stand up and say, "This is the one government in the land which does deal with confederation, and this is the government which has more of an understanding of confederation than many hon. members on the other side. This is the government that has co-operated historically, and continued to do so when the Minister of Finance contacted all of the provincial ministers of finance, but all he got for that was a slap in the face from the NDP because something might have been leaked."

There is no desire on the part of hon. members on the other side to see this bill in its true light. There is a political desire on the other side. Someone mentioned something about the difficulties being the fault of the government because it really wanted to call an election. I suggest it is a fault associated with envy, greed, and the desire of hon. members over there to sit on this side. You covet the seats over here so much it makes you speak that way. It is not that you deserve them or that you can earn them because you can present good legislation and could solve the matter; it is simply because you covet the seats over here, seats which, praise God, you will not obtain.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has not used all his time. I just wanted to remind him that he must address the Chair.

Mr. MacFarlane: I apologize, Mr. Speaker, but when you look into a Newfoundlander's eyes it is like being hypnotized by a cod; you are trapped there.

Mr. McGrath: It takes a cod to know a cod.

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, in conclusion let me say it would be of benefit to all members to remember that the responsibility for presenting legislation rests with the government over here. It is the responsibility of the opposition to—logically and in a fair way—

Mr. Clark: Tell us what is in the bill.

Mr. MacFarlane: Were you not instructed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre not to speak on the bill now but to speak on this motion?

Mr. Clark: What is in the bill?

Mr. MacFarlane: Were you not instructed in that regard?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order, please. Address the Chair.

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, it is, indeed, the responsibility of the government to present legislation.

An hon. Member: And you have not done so.

Mr. MacFarlane: It is the responsibility of the opposition to criticize the legislation and, if it can, amend it for betterment, or in a way that the government thinks it is better, since the government represents the majority of the people and it is the government's responsibility, in the final analysis, to bear responsibility for the legislation, any amendments by the opposition, and changes made in committee. The government is responsible for every single thing that comes from parliament, and the people make the judgment. That is what you seem to forget in the opposition. Hon. members over there seem to forget that ultimately the government will always pay the debt of responsibility.

Members of the oppositions quite often bring in extraneous matters in an attempt to destroy the credibility of a person like the Minister of Finance. Hon. members often talk about him, as the Leader of the Opposition did, in a ridiculous fashion. I would not think once of speaking like that about the lowest backbencher on either side of the House. I would not waste my time trying to destroy personal credibility. I will talk with hon. members opposite; I will joke with them; I will have a few words with them, and laugh, but I will not attack a member personally in an attempt to show that the person is not capable of performing a task.

An hon. Member: Would you call him a separatist?

Mr. MacFarlane: The government ultimately must consider the future of this country, and will have to negotiate a new constitution. It must do so on the basis that there will remain a strong federal government, and the present case is an indication of the strength this federal government has in the face of all adversity, criticism, and opposition. This government will represent the people by presenting legislation and, as it is doing now, through a motion for the allocation of time to deal with the matter.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, that is quite an act to follow.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I wonder why such a motion is proposed now when the minister is conducting negotiations with the province of Quebec. A few days ago we in the opposition supported an amendment to set aside that bill for one month so that the present government would be able to renegotiate the proposal concerning the sales tax with the province of Quebec and all the provinces. The government voted against our amendment to set aside the bill for one month and now, Mr. Speaker, we are faced with a motion for closure. What a joke Mr. Speaker! During this debate on the sales tax, where are all the Quebec members, Mr. Speaker? And let me say this afternoon to the Quebec members that the people from Quebec are listening with interest to know what is most important for them: the interests of the Liberal party or the legitimate interests of their fellow citizens of the province of Quebec.

Where were the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané), the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier) and the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) during this debate? They can talk with reporters or in the corridors of parliament, in the parliament buildings, but what counts is their action here in the House of Commons. Why that silence here on the part of Quebec members? To defend the rights of PQ? No, they rather feared to lose the votes of the people of Quebec and you know that as well as I do. The proposal from the National Assembly to abolish the sales tax in traditional sectors like textiles, footwear, clothing and furniture was supported not only by the Parti Québécois but also by the whole National Assembly with the approval of every citizen in the province of Quebec.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, except for the Liberal members. I realize as well as you do that 35,000 of the 36,000 jobs lost in the secondary sector throughout Canada over the last 18 months were in the province of Quebec, particularly in traditional industries such as textiles and others. I wonder why you voted against such a proposal. Again I put this question to the present government and to hon. members from the province of Quebec: What level of government has jurisdiction over the sales tax? You, in the federal government? I think you know the answer as well as I do.

Let me answer. Because of their stupidity, because of their arrogance, because of their intransigence, nobody had done more than the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance to promote and help the cause of separatism in the province of Quebec. Because of your policy, it is surely an example of several of your measures of confrontation with the provinces; it is not the first time you have locked horns with the province of Quebec and with the other provinces. Because of your policy of confrontation in the present debate, a policy which has been going on for years, nobody has done more than you to help the cause of separatism in the province of Quebec.

• (1712)

Of the 270,000 jobs, Mr. Speaker, in the traditional areas of textiles, furniture, clothing, and shoes, 130,000 of them are found outside the province of Quebec. Leaders in all these industries have stated that since this infamous budget proposition has been brought down, the proposition emanating, not from the Parti Québécois, but from the whole National Assembly, would aid these sectors and stimulate and aid the economy and employment outside the province of Quebec just as easily as it would inside the province. So why, I ask, did you vote against the proposition, why did the Minister of Finance in announcing his original budgetary measures, since this whole matter is within provincial jurisdiction, not just announce a global, general policy and let the provinces, considering that the sales tax matter is within provincial jurisdiction, apply their priorities according to what was going on? Why did there have to be confrontation with the province of Quebec, when the government was flexible enough to accommodate British Columbia and Saskatchewan?

I can tell you what is going to happen after today; there will be some proposition worked out with the minister of finance of Quebec, then the government will give the province of Quebec the money, one way or another, God knows how. Quebec will then go ahead and do what it did in the first place, namely, abolish taxes within the traditional areas of textiles, et cetera. Why did you not cooperate in the first place?

An hon. Member: With the separatists?

Mr. Grafftey: "With the separatists." How sad it is to hear that! I will tell you why. This is not merely one isolated case, Mr. Speaker; this is the end result of ten years of confrontation. The government never expected to defend this terrible policy on the floor of the House of Commons. Once again it is devising a policy for Quebec and another policy for the rest of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: They wanted to go to the people in an election, to inflame the national unity debate and confront Quebec with one policy for English Canada in English and another policy in French Canada in French and, thereby, divide and rule this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grafftey: The government did not expect to have to defend this matter on the floor of the House of Commons. They wanted to use it for short-term votes in an election to prove that their Prime Minister was still the indispensible saviour of a union which he has done so much to destroy. The chickens have come home to roost. For the first time in ten years, French-speaking Canadians and English-speaking Canadians have caught the government at its own game. It never expected to have to defend this policy on the floor of the House of Commons, and what is it doing? It is proposing closure. It is saying "we don't want to hear any more; we don't want to stand up to the truth." So, the gutless Prime Minister, who did not have the guts to call an election, and the gutless Minister of Finance say, "We don't want to hear the truth, we don't want to hear this spoken about, we're going to bail out now with closure." This is arrogance and stupidity, the like of which I have never seen before, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Indian Affairs—Funding for post-secondary education; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen)—Fisheries—Closing of Swiftsure Bank on west coast; the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt)—Fisheries—U.S. ban on sport fishing in American waters.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOTMENT OF TIME TO CONSIDER BILL C-56 ON SECOND READING

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien:

That, in relation to Bill C-56, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, one sitting day shall be allotted to the further consideration of the second reading stage of the said bill; and

That at fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business in such sitting, any proceeding before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question the necessary in order to dispose of the second reading stage of the bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.15 o'clock p.m., the two hours allotted for the consideration of the motion now before the House pursuant to Standing Order 75C have expired. Accordingly, under the terms of the Standing Order, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings at this time and put every question necessary to the House to dispose of the motion.

[Translation]

The question is on the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Chrétien), which was agreed to on the following division:

NATIONAL RESOURCES AND PUBLIC WORKS

MOTION TO CONVENE STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that earlier this afternoon a question of privilege was raised by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae). His words certainly fell on sympathetic ears on this side of the House. They related to the apparent duplication of work between a standing committee of this House and an agreement tabled yesterday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie).

I would request through you, Mr. Speaker, leave of the House to present the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for Fort William:

That the Standing Committee on National Resources be convened as soon as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is available to attend to examine into and report upon the agreement tabled in this House yesterday, June 5, between Atomic Energy (Canada) Limited and Ontario Hydro and the duplication between the work of the committee and the conclusions apparent in the agreement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of the motion at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Order Paper Questions

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 259, 684, 1,453, 1,606 and 1,624.

[Text]

AIR CANADA

Question No. 259—Mr. Kaplan:

For a current period, what percentage of capacity was carried by Air Canada on passenger flights at (a) peak (b) off-peak hours of the day between (i) Toronto—Ottawa (ii) Ottawa—Toronto (iii) Ottawa—Montreal (iv) Montreal—Ottawa (v) all Air Canada domestic flights (vi) all Air Canada flights?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): (a)(i) 42 per cent; (ii) 45 per cent; (iii) 70 per cent; (iv) 60 per cent; (v) and (vi) Because there are no peak/off periods of the day on many Air Canada routes, such as overseas and southern routes and certain domestic routes, it is not possible to provide this information. (b)(i) 18 per cent; (ii) 11 per cent; (iii) Not applicable; (iv) 10 per cent; (v) and (vi) See (a) above.

CANADIAN COAST GUARD

Question No. 684—Mr. Howie:

1. Since January 1, 1975, on how many occasions did the coast guard transport RCMP officers to investigate illegal smuggling attempts involving ships off the (a) Atlantic (b) Pacific coast?

2. Since January 1, 1975, how many reports of alleged smuggling incidents did the Canadian Coast Guard forward to the RCMP?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. (a) eight. (b) four.

2. None.

NOTE: Canadian Coast Guard vessels and helicopters frequently assist or transport RCMP officers in the course of missions, the purpose and results of which are not disclosed to the Canadian Coast Guard. Therefore, the Canadian Coast Guard may have been involved in transporting RCMP officers on additional investigations into smuggling cases without being aware of this fact.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX

Question No. 1,453—Mr. Balfour:

What amount of capital gains tax was assessed against taxpayers in (a) 1972 (b) 1973 (c) 1974 (d) 1975 (e) 1976?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Under the Income Tax Act, one-half of capital gains realized since 1971 are added to income for tax purposes. Capital gains, therefore, are not taxed under a separate capital gains tax. Because of this, it is difficult to determine precisely how much income tax is attributable to capital gains as compared to other components of income for tax purposes. Using available data, estimates can be made of the approximate amount of income tax attributable to the taxable portion of capital gains. Rough estimates for the years 1972-1975 are as follows:

Federal Income Tax on Capital Gains

($ millions)

	1972	1973	1974	1975
Individuals	40	70	80	100
Corporations	30	60	70	90
Total	70	130	150	190

No estimates are yet available for 1976. It should be noted that capital gains are subject to provincial income tax in addition to the federal income tax. Provincial revenues from this source would be approximately one-third of the federal revenues.

CONCILIATION COMMISSIONERS

Question No. 1,606—Mr. MacKay:

1. Between January 1, 1977 and April 30, 1978, did the Minister of Labour appoint conciliation commissioners or conciliation boards and, if so, how many?

2. For the same period, how many conciliation commissioners or boards of conciliation were requested and not granted by the Minister of Labour?

3. Were any conciliation commissioners or boards of conciliation requested by two parties to a dispute, not appointed by the Minister and, if so, for what reason?

4. Were any conciliation commissioners or boards of conciliation requested by (a) international unions or companies in dispute with other international unions (b) Canadian unions or companies in dispute with other Canadian unions and, if so, in each case, how many?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The decision to appoint conciliation commissioners or conciliation boards to assist parties in resolving collective bargaining disputes is the sole prerogative of the Minister of Labour and, as such, is not dependent upon requests for such action by either of the parties or both of them, for that matter. It is a discretionary move by the minister and is but one of a number of options available to him under the Canada Labour Code to resolve industrial disputes.

Between January 1, 1977 and April 30, 1978, the minister appointed 46 conciliation commissioners. No conciliation boards were appointed during this period.

MR. MAURICE GAUTHIER

Question No. 1,624—Mr. Epp:

1. Was Mr. Maurice Gauthier, La Broquerie, Manitoba appointed to a position in the government and, if so (a) for what period of time (b) what remuneration does he receive for his services?

2. Does Mr. Gauthier have an expense account and, if so, in what amount?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): The answer to this question may be provided by the Commissioner of Official Languages who reports directly to parliament and not through a minister. Question may be made directly to him.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

[Text]

*FORMER MANITOBA GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Question No. 1,700—Mr. McKenzie:

Have any former Manitoba government employees (term, contract or otherwise) been hired in any capacity by any federal department, agency, Crown corporation or board since October 12, 1977 and, if so (a) how many (b) in each case, what is his/her (i) name (ii) job classification (iii) yearly remuneration?

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): The information requested is not readily available. To provide an accurate reply in its entirety would entail a lengthy and costly examination of all personnel files of every department, agency, board, commission and Crown corporation. The costs in manpower and time to undertake such a large amount of work would be exorbitant or prohibitive.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, June 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial tax reductions, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I understand there might be some agreement—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) was the last speaker before the debate was concluded on Friday.

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I believe I have a few minutes of my time left to me. I am one of those across Canada who has been very concerned about the way in which parliament has been abused and the way in which people are losing all respect for this institution. What happened today can only confirm that this institution is a mockery and a farce.

Here is a government imposing closure because it wants to force upon one of the provinces something which that province does not want, something which every member of the Quebec

National Assembly voted against. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) is so incompetent that he has brought in a bill which he cannot get through by normal means. The people of Quebec do not want it, and now the government is forcing parliament to impose upon a province something which that province rejects.

If there were ever a demonstration of the government's incapacity to manage the affairs of the nation, we have it here. We have once again been shown that the Liberals have no capacity to govern this country, no capacity to keep it together. Has there ever been a government so insensitive to what this country is all about, so indifferent to the fact that is is a confederation, so insensitive to the needs and aspirations of people in the various regions? It has been demonstrated unequivocally for everyone that the present government is simply incapable of dealing with the issues which are coming before us.

The budget is really a very peculiar document. The Minister of Finance now says he is doing the same thing in all parts of the country, but he is not. It is not a question of a cheque going to everyone on the tax roll as of December 31, 1977, or something. That is an absolutely ridiculous proposition. It is ridiculous and hardly believable that we are debating a bill the central element of which the government has not told us about. Yet here we are trying to debate that bill. Presumably the government does not know what that element is, yet it brings in closure.

The situation is so preposterous that it makes "Alice in Wonderland" seem like Plato's logic. What we are doing to the parliament of Canada is absolutely incredible. When hon. members go around the country and talk to its citizens, they find over and over again that people are asking what is happening. They wonder what this institution is all about. When we try to explain something like today, people just cannot believe it, and that is understandable.

How can we possibly find ourselves in a situation such as this? The federal Liberals have said that there will not be different proposals for different parts of the country. That is what they thought. They are so incompetent that they do not know that there is a fundamental principle in public financial administration that people with the same taxable income should pay the same amount of tax. We have a government which has abandoned that principle. The Minister of Finance has said over and over again that he is doing the same thing in all parts of the country. What he is doing is not the same in all parts of the country. The federal government brings closure into this House of Commons to put through something which a government and a people do not want. He is violating every fundamental principle of proper taxation. He is not doing anything in terms of basic economics of this country, and that is a disgraceful situation.

However, there is one good side to this fiasco. Those of us who represent the province of Ontario and who have always had difficulty persuading the people in that province to follow the lead of those bright people in British Columbia and to get rid of an incompetent government no longer have that difficulty. We have always had to fight the belief that the Liberals understand Quebec and that they are probably the ones who can keep the country together. After what has happened in this House today, we will never hear that again.

The myth that the Liberal party is the party to keep this country together has been totally expelled, and I am certain that after the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has had the courage to go to the people we will not be talking about a small majority for the Progressive Conservative party. We will see a sweep into power of the Progressive Conservative party because the people of Canada want this country to stay together. They wonder how it can be that the Liberals, who are supposed to be able to keep the country together, since 1968 have created alienation in the west and brought about the election of a separatist government in Quebec. Those who are in authority must take the responsibility. The Liberals have been in authority and they have presided over the decline in this country. Canadians wonder how that could happen because for years we have heard that the Liberal party could keep the country together.

We have seen a case history of lack of understanding by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance regarding what confederation is all about. There is a lack of understanding that we are a confederation and that the provinces are important. The Liberals run roughshod over the wishes of the people of a province which is very important to this nation. They have demonstrated that they cannot govern and, fortunately, after the next election they will be out. Mr. Speaker, may we call it six o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would like to inquire of the hon. member as to whether he has completed his remarks, because by calling it six o'clock he leaves the impression that he wants to continue his speech. He has four minutes to go, so he could complete his speech before six o'clock.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, on an issue such as this we could talk for a very long time.

An hon. Member: There isn't much more to say.

Mr. Gillies: The hon. member is quite correct that there is not much more to say. It is very apparent that the critical issue is which party can govern this country. The critical issue is whether the Liberals know how to administer this country. They do not.

That has been well demonstrated by the Minister of Finance, who is so incompetent that he does not even know how to have consultation. He thinks he has consultation when he does not. His idea of budget making is that at two o'clock in the afternoon he should be waiting for telephone calls from ten ministers of finance across the country. This is the way this budget was made, and that is preposterous. I can understand, however, because there is nothing in the budget of any significance. However, when the minister does not get agreement, he says he does. He does not have it. The minister used up two or three weeks in this colossal blunder. He is now trying to correct it by putting in a proposal that will produce a different tax system for one part of the country.

There is not much more I can say about a situation such as this. This country desperately needed a budget. We have the highest unemployment rate since the depression, an increasing inflation rate and a huge balance of payments deficit. While most countries of the world which have resources are getting richer, this nation is getting poorer. The rate of real growth in our gross national product has slowed down. It will be less than 2 per cent in the first half of this year. Between the fifties and the seventies we had an average rate of growth of 5.5 per cent. The reality is that the rate of growth of our economy has sunk to its lowest level since the 1950s and 1960s.

Anyone who thinks we are unique does not read the record. The rate of real growth in England has gone up. The rate of real growth has gone up in Japan and France. This is another indication from the Liberals opposite that they do not read or study anything. All they want to believe is their own rhetoric. The reality is that we needed a budget to turn this country around as we never needed one before.

The Minister of Finance has created a divisive situation in Quebec. He has ignored the needs of the nation. He is still relying on economic policies which will not work. His budget displays no imagination or initiative. There are no new ideas whatsoever. The nation is crying for imaginative and effective budget measures to make this country move again, but now we find ourselves tied up for a couple of weeks because we have a Minister of Finance who has so little understanding of the province of Quebec that he gets us into this problem.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

• (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, debate on the bills relating to the budget and the income tax bill in particular has been going on now for a long time. Since May 15 the House has been dealing with little else, after having previously had the budget debate, so that the general issues and the issues related to taxation matters now before us have had a great deal of discussion. Yet, in all of that time, a certain number of them have been obscured and dealt with in a limited fashion only because of the attention paid to one particular item about which I will also say a number of things. The item which has tended to dominate the attention has been the attempt to see a reduction in sales taxes across the country, and particular focus has been put on the difficulties which arose in relation to the province of Quebec and their separatist government's attempt to deal rather differently with the issue.

I do not think that before going into that matter one should neglect the many important aspects of the budget which are touched on in the bills now before the House.

First of all, as a person from the west, I think of the further step taken to deal with the rollover of capital gains in the case of families engaged in the farming operation. It carries out the attempt to ease the tax burden in that particular situation and, to show the government's concern that farmers be able to pass their assets without difficulty from one member of the family to another and to recognize the special circumstances which can exist in terms of the amount of capital having to be put into this relatively modest income earning operation. The government has recently announced a similar kind of approach in connection with small business for a similar reason. In both cases the Liberal policies are designed to encourage those operating a family farm or a family business to continue to do so, to prosper, and to see the business or the farm handed over to another member of the family.

In the case of this budget, the extension of this rollover provision to the small corporate farm is simply the completion of a piece of work which was started in a previous budget when the direct transfer of a farm from parent to child was already made a matter of special consideration so that the capital gains tax need not be paid at that time.

Those were not the first items with which the government dealt in an attempt to give special consideration to our farmers and, if I may say so, particularly to western farmers. I refer to western farmers because I am thinking of another measure in another budget in which we provided, immediately upon the need becoming apparent, for the deferral of tax on the delivery of grain where, because of the particular western grain situation, the quota system on which farmers deliver led a farmer to want to deliver his grain even though it might have been against his tax interest to do so, and led the Wheat Board to accept his wheat because of the selling they were doing.

Therefore the Liberal government responded quickly to the needs of western farmers in that regard and created, without any great furore or demand for it in the west since we acted so quickly, tax deferral rights so that the farmer could deliver his grain and postpone his receipt, and therefore also his tax burden, until the following tax year. In effect, he could dispose of the grain but treat it as though he had kept it in storage on his farm so far as his tax position was concerned. It is important to notice the government's reaction in this regard. It was so fast that no great demand for this had been built up. We responded because we saw a need, and we acted effectively.

There are a number of other provisions in the budget as well. We see the provision for improved tax positions for those who invest in research and development. Clearly, encouragement in research and development is important to all of us in this country. It is important for the development of businesses to come and for techniques of operating such which we would like to see developed. It is important in encouraging research and development capabilities, which in turn encourages industries to locate here because the manpower to do other related things is available.

I need not go too far from my home area to find examples of the government acting effectively to encourage research and development in order to produce and develop home industries. I am thinking of the protein oil starch plant which has been created at the University of Saskatoon. It is an operation designed for research into the use of grain and its components. Also it makes it possible for those who have ideas to test them, put them into effect, move them into the developmental stage as real products seeking the market, and then hopefully follow up with the actual location of enterprises producing those products in the region where development is wanted. Accordingly we have designated the area for purposes of special grants when plants are created and set up. In that regard the budget is consistent, and is one further step toward the encouragement of research and development. It is important to all regions of the country, without any exceptions at all.

