Another subject I should like to deal with in the area of Canadian taxpayers receiving value for their money is the manner in which the federal public service is run. The morale in the federal public service is not very good. The government has put fear into the hearts of all public servants. There has been no evidence indicating that the government will sit down and discuss this subject with public servants. The morale in the public service started to deteriorate last year and is continuing to do so.

I should like to refer to an article entitled "Members' jobs are on the line as contracting out increases" which appeared in the September 1977 edition of the Argus-Journal. My party has no objection to contracting out, but we object to the fear public servants are working under. The article reads in part as follows:

> The government is contracting out more and more of its work; it could eventually, contract out your job! The PSAC since its foundation has fought against government contracting out but now the issue is even more crucial. Every member must know what we are up against.

Public meetings have been held across the country in order to discuss this matter, but apparently nothing has been done to allay the fears of public servants.

I should like to refer to an article entitled "More government employees to lose jobs" which appeared in the May 1978 edition of the Argus-Journal. I have discussed this problem on many occasions, yet I do not understand why contracting out is increasing. Many public servants have expressed the same opinion; they cannot understand it because so many of them do not have enough work to do. In part the article reads as follows:

> Although the names in this story are fictitious, the circumstances are factual.

Jim Smith is a trusted and diligent public service employee with 20 years of solid work behind him. He has problems like everybody else: his 10-year old son needs braces and the mortgage doesn't seem to be getting any smaller.

● (1702)

Despite this he felt good about himself, he felt good about the world as he walked to work one cold morning last February. When he arrived at the office a letter was awaiting him.

Dear Mr. Smith:

The current economic climate dictates that all government departments and agencies reduce their man year utilization. An extensive study . . . has concluded that the work presently performed by the R & D Labs is a supportive function that can be provided in other ways. Target date for the phase out will be Oct. 31, 1978.

Just a few lines from a deputy minister and the bottom drops out of Jim Smith's world. "I couldn't believe it. None of us could believe it. Sure we had heard rumours but we figured at the most they might discontinue some parts of the operation as guys reached retirement age. But to drop the whole thing! That seemed unbelievable to us."

That seems to be a cruel way of dealing with an employee, Mr. Speaker. From the May edition of the Argus-Journal another article states under the heading "No Job—Bitter Blow":

Although all the men are bitter, those who are close to retirement age have a special grievance. David Martin, 60, gives us his case. "I've been 21 years with the Lab. Three of my kids are in university and two are in high school." If I have to retire now, my pension will be $8,400. You tell me how in the name of all that's holy I can get my kids through school on that income.

They give example after example of similar problems in the civil service. This government and its policies have put a fear into them.

Now we have the irresponsible statement from the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) to the effect that "PCs hurt PS morale". We are not the government, we have nothing to do with the hiring of these servants, and nothing to do with the fear this government is putting into the service. For a Liberal member to try to blame us for this situation in the civil service is absolutely ludicrous. This ridiculous statement that "PCs hurt PS morale" is now being considered by the civil service in Ottawa. This article states:

Ottawa West MP Lloyd Francis accused the Opposition . . . of undermining the morale of the public service with ill-founded, abusive attacks.

The situation is exactly the opposite. I would suggest to government members, including the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), that they should start reading some of these articles about some civil servants to find out what is going on in the public service, because you cannot operate a government department or any government operation while putting that type of fear into the minds of employees.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKenzie: You can yell at me and ridicule all you want. I did not write these articles; civil servants wrote them.

We can talk about taxes, sales taxes and all the rest, but we are never going to be able to accomplish sales tax reductions, or reductions to the extent of $500 million, with this type of threat to the public service, with public servants having to live with these conditions.

I do not know whether any government members intend to speak this afternoon. Perhaps we will hear something from the Minister of Finance tomorrow when we are in committee of the whole in respect of what action the government will be taking to deal with this mass exodus of business and investment money from Canada. I hope he will give us some information on this very serious matter. I will be questioning him in this regard, but I hope that he will make a statement.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, before making a few remarks about the bill I want to say at the outset that I agree with and support wholeheartedly the main purport of the remarks of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield). All of us in this chamber, as well as several million Canadians, are engaged in a struggle to preserve, maintain, enlarge and renew our confederation. Every hon. member of this House is committed to that. In my opinion, and in the opinion of many others, the hon. member for Halifax holds a special place in the hearts and minds of members and millions of Canadians, a place that the rest of us would like to occupy. Not only do I have a great deal of respect and admiration for that hon. gentleman, we even do our hair the same way!

Nobody in this House has the business or the right to get up and call into question the desires of any hon. member or any party in this House regarding the strengthening and renewing of confederation. Using words such as "hatred" and "liar" does not only detract from the efforts all of us want to make, it adds nothing. I may disagree with the official opposition party, its policies and ideas, which I think are nothing more than a renewal of those of R. B. Bennett, but certainly each member of that party as well as others in this House has the same desire, goal and objective. That applies as well to colleagues in my party, the Creditiste members and the three independent members in this Chamber.

The Minister of Finance, his parliamentary secretary, and other government spokesmen have drawn a longbow in attempting to maintain they did not have unanimous agreement or a commitment from the ten provinces in respect of measures the government wanted to take on the levying of retail sales taxes. The Minister of Finance has put forward as an excuse that Quebec announced 48 hours after the budget what it would do regarding its retail sales tax.

The Minister of Finance had no business bringing in a budget until he had a commitment or an agreement from all provinces. If he was lacking a commitment by the province of Quebec, Saskatchewan, or some other province, he could easily have delayed his budget by two days or a week.

Given the circumstances which occurred—the budget being brought down and then 48 hours later Quebec saying what it would do about retail sales taxes—we do have unanimous agreement on the part of the provinces of Canada to reduce retail sales taxes, including the province of Quebec. The fact that Quebec took its entire 8 per cent sales tax of five commodities means simply that the province reduced its retail sales tax, which, is entirely within the jurisdiction of that province, as it is within the jurisdiction of any other province.

It follows, then, that Quebec has complied with the wishes, intent and purpose of the federal budget.

If the Minister of Finance, his parliamentary secretary and others are correct that the separatist government of Quebec — that is, Mr. Parizeau and Mr. Lévesque—are determined and intend not to co-operate in any respect with the national government, Mr. Parizeau would not, and I repeat would not, have had anything to do with a reduction of his sales tax, whether prior to, during or 48 hours after the budget. If there had been some justification for that statement by the Minister of Finance, surely that justification would have been in the actions of the government of Quebec. That has not been the case.

The Minister of Finance and others have overlooked some facts. The first fact I have already given: Quebec has reduced its retail sales tax in a manner that it feels suits Quebec best, and that is entirely its right and prerogative. In fact, I spoke to the minister of finance for Saskatchewan on the telephone last week.

I said to him that I wish that Saskatchewan had taken all 5 per cent of its retail sales tax off five selected commodities, such as farm trucks and clothing. Had they done so, I wonder if the Minister of Finance would be talking the same way in this House as he is about Quebec. If so, he would have created 900,000 new separatists in Saskatchewan. Our minister of finance in Saskatchewan, Mr. Smishek, has authorized me to say in this House that Quebec is entitled to $225 million from the federal government, that the federal government should give it to Quebec, that how Quebec adjusts its retail sales tax is entirely its prerogative, so long as they do not get a nickel more or less than Saskatchewan does.

The Minister of Finance and others on the government side have spoken about a contribution by the provinces to national economic recovery. Let us look at the contributions, Mr. Speaker. Saskatchewan chose to reduce their sales tax by 2 per cent for nine months. This amounts to a reduction of $54 million in Saskatchewan's retail sales tax revenue. Of that, $36 million will be made up by the federal government and $18 million is a contribution or a lost revenue by the province of Saskatchewan. In Quebec the removal of the 8 per cent sales tax in the five areas in which they decided to remove it amounts to a reduction of $340 million. I gave these figures a week ago in the House, and they have not been disputed yet by anyone from the finance ministry or on the government side of the House.

If Quebec obtains $225 million in tax room, their contribution to the national economic recovery as compared to Saskatchewan's $18 million will be $115 million, the difference between 340 million and 225 million. That is in direct proportion, for if you multiply Saskatchewan's contribution to national economic recovery by six, you come very close to the amount of the contribution that Quebec is making by removing an 8 per cent sales tax from five different areas. It is also in proportion to our populations. It is a decision that Quebec has the right to make under our constitution.

My leader, myself and others, including the hon. member for Halifax today, have spoken about our national unity and our confederation. We have said to the minister and the government, and I repeat it again: "Okay, you're wrong a little bit; why not admit it for the sake of national unity and confederation?" We do not need them running around talking about hatred and lying. I do not know of anybody on this side in this debate, for the time it has gone on, who has made those kinds of statements about members on the government side. All we are asking is for the government to say once in a while, and this is one of those occasions, that it just might be wrong. It may be much more statesmanlike, and it would make a much greater contribution to confederation, if they were to say, "We will bring in amended legislation." That we would accept. Whether or not the government of Quebec is right or wrong is their problem, but we accept their constitutional right and authority to deal with their retail sales tax in a manner which suits them the best.

Quebec's contribution to national economic recovery will be as much or more benefit to the manufacturing industry, employers and workers in Ontario as it will be to Quebec. In four of the five areas in which Quebec has removed their sales tax, the majority of the retail sales in those four commodities is manufactured in Ontario. Therefore, Quebec's move benefits Ontario as much as or more than it benefits manufacturers and workers in Quebec.

The fact is that all ten provinces have agreed to reduce their retail sales tax. Alberta has none. When the government talks and brags about their boast that, for the first time in the history of Canada, the national government has received the cooperation of all the provinces in an area which is entirely within the jurisdiction of the provinces, Quebec agreed and Quebec did, in fact, reduce its retail sales tax. I would have thought that this situation would allow the members of the Liberal party and the members of the parties in the opposition to go back to Quebec and say, "Aaha! Where are those separatists now?"

Instead of that, the government has brought in legislation in a manner which plays into the hands of the separatists and reinforces their arguments about economic association, sovereignty or separatism. They have played into their hands, and we in the opposition parties who are joined in the struggle to preserve, enlarge and renew our confederation object to legislation that plays into the hands of those who want to divide this country. The reality is that Quebec has reduced its retail sales tax, and whether the Minister of Finance likes how they have done it or not does not matter. It is their right. I wish that Saskatchewan, British Columbia and Nova Scotia would have decided to knock their sales tax off in five selected areas. They would still be cooperating and making a commitment and living up to it. I wonder if the Minister of Finance would have come to parliament then and accused Saskatchewan, B.C. or Nova Scotia of trying to break up this country. I doubt that he would.

This paranoid Liberal government which has brought about measures that have increased dissension in this nation is now preparing to go to any lengths, including closure, to do what it could have done much easier with the unanimous agreement of every member in this chamber, and that is to provide to the government of Quebec the full amount of money that they are entitled to in this budget and agree that Quebec, like any other province, has the sole right to levy a retail sales tax in any manner they see fit. Quebec would then be answerable to their own public about whether or not the manner in which it was done was proper. It is not the prerogative of the federal parliament to decide whether or not a retail sales tax levied by any province is proper. It is none of our damned business. The fact is that ten provinces have now, today, agreed to reduce and amend their retail sales tax legislation, and they are in fact cooperating with and are committed to what the minister's objectives were in the budget in the first place.

I have one other point to make before I sit down, Mr. Speaker. The minister today spoke about a big increase in retail sales in April and May of this year as compared to April and May of last year. This reminds me of the old vaudeville joke when they asked the guy, "How is your wife?" and he says, "Compared to what?" If you compare retail sales for April and May of this year with April and May of last year, which was a bad year, anything that happens this year is an improvement over last year. It is mythology when the government speaks about the fantastic results that have already occurred in April and May as a consequence of their budget. There is no doubt that it has probably helped, but surely that is no justification for doing a disservice to our constitution with regard to the sovereignty of the provinces.

If the Minister of Finance really wanted to do something about national economic recovery, he could pay attention to what the minister of finance for Saskatchewan said in the legislature on the same night that the Minister of Finance brought down his budget in this House. Referring to Saskatchewan, Mr. Smishek said:

—our preference would have been for a permanent federal income tax reduction for low and middle income Canadians. That would have put cash into the hands of those who need it most and surely would have stimulated consumer spending—

Then he said:

I regret that the federal offer to participate in this tax cut came so late.

And a little later he had this to say:

Certainly, the finance ministers' meeting in January, or the first ministers' meeting in February would have provided an ideal forum for the federal government to present such a tax proposal to the provinces. But this did not take place.

Further, the minister of finance for Saskatchewan, as well as authorizing me to say in this House that Quebec should get its $225 million, went on to say:

In my view a better form of stimulus would be selected personal income tax reductions—

And later he said:

I am concerned that the federal government intruded into an area of provincial jurisdiction by trying to establish policy for the provincial retail sales tax.

He said, in effect: "We agree to co-operate; we are committed; we will live up to our word." There cannot be any question that Mr. Parizeau will not live up to his word about taking tax off five areas of retail sales for which they are responsible. They are committed to that and they are co-operating.

It will take only an amended bill to get unanimous agreement on the legislation. I hope that even at this late hour the Minister of Finance and his parliamentary secretary will tell us that they will do this very thing in committee of the whole, starting tomorrow. If they do, they will be surprised how fast this bill will go through.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, while I listened to the various speeches made by the previous speakers, it was obvious that Bill C-56 was presented to solve a fiscal problem due to a defective distribution of taxes, since the relations between Ottawa and Quebec have been constantly mentioned during the debate on the bill. Although it includes a good many things, we will no doubt be compelled to vote against it, because the procedure used to make that distribution makes no sense. Unfortunately, that bill has not succeeded in restoring order in the confusion we have witnessed for a couple of months.

For almost two months now we have been hearing in the House of Commons a debate where the speakers are inconsistent. It reminds me a remark made by the Speaker of the House of Commons on October 27, 1971 when he said, as reported on page 9086 of Hansard. He said:

If hon. members take five minutes of the question period to say that what the minister said is not what he said, and the minister replies that what he said was what he thinks he said, we might go on for a long time.

Then, we did not get any significant result. We have seen that occasionally and we saw it at the outset of this afternoon's proceedings. I would like now to get back to the bill. Since the beginning of that fight between the federal government and the provincial government over the tax issue, we have heard, as I said earlier, various speeches from the representatives of both Quebec and Ottawa governments. Here in this House, a publicity-seeking hon. member has succeeded in getting what he wanted, that is a one-day-out-of-the-House penalty. However, this is far from being a solution to the problem. Governments are so used to taking money out of the citizens' pockets through all kinds of taxes that they have forgotten the way to give that money back to the people. It is a pity to watch their performance.

In his statement in the House on May 17, 1978, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) mentioned, on page 5525, second column, and I quote:

The tax is very important.

It certainly looks like it, judging by the disputes it leads to. He goes on to say:

If I had decided just to pay by cheque, the increase in the expenditures of the federal government would have been more than $800 million. Everyone would have said that the Minister of Finance is increasing his expenditures, while in fact it would have just been a matter of transferring cash to the provinces to reduce their taxes.

In order to be imaginative and to do what I wanted to do without creating the false impression that we are spending money—and the ministers of finance agreed with me—I said we would reduce our taxes and they could increase their taxes. As we are collecting taxes, nobody has noticed what is happening.

People are so used to paying taxes that they hardly know what is going on.

—The federal tax in Ontario and elsewhere has been reduced by $100. The legislatures of Ontario. Manitoba, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and the maritimes have introduced legislation increasing their income tax accordingly. However, as we collected it, nobody noticed.

That is curious. What I am reading is in the proceedings of the House.

The ways our governments use in the field of taxation, income tax and other forms of draining the taxpayers' pockets are so varied and complex that wage earners, especially, wonder what is happening with the leaders of the country or the provinces when they cannot understand why there are so many deductions on their pay cheque at the end of the week.

● (1732)

Further in the same speech, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) said and I quote:

The other provinces have increased their taxes already and we have effectively decreased our taxes for them since the night of the budget by collecting them for them.

This is the kind of formula that reduces taxes by increasing them. It is quite ludicrous but ludicrous things often happen here. The bill to amend the Income Tax Act and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions submitted on May 15, 1978 by the Minister of Finance of Canada includes amendments to the Income Tax Act and creates as always some implementation difficulties that force the large majority of taxpayers to hire an accountant to file their returns and those costly services are always paid by those whose salary or income has been reduced by the taxation, deduction, adjustment and readjustment system and we could also mention tax transfers, according to the whim of our corrupt provincial system that forces governments to find all kinds of ways to collect taxes under various forms in an attempt to balance an adverse budget.

We should not forget that this bill is submitted in particular circumstances following a strategic error that contributed to create a climate of uncertainty, hesitation and indecision with the result that the people of Canada and particularly the people of Quebec are watching the reactions of the members of the government and some of them try to figure out the number of mistakes made by the servants of those who really control our political puppets. In an editorial of the Wednesday May 17, 1978 issue of the newspaper La Presse, we can read comments that cast some doubts about the real value of the federalism proclaimed by politicians of various stripes. I quote:

Since November 1976 the federal government has been proclaiming everywhere the superiority of federalism over the separatist option but its behaviour is often a parody of true federalism. It resorts to trickery and overwhelming political clout in cases where only good faith and co-operation between the two levels of government should be the rule of the game. Is it not showing it quite clearly once again by choosing to override a provincial government which resists its interference in order to deal directly with the taxpayers?

It will undoubtedly justify its behaviour by suggesting that one cannot reach an understanding with a separatist government which is bound to prove that federalism cannot work. Yet could it not be that the only way to counter such tactics is to rigorously apply the federalist principles: absolute respect for the jurisdictions of each level of government, untiring patience in the quest for dialogue and consultation, constant desire to reach an honourable political compromise? Just as the value of democracy cannot better be demonstrated than by always introducing more democracy in the field of social relations, the superiority of federalism cannot be better demonstrated than by applying it with absolute respect for its rules.

In the Ottawa-Quebec dispute should the federal government not be the first to set the example of the virtues of federalism?

Yet, if the central power suspects the PQ government of acting in bad faith, why does it not try to let everyone be a judge of it by acting itself in an irreproachable manner in this respect?

In another article in Le Devoir of Wednesday, May 17, 1978, one could read, and I quote:

Far from alleviating concerns, the recent decision by the federal government with respect to the sales tax will have only managed in Quebec to throw oil on the fire and cement the solidarity of parliamentarians of all parties around the position being defended by the Lévesque government.

So, for the second time in less than a month the National Assembly once again denounced yesterday by a unanimous vote Ottawa's attitude in this dispute with Quebec, and specifically asked federal members of Parliament to defeat the bill tabled on Monday in the Commons by the Minister of Finance.

It goes on to say:

In a quasi-solemn atmosphere that is usually reserved for important occasions, the Assembly unanimously reiterated its support to Mr. Parizeau and asked the federal government to "stop its foolishness before it is too late".

We were so used to reading articles by reporters, a strong percentage of whom seem to go out of their way to criticize the social credit doctrine without having studied it properly, that particular events were needed to bring them to comment on the adverse effects of the financial system which are the cause of that tax war which broke out at the time of the presentation of a federal budget a few days before that of a provincial government, at a time when it is costing Canadian taxpayers over $100,000 a day to support the floating dollar.

However, it is easy to see that the record current account deficit which reached $4.2 million last year was a capital factor in the depreciation of the Canadian dollar. Most of those problems could have been avoided if the government of Canada had decided to adopt a financial policy more in line with the needs of Canadian taxpayers.

For over a month we have been reading varied comments on that famous tax fight between the federal government and the provincial government. I could quote a series of newspaper articles but in view of the time I am allowed I would like to give perhaps someone else the opportunity to speak for a few minutes before the debate ends. Before I sit down, I would like to add that it will be impossible for me to support this bill as it does not contain what is required to straighten out the present disorder that was created precisely on a matter of bad tax distribution among Canadian taxpayers. The government of Canada did not have to take away their power of taxation from the provincial governments. There are so many federal taxes weighing on the people of Canada that it could have eliminated taxes in its own departments.

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank hon. members opposite, and especially the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne) who accepted to give me a few minutes of his time before the end of this debate not on sales tax, but on the budget tabled in this House on April 10. As a matter of fact, the hon. member for Kamouraska was indicating a few moments ago that the Quebec government is quite sincere. I would like right away to show an aspect of what is the Parti Québécois. I would even ask the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) to pay close attention because I have a very telling document to read in the House, and that will be very important. Here is, Mr. Speaker, how it reads:

Dear Sir:

I wish to acknowledge receipt of your recent letter concerning the applicability of the Quebec retail sales tax to footwear.

First I would like to emphasize my interest in the development of the Quebec footwear industry, which is now going through a very difficult period.

However, as regards your request to eliminate the sales tax on footwear to stimulate Canadian production, I do not believe that this would be a useful means to attain the desired effect. Indeed, in view of the low rate of Canadian independence in this sector, which is about 36 per cent, I am convinced that to stimulate this industry, the setting of quotas on imports is a much more effective tool than a sales tax reduction which would deprive the government of $42 million in 1978.

As a matter of fact, in this regard, the Anti-dumping Tribunal has very clearly stated that the problems of the Canadian footwear industry are caused mainly by massive imports. This is also the opinion of the Quebec government and this is why I have made representations to the federal government to ask it to negotiate under the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs quotas that would limit for a few years the quantity of footwear imports at the 1975 level. Indeed, the federal government has recently announced its intentions in this regard. Please be assured that the Quebec government will see to it that the announced quota policies will be respected.

In short, we must attack the source of the problem, that is we must reduce imports, and interventions like the elimination of the sales tax on footwear are only band-aid solutions which cannot settle the problems of the footwear industry, as, among other factors, more than 60 per cent of the tax reduction would apply to imported products.

You can be assured that the Quebec government is deeply interested in the situation of the Quebec footwear industry.

Yours sincerely,
Jacques Parizeau
Minister

Mr. Speaker, this letter was addressed to Mr. Jean-Guy Maheu, care of the Canadian Association of Shoe Manufacturers, and it is dated January 3, 1978. This letter recognizes the work done by the present Minister of Finance when he was Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce as concerns quotas for the footwear industry, textiles, clothing and shipbuilding. Mr. Speaker, he followed in the steps of another Quebecker, the former minister of industry, trade and commerce, the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin and the present minister of this department (Mr. Horner) is actually following on the same course of action. I wanted to point out today, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance is seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) to whom I say in passing that he should take his orders from his leader instead of playing the role of Conservative ambassador to Premier Lévesque in Quebec. That is what he should do, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) on a point of order.

Mr. La Salle: I simply do not want to say that the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) has lied, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to say that, but once again, as the Minister of Finance and many others, he is misleading the population when he says that I am an ambassador. I am not an ambassador but I know others who would not have minded being appointed.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I suggest that is not a point of order but a point of dispute between two members.

[Translation]

Mr. Guay: Mr. Speaker, I trust that the few minutes the hon. member made the House waste, while adding a few more when he chided Quebeckers for not taking part in the debate. But I want to tell the truth, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask that same hon. member whether he has disowned his leader with regard to the sales tax, when he goes for his orders to the Quebec premier. I think he is quite talkative when it comes to the sales tax and slightly less with regard to the Roy bill which Mr. Davis, the Ontario premier . . .

Mr. La Salle: That is none of your business!

Mr. Guay: Oh yes, none of my business, he says. Mr. Speaker, he repudiates and has little to say when the Ontario premier says that he would campaign side by side with the Progressive Conservative leader. I trust the hon. member for Joliette will be there too. Then we will see to what extent he makes small politics in this House.

Income Tax Act

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. It being 5.45 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to the order made on June 6, 1978, to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith any questions necessary to dispose of the motion before the House.

The question is on the motion in the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Chrétien), which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the business for tomorrow. Does the Minister of Finance have an amended ways and means motion of which he could give us notice now?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I replied to that question earlier. I made a proposal to the opposition, but they refused it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: No, we did not.

Mr. Speaker: It being after six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 6.12 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INTERNATIONAL YEAR OF THE CHILD

CANADA'S PARTICIPATION IN PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The year 1979 has been designated by the United Nations as the International Year of the Child, a fact which has been virtually ignored by this government whereas 70 other countries have set up commissions for this very purpose. This marks the twentieth anniversary of the declaration of the rights of children by the United Nations, to which Canada was a signatory. I, therefore, move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche):

That this House directs the Minister of National Health and Welfare to make a statement in this House before the adjournment on Canada's intentions with respect to the International Year of the Child and what plans, if any, the government has under way to participate with the provinces in recognizing and implementing the principles embodied in the United Nations' declaration.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

ANNUAL SOFTBALL GAME BETWEEN MPs AND PRESS GALLERY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion which I consider very urgent. I think all members of the House, including Your Honour, will agree with it. I am sure Your Honour will be pleased to learn that last evening, in the annual ballgame between members of parliament and the press gallery, your team clobbered the fourth estate by a score of ten to six.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: This happened despite the fact that the press gallery had been in vigorous training since early spring and members of parliament had not played in over a year. In view of our very high esteem for members of the press gallery and our concern about the example that they must set for all of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway) and the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid):

That this House instruct the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) to summon immediately all her top advisers from across the land for the purpose of devising a foolproof emergency program with the very difficult, but not impossible, objective of upgrading the fitness of the average 30-year old press gallery member to that of the average 60-year old member of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Leeds.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC GRANT TO ALLEGED COMMUNIST-FRONT ORGANIZATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgency. If all hon. members will listen carefully, I think they will agree that this motion deserves the support of both sides of the House. It is in relation to a grant in the amount of $51,000 being given by the province of Quebec under the authority of Claude Morin, provincial minister of intergovernmental affairs, to an organization calling itself The Preparatory Committee of Canada for the Eleventh World Festival of Youth and Students, Box 99, Station V, Toronto. The festival is to be held in Havana, Cuba, July 28 to August 5, and the agenda proclaims in newsletter No. 5 the slogan "Anti-imperialist solidarity, peace and friendship" and announces youth delegates will be told methods of carrying out profound "political transformations" in their home countries. I, therefore, move, seconded by the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That this House registers its disapproval of such a reprehensible grant by the government of Quebec to an apparent communist-front organization, and strongly urges the Quebec government to cancel immediately any portion of the grant not yet paid and, finally, requests the Premier of Quebec to order an end to any Quebec support—

Mr. Rodriguez: No.

Mr. Cossitt: If the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) would stop saying "No", I might be able to finish this motion. I know where his sympathies lie.

—for organizations which would seek to bring or advocate separation in Canada by means other than the democratic process.

S.O. 43

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for discussion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

CRITERIA APPLIED IN PROVIDING FINANCIAL SUPPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask for the consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Mr. Cossitt: No.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I wish the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) would stop saying "No". We know where his sympathies lie.

In view of the fact that the Export Development Corporation presently uses three criteria when deciding whether to extend financial support to foreign ventures, they being the credit worthiness of the applicant, the viability of the project, and the likelihood that the project would go ahead anyway, and in view of the fact that the use of these three criteria as the only criteria has encouraged the export of jobs from Canada at a time when we need jobs most, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That this House instruct the minister responsible for the Export Development Corporation to instruct the corporation to add to its criteria two other points, namely, that the corporation will take into account the adverse effect of such a loan or guarantee on the competitive position of our industry and on employment in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING IN LABOUR DISPUTE IN NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the fact that radio CJYQ 930 Limited of St. John's, Newfoundland, a company beneficially owned by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson), and the operator of five AM radio stations in Newfoundland, was ordered by the Labour Relations Board of Canada on January 6, 1978, to bargain collectively with Local 94 of the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians, and in view of the fact that CJYQ 930 Limited refuses to meet with the union representing their employees, despite the order of the Labour Relations Board, and persists in ignoring the collective bargaining agreement still in effect by paying less money than the contract calls for and by insisting on the working of longer hours, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the Minister of Labour grant immediately to Local 94 of the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians the permission they have requested under section 148 of the Labour Code so that they can file a complaint with the Canada Labour Relations Board, and that the minister advise the company and his colleague that it is the policy of the government that the provisions of the labour relations law be adhered to and that genuine collective bargaining should be entered into between employer and employees without constant attempts to avoid bargaining by the employer.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion at this time can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

QUEBEC PROPOSALS RESPECTING SALES TAX

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put my question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement made in the National Assembly this morning by the Quebec minister of finance, that in his view the federal government had two options open to it with respect to the matters covered by clause 30 of Bill C-56, would the Minister of Finance indicate if it is the government's intention to accept option No. 2, to use the terminology of the Quebec minister of finance, option No. 2 being making provision for an aggregate payment of $100 to Quebec City for all taxpayers in Quebec?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have received a letter from Mr. Parizeau in which he accepts the formula which I put into the bill in clause 30(b), so of course we can proceed with it. About the second proposal he has made, I am still looking into it, and if it is better I will be ready to accept it. But at this moment I would prefer clause 30B. I will be in a position to table the ways and means motion later today.

Mr. Stevens: My next question to the Minister of Finance is for greater clarification. When the minister refers to option A, or alternative A, is he referring to the $85 payment to the residents of Quebec, leaving Quebec to their own means as to how they may recover that revenue, or is he referring to the $100 aggregate payment for which he is making provision under subclause (1) of clause 30 of Bill C-56, the provision which he has made for the other eight provinces?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the first formula in Mr. Parizeau's letter is exactly what we are proposing in our legislation, namely to pay directly to the government $40 million for the part of the cuts they made, and which complies with the formula offered to the other provinces. For the remaining $186 million we proposed, and Mr. Parizeau seems to find our proposal acceptable, to make a rebate of $85 to the taxpayers of 1977 so that the money could be given as soon as possible to those who paid taxes last year.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Would the minister indicate to the House why he is so reluctant to proceed under option No. 2 which would seem to put Quebec in a much more similar position to that of the other eight provinces, ensuring that there is not a payment to individual residents of Quebec, to which there has been constitutional objection and which would, presumably, anticipate a working agreement with Quebec on how the $100 can be handled between the federal treasury and the treasury in Quebec City?

● (1417)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member is a bit confused about the second proposition of Mr. Parizeau. He is not asking for the $100, as I proposed last week. He is asking me to send him the $40 million, as proposed in the other formula, rather than the $85 being in the mail right away. But he does not mind if it is in the taxpayers' returns for 1978, which means the beginning of 1979, then he could make some arrangement. In his letter he said that he will have to raise his taxes. That is exactly what I said at the beginning. In his jurisdiction, he can do whatever he wants. In my jurisdiction, I can do what I want. He has just recognized that in his letter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SALES TAX—INQUIRY WHETHER SAME TREATMENT WILL BE ACCORDED QUEBEC AS OTHER PROVINCES

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

To assure the House today that the province of Quebec will be dealt with on the same footing as the other provinces with regard to the sales tax, can he tell the House whether he has accepted the first or the second option, to the effect that the money of the federal government will be paid to the Quebec government and not to the taxpayers of that province, so that we can be absolutely sure that we have almost exactly the same policy for Quebec as the other provinces?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I say to the hon. member that if he reads Mr. Parizeau's letter carefully, he will see that the latter recognizes that the federal government has the right to send money to the Quebec taxpayers, which is the principle we have always fought for. He does not ask us to send a cheque to the Quebec government, as the hon. member is asking us right now; Mr. Parizeau is asking us, very simply, if we wait until 1978, to make certain administrative arrangements with him to facilitate matters.

MANNER IN WHICH $100 PAYMENT TO QUEBECKERS WILL BE EFFECTED

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question.

I would like to ask the Minister of Finance—he explained the first proposal clearly—whether he is willing to accept the second proposal as well? According to Mr. Parizeau's letter, it seems that he would also agree to the alternative of $100 in 1978. Is the Minister of Finance also prepared to make that $100 transfer in 1978 whose means of implementation are now being discussed with the Quebec government?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but in his second proposal Mr. Parizeau is not asking for the $100 I offered last week. He wants us to send him, because he has agreed in part to my plan in the budget for the $40 million, and it is on the $85 that he wants us to make arrangements for 1978. He does not talk about the $100. That is why in my opinion it now seems easier in the present circumstances to accept, as Mr. Parizeau is willing to accept, the proposal I submitted to the House when I introduced Bill C-56.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I merely want to ask the Minister of Finance whether he believes that the Quebec minister of finance would accept the formula which the Minister of Finance considered last week, that is $100 in 1978? Can the minister maintain that the Quebec government would reject that formula?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, in the letter he sent me he rejects my proposal of last week because he wants me to send him immediately the $40 million which I intend to refund one way—

An hon. Member: The choice.

Mr. Chrétien: No, it is not a choice, he wants the $40 million immediately; as to the $85, if I send it only next spring, he wants some administrative arrangements.

PIPELINES

NORTHERN PIPELINE—GOVERNMENT POLICY ON EXPORT OF GAS TO U.S. DURING INITIAL CONSTRUCTION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council as the designated minister for the northern gas pipeline. Press reports quote the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce as having told the Alberta chamber of commerce that he favours the export of gas to the United States during the initial stages of the Alaska gas pipeline and that any swap arrangement would involve paying the going price. He is quoted as having said:

● (1422)

We'll have to buy it back at the going price at the time, if we elect to buy it back.

I want, therefore, to ask the President of the Privy Council whether the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was enunciating government policy in respect of the export of gas to the United States during the initial period of the construction of the northern pipeline.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. gentleman, as he knows, before any such export can be undertaken there would have to be hearings not only by the National Energy Board but also by the Alberta authorities, and none of these events has taken place up to the present time. I would conclude, therefore, that the situation is still quite speculative on that point.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, surely the minister is better informed than that. In view of the fact that the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission of the United States has given conditional approval to an agreement by which the Canadian company's subsidiary is selling gas to the American company which is to own the American portion of the line, is the minister telling the House that he knows nothing about the fact that this approval has been given and that this application has been made to the FERC?

I ask the minister whether any consultation has been held with him, his officials or the government, in any shape or form, regarding this conditional approval which has been sought and given in respect of the export of gas with the provision of the possibility of a swap arrangement.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, no consultations have been held with me or, to my knowledge, with the commissioner of the northern pipeline or any of his officials. I was referring to what would be required in Canada in order to provide for export of the type mentioned. I was not in any way disputing the hon. member's comments about what was happening in the United States.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the National Energy Board is a regulatory body whose sole function is to recommend to the government the amount of gas or oil which can safely be exported, and that the final decision lies with the cabinet both as to the amount of gas or oil to be exported and the terms under which it will be exported, I ask the minister whether the government has worked out a policy. In view of the fact the two companies which are to build the pipeline have already applied for and received permission to import gas into the United States, what is the government's policy in respect of price? Are these companies to be allowed to sell Alberta gas to the United States partner, and then Canada will buy that gas back from Alaska at a price which will be $1 or $2 per thousand cubic feet higher? Surely the minister has worked out a policy and surely this House has the right to know what that policy is.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I believe it might be more appropriate for the hon. member to address his questions to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who has the National Energy Board under his authority. It seems to me the hon. gentleman is premature in putting his questions, when applications have not come forward to the National Energy Board nor, to my knowledge, have applications been submitted to the Alberta board in order to undertake these arrangements. The hon. member is asking about a policy that in the first instance has to be developed by the regulatory authorities.

FISHERIES

METHOD OF SETTLING DISPUTE WITH REDFISH FISHERMEN OF ÎLES-DE-LA-MADELEINE

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): In the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment, my question is directed to his parliamentary secretary.

Considering that redfish fishermen from the Îles-de-la-Madeleine will not go to sea until the government gives them a guarantee of 2 cents for their take, is the government aware of the problem and what decision will it take to solve that dispute between the fishermen and the government?

● (1427)

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the hon. member's question. I am not aware of the subject that he has raised.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DIRECTOR-GENERAL OF UNIVERSAL POSTAL UNION

Mr. Speaker: Before continuing with the question period, may I call to the attention of all hon. members the presence in our gallery of a distinguished visitor who is on an official visit, the Director-General of the Universal Postal Union, Mr. Mohamed Ibrahim Sobhi.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-U.S. FISHERIES AGREEMENT—CONSULTATION WITH NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last Friday, Canada declared that the 1978 interim reciprocal fishing agreement between Canada and the United States would not be implemented by Canada.

Is the Prime Minister aware that the government of the province of Newfoundland, where 90 per cent of its fish exports go to the U.S. and where 20 per cent of the work force are either fishermen or engaged in the fish processing industry—the province most dependent on fishing, economically—was not given any notice by anybody in the Canadian government that this action was going to be taken, neither the minister of fisheries, the premier nor any official? They received no notice. They were not consulted, nor were they asked for their opinion. Will the Prime Minister see that such conduct, which endangers the whole fabric of federal-provincial relations in this country, will not occur again?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I may answer the question of the hon. member, he may be formally correct in saying that there were no direct contacts with the government of Newfoundland on this particular action, but it was for a very obvious reason: Newfoundland fishermen and the Newfoundland fishing industry were not directly involved in the boundary question on either the Georges Bank or the west coast.

However, in terms of keeping the Newfoundland government advised, I can assure the hon. member that on all of the discussions concerning our relations with the United States and also, incidentally—and perhaps of more importance to the hon. member—on the matter involving the boundary question of St. Pierre and Miquelon there has been a whole series of meetings with the Newfoundland government and it is my intention to have still more, probably within the next few days.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, is the Secretary of State for External Affairs aware that the Premier of Newfoundland and the minister of fisheries of Newfoundland have confirmed that they were not informed nor consulted on this step which will affect Newfoundland if the United States takes any retaliatory action? It will certainly affect Newfoundland in its fish exports to the U.S.

Is he also aware that the U.S. treasury department is soon going to rule on whether countervailing duties are going to be imposed on $200 million worth of fish imported into the U.S. from Canada because of Canadian assistance programs and, as a matter of fact, is the minister aware that there is a very strong possibility that tomorrow the United States is going to rule that there will be a countervailing duty on cod blocks exported from Newfoundland? This being the case, and the fact that this action coincides with the minister's action, does the minister agree that the Newfoundland government must be consulted on a program such as this, and a joint program of action developed? Is the minister aware of that—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: —and will steps be taken to prevent this kind of thing?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, of course I am aware of it. I want to admonish the hon. member, as I have done in the House in the past, to please—if he does not have any concern for the government, he should for his fellow Newfoundland fishermen—keep as much distance as he possibly can between the boundary issue and the question of tariffs.

I have made efforts, with the support of hon. members on the opposite side, to avoid the necessity of bringing these two issues into some conjunction so that there appears to be a connection between them. It is of the utmost importance that it not be seen that this boundary dispute in any way reflects on any tariff issues which may be between Canada and the United States. I again express my appreciation for the fact that in public discussion in the committee meeting of two nights ago, this issue was not raised; and I understand why it was not raised.

In so far as Newfoundland and consultations are concerned, on the narrow point about the boundary, the hon. member is correct; I did not talk to the Premier of Newfoundland about that particular point. I did not do so for the very reason I am speaking about now, namely, that I did not want to tie the boundary question and the tariff question, and Premier Moores has had no direct interest in the boundary question.

I said to the hon. member in the House a few days ago, when he raised this matter, that I was aware that there was a different issue, which has been long-standing for several months, on the question of tariffs. I am in the process this day of having discussions and negotiations about this situation. I spoke with the Secretary of State of the United States at 6.15 last evening and made it clear to him that there was no relationship between the two questions, and I had confirmation from him that he would do his best to separate the two. If the hon. member is really concerned about Newfoundland and the Newfoundland fishermen as much as I am, he will stop trying to make this connection.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, a final supplementary question. Does the minister realize that what he has just said illustrates how important this is to Newfoundland? While he may keep it separate in his mind, the United States does not have to. Other people who will be affected by his actions should be consulted. Is the minister saying that there are going to be no countervailing duties imposed on fish products from Newfoundland as a result of his discussions with the Secretary of State for the United States? Is that his statement?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I could give the hon. member that absolute assurance as of this moment if he would be prepared to support me in trying to avoid a reduction of two cents per pound to Newfoundland inshore fishermen for the rest of this fishing season. That is what is at issue. I can meet the United States clear across the board and get many plaudits from the United States and ensure that there is no connection. The need for me to do that, however, is very much circumscribed by the fact that I am conscious that we have said we will pay the inshore fishermen of Newfoundland a two-cent subsidy for the remainder of the fishing season.

The thing I am trying to negotiate is that if I assure the United States government that the subsidy will be ended by the end of this year and will not continue, will they then refrain from taking countervailing action? I cannot be sure that they will do that, of course. I would be a fool and I would also be unfair to the Newfoundland fishermen if I were to say at this time to the United States that I will stop the two-cent payment to Newfoundland fishermen. If the hon. member wants me to do that, let him say so now and we can get the whole matter resolved within 24 hours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS IN PETER TREU CASE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice. I understand the minister is prepared to give some indication to the House of his intentions with regard to documents in the Peter Treu case, what he will file, how, and why. I will give him that opportunity by requesting him to do so.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I undertook to the hon. member the other day to table what I could. I am ready and able to table, later, the undertakings on bail and the statement of the judge on sentencing. While a political opponent, I think the hon. member would not want me either cited for contempt of court or charged under the Official Secrets Act. I am, of course, prevented from tabling the reasons for judgment, but I have instructed counsel to apply to the court for an order varying the order, and I hope the judgment can be tabled in this House because I think it would be helpful.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice tempts me with his observation about the Official Secrets Act. I should like to ask a supplementary question. Having in mind the comprehensive nature of this act, the fact that the minister, after two years of thorough and complete investigation by the authorities, laid two charges of the nature he did, that the act is wide enough that obviously many members of this House, including front benchers, members on this side and members of the press gallery have probably been in breach of the act from time to time, and having in mind that one year after the trial of Dr. Treu commenced he was awarded a contract by the NATO service centre—NATO being an organization of which Canada is still a member, unless the Prime Minister fixed that when he was away recently—and Dr. Treu is engaged in carrying out a contract for NATO at the present time, will the minister not agree that, under all these conditions, the interests of justice would be served if he instructed his counsel to agree to quash the existing conviction and sentence and agree to a new trial being held in the open, with full right reserved to the Crown to seek certain documents which may be sensitive and that certain evidence be kept out of the public eye?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot accede to the hon. member's request. The case is under appeal at the present time. I think, obviously, that Dr. Treu should be permitted to pursue that process. At the commencement of the trial, both counsel in the case agreed to the necessity of the trial being in secret. I do not have a transcript of the proceedings, but I am informed that in a recent statement, counsel for Dr. Treu acknowledged at a seminar that while secret trials were unusual in our jurisprudence, this was the kind of case that required the evidence being taken in secret.

I would remind the hon. member that, difficult as it may be, the evidence in this case involved the NATO communications system. That is a military secret of the highest order, and there is no way, in the interests of NATO and of Canada, that it can be made public.

Mr. Baldwin: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I understand that NATO is of a very sensitive military nature and that Dr. Treu is still working on a communications system which is in that sensitive area. This is one of the reasons that persuades me to ask this final question: Will the minister agree to facilitate the appearance of Dr. Treu before a committee of this House on matters external to the trial, keeping to one side the narrow issues of the trial, so that he might be able to give this House details of the harassment and the extent to which the facts of this case, outside of the trial itself, should be made public?

Mr. Basford: No, Mr. Speaker; first, of course, for the obvious technical reason that I am not in charge of committees of the House. Second, I have had no representations from his counsel to that effect, nor has my counsel had any such representations. I think my proper course of action is to allow Dr. Treu to do whatever he wants to do to make his views known, through counsel, to me.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT KNOWS FATE OF MR. HUGO BLANCO OF PERU

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Can the minister tell the House, based on the latest reports from our embassy in Lima, what the situation is in Peru regarding the presidential election, and could he also advise us as to the fate of Mr. Hugo Blanco who was to be a candidate in the election but who, according to some sources, was arrested and secretly transported to Argentina along with six other Peruvian citizens?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question, I think it is common knowledge that there has been some delay in the election to which the hon. member refers, but I believe a new date has been set for either June 18 or 19 of this year. I am not exactly sure of the date.

We are also aware of the fact that the gentleman to whom he referred has apparently disappeared, but no word has come to us indicating what happened to him. We are continuing to make inquiries on a humanitarian basis.

TRANSPORT

COAST GUARD BUILDING IN VICTORIA HARBOUR, B.C.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport of which I have given him notice. I have been informed that Transport Canada intends to go ahead with the construction of a 30,000 square foot metal warehouse on the foreshore of the entrance to Victoria harbour. The Department of Public Works promised verbally on several occasions that the coast guard buildings would be built in conformity with local design requirements, but their present plans are not. Can the minister explain this unresponsiveness to the city's design plans, and does he intend to do anything about it?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the coast guard construction has the necessary building permit and also meets the city's zoning requirements. I am also informed that the high quality metal panels which are being used have high modifications included for such things as windows for the sake of appearance. I think, having regard to the combination of interests, including the amount of money which can and should be spent on a building of this type, a good balance has been achieved.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, the city of Victoria and other levels of government have chipped in and have spent millions of dollars on the beautification of Victoria harbour. They have turned down tens of millions of dollars of commercial development which did not fit in with their design plans for the harbour. The federal government, of all people, should not go in and despoil the beauty of that harbour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: I would ask the minister if he would reconsider this decision, possibly appoint an independent architect to give him advice, or take the advice of the provincial government, the city of Victoria or the design panel committee—

An hon. Member: Anybody.

Mr. McKinnon: —or delay construction until after the next election, if we ever get it.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the hon. member has omitted any reference to the fact that in this case a building permit from the city was sought and obtained.

An hon. Member: So what?

Mr. Lang: I do not know whether the hon. member is suggesting that this coastguard operation should in fact have gone somewhere else. That may be a point. A decision like this could have been made. But there is obviously a limit to the amount that can be spent on a building which is essentially designed to warehouse a certain amount of materials and equipment.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

EMIGRATION OF DOCTORS FROM CANADA

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the loss of almost 4,000 doctors from Canada during the years 1967 to 1977, and with increasing losses now, what plans does the minister have to rectify this situation? Can she assure the public that there will be enough graduates coming along, not to guarantee the quality of care, because you cannot guarantee the quality of care when the top men are lost, but to guarantee that there will by physicians available to look after the increasing number of geriatric patients in the next ten years?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on the general problem of emigration of physicians and specialists, the real statistics for 1977 estimate that 600, not 1,500, departed. The latter figure is often referred to and has already been used once by the hon. gentleman. I can assure him that a sufficient number of young graduates will replace those physicians emigrating abroad—who are not all Canadians, by the way.

As to the problem of geriatrics which the hon. member touched upon in the last part of his question, we all know that there are not enough specialists in that particular field and that this subject will be touched upon at a special conference in the fall.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the bloc system runs for a period of five years, how can the minister be assured, when that program can be interrupted at any time within five years, that the quality of care and availability of doctors will be present in each and every province?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I understood the question properly, but there is no problem since there will not be any disruption in any of the elements which are the components of the health delivery system in Canada. There will be no disruption in the training of new physicians and specialists and there will be no disruption in the development of the health care of the country, except for improvements, and I do not call that disruption. In most of the provinces these improvements are moving toward more ambulatory care. The hon. gentleman has been a proponent of this, and there are no cuts in budgets by any of the provincial governments, to my knowledge. The system is functioning very well and improving within existing budgets.

APPLICATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS ACT IN LABOUR DISPUTES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice with respect to the wage dispute between the 25 women members of the Ottawa Steel Plate Examiners Union and the British American Bank Note Company. On Thursday, May 25, I asked the minister, as reported at page 5718 of Hansard:

> In view of the fact that section 19 of the Canadian Human Rights Act empowers the government to include a directive in federal contracts with respect to the anti-discrimination sections of the act, may I ask the minister if the government will test the validity of section 19 of the act by giving a directive to the British American Bank Note Company to pay attention to those anti-discrimination provisions?

Two days ago the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby asked whether there was yet an answer to the question, and the minister said, "No, not yet." I hope he has it today.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is provided in section 19 that the governor in council will make regulations under that act before it can be applied. When the Human Rights Commission was first established, it was envisaged that they would examine the use of section 19 and propose recommendations to me or the governor in council as to the type of regulations that should be passed. The Human Rights Commission, as I understand it, is doing that with regard to the general situation. It is aware of the particular case the hon. member raises, and has it under advisement.

However, there are some difficulties in using this as a test case. First, it would require retrospective application of the legislation, which does not commend itself to me, initially, as a good test case. Second, the arbitrator, as I read the arbitration award, clearly found that there was no discrimination in this particular contract. In any event, before section 19 can be applied, we need recommendations or reports from the Human Rights Commission which has the matter under advisement.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker does the government not have some sensitivity over the fact that it is doing business with a company that is in violation of its own Human Rights Act?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, as I read the arbitrator's award, that is not the case.

AIRPORTS

WEST GERMAN CRITICISM OF TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It concerns a report in Wednesday's Globe and Mail quoting a London Sunday Times article that the West German government has rated Toronto international airport one of the least secure airports in the world.

I would ask the minister if this report is true, and if not, could he, through his colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs, ask for an apology from the West German government, since accusations of this sort most certainly undermine the confidence of millions of Canadians and tourists who travel through the Toronto airport?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the allegation of lack of safety at Toronto airport is completely untrue. It appears that at one time, for a very brief period, the Toronto airport did appear on a list which was prepared by the German authorities. But almost immediately, when it came to the attention of Lufthansa, they informed the German authorities that in their view—and Lufthansa is knowledgeable about the matter, as they use the Toronto airport facilities—the Toronto international airport security standards were absolutely adequate and the Toronto airport was immediately removed from the list.

I should say, as well, in terms of the German government, that I appreciated an immediate call from the German ambassador here to explain the situation. He has also contacted the Department of External Affairs and I consider the matter closed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISAPPEARANCE OF CHILEAN NATIONALS—GOVERNMENT STEPS TO INVESTIGATE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It relates to the hunger strike of Chilean friends and relatives of disappeared persons and prisoners which was terminated yesterday at noon, of which perhaps the minister is aware. As a result of an official commitment which was made by the hierarchy of the Roman Catholic Episcopal Conference in Chile to press government authorities on the fate, after the disappearance, of persons and prisoners and, perhaps more important, the apparent assurance of the minister of the interior to clarify the situation case by case in, and I quote, "a short period of time" and in view of the previous commitment of about a year ago from President Pinochet to provide the same information—a commitment made to the United Nations—I wonder what action the minister is prepared to take on behalf of the Canadian government, as well as through the offices of either the Secretary General of the United Nations, Mr. Waldheim, or the Human Rights Commission, to ensure that in fact we do get to the bottom of the disappearance of 2,500 persons and prisoners, which is a very serious situation to those who are deeply involved in this great human agony.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of this matter and I share the obvious concern of the hon. member and of all members in this issue. We have taken a number of steps already and we have done a certain amount of monitoring of the situation to the best of our ability. The response has not been adequate. However, we see some evidence that progress has been made on President Pinochet's commitment, but not enough and not rapidly enough. I am afraid the most I can do for the hon. member is to say that I will take his proposals under advisement.

We can certainly make representations to the Chilean government along the lines suggested, and I will look into the possibility of action through the Secretary General of the United Nations and in other ways.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE BY CROWN AGENCIES IN SEARCH FOR OIL AND GAS IN PAKISTAN

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This week, the government announced that Petro-Canada and CIDA will combine to spend $70 million to search for oil and gas in Pakistan. Since the rationale of Petro-Canada is to increase Canada's proven oil and gas reserves, and since the stated policy of CIDA is to give priority to meeting the basic needs of people in the poorest countries, what are the circumstances which have led to this strange policy by which two government agencies are now doing what private industry could do much better?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am not sure whether I can give a total response within the constraints of the question period. The hon. member has referred to the mandates of these organizations. I think he would agree that although Petro-Canada has an important role to play within Canada, it is not inhibited or prohibited from acting elsewhere in the world. Similarly, while CIDA has an obvious preoccupation with one particular stream of foreign assistance, namely, to the poor people of the world, part of its mandate is to look on the development side.

The hon. member asked me to explain the rationale behind this project. As I advised the hon. member earlier, I have seen the documentation and the reason for it. I think it deserves a good deal of support both as a worth-while form of assistance to Pakistan and also as containing a substantial component, as I understand it, of Canadian equipment, material and technical assistance which certainly add to its benefit. If the hon. member is interested, I am sure we could provide him with a written background paper outlining the history of the project and the reason the decision was made to proceed.

Mr. Roche: I appreciate the minister's response. However, since this is an abrupt change in Canadian policy with regard to foreign aid, I should like this document to be made available not only to myself but to the Standing Committee on External Affairs, so that the committee might study the appropriateness of this project and the aid-effectiveness of the plan the minister has mentioned.

Mr. Jamieson: I believe the hon. member is on the steering committee, and it is a matter for the committee itself to decide how and when it will proceed. I will do my best, but I want to say that I am not at all in agreement with the hon. member's preamble in which he suggested there has been a dramatic change in policy. I think this project is consistent with one aspect of CIDA's role. The hon. member might wish to consult the chairman of the committee in the first instance. I am in a position to give him a great deal more information than I can give him orally today.

AGRICULTURE

EXPORT OF BEEF TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture pertaining to the statement from Washington that President Carter will today announce a 15 per cent increase in U.S. beef import levels. In view of the fact that Canadian cattle producers are only now beginning to recoup a small part of the $400 million they have lost in equity in the last four years, will the minister assure our cattle producers that he will not be increasing Canadian beef quotas which have been set for all of 1978 following reasonable debate and agreement?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The hon. member should be told the amount of quota the United States is increasing would mean we would have about 11 million more pounds which would go to the United States, but at this time this year we have shipped only 32.9 million pounds to the United States and last year we shipped 44.8 million pounds, so I do not think the change will affect us much.

Regarding any decision the government makes concerning the quota restrictions we have just put into effect, what we would do was clearly outlined in the news release at that time and I do not think we have any intention to change that, but to say there is no discussion about what the United States is doing, or on the whole beef situation in the world, would be wrong because there is discussion.

Mr. Hargrave: I would remind the minister that he made a very firm commitment to stick by this quota for 1978. However, in view of the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that there is a shortage of beef, which is certainly not true, and that he will be discussing some initiatives with his colleagues, I ask the minister if he will explain some of the facts of life about beef production in Canada to his colleague, the Minister of Consumer Affairs, and what it means to survive in an industry which has not had a price increase in four years and which has been operating at less than the cost of production.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now making a representation.

AIRPORTS

SAFETY FACILITIES AT CRANBROOK, B.C.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on May 15 I directed a question to the Minister of Transport asking whether he could provide any positive evidence which would prove or demonstrate that there have been four violations involving vehicles on airport runways since the incident at Cranbrook on February 11. Does the minister have that information available?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not have that report at this point.

Mr. Brisco: In light of the fact that on April 20 a Pacific World Airlines aircraft was forced to go round again on a final approach because of a vehicle on the runway at Cranbrook airport, two months after the accident which brought about the fatal crash, is the minister now prepared—in light of this evidence passed to me by PWA—to order an immediate inquiry into the effectiveness of the ground-to-ground and ground-to-air facilities at this airport; or does he intend to wait until there is another accident?

Mr. Lang: The hon. member is being unfair. He knows full well that the whole question of these communications is presently under investigation both as to the specific incident which occurred and at airports around the country. The inquiry is not related to one airport.

CANADIAN CULTURE

COST OF DISCOVERY TRAIN PROGRAM

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Is the minister aware of the confusion and almost complete lack of accountability demonstrated by his officials at the standing committee yesterday, who want to increase the cost of the Discovery Train from $750,000 to $2,250,000 a year?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I would certainly not accept the hypothesis assumed by the hon. member at the beginning of his question as to confusion among my officials in their presentation yesterday. It is true the original estimates of the cost of the Discovery Train are below the cost we expect to be incurred. We are looking at various ways of making up the shortage.

Mr. Friesen: If the Secretary of State had been in the committee yesterday, he would have seen that confusion. Since Treasury Board has approved only $750,000 per year for operating costs, I should like to ask him whether, in light of the government's so-called austerity program, he feels there is justification for tripling the cost of this operation.

Mr. Roberts: The hon. member knows it is not the custom of the Secretary of State to attend committee meetings when officials of the agencies are appearing, unless there is some special request for him to do so. He also knows I shall be meeting with the committee in 30 minutes. If he is asking me whether I know of the financial implications of this project, the answer is yes. If he is asking me whether I am considering ways of dealing with the problem, the answer is also yes.

Mr. Speaker: I have notices from two hon. members regarding questions of privilege relating to documents tabled last evening, and I intend to rule on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). However, it being Thursday, there is the usual question about the business of the House, and I wonder if hon. members might agree that we take that now and then proceed to these questions of privilege. If so, I will recognize the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order I wonder if the minister will tell us whether it is still his intention to give priority to Bill C-56 in terms of government business, and whether there is any change in the list of legislation he announced a couple of weeks ago.

While the minister is answering, I wonder if he would be prepared to designate Wednesday, June 14, and Thursday, June 15, as allotted days.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, there is no change in the legislation which is now before the House. That will be continued, and there is no change in the list of legislation which I mentioned to my colleagues and to the House of Commons. When we finish the debate on the present bill, that will probably be a good time to review the situation with a view to concluding our business by the end of June. I, of course, designate next Wednesday and Thursday as allotted days.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could use this matter of House business to indicate that the motion for the allotted day tomorrow is as follows:

That this House notes with concern the secret trial of Alexander Peter Treu and the harassment of the Toronto Sun and its editor, Peter Worthington, under the provisions of the Official Secrets Act, and urges the establishment of a special committee of this House to recommend such changes in the act as will limit its scope to matters directly related to national security and defence.

That motion will be in the name of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, with respect to House business, since the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) made reference to an intention about which we have known for some time, namely, to try to bring this part of the session to a conclusion on June 30, can he tell the House whether the government has any plans respecting the two holidays, June 24 and July 1, both of which this year fall on a Saturday? Every year when these two days come along certain questions are asked. Does the government have any plans about sittings of the House with respect to those two days? I do not mean we should sit on those days, but are there to be compensatory days off?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker. I am surprised that the hon. member would even suggest to his colleagues in this House that we should not sit on the greatest possible number of days. It is not our intention to make compensation for holidays which fall on Saturdays. Therefore, it will not be our intention to change or to eliminate the sitting on Monday, June 26. It is not my expectation that the House will be sitting on July 3, but if it should happen by some misadventure that we do sit in July, it would not be my intention to compensate for the July 1 holiday.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, can the government House leader tell us if the French-speaking staff of the House of Commons, who usually have a holiday on June 24, will have the day off later on or at a date set by the government that will cause the least disturbance, since this year that holiday falls on a Saturday?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to turn this question over to the rightful authority.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—STATEMENT ISSUED BY JUDGE MAYRAND OF MONTREAL

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has raised a question of privilege concerning the remarks of Judge Mayrand respecting some interventions by the hon. member for Peace River in this House and their reference to the trial of Peter Treu.

Since that question of privilege has concerned the right of a member of the House of Commons to speak in this House in criticism of proceedings in our courts, it has provoked a good deal of discussion. That discussion was contributed to at great length by a number of hon. members who had done some study on the matter. They made very useful contributions, and rather than attempting to refer to those individual contributions in terms of particular arguments to which I will be referring, I simply want to recognize the very useful contributions which have been made, and to say that they have been of great help to us in researching the matter.

The hon. members to whom I refer are the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Young).

The arguments in favour of finding this language by Judge Mayrand to constitute a question of privilege relate primarily to three areas, that is, that these remarks themselves were made for the purpose of intimidating a member and could really not have had any other purpose; that the remarks, coming as they did from a judge speaking, for example, of not being able to tolerate the remarks of a member of parliament certainly have more weight than those of perhaps an editorial writer or any other citizen; and, finally, that the remarks of the judge were obviously based on a misunderstanding of what the hon. member for Peace River in fact had said in the House because the remarks of the judge indicated that the hon. member should be attempting to change the law and not criticize the courts and, in fact, on every reference that is exactly what the hon. member had been doing. The argument therefore became that they constitute a misrepresentation of the efforts of the hon. member and of the proceedings of the House.

On the other hand, those arguments which would prevail against a finding of privilege are that the courts, like parliament, enjoy privileges that ought to be left to them without interference from us; that the judge was doing nothing more than defending his court in the circumstances; that he did not in any way deny the privileges of members; that in no way have the judge's comments intimidated any member; that they do not constitute an instrument of the court as they easily could have done; and that, finally, the issue is really one of a difference of opinion regarding the interpretation of language.

Regarding the precedents relating to the use of language as a matter of intimidation, I think we have to isolate it to that because rarely—in fact, never—in the precedents which were cited by any of the hon. members who contributed to the discussion, or in our research, could we find a precedent in which language which implied a threat but did not state it had been found to be a matter of privilege. I think that is quite significant.

On one occasion referred to in Erskine May's nineteenth edition at page 150 a letter to a member threatening him with a trial at some future date if he continued a line of questioning was held to be privilege, but that obviously specifically stated a threat of prosecution.

The one Canadian precedent which was of some use was the recent case involving the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) and his complaint against the then president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the language of the president of the corporation had been intended or calculated to intimidate or influence the hon. member. At that time the ruling said, in part:

> —I must indicate that as a general proposition nothing that anyone says about the conduct or performance, the speech or contribution of any hon. member could in general terms be taken as interference with his right to speak or to operate as a member of the House of Commons. I do not see . . . that his privileges as a member of the House of Commons, his right to appear here and to participate fully as an active member of the House, his right to speak and express his opinions, have in any way been interfered with.

In interpreting the judge's remarks, it seemed to me that, without any dispute about the translation from French into English, there is one statement that would represent the epitome of the arguments in favour of finding privilege, that is, the circumstances in which the judge said:

> In the name of respect for judicial independence, we cannot tolerate the remarks of Mr. Gerald Baldwin, MP who was wondering whether the law had not been well understood or had been wrongfully applied by the judges.

It seems to me that this statement can be interpreted as being offensive to the privileges of the House, for several reasons. First, it is extraordinary for a judge to become involved in any kind of public commentary. I think that all of us, whether lawyers or otherwise, are aware of the fact that only in the most extraordinary circumstances does a judge ever speak out to the public with respect to proceedings in his court. There are several reasons for that respecting the independence and the dignity of the judiciary, but, in addition, there is the obvious reason that a judge has several remedies available to him, the least of which is to make public statements and to get into a public dispute, which has always been unseemly for those who preside over the courts and never seems to be productive. Certainly it does not seem to have been very productive in these circumstances.

Those who argue that it could have been found as a privilege would want to urge also that such remarks by a judge—and not even the trial judge—cannot be looked upon simply as an outburst of temper since they were uttered by a judge acting in the capacity of acting chief judge of the court and, therefore, had special weight and significance, but ought to be taken as more than simply a passing warning in respect of the conduct of the hon. member, ought to be taken as a threat and an intimidation of the hon. member.

Those who argue that it should be taken as a privilege say the judge could have used less offensive words. If he simply wanted to disagree with the hon. member for Peace River he could have easily said that or, if he rejected his proposition, that could have been said as well. Instead, he said "we cannot tolerate", which is much stronger language than necessary simply to disagree.

Finally, one other reason—I think the hon. member for Halifax put it very well—was that, never mind the specific language, the general tone of the remarks should be considered. Why would a judge bother to do that, except for one purpose, that is, to tell the hon. member that he should desist in his criticism of the courts or in his criticism of the proceedings in this particular case, because it was offensive.

On the other hand, a more generous interpretation is equally available, it seems to me. It is perfectly possible to interpret the judge's language as being nothing more than a defence of his court. His court has been criticized, and I think he has said that his court has been criticized unfairly. He might have said, "We are instructed by the law to carry out the trials in this way, therefore we really cannot accept or tolerate this kind of criticism. It is not our fault, we simply obey the law. Therefore, if you want to change it, change the law, do not tell us that the courts are being badly run." That is a reasonable interpretation of the judge's remarks, just as reasonable as the one I have stated previously.

Again I repeat the argument. It is argued that the judge could have used different language. It is equally applicable to both interpretations, for just as it was possible to say it in the other interpretation, in this interpretation it is also possible to say that if the judge had wanted to cite the hon. member for contempt of court, he knew how to do it; if he had wanted to threaten him with a citation for contempt, he knew how to do that too and therefore by avoiding that language he gives weight to the interpretation that he was not trying to threaten or intimidate the hon. member.

However, I am also concerned about a few other consequences of finding privilege here. While I say that they do not render it impossible to find privilege, I do say they render it very risky to find privilege. I stress that depending on what interpretation we follow—because we are dealing here with the interpretation of language and not with agreed circumstances of fact—it is possible to go either way. But I do bear in mind that the threat, if it is here, is an implied threat, not a stated threat, and the first risk would be, therefore, to extend the precedents from those cases in which a threat by language was clearly stated into that area where it was not clearly stated but implied. I think that would be dangerous. I do not say it is not possible but I think it would be dangerous, unless absolutely necessary in protection of our freedoms.