The budget contains special provisions with regard to the development of heavy oil plants. That measure is of particular interest to the west, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Hopefully that will lead those provinces to follow up, because it creates the necessary provincial tax climate which will encourage the development of plants and the processing of heavy oils in the Lloydminster area and across that broad expanse where a vast volume of this resource exists.

Also the budget contains provisions for improved depreciation for the railways. In terms of this country's development, that is a significant measure. We all know that the railways, particularly our two great national railways, have been carrying grain below the cost of carrying it to them. Part of their losses in passenger services were not paid for, even though they were directly related to maintaining the service.

The government believes that must be changed. Those burdens in relation to grain and passenger services are imposed upon the railways by the national policies of the government and the country. The railways should be compensated for the losses they bear in connection with those operations. We have committed ourselves in principle to doing that. We have gone a long way toward doing that in the case of grain by our commitments to rail line rebuilding, the purchase of hopper cars and the repairing of boxcars.

We have instituted and carried out those commitments to a very extensive degree. In the case of passenger service, we created VIA Rail. We have moved toward complete compensation to the railways for their costs in providing passenger service, and it is right that we should do so. If the railways are forced to carry losses in connection with passenger and grain services or any other aspect of transportation, either they will be short the capital and income to maintain a viable railway system, or they will have that income by obtaining more than they ought to from other goods and services which they perform. Surely that is not in our interests. By moving to clear these burdens from the railways, we are allowing them to have fairer rates and more equitable treatment for the other goods which they carry and the other services which they perform.

By improving accelerated depreciation on several other items in the budget, as was the case in a previous one, we have assisted the railways in having a greater current cash availability to proceed with important railway developments, maintaining equipment, expanding their track facilities, expanding the capacity through the mountains in the case of recent western developments, the Canadian Pacific double-tracking, and improving its grade as a result of the incentives offered to it.

These are important matters. There are other important matters in the budget as well which have been overlooked because of the attention paid to this particular issue which has dominated the thoughts of hon. members of the opposition and of people in the country. I am referring to the problem which was created as a result of the attempt to reduce sales taxes across the country. It is important for us to look back at the beginnings of this issue. It is important to recognize that foremost economic opinion indicated a reduction of sales tax would be most helpful to the encouragement of faster economic growth.

Sales tax at the retail level is within the provincial scheme. At least, we are in the habit of seeing those taxes imposed by provinces across the country. In all but one province sales tax exists. Also the economists told us that additional spending and a lower level of taxation by the provinces could be an encouragement to growth, without the side effect of inflation which occurs when the federal treasury spends and incurs a larger deficit.

That was the background against which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) was working. Many months ago he first proposed to the provinces an arrangement which would reduce sales taxes across Canada, and a certain amount of compensation would be made available to the provinces from federal tax revenues in return. At that time the provinces did not find the offer generous enough. They did not accept it.

In moving toward a budget in the spring of 1978, the Minister of Finance thought he should attempt once again to arrange for a sales tax reduction. He proposed an increase in the compensation he would give to the provinces compared to what he had offered before. He instituted formal consultations with the ministers of finance of all the provinces. It should be noted to the everlasting credit of this Minister of Finance that he sought out all of the provincial ministers of finance in consultation in an attempt to produce a budget which was ideal for this country. He tried to work in a co-ordinated way, riding over and working with the jurisdiction of the provinces and of the federal government together. This Minister of Finance tried that and it should be remembered.

● (2022)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: In the process of doing what sound economics dictated, what the Minister of Finance offered was a certain significant additional expenditure from the federal treasury; and what he asked from the provinces was that they contribute a part as well of the tax reduction which was to go into place. It was, after all, to be a tax reduction in excess of $1 billion in provincial taxes. He asked that they share a part of that reduction while he offered to pay the greater share of it. He had a significant amount of success in that consultation.

Earlier today the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) asked: What does the Minister of Finance know about consultation? How could he work at this late hour with the provincial ministers of finance? How could he fail to have a written and sealed agreement in respect of the tax arrangement he has entered into? Yet even as he consulted, and even as he asked these ministers of finance hypothetical questions about how they would react to various possibilities, the media got word of this and questions of privilege were raised in this House about this manner of consultation being some breach of budgetary practice.

I wish that for once opposition members in this House would be willing to be consistent in deciding whether they approve of consultation in advance of a budget being proposed or disapprove of it, and not attempt on one hand to disapprove of it when they hear a few hours before the budget that there has been some consultation, and then a month later criticize by suggesting that there should have been much more. They cannot have it both ways.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: In the course of that consultation the Minister of Finance obtained significant agreement from the provincial ministers of finance, including, I would like to note again as a westerner, an agreement from the minister of the province of Alberta that that government would understand if it was not included in the sales tax reduction program because it had no sales tax, and that other provisions in the budget might in fact favour that area or region. Several of the items I have mentioned this evening did just that.

In eight of the provinces the Minister of Finance obtained agreement as to what they would do quite specifically in relation to the sales tax. In six of those provinces there was agreement with his initial proposal, and in two others there was required a small modification in terms of a change that British Columbia and Saskatchewan wished; instead of a 3 per cent reduction over six months, they wanted to engage in a 2 per cent reduction over nine months for effectively the same amount of revenue. That was a modest modification of the initial proposal.

In all of this there was some understanding among the ministers of finance that they were trying to work together as a group of eleven, and there would be limits as to how far they could go or expect anybody else to be allowed to go in terms of producing an arrangement that was consistent with the objective of the Minister of Finance. His objective, after all, was to follow the advice of some of the best economic advisers that a sales tax reduction would immediately produce a return to the economy of $1 billion to $1.2 billion, and was one of the best ways of spurring the economy and encouraging employment and development. And the provinces understood this.

However, he had one other minister of finance, the minister for Quebec, who heard him, and heard him again, and decided not to give a firm answer, and even at the last hour said: "I will answer you later". Our colleagues in the official opposition are once again not quite clear about what they are saying in that regard. The howls we would have heard from them if the budget had been postponed would have echoed throughout this land.

The Minister of Finance felt it necessary to accept his responsibility on that point and in fact make in his budget the offer which he had by implication made in his conversations with the ministers of finance across this country. Then when the negotiations with the ministers of finance had been completed and the budget was announced, the separatist minister of finance, whose objective may be economic in some short term manner, but whose real and fundamental objective is to divide this country, came forward with a proposition that was not designed to deal with the situation but to deal with the cause he holds dearest, and that is to separate from this country.

That minister of finance attempted to come just so close to the proposition which had been put before him that he might tempt the Minister of Finance into accepting it—just so close, but just so far away that he did not choose to put it on the table for days and weeks before the budget. He could have put that proposal forward and had it tested by the Minister of Finance and the other ministers of finance and seen it rejected on the basis of the consistency we were seeking to have in this sales tax reduction. The significant thing is he did not put it on the table, he did not have it accepted or rejected, and he did not accept or reject the proposal of the Minister of Finance because he wanted to keep his separatist options open in order to cause as much difficulty in this country as possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Then he came forward with his plausible proposition that, instead of reducing the sales tax across the board by a few percentage points, he would select certain items and reduce it all the way on those. This was plausible because it sounds somewhat close to the original proposition, but a little devious in its separatist aspect because he was choosing those particular products which were slightly more favourable to production in Quebec. That in itself is an objective of this government. This government has always intended, and has gone out of its way, to help regional development in this country, particularly in the Atlantic region and in the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: He came forward with this plausible proposal which, if he had put it forward in that period before the budget, would have been taken by the Minister of Finance to the other provinces, and the minister would have asked how it would meet their views of the arrangement they were trying to make. The arrangement had, however, been made, and when Mr. Parizeau came forward with his proposal our federal Minister of Finance went to several other ministers of finance with whom he had made the arrangement and reached understanding and asked them whether that would be acceptable to them. They said no, it was not consistent with their view of the arrangement which was being struck.

● (2032)

As a result, after hearing from Manitoba, British Columbia and Ontario, the Minister of Finance agreed with them that he could not, in fairness to the other provinces, change the arrangement now. The key is that in this House the Conservative opposition did not see that what was being played was one step of hundreds and hundreds of steps we will see until that separatist government is defeated. If they could not see it from the coolness of opposition—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. minister's time has not expired. It is only the hon. member for Kootenay West rising on a point of order.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I regret that you described me as just being only the member from Kootenay West, but I will accept that particular position for the moment. I wonder if the minister would entertain a question now or after his speech with reference to his comments regarding the government's approach to development incentives for the various provinces.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows, of course, that he needs the consent of the hon. minister to ask a question.

Mr. Lang: If the hon. member had contented himself with simply saying "could I ask a question", I would have said yes; but he has made it clear that he is off on another branch of the subject. I would prefer to take that at the end of my remarks rather than in the middle, but I appreciate his interrupting me so that we could have a bit of a pause at this time.

I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that what we saw was the Conservative party falling into a trap that they will find presented frequently enough in this country. We have in this country a separatist government which has many techniques at its disposal, and among them is one of creating confrontations with the federal government. Over this past period of time we have been fairly free of those sorts of confrontations, notwithstanding their objectives.

In this particular case the Minister of Finance had the choice of either not attempting to have sales tax reduced in the province or of taking the risk of dealing in this fashion with the minister of finance from the province of Quebec. The record, however, on his part was clear and it should have been simple, but the minister of finance in the province of Quebec reduced sales tax in a different way, a way which favoured certain goods in a selective fashion which, as I indicated, had its own separatism about it. It is subtle but it is there.

Secondly, it happened that by reducing those sales taxes to zero, it made it rather difficult to monitor the program to determine how much sales tax was indeed lost by the reduction. In other cases when the tax was reduced from, for example, 5 per cent to 3 per cent or from 7 per cent to 5 per cent, you could tell how much sales tax was collected and basically how much therefore had been forgone. That was the proposal with the other ministers of finance with whom the federal Minister of Finance was dealing and with whom he had to act in good faith.

I ask the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), could the Minister of Finance of Canada, having had an arrangement with the nine ministers of finance, accept the final proposal from the tenth minister of finance, who had not the good grace to put it forward before the budget and who came along afterwards with it? Could our Minister of Finance have gone along with that proposal in the face of disagreement with the other ministers of finance? Clearly, he could not. Yet the Conservative opposition began immediately to pursue their route of assistance and aid to the separatist cause—whether it be knowing or unknowing, I know not. I know they have little enough advice about the subject of mentality in the province of Quebec because they have so little strength there.

However, even they were not sure how they were going to proceed. I notice the first reference to the subject in the House was when the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), in putting a proposal under Standing Order 43 before the House, cited all the facts about what had happened and what had gone on. Presumably, in view of their present position, he should have ended by demanding that the Minister of Finance immediately pay the money to the separatist finance minister, but having put the whole proposition before the House, do you know, Mr. Speaker, how he ended his motion? He ended his motion in this decisive way, by saying that the Minister of Finance be required to reply as soon as possible to the minister of finance of Quebec. He did not say how he should reply, he said he should reply.

Then he began a series of questions, and if you look at Hansard at page 4453 you will find that first of all he asked this sort of question: "Has he responded, will he respond?" When it became clear that the Minister of Finance had responded in a negative manner, finally the Conservatives got drawn into saying that they really thought he should have responded positively; that he should simply have done what the other ministers of finance in this country said would not have been consistent with the arrangement made; that he should have bowed and given the money over.

The Minister of Finance had some difficult choices to make. He could have simply stood his ground and said that we made an offer which has not been taken up by the province of Quebec, or that it has only been taken up to the extent of a 2 per cent reduction on a certain number of goods, and since in those goods their cut was the same we will therefore pay them $40 million or $45 million.

He did that, but he also felt that the separatist government ought not to have the victory of depriving the people of Quebec of the benefit which was available to them if they had gone about their sales tax cut in a different manner. The subtlety of what we are dealing with when we are dealing with separatists in this cause is that they will try in every way to disrupt this country. They will try to avoid co-operation with the federal government, as they did in this case by not making their position clear to the minister before the budget; and then they will make an offer or produce a situation where the minister looks as though he is in a difficult position if he does not comply, as though he is depriving the people of the province of Quebec of certain money if he does not act.

The federal Minister of Finance decided that he would find a way to return that money to the people of Quebec. That is what he has offered to do, and he, in his flexibility, has indeed offered to do it in one of several ways. Perhaps one of those ways will yet be acceptable even to the separatist minister, in the absence of the collapse which the Parti Québécois wanted from this federal Minister of Finance. In his objectives, Mr. Parizeau was well served by the members opposite, who care little about the fact that in this case and in occasion after occasion after occasion a separatist government will attempt to make trouble in Canada and create difficult situations.

In a responsible House, one should see an opposition seeking to form a bipartisan policy in the face of this kind of separatist attack. It is as important to deal with the separatists in Canada as it is to deal with the enemy in war in the international scene.

Mr. Brisco: Tell us about Claude Ryan.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. Minister of Transport has the floor.

• (2042)

Mr. Lang: What we have in this House—

An hon. Member: —is an incompetent government.

An hon. Member: Totally incompetent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: —is a Conservative opposition which does not care to consider the impact on this country's unity and which does not care indeed if its actions, time and time again, drive wedges between people in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: The hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) shrieks—

Mr. Nowlan: I hope to speak after you.

Mr. Lang: —but let me tell him about colleagues of his having urged in this House on the one hand that the Minister of Finance immediately pay the money to the government of Quebec, when they would have gone across certain areas of this country saying to the people in the rest of Canada—in Saskatchewan where I live and in neighbouring provinces—"There is the government once again giving this special form of treatment to Quebec". They would have said that once again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Time and time again, Mr. Speaker, the tragedy of the action of the Conservative party is that, whatever its public and apparent stand is here in this House, back on the hustings across this country they seize upon every—

An hon. Member: Grit failure.

Mr. Lang: —opportunity—

An hon. Member: Like price and incomes controls.

Mr. Lang: —to encourage feelings of hate and antipathy in this country.

I am going to invite the hon. member for Joliette to go on a trip with me—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: —and to watch what some Conservative friends of his have been saying in urging in this country a lack of patience for Francophones, people who seize upon an easy and ancient prejudice. It is there, Mr. Speaker. It is there to be picked up in our hands and grappled with. And grapple with it we must if this country is to stay together. But instead of grappling with it, the Conservatives go into Anglophone Canada and feed it with their lies and deceptions and their urgings to hate—

An hon. Member: Don't you wish you believed that?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I realize the minister is trying to make a point, even though ever so inadequately.

An hon. Member: He is desperate.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: But I think he would want to reconsider his reference to lies, because that certainly is unparliamentary.

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. speaker, I would not. Unfortunately that has been the course of action of the Conservative party in the west, which I know so well, where they have—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I have listened to the point of order raised by the hon. member—

An hon. Member: A point of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member first rose on a point of order.

Mr. Mazankowski: With the greatest respect and deference to the minister, he did indicate and did suggest that western members of parliament go out and perpetuate lies—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: —about Francophones in this country. Those Conservative members are western members of parliament. The implication was directly toward Conservative members, Mr. Speaker. I am a western Conservative member. If the minister can categorically state in this House where I have deliberately lied or misled, either directly or indirectly, I would challenge him to make that statement right here and now.

Mr. Paproski: And put his seat on the line.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: I ask that the minister do the courteous thing and withdraw that remark.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I did hear the remarks of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) but I do not think I heard him say the hon. members of the Conservative party; I believe he said the Conservative party. However, if the Minister of Transport did say the hon. members of the Conservative party, then that was certainly unparliamentary.

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, incidentally I have in mind some kinds of promotion. I understand recently the Conservative party has been promoting a book by a certain hotliner in British Columbia which talks about a $1 billion bribe to Quebec under the DREE program. If that, Mr. Speaker, is not lies and deception, I do not know what is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You are sick.

An hon. Member: You are fighting for your life.

Mr. Lang: This is a very serious matter—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister but his allotted time has expired.

An hon. Member: He is sick and expired.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I understand the hon. member for Kootenay West would like to ask a question of the hon. minister, but as his time has expired we would need unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleagues for giving me unanimous consent. The minister in his speech made reference to the fact that his government's policy has been one of lending assistance in considerable measure in the form of DREE funding for those areas that need regional incentives. That was the minister's statement, or words to that effect.

An hon. Member: Who cares?

Mr. Brisco: If that is government policy, would the minister explain why it is that a small segment of the Department of External Affairs provides $1.4 billion for CIDA, whereas the budget for his much-touted DREE is $514 million?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that the hon. member would compare those two budgets, that of CIDA and that of DREE. I presume the implication of the question is that this government is spending too much on one or the other, or both. Certainly one can find members opposite who will attack the spending by DREE when it concerns the province of Quebec. I have seen them isolate Quebec when it is clear from the evidence that, because their need is greater, the Atlantic provinces get more. But they will isolate the province of Quebec in attacking DREE spending. That is an example of what I was talking about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Lang: Surely now in that question we have the excitation of another prejudice against another very important policy of this country, and that is to help those areas of the world which are less fortunate. If I believe, as a person from an area which now happens to be becoming a have province rather than a have not, in the principle of helping now and in the future of those regions of the country which are poor and which need the help, so will I now and in the future believe in working for those parts of the world. Because their poverty is so fantastic that they do not compare with the poor of the poorest region in this country. If in that question the hon. member if for a moment expressing as Conservative policy that our foreign aid is too great, then I hope all others on his side of the House, as they jump up so fast in other cases, will in this case too jump up and disown the suggestion that we give too much in foreign aid. It is a despicable suggestion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Prince George-Peace River on a point of order.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, my point is one of privilege rather than of order. I cannot believe that we would, as lightly as we have, overlook the minister's comment as he was concluding his speech. He clearly said, and he left the impression, that members of the Conservative caucus were going throughout this country, and particularly western Canada, spreading lies about the performance of this government. He made an innuendo about a publication that appeared recently in western Canada which is bought and distributed by the Conservative party in western Canada. Does the minister have the courage to name the publication and its author so that we can judge as to what connection the Conservative party or any other party has with this particular author? We can then look at the publication to see what kind of lies may or may not have been spread in it.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard).]

• (2052)

In the party of which I am a member, honesty has always been the best policy. It will be the best policy in spite of the assiduous attempts by those across the aisle to prove differently. I want the minister to withdraw the reference about members on this side lying to people in western Canada. I would also like him to have the courage to identify the publication and the author about which he has spread this innuendo.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I hope I will have the opportunity to check the record. This is rather interesting. It is my impression that I talked about the lies and deception of Conservatives without necessarily identifying members of parliament. I did not go out of my way to exclude them, and sensitivities opposite may lead me to believe there is something there.

As far as the publication is concerned, the record will show, interestingly enough, that I said they encouraged distribution of it. The hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) said something about the Conservative party buying and distributing a publication. Is that what they are doing? I did not know that for a fact and I am interested to hear that. The fact is the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) recently quoted extensively from that publication, so the hon. member can get the reference to it that I am making.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I first raised the question of privilege with regard to the statements made by the Minister of Transport in this House. According to my recollection, and I want to reserve my right until I look at the transcript of the proceedings, the minister referred to Conservatives lying. Certainly there was reference in the context of the official opposition. On the basis of precedents by Your Honour of very recent date, that is definitely and clearly unparliamentary language.

I reserve my right to raise this matter again. I will not stand here and have him, of all people, accuse people on this side of the House of lying. It is clearly unparliamentary. It is one thing to make some sort of general reference, but in the context in which the minister was speaking it was clearly a reference to people on this side of the House.

Aside from everything else, common decency should possess the minister to stand up and withdraw unequivocally any reference to anybody on this side of the House lying. My recollection is clear in that regard. If he would do the proper thing, the minister would stand in his place and withdraw any allegation of lying by any member on this side of the House.

Mr. Lang: In terms of making direct references, Mr. Speaker, it would have been better if the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) had chosen not to say "the Minister of Transport, of all people". What kind of reference was that nice phrase meant to have? I have in the past respected the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

I did refer to the lies and deception with which the Conservative party practices its spread of insidious incitement of dislike across this country. I stand by that. It is part of their program in terms of tactics that any one of them may want to associate with or may very well dissociate themselves from.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With regard to the last intervention of the minister, I do not think he is helping the Chair in clarifying his point of view as far as accusations are concerned. I must bring to the attention of hon. members that this House is a place where debate is engaged in. It is not always possible to identify points of order or remarks that could be unparliamentary on one occasion and acceptable on another.

At this time I can only refer hon. members to citations at my disposal. They must make their own personal judgment as to what action they might wish to take on a further occasion. I do not want to prevent them from looking at the transcript of the debate before deciding to raise the matter at a later date. They should be left with that possibility. At the same time, I wish to bring to their attention that one of our most renowned authors, Erskine May, in his nineteenth edition of parliamentary practice states at page 430, and I quote:

> Abusive and insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder. Certain expressions which have caused the Chair to intervene from time to time are listed as an Appendix to this Chapter.
> Expressions which are unparliamentary when applied to individuals are not always so considered when applied to a whole party.

This might open the door to abuse. I am not going to judge whether it does in this case. I was not in the chair when the remarks were expressed.

With regard to what the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and other members might have expressed, it is my first impression that the minister has been passing judgment on party policies or members who are identified as a party. In that way, I do not at this time see that there can be any question of privilege or point of order.

If the hon. member thinks otherwise, it will be his decision as to whether the remark of the minister goes beyond the citation that I have quoted. I could give other citations from Beauchesne's where the Chair is requested to intervene at the earliest opportunity to prevent abusive language, passing judgment, or reflecting on hon. members. However, I will not take the time of the House at this time. I will leave it to hon. members' own judgement and decision at the next sitting of the House.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I appreciate Your Honour's trying to de-escalate a situation which was starting to escalate. The difficulty is, as Your Honour said, that you were not in the chair when some of this unfortunate rhetoric came from the lips of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). I heard all of his speech, and I heard some of the gratuitous references he made at the close of his speech.

I am somewhat surprised at the sort of ruling tentatively made. If I understand it correctly, the minister can smear a party for spreading as party policy lies and deception, but he cannot do that in terms of members of the House of Commons. As I heard the minister, he said he was deadly serious in his allegation of spreading lies and deception as party policy. However, before Your Honour came to the chair, the Minister of Transport said definitely that the western Conservative party were spreading lies and deception. I can speak somewhat objectively on this because I am not a member, whatever that means, of the western Conservative party. Whether he is trying to get over the generic word of party followers, which none of us can control, I do not know.

I do not believe the minister would be so naïve as to think that sometimes in the province of Quebec things are not said which the minister himself would not support in the heat of debate and/or when the battle lines are drawn in terms of an election. But the minister, in the calmness and coolness of the House of Commons tonight—not on the hustings during election time—said distinctly those words. I am not sure about my deputy House leader, but I, for one, would like to reserve the right to raise a very definitive question of privilege if the blues support three different references I heard the minister make specifically to members of the western Conservative party spreading lies and deception, let alone as party policy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) would agree with me, I am sure, that I have already allowed him and any other members who think they have been offended to raise the matter at the next sitting of the House. There is no restriction as far as that goes. I did give a chance to hon. members to start from a reference I have given them, but they can look up any other reference or interpretations of the rules and they can question the point of view or the remarks of the minister if they wish.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I trust that my colleagues will not be too harsh on the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) for his defamatory and derogatory remarks. One reason Canada is so divided today is because of attacks by this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Towers: "Divide and rule" has been the approach taken by these people and, now that we are hearing the cries of an individual whose empire is crumbling around him, I do not think we should be too hard on him. We should recognize we only have to tolerate him until the end of this session.

He said he would like to take the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) for a ride. Well, if the hon. member for Joliette goes for a ride with the Minister of Transport he had better make sure he has enough money to get back to Ottawa or he will find himself like a certain nanny—he will only get halfway home.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Towers: I hope I am clear in what I am saying to the minister. One of his first remarks was to the effect that he was not clear about what we were saying.

One of the reasons I am here tonight is to make it clear that we who live in Alberta expect to be treated like residents of any other province but, no matter how you cut the cake, there is no way the government can say that Albertans have been so treated. The hon. gentleman told us that the minister of finance from Alberta did not say anything when the original proposal was made, rightly so. The minute the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) changed the rules of the game, Alberta wanted to be considered. It is my contention that Alberta has the right to be considered and, until a better argument is produced, we will retain that view in the province.

I wish the Minister of Transport would do something well. He is trying to do so many things that he is not doing anything right. If he wants to be minister in charge of the Wheat Board, that is fine and dandy, but let him do his job well. If he wants to be Minister of Transport, that is fine and dandy too, but let him do the job well. Tonight he is here trying to save the skins of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) in Alberta and the Minister of Finance, and there is no way he can do that job well. He is not going to save the reputation of either of those ministers.

We have to recognize that Canada is a family and that every member of the family has a right to be considered. Even though, perhaps, Dame Fortune has smiled upon us in Alberta, we want to be considered as a member of the family and as part of the Dominion of Canada. The insolence and the arrogance of the government will certainly not encourage Canadians to stay together. We have to realize that the federal government is responsible for about 40 per cent of all government spending and collects some 49 per cent of all taxes. We in Alberta contribute to that tax revenue. We recognize that this is part of the process which makes the constitution work. When we in Alberta expressed willingness to stand aside while the federal government tried to implement a six months' reduction in sales taxes, it was because we thought that at the expiration of the six-month period there would be a return to the same arrangement as before. We were willing to stand aside while this was happening, although we realized what the Minister of Finance was up to: he thought there would be a federal election and the extra spending which might take place in that period would make the economy buoyant enough to increase the probability of the Liberals being elected again—perish the thought.

Canada has never been so divided as now. The economy is in worse shape than ever. This is the first time we have been obliged to resort to borrowing to pay our interest charges. If we carry on with a $10 billion deficit year after year, bankruptcy is inevitable. The minister planned this tax reduction for a period of just six months. What was going to happen after the six months were up? Canadians are clever people. They will simply step up their spending and do their buying in the six months but, after that period is over business and industry will experience harder times than before. There was only one reason in the mind of the government for doing things that way: it was to try to get beyond the election. If the Gallup poll had not turned out as it did, there is no doubt we would now be in the middle of an election campaign.

The Minister of Finance has entered into a new arrangement whereby the provinces are being involved in the preparation of the federal budget. I think this is a dangerous course, however good the idea may be. If sales taxes can be cut, fine and dandy. But ministers on the opposite side had better not be in a hurry when contemplating such a course. They should not rely upon telephone conversations on the afternoon of the day on which the budget is to be presented.

I think it is dangerous for any federal government to become involved in provincial taxation. It is not a requirement of confederation and there are other means by which the federal government can intervene in the taxation field.

One of the best ways of stimulating the economy would be to reduce the building tax. If ministers opposite want to speed up development in this country, let them cut out the building tax which has nothing to do with the provinces. Why do they not cut out the manufacturing tax if they want the economy to become more buoyant? Why do they not remove the 10 cents excise tax on gasoline? This is a tax I thought should never have been imposed. We have been asking successive ministers of finance to drop that tax because it is recognized that it costs 1 per cent to collect it in the first place. Retailers and users, whether they be truck drivers or farmers, have to pay an extra cost. It costs the government 1 per cent for collection, so it is nonsensical for the government to be involved in this kind of taxation. I do not understand it. It just does not make sense.

The Minister of Finance says the reason Alberta was left out of this tax scheme was that it receives benefits other provinces do not. I challenge that statement because I believe the benefits which accrue to Alberta in the form of incentives for the oil industry also accrue to all Canadians. All Canadians will have cheaper oil as a result. The figure runs into the billions of dollars. My friend and colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), said the other day that over $10 billion has accrued to the economy of Canada because we have enjoyed oil at prices lower than the world price. If this is not a significant contribution from one province, I do not know what is.

The minister says that is to our benefit so we get nothing else, but I do not think he is being fair or just. He certainly is causing a great deal of ill will in Alberta. We are getting certain benefits, but let me impress upon the minister that these are costly. People in Alberta have a higher cost of living as a result of developments which are taking place there.

Let us consider housing. I have figures which show that in the years 1973 to 1977 in British Columbia the cost of housing went up 78 per cent; in the province of Quebec it went up 56 per cent; in Ontario 49 per cent; in Manitoba 100 per cent; in Saskatchewan 122 per cent, and in Alberta it went up 125 per cent. It is significant that Alberta has the highest cost housing in the Dominion of Canada. That means individuals who are renting accommodation pay increased rents. Those who are living on old age security in Alberta are getting very little more than their counterparts in other provinces. Granted, Alberta is contributing a small amount, just a few dollars, toward the welfare of those who are caught in that. So it should, because of the increased cost of housing which puts a tremendous burden on these people.

Calgary has the second highest cost housing in Canada. In 1977 the average house cost $66,428. In Oakville, Ontario—which had the highest cost housing—the average house cost $72,641. In Montreal the cost was $39,192, and in Moncton the cost was $44,160. The cost of housing in Calgary over a four-year period went up 80 per cent. In Oakville it went up 20 per cent, in Montreal 14 per cent and in Moncton 19 per cent. People in Alberta are suffering because of the high cost of housing. People are moving into the province. They are welcome. We love to have them. They are good people, and they contribute to our economy, but they are putting a strain on our over-all economy.

Alberta is also experiencing an increase in criminal activity. Criminal activity seems to go where the action is. This is causing increased costs for policing and other services. Just recently I learned there is concern among the peace officers of Alberta because so-called junkies from other provinces are going there. This causes social problems because when these people come to Alberta they do not have the means to sustain themselves, and we have to care for them. Let us realize that the province of Alberta is having problems as a result of developments there.

People in Alberta are entitled to participate in this tax scheme just as much as the Minister of Finance. An Alberta couple with two children, with only one person in the family working, has to pay $100 in income tax if the family income is $7,771. If that couple has to put out $250 or $300 for an apartment or $400 to $500 for a house, what else do they have on which to live? I am sure these people would like to have their $100 income tax rebated to them. I think people in Alberta have just as much right to that rebate as the Minister of Finance or some Senators who will be getting that benefit. I just do not see that this is fair.

Further, we in Alberta have other costs to pay; for instance, it costs $400 to move an automobile out there. This is all part of our cost of living, on the understanding that we want to carry on as we are and as other Canadians can. I think we are entitled to that. These are things which the Minister of Finance has completely overlooked, and this is why there is unrest in the province of Alberta. There is unrest when Albertans hear other Canadians are going to get an income tax rebate but they are not.

Let me deal for a moment with some of the other benefits which are in this bill, and we recognize that there are some. We on this side have been working for a long time to get a roll-over benefit on capital gains tax for family farms. We started with the Hon. John Turner. Hon. members will remember when he first brought in his bill the roll-over was only to be at the time of the probate of a will. We said then that was not good enough because a 60-year old might have or operate a farm while his parents are still living and in their eighties. There was no way to proceed until the passing of the parents. We said it had to be during the course of the lives of the two individuals concerned. The minister said that that was fine and brought in an amendment so that this roll-over could transpire at any time during the lives of the two individuals.

We asked him about the incorporated farm, and he asked us to wait. The minister said we should not push too hard because that would be brought in later. The succeeding minister of finance would have no part of that.

Then the House will remember the present Minister of Finance brought in a mini budget. We were after him as well. We were asking him about this roll-over, and we suggested it could be accomplished with a dollar figure. He asked what figure we had in mind, and we suggested possibly about $5 million. That shook him up. He did not think it could be done. However, we are pleased that he has now seen fit to allow an incorporated family farm to be rolled over so there can be a deferral on the capital gains tax.

Once again we find the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board has missed the point entirely. He says this problem is now solved. Let me impress upon him that it is not. We are not finished yet because there is a discrepancy in this roll-over provision which has to be cleared up during this session of parliament if we are to satisfy the farmers who are caught up in this. The farmers who are caught up are those who have incorporated their operation but have kept their land outside of the corporation, so they are not the sole operator of that property because they and their family are part of the corporation. There is no provision in the bill to roll-over that piece of land to the succeeding generation. That is fine and dandy if the property was turned over at the time of the incorporation. But if it was not, they are caught. This is one of the anomalies in this legislation which should be corrected. While the Minister of Transport may believe it is completed, it is not in fact and that portion of it should be cleared up.

One of the other areas of concern in Alberta is that our cost of living has gone up, as it has in the rest of Canada. Perhaps Alberta's cost of living has gone up a little more than in the rest of Canada because of the fact that we have to pay freight costs on all products going out there, such as clothing. The increased tariffs that are being imposed in eastern Canada are reflected in western Canada and are of little benefit to the people out there and it should be considered by the government that we in Alberta have a beef in that respect.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has stated time and time again he wanted a voice from western Canada, and especially from Alberta, in his cabinet. He has that voice now but he has muzzled it, as he has previous ministers, therefore, Albertans feels that the Prime Minister has betrayed them. He has made a sacrificial lamb out of the Minister of Transport and, if anybody is to stand up and voice the disapproval of Alberta, who would be in a better position than the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce? Instead of that, the minister covers up the tracks behind the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, and we do not accept that.

This is the most discriminatory treatment that has ever been handed to Alberta since it became a province, the worst treatment we have had in 73 years. Not only do we feel we are being neglected financially, but we believe we are neglected from the human point of view also. As I said earlier, we want to be considered. We want to be part of the family, and if we are to be part of the family, then the programs which are put in place should make room for the residents of Alberta. If not, we must believe that the Prime Minister, who purports to care for and protect culture, cares much less for people, especially if they happen to be Albertans.

I think the Minister of Finance has been remiss in not giving greater consideration to the pleas from this side of the House on behalf of the province of Alberta. In the Globe and Mail of this day we find the following statement:

> Finance minister Jacques Parizeau said yesterday he will present another proposal later this week aimed at solving the continuing dispute over sales tax cuts between his government and Ottawa . . .
> Mr. Parizeau said his offer, to be considered first by the Quebec cabinet tomorrow, will deal "exclusively with transfer methods" for the $226 million involved in the dispute . . .
> Federal finance minister Jean Chrétien made the motion in the Commons and said he would press ahead with the bill until he gets another proposal from Quebec.

The reference here is to the closure motion imposed today. He is certainly leaving Alberta out in the cold as he deals with Mr. Parizeau. The article goes on to state:

> Mr. Parizeau said the federal government has already come some distance from its earlier positions.
> Mr. Parizeau said the only question now is the method of payment.

I should like to impress upon you, Mr. Speaker, that we too would like to have some payment in the province of Alberta because the incentives and the money that have been put into the oil projects in Alberta will bring return to the Government of Canada and to the province of Ontario. Let me impress upon you, Mr. Speaker, that not a dollar is going out of the federal treasury to the province of Alberta as a result of this budget. Some business incentives are contained which will benefit all of Canada, not just the Albertans. Let me quote the statement that was made by the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), as reported at page 5977 of Hansard. He said:

> If we look at the Syncrude project, which is a projection sized, scale sized plant in which both the federal and provincial governments of Alberta and Ontario invested some $600 million, we see a very good return to the governments because the three governments involved hold an equity of some 37 per cent in that plant, and yet some 77 per cent of the revenues from the production scale plant will be accruing to these governments. The revenues over the next 25 years are estimated to be some $25 billion. The federal government will collect some $3.5 billion in taxes towards the end of the production life of that plant.

This proves beyond reasonable doubt that the federal government is going to enjoy benefits from development in Alberta. I hope the government will mend the error of its ways when dealing with Mr. Parizeau and that tomorrow the Minister of Finance will telephone the Alberta minister of finance to ask him what he considers will be a fair share for that province in this budget proposal which is being presented to the House of Commons and to the Canadian people.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to express the views of at least one Albertan.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat dismayed a little while ago when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) spoke. He started out in a very professorial manner in addressing himself to Bill C-56 and made some rather interesting remarks about what the government has done in his own part of Canada as well as in the prairie provinces. Then he made mention of the fact that Bill C-56 will be of great help to various groups on the prairies.

But then, without any provocation, so far as I can recall—this was only about an hour ago—he took off in a very emotional way and began to play what I call pretty dirty politics. I use that term advisedly and I mean to stay within the rules of our House. The minister started making certain statements to the effect that one of the opposition parties was responsible for spreading certain misconceptions in western Canada with respect to a province in eastern or central Canada. I am surprised to hear a cabinet minister of the intellectual calibre of the Minister of Transport allow himself to become so entangled in that kind of verbal crossfire which does nothing but bring disrepute to us, not only as members of parliament but as Canadian citizens. We are going through a very, very difficult time in our history. We do not need statements which excite, get us up tight and make us say things that normally we would not say.

At the outset I should like to say that no party in the House has a premium as far as popularity is concerned in western Canada, central Canada, Quebec or the Atlantic provinces. As members of parliament, we are required to talk about our constituencies as well as the country as a whole. We should do what we can to hold Canada together and not divide it. We must not use methods or means which will incite emotions in this chamber and create division instead of attempting to narrow the gap between the various regional, ethnic and racial groups within the country.

I do not want to use up all my time on that issue, but I was, as I say, somewhat dismayed by the remarks of the Minister of Transport. I will not say they were unwarranted in a political sense because I am not an expert on prairie federal politics. I got the impression that the minister was speaking extremely defensively. He created the impression that both he and his party were in trouble in western Canada. Otherwise, I do not know why we witnessed a burst of emotionalism on his part, especially since he was a former minister of justice and dean of a law school. This is the last thing one would expect from a person with such a background. Perhaps someone like myself, a small town school teacher, could be excused for becoming very emotional over an issue similar to that.

Dealing with Bill C-56, there is one matter I should like to zero in on this evening. I do not want to spend a lot of time because there are a number of other speakers who want to address themselves to this important piece of legislation both this evening and perhaps tomorrow.

In order to provide a brief background to the major problems in the economy, on this date we are still faced with a major unemployment problem. June 6 is a memorable date in Canadian history. On June 6, 1944 our veterans stormed the beaches of Normandy. At the present time approximately one million people are registered as unemployed, and another 500,000 have given up. Inflation is still increasing in very important sectors of the economy. There have been various federal job creation programs over the last several years which have flopped. The figures indicate this. New jobs have not been created. Certain private sectors have done their best in the area of job creation. Members of this House have not accomplished in the last few years what we should have.

As a result of the April budget, one program was introduced. I am referring to the $100 million employment tax credit program. Obviously no one in the Department of Finance, including the minister himself, took a look at the British experiment which occurred three years ago. At that time a tax credit program to employers did not work. It has never worked anywhere in the western democratic world, not at a time when there is falling demand. We have been experiencing that for the last two or three years. Even business and labour groups have indicated that the program is a flop.

For example, the program was supposed to create 50,000 new jobs in the first year. It was implemented approximately three months ago. Thus, I am talking in terms of the first quarter of this program. Approximately 25,000 of those new jobs were to be created in the province of Ontario. In the first three months of this program, approximately 1,900 jobs have been created in Quebec which has an 11.8 per cent unemployment rate.

Perhaps that is why the minister was somewhat upset about possible falling fortunes in Quebec at the present time, or at least the ongoing battle between the Quebec minister of finance and the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) as to who will receive the votes and who will put money in whose pocket in order to buy votes. That is not what the minister said, but certainly that is how I interpret his remarks. If money can be tucked in a person's pocket, one can be assured that that person will be sympathetic to one's party at election time. Of course, we did not have an election, and the entire matter has become somewhat topsy-turvy.

The employment tax credit program is not a bad idea, but employers will not create new jobs within their plants or rehire those who have been laid off unless they are in receipt of orders. I am referring to purchases and a demand for the goods they produce. I do not care if they are subsidized to the tune of $5 an hour, employers will not create new jobs or rehire unless there is a demand for their products. It has not worked before and it is not working now. Approximately 1,900 jobs have been created in Quebec, with its 11.8 per cent unemployment rate; 262 jobs have been created in Ontario; and a smattering of jobs have been created across the country. Demand induces an employer to rehire or create new jobs. One cannot expect to have demand in Canada with its sluggish economy, unless people have enough money to spend on basic necessities.

For approximately a year now, the New Democratic Party has stated that tax cuts for the benefit of middle and low income earners is the only way in the foreseeable future to pump money into our economy, stimulate demand and put people to work producing necessary goods and services.

I should like to make another point in respect of what happened this afternoon in the House in the form of the motion for closure at the second reading stage of Bill C-56. We are dealing with a bill that is creating even greater dissension and animosity between the Liberal government here in Ottawa and the Québécois separatist government in the province of Quebec. In spite of that and the importance of this matter, this government is closing down the debate on second reading, preventing members on both sides of the House from continuing to make some input to this matter. I think it is a shame that we are to be muzzled tomorrow at 5:45 p.m. by a forced vote.

The impression I have been getting is that Liberal members feel they belong to the only party that has any influence in the province of Quebec. Unfortunately, some bigots in my riding are now suggesting that the Liberal party is the French party in Canada. I wonder how many men and women in the Liberal party on the other side of this House realize what is happening in my part of the country. I am just talking about the southwestern part of Ontario and the city of Toronto, where the anti-French feeling is building to the point that things are going to boil over unless the government does something very quickly about Ottawa-Quebec relations.

I am not championing separatism or patting René Lévesque and Jacques Parizeau on the back, saying they are doing a good job. I am simply suggesting that they are in power in Québec. We on this side of the House are not in favour of separatism, yet many members of the federal Liberal party in this House, whenever they rise to speak, damn us on this side of the House for being anti-Quebec and anti-French.

We have had the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in office for over ten years. He is a Francophone. We have had a party in power for ten years with about 60 seats from the province of Quebec. I forget the exact number but it is in that neighbourhood. Just consider the mess we have fallen into in respect of Ottawa and Quebec city relations during this time when we have had a Prime Minister who should have known what was happening in that province in the last ten years, and throughout the 1960's. Yet we are worse off today in so far as separatism and the dismemberment of this country is concerned than we were when the Prime Minister first came to office in 1968.

Unless the Liberal government decides very shortly that there is to be an election in the fall, and unless that party decides to select a new leader next winter to be followed by an election in the spring, this country will surely fall apart. This government must decide now to stop accusing us on this side of the House of trying to split the country, and begin addressing itself openly and frankly to the problems that exist in Quebec. Unless the government does that quickly and attempts to put an end to the bitterness that has grown among French and English speaking Canadians, this country will surely split apart.

What can this party with 15 members here do to prevent that? What can the official opposition do? The responsibility at this point clearly lies with that party on the other side of the House. Yet today we witnessed the spectacle of a minister of this Liberal government, a former dean of law and a former minister of justice, the Minister of Transport, who is minister responsible for the Wheat Board, standing in his place trying to get a rise from members on this side, and trying to make hon. members here feel guilty in a political sense for not doing our jobs in attempting to understand the people of Quebec and their feelings about Bill C-56. I am not trying to impute motives, but that is how I saw it.

This bill is badly designed and is in a state of transition at this very time when we are debating it. We do not know what is in the bill at the present time. We do not know what phone calls are being made tonight to Quebec city and to other provincial capitals. We do not know what is going on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Is the minister seeking the floor in a point of order?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not sure whether the hon. member was here when I spoke, but I do want to point out to him that I was rather careful to distinguish between the Conservative party and the NDP in my remarks, and I was in no way—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Blackburn: Again, I am amazed, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes we transgress in this House when we confuse points of order with simple argumentative statements, but—

[Mr. Blackburn.]

An hon. Member: You can't blame him; he was a lousy dean of law too.

Mr. Blackburn: When the minister is defeated I hope no law school in this country will hire him. I think his knowledge of parliamentary procedure is somewhat lacking, and for someone like myself to have to say that—

An hon. Member: That is a cheap shot.

Mr. Blackburn: Is it a cheap shot? He is the one who precipitated it. I was simply reacting to his statement.

I do not intend to continue speaking much longer as there are others who wish to speak this evening on this bill. I am not happy with the bill. It will not create jobs and it has placed us in a constitutional wrangle, the last thing we need at this time. I am not opposed to the principle of a reduced sales tax approach to stimulate the economy. What I am opposed to is the fact that, as a result of this bill, we are further dividing the country.

I do not place all the blame at the feet of the Minister of Finance, but good heavens, he should have anticipated some of the reactions of the members of the separatist government in Quebec. There should have been more consultation instead of just phone calls to the ministers of finance of the various provinces to obtain agreement in respect of this new mechanism. There should have been anticipation of problems with the province of Quebec. If the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are unable to deal with the province of Quebec on fiscal matters, what will they do in the next election campaign? Will they make the situation even more emotional and split the country wider? Will they go into Quebec and say that they are the only ones who can keep Quebec in confederation? Will they then go to English speaking Canada and tell the people that without them Quebec will separate? Is this any way to administer the country?

Another impression I gained today when listening to the remarks of the Minister of Transport was that hon. members of the Liberal party are desperately attempting to emotionalize this controversy in the country between Quebec Francophones and the Anglophones in other parts of the country. I got the impression that they were trying to use this situation as an emotional smoke screen behind which to hide the other issues that are of greater importance, specifically the issues contained in Bill C-56. This is a very important tax bill, but in my opinion it will not stimulate the economy or create more jobs.