Second, in this case and in other cases we have vigorously defended the right of the hon. member for Peace River, and of all other hon. members, to speak freely in this House, to be free to speak critically of our institutions, and we will always defend that right. I want to stress here, in case I leave it in any doubt, and I want to reaffirm here, as I know all hon. members do regardless of their position on this argument, the right of the hon. member for Peace River to speak freely in the House at all times and to be free to speak critically of these kinds of proceedings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The risk that might be encountered on the other side of the argument is that if we are to defend so vigorously the right of any hon. member to stand in the House and criticize any proceedings where we see the danger of injustice, or the appearance of injustice even, then I would not want, unless absolutely necessary to defend those rights, to circumscribe or restrict the freedom of the judge in these circumstances to defend his court against that criticism.

For us to defend to the death our right to speak freely here, and yet be terribly tender about the freedom of those who speak back to us, would be unseemly and unfortunate for the House of Commons, and again I say it is risky. But it could be necessary to defend our freedom of speech and, if it were, I think we could move to it. However, I want to recognize the risk.

Finally, I think parliament must always be on guard to defend our own privileges and our right to criticize the courts or any other institution. However, there is a danger here of the appearance of putting the courts of the land under parliament's scrutiny. That can be done if it is necessary to protect our freedoms, and we will do it if it is necessary to protect our freedom, but I say that in this particular circumstance, unless it is absolutely necessary to do so, I think it would be risky for the House of Commons to move in that direction.

Therefore, while I think that the judge, in the circumstances, might have either misunderstood or misinterpreted the actions of the hon. member for Peace River, also in the circumstances I think the House should not use its power under privilege in this case where the judge's remarks are open to more than one interpretation and, in any case, contain an implied threat as opposed to a specific one.

I do want to stress again that this kind of intervention by a judge in public was an extraordinary intervention, and I do not think the judge would have to do much more than he did to offend the privileges of the House. I think it is a very dangerous situation, and I hope it will be noted. Again I say I want to reaffirm the right of any hon. member to criticize whatever injustice he may see, and I am sure we will always follow that course.

Finally, I want to return to an observation which I made at the beginning. The hon. member has moved the motion that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Rights and Immunities. That committee is continuing its study and has endeavoured to hold a meeting recently on this and other matters. Its original mandate is to examine, at the initiative of the hon. member for Peace River, the whole question of rights and immunities of members, and to report to the House. Subsequently, the House agreed to an additional reference, although not in specific terms, on the subject matter of the Official Secrets Act raised, in its relation with rights and immunities, by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). It seems to me that the combination of those references would not only permit that committee, but in fact direct it, to examine the Treu trial, and the Official Secrets Act, and its application thereto, and indeed to examine the whole sequence of events on which so many members have contributed their arguments. I am quite certain that this committee, in carrying on its work, with the assistance of the hon. member for Peace River, will do a very detailed analysis of these events and, I hope, will present a meaningful report to the House in due course.

MR. DINSDALE—DELAY IN TABLING POST OFFICE ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have given you notice of my intention to raise a question of privilege with respect to the delayed tabling of the report of the Canada Post Office for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977. I have decided to raise it as a question of privilege because it seems to be part of a pattern that has developed with respect to the actions of the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne).

You will recall, sir, that a short time ago we were discussing in the House the question of the illegal raising of postal rates by circumventing the requirements of the Post Office Act and proceeding by means of order in council under the Financial Administrative Act, this in spite of the fact that section 10 of the Post Office Act quite clearly directs that there will be no rate increases other than by amendments to the Post Office Act, and furthermore, the endorsation of the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments which unanimously condemned the actions of the Postmaster General.

With respect to the present complaint, that is, of ignoring the requirements of Section 80(1) and (2) of the Post Office Act in the tabling of the annual report, to put the matter into perspective perhaps I should read to the House parts of the section that are relevant.

Section 80(1) reads as follows:

The Postmaster General shall submit annually to the Governor General a report of the Canada Post Office for the preceding fiscal year, containing a statement of the gross revenue collected, the amounts paid by the Postmaster General from revenue, the amounts paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund, the amounts paid from moneys voted by parliament . . .

Section 80(2) reads as follows:

The report referred to in subsection (1), if completed when parliament is in session, shall be laid before parliament forthwith, and if not so completed, within ten days after the commencement of the next ensuing session of parliament . . .

On May 12 I raised this question in the House of Commons. As the Postmaster General was not present in the chamber, I directed my question to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), and he indicated that he would look into the matter.

On May 17 the report was tabled in mimeographed form, but it was not circulated among members as is the well-established practice in respect of annual reports provided under statutory provisions.

I raised this question because we were hoping to have the estimates of the Post Office Department referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. These estimates were required for the purpose of background preparation in respect of those hearings.

The delaying of the tabling to May 17 obviously was in contravention of the requirements of the Post Office Act. I attempted to get a copy of the report. Finally the estimates were referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications yesterday, at which point I was still endeavouring to obtain a copy. Finally I received a copy in the French language which did not assist in preparing for a thorough examination by the committee.

There seems to be a pattern in this regard, which is the reason I raise this issue. There is an attempt on the part of the Postmaster General to avoid a thorough discussion of postal affairs in the House. If there is one department which needs a thorough examination, surely it is the Post Office Department.

Yesterday the Postmaster General and I arrived together in the committee for the consideration of the estimates. We were there at the starting hour. He made his statement, and as is the tried and true practice from time immemorial, I anticipated, as the official spokesman on postal affairs for the opposition, that I would have the right of responding to the leadoff statement of the Postmaster General. The chairman of the committee decided against accepting that practice, and a procedural discussion ensued.

I realize this is not prescribed in the procedures and regulations, but in the 27 years I have been here, the courtesy, practice, and unwritten tradition of this House have been to permit the official spokesman of the opposition to reply to the statement of a minister. A pattern seems to be developing to deny members of the House an opportunity for thorough discussion regarding the introduction of amendments to the Post Office Act, and that pattern also is carrying over into consideration at committee stage. Those of us who have had considerable experience in the examination of estimates in the committee of the whole remember that we had the privilege of examining at length the spending plans of various government departments. Also we know how restricted we are under the present procedures of allocation of time and closure which have been placed upon parliament in the past ten years.

Mr. Alexander: Plus a Liberal majority.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes. During that time expenditures have grown astronomically. The Post Office Department is no exception, as indicated by the current deficit of over half a billion.

I should like to mention one other item. Your Honour will recall that a few weeks ago a decision was reached by the Postmaster General and the government to establish an internal committee to examine the advisability of transforming the Post Office Department into a Crown corporation. This internal committee is to be made up representatives from the Post Office Department, Treasury Board, and the Department of Labour. An announcement of that importance should have provided an opportunity for response from the opposition. To avoid such a response, the announcement was made outside the House of Commons in a special press conference.

All of these circumstances build up to what I think is a justifiable question of privilege. If Your Honour rules that a specific question of privilege has been established in the remarks I have made this afternoon, I intend to move a motion which will ask that both the issue of the postal rate increase and the issue of the delayed tabling of the Post Office Department report be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard : Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Postmaster General, for an excellent reason, cannot be in the House to reply, I would respectfully ask you to reserve his right and defer the debate on that question of privilege until his return to the House tomorrow or early next week.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Certainly that would be the normal course. I am sure the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) would want to respond. Perhaps we are into an argument concerning a breach of the law. I am not so sure whether that results in a breach of our privileges. In any case, I should like to examine carefully the arguments of the hon. member, because he extended the matter beyond a mere breach of the law and into a pattern of conduct at which I want to look. In any event, I should like to hear the intervention of the Postmaster General on the subject before deciding. As we usually do, I think it would be appropriate to wait for that.

MR. ANDRE—RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will not take too much of the time of the House. My question of privilege arises out of a statement made by the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Buchanan) on June 1. The reason for the delay is that I was not aware of the difficulty until Monday of this week. It took until this morning to find the date necessary to be sure of the position. Basically it relates to the provision of misleading information to the House.

The statement by the Minister of State for Science and Technology was the presentation of a new science initiatives policy by the government, with appropriate fancy coloured brochures, background documentation, speech, press releases and so on. The minister made a statement in the House and tabled two supporting documents. One was entitled "Research and Development in Canada—Discussion Paper", and the other was entitled "Measures to Strengthen and Encourage Research and Development in Canada".

The first and the main point of the minister's statement was a declaration that the Canadian government was establishing a target of 1.5 per cent of gross domestic product for research and development expenditures by 1983. That is an important distinction. The figure 1.5 per cent does not have meaning in itself. It must be compared with other figures, or the historical performance of other countries, and so on. To give that target meaning the minister included in the document he tabled, a table indicating the historical performance in Canada in respect of research and development expenditures as a percentage of gross national product, from 1963 to 1977.

To give meaning to this target the table is presented as a percentage of gross national product, yet the target itself is a percentage of gross domestic product. The figure in relation to domestic product is a figure historically smaller than in respect of gross national product. Therefore the minister has somehow engaged in flim-flam by saying this is our target, measured in so many oranges, and in comparison we produced so many apples in the past.

That is not my main point, Mr. Speaker. The sources of these data are referenced as the Bank of Canada Review and Statistics Canada Catalogue 13-003. It took me some time to find Statistics Canada catalogue 13-003. I finally traced it down and looked up the data, only to find that it is quite different from the data in this table. The effect of this difference is to make this target, about which the minister talked—the prime new initiative—look like a much greater change than in fact is the reality. If you use the data referenced by the minister, you will see it is gross domestic product, from the Bank of Canada. We are talking about data from the Bank of Canada and Statistics Canada, and I think that is beyond question in terms of its validity. In any event, you find that in effect this new target, instead of representing an increase from .9 per cent to 1.5 per cent, in the form of new ventures, is in fact a return to the 1971 levels of effort. That is a significant year in that it was the year the Ministry of Science and Technology was established, mainly because Canada's efforts were so puny in this field. It would appear to be, prima facie, that this was a deliberate attempt to make this policy initiative appear much greater and much more grand, if you like, than in fact is the reality.

It has been a long established practice in this House that the words of a minister are to be taken as fact. I think there is no difference whether the words of the minister are oral or in the written form; we accept them as factual. It is demonstrable that the data presented by the minister are not fact and are not accurate. Using his own references it can be shown that the information is wrong and creates quite a different impression, and distorts the information before the House.

If we are in a position as members of having to permit or allow ministers to present misleading and inaccurate data, then I think our opportunities to participate and contribute in a meaningful way are infringed upon. I would maintain that this represnts a question of privilege, and that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have tried to allow the hon. member as much latitude as I thought he would need to develop his argument fully, and to make sure that I understood it completely.

I will examine the hon. member's representations. I will reserve judgment at the present time, but my very clear impression is that he has a disagreement in respect of the interpretation of statistics presented by the Minister. Presumably the minister will argue that he puts an entirely different interpretation on the figures. I am sure there have been many occasions, and the hon. member will recognize this, when there have been accusations of total disagreement in respect of the accuracy of figures and statistics. If every time that argument were made, by an hon. member on one or the other side of the House, it resolved itself into a question of privilege, the extension of privilege would be far greater than most of us believe it to be in terms of the classic definition. However, I will examine the hon. member's argument to see whether there is the appearance of a question of privilege and, if so, I will rule on it as soon as I possibly can.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong the argument, but your reaction to my remarks causes me to consider that possibly I did not express my concerns accurately.

This does not involve a matter of disagreement over numbers. We agree that Statistics Canada and the Bank of Canada are the authoritative sources of this data. The minister claimed that this was what he was presenting but, in fact, did not do so. If that is not a misleading of the House then, my goodness, I cannot think of anything that could possibly be misleading. He has claimed those two statistics as the authority for his suggestions, and the statistics produced by those two organizations are beyond question in terms of their validity.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I assured the hon. member I would look at his arguments. I will hear what the minister's intervention is when he is in the House, and then decide what is the resolution of this problem.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH)—REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, and I am sorry the government House leader is not present.

On June 5, Monday of this week, a special reference was given to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry in order to prolong its hearings, specifically for Tuesday and Thursday of this week. I do not think I need to go into the background of that fully. The reasoning for it is fairly clear to those who participated in the meetings.

There was a halt in meetings late last month because of the delicacy of negotiations then in course. Rather than having an in-camera session, or an open meeting when questions that might interfere with those negotiations could be asked, it was decided by the steering committee that we should not meet. It was agreed then that one extra meeting would be held in respect of fisheries. The meeting at which that decision was taken was on May 30.

On June 2 there was a very dramatic development, as you will recall, when United States fishermen were excluded from Canadian fishing zones, except in that area in dispute.

Following upon that, it seemed evident that the committee ought to meet to examine this situation more fully and obtain answers from ministers in respect of policy questions. Two meetings were organized, and it was expected that the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) would be present. For very good reasons the minister could not be there. He is in New Brunswick attending the funeral of a former member of the other place. That is understandable.

What I am suggesting is that we are trying to get from the House leader a further reference. In view of the fact that June 19 is the date when new negotiations are to resume, I would like to see this as an open reference to last for as long as this House is sitting this session, in order that the committee might meet and examine the situation as it develops even while the negotiations continue. We could then ask questions, not to embarrass anybody, but in order that we understand as well as possible what is going on, and for the edification of not just members in this House but of the Canadian public as well.

I would hope, therefore, that it would be possible to convince the government House leader to make a further reference to the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry in order that it might meet on a number of occasions between now and the termination of this session.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, a motion has already been tabled by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) under which the committees can sit and consider the estimates after May 31 until the third day preceding the last allotted day which has not yet been determined but which will probably be before June 30. As for the request of the hon. member who would like to discuss a matter other than the estimates and to sit as long as possible in June, we will consider its merits.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Fourth report of Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs—Mr. Kaplan.

MR. ALEXANDER—INACCURACY IN MINISTERIAL DESIGNATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order which relates to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). I did give him notice, but he is not here. However, I think it is important that we clear this matter up. In a brochure congratulating the winner of the winner of the Miss Polonia contest of Grimbsy, Ontario, in and around the third week of May, there is a message allegedly coming from the minister's department. You will notice I did not say the minister himself because I know that the minister would not do a thing like this, but I think it is necessary for him to know, and he does know, what perhaps his staff have done inadvertently. The message says:

> Congratulations to Miss Polonia from John Munro, P.C., M.P. Minister of Labour and—

Here is the offensive clause, sir:

> —minister responsible for multiculturalism.

We all know that the minister has one particular job, and not two. Therefore, having brought that to the minister's attention prior to my standing today, and again at this moment, I hope he will admonish his staff in order to see that this sort of inadvertence is not carried on any further.

MR. SCOTT—RECOGNITION DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. My question of privilege deals with the matter of not being able to get a question on in over three weeks. I rise on this motion with the deepest regret to you, sir, and with the greatest hesitancy, but for three weeks I have repeatedly tried to get a question on, and I have not been recognized. The question is not parochial, it is several questions of broad significance.

I raise this matter not only on a question of privilege in respect to the proceedings, but I ask for guidance as to the proper procedure in getting a question on. In my 13 years in the House of Commons I have tried to show the greatest respect for this institution. I believe that probably my people are desirous—not only my people, but as I said this is of broad scope—of having me ask this question in their interests. Again, I say, sir, I not only raise this question of privilege, but I ask also for guidance from the Chair.

WAYS AND MEANS

DESIGNATION OF ORDER OF THE DAY TO DEBATE WAYS AND MEANS MOTION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with your ruling of May 19, I am tabling a notice of the ways and means motion, and I ask you to designate the necessary order of the day for its consideration.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, in relation to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and the tabling of the documents, I was wondering if he could clarify if the notice of the ways and means motion that he just tabled is exactly the same as the original motion, with the exception of paragraph 13, which I note has had some change to it.

Mr. Chrétien: I will refer to my information as I have not checked every phrase, but, yes.

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS PERTAINING TO TRIAL OF ALEXANDER PETER TREU

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), and the undertaking of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) to this House given on May 15, and comments earlier this day, to table as much as he could relating to the trial of Mr. Peter Treu, I am now tabling on his behalf the following: first, all documents relating to Mr. Treu's bail dated March 16, 1976, and as modified March 31, 1976; second, all documents relating to Mr. Treu's bail proceeding in the Court of Appeal of Quebec dated May 4, 1978; third, an official transcript of the Report of Commodity Tax Revenue Group remarks of Judge Trudel on sentencing Mr. Treu, dated May 16, 1978.

I would add, Mr. Speaker, that I am tabling the remarks at sentence in French only as we have no authority to produce an official translation of such court documents.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE NAME OF LEGISLATIVE BODY

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-460, to amend the Northwest Territories Act (legislative assembly).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Firth: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to change the name of the Council of the Northwest Territories to that of the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

REFERENCE OF REPORT OF COMMODITY TAX REVIEW GROUP TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a motion to the effect that the report of the Commodity Tax Review Group be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: I am not aware of the notice of motion and, therefore, the minister will need the consent of the House to introduce this motion at this time that the report of the Commodity Tax Review Group be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We are prepared to consent, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister have consent for the introduction of the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is moved by Mr. Chrétien, seconded by Mr. Horner:

That the report of the Commodity Tax Review Group be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 709, 1,251, 1,436, 1,476, 1,477 (corrected), 1,503 and 1,588.

[Text]

U.S.S.R.—RADIO SIGNALS

Question No. 709—Mr. Howie:

1. Since January 1, 1977, were investigations conducted to determine whether or not radio signals from the U.S.S.R. have any effect on weather systems and, if so, were conclusions arrived at?

2. Did such signals interfere with radio signals by the Canadian Armed Forces or Marine Services?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Fisheries and the Environment, National Defence and Transport as follows: No. See reply to question No. 1,251 answered this day.

RADIO INTERFERENCE WITH CANADIAN WEATHER

Question No. 1,251—Mr. Robinson:

Is the government prepared to examine the claim of Dr. Andrew Michtowski that a Russian radio team is affecting Canadian weather patterns?

Mr. Mike Landers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Environment)): An examination of this claim by the atmospheric environment service revealed that there were no scientifically credible factual observations to substantiate such a claim. If such observations do exist, and are made available to the atmospheric environment service, a reappraisal will of course be undertaken.

PENSIONERS' OVERPAYMENT

Question No. 1,436—Mr. Forrestall:

1. For each year since 1970, how many overpayment cases have been due to the failure to reduce a pensioner's benefits received under the Public Service Superannuation Act and/or the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, when a pensioner became entitled to disability benefits from the Canada/Quebec Pension Plan?

2. What was the total amount of overpayments for each year since 1970?

3. How much of the overpayments have been recovered to date?

4. How many pensioners have been able and willing to liquidate their total overpayment by means of a single cheque or money order?

5. How many pensioners have or are liquidating their overpayment by monthly deductions from their annuity cheques?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Not available in annual totals: the figures displayed below represent the cases at the dates specified: 1970-1974, not available; November, 1975, 626; March, 1976, 760; March, 1977, 1,110; December, 1977, 2,693.

[Mr. Speaker.]

2. Not available in annual totals: the figures displayed below represent the amounts outstanding at the dates specified:

	Public Service Superannuation Act	Supplementary Retirements Benefits Act	Combined
1970-1974	Not available
November, 1975	73,360.68	4,112.51	75,473.19
March, 1976	65,276.67	3,153.73	68,430.40
December, 1977	1,404,068.74	207,332.28	1,611,401.02

3. Not available as requested. The department calculates the total number of pension overpayments recovered. However, this total is not broken down to show different totals for different types of situations related to overpayments like the one which originated this question.

4. Thirteen per cent of all overpayments are liquidated by cash remittance.

5. Eighty seven per cent of all overpayments are being liquidated by monthly deductions from public service pensions.

CONFERENCE ON SECURITY AND CO-OPERATION IN EUROPE

Question No. 1,476—Mr. Mitges:

1. (a) Who was in charge of the Canadian delegation to the Belgrade meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe held between October 7, 1977 and March 9, 1978 and what are his/her credentials (b) how many persons were part of the Canadian delegation on a (i) permanent (ii) part-time basis (c) how many persons from the Canadian delegation were recruited from (i) the Department of External Affairs (ii) other government departments or agencies?

2. What was the total cost to the government of maintaining the delegation in Belgrade for the duration of the conference?

3. On what occasions did ministers attend the conference and, in each case, who was the minister and what travelling and other expenses did he/she incur?

4. What directives, if any, were issued to the Canadian delegation by the Department of External Affairs in relation to the official visitations to the Belgrade conference by members of parliament and senators?

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) The head of the Canadian delegation to the Belgrade meeting of the CSCE was Mr. W. T. Delworth, Canadian ambassador to Hungary. Mr. Delworth has been actively associated with CSCE questions since September, 1974 when he was appointed head of the Canadian delegation at the Geneva phase of the CSCE that drafted the final act which was eventually signed in Helsinki on August 1, 1975. (b) (i) Six officials assisted by six administrative support personnel; (ii) Twenty-one. (c) (i) Twelve—The Department of External Affairs. Two—Office of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. One—The Department of National Defence. Eighteen parliamentary observers from the Senate and the House of Commons.

2. The total cost of maintaining the delegation in Belgrade, including those participating on a part-time basis, is not available yet because all invoices have not been received but it is estimated at $260,000.

3. The Hon. Norman Cafik, Minister of State for Multiculturalism was the only Canadian minister to go to Belgrade. His travel and other expenses associated with his attendance and paid out of the budget of the Department of External Affairs amounted to $1,539.

4. Notifications of the attendance of senators and members of parliament were sent to the Canadian delegation as the names of those participating were made known to the Department of External Affairs. The delegation's instructions indicated that parliamentarians were to attend the meeting as "observers on the Canadian delegation".

MR. IAN HOWARD

Question No. 1,477—Mr. McKenzie: (Corrected)

1. Is Mr. Ian Howard working in the office of the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and, if so (a) since what date (b) what is the title of his position (c) what is his classification in the Public Service (d) what was his salary range on joining the Minister and what range is he in now?

2. Has Mr. Howard worked "overtime" since he joined the Minister and, if so, has he been remunerated, at what rate and what total amount as of March 1, 1978?

3. What travel expenses of Mr. Howard's have been paid by the government up to March 1, 1978, exclusive of any travel he may have done in the company of the Minister?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): 1. Yes. (a) September 19, 1977. (b) Executive assistant. (c) On leave of absence from a position at the level of program manager 5. (d) (i) Salary range in previous position $22,695 to $25,473; (ii) Salary in present position not to exceed $29,450.

2. Yes, with no remuneration.

3. $2,568.22 since September 19, 1977. However, during the period of the assignment, Mr. Howard has received, in addition to this sum, $2,480 to cover accommodation and $1,402 in per diem allowances to compensate him for expenses incurred due to his absence from his home in Vancouver.

EXPENDITURES IN FRASER VALLEY EAST

Question No. 1,503—Mr. Patterson:

What amount was spent by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the Constituency of Fraser Valley East in each year since 1970?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1977-78, $3,054,990; 1976-77, $3,045,226; 1975-76, $2,190,270. Expenditures for previous years are not easily identifiable as departmental records are not maintained by constituency. The time required to provide this information would be considerable.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Question No. 1,588—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

For the fiscal year (a) 1968-69 (b) 1977-78, what was the total amount paid by the government in family allowances?

Point of Order—Mr. Jones

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Family allowances paid in: (a) 1968-69 totalled $56,186,052; and (b) 1977-78 totalled $2,122,524,000 (subject to final adjustment). Please note the 1968-69 figures do not include expenditures under the Youth Allowances or Family Assistance Programs, both of which were incorporated into family allowances in the 1974 amendments. The amounts paid in 1968-69 under both programs were: Youth Allowances, $52,457,272. Family Assistance, $3,467,605.

MR. JONES—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION NO. 145

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, on several occasions I have brought to the attention of this House and to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) that question No. 145, which was listed in this House on October 19, 1977, and had previously been on the order paper in July, 1977, has not as yet been answered. Some months ago I was told I would get an answer within a few days. Those few days have grown into five months, and it is getting pregnant with difficulties.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we have already provided answers for six of the 13 questions indicated by an asterisk. We are currently looking into the remaining seven and we shall try to provide answers for them as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

On the order:

June 7, 1978—House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-56, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish at this moment, since it is the first opportunity following the vote of last night, to raise a point of order with regard to the holding of the vote. It is my contention, sir, that Standing Order 60, subparagraph (1), as indicated in your ruling on May 19—to which I have referred on two previous occasions, in 1974 and 1975—requires that a bill shall be brought in in conformity with the ways and means motion. Briefly put, you found on May 19 that the bill did not conform with paragraph (13) of the ways and means motion, and you indicated at that time that the government would have to bring in a ways and means motion to correct the situation.

I want to have the citation of May gone into in detail to see whether it is now correct. I raise the point at this time because I may wish to take this matter up a little later—as this is the first opportunity to do so after the vote.

It is my view, Mr. Speaker, that it is not possible for this House to vote on the principle of a bill which, by prior ruling, has been found not to conform with the requirements of our rules, and that it is distinguishable from the precedents upon which you apparently based yourself.

First of all, in 1974, when I first raised the point, the matter was found not to be of essence to the bill—it was a matter of degree—and therefore it did not matter. However, in July, 1975, you did find that that was of the essence.

Subject to correction—and I am having this checked—I would point out that this particular case with which we are now dealing may have been distinguishable from the case upon which your judgment the other day was based.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will permit the hon. member to go on, but it seems to me he is faced with two basic difficulties that he will have to address. The first basic difficulty is that I, of course, do not agree with his contention that the ruling might have been in error. But even if it were, nothing can be done to change it now. The second difficulty is that—even if the ruling was in error and something could be done to change it, and the vote was not to have been taken—the vote has already been taken. Therefore, before I can hear the hon. member he will have to indicate to me in the first place how he gets around those two basic points.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Very simply, Mr. Speaker. The vote last night was under guillotine by Standing Order 75C.

Mr. Chrétien: It is a rule.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is right; it was a time allocation. I had to wait until the vote was taken in order to demonstrate the difference. My submission is that we are moving down the wrong path.

I will agree that if after second reading there is to be an amendment to the ways and means motion, and the point has been raised as a point of order during the committee hearings, the government may then bring in a ways and means motion to conform to a ruling of the Chair. But this point was raised prior to second reading, and Your Honour ruled that the bill was not in conformity. It seems to me very, very difficult in logic to understand how we can be asked to vote on a bill which the Chair has found not to conform with our requirements.

If by chance it might be said that these provisions are the subject matter of the ways and means motion filed just a few moments ago, that is another reason I am raising this at this point. The government was waiting to see whether it was going to rely upon the amendment it has put in or upon another one, and whether it might have to scrap the second one. These provisions in clause 30 relating to the pay-out of income tax to selected Quebec income tax payers go against the principle of the bill. Someone will ask if it is the principle of the bill. The bill is going to amend the Income Tax Act.

I refer the Chair back to its own ruling at the time we amended the Criminal Code with regard to capital punishment. On that occasion we were amending the Criminal Code in a number of material aspects. When one of my colleagues went to amend the clauses on capital punishment at committee stage, however, the proposed amendments were ruled out of order in that they were against the principle of the bill.

I wonder what the position would have been if the ways and means motion which was tabled just a few moments ago had been in variation of the bill that was voted upon at second reading last night? It may be that Your Honour will find me out of court at this time, but I am rising in protest at what I think is unfortunately an error in judgment and—

Mr. Pinard: You are making one now.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is identifying that he is directly appealing, as it were, or re-arguing a ruling that the Chair has made. He has made that quite clear. He made it in the argument when I made the ruling to start with, and I disagreed with the position he took at that time. I made it clear that the solution to the problem was optional in the Chair. There had been occasions in the past, according to precedent, in which the Chair had ordered that the matter be corrected by an amended ways and means resolution up to the time that the clause was taken into consideration. That is one of several ways to solve the problem.

In even the short time that I have been in the Chair, in similar circumstances with other bills, other ways and means resolutions, and other differences, I have ordered that the progress of the bill be stopped. In some cases the matter was amended by way of an amendment to the bill to conform with the existing ways and means resolution.

There are several solutions. On the basis of a clear precedent I chose one; whether I would choose another one in different circumstances remains to be seen. In this particular case I chose an option for the correction of the irregularity on the basis of a precedent that I cited at the time. Whether the hon. member agrees with that or calls it an error in judgment, which he just did, is of no consequence at the moment. The ruling has been made and the House is stuck with it. I happen to think it is a correct ruling and the hon. member does not, but that is academic. The House is stuck with the ruling and has proceeded on the basis of it until now. Whatever consequences might have taken place are hypothetical.

In any case, if the second reading vote was in any way out of order, as may have taken place with countless motions in the past, they may have been out of order, but once they are passed and the vote taken, there is nothing the House can do about it. The House has voted and has on its records that it now proceeds according to that vote to consideration by committee of the whole of this bill. There is no power in the Chair at this stage to turn that around on the basis of rethinking a decision it has taken previously.

With respect, the hon. member has not got around the two basic points that I gave him, the first being that he cannot change a ruling even if he disagrees with it, and the second, that we cannot do anything to reverse the result of the vote because the vote has already been taken. I do not know how we can go any further on it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am reserving the opportunity, on third reading debate, of referring to this matter again. I am doing it now at the first opportunity following the vote because it is still my contention that we are on the wrong path with this particular bill. We operated differently under different circumstances, and the two instances do not jive.

While I accept Mr. Speaker's ruling, no one says that I must agree with it. I do not think Mr. Speaker says that I have to agree with it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not expect the hon. member to agree with it, but I just ask him to respect it.

Pursuant to Standing Order 54 I do now leave the chair for the House to go into committee of the whole.

[Translation]

The House in committee of the whole on Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions—Mr. Chrétien—Mr. Laniel in the Chair.

The Chairman: The committee is now on clause 1. Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, as we know, there are 59 clauses in Bill C-56 to which the committee will undoubtedly want to give some attention. I think the two clauses of most interest, however, are clauses 30 and 59. I think it would facilitate the deliberations of this committee if, in the few moments I have available at this time, I could put some questions to the minister with respect to the current position of relations between the federal government and the government of Quebec on the income tax—sales tax rebate scheme. This has been of great concern to this House for almost two months now. With that in mind, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance—

• (1602)

The Chairman: Order, please. I might try to satisfy the hon. member by saying to him that it has been the general practice, when considering clause 1 of the bill in committee of the whole, to allow members to express opinions or ask questions of a general nature. Of course the hon. member wants to direct his attention to one particular clause. I understand it is a fundamental clause as to the general policy and I think I will be ready to accept his intervention in that way.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, the Minister of Finance very kindly gave us a copy of a letter which he has received from the minister of finance of the province of Quebec. As the letter is quite relevant to the consideration of Bill C-56 by this committee, I wonder if the minister would be willing to table that letter so that the entire committee of the House may have the letter for their consideration?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I was pleased to hand out copies to some opposition members a while ago, so that they may examine them, and I am also pleased to table the French version only which I have just received. I do not have the English version. I did not have time to have it translated. With leave of the House, I should like to table the letter of the Quebec Minister of Finance, Mr. Parizeau, dated June 7, 1978.

The Chairman: Order, please. To table the document, the House should not be in committee of the whole and the Speaker should be in the Chair. So the hon. minister might perhaps do so on another occasion. In any case, in the meantime he can still circulate the letter among hon. members, unless he proposes to have it appended to today's Hansard with the unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have a few more copies, so I can give them to a few hon. members, but I have not enough copies for everybody.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I was about to suggest what you suggested to the minister namely, that he ask consent for this letter to be debated and appended to today's Hansard. That way we will have it in both languages, and everybody will have it.

The Chairman: Hon. members have heard the proposition that the letter referred to by the minister, written by the minister of finance of the province of Quebec to the federal Minister of Finance, be appended to today's Hansard. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For letter above referred to, see Appendix.]

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thank hon. members for their consideration in allowing this letter to be appended to today's Hansard.

Would the minister indicate if he has prepared or sent a reply to the minister of finance of the province of Quebec in respect of the June 7 letter we have just appended to Hansard?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order and I also want to reply to the hon. member. First of all, I have just received the letter, barely a few hours ago. I am willing to answer the question but I do think the question of the hon. member is out of order, in that the letter deals not with clause 1 of the bill but with clause 30. Therefore, we can discuss its contents when we reach that clause.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I also rise on a point of order.

The Chairman: The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council, on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: A while ago, I thought that on a very special question you allowed an hon. member to put a question in order to obtain the letter explaining clause 30. But I want to point out, Mr. Chairman, that in fact you called clause 1 which we are to discuss, and that clause 30 will be considered in due course. We have spent 11 days on second reading and the hon. members can think only of clause 30.

The Chairman: Order. I should like to point out to the hon. member that I gave a ruling, that I gave it in good faith for the orderly working of the committee, perhaps precisely to speed up progress on the bill. The hon. member indicated to the Chair that he had specific questions to put to the Minister of Finance to clear up certain points and that those questions might possibly speed up study of the bill if they were cleared up. It is not up to me to decide whether replies meet with the satisfaction of the hon. member. I allowed him to put his questions, and it is up to him to decide. If the Minister of Finance does not want to answer, that is up to him. As for me, I know that under our rules of procedure, we generally allow a general debate on clause 1 in committee of the whole. We do not restrict ourselves to clause 1 of the bill. It is in that spirit that, in order to speed up somewhat consideration of the bill, I allowed the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) to put his question, and my ruling has been made on that matter. The hon. member for York-Simcoe.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I was simply trying to identify which letter it is that we will be referring to during the committee of the whole, and secondly, if in fact there had been any formal reply sent by the minister. I can well understand, if the Minister of Finance has only had a few hours to deal with the letter, that he would not yet have sent a reply.

I feel it would be helpful if the minister could give us an outline of what the general reply will be with respect to the proposals put forth by Mr. Parizeau concerning Bill C-56. I would emphasize that the letter we are referring to does not refer to specific clauses of Bill C-56; it refers to the entire bill. I think it is quite in order that we raise various questions pertinent to the current status of negotiations between the province of Quebec and the federal government relating to the provincial sales tax—income tax adjustment provisions.

First of all, did I understand the minister correctly during question period today when he mentioned that the $40 million that Mr. Parizeau refers to in the original paragraph of his letter is in fact an amount that the government is going to pay to Quebec, and will pay without too much delay?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we are getting into an improper situation. To accommodate the committee earlier, I answered a few questions, but now we are going into the substantive argument about Clause 30. Mr. Chairman said that I need not reply. I will deal with all of the aspects of clause 30 when we come to clause 30. Presently we are discussing clause 1 which deals with employment at special work sites or remote locations. I am ready to answer all of those questions. I will say to the hon. member for the last time, and I have said it over and over again, that under the scheme I proposed the night of the budget Quebec qualified for about $40 million.

In my communication I think he asked for four items and those four items, according to the calculations made by my officials, amount to about $40 million. We say we shall pay that to them. We said that at the time, and he wants us, now, to pay it. But all that is subject, as usual, to verification by my officials of the accuracy of the cost of those items for the six months, because exactly what we are doing is verifying the tax with the other provinces which have cut sales taxes across the board according to our plan. For clarification, it is two thirds of a three point cut on four items for six months, and we are willing to pay about $40 million.

Mr. Stevens: I am sure the minister will agree that on clause 1 it is traditional that the specific wording of the clause is not the substance of what is really before the committee. The clause is a conventional starting point for a more rambling question or, for that matter, speeches with respect to the bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, what the hon. member suggests is true generally speaking. Clause 1 of a bill usually gives the title of the bill. What we have here in clause 1 is a very specific measure dealing with employment at a special work site or a remote location covering two pages and not the title of the bill. So the hon. member is not being consequent when he says that he can argue in a general way on the bill as a whole because clause 1 is of a general nature when in this case it is of a strictly limited and specific nature. So for that reason he cannot do what can usually be done with other bills.

Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member wants to stick to what is in clause 1 I think that then we will be in order and we will be able to make progress in a logical and normal way.

The Chairman: Order. I must point out to the hon. parliamentary secretary that he should listen not only to what the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) has to say but also what the Chair has to say. The Chair has already said—and that is my ruling—that as a general practice and in this committee of the whole whatever the subject of clause 1 may be, whether it be the title or a particular subject matter, the practice has been to give more latitude to the debate while at the same time trying to prevent hon. members from dealing with specific clauses but allowing them also to discuss the bill in a general way. It is precisely under clause 1 that hon. members take the floor to express their opinion in a general manner on two or three clauses of the bill without addressing specific questions to the minister or to those who can answer questions. So my decision stands. I shall continue to follow the practice which has always prevailed in committee of the whole and if I can lay my hands on some precedents which confirm what I have just said, I intend to leave hon. members a certain leeway as it has always been done regarding the first clause of a bill and not restrict them, as the hon. member seems to want, to dealing with the issue of "employment at special work site or remote location". Of course that does not prevent them from speaking about that clause in particular but then they can also express a general opinion on the bill.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I think it is most regrettable, closure having been used last night to force a vote on the second reading of this bill, that we in the opposition should be met with 15 minutes of running interference or filibuster, whatever you like to call it—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Stevens: —on the part of government supporters when we are simply putting a few questions to the minister to clarify the position of the government with regard to this bill. Our difficulties today have been doubled because, as a result of the failure yesterday to table copies of the ways and means motion, we cannot reach clause 30 today in any event.

An hon. Member: What about unanimous consent?

Mr. Stevens: It is the fault of the government that we cannot reach clause 30. So if we are not able to speak in general terms on clause 1 we are prevented, really, from asking any questions with regard to the most relevant portion of the bill, namely, the provincial sales tax arrangement, until next week. In order to clarify the current position of the government may I ask whether it is the intention of the government to continue with the plan to pay $85 or some such amount to the taxpayers of Quebec as outlined by the minister the other night?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, it does not matter in any case because when we reach clause 30, I will determine exactly the clauses or provisions of this bill. As I have said on several occasions, we do intend to clarify once again the policy of the government. Since the government of Quebec is entitled to these $40 million we will let them have it. As for the rest, they have left on the table some $186 million and we have decided not to penalize the people of Quebec, which means that we can immediately reduce by $85 the income tax of Quebeckers. Mr. Parizeau came up yesterday with a change to that decision by saying that if I decide to wait until next spring, and in this respect he still leaves me the choice, it could cause him some difficulties. He is leaving that to me. I have not yet studied whether his second proposal contained something worthwhile. I have just received the letter where he acknowledges, Mr. Chairman, that my proposed $85 rebate to those who have paid income tax in 1977 is quite acceptable to him. This means that the bill such as it stands now is quite agreeable to the government of Quebec. For some two months the opposition has been telling me to accept what is agreeable to the government of Quebec so I do not see why they are asking me questions about it. Of course I will pay back to the Quebec taxpayers what is owed to them. If Mr. Parizeau made a mistake in his budget by including figures which he had no right to include, that is his problem and he will have to find a solution to that by himself.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: As I understand the minister, he is saying the proposal to pay the $85 as originally put forward by the government was entirely acceptable to the minister of finance of Quebec. I think the hon. gentleman is reading a lot into the wording of the letter. As I read it, Mr. Parizeau feels he cannot stop the federal government from proceeding with Bill C-56, but that if this course is followed he would have no alternative but to tax back in its entirety whatever the aggregate amount might be—$85 times the number of taxpayers in Quebec. Is that the case? Has the minister received any assurance from the Quebec minister of finance that his proposal, now, is acceptable by Quebec, or is it not the case that the Quebec minister is simply indicating that there is no alternative?

Mr. Chrétien: I have explained the situation as well as I can. I cannot add anything to what I have said. Clause 30(b) was my proposition, and the letter from Mr. Parizeau said it would be a solution to the problem.

Mr. Stevens: I emphasize that the $85 proposal is a direct payment by the federal government to the residents of Quebec, and if the federal government intends to go ahead with that proposal, would the Minister of Finance indicate if he is then out of hand turning down the alternative proposal Mr. Parizeau has made with respect to having a 1978 pay-out scheme which, through an administrative arrangement, would be much more comparable to the arrangement the federal government has with the other provinces which, presumably, are willing to participate in the plan?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I am not making any payments. I am reducing the amount of tax paid by the Quebec taxpayer in 1977 up to $85, so that the people can qualify for a return on their taxes. It is exactly the same mechanism whether we use 1978 or 1977 tax lists. There is absolutely no difference. The reason there is a difference regarding the other provinces is that the other provinces do not collect their taxes. I reduced by $100 the income tax in Ontario, for example, two months ago. The same day, or a day later, Ontario raised its income tax by $100. I collect it, so there is no problem.

Since 1954 under Duplessis Quebec has collected its own taxes. I am reducing, as I am doing in Ontario and elsewhere, the difference of $85, and if Mr. Parizeau needs that amount of money or more, he will have to raise his taxes. There is no problem there. It is a problem for him, but it is not a problem for me. I am reducing the income tax of the Quebec taxpayer by $85, and I am making a cash payment of $40 million for the amount Quebec has contributed to the scheme by selecting four items for six months. I am paying two thirds. The cash payment is not just for Quebec.

As I said in the question period, there is provision for cash payments as adjustments in all the provinces. In fact it will be something like $19 million for B.C. because the $100 was not sufficient for B.C. I have to compensate B.C. more. In the case of Ontario $100 was too much, so Ontario has to pay back a certain amount of money to the federal government. There is a cash adjustment, and the $40 million for Quebec is part of that.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I think it is important that we get the two options clearly in mind. The first option to which the minister has referred is the payment to the residents of Quebec of $85. As I read Mr. Parizeau's letter, Mr. Parizeau says he cannot do anything about that. If the federal government wishes to pay that $85, that is its right. Mr. Parizeau wants it clearly understood, however, that he will use whatever means he has at his disposal to tax it back. I want to know the current position of the Minister of Finance with regard to the second option, which is an alternative proposal on the part of Mr. Parizeau. In effect, Mr. Parizeau is asking that Quebec be put in a situation similar to that of the other provinces. He is saying that for the 1978-79 fiscal year the tax of Quebec taxpayers should be reduced by $100, or $85, per person. As an administrative matter Mr. Parizeau wants to have that picked up between Ottawa and Quebec city so that Quebec will be in a position similar to that of the province of Ontario, the province of Manitoba, or any of the other provinces. Is the Minister of Finance as of this afternoon turning that proposal down?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I have been very generous with my time. These questions should all relate to clause 30, and I will reply when we are dealing with Clause 30. Your Honour said earlier that I was not obliged to reply. We have been on questions which should be asked on clause 30, for 25 minutes. That is not the purpose of committee work. We should be dealing with this bill clause by clause. I have been extremely generous. I replied to questions in the House this afternoon.

It is obvious that hon. members opposite just want to drag the debate out. They do not want to deal with the nitty-gritty of this scheme. Hon. members of this House have the right to know what we have done for farmers with regard to capital gains, what we have done with regard to RRSPs and what we have done for retired people. We are proposing something to make things easier for them. Hon. members opposite do not want to talk about those new provisions. We are now on clause 1 and, according to Your Honour's directive, it is up to me to decide if I want to reply. I want to deal with clause 1 as soon as possible. Hon members opposite can talk ad nauseam, but I will not reply.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the minister has a very short wick.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. When we reach clause 30, there will be no problem, but prior to getting to clause 30 I want to deal with clauses 1 to 29.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Thanks, Your Excellency. You sit too close to Trudeau. You are starting to act like him.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the minister seems to be acting like an emperor today, but I remind him that it is this committee which decides what questions can properly be put. Granted, he has the option to refuse to answer questions regardless of what they are, but in no way does he have the right in a high-falutin' way to tell us that we can talk ad nauseam about various questions but that he will not answer.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman told me that.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the minister is burying his head in the sand. The most pertinent part of Bill C-56 is the question of the provincial sales tax. The appropriate place to deal with it—as we do with every standing committee—in this committee of the whole is on clause 1. That is the point at which we should be dealing with general questions. When we are dealing with this bill clause by clause, this very same minister will be standing up on his hind legs and telling us that we can deal only with technical things. He will do that when we are dealing with clause 30. He will tell us that we have no right to ask general questions.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He will impose closure. That is the way he will operate.

Mr. Stevens: The minister is under a lot of pressure. He is very nervous today.

Mr. Chrétien: You are backing a loser.

Mr. Stevens: The minister has a few members sitting behind him who are very uncomfortable with some of the answers he has been giving with respect to the present situation regarding the provincial sales tax in Quebec, so I do not doubt that he would like questions to cease. However, let me put one further question.

Mr. Parizeau has raised the suggestion that because of the delay which may ensue regarding the federal payment in relation to the provincial sales tax reduction, debt in Quebec might be incurred which would result in interest having to be paid. Mr. Parizeau would like to be reimbursed for that interest. It is estimated that it might amount to $8 million or $9 million. Would the minister indicate whether the federal government is willing to reimburse Quebec for that?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I will be able to reply when we are on clause 30.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Take the Fifth Amendment, Jean. It would be a lot easier.

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps the minister could indicate why he has appeared to be so ready to cooperate with respect to questions of a general nature touching on the provincial sales tax. At our request he even tabled a letter from Mr. Parizeau. Why did the minister appear to be so ready initially, and why is he now simply saying that he will not deal any further with the provincial sales tax matter until we reach clause 30?

The Chairman: Order, please. I hesitate to intervene at this time. I maintain my ruling, and I hope that whatever answers are given, or whatever questions are asked, hon. members will not be prevented from expressing their opinions. The path being followed by the hon. member for York-Simcoe is to address himself to specifics. That has been allowed by me for one general purpose, to facilitate the work of the committee. I know the hon. member is the spokesman for the official opposition on this question.

This matter has been the crux of the debate on second reading, and it preoccupies all members of the House. I wanted to allow the hon. member to go beyond what has been permitted because this is supposed to be a general debate and it is not meant to be a specific debate on a clause. But because the new ways and means motion is in front of the committee only now, and also because of the letter of the Quebec minister of finance, I have allowed all these questions. It has been left up to the Minister of Finance to decide whether or not to answer them. It is within his rights to decide whether or not he wishes to answer them at this time, because there will be a further opportunity to answer them when we reach clause 30. I cannot quarrel with his decision. I can only hope that hon. members will not spend the time asking these questions when we are on clause 1, when they can do so when we reach Clause 30. This does not prevent hon. members from asking questions on general policy. It will be up to the minister to decide whether he wishes to answer them.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Again it is to try to facilitate—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Smile, you're on camera.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, it is truly remarkable when one has to sit on this side and watch the kangaroos opposite in action. My point of order was simply this: if the minister is so anxious that we get to clause 30—and he seems well disposed to tell us anything we want to know once we reach clause 30—would he consider standing clauses 1 to 29 inclusive and letting us consider clause 30 right now, and perhaps he will feel more relaxed to give us some information which we would obviously like to have?

Mr. Chrétien: If the hon. member is willing to pass the 29 clauses right away, I will go on to clause 30.

Mr. Stevens: I proposed that we stand them.

The Chairman: Order, please. Either solution is impossible until we accept the new ways and means motion.

Mr. Chrétien: We can do that with the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That can only be done in the House, not in committee.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I think I will try again. I want to say a few words on clause 1, which is the general clause, and my remarks pertain also to the sales tax. I have had a chance to look over the letter sent to the minister by Mr. Parizeau and I do not think it was fair of the Minister of Finance to have said that there has been agreement. My interpretation of what Mr. Parizeau said was: "What is the use, the federal government has the power to give $85 to the citizens of Quebec, I cannot do anything about it. I will have to tax back that $85." He said in his letter:

[Translation]

Following our exchange of correspondence and our discussions, it seems clear that our governments disagree about the formula for the sales tax reduction in Quebec and that it would be useless to seek a formula other than the one which was approved by the Quebec government and supported unanimously by the National Assembly.

[English]

What he is saying here is that it is futile to go on looking for a solution or to go on looking for an agreement between the two governments. The position of the government is very clear, and it is obvious that the two governments are not in agreement. It is obvious, says Mr. Parizeau, that he has the support of the National Assembly in Quebec.

[Translation]

And all parties at the Quebec National Assembly, the Liberal party, Mr. Ryan, the Union Nationale, the Parti Québécois and all the others at the National Assembly.

[English]

Therefore, it is really futile to go on looking for a solution. That is what Mr. Parizeau is saying. I think the Minister of Finance is trying to pull wool over the eyes of the people of Canada when he says there is a solution. Perhaps he can explain in more detail just what the change is, and to what Mr. Parizeau is agreeing.

I think this is one of the strangest debates we have ever had in this country. As has been said before by members of my party, members of the Conservative party, and members of the Social Credit party, it is clear that the actions of the Minister of Finance are a real infringement upon provincial rights and provincial authority. The federal government makes a special arrangement with Saskatchewan whereby the sales tax in that province is reduced by 2 per cent for nine months. There is also an arrangement with British Columbia and with the Atlantic provinces, as well as with Alberta with which there is an agreement not to do anything because they do not have a sales tax. So other provisions were put in the budget for the province of Alberta than for the remaining provinces.

Why is there all the concern about Quebec's way of reducing their sales tax? They are trying to give the benefits of that federal money to their people in a fair and equitable way. Why cannot Quebec do that in the way they want? The sales tax is under their jurisdiction. If the minister cannot get agreement from the province, he should not force something on them, particularly since it is within their jurisdiction. The minister is flexible with Saskatchewan, British Columbia, and the Atlantic provinces; why can he not be flexible with the province of Quebec?

I am very suspicious that the Minister of Finance is trying to set up a classical confrontation between French and English Canada, and that is very unfortunate. I am concerned about national unity, and I wish some of the Liberal members were as concerned as some of us are. If there is constant fighting, that will not help the situation in the country. An hon. member opposite is saying that I am playing with the separatists in Quebec. If I am, then what about Claude Ryan and what about all the members of the Liberal party in the National Assembly in Quebec? What about the four, five, or more Liberal backbenchers in the House, such as the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont and a few others, who are critical of what the Minister of Finance is doing? Is the minister also accusing the premiers of the western provinces of taking that position?

The Saskatchewan minister of finance has said that the sales tax is under provincial authority and he would like to have the money from the federal government and to spend it as the province sees fit. If everybody is a separatist, then God help this country. If everybody but the Liberal party is a separatist, God help us. I think that is one way to tear this country apart.

I believe that the disagreement can be settled very simply. It seems to me that when the Minister of Finance was offering something to the provinces that is under their authority and power under our constitution, he should not have brought in a plan unless he had the agreement of all the provinces. It does not matter what he proposes so long as he has the agreement of the provinces. He did not have that agreement with Quebec, therefore he should have waited for a while and brought in a plan to which all the provinces could have agreed, or he could have exercised the same flexibility with Quebec as he had with the other provinces.

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Labelle is asking the permission of the hon. member to ask him a question.

Mr. Dupras: I would like to know if the hon. member claims that the Minister of Finance should have postponed his budget until the Quebec minister of finance had made up his mind. Is that what he is saying?

• (1642)

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, the minister should have discussed this proposal with the ministers of finance at their conference in January. I understand there were detailed discussions at that time. If he did not discuss it at that time, it should have been discussed at the first ministers' conference in February. Why did he wait until the last minute before starting to discuss this proposal with the ministers of finance across the country?

Mr. Dupras: That is not correct.

Mr. Nystrom: Many, many ministers of finance have claimed that they were not given much time to consider the proposal. Apparently the Minister of Finance had a telephone conversation, for example, with one of the provincial ministers of finance and said, "Look, I have a budget coming up in two weeks. I have a proposal for you. Do you accept it or not?" He was like the big godfather standing up with a bit of federal money.

The province of Quebec wanted to make a special arrangement with the federal government, similar to the arrangements which were made with Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, and the Atlantic provinces. I come to the same conclusion which I arrived at a few minutes ago. Why did the minister not wait until an agreement had been reached with all provinces? If such an agreement could not be reached, why could the minister not be flexible? Why did he turn down the offer of Mr. Parizeau?

Mr. Dupras: Mr. Parizeau waited until two days after the budget was tabled.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Parizeau waited 48 hours before taking a position. So what? He was taking a position on something which is under his jurisdiction and his authority. Sales tax comes under the provincial laws of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I would like to go back for a moment to the ruling you made a moment ago. It is easy to see now that the members of the official opposition, like the others, do not have the slightest desire to discuss the bill clause by clause. They want to do today what they did not have time to do yesterday or the day before, or two months ago. The soundness of your ruling is easy to see, and I accept it, but at the same time it is clear that they are taking advantage of the opportunity given by this ruling—I do not want to make the situation more complicated—but we could discuss this ruling at great length. They take advantage of a ruling you made precisely to take unfair advantage of it, simply to engage in a filibuster, and this shows that the members of the opposition are not serious, but just a bunch of actors.

The Chairman: I would like to point out to the hon. member that what he is raising is a point of debate. He is entitled to his opinion. The Chair is not here to pass judgment on speeches, but to apply the rules. I said earlier that, under our practice, there is a general debate on clause 1, and I have here a ruling made by chairman Batten of the committee of the whole on February 15, 1968. He had this to say then:

[English]

The usual procedure, of course, is to have the general debate on clause 1, assuming that clause 1 is not just a short title. However, if it is the wish of the committee to have a general debate on the bill under clause 4, there is no reason at all why that should not be done. If the general debate is to be on clauses 4 and 5, or either of these clauses, I would ask members of the committee to confine their remarks in connection with clauses 1, 2 and 3 to those actual clauses.

If my interpretation is correct, the government House leader at the time, Mr. Sharp, intervened in this procedure and addressed himself to the Chairman. He is reported as saying the following:

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that clauses 1, 2 and 3 are of a purely technical character and if there are to be remarks of a general nature such as has been suggested by the hon. member for Edmonton West they could quite appropriately be made on clauses 4 and 5. The first three clauses are merely technical in character.

This means that it is a question of interpretation by the Chair. If clause 1 is just a short title, or if it is a specific clause and the first clause to be considered, it is a clause on which there can be general debate in committee, and all latitude should be given to hon. members to use the time of the committee to express their feelings or points of view.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, once again it has been necessary for Your Honour to tell government members what the rules are. There can be a general discussion on clause 1. My intention was to talk about two or three matters, but so far I have dealt only with the sales tax provision.

The government has indicated that Mr. Parizeau made up his mind two days after the budget came down. So what? Sales tax is totally under provincial jurisdiction and authority. If Mr. Parizeau did not want to make up his mind, so what?

Mr. Lachance: It is mixed jurisdiction.

Mr. Nystrom: I hear a Liberal backbencher indicating that sales tax comes under a mixed jurisdiction. That is not correct. Even the Minister of Finance would not say that.

Mr. Lachance: I challenge you on that.

Mr. Nystrom: The hon. member can challenge me if he so desires. He has the right to rise in the House and make a speech or a statement concerning how the retail sales tax can suddenly become an area of mixed jurisdiction. I am sure even the Minister of Finance would be embarrassed by that comment on the part of one of his backbenchers.

At any rate, Mr. Parizeau had the right to do what he did. This is an area which falls under provincial jurisdiction. He decided to use the money which was coming to Quebec in a manner that would help the people of Quebec the most. He chose to eliminate taxes on five sectors altogether. So what? That is his right. He can spend that money in the manner he sees fit.

The government of Saskatchewan decided to implement a 2 per cent reduction over nine months, rather than a 3 per cent reduction over six months. They had various global Saskatchewan reasons for doing so. The federal government bought that proposition, as well as the proposition of the province of British Columbia. Why did the government not accept Quebec's proposition? Because its proposition came two days after the budget was tabled does not matter.

I have to come to the same conclusion which I reached a few moments ago, even though that conclusion resulted in government members becoming excited. I am suspicious that the government was attempting to set up a high school confrontation between French and English Canada. Such a confrontation makes it difficult to keep Canada together. Hon. members oposite know my sympathies for keeping this country together. I feel very strongly about that. I do not think that can be accomplished by allowing a constant confrontation.

If the minister is willing to come in with a budget proposal without the agreement of one province beforehand, that in itself is dangerous. If that province is a province which has a government advocating independence, it is even more dangerous. The minister is aware of that. I suspect one reason for him not withdrawing the proviso in his budget was that he wanted a confrontation and fight on this issue. That is very, very unfortunate, as well as being very damaging to the future of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont on a point of order.

Mr. Lachance: I do not want to start a debate on this matter, Mr. Chairman, but I think that a while ago the hon. member unwillingly no doubt, I repeat unwillingly, said things which are not consistent with the facts. I simply want, for the record—

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Lachance: Of course it is. This member has misled the House. I must put the record straight. He indicated that sales tax is under provincial jurisdiction. If the hon. member reads sections 92(2) of the constitution, he will see that the federal parliament has the power to impose taxation on any subject whatsoever. Thus, it is a mixed jurisdiction.

The Chairman: I am aware that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is seeking the floor, but I am sure I can deal with this point of order without his assistance. Surely this is an argument and an expression of opinion. The hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont can contradict the argument of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville when he seeks the floor in due time, unless he wants to prevent a grave misrepresentation or wants to correct a wrong quotation, which can be done under the guise of a point of order. When there is a difference of interpretation in respect of the bill, the avenue which is open to the hon. member is to seek the floor and make his point at that time.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I hope the hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont will give the committee the pleasure of getting up and explaining his point of view of how the retail sales tax area can be shared by the federal and provincial governments. It seems to me that if he pushes that line he will really have a fight with the provinces, not just the province of Quebec but with every single one in this country.

There is a federal sales tax, but it is indirect and at the level of manufacturers and wholesalers. It is not a direct and overt sales tax as we have on retail goods imposed by the provinces. This is an area totally within provincial authority by practice in this country, and has been for as long as I can remember.

An hon. Member: But only by practice.

Mr. Nystrom: I am saying that it is by practice. Maybe some of the brilliant constitutional lawyers in this place, like the hon. member for Crowfoot and some of the others from that side of the House, will devise a plan to provide the Minister of Finance with a means of levying a retail sales tax in addition to the present sales tax by the provinces. Perhaps that is a question the minister should answer. Is this in the back of his mind? Was the hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont speaking of government policy, and was he giving us a signal of what is to come in the future, namely, that the federal government is considering getting into the retail sales tax area? I hope the minister will answer that question in a minute or two because this is damned important. I know the minister of finance for Saskatchewan would want me to ask that of the federal minister since we have now had one of the backbenchers and a minister of the Crown suggesting that the federal government could get into the retail sales tax field. Is the Minister of Finance considering this?

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nystrom: Perhaps the minister would answer my question. Is the federal government giving consideration now, as has been indicated by one of his own backbenchers and one of his colleagues in the cabinet, namely, the hon. member for Crowfoot, to getting into the retail sales tax business in competition with the provinces? One of the members of the hon. minister's party has said that the federal government does have some authority in this regard and could get into the retail sales tax business. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said, if I understood him correctly, that according to the constitution the federal government could do this, and that it is only as a matter of practice that it has not done so to this point. Is the federal government now considering levying a retail sales tax in Canada in direct competition with the provinces?

Mr. Chrétien: No. I think the hon. member was just trying to be smart in that regard. Just this afternoon at 3:30, with unanimous consent, we made a reference of the problem to members of the committee, that is, what we should do with the federal tax that exists at the manufacturing level. This is a matter that will be contemplated by members of the committee and people across the land.

Some people suggest that we should change the federal tax to a type of tax that would apply at the last level of the transaction rather than at the middle stage. This is completely possible. We have a manufacturing tax today, but some suggest that when we reduce that tax the manufacturer very often does not pass the benefit on to the consumer. When we reduced this tax some time ago some corporations were accused of putting the savings in their own pockets rather than passing them on to the consumer.

Constitutionally this could be done. I do not say that we will be doing that, but the House will be studying this problem very soon. That is a tax system being used in many countries in Europe. It is a value added tax. We are exploring new schemes and methods. The most conservative suggestions made in this House very surprisingly always come from members in the NDP.

Mr. Nystrom: I should like to ask the minister a question in that regard, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member's time has not expired. If he wants to pursue the matter he has another few minutes available.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I think I have about two minutes so I would like to ask the minister a supplementary question. Is it fair to say that the proposal to levy a federal sales tax at the retail level is now under active consideration?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I would say no.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Chairman, following the comments made by the previous speaker, I would simply like to add a few remarks on this bill. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that I spoke during the debate on second reading and that I then expressed my view on the bill now before us. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that when studying a bill of a fiscal nature it is important to keep in mind the very basis of the financial system, the power granted to various jurisdictions to levy taxes. Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who spoke before me made an intervention on the subject of Bill C-56. He had the inalienable right to do so. However, I am left with the impression that he does not really understand the basis of the Canadian financial system.

I would simply remind the House, Mr. Chairman, that in a federal system such as ours, made up of several levels of jurisdiction, the Canadian constitution and more precisely the British North America Act of 1867 have provided for a redistribution of the fiscal burden and the power of levying taxes. In this respect, Mr. Chairman, the federal government has to power to levy public money through any means or tax system provided for in clause 91(3) of the British North America Act.

Mr. Chairman, the provinces have the power of direct taxation within provincial limits in order to raise revenues on provincial items as stipulated in clause 92(2). Mr. Chairman, I never meant to say that the federal government should get involved in direct taxation within the provincial sales taxes jurisdiction but simply that it has a general responsibility as far as tax is concerned and more particularly that it has the power to levy taxes in any field and in any way it wants. The provinces, Mr. Chairman, are restricted in the way they raise taxes and I would simply remind the hon. member, who is generally serious but who played the fool a while ago, that if he read the British North America Act over, he would realize that restrictions included in the constitution are not imposed on the federal government but indeed on provincial authorities.

In that sense, the Minister of Finance has made a proposal to the provinces which aims at reducing the sales tax. He did not want to interfere in the business of the provinces by levying his own direct tax, but simply provided for a means to give back to the provinces the missing money. However, it is obvious that the provinces have been used to have jurisdiction in that fiscal field, a jurisdiction which they were entitled to under section 92(2), but as far as I know, Mr. Chairman, tradition has never invalidated the constitution and I would need proof to the contrary to believe it has. In this regard, I think the federal government had—and still has—the possibility of imposing whatever tax it wanted and by whatever means it wished, and in this regard, the sales tax—

The Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to resume consideration of the bill later today.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Capital Punishment—Reinstatement of death penalty for terrorists; the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—Conflict of Interest—Effect of guidelines on former ministers and deputy ministers.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, private bills, public bills.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think there is unanimous consent to proceed to consideration of notice of motion No. 52 in the name of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) and that preceding notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it agreed by unanimous consent that we allow item No. 2 to stand and retain its place on the order paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

POST OFFICE—CLIMATE ANALYSIS REPORT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the Post Office Department, Climate Analysis Report carried out by Hay Associates Limited of Toronto, Ontario, in October 1975.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is one of a series of motions which I have placed on the order paper in an effort to open up the Post Office Department to the scrutiny of this House and to the public, because I feel that it is the responsibility of every member of parliament to endeavour to the best of his ability to come to grips with what is a growing malaise in the Post Office Department. I am not going to debate at length this particular motion this afternoon because I have brought this issue repeatedly before the House of Commons.

Motion No. 52 is particularly germane to the situation because it calls for the tabling of the climatic report that was prepared by the Hay consultant group, which was hired by the Treasury Board to do an in-depth examination of the problems besetting Canada's postal service. The Hay group produced a series of reports, including the one which we have requested for tabling. This one is particularly pertinent because it deals with the climate of the Post Office Department, that intangible psychological aspect of labour-management relations. It is in this area that the successive postmasters general have had the responsibility for administering the Post Office in the past ten years—although there have been repeated changes, seven in the short space of ten years—dealing with labour-management relationships which have continued to deteriorate ever since the process of automation and mechanization was announced back in 1970.

Unfortunately, instead of an improvement in this fundamental area of concern, there has been continuing breakdown of the climate of trust and atmosphere of good morale that is essential if the Post Office is to pull itself out of the doldrums and to operate as an efficient, reliable service, which is what Canada must have in the interests of unity and economic well-being of the country.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

We know what has happened over the years. The successive strikes have constantly disrupted the delivery of mail, usually at the busiest times of the year—pre-Christmas strikes, both legal and illegal—and they have had a damaging effect on the business community. Strikes of this kind are always followed by a rash of bankruptcy declarations, and it has been of particular concern to the Canadian Independent Business Federation which is made up of small business groups in Canada. It has resulted in this association, under its leader, John Bulloch, making repeated attempts, by consultation with the government, by consultation with the opposition, and by attempts to arouse public response, to improve the efficiency of the Post Office Department.

I see no reason for the government to restrict a report of this kind which comments on the prevailing atmosphere and is a detailed discussion in terms of modern industrial relations. The Hay people are very skilled in this area. This report offers advice which, if available to the members of parliament and the people of Canada, would provide some of the answers for the long overdue solutions that would have to be put into play if we are going to solve the problems of the Post Office.

We now have a new Postmaster General, and he has made statements in his speeches which indicate that he realizes that this is the essence of the problem. You can transform the Post Office Department into a Crown corporation, you can reorganize management, you can do all the technical and administrative changes, but until you improve the climate, the working atmosphere of the Post Office, you are not going to resolve the malaise.

The Postmaster General made a speech on April 28 at the opening of the new post office building in Port Stanley. There are a few quotations which indicate that he has been reading the Hay report, and I wish that he would allow others to have access to the report. The reports do come to us because, obviously, when you have problems of the proportions of those prevailing in the Post Office, leaks occur, and we do get these reports regardless. What I am advocating here, however, is that he make it available to the people of Canada so they can understand the essence of the problem.

The post office is not only a place of business, but also a meeting place, a place where people like to go. And in this kind of office you get the best of service, personal service.

That is the ideal picture of what the post office should be, a place where there are cordial, good relations, in this instance with the public. He goes on:

These days, when everything seems to be big and impersonal, your post office is still a very personal place.

If the Postmaster General can convince the members of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers that it is a very personal and friendly place, then he will have his problems solved. Turning it into a Crown corporation will not solve the problem if you do not solve industrial relations in the Post Office work place.

Here is another significant paragraph which indicates that the Postmaster General has read the report:

Mail is a vital factor in almost everyone's life. Every day thousands of people write countless letters, and unless the Post Office delivers them, day after day, the economy slows to a crawl, friends and relatives lose touch with one another or, as almost everyone notices in times of labour conflict, everything comes to a shuddering stop.

That is very dramatic language, and it describes the situation that exists in the Post Office at the present time to perfection.

Mr. Baldwin: In the country.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, in the country as well.

Obviously, the Postmaster General has read the report, and all we are asking is that it be released so the public can see at least that the officials in the Post Office Department are endeavouring to come to grips with the difficulties.

● (1712)

Let me indicate that there is no improvement in the situation. On the three major fronts of postal affairs where the Post Office interfaces with the people who are most involved with the whole mail delivery process, the Post Office management is in trouble. First of all, there is the public, which is in constant cry protesting the deterioration in service.

The Toronto Star has assigned one of its chief investigative reporters to conduct an in-depth study of the deteriorating climate in the work place of the Post Office. The reporter, Sidney Katz, has an outstanding reputation in this regard, and I should like to quote from his report in the Toronto Star of May 27, 1978, as follows:

A three-week Star investigation suggests the union often has good reason for its militancy. The union lists these gripes:

Insensitive and boorish supervisors; mistreatment of probationers; ridiculously long delays in getting paid; failure to consult the union about technological change; unreasonable delays in handling grievances;—

There is a backlog of thousands of grievances, and I will put on the record in a moment an item from Ottawa Citizen of May 25, under the heading "Postal Grievances Costly". The Toronto Star article continues:

—managerial incompetence; the improper use of casual and part-time help; unreasonable censorship of notices the union wants to post on the plant bulletin boards; working conditions which are unsatisfactory because of noise, monotony and night work.

You can add to that list disciplinary procedures like this one. It's prescribed by an official Post Office managerial document as a cure for major problems and it's called the 'hot stove' approach.

The manual says it is a concept to help supervisors deal with the basic dilemma of discipline. 'Like touching a hot stove, the person (the offender) will have an experience which is 1, immediate; 2, consistent; and 3, impersonal', it says.

Joanne Leader, 22, is one of the 3,000 federal employees who work inside the mammoth, super-mechanized gateway postal facility in Mississauga.

She protested to the Star; 'The public has no idea of the abuse we have to put up with from management. We have to fight like crazy for rights that other employees take for granted. We're ordinary human beings who want to be treated fairly and with respect.'

This points out the continuing problem with the union and with labour. A pile up of grievances must be avoided as they are costly.

The article in the Ottawa Citizen of May 25 begins as follows:

An ever increasing number of grievances referred to adjudicators from the area in the Post Office has helped lead to a major increase in the cost of adjudicators, J. H. Brown, chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board (PSSRB) said today.

Something has to be done, Mr. Speaker. I am sure if we had access to the climate report of the Hay group we woud be able to offer some helpful suggestions to the Postmaster General as he endeavours to come to grips with these problems. According to the speech he made at Port Sydney he is obviously trying to come to grips with them.

Not only is the Post Office suffering from low morale on the labour front but the public is also beginning to act. A letter came across my desk this afternoon which is similar to many that come to my office every day. It is addressed to the Postmaster General, and reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Lamontagne:

I am returning the brochure 'The way to better postal service' received with my family allowance cheque. This brochure is an insult as well as a waste of money. You are implying that I and the rest of the Canadian public are responsible for the deplorable state of the Canadian postal system. Most Canadians are co-operating and trying their utmost to get the mail through. Your meagre suggestions would not improve the situation at all. The problems with the postal service are internal and until you and your colleagues have enough courage to do the job for which you were elected the postal union will continue to make the Canadian public suffer under this farce you call 'postal service'.

The letter was dated May 19 and signed by a Mrs. Vera E. Gillespie. This sort of public reaction is reflected in the press, so the Postmaster General must be aware of it.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, Post Office customers are at breaking point and, of course, if you lose your customers there is no use staying in business. The Periodical Press Association of Canada is taking the Postmaster General and his department to court because of the illegal method of raising rates, and particularly because of the failure to consult and inform customers that this increase was in prospect. Major users of the Post Office such as Readers Digest are just as concerned with the lack of efficiency, increasing costs and declining services. These protests come across my desk. They indicate the dilemma when the efficiency of an organization depends upon three groups—the public, the inside workers, and the customers. They all lay their complaints on doorstep of the Postmaster General.

We have a major dilemma, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think it will be solved by the tactics the Postmaster General has used so far. He has announced yet another internal study on the advisability of converting the Post Office into a Crown corporation. I imagine this will be a secret document and that members of this House will not have access to it. We will probably not be able to consider the recommendations in open debate in this House. The report is scheduled for July 13.

The Postmaster General avoided discussion on the proposition by announcing the establishment of the internal committee study outside the House of Commons, in company with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). I ask him in this motion, and in the other motions I have put forward, to take the Parliament of Canada into his confidence. Elected members have responsibility for grappling with problems as they arise in areas of public concern. I am sure you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that the Post Office is one of the greatest areas of concern at the moment. I hope we can have this report and the others we asked for so that we may have intelligent dialogue on the matter.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to take the opportunity to participate in the debate on this motion. It is rather interesting to hear the Conservative critic for the Post Office mention the "hot stove" technique. He dealt with the problems within the Post Office, and there is no doubt that those problems are interpersonal. They are the interpersonal relationships between management and the employees. The government has embarked upon the wrong approach to the problems.

I draw to Your Honour's attention the Ritchie report on the Post Office. If we think the conditions presently tolerated by the government have exacerbated relationships in the Post Office between management and employees, can you imagine what would happen if the Ritchie report were implemented? That was the Conservative report on the Post Office. For example, it says no strikes in the Post Office. That is like carrying a match around where ammunition is stored. Imagine that! Will that help industrial relations within the Post Office? Secondly, one proposal was to the effect that the Post Office should sell off some of its operations. I presume they mean sell off the more profitable operations and let the taxpayers pick up the more costly operations in the Post Office.

After all the study done by the official opposition on the Post Office I do not think it will in any way come to grips with the problem. There is certainly no doubt whatsoever that the Post Office should operate as a service. It is not in the business of making a profit. It is in the business of providing service to Canadians at the best possible price at the most reasonable cost to the taxpayers of this country.

We have heard from the workers in the Post Office, and we have heard from the consumers who use and get service from the Post Office that the relationships within the Post Office are very bad. The Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) has travelled across this country making speeches. I think he has been very abrasive in the statements which he has made with respect to the CUPW, with respect to conditions in the Post Office, and in trying to tag CUPW as the bête noire for the problems in the Post Office.

This motion calls for the production of a study done by Hay Associates. It is Part II of Canada Post 75. I have just had a copy of that report delivered to me in a brown envelope. I can understand why the Postmaster General has been so secretive about this report, because in effect it places the blame and responsibility for the mess in the Post Office firmly and squarely on the shoulders of this government and, the revolving door approach to Postmasters General in that office over the last five or six years.

I would like to quote from the Hay report. Under the title "Organizational Clarity—Factor I", it says:

The group score on this factor (33rd percentile) indicates that your managers are uncertain about the aims, objectives, and future directions of Canada Post.

The reference to "your managers" is to postmasters general. This section goes on further to say:

A look at the individual items shows that while there tends to be some formal planning, it is incomplete. The goals are unclear and provide little useful context for the everyday functioning of the organization. Even when goals do exist, there seldom are well defined plans to achieve them. The limits of authority for managers are ill-defined and downward communications are poor.

After studying the Post Office management and inter-relationships within the Post Office, under the heading "Decision-Making Style" Hay and Associates said this:

While this is the factor on which the group had the highest score (37th percentile) it can by no means be considered very positive. Although planning is seen as being oriented somewhat toward the long term, decision-making tends to be based on a short range view and is delayed. Moreover, decisions are commonly based on inadequate information.

On the question of "Organizational Integration—Factor III," this is what the report had to say:

The fact that the group scores at only the 33rd percentile on this factor says that here is little interunit co-operation and a lack of understanding between units of each other's goals or difficulties. In addition, there is a lack of awareness of the inter-relationships among units and communications are generally poor. Even lateral communications, which are seen as the most positive aspect of integration, are barely adequate.

Under the heading "Management Style—Factor IV" the report says this:

This is the second lowest factor, and the fact that the score is at only the 27th percentile is a strong indication that your managers are extremely frustrated and feel they do not have sufficient say in how end results are achieved. More specifically, they feel that open discussion of conflicts, constructive criticism and innovation are not encouraged. Nor are managers encouraged to take reasonable risks in order to increase the organization's effectiveness. There is little freedom for them to take independent action in the performance of their jobs and, most significantly, support from higher levels of management is almost totally lacking.

Under "Factor VI: Organizational Vitality" the report says:

Canada Post is viewed by its managers as being a conservative organization: unresponsive to changes in its environment; conservative—

Small "c" of course.

—in its decision-making; and having cautious goals. Consistent with this is the perception that Canada Post does offer considerable job security—little ever happens to alter the status quo.

The low score on this factor (32nd percentile) may be a reflection of other basic problems in the climate. The fact that on earlier dimensions the managers indicated that they have little freedom to act, that they find the decision-making processes to be less than adequate, and that they are unclear about the organization's plans and goals, probably all contribute to their perception that Canada Post lacks vitality.

On the question of "Compensation" which is "Factor VII", the report says this:

This is the factor which is perceived most negatively by your managers (21st percentile). None of the items could in any way be considered positive.

Both the internal relationship among salaries in Canada Post and the external competitiveness of salaries are perceived to be poor. Moreover, there is little perceived relationship between compensation and performance, which is consistent with Factor V where your managers indicated that there is little demand for performance anyway.

Most noteworthy is your managers' extremely negative view of the competitiveness of benefits in Canada Post.

The question which senior management must answer in order to be able to interpret the items in this factor is whether the perceptions reflect real inequities, or whether, in fact, the perceptions themselves are erroneous.

Now we come to "Human Resource Development" which is "Factor VIII". In this regard the report says:

This factor represents a specific instance of a more general problem in Canada Post, the perceived lack of planning in this case for the human resources of the organization. Although there is some searching within the organization for management talent when a vacancy exists, there is almost negligible emphasis on developing this talent: the jobs present virtually no challenge; there are few opportunities for individual growth and development; and there are relatively few opportunities for promotion. Consequently, Canada Post is unsuccessful in developing people from within for larger jobs, and there are very few people available within the organization who are competent to move into larger jobs.

I can understand why the minister has been so defensive and secretive about exchanging that report and making that report public so that members of this House, who have concern about the performance of the Post Office, could have the information. It has been the practice of the minister and his predecessors to pick out, say, CUPW or the more militant union leaders and point to them as the cause of the problem in the Post Office. Mr. Speaker, that is a neat trick whose purpose is to divert attention from what really needs to be done in the department. The minister and his officials have been sitting on these reports though their conclusions would greatly assist our discussions about ways in which conditions in the Post Office could be improved.

I receive regularly from the office of the Postmaster General a memorandum attached to which are 50 or 60 press clippings which are nothing but self-serving statements the minister has made at various places from coast to coast. I wonder he has not broken his wrist patting himself on the back. If he has somebody in the department spending his time photostating all these self-serving comments and putting them together in a memorandum to send to members of parliament, he can shove it. If he wants to send me something, why doesn't he send me these reports which the taxpayers have paid for so that we can question the minister and his officials properly about the service the Post Office is giving?

The Postmaster General, Mr. Speaker, will never be able to set things right in the Post Office until he gets himself a backbone instead of a wishbone. My experience is that postmasters general have been the victims of their senior bureaucrats moulded to believe the same things as they believe about the way the Post Office should operate. I remember that soon after I began to take an interest in Post Office affairs for my party the first postmaster general I encountered was Bryce Mackasey. And the first thing he said to me was: "John, the problems in the Post Office lie with the Marxists in the Montreal post office." Notice the mentality, Mr. Speaker. They look at a group of workers and say: "There is the problem". They do not look internally. They do not look objectively at the way in which the department is operating. New ministers are appointed and right away the senior bureaucrats in the Post Office start moulding them. They are like clones. They all march out looking alike, saying the same things.

Well, the Postmaster General certainly had an insight the other day. He made a statement to the press in which he said communication between CUPW and Post Office management had deteriorated to nothing. It takes a Postmaster General with great insight to determine that communication between CUPW and management has deteriorated.

If the minister really wants to solve his problems with CUPW, I can offer some suggestions to him right now. First, all 43,000 grievances should be wiped out immediately. They should be wiped off the books.

Second, there is no need for a further study. There is no question but that the Post Office should become a Crown corporation under the Canada Labour Code.

Third, a memorandum should go out to all engaged in management telling them that the Post Office intends to abide by its agreement with the employees, whether with CUPW or with any of the other postal unions.

Fourth, the minister should begin transferring some of those postal corps officials from the last war who occupy positions in middle management and who are today square pegs in round holes. Early retirement might be one way, or they could be transferred across the country so as to get a better perception of what it is like to serve people in other regions.

These are things the Postmaster General should undertake to do if he has the courage. Radical action of this kind is needed to show that it is the Postmaster General who is in control, not the bureaucrats who sit in the background and try to stage the whole operation.

There are a lot of good workers in the Post Office and the minister does no service to the institution when he permits the Post Office to be torn apart by people who are on the outside. He does not serve the Post Office well if he allows productive and committed workers to be downgraded and denigrated by people outside who do not understand the workings of the Post Office or the difficulties outlined in the Hay report.

I might say it does not help morale in the Post Office to hear, for instance, of a secret report with respect to cutting back walks and deliveries in Vancouver. I understand there is a secret report flying around somewhere to that effect. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) once said, we recall, that people will have to be prepared to forget about door to door delivery. It seems to me that speculation of this kind has no positive value whatever. Let us instead get down to the business of correcting what is wrong with the Post Office. We have paid for these studies as taxpayers. Surely, the point of a study is that it provides the basis for informed discussion. It would be much better to provide this information than to go around the country making even more difficult the negotiations currently going on between Treasury Board and CUPW.

I trust the Postmaster General will act on the positive suggestions we have put forward. The Conservatives have welcomed the recommendations of the Ritchie report with a big fanfare. They got this man from Imperial Oil, he was parachuted into Algoma—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

● (1742)

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to both the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) and the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), but I would like at the beginning of my speech to put things in their places and to try to explain the problem at the Post Office.

We are very much aware that the Post Office is an essential service to all Canadians. I agree with the hon. member for Nickel Belt that the main purpose of the Post Office is not to make a profit but to provide service. I do not agree with every suggestion the hon. member has made to solve the problems of the Post Office because the hon. member does not seem to understand them.

This is the third time I have been asked to answer questions about the Hay report. I also spoke on May 4, and my speech can be found at page 5164 of Hansard. Before I deal with the Hay report, I would like to ask hon. members to be serious, more constructive and positive. Let us stop this attitude of gloom and doom about the Post Office. Let us stop looking backward and conducting a post mortem. Let us stop thinking about what happened weeks, months and years ago.

Mr. Dinsdale: What about yesterday and today?

Mr. Lamontagne: Let us stop crying over spilt milk, as we say in English. Let us not live the Conservative way. Let us deal realistically with the problems we have. It is true we are facing a challenge at the Post Office, but it is unrealistic and irresponsible to ask people to believe that we could have the same Post Office service we had 50 years ago. Perhaps the opposition would like us to pull out a report relating to 1925.

The Hay report is three years old. Many things have happened since then. It is a challenge to make the Post Office operate more efficiently and more consistently and to give Canadians the service they deserve. With the revolution in technology that we have seen in the Post Office, many problems have arisen. We have a budget of $1.4 billion. There are 63,000 workers, six unions and some associations. We operate the largest fleet of trucks in Canada; we have 3,734 trucks. We use 4.5 million gallons of fuel and have close to 9,000 postal bureaux across Canada. There are millions of miles to cover in order to get six billion pieces of mail to our 23 million people. That is the magnitude of our postal service, and the recommendations in the Hay report will not solve the problems we have.

[Translation]

A few years ago, a program was implemented to meet more effectively the increasing volume of mail in many regions of the country and the problems at certain of our installations which had become outdated. New installations were therefore proposed and a new operational technology was designed. This is why we are now facing an extraordinary evolution. We are now going through a completely new experience thanks to the most sophisticated technology.

[English]

The Hay report will not cure that.

It would be much easier to solve the problems that have come up and to provide Canadians with the best performance possible if we could count on the full co-operation of all the members of our unions and especially the Canadian Union of Postal Workers.

The problem of labour relations that I would like to touch on briefly is well known, but since we are now involved in a conciliation process with the Canadian Union of Postal Workers and are also negotiating on a friendly term with the Letter Carriers' Union of Canada, I shall not go into details. However, I would like to clarify certain recent statements. It is wrong to suggest that the Canadian Union of Postal Workers does not have a collective agreement. Even though the expiry date of last June is now passed, the previous collective agreement remains in effect and its clauses must be respected, as they are. This is an excellent collective agreement, and if the hon. members think that the postal workers are not well treated, I would suggest that they read their own collective agreement and compare it with that of the CUPW.

[English]

The hon. member for Nickel Belt is well aware of working conditions in the Post Office and, like me, is devoted to the workers. I would like him to look into the collective agreement with CUPW to see if he knows of any other collective agreement which provides the same rights or conditions. I would be surprised if this collective agreement is not the best collective agreement compared with many others. When we say we do not want to renegotiate, that does not mean we are not ready to discuss some items. The existing collective agreement is very good, but we want to clarify its language. That has been the source of the problem since 1975. If we could clarify the language and the interpretation of some clauses, I think we would find the solution to many of our problems.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, of course, we are still ready to negotiate through the conciliation process. However, we have believed it essential—and this is what I said in French—to clarify the legal interpretation and the meaning of certain expressions used in the agreement. I repeat that we are willing to do everything in our power to prevent a strike and to provide at the same time for our workers fair and humane working conditions which will be equal to those of most Canadian workers, or even better, as long as these are reasonable and allow us to meet our commitments towards the Canadian people.

[English]

The Post Office has 23 million shareholders. It is very nice to say that we should please the workers and give them extraordinary conditions, but we have a responsibility to the Canadian people who are paying the bills. We talk about the rights of management and the rights of workers, but there are no rights without responsibilities. Both management and the workers have responsibilities. I ask all our workers to put in an honest day's work and to strive to eliminate some of the current abuses of the rights contained in their collective agreement.

Two such abuses are absenteeism and multiplicity of grievances. The hon. member for Nickel Belt spoke about 42,000 grievances. I think that is proof that there must be abuses. The hon. member for Nickel Belt knows very well that it is easy to gather 1,000, 2,000 or even 5,000 grievances. I negotiated collective agreements in Quebec City for 12 years. We never lost an hour's work. We could at least talk to the people. We tried to communicate with our unions so that their rights could be protected. We collaborated, but it is very difficult to do that in this situation.

Asking what I just asked of our workers is not beyond reason. It is common sense, and the Canadian taxpayer has the right to an efficient postal service in return for the taxes he is paying. Despite all these difficulties I am still optimistic that we can come to an agreement and improve substantially the quality of our postal service. This has to be worked out between management and labour together. One cannot do it without the other. I am not being naive when I say that I have the firm belief that the majority of postal workers and ourselves desire an agreement instead of the other course which would be open to us all if we fail to reach an agreement.

When I say the majority of workers, I would like to see all CUPW workers vote at a certain point so that we may know whether or not they want to strike with the conditions we give them. I think that would be much more democratic than to have a vote of 1,000 workers out of 23,000. If we could find that out, maybe that would be a good move.

There were many other reports which did not come up with a solution to our present problem. There are no miracle solutions, and even the Ritchie report submitted by the opposition has not brought us any solutions or any cure for our present difficulties. Banning the right to strike is no cure. Can you believe such a ban in 1978? Banning the right to strike would not prevent slowdowns. It would be much better to try to make our unions understand their right to strike but, as I said before, not to strike for any reason but rather to strike for good reason. As to private enterprise, obviously private enterprise would take over the Post Office, or what is profitable in the Post Office; but as for the rest, Canadians would have to foot the bill.

With regard to converting the Post Office Department into a Crown corporation, we are studying that proposal at the moment. We are studying it intelligently. As I said when I took over this portfolio, let us be intelligent about it. Let us look at it first. This has been tried in the United States and after seven years it is a mess. Are we to copy them now? We are still open minded about it and we say let us study this and see what happens. I do not believe that even if we convert the Post Office into a Crown corporation we will settle all our problems. On that point I agree with the hon. member for Nickel Belt.

It has been suggested that we should pay salaries equal to those paid by private enterprise. I think that is the case already. We provide good conditions; our salaries are fair.

There has been mention of leadership with backbone. We are exercising leadership in many ways, but one has to be careful not to confuse leadership with dictatorship. It would be very easy to be a dictator and to be arrogant toward our workers or even with regard to management; but it is much more intelligent to be flexible as well as firm and at the same time to show leadership without being dictatorial.

Many people have suggested that I should take the hard line. When something is broken, it is easier to repair it than to take steps to prevent the break.

[Translation]

Until now we have been tolerant and understanding. We have tried to communicate and establish a relationship with the other party to find together the answer to our problems. We intend to continue in that direction. We must explore every approach and make sure that we did not ignore any possible solution before we decide to change our philosophy and adopt intransigent tactics, as everybody will suffer from it.

[English]

Let me come back, Mr. Speaker, to the Hay report. It remains a great mystery to me why hon. members of the opposition persist in demanding to have copies of the Hay report, which apparently they already have. If this document prescribed a cure-all for a number of labour relations problems which are now confronting the Post Office, I could understand their concern. The Hay report, which is an attitudinal survey of the Post Office management, does not do that. Not one document could possibly prescribe a simple solution to perfecting the movement of the mails in an organization staffed by over 60,000 employees in operations scattered over thousands of square miles.

Furthermore, what mystifies me is why the hon. member for Brandon-Souris should demand a copy of the report when obviously opposition members have it. The report is three years old. Having heard the hon. member for Nickel Belt quote some of the paragraphs from the report, I am convinced that it does not offer solutions to our problem. What kind of manoeuvre is this? Are they really dedicated to ferreting out information which it would be in the best interests of the Canadian public to know? I hardly think so.

The report conducted by Hay Associates of Toronto is now almost three years old. Lots of things have happened in the last three years.

Mr. Dinsdale: All downhill.

Mr. Lamontagne: The hon. member should be aware of that. Yesterday in committee the hon. member for Brandon-Souris asked me to table the annual report of the Post Office for 1976-77. I told him that it had been tabled on May 17.

Mr. Dinsdale: Five months late.

Mr. Lamontagne: That does not matter. He did not know it had been tabled. He should not complain that he does not have the information when he does not know about it.

Mr. Dinsdale: You do everything in secrecy.

Mr. Lamontagne: The hon. member is demanding a document which is almost three years old and whose application to current realities at Canada Post Office has now only limited relevance.

[Translation]

As I said earlier, this report was a confidential study on attitudes at various management levels of the department. In fact, this report was entitled "Climate Analysis Report—Rapport d'analyses du climat de travail." If that confidential document were made public it might embarrass some components of the Post Office Department that did not operate properly at the time, for various reasons.

[English]

We do not try to hide the fact that we have problems. I described a moment ago the magnitude of this problem. But General Motors have problems, Bell Canada have problems and Air Canada have problems.

Mr. Béchard: And the Conservatives have problems.

Mr. Lamontagne: The Gallup poll shows this.

Mr. Dinsdale: Let us have an election.

Mr. Lamontagne: This morning's poll showed that the Canadian people do not think that the Post Office is that bad. Some people thought that part of the reason the polls are down is in the Post Office. Things in the Post Office are improving. The improvement in the Post Office has probably helped boost the polls.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would not like a section or a division of the Post Office Department to be subjected to pressures following a report from outside consultants. May I remind the hon. member that we sincerely worry about the morale of postal workers. The disclosure of some parts of that report would certainly prejudice their morale. Furthermore, the Hay report is merely one report among several submitted by inside or outside consultants on postal operations. It is not the most important and certainly not the most recent. Why this obsession concerning the Hay report? Is the hon. member aware that there have been more recent studies on the Post Office operations that might inform him more adequately? I might mention that a former president of the major postal workers union last week published a summary of the main events that occurred in the Post Office Department over the last 20 years. He probably felt that the Hay report was not so important as he did not mention it in his book. I am convinced that this former union president is aiming at the well-being of the Post Office as sincerely as hon. members. Maybe it is in the interest of the hon. member to use the Hay report to act as the champion of freedom of information for Canadians?

It is obviously a very noble gesture to fight in defence of freedom of information, of the right of the public to know what is going on. But to urge the publication of information that can destroy the career and the morale of a person is another thing—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. With the consent of the House, perhaps we could go back into committee of the whole before the Chair calls it six o'clock. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The house resumed consideration in committee of the whole of Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions—Mr. Chrétien—Mr. Turner in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

• (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

On clause 1—Employment at special work site or remote location.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I was very interested in the exchange between the hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, particularly on the subject of sales tax. I should like to offer a few remarks in that regard.

Before my efforts are finished in committee of the whole stage on Bill C-56, I should like to have an opportunity to make a few comments on the research and development items within the bill, because I think there is some poor advice and arithmetic behind the recommendations of the Minister of Finance.

When good legislation is presented to the House, it has no trouble receiving fair and good examination from the opposition and has no trouble getting through the processes; but when the government mixes good items with bad items in legislation, as it has in this bill, then its only resort to get on with the business of the House is to invoke closure, so it thinks. Closure was a very poor decision in this case. In the last hours of consideration on second reading before the House, some 15 government members rose to speak on the bill, using up the time of the House in the period which is no longer called closure but is known as time allocation. As long as the government continues to mix its legislation with good and bad items, I suggest the official opposition will continue to do its duty by opposing such activities.

One thing which really shocked me for the first time in the four years I have been here was the statements made by the Minister of Transport the other day. He came here, disrupted the process and the proceedings on this bill and moved into allegations of the official opposition spreading lies and using its offices for the creation of hate within the country. I want to express my disgust at that type of tactic and at that use of a bill of this nature.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: Separatism exists in Canada today and separatists are in office in the province of Quebec because the people of that province rose against a government which had allowed levels of patronage and political behaviour to go beyond the bounds acceptable to Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Huntington: That is what caused the political turmoil in this country today.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I suggest the hon. member get back to the bill under discussion, Bill C-56, clause 1.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I am right on the bill and right on the clauses of it.

Also I was very interested in an article which appeared on page nine of the Ottawa Journal dated Tuesday, June 6, 1978. The article contained a good picture of the Minister of Finance with his Irish jaw right out, his lips firm and his characteristic strength showing. The article is entitled: "Private sector lacks initiative, Chrétien says". The Minister of Finance is quoted extensively throughout the article. He compared the tax system in Canada to the systems of other industrialized countries and the United States. In part the article reads:

> Canada's over-all tax burden as a percentage of gross national product was 32.7 per cent in 1977 compared with 30.8 per cent in the U.S., he said. That is in the middle rank of industrial countries.
> Corporations pay a lower level of taxes on their income in Canada than in the U.S., he added, while personal income taxes are higher here.
> "Corporation income tax as a percentage of book profits totalled 35.2 per cent in Canada last year," Chrétien said. "In the U.S., it was 40.2 per cent."
> "In the manufacturing sector, the typical Canadian corporation enjoyed an advantage of almost 10 percentage points."
> Chrétien added that indirect taxes, such as the manufacturers' sales tax and custom duties, are relatively high in Canada. But the sales tax is generally not charged on exported goods and therefore favours firms competing internationally.

● (2012)

One has to ask the Minister of Finance, after a statement such as that, with the kind of publicity we can all see in that headline treatment, why so much entrepreneurial capital and industry is leaving Canada and this beautiful environment the minister so aptly described. There is something wrong. It says right here that our tax brackets and everything else are right in line. Something has to be wrong when hundreds of millions of dollars of entreprenurial capital are leaving this country. This represents industries that could create payrolls in Canada in the right environment. They would stay here and be fostered and nurtured and add strength to this country. What is happening to the fibre in Canada if all that the minister stands up and says as far as tax brackets are concerned is "Right on" and "We are in the middle rank"? Something is wrong.

The drafters of the tax legislation in this country are just not familiar and have not had any experience with the world of work. They still do not realize that wages in this country, no matter who is paying them, come from one basic function, and that is a function of adding to the value of goods.

The other thing that has happened in this country is that since 1952 when the Benson tax cut came in and the economists that were part of the Carter commission got their way under a minority government, supported by the NDP, the decision-making base of the business sector in Canada has been destroyed. Ever since 1972 all this govervent has been able to do is monkey-wrench the tax act, change the rules of the game and try to correct the inequities that legislation brought into place. That is the tragedy in Canada today. There is no decision-making base for the private sector.

We hear the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and other members in the government party mouth platitudes about service to the private sector and the small business sector. We have just heard a great announcement on the part of the Minister of State for Small Business about all the things they are going to do for small business. Why is that necessary?

The government has changed a basically simple tax act to one of the most complicated monsters in the industrial free world. That is where our problem is. We keep having these amendments come in, these ways and means bills and budget speeches, such as we have seen in Bill C-56, and all they do is correct errors, change the decision-making base and encourage companies in the private sector to create holding companies and trust companies to take advantage of some careless loophole such as the one the drafters of the last mini-budget put into place, all of which creates tremendous waste and loss of working capital in the business sector, and all because of bad drafting, bad legislation and more ad hockery. That is the problem we are facing in Canada today.

I was rather surprised and pleased when the budget statement came down on April 10 and I saw that the government was finally going to do something about research and development costs. In that budget statement the minister said:

> The effect would be to reduce a company's after-tax cost of each additional dollar spent on R & D to as low as 20 cents.

Then the statement goes on to say in the next paragraph:

> Because of the incremental nature of the new incentive, its impact on tax revenues will depend upon the extent to which industry responds. However, it is estimated that in the initial years the reduction in federal revenue will be about $50 million a year.

I know you cannot say somebody has deliberately misled the Canadian people or members of this House, Mr. Chairman, but if this is not misleading then the advisers and the people working with sharp pencils behind the ministers had better sharpen up. Because there is no way you can find anything through an in depth analysis of this part of either the minister's statement or that other program announced by the Minister of State of Science and Technology, that will support this statement about reduced revenue of about $50 million a year.

I know the minister too well to suggest other than that he meant this sincerely, but he had better do something about the people behind him who are giving him that kind of advice and figures on that subject. Because there is nothing one can find through an analysis of the situation that would lead to that kind of a conclusion.

I am just searching here for a few figures I should like to point out. First of all, I should like to pose this question. On what basis does the minister think the new incentive is going to produce a higher growth rate than the 10 per cent per annum that is in place? I would like to ask why the government killed IRDIA, a program that was in place, had had good experience, and was showing a good growth pattern in Canada. What was it that caused the government to get this thing finally through all its birth pains and then to abort it absolutely just as the industry was finally learning how to use it, even though there were some faults, and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce was starting to work in some modifications? Why was it all of a sudden completely aborted?

This seems to be the pattern of this government. It goes out into the world and up into the north with programs, and just as they get going the government pulls the rug out from under them and starts something new, so that there is a totally endless wave of confusion on the part of the public. Is that policy deliberate? If it is, it is causing an awful lot of dry rot in the economic hull of this country.

An hon. Member: That is not what the Gallup poll is saying.

[Mr. Huntington.]

Mr. Huntington: We talk about being an industrial country. I have a table here which indicates to me that when we make a comparison of the research and development effort in Canada with other OECD countries we are fourteenth on the list. We rank behind Italy, Finland and Denmark. Only behind us do we find Ireland and New Zealand. What is wrong? Something has to be wrong when we consider the resources and the people we have. We used to be expansionary, we used to be growing and we used to be hard working. What has happened to these characteristics that delivered us to one of the most enviable standards of living in the world?

An hon. Member: A bad opposition.

Mr. Huntington: You are on your butt again. I saw you up on your feet this afternoon for the first time since I have been sitting in this House.

An hon. Member: What is your definition of "butt"?

Mr. Huntington: You just talk from the seat of your pants all the time.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I would invite the hon. member to address the Chair.

Mr. Huntington: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for asking the hon. member to get back under control so we can carry on with the debate.

If we look at industrial research expenditures from 1963 to 1977 we will find that, as a percentage of gross national product, in constant terms we peaked out in 1965 at 0.52 per cent. In constant dollar terms in that year we spent $363.3 million. Then from 1965 on there was a steady decline, right down to 1977. As a percentage of gross national product that year—that is, last year—we only spent 0.4 per cent of gross national product on research and development. We have seen a stagnation in respect of research and development funds from 1971 right through to 1977 in real terms, going from $467.5 million in 1971 to $497.9 in 1977.

There have been three opposition days in this House in the life of this parliament in reference to that very subject, and we did not get one ounce of effort until we reached the pre-election days. Just how honest are the statements of the Minister of Finance? How much truth is in the statements of the Minister of Finance and the statement of the Minister of Science and Technology in the presentation that they have given the House and the people of Canada in this area? I will tell you, Mr. Chairman, how honest and truthful these statements are. We have been led to believe that this is a great program with a great bonanza for the small business sector and the industrial sector of Canada. But as I examine it and as I am advised on this subject, if we look at the large firms and at the standard deductions, R and D cost a large firm 58 cents for every dollar spent on research and development in 1976; in 1977, with the investment credit of 5 per cent, the amount was reduced to 55.1 cents for each dollar spent on research. In 1978 the government came through with a 50 per cent additional allowance, which reduced the cost of each dollar for research and development for a large firm to 35.15 cents, a drop of 20 cents on the dollar.

The thing that I find staggering, Mr. Chairman, is that under the IRDIA program back in 1975 a large firm spending a dollar on research had a cost of only 33 cents. So we have the government going through all this flimflam of announcing this program in the budget and then announcing it in Bill C-56, and having the Minister of Science and Technology announce a new program for research and development, when what they have announced for large firms is not as good as what they cancelled back in 1975. This is shameful, Mr. Chairman.

I would like now to look at small firms and how they have fared under this research and development program, and shed some light on the equality that this government has given small firms, for which they have created a minister of state to supervise. The small firms get an absolute hosing in terms of equality. Under the standard deduction in 1976, on a dollar spent on research they had a 75 cent cost because their tax rate was 25 per cent. Under the 5 per cent investment credit of 1977 they had a 71.25 cent cost, a reduction of 3¾ cents. Then in 1978 with a 50 per cent additional allowance on each dollar spent on research they had a true cost of 59.38 cents, giving a reduction of 12 cents.

Again, Mr. Chairman, let us examine the flimflam that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Science and Technology have imposed on this House, the people of Canada and the business community of Canada. The flimflam is that in 1975 under IRDIA a small business spending a dollar on research had a cost of only 50 cents, yet under this budget, this bill, this minister's announcement, he has a cost of 59.38 cents. He was 9.4 cents better off three years ago under IRDIA. That is the kind of flimflam that causes most of us trouble when dealing with the legislation brought down by this government.

Let us now look at the value of the new tax incentive for industrial research and development. It is estimated that research and development performed by industry in 1977 amounted to $846.4 million. Federal government grants against that were $214.8 million. Thus, the net research and development funded by industry was $631.6 million. The rate of growth of industrial research and development from the years 1971 to 1975 averaged 10.3 per cent. That is just fantastic. That rate of growth merely matches the inflation component of this beautifully managed economy.

In my opening statement I mentioned R and D had gone as low as 20 cents on the dollar. The value of the new incentive for the 1978—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. The hon. member for Portneuf.

Mr. Huntington: I will be back.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief. I must say that what surprised me at first when Bill C-56 was introduced was the new procedure followed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) who sought the advice of the provincial ministers of finance. At a time when so much is said about the new spirit of Canadian federation, I think this is an indication of the flexibility shown by the Canadian authorities towards the provinces. It was a new initiative and I hope this example will be followed from now on. And if the experience was deemed unfortunate, because the minister of finance of one of the ten provinces was mean and showed bad faith, nothing will prevent the government from seeking such advice to prepare future budgets.

Mr. Chairman, throughout the debate that has been going on here over the past few weeks, the source of the Quebec finance minister's lack of good faith in his colleagues of other provinces, the other ministers of finance and the Minister of Finance of Canada has become quite obvious. He has never accepted a compromise that would have given Quebec the same advantages as other provinces. For instance, the Minister of Finance suggested that the Quebec minister of finance reduce the sales tax by 2 per cent and that he use the 1 per cent, which Ontario for example uses to bring the sales tax down to 3 per cent, that he apply that 1 per cent on the four sectors where he decided to abolish the tax, but he never replied to that compromise. The only thing is the letter which was tabled today and which, in fact, is not a compromise comparable to the measures adopted in the other provinces regarding the sales tax. Mr. Chairman, I say that is selfishness and bad faith. Quebeckers, more particularly members from Quebec who support the Government of Canada on this issue are not showing, as could have been implied, a lack of courage but on the contrary an understanding of the life of their country which is essential if we are to continue to preserve this country.

I was very surprised to hear the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) this afternoon as he seemed to say that the consequence of that situation was a confrontation between English-speaking Canadians and French-speaking Canadians. He blamed the Minister of Finance of Canada (Mr. Chrétien) for it. One cannot agree with such a fallacy. Indeed, the conclusion at which the hon. member arrives is not at all in accordance with the premises he laid down or the premise also dictated by reality. If one looks at the facts, if one looks at what happened, one realizes that the one who is keeping things from going smoothly is not the Minister of the Finance of the Government of Canada but the minister of finance of the province of Quebec who at no time would come to a compromise, a compromise that the ministers of the other provinces had accepted to promote manufacturing production in this country. I am very surprised that the hon. member reached those conclusions.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to repeat that that initiative by the Minister of Finance appears to me as an excellent example of the co-operation that is required in the preparation of budgets in future in this country, a co-operation that was reflected in his consultations with the ministers of finance. Furthermore, the selfishness and the bad faith of the Quebec minister of finance led to a situation that is only a purely superficial confrontation as basic common sense suggests that we are right. Finally, I really do not see how the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) could conclude from those facts this afternoon that a confrontation between Anglophones and Francophones had been arranged as this was in fact rather an attempt to bring all provincial ministers of finance to participate in part of the budget of the government of Canada, a part that was intended to stimulate the demand by Canadian consumers for Canadian-made products. We wanted this demand to involve all products manufactured in Canada. Never, Mr. Chairman, has the Minister of Finance of Canada denied the minister of finance of the province of Quebec the right to abolish completely the sales tax on any item whatsoever in his own budget. But he has talked about the chance that the other provinces give our manufactured products by putting down the sales tax by 3 per cent. Let us give them that chance also by putting down the sales tax on all items by at least 2 per cent and the 1 per cent that some of the other provinces bring to lower the sales tax by 3 per cent, let us apply that to the fields where we want to abolish it completely. I think that compromise was quite reasonable and acceptable and the minister of finance of Quebec should be ashamed to have been so stubborn in his position, like some members of the opposition who got entangled in supporting it.

[English]

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, this evening I should like to speak mainly of the sales tax. The hon. minister is not taking questions today so I should like to put on record some thoughts regarding my province of Manitoba.

The sales tax reduction for Manitoba is not a particularly good one as there is not much industry in that province to benefit from it. This could also be said for the province of Saskatchewan where even fewer consumer items affected by this tax cut are manufactured. It is well known that the western finance ministers were not very happy with the situation but they recognized the problems of a lagging economy. Most economists were advocating a sales tax cut as one of the best things that could be done to help the national situation.

There seems to be some confusion about whether the Minister of Finance adequately canvassed the provincial ministers. I do not know whether he received an iron-clad agreement from Mr. Parizeau, the finance minister of Quebec, but in any case he was not been able to show us that a reasonable agreement had been reached. It seems to me that Mr. Parizeau has won hands down in the altercation and has accomplished what he set out to do, which was to protect the industry of his province and to retrieve this money from the federal government. Whether the citizens of Quebec receive the money by a direct cheque or in some other manner through income tax, the result is the same—the economy of Quebec will receive a considerable payment.

Just the other day a well known columnist likened the situation to someone having a piece of property shaded by the trees of four neighbours. Wanting to have the shade they threw on his property removed, the owner asked the neighbours to cut down the trees. Three of the neighbours complied; the fourth only cut down a few of his trees yet he wanted to be paid the same as the other three neighbours.

According to the figures I have, the federal contribution to the province of Quebec would be $226 million, of which $222 million would be a tax abatement and about $5 million a cash payment. In the original plan Quebec was expected to contribute $113 million, for a total federal-provincial contribution to Quebec of $340 million. By selective tax cuts to the extent of 3 per cent, the Minister of Finance now proposes to pay $40 million to that province in direct payments.

I should like to compare this with the pay-out to Manitoba and show that if Manitoba had received money under the same conditions as Quebec it would have been immeasurably better off. It is fairly easy to compare Manitoba with Quebec; Quebec has approximately six times the population of Manitoba. Furthermore, our economies are very close together—the ratio of activity of each of the provincial economies is approximately the same.

Manitoba's 1 per cent tax abatement cost $21 million compared to an estimated $113 million for Quebec. The tax abatement for Manitoba was to be $37 million on the $100 tax abatement compared to $4 million of direct cash payment, which means the $100 abatement for Manitoba was not enough and therefore it was estimated the federal government would have to contribute a tax payment.

Had Manitoba followed the example of the province of Quebec it would have found itself in quite a different situation. Instead of the Manitoba treasury having to come up with $21 million on the 3 per cent sales tax cut across the board it would only have had to come up with $3.5 million. The federal government's share of the selective tax cut abatement on the same level as the province of Quebec would have cost the federal government only some $7 million and the taxpayers of Manitoba would have received cheques totalling about $36 million, which would certainly have been a good thing for the economy of that province. It would have protected its market for its own industry and benefited from the sales tax cuts on those goods it produces.

Industries in the province of Manitoba did not benefit directly from the sales tax very much. By the nature of our province, Manitoba does not have a large manufacturing component, whereas in the province of Quebec the manufacturing component is quite a bit larger. Certainly industry in the province of Quebec benefits by the rest of Canada being able to take advantage, whatever it is, of the 3 per cent tax cut in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, B.C. and Ontario, while to a considerable extent the province of Quebec was able to protect its industries against goods shipped in from other provinces. The situation was no different than it has been in the past.

I would like to say that the minister of finance of the province of Quebec seems to have done exceedingly well for his province. He has protected industries which his province is able to take most advantage of and which do well, namely the furniture industry and the clothing industry. Industries in the province of Quebec have been able to go across the country and take advantage of whatever a 3 per cent sales tax in Ontario, Manitoba and the maritimes might bring. In return they have been able to get out of the federal treasury what they were entitled to on the basis as if the pay out of 3 per cent on the sales tax across the board had been implemented. In the situation we are concerned about as to how the tax pay-off will be made to the citizens of the province of Quebec, it does not seem to be terribly important. The citizens will receive it, and presumably the Quebec finance minister will have to find a way to tax back that portion that is paid to citizens in his province. I suspect this is the reason for the suggestion that some means be worked out for 1978 taxes so that we can arrive at a modicum which will not upset citizens. When people receive a cash payment they do not like to be taxed on it.

We have the situation where the Minister of Finance proposed to nine provinces a certain type of sales tax cut, in return for which he gave a certain amount of money. They accepted this, though for most of it not with any great alacrity and not with any great feeling that it was the right thing to do. After all, it is an invasion of provincial rights to some extent. I agree that the fields of unemployment insurance, health programs, welfare programs and education, fields which were given to the provinces, have been invaded by the federal jurisdiction over the years. They have been invaded because we did not allow enough tax room for the provinces to do those things they should have.

The Minister of Finance mentioned the other day, I believe, that he finds the provinces are spending more money than the federal government because of the change in tax revenues. It should be realized that the provinces' assumption of much of the tax load and spending has come about not because it has taken over from the federal government, but because in the fields of education, health and welfare the provincial governments have taken over from the private sector, and these fields alone contribute some 60 per cent to 70 per cent of the total provincial budgets. In this situation it has been bad business for the federal government to meddle in the sales tax, which is one of the few taxes the provinces have available. The BNA Act gave them only direct tax. There is not much scope for these when they are analyzed.

While it may have been a good thing economically to have the sales tax cut, one doubts whether the legacy of distrust that it will leave will contribute much to Canadian unity. In any event, the province of Quebec has won one over the Minister of Finance because the province has received its money and has made tax cuts which are favourable to that province and to its industries. To argue about in what manner or by what means the $186 million should be paid to that province seems to be largely academic.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Chairman, we are seeing a very unusual happening in the House. We are debating a bill which the government pretends it wants to see passed as soon as possible, and yet it has the audacity to put up 15 speakers during second reading debate to the 17 speakers put forward by the members of the official opposition—

Mr. Huntington: And then bring down closure.

An hon. Member: The guillotine.

Mr. Friesen: —and then bring down closure. What a contradiction. It is not closure, I would remind the hon. member for Capilano, it is now called time allocation. What this government always does when it runs out of excuses is change the name. I do not know what PR company they hired to do this, but it always looks a lot better if they change the name. It is just as the Prime Minister says; he is in favour of democracy. By "democracy" he means: "Throw me out if you do not like what I have done". Whether or not he has kept a promise that he should have kept in the first place, that is his new definition of democracy.

I am a little amazed at the government's policy in taxation. It seems to me that we in this country are moving dangerously in the direction of a taxation policy which sees every missed opportunity as a tax loophole—

Mr. Epp: Confiscation instead of taxation.

Mr. Friesen: —that the government has to fill. The hon. member for Provencher says it is confiscation instead of taxation. That really is the direction in which we are going. So every time there is a missed opportunity the government gathers all of its staff resources together to see if they can plug that extra hole for fear that Joe Citizen has a few dollars left over. The parliamentary secretary is sitting there and joshing at all of this. What he is doing is attempting to pump the public to become dishonest citizens, because it is becoming a contest to see how much money will be left over at the end. It is a contest between them and the government. As soon as the government discovers there is something it can possibly latch on to, then Joe Citizen has to find a way of beating it. If we do not watch ourselves, we will find ourselves in the impossible position where we will have a whole generation of people who will see that they have, in order to eke out an existence, to beat out the government.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Bring proposition 13 on!

Mr. Friesen: Yes, or bring proposition 13 on and see another tax revolt.

I have a few examples I would like to bring to the attention of the parliamentary secretary since the Minister of Finance is not here.

An hon. Member: He is here.

Mr. Friesen: He is here? I am sure he is listening to everything he can.

An hon. Member: With both ears.

An hon. Member: Pursed lips.

An hon. Member: And open arms.

Mr. Friesen: I know the Minister of Finance wants to talk about clause 1 and I thought that once in a while we should refer to it.

Mr. Lumley: Hear, hear! After three hours.

Mr. Friesen: I do not want to disappoint the hon. member completely, but I would like to make passing reference to clause 1. If the parliamentary secretary will notice, it has reference to a person at, and I quote:

—a special work site at which the duties performed by him were of a temporary nature and from which, by reason of distance from the place where he maintained a self-contained domestic establishment (in this subsection referred to as his "ordinary place of residence") in which he resided and actually supported a spouse or a person dependent upon him for support and connected with him by blood relationship, marriage or adoption, he could not reasonably be expected to return daily to his ordinary place of residence,

An hon. Member: Ask them what it means.

Mr. Friesen: I do not know whether they could tell us. But there is one group of people who would fit this description and who have faced the wrath of the income tax department every year. They are the truck drivers. Truck drivers are now expected to save every little receipt they get in the local coffee shops as they drive across the country. And if they exceed $9 they can get, maybe, a $12 or $15 deduction on expenses. I can just see every truck driver having a little filing cabinet in his cab in which to keep receipts from coffee shops. There are really some ridiculous connotations for truck drivers. The government are expecting truck drivers to save all receipts, but civil servants travelling across the country get $25 per diem. Somehow truck drivers are expected to save as much as possible, but members of parliament, members of the Senate and bureaucrats should spend as much as possible. It doesn't add up. It savours of discrimination.

It is one thing to drive in your local community where expenses are commensurate with the area, but what if you are a truck driver moving into, say, northern British Columbia or the Yukon or the Territories. You cannot always stop at a local greasy spoon to save money. Meals cost a great deal of money in those areas. We are asking these truck drivers to save receipts, and the implication seems to be that they are going to eat too much and live too high, possibly at the expense of some loss of revenue to the government.

I turn to another aspect which has come to my attention because I have a large number of employees of airlines in my constituency who are beginning to write to me on this subject.

The government seems to have a plan to put a tax on the airline passes given by the airlines to employees. I suggest to the Minister of Finance that here he is getting into dangerous territory.

I have already asked the Minister of National Revenue by letter how far he proposes to go with such a policy. How far is he willing to go in taxing these proposed perks? Does he propose to concern himself with every store clerk in Canada who gets a 10 per cent reduction on every piece of merchandise bought for personal use from department stores and other places where they work? Does he propose to estimate how much they save in a year and put a tax on it? Take one example which I brought to the attention of the Minister of National Revenue. Suppose, for example, you are a medical doctor and your wife is about to have a baby and one of your colleagues delivered the baby without charging a fee because he was a personal friend. Is it intended to impose a tax on that saving?

Then there is the position of the voluntary firefighter across Canada. For the past ten years or so they have been able to claim a tax deduction of $300 a year. Numbers of us have written to the Minister of Finance saying it is time for an adjustment to be made to bring the tax more into line with current realities. But the minister says he does not think so.

These are just a few items which occur to me, items which need amendment or further consideration. In so many of these respects the taxation policy is not only contradictory but is setting dangerous precedents and inviting habits among the taxpaying public which may be regretted in the future. It is inviting people to try to get as much as they can out of the treasury and to cheat on their taxes because there is so little over after the demands of oppressive taxation have been met.

All that is by way of introduction. I will be back later.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, when you intervened to tell me my time had expired I was talking about the value of the new incentive for industrial research and development. I was drawing attention to the fact that research and development performed by industry in 1977 cost $846.4 million, and if you subtract the federal grant component amounting to $214.8 million the net value of research and development funded by industry is $631.8 million.

The minister in his budget speech mentioned R and D costs at the level of 20 cents on the dollar. But if you look at the rate of growth of research and development you will find that from 1971 to 1975 the rate of growth was 10.3 per cent per annum, which in real terms only matched inflation. It was a no-growth situation in terms of constant dollars.

If you look at the value of the new incentive for 1978 at 20 cents cost per dollar invested in research, and you take the $631.6 million research funded by industry at a growth rate of 10.3 per cent at 20 cents on the dollar, you arrive at a figure of $13 million. Yet the Minister of Finance in his budget address stated that, according to his estimate, in the initial years the reduction in federal revenue would be about $50 million a year. That is $13 million—$13.01 million to be closer—versus the $50 million claimed by the Minister of Finance.

If one takes a very optimistic value of the incentive, say 15 per cent per annum growth rate, and takes the figure of $631.6 million invested in industry at a 15 per cent growth rate—which is almost 50 per cent greater than the actual rate from 1971 to 1975—at 20 cents on the dollar you would come up with a figure of $18.95 million. Even that, Mr. Chairman, is a long way from the $50 million presented by the minister in his April 10 budget address.

If, on the other hand, one took the figure of $50 million advanced by the Minister of Finance and extended it on the basis of a growth rate of 20 cents on the dollar, one would have something like $250 million. Then if you divided that by the 631.6, one would have an actual growth rate of 39.6 per cent per annum, a figure which is absolutely impossible.

In the simplest terms I can muster within the environment of this debate, I say that the $50 million figure of the Minister of Finance in his budget address and in his presentation to parliament and the Canadian people is just complete flim-flam, if I may use my colleague's term.

Another aspect of the research and development program which troubles me is that the Minister of Finance completely ignored all the representations from the industrial sector of this country. There has been much talk in recent months by the government side and by the Prime Minister that the government is going to do all kinds of things for the private sector to pull this country out of the doldrums and get the one million unemployed people back to work. We have to get the private sector working.

If that is so, why does the government not listen to the private sector once in a while? Why does the government listen to academics in closets in the ivory towers of government, those people who have come from the land of Academe? They have worked on campuses and established themselves with honours degrees and secure tenure, and then moved as experts in their fields up here to the halls of government. They have got themselves into isolated environments where they draft legislation and impose upon the people of Canada the legislation which comes down through the government into this House. There is no input at all from the private sector. Why did the government not listen to the private sector when it favoured a 25 per cent tax credit without increments?

Mr. Maine: Hear that, Harvey?

Mr. Huntington: An hon. member opposite is giving the needle to my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary Centre, who is an academic. However, let me tell the House that he is an academic with great experience in the world of industry. He is well respected in the world of industry and makes valuable contributions to it. He has not isolated himself in the sterile environment I am talking about where we have drafters of legislation who have had no experience out in the world of work or in the world of adding to the value of goods. One of the great problems the country is facing today is the lack of experience of academic drafters of legislation.

The hon. member shakes his head. Let me take him and waltz him into the Treasury Board. That is a place to end all ivory towers, believe me. There we can find very respected individuals, and I respect them too. They are very well qualified individuals. They are responsible for allocating the tax resource of Canada, and they look after the priorities set on the tax resource by the cabinet. Here we have these gentlemen in this sterile environment allocating this resource. They have all kinds of problems, and they are tearing their hair out because too many departments want too much. They are hard, tough, mean people as far as the departments, agencies and Crown corporations of government are concerned.

It has been my experience that those gentlemen, as respected as they are in their fields, have absolutely no concept of what the taxpayer in this country has to go through. The taxpayer in this country is accountable to the tax collector, but the people who spend and are responsible for the use of the tax resource in this government are on a cash-flow accounting basis and have been accountable really to no one. That is one of the dilemmas this country is in today, and it is a cause of concern for many people and one of the pressures this government is under.

If the people who allocate the tax resource had the same degree of training that people in the private sector have had to go through, there would be a lot more care and attention and much more accountability demanded by the people and by the government. Some of us in this House are certainly working on the word "accountability" right now.

I interrupted what I was saying about research and development. I take issue with the minister's $50 million figure. My arithmetic says that there is no way that there is truth in that figure, and that the figure is between $13 million and $18 million at the most. I think the people behind that other arithmetic should have their heads examined or should be on the carpet in front of the Minister of Finance tomorrow morning.

One other thing about research and development which troubles me is where federal government expenditure on research and development is directed. Looking at the intramural component—which means the in-government component—we find that in the fiscal year 1976-77 federal government expenditure in the field of natural sciences was $460.8 million. In the fiscal year 1977-78 it was $511 million. In the fiscal year 1978-79 it is $567.1 million, for an average growth rate of 10.9 per cent per annum. That is just a little bit ahead of the inflation component.

However, if we look at the extramural expenditure—that is, organizations outside government, industry—in 1976-77 expenditure was $222.3 million. In the fiscal year 1977-78 industry got $214.8 million. What happened there? In fiscal year 1978-79 industry gets $217.6 million, for an actual loss of 1.1 per cent per annum. The university component went up 10.4 per cent per annum. In the "other" category, expenditures have gone up 8.8 per cent per annum.

The point I want to make is that this government, which is saying it is doing everything it can to stimulate the private sector and industry in this country, has actually spent less in that sector, and I think the government should be severely criticized for that.

One other point on this allocation which troubles me is the fact that unsolicited proposals for industry got $1.5 million. The science and technology employment program for universities got $3 million. The program for industry laboratory projects got $5 million. For technical information from the National Research Council the government paid $.35 million. The total for "industrial" was $6.5 million. Universities got $15 million in total, and the intramural government sector got $7.5 million. However, of that $6.5 million for industry, $5 million was delivered to intramural programs, so industry ended up with $1.5 million.

I think this is where we have a very serious problem in the area of research and development. There is a problem not only with the program announced by the Minister of Finance but also with the program which was announced by the Minister of State for Science and Technology the other day.

Early in the debate today there was an exchange between the Minister of Finance and the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville about sales tax, and I would like to say a few words about that. I am in the importing and distributing business in Canada. I have been extensively involved in costing and in the distribution of consumer merchandise, and I can tell hon. members that one of the things which interferes with the purchasing power of the Canadian wage dollar is taxes which are collected at the bottom of the pyramid. I am speaking of the 12 per cent federal sales tax.

I can show hon. members that if there was no sales tax collected at the manufacturer's level, an item which retails for $5.60, rounded out to the psychological price of $5.59, would retail for $4.95. I really think that if we are going to start to improve the purchasing power of the wage dollar, we in this House have to take a serious look at the negative effects of the federal sales tax on that purchasing power.

Hon. members opposite might say there could be a loss of revenue which must be compensated for, and I agree. I think we could collect that in another way very easily, but I will save that for another point in this debate.

One of the other things which has delivered us into the national dilemma we are in today is that 55 per cent or 60 per cent of our federal budget is involved in statutory payments. In other words, there is no way to cut, mend, allocate or manage because 55 per cent to 60 per cent of our budget goes to transfer payments to the provinces to handle the social services we have built into the structure of Canada.

I do not think there is a person in the House who wants to see those social services threatened. But one of the weaknesses we have is that people, because of political gains, have got used to expecting something for nothing. When you compare one nation to another historically, you find that with high transfer payments you start to have problems with the collection of taxes with respect for taxation and with respect for the spending of that tax dollar.

Miss Bégin: Give us an example.

Mr. Huntington: We have seen, my dear, the example where you had to go into block funding because you had to put under control those provinces which spent money on the basis that the dollar they spent was matched by the federal government, and that got the Department of National Health and Welfare into a budget problem. It was a transfer of payments problem, and there was a runaway situation which the government had to put under control.

Miss Bégin: Of whom are you talking? Name the province.

Mr. Huntington: If we could give the people of Canada the measure of the services they demand from government in terms of their own purchasing power, we could start to put the situation under control and have an accurate measure of just what it is they want so that they could measure its benefit in terms of their own purchasing power. It is difficult for any one of us in the House to think and talk in billions of dollars as we are doing. We lose track of reality. But if you look at the cost of the service in terms of somebody who is spending $150 a week, and all of a sudden some political party comes along and promises medicare and you find you have $1 billion or $2 billion more in expense and more problems in the tax collectors' over-all situation, you should be able to measure whether you want medicare or denticare in terms of your present costs or in terms of what it will cost you if it is provided by the government.

Somehow or other in the next decade this chamber will have to meet that challenge. We have to convert the cost of social services into terms that can be measured by individual spending power. Let us say that Mrs. Johnny Canuck is spending $100 a week and someone promises a service that will take $2.50 away from that. She knows that her present cost is $1 or $1.50. She must be able to measure this, not in terms of the millions of dollars it will cost the government, or in terms of dreams, or in terms of "what does it matter, the government will give it to us". Somehow or other we must resolve this dilemma in the sales tax debate. If we could put the cost of our social services in this country in terms of measurement for each individual user or drawer of that service, we would start to turn our problem around.

I think the answer is in the sales tax. I was very interested in the exchange between the minister and the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville and the comments that were made in this debate earlier, because I suspect you are starting to move to the end user tax. If we had an end user tax with no exemptions, dedicated to the supply of health and welfare services to the people of Canada, we would then have a measure in terms of the value and cost of that service to them. No matter what his pay cheque, a person could measure the value of a given service and he would have to know that there is a cost. If you start to think in those terms or put your experts into studying those terms or publish a national white paper in those terms, you could start to make a solid correction to some of the very serious problems and attitudes of the government and put some responsibility into the political forces in this country.

I think that the comments that came from the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville and the Minister of Finance today are very significant. This is an area in which I would certainly like to participate in the years ahead in trying to resolve the very serious problem of providing services at a cost that can be validly measured.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, the House is now studying Bill C-56 in committee of the whole. At the beginning of this study this afternoon, the spokesman for the official opposition and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) seemed to be at grips with each other, to oppose each other on totally different principles. However, a few moments ago, they both seemed to be in complete agreement and, to repeat an old expression often used in the House, it was the same old gang. They leave the impression, Mr. Chairman, that they are opposed on principles, but when the time comes to take a decision they reach agreement. It seems to me they both obey the same commander, a commander we do not know, a commander who is not in the House, a commander whose authority is strong, who is outside the House and yet is able to command not only the old parties referred to as the traditional parties of the House, but also to parties in other legislatures, in other legislative assemblies. Mr. Chairman, I have already expressed my views on Bill C-56 on second reading or during the debate on the amendment moved by the leader of the New Democratic Party. At that time, Mr. Chairman, I said that when the government wants to pass legislation likely to serve the interests of high finance, it always manages to include, as in the case of Bill C-56, proposals which will please all members of parliament and serve at the same time the interests of ordinary workers.

This is the case of Bill C-56. It contains provisions on which we agree, but it also contains a provision on which we are in complete disagreement because it goes against our constitution, our constitution that we must obey and follow as long as it is not replaced by a totally Canadian constitution, made by Canadians, for Canadians and for the whole of Canada. I already had the opportunity to comment on this matter during a debate that took place in 1977 and which was brought about by a motion entitled "National Unity". At that time, at the very start of the debate, I immediately emphasized that a debate on Canadian unity could not produce anything new that would allow hope that Canada would really be the nation of all Canadians, regardless of their language or ethnic origin.

At that time, I said that it was the duty of the 264 members sitting in this institution to work earnestly so that all Canadians could be proud of a true nation that would be called Canada and in which they could live in harmony. Mr. Chairman, I value harmony much more than unity because if you want to have harmony within a family, you will also inevitably have unity. The same is true in a parish. The same is true in a county. The same is true in a province. The same is true in a country. And to live in harmony, Mr. Chairman, it must be acknowledged in practice at all costs that all citizens are equal before the law, that every province of our country, all ten of them, should enjoy the same advantages, the same rights, and that they should get the same income to be able to assume their responsibilities.

Mr. Chairman, Bill C-56 is the logical result of the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) last April 10, in which he informed this House of the various policies that parliament might implement to alleviate the burden of Canadian taxpayers, to provide every Canadian with a higher income, to enable every head of family, every individual to face his responsibilities. This ways and means motion on income tax was followed by a legislation known as the Bill C-56. After the first reading of that bill, we witnessed the opposition of the Quebec government, a legitimate government, as it was elected following a general election on November 15, 1976. Some saw in the results of that election a rejection by the people in Quebec of a weak government, a government that was shirking its responsibilities in the face of events occurring in the province of Quebec at that time, when there were strikes after strikes in the private sector and in the public sector, and Quebeckers were asked at that election to pass judgment on the administration of our province, the province of Quebec. The people in Quebec chose an alternative government that had not mentioned in its electoral program its basic objective, the separation of Quebec from the rest of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, Canadians and Quebeckers voted then for a good government. They wished to express their desire to have a sound government, able to face its responsibilities and to solve our problems. Since then, Mr. Chairman, that government has made every effort with all kinds of mistakes, of course, like any government which acts, because a government which does nothing does not make any mistakes.

But a government which takes decisions also makes mistakes, as we do here in Ottawa. Mr. Trudeau's government has not only always done the right things; it has also made mistakes but it is through the experience of our mistakes that we learn how to correct them and do something in line with the common good. So, Mr. Chairman, this government, our national government, has presented a budget.

This afternoon I heard a member asking a question, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) who was asking: But if you had to make a decision at that time what would have been your position? Mr. Chairman, I do not have to answer for that member, but as a responsible representative I have to answer as a responsible man. I must say that if the same procedure had been applied toward any of the other provinces of my country, I would also adopt the same position as the one I am taking today because we live in the same country, with the same principles, the same responsibilities and I feel quite disappointed today after these two months of debate for we have been discussing that for two months in this House and we have taken strong stands so that the constitution will be respected, so that we can live together in harmony. Today after reading the letter of the finance minister of Quebec which I have read carefully and reread and perhaps not understood completely, though I am willing to read it again, I think we should do our utmost to try to understand it well so that all of us 264 members of the House can adopt a position which will be the one likely to lead us to prosperity in this country and give equal chances to every province. Mr. Chairman, we have been witness to the fact that the province of Alberta, which does not have a retail sales tax and I now see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) listening to me carefully, it will still be getting something from the federal government.

Mr. Chrétien: No.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): No? Well, I would like to be corrected then. Will the province of Alberta not be getting a few million dollars—

Mr. Chrétien: No!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): —to allow. Here, according to—the Minister of Finance shakes his head. All the more reason for saying that not many in this House understand the thinking of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister. About two weeks ago, the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Chrétien: I have been saying for two months that we are not paying Alberta!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): —the following happened, and please correct me, because it is time to take honest stands. For me, if I have to back out, I say to the Minister of Finance that I will do so—

Mr. Chrétien: It will depend on the questions!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): —in all honesty in order to serve my country well.

If the Minister of Finance has to do the same thing I hope he will be honest enough to do it to serve this country well because in the final analysis we are at a climax. We now have a crucial problem—

Mr. Chrétien: It is solved—read the letter.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance tells me it is solved. He says, read the letter. In the first paragraph—I see the Minister of Finance telling me to read the letter. I am pleased that the Minister of Finance should refer to me as tu. We do it for the Holy Father, so why not for a simple member of parliament?