I thank you for the opportunity of speaking briefly this evening, Mr. Speaker, and I will now surrender the floor to the next speaker.

● (2152)

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take the floor before the end of this debate which has lasted too long already, to say where I stand in the dispute between Quebec and Ottawa concerning the sales tax and to place all that issue in the proper perspective.

Mr. Speaker, I probably will not have enough time to comment on all the excellent measures contained in the last budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), but I wish to give him my full support for that set of measures designed to spur a vigorous recovery of the Canadian economy in the next few months.

Mr. Speaker, before I get into the subject I must congratulate the Minister of Finance for the initiative he took by consulting his provincial counterparts during the preparation of his budget. This initiative has been underemphasized in the last two months, all the more so since it was the first time, Mr. Speaker, that a federal minister of finance invited the provinces to take part in the budgetary process. By doing so, the Minister of Finance has demonstrated the significance he sees in intergovernmental co-operation in economic matters and I hope he will not depart from that positive attitude in spite of the provincial imbroglio resulting from his budget.

Mr. Speaker, whatever anybody may think of the Quebec government and the federal government position in the sales tax dispute, one thing seems obvious to me: If the Quebec minister of finance had stated his position from the start by saying yes or no, we would have avoided a vain dispute and, as the Quebec finance minister has admitted yesterday, and I quote him, "a conflict of which we are all starting to get a bit tired." In fact the federal Minister of Finance would certainly have attempted to find another way had he been told in time that Quebec could not accept this formula.

Mr. Speaker, if the federal government has proposed a sales tax reduction it is because everyone agreed that it would contribute to increase consumer demand and encourage our economic recovery while reducing price increases. And the soundness of that policy was confirmed by the latest data published by Statistics Canada. I would like to point out to the House that the latest statistics on inflation indicate that the consumer price index last month rose by only 0.2 per cent, which means that if such a rate is maintained during the next 12 months the rate of inflation will be approximately 2.5 per cent for the next year.

Mr. Speaker, many references have been made in the press to the considerable advantages that the selective tax sales cut implemented by Quebec would bring to the economy of that province. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I am far from being convinced that the total abolition of the sales tax on clothing, textiles, furniture and footwear maximizes the economic benefits that Quebec stands to gain from a sales tax cut. On the one hand, one may doubt the impact that step will have on production and employment when one knows that in those sectors a large number of manufactures are already operating at full capacity because of the quotas the federal government imposed at the end of 1976 on imports from some countries. On the other hand, the monetary policy of the government, particularly with respect to the value of the Canadian dollar, makes those products manufactured in Canada, more particularly in Quebec, in those soft sectors, a lot more competitive on the Canadian market because of the higher cost of imported products.

Mr. Speaker, the management of the Dominion Textile plant in my riding confirmed to me recently that the employees who had been called back at the beginning of 1978 had been called back before the selective sales tax cut enacted by the Quebec government.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that a 4 or 5 per cent cut would have been enough to stimulate demand in those so-called soft sectors which would have allowed the provincial treasury, and this is important, Mr. Speaker, to recover through an increased volume of business part of the lost revenues resulting from the partial sales tax cut whereas by abolishing entirely the sales tax they are depriving themselves of any source of revenue even if the volume of business were to increase.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, whether the government of Quebec was right or wrong, it was certainly perfectly entitled to do what it did, and this without suffering any financial penalty. If the government of Quebec did not take the most appropriate action to stimulate the Quebec economy, it is up to Quebeckers to voice their opinion at the next election. I believe it is essential to note, Mr. Speaker, that the economic sectors for which the tax was completely eliminated in Quebec also have a great impact on employment outside Quebec, especially in Ontario. For instance, 10,000 of the 20,000 jobs in the footwear industry are in Ontario and 9,000 in Quebec. As for the furniture industry, it provides 22,000 jobs in Ontario, 19,000 in Quebec and 6,000 elsewhere in the country. Moreover, Quebec accounts for only a little over 50 per cent of the 78,000 jobs provided by the textile industry. In fact, it is only in the clothing industry that Quebec has the lion's share of the jobs since the province accounts for approximately 70 per cent of the 120,000 jobs provided by this industry. Having said this, Mr. Speaker, it would therefore be wrong to suggest that the action taken by the Quebec government will benefit only the economy of Quebec and go against a healthy federalism.

In reality, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the present conflict is largely caused by the way this government sees federalism. It seems to me that federalism can survive in a diversified form and that federalism does not necessarily mean uniformity.

In other words, I believe that our federal system must be flexible enough to enable the provincial authorities to take the most appropriate economic action to meet the particular needs of each province.

In this case, I believe that the fact that Quebec has reduced its sales tax the way that it has does not seriously distort the Canadian economic system which can tolerate a sales tax of over 11 per cent in Newfoundland while Alberta has no sales tax at all, or which can accept the interventions of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is certain disadvantaged regions or which must live with different purchasing policies for each provincial government.

Since it is ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I shall continue at the next sitting.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—FUNDING FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on May 15 I put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner) concerning post-secondary education funding, especially as it applies in the Sudbury district office of the Ontario region of his department. The Indian band councils in the Sudbury region were advised several weeks ago that there was a shortfall of some $539,000 in that region for post-secondary education. This not only applies to students who will be going to university, but it also applies to those going to post-secondary institutions such as community colleges, and to a small training centre in the Wikwemikong Indian reserve called Wasse Abin College.

This particular training centre is making a great contribution to young people who have either dropped out of high school and not been able to complete their grade 13 or grade 12 courses so they can go to post-secondary institutions, or as well those who are not quite prepared to leave the Indian reserve and go to a university such as Laurentian in Sudbury or Cambrian College, where many of the students in Sudbury go.

● (2202)

I raised this matter several times with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and had one delegation come here to meet with the parliamentary secretary. It seems to me that this matter should be resolved in the very near future.

The minister in his statement on May 15 said:

> Mr. Speaker, on the general commitment, I certainly maintain the commitment I have given before. On the two specific cases the hon. member has referred to, I would have to look into the actual amounts.

It would appear to me that that answer is very indefinite. We are not talking about an abstract subject here or of something away off in the wide blue yonder. We are talking about young people who are completing their grade 12 or grade 13 education and who want to apply to go to post-secondary institutions this fall. We are talking about a small training centre on the Wikwemikong Indian reserve, where three or four weeks ago 18 fine young people graduated from that college and every one of them is going on to a post-secondary institution this fall. But no students will be going in September of this year unless this matter is resolved.

I understand that an application has been before Treasury Board for the additional funding, which has been approved but not broken down. What we need is a firm decision by the minister as to what amount of funding will be provided. Surely with over 900,000 people out of work in this country, this is not the time for cutbacks in post-secondary education. All through the years we have been encouraging young people from the 12 Indian bands of the Algoma riding and the Algoma-Manitoulin districts of northern Ontario to go on and take post-secondary education in order to open up opportunities for better employment and a fuller life for them. Now with high unemployment is not the time to be cutting back on post-secondary education. It is a time for decision by the government on this matter so that these young people can apply and go on to school this fall and be able to take advantage of post-secondary education.

I hope we can get a firm commitment from the minister right away so that this matter will not be left with the uncertainty as to whether the Wasse Abin College will resume its function this fall and whether the several hundred young people in northeastern Ontario who are served by the Sudbury district office will have funding for post-secondary education.

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the hon. member's statement. I would like to point out that I have discussed this issue a number of times with the hon. member in detail. I appreciated the fact that some local Indian representation came to Ottawa to further substantiate the hon. member's concern on this issue. I was impressed by the sincerity by which they put forward their case.

There is no question about the support of the minister or the ministry for education. In this particular instance we are talking about bridge education between the secondary schooling and post-secondary education. If this is valid in any area, it is certainly so in the native community where they face many disadvantages and need this kind of support to ensure that they go on to post-secondary education with every confidence and opportunity to succeed.

● (2207)

Having said that, I want to put on record that the department is labouring under some difficulty in that, under the restraint program, it is necessary to meet the statutory requirement first to accommodate the price and volume increases that go forward both in education and in other areas, then to look at the non-statutory items and, last, any new programs. As the hon. member said, additional money has been approved.

In conclusion, I cannot tonight give a very definite answer to the hon. member's representation other than to say the request will be met if at all possible, given the many demands and the fixed budget. In addition, I give the undertaking that we will do everything we can to have a definite answer on this by mid-June.

FISHERIES—CLOSING OF SWIFTSURE BANKS ON WEST COAST

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday, May 31, I asked the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) the following question:

> Today the minister received a telegram from some very irate fishermen in British Columbia because the minister made a very major concession to the United States by closing the Swiftsure Bank without getting anything in return. How much longer will the fishermen have to wait for an agreement, and what are they going to get in return for all their losses?

The minister replied:

> As to how long the resolution of this issue will take, I can tell the hon. member that it will not take very long.

As we know, the answer came last Friday with the Canadian ultimatum to American fishermen and the American government. That does have some attractive emotional solutions for the short term, but it has a very long term disaster built into it. It is a case of brinkmanship in this whole matter.

For the past several years, the Americans have been getting the best end of the deal. Now it is like a withdrawal from cocaine or heroin. The withdrawal symptoms are pretty bad. When our ambassador starts getting tough in his negotiations, they do not like it. That is why they asked us to close the Swiftsure and were giving us a hard time.

The problem is that in all of these negotiations, our fishermen have been kept in an extended period of uncertainty. As I said, in the short-term it has some emotional gains. It has the support of the fishermen at the present time because they have seen their position in the fishing areas off the Pacific coast taken away from them year by year by American fishermen and our weak-kneed approach. Friday's announcement is the tough posture and the tough stance which all of us have been looking for and for which all of us are grateful. It inspires in us some hope that we will make some gains.

We have to keep in mind that Canadian fishermen, as a result of having to draw back out of the water they are accustomed to fishing in, stand to lose something like $7 million this year. The parliamentary secretary shakes his head. Some reports say $3 million or $4 million, some say $7 million. In any event, it is a lot of bucks and it is the fishermen who will feel this loss.

In the long haul, it is not going to be very attractive to our fishermen. Rest assured they support the decision right now in the hope they are going to get something in return in the long haul. Our hopes are pinned on the negotiations that will come on June 19 and 20. All of us in the House hope something substantive will happen then and that the Canadian fishermen, for whom we are responsible, will benefit as a result.

The related question is, how do you make up the losses as a result of the dislocation that takes place because of having to draw back? We can say to these fishermen, go to the Swiftsure Bank as we did in 1956. We can tell them to go to the Swiftsure Bank, fish for 24 hours a day, catch all you can before they go up the Strait of Juan de Fuca and to Georges Bank before the Americans have a chance to get at them. That will cut off the fishing supply to the Americans. I would point out it also cuts off the supply to the Fraser River run.

The question is, what are the fishermen going to do who are accustomed to fishing in the Fraser River and who will have their catch lost? We say tell them to go to the open water, but at least 50 per cent of them do not have the kind of equipment which would enable them to do so. This will mean a great deal of dislocation for fishermen in the lower mainland of British Columbia.

After so much brinksmanship we are entitled to some answers. What does the minister intend to do for the fishermen who are affected? Will he provide them with some assistance in the short term? In the ensuing few weeks will he introduce stop gap measures which will assure them a livelihood? What steps does he intend to take to make sure that the Fraser River fishermen can gain the livelihood to which they are accustomed and entitled?

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, Swiftsure Bank is now open to salmon trollers, and has been since June 2, when Canada announced its decision to suspend the provisional implementation of the 1978 interim reciprocal fisheries agreement. Although we lost almost three weeks of fishing on these grounds, this was in a last ditch attempt to resolve the west coast salmon troll problems that arose under the agreement.

A relatively small group of trollers would have been involved; however, the rest of the fishing area off British Columbia was available to them. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, although these fishermen were not permitted to fish Swiftsure during that period, it in no way meant that they were prevented from fishing in other areas.

I say this with respect to the hon. member: this afternoon we had a meeting in the fisheries committee with the boundary negotiators and there will be a further meeting with the boundary negotiators on Thursday. Because of the limited time available to me during this period I would recommend to the hon. member, in view of his interest in this subject, that he attend the meeting on Thursday. This will give him an opportunity to question the officials in detail, a procedure which I think would be to his benefit.

Mr. Friesen: I will be there.

FISHERIES—U.S. BAN ON SPORT FISHING IN AMERICAN WATERS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my intervention concerns a similar subject but I want to deal with sport fishing rather than with the commercial fishery. The matter arises from a question I asked in the House yesterday concerning the enforcement of the United States law which covers not only Canadian commercial fishing in U.S. waters but Canadian sport fishing boats in such waters.

The minister has been quoted as saying that such restrictions were the "name of the game" and that Canada would have to consider reciprocal action. But at that point there had been no enforcement of the ban on Canadian sport fishing in their waters. Today, however, at Haines, Alaska, the U.S. coastguard swept all Canadian boats which had been engaged in a traditional salmon derby from the water, not only to the discomfort of the Canadian competitors but also to the discomfort of the Alaskan sponsors of the derby who rely a great deal upon the participation of Canadian boats for the success of their enterprise.

If Canadian sport fishermen were excluded from the ban, perhaps the coastguard in Alaska did not get the message. I am not sure about that. In any event, we are running the risk of seeing a substantial number of Canadian sport fishing boats prevented from continuing to fish in American waters; I refer particularly to the Point Roberts area which is almost exclusively fished by Canadian boats from the Crescent Beach side. I do not know whether any action has been taken in that regard.

I would therefore like the parliamentary secretary to deal with at what stage enforcement is at in terms of the U.S. legislation and in terms of Canadian boats. I want to know whether there will be any warning to Canadian fishermen to stay out of American waters.

The second aspect of this question deals with reciprocal action. It is my own view that we should not ban American fishermen from Canadian waters. The reason is that the economic impact of that would be tremendous, not merely in British Columbia but all across the country. According to the figures we were given today in committee, there is a ratio of almost ten to one in favour of Americans having boats in Canada versus Canadians having boats in the U.S., and 20 to one in terms of individual fishermen fishing on the Canadian side of the border. There is a considerable tourist benefit as a result, so I am not suggesting that we should reciprocate with a ban on U.S. fishermen. What I am saying is that this gives us a golden opportunity to re-examine a couple of areas in terms of the way U.S. fishermen fish for salmon in Canadian waters.

To some extent this may apply to the east coast, but I want to deal just with the Pacific coast. British Columbians are tired of 50-foot alleged American sport boats coming up and canning salmon for weeks and weeks, shipping that salmon to the United States and selling it. They are tired of seeing the use of fish finders, which are electronic devices not dissimilar to the ones which our own commercial trollers are using. They are tired of seeing downriggers which can catch any level of troll for salmon, exactly the same equipment as our own sophisticated commercial trollers are using. I do not call that sport fishing. That is just trying to get as much meat as possible in a short time. That, to me, violates the principle of the use of a recreational resource.

What I am suggesting is that we have to give consideration to limiting the amount of salmon which can be taken and held by one boat, limiting the amount that can be exported to the United States, and restricting the kind of gear which is now being used in Canadian waters. I do not say that that is a response to the U.S. position. I do not say that that is a reciprocal action. I think that is something we should have done a long time ago, and we now have a golden opportunity to re-examine our position.

I might say that tonight in committee the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) indicated that an announcement may be forthcoming very shortly with regard to the export of sport-caught salmon in Canadian waters. I look forward to that announcement, and welcome it. I think this is a good time to decide to start controlling the extent of alleged sport fishing by major U.S. charter vessels. We have to keep in mind that those charter vessels quite often buy nothing in Canada. They load up in Bellingham. They buy all their provisions in Bellingham. In fact, there are many cases of yachts in B.C. water radioing to Bellingham when they run out of supplies. They make sure they do not have to buy in Canada. They bring provisions by ship to supply their needs. It seems to me that that is not the kind of sport fishing we want in Canadian waters, so we had better have a careful look at the way we regulate sport fishing.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, both the Canadian and United States notes on the question of suspending the implementation of the 1978 interim reciprocal fisheries agreement—both of which have been tabled in this House—indicate that the reciprocal halibut fisheries should continue. However, the implementation of this will be under discussion between officials of the two countries with a view to the Canadian government's being able to provide firm advice to Canadian halibut fishermen as far as possible in advance of the June 19 reopening of the halibut fishery.

As to the hon. member's second point with regard to the decision of the United States to enforce its fisheries management and conservation act against all Canadian sport fishermen, I can only repeat the statement of the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) in the House yesterday that Canadian waters are open to United States recreational fishermen.

I should also point out that the Canadian government has not taken any action against American recreational fishing craft in Canadian waters, and the minister stated today in the House of Commons that Canadian waters were open to licensed U.S. recreational fishermen. In any event, no action is contemplated at any time with respect to American tourists using Canadian craft. The minister sent a telex stating the foregoing to all his provincial counterparts.

I would add that when the minister refers to "licensed fishermen", he is referring to the various provincial licensing requirements which prevail in inland waters.

With regard to the third point brought out by the hon. member, I think he is aware from comments made in the fisheries committee that a long time prior to the action we took against the United States commercial fishermen discussions had been taking place in the province of B.C. regarding the catch limit for tourists coming into B.C. and the amount of canning that can be done by them. As he is also aware, that subject will continue to be examined, and I hope that an announcement will be made in the near future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 10.22 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

STATISTICS CANADA

FILLING OF CENSUS COMMISSIONER POSITIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of the recent conformation at a provincial court case in Winnipeg by Mr. Harold Kenna, a program manager with Statistics Canada, that lists of Liberal party supporters to fill census commissioner positions for the 1976 census were sent out to Statistics Canada by the federal Liberal party, a practice which can be used for the purpose of gathering political information, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce instruct his departmental officials to abandon this obvious patronage policy which is undermining the political privacy of millions of Canadians, and adopt a policy whereby impartial lists, free of political affiliation, are given to Statistics Canada for the census commissioner.

Mr. Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43, a motion can be presented only by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

LOANS BY CORPORATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent necessity to draw attention to recent loans made by the Export Development Corporation, one in the amount of $47 million and the other in the amount of $50 million, to the Beloit Company of Canada, Sorel, Quebec, a totally-owned subsidiary of the Beloit Company of Wisconsin, U.S.A., for the manufacture of newsprint machinery to be used by two American companies, namely, the Bato Company in Virginia and the Midtec Paper Corporation in Wisconsin. I, therefore, ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

In view of the fact that the machinery thus produced will be used in the United States to produce paper in direct competition with Canadian paper producers, something which could result in serious loss of business and jobs in one of our major industries, the House condemns the action of the government in sacrificing the long-term health of a truly Canadian industry, namely, the pulp and paper industry, in favour of a short-term benefit to a Canadian machinery manufacturer which is wholly-owned by American interests; and, finally, that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce explain to the House why such steps were taken by ministerial order against the recommendations of senior officials of the Export Development Corporation.

● (1412)

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

STATISTICS ACT

MAKE-UP OF CENSUS FORM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek the unanimous consent of the House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that Mr. Bill Watkins, a constituent of mine, has been charged under the Statistics Act with failing to complete a census form, that the section of the form which Mr. Watkins refused to complete did not provide for the accurate listing of the mother tongue of his children, which was neither English nor French but was both, since the children are fluently bilingual, that Mr. Watkins had pointed out this failing in the census form to the chief statistician in 1971 and had been informed that the census form would be changed, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That this House urge the government to charge the responsible minister with an infringement of section 8(1) of the Statistics Act for discrimination against bilingual Canadians and, further, that this House urge the government to introduce a special bill to cover the legal expenses of Mr. Watkins incurred for contesting this charge brought against him by this government.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

URBAN AFFAIRS

CMHC DATA ON MORTGAGE DEFAULTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) has not allowed CMHC to release information relating to mortgage defaults, including AHOP defaults which will quadruple those of last year, and knowing that this information is critically important and necessary, first, for the evaluation of existing government housing programs and, second, for the analysis, projection and prospects for success of the government proposed graduated payment mortgage program, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott):

That this House direct the Minister of State for Urban Affairs immediately to authorize CMHC to release all data relative to mortgage defaults in the past five years.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

FUNDS FOR SYDNEY, N.S., STEEL MILL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that Mr. Tom Kent, president of the Sydney Steel Corporation, has announced an agreement with the Three Island Steel Company Limited of Richmond, B.C., to sell 1.8 million to 2.4 million tons of steel billets between July, 1980, and December, 1990, and in view of the fact that this will amount to sales for the Sydney plant of about $30 million a year by 1980, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That the Department of Regional Economic Expansion make funds available immediately for the repair of the billet mill in Sydney and for renovating the plant so that by 1980 a Q-BOP furnace capacity will replace the outmoded open-hearth steelmaking facilities in order to guarantee that this order will be profitable to SYSCO and increase employment at that mill by over 500 by 1980.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

HOUSING

DIRECT FUNDING TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs who I saw outside the chamber but who is not in his place. In his absence, perhaps I could direct it to the Prime Minister.

As the Prime Minister will know, the minister's proposed new directions in housing in one part propose the extension of direct funding to municipalities by the federal government well beyond the present limited state of that direct funding, in a manner which at least four provinces oppose and which is against the law of at least one province. Can the Prime Minister give us a categorical assurance here in this House that the government will not implement this aspect of that policy without the agreement of the provinces?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is asking a question which can be answered only by someone with intimate knowledge of the negotiations with the provinces, which the minister has. He will be in attendance in the House in a moment. Of course, the plan of the minister, in general terms, is to fund the municipalities, after consultation with the provinces, to choose precisely the kinds of areas which have been agreed to with the provinces. I cannot speak in any detail about the results of those negotiations, but I repeat that the minister will be here in a few moments.

• (1417)

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister certainly knows that the most serious possible exception has been taken by at least four provinces to this proposal. I wonder if, as a matter of ensuring that the conduct of federal-provincial relations in this country continues, or begins to proceed, in a civilized way, he would raise with his minister the necessity of giving the House a categorical assurance that the government will not proceed with an invasion of provincial jurisdiction without the agreement of the provinces. We can wait for that answer.

Let me ask the Prime Minister a question in relation to a statement made by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Was the minister stating the position of the Government of Canada when he said yesterday:

The role of municipalities must be legally enshrined in the constitution as a full-fledged level of government with powers of their own.

Is that the position of the Government of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has not taken that position. If the minister said those words, he was expressing his own views.

Mr. Paproski: Goodbye, Ouellet!