In the first paragraph, the minister of finance of Quebec says, and I quote:

. . . our governments disagree . . . and that it would be useless to seek a formula other than the one which was approved by the Quebec government and supported unanimously by the National Assembly.

That is in the first paragraph. Moving to the second paragraph, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chrétien: But the problem is solved.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): You can be sure, Mr. Minister of Finance, that if you can convince us that the problem is solved I am going to applaud like mad with my two big hands—you can be sure of that!

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, if I could urge the hon. member to read the letter where he says at the end of the second paragraph on page 2, and I quote:

In this regard, I would like to submit to you a three-part proposal which includes the various elements of solution suggested in recent weeks.

First, there is the $40 million that I mentioned at the beginning for which the government of Quebec qualified. The second paragraph deals with Bill C-56 in which we propose to reduce immediately the income tax of Quebec taxpayers by $85. That is clause 30(b) of the bill now before us. If we could vote tonight on clause 30(b), we would thus accept Mr. Parizeau's first proposal. Mr. Chairman, I am happy to see the hon. member for Bellechasse getting all set to applaud.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Let us not go too fast, do not ask for anything before I have understood everything clearly. I am not the only one who has not quite understood the policy of the Minister of Finance since April 10. If I were, I would bow out, but I am not the only one: many other hon. members did not either, nor did quite a number of editors who wrote whole pages on the matter and have kept asking questions of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance.

An hon. Member: Do not forget Claude Ryan.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, I should like to come back—

Mr. Nystrom: Do not forget the Gallup poll.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): One hon. member tells me that only the Gallup poll understood. Mr. Chairman, in that regard, if you will allow me . . . I do not believe in the Gallup poll. Last week, they said white; this week they say black—

An hon. Member: Or red, rather.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I trust they do not mean red like in China or Russia: I would really feel terrible about that. Mr. Chairman, in any event, political colours do not mean much to me. I would rather have good old common sense any day. We now have a problem that is crucial, serious, and if the Quebec minister of finance . . . I can see the federal Minister of Finance showing the letter from his Quebec counterpart. He seems to be saying: Victory! Victory! He has given in to their proposals. But if that is true, surely someone was not serious somewhere.

● (2142)

There is only one possibility: either the Canadian government, through its Minister of Finance, was justified in making its tax proposal in the April 10 budget, or the Quebec minister of finance was justified in doing the same when introducing his budget, the date of which I do not remember. Both cannot be right at the same time. It is impossible. When he introduced his budget, the Minister of Finance of Canada made some proposals. He said: "We will grant an income tax reduction to Canadian taxpayers to enable them to increase their income, to spend more on the purchase of Canadian goods, to stimulate the Canadian economy and allow our Canadian industries to market their products, thus creating jobs and reducing inflation".

A week or two later, the Quebec minister of finance stated that the federal formula is unacceptable. The federal government wants to reduce income tax and compel the Quebec government to increase its taxes accordingly. Then it will be able to provide advantages to stimulate the economy.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps I do not understand anything and, in that case, the minister understands too well. He came here to sit in this chair. I asked him to explain clearly how he could possibly reconcile both policies. I would not want Canadians who are watching us on television to believe that we are making fun of their problems, far from it. Mr. Chairman, I want to say seriously that if the proposals contained in Bill C-56 are likely to become an economic solution or to stop inflation and bring harmony within our country, I would be quite happy. But why the discussions for two months between two intelligent ministers of finance, or supposedly intelligent, who were ruling the roost?

The federal minister said, "No, I don't understand anything". The minister in Quebec said: "The federal minister does not understand at all". At one time I for one was inclined to think that neither understood anything. Mr. Chairman, here is the centre of the problem. I made a promise to the Minister of Finance, I will keep my word.

Mr. Boulanger: Now we're going to get it!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, I can understand that hon. members who have nothing serious to say make jokes. They have no opinion to voice. They are simply here to vote, to increase their number when it is time to get a majority. But I cannot understand that a sensible man like the hon. member who just made a remark can make silly cracks such as the one we just heard. Mr. Chairman, the problem we are faced with now is one of a financial nature. If there is one hon. member in this House who can claim the opposite, let him rise and I will sit down.

It is a financial problem for the federal government, for the provincial governments, for municipal governments as well as for individuals.

What is a financial problem then? A financial problem occurs when you have more liabilities than you can meet. That's what a financial problem is. And Canada's problem is a financial one. Yesterday—that is quite recent, Mr. Chairman—yesterday the Minister of State for Urban Affairs submitted to us a formula which will allow some organizations to provide families or individuals with housing suited to their capacity to pay. In order to meet this objective, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs announced very happily to the House that the interest rates would be reduced from 8 per cent to 1 per cent, which represents a 7 per cent reduction. Then the hon. member opposite and, after him, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, made the following remark: it is a Socred formula, the same kind that applies to developing countries to whom we provide loans with interest rates equivalent to the administration costs involved.

Mr. Chairman, we have often in the House urged the government to give Canadians in our own country the same advantages it is willing to give to people in underdeveloped countries. For once, Mr. Chairman, I must congratulate the Minister of State for Urban Affairs for realizing that the formula we are suggesting is reasonable and useful. He still has just a little further to go in this direction. How is that? Well, in order to get the necessary funds to provide loans with an interest rate to cover just about the cost of administration, we must take advantage of the bank which belongs to Canadians, the Bank of Canada, our own bank. We will be able to do so if we amend the current legislation along the line suggested in Bill C-390, which I introduced in the House and which has reached second reading stage—and I urge the Minister of Finance to bring back this bill in order that we may resume consideration of it, to help the government get out of its financial slavery.

The Minister of State for Urban Affairs has taken the right step, and I commend him for it. He speaks French and English, so he should have no difficulty making the Minister of Finance, the President of Privy Council and the Prime Minister understand. He can tell them this: Canadian are glad of this initiative. If only we could make up our minds to get out of this financial ironcollar, to get rid of this machinery from outside the government which controls the financial affairs of our country, I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that if the government, the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board had this courage, the government would remain in power till the end of times, because the Canadian people would be delighted to be liberated from their financial chains.

Mr. Chairman, clause 30 of Bill C-56 is at the centre of this whole debate. For our workers gone to work at remote work sites where they cannot maintain a home, a house, normal housing with their families, well, with this bill they will get some benefits. I am entirely for that.

As for the other clause regarding retirement savings plans, I have already talked about that—the hon. member for Saint-Denis is making faces. He looks as if he was saying: "Gee! That makes sense, but I do not have the guts to say it." Well, I have the guts to say so.

Mr. Prud'homme: You speak too loud.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Me, speaking too loud? That is my natural voice. We will never speak too loud in this House to wake up those who are sleepy, those who sit here only to vote at the call of the bell but who have no guts to rise when it is time to do so. Mr. Chairman, to sit on the majority side and form the majority when the time comes to vote, that is not what is called courageous. I have seen hon. members on the majority side who do not agree with this bill. Oh, my God! I see one over there who refrained from voting. But there are others who in the past have spoken in this House and accused the others of being fence riders, people with no spine. It was the hon. member for Compton who accused his colleagues of sitting on the fence. Well, Mr. Chairman, during the vote yesterday, he gave me the impression that he was the chief fence rider, because he voted for a bill which he denounced on television.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think that I am being insulting because it is the hon. member who said that first, not me, he said that there were such people who just swayed in the wind, one way and then the other, but who nevertheless continued to sit on their fence. Well, I do not want to be a fence rider, I want to know where I am going; the hon. member for Roberval knows where he is going. We may not have a large team, but we are not a team of fence riders, we are a team of people who know where they are going, we want financial reforms to put the economy back on its feet, we want to bring harmony in our country so that French Canadians and English Canadians will love each other, because after all, we eat the same way and we react the same way. When we look at one another, we find a striking resemblance, so why should we not be able to get along? Simply because there are financial considerations which separate us, because we create dividing interests, and that is why we cannot understand one another in this country.

Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to invite all my colleagues in the House to consider seriously in the coming months the bill which was introduced regarding chartered banks in Canada. It is that thick! It is an extraordinary bill, but it is a bill which can generate harmony among us, the federal government, the provincial governments, the municipal governments, and among Canadians. It is an extremely important bill and I would invite all my colleagues, during recess, if it can be called that, to scrutinize all the clauses in the legislation so that we can be well prepared to study it objectively when we return to the House.

Then it will be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs so that we can also consider it seriously, and finally bring in the necessary amendments to enable the Liberal, Progressive Conservative, NDP or Socred government to meet the aspirations of all Canadians, to give equal opportunity to all citizens, all individuals, to the private sector, to municipalities, to provincial governments and to the government of Canada. This is, Mr. Chairman, what a genuine Canadian constitution is about: first put some order in the financial system and the rest will come to us naturally.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, I have only a few minutes in which to speak. I remarked to the Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance that if the hon. member for Bellechase ever made a speech like that in Saskatoon, he would get a standing ovation.

Miss Bégin: Would he be elected?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is a good possibility, especially if he ran in the riding of the Minister of Transport. He would be a shoo-in there.

I want to direct a few questions to the Minister of Finance. As you pointed out in your ruling earlier today, Mr. Chairman, there is an opportunity in clause 1 for us to deal in a general way with some of the fundamental principles of this bill. I should like to ask the minister some questions on the amended ways and means motion as I am anxious to have a better understanding of it.

I must say I was very upset at the attitude taken by the minister this afternoon when he refused to answer questions on anything except clause 1. If we are to make any progress in committee of the whole he should not ignore this opportunity to try to clear away some of the misunderstandings and misapprehensions some of us have about this bill.

The way in which the bill has been handled up to this point reminds one of "Alice in Wonderland". It has been an unfortunate scenario of incompetence—of stupidity, I am sorry to say, as demonstrated by the minister. I should like to try and help him get the best possible arrangement under the circumstances, but that will be difficult if he refuses to answer questions. I suspect he wants to avoid answering questions, just put in some time here and then try to invoke a time allocation on this segment of the deliberation. This would be an unfortunate move on his part and would demonstrate again his inflexibility.

If the minister is not going to be here, perhaps I might ask the parliamentary secretary a couple of questions. If the minister is unwilling or afraid to answer questions maybe the parliamentary secretary will screw up his courage and answer them.

In the amended ways and means motion there is a provision that no interest will be payable on the portion of any refund arising by way of a reduction. Could the parliamentary secretary explain—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being 10 o'clock it is my duty to rise and report progress and request leave to consider the bill again at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—REINSTATEMENT OF DEATH PENALTY FOR TERRORISTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, recently in Toronto the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) announced that he was calling for hanging for terrorists. He said that while he does not think the death penalty would deter terrorists, it would keep them out of jail, and that one of the prime motives for terrorism is the demand for release of imprisoned terrorists. In an interview the minister cited the assassination of Aldo Moro as an example of why terrorists should be executed.

I raised this matter in the House on June 2 when I put a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) about whether the government was considering reintroducing capital punishment for terrorism. At page 6000 of Hansard the minister replied:

> It is not the intention to amend the law in the manner indicated by the question.

I do not think I have to remind hon. members that 80 per cent of the Canadian people have been requesting the return of capital punishment. With the amount of terrorism we have seen around the world, the government should certainly be giving some serious consideration to the return of capital punishment. I asked the Minister of National Defence in the House to explain his statement that he wanted capital punishment brought back for terrorism. Part of his answer, appearing in Hansard at page 6000, reads as follows:

> When one looks at the situation in recent months, where most terrorist activities have been directed to the release of terrorists who are incarcerated, one must consider the alternatives to reduce terrorism which is aimed at the structures of our society and our democratic way of life.

I would like to add a little further to that. When a terrorist is jailed he should be required to sign an affidavit that if his friends, the other terrorists outside, seize hostages to demand a prisoner's release from prison, it should be made clear to the jailed terrorist that he too will receive capital punishment along with his terrorist friends outside of the jail.

We have seen terrorist action in Zaire recently where rebels slaughtered as many as 200 foreigners in a hunt for the white man. French troops found a new massacre site in a European quarter of Kolwezi containing about 20 bodies, including a dozen children. In another town in Zaire, at Kinshasa, rescuers found 44 slain. Those examples prove that terrorists have been acting in a revolting manner around the world.

We now come to Spain, where three terrorists, believed to be mainly Armenian vengeance-seekers, pumped bullets into the Turkish ambassador's car at a stoplight in downtown Madrid killing his wife, brother-in-law and a chauffeur.

So one can see how bold terrorists are. No one is safe on the streets whether a person is in his car, walking down the street or whatever he is doing.

At least some countries know what to do with these individuals. I would like to refer to a recent case in Egypt where the Egyptian government hanged five people for a kidnap-murder. The Ottawa Journal for Monday, March 20, 1978 reported:

> The Egyptian government hanged five Moslem fanatics at dawn Sunday for the kidnap-murder last summer of former cabinet minister Sheik Mohamed Zahabi, Egypt's Middle East news agency reported.

Closer to home, Mr. Speaker, last year the FBI reported that 91 policemen were killed on duty in the United States. In 1976 111 were killed in that country. Many Canadians want capital punishment brought back for the murder of policemen. So far this year in Canada four policemen have been murdered.

One sees many letters to the editor in many papers across Canada. Members of parliament also receive mail on the subject of capital punishment. I would like to refer to a letter to the editor in the Winnipeg Tribune which states:

> We are not going to take it any more! Another police officer killed, two wounded, including a young woman constable!
> How many more police officers have to be murdered before our government will bring back capital punishment?

That is just an example of one letter. I have another one which appeared in a Winnipeg newspaper recently entitled "Who is next on killer list?" It states:

> At the risk of being thought a bigoted redneck from the West, I am still firmly in favour of capital punishment being put into force in Canada, immediately, for any deliberate murder.

The letter goes on to say:

In parliament the flag dropped to half mast in respect for Italy's Aldo Moro, a politician. How much more appropriate would it be for such respect to be shown for our own Mounties when they give their lives in the service of Canadian citizens, including those stupid politicians who refuse to give them the protection of the law.

I would like to refer to the murder of the young shoeshine boy in Toronto last year, and in particular to an article which appeared in the Toronto Sun under the heading "Police say film shows sex attack on Emanuel". The article states:

● (2207)

Police investigating the slaying of Emanuel Jaques yesterday revealed they had seized colour film showing the boy being repeatedly sexually assaulted before his death.

These are the types of people Canadians want punished and that is why the government must consider the implementation of capital punishment once again.

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it has been stated before that the ministry is not prepared to accede to the request for reinstatement of capital punishment in this country. The ministry does not feel compelled to depart from that principle presently enshrined in the law of this country in relation to offences committed by national or international terrorists.

This, notwithstanding the comments made by the hon. member this evening and the press clipping he quoted from a Winnipeg paper referring to "stupid politicians". I take it that must refer to all members of this House who voted for abolition in a free vote, including a number of members of his own party, among them his own leader.

Criminal Code amendments passed by parliament in 1977 which have now been proclaimed as the law of the land should be ample notice to would-be national or international terrorists that Canadians are prepared to deal rigorously with those who would commit violent criminal acts. This trend has been continued in the current legislation presently tabled before the House.

These present and proposed provisions are ample testimony to the fact that Canada will not be a haven for incidents of national or international terrorism.

The impact of the increased lengths of parole eligibility for persons convicted of first and second degree murder is becoming increasingly apparent in the community. Individuals who are convicted of first degree murder will be sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole for 25 years. Persons found guilty of second degree murder run the risk of having their parole eligibility extended from ten to a maximum of 25 years.

Radical changes to the penalties for the criminal misuse of firearms are a mark of the new gun control legislation. Use of a firearm while committing an indictable offence will now be punished by mandatory imprisonment for one to 14 years for the first offence. Subsequent offences may attract sentences of three to 14 years. The sentence for use of a firearm in the commission of a violent indictable offence will be served consecutively to any other offence imposed for the crime. Carrying a concealed weapon, possessing prohibited weapons or unregistered restricted weapons, is punishable by up to five years imprisonment. Any offence under the Criminal Code authorizing imprisonment for five years or more now comes within the expanded definition of "offence" for which an authorization may be permitted under the wiretap provisions of the Code.

Proposed amendments presently before the House to the Fugitive Offenders and Extradition Acts are an attempt to modernize this legislation in the face of the increasing international scope of criminal activities, including terrorism. The—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST—EFFECT OF GUIDELINES ON FORMER MINISTERS AND DEPUTY MINISTERS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight in the hope of getting a better answer to the question I raised with respect to the conflict of interest rules set out by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), particularly as they related to the appointment of the former minister of finance, the Hon. Donald Macdonald, to the board of directors of the MacDonnell-Douglas Corporation.

I suppose one of the advantages of flying back and forth between Saskatoon and Ottawa is that one has the chance of reading the papers. But on the weekend, before I asked my question, I noted on the financial pages of various newspapers, including the Globe and Mail, an announcement by the MacDonnell-Douglas Corporation of the appointment of Mr. Macdonald to the board of directors. In reading the announcement over, what struck me were the rather Freudian references to the qualifications of Mr. Macdonald, including the fact that he is a former minister of national defence and minister of finance. There was no reference to any other portfolios Mr. Macdonald held, so I suppose MacDonnell-Douglas felt those other portfolios brought no significant advantage to the company and were not the basis upon which Mr. Macdonald was made a member of the board.

The company went on to point out that it has commercial and military aircraft and automation services amongst its products. As we all know, the Government of Canada is now in process of considering a number of tenders for a massive $2.3 billion contract relating to military aircraft for the Department of National Defence and the government generally.

Mr. Macdonald resigned as minister of finance less than a year ago. He was minister of finance up until September, 1977, so there are a couple of considerations in this situation. As has been pointed out by many people, no one is suggesting that Mr. Macdonald is going to use some devious methods to obtain a particular preference for Macdonnell-Douglas. That is not the issue.

If we look ahead and if MacDonnell-Douglas is the successful bidder, what will be the perception as far as the Government of Canada is concerned? This will put the government in a very peculiar position, and the perception is going to be unfortunate. The perception might be that the contract was awarded to a company which had on its board of directors someone with access to and influence with the government over and above the normal lobby one might expect from competitors.

The point I was trying to make to the Prime Minister when I was asking the question was twofold. I think there is a very good reason to say that technically and unfortunately Mr. Macdonald has breached the guidelines which the Prime Minister laid down. Under the guidelines, and I quote:

A former office holder must not, within the relevant time period—

Which is two years.

—accept appointment to the board of directors of a commercial corporation which was, as a matter of course, in a special relationship with the department or agency with which he was last employed, where "special relationship" means regulation of the corporation by the department or agency—

The fact is that as minister of finance Mr. Macdonald would have had a special relationship with MacDonnell-Douglas and other companies such as Shell Canada Limited and Boise Cascade. Because he was minister of finance, he was technically responsible for the Anti-Inflation Board in relation to the aircraft company and quite possibly Shell, I do not know. He was also responsible for the Anti-Dumping Tribunal, which is responsible for protecting the production of materials in Canada and for making sure that there is no unfair importation of goods produced in other countries.

If we want to look at this technically, I suggest there was a breach of the guidelines. Quite apart from that, I suggest that the spirit of the guidelines has been breached in this situation because Mr. Macdonald was surely very keenly involved in cabinet deliberations respecting the expenditure of $2.3 billion. It goes without saying that as minister of finance he would have had to have very great interest in whether the government should expend that amount of money for fighter aircraft. He would have been involved in the decision-making process, so to say that he was not minister of national defence for some years and therefore the two-year period lapsed I think is begging the issue.

We have to have a serious look at what kind of rules we should have, if we are going to have rules, to bind office holders and former office holders so that there can be no question that there is preferential treatment being afforded some commercial corporation because of a particular connection of a former office holder. This is the submission I was making to the Prime Minister. I think this is a matter of public trust and confidence. If there are going to be guidelines which are worthless, why bother—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Rod Blaker (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, if I recall correctly, in 1975 an all-party committee of the House of Commons unanimously recommended conflict of interest guidelines. I remind the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) that his present leader was one of the members who worked on that committee. My recollection is that the recommendations of the committee to parliament were unanimously agreed upon.

In 1976 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) tabled guidelines respecting conflicts of interest relating to ministers. Last April post-employment guidelines were tabled in this House. They are public knowledge and within the awareness of the hon. member.

The hon. member indicates that there was a technical breach of the guidelines with respect to Mr. Donald Macdonald and the aircraft company mentioned. I have read those guidelines and I am of the same opinion as others who have said that there is no breach whatsoever and that the former minister of finance is perfectly within the spirit as well as the letter of those guidelines.

If the argument presented by the hon. member had any validity at all, it would absolutely deny former ministers and members of parliament participation in public life because of the most far-fetched possible connection that can be found. The minister has observed the rules, as the Prime Minister has indicated, and since the hon. member opposite has made a point of saying that he does not raise a question as to the good faith of the former minister, he should not argue that on the appearance of the matter there might be some apparent conflict of interest. He himself has stated that he is satisfied as to the good faith of the individual, so I do not think he does the institution of parliament any good when, despite his own faith in the former minister, he raises the question of appearance. I do not think he can have it both ways.

These guidelines are amongst the most stringent in the world, as I am personally aware as a result of being chairman of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections which has studied the guidelines on conflict of interest. I, too, from that position can say that I am perfectly satisfied that there is neither an apparent nor a real conflict of interest.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 10.20 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX

LETTER DATED JUNE 7, 1978 FROM QUEBEC MINISTER OF FINANCE TO FEDERAL MINISTER OF FINANCE

GOVERNMENT OF QUEBEC MINISTRY OF FINANCE
OFFICE OF THE MINISTER

Quebec, June 7, 1978

Honorable Jean Chrétien, Minister of Finance,
Government of Canada,
Ottawa, Ontario

Dear Sir:

Since your budget speech of April 10 last, we have had several opportunities to explain the point of view of our respective governments concerning the federal proposal on the provincial sales tax reduction. Following our exchange of correspondence and our discussions, it seems clear that our governments disagree about the formula for the sales tax reduction in Quebec and that it would be useless to seek a formula other than the one which was approved by the Quebec government and supported unanimously by the National Assembly.

The Government of Canada recognizes the principle that the decision of a province not to take part in a federal program should not result in a financial loss for the taxpayers of that province. Your government therefore accepts to pay to Quebec in one form or another the federal contribution originally offered in its provincial sales tax reduction proposal, which amounts to $226 million. Recognition of this principle should have led to a settlement between our two governments. You have not accepted that. I believe our disagreement on this matter has gone on long enough and time has come to settle the terms of payment of the federal contribution. In this regard, I would like to submit to you a three-part proposal which includes the various elements of solution suggested in recent weeks.

First, the federal government will pay to the government of Quebec, in this fiscal year, a financial contribution of some $40 million representing the equivalent of a two-point sales tax reduction for a six-month period on clothing, footwear, textiles, furniture and hotel accommodation, all this pursuant to the commitment you made in your letters of last April 21 and May 15.

Second, if you do not intend to amend Bill C-56, the government of Quebec will take the necessary action to recover a global amount equivalent to the sum which otherwise would have been paid to the province by the federal government. However, should the federal government choose to amend Bill C-56 and pay the balance of $186 million through a personal income tax reduction at the end of the 1978 fiscal year, the government of Quebec might consider recovering that amount through a special tax equivalent to the federal rebate. In the absence of any fiscal collection agreement, the government of Quebec would collect that tax itself. To facilitate its collection and ensure that in any case it will be no higher than the federal tax reduction our respective Departments of Revenue should agree on the administrative conditions governing that fiscal arrangement. Those conditions would concern particularly the provisions of our respective laws and formulas as well as the appropriate controls.

Last, the government of Quebec would be reimbursed the amount representing the interest on the loan it would contract in the absence of any fiscal collection agreement. Indeed, should Bill C-56 be amended as suggested above, unlike the other provinces the government of Quebec would have to wait until the next fiscal year to recover the federal rebate at the time of filing of income tax returns for the 1978 taxation year.

I hope that this proposal represents an acceptable solution as concerns the terms of payment of the amount of $226 million which must be paid to the province of Quebec one way or another, as you have recognized yourself.

Sincerely yours,

The Minister,
Jacques Parizeau

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

CALL FOR AMENDMENT TO END DISCRIMINATION AGAINST SINGLE PERSONS 60 TO 65—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I raise a matter that is of continuing urgency. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House urges the government to introduce before this session ends an amendment to the Old Age Security Act to end the discrimination therein against persons of single status between the ages of 60 and 65 by providing for the equivalent of the spouse's allowance to be available to all persons between the ages of 60 and 65 regardless of marital status, provided they are out of the labour market.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PUBLIC WORKS

LES TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE PROJECT, HULL, QUEBEC—ANSWER OF MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns Les Terrasses de la Chaudière project in Hull. As the Minister of Public Works has been absent from his place during the question period for the last three days, I was going to direct my question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, but in his absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister.

Is the Prime Minister aware that the Minister of Public Works, in reply to my colleague, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, as reported at page 6045 of Hansard for June 5, misled the House when he said:

Let us make it clear, however, that there were reasons why this arrangement was entered into. The land in question was partially owned by Mr. Campeau's corporation. The question really is, are you going to expropriate the land of a developer and then offer it to other developers? There was some question of ethics involved in the matter as well, since he owned part of the land which is in play and which is, in fact, being used for this development.

In light of the fact that the land was not owned by Mr. Campeau or the Campeau corporation—it was only under option and was not purchased until February 13, 1975—could the Prime Minister give some kind of explanation, that would be credible, for the statement of the Minister of Public Works?

Mr. Frank Maine (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to correct the false impression which the hon. member left in his question, that the Minister of Public Works was absent. In fact, he was here yesterday, when the Leader of the Opposition was not. The statement which the minister made last week is essentially correct, in that the land was privately owned and, therefore, had a different aspect so far as the negotiations were concerned.

Mr. Huntington: The facts do not bear out that answer, Mr. Speaker. Still pertaining to the land assembly problem surrounding the Les Terrasses project, perhaps the parliamentary secretary could explain the $600,000 overpayment to Hydro Quebec, particularly in light of the fact that the National Capital Commission went to the expense of having three independent appraisals made proving its worth below $1,700,000.

Mr. Maine: Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the statement made by the hon. gentleman, but I will certainly consult with the departmental officials and get back to him at a later date.

• (1112)

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the acting minister, whoever that may be. If the facts surrounding Les Terrasses de la Chaudière project are as tidy as the Minister of Public Works would have us believe, can the minister give us a believable explanation for the total rejection of the Campeau project by loyal, hardworking public servants involved in both the Department of Public Works and the National Capital Commission who were overruled by ministers acting politically?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

Oral Questions

LES TERRASSES DE LA CHAUDIÈRE PROJECT, HULL, QUEBEC—METHOD OF CALLING FOR TENDERS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister having to do with this matter. As well, it deals with statements which were made outside the House by the Minister of Public Works some time ago expressing misgivings about how this project went forward without tender and without the usual competitive aspect which should prevail. The Minister of Public Works said publicly that if he had been in charge, that kind of thing would not have occurred.

Given that set of circumstances, the fact that this project, which was worth, initially, $160 million, will eventually cost the Canadian public $600 million, and in view of the allegations which have been made by Mr. Fullerton—who is not known for an idle tongue—would the Prime Minister inform us whether he has had this matter under investigation? Can he assure the House that projects of this proportion are not cleared politically with certain ministers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the series of allegations made by the hon. member in his question are not all according to the facts. I am sure he would want to have some of his impressions corrected. The Minister of Public Works was in the House yesterday. He will be in the House next week. I will take notice of these questions, and I am sure he will be able to satisfy the hon. member on every aspect.

In so far as allegations are concerned based on what Mr. Fullerton said, I refer the hon. member to a denial made by Senator Marchand in the Senate who has been very incorrectly quoted by Mr. Fullerton. This shows the extent of Mr. Fullerton's ignorance or his lack of memory in this particular matter.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister had read the report correctly, he would find that Senator Marchand referred to the breaking of the height by-law by Place de Ville in the city of Ottawa. The series of questions which I am directing to him has nothing to do with that: my questions concern Les Terrasses de la Chaudière, which is the matter I am interested in today. We can explore the other aspect next week.

Relating to Les Terrasses de la Chaudière, has the Prime Minister had this matter under investigation? Can he assure the House that projects of this proportion and magnitude are not cleared politically; that this one was not cleared politically and that others are not cleared politically with certain ministers? Can he give us that assurance?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the confusion is not in my mind; it is in the mind of the hon. member. I just indicated that in his questions concerning Les Terrasses de la Chaudière, he was quoting as his authority no less a person than Mr. Fullerton whom I indicated was proven wrong in his other allegations.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Make sure your minister is in the House on Monday.

Mr. Trudeau: Make sure your leader is here.

[Mr. Speaker.]

POST OFFICE

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNION TO AVOID STRIKE

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that this country is faced with a very real threat of another postal strike, that a lot of tension and the threat arises from the fact that the Post Office Department has put before CUPW and the conciliator the possibility of reopening very sensitive areas of the contract, namely, the technological change clause, casual work and the contracting-out of work, and the seriousness of the situation, is the Prime Minister prepared to intervene and withdraw those proposals which are being put forward now by the Post Office Department over a year after negotiations for a new contract were commenced?

• (1117)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is making a representation on behalf of the union. I will make sure the minister is informed of it.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I am not making a representation on behalf of the union; I am making a representation on behalf of the 23 million shareholders of the Post Office Department. Can the Prime Minister give an assurance to this House, instead of participating with the Postmaster General in trying to provoke a strike?

Will the Prime Minister take his responsibility as leader of the government and of this country, remove these clauses and let the Post Office, Treasury Board and the union get on with negotiating a proper contract, instead of dragging in all these red-herrings to force a strike on the Canadian people?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems to be the one who is excited and is drawing in red-herrings. He talks about a strike. We know of no imminent strike in the Post Office. Perhaps the hon. member could save his excitement until a little later; the minister will be back very soon.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this member, myself, is not the one who is provoking a strike, but it is the Postmaster General himself, who is reported in the press as having said that it looks like we are heading on the path of a strike, and in view of the fact that this could be extemely serious to the taxpayers of this country—those who use the postal services, including the aged and small businesses—is the Prime Minister prepared to take action now, and not after the fact? Will he please have the Postmaster General withdraw this controversial proposal at this twelfth hour?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, all I am pointing out is that if the hon. member is talking about a strike and alleging this has something to do, perhaps, with a strike in the autumn, if he will keep his cool until Monday, the minister will be happy to answer.

ENERGY

PUBLICATION OF STUDY ON LIQUID FUEL EXTRACTED FROM RENEWABLE RESOURCES IN QUEBEC

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, since my question concerns several government departments, I shall put it to the right hon. Prime Minister.

A feasibility study has been conducted recently on liquid fuel extracted from renewable resources. Considering that some regions of our country are faced with a shortage of gas and oil resources and that this report seems to indicate that alternative supplies could be secured through processing certain materials into petroliferous fuel, would the Prime Minister tell the House if his government has been requested to take a closer look at this report and if it intends to implement the necessary policy to carry out the conclusions of that study which might yield an interesting solution to the problems that Canada is likely to face in a few years?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Abitibi for directing the attention of the House to that report. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has already referred to it but I can assure the hon. member that the report is under consideration and that the government, which has already announced several measures in the field of renewable resources, is as much interested as the hon. member in pursuing that line of thought.

POSSIBILITY OF PROCESSING CERTAIN ENERGY PRODUCTS IN EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, as this report was prepared by a Winnipeg firm and seems to have dealt almost exclusively with such possibilities in western Canada, would the right hon. Prime Minister be willing to suggest to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that a similar study be made on the possibilities in eastern Canada for converting various matters into sources of energy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it has already been done. The minister did it on a far broader scale. For instance, with regard to the region the hon. member represents, we have encouraged research in the use of forest by-products as a possible source of renewable energy.

OPERATION OF OIL WELLS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is also directed to the right hon. Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that, in the province of Quebec, and more specifically in the Lotbinière riding, an oil company did some exploration the results of which are very positive—oil has been proven to exist there—and the fact that the Quebec government seems to think that the construction of a pipeline from St. Flavien, in the Lotbinière riding, to Quebec City would be too costly compared with possible supplies outside the province, would the Prime Minister be willing to recommend to his minister that a special study be made on the cost of tapping those oil wells in the province of Quebec as compared with the cost of obtaining supplies from other parts of Canada or foreign countries?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to draw the attention of the minister to the matter and I am convinced he will take up the matter at least to the extent of giving the hon. member a reply.

TOURISM

STEPS TO COUNTERACT ADVERSE PUBLICITY IN U.S. RESPECTING SPORT FISHING IN CANADA

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whose department is responsible for the promotion of tourism in this country. As the minister is well aware, tourist operators and the tourist industry as a whole are very worried about the fish war which is still in progress. We are all aware that the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment have categorically stated that sport fishermen are welcome in Canada.

I am wondering if the minister, through his departmental officials, is getting that message across to our neighbours in the south, telling them that they are welcome here, because I have had information to the effect that United States Customs and Immigration officials have been spreading rumours that boats will be confiscated if they come across the border. I would appreciate the minister's comments on this matter.

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we, too, have heard those rumours and we are attempting to track them down. We are also notifying our agents in the United States that we do not intend to take action against American sport fishermen in Canada. They are welcome to bring their boats, fishing reels and rods. We wish them all the luck in the world and hope all their catches will be big.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate what the minister has stated, that he is passing on this information. But my point is that I think we should be spending some money to get that message across in the media—in the newspapers, on radio and television. If money is spent in that way, it will certainly come back tenfold. Will the minister tell me what they intend to do on that basis?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, we are advertising tourism in 56 major populated areas of the United States in order to get Americans to come to Canada. In that advertising package we will enhance the idea that sport fishermen are still welcome to do their fishing in Canada and to bring their boats. We will add that, I suppose, to what we are already doing.

INTERNATIONAL YEAR OF THE CHILD

CANADA'S PARTICIPATION IN PROGRAM

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister for external affairs and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. It is a very important one of which I am sure he is aware.

In 1959, Canada voted for and was a signatory to the United Nations Declaration of the Rights of Children. To mark the twentieth anniversary of that declaration, the UN has declared 1979 as the International Year of the Child. I ask the Prime Minister, in light of the fact that a meeting is being held in Ottawa today by private groups which are fulfilling the leadership role in this area which has unfortunately been abdicated by the federal government, why the Government of Canada has not acted to set up a national committee to mark the International Year of the Child and make plans for it, as have 70 other countries.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for a more detailed answer I am sure the Minister of National Health and Welfare will be in the House next week. I want to tell the hon. member that, far from being inactive, the government has taken many actions within its various departments to ensure that we live up to not only the letter but to the spirit of the International Year of the Child.

Of course, we also encourage the private sector to do the same thing and that is what is happening in Ottawa. People on the other side of this House are generally not too anxious to see the government set up new committees in every area and to create new areas of expenditure. That is why the government is doing its share. But it also expects the private sector and the voluntary organizations to do their share.

● (1127)

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, no one would expect the Government of Canada to exercise any degree of restraint in this very important area. The Prime Minister has confirmed what we already know, that the government has set aside a very modest budget for this very important year.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he can give the House an undertaking that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, will make a statement to the House, before the adjournment, about the government's intentions with respect to marking the International Year of the Child.

[Mr. Darling.]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am sure those ministers will be happy to answer questions. As far as having a modest budget is concerned, of course we have a modest budget. I do not think the hon. member would expect us to have an immodest one. They are always preaching cuts in expenditure, and we are being modest in our expenditure.

ABORTION

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF ABORTION LAWS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that 1979 will be the International Year of the Child, and the government's policy respecting that program, will the Prime Minister review Canada's abortion laws so that children will be given the greatest gift of all, namely, the gift of life?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is not for the government to give the gift of life to children: that is done by God and by the parents.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, this is a serious subject and I do not want to respond to the Prime Minister in kind. We realize that, but this is a serious topic. The fact is that under our present law, 60,000 children are losing their lives by reason of the system now being established through abortion committees.

Will the government review its abortion system, whereby the spirit of the law that was changed will again come into effect, rather than the situation that obtains at present in some of our hospitals which have become abortion clinics?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, more than a year ago, we set up a committee to report on that very subject. The essence of it is that although the federal government would like to see those laws applied in an even-handed way in every province, as the hon. member knows, the criminal law is administered by the provinces, so prosecutions under and enforcement of the law is up to them. Perhaps the hon. member could talk to his premier and suggest that the spirit of the law be observed.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

CONSULTATION WITH MR. TERON ON HIS EXTENDED LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns a subject I have discussed with him on a number of occasions, namely, the possible conflict of interest of one of his senior public servants, Mr. William Teron.

At this time when the government is going in an entirely new direction in respect of housing, Mr. Teron is taking four months leave of absence to shore-up what he calls his ebbing private fortunes both in Canada and in the United States. Has the Prime Minister consulted Mr. Teron about this latest exploit?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not directly Mr. Teron, Mr. Speaker, but I have been informed of the dispositions he intends to take during his leave of absence. I think the government should congratulate itself upon being able to keep men of this high standard and calibre in the service of the government, rather than having them return to the private sector where they could make a hell of a lot more money.

Mr. Oberle: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. According to an article in the Globe and Mail of yesterday, Mr. Teron said that he has been advised by friends, or consulted by friends—and the Prime Minister is one of his personal friends—who are telling him that he must be "an idealist or a fool" to continue what he is doing. Which of these two attributes does the Prime Minister ascribe to Mr. Teron, and which of them is best suited to Mr. Teron carrying on his portfolio?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am a friend of Mr. Teron, but I can assure the hon. member that he did not consult me on this matter. As far as the hon. member is concerned, he is not a friend. If I were to ask myself if he was an idealist or a fool, I would be using one word too many; I know which he is.

AIR TRANSPORT

LIABILITY TO DEPENDANTS OF DECEASED IN CRASH AT CRANBROOK, B.C.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. The Vancouver Province of last Wednesday quoted the minister as saying that it was impossible for the federal government to join in a pool which would expedite early payment to dependants of the deceased in the very tragic Cranbrook crash of a few months ago. Can the minister tell the House what the difficulty is, and why his ministry felt it could not take part in that pool?

● (1132)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the difficulty is the legal one of not being in a position to pay money in these circumstances, as distinct from circumstances of established liability.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, as I understand the situation, the first step would be to establish a pool and then to determine the liability of all those entering into the pool. Is the difficulty within federal statutes, or does the difficulty to which the minister alludes lie in the framing of a provincial statute?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I had reference to the federal position, the federal law and lack of authority to pay such money in the circumstances. I have made it clear that we are quite prepared to involve ourselves in a negotiating team in an attempt to resolve the issues of liability and damages as quickly and as effectively as possible. But the advice I have been given is that we could not pay over money in the circumstances which were outlined to us.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell the House whether the difficulty is in existing federal legislation or does it refer to the regulations? I ask that question seriously, because if it is the regulations, under the circumstances the minister has the right and power to make adjustments to them to suit this case. If it is in federal legislation, even that could be changed, given the seriousness of this particular incident.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if there were a simple change open to me to allow this to happen, it would have been drawn to my attention. The advice is that there is lack of legal authority to make a payment which would require some form of legislative action. I am not sure that the legislative solution would be so simple as to be accomplished in the time we may have available.

FISHERIES

GOVERNMENT SUBSIDY OF TWO CENTS PER POUND FOR GROUNDFISH

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): My question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment, but in his absence, I will put it to his parliamentary secretary. Could he tell the House whether the Department of Fisheries has decided to abandon the excellent policy it had put forward a few years ago to guarantee a reasonable income to fishermen in difficulty, and which provided for a two cents a pound subsidy for groundfish? If so, would the minister be prepared to reconsider his decision, at least until that resource has come back to normal?

[English]

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the minister is aware of the request for a subsidy for groundfish. I understand an announcement will be made shortly regarding such subsidy, and I trust the hon. member will be patient until it is made.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST INCREASE IN DISABILITY PENSION NOT BE TREATED AS INCOME

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs; it relates to a matter we discussed at a recent meeting of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. Of course, at that time he was only able to take my question as notice.

In view of the fact that a veteran on a small disability pension who is also in receipt of war veteran's allowance will have his war veteran's allowance reduced by the amount of the increase in the disability pension because of the operation of the income test as it applies to the war veteran's allowance, has the minister found a way by which the War Veterans Allowance Board can treat as exempt income the increase in the disability pension which is to take place on July 1, so that all veterans who are receiving disability pensions can get the benefit of that increase and not have it given with one hand and taken away with the other?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the act does provide for the exemptions of certain types of income. Each of these exemptions has been granted for a specific reason. To extend these exemptions to include the recent pension increases would be a contradiction of the philosophy underlying the allowance and would result in inequitable treatment of allowance recipients. After careful examination of the factors involved, I am not prepared to consider recommending that the exemptions be extended to include other payments under the Pension Act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that on previous occasions when the minister has taken a negative stand, he has been persuaded to reconsider the matter and has done so successfully, may I ask if he will even yet reconsider this matter?

Would he also look at the position of widows who are in receipt of an allowance under the War Veterans Allowance Act to see if there is not some way in which they, too, can get the benefit of the increase which they would be getting if they were receiving a payment under the Pension Act?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have those things under consideration. I might add at this time, for the information of the House, that in respect of recipients of war veterans allowances there is a study under way which is quite comprehensive and which will not be available to my department for some time, probably a number of months. Something may be revealed by this study which will bring these things to light.

FINANCE

DEFICIT IN TOURISM ACCOUNT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): In the absence of various ministers, Mr. Speaker, and as my question overlaps several departments, I would address it to the Prime Minister. In view of Statistics Canada's quarterly figures released yesterday which show a deterioration in the seasonally adjusted travel account in Canada, to use their terminology, which has risen by one-third to a current deficit of $471 million, would the Prime Minister indicate if he intends to take any steps to co-ordinate the activities of his departments to ensure that this tourism deficit will somehow be corrected in the near future?

Second, has the right hon. gentleman any plans to co-ordinate a federal-provincial approach to try to get a better handle on our tourism and travel deficit?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter was discussed at some length at the February conference of first ministers. It was referred to in a communiqué, which I commend to the hon. member's attention. Since then, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has been working at the federal level and the provinces have been taking various steps to attempt to ensure that the tourism deficit in Canada will be reduced. In due course, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will make the announcements.

Mr. Stevens: My supplementary question is to the Prime Minister. As Statistics Canada's quarterly figures also reveal that the interest on dividend outflow has now hit the staggering figure of $939 million in that one quarter—almost double the level in a comparable quarter two years ago—is the Prime Minister aware, first of all, of this deficit in our interest and dividend payments and, second, to what extent will the new government borrowing of foreign funds contribute in future months and years to an increasing deficit in our interest and dividend account?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I should have thought the hon. member would have known for a long time that Canada has a deficit on interest and dividends and that this has been germane to Canada's economy for several decades. The fact that he is quoting a particular figure causes me to think that it is probably because the companies operating in Canada, both domestic and foreign, are making higher profits now than they were a couple of years ago. Perhaps they were paying small dividends then and are now paying higher ones.

REQUESTED INCREASED MILK QUOTAS FOR ONTARIO CHEESE MANUFACTURERS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture. It pertains to Ontario cheese manufacturers "who at the present time", to quote the Prime Minister, "are making a hell of a lot less money"—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Following the recent meeting between the Minister of Agriculture and the Ontario minister of agriculture, has a solution been reached to provide increased milk quotas to Ontario Cheddar cheese manufacturers who are experiencing a serious shortage of milk in their efforts to supply markets waiting for cheese?

● (1142)

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice.

TRADE

PARTICIPATION IN INTERNATIONAL AIR SHOW—BENEFITS RESULTING THEREFROM

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Each year, the Abbotsford Air Show Society sponsors an aerospace symposium in Vancouver and the international air show at Abbotsford. Attendance runs in the neighbourhood of 135,000 to 150,000 for the three-day show. Boeing Aircraft and Lockheed participate very willingly in the show.

Will the minister make representations to de Havilland Aircraft alerting them to the possibility of commercial and publicity benefits to Canada as well as to international trade? At the present time, de Havilland has refused to co-operate in plans for the international air show.

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will bring the hon. member's representation to the attention of management and the board of directors of de Havilland and see whether we can convince them to take part in the Abbotsford air show.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REASON FOR BEEF PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Notwithstanding the inevitable and, I believe, justified increase in beef prices and the need for a more stable meat market, the increases seem excessive at the retail level.

Is the minister monitoring this sector to see whether the increases are in excess of what is justified by farm price increases? Is there any evidence that the sharp rise in prices is also related to the disappearance of controls on the processing and retail side of the industry?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): As I answered in the House a few days ago, we are monitoring this situation. We are very concerned about it. I intend to have further discussions with other ministers and officials shortly.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY WHETHER DOCUMENT CONTAINING PROPOSALS FOR CHANGE HAS BEEN PREPARED

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister.

This morning a daily newspaper reports that the Prime Minister is ready to give Canada a new constitution in 1981. According to an original document, on the basis of reliable sources, it is a 400-page document which has been discussed by the cabinet and is entitled: A Time for Action. Could the Prime Minister tell the House whether this document has been drafted and completed and whether it represents the constitutional proposals? What information could the Prime Minister give us on the veracity of such a document?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not read about the document in the newspapers mentioned by the hon. member, but I announced yesterday and several times in the House and at press conferences that the government would in fact table in the House some proposals on national unity and the constitution before the end of the session. So the hon. member may expect such tablings in the course of next week.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Considering that this document will certainly be of interest to the Canadian people, will it be made available for public consideration or will it be made available only to cabinet ministers or to government members?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the document will have the widest distribution possible.

ALLEGED LEAK OF SECRET DOCUMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Is the Prime Minister in a position to indicate to the House whether this leak was inadvertent, or was it a deliberate leak? If so, has he consulted the Minister of Justice about taking proceedings under the Official Secrets Act?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it was inadvertent as far as the government is concerned. I would not be surprised if the other side deliberately leaked some secret documents; they often do.

Oral Questions

AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE

CONSULTATIONS WITH QUEBEC AND SUPERINTENDENT OF INSURANCE ON QUEBEC SCHEME

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. There are press reports concerning the new Quebec auto insurance scheme that became effective March 1, 1978. My understanding is that there is now a combined public and private insurance coverage which provides minimum protection for Quebec residents anywhere in the world, but there is no reciprocal arrangement for other Canadians or American visitors to Quebec.

As this discriminatory jurisdiction currently affects thousands of Ontario workers who are working in Quebec, and our American visitors, many of whom have had no warning about it, can the Prime Minister tell the House if there have been consultations with the Superintendent of Insurance, and are there active negotiations going on with Quebec officials on this very serious situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take notice of the question. I know of no consultations having taken place, at least at the federal level. I suppose that in so far as the matter affects residents of Ontario, it would be good for the two provinces to discuss this matter since it is an area of provincial jurisdiction.

LEGISLATION COVERING GUIDELINES

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the consensus that appears to have developed that Mr. Donald Macdonald, former minister of finance, breached even the guidelines of the Prime Minister with regard to his appointment to the board of directors of McDonnell-Douglas, and the Prime Minister acknowledges that the guidelines have no effect in law and no sanctions attached to them, is it the intention of the Prime Minister to bring forward legislation respecting conflict of interest guidelines for cabinet and former cabinet members which could be studied by this House at an early date?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member talks about consensus. I doubt whether consensus could even develop in his own party on such a simple matter as that. I can tell him that as far we are concerned, the guidelines were tabled in this House 2½ years ago. They were made public after having been sent to the ministers. From my examination of the guidelines, they have not been breached by the former minister of finance. If the hon. member can indicate some aspect of them which in his view has been breached, I will be happy to hear his information.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It was contained in my speech of yesterday evening. The Prime Minister has been invited by McDonnell-Douglas to go to their plant in Malton on June 24 and 25. If he goes to McDonnell-Douglas, is he planning to visit the plants of their competitors for the $2.3 billion contract which is now being considered by the Government of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member must have some inside information. He probably has friends in McDonnell-Douglas, because I know not of this invitation. I will take the hon. member's question as a representation on behalf of McDonnell-Douglas, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL REVENUE

CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO RCMP ACCESS TO TAX FILES

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister: it arises from an issue raised yesterday at his press conference about which he may be better briefed today. I refer to the correspondence of approximately two years ago between the then minister of national revenue, now Minister of Employment and Immigration, and the then solicitor general, now Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It relates, as the Prime Minister will know, to the 1972 agreement which permitted access by law enforcement officers to confidential income tax information. The nature of the correspondence indicated that the then minister of national revenue was very concerned about the legality of the agreement and the abuse under which it might have been implemented.

Can the Prime Minister tell us whether it is the position of the government that this correspondence is protected by the doctrine of cabinet secrecy or privilege or, in the alternative, are negotiations now under way among counsel for the various ministers appearing before the McDonald commission and counsel for the commission to permit the commission to examine that correspondence?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member refers to questions asked at a press conference yesterday, to which I was unable to give accurate answers because this whole matter surfaced when I was in New York and Washington a couple of weeks ago. However, since then I have informed myself and my understanding is that the whole of the correspondence is before the McDonald commission. It is in the possession of the McDonald commission. It has not yet been tabled, but the intention of the minister is to appear before the McDonald commission whenever he is asked to appear and to answer questions on this matter. I believe the further questions asked by the hon. member would have to be asked at that time.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister can inform us whether it is the position of counsel representing the various ministers before that commission that that correspondence will be tabled at an in-camera session. Is that now the negotiating position of the lawyers for the ministers, or is the Prime Minister in a position to tell us that having agreed that the correspondence should be before the commission, the government is willing that it be before the commission at a public hearing?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the government has been that everything it had on the whole subject of the RCMP would be put before the McDonald commission. But many of the subjects inquired into by the commission are either of a security nature or they have to do with secrecy of cabinet, and so forth; that is why the McDonald commission has been given authority to hold certain meetings in camera.

Not having been party to the correspondence and not having looked at it, I cannot state at this time what the arguments will be relating to that particular part of the testimony. It is important to know that it is all before the McDonald commission and that the commission will bring it forth in evidence in the normal course of events. I do not know if the commission will want to do this in camera or in public.

TRADE

IMPACT OF U.S. ACTION ON BEEF QUOTAS

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to one asked earlier by the hon. member for Fort William, who carefully and quite rightly avoided any criticism of farm incomes in his question about beef prices.

My question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I wonder if the minister has yet been able to do a specific analysis of the impact of the recent U.S. action on beef quotas and what impact that action might have upon the Canadian scene. Also, can the minister give us the assurance that no Canadian action will be taken which would impact negatively on the recovering incomes of Canadian beef producers?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as of June 2 the quota allotments for beef coming into Canada from Australia and New Zealand were 28 per cent behind those of a year ago. About 17 million fewer pounds came into Canada from Australia and New Zealand as of June 2 this year, compared with up to June 2, 1977. Allowing Australia and New Zealand to bring in more meat would not in any way affect today's prices because there is plenty of room in their allotment now for them to bring over more beef.

With regard to beef moving to the United States from Canada, our movement of dressed beef is 21 per cent behind what it was a year ago. As of June 2, about 11 million fewer pounds than last year moved from Canada to the United States. So I do not think the United States allowing us to shift an additional 15 million pounds to the United States will have any real effect on prices in Canada because we have not moved as much beef this year as we did last year. As of June 2, live cattle shipments were up slightly over last year. I suppose that gives the House a picture of beef movements in and out of Canada.

COMMUNICATIONS

LIQUOR ADVERTISING IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Communications. I am sure the minister is aware that for years the Saskatchewan government has not allowed liquor advertising in the media in that province. A few weeks ago, the Saskatchewan legislature passed legislation extending that law to cable television. The legislature has not yet had a chance to proclaim the legislation, but last week a representative of the CRTC said that if the legislation is proclaimed, the CRTC will have to step in and do something.

I ask the minister whether she can explain what the CRTC means. Also, could she tell us the government's policy? Is the CRTC planning to step in and, if so, what will it do?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, Saskatchewan has traditionally been opposed to alcohol advertising in the media. The law passed in the last few weeks is legislation regarding the provincial liquor act. That is entirely within provincial jurisdiction. However, some of the amendments apply to broadcasting and that, of course, is not within the jurisdiction of the province but is within the jurisdiction of the federal government.

When the CRTC says it will have to step in if the law is proclaimed and implemented, it means exactly that. The federal government is responsible for content, and advertising is content. However, for the hon. member's information, Mr. Romanow has asked to see me and I am supposed to meet with him in the weeks to come.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if there is not a contradiction, because it applies now to radio and television advertising in the province, and if it applies to that, why cannot it apply to cable? The Minister of National Health and Welfare has said a number of times that there is a clear policy against promoting the consumption of alcohol in this country. Is there not a contradiction between the policy of the Department of National Health and Welfare and the statement of the CRTC? The statement of the CRTC seems to be promotion of the consumption of alcohol through advertising.

Mrs. Sauvé: No, Mr. Speaker, there is no contradiction. It is true that the CRTC has made adjustments and accommodations for provincial legislation regarding advertising. The CRTC has been able to do that for off-air broadcasting. However, when this would apply in the field of cable we have the problem that cable is the transmission of a foreign signal, and when we are dealing with a foreign signal the same flexibility, obviously, does not exist.

The hon. member will recall that the CRTC called a moratorium because it would imply a deletion of commercials on cable if advertising for alcohol were to be prohibited. So we had a moratorium on the matter of deleting commercials and that is why the situation is very different from off-air broadcasting.

ABORTION

FUNDING OF ABORTION CLINICS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister who, with his usual extraordinary perceptiveness, pointed out that only God and parents can create children. However, abortion clinics take those lives away, some of them on the advice of groups funded by the federal government.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is willing to re-examine the funding policy instituted by the previous minister of national health and welfare and take away some of the money that has brought about high abortion statistics in this country.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is continuing another representation. The hon. member for Hamilton West.

AIR TRANSPORT

FACILITIES FOR HANDICAPPED TRAVELLERS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I should think he now has at hand a letter from Mr. Al Oakie, executive vice-president of the Hamilton Automobile Club, regarding the treatment of handicapped travellers at Canadian airport terminals. If Your Honour will be very patient and allow me a couple of seconds, I shall read from that letter as follows:

● (1202)

Up until recently, handicapped people travelling in wheelchairs, etc., were assigned an attendant to assist them to the aircraft and off the aircraft. We understand that this has now been changed and such travellers must have a companion to take care of them.

I hope the Minister of Transport can advise us that this is not the policy and that he will ensure such restraint is not practiced on the backs of the handicapped. I hope he can give me the assurance that this is not happening and that it will not happen in the future.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not have that letter at hand but I will certainly be glad to look at it. I think the hon. member will agree that this is really a representation with regard to how airlines should conduct themselves. It would ordinarily be their responsibility to see to the comforts and needs of passengers approaching and boarding aircraft. Therefore, it is in no way a matter for the Department of Transport or government policy but, rather, that of airlines. But I will look into the matter in that way.

I should say to the hon. member that I have received many letters from associations concerned about the handicapped, and they have been very complimentary about the persistent way in which Transport Canada in particular, and this government in general, is providing facilities for handicapped persons in its buildings and in its transportation.

Mr. Alexander: I appreciate the answer given by the minister, but I would like an assurance from him, notwithstanding that he just said this is the role of the airline companies, that he will not tolerate this practice and that it is neither wanted nor acceptable, I think the handicapped want to know that we are not attempting to impose restraint on their backs. Surely the minister can show some sympathy in this regard.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I have shown sympathy, indeed, by my emphasis on the fact that wherever we in the government or in my department are involved, we provide essentially for the needs of the handicapped. I demonstrate that in action. What I am not prepared to do is to accept a generalization, or even the allegation the hon. member is making, which presumably he is making on the basis of one letter with regard to one incident and it might apply to one company or more.

Notwithstanding his sympathy for the handicapped, which I share, I think he should have a set of standards which is not simply to indict all companies without first investigating all the facts. I will certainly want to investigate the facts.

Mr. Alexander: This is the case at Canadian air terminals.

MR. FRIESEN—QUERY DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my point of order has to do with your ruling a minute ago with respect to my question. While I respect your ruling, sir, I want to point out to you that my question was materially different from the others that had been raised because it had to do with the funding policies of the federal government, and the others have not raised that issue with regard to abortion clinics. The Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Lalonde) was rising to answer my question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member misunderstood if he concluded that I set the question aside because it was the same as the ones before. I indicated that he was continuing a representation. The difficulty with the question was that it was essentially a representation that funding in respect of certain groups be withdrawn. I regard that as a representation as opposed to a question. The hon. member may want to think about it and perhaps rephrase the approach to the matter in the form of a question as opposed to a representation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to change the name of the Old Age Security Act to the Social Security Act, thereby striking from the existing act the words "old age", which discriminate against many senior citizens by suggesting that they, at the age of 65, are no longer capable of leading a productive life, and that they are no longer capable of making a valuable contribution to society.

MR. VICTOR CHAPMAN

Question No. 415—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 2,441 of the Second Session of the 30th Parliament which stated in part that Mr. Victor Chapman received $12,701.90 up until May 11, 1977 acting as Media Co-ordinator for visits to Canada by the Prince of Wales and also by Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip (a) what was the final figure received by Mr. Chapman now that the visits are concluded (b) what is the name of the highest ranking official who selected Mr. Chapman for the work (c) what are all the reasons that Mr. Chapman was selected (d) were any other persons or firms asked to submit prices to the government for doing the same work and, if so (i) on what date (ii) what were their names (iii) what were the amounts involved?

2. Is Mr. Victor Chapman the same Victor Chapman formerly employed on the staff of the Prime Minister?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): 1. (a) Fee, $27,000. Travel Expenses, $7,491.18; (b) The director of operations in consultation with the assistant under secretary of state and the federal coordinator for royal visits 1977. (c) Knowledge of and experience with the media. Arranging media requirements for many previous events in Canada such as First Ministers Conference (Commonwealth Conference), heads of governments meeting and many visits to Canada of heads of governments. Previous work as a press advisor to the Prime Minister. (d) No.

2. See reply to question No. 2,441 answered October 17, 1977.

Question No. 416—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,441 of the Second Session of the 30th Parliament which stated that certain specific sums of money were received by Intertask Limited and/or Vic Chapman for certain services, is the government aware that a press statement was issued by Mr. Paul Akehurst of Intertask Limited stating that no such money was received and, if so, how does the government explain this discrepancy?

2. Is Paul Akehurst of Intertask Limited a former employee of the staff of the Prime Minister's office?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): 1. See reply to question No. 2,441 tabled October 17, 1977. Also see Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition, citation 171(e) and (t).

Order Paper Questions

Question No. 418—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 2,441 of the Second Session of the 30th Parliament which stated in part that Mr. Victor Chapman and/or Intertask Limited received $18,000 from the Department of External Affairs, Public Affairs Bureau for services rendered in co-ordination of a film project (a) what is the name of the highest ranking official who selected Mr. Chapman and/or Intertask Limited for the work (b) what are all the reasons that Mr. Chapman and/or Intertask Limited was selected (c) were any other persons or firms asked to submit prices to the government for doing this same work and, if so (i) on what date (ii) what were their names (iii) what were the amounts involved?

2. Is Mr. Victor Chapman the same Victor Chapman formerly employed on the staff of the Prime Minister?

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) The decision to hire Intertask Limited first for a feasibility study which eventually led to a second $18,000 co-ordination contract was made by an ad hoc committee chaired by the director of academic relations division and the second contract was approved by an assistant under-secretary of state for the Department of External Affairs. (b) Intertask Limited was chosen because of the expertise of one of its employees, Miss Ann Acland, the prospectus which accompanied its bid and by virtue of its bid on the first feasibility contract being 21 per cent less than its competitor. Because of its satisfactory feasibility study, Intertask was then given a further contract of $18,000 (referred to in (a) above) to co-ordinate the principals in the production of the film-video-tape series. (c) When bids were being solicited for the feasibility study, it was understood that the successful bidder would also be asked to co-ordinate the project if its work and prospectus were satisfactory to the Department of External Affairs. In so far as the first contract for $6,000 was concerned the answer is: (i) January 21, 1977; (ii) Innovacom (other solicited organizations were unable to provide the service required); (iii) $8,875.

2. See reply to question No. 2,441 answered October 17, 1977.

Question No. 419—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,441 of the Second Session of the 30th Parliament which stated in part that Mr. Victor Chapman and/or Intertask Limited received $17,875 from the Department of External Affairs for services rendered towards the NATO Ministerial Meeting Task Force on June 18 and 19, 1974 (a) what is the name of the highest ranking official who selected Mr. Chapman and/or Intertask Limited for the work (b) what are all the reasons that Mr. Chapman and/or Intertask Limited was selected (c) were any other persons or firms asked to submit prices to the government for doing this same work and, if so (i) on what date (ii) what were their names (iii) what were the amounts involved?

2. Is Mr. Victor Chapman the same Victor Chapman formerly employed on the staff of the Prime Minister?

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) The decision to hire Intertask Limited was made by an ad hoc committee chaired by the chief of protocol. The decision was approved by the under-secretary of state for the Department of External Affairs and by the minister. The contract was then submitted to Treasury Board for approval in the normal way. (b) Intertask Limited was selected because it was known to have expertise and experience in this area and it was available immediately. (c) Other firms were not asked to submit tenders because of the shortness of time between Canada's agreement to host the NATO ministerial meeting and the date on which it was held. Canada agreed to host this meeting only two months before it was held and was obliged to compress into that short time all the preparations that normally are made over a six-month span. (The Treasury Board regulation which covered situations of this nature in 1974, was section 14 of the Treasury Board Regulations PC 1964-1467. It states: "Before a service contract is entered into the contracting authority shall invite tenders except in such cases or classes of cases as the contracting authority considers the invitation of tenders not to be in the public interest").

2. See reply to question No. 2,441 answered October 17, 1977.

Question No. 420—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to question No. 2,441 of the Second Session of the 30th Parliament which stated in part that Mr. Victor Chapman and/or Intertask Limited received $88,000 from the Department of Supply and Services for services rendered towards the United Nations Habitat Conference held in Vancouver, British Columbia from May 31 to June 11, 1976 (a) what is the name of the highest ranking official who selected Mr. Chapman and/or Intertask Limited for the work (b) what are all the reasons that Mr. Chapman and/or Intertask Limited was selected (c) were any other persons or firms asked to submit prices to the government for doing this same work and, if so (i) on what date (ii) what were their names (iii) what were the amounts involved?

2. Is Mr. Victor Chapman the same Victor Chapman formerly employed on the staff of the Prime Minister?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. (a) the director, professional and special services centre, Department of Supply and Services. (b) This firm was recommended by the customer department. Intertask Limited has established an excellent standard of performance in providing identical services for previous conferences. A survey of other firms who provide the services established that none of the firms had previous experience with conferences of the same magnitude. As a result, Intertask Limited was the only firm invited to bid. (c) No.

2. See reply to question No. 2,441 answered October 17, 1977.

MURDERS—POLICEMEN, PRISON GUARDS OR DIRECTORS

Question No. 1,308—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. Between 1965 and 1970, were any policemen, prison guards or prison directors murdered in Canada and, if so (a) how many (b) in each case, what was (i) his/her name and address (ii) the date and location of the murder?

2. Has anyone been found guilty of such crimes and, if so, what are their names?

3. Have there been any (a) hangings (b) remissions through a Cabinet Order and, if so (i) how many cases (ii) what were the cases?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): 1. Yes. (a) Five members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police but no prison guards or prison directors. (b) (i) Name-Address: Constable N. M. Bruce, RCMP Detachment, Kelowna, B.C.; (ii) Date-Location: April 10, 1965, Westbank, Kelowna, Detachment Area, B.C. (i) Name-Address: Constable G. D. Pearson, RCMP Detachment, Edmonton, Alberta; (ii) Date-Location:

November 22, 1966, Winterburn, Alberta. (i) Name-Address: Corporal D. A. Harvey, RCMP Detachment, Grande Prairie, Alberta; (ii) Date-Location: June 23, 1967, Grande Prairie, Alberta. BAY BRIDGE—HIGHWAY 14, (ONTARIO)

Question No. 1,514—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. How many ships passed under the Bay Bridge at Highway 14 (Ontario) during the shipping season, May to October 1977?

2. What is the breakdown (a) eastbound (b) westbound?

3. What is the information for the past two years?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The swing Bay Bridge at Highway 14 is owned and operated by the government of the province of Ontario, therefore provision of information concerning the operation of this bridge is not the responsibility of the Government of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—SUGGESTED LIMITATION ON SCOPE OF OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved:

That this House notes with concern the secret trial to Alexander Peter Treu and the harassment of the Toronto Sun and its editor, Peter Worthington, under the provisions of the Official Secrets Act, and urges the establishment of a special committee of this House to recommend such changes in the Act as will limit its scope to matters directly related to national security and defence.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will note that the proceedings on this motion shall expire at the ordinary hour of adjournment later this day, in accordance with the terms of section 11 of Standing Order 58.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise first on a point of order before time starts ticking against me. Certain documents were tabled yesterday by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Young) and in tabling them he said, as reported at page 6189 of Hansard:

I would add, Mr. Speaker, that I am tabling the remarks at sentence in French only as we have no authority to produce an official translation of such court documents.