Mr. Clark: Since the minister was expressing these personal views when he attended a national conference in his public capacity as a responsible minister in the field of urban affairs, will the Prime Minister indicate to the House of Commons at the earliest possible opportunity, since this matter has now been raised, the precise position of the government in relation to the constitutional status of municipalities? Will he also, since the matter has been raised by his responsible colleague, give us a categorical assurance that there will not be the proposed encroachment into provincial jurisdiction in the field of municipal affairs without concrete, advance discussion with the provinces?

Mr. Trudeau: I say once again, Mr. Speaker, that I have not seen the particular words to which the hon. member refers. If they referred to municipal affairs, then of course under the present constitution municipal affairs come under the jurisdiction of the provinces. When we get to constitutional discussions on a new sharing of powers, of course, we will be prepared to discuss even this aspect of jurisdiction. No doubt the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has some views on that. But because municipal affairs come under provincial jurisdiction does not mean that everything having to do with municipalities comes under the jurisdiction of the provinces. We take a contrary view and I support the minister in so far as he takes that view.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I want to reserve a supplementary question in the hope that the minister will eventually show up.

LOTO CANADA

EXTENSION OF LOTTERY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and it is based on my understanding that she is meeting tomorrow with the provincial ministers to discuss the general area of Loto Canada.

Is she prepared, today, to give the House the assurance that the commitment which was made by the Prime Minister in 1976, as well as by the Minister of Finance, namely, not to extend Loto Canada beyond 1979 without the agreement of the House and, what is more important, without the agreement of the provinces, will be respected at her meeting tomorrow with the provincial ministers, and that the meeting will be based on that underlying principle?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the commitment was made to have legislation in the House if we should wish to continue the lottery. I think we should put first things first. I should meet with our provincial colleagues first, which I am undertaking tomorrow, and if we move into a future lottery I will be pleased to bring it to the floor of the House for discussion.

Mr. Oberle: Will the minister be discussing tomorrow with the provinces the extension of the lottery beyond 1979 and, as well, further cost-sharing agreements? Furthermore, will she undertake to report to the House, so that in future we can avoid these on again-off again negotiations, the outcome of the discussions with the provinces so the House will know where the provinces stand on this very important question which is also under provincial jurisdiction?

Mrs. Campagnolo: There is no clear jurisdiction in lotteries. Obviously, the Fathers of Confederation did not foresee such an event. I will be very pleased to report to the House in due course when I bring in legislation, if I do bring in legislation to the House.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

BEEF: PRICE INCREASES FAVOURING MORE EXPENSIVE CUTS—PRICE OF SKIM MILK POWDER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my questions are to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and they relate to the price of a couple of particular foods. I am sure the minister is aware of the fact that farmers are now, finally, getting a decent and well deserved price increase for the beef they are producing.

● (1422)

I ask the minister a question arising out of studies done by the Manitoba department of agriculture which show that in the city of Winnipeg, from August 12, 1977, to May 26, 1978, the price of hamburger increased by 128 per cent and blade roast by 120 per cent, and that more expensive cuts such as T-bone steaks increased by only 19 per cent and sirloin steaks by 27 per cent.

Is the minister aware of this tremendous price differential? Can he explain to the House why the cheaper cuts which lower income earners have to buy have gone up by such a drastic amount in the last few months, while the more expensive cuts while are purchased by wealthy people have had only minor price increases?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that with the shortage of beef there is less low-price beef available to lower income consumers. We are very much concerned about that, and I will be discussing some initiatives with my colleagues very shortly.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, also in the area of food prices, on Tuesday, May 30, 1978, the minister said he would be looking into the tremendous increase in the price of skim milk powder. As we know, in April the Minister of Agriculture took off the 34 cents per pound subsidy on skim milk powder. Price increases have been as high as 45 cents and 46 cents a pound. Now that the minister has had approximately seven or eight days to look into this matter, can he say why there has been such an excessive increase in the price of skim milk powder?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member pointed out, he asked me that question about a week ago: I immediately referred it to the officials in my department, including the director of investigation in the combines bureau. They are investigating this matter. The hon. member made an allegation that there was profiteering in that particular business. That is now being investigated, but I do not have a report.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ACCESS OF FORCE TO INCOME TAX RETURNS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General: it relates to the ongoing policies of the government regarding the confidentiality of income tax returns. Does it remain the government's policy to permit law enforcement officers access to confidential income tax returns in files of private citizens who are reasonably suspected of being involved in organized crime?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is very much aware of the terms of the agreement entered into between the Department of National Revenue and the Solicitor General. The terms are self-explanatory. Both the Department of National Revenue and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police comply very specifically with the terms of that agreement.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General is aware that access is only permitted on the basis of a citizen being suspected of being involved in organized crime, the official definition of which is "two or more persons concerting together on a continuing basis to participate in illegal activities either directly or indirectly for gain." It has been pointed out in the McDonald commission that that could include a husband and wife conspiring together to cheat on an unemployment insurance claim.

In the area of access by law enforcement officers to confidential income tax files of those suspected of being involved in organized crime, is this rather broad definition used, or is a more restricted, pertinent definition of organized crime used to permit that access? If so, what is that more restricted definition?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member fully knows if he has read the proceedings before the McDonald inquiry, the definition was one suggested by counsel through a leading question. I can assure the hon. member that the definition relating to a husband and wife attempting to conspire to defraud the unemployment insurance system is not one which is of any interest to the RCMP.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, as the Solicitor General knows full well, that definition has been accepted by the minister and by the commissioner of the RCMP, in committee, as being the only official definition of organized crime. Is access being granted to confidential income tax returns on the basis of that definition? If not, on the basis of what definition is such access being given?

• (1427)

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows that the purpose of the agreement was to permit co-operation between National Revenue and the RCMP in order to prosecute offences under the Income Tax Act. That particular arrangement has been very successful in terms of the number of prosecutions undertaken. In terms of non-compliance with the Income Tax Act, there has, indeed, been information made available by the RCMP to National Revenue that permitted these prosecutions. Surely the hon. gentleman knows that the full purpose was to deal with individuals who are known to, or who are suspected of engaging in activities that come within the definition of organized crime as the hon. gentleman understands that definition.

AIRPORTS

POSSIBILITY OF INSTALLING LANDING INSTRUMENTS AT EASTERN QUEBEC AIRPORTS

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Since it is important for eastern Quebec to have satisfactory air connections with the remainder of the province, and since the Gaspé and Magdalen Islands airports have no instrument landing facilities, as a result of which 15 to 20 per cent of flights are cancelled, does the minister intend to correct those conditions in the near future?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as earlier answers in this House to the two members of parliament from the areas of Gaspé and Bonaventure have indicated, we have this matter under active consideration. There are several solutions, including the possible use of Dash-7 aircraft, and certainly improved landing systems in the long run will be part of the improvement to the air system in the area. The complications at the moment include, in at least one case, the location of an ideal site for the airport. We hope to come to a conclusion on this matter at a fairly early date.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Since the Dash-7 STOL aircraft seems to be a temporary solution for those two airports, does the minister intend to subsidize Quebecair for the purchase of a Dash-7 to improve the service for the citizens of my constituency and those of eastern Quebec?

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, again as answered in this House a few days ago, we are looking at this question of regional airlines, several of them, their possible use of the Dash-7 and the financial arrangements that may be required to enable them to acquire the aircraft.

HOUSING

REQUESTED WITHDRAWAL OF NEW PROGRAM

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. The minister has been repudiated by his leader, the Prime Minister, for his clumsy intrusion into constitutional questions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: At a meeting of the Canadian Federation of Mayors, at Edmonton, he was repudiated by at least four of the provinces for his failure to consult with the provinces on his clumsy intrusion into provincial jurisdiction. Now that he has been repudiated by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities for not consulting with them on his new housing and community services program, I ask the minister—who, surely, has some logic and common sense left, although we doubt it sometimes—whether he is prepared to withdraw that program which lies shattered, in any event, since it was designed as an election gimmick, and nothing more?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, in asking the question, has bad timing because I was just reading some of my correspondence. I have here a telex which I just received from one of my provincial colleagues, who says:

I wish to acknowledge your telegram and to assure you that the province of Manitoba wishes to reach an agreement on an appropriate method of administering the proposed community services grant program as soon as possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: That is one of many positive responses I am receiving in relation to the proposal I have put forward to my provincial colleagues. Next week I will go to a federal-provincial conference in Toronto in a spirit of co-operation to reach agreement with all provincial governments in order to make the housing and community services proposals workable, in the interests of all Canadians, and of creating more jobs as soon as possible at the local level for the benefit of the municipalities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1432)

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, it speaks volumes for the minister's program when he can boast that only one province has agreed even to talk about it, let alone agree to it. The fact remains, sir, that over a month has gone by since the minister's telex to the provinces setting out the new program. Since that time the province of Quebec has rejected it outright, the province of Ontario has rejected it and, indeed, the very meeting which the minister refers to is being called at the initiative of the provinces.

I ask the minister, is he prepared to sit down with an open mind and discuss this program with the provinces, whose jurisdiction has been clumsily intruded upon by the minister? While the minister is on his feet, perhaps he could assure the House that when he does sit down with the provinces, he will not only recognize the constitution of this country but he will recognize his solemn obligation to low income earners to ensure that they have adequate housing, which they will not get under his program.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, this is a surprising change of mind by the hon. member. About a month and a half ago he was urging me to increase federal funds for neighbourhood improvement programs, precisely the type of community services which the federal government wishes to expand for the benefit of Canadians. I do not understand the rationale of the hon. member who on one hand is asking us to do more for community services in his own province, and today is saying I am intruding into a field of provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister understood when he repudiated you.

Mr. Ouellet: There is great contradiction in the words spoken today by the hon. member and the letters he sent to me some weeks ago in relation to the neighbourhood improvement program.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: With regard to the latter part of the question by the hon. member, on whether or not I will go to Toronto with an open mind, there is no doubt that throughout the negotiations with the provinces I have kept a very open mind, which I will continue to keep despite the hope of the hon. member that there will be confrontation. I will not go there with a spirit of confrontation: on the contrary, I will go there to meet the provinces in an attempt to agree on a positive policy that will be to the best advantage of every Canadian living in any province.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the minister has been repudiated by the Prime Minister this day, just as he has been repudiated by the Co-operative Housing Federation of Canada which has accused him of misleading this House on Monday in the answers he gave to my colleagues on questions with respect to what will happen to co-operative housing under this program.

Can the minister tell the House how the low income earners of this country will benefit from a program which most of the main lenders of this country are saying will cost low income earners, over the life of the mortgage, $10,000 more under the graduated mortgage program than it would cost if they were to get conventional loans? Let him explain that to the House and to the low income earners of the country, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is a bit confused. The graduated mortgage payment will apply to the Assisted Home Ownership Program, while the other programs in relation to co-operative housing and non-profit housing are entirely different.

Incidentally, when I am in Toronto next week I will take the occasion to meet representatives of the non-profit groups to explain further the ramifications of the program and to clarify the aspects of it which they have misunderstood. Clearly, the objective of the government is to create more public housing in Canada to allow people in lower income brackets to take advantage of our program, not the contrary.

MORTGAGE PAYMENTS UNDER CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING PROGRAM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my questions are for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, on the same subject. I would like to say at the outset that I, for one, am not surprised that he got agreement from the government of Manitoba on a program that will be detrimental to low income housing.

I would like to ask him very specifically, in that context, considering that the head of CMHC made a speech recently in which he admitted that 280,000 families in Canada spend more than 50 per cent of their income on housing—clearly demonstrating the need for more, not less, low income housing—if he could explain why he has virtually scuttled the non-profit and co-operative housing sections. That is the accusation made by people in the field. In answering that question, will the minister take the opportunity, if he wishes to, to deny that the financing changes proposed by the federal government in the co-operative field will, in fact, mean that people, over the course of paying their mortgage in co-operative housing, will pay much more than they do under the present legislation?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that when we have the meeting in Toronto next week the ramifications and details of the program will become quite clear. It will be obvious that the intention of the government is to substantially reduce the interest rate that this group has to pay. In fact, rather than paying 8 per cent, they will pay—

An hon. Member: They are going to pay more.

Mr. Ouellet: Under the current program, Mr. Speaker, the interest rate these people are paying is 8 per cent. We will reduce the interest rate to 1 per cent, which means that they will be paying 7 per cent less than they are presently paying under the existing program.

Mr. Broadbent: For how long?

Mr. Ouellet: For the duration of the loan, that is, 35 years.

[Mr. McGrath.]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, if what the minister is now saying is the case, it is certainly very different from the regulations—he is nodding his head—or very different from the announcement which he made not long ago in this field, which upset virtually everyone in the country concerned with low income housing. If what he says is correct, we on this side of the House will welcome that change. I would say to his colleague, who is cheering on the right, that he has just had an about-change, again, of 180 degrees, which is typical of that side of the House.

I would like to question the minister in another area, Mr. Speaker. The federation of Canadian municipalities, meeting in Edmonton, have said of the minister's general changes in housing that the government leaves all of that area of social policy in Canada, to use their phrase, "in the twilight zone". In this context specifically, would the minister explain to the House why the federal government is withdrawing from the capital financing of housing, particularly at a time when starts are down by some 20 per cent compared with last year?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, one of the fundamental decisions that must be taken in relation to federal subsidies in the area of housing is to decide where to put the emphasis. Indeed, the emphasis should be put on low income housing and housing for old-age people. In order to do more in this area, to take all our available resources and increase our activity in that area, we had to cut some of our expenditures in other sectors. We decided to ask the provinces to borrow in the market through the normal financial institutions, rather than coming to the federal government and using us as banker.

This allowed the government to have more money available and to use it to help people of low income and people who need more in society. That is where the emphasis is. We will no longer put the capital on the table, but we will restrict our activities to subsidies to reduce substantially, as I indicated earlier to the hon. member, the interest rate which these groups must pay.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister has acknowledged in his answer, by shifting the burden to the provinces, that this means the poorer provinces and people living in them will be worse off than those living in the richer provinces. If the federal government maintains its program, that will not necessarily be the case.

Mr. McGrath: It is a Mickey Mouse program.

Mr. Broadbent: More specifically, on the question of finance, as the minister knows, his proposal in part involves the shifting of obligation to the provinces and in part to the private financial institutions. I ask the minister whether, in getting out of direct financing the federal government has obtained specific commitments from the banks and other lending institutions that they will fill this financing gap at low interest rates.

● (1442)

I ask this question in light of the failure of the former minister, the Minister of National Defence, who promised us in 1975 that we would get $1 billion in financing for housing from the banks, but it turned out that we got only $300 million.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, in our negotiations with the lending institutions, I could say that while they have some reservations and a prudent and cautious approach to the proposal of the graduated payment mortgage, on the other hand their responses to our initiative on the low income housing proposal were very positive. The lenders responded positively to the federal initiative in this area and indicated a willingness to invest in social housing programs in support of provincial, municipal or private non-profit or co-operative associations.

We have received this assurance from the lending institutions, and therefore we believe that the provinces or the private non-profit or co-operative groups could get the money from the banks. We have indicated that, at any rate, the federal government could be there as a banker of last resort.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

LINGUISTIC AND CULTURAL EQUITY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right hon. Prime Minister. Given the fact that the Premier of Ontario has abdicated his responsibilities with respect to the linguistic situation, given the urgency there is to stop the galloping assimilation of the French-speaking minorities living in provinces with an English-speaking majority and, finally, in order to secure a federal leadership which will assure the existence of a united Canada which will respect the rights of all Canadians, can the right hon. Prime Minister tell the House whether he intends to table very soon the constitutional proposals he promised in the Speech from the Throne in order to enshrine in the Canadian Constitution, before it is too late, the fundamental rights in the field of linguistic equality and justice which will allow all Canadians to achieve their legitimate aspirations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will remind the hon. member of what he surely already knows, and I mean that since 1969 at the least, the federal government has been making proposals to the provinces aimed at enshrining into the Constitution an unfailing protection for the rights of the minorities, whether they are the French-speaking minorities in the rest of the country or the English-speaking minority in Quebec. Those proposals are to be reiterated and restated in the proposals the government will table before this House within a few weeks.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOTIVE PLANTS IN ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the minister advise the House of the proposals he and his officials have made to General Motors, Ford and others regarding the establishment of a new automobile assembly plant and a parts plant in Ontario and Quebec?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have been over this one several times in the House. I have said repeatedly that when I have an announcement to make, I will be only too glad to make it. In our continuing negotiations with the Big Three auto manufacturers in North America, we hope we will be successful in landing a plant or two, or three for Canada. To date I have no announcement to make.

Mr. Kempling: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister confirm that this package of more than $150 million is broken down into roughly $50 million each for Ford and General Motors? Can he confirm that an amount of money is being offered to Chrysler for the refurbishing and renovating of the Tecumseh truck plant at Windsor, and tell us whether these proposals will require renegotiation of the auto pact between Canada and the United States?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we know that Chrysler is interested in making substantial improvements and an expansion of their van plant at Windsor, but they have not really outlined a proposal to the federal government on which we could make a concrete offer to assist them in any way. We are talking to Chrysler, however, and when they determine exactly what their proposal for expansion will be, then we will sit down and see how we can best assist them.

We are always willing to assist the expansion of industry within Canada. We are at the service of the Big Three and we have notified them. I really do not know where the hon. member got the figures he has quoted.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

DISPOSITION OF SOCIAL SERVICES LEGISLATION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The hon. lady is aware of the extended visit to Canada recently of Dr. Paul Dolfus, chairman of the international commission on technical aids, housing and transportation for the handicapped. His purpose is to promote the rehabilitation international congress in Winnipeg in 1980.

In view of the importance and the urgency of the minister's new social services legislation, and the necessity of having it on the statute books as part of the preparation of the congress in 1980, can the minister indicate what priority she is giving to Bill C-55 and her proposal for the debating schedule?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, any proposal for a debating schedule is a question that the hon. member knows should be addressed to the leader of the House. The government has given the highest possible priority to Bill C-55. I do not know when the caucus of the official opposition takes place, but the hon. member could do well to negotiate an agreement with his party in order to speed up the passage of the tax bill; then we could deal with Bill C-55 which includes a section concerning a rehabilitation fund of $50 million for capital expenditures. This will certainly be welcomed by handicapped groups and is awaited impatiently by several provinces.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I think the tax bill will take care of itself, under the present plan for closure by the government. Because of the emphasis of the new social services legislation on meeting the special needs of the disabled, can the hon. lady give the assurance that the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs will be charged with the responsibility at the committee stage of bringing in a comprehensive report on the rehabilitation movement in Canada as background to the 1980 congress?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, through their steering committees, the committees of the House decide on the witnesses and support documents they presented. It will be a pleasure for me to be a witness, if invited, and to bring with me whomever the committee would like to hear as witnesses on the question of rehabilitation. This is one of our top priorities in this country. We all know it is a matter to which the hon. member contributes very actively.

TRANSPORT

USE OF CANADIAN RAIL CARS BY U.S.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Last week, the president of the Canadian Transport Commission indicated there were some 23,000 CN railway cars located in the United States and said this was some 13,000 more than would be considered normal. He further indicated that the U.S. railways are using these rail cars for the movement of goods in the United States and are getting their use at no charge.

Has the minister looked into this matter, or will he look into it? Would this type of subject come under the consideration of the new special investigating committee announced last week by the hon. member for Assiniboia?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this committee would not normally consider the expediting of grain movement. Grain cars as such are rarely involved in this problem with United States traffic, since they are rarely moved into the United States for any great distance.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

There is a higher than normal number of cars in the United States. A number of factors contribute to this, including a combination of heavy traffic into the United States, some difficult weather conditions during the winter and, without doubt, some weaknesses in the United States rail system which cause an increasing number of slow orders to be issued across the rail system, thereby slowing down the return of the cars.

● (1452)

There is a penalty or payment in respect of many of these cars when they are used against the rules; indeed, when they are used in any case. My information is that this penalty was doubled recently so that there would be more inducement for the cars to be brought home. We are still not satisfied with the situation and are paying close attention to it to see whether other steps can be taken to ensure the return of cars, particularly in the case of potash and lumber, more quickly than at present.

Mr. Mazankowski: The minister indicated that none of these cars would be used for the movement of grain. That point of view is different from that of the president of the Canadian Transport Commission.

I have a related question, Mr. Speaker. Since many points in western Canada will not be able to take advantage of the current delivery quotas which will terminate on June 9, for example, Kyle, Saskatchewan, where some 300,000 bushels are waiting to be shipped, with trucks lined up, is consideration being given to extending the termination date for quotas so that the grain can be moved to port position?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I indicated in my earlier answer that grain cars as such are not involved in movements to the United States. Obviously, there are occasions when potash cars which are no longer needed for carrying potash could be helpful. I do not deny that there may be some slight implication for grain movement in relation to cars.

As far as quotas are concerned, I can tell the hon. member that the Wheat Board, as ever, is watchful of the situation of whether farmers are able to deliver on quota. It has already announced its extension of the June 9 quota date to June 30.

STUDY OF WESTERN CANADA GRAIN HANDLING

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. On June 3, the government made what turned out to be a form of press statement in Saskatchewan. The general thrust of it is that they are going to initiate one more study with regard to grain transportation in western Canada.

Will the minister inform the House who the government will appoint for that study, the length of time it will take, and will he outline some of the general guidelines that the person who will be appointed to carry out the study, for whatever reason it is being done, will operate under?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the appointment has not yet been made. The study is being undertaken because we are not certain we have done everything that can be done; that is to say, we collectively, the railways, the elevator companies, the Wheat Board and all the rest, in order to get the maximum out of the equipment we have. We have done a great deal. We have the bloc shipping system, co-ordinators at the terminals, some improvements in the way cars are handled by the railways, and I could go on to many more things.

There are some very difficult constrictions in the system, such as union relationships at the terminal and the relationship among the elevator operators and their managers with regard to hours of work. There are some in the way the railways handle their cars and give them priority. It is our intention to again study these fundamental problems, with the optimistic view that we will not stop at the first objection from one or another of the parties involved that it is difficult to accomplish a particular end. We will go beyond that and look with imagination at how that goal can be accomplished so that we can get perhaps 40 per cent more use out of all the hopper cars that we are acquiring.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY WHETHER NAVAL VESSELS REPAIR PROGRAM WILL BE ACCELERATED

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. I would like first to thank him for having responded to the requests made by hon. members in anticipating the program for repair and assistance to the shipbuilding industry which is aimed at improving the situation which faces shipbuilding at the present time. I would like to know whether his department has secured the necessary funds, that is $2 million, following tenders which have been received for the building of the Protector for which the Davie Shipbuilding had made the lowest bid at $9 million.