My office telephoned the office of the judge, and I spoke to the people there who said that so far as they were concerned that is a lot of nonsense and they have no objection at all to the documents being translated into English. After preliminary examination of these documents—it is the first time I have had a chance to pull back the curtain and have a look at what lies beneath—I think it is very important that these documents should be made available. It may well be that the House might agree at this time that the remarks of the trial judge with respect to the sentencing be appended to Hansard. They would then be available in both French and English for all people who are interested, and I commend them as very important reading to all members of the House.

Mr. Speaker: I would presume that any reluctance on the part of the government to do the translation was not related to a lack of permission but rather to an unwillingness to accept the responsibility for the translation of a document which might come under contest. I notice that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Young) is prepared to respond.

I have no objection to accepting the document on behalf of the House in any way that would facilitate its translation in our area of responsibility. We do it as a matter of regular course with those documents that are filed and are either referred to in debate in such a way as to require translation or, alternatively, are appended to Hansard so that they require translation. I think that should be done, unless the Department of Justice will proceed with the translation.

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think you have touched exactly on the point I would have mentioned. I do not think there is any objection on the part of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) either to translating the document or having members of the opposition translate the words that I tabled yesterday, from French to English. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has mentioned a phone call and told us of the response that there was no objection to the translation.

I would point out that this is an entirely different issue from whether I or the Minister of Justice could have provided the House with an "official" translation. I do not think we could have done that. It was our belief that we could not specifically provide an official translation of the remarks by the court. We could do a translation and hon. members opposite could do one, but whether that would be accepted as "official" on the part of court officials is, I think, a completely different matter.

Mr. Baldwin: Would the parliamentary secretary then give consent to having the document which was tabled by him yesterday appended to today's Hansard? That would leave very simply the question of translation where it belongs, with the House. I would be as willing to accept the translation of the House as I would that of the Department of Justice.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker I have no objection to the document being appended to Hansard (and thereby translated.)

• (1212)

Mr. Speaker: The House is agreed. Then we will order that the document shall be appended to today's Hansard, in which case we can commence at once on the translation of it. There are parts of the document which should be given priorized treatment. Perhaps that can be related to further comment. In any case, we will agree and so order that the documents tabled by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) yesterday, in respect of the Alexander Peter Treu case, be appended to today's Hansard. The result of that will be that we will commence translation at once.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For text of document above referred to, see Appendix.]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate at once that I am glad we have been provided with the opportunity for this debate today. While I may have lost a skirmish yesterday, we in the House get used to losing skirmishes from time to time. Because of Your Honour's remarks yesterday, perhaps the net result will be the provision of an opportunity for a committee to have a look at the general issue involved. Because of the fact that we have been provided with an opportunity to debate this matter, I think a major battle is being won by the House and by the country. There is still a war to be won, but this first battle will assist in the winning of that war. My loss of a skirmish is part of the proceedings which make this House go around.

Before I knew that we would proceed with this debate today I took the liberty of circulating to all members of the House, except cabinet members and, I believe, some parliamentary secretaries, a simple letter asking for the widest possible support for action involving the naming of a committee to examine the provisions of the Official Secrets Act. So far the result is that I have received approximately 80 or 90 responses, even some from the government side. I did not send one to Your Honour, of course, because it would place Your Honour in a difficult position, nor did I send copies to members of the cabinet. In any event, I have received responses from all parties in the House. With the permission of the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) and the facilities here, perhaps we will receive some 100 responses, all of them except one being favourable, and some indicating variations of the possible order. I mention this because I think it provides an attitude of the feeling in the House toward this issue.

The United Kingdom has the same rule as the House, where a motion can be put down which is signed by 100 or 150 members. I am attempting to receive signed support of a motion such as that before the House now. The response has been very gratifying. Before the debate is over perhaps the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) will lend his vocal support to the issue. Of course I will wait for him to speak in this regard.

There are some clichés concerning freedom and democracy. It is not true to say that we are born free and automatically inherit institutions of democracy which are self-starting and self-sustaining. On the contrary, in a democratic country there is a constant struggle against governments. By their nature, governments have an inclination to be authoritarian, tyrannical, overly secretive, and one of their prime requirements is to cover up embarrassments, mistakes, and sometimes touches of corruption. I say this of all governments. Because of long experience in this House, the present government has a special expertise in this regard, particularly respecting the hiding of information and taking steps to conceal facts and documents which to any extent may be considered embarrassing. Of course that touches upon the issue before us, the Official Secrets Act and the use which can be made of it.

Recently many people in this country were somewhat shocked to learn of the nature and history of our Official Secrets Act. I should like to take a very few minutes to comment on that aspect of the problem. The Official Secrets Act did not spring into being fully armed like the figure in Greek mythology. It was brought about in its present form mainly by the machinations and desires of senior bureaucrats in government.

In the nineteenth century in the United Kingdom, a clerk of the foreign office, who was doubling in brass and making extra money writing for the press, had a phenomenal memory. He was able to memorize foreign dispatches, return to his home, and write stories concerning them for the newspapers. He did this at the time of a very important meeting in Europe. As a result, a great deal of trouble was created. If I can quote the prime minister of the day who stated his disapproval, "All hell broke loose in the United Kingdom". This clerk was prosecuted, and the charges against him were dismissed because it was found that there was no charge under the then criminal code to deal with that particular case. Thus the first Official Secrets Act was born under those circumstances. It dealt exclusively with issues of national defence, espionage, and foreign relations. There was no law then; there had to be one and, quite properly so, one was passed.

Some years later enterprising bureaucrats, supported by people in government, improved upon and added clauses to the British act. It expanded the act to cover the disclosure of any official government information. That was the British experience. There were a number of prosecutions under it. As far as I could find out, none of the prosecutions were in secret. During the war there were secret trials, but they were held under the treason provisions where spies were charged, found guilty, and executed. These secret trials were held under the criminal provisions and not so much under the Official Secrets Act.

In 1939 in Canada, when we were approaching the eve of the Second World War, in the type of hysteria and attitude which prevailed at that time this country passed its own Official Secrets Act. To all intents and purposes, it was a replica of the British Act. I emphasize this to hon. members of the house. It was passed with no debate at all. There was no debate at second reading stage. There were a few comments at the time of clause by clause discussion.

The then minister of justice, Mr. Lapointe, who perhaps was badly advised by his officials, told the House that this was an act dealing with espionage and defence only. The only critic, an hon. member of the then C.C.F. party, who dealt with the issue said precisely the same thing.

Whereas in fact the direct copy of the British act brought within the ambit of sanctions and criminal action every minor leakage of official documents of any kind, any public servant who gave or any person who received documents was caught within the fine mesh of Section 4 and other sections of the particular act. What had been a weapon of defence against enemies without, became an offensive mechanism for governments and bureaucrats to deal with embarrassments within. In other words, it became part of the danger within. In my humble opinion, I consider the text and the provisions of the act, as it stands today, to be a very grave danger at this time.

Any law which does not deserve the respect of the people is not a law that should be on the statute books. I do not mean by this that we should remove the Official Secrets Act entirely, but we should certainly tailor it to make it conform to what the views of society think it should be.

Any act which would not sanction a situation such as we saw today, or in this House yesterday when the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) quite conscientiously and in good faith, when participating in a debate dealing with the Post Office, read from a secret report, namely the Hay report, a report not officially released, is a bad act. There is no doubt that someone gave that document to him or to somebody else. The hon. member was technically in default under the act.

How can we in this House discharge our duties in view of the failure of governments to provide us with documents which constitute reasonable analyses and suggestions in respect of problems in government departments? This forces us to break the law. I suggest with respect that possibly you, Mr. Speaker, at some time or other before you occupied that position—I am not going to ask you to deny this, because you cannot—have been in company with most members of this House in having in their possession documents not officially authorized, and perhaps not even dangerous. You, and all of us, were in breach of the act at those times. There are ministers in the House today who have, or through their assistants, deliberately leaked documents to provide a favourable impression of their activities, or quite frequently to deal with issues and confrontations between themselves and other ministers.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said there are ministers in the House today who had themselves, or through their assistants, leaked documents. It seems to me he is in that way making an allegation of the commission of an offence.

An hon. Member: Oh, sit down.

Mr. Lang: I would think he ought not to do that unless he is prepared to give clear evidence about it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) seems to think this is a strange request. I am simply saying that if the hon. member for Peace River is there stating a specific illegal act, is describing an illegal act and ascribing it to a minister in this House, he ought to have some evidence to support what he is saying, or he ought not to say it, and ought to have the good grace to withdraw that allegation, making clear he is not alleging, because he lacks evidence to allege, any such wrong doing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, if possible the minister is making himself even more ridiculous than he did the other day. I did not think that was possible, but apparently he has been successful.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I made a general statement. If this minister can stand up in this House and say on his honour as a member of the House that none of his colleagues at any time has ever directly or indirectly leaked information to the press, or to other people, to influence the course of the appreciation for their actions, or to deal with confrontations, let him stand up and say so. If he can make that statement and guarantee it, and if he does so, I will say nothing more about it, but will leave it to the public and the press to judge who is correct.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, the hon. member for Peace River has now, indeed, even moved from the specific allegation of an illegal act and wrong doing to the general question of whether anything was ever leaked. What an extraordinary proposition he is putting forward! How extraordinary that he could a moment ago make a general charge of illegal act or wrong doing against ministers in this House—

An hon. Member: My goodness, he is sensitive.

Mr. Lang: —and now says he will not withdraw that but stand by it, not because he is going to produce a tittle of evidence about it, but will stand by it unless someone on this side can make a sweeping and absolute defence against some leak somewhere, which is quite a different issue. What an extraordinary legal doctrine, that the hon. member for Peace River may make a charge in relation to wrong doing, and then, rather than having evidence, he says; "Let the defence come forward first before the charge is even substantiated." I find that so extraordinary that it colours his entire earlier rhetoric about our legal system, our courts, and their role in it.

An hon. Member: How sensitive can you be.

Mr. Lang: It seems to show a complete lack of understanding of our legal system. If members opposite suggest I am sensitive about this, let me say that I am sensitive about the need to adhere to some decency and some tradition—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: —and some traditions of British justice and fair play. If hon. members opposite find that unimportant, then let me say that, to me, it is extremely important that no member in this House should in that fashion seem to put the burden on others by a general statement of illegality and wrong doing. I take it the hon. member for Peace River should have the good grace, with his wisdom and experience in the law, to move away from any suggestion that he would, without evidence which he is willing to produce, make an allegation of illegality or wrong doing on the part of, as he said, ministers in this House.

An hon. Member: Your halo is crooked.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the expressions of opinion by the minister and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) would indicate that the point has been clarified, at least to my satisfaction. I listened to the hon. member for Peace River who at one time implied that I, as a member, might have at one time, in my parliamentary life had some documents in my possession. I did not take that as a direct innuendo, but rather a statement said in a way that would mean any person at some time in his life might find himself, without his own knowledge, in that position. I took the hon. member's statement perhaps a little more lightly than did the minister. The minister did quite rightly rise to clarify the issue. I think we should leave it at that point.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I was attacking the law and how it operates as being a stupid, silly, and ridiculous law. It was certainly not an attack in the parliamentary sense against any person at all. I think the Minister of Transport should have realized that. This reminds me of a judge we used to have in the Peace River country. He was there for a good many years and we used to refer to him as "the judge of necessity" because of that very old motto about necessity.

However, let me carry on, Mr. Speaker. I have said that in my opinion this act is no longer a weapon of defence but has now become an offensive mechanism. That is borne out by the report of the Royal Commission on Security in 1969. I am not going to take the time to read the document in whole or in part, but it does make some very strong criticisms of the operation of the Official Secrets Act.

That commission made some suggestions that I and other members on this side have advanced from time to time. Some of us who have been in the House for some time will remember the unfortunate case involving a postal clerk by the name of Spencer. He was a former member of the communist party and had gathered together information that was publicly available to anybody in this country, and had given it to an agent of another country. There was a fuss in this House, and the then Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, quite courageously stated the facts and said that no action would be taken because of the nature of the proceedings that would have to be initiated. The man died, not long after. He was then suffering from terminal cancer. This shows the stupidity of the existence and maintenance of this act.

Those who have criticised us who have suggested that the law should be changed, have always asked us to define the kind of crime that should be covered. They have talked about definition of the kind of criminal actions that should be covered, and have referred to the use of the phrase "national security", which we deliberately put into this motion because it involves the subject of discussion. I recognize that it is not easy, Mr. Speaker. The words "national security" are comparatively new words which have come into the lexicon of governments and the courts since the time of Joseph MacCarthy and the cold war. But even if the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) would find difficulty in defining them, I have seen in this House monstrosities in legal form perpetrated as legislation, after people in the Department of Justice have struggled to bring forward legislation.

I suggest that it is not beyond the scope and the capacity of this government to produce the limited, narrow type of definition to which provisions of this kind should be restricted. To say that it is hard to do, is no answer. The trouble today is that the normal practices of cover-up and concealment, which in the passive sense have been so evident in the operations of this government, have now been translated into intimidation and threats, as in the case of Rudnicki and in the case of attempts by the government to stop the operations of the Laycraft commission and the Keable commission using section 4(1) of the Federal Court Act. There are also the examples of the uranium cartel, that diabolical regulation which was enacted and the attempt by the Prime Minister to intimidate the CBC to take a course of action with regard to national unity, which was, in his opinion, the only course that could be taken.

There was a recent disclosure yesterday in the newspapers of the RCMP apparently taking OHIP records illegally and then saying they cannot break another law by revealing them. There is the case of the Toronto Sun, a case of selective prosecution that, in my opinion, was deliberately taken. I am not talking about whether or not the Sun is guilty of an offence under the act. As a matter of fact, as I tried to make out a moment ago, almost anything can be a crime under the Official Secrets Act. The Toronto Sun has been selectively prosecuted and the case is very similar to the Aitken's case in the United Kingdom.

I believe that part of the reason for which the Sun was picked out is because it came to the defence of Dr. Treu about the very dangerous trial that was undertaken in that regard by the government. In the Treu case, the trial and the conviction were in secret, and the sentence was open only because the law demanded it. The reasons for judgment disclosed in this sentencing are remarkable. The comments of the learned trial judge who sentenced this man to two years, and the fact that the government, not only stood by passively, but launched the prosecution, are events which I find extraordinary.

I find it difficult to believe that a government would act as this government has acted, and looking ahead I hope that the appeal will change the conviction. If it is not changed, Mr. Treu will go to jail for two years, or whatever time is suggested by the appeal court. I am convinced that if the government takes the same attitude it does now, Mr. Treu will be told while he is in jail that if he says anything his rights to parole will be limited, his opportunity to seek early release through parole will be limited, and he will be told that if he says anything after he has left jail he will be liable for further infractions and further charges under the Official Secrets Act.

Alexander Dumas should have lived today, Mr. Speaker, to write about this as he wrote about the Count of Monte Cristo or as in the story of "The Man in the Iron Mask." Those are the kinds of situations which have been created under the operation of the Official Secrets Act. It is particularly so in the case of Alexander Peter Treu. This government has put out the lights for him.

The facts behind the charges against Mr. Treu, if there is a charge in the true sense of the word, not a technical sense, are extraordinary. In March, or at least early 1974, the authorities began a most painstaking investigation of his documents. The only charges which the former minister of justice, Mr. Turner, was able to lay were the two rather innocuous charges upon which he was convicted. The trial did not start until 1976, and a year and a half after it started Mr. Treu received from the NATO service centre in Brussels another contract related to the contract upon which he had been working before the documents were seized. He received a contract, and was operating under that contract, and he received other contracts as well since the time the investigation had started, and the last contract, which he received in 1977, Mr. Treu is still engaged in carrying it out, and he is still receiving classified documents. Those are the facts of the case.

However, this government has refused to look at the matter from the viewpoint of equity, to order a new trial in the open. It is one of the most extraordinary situations I have ever seen in all my years at the bar. There are a number of questions which cry out aloud against this government. There is the case of Treu alone, which goes in one slot. There is the case of this law, this stupid, tyrannical authoritarian law which, as an English judge once said, "has long outlived its usefulness in its present form and has to be pensioned off." A law such as this deserves contempt, and that is all I have for it.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a strange and disturbing case which remains a mystery in a dark room, behind locked doors. Unless this House and this country meet the challenge, open those doors, and turn on the lights, in my humble opinion a very substantial injustice will have been committed and carried on. Here is one small man against whom is arrayed the enormous power of the state and the state system. He is not a real criminal, as the judge himself said in sentencing, in the ordinary sense of the word, but had to be sent to jail as a deterrent to others, yet nobody else knows what the facts are.

If there is a criminal in this matter in the general sense of the word, it is the government that sits opposite, criminal in the sense that it has taken the proceedings which, in my opinion, are against natural justice and human rights. We in this House just a short time ago cried out unanimously against this kind of trial which was being perpetrated in the Soviet Union, and we did so promptly. I would suggest to the members of this House that we look at what we are doing in the case of Alexander Peter Treu.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise here to speak in this debate on behalf of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) because he has previous commitments in British Columbia today. He has several very important meetings, including, I believe, one with the premier and one with the Law Society, which were longstanding commitments. As hon. members know, a debate like this is brought about with relatively short notice. Indeed, we are grateful that perhaps the notice in this case was a few hours longer than normal, but even at that the travel plans and firm commitments of the Minister of Justice were in place.

First I would like to note that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), in moving this motion, is asking for a review of a law, and that is in itself not an extraordinary matter but one which, after a period of time, obviously deserves attention, and I am sure it is receiving that attention.

The motion would have an examination undertaken by a committee of this parliament. No doubt at some point that would be the right course as well, although it may very well be that the best course is for the Minister of Justice and others charged with responsibility in this area to consider what propositions and proposals they would want to put forward, and have them examined as proposals rather than in the abstract.

I found the motion rather strange in that in referring the subject matter to a committee it seemed to go on to tell that committee in advance about the results of its work. It directed that the scope be limited to certain things. That would be, perhaps, an unusual way of concluding a question before the question is even raised in the committee. It shows the kind of confusion that the hon. member for Peace River is bringing into this area, which is a very important area.

It is important to understand that we all believe very firmly in the principle of the independence of the courts and their role in safeguarding rights of citizens while at the same time enforcing law laid down by parliament. It is important that we avoid intemperate outbursts against judges and the courts, against process and procedure, in the absence of the full facts, and to avoid implications that the courts are in some way misbehaving or mishandling the question. We have seen that recently from the hon. member for Peace River. I think it is unfortunate and wrong.

The fact that a trial was held in secret is, of course, a matter which can catch the public imagination and be made to sound as though something very strange was going on. The hon. member for Peace River referred to it in that way when he said in his closing rhetoric that this was held in a dark room behind closed doors. Mr. Speaker, neither the hon. member for Peace River nor I was present, and neither of us knows whether the room was dark, middle lit, or lit very brightly. That is a small example of the way in which rhetoric is designed to excite opinion about an issue which may be in the process of being handled in a completely legitimate way and in a way in which it would be handled even after the closest scrutiny by any committee. After the restructuring of laws in this particular case the same procedures might be followed.

There are reasons for a court from time to time to have discretion to exclude its deliberations from public view. Only about a year ago a piece of legislation with which I was associated as Minister of Justice, was endorsed by this House. It gave some additional powers to courts in relation to excluding from public view or comment, cases involving certain sexual offences where the particular purpose of the exclusion was obviously the defence of reputation and innocence which might otherwise be damaged. In the same way, in cases involving delicate information in the hands of government, the state and its agencies, where the protection of the security of the state is at issue and where the secrecy of that information is important, it would seem obvious to me that some such matters cannot properly be talked about in court in open public view.

If there is secrecy attached to any document or any information, and even the hon. member for Peace River admits that in certain categories of information, then there may be cases where secrecy in court is required as well. In this particular case that followed exactly. Indeed, items of information involved here would appear to fall even within the hon. member's narrow category, that is to say, even he would have the official secrets law apply to certain types of information with which we may deal here.

I cannot say very much about the two cases referred to in the motion, of course. Indeed, all hon. members would require that these matters be sub judice and there ought not to be extensive analysis or reference to them as though the rights of the individuals were not important and as though the proceedings before the court were not the right and best way to test those rights.

In this particular motion, referring again to the Treu case, what was arranged in advance was the application for the hearings to be in camera, and the indication was that that request was being made because the documents which would be reviewed included a large number of NATO documents and testimony of witnesses concerning those documents. The obligation of the Government of Canada to protect the secrecy of that information was also cited. Information was to be discussed which was of a military and defence nature. For those reasons the request was made for in camera proceedings.

The accused was there before the court with his laywer. The court invited the lawyer for the defence to make comment upon the request that the hearings be held in secret, and his reply, as recorded by counsel for the defence, was:

. . . as far as that request is concerned, I have no representation.

[English]

This is, therefore, hardly an occasion the beginnings or the continuation of which should lead to the high flown rhetoric of the hon. member for Peace River who referred to the Star Chamber, a situation where procedures for the defence, rights of appeal and all, were set aside at one difficult period in history a long time ago. In this country rights of defence counsel for the accused, rights of appeal, all stand and exist, and are very important indeed to us.

The Official Secrets Act is a necessary piece of legislation and exists in countries throughout the world where in every case there are certain matters which are of delicacy and confidentiality and which need, for a variety of public purposes, to be protected.

We have here the results of that in the existence in Canada of a law, one which in its particular form has stood for a long time, one which troubles the hon. member opposite when he reaches his own legal conclusions about who may be offending against provisions of the act, who may have a different opinion than his, a different legal advice than he about those provisions. In some cases he may be sweeping in as illegalities things which are not illegal under the act. His carelessness in referring to secrecy and the Star Chamber, his carelessness in referring to the judge, weaken the allegations he is making in law. It shows a driving willingness to exploit the situation in a particular way rather than analysing it in a way which a committee of this House dealing with it later on would presumably do.

Very few cases have gone to court under the Official Secrets Act. Officials have provided me with a list of eight or so cases, including the two to which the hon. member's motion refers. Of the others, four dealt particularly with matters which resolved around the famous Gouzenko case. There were two others, one in 1962 which was dismissed, and one in 1967 where a conviction was obtained, and there are two current cases. That is all an indication of the fact that the act in its operation is designed to deal with certain important matters and is not necessarily as sweeping as the hon. member would seem to imply.

I should say that I take some umbrage on behalf of the Minister of Justice at the words in the motion which refer to the harassment of the Toronto Sun and its editor. I am not sure that the hon. member for Peace River has added anything to clarify where he finds the harassment. He referred to the matter as being the subject of a charge and a proceeding. I wonder if he is, indeed, suggesting that this is a reason for somehow calling it harassment. If he is, I think it is a completely erroneous statement to make, having regard to the careful traditions and procedures which were followed in this case by the Attorney General who himself cited the long standing traditions of care with regard to these matters.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is worth while my recalling for hon. members the words of the Minister of Justice when referring to the matter in this House shortly after the laying of the charges. At that time the minister described his concern and deliberation of the matter before reaching his conclusions as to where his duty lay. I refer to page 388 of Hansard for March 17, 1978. The Minister of Justice is quoted as saying:

> In arriving at these I have been guided by recognized authorities such a Lord Shawcross, Edwards, Erskine, May and Bourinot, and more recently and very helpfully, my valuable discussions with Commonwealth attorneys general in Winnipeg last summer on the office of attorney general, and more particularly my personal conversations at that time with the Attorney General of England and Wales and the Lord Chancellor.
> I am aware that, since the enactment of the Official Secrets Act, this would appear to have been the first occasion in Canada where consideration has to be given to the provisions of the Official Secrets Act and the right of a member of the House to freely express his views in the House in the course of carrying on his parliamentary business.

The first principle, in my view, is that there must be excluded any consideration based upon narrow, partisan views, or based upon the political consequences to me or to others.

In arriving at a decision on such a sensitive issue as this, the Attorney General is entitled to seek information and advice from others but in no way is he directed by his colleagues in the government or by parliament itself. That is not to say that the Attorney General is not accountable to parliament for his decisions, which he obviously is.

Clearly, I am entitled to seek and obtain information from others, including my colleague, the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais), and the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police on the security implications of recent disclosures. This I have done.

In my view, the special position of the Attorney General in this regard is clearly entrenched in our parliamentary practice. Based on the authorities and on my own experience as a member of the government for ten years, which has included my three immediate predecessors, this special position has been diligently protected in theory and in practice.

Mr. Speaker, the second principle is that every citizen is subject to the law. One of the pillars of our system of government, dating back three centuries, is that neither the king nor any other person, be he a member of this House, a member of the government, a member of the press, or someone possessed of title or position, is above the law. The law should apply to all, equally. He who breaks it must bear the consequences.

Third, with today's differing ideological viewpoints between different countries, it is essential for the preservation of our democratic way of life that there would be maintained a strong and vigorous security service. In spite of all that has been alleged and what is properly being examined by the McDonald Commission, we are being well served by a group of dedicated individuals.

The Minister of Justice went on to refer to his consultation with his officials and their advice in the matter, upon which he was relying. That, surely, is an answer, and a complete one, to the use of the word "harassment" used by the hon. member. We have before us the law of the land. Members opposite are sometimes seen to ask the government to ensure the law is observed and not in any way ignored. In this case the Attorney General, looking at his obligations under the law, following the highest precedents and traditions of his office, reached the conclusion that his consent under the Official Secrets Act was the appropriate course of action to take, and he therefore followed it. That is surely an answer to this particular part of the motion, one which should stand and should lead the hon. member for Peace River to accept and to qualify his remarks. He should accept these explanations and comments and qualify his remarks concerning harassment.

We do have in this country an Official Secrets Act, and we shall continue to need one. There seems to be no debate about that. The debate may go on with respect to interpretation and, perhaps, about some procedures within the law, but the law does stand. Hence, the judge in the Treu case was quite right in being concerned about implications that he had in some way ignored the law when those implications were somewhat overstated by the hon. member for Peace River.

The hon. member touched on another item. I do not know that he produced any evidence on it, but it concerned the suggestion when he said, I think, "the continuation of receipt of classified information by the defendant in this case." My information does not agree with that, and I do not know where the hon. member is receiving his. However, as I have indicated in some four or five cases during the course of my remarks, the hon. member for Peace River has substituted allegation and suggestion and hint without evidence at all for any substantial base upon which to make his case. We have heard him refer to the Official Secrets Act which he admits is required. He would argue about the nature of matters which should come before it. But surely in addition to those of national security and defence, there is a need to protect certain matters which need to be received in confidence, such as private information which is sometimes designed to be in confidence, such things as cabinet documents and information which in that way it is important to keep confidential.

The question of procedures which will follow is one which we can debate, but surely the hon. member would admit that some trials would have to be in secret. He should therefore avoid rhetoric which makes him sound as though he would never, at any time, have a part of any such secret trial.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

● (1402)

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear, even from the motion, that from any analysis of the nature of the problem of secrecy and the protection of information, we need an Official Secrets Act. It is fairly clear in almost any circumstance it would be somewhat broader than the narrow definition prescribed for it by the motion of the hon. member for Peace River. I am thinking of information which, if released, might impede law enforcement, or assist criminals, which might interfere with our foreign relationships or, indeed, if information was received in confidence on categories which might continue to deserve protection.

I think that the reference I made to the Worthington case and the statement by the Minister of Justice adequately dealt with the course of conduct he felt obliged to follow. I do not want to say more about that in view of its nature as a case before the courts.

I think it is clear, without any reference to the Treu case, that secrecy in a trial may well be required. If that is the case, then the approach in the Official Secrets Act, which gives the judgment to the court and the decision of the judge as to when that should be the case, is the right and time-honoured approach. I think it sits very badly with a member of parliament, or indeed anyone, to attack intemperately that process of the court or the judge without the least bit of evidence of any misapplication of principles of law, fairness, and justice, to make it seem as though something nefarious had gone on.

I referred earlier to the fact that the accused's counsel did not in fact offer any representations on the argument that it was to be a case in camera. I put forward the proposition that obviously that would have to be so in some cases where the very evidence being dealt with was itself so delicate that the speaking about it and arguing about it would do the very damage that was sought to be prevented by the law.

I think any defence counsel would understand in certain circumstances it would be appropriate, just as in some others for the sole protection of the defence or a witness secrecy is the exception, as a permitted and recognized form of action. Here too with the judgment of a court it can be properly brought about.

It is rather sad if members raise the level of their rhetoric to try to appeal to the superficial view of the fact that the trial being in secret was something wrong by talking, as the hon. member for Peace River did, about something behind closed doors in a dark room or the Star Chamber. That is wrong, and should be emphasized. I repeat it in order to emphasize it.

Members of parliament and other citizens ought to have such respect for the courts and our processes that they do not launch into attacks against them without some evidence of a misapplication of a rule or principle. No such evidence has been put before us here.

I would add that we do not have before us, inevitably, the full story of that case. We may have more if the Minister of Justice succeeds in his suggestion that he will see if the judgment of the court, as distinct from the words of the sentencing, may be made available to the House for our further information about the case.

Obviously any law may be reviewed and should be reviewed from time to time, and I indicated earlier that that may well be an appropriate course of action now with regard to this one, but it is quite wrong to use lack of evidence, intemperate rhetoric, and the excitement of concern, based on principles and practices which themselves are completely defensible and understandable, to distort the situation and make it appear as though something is going on which is in fact not in any way a threat to the system of justice in which we all live and which we all defend and cherish.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to indicate that we in the New Democratic Party are in full support of the motion which has been placed before the House today by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I want to commend him on the campaign he has conducted over a number of years against secrecy in many areas of government. Indeed, the motion he has put down today specifies one particular area where there is too much secrecy for our democratic way of life, and we welcome the opportunity he has given the House to discuss this matter on this allotted day.

I want also to say that, in my view, the hon. member has certainly made a case for the intent of his motion, namely, that there should be a special committee of this House to review the Official Secrets Act and to recommend such changes as might seem desirable to that committee.

I listened with a great deal of interest, and perhaps a bit of amusement, to the attempt of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to demolish the case of the hon. member for Peace River by accusing him of indulging in rhetoric and of being intemperate.

Mr. Dick: That was because he had a weak argument.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Precisely. I thank my hon. friend for taking the words out of my mouth. The minister had such a weak argument that he had to turn on the hon. member for Peace River as a man who indulges in rhetoric. The hon. member for Peace River is a very interesting speaker. I like his style. He often comes out with a turn of phrase which really makes the point, but he is not exactly one of the tub-thumping orators of this place. As for accusing him of indulging in rhetoric, all the Minister of Transport was doing was admitting that he did not have a case against the solid arguments of the hon. member for Peace River. Then to throw in the word "intemperate" a few times adds to the evidence against the Minister of Transport that he was really floored by the argument and the case made by the hon. member for Peace River. We certainly give that hon. member and his motion our full support.

One other attempt the Minister of Transport made to belittle this motion was to argue that there have been very few cases under the Official Secrets Act where persons have been charged or brought to trial. I did not make the notes I perhaps should have made, but I think he said that since the Gouzenko case there have been only four cases. One case was dismissed, and another led to a conviction. Others are the two which are with us right now, the case against Alexander Peter Treu, and the harassment of the Toronto Sun and its editor, Peter Worthington. In terms of civil liberties and in terms of democracy that is just about the weakest argument I have heard. If there is only one case of injustice, or only one case of the law having done something wrong to a human being, that is a serious matter, and I think it calls for the kind of review which has been proposed by the hon. member for Peace River.

As for those few times that the Official Secrets Act has been used, I noted the reference to the Gouzenko days. I was here then, and I remember the feeling of revulsion there was on the part of people concerned about civil liberties.

Mr. Ellis: Nobody can remember when you weren't here.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was here a few years before I was, and my friend, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), came long before I did.

Mr. Goodale: All that is irrelevant.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My friend, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), says that is irrelevant. That is true. It was an answer to an interjection, but I thank the hon. member for getting me back to the point I wanted to make.

In the Gouzenko days there really was a hue and cry about the extent to which secrecy was used on that occasion against a great many Canadians. I well remember taking part with the late Dr. B. K. Sandwell and the present right hon. member for Prince Albert in a big meeting which was held in Winnipeg in those days. I remember how fully that was reported and how much interest there was, because even though Canadians were found guilty of certain crimes against their country, the feeling in defence of civil liberties was so strong in those days that there was a good deal of concern over the way in which the government had used that legislation, in other words, the Official Secrets Act.

The minister says that since that time there has been one case where there was a dismissal, another case where there was a conviction, and now there are two, in one of which there has already been a conviction. It is good to know that secrecy on the part of the government is not practised very often, but I thought we believed in an open society. I thought we were opposed to this sort of thing when it is done in countries on the other side of the iron curtain, but we had the Gouzenko experience and the use of the War Measures Act in 1970, and now we have the use of the Official Secrets Act in two cases. Even if in only one case harm is being done to an individual in terms of his rights, I say that it is time that this parliament, the highest court in the land, reviewed that situation, and I am pleased to indicate our full support for the motion which is before us at this time.

I said earlier that we welcome this motion not only for its own sake but also because it is tied in with and is part of a campaign in which many of us have taken part—I have to give the hon. member for Peace River particular commendation—against secrecy in government in many ways.

We have had a great deal of trouble the last number of months about matters respecting the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and their use of the powers they had or powers they did not have. We have had trouble because much has been kept secret, because the police did not tell the responsible cabinet minister what they were doing, or because one minister did not tell another, and a good deal of the trouble which is still with us today and which supposedly is being investigated by the McDonald commission is because we have across the way a government which seems to think that the right to do things in secret somehow goes with the fact that the government is in power. I think that that is an area where things ought to be reviewed.

I may say too that we all know of cases in the public service where persons get fired and never know the reason. There was much fuss a while back about extra-parliamentary activities and about a certain secret list, but around here many things which are secret seem to get leaked and seem to get out. However, many individuals feel that their lives are put in jeopardy, or their careers are frustrated because of things which are done against them for reasons they know nothing about at all. In our view that is not consistent with the whole principle of democracy, which calls for things to be done in the open just as much as possible.

I know that every time an hon. member, like the hon. member for Peace River, says we must have an Official Secrets Act, we must have some areas where secrecy is the rule, it brings back the great orator, the Minister of Transport, to tell us that we have admitted his side of the case. It makes it difficult for us to make that admission too strongly because our greater concern is indeed with individual rights and liberties, and those rights and liberties are in jeopardy when secrecy can be practised the way it is by this government.

I think of another area where we have far too much secrecy around here, and that has to do with the difficulty we have in getting hold of government documents, of opinions or reports that have been prepared for the government in connection with decisions. It is a myth that the government must have these secret reports and secret documents and that the rest of us must not know what is in them. The government makes decisions on the basis of reports or of research that has been done, but we in parliament and the people of the country are denied the right to know what has been produced by those who have done the research. Sometimes it is in matters of social policy, of agriculture, of labour, immigration, or what have you, and I think we have gone too far down the road in terms of protecting these areas by secrecy. When I say "we", I mean the government has gone that way.

Those guidelines which were tabled by the President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) some time ago are forever being read to us. I realize that they have been studied in committee and so on, but they have never been adopted by parliament itself. They are guidelines foisted upon us unilaterally under which, as I say, the government keeps all kinds of things secret. Many a time when we have asked for the reasons for certain decisions, or why this piece of legislation was valid and that one was not valid, we have been told that this is because of a ruling from the Department of Justice, and a number of times I have had something to say about some of those rulings. As a matter of fact one former deputy minister of justice has remonstrated with me for referring to certain specific cases where I felt that the government was getting the ruling that it wanted from the Department of Justice. Out of respect for that opposite opinion I do not intend to mention any particular cases at this point, but I would just say that if we are expected to take at its face value the decisions that the government makes on a ruling of the Department of Justice, we should be able to see that ruling. The cloak of secrecy that is put around those rulings, like the cloak of secrecy that is put around reports prepared by the government, makes it difficult for us to make an evaluation as to whether the decision or the judgment is the correct one or not.

There is another area in which I think there is far too much secrecy, and although in this particular debate I am supporting a motion from the Conservative party—and they are glad to have my support—I am coming to an area where they might not be so ready to agree with me, but I will try it anyway. I believe that in income tax matters, out of respect for the poor little fellows whose affairs should not be made public, we have gone too far in terms of total secrecy on income tax returns. It seems to me that it would make good sense for us to strike some level, such as $50,000 a year, or what have you, and say that above that level information on people's returns should be made public. I think the same thing should apply to corporations. How many times do we find it impossible to ascertain whether the public has paid for certain expenditures of corporations because they get a deduction from their income tax because, we are told, of the secrecy provisions in the Income Tax Act?

I admit that 30 or 40 years ago I brought in a bill to remove the secrecy provisions from the Income Tax Act as a whole, and I well remember the howls I got from my friends to the right. I am prepared to modify that position and to say that for the little people the secrecy rule should stand. But when you get people making $50,000 or $100,000 a year, or more, when you get people with high incomes who manage to make our their returns so that they pay no income tax, I believe that they are defrauding the public and that this information should not be guarded by a cloak of secrecy. As I have said, the same thing applies to the kinds of expenses that corporations can claim for income tax purposes.

I am quite justified in putting this kind of thing in the same category with reports that are prepared for the government to help it make up its mind, with decisions that the government gets from the Department of Justice as to the validity or invalidity of certain measures, in the same way as I put the firings which take place, the reasons for hiring, and all the rest of it. There is far too much of the practice of secrecy in government today, particularly by this government, and what has happened in the Treu case is that the whole thing has been brought out into the open.

We are trying our best to get a freedom of information act passed in parliament. The government is favourable to it, and one minister after another says that it is a good idea. We have certain provisions now under the Canadian Human Rights Act where people can get certain information, but we seem to hear more about the kinds of information that cannot be obtained than we do about the kinds of information that can be obtained. Are we a free and open society or are we not? If we want to make a comparison with some other societies, maybe we are better off than they are, but in terms of our protestations about ours being a free, open, and democratic society, we are far below the mark.

Therefore, I am pleased that my friend, the hon. member for Peace River, had the opportunity to put this motion down today. I think he has made an excellent case for it. He did not indulge in intemperate rhetoric; he just stated the case as it is. The Minister of Transport has no reply, so he has made the accusations he has made in his remarks today, but I hope that the rest of the day will witness a number of members from all sides of the House supporting the proposition that it is time we had less secrecy in this country and therefore it is time we had the kind of committee that is recommended in the motion presented by the hon. member for Peace River.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say something in support of the motion moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I have to say that the attitude taken by the minister today is almost as hard for me to accept as the terms and scope of the Official Secrets Act as it stands in the books. I understand of course what might have prompted the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to talk so much about the importance of avoiding intemperate statements. I think that is something that the minister should repeat to himself every hour on the hour for several weeks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It seems to me rather amusing that he should accuse the hon. member for Peace River, one of the most moderate and soft-tongued members of the House, of rhetoric and intemperate language. I quite understand why the hon. member for Peace River would speak with some vigour about the Official Secrets Act. It needs to be attacked with some vigour. The hon. member for Peace River has not attacked the judge or the courts, as the Minister of Transport seemed to indicate. He has attacked the act and he has used some vigour in doing so, as I may myself in the course of the afternoon.

I think there are a number of considerations in connection with legislation of this sort, the Official Secrets Act. The minister has said this morning, and again this afternoon, that there is agreement that this kind of legislation is necessary, and that it exists in virtually all countries. Certainly I am prepared to agree that we need an Official Secrets Act of some limited scope. I would not contest that point with the minister. He spoke as if the act is necessary, that we need this kind of legislation that perhaps it should be looked at, and that all legislation requires some review. He ignored almost entirely the weight of committees and commissions in Canada and elsewhere upon the urgency of a thorough overhaul of this legislation.

First of all, there is the question as to the appropriate scope of such legislation, and what kind of information the Official Secrets Act should try to protect. As the hon. member for Peace River pointed out, this legislation is practically a copy of the British legislation. Virtually it protects all government information. It would permit prosecution for wrongful possession or transmission of practically any or all government information.

An interdepartmental committee in Britain examined this, and made a report in 1972. The committee was headed by Lord Franks. He referred to section 2 of the British act, which is equivalent to section 4 of our act. He said that the main offence which section 2 created was the unauthorized communication of official information, including documents, by a Crown servant. Actually this matter is not involved in either of the two cases we are talking about today, but this is the main offence created by section 2 of the British act. The Franks committee also indicated that the leading characteristic of this offence was its catch-all quality. It catches all official documents and information, everything and anything at all. It makes no distinction as to kind or degree. The committee indicated that all information which a Crown servant learns in the course of his duty is official for the purposes of section 2, whatever its nature, whatever its importance, whatever its original origin.

As the hon. member for Peace River pointed out, when this legislation was adopted in Canada there was virtually no debate. It was presented to parliament on the basis of legislation dealing with espionage and the protection of national security in a very basic way. I have the impression that the same thing occurred in Britain when the act was passed in the 1880s. It was not discussed on the basis of preserving the confidentiality of ordinary government documents. It was presented to the House in terms of espionage. The same thing took place in 1911 at Westminster. The situation was similar to what occurred in Ottawa. There was practically no debate or no discussion at all.

As I understand the situation, the catch-all provision has been loved by governments and high functionaries in the public service through the years because it serves as a deterrent. There are some known cases where it has been used, not necessarily in Canada but certainly in Britain, to persuade journalists and authors not to include certain documents or information in some of their writings.

In 1972 the British Franks committee came to the conclusion that their legislation was too broad. Also it found section 2 to be a mess, which is the equivalent of Section 4 in our legislation.

The Canadian Royal Commission on Security found that the legislation was much too broad. Having judged that the Official Secrets Act was unsatisfactory, the royal commission was in favour of a complete revision of the legislation. It discussed some of the things the revised legislation should and should not do.

This morning the Minister of Transport quoted the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) when he said that the law should apply to all equally. I say with no hesitation that this broad catch-all provision has not been applied equally. I doubt if it is possible to apply it equally. For that reason alone, it is bad legislation. Possibly it has been used as a threat or a deterrent, but no one would pretend either section 2 in Britain or Section 4 in Canada would apply to the need at hand, and therefore it is poor legislation.

In addition to preserving confidentiality and protecting the disclosure of matters, also there is the question as to what degree criminal law should be used for this purpose, and the group of cases where we should consider it appropriate to use criminal law. The Franks committee gave a good deal of attention to this question. It came to the conclusion that there was no justification or no acceptable reason for using the criminal law, as we now do, to protect all documents and information which we catch up and protect in Section 4 of our legislation. The Franks committee made a short list containing four categories of information where criminal law should be used. Under our Official Secrets Act, as it is now drafted and in effect, the sanction of the criminal law is applicable to any violation of the broad, wide-ranging Section 4 of our legislation. I suggest that is an intolerable situation. I hope the Minister of Transport will not regard that as intemperate language. It is an intolerable situation that we are using the sanction of criminal law to protect all the information covered in Section 4.

A third consideration or concern is evidential and procedural arrangements. These were of concern to our Royal Commission on Security. As the law now stands, in certain circumstances the burden of proof is put on the accused when certain facts have been established. It provides for certain evidentiary presumptions. The royal commission mentioned a couple of instances in which there should be some evidentiary presumption. Also the commission indicated, apart from the two provisions it had mentioned relating to classifications and cases involving classified information and ones involving unclassified material, that it saw no reason for major unusual evidential or procedural arrangements. Yet, the Official Secrets Act has very far-reaching evidential arrangements which are prejudicial to the usual position of a defendant charged with an offence.

This morning the minister said that such prosecutions are rare in Canada. I do not question that. But I do not know what that has to do with the situation, Mr. Speaker.

The minister said prosecutions are rare and, therefore, clearly the Act is designed to deal with certain important matters, but it is not really as sweeping as the hon. member for Peace River implies. I think I have said enough to indicate not only my opinion but the opinion of commissions which have been established to examine the legislation. Their view is that the legislation is enormously sweeping and catches up virtually everything that anyone could think of.

I say, without any hesitation, that I do not believe the government, ministers in a government, or high officials in a government are necessarily the best ones to decide what should or what needs to be kept secret. I am not being offensive about this, and this is not directed toward any individual, but there is a very real danger that members of the government or officials serving the government confuse the interests of the nation with their own political interests. There is very real danger of that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I think some better mechanism or better method of deciding what needs to be protected should be considered by the committee.

We have secrecy in the case of the Treu trial. I do not hesitate to agree that there might very well be documents that need to be considered in camera. There is no question about that. I must say, however, I find it pretty hard to accept that a whole trial has to take place in secret. That is asking me and other people to take a good deal on faith. I am not criticising the judge or the court. A court has to operate under the legislation of this country. The fact is that the trial did take place behind closed doors and, in terms of publicity at least, in a dark room. There is no suggestion in the sentence of any mens rea in this instance. It seems to be simply a matter of an allegation of improperly having information in one's possession and not taking proper measures to secure that information. The judge said, as I understand it, that it was necessary to convict and sentence Treu in order to serve as an example to others.

I do not want even to try to put myself in the position of being an appellate court, and I assume there will be an appeal, but I have to say very simply that I find this kind of totally secret trial pretty hard to accept in our country, and I would require a good deal better case than that put by the Minister of Transport this morning to persuade me that it is necessary. I repeat, I am not criticising the judge; I am criticising the legislation under which the judge had to proceed.

With regard to the Toronto Sun, I am sure the Minister of Justice did the best he could to make the best decision in respect of the charge. Again I find it difficult to understand how a document which was alleged to have been put in the hands of some 50 odd people could be considered an official secret document of any great importance to the state. As far as I know it was never denied that these documents had wide distribution.

I notice that the Sun was prosecuted, but radio stations and others that broadcast effectively what the Sun had published were not prosecuted. I think the Minister of Justice is put in a pretty difficult position with this kind of legislation, and we ought to be able to do something to help him.

The Official Secrets Act is much too broad and much too sweeping, as has been agreed by the authoritative groups which have examined it. It is badly in need of overhauling. The minister did not dispute that it might be a good idea, as he said, to have a look at it. He also said that rather than the work being done by a committee it might be more appropriate if the minister examined the legislation and brought forward some proposals. He said it might be more appropriate to deal with specific concrete proposals brought forth by the minister rather than have a committee deal with this question in the abstract. All I want to say about that, Mr. Speaker, is that it is nearly ten years since the Royal Commission on Security condemned the Official Secrets Act and, in very unambiguous language, called for a review and a substantial overhaul of that legislation.

What reason have we to believe that the Minister of Justice is going to bring forth concrete proposals in respect of overhauling this legislation when the matter has been before him and his predecessors for nearly a decade? It shows something of the attitude of the minister and the government that he should bother to say that perhaps the proposals should come from the minister rather than the matter being considered by a committee. This reflects what seems to me to be the rather authoritarian attitude of this government.

It was said some ten years ago by a royal commission in Canada that this legislation needs to be overhauled, narrowed, and substantially changed. It was said more recently in Great Britain, by a prestigious committee, that their legislation, which is very substantially the same as ours, needed to be overhauled and changed.

We have had these developments in our own country, the Treu trial and the charges against the Toronto Sun, that have served to accentuate the need for a fresh and urgent look at this legislation. I cannot think of very much that would be more urgent for this parliament to do than to send this subject matter to a committee, and for that committee promptly to launch a thorough study and overhaul which would result in legislation we need for our security, but not legislation that permits itself to be abused.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by commending the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) for enabling us to discuss this subject in the House today, and also on a much broader basis for the determined leadership he has given in the country and in the House, not only in respect of this subject but on the broader understanding of it, namely, freedom of information.

I say this, first of all because I think it is true, and it is incumbent upon us from time to time in the House to pay tribute to what members on the other side are doing. I say it secondly because I have to admit I am disappointed with his presentation on this occasion.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: It is sad to say that to gentlemen in the opposition, but I had thought the hon. member for Peace River might have given us a different kind of presentation this morning.

I am disappointed first of all because of the insertion in the motion of the reference to the "harassment of the Toronto Sun and its editor, Peter Worthington", to quote from the words of the motion. I had thought of challenging that on a procedural ground. I must say I think it is highly improper to refer in that way to a case which has not yet come to trial. It is unfortunate that such a reference was put into a motion of this kind, the subject matter of which ought to be approached on a different kind of basis.

The complaint of the hon. member for Peace River has to do, as I understand it, with the Official Secrets Act as such, and it should not really be necessary, and indeed it is not even proper, to bring in a reference to a case under that act which is presently in progress.

Secondly, I am disappointed because of the inclusion in the reference of the conclusion, which he would thus determine in advance. I do find this disappointing, Mr. Speaker, because the conclusion which he recommends is not shared by either the Mackenzie Royal Commission or the Franks Royal Commission, in Great Britain. The Franks Royal Commission, admittedly, comes closer than the Mackenzie commission to the kind of proposal which is made here, because they recommend that section 2 of their act, which is equivalent to Section 4 of our act, should no longer be dealt with under the Official Secrets Act, but should be dealt with by a different kind of legislation. They go on to advocate much more than the terms of this motion would allow as to using the remedies of the criminal law to deal with the release of government or official information.

Thirdly, I have to admit that I am disappointed with the presentation of the hon. member for Peace River because of the partisan, rather than the positive, tone and content of his presentation. In fact the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), who is perhaps now freer from such considerations than many of his colleagues and even perhaps members on this side of the House, gave the kind of presentation I would have expected from the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Baldwin: I gave him my power of attorney.

Mr. MacGuigan: I think it is highly useful at least that we have the statements of the hon. member for Halifax because he did attempt to explore the legislation and to say what he would criticize in it and what he thought should be involved in the replacement of the Official Secrets Act. That is what this debate is about, Mr. Speaker, if this debate is to be useful at all. It is not an occasion for partisan polemics, but it is an opportunity for us to influence future legislation in an area which is most important to this country. Later on I will refer to another reason why I am disappointed in the statement of the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Dick: What would you do about it?

Mr. MacGuigan: I will tell you what I would do about it. I propose to say how I think the legislation is wrong and to some extent how I think it should be amended, within the limitations of the time that is available to me.

With respect to the Treu trial, we have a most unfortunate situation. We have a lot of information that has reached the public, and I will be taking a lot of it from an article on the Treu trial by Lew Diggs of the Canadian Press which was in the Montreal Gazette of May 29, so that members who wish to see these facts will find them in one place.

That article refers to a statement by Treu himself. He said:

—a top civil servant in the Department of Supply and Services withdrew his security clearance without his knowledge while he continued to receive classified documents.

Apparently, however, Treu's own counsel said that although this may have been substantially correct, it was a very marginal factor in the decision of the case. I just wish we knew more about the case to understand that comment. The Crown prosecutor said:

—he called witnesses from NATO and the federal department of supply and services as well as "three military witnesses." All had to deal with highly classified documents and to discuss in detail the relationship between NATO and Canadian classification system.

Apparently, according to other newspaper reports, Mr. Treu was a one time designer of NATO air communications systems.

Mr. Baldwin: He still is.

Mr. MacGuigan: He still is, as we are told by the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Baldwin: He may have to carry on in jail.

Mr. MacGuigan: In looking at the judgment of the court, I am even more troubled because one would normally think it would reveal a lot about the facts in the case. In fact, it reveals more about the judge's philosophy than about what actually happened in the case. There are, however, several passages worth referring to. In one case the judge says:

[Translation]

. . . it is exceedingly difficult for a human being to try another human being or sentence him . . . That is a task that is almost humanly impossible . . .

[English]

He goes on, Mr. Speaker, obviously addressing Mr. Treu himself:

[Translation]

In your case it is even more difficult because your lawyers are right, you are an exceptional person, you are certainly not, in my opinion, a criminal; you have committed a criminal act but you are not what one would call an individual with a criminal career, far from it, you are a person who has had a most respectable life, who has great intellectual qualities, who as a human being is likeable, at least in my opinion, who has a family, who has children . . .

[English]

In other words, the judge finds Mr. Treu an admirable person, and it seems that on the subjective side of the case he would be disposed to great leniency, but he talks about the necessity of looking at the objective side and of looking at the deterrent effect of sentencing.

I will not take the time to read much more of the judgment except for this one passage which indicates that Mr. Treu had legitimate access to the documents at least at certain times. The judge says:

[Translation]

Your lawyer drew my attention to certain circumstances—that the documents for which I have convicted you were your work tools, your intellectual property . . .

[English]

Again, this makes it a bit more difficult to understand the result, which consisted of a sentence of two years' imprisonment, two years on the first count, which was under Section 4(1)(c) of the Official Secrets Act, and one year concurrent under Section 4(1)(d) of the same act.

I have not gone into the case to the extent that I have with a view to criticizing the judge. Rather, the point I make is that when we are given this much information, but no more, it is tantalizing, to say the least. We may almost be better off to be in the situation of the Australian parliament where the public is excluded from, not only the hearing itself, but also the sentencing, should the accused be found guilty. But in Canada the public is admitted to sentencing.

While I do not suggest that we revert to the Australian type of rule, nevertheless, if we were to have such a rule we would not have some of the problems which we have here. For one thing, given the reliance which the trial judge placed on the concept of deterrence, one can see certain limitations, given the fact that without knowledge of what the offence was and the kind of documents involved, the deterrent effect is somewhat muted. Of course, one learns that the courts take a serious view, at the very least, of the unauthorized holding of secret information, but perhaps that is not enough for the concept of deterrence to be as operative as it might be.

I would suggest that there ought to be a rule. I can accept the necessity for a secret trial as such, but there ought to be a rule that the judge divulge as much as possible of the proceedings, and especially, as much as possible, the kind of evidence which leads him to take such a serious view of the matter in question. Perhaps it would be possible to give an indication of the kinds of documents involved in a general way so that if it was necessary to impose a sentence for reasons of deterrence, we would at least have some idea of why the sentence was imposed. This would go a long way, not only toward public comprehension, but also toward increasing the deterrent effect which the court itself has in mind as one of the important aspects of a case such as this.

As the hon. member for Halifax pointed out, the Mackenzie Royal Commission on Security itself made a number of criticisms of the Official Secrets Act when it reported in 1969. The general comment at page 65 was as follows:

● (1502)

The Canadian Official Secrets Act is an unwieldy statute, couched in very broad and ambiguous language.

The commissioners found practical problems with that kind of legislation and they went on to say:

—must the Crown prove in all cases that the information concerned is secret and official?

The secrecy of the information or the relevancy of secrecy is thus the question they raise. They also raise the question of unusual evidential and procedural provisions relating to espionage cases.

The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) has dealt with these questions so I shall not take the time to deal with them further except to note that they point out that a prosecution for conspiracy to commit an Official Secrets Act offence is a prosecution under the Criminal Code and does not require the fiat of the attorney general as does a prosecution which is brought squarely under the Official Secrets Act. So there is even a way of getting around that provision for the permission of the attorney general for a prosecution under the legislation.

I would go further than the Mackenzie royal commission. It seems to me that under section 4 of the Official Secrets Act, which is the most relevant section for our discussion, the provision is so sweeping that it is almost difficult to conceive that in strict law any minister or public servant could lawfully communicate any significant information. The definition of "communication" in section 2(3)(a) is as follows:

—expressions referring to communicating or receiving include any communicating or receiving—

This is the broadest possible language imaginable. In section 4 the law allows him to communicate only to a person to whom he is authorized to communicate or a person to whom it is in the interest of the state to communicate.

Such a section can have a very chilling effect on the operations of people in government. It is quite true that the section has rarely been used. In fact, there are only two cases between the series of Gouzenko cases and the present Treu and Sun cases. Those are the Featherstone case of 1967 and the Biernacki case in 1962. The fact that there have not been many cases does not indicate the fully chilling effect such law may have by way of deterring people from communicating things they would otherwise communicate.

In particular, it seems to me that the concept of treasonable spying and improper release of classified information ought not to be treated on the same basis. Public release of secret information could conceivably be just as treasonably effective as clandestine delivery. Generally speaking, however, the two differ in character, nature and effect. I believe it is a mistake to jumble all those things together in the act as is the case at the present time. I think we have very serious reasons for looking at the effect of the legislation.

The Franks commission in Great Britain looked at similar British legislation—on which our statute is based and with which it is almost identical—and recommended a new statute called the official information act. This proposal has not yet been adopted by the British parliament but it has in it a lot of eminently good sense. The official information which it would be illegal to reveal includes not only classified information relating to defence or internal security, foreign relations, et cetera, but also matters such as are likely to assist criminal activity or to impede law enforcement—things which are not taken account of in the motion—or a cabinet document, or information that has been entrusted to the government by a private individual. I feel that the law ought to take account of those categories in its use of the criminal law to support the prohibition of release of certain kinds of information.

The "official secrets" question is almost the most serious aspect of the general problem of freedom of information. In the field of freedom of information we try to arrive at principles as to what should be released and how documents should be classified by the government. In the Official Secrets Act we impose penalties for releasing those documents. Official secrets legislation is, therefore, the completion of the doctrine of freedom of information.

In that context I find it all the more surprising that this motion should be placed before us by the hon. member for Peace River, because he is chairman of the committee which is looking at the question of freedom of information based on the green paper. I believe he is also a member on the Special Committee on Rights and Immunities of Members which is even more directly looking at the question of official secrets. I suggest that it is incumbent on the members of those committees to put before the House and the country with the greatest possible speed their conclusions on these matters.

The Standing Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has had this reference before it at least since December. I know that one of the most important aspects of their report will be the consideration of what to do about the Official Secrets Act. I hope they will soon be able to make a report which will recommend to the government where we should go from here.

I would go so far as to suggest to the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) that if the committee does not produce that report in the near future he should no longer wait for it, the matter being of such importance. He should present his own proposals and perhaps later this afternoon he will give us some indication of what those proposals might be.

My time is almost up, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to conclude with a quotation from the Franks report which I believe puts the problem in the kind of context it seriously deserves, which I regret to say this motion does not do.

On page 12 of the Franks report appears the following statement:

> A totalitarian government finds it easy to maintain secrecy. It does not come into the open until it chooses to declare its settled intentions and demand support for them. A democratic government, however, though it must compete with these other types of organizations, has a task which is complicated by its obligations to the people. It needs the trust of the government. It cannot use the plea of secrecy to hide from the people its basic aims. On the contrary it must explain these aims: it must provide the justification for them and give the facts both for and against a selected course of action. Nor must such information be provided only at one level and through one means of communication. A government which pursues secret aims, or which operates in greater secrecy than the effective conduct of its proper functions requires or which turns information services into propaganda agencies, will lose the trust of the people. It will be countered by ill-informed and destructive criticism.

In those words, which I take to be of universal validity, I think there is a message for all of us—for the government, for the opposition and for the country. I hope that these words will be the inspiration for us in developing a new Official Secrets Act in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate briefly in this debate. To those who will speak later I would like them to know that I have to leave the chamber early to catch a flight and I intend them no disrespect, particularly the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts). I look forward to reading the transcript of his remarks with interest.

I deem it a pleasure to follow my distinguished colleague, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan). I serve on the committee of which he is the distinguished and highly regarded chairman. His remarks today reminded me of nothing so much as a sandwich; the two slices of bread containing the opening and closing remarks were rather green and mouldy, but the meat in the middle was a credit to the hon. member. This was particularly so when he refuted the suggestion of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) that we rate the Official Secrets Act by the number of charges laid under it. If one were to take that philosophy to its conclusion, it would mean the fewer the charges, the better the legislation. The Minister of Transport would continue to defend, as he did when he was minister of justice, that important provision in the Criminal Code dealing with the abduction of a female passenger by the master of a vessel. Likel no provision of greater import adopting that philosophy exists in the Criminal Code.

On a serious note, Mr. Speaker, one would hope that the provisions in the Criminal Code with regard to treason would not be judged on the number of charges laid under that particular section, and no one in this chamber would suggest that they be removed, but it was such a specious argument that I had to make mention of it. What troubles me the more is, if I understood the Minister of Transport correctly, that he opened his remarks by saying this law deserves attention and in fact is receiving attention now, the suggestion being there is proposed legislation of some kind. Because it would be a waste of time for the Minister of Transport to examine this situation of the Official Secrets Act in the abstract, to use his words.

What shallow hypocrisy is this when at this very moment this important subject is before the justice committee? In that committee we are debating matters pertaining to the invasion of privacy, of written communications, Bill C-26, to which the Official Secrets Act is applicable. Indeed, a year ago we went through the same exercise when we were dealing with the interception of oral communications by means of electronic surveillance. If, as the Minister of Transport says, the law deserves attention and is receiving attention now, why on earth in June of 1978 is the justice committee occupying itself with a study directly involving the application of the Official Secrets Act, particularly when a third situation is going on simultaneously? I refer to the McDonald royal commission. That absolutely astounds me.

No case has been made out for Bill C-26 as yet; it may be done in the days to follow. But for the Minister of Transport, a former minister of justice, to come into the House and say that this law deserves attention and is receiving attention now, while both the McDonald commission and the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs is preoccupied with the matter, is simply a demonstration of hypocrisy which brings no honour or integrity to this chamber or to the government.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport accused my hon. friend from Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) of bringing confusion into this area in challenging the independence of the courts, a charge which I feel I must reject out of hand, sir. The minister said the courts should have discretion. I do not believe that anyone using the broadest interpretation possible of the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River would suggest that the judicial system and the discretion of that system is under attack. Far from it.

In my view, it is the unhappy position in which the legislation has put our judicial system which is under attack. Last night in committee we heard about a law case in British Columbia—the longest ever held in that province, lasting some seven and one half months, I believe—in which it was ruled that counsel for the accused could not cross-examine in any way the propriety of the warrant which led to the use of electronic surveillance. If the order had no defect on the face of it, then defence counsel had no right whatever to determine whether the warrant was issued properly.

Since we are now talking about postal interceptions, and particularly in the light of national security, I am disturbed even further. In the case of postal interception there is no judicial warrant; it is a warrant under the proposed legislation of the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais). Who watches the Solicitor General? Under the proposed legislation, no one watches the holder of that office.

A colleague of the Minister of Transport said last night—I do not think he was advancing this as a proposed amendment, although he was certainly advancing it as a suggestion for discussion by the committee—that the Solicitor General in his annual report should report to a committee of three judges of the Supreme Court of Canada. I put forward, again for discussion last night, the suggestion that before a warrant is issued we might consider a system whereby, on the national security side under the Official Secrets Act, the Solicitor General, rather than being the judge of whether a warrant should be issued, should be the applicant to a judge for a warrant.

I do not necessarily advance this as a policy of my party because I believe that the motion today is right on target and should be sent to a committee for extensive study. If I had the good fortune to be a member of such a committee I would not feel I was examining anything in the abstract. I would feel that suggestions such as the one which came from a Liberal member last night regarding reporting annually to a three-man committee of the Supreme Court of Canada would be an important and vital proposition to discuss. This is something very urgent and not in the abstract at all. Similarly, I hope that such a committee would consider the suggestion I made last night, that the Solicitor General should be the applicant for a warrant rather than the issuing officer for a warrant to intercept mail.

There are those who might argue that such a course would be an abdication of ministerial responsibility to the judiciary. I am willing to be persuaded, although I fail to follow the argument presently. It is one which has been advanced from time to time but, again, I would not anticipate that a discussion in committee about such a thing would be a discussion in the abstract. I believe it to be rather mundane. If I wished to be highly partisan here, I could say that under no circumstances is an abdication of the doctrine of ministerial ignorance advanced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whereunder if a minister is ignorant of a situation he is not responsible for the situation. I will refrain from doing that, Mr. Speaker, but under the more commonly accepted doctrines of ministerial responsibility I would think an argument could be sustained wherein judges of the Supreme Court of Canada could be the issuing authority, without taking away one whit from ministerial responsibility, of warrants under the proposed legislation to permit the interception of mail.

My final point, Mr. Speaker, goes back to what the Minister of Transport said earlier today. He kept using such words as "rhetoric" so often that it was sometimes very hard to get the point he was making. I do not wish to do him an injustice, but it seems to me he was suggesting that publicity, attendant upon a trial such as the Treu trial, would work against the interests of justice. I really cannot accept that premise. I was always under the impression that publicity protects against injustice.

An hon. Member: Right!

Mr. Jarvis: I always thought of that as a principle. As an officer of the court and as a defence counsel I always accepted the principle that one of the important things in the administration of law was publicity. I always attached importance to the view that publicity in itself worked to prevent either injustice in a specific case or future injustice. Yet if I understood the Minister of Transport today, he appeared to be advancing the proposition that publicity about a trial such as the Treu case would work an injustice or would constitute an attack on the judicial system. I do not see that point of view.

I am quite anxious to read the report of what the minister said because, as I have indicated, I found him difficult to follow because of his rhetoric. When we have trials in secret, without publicity, no one can gauge the wisdom of the verdict, no one can gauge the fairness of the sentence and, most important of all, no one can gauge whether or not a secret trial was necessary in the first place to protect the interest of the state. On these three crucial points no one, least of all the public, can sit in judgment as to the efficacy of that particular trial.

To my colleagues, particularly to those on the government side, I commend the necessity of taking some form of positive action wherein the Official Secrets Act is reviewed by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, by a special select committee or by some parliamentary committee, rather than waiting for some legislation or white paper from the government. To do otherwise, in my view, would be to deny this country and its citizens, the justice they have earned and the justice they deserve.