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we are looking at this matter very carefully. We hope to be able to find the funds to make this work possible in the St. Lawrence shipyards as quickly as possible.

AGRICULTURE

PLANT BREEDERS' RIGHTS LEGISLATION

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It relates to the progress or, perhaps more accurately, the lack of progress with regard to the plant breeders' rights legislation. The plant breeders require this legislation: they have been asking for it for months and the government has promised it for months. I simply ask the minister when we can expect to see the legislation.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much whether the legislation will be brought in before the end of this month. It depends on how long the House sits. If it is not brought in at this time, it will be given a priority position in the early fall.

Mr. Wise: I am disappointed by the minister's response and I am certain the plant breeders will share my view. Can we get an assurance from the minister that this legislation will not be like the Canadian meat import law and the stabilization payment to beef producers—promised and never delivered? These kinds of promises we can do without.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, our plant breeders have been without this kind of legislation since plant breeding began in Canada. If they do get it, it will be something they have never had before.

GRANTS UNDER GRAIN ELEVATOR PROGRAM

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Agriculture. It has to do with the elevator program which was announced jointly by the Minister of Agriculture and the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, about nine months ago. I understand Treasury Board has given approval to it in the last two weeks. When may announcements be expected with regard to individual grants? I am particularly interested in the one in the south part of Hastings.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can understand why the hon. member is concerned about the one in this area. I signed a press release on this and outlined that the regulations would be announced very shortly for people such as the hon. member is talking about who want to take advantage of the program. People in the feed deficient areas of eastern Ontario, western Quebec and eastern Canada, will be able to take advantage of this program. We hope to have the regulations by the end of this week or the first part of next week so they will know how to apply.

INDUSTRY

SALE OF HALIFAX SHIPYARD

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister of industry, trade and tourism or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can he report any progress as far as the Halifax shipyard is concerned? He must have been made aware by his confreres in the province of Nova Scotia that many of the shipyard workers are running out of unemployment insurance. Will there be a buyer for the shipyard? If not, why does the government not take it over and run it?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we are carrying on conversations with the Nova Scotia government and the owners of the Halifax shipyard in the hope that if they no longer want to run it, between the three of us we can find someone who will take it over and continue the business of repairing ships at Halifax.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-U.S. NEGOTIATIONS ON UNDERSEA ENERGY RESOURCES

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. According to published reports today, the minister's Canadian negotiators on the undersea boundary dispute question have proposed a shared 50-50 access to oil and gas production in disputed territories with the United States. My question to the minister is, is this true?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Without being the least offensive, Mr. Speaker, I do not think I ought to tell the hon. member. It is obviously part of a negotiating posture. It is a story in the newspapers. However, I would not want to confirm or deny it in precisely the language the hon. member has put to me. If he can rephrase the question in some way, I will be glad to be as forthcoming as I can.

Mr. Lawrence: Regarding any giveaway of undersea mineral rights on the continental Canadian shelf, regarding which many Canadian provinces feel they have a very just claim—and that view is shared by many in the country and in this House—may I ask the minister if any of the provinces concerned were involved in the discussions ahead of time, or will they be before any such offer is made to the United States?

● (1502)

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can answer that question clearly. We have had discussions with the provinces and we are continuing to discuss the matter with them. I am speaking from memory, but I do not think there has been any firm position taken by either side. A number of possibilities are being explored. As I understand it, even if a clearcut line is delineated there is a necessity for some agreement on each side of the line because deposits, particularly our deposits, may be located under the seabed on each side of that dividing line. So there are some complications involved. But the provinces are being consulted and we shall take their representations very much into consideration in reaching any final decision.

Mr. Lawrence: A final question. Does the minister not think it possible that we could at least discuss this subject in the House, with the minister leading the way, and consider some of the legal questions involving jurisdiction, instead of some of us having to pick these things up in the newspapers? Could we not discuss these things in the House first?

[Mr. Hogan.]

Mr. Jamieson: I do not know what mechanism might be adopted. There are two considerations involved. One is the restriction imposed during the question period. The other is this: I do not know whether members opposite would genuinely wish to get into a discussion in terms of indicating what the posture is while the negotiations are under way. However, in committee or anywhere else where it could be done without causing problems to our negotiators, we would have no objection to the subject being dealt with. We have asked the provinces for their views, and there is no reason why we should not let members in on our position.

MR. HNATYSHYN—REMARKS OF MINISTER OF TRANSPORT IN DEBATE

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I gave you the usual notice of my intention to raise a question of privilege on a matter I brought to your attention yesterday evening. It relates to the performance of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in this House.

Mr. Basford: A great performance!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is interesting to note the kind of action on the part of this minister that government supporters are applauding. I raise this matter because I feel it is one which should receive serious attention by Your Honour and by members of the House. We have, unfortunately, become used to intemperate and petty outbursts from the government side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We regret that the minister is incapable of making his point in debate without indulging in personal reflections. Members on both sides of the House occasionally infringe the rules in their warmth of expression and are usually quick to withdraw any remarks of theirs which the Speaker has described as unparliamentary. I hope the minister will take this opportunity to improve his record in this regard.

Yesterday evening, the minister stated:

> But instead of grappling with it, the Conservatives go into Anglophone Canada and feed it with their lies and deceptions and their urgings to hate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, it would be hard to imagine language which more grossly offends against the standard usually enforced in this House. It was suggested yesterday that the minister saved himself by referring to the Conservative party generally. I agree that vague references have often been passed over. However, I suggest that in this case the violence of the language, and the fact that western members appear to be singled out by a subsequent statement of the minister, removes that defence.

For similar language, Mr. Speaker, a member of this party was ejected from the House two weeks ago. The words "lie" and "liar" have always been withdrawn after being used in this House. I also suggest that the words "urgings to hatred" offend the spirit of Beauchesne 155, in that they accuse a member of base and offensive motives.

It would not be very gracious of the minister to fall back on the defence that he did not single out a particular member, but accused all of them. It seems to me that a minister of the Crown should be fully supportive of the dignity of the House, and realize that we are here to debate policies and not debase the personal reputation of fellow members.

In the interest of preventing the kind of breakdown in the House that I know Your Honour would like to avoid, I hope the minister will take this opportunity to withdraw the remarks and allegations he made yesterday.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear that the language I used does not fall within the definition of what is considered unparliamentary. I agree that it is strong language; statements about "lies" and "deception" do, indeed, constitute strong language. Nevertheless, the fact of the matter is that I have frequently seen this used as a tactic, particularly in western Canada, and what I was addressing last night was the serious consequence for this country of that tactic being used in a way which permits, preaches and evokes dislike for either a region of the country or of a particular linguistic group. I have seen this time and time again.

I would be delighted to have a committee of the House look into the question of how these things are done and how hatred and separation are spread. I recall one instance particularly in the home town of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) which I share with him. It was very clear from the Conservative advertising that they were suggesting a Quebec plot—it would be funny if it were not so sad. They said the picture of the prairies had been removed from the dollar bill and replaced by a picture of the Parliament Buildings taken from the Hull side.

Going on from there, you have a greater combination of suspicion and lies. The example I used last night had to do with the way in which Conservatives across the country assert that the government is favouring the province of Quebec in DREE programs, winter works programs and the like. The fact is that Quebec may indeed benefit more than Ontario, Alberta or some other province, but in all cases it derives less benefit than the Atlantic provinces because the principle is to try to help those areas which most need help.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: At the very time we are making our case against the separatists in Quebec, pointing out that the province does receive a good deal from the federal treasury given the economic circumstances of the province, we find these neo-separatists from other parts of the country spreading dislike—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is a natural temptation for hon. members to get into the merits of the question when words such as "lies" and "deception" have been used, and to go behind such phrases to demonstrate a certain position or support a certain argument. Nevertheless, I think we should avoid going into the merits and confine ourselves to the procedural question.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has indicated that the description he was using was not applied to members of the House of Commons but to Conservatives generally.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order. On a straight reading of the language objected to, I would be prepared to accept that possibility. However, I go back to the beginning of his remarks, to the paragraph in the middle of the second column of Hansard at page 6126. In cases where there is any possibility that unparliamentary expressions have been directed against members of the House, I think we have to take action quickly.

● (1512)

The minister says now that he did not intend to direct this comment against members of the House of Commons and, if that is so, I will ask him to make that perfectly clear because of the following language the minister has used. I will read it without including interjections:

> What we have in this House . . . is a Conservative opposition which does not care to consider the impact on this country's unity and which does not care indeed if its actions, time and time again, drive wedges between people in this country . . . The hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) shrieks . . . but let me tell him about colleagues of his having urged in this House on the one hand that the Minister of Finance immediately pay the money to the government of Quebec, when they would have gone across certain areas of this country saying to the people in the rest of Canada—in Saskatchewan where I live and in neighbouring provinces—

And so forth. In light of that language, if the Minister of Transport was endeavouring to make an accusation only a few lines later in respect to Conservatives outside the House and not members in the House, that certainly is not the context which is described by the language which I have just referred to; and if the Minister of Transport says today that he was talking about Conservative organizers and so forth, he is excused. However, on the basis of this language I would have to have him state here in this House that that language somehow did not refer to members of the House of Commons, and that if he did refer to members of the House of Commons he now withdraws that remark in respect to members of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure I understand your adjudication.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: I would like to make it perfectly clear that in the later reference to lies and deceptions I was referring to a general Conservative tactic and conduct and certainly not specifically to any members of parliament.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Cheap.

Mr. Lang: In the earlier one I did indeed, I think, describe exactly what I thought they did in the way of a tactic, in terms of talking one way in this House and talking another way outside the House. That did apply to members. But I am presuming that Your Honour does not indicate that that earlier reference is the unparliamentary one, so I do separate those two very completely.

Mr. Speaker: What I am saying is that the combination of the two references, so closely related, leads to a very clear suspicion, which the minister says is not the case. We accept the word of members in this House, but it leads to the clear impression that the two are tied together. He separates them in his mind, and I accept that; however, I would want the minister to make clear today the intent of the language he used, "lies and deceptions". I think we always have to be very careful. When we enter into that kind of language, we have to be absolutely clear that it is not in reference to members of the House of Commons, and I would want the minister now to make it absolutely clear that he was not making that reference in relation to members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is what I meant to do in my previous intervention. I do not so intend.

[Translation]

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as the national Leader of the Progressive Conservative party and as a member of this House, I am responsible in quite general terms for the strategy of my party. It is that very strategy which was attacked by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) last night in the House of Commons.

[English]

I am quite prepared to accept the ruling which Your Honour has made and the retraction you have extracted from the Minister of Transport. I will accept that on the very narrow procedural grounds which are the grounds to which Your Honour, by necessity, is confined.

What is of greater concern to me here, as I am sure it is to all hon. members of the House of Commons, is that we know that in this House we set a standard which is followed elsewhere in the country and which forms attitudes toward the goodwill which exists among peoples and regions in this country and also toward the very delicate and difficult question of national unity in this country. I think that whatever the technical ruling Your Honour has made in relation to this intemperate, unfortunate statement by the Minister of Transport, it is very clear that when a senior minister of the Crown of Canada can stand up in the House of Commons and make that kind of allegation, designed in its way to create apprehensions about the Progressive Conservative party and also designed to undermine and to sow discord in the country and to create suspicions where no suspicions should exist, then, sir, I think we have a rather different circumstance.

I quite accept that the circumstance which has arisen now as a result of the unfortunate, irresponsible and childish remarks of the Minister of Transport is one which cannot be dealt with in any further procedural way by Your Honour. But we have in the House with us now—and I appreciate his staying at my request—the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the leader of the party of the minister who has made this allegation against the Progressive Conservative party as a whole in the country and who has made these statements which clearly can lead to a very serious hostility in the country.

The Prime Minister has heard these remarks stated. He was not here yesterday. I recall that in 1968 when the Prime Minister was campaigning in his first election as leader of his party he had the courage and the courtesy, when faced with an advertisement placed in the name of the then Liberal candidate in Calgary South which made similar unfounded allegations against the Progressive Conservative party, to dissociate himself as leader of his party from those irresponsible remarks, and I hope that the Prime Minister of Canada will use this opportunity here, not to hide himself behind the narrow grounds which have provided some protection under the rules to the Minister of Transport, but instead to accept his larger responsibility to national unity and stand in his place and dissociate himself from the statements which have been made by the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Procedurally we are in a very vague area here. On procedural grounds the matter was resolved. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has been given the floor. He has raised a point to which I think the House obviously would expect a reply. However, the matter was raised by the Minister of Transport last night in debate. In so far as the comment was not made about members of the House of Commons, it is a comment which can be made by the Minister of Transport.

Debate on the bill will carry on today. There will be a few hours of debate later on this afternoon, and if there are to be further replies, they can be made in that debate.

In so far as there was an unparliamentary use of language, that has been corrected procedurally. But there are ways of answering the allegations—or repeating them, in fact—if in fact they are parliamentary allegations; and in so far as they do not apply to members of this House, no procedural objections can arise.

I see that the Minister of Transport wants to answer the Leader of the Opposition. I think it is only fair that he make a response and then, from a procedural point of view, the matter ought to be closed.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I need not take a great amount of time to respond, but I think the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) did in fact impute motives to me in terms of trying to create some unfortunate and disastrous results in the country by my comments.

I would just like to assure him that my motives are very much based on the hope that he may take his responsibilities and correct the actions which go on in the Conservative party so that there will not be seized the advantage of prejudices which do exist. If the Leader of the Opposition does not know how extensive they are, I ask him to accept the offer I also extended to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), and that is to let me take him to certain areas in the west and let him hear how deeply these divisions are sown. I have the hope that his party, as one of the traditional and ancient parties in this country, will adopt a standard designed to unite the country and not divide it and feed on prejudice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are on very doubtful procedural grounds here. The Leader of the Opposition has been given the floor. He made a request by way of intervention which does not in any way relate to a procedural matter. It certainly is not a point of order. It certainly is not a question of privilege. The procedural matter has been settled. The debate will go on for the rest of the afternoon, and there will be all kinds of speeches and suggestions made during the course of the balance of the debate. But there really is no procedural basis upon which we can now go on to recognize other hon. members so that they can make other contributions to a non-procedural point.

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, may I respectfully submit that the only retraction here has been about lies and deceptions and urgings to hate. I as a member of the Conservative party in the House have also been accused of seizing every opportunity to encourage feelings of hate and antipathy in this country. There has been no withdrawal of that statement by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang).

● (1522)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Hon. gentlemen opposite can howl all they like; we have our reputation to defend, Mr. Speaker. At page 6127 of Hansard the minister has clearly libelled every member of the Conservative party in the House by saying:

—they seize upon every—opportunity—to encourage feelings of hate and antipathy in this country.

I have never done that, nor has anyone else on this side of the House. So I put it you, Mr. Speaker, that the minister has not retracted that part of his remark.

An hon. Member: The decision has been rendered.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member misunderstands, and I will say it one more time. Procedurally, members of the House of Commons are restricted in making allegations in various forms of unparliamentary language against members of the House of Commons. They are not under the same constraints in respect of other groups of people. Therefore, if any member of the House feels himself aggrieved as part of a larger group, there are several recourses for him. If it is a political aspersion, it can be defended in a political circle; if it is a debating point, it can be carried on in the debate this afternoon. But on procedural grounds, the minister has made an allegation which, in my opinion, indicated it may be directed at members of the House of Commons, and in so far as it was, it was unparliamentary. Therefore, I insisted that it be withdrawn in respect of members of the House of Commons.

I think hon. members should understand that the precedents indicate quite clearly that a general aspersion against a group of people, whether it happens to include members of the House of Commons or not, is not to be included in those parliamentary categories. Therefore, whether a member of the House of Commons incidentally, as part of a larger group, feels himself aggrieved by the aspersion is beside the point.

In any case, I have ruled on the matter procedurally and the minister has indicated his withdrawal of any unparliamentary remarks in the sense that they might have been directed at members of the opposition here, and that closes the matter procedurally.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what is my position as regards the challenge made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark)? I was asked some questions by the Leader of the Opposition. Are you ruling that it is not in order for me to answer them at this time?

Mr. Speaker: I felt that I should indicate a response of equal proportion. I thought that response was taken up by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). If the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) were to make a reply at this time, it seems to me that it would have to be only with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, just before we deal with the matter of unanimous consent, may I say that I hope we will not get into this matter too deeply, and I will tell you why, sir. Just after you made your ruling and after the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) had spoken for the last time—and we will make our judgment on what he said—the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) was on his feet trying to get the floor, but you did not see him—and I use that expression in the procedural sense. I think that if the issue is going to be opened up—and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will be allowed to speak if he wishes to do so—then I think the hon. member for Halifax should be allowed to do so as well, and any other member of the House of Commons. I merely point that out to you, sir, to indicate the extent to which we might very well be proceeding if you adopt the practice of asking for unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I had indicated earlier my disposition of the matter and I said that the Leader of the Opposition had been given the floor, as is often the case on an unclear point from the procedural point of view, and that I thought a reply should be given, which it was. I said that there was no procedural basis upon which I could recognize any other member without opening a debate.

I think that is probably the safest course to take, notwithstanding the desire of several members, including the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Halifax, to get into the debate; and I think that upon that procedural basis I should take the safe course and close it off.

MR. BROADBENT—ANSWER GIVEN BY MINISTER OF STATE FOR URBAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on an entirely different question of privilege. Earlier in the question period, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), either deliberately or inadvertently—and I am assuming the latter until he clarifies the record—told the House that under the changes announced in the housing program those who are going to get a subsidy for mortgages in the co-op housing section would get a mortgage of 1 per cent for 35 years. The clear, commonsense interpretation of that answer is that anyone who is in a co-op housing project would get that 1 per cent mortgage for 35 years.

As the minister surely knows, the reality is that such is not the case. According to a document which was circulated by his own department in the month of May, the reality is that someone in a co-op housing project might get a subsidy down to the 1 per cent level and might get it extended year after year for up to 35 years. Because of other changes made in the regulations by his department, it is most unlikely that anything approaching a significant number of people going to that co-op project, would be eligible for a 1 per cent mortgage and subsidy, on the assumption that a significant number in that project were eligible for a 1 per cent mortgage subsidy.

That is a very important point because the minister, in his remarks today, left the impression that there is a fundamental change in policy which will be to the advantage of the co-ops rather than, as many of them see it, to their disadvantage.

I should like him to clarify the record on that point and make it clear that it is just possible that a few people might get a subsidy down to the 1 per cent level. In that context, would he clarify the other concern which is directly related?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) is raising what is essentially a point of disagreement or interpretation. However, in case there has been, as we have recognized in the past, the possibility of a misleading reference, the minister may contribute now, but I do not think it should go much further.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think I should say very briefly that perhaps I should send to the hon. member and to other members of the House some background information on the proposal which will clearly indicate its intent and its advantages, as the policy has been amended. This should meet some of the remarks which have been made by the co-op groups and non-profit groups.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. WHITEWAY—ALLEGED MISLEADING OF HOUSE BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order regarding a statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I think the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) might want to correct a misleading statement made by the Prime Minister in answer to a question from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), in which the Prime Minister indicated that the new housing initiatives have been taken by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs with the agreement of the provinces.

The Minister of State for Urban Affairs then rose in his place and, in answer to a later question, indicated that the province of Manitoba had not given agreement. The telegram which he quoted clearly states that the province of Manitoba wishes to reach agreement at the earliest opportunity. That is a clear indication that the minister proceeded with the housing program without the consent or agreement of the province. The Prime Minister, deliberately or inadvertently, misled the House by saying, in answer to an earlier question, that the new initiatives have taken place with the agreement of the province.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely the hon. member raises a matter of disagreement, not a matter of order.

MR. STEVENS—CLARIFICATION REGARDING TABLING OF WAYS AND MEANS MOTION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my point of order touches on the order of business for today and certainly for tomorrow. As you know, sir, we had difficulty with the original tax motion with respect to a portion of Bill C-56, and your ruling called for the tabling of a new tax motion, a new ways and means motion, which would facilitate whatever the government saw fit to do with respect to clause 30 of Bill C-56.

• (1532)

The reason for my point of order was perhaps to receive clarification from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) as to whether he intends to table notice of his ways and means motion today, so that it might be concurred in tomorrow on the assumption that we will move into committee of the whole stage tomorrow, at which point we may well reach clause 30.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, in the ruling you made in this House, you indicated that it was not necessary to table a notice of an amended ways and means motion before we reached examination of Clause 30. If the opposition were ready to guarantee that the 29 preceding clauses will be agreed to quickly, with the unanimous consent of the House, we might adopt an amended ways and means motion which could comply with your ruling a few days ago.

[English]

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. A rather difficult procedural problem is created for the House by the failure of the Government of Canada, when it first introduced the ways and means motion relative to Bill C-56, to have clearly in its mind what exactly it was going to propose. Your Honour has ruled on that by indicating that before we get to clause 30 tomorrow, a new ways and means motion must be approved by the House in which the Government of Canada spells out what it proposes in Bill C-56.

The government has chosen to introduce closure. That issue was debated and lost yesterday by this side of the House. There will be a vote today, and then we will proceed tomorrow into clause by clause consideration of Bill C-56. Perhaps clause by clause debate in committee of the whole will go very quickly tomorrow. If that is the case, surely it would be helpful to the House of Commons, if we are not stopped by a failure of confidence by the government, to introduce a ways and means motion in time to allow us to deal with that clause if we come to it. We do not know if we will come to it, but perhaps we will. The rules of the House require that notice must be given the day before in order for us to deal with clause 30.

Perhaps some Liberal members will want to hold up debate and perhaps there will be some serious disagreement on the preceding 29 clauses. Also it is important to contemplate that the House of Commons may want to deal with the new clause 30 tomorrow, that part of the bill which the government will change as soon as an arrangement has been worked out with the government of Quebec.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has two options open to him. He can introduce that ways and means motion today, which would allow us to deal with clause 30 if we come to it tomorrow. Perhaps his difficulty is that he does not know what he wants to propose. Yesterday he imposed closure on a matter the nature of which he did not know. Perhaps he does not know what he intends to put in the ways and means motion.

The other option open to him, since he does not know what he wants to propose and what he wants parliament to deal with tomorrow during clause by clause consideration, is that he may want to suggest to the House leader that we withdraw the bill and go on to other matters where the government is ready.

I see the minister is shaking his head and indicating no. Thus I assume the minister has come to some conclusion as to how he will amend clause 30 and how he will amend the ways and means motion. If that is the case, then it is very much in the interests of progress in the House of Commons and very much the responsibility of the minister to introduce that ways and means motion right now.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) to use the proper terms. He indicated that yesterday I used the procedure of closure in the House. That is not the case. I used the time allocation procedure. There is a difference.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: It is completely different. Closure does not permit any more discussion on a bill. We have provided 11 days for the second reading debate. The hon. member should be correct and indicate that we have used time allocation, which is a very proper rule. After nine days of debate, I provided another day and a half of discussion.

Dealing with the ways and means motion, I confirm the decision of the Chair. Your Honour said that I had to table the amended ways and means motion, if I so wished, before the House reached consideration of clause 30. If the hon. Leader of the Opposition is willing to guarantee that the preceding 29 clauses will be passed very early, I would not mind tabling the ways and means motion.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition likes to presume if there will or will not be an agreement with the province of Quebec. I do not know this. For approximately two months I have sought an agreement. Yesterday I read in the newspaper that Quebec will probably propose my own proposition. If that is the case, perhaps an amendment to the bill will not be necessary. We will see when we arrive at clause 30. If the opposition wants to collaborate with me and pass 29 clauses tomorrow, I will be ready to table a ways and means motion with unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should like to refer to the relevant portions of the hon. member's point of order and the second last paragraph of my earlier ruling on this matter. I referred to May's Parliamentary Practice, 19th edition, page 790, which reads as follows:

> If any provisions of a bill are found to go beyond the resolutions on which the bill is founded, further resolutions must be passed—

The operative word is "passed" and not "tabled". It continues:

> —before those provisions are considered in committee on the bill—

The second relevant reference would be Standing Order 60(1) which reads as follows:

> A notice of a ways and means motion may be laid upon the Table of the House at any time during a sitting by a minister of the Crown, but such a motion may not be proposed in the same sitting.

Subsequently the rules indicate that the taking up of such a ways and means motion is without debate and the question for concurrence is put without debate.

The procedural point raised is the question of possible consideration of clause 30 in committee of the whole stage. These are the provisions which apply to it. If that were to take place tomorrow, it cannot take place on the basis of the precedents I have cited until the amended ways and means motion is passed. It can be passed tomorrow if notice is given today. Notice can be given today at any time during this sitting, in the language of Standing Order 60(1).

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, it would clarify this issue greatly if the minister would simply indicate whether he has an amended, suitable tax motion to give notice of today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure if the minister had one that he would give it.

Mr. Chrétien: If the opposition wants to agree to pass the 29 clauses tomorrow, I am willing to give notice today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The request that a minister make some sort of notice or table a document surely is not a point of order. If the minister seeks to table a document, a point of order may arise. To simply ask a minister to take such a step does not constitute a point of order.

PUBLIC OPINION POLL DISCLOSURE ACT

MEASURE TO ELIMINATE MISLEADING INFORMATION DERIVED FROM POLLS

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-459, respecting public opinion polls.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, this bill would require those who release public opinion polls during the time of a writ, either in respect of a general election or a by-election, to give certain adequate information regarding such polls so that the public could ascertain the validity and reliability of such polls.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 491 and 1,375.

[Text]

CANADIAN PACIFIC

Question No. 491—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. Over the past five years, has Canadian Pacific received any grants from the government and, if so, in each case, what was the (a) amount (b) date (c) allocation?

2. Was a portion of the grants assigned to the North Bay area and, if so (a) what percentage (b) what amount was used for the road that runs through the Constituency of Témiscamingue?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. Yes. The information requested is available in the CTC Annual Reports No. 6 to 10 tabled each year from 1972 to 1976 in the House of Commons.

2. Canadian Pacific Ltd.'s application to abandon its Ville Marie Subdivision, between Gaboury and Ville Marie (7.7 miles), and a portion of its Temiscaming Subdivision from Gendreau running through Gaboury to Angliers (69.0 miles) was filed with the Commission October 27, 1977. No subsidies have been paid to date on either of these lines. Canadian Pacific will not be entitled to subsidy on these lines until 90 days after October 27, 1977, as per Section 256(1) of the Railway Act. Subsidies will not be paid until such time as a public hearing has been held on these lines and/or the Commission has determined that actual losses have been incurred by Canadian Pacific. The future of these two lines will be tetermined on the basis of a public hearing at which time all interested parties may present their views, verbally or in writing. No abandonment of these Subdivisions would occur before such a public hearing is held. Based on the workload before the Railway Transport Committee at this time, it is doubtful such a public hearing would take place before the latter half of 1978, at the very earliest.

In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned:

CPR—SUBSIDIZATION

Question No. 1,375—Mr. Jones:

Is Canadian Pacific Railway subsidized in part by Canadian government funds, and if so, what are the names of its shareholders and what is the amount of their shares?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): For the first part of the question, please see replies to questions No. 17 ordered December 18, 1974, No. 1,250 ordered April 29, 1977, and No. 491 answered this day. For the second part of the question, see Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, citation 171(dd).

POINT OF ORDER

MR. ALEXANDER—REPLY GIVEN TO QUESTION 1,216

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in respect of questions on the order paper, and I would beg your indulgence for a couple of moments, sir.

On January 25 I placed a question on the order paper, No. 1,216, which reads as follows:

For each department, what was the total expenditure on air travel during the last year for which figures are available and, in each case, how much was for (a) domestic (b) overseas flights?

A return was tabled last Friday, and I would have been reluctantly prepared to accept the advice of the President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) when his return was tabled as follows:

The information on all air travel booked directly by each department i.e. last minute reservations, etc., is not readily available. To provide an accurate reply would entail a lengthy and costly examination of thousands of travel claims for every department, which cost in manpower and time would be exorbitant or prohibitive.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I would have been reluctantly prepared to accept that, but we have received further answers in respect of that same question. We find that the Department of National Defence did give a reply to the effect that, because of the complexity of the question, they could not answer it. I would have been happy with that as well.

However, we have an answer in respect of the Department of External Affairs, and it was at this point that I began to feel that the House was being misled by the minister or the office of the President of Privy Council, or that they were at least being less than honest with members of parliament. This department did answer the question. They were able to come up with the figure of some $4 million.

That is not the end of it, sir. We then received another return, and this is most important because sometimes I find that the office of the President of Privy Council is less than co-operative. I do not suggest officials intentionally attempt to mislead the House, but in this case at least I think they were less than honest. The return from the Department of Supply and Services is as follows:

Insofar as the Department of Supply and Services is concerned:

The total expenditure on air travel booked through the Central Travel Service of the Department of Supply and Services was $30,539,494.00 in 1976-77, the last year for which complete figures are available.

Information is not accessible on the division between domestic and overseas flights.

My point of order arises from the return tabled by the President of the Privy Council through the parliamentary secretary which, in effect, states that the question is too complex, would cost too much money to answer, would call for the expenditure of a tremendous amount of manpower, and accordingly will not be answered department by department. We then find a department answering the same question, namely the Department of Supply and Services, which refers to expenditures in terms of air travel for 67 agencies, including the departments.

I suggest there are too many of these stock type of answers. With all due respect, the parliamentary secretary has egg on his face. I hope in the future when questions are replied to there will be some co-ordination. The replies to question 1,216 would indicate there is something lacking in respect of co-ordination of answers given to questions on the order paper.

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we guarantee one thing: the most serious and complete research possible in order to give answers that are as complete and as accurate as possible. Unfortunately, we cannot give the hon. member a guarantee that he will be satisfied, on the political level, with the replies he receives. We are not here in this House to serve the political ends of the hon. member; we are here, at the taxpayers' expense, to try to give him the most complete answers possible.

As was explained in the reply in most of the departments concerned we could not obtain the requested details; that is why, because of the costs and the time factor involved, the hon. member did not get the answer he had requested. Fortunatly, in some cases, he did get a global amount but no breakdown, precisely for the reasons explained in the reply we gave him. In short, Mr. Speaker, once again, the employees of the Privy Council office always do their best to give hon. members on both sides of the House the most responsible, honest, accurate and complete answers possible. That has been our attitude in this session when up to now we have already replied to 73 per cent of all questions on the order paper. So I would ask the hon. member to be more understanding and much more courteous, and not to think when we answer questions that we are trying to mislead the House. Such is definitely not our motivation. Once again, we are not here to look after the political yearnings of the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring to the attention of the parliamentary secretary question No. 1,295 which I placed on the order paper on February 7. It is a simple question asked of the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) regarding a program called "Open House Canada". I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary could look into the matter and find out why it is taking so long to getting around to answering it.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I also have a complaint in respect of delays in answering order paper questions. Last year on December 7 I placed question No. 895 on the other paper as follows:

> Are Members of Parliament entitled to use DOT Telex "Comcen" facilities for the purpose of sending political messages to their constituency and, if so, how many members used such facilities in 1976-77—

That was six months ago. Last fall I presented evidence at a committee meeting that the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) was being allowed to use DOT telex facilities to send out political—and I have to refer to it as "garbage". We are entitled to an answer as to how many Liberal members are allowed to use this DOT telex network to send out political messages. This is information that could have been provided within a week. Here we are six months later without an answer.

I realize this is a very embarrassing question to the government but, nevertheless, I am entitled to an answer. Six months is a ridiculous length of time to provide an answer to a question like that. I would like the parliamentary secretary to look into the matter and give some indication as to when I can expect to receive an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Tuesday, June 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-56, to amend the statute relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, when the debate ended last night, I was going to say that some people do not seem to understand the facts of the dispute between Ottawa and Quebec concerning the sales tax, a dispute which is admittedly very complex, but some do not really understand the facts of the matter or still they try to make political capital by using arguments which strike the people's imagination but have strictly nothing to do, Mr. Speaker, with the matter before us. For example, how can someone say that to give an $85 or $100 tax credit to Quebec taxpayers is socially unjust because the underprivileged will receive nothing?

I think, Mr. Speaker, that any one who feels he can make a useful contribution to this debate should at least know that the problem is merely to find a means to transfer to the Quebec government an amount of $226 million to compensate the Quebec Treasury for part of the loss it incurred following the removal of the sales tax on a number of items. In short, Mr. Speaker, these tax credits granted by the federal government will be of no use whatever to those taxpayers since their tax burden will be increased by the Quebec government by an amount equal to the federal tax cut. Hence, Mr. Speaker, I find quite irresponsible a statement such as the one made by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) who said in Montreal on May 28, and I quote:

> We shall never agree to the Chrétien proposal. This formula is unfair because it benefits the wealthy and penalizes the poor.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, such a statement does not mean anything at all. Either the Leader of the Opposition does not know what he is talking about, in which case he should shut up, or he does, and then he should have the decency to recognize that such a statement is irrelevant. Also, Mr. Speaker, what about the argument to the effect that a tax credit of $85 or less to Quebec taxpayers would have very little effect on the economy since the recipients tend to buy less than non-taxpayers, and thus might not inject the amounts received into the economy.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, such an argument holds no water since it is a cut in the sales tax, whatever form it may take, which is supposed to stimulate the economy, and not the money given to the taxpayers by the federal government, which one way or another will end up in the provincial treasury. The same applies to the argument that it would be preferable to give the tax credit on the basis of the 1977 tax returns because a larger number of taxpayers would then be eligible and the economic incentive would be more immediate. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, the tax credit has nothing to do with social justice since the recipients of that money would not benefit from it and would have to turn it over, as extra tax, to the Quebec treasury. The taxpayer, in that case, is nothing more than a conveyor between two governments, and the tax credit would not serve as an economic incentive, since it is only through sales tax cuts that the economy can be put on the way to recovery.

Mr. Speaker, last week's events have clearly demonstrated the willingness of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and his eagerness to find a honourable solution to this legal problem. I commend him for proposing to his Quebec counterpart a $100 tax cut for each and every Quebec taxpayer in 1978. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I deplore the fact that the Quebec minister of finance did not find it advisable to explore fairly and immediately the offer which was made to him last Thursday by the Minister of Finance of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to fight for the interests of Quebeckers, but their elected representatives in the Quebec government should indeed adopt a reasonable attitude which would make negotiations possible. I feel that the reasons put forward by the Quebec minister of finance for turning down the federal government's offer do not carry any weight and cannot stand analysis. For instance, how can he claim that this generous offer will penalize the less fortunate when he knows perfectly well that this tax cut would serve only to vacate a fiscal field which the Quebec government could take over to recover the funds it is entitled to receive? Moreover, Mr. Speaker, he is not very convincing when he criticizes the last federal offer for not providing for a cash payment of some $40 million as compensation for the equivalent of the province's 2 per cent sales tax reduction on clothing, footwear, textiles and furniture. Mr. Speaker, he is fully aware that Quebec will not lose these $40 million which are part of the $226 million which would be transferred to the Quebec government under the new tax cut scheme proposed by Ottawa. Finally, why does he come up with the cost of some $8 or $9 million in interest which would result from the transfer only next year of this tax money, when the federal Minister of Finance has clearly indicated that this question is negotiable?

Mr. Speaker, we learned yesterday from the media that the Quebec minister of finance seemed to have had second thoughts about the whole matter and appeared quite willing to come to an agreement. Whatever may happen, Mr. Speaker, whether the current negotiations come to an happy or unhappy conclusion, I sincerely hope that the federal Minister of Finance will continue to demonstrate the open-mindedness which served to increase his stature over the past week and include clause 30, the proposal he made to Quebec last Thursday, in Bill C-56.

To put it in a nutshell, Mr. Speaker, the idea is to grant Quebec taxpayers a $100 tax-rebate for the year 1978, hopefully, pending an agreement on the procedure to be followed by the Quebec government when it takes over fiscal jurisdiction from the federal government. The Quebec minister of Finance would apparently be prepared to give up the idea of a tax collection agreement. I am happy about this latest development which heralds the end of a useless quarrel. But I think that for the sake of Quebeckers it would be preferable to go one step further than a $226 million reduction in federal taxes and a corresponding increase in provincial taxes. As the leader of the Quebec Liberal party pointed out recently, we should not end up, Mr. Speaker, with some taxpayers suffering inequities in all this matter, such as, for example, double taxation on a short-term basis or retroactive taxing by the Quebec government.

To avoid these difficulties, it seems to me that a collection agreement is practically essential unless it is technically feasible to avoid these difficulties without such an agreement. But if such an agreement is necessary and can be entered into, it should not be interpreted as an additional concession to the Quebec government, but rather as the expression of a federal concern not to penalize anyone in Quebec. I would add, Mr. Speaker, that any agreement between Quebec and Ottawa should include the explicit commitment by the Quebec government to take over the whole power of taxation from Ottawa so that it would not be tempted to gain political advantages by refusing to accept all the monies transferred by the federal government to the Quebec taxpayers under the $100 tax rebate.

Mr. Speaker, I shall close on this note and I am happy to see that the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) is in the House. It has been quite natural for the official opposition in the last few weeks to criticize the Minister of Finance and to pretend that it was defending Quebec interests. They thus obtained political capital at little cost by using such nonsensical arguments as the one used by their leader and which I mentioned earlier. I want to say very clearly and specifically to the hon. member for Joliette that his crying and his anger have contributed very little to the solution which seems to have been found for this conflict. Moreover, I would like to caution him that his party should not accuse the government of having been overly flexible towards Quebec once this problem has been resolved.

We are used to this type of double play by the Progressive Conservatives as far as Quebec is concerned. I remember that in last year's federal by-elections, the hon. member for Joliette went around Quebec saying that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was too rigid in his stand on the constitution and that he was refusing to grant additional powers to the Quebec government, on matters of immigration, for instance.

At the same time, at the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, some of his colleagues accused the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) of wanting to sign with Quebec an agreement which would balkanize the country. Mr. Speaker, members of the opposition should stop saying one thing in Quebec and something else everywhere else in Canada. Mr. Speaker, since this bill will not penalize financially the people of Quebec and since the Minister of Finance has shown his good will by offering Quebec a tax rebate of $100 for 1978, I shall support this bill when the vote is taken at the conclusion of the debate on second reading.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to enter this debate until I listened to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) speak earlier this afternoon. I participate in the debate mainly in response to the suggestion of Mr. Speaker that this debate might be an appropriate place to make the response that I wish to make to the Minister of Transport.

With regard to the bill itself, I think the position of my party has been very well put and very well stated. We have been asked—indeed compelled—to vote today. I do not know whether the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has time enough to come in and hear my remarks or not. We are being asked today to vote on a bill, the terms of which we do not know. It is as simple as that. The Minister of Finance speaks of being flexible, which is another way of saying that the bill, in its most important aspect as far as this House is concerned, may be very significantly changed in committee.

I never expected to sit in this House and be required to vote on closure on a bill, the terms of which I do not know. I think it is most extraordinary. If the roles were reversed and my hon. friends opposite by some strange coincidence found themselves in opposition, I can just imagine what a howl they would put up if they were confronted with a closure motion to vote on a bill, the terms of which are not in the bill itself. They are not even in the head of the Minister of Finance. I take it the Minister of Finance has some things in his head, but that is not one of them.

It is most extraordinary. I do not wish to use excessive language, but surely what is being asked of the House of Commons today is an affront to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I presume you do not know what I will do.

An hon. Member: You do not know either.

Mr. Stanfield: I agree; I do not know what the minister will do. I agree that he does not know—

Mr. Chrétien: I think you do not.

Mr. Stanfield: If the minister does know, that makes the affront even more offensive. There is a double affront to this House. The minister sits there grinning. He thinks he has the troops and I am sure he has got the troops.

Mr. Prud'homme: Wait until we read you this letter.

Mr. Boulanger: You are filibustering.

Mr. Stanfield: If the hon. member wishes to speak he will have his opportunity. I am not going to speak for very long.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) has the floor.

Mr. Stanfield: I think the hon. member who is interrupting me is fundamentally a good natured man but he finds himself in a tight position on this bill and his usual good nature is giving way under the difficulties in which he finds himself.

Mr. Boulanger: I am surprised that you follow Joe Clark in this manner.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, some people can speak better from the seat of their trousers than on their feet. It is an old gag to be rude to a member when he is speaking, but the hon. gentleman does not really bother me. This is a further indication of the extent to which supporters of the government are bothered by the situation in which they find themselves.

I say it is an affront for the minister to introduce closure to compel the House to vote on a bill, the terms of which are not clear to the House. Furthermore, we are being asked to vote on a bill which does not conform with the ways and means motion. We are being compelled, through closure, to vote on a bill which does not comply with the ways and means motion.

The minister finds himself in a difficult position. He tells the House—and I believe him—that he thought he was doing something useful for the country; he thought a reduction in sales tax was a useful thing to do at the present time and he set up to confront the provinces and get their agreement.

The difficulty is that he did not get the agreement of all the provinces. My hon. friends opposite can criticize the government of Quebec as much as they like and say it is regrettable that the government of Quebec was not prepared to go along with the Government of Canada and the rest of the country. The fact remains, however, that there is nothing in the constitution that requires the government of Quebec to go along with the Minister of Finance or the other provinces. There is nothing in our constitution nor in the spirit of our constitution which gives any of us the right to criticize the government of Quebec for refusing to go along with the proposal.

I hope the Minister of Finance will work this out eventually. I hope he is able to reach an accommodation with the government of Quebec. I say in all sincerity that there is no justification for introducing closure on a bill to bring about a sales tax reduction in the province of Quebec and across the country without the consent and approval of the provinces. In other words, I say in all sincerity that I understand the minister being worked up and feeling badly about the situation he is in.

Mr. Chrétien: Not at all.

● (1612)

Mr. Stanfield: He says not at all. I think he should. I hope he is able to work it out eventually. However, he ought not to ask this House to vote on the question until he has it worked out.

I want to say something else on this point in connection with the bill. The Minister of Finance and other members on that side of the House, realizing that they are in a position of some difficulty, try to work out their difficulty by attacking the motives of myself and other members of the opposition. They take the view that you cannot disagree with or criticize the position of this government unless you are a separatist or have separatist tendencies.

Whenever the Minister of Finance is asked about the level of the dollar or some other aspect of the policy which he finds difficulty in answering, he criticizes the motives of those asking the question. I had hoped we had gotten beyond that in this country. I must protest the tone of that kind of response.

I resent very much hearing the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), for example, suggest that members of the opposition are speculating on the dollar. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) accused members of the opposition of speculating on the dollar. There has been no withdrawal of either remark. The Minister of Finance and others are constantly accusing the members of the opposition of hurting the country, being only interested in securing some cheap political advantage, incidentally never giving any information and never answering the question.

I would not have risen simply to have made these points today, because I think they have been pretty well made already. However, the Minister of Transport took off last night and he took off again in the House this afternoon. He said it was the tactics of the Conservative party to divide the country. Last night he said, and I quote him:

> Time and time again, Mr. Speaker, the tragedy of the action of the Conservative party is that, whatever its public and apparent stand is here in this House, back on the hustings across this country they seize upon every . . . opportunity . . . to encourage feelings of hate and antipathy in this country.

As a former leader of the Conservative party for some seven years or so, I had some responsibility for the tactics of the Conservative party at that time. It was very clear from the minister's remarks that he was speaking about the tactics of the Conservative party for some period of time. He called upon the present leader to correct these tactics.

I recognize the need for all of us who are members of parliament, and indeed everybody who has any part to play in public life in this country, not only to exercise restraint in terms of people in other parts of the country and in terms of people who speak in tongue different from theirs, but to recognize the responsibility we all have to encourage restraint and increase understanding. I say to you in all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, we do not need the kind of vicious, unrestrained remarks that the Minister of Transport made in the House last night and again this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! The parliamentary secretary rises on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I want to reserve the right and privilege of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to raise a question of privilege regarding the term just used by the previous speaker. Obviously, the word "vicious" is unparliamentary and I want to reserve the right of the Minister of Transport.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: I was making the point, before the parliamentary secretary saw the need to rise and make his point, that we all have a responsibility to exercise restraint and to try to increase understanding in this country. We all have a responsibility to refrain from inflammatory remarks which encourage distrust in our country. We do not need the kind of hot-headed, unrestrained, intolerant, unjustified and, indeed, vicious remark made by the Minister of Transport in the House and the drift of his remarks here this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I recognize that through the years there has been a tendency among candidates from time to time to get a little enthusiastic in their desire to get votes and succeed in getting elected and to yield to the temptation of attacking some other parts of the country. For many years the Liberal party made quite a thing about attacking Toronto, the people of Ontario and those in my own province of Nova Scotia. One can say that is fair game. I do not make too much about that. It is an old practice. It did not involve any racist element or anything of that sort.