I am most obliged to my colleague, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Peace River, for bringing this motion before us today and I am most pleased to have had the opportunity of participating in the debate, one which I believe to be of the utmost importance.

● (1522)

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as members of the House will realize, I am not in my normally fine voice today. I therefore would not have sought to rise to present my views to the House, particularly on the essential subject matter of the hon. member's motion, the Official Secrets Act, if it were not for the speech by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the speech of my colleague the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) which touched upon the question of freedom of information or access to public documents.

No doubt the parliamentary secretary will later be replying to the various interesting speeches which have been made by members on all sides of the House which relate to the Official Secrets Act. I would like to confine my remarks to the question of freedom of information which the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville virtually challenged me to speak about today. In the face of such a challenge, I would find it hard to resist informing the House as to what is the present situation.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said something to the effect—I may be paraphrasing but I think not inaccurately—that too much is secret around this place, that there is not enough openness in government administration. I want to say right off that both I and the government agree entirely with that statement as I have paraphrased it. We do agree that too much in the conduct of the business of the federal government, indeed one might say of all levels of government in Canada, is carried on in a confidential manner, behind closed doors and away from public scrutiny.

It may be interesting on some occasion to try to analyse the historical reasons why that should be the case. It may spring from the fact that the power of government was the power of the Crown. Gradually the Commons undermined that authority of the Crown; but the legacy of that process was the basic principle that the conduct of the business of the Crown was decided upon in secret. It may be in some ways a reflection of the traditions of parliamentary government.

In parliamentary government, as Bagehot described it a century ago, the principle was that responsibility was focused clearly in the hands of a prime minister and a government responsible to the Crown. They were judged through decisions of the House of Commons, through the decisions of the public, on the basis of their accomplishments, on the basis of their policies and on the basis of the legislation which they publicly presented. The process of arriving at that point of presentation, the planning, the consideration, the calculation of what was to be done and said, was away from the eye of the public or the opposition because it was, in effect, the results of government which were being judged and assessed by the Commons.

Whatever the historical reasons might be for the development of these traditions of secrecy and confidentiality, it is certainly a paradox that in the last quarter of the twentieth century so much in government should be hedged about by doctrines of confidentiality and practices of secrecy. We find this not only in the presentation of advice of civil servants to ministers. We find it not only in the deliberations of the cabinet. We find it in the deliberations of various caucuses of the parties of this House of Commons which are carried on behind closed doors, away from the public view. There is in some ways a legacy of the use of confidentiality which, I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, is in the present context, the context of the twentieth century, an unfortunate tradition which has carried this far.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville invited me to associate myself and all members to associate themselves with the paragraph which he read from the Franks report. I do that with glad heart. Lord Franks describes the conditions which require openness in government, the danger of arbitrary and unjust decisions being taken by totalitarian governments which maintain secrecy. I would go further than Lord Franks and say that the doctrine that the government must be open, that administration must be open, that the research, material and information to government must be open, really springs from the doctrine of universal suffrage.

It was said in the nineteenth century in Great Britain by one British commentator when the act of universal manhood suffrage was passed that we must educate our masters. The implication was that now that power was in the hands of the people, they must be educated about their responsibilities since they would be determining the course of the nation.

I am not sure I would use the word "educated" in mid-twentieth century. I would say it is an obligation that they be informed. If people are to vote, if they are to present to government their view of what should be done, it must be on the basis of the knowledge of alternatives open to government, the information on which decisions are taken. Without full information on the basis of decision making, it will be difficult for them to exercise intelligently the vote, the responsibility and the power which the franchise gives to them.

The government therefore recognizes the need for open government. It not only agrees and accepts that it should be the case, but urges that that principle should be the basis of its administrative practices. It accepts, urges, and indeed in the green paper which I presented to the House on access to public documents accepted as a basic principle that the information and the material which is in the hands of government should be available to the public.

The green paper which I presented to the House embarked on the process of finding the most effective ways of making that principle a living reality within the Government of Canada and its administrative dependencies. The paper was presented to the House for the very real purpose of stimulating discussion and providing the basis for debate.

I think that most if not all members of the House recognize that there are certain areas of public documents which it would not necessarily be in the public interest to reveal. A moment ago the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville cited a paragraph from the Franks report. I think he had a careful eye upon you, Mr. Speaker, at the time. He felt that he should close his quotation from that report because he saw you ready to stand before he had quite arrived at the end of it. Perhaps I could read the paragraph. Lord Franks was describing the necessity of openness, a necessity which I certainly accept. He went on to say:

> A government which pursues secret aims, or which operates in greater secrecy than the effective conduct of its proper functions requires, or which turns information services into propaganda agencies, will lose the trust of the people. It will be countered by ill-informed and destructive criticism. Its critics will try to break down all barriers erected to preserve secrecy, and they will disclose all that they can, by whatever means, discover. As a result matters will be revealed when they ought to remain secret in the interests of the nation.

I think most, if not all members, will accept that there are some matters which should not be accessible to the public. That does not in any way derogate from the essential principle which should govern our actions.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre touched upon one area, an area which has considerably exercised me, namely that there may be upon occasion a conflict or, it would be better to say, a tension between the rights to privacy and the rights to public knowledge. He cited in particular the case of income tax returns.

He cited also the fact that 40 years ago he presented a piece of legislation and in the intervening years he had become more concerned with the rights of poorer people. I find it impossible to believe that the hon. member could become more concerned with the rights of poorer people, a determination that he has shown throughout his parliamentary career. He recognized that there could be a conflict between the possession in the hands of government of tax information which the individual citizen, even if only an individual citizen with an income of $150,000 a year, would have a right to protect, a right to privacy that in some ways was a limitation therefore upon the right to know.

I doubt that there are many members of the House of Commons who want to allow the public to have the capacity to force the federal government, when preparing for a conference with the provinces, to disgorge its negotiating position or the basis upon which it wishes to undertake those negotiations one week or two weeks before the conference is to take place. To make the example more clear, I am sure most hon. members would not want the public to be able to insist on knowing what kind of negotiating position the government is considering in relation to some international negotiations.

Apart entirely from what we might call the narrow area of national security, there are public interests, which I think all hon. members would recognize, which relate to certain documents held within government.

The task which the green paper outlined as essential was not simply the establishment of the basic principle that information which is available to the government should also be available to the public; the green paper also recognized that there will have to be, however strongly that principle is established, certain exceptions to that principle.

I must confess that in government we found it difficult to wrestle with the problem of the precise definition of what those exemptions and exceptions could or should be and to find language which would adequately respond to the problem. That was one of the reasons why in the green paper on access to public documents we put before the public a variety of possible interpretations. For instance, we asked whether it would be acceptable to adopt the wording which exists in the United States freedom of information act or, alternatively, we wondered if it would be preferable to use the wording which was being considered by the parliament or the government of Australia. We were open to suggestions as to how these exceptions, which will be necessary, can be worded to make them as precise and narrow as possible. That was one area of controversy which was outlined in the green paper. I am glad to say that there has been a great deal of public discussion about it.

Another controversial matter is the question of what kind of review process should be applied to the application of those exemptions or exceptions. If one does admit that there must be some exceptions to the basic principle, then there is the basic question of who is to decide on the application of those exemptions and whether any specific document falls within their confines.

In the green paper we presented, as a basis for discussion, five varying approaches as to how that review process might be exercised. I know that there are some who regard the green paper process as a disguised dressing up of a determined government conviction. They feel that rather than genuinely presenting matters for discussion we have some design which has already been determined and that this is a means of obfuscating essential issues.

I want it to be clear to members of this House and to the public that that is definitely not the case. There has not been a predetermined government position on how the question of the exemptions and the review process should be handled. There was a genuine desire to have the input of that very valuable committee of which the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) is co-chairman. There was a desire to have its views as well as the views of the public. It was with that purpose in mind that the green paper was referred to the joint committee of which the hon. member for Peace River and a distinguished member of the other place are co-chairmen. I hestitate to say this, but I thought that the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) might have been—unintentionally, I am sure—slightly unjust to the hon. member for Peace River when he implied that the hon. member was in some way dragging his feet on this issue.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville urged me to take action without waiting for the report of the joint committee, but I know that the deliberations of the committee have been active, and I can say honestly that they have been extremely useful. I know that the joint committee plans to report some time before the end of this month. At least, we hope it will be before the end of this month, and I am very much looking forward to the conclusions the committee will draw from the hearings which have already been held.

The presentation of briefs to the committee has in itself been a very useful process. It has enabled us to get a sense of perspective regarding the views of interested organizations on the matter. I can assure the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville that we are going ahead and that I am now preparing proposals for my cabinet colleagues on this matter. In a sense I am not really waiting for the final report of the committee, but I am reassuring hon. members that when the report of the committee appears later this month it will certainly have an impact on the proposals I make. I will certainly not come forward with any final proposals until I have had a chance to assess the views the committee brings forward.

I want to assure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville that as a government we are determined to proceed to the implementation of the principles which those hon. members, myself and all members of this House accept, the basic principle being that the information in the hands of the government must be available to the public. We know that there are aspects of the question which are complex. I have wrestled with them. The hon. member for Peace River has wrestled with them. The Joint Standing Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has wrestled with them. The committee is coming forward with its report. I will be presenting proposals to my colleagues. It is very much my hope that I will be presenting legislation in this regard early in the new session. Progress is being made. I hope the House will understand that the commitment of the government to this principle is fundamental. We shall proceed as expeditiously and efficaciously as we possibly can.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) for his efforts over the last number of weeks and for his determination in trying to bring a very sad state of Canadian affairs to light. I think the intent of the motion he has put forward today is the very minimum position this House should adopt. When I say "this House", I include the government. This matter should be referred to a committee.

I suggest that this government should take the position being taken by the hon. member for Peace River when he asks the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) to apply to the court to declare a mistrial. I suggest that a new trial should be directed and that that trial should be held in the open.

We heard some comments earlier today by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). In his efforts to put down the mover of this motion he spoke quietly and with repetition. I feel that he spoke in this way because he had such a weak case. He does not have the facts on his side, so he used up his 20 minutes quietly trying to accuse others of doing things he feels they should not have done.

This is the forum in which things of national importance are brought forward to be discussed, and today we are dealing with a matter of crucial importance to the democratic way of life we believe we have here in Canada, that is, civil liberties and rights being guaranteed to human beings.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) also deplored certain aspects of the presentation of the hon. member for Peace River. He went on to point out that he agreed with certain parts of the Franks report dealing with the official secrets act of England. I felt that there was much prattle but not very much substance in the three speeches from the government side.

We have heard from the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts). He did not talk about the resolution at all. He spoke about freedom of information, which has been discussed for four or five years. If members of the government would stop talking, do something concrete and put something before the House—which could have been done three years ago—we would be well on the way. However, they have been prattling quietly today because the facts as they appear in this case indicate that perhaps a wrong course of action has been taken in Canada.

I have always been a very proud Canadian. I suppose I am nationalistic, and I am somewhat embarrassed by the fact that there has been a trial in this country which has been held in absolute and total secrecy. I am not ashamed of my country, I am not ashamed of our way of life, but I am embarrassed about this.

• (1542)

Perhaps I can draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that on February 15, 1977, as reported at page 3041 of Hansard, the former member for Eglinton, the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, stated that Canada was the strongest proponent of basket three incorporated in the final act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, popularly known as the Helsinki Agreement. He went on to move a motion under Standing Order 43 which read as follows:

> That the Secretary of State for External Affairs convey to the government of the Soviet Union the disappointment and deep concern of the elected representatives of the Canadian people in parliament assembled at the arrest of Alexander Ginsberg, Mykola Rundenko, Alexy Tikhy and Yuri Orlov.

What he was doing in that motion was condemning an act in the judicial proceedings and the way in which things were carried out in the Soviet Union which is foreign to our ways in this country. We did not feel it was right and therefore we condemned it.

On March 2, 1978 a motion was put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche), seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), under Standing Order 43 which read as follows:

> That the Canadian government request the Soviet government for permission to appoint an official observer at the trial of Anatoly Shcharansky on charges of treason so that the wide international community of concerned people can be assured that justice is done in this very important human rights case and, further, that the Canadian government repeat its offer to give immediate landed immigrant status to Mr. Shcharansky.

We as the House expressed concern in an official motion which has been adopted, and yet now we are saying that we do not even want the Canadian people to know what is going on at a secret trial in our own country. It seems absolutely absurd.

We find further that on Thursday, May 18 of this year, the following motion under Standing Order 43 was put forward by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and seconded by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen):

That this House deplores the trial and extremely severe sentence given Yuri Orlov by the Soviet Union for his activities with the Moscow-Helsinki group, activities which in Canada would be perfectly acceptable.

We deplored that trial because it was held partially in secret and foreign correspondents and journalists were not allowed to attend. Yet here in our own country we have a trial which was held in absolute secrecy. How can we speak out of both sides of our mouth at the same time from this chamber? Therefore, I hope that the government will move, as was suggested by the hon. member for Peace River a couple of days ago, that the trial be declared to have been a mistrial and that the next trial be held in the open.

Having secret trials makes people think of, perhaps, Danté's "Inferno", the Star Chamber practices which took place in years gone by, or perhaps the practices that took place in Europe during the second world war. I think many people would want to forget that. We in a free, democratic country want to know that we have the right to free, public and open trials, because it is only by having a free, open and public trial that justice can not only be done but can be seen to be done.

I would like to sketch in a few things. It is my understanding that Alexander Peter Treu in 1974 had his documents seized for the first time and finally, after two years, charges were brought against him in 1976. After he had been charged in Canada, he was given contracts by NATO on security matters. I understand that the last contract was given to him in 1977 and even now that he is sentenced he is still working on that contract. I suppose that if he had not appealed and had gone to jail, he would be doing work on NATO's communication system. Would that not be interesting! This seems ludicrous, but that is what has actually happened in this case. What concerns me is that, even if there were a technical breach in this case, there is a judgment on the minister as to whether or not he would prosecute.

According to some of the comments the judge is alleged to have made in passing sentence, Peter Alexander Treu is not a criminal and cannot be considered a criminal. He is a brilliant man and he is continuing to do his work, but in a technical way he has breached the law. If it is a technicality, why was discretion under section 10 of the Official Secrets Act not applied? Section 10 says "may be arrested"; so a person may be arrested but does not have to be arrested. There is also discretion under section 12, which states:

A prosecution for an offence under this act shall not be instituted except by or with the consent of the Attorney General;—

The Attorney General of Canada had to give his consent, so again there was an overact after the delay, even though, at the very most, it might have been a technical breach of the law. Then in section 15 the Attorney General can elect whether to go by way of summary conviction or by way of indictment. Summary conviction carries a fine not exceeding $500 and imprisonment is not to exceed 12 months. But they proceeded by indictment, which could mean imprisonment up to 14 years.

What is interesting was that Treu was charged under section 4 of our Official Secrets Act, which is equivalent to section 2 of the British official secrets act. But the British official secrets act limits penalties under section 2 to two years, whereas our act carries a much more onerous penalty of up to 14 years. Bearing in mind those considerations and the overact by the Attorney General of Canada in exercising his discretion in proceeding by way of indictment and allowing a prosecution to take place, all this is of great concern to us and should be of concern to all Canadians.

It has been brought out that there have been only eight prosecutions under the present Official Secrets Act. The British official secrets act was first passed in Great Britain in 1889. It was adopted in the Canadian Criminal Code in 1892. It became a new statute and was passed in England in 1911. We adopted the statute holus-bolus in Canada until the Statute of Westminster in 1931. Technically we relied on the Criminal Code provisions without having an official secrets law between 1931 and 1939 when we adopted our Official Secrets Act modelled on the one passed in Great Britain in 1911. As I said, there have only been eight prosecutions under the act, but for the first time in Canadian history a trial has been carried out in Canada in complete secrecy.

The Gouzenko trial and the Rose trial were not held in secrecy. An application was made in front of an open court for portions of the trial to be held in secrecy because of certain reasons which were stated. Thus there was exclusion of the public for a short period of time. When the sensitive area had been dealt with, reporters were allowed back into court.

In 1961 the public was admitted to the trial of the Biernacki case, in which he was acquitted before he went back to Poland. In 1967 at the time of the Featherstone case, again press reporters and the public were allowed to attend. During that trial an application was made to exclude the public from portions of it.

I should like to indicate that I have carefully researched the law in this regard. Perhaps I am somewhat unique. Unlike the Minister of Transport and the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville who are knowledgeable in theoretical approaches to the law, having been deans of universities, my experience has been a far cry different. Many persons who have studied law often wonder why they bothered to attend university, particularly when one compares the theoretical approach at university to the practice of law in the courts.

I have had an opportunity to prosecute on behalf of the Crown in Canada, wherein I made applications under section 44(2) of the Criminal Code which provides for excluding the public from all or portions of a trial. Because evidence was going to be disclosed indicating the procedure Bell Canada used to make credit card numbers, on one occasion it was necessary to make an application for exclusion of the public. The accused was being charged for a telecommunications theft. I explained to the judge that it would be necessary to establish how credit card numbers were arrived at. If that information was given in an open court, anyone who was present could make up a credit card number. Thus, the entire system would have been frustrated. Because it was not to the benefit of the public, the spectators were removed from the courtroom for approximately 15 minutes while this evidence was adduced. After that sensitive technical information was established, the public and the press were allowed to return to the courtroom. Only under special circumstances should that be done.

I should like to refer to some of the most important cases historically regarding this matter, such as the Scott versus Scott case which was heard by the Privy Council of the House of Lords. At that time Viscount Haldane is reported as saying the following:

> In cases in other courts, where all that is at stake is the individual rights of the parties, which they are free to waive, a judge can exclude the public if he demits his capacity as a judge and sits as an arbitrator.

In other words, it cannot be done if he stays on as a judge. He continued as follows:

> . . . in the final reasons for his judgment, on the ground that justice could not be done in the particular case before him if it were not heard in camera.

He was discussing a case where counsel wanted a portion of it held in secrecy. He continued:

> My Lords, provided that the principle is applied with great care and is not stretched to cases where there is not a strict necessity for invoking it, I do not dissent from this view of the existing law.

He expressed the existing law as follows:

> While the broad principle is that the courts of this country must, as between parties, administer justice in public, this principle is subject to apparent exceptions, such as those to which I have referred. But the exceptions are themselves the outcome of a yet more fundamental principle that the chief object of courts of justice must be to secure that justice is done.

In other words, no matter what one may have to bear in front of the public's eye, it has to be done, because under common law a secret trial or portions thereof can be conducted only if it is for the protection of certain individuals and their rights. This matter dealt with immoral conduct involving children and lunatics. In order to provide a witness with some protection from being shot, for example, and in order for justice to be done, the request was made.

> But the burden lies on those seeking to displace its application in the particular case to make out that the ordinary rule must as of necessity be superseded by this paramount consideration.

The paramount consideration is that justice must be done. He continued:

> The latter must treat it as one of principle, and as turning, not on convenience, but on necessity
> In either case he must satisfy the court that by nothing short of the exclusion of the public can justice be done . . .
> A mere desire to consider feelings of delicacy or to exclude from publicity details which it would be desirable not to publish is not, I repeat, enough as the law now stands.

That common law principle was expanded and relied upon in the case of Rex versus Lewes Prison (Governor), Doyle, ex parte. The case involved a court martial which was held in secrecy in Dublin in 1914. That was because martial law was in existence at the time. Dublin was under martial law because the IRA were in revolt. There was concern that the courtroom might be blown up, or at least that witnesses would have been shot either in the courtroom or in retaliation afterward. In order for justice to be done, it was necessary to conduct the trial in secrecy. Otherwise the trial could not have been carried out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In conclusion, I should like to point out that nowhere can I find in civil cases, criminal cases or cases conducted under the Official Secrets Act in Canada, an example of a total trial being held in secrecy. Applications for exclusion have been made only for sensitive parts.

In the Treu case, upon the charge being read and the plea being entered, an application was made and secrecy was invoked carte blanche for the entire trial. It is unfortunate that not even the reasons for doing so were given publicly.

In the Tomasz Biernacki case, the accused was a hydraulic engineer. In his case, much of the evidence at the preliminary hearing was heard in public; but from time to time the judge ordered journalists present not to publish certain pieces of information involving national security matters. That was because the Official Secrets Act indicated that all or any portion of the public may be excluded. In other words, the judge may order average citizens out of the courtroom, at the same time as telling press reporters that they can remain. For example, the judge could order that all women have to leave the courtroom but that the men are allowed to remain, or vice versa. In the Biernacki case most of the evidence was heard in public.

In the 1967 Featherstone case, most of the evidence was heard in public; but the judge excluded reporters and spectators from the courtroom to protect the identity of undercover RCMP agents. The judge authorized the official court reporter to make available a transcript of the closed door testimony, provided the agents were not identified. Even though it was necessary to protect certain elements of secrecy, they went to extremes to make it as public as possible. "Public" means an open and public courtroom.

I should like to refer to the case of Mr. Treu and an article which appeared in the April 29 edition of the Globe and Mail. It was written by a Mr. Jeff Sallot and reads as follows:

> RCMP Sergeant D. R. McElroy, one of the investigators, told reporters there were "entire days of evidence" that didn't concern classified material.

● (1602)

Why was the public not there? The article continues as follows:

> But it was better not to have the public present because there was no way of determining in advance if questions by the defence would get into national security areas.

The defence counsel could easily have been warned by the judge—I have seen it happen many times, and have been warned myself—that he was going too far. If necessary they could have made orders for exclusion as they were needed.

I have been informed that the Crown prosecutor in this case also did a search but could not find any precedent in law which showed a complete trial held in secrecy in Canada. He has no knowledge of any such precendent although he did some research into the matter.

It is stated in an article which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of May 29, 1978 by Lew Diggs of the Canadian Press:

> But prosecutor Handfield said "the whole transcript would have to remain secret" even if it was reviewed today. The only possible exception, he added, was testimony from an RCMP officer who raided Treu's west-end home March 29, 1974, and hauled off about 500 pounds of documents, some of which were used in the trial.

The prosecutor indicated that there were areas in respect of which it was not necessary for the public to be excluded, as there would have been had matters of state secrecy been involved. So we have the prosecutor and one of the investigators both suggesting that the public could have been admitted. I do not know how we in this country can tolerate such a thing as a secret trial from beginning to end. I suggest that is intolerable and in this case it is unfortunate.

I want to refer to a very much celebrated British case, that of George Blake. I have a copy here of an editorial which appeared in the Toronto Sun of May 17, 1977.

> The article says that when Soviet master spy George Blake has a secret trial in Britain at least the opening and the closing sessions were open to the public. The evidence at those sessions was so damning and compromising to the state that it could not be revealed in total, and Blake was sentenced to 42 years. Then he escaped to Moscow.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to point out something that apparently has not been brought forward, and of which I think the Minister of Justice should be made aware. Let me read sections 14(1) and (2) of the Official Secrets Act as follows:

> For the purposes of the trial of a person for an offence under this Act, the offence shall be deemed to have been committed either at the place in which the offence actually was committed, or at any place in Canada in which the offender may be found.
> In addition and without prejudice to any powers that a court may possess to order the exclusion of the public from any proceedings if, in the course of proceedings before a court against any person for an offence under this Act or the proceedings on appeal, application is made by the prosecution—

I want to emphasize those words "in the course of proceedings". You must make an application in the course of proceedings; but the application in the case to which we have reference was made before the trial got under way. A trial is not under way until after a plea has been entered. In this case they did not wait until the course of proceedings. The section of the act states:

> —if, in the course of proceedings before a court against any person for an offence under this Act or the proceedings on appeal, application is made by the prosecution, on the ground that the publication of any evidence to be given or of any statement to be made in the course of the proceedings—

Again, I would emphasize the words "in the course of proceedings" having regard to evidence to be given or statements made. It continues as follows:

> —would be prejudicial to the interest of the State—

In other words, you can only make the application during the course of the proceedings for exclusion during the giving of evidence or the making of a statement which would be prejudicial to the interests of the state. There is not to be a carte blanche order in this country for the closing of a trial. There must be a good reason, and that is stated in the act. The act goes on to state, and I want to emphasize this:

> —that all or any portion of the public shall be excluded during any part of the hearing—

Let me emphasize again the words "any part of the hearing, the court may make an order". It says "any part". It does not say the court can make an order in respect of the whole, but rather any part. I have not yet found a dictionary that describes "part" as being equal to the "whole". The statute says specifically a part of the trial, not the whole trial.

Even though the defence lawyer sat silent, as I understand it, or said he had no representations at that time, I do not understand how a judge looking at the law could make a decision that a "part" all of a sudden becomes the "whole". I will never know how that was done, because that is not what the law states.

With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, let me encourage members of the House in every way possible to accept the suggestion included in this motion; that we find some way of referring the subject matter to the committee. I hope the Minister of Justice will seriously consider the earlier question by the hon. member for Peace River as to whether he would direct a mistrial and order a new trial to be held in public, with some of the evidence being heard in secret, namely, those parts that are truly important to the national interest.

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, before commencing my comments today I should like to commend all members of the House who I have heard participate in the debate so far. It appears very much to me that the debate has been straight forward and worth while. I congratulate those persons who have spoken for the largely calm and deliberate tone they have set. The matter has had a fairly thorough airing today.

Members on all sides of this House are concerned about these serious matters. That is quite apparent, and I think that speaks very well for parliament and its day to day work. The conduct of the debate so far has been exemplary.

Let me preface my remarks by making one point regarding the motion for the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). He does include in his motion the following comment:

> —this House notes with concern the secret trial of Alexander Peter Treu and the harassment of the Toronto Sun and its editor, Peter Worthington, under the provisions of the Official Secrets Act—

I could have risen earlier but I did not want to do so. I mention the matter now in only the most cautionary way. Members have had very great respect today for the sub judice rule and have stuck to the main issues of the debate rather than reflecting upon the two cases mentioned. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) did make one or two remarks about the merit of those cases, but soon returned to the main point.

It is interesting to note, since there have been comments today about what the British parliament does in relation to its official secrets act, how the British House also treats the sub judice rule. Let me refer to Erskine May, nineteenth edition, at page 427. Under the heading "Matters pending judicial decision", May states:

> Matters awaiting the adjudication of a court of law should not be brought forward in debate, subject to the right of the House to legislate on any matter;

It goes on in the subsequent paragraph to state:

> Following the first report of the Select Committee on Procedure, 1962-63, the House passed a resolution (23 July 1963) which set out the rule in detail. This resolution bars references in debate (as well as in motions and questions) to matters awaiting or under adjudication in all courts exercising a criminal jurisdiction and in courts martial from the moment the law is set in motion by a charge being made to the time when verdict and sentence have been announced, and again when notice of appeal is given until the appeal is decided;—

● (1612)

That rule sets out a wise caution on matters of procedure and of debate such as we are into. I am not so sure if this were the British House that this same motion would have been allowed to be brought forward this afternoon by an hon. member, such as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), in the same wording and debated in the same fashion.

This side of the House has participated quite willingly in the debate this afternoon, and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) himself said somewhat earlier in the course of the session at page 3882 of Hansard:

> This House has established a committee to examine the privileges and immunities of members of parliament, including the application of the Official Secrets Act. That examination is necessary and, in my view, urgent. It is essential to protect the position of members of parliament to continue to be able to speak freely and candidly in carrying out the responsibilities that we bear on behalf of our constituents and the country at large without any harassment.

I point that out because the hon. member for Peace River in his speech this afternoon spoke of the harassment of an individual and a newspaper corporation. I think it explains quite adequately the position of the Minister of Justice.

The wording of the motion by the hon. member for Peace River gives me some trouble. To me, it is not just a mere reference to a matter before the courts, but it strikes me that the hon. member bases his motion to examine the Official Secrets Act on the obvious premise that the courts are no longer able to discharge their function of ensuring that the criminal process is not used for abusive ends. Where will it all end? Are we then to abolish all courts of appeal and refer judicial decisions to the hon. member for Peace River?

During the course of his comments, the hon. member compared the trial of Dr. Treu to the Star Chamber. I urge him to reflect upon that and to look into some law books and perhaps some legal history. The Star Chamber was a court of investigation and torture from which there was no appeal. To make reference to that infamous chamber in the context of comparing it with a modern day Canadian court with the attendant regard for due process, the rights of the accused, the presumption of innocence and the right of appeal, is something of a slight upon our judiciary, our laws and the rule of law in this country.

Does the hon. member really believe that the courts act judicially and fairly only in an open court? Is he serious in implying that Judge Trudel applied a different test to guilt or innocence in a closed court than he would have done otherwise in an open court? If the hon. member has any basis for such an allegation or such a comment on the judicial integrity, I would suggest that it is his duty to make it public. If not, then he would be doing himself, the bench, the country and this House a disservice.

Mr. Baldwin: I am waiting until the facts are made public.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, the decision to hold the trial in camera was a decision for the judge, but only after he provided an opportunity to both sides, the prosecutor and the defence, to be heard on the question. It was pointed out earlier by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) that in the Treu case the defence was given the opportunity to argue why the trial should not be held in camera, and counsel for the defence did not oppose the motion to proceed in camera.

In the course of the remarks made by the hon. member for Peace River today, he said that it may be possible to guard some secrets. He did not expand, but he said that perhaps at some time there may be a need to guard closely some secrets. However, in the course of his remarks today he called the Official Secrets Act a "stupid, tyrannical, authoritarian law deserving of contempt". I do not know how you can provide a law to protect secrets on the one hand, and on the other hand feel that it is "stupid, tyrannical, authoritarian and deserving of contempt." How can you balance those two points of view in your mind? Therefore, I am not quite sure exactly where on the real crunch of the issue the hon. member for Peace River comes down.

The hon. member said today that the scope of the Official Secrets Act should be limited to matters of national security and defence. I have yet to hear him come forward with a definition of the term "national security".

Mr. Baldwin: It is in my private member's bill. I have tabled it.

Mr. Young: I did not hear that put forward in the debate this afternoon.

Mr. Baldwin: I don't need to.

Mr. Young: Well, I did not hear it put forward in the debate this afternoon, but if the hon. member has a good definition, why did he not bring it in in the course of his remarks today?

Mr. Baldwin: Repetitious.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He has been making speeches on this subject for a long time.

Mr. Young: The other day the hon. member for Peace River said that he held no brief for Mr. Treu, yet today his hope is that the verdict will be overturned on appeal. He said that the government has "put the lights out for Mr. Treu", that there has been a "selective prosecution" of Mr. Worthington and the Toronto Sun, and that it was an "act deliberately taken". This was not the kind of feeling which was gathered by a fairly well-known member of the press corps in this building, who is perhaps a much greater friend to the Conservative party than to this party or to myself, even though, if I may say, I went to school with the gentleman at one time.

I would like to read into the record the comments of Geoffrey Stevens in the Globe and Mail on March 18 of this year. The headline is "Mr. Basford's statement: calm, intelligent, non-partisan, restrained". In the course of that editorial, these comments are found:

> Justice Minister Ron Basford, a young veteran at the age of 45, is nearing the end of a 15-year career in Parliament; he will not be a candidate in the forthcoming general election. Yesterday, Mr. Basford ensured that he will depart with distinction.
> His statement to the Commons was everything we should expect from the Attorney-General of Canada on such a grave matter. It was intelligent, carefully reasoned, non-partisan, restrained in its language and calm in its tone.

Later on in the article:

> —the government cannot ignore the leak and dissemination of documents which it deems to be vital to the security of the nation. Thus, Mr. Basford has consented to the prosecution of the Toronto Sun.
> Although it can be argued that the Sun virtually dared the government to prosecute by publishing its materal five days after the Solicitor General had first demanded that Mr. Cossitt return the document, no one likes to see a newspaper hauled into court for giving its readers information which it judges is in their interest to have.
> Freedom of the press, however, is not a licence to break the law.

Those are the remarks of a reporter who watches these proceedings nearly every day of the week we are here, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baldwin: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Young: I will take a question at the end of my remarks, if the hon. member will allow me to continue. I say that only because I have some comments grouped before me and I do not want to lose track of my thoughts.

● (1622)

I listened to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) with care because I have a great deal of respect for him. It seemed to me that his speech was built on the premise that the Official Secrets Act is bad because of the power of secrecy, because the power to hold hearings and trials in camera is built into it, and more so because he feels the scope of the act is far too wide and must be limited. I did not hear him outline a definition or a circumscribing of the scope that he felt would have been appropriate. It is much easier to be critical of a matter than to be positive; it is sometimes easier to criticize than to defend. I was always taught that one should criticize in a constructive manner. If you are going to say that the scope of something is too broad or the powers are too wide, then you should suggest a better outline of what you would like to see. But I did not hear that. I heard that the law was bad, that it was too powerful, but I did not hear what the definition of limitations of the law should be.

The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton touched upon some issues which reflected on the merits of the case. I want to be careful not to do something that I do not think anybody else should do. He referred to some comments on the supposed continuing employment of Mr. Treu. I do not want to say anything more than that those are not the facts as I understand them.

If I may deal with some of the facts involved in the case of Dr. Peter Alexander Treu, Mr. Speaker, they are that he was charged in March, 1976, on four counts under section 4(1) of the Official Secrets Act. The charges alleged in substance that Dr. Treu violated provisions of the Official Secrets Act by retaining in his possession certain documents without authority and failed to take reasonable care in the keeping of such documents. As mentioned already in public debates, the documents alleged to be in the possession of Dr. Treu were, for the most part, classified NATO documents.

After a trial held in camera, Dr. Treu was convicted on two of the four counts and was sentenced to two years in the penitentiary. Dr. Treu has appealed the decision to the court of appeal of Quebec. Shortly after his arrest on the charge he was granted bail and he continues to be free on bail pending his appeal.

Since this matter is now pending before the court of appeal it would be improper at this time to comment further on the facts of the case.

There has been considerable debate in this House and in the press concerning the decision made by the court to proceed in camera. Section 14(2) of the Official Secrets Act provides as follows:

> In addition and without prejudice to any powers that a court may possess to order the exclusion of the public from any proceedings if, in the course of proceedings before a court against any person for an offence under this Act or the proceedings on appeal, application is made by the prosecution, on the ground that the publication of any evidence to be given or of any statement to be made in the course of the proceedings would be prejudicial to the interest of the state, that all or any portion of the public shall be excluded during any part of the hearing, the court may make an order to that effect, but the passing of sentence shall in any case take place in public.

Parliament, in enacting the Official Secrets Act, did recognize that there would be instances where, by reason of the necessity to protect the interest of the state, in camera hearings would be required. Parliament, however, did not grant the state nor the prosecutor the power to unilaterally decide on the question of an in camera hearing. Parliament entrusted the judiciary with the power to make such decisions upon its being shown that the public interest would require an in camera hearing.

In comparison, Mr. Speaker, section 442(1) of the Criminal Code provides as follows:

—judge, magistrate or justice, as the case may be, is of the opinion that it is in the interest of public morals, the maintenance of order or the proper administration of justice to exclude all or any members of the public from the courtroom—

The judge may do so for all or part of the proceedings. The discretion to use in camera hearings, although used sparingly, already exists in the Criminal Code and may be exercised in those circumstances.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must inform him that his allotted time has expired. He may continue if there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: Including the answer to the question.

Mr. Young: I will try to answer the hon. member's question, Mr. Speaker. I shall be as brief as I can but I hope I will be allowed a few moments to wind up my remarks.

What I am trying to point out is that the power to have in camera proceedings is found not only in the Official Secrets Act but also in the Criminal Code. Beyond that, at a preliminary hearing a justice of the peace may also order in camera hearings when he is of the opinion that the ends of justice will be best served by such an order as provided in section 465(1)(j).

A number of other provisions in the code, although they do not affect the right of the public to be present in the courtroom, affect the right of the media to publish the proceedings. Section 467 provides that a justice must, on the application of an accused, prohibit the publication of evidence adduced at a preliminary inquiry.

Section 470 prohibits the publication of a confession of an accused adduced at a preliminary inquiry.

Section 457.2 provides that a justice may, and must upon request by an accused, prohibit publication of evidence given at a bail hearing.

Section 442(3) provides that in trials pertaining to certain sexual offences the judge must, if the prosecutor so requests, order that the name of the victim and her evidence shall not be published.

Those are instances, far removed from the Official Secrets Act but found in the laws of this country, in which the public may be excluded from a trial. In essence, that part of the trial may be conducted in camera—such as was done under the Official Secrets Act—or the publication of evidence given in a trial may be barred or banned by a judge. That prevents its being given to those outside the courtroom where the trial was held by a newspaper or radio or television station.

Instances where the public may be excluded from a courtroom in criminal proceedings or where limitations on publication of evidence adduced may be imposed are not unique to the Official Secrets Act. The reasons for such limitations are self-evident and are designed to facilitate the administration of justice and protect the rights of accused as well as the victims of sexual offences.

In matters where state secrets are involved, some of which relate to sensitive defence secrets, can it not be advanced that it is quite legitimate and proper to grant courts the necessary powers to protect against the undue disclosure of such information? On balance, should it not be common ground that important state secrets, the disclosure of which might affect the security of Canada and its allies, warrant as much protection against unnecessary public disclosure as matters involving public morals? If it is proper to grant to the court the powers referred to in section 442 of the Criminal Code, I suggest it is as proper to give the courts the discretion provided for in section 14(2) of the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Dick: Part of the trial, not the whole trial.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I reiterate that in this case the Crown prosecutor, during the course of a public hearing, at the outset of the trial—and I say this for the benefit of the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton—moved the court to order an in-camera hearing for reasons which I think have already been given today by the Minister of Transport or the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville. The defence attorney made no representation to that question, Mr. Speaker. That was done in public. The court thereafter immediately ordered that the trial proceed in camera. In its remarks the court interpreted the attitude of the defence counsel as meaning that he had no particular objection to that order being made.

Just in closing, Mr. Speaker, I understand that counsel for Mr. Treu spoke openly within the last couple of weeks to a meeting of the bar; I believe it was an annual meeting held in Quebec. I do not know whether there is any transcript of those remarks but I am given to understand that counsel for Mr. Treu did speak openly and did make some references to the trial. I do not wish to take anything out of context, but I am of the understanding that counsel for the defendant accepted the proposition that there are matters relating to national security which cannot be discussed in public and that such matters arose in the Treu case, which led the court to make the decision it did for national security reasons and thus ordered the trial to proceed in camera.

I also understand that the impression gained from some who were in attendance was that defence counsel was quite happy with the handling of the matter by the court. The hon. member for Peace River shakes his head, but it is my understanding that defence counsel was quite happy to accept the fact that judges are given power to make such decisions, that they have the responsibility to make such determinations, and I know of no cause for complaint in respect to the manner in which the learned justice conducted the trial. I know of no complaint arising to date—at least none has come to my attention—that the judge had discharged his responsibilities in anything other than a proper manner.

If the point hon. members opposite are trying to make today is that the Official Secrets Act is so damnable because of its extent and scope, or because it contains within it the power to hold a trial in camera, then I would have expected to have heard reflections in the debate on the Criminal Code on the powers given to justices of the peace and the powers given to judges to ban publication. We have heard nothing of those things, Mr. Speaker, although there may be someone to follow my contribution who will incorporate some such remarks into his speech. But so far we have heard none of those arguments.

I think it is true to say—and I hope not trite—that the party which gains the majority of the seats in an election is the party chosen to form a government. Upon it is thrust a great deal of responsibility to carry out the affairs of the country within the context of the laws by which we are all governed. I guess there is some degree of trust by the people of this country in those who are elected and then subsequently appointed to the ministry. I suppose we all share some degree of trust that in this democratic society those responsibilities will be carried out in a proper way and that our trust will be in the good hands of those who become members of the cabinet. Upon those people who are in charge of leading this country, in the context of their daily work, comes a good deal of information. Some of it is very sensitive and some of it is necessarily secret, and it is incumbent upon them to guard that information so that it may be used in the best interest of us all in this country.

An hon. Member: You are not in favour of freedom of information?

Mr. Young: I am not saying I am not in favour of freedom of information. I am saying that there is a trust placed in members of cabinet. They have to accept it and exercise their responsibilities diligently. There are some secrets which must be guarded and I know it must become very difficult. I am not saying that the hon. member for Peace River has no point whatever to make. I am not saying he is not a conscientious member or that he has not put forward a point or philosophy which bears examination and good, solid debate. I welcome these things because I share the concern which he has expressed in this House, that of an upstanding, honest member of parliament. That is fair game, fair comment in debate in this place.

Upon members on this side, particularly those in the cabinet, is thrust the responsibility of a difficult job to do. I am sure that the burden of some of the information which comes their way is not always welcomed on their shoulders. But they have that job to carry out and they must guard it carefully. That is a crunch decision to make. There has to be a way of doing it carefully. There is a necessity to carry it out, although at times it may be difficult. In my opinion that trust has been carried out admirably by people on this side, fairly and in a proper manner.

I do not wish to overstep the kindness and courtesy hon. members have allowed me in granting a few extra minutes to conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, and I will therefore break off at this point. There are a few more points I would have liked to make but I will conclude at this time because I understand the hon. member for Peace River wished to ask me a question.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I pass the baton on to my hon. friend from Saskatoon-Biggar.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The old winder-upper!

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pointed out, it seems to be my place to try to bring many debates in this House at least close to conclusion. I spend less time in this chamber, I am sure, than the hon. member but I seem to spend an inordinate amount of time catching up and trying to bring into perspective some of the comments which have been made and some of the deliberations which have gone on.

I wish first to commend and compliment my seatmate, the distinguished member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), for bringing to the attention of the House, through his motion today, a matter which I think is of utmost importance at this particular time. It is one which has caused people who give serious consideration to civil liberties in our country to feel great concern.

Notwithstanding some of the comments we have heard, which I take to represent official government attitude, I would not want to suggest that the parliamentary secretary, on the basis of the remarks he made, would be awarded the civil libertarian of the year award in this country or any other jurisdiction at least as far as I can make out.

There is a place for civil liberties in this country. I know the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) may not agree with that view. In fact he may hold a contrary view. However, notwithstanding some of the activities of this administration, there is still room for civil liberties in this country. If he wants to take the contrary position, maybe the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) will yield his place and allow him to pursue that so that we can understand his position.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is a little unfair for the hon. member to suggest that I am against civil liberties because of an interjection that I made.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member might have a private point or a point of debate, but it is certainly not a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Maybe that will teach the hon. member not to interject as he does. He is renowned for his capacity to speak from the seat of his pants.

There are other points that have to be made. It is not as though the hon. member for Peace River is making an isolated plea on the basis of the motion he has presented today. I was surprised that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Young) quoted from Geoffrey Stevens as being the basis of absolute truth and perception in all things. We in the opposition understand as well as anyone that his perception with regard to the Gallup poll results last week sometimes gives us cause for thought as to whether everything Mr. Stevens says is the absolute truth and comes from on high. Be that as it may, he is probably the sole critic of the position taken by my colleague from Peace River with regard to this matter.

I can perhaps underline that fact by making two comments. As far as I know, every newspaper, every editorial comment and every political observer commend the hon. member for Peace River on the position he has taken and castigate the government on the position it has taken with regard to this matter relating to Mr. Treu. In fact, the paper for which Mr. Stevens writes made reference to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). I wish to quote from the collected wisdom of the paper rather than an isolated columnist. I quote from an editorial in the June 7, 1978 edition of the Toronto Globe and Mail. It is a reference to the attitude and position taken by the Minister of Justice. I quote:

> Mr. Basford responded with a glib sophistry unworthy of his office.

Mr. Stevens should read that comment. The article goes on to comment with regard to the performance of the Minister of Justice, and I quote:

> Meanwhile Canadians generally, and the Minister of Justice in particular, will have to start getting used to the idea that thanks to the Treu case Canada has joined such countries as Argentina, the Soviet Union, Chile and Uganda in coming under the examination of Amnesty International, the international organization that investigates violations of human rights and campaigns for their redress.

Those kinds of comments are the kinds of uniform comments one finds across this country with respect to this outrageous trial we are now considering and which continues on to appeal. It does not do the case of the government any good to have the parliamentary secretary bring forward provisions in the Criminal Code where there is a particular, narrow situation prohibited or banned from publication, or where there is an opportunity for the judge in certain cases to clear the courtroom temporarily. It does no good for the government side of the case to present those arguments. That is what those on all sides of the House who object to the provisions in the Official Secrets Act are trying to attain.

What does the motion say? It does not say that we should wipe out every provision in this country with regard to national security. It does not say there is not a place in certain limited instances where considerations of national security have to be protected. What the motion says is that certain aspects of the Official Secrets Act have to be changed. Limitations have to be placed on the powers now contained in that act relating to secrecy and to the onus of proof. If anyone speaking on behalf of the government suggests that is not the basis upon which we all approach the Official Secrets Act, then I am really concerned about where we are going in this country.

I suggest to those who oppose this motion that, as suggested in the motion, we should look in committee at ways of melding the interests of national security, the interests of the state, and the interests of the basic principles of freedom and openness which we hope will be prevalent in our country, and that in some way we can, by non-partisan deliberation, come to some conclusions.

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

Maybe we can do as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) suggested when he did not call the election—demonstrate that there is a lot of work which parliament can do. If we are not going into an election, let us get on with this kind of task. Let us have this kind of non-political, non-partisan look at what is an odious piece of legislation if ever there was one.

I want to comment on a rather interesting aspect of what has gone on in the debate today. I detect two lines of argument coming from those who purport to speak for the government. If I can lump the speakers together, one line consisted of arguments by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice who apparently gave us the official government view with regard to the Official Secrets Act and the content of this motion. The other line was presented by the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) and the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan). There was somewhat of a conflict between the two lines of reasoning carried on by those two groups.

As I understand the principles which should guide us in this country, freedom of information and openness should be a basic principle and a basic right and any limitation should be an exception to that rule. Those who oppose this motion appear to take the position that somehow the government, in its power that is granted to it by the electorate, should have the ability to make decisions and that there should be the right to do that in private, in closed conference, getting advice that is not open to the public except in specific exceptions granted by the government in their wisdom.

That really is the fundamental question we have to consider. What is the attitude of this government toward freedom of information as it relates to the general topic and to the conduct of judicial proceedings in this country? The Secretary of State tried to speak on behalf of freedom of information. He said he accepts that idea and supports it strongly. I ask the Secretary of State, as I have done in the course of committee meetings, how far he and this government are prepared to go to bring about effective freedom of information as opposed to something less than effective freedom of information.

Unfortunately, the Secretary of State has not yet come down hard on the side of supporting the proposition that there should be an independent review of an application for information by any citizen of this country which could be adjudicated upon by an independent arbiter whose decision would be binding in 99.9 per cent of the cases upon the executive or cabinet of this country. I think that is a very fundamental consideration we have to give to the kind of freedom of information we have in this country, if it is to be effective. All I am saying is that it is all right to pay lip service to freedom of information and to stand up in this House and say that we really believe that there should be freedom of information; but if we are not prepared to support the basic mechanisms which would bring about that freedom of information, it is quite another thing to be believed.

I do not want to speak for too long because I know that the hon. member for Ottawa West wishes to make a few remarks. However, I do want to point out that part of the motion refers to the fact that, in the case of Peter Worthington of the Toronto Sun, there has been harassment.

When we talk about harassment, there are two ways to look at it. Without getting involved in the merits of this particular case, actual prosecutorial actions have been taken against the Toronto Sun. Some say that this is an isolated incident, but this is not the first time Mr. Worthington and the Toronto Sun have been threatened under the Official Secrets Act. Hon. members will recall that a little more than two years ago, on May 7, 1976, the Prime Minister of this country was ranting and raving in this House about an attempt on the part of the media to discredit him. He said the following in this House:

I think it is of concern to every member of the House, too, that a leak which is obviously destined to destroy my reputation and credibility should have been deliberately put into the hands of the press and treated that way by the press.

The Prime Minister was referring to a letter, as hon. members will recall, which was from General Dare, the head of the security section, to his deputy. The Prime Minister was in hot flight after the press and after the Toronto Sun particularly. What he said about the Toronto Sun almost prohibits repetition in this place.

While the Prime Minister was carrying this on, by mere coincidence four RCMP officers swooped into the offices of the Toronto Sun, demanded copies of the correspondence and threatened Mr. Worthington under the Official Secrets Act. That is the kind of use to which the Official Secrets Act has been put on a previous occasion.

What has happened in this instance? The Prime Minister talks about rights of individuals and democratic principles, but we all recall that not too long ago the Prime Minister stood in this House and, in effect, charged, tried and convicted on public television a member of this House with respect to the alleged possession of certain documents, as well as Mr. Worthington and the Toronto Sun. What basic precepts or concepts of freedom and principles of justice does the Prime Minister have when under the protection of this House he advises everybody in public that these are secret documents and that there has been a breach of the Official Secrets Act? Where do we go from there? There is no charge against the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt). Is there a charge against the CTV network which carried the essence of those documents and the story? I do not recall there being any charge laid against that network.

Is there a charge against any other newspaper in this country? No. Only Mr. Worthington and the Toronto Sun were charged. Mr. Speaker, I am talking about harassment by selective prosecution. Without going into the merits of the thing, I simply ask you, as an independent observer, what conclusions can be drawn from that situation.

I want to conclude on that note. I am sorry; I did not realize what the time was. I know the hon. member for Ottawa West does want to speak briefly and conclude this debate, but I appreciate the time I have been given.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, in the very brief time—some two minutes or so—remaining to me I want to go on record as supporting the principle of referral of the Official Secrets Act to a committee of investigation. I am not prepared in any way to comment or pass judgment on the way in which the existing law has been applied in the cases under it. It seems to me that previous speakers have explained in some detail the law as it stands.

Mr. Prud'homme: I share your opinion.

Mr. Francis: I know some of my colleagues to my right share the opinion I am expressing now. The hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) is one of them.

On only one or two occasions have I had reason to be familiar with the provisions of the Official Secrets Act. I remember that in 1975 the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) was charged by a newspaper, the Montreal Gazette—it was really quite an incredible situation—with having disclosed some features which were allegedly contained in a budget, which would have been the basis of a violation of the Official Secrets Act.

The charge led to hearings before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, and the findings were as one might have predicted. There really was not much to substantiate the charge of the Montreal Gazette. However, if the effect of the Official Secrets Act is to restrict access to information, the context in which the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has set the debate today, then along with other hon. members I can only express the wish that we have it reviewed and that we will proceed to a freedom of information act.

Speaking earlier in this debate the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) undertook that, at the beginning of the next session, he hoped to have a bill to present to this House. I welcome that very much. Those of us who have examined the green paper on freedom of access to information have found that it really is not strong enough, as far as I am concerned, in many areas. I for one prefer to have a judicial review to determine whether papers should be accessible through a federal court.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being five o'clock, it is my duty to declare, pursuant to Standing Order 58(11), that the proceedings on the motion have expired.

Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock on Monday afternoon.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

[Traduction]

PAR LA COUR (M. LE JUGE LUC TRUDEL, J.C.S.P.)

Monsieur Treu, je vais rendre ma sentence en français, ma langue maternelle, car j'y suis beaucoup plus à l'aise. J'estime que c'est important et je préfère m'exprimer en français. Cependant, vous pourrez obtenir le compte rendu de mon jugement sans difficulté et, si vous insistez, nous pouvons le faire traduire dès maintenant.

PAR L'ACCUSÉ

Cela ne sera pas nécessaire, Votre Honneur.

PAR LA COUR

Très bien, mais j'espère, et je suis même sûr que vous allez le faire, que vous allez lire ce jugement et vous le faire traduire. Je pense que vous devriez le faire.

[Français]

Alors, en date du 28 avril 1978, la Cour a trouvé coupable monsieur Treu sous deux chefs d'accusation, à savoir: que le ou vers le 29 mars 1974, il a eu illégalement en sa possession, ou contrôle, des documents ou des informations qu'il avait obtenus, ou auxquels il avait eu accès, comme un individu qui était employé pour une compagnie qui avait eu un contrat pour le compte de Sa Majesté, à savoir: la Northern Electric Company Limited, lequel monsieur Treu a illégalement retenu de tels documents et/ou de telles informations, alors qu'il n'avait pas le droit de le faire, commettant ainsi un acte criminel contrairement à l'article 4-1-c) de la Loi sur les secrets officiels. Le deuxième chef d'accusation était à l'effet que, quant aux mêmes documents et quant aux mêmes informations, après les avoir retenus ainsi illégalement, l'accusé n'en a pas pris un soin raisonnable, tel qu'il est spécifié par la Loi, ou s'est conduit de telle façon et de telle manière qu'il mettait en danger la sécurité de tels documents, le tout contrairement à l'article 4-1-d) de la Loi sur les secrets officiels. Je veux assurer l'accusé, ainsi que les avocats, que j'ai revisé entièrement, avant de rendre mon jugement, tel que la Loi m'y oblige d'ailleurs et en conformité avec mon secret d'office, que j'ai revisé entièrement toute la preuve, que j'ai revu tous les exhibits, que j'ai, je crois avoir compris, dans son entité, toute la preuve, sauf évidemment certaines parties techniques, très techniques qui dépassaient mes connaissances, du moins quant à la partie qui exigeait des connaissances vraiment spéciales que l'accusé possède et que d'autres experts possèdent. Mais du moins, tout ce qui regarde le côté légal et le côté droit et les faits de la cause, je crois que j'ai rempli mon serment d'office du mieux que je le pouvais dans les circonstances, après avoir revisé et après avoir pris tout le temps et toutes les heures nécessaires qui s'imposaient dans les circonstances.

Je ne dis pas cela évidemment pour un but personnel, au contraire, c'est pour assurer tout simplement l'accusé que tel que mes fonctions l'exigent et tel que mon serment d'office l'exige, j'ai revu toute la preuve et j'ai basé mon jugement uniquement sur cette preuve et sur rien d'autre que la preuve qui a été faite devant moi durant tout le procès. En surplus, depuis que j'ai rendu mon jugement, j'ai pensé tout le long de cette période qui s'est écoulée entre la fin de mon jugement et votre comparution aujourd'hui et je puis vous assurer que j'ai continuellement pensé à la sentence que je devais rendre, sans tout de même présumer des plaidoiries qui seraient faites devant moi, ou sans non plus me faire une idée définitive parce que je n'avais pas le droit, tant que je n'avais pas entendu votre avocat, ou la preuve qu'il voulait m'offrir, et tant aussi que je n'avais pas entendu la plaidoirie de la Couronne, mais je possédais les faits de la cause et je possédais la Loi et il était de mon devoir, tout de même, de commencer à mûrir et à penser à une sentence que je pourrais vous imposer après vous avoir trouvé coupable. Alors, ni mon jugement ni ma sentence ne sont des décisions de dernière seconde ou de dernière minute et mon jugement et ma sentence, je le crois en toute honnêteté, ne sont basés que sur les faits, que sur la preuve, que sur la Loi, que sur la jurisprudence, après, comme je vous le répète, avoir pris connaissance du dossier et après avoir entendu les plaidoiries de vos deux avocats et ce jugement et cette sentence évidemment sont rendus en conformité avec ma conscience et de la façon que j'interprète à la fois les faits, la Loi et la jurisprudence. Monsieur Treu, je veux aussi vous dire que, dans mon opinion, vous avez subi un procès juste, en conformité avec les lois du Canada, telles qu'elles existent; la Loi des secrets officiels évidemment est une loi canadienne qui nous lie tous, y compris moi-même, y compris les avocats, y compris les journaux et les journalistes. D'ailleurs nous tous, comme citoyens, les Juges à plus forte raison et les gens qui occupent de hautes responsabilités, nous sommes tous liés par les lois de ce pays et je crois personnellement que la Loi est au-dessus des hommes, est au-dessus des personnalités, est au-dessus de tous les citoyens, individuels ou corporatifs, et j'avoue que votre procès a été tenu, vous le savez, dans des conditions exceptionnelles, mais en conformité avec la Loi sur les secrets officiels et, à cet effet, j'aimerais tout de même monsieur Treu, rappeler, pour les fins du dossier, les procédures qui ont eu lieu dans cette cause. Vous avez d'abord comparu devant un Juge de la Cour des Sessions de la Paix; ce Juge vous a mis en liberté, conformément à la Loi, avec certaines conditions. Par la suite vos avocats, tel que c'était leur droit et le vôtre aussi, a présenté une requête devant la Cour Supérieure à l'effet de reviser les conditions qui avaient été imposées par le Juge de la Cour des Sessions de la Paix; sans entrer dans le détail, je crois que le Juge de la Cour Supérieure, après avoir pris connaissance évidemment des plaintes et des faits qui lui ont été présentés, ainsi que de votre requête assermentée, a décidé de changer certaines des conditions de votre mise en liberté, sauf qu'il vous obligeait encore à vous représenter devant, plutôt à la Gendarmerie Royale, une fois par mois au lieu de deux fois et peut-être que certaines autres conditions mineures ont été changées mais, dans leur essence, le Juge de la Cour Supérieure a maintenu les conditions qui avaient été imposées par le Juge de la Cour des Sessions de la Paix. Par la suite, vous avez comparu encore de temps à autre devant d'autres Juges, soit pour les remises du procès ou pour d'autres formalités administratives, pour finir par fixer une date de l'enquête préliminaire. L'enquête préliminaire a eu lieu. Au début de l'enquête préliminaire, la Couronne a demandé que le procès se tienne à huis-clos, pour des raisons qui ont été indiquées par la Couronne; les avocats de la Défense, vos deux avocats qu'entre parenthèses je considère compétents et que je considère honnêtes, je crois qu'ils vous ont défendu avec tous les moyens qu'ils avaient à leur disposition, ont consenti à ce huis-clos. Par la suite, à l'enquête préliminaire, et je n'ai pas à revoir toute la preuve, mais à l'enquête préliminaire les exhibits, pour la plus grande majorité, les documents, pour la plus grande majorité qui ont été déposés devant moi au procès, ont aussi été déposés à l'enquête préliminaire et entre autre, à l'enquête préliminaire, la liste d'inventaire a été produite et par la suite j'ai aussi appris, lorsque j'ai présidé le procès, qu'il y avait eu échange de correspondance entre vos avocats et l'avocat de la Couronne quant aux documents qui seraient éventuellement produits, même s'il y a eu certaines divergences d'opinions entre les avocats quant à la masse des documents. Mais ce que je veux exprimer par ceci, c'est que, dès le début du procès, la Couronne qui représente évidemment le Ministère de la Justice, dans le cas, le Ministère de la Justice Fédéral et en passant je dois dire, je dois souligner parce que ça fait partie du dossier, qu'une autorisation du Ministre de la Justice a été produite, je l'ai ici, conformément à l'article 12, le texte est en anglais, mais conformément à l'article 12 de la Loi sur les secrets officiels, le Procureur Général du Canada, monsieur Basford, a autorisé toutes les procédures qui ont été intentées contre vous, conformément à nos lois, ici, au pays. Je n'ai pas besoin de vous dire évidemment, tout le monde le sait, que le Procureur Général du Canada occupe les plus hautes fonctions, du moins quant à l'administration de la Justice au pays et qu'aucune poursuite en vertu de la Loi des secrets officiels ne peut être intentée sans l'approbation ou le consentement du Procureur Général.

Le procureur de la Couronne a fait connaître à la Cour les intentions et les raisons pour lesquelles ce procès devait avoir lieu dans des conditions vraiment exceptionnelles; comme je le disais, il représente les plus hautes autorités du pays et la Cour, face au sérieux et par le fait que vos avocat connaissaient le dossier et les documents et que vous-même, vous en connaissiez tous les documents qui avaient déjà été déposés à l'enquête préliminaire, je crois que dans les circonstances, la Cour ayant exerçé d'une façon discrétionnaire sa juridiction, je crois que dans les circonstances qu'elle était basée et je ne dis pas ça du tout pour justifier en aucune façon, parce que les avocats connaissent notre système, toute décision judiciaire de première instance évidemment, sauf dans certains cas, quant à sa discrétion, je ne veux pas donner tout cours de droit ici, sont toujours appelables et c'est une bonne chose, non seulement c'est une bonne chose, c'est péremptoire dans notre droit et c'est essentiel pour que la démocratie puisse fonctionner. Alors, je dis ceci tout simplement pour que ce soit bien clair dans mon esprit que je vous ai jugé, quant à moi, dans les cadres de la Loi canadienne, je n'en ai pas sorti, je n'avais pas l'intention d'en sortir et je n'en sortirai pas, ni pour ma sentence. Je vous ai jugé, quant à moi, selon la preuve qui a été faite devant moi et je ne sortirai pas de cette preuve et des faits de la cause et c'était important pour moi d'établir cette position de la Cour parce que, vous le savez, il y a eu dans ce dossier-là beaucoup de publicité, dans beaucoup de cas à tort et à travers, on m'en a souligné certains faits de part et d'autre et il y a peut-être eu aussi certaines mauvaises interprétations qui ont été faites à tort ou à travers, de bonne ou de mauvaise foi selon le cas, par des gens qui ont intérêt des fois à agir ainsi. Vous-même, monsieur Treu, comme je le disais, vous étiez représenté par des avocats compétents et honnêtes. Dès le début, vous avez, évidemment vous avez vu tout le déroulement du dossier, vous avez été averti par la Cour à certaines occasions, vous saviez que le huis-clos a été ordonné, vous saviez qu'au début du procès ou à peu près, votre avocat avait souligné à la Cour un journal de Toronto, dont je me souviens pas le nom, pas tellement important, n'avait pas respecté le huis-clos ordonné par la Cour. J'avais, dès ce moment-là et c'est dans les notes évidemment, averti Me Chabot que je considérais ceci d'une façon trés sérieuse et que, dans mon opinion à moi, personne n'est au dessus de la Loi, ni vous ni, comme je le disais tout à l'heure, ni les journaux, ni personne en définitive mais que, vous le savez peut-être pas, mais il y a ce qu'on appelle les mépris de Cour qui sont commis face à la Cour et il y aussi le mépris de Cour qui est commis hors la présence du Tribunal. Quand il s'agit d'un mépris de Cour qui est commis face à la Cour, la Loi me donne juridiction pour agir immédiatement; quand il s'agit d'un mépris de Cour qui est commis hors la présence du Tribunal, je n'ai pas juridiction. Tout ce que je peux faire, ou tout ce que je pouvais faire dans les circonstances, ou ce que votre avocat pouvait faire, était évidemment de soumettre le tout à la Couronne qui est en charge de ces procédures en vertu du Code criminel et, dans le cas, il s'agissait de la Couronne provinciale. Quant à moi, je n'ai pas voulu, j'ai souligné immédiatement par exemple que votre avocat devrait, s'il le désirait, prendre des procédures immédiatement, ou faire un rapport à qui de droit, j'ignore s'il l'a fait ou non, quant à moi je n'ai pas voulu à ce moment-là rien faire et je crois que c'était justifié parce que je ne voulais pas obnubiler mon esprit en aucune façon et je voulais demeurer, tel que je conçois mon devoir, le plus objectif possible dans les circonstances, et je ne voulais pas en aucune façon être dérangé par quoi que ce soit, intellectuellement et légalement, par d'autres choses que les faits qui se déroulaient devant moi à la Cour, que la preuve qui se déroulait devant moi. Alors, j'ai tout simplement porté à mon sens le tout à la fin du procès mais il reste que je vais tout de même bien spécifier et je crois que c'était compris des avocats et, logiquement, ça devait être compris de vous parce que vos avocats tout de même vous ont conseillé tout le long de ce procès et avant les procédures, et je crois que logiquement ça devait aussi être compris de vous que le huis-clos devait être respecté. Les personnalités en cause ne sont absolument pas importantes à mon point du vue, tel que je vous le disais, c'est la Loi qui doit être respectée, monsieur Treu, c'est ça qui est le plus important dans notre société, c'est le seul rempart que la société, que nous avons nous tous ici. Le dernier rempart qui vraiment, qui puisse nous protéger, c'est la Loi et le respect des tribunaux et je crois, cet énoncé qui a été dit d'une façon beaucoup plus élaborée et d'une façon beaucoup plus savante par énormément d'auteurs, de savants ou de juristes, mais il reste que dans des termes bien simples, il me semble que tout le monde comprend que, sur une longue période, la seule protection de tout citoyen est la Loi et le respect de la Loi et le respect des tribunaux. Chaque fois que vous ou moi ou un citoyen corporatif ou autre, un journaliste ou journal, enfin de compte, qui que ce soit, manquons au respect de la Loi et manquons à des ordres de Cour d'une façon aussi flagrante, à mon sens, je crois que nous tous nous en souffrons et que la société dans laquelle nous vivons et pour laquelle nous avons, depuis des siècles dans beaucoup de cas, l'être humain s'est battu pour obtenir une certaine garantie judiciaire, une certaine indépendance des tribunaux, il y a des gens qui se sont battus pour ça et, quant à moi, je crois que nous devrions respecter ceci d'une façon intégrale. Alors, ce que j'ai l'intention de faire, je ne peux pas présumer de ce que les tribunaux en feront ou de ce que la Couronne en ferait, mais maintenant que le procès quant à moi va être fini bientôt, d'ici une demi-heure, trois quarts d'heure, après que ma sentence sera rendue parce qu'il faut bien préciser que vous êtes sous ma juridiction tant que ma sentence n'est pas rendue et que vous l'étiez évidemment dès le début du procès, et que ce procès n'était pas terminé tant que la sentence n'était rendue, alors j'ai l'intention de faire un rapport à la Couronne de ce que j'ai pu lire dans les journaux et, autant des remarques qui avaient été faites par Me Chabot que, depuis ce temps-là, et la Couronne prendra ses responsabilités à cet effet. Si, je ne dis pas, moi, qu'ily a eu outrage au Tribunal ou non, c'est pas à moi à me prononcer sur cette partie. Je ferai mon rapport de ce que j'ai pu constater moi-même en lisant les journaux. Je me souviens que même avant que Me Handfield en fasse mention ce matin qu'après que la preuve était terminée des deux côtés, vous avez donné au Montreal Star une entrevue et vous avez encore expliqué toute votre Défense en plein milieu du procès, alors qu'il n'était pas, la preuve était terminée mais le procès comme tel n'est pas terminé, il y a la règle du sub judice qui évidemment doit être respectée et il ne faut pas que les tribunaux soient influencés par quoi que ce soit en dehors de la Cour. J'ai pas agi, parce que je ne voulais pas être influencé et j'ai d'ailleurs, le procès, je crois que ça c'est en octobre ou à peu près que cette entrevue a eu lieu, le procès a été remis par la suite et il s'est écoulé une période assez longue de sorte que, quant à moi, je n'ai pas tenu compte de tout ceci. Mais je voulais que vous compreniez que pour vous, comme pour moi, votre meilleure Défense, c'était la Cour et votre meilleur, l'exercice de vos droits doivent être faits à l'intérieur du système, à l'intérieur du Tribunal et que ce soit par des actions en dommages-intérêts ou que ce soit par, dans la présentation de votre Défense ici au procès ou que ce soit à la Cour d'Appel, si tel était votre désir d'y aller de mon jugement, ou plus loin, en fin de compte, d'épuiser tous les recours auxquels vous avez droit et que je respecte énormément, mais si vous pensez que votre réputation a été atteinte ou si vous pensez que, pour une raison ou pour une autre, la dénonciation initiale qui était assermentée était de mauvaise foi, je vous le dis encore parce que je considère que c'est un dossier d'une nature spéciale, vos avocats pourraient vous renseigner davantage mais il est bien évident que tout citoyen a droit à des actions en libelle, tout citoyen a droit à des actions en dommages-intérêts, que ce soit avant les procédures ou que ce soit quand le dénonciateur est de mauvaise foi, dès le dépôt de la plainte, à ce moment-là le droit de poursuite en libelle existe. Personne n'a le droit de faire du tort à qui que ce soit. Et c'est à ce moment-là que vous avez votre meilleure protection et dès le dépôt de la dénonciation, dès le début des procédures, pour une raison ou pour une autre, si vous étiez capable de prouver la mauvaise foi du dénonciateur, celui-ci peut être, pourrait être condamné, selon la preuve, à des dommages-intérêts et pourrait être certainement poursuivi en libelle. Alors, vous avez droit, avez le droit comme tout citoyen à l'exercice de vos recours et il n'y a aucun doute aussi que, on a dit que c'était un procès secret, mais il y a tout de même, dès le début, tel que je vous le disais, il y a eu des dénonciations qui a été déposée, les journaux ont rapporté d'ailleurs les actes d'accusation, les journaux ont rapporté ce qui était normal dans les circonstances, les journaux aussi ont rapporté ce sur quoi vous avez été jugé et ce sur quoi vous avez été condamné. Alors, ce sur quoi vous avez été condamné, je vous l'ai lu tout à l'heure, ce sont des offenses conformément à l'article 4 et, quant à moi, je ne fais pas plus de commentaires que ça, mais il est bien évident que la Loi, elle, elle est publique et tout le monde est censé connaître la Loi. A l'article 3 de la même Loi sur les secrets officiels, dont le titre en français est indiqué à côté «spying» et en français plutôt «espionnage» et en anglais «spying», c'est sous l'article 3 que le législateur a décidé de décrire l'infraction d'espionnage ou de «spying» en anglais, et non sous l'article 4. Alors, si qui que ce soit vous a atteint dans votre réputation, ou ont mal rapporté de bonne foi ou de mauvaise foi, mais par ignorance, négligence grossière ou de mauvaise foi ce qui serait pire, je vous prierais d'exercer tous les recours que vous puissiez avoir; vous avez été accusé sous l'article 4 et vous avez été trouvé coupable sous l'article 4 et la Loi parle d'elle-même quant à ceci. Alors, tout ceci pour vous dire, monsieur Treu, qu'il n'y a pas, ce ne sont pas les journalistes qui vous ont condamné ou qui vous auraient acquitté, ce ne sont pas les journalistes qui vont vous sentencer autrement puis ce ne sont pas non plus les journalistes qui vont plaider votre cause en appel, c'est pas comme ça que le système marche et ce ne sont pas non plus, votre réputation, la meilleure protection, quitte à ce que je me répète, c'est que votre protection à vous et l'exercice de vos droits doivent se faire à l'intérieur du système judiciaire, puis c'est encore là, malgré les imperfections du système, que vous allez obtenir la meilleure justice, puis c'est encore là que, il faudrait que vous vous méfiiez de vous-même, de vos réactions et peut-être de vos amis dans certains cas. Votre avocat, Me Chabot, a souligné à la Cour que vous ne faisiez que vous défendre, mais je n'ai pas, je ne répète pas ce que je viens de dire depuis au moins dix, quinze minutes, parce qu'il est bien évident comme je vous l'ai dit que c'est pas, un député est soumis à la Loi, un ministre est soumis à la Loi, tout le monde, et on ne se défend pas, on n'a pas le droit de prendre la Loi dans nos propres mains et de faire ce qu'on en veut, personne n'est au dessus de la Loi, alors que ces gens-là, ce n'est pas une réponse parce qu'on verrait quelqu'un en tuer un autre, «moi, j'ai le droit de le tuer», c'est pas comme ça que ça marche. Ou, en fin de compte, «Quelqu'un qui me ferait du tort dans mes biens, puis je vais lui en faire, du tort», vous savez, c'est pas, j'ai pas besoin de vous donner plusieurs exemples mais, de toute façon, tout le monde sait ce que je veux dire, je le pense. Il s'agit simplement que de regarder ce qui se passe dans le monde pour s'apercevoir que tout citoyen, plus il a des responsabilités élevées, plus il doit respecter et se soumettre à la Loi; on a simplement qu'à regarder ce qui s'est passé aux États-Unis, alors que le Ministre de la Justice a été condamné parce qu'il n'avait pas observé la Loi pour comprendre que, dans une société, c'est important. Bon. J'en viens à la partie même de la sentence, je n'ai pas besoin de vous dire, monsieur Treu, que ça fait un certain temps que j'œuvre en droit criminel, que ce soit à titre de Juge ou dans d'autres fonctions, et je crois que c'est la partie, on le dit souvent mais peut-être que les Juges sentent le besoin de le dire davantage parce que ce sont ceux qui les rendent, ces sentences-là, il n'y a aucun doute que c'est la partie qui est la plus difficile. Il est relativement facile, même si ça prend beaucoup d'ouvrage, il est relativement facile de, parce que nous avons des connaissances légales particulières, d'étudier un dossier et d'analyser une preuve et de finir par atteindre certaines conclusions légales et, après que nous avons tout fait, du moins humainement parlant, avec nos connaissances, bien, nous croyons que nous ayons nous croyons avoir rempli notre devoir de la façon qu'il doit être rempli. Mais quand nous arrivons à la partie de la sentence, même si celle-ci est réglée de la même façon par la Loi et par la jurisprudence, il reste que le Juge est un être humain; il est excessivement difficile pour un être humain de juger un autre être humain ou de le sentencer, ne serais-ce qu'à cause de cette partie humaine. C'est une tâche qui est presqu'impossible, humainement parlant et je ne connais pas de Juges qui, et d'ailleurs ça ne serait pas un bon Juge, il ne mériterit pas de siéger, à mon sens, qui prendrait un certain plaisir à sentencer un de ses semblables. C'est excessivement difficile. Mais cette partie-là, évidemment, ne peut pas être rendue, non plus que le jugement, sur des sentiments: il faut que le Juge se base uniquement sur la Loi et sur la jurisprudence et sur les faits, puis sur les critères que les cours d'appel nous donnent et, encore là, je pense que le Juge n'a pas le choix, que ce soit pour une sentence très minime ou que ce soit pour une sentence plus sévère, le Juge est liépar la Loi et je pense encore là que c'est la meilleure protection. Alors, dans votre cas, c'est encore plus difficile parce que, vos avocats ont raison, vous êtes uen personnalité exceptionnelle, vous êtes certainement pas, dans mon opinion à moi, un criminel, vous avez commis un acte criminel mais vous n'êtes pas ce qu'on appelle un individu avec une carrière criminelle, loin de là, vous êtes un individu qui avez eu une vie plus que respectable, qui avez de grandes qualités intellectuelles, qui, comme être humain, est sympathique, du moins à mon sens, qui avez une famille, qui avez des enfants, alors vous n'êtes pas un individu, ça complique davantage et ça rend plus difficile une sentence dans ces cas-là. A l'occasion de vos fonctions et à l'occasion des hautes responsabilités que vous aviez, à mon sens, puisque je vous ai trouvé coupable, vous avez commis un acte criminel mais vous n'êtes pas, je ne vous ai jamais considéré, parce que je n'ai jamais eu cette preuve-là, comme un criminel et je ne l'ai pas davantage alors, dans mon esprit à moi, vous n'en êtes pas un. Il faut que je vous juge, que je vous donne ma sentence en tenant compte, tel qu'on l'a mentionné ce matin, de l'objectivité du crime, la protection de la société, l'exemplarité, de la dissuasion, en anglais, «deterrence» et, évidemment aussi, de la subjectivité; qui a commis ce crime, votre âge, votre personnalité, votre situation familiale, vos antécédents, dans le cas il n'y en a pas, votre réhabilitation possible, votre attitude au moment du crime ou immédiatement après le crime, vottre degré de préméditation, les circonstances du crime. Je dois, comme toute Cour, je dois balancer tous ces facteurs, du moins il faut que je retienne certains de ces facteurs, certns critères et les mette dans une espèce de balance et c'est de là que la sentence sort. Dans certaines causes, il est plus important, le facteur de réhabilitation est plus important que dans d'autres causes; dans d'autres causes, c'est la protection de la société; dans d'autres causes, nous devons tenir compte de la personnalité qui influe encore davantage, qui fait peser la balance d'une façon un peu plus lourde que de l'autre côté, dans certains cas, quant à l'individu lui-même; alors, c'est de tenir compte à la fois des critères objectifs et à la fois des critères subjectifs et après avoir pesé, mis tout ça dans les deux plateaux de la balance, essayer de rendre justice à l'accusé conformément à la Loi et à la jurisprudence. Et, c'est cette partie évidemment qui doit guider le Juge, c'est l'ensemble de tous ces facteurs qui doit guider le Juge, afin de rendre sa sentence. Je n'ai pas besoin de tout répéter au point de vue subjectivité, je n'ai pas de doute, monsieur Treu, en aucune façon, que vous êtes un individu respectable à mon sens; vous l'étiez, vous l'êtes encore et je crois que, comme je le disais, vous n'êtes pas un criminel. Votre avocat a attiré mon attention sur certaines circonstances à l'effet que les documents pour lesquels je vous ai trouvé coupable, c'était vos instruments de travail, il s'agissait de votre propriété intellectuelle, que la compagnie ou l'OTAN, dans certains cas, ou la compagnie Nadgeco et que, elle continuait à vous favoriser dans votre travail, enfin de compte, que vous avez continué à travailler.

Toutes circonstances du crime que j'ai étudiées dans mon jugement, alors je n'ai pas l'intention d'y revenir en détails parce que les circonstances du crime ont été que, je les ai toutes analysées et étudiées et je me souviens d'avoir analysé P-10, je me souviens d'avoir analysé tout ce qui a retenu votre, tout ce qui a plutôt amené votre rétention des documents et à votre détention des documents pour une période assez longue, après la cessation de votre emploi à la Northern Electric. Alors, en résumé, moi je crois que, après avoir pensé, monsieur Treu, à cette affaire et après avoir pesé le pour et le contre, je pouvais, dans les sentences que je pouvais rendre étaient que, c'est punissable par un maximum de quatorze ans, on l'a souligné; je veux tout simplement, pour les fins du dossier ici, répéter les causes qu'on m'a données: la cause de Lemire et Gosselin, 1948, 5 C.R., page 181 et suivantes, 92 C.C.C., page 201; la cause de Pierre Tanguay, C.R., Cour d'Appel, numéro A-4962; la cause de Pierre Taillon, C.R., Cour d'Appel, numéro A-4963; la cause de R. versus Wilmott, W-I-L-M-O-T-T, 1967, 1 C.C.C., page 171, Cour d'Appel de l'Ontario et, en surplus, il y a une cause ici que j'ai, qui va peut-être vous faire comprendre ce sur quoi je base davantage ma sentence, la cause de la Reine versus Morrissette, qui est reportée à 1970, 1 C.C.C., deuxième édition, page 307, dont on émet certains principes à la page 207, du volume de Canadian Criminal Procedure, deuxième édition, Salhamy, S-A-L-H-A-M-Y. Alors, je pourrais évidemment, le maximum est de quatorze ans de prison, le minimum dans les circonstances, ça serait une sentence suspendue, à laquelle je pourrais ajouter une sentence suspendue à laquelle je pourrais ajouter évidemment une ordonnance de probation ainsi qu'une amende, du moins selon les causes que je vois ici et qui sont rapportées dans Martin's sous les articles 663, mais je ne pourrais pas vous imposer une amende seulement et, à l'intérieur de ces deux extrémités, bien j'ai le choix, j'ai une certaine discrétion. Alors, pour résumer tout ce que j'ai dit, quant à moi, je retiens le facteur principal en mettant, comme je vous le disais tout à l'heure, dans le plateau de la balance votre personnalité subjective même, ainsi que certains autres facteurs dont l'exemplarité et la dissuasion, en tenant compte du contexte dans lequel vous avez obtenu les documents en question parce qu'au fond, dans votre cas comme dans le cas de n'importe quel autre citoyen qui entrerait en possession de tels documents, dans le contexte de la Loi sur les secrets officiels, avec des conditions bien strictes et restrictives, il faut tenir compte, à mon sens, de la dissuasion, de l'exemplarité et davantage ces deux facteurs que le facteur subjectif que j'ai énuméré et que votre avocat a énuméré. Il est bien évident que nous ne pouvons pas, votre avocat posait la question souvent «Pour qui, l'exemplarité», ou «Pour qui, la dissuasion?»; il s'agit d'un crime bien spécial, ce n'est certainement pas, je pense bien, pour le voisin, mais je ne crois pas, peut-être à tort remarquez bien, pour un je respecterais, non seulement je respecterais mais, quant au fond du jugement ou quant à la sentence je, vous devriez exercer tous vos droits évidemment, judiciaires, si vous croyez qu'ils doivent être exercés. Alors, il faut tenir compte davantage à mon sense de la dissuasion et, pas tant pour monsieur «X» qui serait l'inconnu ou le citoyen moyen, je ne crois pas, ça serait pour éviter que des gens qui sont placés dans la même situation où vous l'avez été, avec les responsabilités que vous aviez, en tenant compte des conséquences que ceci peut avoir en tenant compte aussi que la confiance qu'on vous faisait, et même si je prenais pour acquis qu'il s'agissait de votre responsabilité, plutôt de votre propriété intelectuelle, en partie, et d'ailleurs je le mentionne dans mon jugement aussi, il reste que cette propriété intellectuelle ou ces connaissances que vous avez comme savant, ou comme ingénieur, ou comme, ces connaissances que vous avez, à un moment donné vous les avez mises à la disposition du Gouvernement, à l'intérieur de nos règles de sécurité, pour réaliser un contrat où les règles de sécurité devaient être observées et cette partie-là pour lesquelles vous êtes favorisé en fait, d'avoir toutes ces connaissances, elle devait être, ces connaissances intellectuelles, cette propriété intellectuelle qui était mise à la disposition de la compagnie, dans la réalisation d'un contrat où le Canada avait un intérêt, tel que je l'ai mentionné dans mon jugement, cette connaissance et cette propriété intellectuelle devaient être observées et devaient être protégées par des règles de sécurité qui sont établies par l'État et l'État, à tort ou à raison, est le maître absolu de ces règles de sécurité et l'État tire son mandat évidemment de la société, du moins de la façon que la Loi existe actuellement et, si l'État se trompe, bien, que le législateur change la Loi mais vous aviez, dans ce cadre bien précis, des responsabilités énormes, des responsabilités précises et votre propriété intellectuelle devait être exercée dans ce cadre bien délimité et était remise en définitive à l'État et, une fois que l'exécution de ce contrat était terminée, de la façon que je l'ai interprété en tout cas, vous n'aviez plus le droit de retenir ces documents et ils devaient être soit détruits, ou vous deviez obtenir une permission pour les garder, ce qui n'a pas été fait et c'est pour ça d'ailleurs que je vous ai trouvé coupable et c'est pour ça que ça occasionnait à partir de ce moment-là un danger pour la sécurité de l'État, du moins tel que je l'ai conçu dans mon jugement.

Dans la cause de Morrissette, on cite ceci au deuxième paragraphe du moins, de la page 207:

[Traduction]

[Français]

Alors, en définitive, c'est que cet élément de dissuasion, de prévention d'un crime, devrait être considéré d'une façon objective, si le but est d'empêcher d'autres personnes ou d'autres individus de commettre ce même crime, qui pourraient être inclinés, qui pourraient avoir des tendances à faire cette infraction, s'ils sont placés dans les mêmes circonstances. En d'autre mots, la gravité objective du crime, l'incidence de ce crime dans la communauté, le tort causé, que ce soit par l'individu ou à la communauté, ou à l'individu, et l'attitude publique envers ceci, devraient être des sujets qui puissent être considérés et cet effet de dissuasion, évidemment, si elle s'applique à celui qui a commis un crime, si c'est pour l'empêcher de commettre ce même crime, bien là nous devons considérer davantage les facteurs subjectifs parce que si un individu, par exemple, aurait une tendance à faire des vols qualifiés, bien, pour éviter qu'il commette d'autres vols qualifiés, à ce moment-là, nous pouvons considérer le facteur subjectif et aussi, s'il n'a pas cette tendance à répéter le même vol, bien, nous devons tenir compte de son âge et le facteur subjectif serait, prévaudrait sur le facteur objectif. Mais lorsqu'il s'agit, non pas d'empêcher un autre individu, c'est-à-dire l'accusé plutôt de commettre le même crime, mais d'empêcher que d'autres individus placés dans les mêmes circonstances soient tentés de commettre ce crime, il faut à ce moment-là considérer les facteurs objectifs et je pense que, dans votre cas à vous, de toute façon, je n'ai pas toute cette cause devant moi, je n'ai qu'un résumé, mais de la façon que je l'interprète et quoi qu'il en soit, je considère, moi, que je suis obligé de peser dans la balance le facteur objectif, avant tous les critères subjectifs, dans votre cas, c'est-à-dire que je me dois de considérer le facteur dissuasion, ainsi que l'exemplarité, pour que toute personne ou tout autre individu qui, dans les mêmes circonstances, dans les mêmes cas, serait obligé d'avoir accès à des documents d'une nature militaire si importante, selon la preuve qui a été faite devant moi, ce facteur doit primer sur tous les autres facteurs et je m'en tiens uniquement à la preuve et la preuve a été faite devant moi que ces documents-là avaient une importance excessivement grande, quant à la preuve qui a été faite devant moi, quant à la preuve d'expert que j'ai entendue.

Alors, en conséquence, monsieur Treu, je me vois dans l'obligation de vous condamner à un terme de prison et je vais vous condamner, sur le premier chef, à deux ans de prison, sur le deuxième chef, à une année de prison, concurramment. C'est tout.

COMMUNICATIONS

LICENCE APPLICATIONS BY NEWFOUNDLAND RADIO STATION VOWR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that radio station VOWR of St. John's, Newfoundland, owned and operated by Wesley United Church since the year 1924 as a non-profit service, today is appearing before the CRTC on an application to increase the power of the station from 1,000 watts to 5,000 watts which application, if successful, will not cause interference with other radio signals in Newfoundland, and in view of the fact that this application has the support of the VOCM network and all public spirited citizens, but is opposed by radio CJYQ 930 Limited of St. John's, a company beneficially owned by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) and managed by Mr. Colin Jamieson, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House supports the application of Wesley United Church radio station VOWR for an increase in power from 1,000 watts to 5,000 watts and requests the Minister of Communications to pass on to the CRTC and her colleague the support of members of the House for this application, and to radio CJYQ 930 Limited the request that it cease and desist from opposition to this most worthy application.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED TAKEOVER OF HUSKY OIL BY PETRO-CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion concerns the pending purchase by Petro-Canada of Husky Oil. This takeover will not add one barrel to Canada's present reserves of oil. It will probably not result in any increased processing of heavy oil which the present owners of Husky Oil would not have undertaken. But it will allow a foreign-owned company to liquidate its Canadian assets and, in the process, make a healthy profit. Husky Oil will not have to reinvest these funds in Canada but will be free to move them out of the country. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

That this House deplores this misuse of taxpayer's money by Petro-Canada and urges that the government prohibit it from carrying forward its proposed purchase of Husky Oil.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIRPORTS

FIREFIGHTING EQUIPMENT AT CASTLEGAR, B.C.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the fact that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) attempted to assuage some of the concerns of the users of Castlegar airport who may have taken seriously the statements of the minister regarding five suppression standards at that airport, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the minister come clean and admit, contrary to his statement that the airport has a jeep, two fire extinguishers, an axe and two pairs of rubber boots, that there are, in fact, three pairs of rubber boots and a rubber ducky for the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to ask questions of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Supply and Services on a very important issue touching upon the liberty of the subject. In the appalling absence of those ministers, and if it were not too late—probably it is—I would like to move a motion under Standing Order 43 to the effect that the Sergeant-at-Arms be instructed to go out and have those members attend the service of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: I will postpone asking these questions until these ministers return.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will postpone my questions until these ministers return.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I, too, will have to hold my questions until the Prime Minister gets here.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUESTED AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE JUSTICE TO FARM WORKERS

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It deals with section 57 of the unemployment insurance regulations, namely, that which stipulates that whoever works for a farmer is not entitled to unemployment insurance stamps unless he has worked during 25 work days. This is discrimination because in industry the employer must pay those stamps for the first full week of employment. I therefore ask the minister whether he intends to change that rule to do justice to farm workers.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his representations. From time to time, that rule has posed problems and we will have to examine it. I believe my advisory council will look into it in the near future.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the minister, before he goes ahead with that study, that there are cases of real hardship such as the one that recently occurred in my riding. After one year, a person was declared non-insurable and had to reimburse $2,400; civil servants had said the person could be insured. I ask the minister whether it might be possible to do something in such cases?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I believe that, with the present regulations, it is impossible.

ENERGY

PROPOSED TAKEOVER OF HUSKY OIL BY PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and concerns the Petro-Canada takeover bid of Husky Oil at a price rumoured to be 50 per cent higher than the market considers Husky shares to be worth. Given that when Petro-Canada was established, we were told its purpose was to explore, either alone or jointly with other Canadian companies, for new oil and gas reserves, can the minister tell the House why Petro-Canada is using taxpayers' money to buy out an existing oil company, rather than pursuing its original mandate of aggressively exploring for new oil and gas reserves?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe, if the hon. member were to reflect on the objects of the Crown corporation and review the various statements of government ministers of the day in respect of the purpose of the Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, he would realize that the activities, including acquisition by Petro-Canada, are very much in the national interest and very much in conformity with the mandate as laid down by the House of Commons.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, given that Petro-Canada has yet to discover any new oil and gas reserves, and in view of the fact that at least one other consortium of Canadian-owned and controlled companies, of which I am aware, as I am sure is the minister, was on the verge of making a takeover bid for Husky when upstaged by Petro-Canada, would the minister not agree that in terms of Canada's over-all interests it would be better to allow these private Canadian companies to take over Husky Oil and direct Petro-Canada to fulfil its original mandate, namely, going out and trying to find the new oil and gas reserves which Canada is supposed to need in the future?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member has misread the situation and is trying to mislead public opinion with respect to the situation. The board of directors of Petro-Canada or, more particularly, the president, has issued a statement today indicating that they have communicated their interest in acquiring all of the common shares of Husky Oil. To my knowledge, no other group of Canadian companies has made a similar declaration.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister did not say that I deliberately misled the House.

Mr. Alexander: It was close.

Mr. Andre: My remarks were that there is another consortium of Canadian companies on the verge of making a takeover bid. My supplementary question is: Given that Husky shares rose from $28.75 to $35.75 in the last week of trading and, indeed, $4 of that was in the last day, within a few hours, could the minister indicate whether the government has taken any steps to investigate allegations that insiders who are privy to Petro-Canada's plans may have profited from this inside knowledge?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a red-herring. The hon. member probably realizes that the directors of the stock exchange have already indicated that they will initiate an investigation to see whether there had been any insider knowledge and whether that insider knowledge had been used improperly.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

POLITICAL CLEARANCE OF MAJOR CONTRACTS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, all the ministers that I wish to direct my questions to are absent, but perhaps I could proceed and see how well the system of acting ministers works. I had intended to ask the minister of urban affairs or the Prime Minister if either of those gentlemen would tell the House whether, while the current ministers of justice, defence and the treasury board were ministers responsible for the National Capital Commission, it was the practice to clear politically major contracts awarded by that agency in Quebec with the Quebec campaign chairman of the Liberal party, who at that time was Senator Marchand and whose post is now held, I believe, by the minister for federal-provincial relations.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am going to take note of this question. In all matters pertaining to government administration, the ministers are advised of projects the moment such projects are submitted to the cabinet, but I do not quite see to what the hon. member is referring. When an hon. member is appointed minister, he or she is advised of what is going on inside the government.

[English]

Mr. MacKay: My supplementary to the Minister of Finance is this: Could he indicate as Acting Prime Minister, whether it is still the practice of the government to require political clearance for major contracts of the NCC as it was in September of 1975 when, in minutes of a meeting between the then minister of urban affairs, the now Minister of National Defence, and the then chairman of the NCC, Mr. Edgar Gallant, when matters were being discussed such as the Rideau Centre, the International Women's Year workshop and the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent statue, the following appeared on page 2 of the minutes under paragraph 9:

> The minister wants to make sure that the firms chosen for major contracts of this sort are cleared politically with the Ministers responsible, through his office.

These minutes were taken by Helen Tomlinson who, according to the government directory, is now special assistant to the Minister of Supply and Services.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not see anything wrong with that statement. Whenever projects are considered for this or that part of the country, we must make sure that everybody has been consulted. It is quite normal for inter-regional consultations to be held in a cabinet such as we have in Canada.

[English]

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, consultation is one thing and political clearance is another. I wanted to ask the Minister of National Defence a question but I will ask the acting minister, now that the minister is in his new portfolio as opposed to the one he occupied when these minutes were taken, has he issued a directive in his new portfolio that all major contracts are to be cleared politically through his office with the ministers responsible? I am thinking of some very major defence contracts.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I shall take note of the hon. member's question. As I said, it is certainly important that, under any circumstances, each and every minister be aware of what the government is doing.

HOUSING

MORTGAGE DEFAULTS UNDER AHOP

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I will address my question to the Acting Prime Minister. It has to do with the CMHC, AHOP default in mortgages' statistics for the last several years. A few weeks ago I contacted CMHC for these figures and they informed me they had to be cleared by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs has yet to authorize release of these figures from CMHC. Would the Acting Prime Minister tell the House whether or not it is cabinet policy to withhold this kind of information?

• (1422)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is absolutely normal that an agency of the Crown consult the minister responsible on things that happen in different organizations. I see absolutely nothing wrong in the question of the hon. member: I think when a minister wants to be responsible in his department, he should be lauded for it.

Oral Questions

MORTGAGE DEFAULTS UNDER AHOP—STUDY COMMISSIONED BY TREASURY BOARD

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the President of the Treasury Board concerning a study of which he is, of course, aware as it was commissioned by Treasury Board and relates to AHOP defaults. The study was done on the urging of several major lending institutions in the country.

Could the minister tell the House why this study on AHOP defaults, commissioned by Treasury Board, is classified as a national security document and therefore cannot be released to the Canadian public?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire as to the accuracy of the hon. member's description of the document and report back.

POSSIBLE RENT INCREASE OF 50 PER CENT FOR ELDERLY AND LOW INCOME PERSONS IN TORONTO

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, I shall put my question to the Minister of Finance; possibly it is more appropriate for it to be put to him in any case.

In view of reports to the effect that if a certain agreement is reached in Toronto today among provincial and federal ministers of housing, the result will be that 150,000 elderly persons and low income families will face rent increases of up to 50 per cent, which for such persons is a very serious situation, will the Minister of Finance interest himself in this matter and see if he cannot make some proposal to his colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, to avoid putting this kind of burden on these people?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will look into the question. I am not aware of this problem.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the minister's colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, is having a good deal to say these days about the need for the Minister of Finance to concern himself with the incomes of older people, tax credits, housing, and so on, will the minister look into this matter, not just by way of consulting the Minister of State for Urban Affairs but from his own responsibility as Minister of Finance to make sure that this suffering is not imposed?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, concerning the payments we are making to the needy in Canada, I suggest that the official documents are self-explanatory. Spending in social areas has increased to such an extent in Canada over the past five years that the question, generally speaking, is not whether we should give more. The opinion is that we are giving too much already. I shall therefore find out if there is a special problem in this case, but I want to indicate to the hon. member that all our social programs in Canada are indexed, and that we should not be ashamed of our social policies.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

POSSIBILITY OF U.S. IMPOSING COUNTERVAILING DUTIES ON IMPORTED FISH PRODUCTS

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, or it could be for the Minister of Fisheries, but they are not here. It could be for the Deputy Prime Minister, but he is not here. The Prime Minister could have answered, but he is not here either. The Secretary of State for External Affairs is relevant, but he is not here. So I should like to ask my question of the Minister of Finance.

As the minister should be aware, the export of Canadian fishery products is heavily dependent on the United States market. There is now the possibility of countervailing duty being imposed there, and there is already duty on semi-processed fish products from Canada of 2½ cents per pound.

In view of these facts, can the minister tell the House whether the government is making any special effort—-and, if so, what—to negotiate the lowering of the 15 per cent tariff of the European Common Market on the export of Canadian fish products? Is there a special effort under way to achieve this, in view of the fact that we are dependent on one market primarily and that market may be in danger?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what the Canadian government is doing at the GATT negotiations in Geneva at this time. We are trying to get better access for Canadian products all over the world, including the European market.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I thought that might be the minister's reply. He is not blustering like his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, with his crocodile tears. If that is the case, could the minister tell the House why the minister has to wait for the GATT negotiations? Why were Norway and Iceland both successful in negotiating the tariff down to 3 per cent for Icelandic and Norwegian fishery products into the EEC, when Canada apparently can get nowhere and has to wait for GATT? We have been hearing about GATT, GATT, GATT all year. Why is it that Norway and Iceland did not have to wait for GATT? Will the minister take some action to follow this up as an emergency?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member was aware of the situation, he would know that the GATT negotiations are proceeding very well. We hope they will be completed this year. So I think the hon. member should make an effort to know the facts before asking that kind of a question.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, would the minister undertake to the House to investigate how Norway and Iceland—apart from GATT altogether; forget GATT; forget Geneva; forget the excuses—were successful in negotiating lower tariffs on fish products; and when the minister can, would he find out how they did it? I know they have better governments, but would he find out whether there are any other reasons?

CONTINGENCY PLANS IN EVENT U.S. IMPOSE COUNTERVAILING DUTIES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of External Affairs. In view of the importance of the fishing industry to Atlantic Canada, is the minister aware of any discussions that may have been held by the government with the premiers of Atlantic Canada concerning the government's contingency plans in the event the Americans proceed with countervailing duties on exports of Canadian groundfish products to the United States? If so, what steps will be taken so that Canadian fish products can remain competitive in the United States or sold to other markets? Is the minister aware of any response to this matter by the premiers of Atlantic Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment had several conversations with the premiers of the Atlantic provinces who are interested in fisheries matters. I do not know whether they had particular disussions at this time. Of course, in spite of some threats which were allegedly made yesterday, namely by certain American people, on the situation of fisheries in Canada, I think that commercial relations between Canada and the United States are very good, and I do not think that the problem of fisheries interferes with the problem of trade negotiations between Canada and the United States.

LEGISLATION DEALING WITH YOUNG OFFENDERS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It relates to the long-awaited legislation dealing with young offenders, an issue which has been kicking around here a good number of years in the Solicitor General's department, either aging like old wine or having long since turned to vinegar; we do not know because we have not heard anything. Have consultations with the provinces been completed? Has consensus been reached with each province in terms of this legislation and, if not, is there any target date by which the Solicitor General expects such consensus?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with the hon. gentleman that this legislation has been in the mill for more than ten years and, indeed, it has come forward in one form or another several times. Hopefully, it will reach fruition within a short period of time.

An hon. Member: Another ten years.

Mr. Blais: The reason for the delay is exactly that which the hon. gentleman has identified, namely, that we have not yet completed our consultations with the provinces. Consultations with my counterparts, namely, those individuals in the provincial areas who are involved with justice, with corrections or young offenders, have taken place and their concurrence has generally been obtained. However, there is another area of interest; that is the area of provincial social services. Consultations in that area are not complete. I hope to receive the response of all ministers by June 30.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, in connection with the final outcome of the consultative process, is it the Solicitor General's intention to proceed by way of legislation, or by way of a discussion paper, such as occurred seven or eight years ago, acknowledging that there are a number of individuals and groups within society other than governmental groups which have a direct interest and concern in this legislation?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I will be addressing a meeting of judges who are involved with juvenile justice, I believe on July 18, in Montreal. At that time I will be making a policy declaration of some interest to the hon. gentleman. If he has not been invited, I will make sure that an invitation is sent to him.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING KIDNAPPING OF DALILA MASCHINO

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs. It relates to the alleged kidnapping of Dalila Maschino. Has the department made representations? If it has, does it intend to continue making representations to the government of Algeria, expressing Canadian concern, as well as requesting a meeting of the parties on some neutral, third ground?

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Montreal police has apparently completed its investigation on the matter. It is now up to the justice department of the province of Quebec to start the proceedings concerning this case. On the other hand, I would like to add that the civil servants of the department and of the Canadian embassy in Algiers put themselves at the disposal of the police to complete the investigation on this case.

TRANSPORT

APPLICATION OF CROW RATES TO OTHER GRAINS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in the serried ranks of Tuscany—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —with only 11 per cent out of 32 of 34 cabinet ministers—something I have never seen before in my years in the House—I will have to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. It has to do with the general question respecting the Crowsnest pass rates. Is any consideration being given by the government to applying these rates to other grains, so that farmers in general will be able to secure a fair and reasonable price, which is being denied them today?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have, as hon. members know, extended special benefits to the movers of rapeseed oil and meal in assuring that those processed products are not at an increasing disadvantage. I have recently had representations from the producers of alfalfa pellets along similar lines. Of course, we have to take that into very serious consideration along with the major recommendations of the Hall commission report and our over-all policy position with regard to the Crow rate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the over-all regard for the Hall report is simply nil. I ask the minister this question: Is it a fact that consideration is being given—that was my question—to applying the Crownest pass rates to other grains, so that farmers producing other grains may have a reasonable opportunity of making a fair return? That was the question I asked; it was not the one answered.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I did indicate in my answer two additional grains, or grain products, which are not covered and which, therefore, raise special concern. I am not sure which additional grains the right hon. gentleman may have in mind. The over-all question for the government, to which we will be giving consideration, is the timing of the implementation of the full recommendation of the Hall commission report, that the whole difference between the Crow rate and the cost of carrying grain to the railways be paid to the railways. In conjunction with any such consideration, we will be giving thought to the whole issue of rationalization of freight rates in relation to other grains and, even more important, to those products resulting from grain.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the minister whether the law officers of the Crown have been asked for their opinion as to whether the government could apply the Crowsnest pass rates by order in council. Has that opinion been asked for, and is consideration being given today to doing so by order in council?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I have not sought that specific opinion although my understanding, as a result of opinions I have received touching on that matter, and because of the way in which previous governments have acted in passing legislation where additions to the Crow rate structure were to be made, is that legislation would be required. However, I am also fairly confident that that legislation would not take very long in this House.

ENFORCEMENT OF AUTOMOBILE SAFETY STANDARDS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Minister of Transport on another matter. In view of the recent decision of Ford Motor Company to issue a safety-related recall of 1.6 million automobiles in the United States and Canada under the threat of a possible U.S. transportation department order, can the minister advise why the safety of Canadian motorists is left to the enforcement of United States laws or the head offices of U.S. auto manufacturers, while the minister is merely advised of their decisions and the Canadian government is relatively immobile?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has it quite wrong. We were in full consultation with the company prior to the recall. We had discussions about it and the enforcement of Canadian law. Therefore, we were not simply advised about it but were, rather, very active participants in the decision that the recall take place.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, in the minister's own press release he says he has "been advised" by the Ford Motor Company. In view of the fact that safety-related automobile recalls increased by 537 per cent in the 12 months ending March 31 compared to the previous year, which is about one in every six vehicles travelling Canada's highways, when will the minister and the government set up an effective Canadian monitoring, testing and enforcement capability on safety standards for automobiles sold in Canada, instead of leaving it to the laws of another country?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, we certainly do not leave it to the laws of another country. We have an inspection and safety team. We are developing our testing facilities day by day to a higher standard. Indeed, the very fact that there is such a large number of recalls is evidence of a system that is working.

LABOUR RELATIONS

EXEMPTION OF COUNTRY ELEVATOR AGENTS FROM HOURS OF WORK REGULATIONS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Labour. After almost a year of negotiation between the grain handlers' union and the Manitoba and Saskatchewan wheat pools, with a government conciliator, without any settlement with regard to the country elevator agents, and as wages are not at issue, will the minister move to declare the country elevator agents permanently exempt from the hours of work regulations?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any assurance that that will restore harmony to this particular situation, in view of the fact that negotiations are going on, however unsuccessfully at the moment, with a view to resolving this particular dispute.

Mr. Ritchie: As the long dispute is seriously impairing the efficiency of the wheat pools and putting in doubt their competitive position, does the minister intend to impose a settlement on these companies? If so, how does he propose to deal with the rest of the grain handling companies which have no union for their country elevator agents?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, without agreeing with the preface to the hon. member's remarks, no, I am not thinking of imposing a settlement in this particular dispute at this time. Therefore, any answer to the second part of the hon. member's question is unnecessary.

TRADE

GATT NEGOTIATIONS ON TEXTILES

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the ministers responsible and secondarily responsible are not in the House today, as we see only 11 out of 33 here. Perhaps I could direct my question to the Minister of Finance as Acting Prime Minister and as one who may have some knowledge about textiles and GATT negotiations.

Two weeks ago the Deputy Prime Minister said there would be no change in the tariff barriers on textiles this summer. I understand from other sources that there is an indication Canada has negotiated and that our textile tariffs will be cut this fall. Is that the understanding of the Acting Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, or is he prepared to say there will be no change in our textile tariffs until at least into the new year?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as we have already stated, it is not likely there will be a final agreement on those items before the end of the year. Of course, there could be a general agreement on the tariffs at the negotiations in July, but there will be no specific cuts before the end of the year. Moreover, any agreement at Geneva will be implemented over an eight-year period, so when the hon. member says there will be cuts effective in the next few months, I do not think his information is correct.

REPORTED FRAUD IN FRASER VALLEY, B.C.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I want to ask him about the unemployment insurance fraud featured recently in a story which appeared in the Vancouver Sun and, in particular, about an investigation started there which has revealed at least one prosecution and a loss of up to $5 million. Can the minister tell us the status of the investigation and whether rulings on disentitlement which have been made in the Fraser Valley have been overruled by officials in Ottawa?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): I asked for a full report following the appearance of that story. I should like to be in possession of the background in order to be in a position to give a more comprehensive response to the hon. member.

Mr. Clarke: Will the hon. gentleman's reply include information as to the number of charges laid and the losses which have been incurred by taxpayers as a result of this scheme?

Mr. Cullen: Until we have all the information, I think the hon. member is jumping the gun.

LOTO CANADA

POSSIBILITY OF EXTENSION BEYOND EXPIRY DATE

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. In view of reports that Loto Canada is to be extended to include a new, computerized $1 betting program to supplement the present operation, and since, based on legislation passed by this House, the Loto corporation is due to terminate by the end of 1979 unless parliament approves an extension, can it be assumed that plans are under way not only to extend Loto but to extend it beyond 1979 despite the opposition of nine provinces?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): I can confirm that we shall be initiating a new game. I believe the hon. member was a member of the miscellaneous estimates committee which studied this matter back in 1976. It was never spelled out that the corporation would necessarily end, though it was contemplated that the present sharing agreement would terminate.

Mr. Jelinek: In 1976, the Prime Minister made a firm commitment to this House and to the country that Loto Canada would terminate at the end of 1979 unless all the provinces and the House of Commons approved an extension under a new formula. I take it that it was to this new formula, the cost-sharing formula, that the hon. lady referred. Is the minister now prepared to stand behind that undertaking given by the Prime Minister in 1976 and phase out Loto Canada unless the provinces and this House, which is now being bypassed, approve an extension?

Mrs. Campagnolo: We have some 18 months to go before termination of this sharing agreement. I would refer the hon. member to a motion put by the hon. member for Vegreville in the miscellaneous estimates committee which clearly outlined the understanding held by the Conservative opposition of the deadline as being one which simply terminated the sharing agreement. As I said to the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River a few days ago, I will indeed bring this matter before the committee or before the House in line with the undertaking of the Prime Minister.

PROVINCES OPPOSED TO EXTENSION OF PROGRAM

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): On this day, when we are discussing federal-provincial co-operation in the absence of the Prime Minister and most of his cabinet, might I ask the minister whether on Thursday last, when she met with her counterparts from the provinces, she received a request by nine of the ten provinces represented there that the federal government get out of Loto Canada by the end of 1979? Did she reply by saying that, regardless of the wishes of the provinces in this field of provincial jurisdiction, the Government of Canada was determined to go ahead on its own? Would she confirm those two facts?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): I can definitely confirm that nine of the provinces did, indeed, present an ultimatum to me at a federal-provincial conference which was called as an occasion for co-operation between the federal government and the provinces concerned. I fail to see what is co-operative about a unilateral declaration requesting the federal government to leave a field with respect to which it was understood that any future plans would be referred to the House of Commons in line with undertakings given both by the Prime Minister and by the minister formerly responsible for this area.

I find it strange that the Leader of the Opposition should have a set of standards different from those of a member of his party who stated clearly in committee that what we were talking about, in his view, was the termination of the present sharing agreement as of December 31, 1979.

Mr. Clark: What the Prime Minister and the then minister were talking about was a process of consultation. What we saw last week was an ultimatum given by the government to provinces which have traditionally drawn on this source of revenue, in breach of a commitment given to this House by the Prime Minister.

May I ask whoever in this remnant of a cabinet is Acting Prime Minister, whether the Prime Minister has yet replied to the telex he received on Thursday expressing the strong opposition of the provinces to this breaking of an understanding in relation to the lottery?

[Mr. Jelinek.]

Mrs. Campagnolo: There is no breaking of any understanding. I find it surprising that on this day when the constitution is in the minds of many, we should be talking as if there are ten separate and sovereign states in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Campagnolo: Canada is not a Ruritania in which the provinces find it necessary to act as though any funds going to the federal government will not end up in their own treasuries, as does every penny at the present time. Where else would they go? There is nothing but Canada.

Mr. Gillies: Preposterous!

Mr. Clark: This, indeed, is not Ruritania, but it is a federal system and one which will only survive if there is mutual respect among the federal government and the provinces who make up that system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: What we saw the other day was one more breach by the federal government of that atmosphere of co-operation. My question to the Acting Prime Minister, whoever that being may be, is this: Has the Prime Minister replied to the telex sent by nine of the ten provinces protesting this breach of an agreement on the part of the federal government and, if so, what has been the nature of the reply?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Acting Prime Minister): I will take note of that question, Mr. Speaker. I do not know whether a telegram was, in fact, sent to the Prime Minister. What the Prime Minister said—and I was the minister at the time—was that we would come back to the House by the fall of 1979 to determine what kind of mandate Loto Canada would receive. However, it is misleading to create an impression that this is a field which belongs to the provinces. I would point out that we had to pass a law amending the Criminal Code in order to allow the provinces into that field. It is this parliament which gave them permission to enter it. The Leader of the Opposition does not know much about the Canadian constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

DREE FUNDING OF HIGHWAY PROJECTS—REFERRALS FOR EMPLOYMENT THEREON

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. The minister recently held discussions with the Premier of New Brunswick concerning the general development agreement with that province under which falls the subsidiary agreement concerning highways. Will he tell us whether or not he impressed upon the premier that all referrals for employment on highway projects funded by DREE are made through the Department of Manpower and not by Tory party bagmen as has been the usual practice?

● (1452)

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes, indeed, Mr. Speaker. I met recently with the Premier of New Brunswick and on that occasion we reviewed our programming throughout the province. This is one matter which I brought to his attention, because I think it is very important that hiring practices be kept in line with the agreement we have signed.

AIRPORTS

FIREFIGHTING EQUIPMENT AT CASTLEGAR, B.C.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. When the minister was in Vancouver recently, he spoke to the Board of Trade there and expressed concern about the firefighting equipment at Castlegar. He said he considered it to be a distinct risk. May I ask the minister what he has done in order to alleviate the situation at Castlegar, where they have one Jeep, two fire extinguishers, three pairs of rubber boots, and an axe?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): First of all, I think the hon. member is not referring accurately to what I said about Castlegar when I was in Vancouver. I asked for a complete report on all our airports and their firefighting capability and also the standards which are ordinarily expected to be complied with. I will be looking at what further action must be taken. We are constantly acquiring new equipment and attempting to ensure that airports have the appropriate equipment for the number of flights which will arrive.

In the past year we experienced some delivery delays with regard to certain firefighting equipment, which postponed our ability to move the equipment into place and to move other equipment from major airports to smaller ones as we ordinarily do as we proceed to re-equip.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, the comments I made are not my own but are, rather, Canadian Press comments taken from the Trail Times of June 1, so I hope the minister will not consider my comments to have been out of order.

In light of the fact that his department has decided to provide a foam truck for Castlegar, and in light of the fact that the temperatures there during the winter months frequently drop to below zero and there is no provision for winter storage of that vehicle, is the department prepared to cancel the order for the foam truck, or provide winter storage for it?

Mr. Lang: In the same way as provision of equipment is important in our over-all planning, so is the provision of adequate facilities for housing the equipment. There are times when before we are able to build the housing facilities we have to find temporary locations for the equipment, and that is what we would ordinarily do.

GRAIN

SHORTAGE OF BOXCARS AT CHURCHILL, MAN.

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. It is my understanding that the Canadian Wheat Board has committed some 30 million bushels to the port of Churchill. The shortage of boxcars could have a serious effect on the movement of grain to the port. Due to the short shipping season of less than 100 days, what assurance can the minister give the House that boxcars will be available to fulfil the Canadian Wheat Board commitment?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have no reason to believe that there will be any problem with boxcars for this movement. I am glad the hon. member has at least recognized that we are likely, indeed, to set another record at Churchill.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): I appreciate the fact that the record is going to be set, but it was at my insistence that this was brought to the attention of the minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Smith (Churchill): I should like to ask the minister if any commitment of CIDA grain has been made through the port of Churchill, and if the cars that will be used in Churchill will have to be taken off the Thunder Bay and Vancouver routes.

Mr. Lang: I do not have the details of the Wheat Board's shipping program here, but I have known for many months that they have succeeded in allocating grain to set the record. I kept telling the hon. member that, but he seemed either unwilling to believe it or preferred to continue expressing his negative thoughts. Every year when boxcars are required for the movement to Churchill, obviously those boxcars cannot be used the same day for Thunder Bay and Vancouver. When they are no longer needed for Churchill, they are used for Vancouver and Thunder Bay. In that sense, those that go to Churchill will not go the same day to Thunder Bay.

INCREASE IN PRICE OF DOMESTIC WHEAT SUGGESTED BY ALBERTA

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact that Canadian producers are producing wheat for domestic consumption at well below the cost of production, has the minister given any consideration to the proposal put forward by the minister of agriculture from Alberta that the price for domestic wheat be raised to $6 per bushel?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the two-price wheat arrangement which was entered into in 1973 does have another two years to run until 1980. It provided for a range of returns to the producer from a floor of $3.25 to $5. In fact, that floor was raised by government action only six months ago.

I should say to the hon. member, in addition, that the $3.25 which the miller pays for wheat is not all that the Wheat Board receives for domestic consumption, because the treasury pays to the Wheat Board the difference between that level and whatever the world price may be at any given time. Right now, those prices have been in the area of $4.15 to $4.25.

NATIONAL SECURITY

ALEXANDER PETER TREU CASE—REQUEST FOR STAY OF PROCEEDINGS PENDING HOUSE INVESTIGATION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the late Prime Minister. I hope that this time next year I will be welcoming him as the former prime minister.

I should like to ask this question of the right hon. gentleman. In view of what appears to be a thoroughly researched article into the facts, appearing in the news item written by George Bain in the Saturday Sun of June 11, in connection with Dr. Alexander Peter Treu, taking into account the facts set out in the judgment at the time of sentencing by the trial judge in that case—I am sure the Prime Minister read them with great anxiety over the weekend; they are appended to Friday's Hansard—and because this is the only chance we have had to look closely at this particular trial, all of which raises a strong circumstantial case of presumption that Dr. Treu might have been charged and sent to jail to prevent the probable disclosure of bungling, ineptness and stupidity on the part of the government and government officials, will the Prime Minister not overrule his Minister of Justice and stay further proceedings until there has been a thorough investigation by the House, as the ultimate court of this land?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know if I can add much to what was said in the debate on Friday. However, let me remind the hon. member, who does not seem to have noticed it, that the trial was a secret one, indeed, but it was so at the demand of both parties.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Trudeau: I think it is established that both parties agreed to have a secret trial.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The second point is that the case is under appeal, and it is not customary for parliament to intervene in a case which is under appeal and I do not propose to do so.

Mr. Baldwin: I do not know what is customary for this government, but this is not a customary case and I hope the Prime Minister realizes that. Here is the Prime Minister telling the House that he is quite prepared to stay silent and let this injustice continue.

Mr. Dick: This is the first time there has been a secret trial in Canada.

NATURE OF SECURITY RISK POSED BY MR. TREU

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is on the same subject matter. Could the Prime Minister explain to the House how Mr. Treu, while facing charges under Canada's Official Secrets Act for allegedly mishandling NATO technical documents, could continue to be the recipient of confidential material from NATO during the precise period of this secret trial? Does this fact not mean that NATO, at least, did not regard him as some kind of security risk?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It may be that NATO wants to give him the benefit of the doubt. Since he has the right to appeal, and this appeal has not been exhausted, I am sure that members on both sides of the House will consider him innocent until proven guilty.

Mr. Speaker: Tabling of documents.

MR. BAKER (GRENVILLE-CARLETON)—ABSENCE OF MINISTERS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have been treated today to what was a charade of the question period by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and members of the government. There are in excess of 30 members of the government today, and until the Prime Minister came to the House at about six minutes to three o'clock there were only 11 government ministers in the House of Commons.

Mr. Andras: Fourteen.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) says there were 14. That may be so, but whether there are 11 or 14, I say that this parliament cannot act properly unless ministers of the Crown are here to answer questions. That is what they are here for.

● (1502)

In order for Your Honour to understand the significance of it, there were questions for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at the outset today. He came in just at the last minute. I was one of the members who was recognized by Your Honour, but the passage of time made it impossible for me to be recognized later. There were questions for the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Buchanan), the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). These are the ones which I know about. The only minister of the ones I have listed who indicated that he would not be here, because he would be away on legitimate government business, was the Minister of Justice. On Friday I was advised that he would be away, and again today I was advised of his absence.

Ministers of the Crown do not have to answer questions, but surely there is more to question period than the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), who is misinformed as to detail in respect of other portfolios, standing in for a Prime Minister who continually refers questions to other ministers, and ministers not being present in the House in order to answer questions.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) indicated that in his over 30 years in parliament he had never seen an occasion such as this, when there were so few ministers of the Crown present.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It is time for Canadians to understand how directionless and rudderless the government is.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Their absence today indicates that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on the point of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, if indeed there is one, I should like to make two brief comments. The first is that several ministers are absent because they are in the process of informing the premiers of what is going to be tabled today. We thought it proper that there should be some measure of consultation, since I was to table this document.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: Today!

Mr. Gillies: There are only ten provinces.

Mr. Trudeau: The second is: we have indicated before, and we indicate again, that we would be happy to sit down with the opposition to work out some system whereby the time of ministers could be allocated in such a way that they could be here to answer all relevant questions of the opposition. Your Honour will recall that we looked into this matter a few years ago. It is apparent from actual count that something like six to ten ministers, on an average, receive questions every day. It seems somewhat pointless to have every one of the 33 ministers present every day of the week in order to assist at questions which are never asked of them.

If the opposition were prepared to sit down and discuss this matter reasonably with us, as is done in other parliamentary systems, gladly we would work out with them a way in which they could be assured that on given days given ministers are here. One must realize that we cannot always foresee with certainty when a given question will arise. That is why we have first acting ministers, second acting ministers, and parliamentary secretaries. In this way the government does its best to attempt to answer the questions which come up every day in the House of Commons, while at the same time maintaining a federal presence and the existence of the federal government not only in every part of this country but sometimes in other parts of the world where ministers have to be present.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), as House leader for the official opposition, has raised this matter, which is a matter of criticism. As I am sure he is aware, it does not constitute a point of order in the circumstances. It has been replied to at equal length and, in fairness, I think the matter ought to stop there.

Tabling of documents. The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TABLING OF DOCUMENT "A TIME FOR ACTION" ON RENEWAL OF CANADIAN FEDERATION

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 41(2), I should like to table a copy, in both official languages, of a document which proposes the principles for the renewal of the Canadian federation.

[English]

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the document I have just tabled before the House of Commons constitutes the first segment of the formal proposals the government wishes to present to parliament and the Canadian people with a view of beginning the renewal of the federation.

The last few months have been a time of deep thought for all Canadians. Within political parties, interest groups, and professional associations, before the Pepin-Robarts Task Force, and in the press, we have attempted to take a new look at our country and its institutions. We have rediscovered its past, sought to understand its present, and tried to envisage its future. We have not yet reached agreement on what Canada should be, but at least we have all agreed that a significant renewal is necessary and that we must sit down to business.

[Translation]

The federalism instituted in 1867 and modified to meet our needs over the years has served our country very well. It has involved a largely successful attempt to set up a balanced system based on reason and flexibility and thereby join our communities and regions together in a country blessed with both variety and vigour. Between two orders of loyalty and two levels of government it has established a dynamic equilibrium in which each Canadian could and still can belong in a real and profound way to both his province and his country. It has given Canada the spiritual and physcial strength needed to carve out a place in the world and in history of which we may all feel justly proud.

But Canadian society is still developing. Fortified by the contributions of people from all over the world, it has lost none of its instinctive desire for the new, for the unexplored and for a better life. As a result it now feels cramped within a legal framework devised over one hundred years ago and in an administrative system built piecemeal over the years, and this in turn has given rise to the desire for renewal that is being felt in the country.

[English]

The time has come to respond to this desire for renewal among the Canadian people, and it is up to parliament, the federal government, the provincial governments, and all those who hold authority in our society, to ensure that this renewal is carried out promptly, explicitly, and with the greatest respect for our democratic tradition. Our present uncertainty is not helping the country; it is drawing strength required elsewhere, jeopardizing our economic progress, and eating away at the world community's much-needed confidence in Canada. The federal government therefore urges all Canadians to join it in settling this question without further delay by renewing our federal pact and our sense of belonging to this country. Through this renewal will come the other changes—economic, social, and cultural—to which we are entitled. It is time for action.

The objective of the document I have just tabled is, precisely, to start this process. It sets out the principles of this renewal and their application to the workings of our federal system and the institutions provided for in the constitution. It is no coincidence that it is entitled "A time for Action". It is our firm intention to take concrete measures according to a very specific timetable.

The renewal of the Canadian federation is not the issue of any one political party. It is an issue for all parties to address and to resolve, and the government intends to deal with it in a non-partisan, open-minded manner. We know, Mr. Speaker, that the other parties represented in this House have already done a great deal of work on this issue. Their conclusions regarding the terms and conditions of this renewal may sometimes differ from ours, but their ultimate objectives are probably much the same as ours. We hope, therefore, that we can count on their co-operation in speeding up the process. Let us agree upon the objectives, then we can deal with the terms and conditions, instruments and texts.

We have set ourselves a tight schedule. We therefore urge this parliament, the provincial legislatures and governments, and all Canadians, to begin working with us as soon as possible.

[Translation]

We are placing only two conditions on our proposals for renewal. The first is that Canada continue to be a real federation—that is, a country in which the federal Parliament possesses real powers and the provincial legislative assemblies have powers that are just as real. The second condition is that basic human rights and freedoms be entrenched in the constitution and thus be protected against interference from either order of government. Apart from these prerequisites, we wish to be guided by the will of the citizens who elected us. Our proposals are there to be examined, debated and refined. We are counting on a national consensus to launch the renewal, and we hope that a national consensus will emerge on the nature of this renewal.

"A Time for Action" was not written as an attack on anyone. It was written in support of a cause—that of a renewed Canada geared to our needs. It invites all Canadians from the Atlantic to the Pacific to define the terms of the Canadian identity, bring our federal system up to date and reshape our constitution in the image of Canada today. As for those who do not share our profound belief that so fundamental a renewal of the Canadian federation is possible, I ask simply that they open their eyes and hearts in all honesty to the desire for change which the great majority of Canadians feel and which "A Time for Action" endeavours to express as faithfully as possible.

[English]

Today we are embarking on an important stage in our development, one that will perhaps determine the course of Canada's history. I invite all Canadians to summon their most positive qualities and enter this new stage with enthusiasm, drawing confidence from the very sources of our history. We cannot allow ourselves to miss this unique opportunity to make a collective decision on our future as a country.

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want at the outset to express my appreciation to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for making a copy of both his statement today and the document he has tabled available to me earlier in the day. I must at the same time express a very real concern in that it was only today he sent ministers of his government to communicate the contents of this document directly to the premiers of the provinces, who are the other partners in this confederation. I think that kind of last minute notification of a document of very real importance to the premiers is an indication of the kind of thing that has gone wrong during the last ten years when the federal government, instead of treating the provinces as partners, has treated them as people to be communicated with on matters of real concern to them, only at the last minute.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, some of the proposals contained in this document look strangely familiar. Upon reflection, the Prime Minister will certainly recognize that he is exaggerating when he insists today that we are entering a new era in our development. We believe that that era has started some while ago, and it is high time for the government to catch up. The leader of the government urges all Canadians to think and act. But judging by his proposals, he seems quite content with the appearance of action. We are not much ahead on his true intentions regarding, for instance, certain basic problems such as the distribution of power between the two levels of government.

[English]

As I was saying, sir, the Prime Minister calls his document "A Time for Action". I think it would be far more appropriate, judging by its contents, if he called it "A Time for the Appearance of Action". Some of the proposals, I must say, are as interesting now as they were when we first made them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: But, sir, the significance of this document is not the presence or the absence of imaginative proposals. What is significant here is the tone. This document anticipates unilateral changes in a partnership. It distinguishes between two categories of constitutional change: those characterized as phase I, where there is "full capacity for parliament to act alone", and those characterized as phase II, which "the federal government and the provinces must discuss together". That might be the way to treat an ordinary law, but it is no way at all to approach a constitution. The intention here is quite clear. Where the federal government is obliged to get agreement from the provinces, it will aceept that obligation. Where it has a narrow legal competence to act alone, then it will act alone.

Of course, it pledges consultation in this document in one sentence, but in the next sentence it pledges a deadline thirteen months from now.

[Translation]

The Prime Minister is prompt to praise the virtues of federalism, but he is behaving like the leader of a single type of government. In a federation where the central power and the provinces are to be true partners, the leader of the government has no qualms whatsoever about saying that he intends to proceed unilaterally with some constitutional amendments which are of vital concern to the provinces.

[English]

The reason that is particularly alarming is that it has been this very tone, this refusal to regard confederation as a partnership where partners co-operate even when they are not required to, that has done so much damage to our country in this last ten years, on questions ranging last week alone from sales tax to the lottery. That, sir, of course, is a source of partisan disagreement in this House. I do not raise it in a partisan way. There are other times and other topics for partisan division.

I agree with the Prime Minister that this fundamental question is more important than parties, but the fact is that this document fails to reflect, as perhaps sadly its authors failed to recognize, that the paternalistic tone of this proposal is itself a major modern cause for distrust and disunity in Canada. This process, sir, will come to nothing unless that is recognized. Indeed, it may come to worse than nothing because it may deepen the divisions that exist among Canadians. That is particularly true since the reaction of the separatist government of one province is already predictable. That makes it all the more essential that every step is taken to secure a consensus among the other provinces, and that, sir, will happen only if they are treated as full partners in this process and are not faced with deadlines or with declarations that may turn out to impede agreement.

These last two years have shown us all that there is a great deal of agreement in this country about the necessity for constitutional and administrative reform. There is also, as we found as a nation in earlier times of challenge and of crisis, a great deal of good will in Canada that will result in concrete agreement. I found this in Kingston last September when I met with four premiers from one party from very different provinces and secured agreements on important constitutional, administrative, and economic changes. I make the point in passing, sir, that it would be tragic for the unity of this country if we were to deflect attention from the fundamental requirement of this parliament to address ourselves to economic growth over the next six to eight months. I found that kind of agreement also when I discussed those changes arrived at in Kingston with other party leaders in the other provinces in subsequent discussions.

We came to Kingston as partners and we found agreement because there was a basis of mutual respect. The Fathers of Confederation came together as partners, and they found agreement. We can do that again today providing we recognize that confederation is a partnership and not a system where one government can adopt a paternalistic and domineering attitude toward all the others.

There is one other matter of procedure that concerns me in relation to the document that has been tabled here today and the proposal that I understand the Prime Minister is making as to how we proceed with it. That is the role of this parliament. We have demonstrated before in this House of Commons a capacity to secure progress and to secure a consensus on constitutional questions when parliament is given the chance to address those questions. I would hope, sir, that there will be the widest possible role for parliament, not just the government, in considering constitutional and administrative reforms that we must contemplate as a country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) suggested in his statement today, in recent years Canadians have, indeed, been giving more thought than usual to the problems and prospects of our country. At every level there has been concern that the traditional Canadian dream for a united Canada, committed to a just and exciting society based on liberty and equality for all our people—French-speaking, English-speaking, other ethnic groups, the Inuit, and the Indian—was falling short of realization.

[Translation]

It is ironic and historically sad that this anxiety regarding the future of the country should appear when the Canadians of my generation, whether they are French or English-speaking, have succeeded in gaining unprecedented recognition in the cultural field, and this at the national and international levels.

[English]

Beyond this level of creative excitement, Mr. Speaker, as we all know, there have been disturbing and unsettling signs of discontent. It is important that we understand the origins of this discontent. They are to be found in the inequality as it exists between and within our regions. They are to be found in the absence of strong federal leadership which ought to have been positively identifying itself with the cultural excitement of French and English-speaking Canada in recent decades. They are to be found in the absence of federal leadership which recognizes that the independence of the Canadian economy and all that depends on it are threatened at least as much today by our vigorous neighbours to the south as they were more than 100 years ago, and finally they are to be found in the lack of a specific Canadian constitution which contains in one document guarantees for individual and cultural rights of Canadians as well as a division of responsibilities between federal and provincial authorities.

[Translation]

We must get involved in the political life of our country, show leadership in each of the fields that have a bearing on the country's future, like regional disparities, recognition of fundamental rights or political determination to achieve Canada's economic independence. It is in that perspective that I want to answer today to the Prime Minister's statement.

[English]

The highest priority we must set for ourselves is to establish at this time in the hearts and minds of Canadians that we are now embarking upon the development of a future that is both just and exciting, and that deals with all of these questions. Our priority must be to pledge ourselves, not simply to constitutional reform, but, more basically, to the removal of inequalities and the establishment of a viable, healthy, industrial country in this part of North America.

In the broad sense of what our country is about, the document which the Prime Minister has tabled, I regret to say, fails. It is totally devoid of a broad scale of imagination. Regrettably, it deals only with the most general proposals on the constitution and the establishment of linguistic and other rights. As important as these are, they are not new. We all assumed that proposals would be made concerning these areas at some point during this year, and in this sense we accept and support them.

It is worse than regrettable that a document entitled "A Time for Action" is exclusively legalistic in its proposals for the future of our country and of our people. Economic inequalities within our country and the deeply serious matter of the economic viability of our future on the North American continent are virtually ignored. A statement of purpose so narrow in its focus and so devoid of concern for matters beyond a legal framework for our nationhood is totally inadequate to meet our needs as a people at this time.