I recognize as well that there are times when advertising during campaigns gets a little out of hand. I recall very well during the 1968 campaign—and I am sure this was not the wish of the Prime Minister—the Liberal party in western Canada running on the basis that the Prime Minister was the one to put Quebec in its place. Some Liberal candidates in Alberta, or at least their associations, ran ads accusing me, as leader of the Progressive Conservative party, of supporting special status for Quebec. Those ads had no purpose other than their obvious purpose, and that was to create doubt in the minds of the people in the west as to how firm I was on Quebec. They wanted to create the impression that I was soft on Quebec and that I would yield to Quebec things that ought not to be yielded to Quebec. I had to chase the Prime Minister through most of that campaign in 1968 to get him to repudiate that kind of approach and advertising.

I had some trouble with advertising in 1972. A couple of constituencies engaged in advertising which was considered doubtful. One was around the Lakehead.

During that campaign I was also in Alberta. Correspondence called to my attention an advertisement being run on behalf of the then hon. member for Crowfoot. I got in touch with the hon. member's campaign manager who stated quite simply they had not considered anything offensive in that ad. I asked that it not be run again, and it was not. I do not make anything particularly of it. I simply indicate there have been instances in which advertising has been run by candidates, or associations on their behalf, which was at least of doubtful tendency in terms of its significance. It has not been limited to the Conservative party.

● (1622)

The reason I am taking part in this debate today is the reference made by the Minister of Transport to the practice and tactics of my party. I am rather proud of my party. I do not want to be too thin-skinned but I like to think that while I did not become prime minister I did at least not pursue or permit tactics which divided the country. There may have been some things in my party which could be criticized. There are a good many things I see in the Liberal party which I have criticized—and I could go back over them today beyond those I have mentioned.

There can be no question that it is a challenge in this country to achieve understanding between the various regions and an even greater challenge to achieve understanding between the French and English speaking people. My party under its present leadership is dedicated to improving and increasing that understanding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I like to think at least that I worked in that direction myself and I deeply resent, both personally and on behalf of my party, the intolerant, unrestrained and savage attack by the Minister of Transport. I think it was unworthy of a minister and his words could do nothing to improve understanding and a feeling of unity in our country. I deeply regret that they were uttered. Perhaps he, also, deeply regrets having said those things last night, but being a stubborn man he was not prepared to back off today.

Mr. Speaker, no one party in this country has a monopoly on good motives. No one party has a monopoly on patriotism. I myself distrust people who talk too much about patriotism. I think there is a lot to be said for the remark of old Dr. Johnson, who said that patriotism was the last refuge of a scoundrel. I suggested jokingly to the Minister of Finance in a private conversation last evening that he should bear those words in mind himself.

To conclude, I do not expect the Minister of Transport to withdraw any more or to express any regret. But as a former leader of the party I repudiate the attack made on my party and indirectly on myself personally. I repudiate it and I say to all members of the House that, if we are going to work to keep this country together, let us stop attacking the motives of those who are opposed to us and let us really seek to improve understanding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few brief comments. Many Canadians, through cable television, are now in the fortunate or unfortunate position, depending upon one's point of view, of being able to watch the proceedings of this House on a regular basis. I do not know what message other members have received but the message I have had is that, by and large, they view us as being long winded, repetitious, frequently fuzzy-minded and sometimes downright boring.

One of my friends was quoting Woodrow Wilson to me the other day in this regard. When Wilson was asked how long it would take him to prepare a speech, he said: "If you want me to talk for two hours, I will start right now. If you want me to talk for 40 minutes it will take me about a week. If you want me to speak for ten minutes it will take me about two weeks". My friend went on to recommend that most of us should be using the ten-minute version in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Buchanan: I will endeavour to comply. First, I should like to praise my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). We have heard a great deal of criticism directed at the initiative he has taken. I suggest it was a vital and important initiative as far as this country is concerned. For the first time in Canadian history he went out to talk to his provincial counterparts before bringing in his budget to see whether there were any provincial initiatives which could be taken to the advantage of the country as a whole. Such an innovation, viewed against the background of the difficult times which Canada, along with much of the world, is passing, was, it seems to me, crucial to the well-being of the country.

I trust the response my colleague has received will not dissuade him from taking similar initiatives in the future. He would certainly be the first to admit that the result has not been a smooth operation or that there has not been a certain roughness around the edges. Nevertheless he has made a significant and important effort.

It was only after the acceptance of the budget by eight provinces that Quebec said no and produced a scheme designed mainly to benefit that province regardless of its impact on the rest of the country. It was a scheme designed to be divisive and to tear apart the Canadian market rather than unify it. The immediate reaction of the Tory party was: Whatever Levesque and Parizeau approve, we support.

Mr. Stanfield: There you go again!

Mr. Buchanan: I am sorry the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) takes umbrage at that remark. I think it is important that the reality be stated unequivocally. The stand to which I have referred was asserted day after day in the House of Commons by all members opposite and then repeated in Montreal by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark).

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I take exception to that statement. I hesitated to interrupt the minister. Nevertheless, the phrase he used, "all members of the opposition", includes me. The stance I have taken has been an Alberta stance. It had nothing to do with Parizeau. The minister should be more careful when making statements in the House.

Mr. Buchanan: The hon. member is quite correct in that all members opposite have not spoken on this bill. I will say, then, that the vast majority of the members of the Conservative party who have spoken on this subject, including their leader, have taken that position unequivocally.

When the Minister of Finance proposed to finance part of the selective cuts and all of a 2 per cent reduction for six months of the general retail sales tax in Quebec, the Tory party waited for the PQ to reject the counter-proposal and then rejected it themselves. When, for a period of weeks, Mr. Parizeau gave no sign of life, when, in his own words, he "behaved like the cow watching the train go by", the opposition spent its time attacking the Minister of Finance for what they called his inflexibility and bad faith. Never once did it cross the mind of the opposition that the Minister of Finance was faced by adversaries dedicated to the break-up of Canada.

● (1632)

As far as the Leader of the Opposition is concerned, the enemy of the federal Liberals is his friend. We do not want, nor do we need, the Parti Québécois for a friend. I suggest that hon. members opposite should beware of Pequistes bearing electoral gifts. When the Minister of Finance proposed an income tax refund of up to $85 for Quebec federal taxpayers based on the taxation year 1977, the Leader of the Opposition was outraged. Last week when the Minister of Finance stated that he was prepared to change the refund from 1977 to 1978 so as to meet some of the objections to his proposal, what was the reaction of the Leader of the Opposition? On Friday he said that the minister was refusing to give an immediate economic stimulus to the economy of the province of Quebec. He cannot have it both ways. He cannot talk out of both sides of his mouth at the same time.

The lesson of the last many weeks is that we in Canada are dealing with a formidable and dangerous adversary in the separatist government in Quebec. The Minister of Finance made one proposal before his budget which Quebec rejected only after the budget. Since then he has made four proposals, one on April 25, one on May 15 and two last week. All have been summarily and arrogantly rejected by Mr. Parizeau and the Tory party.

It is obvious that an agreement on a national plan of economic benefit to Canada is not in the best interests of the government of Quebec, nor does it fit with its goals. Opposition members seem to be unwittingly going to bed with the Pequiste government and supporting a position held by that government, which is bent on destroying Canada. Its objective is to tear Quebec out of the Canadian confederation. I have a great deal of respect and even affection for my hon. colleagues opposite, but I am distressed because I firmly believe that they are being duped. They cannot continue to do pirouettes with their tongues and dance from one position to another. It is a ballet of politics with no grace and no finesse, and the people of Canada clearly see that. C'est vrai, n'est-ce pas?

The objective of the measure put forward by the Minister of Finance clearly was to increase and to stimulate consumer demand in Canada. Last weekend I was attending a meeting of the Conference Board out in British Columbia. Several ministers from provincial governments were present. One of those, a minister of finance from one of our western provinces, said, "Well, Buchanan, we were not totally happy with what has developed, but there is absolutely no question that it is successful, and we are seeing a dramatic upturn in consumer demand". That was the goal we were achieving.

It has been suggested that we should have stayed out of the provincial bailiwick of direct provincial sales taxes and that we should have used federal sales tax cuts. We have done that before. Unfortunately, we have found that there is a great tendency for the impact of those cuts to disappear somewhere between the manufacturing level and the point of purchase. The actual stimulus turns out to be very minimal. That route was considered. It was advocated by several hon. members opposite and it was rejected. Another route is the personal income tax cut. That is another policy which was advocated. We have had a similar experience in that regard. Those cuts do not turn out to be a direct and immediate stimulus to consumer demand.

Last October the Minister of Finance cut personal income taxes for seven million Canadians by $100. This tax cut was seen in January and February. A distinguished businessman, former banker and sometimes critic of the present government commented last January that, and I quote:

> Relatively little stimulus will come from Chretien's $100 tax credit, yet the measure represents the right approach. Consumers must feel that they are becoming better off in real terms.

His advice, notwithstanding this personal income tax cut, was the following: "We should continue to press for a retail sales tax cut". This commentary is contained in a memorandum dated January 23, 1978 addressed to members of the Progressive Conservative caucus. Its author is the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens).

I suggest that the Minister of Finance should be commended for his initiative and for trying to work out a collaborative, co-operative arrangement with provincial ministers of finance. His approach is very much in accord with the goal laid down at the first ministers' conference. The feeling was that we are all in this together, and that if we do not hang together we will hang separately.

The first ministers clearly and unequivocally stated that we should be endeavouring to collaborate, to work together and to share common interests in endeavouring to stimulate our economies and to help growth in this country. The minister has been pursuing that goal, and I suggest that is an extemely worthwhile goal to be pursuing. I hope the shell shock of the experience will not deter the minister from similar initiatives in the future.

There is no question that we are achieving our objective. The figures which are coming in now for the months of April and May show clearly that in the area of retail sales there has been a dramatic impact, particularly in the province of Manitoba.

Throughout the course of all this the opposition has been incredibly inconsistent and opportunistic. With all the good will in the world I feel that hon. members opposite have been naive. They have inadvertently got themselves into bed with a government whose clear objective is to prove that federalism does not work and that provincial governments—the provincial government of Quebec, at least—and the Government of Canada cannot work together. Working together is not the objective of the government of Quebec. Its clear objective is to do the opposite. Hon. members opposite may find themselves with a comfortable bed mate in this case, but I certainly do not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Buchanan) certainly made some interesting comments in criticizing the opposition regarding sales tax proposals. It is his right to criticize, but I find it very strange that he should be criticizing the opposition when there are members in his own party who have voiced strong objections to the formula of the government. We are talking about the tax sales formula, the income tax formula and all the rest. We are not talking about being in bed with any separtist government. Nobody on this side of the House supports that separatist government. I think the people of Quebec will take care of Mr. Lévesque in the next provincial election. He is a one-time deal.

I would like to point out to the Minister of Public Works that federal proposals to compensate provinces for sales tax cuts, a plan rejected by Quebec and attacked by other provinces, have led to pronounced disagreements within the Liberal party caucus. Three Quebec Liberal backbenchers, the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal), the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané) and the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier), have all expressed doubts about the plan. They were noticeably absent when the House voted on an NDP motion which would have scuppered the proposal.

An editorial in the Montreal Star of May 17, 1978 states the following:

"Clumsy rebate": The best that can be said about Jean Chrétien's plan to give an $85 rebate to Quebec income taxpayers is that it provides a way, however clumsy, of getting rid of 186 million embarrassing dollars.

The rebate will achieve none of the aims of the reduction in provincial sales taxes which it replaces. It will not provide the timely economic stimulus, it will not give the help to the lowest income families and will certainly not encourage the federal-provincial co-operation on tax matters that was the aim of the original budget proposal.

Mr. Chrétien, of course, was in a box, largely of his own making.

[Mr. Buchanan.]

In the event, he has chosen a solution which contains a large element of inequity and which has provoked opposition in other provincial capitals anyway. Mr. Chrétien would have done better to admit that he had been out-manoeuvred, pay Quebec the money and make sure that, if he ever again proposes joint tax action with the provinces, he does his negotiating before, not after, the event.

That was our main point, Mr. Speaker, and there are many other editorials around the country. One in the Montreal Star reads:

Chrétien deserves his troubles: Finance Minister Jean Chrétien is in deep trouble trying to rescue his April budget proposal for sales tax cuts and he deserves every bit of it.

So it is not just members of the opposition who are critical; it is members of the Liberal party, newspapers across the country and also the provinces.

I listened very closely to the debate and especially to the speeches of the government members. Those speeches which I have not been able to hear in the House I have read in Hansard, and I find that government members have come out with some of the strangest comments I have ever heard in my five and a half years here. I would like to refer to some of the comments made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) when he spoke about tax reductions. He said:

One must say where the spending can be cut down.

He went on to say:

The people of Canada should be shown where reductions can be implemented—

Many of the government members have said that there is no such thing as tax reductions, that there is no way we can cut down on government expenditures, no way we can cut down on growth, that it is an absolute impossibility. They made that point very clearly on February 2, 1978, and they also made that point very clear two weeks ago when we had a debate on a review of Canada's tax structure. They are against tax reductions and they say there is no possible way in which taxes can be cut down or reduced.

So what did we hear last Friday? We heard an announcement which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen and is as follows:

Cut costs $500 million, every department asked.

Prime Minister Trudeau has asked all federal departments to come up with program cutbacks that can slice $500 million from this year's budget.

It is obvious that the Liberal party is divided. In speech after speech and debate after debate month after month they have told us it is absolutely impossible to cut anything, so how can the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) ask the different departments to cut costs by $500 million? This is obviously more window dressing. The article goes on to state:

A letter circulated on May 23 asks all departments to notify Treasury Board as soon as possible which expenditure cuts can be made so reductions can be announced this summer and early fall.

Where is the cohesion in the Liberal party? I read the speech by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) made in Toronto on June 5 in which he stated the following to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association:

I want to suggest to you today that in half a dozen vital respects the government is doing things that are contributing to a better business climate in this country.

I see no evidence that they are creating a better climate in this country, and I will go into some detail on that point in a moment. The Minister of Finance went on to say:

I have to add that I am disappointed, so far at least, in the reaction of the Canadian business community to the many changes in government policy that are favouring private sector development. The room is there for private initiative. The incentives are there. With a million Canadians out of work, the need is there for job creating expansion. The first ministers of this country have said: Look, we don't think government make-work and bootstrap operations are the answer to our problems.

I certainly agree with the Minister of Finance on that. It is unfortunate that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and other business people in this country are not taking advantage of these so-called proposals and initiatives. They are taking them down to the United States. What concerns me in this debate is that there has not been one comment from a government member about the mass exodus of investment money and businesses from Canada. It is absolutely ludicrous for them to ignore this.

I would like to quote from a recent article reporting on Northern Telecom moving to the United States. The article reads:

By 1982, the 100th anniversary of its founding in Canada, Northern Telecom Limited, Canada's largest telecommunications manufacturer, will be largely an American enterprise—consequently, its Canadian employment will screech to a standstill, while its U.S. employment will quadruple. As a result, Telecom's 5,061 Canadian suppliers will be unable to cash in on its U.S. growth because Telecom's U.S. operations only buy in the U.S.—

It is by no means alone. According to the Conference Board, a New York based private business research organization, Canada with 49 investments ranked second in foreign manufacturing investments in the U.S. in 1977, compared with the 53 of leader West Germany.

Telecom Chairman, Robert Scrivener predicts that the U.S. portion—now $228 million—of Telecom's sales will grow from 18 per cent last year to 45 per cent in 1982. By contrast, the Canadian portion—now $925 million—is expected to drop from 73 per cent last year to 40 per cent.

That is just one example, but there are a large number of businesses that are moving out. This tax bill and all the statements and speeches made by government members as well as the Minister of Finance certainly do not encourage anybody to stay in this country. The article goes on to read:

For Telecom's Canadian workers, the implications of Telecom's shrinking Canadian outlook are all bad. If, as Scrivener says, "payroll tracks sales," Canadian employment by 1982 will have levelled off but U.S. employment will have almost quadrupled.

Those are devastating figures. The article goes on:

Already, Canadian employment has decreased 9 per cent from a year ago, whereas U.S. employment is up 29 per cent.

With this trend we will never overcome the problem of our unemployment. As I stated before, unemployment is costing the taxpayers of Canada $8 billion, UIC is costing $4 billion a year, welfare is costing $2 billion, and $2 billion is lost in taxes.

Here is another report on how we are creating jobs in the United States, especially in Florida. Scarcely a single community in Florida does not feel the impact. In Dade County, Florida, a consortium led by Canada's Markborough Properties is spending $1 billion on an 18-year project to build an entire town, Villages of Homestead, that will add more than 14,000 homes to the tight south Florida market and provide 4,000 jobs. Would it not be wonderful if those developers could stay here and develop some of their projects here? But they are taking their money and expertise to the United States.

I have done some research on some of the other companies which are moving to the U.S. or expanding to the U.S. We now find that Canada has moved from being a recipient of foreign investment to being a net exporter of funds. In 1977, Canadian direct investment abroad, CDIA, stood at $790 million, foreign direct investment in Canada stood at $410 million, and the balance or net outflow amounted to a deficit of $380 million. The balance sheet assets of Canada's U.S. affiliates, according to a U.S. study, totalled $24 billion in early 1977. The following corporations, deemed Canadian by the Conference Board, made major new investments in the United States in the third and fourth quarters of 1977.

I would like to read the names of the companies which are moving and expanding to the United States and investing there. They are: Tonecraft, Commercial Label and Tag, Québécoi, Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting, Standard Industries, Santana, Kins Management Ltd., Alcan Aluminium, Bell Canada, U.S. Bell Canada, Tridon Ltd., Sun Pac Foods, Ivaco Industries Ltd., CTC Industries, British Columbia Forest Products, Thomson Newspapers, Harlequin Enterprises, Reichhold Chemicals Limited, Hudson Bay Mining, Renwick of Canada, NRG International, GSC Electronics, Robin Sportswear Ltd., Original Jewellery, John O'Connor and Son and Junjian Company Ltd.

I should now like to refer to some of the investments which are going to the United States to the detriment of Canada. In the first quarter of 1978 in the area of food and related products a number of companies moved to the United States. John Labatt, Ltd. announced plans for a wheat starch and gluten facility in South Carolina.

In the area of textiles, Industrial Knitting has leased a plant in New York State to produce elastic netting. Why could that company not lease a plant to produce elastic netting in Canada?

During the last year and a half members of my party have raised this matter with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). We asked them what they were prepared to do about this serious outflow of business investment money. All we have received are negative responses. Also we are told that we should not raise this subject. We will continue to raise this subject until some action is taken. The government must sit down with these people and find out why they are not prepared to stay in Canada.

In the area of chemicals, Kingston Spinners will manufacture synthetic yarns in Georgia. The initial employment will be 35 to 40 persons.

In the area of rubber and miscellaneous plastics, St. Laurence Steel & Wire Co. Ltd. has leased facilities in New York state and will produce hockey masks. Good Heavens, can we not produce hockey masks in Canada? Why does that company have to move to the United States? The Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Abbott) have made no comments about this mass exodus.

In the field of fabricated metal products, Velcro Industries announced an expansion of its New Hampshire facilities. Velcro is a producer of look and loop fasteners.

In the area of non-electrical machinery, Northern Telecom acquired Sycor Inc., which is a Michigan based manufacturer of data processing terminals, for $77 million.

In the field of electrical machinery, C Tech leased facilities in New York to provide radar and sonar equipment. Mitel leased facilities in Florida to produce telecommunications equipment. Also Mitel opened a plant in Puerto Rico to produce printed circuit boards. Northern Telecom acquired Danray, which is a Texas manufacturer of telephone switching equipment, for approximately $23 million.

In the area of transportation equipment, R.C. Machine Ltd. leased facilities in New York to produce aerospace parts.

It is evident that the exodus is ongoing. These companies do not go back and forth. Once they are established in the United States they stay there. I have dealt with this subject many times, but I have received no comments from the Minister of Finance or any other government minister.

The list of companies involved is endless. Recently Canadian Pacific invested $185 million in New York. In 1977 in the province of Ontario 140 Canadian manufacturing firms went to the state of New York. They took $28.6 million with them when they left. Union nationale leader Rodrigue Biron said that $4 billion of economic exodus from Quebec has gone to the United States.

A few weeks ago I referred to the figures for nine states. Approximately $6.5 billion of Canadian investment money has gone into nine states. I do not have the figures for the other 41 states. We are looking at a figure of $50 billion to $100 billion of Canadian money which has left our country. Even so, this government has no comment to make on that. The government has said nothing except to tell us to shut up and that we should not be talking about it. How irresponsible can the government get?

On Monday of this week there was a report on CBC radio out of Winnipeg which indicated that there were one million Canadians in Florida. I do not know where that figure was obtained from, but that is what was said in the newscast. I should like to refer to some examples of Canadian funds which have gone to Florida. Approximately $7.5 million went to a North Miami Beach apartment complex; $1.3 million for Hawaiian Inn; $2.3 million for Beachcomber Motel; $6.3 million for Lincoln Industrial Park; $1.5 million for Industrial Park in Lauderhill; $1.6 milion for Fort Lauderdale Apartments; $1 billion for Housing Corporation from a Toronto-based firms; $60 million for high rise condominiums from a Montreal-based firm; $50 million for a 7,800 unit complex; $50 million for a 1,200 luxury apartment complex in Key Colony by a Toronto-based firm, Fininvest Corporation.

There are others. Genstar, which is a Montreal-based firm, is planning a $8 million operation in Houston. Hillcrest Investment Ltd. of Calgary is investing $11 million for two Denver apartment buildings. Canlea, a Canadian investment group, is investing $16 million in an 850-unit apartment building in Houston. The list is endless.

There has been a $70 million takeover by B.C. Forest Products Ltd. of a Minnesota paper company plant; a $140 million takeover of a Revere Copper and Brass Co. plant in Alabama by Alcan Aluminium Ltd.; and a $95 million acquisition and reconstruction by Co-Steel of Toronto of a New Jersey plant. Trizec Corporation of Montreal has land holdings of $192 million or 26 per cent of its $840 million assets in the United States.

Western Canadians are also fleeing to the United States. Mainly they are buying real estate in Texas and Colorado. The Edmonton based firm of Oxford Development Ltd. is putting up $145 million to buy property and buildings in Denver. The Calgary based firm of Nu-West Development Corporation recently announced a $3 million investment in single family units. York and Olympia Developers of Toronto laid out $350 million for skyscrapers in New York City, which was the largest Canadian investment in the United States.