It is, indeed, time for action. A central concern in the confederation debates more than 100 years ago was the state of the economy of the various provinces. Where is that concern in the document that has been tabled today? The economic position of Atlantic Canada compared to Ontario has worsened since confederation, not improved. We still have millions of people at the poverty level, while the rich still get richer in our country. We have a manufacturing sector which is weaker today than it was a decade ago, and we have more than one million people unemployed. And, as Sir John A. Macdonald would well understand, we cannot stand idly by while our vigorous neighbours to the south daily make inroads on our economic independence as a people. Canadians want action.

They want imagination and leadership which will reverse our inequalities and reshape our economy for the requirements of the twentieth century. Legal pedantry of the kind we have today is no substitute for leadership.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for having provided us with a copy of his statement a few minutes before the opening of this sitting. As usual, we were able to read the statements of principles in the newspapers, but we could not be sure if this was improvisation on the part of the reporters or a leak that the government obviously wanted.

The title "A Time for Action" is well chosen because it shows at least that the right hon. Prime Minister has backed down in finally deciding to make an appeal for a real constitution. It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that I did not say a renewed constitution, as the right hon. Prime Minister calls it, because I have always thought that the British North America Act is simply a royal order of the British Crown for its Canadian colony that we have used up to this day. Since it was written in England by the parliament in London, it could not reflect the aspirations of the Fathers of Confederation who had certainly spent many months preparing a thick memorandum for the British government, and this memorandum, which favoured a confederation in which the provinces would have priority, was probably put aside to be replaced by this little private bill which was entitled the British North America Act and which has been the basis for our constitution since 1867.

This is why I agree with the right hon. Prime Minister when he lists certain defects of the present constitution, including the following, and I quote:

It is based largely on acts of the British parliament and has not yet been properly rooted in Canada.

Its provisions are scattered through a large number of statutes, many of which are unknown to the general public.

It has not preamble or statement of principles; its language is obscure, its style plodding and uninspiring.

It has little educative value and Canadians find in it little which inspires patriotism.

It makes no mention of basic rights or freedoms, and it is inadequate to protect language rights.

Its division of legislative powers between the federal and provincial governments is neither as precise nor as functional as might be wished.

And he goes on to enumerate the shortcomings that he finds in the British North America Act. For example, Mr. Speaker, I have always thought that its greatest shortcoming was to have made the federal government the architect with a certain measure of supremacy over the provinces. We reason that very often that is why the federal government instructs the provinces instead of consulting them. Of course, compared to previous agreements the 1867 confederation represented one more step toward Canadian unity, but for many years all the provinces and all Canadians have been hoping for new agreements and their greatest desire would be to see the provinces initiate consultations within their borders so as to come up with strictly interprovincial conferences, through which they could tell the central government what they expect from it.

We are still convinced that only a confederation including all provinces will bring back harmony in Canada. As long as the federal government interferes in interprovincial conferences to rouse their suspicion and pit them against each other we shall witness the same confusion that has prevailed in the last 110 years in federal-provincial conferences. We should recognize once for all that the provinces will have the final veto.

So, if the federal government really wants to do something useful for Canada it should encourage the provinces to get together and agree on a constitution. Shall we have a true confederation under our new constitution? This is the first question. Or will it be a federation as the present government sees it, that is to say a profitable federalism with a strong central government and in which the provinces will be nothing more than administrative districts.

I think the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) best expressed the thoughts of the government when he declared in the House recently that the ideal solution for Canada would be a single government! With such statements, Mr. Speaker, this is something we will have to consider because if we are to judge someone through his actions, the ten years of administration of the present government are not very favourable to provincial autonomy. The many intrusions into provincial jurisdictions and the Quebec jurisdiction particularly make Quebeckers wonder about their future.

This is why I ask the government to avoid any confrontation at least with Quebec, end personal conflicts and try negotiation. We must absolutely avoid the unfortunate mistake of 1867. We must absolutely avoid it and judging from the orientation of this issue, I think that we are going towards even more centralization in which the federal government will have almost all powers and will leave only secondary powers to the provinces. I sound a warning note to the right hon. Prime Minister and all government members and I hope we will change our orientation so as to favour the provinces.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been trying to obtain a copy of this document. It has gone to my office. This has not been very helpful to me in posing any questions I might have to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—

An hon. Member: We are all in the same boat.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not know why my friend over there is so sensitive. I understand what the Prime Minister said in his comments. This document is of some importance, and I understand he will accept questions in relation to it. It is perhaps a good time to get enlightenment—

An hon. Member: There it is!

Mr. Stanfield: Thank you very much.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct several questions to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with regard to this document which is long on generalizations and pretty short on specifics.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister, for example, some specific questions with regard to certain proposals which are included. He said in his statement and in the document that he would like to invite all Canadians to participate in the discussion on constitutional change—constitutional renewal. I am interested in the forum that would be provided for this. The Prime Minister will remember that last year about this time we on this side of the House proposed that a joint parliamentary committee be set up to provide that forum wherein all Canadians could participate and make their views known with regard to constitutional review. That suggestion was not accepted at that time; it was bypassed by the Pepin-Robarts commission. I know that later this year with the constitutional conference, by necessity parliament will again be bypassed.

I make a special plea to the Prime Minister this afternoon to consider referring this document immediately—and he might inform us on this point—and I would ask him how detailed proposals will be presented. Will they be presented to parliament by way of legislation? If so, will he refer this document with any legislation forthcoming before the end of this session to a special joint parliamentary committee which would sit throughout the summer months to study these proposals and allow Canadians to appear before it to make their views known, so that parliament indeed can have a role in the renewal of our constitution?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it would be our intention to propose the setting up of such a joint parliamentary committee. Before the end of the month we would like to find a day, or perhaps two, on which to have a debate on the government proposals, with a view to setting up such a committee at the end of the debate. I am sure that all parties in the House will be discussing an appropriate committee and appropriate timing for such a debate.

Miss MacDonald: I take it by that that the Prime Minister will also consider the suggestion that a special parliamentary committee be appointed at least before the end of the month to sit through the summer and have input into these proposals later in the year.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister to tell us as well the status of the Pepin-Robarts commission in relation to the proposals being put forward. Would the Prime Minister say whether these proposals are coming forward by way of legislation before the end of the month, and would he also indicate the particular status of the Pepin-Robarts commission at this point, a commission which was appointed on July 5 last year with a mandate initially for one year, which was to provide a source of advice to the government on unity issues? That commission has not yet issued a report and it is not anticipated that its report will be forthcoming for some months. What is going to happen to that report? Will it be superseded by proposals that the government puts forward, and where does it stand in relation to the government's proposals?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, when the Pepin-Robarts commission was set up, as the hon. lady reminds us correctly, it was intended to report within a year. Then when it was apparent the number of presentations on the task of the commission was such that it would not be able to report finally before the end of the year, it was expected that perhaps there might be an interim report which the government could have consulted before bringing down this particular white paper. We understand that that has not been possible. Therefore, we had to proceed with this white paper without the benefit of the Pepin-Robarts commission report.

I would point out that the proposals of the government at this stage, though they are a white paper and do represent government policy, are in front of parliament and the country for the purposes of discussion. As it is stated in this particular paper, Mr. Speaker, we do expect a federal-provincial conference on the constitution early in the fall. We hope that there too there will be a possibility of input from the provinces. So we would have many sources of input, the standing committee, which the hon. lady mentioned, the Pepin-Robarts committee, reactions from the country of course, and finally the federal-provincial conference of first ministers. As a result of all that, after having heard from everyone, the provincial governments, the House of Commons, and the people of Canada, we would then propose to proceed in the House of Commons in the next session with a bill for adoption, as it is said in the white paper, before July 1, 1979.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure from what the Prime Minister has said and what this document states that they are one and the same thing, for example, "the government will soon be informing parliament and all Canadians of its details." I still do not know whether or not the Prime Minister intends to introduce those details by way of legislation or by way of a further white paper, because there is very little in the way of detail here as to the specifics of any of the proposals. Surely we would need more to go on than this? The government goes on to say, "There is no expectation that these proposals will be passed by parliament without change." So, unless we know something of the detail of the proposals, it is very difficult to formulate any views on them or to suggest changes. These are very broad measures indeed. I would like to know whether it is the government's intention to introduce those details before the end of the month.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the government intends to proceed in two stages on the white paper tabled today, and which is the object of today's discussion. It intends to put forward the general principles on Canadian identity, and the principles for renewal, the way in which we want to renew the practice of federalism. We did hope that this would cause some reflection in parliament, and outside, on the principles which inspire government's actions. This will be followed before the end of the month by a bill which will be given first reading in this House. It is on that bill that we intend to have the House leaders look for the possibility of debate for the setting up of a standing committee, a special committee of the House of Commons and of the Senate, or two special committees, if this is what is preferred by members of parliament of both Houses, so that they will be able to take cognizance of the bill, not after second reading; the bill itself, or the subject matter will be referred to the committees, Mr. Speaker.

I must say the first reading of that bill does give me some concern now. Having heard from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) that we must first consult with the provinces before doing anything here, I am wonderig if we should show the bill to the premiers before showing it to the House of Commons. This would cause me some concern, but if that is the view of the Leader of the Opposition, of course we would be prepared to do that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Shallow and wrong again.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister concerning some detail. I have read in the white paper, and I have heard the Prime Minister say, that we will get some details later on. One particular matter of interest to me and on which perhaps he could shed some light concerns the Senate, to be renamed the House of Federation. Could the Prime Minister tell us now what the government has in mind in terms of appointment by the provinces? Just what kind of detail has the government already worked out on that subject matter?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this would be spelled out in very considerable detail in the bill which will be given first reading in the House. In this white paper, I repeat, we have intended to state the principles, the general lines of action, but the details will be contained in the bill.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, just on the question of principle which is outlined in the white paper, the stated intention of the government is by means of reforming the Senate to give the provinces a greater and more effective say in Ottawa. I would like to ask the Prime Minister, considering there is no talk about changing the power of the Senate—thank God—will this whole operation not be a bit hollow because what is being proposed is to give the provinces authority in a body that quite appropriately has no power in Ottawa?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we hope that is the very subject which will be discussed by the country and by the joint committee of the House of Commons and of the Senate. The hon. member, without benefit of seeing the proposals, suggested that it might be quite hollow. I hope that we will benefit from his intellectual resources when we come to discuss this proposition. He realizes, of course, that in a parliamentary system there is a choice to be made by those who are writing the constitution between having a second chmber which is truly representative of the people of the regions or provinces,—which presumably would be elected with all the attendent problems of cabinet and responsible government,—or having some other form of representation. We come down on one side of the choice, but I am sure we will benefit from the insight of the hon. member into this problem.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister confirm for us that when the bill is brought forward, pertaining to the Senate particularly, the government will not be imposing an increase in the powers of the Senate?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think in order to avoid answering in detail any of these questions, I must ask the hon. member to be patient and to wait until the bill comes forward. He will see what powers we propose for the Senate.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, on page 11 of the document there is a phrase which reads as follows:

> The courts . . . .conferred on the federal authority most of the powers necessary for the government of the federation as a whole.

That referred to a process. I am wondering if it is an accurate interpretation of that particular section. It is on page 11, about two-thirds of the way down. I am sorry, I do not have the original copy. I will give the quotation again.

● (1552)

Mr. Trudeau: I have it.

Mr. Clark: Does the government intend by that to indicate its view that the federal government does not now have all of the authority that it requires, and all of the powers necessary for the government of the federation as a whole? If that is the case, can the Prime Minister indicate to us what kinds of new powers he thinks are necessary to be added to the central authority?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this paragraph in reality refers to the historical evolution. I think it is generally recognized that the Canadian federation today is less centralized in practice than it was 110 years ago, although there has been that great redistribution of powers. That is all this particular paragraph intends.

In so far as the distribution of powers in a new federation is concerned, which seems to be of interest to the Leader of the Opposition, we do intend and do say that this is open for discussion. We are ready for a re-examination of the functions of both levels of government and a redistribution of powers in whatever way is of greatest utility to the citizen. However, no suggestion is made that it should result in a greater decentralization or, indeed, in a greater centralization. We think there should be some shifts of power in both directions.

I would certainly incur the wrath of the Leader of the Opposition if I were to indicate now without the benefit of consultation, what we would like to see become federal jurisdiction which is now provincial jurisdiction.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I am quite sincere. The Leader of the Opposition does present me with a dilemma. I repeat it to him. Would he like us to show the premiers the bill before we show it to the House of Commons? I am in his hands and will do whatever he suggests is best.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I rather think the Prime Minister is anticipating himself by four or five months by putting questions to me, but I will be delighted to answer them. I think it would be very profitable for the system if the Prime Minister were to get together with his counterparts in the provinces and have some kind of discussion now which might serve as the basis for proposals that might come from the federal government or from the provinces. This business of people issuing manifestos from behind their jurisdictional barricades will not take us very far. I hope the Prime Minister might follow the example that I set for him, since he has raised this question, when I met with the premiers at Kingston. I wonder if I might now ask the Prime Minister this, just for the purpose of clarification. On page 23 the document states that the government will therefore be putting forward proposals regarding constitutional provisions for certain institutions of the executive of the central government. Can the Prime Minister tell me in a general way what that phrase means?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, in his comments on consultation the Leader of the Opposition makes bold that he met four premiers. I must remind him that throughout the months of November and December I met every one of the premiers and we had lengthy discussions on the constitution and economic matters. In those discussions I spoke at great length about the subject matter of this white paper. I indicated to them that we were proceeding with phase I and phase II, and asked what they thought about it. I indicated in phase I what it was our intention to discuss.

I not only had these discussions with the premiers, but the hon. member will know that there were many speeches and comments made by the premiers either resulting from or following upon those discussions, and we do have the benefit of the views of many, if not all, of those premiers on the constitution.

I will be tabling later this week, when my letters have been received by the premiers, a lengthy letter which is in their hands at this moment on the white paper, and commenting on some of the proposals which they have made on constitutional change in the past months.

We must consider that for something like 52 years this subject of constitutional renewal has been debated in parliament after parliament. It was debated during several provincial conferences between 1968 and 1971, and was the subject of consultation time and time again since then at meetings of the premiers and with myself on the constitution.

I think the House will recognize that at some point it is not only natural but desirable for the government to give leadership and to say that, after all these consultations, this is what we think. However, we are of course anxious to know what the opposition thinks and what the premiers think. That is why this very day and in the following days of this week there will be meetings with the premiers on the basis of this paper and on the basis of the general content of the bill.

When we do table the bill in this House, before the end of the month, I hope we will not hear from the Leader of the Opposition that it is full of platitudes and, to use his expression, déjà vu, a lot of things that have just been rehashed and, on the other hand, objecting that it has not been shown to the provinces in advance. This is just a general comment which I mean to be helpful to the hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister was so overcome by the privilege of putting a question that he forgot to answer the one I put. I am sure he would like to redirect his attention to the meaning of the proposal for certain institutions. To save the time of the House, will he also indicate just how firm is the timetable of July 1, 1979?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the reason why I made a lengthy answer is because the Leader of the Opposition always brings in preambles when he makes suggestions. I think it is normal that I make some comment on them.

In terms of his particular question on the executive, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition probably knows that in the present BNA Act the function of the executive and its composition are not spelled out in any detail. It would be our intention in the bill presented to the House of Commons to spell them out in quite a bit of detail.

On the second question, Mr. Speaker, that of the dealine, we think that within the next 12 months and 19 days it is reasonable for the country and parliament to be able to make up their mind on what the federal government, acting alone under the constitution, can do.

I repeat what I said in my statement some minutes ago. We hope this will be approached in a non-partisan spirit. Many of the proposals we have made and will make find their echo in proposls made on the other side of the House in their policy paper on the constitution. Indeed, many of the provincial premiers have been saying things which will find an echo in our bill.

In having the benefit of the bill very soon, and having it before them until the federal-provincial conference in the fall, we hope the premiers will be able to express some concrete response to this in so far as we are anxious to have their opinions, even in areas where the federal government and parliament can act alone. We hope this will be true of the Leader of the Opposition, and his party as well, and that between now and the next four months he will be able to arrive at some view on what the federal institutions and federal parliament are, and how the federal institutions and parliament should be composed in order to respond more accurately to the aspirations of the Canadian people and the principles set out in this white paper, assuming that these principles of renewal are some with which the opposition can agree. If they are not, we are once again prepared to discuss these principles and modify them for the better.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are some ten or more members standing to put questions at this time. The Chair is expected to exercise a discretion about the duration of this kind of question period. It is certainly far too soon now to consider stopping it. I do not mean that. Neither do I think it is intended that these question periods after a statement afford the opportunity for an exhaustive discussion on any subject on any particular day. Perhaps I could recognize a few more hon. members, but I shall have to ask that the questions be kept brief.

Mr. McGrath: I know Your Honour will not lose sight of the fact that we are dealing with an important document in the history of our country and one which conceivably has implications for the future. The background to my question is a study taking place in Toronto today at which provincial ministers of urban affairs and housing are meeting with the federal minister to discuss his clumsy intrusion into provincial affairs. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has already dissociated himself from the remarks made by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellett) who stated at the conference of the Canadian Federation of Mayors in Edmonton last week that the role of the municipalities must be fully enshrined in the constitution as an additional level of government on its own. As I say, the Prime Minister has dissociated himself from that statement, but perhaps he will explain what the intentions of the government are in this area. The right hon. gentleman talks about the trend to urbanization and growth of our cities; he suggests the population of some of them might be greater than that of certain provinces, and talks about Canadian cities as being a new problem which will require attention. When considering such cities, is he thinking about bringing in mayors and municipalities within a constitutional context?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I suggest the hon. gentleman is confusing two areas of discussion. To the extent that the quotation he gave refers to something said in this debate, what we are saying is that when Canada was founded 110 years ago the Fathers of Confederation were dealing with a largely rural society, whereas today the majority of Canadians live in cities. This has created not only a new power relationship but a great many new problems, and it is necessary to deal with them. As to the principles which the government has in mind, I would refer to chapter IV on renewing the practice of federalism, and particularly to page 17 where a certain number of proposals for action are set out.

We have made two proposals in particular—I shall not take up the time of the House reading them but they are there on page 17 and their intention is, to eliminate wasteful duplication where it exists by attempting, along with the provinces, to define more accurately the areas where the provinces and the federal government should be acting each in its own sphere. We will be making special proposals to the provinces for action in this area. When problems, by their very nature, come under shared or joint jurisdictin we will also make proposals to ensure that this joint jurisdiction is exercised jointly and in consultation. I commend page 17 to the attention of the hon. member.

Mr. McGrath: I refer again to the statement made by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs at the meeting of the Canadian Association of Mayors in Edmonton when according to newspaper reports:

> ... Mr. Ouellet assured the delegates their municipalities would be full and equal partners with the other levels of government in current discussions on constitutional reforms.

Given the constitutional fact of life that the cities are creatures of the provinces, an aspect of jurisdiction which the provinces jealously guard, would the Prime Minister tell the House how the government intends to go about bringing the municipalities in on this so-called constitutional reform? Does he envisage, for example, a constitutional conference which would include the provinces and the municiaplities?

Mr. Trudeau: We think, Mr. Speaker, that the municipalities do have a role in being a voice of the people at the administrative level where they exist and we hope that many of them will be heard not only by the government but by the joint parliamentary committee which we propose to set up. Indeed, I believe the Pepin-Robarts committee has heard from many representatives of municipalities who have their views on the constitution. We would not propose by any narrow legalism—to borrow a phrase from the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent)—to silence them and say they should not express views on a new constitution.

Mr. McGrath: Will they be at the constitutional conference or not? That is the question. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs has indicated clearly that they would be consulted.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I repeat: they will be consulted.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that the government intends to move in two stages. I would like to ask a short question about each stage. I understand that in the first stage legislation will be brought down shortly to deal with those matters which come solely under the jurisdiction of the federal parliament. I want to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) if that includes the basic human rights to which he referred in his statement a short time ago or, in view of the fact that provincial governments have some voice in certain matters pertaining to human rights, whether this will be left until the second stage? Can we expect, in the legislation which is to be introduced later this month, clarification of the government's position with respect to basic human rights?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, I think the question is very important and I shall attempt to answer it, first in general and then in particular. In general, Mr. Speaker, we all know there are some areas under the BNA Act—the Constitution of Canada—in which the federal government can act alone. There are other areas where the provinces can act alone. Then there are areas where the two levels must act together and, again, there are areas where they can act together but each in their own sphere. The bill of rights is in this fourth category. We intend bringing in a bill of rights indicating that parliament would be bound by it as a constitutional document. We realize that certain applications of a bill of rights cannot be binding on the provinces in the sense that they raise the matter of provincial jurisdiction. In these particular areas we hope that the provinces would want to be bound by the bill of rights. In other words, there would be a provision for opting in by the provinces, by concurrent legislation, by joint resolution or whatever the formula might be, into a bill of rights which we hope would eventually bind all Canadians.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I thank the Prime Minister for that answer. The second question I want to ask is with respect to phase II, which involves discussions between the federal and provincial governments. Having regard to the division of powers, particularly with respect to Sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act and the amending formula, which is probably the most difficult part of all, and was certainly the rock upon which the Victoria charter foundered, I ask the Prime Minister this: what is to be the modus operandi which the government has in mind? Is a white paper to be prepared which will be submitted to the provinces, following which meetings will be held? Or will meetings be held first? Is the government intending to have some discussion in parliament or by a committee of parliament with regard to what the government has in mind, always recognizing that there might be changes as a result of negotiations with the provinces? Just what are the procedures which the government has in mind?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, with respect, might I slightly correct the preamble to the hon. member's question? It was not on the amending formula that the Victoria conference foundered, to use his expression. It was on something else. I believe there was general agreement at the Victoria conference, including the province of Quebec, on the amending formula. As I said in my letters to the premiers over the past years, we would hope that this formula would still serve us as a basis for patriating the constitution. What we intend to do in the course of the summer is to publish a document which would bring this subject to the attention of Canadians at large, as this white paper has done, and which would go into the various possibilities of amending formulas which historically have made some progress in Canada, and give rise to discussion among Canadians, in this House, in the legislatures and elsewhere, on this subject.

At the federal-provincial conference in the fall we would like to deal with the matter of patriation and amendment but we do realize that, strictly speaking, this could be considered outside the area of what we call phase I, since it does call for provincial consent. We do hope, however, that enough progress will be made on this matter so that we would be able to proceed by July 1 of next year not only with matters of federal jurisdiction but perhaps in a certain number of areas such as the bill of rights and the amending formula on which progress could also be made. But we realize that on this we cannot act unilaterally and we hope there will be co-operation from provincial governments, which we think will be forthcoming if the opposition parties share our views on some of these matters, and that is why we intend to present it to parliament in as non-partisan a fashion as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, following up on the questions put by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), the paper tabled today by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announces, for the implementation of the proposals contemplated in phase two of the constitutional reform, the promulgation of a new constitution for July 1, 1981. However, the paper does not seem to provide for any specific mechanism for federal-provincial negotiations such as that, for example, which was established to pave the way for the Victoria conference. It does not provide either for any process of popular identification with that effort to Canadianize our institutions. Nor does it specify whether a popular sanction is being contemplated by way of a referendum on that new constitution. Has the Prime Minister made provisions for a way of breaking the vicious circle of distrust and disillusionment that has set in the minds of Canadians since the failure of the Victoria conference with respect to the federal or provincial governments claiming the monopoly on good intentions in the area of constitutional proposals and what does he intend to do to associate as many Canadians as possible to that long awaited reform so it will best reflect the Canadian reality and that consensus the Prime Minister was referring to in his remarks will not be an illusory one and will not feed the frustration felt by many Canadians?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is perfectly right. That mechanism is not provided for in the white paper that we just tabled before the House but we intend to take precisely that problem before the House of Commons, before that joint committee of the House and the Senate and also at the premiers' meeting in the fall. There are certainly several sections under which the government could approach that problem, and the hon. member referred to some of those means. Before setting the final form we prefer to take the matter before the House and before the premiers.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the statement in the document that the draft bill, which I assume will be introduced later this month, will obviously not be an item which will be passed directly without change, and the subsequent consultation that will take place this fall with the provinces, I wonder if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) can indicate if there is to be some sort of deadline to be applied to the provinces with respect to the consultation that will take place on phase I. In what way will the recommendations which come forward from some kind of meeting between the Prime Minister and his provincial counterparts come before this special joint committee so that they can be fully considered before a final bill is presented to parliament, particularly given the deadline that the Prime Minister has enunciated?

Mr. Trudeau: What we will table before the House of Commons is a bill for first reading. This is frequently done, as the House knows, so that there can be discussion on the basis of that bill. I have indicated that, following the committee report and following the federal-provincial conference, the government will be prepared in the next session of parliament to introduce a bill for first reading and adoption by the House. It is precisely because we want to make sure that we will meet the deadline of July 1 next year that we will attempt in the bill before the House to meet, as much as possible, the concerns expressed by the provinces, by the many parties in the House, and by the Canadian people, as regards the precise reforms that we are putting before the House. It is possible that on some of the proposals we are making we will find a better formula, and although the bill represents government policy to which we are all bound, we make it quite clear in the white paper that changes can be made to the bill between the form in which it is first presented and its form in the next session.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): It is difficult to talk about a bill which is not before us, but I wonder to what degree the provinces will be able to make suggestions, perhaps fundamental suggestions, about the nature of the specifics that are in this draft bill, because I think that to some degree it circumscribes the fundamental consultation which takes place with the provinces. I suppose that the subsequent question then is: when those recommendations come to the committee and the committee makes its own recommendations, will there be any further consultations with the provinces before the government brings forward, as the Prime Minister said, its final bill for first reading in the next parliament?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member asks to what degree there will be consultation with the provinces.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): No, the extent of change.

Mr. Trudeau: They will be given the bill and they will be present at the first ministers' conference in the autumn. We are anxious to improve the bill in any way that can be suggested by the provinces or by the parliamentary committee. I would just remind the hon. member that the very nature of this bill—subject of course to the provisions which I pointed out to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), some of which will call for provincial consent if they are going to be bound by it—will be to act in areas under federal jurisdiction.

We believe that after weeks and months of consultation parliament must make up its mind at some point. I am not saying that should be in November, December, January or March; I am just saying that at some point we hope that the bill, presented in the next session of parliament, will reflect the collective wisdom of the government, of the opposition parties, and of the premiers of every province. But we are all realistic enough to know that it is unlikely that we will get every province to agree with the proposals for change that we are making. We already know from a press conference on Friday that at least one province, without having even seen the white paper, has decided that it is no good. So I cannot say that we will only proceed with the bill when everybody is agreed. I do hope that we will have established a large measure of consensus across the country, and particularly on all sides of the House.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has already alluded to the fact that a constitutional document is a political document in the best sense of the word and will require all parliamentary co-operation between the parties. I realize that there are two sides to every coin, but considering the fact that most of the members from the province of Quebec are sitting on the government side and, as everybody knows, most members from the west are on this side of the House, would it not have been wiser to constitute an all-party committee of the House before a bill of any kind was presented? I put that forward as a proposition. For example, I feel I might go to a committee where a bill has been presented and, although the government says it has read our party's proposals, where I will not feel there has been individual input. Would it not be wiser, I ask the Prime Minister, in view of what I said, to constitute an all-party parliamentary committee before we are faced with bills of any kind, even though we are only dealing with exclusively federal jurisdiction?

Mr. Trudeau: I must point out to the hon. member that this debate has been going on for quite a number of years, and I think that by now most of us have made up our minds generally on the way in which we think a new constitution should be oriented. The opposition party has published a policy paper indicating how they think the constitution should be reformed. As I said earlier, the government has benefited from this policy paper, much as we have benefited from the policy paper put out by the government of Ontario, from the western policy conference, and from statements made by various premiers across the land. I would remind the hon. member that there was such a committee which sat and which reported in 1972. The conclusions of that committee inspired us in drafting this document and in drafting the bill which will be put before the House.

At some point the hon. member must realize that it is up to someone to make up his mind and say, "This is what we think corresponds to the best interests of the country at this time and for a long period to come". This is what the bill will be. I know the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) well enough to know that he will not be inhibited merely because a bill is there for first reading only. I am sure he will continue to ensure that the government benefits from his wise thoughts in constitutional matters.

The Constitution

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the statement of principle entitled: "Pre-eminence of citizens and of their freedoms". In part the principle reads:

> The renewal of the federation must confirm the pre-eminence of citizens over institutions, guarantee their rights and freedoms, and ensure that these rights and freedoms are inalienable.

On a number of occasions this afternoon the Prime Minister spoke about leadership on the part of the federal government which he now leads. Is it his intention, in a non-partisan way, to bring forward amendments in respect of more odious provisions of such legislation, bills, and acts, as the Official Secrets Act and the War Measures Act? Some time ago the Prime Minister promised drastic changes in this regard. I wonder if he can give the leadership which he talks about in the area over which he and his government have exclusive jurisdiction, and indicate that immediate and dramatic steps will be taken to show where the government stands on this very important principle.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker. I think the answer is contained in the knowledge we all have now of the present Canadian Bill of Rights. As we know, it is an act of federal parliament which is variously interpreted by the courts. I remind the hon. member that the Bill of Rights, brought in by the former leader of the Conservative party, makes an exception for the War Measures Act, and has provisions for the War Measures Act overriding normal acts of parliament. In the bill we bring forward, it is our intention to make sure that the Bill of Rights, as stated in the constitution, will have precedence over every and all bills of the House of Commons. That can apply to any bill to which the hon. member wants to refer.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I accept the answer of the Prime Minister as far as it goes, but he has avoided and or neglected answering my specific question concerning his intentions in respect of the Official Secrets Act and the War Measures Act. Will he in fact demonstrate the good faith and the position the government takes in that connection?

The final part of my supplementary question is in respect of the entire question of freedom of information which is receiving some consideration now. In that regard, according to the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) and the government, the question which is causing concern within cabinet is whether the government will accept the proposition, as far as freedom of information is concerned, that the arbitration of the rights of Canadians will be one which is binding upon the government, notwithstanding the fact that the argument often used is that our parliamentary system is based on British tradition. Will he give us the assurance he is committed to the idea that whoever is to be the final arbiter, judicial or otherwise, the final arbiter will have the power to bind the institution of government and the cabinet in particular?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, with respect, I think we are beginning to deviate from the subject matter of this white paper. I want to assure the hon. member that legislation will be before his eyes very soon, before the end of the month. He can read the sections on the Bill of Rights and fundamental guarantees. If he wants to propose some amendment, assuming the thought is not already there, to make the constitution supreme over the War Measures Act, or over the practices of cabinet secrecy and other such practices, I hope he feels free to move such an amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether according to the white paper, it is considered that the guarantee of linguistic equality suffices to establish the equality of the two founding nations. For instance, if we want to go further in that field, will the reform of the Supreme Court allow for the addition of a court, which might be called constitutional, where the Anglophones and Francophones of Canada would be represented equally? Finally, Mr. Speaker, still with a view to Canadianizing our institutions, is the government at this point willing to call in question again, or at the very least to reassess, our ties with the British Crown?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first question I must, regretfully, give the hon. member the same type of answer that I gave hon. members on all sides of the House, namely that at this stage I do not want to give the details of the specific provisions dealing with the supreme court in the bill we shall soon introduce in the House. As for the second question, Mr. Speaker, I can say to the hon. member that we intend to reaffirm the fact that the Canadian Constitution is a constitution that sets up a constitutional monarchy.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I note there are other hon. members who wish to ask questions. Certainly I think time ought to be taken for them. In light of the time already spent, I think questions should be confined to those members who have been present throughout the discussion and have sought the floor to ask questions. As I have noted, those members are: the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), and the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Marceau).

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, perhaps my question will appear to be somewhat naive, but perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) can indicate his views on this. Is it his intention to have this parliament deal with the first phase of this program?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is closely related to the one just asked. On page 25 of the white paper I notice the government pledges itself to seek passage of such constitutional legislation before July 1, 1979. Specifically I notice the following words: "pledges itself to seek passage".

Given the life of this parliament which, according to my understanding, will end on July 8 or 9, 1979, this particular legislation will have had to pass this House by May 8 or 9, 1979. In other words, some 11 months hence. Is that the understanding of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, certainly the hon. member is mistaken when he talks about a date in May. Hopefully the date in July will permit us to proceed before the House of Commons well into the spring. I am sure there are other constitutional experts, but I hope we will not have to do this on the eve of July 1. I hope that well before winter is out parties will have made up their minds on what is best in terms of constitutional reform, and that they would be prepared to vote on it.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister deliberately misunderstood my question.

My other derives from comments which appear on page 24 of the white paper. I am referring to the amending procedure and the patriation. Recognizing as the white paper does that many of the propositions will have to be passed by the House of Commons in London, I come down to the form. The Prime Minister has talked about a bill. In effect, is he talking about bills or resolutions which will be forwarded to London for passage, including such things as the amending process and certain other features? Even the division of powers under our existing constitution, prior to the constitution being patriated, might well have to be approved, at least in substance, in London. How does the Prime Minister plan to proceed in this particular matter? Will it be by bill which would be something we would enact in this House? Will it be by resolution which would be forwarded to Westminster for sanction?

Mr. Trudeau: In the case of the measure that will be presented to the House before the end of the month, it is quite clearly a bill in the normal and regular form. Other steps such as patriation can and might be taken by way of joint resolution of both Houses, but that is not for debate at this particular phase now. We are talking of a bill which will be tabled before this House before the end of the month.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question which I think is of importance to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Recently I had the opportunity of meeting with the National Indian Brotherhood and with the Indian chiefs of Saskatchewan. They were concerned that the treaty rights of the Indian people be enshrined in any new constitution. I am wondering whether the Prime Minister is contemplating enshrining the treaty rights of the Indians in the constitution, as well as the rights of the Inuit people of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we will make quite sure in the bill we want to present, and in any further action, that any rights enjoyed by the Indian and native people, the Inuit, will not be taken from them but, on the contrary, will be protected.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I assume it can also be taken that the Indian people will be consulted before the bill is finally passed?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I would hope that the parliamentary committee would see its way clear, particularly in that area, to consult these groups.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Lapointe): During the weekend, it has been said that, according to the white paper which has been tabled, the federal government was not thinking of dropping any of its powers. Would the Prime Minister specify that this allegation is false and that the federal government intends to consider the abandonment of some of its powers, and perhaps to reshuffle the federal powers in a way which would be favourable to the federal government? Also, in this redistribution of powers, is the Prime Minister considering only a transfer of powers from the federal government to the provincial governments or vice versa or does he intend to give some importance to regional governments?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the government's proposal to that effect is clear. On the basis of the two basic principles, which consist in the preservation of a true federation and in the protection of individual rights, we say that everything can be a matter of negotiation. So it is clear that in the area of the sharing of powers, we are prepared to discuss the transfer of powers in one way or the other so that the result would be more appropriate, functionally speaking, to the necessity of a better government.

In answer to the second question, Mr. Speaker, I would say that at the present stage of our proposals, we have not yet entered the area of the detailed distribution of powers and consequently, we cannot answer the hon. member's question immediately, but we wish to have in-depth discussions with the provinces in order to have their points of view on that issue.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I noted some remarks made by the right hon. Prime Minister a moment ago, and what worries me a little is the importance that was given to the Pepin-Robarts commission. Last year, the Prime Minister had announced with much emphasis the creation of that commission and I think that all Canadians expected a lot from that group of experts. We realize that the commission may not have been able to make its report within the prescribed delay, but how can the right hon. gentleman explain to the Canadian people that, given those delays, he has decided himself to write this document which in fact repeats many comments he has already made to us, with the only difference that he put them on paper? I think that the Canadian people expected very much from that report and we had reason to believe that it would help parliament make the new legislation that the Prime Minister intends to submit. Does the Prime Minister really intend to present his draft legislation before the report of the commission?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as many other hon. members, the hon. member pestered me with questions to know when we were going to table our constitutional proposals. We have just tabled them. I indicated earlier, in answer to his leader, that of course we would have liked to have the views of the Pepin-Robarts commission before tabling this first project, but I explained that it was not possible. The Pepin-Robarts commission had too much work, many more consultations than expected at first; this session will close at the end of the month and we think that the country and the opposition in particular would have a right to complain if we had not tabled our proposals before the Pepin-Robarts commission tabled their own, either in late fall or in midwinter. So we decided to go ahead on our own but, as I explained earlier, during the next session of parliament we will introduce a new bill which will take into consideration not only the views of all hon. members, but also resolutions from the Pepin-Robarts commission.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, does the right hon. Prime Minister understand my question? He must recognize that his statement is extremely serious as concerns the cost of this commission for Canadians. I think that, like all members of the House, he recognizes the great value of the members of the commission and the importance that it has had. Now, the right hon. Prime Minister finds it very easy to say: Well, they did not have time to submit their report so I have decided to write a book which should be entitled "The Future Canadian Constitution".

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that my colleagues have comments to make on this issue, but Canadians have given great importance to this report, Mr. Robarts and Mr. Pepin have stated how important it is to submit their report, we await with great anticipation the report of this commission, and I do not think that the right hon. Prime Minister can ignore this report to introduce constitutional reforms. I would be very insulted if I were a member of this commission. I therefore ask the right hon. Prime Minister to at least attempt to obtain the report of the commission so that the House of Commons can discuss this issue on the basis of the very valuable information that the commission should normally be able to provide us with after the hearings that it held throughout the country.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has enough experience in this House to know that the government does not control royal inquiry commissions and does not decide when they should submit their reports. We were placed before the fact that the session was coming to an end before we had received the report from the royal inquiry commission. What I am trying to explain to the hon. member is that the government is meeting its responsibilities by expressing its point of view while being careful to say that this is the policy of the government and that we are prepared to consider the opinions of the opposition parties. The hon. member says that the country will pay for the commission. The country also pays him to sit in the House, but as we know the hon. member would have been the first to complain if the government had waited until November or December to bring in constitutional proposals. I seem to recall that the hon. member has been among those who have asked me most often to take a position in this regard and to submit proposals. Now that we have done so, of course, he is blaming us for having done precisely what he asked us to do.

MOTION TO LIMIT COMMITTEE STAGE DEBATE ON BILL C-56

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that it has not been possible for the party representatives to reach an agreement pursuant to Standing Order 75A or 75B with regard to the allocation of time for study in committee of the whole of Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions.

[Translation]

For this reason, pursuant to Stading Order 75C, I give notice that at the next sitting I will be proposing that two additional days be allocated to the study of the bill in committee of the whole.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,172, 1,511 and 1,554 to 1,585 inclusive.

[Text]

METROPOLITAN AREA GROWTH INVESTMENTS LIMITED

Question No. 1,172—Mr. Andre:

1. What is the Crown's precise financial interest in Metropolitan Area Growth Investments Limited as administered by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and on what date was such interest acquired, at what cost and for what reason?

2. What was the book value of the Crown's equity on the date of acquisition and what is its latest estimated book value?

3. To date, what is the Crown's total investment, including equity costs, contributions to operating funds, debt forgiveness and what is the Crown's total realized profit from such investment?

4. In what manner is the Crown's interest represented (a) on the board of directors (b) in its senior management?

5. Did the government make a policy decision in regard to the future disposition of its interest?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. (a) Crown's financial interest—Please refer to question No. 5356 answered June 2, 1976. (b) Date interest required—Please refer to question No. 5356 answered June 2, 1976. (c) Cost—Please refer to question No. 5356 answered June 2, 1976. (d) Reason—The company was established for the purpose of identifying industrial and commercial business opportunities in Halifax-Dartmouth area and establishing business operations to pursue these opportunities.

2. (a) Book value of Crown's equity—Please refer to question No. 5356 answered June 2, 1976. (b) Crown's latest estimated book value—As of March 31, 1977 the Crown's estimated book value was $5.8 million.

3. (a) Crown's total investment—See part 1 above. (b) Equity cost—See part 1 above. (c) Contribution to operation funds—None. (d) Debt forgiveness—None. (e) Crown's realized profit—None, corporation profits returned to earned surplus.

4. (a) Two board members. (d) None.

5. No.

CONTAINER RATES

Question No. 1,511—Mr. Forrestall:

Has the government conducted a study on the impact which the proposed reduction in rates on containers transitive through the Montreal/Lake Ontario section of the St. Lawrence Seaway may have on the ports of Halifax and Saint John and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, in the government's best estimate, will the proposed reduction help shipping lines such as Ernst Russ (Great Lakes European Line) in competing with shipping lines serving Halifax and/or Saint John, for cargo originating in or destined to Toronto?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): (a) Modifications to the structure of tolls have been based on extensive discussions both in Canada and the United States and many studies in the two countries have assessed the sensitivity of seaway traffic to tolls. (b) A net reduction of less than 20 cents per ton in the Montreal-Lake Ontario section will only affect the containers consigned to Lake Ontario ports. This amount is almost insignificant in the overall cost of bringing containers to the mid-continent and the new rates are not expected to affect one way or the other the competitive position of Great Lakes ports vis-à-vis Atlantic ports.

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: records are not kept in such a way as to enable the Public Service Commission to answer parts 3, 4 and 5 of these questions. In addition, the necessary data to endeavour to answer parts 1 and 2 would be incomplete, unreliable and prohibitively costly to provide.

Mr. Young: I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

WAYS AND MEANS

INCOME TAX

The House proceeded to the consideration of a ways and means motion to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance) moved:

That a ways and means motion to amend the Income Tax Act laid upon the table on Thursday, June 8, 1978, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon)—Transport—Coast guard building in Victoria Harbour, B.C.; the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway)—Urban Affairs—Possible conflict of interest respecting deputy minister of urban affairs; the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco)—Airports—Safety facilities at Cranbrook, B.C.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Thursday, June 8, consideration in committee of the whole of Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions—Mr. Chrétien—Mr. Turner in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, we have just now heard the motion put forward by the Minister of Finance in respect to another closure. If there is any sense of outrage on the part of those people who are watching this proceeding, this must certainly fuel that sense. The fact of the matter is that we have now had one day in committee of the whole to consider this bill clause by clause. Within one hour's time of starting this consideration, the people on the other side supporting the government were yelling and screaming, "filibuster" and "time for closure." They did not even give us a chance to get our preliminary remarks out in connection with this bill and the Minister of Finance is now standing up at this point in time informing us of closure.

I know how much he hates committee of the whole and hates to answer questions. If members will recall, the last time we considered this piece of legislation the minister actually refused to answer questions. He sat in his place, he walked out of the chamber, and he refused to answer any questions. There were legitimate questions put to him in accordance with the ruling of the Chairman by people on this side of the House. He either did not know or was afraid to give the answers. It is no wonder—

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, a question of privilege—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Minister of Finance on a question of privilege.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has stated something that is not true. I would like to answer the questions, but according to the ruling of the Chairman on clause 1 there is no obligation on me to reply to any of the questions. I would like to state very categorically that we have had a full day on clause 1 already, and not one single question has been asked of me. If the hon. member wishes to proceed clause by clause, I am waiting and eager. I have not imposed closure, but have given time allocation which means that there are three days available to discuss this bill.

After 19 days, Mr. Chairman, we have not finished clause 1 as yet, and any observer would realize what is going on. The opposition merely wishes to score some political points which they are losing because they are in bed with the PQ and they do not feel comfortable with it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, the fact is that this is the kind of pathetic rhetoric the minister raises, ostensibly on a point of privilege, when he knows full well that he has absolutely nothing upon which to base his point. I take particular umbrage at the Minister of Finance questioning your ruling, because it was clear last week that clause 1 was an opportunity to discuss this particular legislation in a general way and an opportunity to obtain information fundamental to the bill. However, when we put the question to the minister dealing with his intentions with respect to the particular provisions of this bill, he refused to answer and left the chamber. We know how uncomfortable he is because he has no answers, and for him to come forward with the very boring response that we are somehow in bed with one person or another is an insult, not only to his leader in Quebec, but to every western provincial premier, most political observers, and the people in his own party. I would hope that he would at least desist from insulting his own colleagues in his own party if he insists on insulting the opposition.

At the close of proceedings last day, Mr. Chairman, I put a question to the minister's parliamentary secretary, as he was not there, in the hope that he would break new ground and perhaps answer a question. If the minister refuses to answer or is afraid to answer, then that is fine, but I pointed out that I thought it was a legitimate and fundamental question. The minister has brought in the ways and means motion, and he has tabled it at the last moment. They way in which he has handled this whole bill has been with a sense of incompetence, and one wonders how long he is going to be in this portfolio let alone an election, and whether or not the Prime Minister can tolerate having him refusing to answer questions on a very important bill.

There is provision in the amendments put forward under clause 13(b) of the ways and means motion which states:

—no interest be payable on the portion of any refund arising by virtue of such reduction.

Would the minister tell the House, in view of the contents of the bill, what the purpose is of having that particular provision in the ways and means motion?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, it was by way of reply to a ruling of the Chair that we amended the ways and means motion to have a similarity between it and clauses 30(a) and 30(b). It was done to ensure that the ways and means motion was in parity, if I may use that term, with the bill.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: If my recollection is correct, Mr. Chairman, that particular aspect of it is not contained in the bill with respect to the interest division. I would ask him again if he can now tell us why that particular phrase was used in terms of the ways and means motion, as to why reference is made that "no interest be payable on the portion of any refund arising by virtue of such a reduction."

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, according to clause 30(b) the refund will be $85, payable to the taxpayers of Quebec in compensation for the $186 million that was left on the table by the Quebec government. The refund under clause 30(b) will be made to the individual, and it will be made as soon as possible, but the government does not intend to pay any interest.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The minister has now raised, in the course of his response, the fact that his government intends to pay back the $85 to the individual taxpayers in Quebec. I would ask him when it is the intention of his government to make that payment, having regard to the provision of the ways and means motion provision with respect to interest. Will this be an immediate payment, or is the minister intending to pay it in August so that there would be no suggestion, for example, that the minister would be so crass as to pay it out before an election campaign? Will the minister commit himself now as to when that money is going to be paid? It is a fundamental question, and I know that the minister would not want to be accused of playing petty, crass politics, but on the other hand perhaps he could give us an apolitical answer right now.

● (1652)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I explained what it was about clause 30(b). I hope members of the committee will pass clauses 1 to 29 and then we will be in a very good position to discuss clauses 30 and 30(b).

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, I take it from that response that the minister is trying to weasel out of answering certain questions. He started off on a proper basis. We are considering a fundamental amendment by way of a ways and means motion—

An hon. Member: Get to clause 30.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The parliamentary secretary may think we should accommodate the government. Maybe he has a concept of the way the government should work and the way members of the opposition should ask their questions. I do not believe any thinking person subscribes to that point of view.

The minister brought in an amendment to the ways and means motion because of his own ineptitude. Before we progress with clause by clause consideration of the bill I want to find out how this will affect the operation of the bill as a whole. A substantial amount is going to be paid out of the consolidation fund, and before we carry on I think we are entitled to find out from the minister when he is going to pay $85 having regard to the interest provision he has included in the ways and means motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: I will answer with great pleasure when we discuss clause 30(a) or 30(b). At this point, according to the rules, I am not compelled to answer these questions. Following the ruling given by the Chair the other day, government members can make some observations if they want to, but I am not obliged to answer questions, except if I am dealing with a precise clause, and now this precise clause is clause 1. I must draw the Chair's attention to the fact that we have been discussing this matter for 19 or 20 days now; moreover, I think that today is the twelfth or thirteenth day of debate on the bill and, believe it or not, Mr. Chairman, we have not dealt with one single question relating to clause 1. Hence, if the hon. member wishes to ask me questions on clause 1, it will be my pleasure to answer them and, in accordance with the desire of the committee, we shall listen to the comments of hon. members but I will answer precise questions only when I get to precise clauses.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, the minister is completely wrong in two respects. First of all he is wrong about your ruling. We all understand that. Of course, the minister is not obliged to answer any questions and there is no way that you, as Chairman, can compel him to—not by bringing in the Sergeant at Arms or by using the mace—over his head, probably—to force him to answer questions. He refuses to answer any questions, so I can only draw the conclusion that he does not know anything. He does not understand the bill and he does not understand the motion so he brings in closure—he may call it time allocation—because he is quite uncomfortable here. He squirms in his seat and says we should wait until we get to clause 30 and then he will answer.

We are quite within our rights to ask questions. If the minister persists in not answering he will have to live with the reputation of being incompetent and unable to deal with them. The second point on which he has misled the House—probably unwittingly due to his lack of knowledge—is that he implies the world will stop if we do not pass this bill tomorrow or the day after. Anyone with an interest in budgetary matters recognizes this as a misstatement of fact. The budget tax cut and each and every piece of legislation set out in the terms of the budget can come into effect whether we pass them now, after another session of parliament, or even after an election. What we are trying to do in committee of the whole is to assist the minister so that he will not make any serious blunders. He cannot understand that.

We are trying to ask questions to bring out precisely what he intends to do so that he will not end up with egg on his face. If he is trying to suggest that these items have to be passed by tomorrow, he should remember that this government has developed the unfortunate practice of bringing down legislation arising out of a budget sometimes almost a year after the budget. We have just finished discussing a bill relating to the budget brought down on March 31, 1977. The minister should not try to impress his own people in Shawinigan with how knowledgeable he is.

I deal with one simple, fundamental proposition, and the Chairman has ruled that we can ask questions. He has implied by the fact that we can ask those questions that the minister, if he knew what he was about, should answer them. That is the interpretation we put on this ruling—not that he is not obliged to answer until we reach clause 30.

Will the minister tell the House when he intends to pay the $85 to the taxpayers in the province of Quebec? That is fundamental to this whole issue.

Mr. Railton: Clause 30.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The hon. member for Welland understands this. He is an expert in financial matters and understands that the ways and means motion was changed by the minister at the last minute to cover up his ineptitude. I want to find out when the payment will be made out of the federal fund.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I have amended the ways and means motion but that has not affected the bill at all. The bill is the same and it has been in front of the House for more than a month. I have not put forward any amendment on clauses 30 and 30(b). If the hon. member reads the bill he will see that the payment will be made as soon as possible after the bill is passed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I do not know why the minister cannot give us an indication—

Mr. Chrétien: As soon as possible.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I do not hold myself up as an expert on government financing, but even I know that the provisions of the bill go forward. The effective dates go forward. If the minister wants to demonstrate that he knows anything about his portfolio he should tell the House what the plans of his department are in regard to making that payment. If he does not know I will accept that, but let him say so now.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I have to inform the hon. member that his time has expired, but I will allow the minister to answer the question.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I should like to quote to the hon. member the decision of the Chairman on June 8 as reported at page 6193 of Hansard:

> —when considering clause 1 of the bill in committee of the whole, to allow members to express opinions or ask questions of a general nature.

I think the questions of the hon. member are of a very precise nature. I say if the bill is passed the government intends to proceed with the payments as soon as possible. We have to do the processing, and it is up to the Minister of National Revenue to make the final decision. "As soon as possible" is as soon as possible.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Dealing with clause 1, Mr. Chairman, I have a few questions. I should like a definition of "remote location" referred to in clause 1.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, it is the same as the decision we gave when we had the bill as the income tax bill, Bill C-11, which we debated last fall. Incidentally, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Churchill because, after 19 days, at last we have a precise question on one clause, according to the rules.

The definition of remote location is as follows:

> (ii) a location at which, by virtue of its remoteness from any established community, the taxpayer could not reasonably be expected to establish and maintain a self-contained domestic establishment,

• (1702)

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, maybe I asked the first question, but I did not get the first answer I can tell you.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Smith (Churchill): That is not a definition of a remote location. Is it north of the 52nd parallel or north of the 53rd parallel, or where is the remote location? I would like a definition of just where that applies.

An hon. Member: West of Ottawa.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Does it apply to Churchill, or does it apply to some place in Newfoundland? Does it apply to somewhere in Ontario? I think we should have something definite, whether it is north of the 52nd parallel, the 53rd or the 60th, or wherever it is.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, it is not related to a zone in Canada, it is related to a locality. For example, there are some people who work quite south in the forests, I am thinking of my own area of Montmorency or north of Joliette, where they are staying in camps away from their houses. Also, there are those who work on ships. These people could be south of the Churchill area. If a person is in a ship travelling under the Canadian flag and covered by federal income taxes, and he is in the middle of an ocean, he cannot have a house. So the expenses paid for that person on board a ship qualify under this provision of the act. It is not in relation to any place in Canada, it is in relation to a location where a person cannot have a residence.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, that is still not too clear to me. If, for example, someone lived here in Ottawa and maintained a home and that person went to work at a site 60 miles out of Ottawa where he paid his own room and board, then he would qualify for a deduction on his income tax for, and it says here "not in excess of a reasonable amount". Does that mean that that person would qualify?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, if he is required to be away from his home to work for a certain period of time and he cannot expect to be moving back home and say his company is paying his room and board—for example if a person lives in Ottawa and goes to work for a construction company in Churchill, Manitoba, it will be quite remote. If the company pays room and board for that person, and he cannot be expected to establish his residence there, that person would qualify under the provision, as I understand it.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, it would pertain to anyone in Canada no matter where they are, as long as they are away from their main residence where they maintain a family? Whether that person is ten miles or five miles away from their main residence, they will qualify for this exemption and can claim his room and board. The confusion arose over the words "remote location". As stipulated by the federal government, remote location is a location where people would receive isolation pay because they live in a remote location of Canada. I find that is confusing. Then this pertains to anyone who is not residing in his own home where his job takes him away. For example, if he lives in Ottawa and is working ten miles away or whatever the government may decide?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, perhaps my description was a bit confusing. It is any area where there is no established community. It could be in the south or it could be in the north. As I was explaining earlier, it could be in some parts of Ontario where there is no established community. When I used the example of Churchill I was confused because Churchill is an established community. But if a person lives in Ottawa and goes to the bush to work in a camp at a site 60 or 80 miles from Ottawa, in the Gatineau for instance where there is no established community, that person will qualify.

If a person is working in an established community and away from home, that person will not qualify. By that I mean if a person goes from Ottawa to Montreal, or perhaps to North Bay, he will not qualify under the provision because Montreal and North Bay are established communities.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, what about a fairly large diamond drilling camp which may be located in the bush, does it qualify as an established community even though it could have been in that location for ten or 15 years? What would the definition be in that case?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we passed a law. The interpretation is given by the Department of National Revenue. They look at the circumstances. If there is a site which has been at a location for a long time and the department comes to the conclusion it is no longer a remote area in that traditional sense, it could decide to disqualify those people who work there. I cannot be expected to forecast all the interpretations which the Minister of National Revenue will draw from the present act. What we mean by that is a location remote from an established community. If these camps are at remote sites and have been established ten or 15 years at the same place, one day the department will consider them in a sense as established communities.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, this particular section, a remote location, would apply to a diamond driller who might be working out in a remote area. It would probably apply to a prospector who is also away from his main residence. But how does it affect a trapper? I see in here where a person is away from home on a sort of temporary basis, and whereas trapping is not a full-time job, it is a seasonal job, then that trapper should be able to claim for board and room on his income tax when he is on his trap line away from his main residence. Is this correct?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the deduction we are talking about in this bill at the moment—there are other deductions—is for an employee, and I do not know of any trapper who works for an employer. Usually a trapper is on his own and his expenses are deductible from his income.

[Mr. Smith (Churchill).]

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, no, there are trappers who do hire helpers to go out with them. So these people, under this section, should qualify for a deduction if they are helpers. This would also apply to commercial fishermen who are fishing away from their own home. In many areas there is one licence issued and a fisherman could have five, six, or ten hired men. Those people will qualify for this board and room deduction, or are they able to claim it on their income tax?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, of course if they are employees and are working for an employer and the employer gives these people those benefits, I think those benefits could be exempt, if there is a relationship between the employer and employees—say between an owner of a ship and his employees, etc. In my judgment that would qualify. However, it is not the minister of finance who passes those judgments. It is up to the ministry of national revenue to make the final resolution if there is any problem.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, this is the problem we have. It is fine to sit here and say, yes, but somebody will give a different interpretation on this, or will give the final interpretation. However, for someone who is living in a remote part of the country and who possibly does not have the sophisticated media that we do here and who wants a clear definition of exactly where he stands, it is confusing. It says here:

> a special work site at which the duty performed by him were of a temporary nature—

The temporary nature can mean that a trapper or a commercial fisherman can qualify because he is only there on a temporary basis to take the limit off of a particular lake and he is away from his residence. I take it that if he is a hired man, working as a commercial fisherman, then he could qualify because he pays room and board to the fellow who holds the licence. He would then qualify for the income tax reduction for room and board.

● (1712)

Mr. Chrétien: I do not think I have to add to what I have said. I think the hon. member can come to a conclusion. If there is a relation between employer and employees and they were working in remote sites, they would qualify.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): This would also pertain to catswings, to freighthaulers who haul freight into remote areas of the north and are away from their residences for considerable periods of time in various parts of the country. These people are hired by the day or by the month as freight haulers. Would this also apply to trcuk haulers who haul freight over winter ice-roads into remote parts of Canada? I refer to the Northwest Territories, northern Manitoba, and so on.

Mr. Chrétien: If they receive free board and allowances for that, as far as the allowance is concerned, there is a relation between employer and employees. If they have to be located in remote sites, they would qualify according to the law.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): This would also apply to railway workers. I would like it clarified whether it would apply to railway workers, Mr. Chairman. During the grain shipping season to Churchill, additional trains are put on. The workers are moved to remote locations along that 500 miles of rail. They may only be temporary employees of CN. Would they qualify for this?

Mr. Chrétien: If they have an allowance. If they are in a remote location and if there is a relation between employer and employees, they would qualify.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Seeing that we are discussing sales tax or a tax bill, not too long ago under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I recommended that the federal sales tax be taken off smoke detectors. We now see that smoke detectors will be required in all new dwellings under soon to be published revisions to the National Building Code. H. Brian Dickens, a National Research Council official, said so on Wednesday. Dickens, head of the Research Council's codes and standards group, building research division of the NRC, was speaking to about 150 delegates at the annual Canadian Building Officials Association convention in Winnipeg's Holiday Inn. Now that it will be compulsory under the National Building Code, is any consideration being given to removing the federal sales tax from smoke detection equipment?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, that is not related to the bill before the committee, but I can answer. There are all sorts of compulsory products in Canada on which there is some tax. I do not know whether a special case should be made in the case of safety by the use of smoke detectors.

In the construction of houses, and indeed in the construction of automobiles, there are many items which are compulsory and on which there is some sales tax. I find the principle unacceptable that everything which is compulsory by regulation should have the sales tax removed. That would be a bad principle to adopt. Even if one could make a special case because this is related to safety, there are all sorts of other instruments used for safety purposes on which there is a tax. If you exempt one, you would be bound to exempt the others. It is always difficult to pass judgment.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, the reason I raised this is because we were talking of remote locating. I am sure the minister will appreciate that the remote locations to which I am referring are in northern Canada, northern Manitoba in particular. There is no fire protection equipment on the Indian reserves and in the small communities. As this will be compulsory under the National Housing Code, and as these remote locations do not have any fire fighting protection whatsoever, I would appreciate if the minister would take this into consideration.

Mr. Chrétien: I will take notice of the hon. member's representation, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I have a question on the same point of the tax concession for people working in remote areas. I understand clearly from the remarks made by the hon. member for Churchill, and also the minister's remarks, that it would apply to lumber workers working in the bush away from their homes, and construction workers working away from their homes. What about the employees of tourist camps who work in fly-in camps, and room and board is provided by the employer in the normal way? Would they also qualify for this?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, Mr. Chairman. If they receive allowances when they are in a remote location and there is a relation between employer and employees, they would qualify.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, I understand that vis-à-vis the sales tax issue the minister wants to answer questions very generally. I propose to ask him very general questions. Considering that the sales tax is within the provincial jurisdiction—

Mr. Lumley: Which is not true.

Mr. Grafftey: The parliamentary secretary says "which is not true". The provinces would be very interested to know that a member of the federal government—

Mr. Chrétien: The Constitution. It is not a question of feeling.

Mr. Grafftey: I am talking about direct tax. I think the minister knows that. We have gone through a period of time which the minister says is a waste of time of parliament. It has also hurt national unity and wasted the time of the country.

Considering what I have alreay said, in preparing his budget why did the Minister of Finance not say to himself that he has a certain amount of money to distribute from coast to coast and, in relation to the population of each province, have a certain amount of money to cut sales tax according to their priorities? Once the minister started negotiating, before he presented the budget, it was obvious that he had to be flexible with British Columbia, Saskatchewan, the Atlantic provinces, and the others. Why did he enter into this area with such detailed proposals when, in the view of those on this side, he could have obtained the same result by saying we have a global amount of money, a certain amount to each province, within the general—

—as we say in French, by implementing the main features of our policy any province could choose to cut its sales tax according to its own priorities. Why not?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I would like to answer that question, because I want to say again that during three weeks I had consultations with all finance ministers. We talked about that in October, that is a sales tax cut being, in the circumstances, the best incentive to stimulate our economy. We had talked about it in October, we had talked about it in January, and when time came for me to prepare a new budget, I did not want to do it without consulting all ministers of finance on that matter.

Mr. Grafftey: Not all of them.

Mr. Chrétien: Not all? Yes, all! If the hon. member is suggesting that I did not consult Mr. Parizeau, I should like him to know that I consulted Mr. Parizeau and Mr. McKeough, from Ontario, more than anybody else. And during the three weeks the discussions lasted, everybody came up with suggestions and we made the necessary changes. I had an understanding with the other ministers of finance to the effect that on the day of the introduction of the budget, because I would be stuck with the traditional secret concerning the preparation of the budget, they were going to tell me either "yes" or "no". We considered then a possible sales tax cut. A number of them asked for flexibility and we made the necessary changes.

It had been agreed, however, because this consultation process was entirely new, that people would assume their responsibilities on the day of the introduction of the budget. Then, on the day I introduced the budget, following three weeks of consultations, I called everybody, having made the necessary changes to meet their requirements, and indicated to them the changes I had made, and they agreed. Never, during those three weeks, did Mr. Parizeau refer to selective cuts. No other finance minister was or would have been interested.

[English]

I gave my word to all ministers of finance that I would call them the day of the budget. I did call them. Everyone accepted the responsibility, lived up to the gentlemen's agreement, said yes or no, except Mr. Parizeau who said, "I will give you an answer 48 hours later". The problem was this: it was too late, two days after the budget, to offer that deal to the others. Already British Columbia and Manitoba had put out their budgets. Otherwise, it would have been so easy.

● (1722)

What amazed me was this: at no time did the officials from Quebec make any reference to the question of the Constitution. I want to point out there is absolutely no problem involved here in terms of the Constitution. I spoke with the ministers of finance and said I wanted to help them cut provincial sales taxes and was ready to negotiate with them on the matter. They were completely free to tell me that they were not interested. But they all told me they were extremely happy that for the first time in Canadian history a federal Minister of Finance was willing to discuss his budget with them. I discussed not only the sales tax but monetary and fiscal policy. I tried to include them in the process. As I say, everyone left with the understanding we had to come to a solution the day of the budget. Mr. Parizeau did not.

He has done in his field what he wanted to do. I never tried to stop him. I simply said that if he did not comply with the national plan he would not qualify for the same total as the others.

As I say, we did not wish to penalize the people of Quebec because no agreement had been reached between the federal government and that province. If Mr. Parizeau or any other of the ministers had said to me before the budget that they would not go along with my proposal, this issue would never have arisen. But I felt I had enough of a national program, and my plan was to offer to residents the possibility of an income tax deduction as I am proposing under 30(b). Nevertheless, that was not my favourite route. I would have preferred an agreement on sales tax.

I have done nothing to prevent any province from refusing the proposition. They were all completely free. Mr. Parizeau decided to cut his own tax the way he wanted to do so, just as two years ago Mr. McKeough decided to cut his own sales tax on automobiles for six months. But he paid for it from his own revenue sources. He did not come to me for money to pay for it. Mr. Parizeau has done it, but as there was no possibility of reaching agreement he qualified for only $40 million, leaving $180 million on the table inside the national plan. We have decided to compensate taxpayers in Quebec to the extent of $85 per taxpayer, and that is what we are doing in this bill.

What I would emphasize is this: never during the three weeks of negotiations did the Quebec minister of finance attempt to have his idea discussed with me or with the other ministers. It was only after we had closed the deal with everyone else, only after I had given my word to the other ministers, that he put me in an impossible situation after the fact. But even then I tried. I called three of the other ministers to learn if there was a possibility of agreement.

Mr. Grafftey: Too late!

Mr. Chrétien: Of course it was too late, because Mr. Parizeau had said no only after the agreement was in effect. Mr. Chairman, if I had made a special agreement with Quebec, after the others had signed, the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi would have been the first to give me hell for pulling the wool over the eyes of the other ministers of finance. I acted in good faith, and they all acted in good faith with me. I cannot say that, unfortunately, about the Quebec minister of finance who did not say yes or no until the day of the budget. If he had said no earlier I would have announced I was compensating the people of that province through tax provisions.

Mr. Grafftey: It is all very well for the Minister of Finance to say it was too late. It was too late because the fat was already in the fire. Supposing at the very beginning of the negotiations he had simply said; "Here is a certain sum of money depending on the formula used by each province to cut sales taxes according to your priorities," what would the difference have been? I am not griping about Ontario. Ontario did not object, but the proposal suited very well the needs of the automobile industry in that province. The minister had to make an adjustment for British Columbia and for Saskatchewan—

[Translation]

—did you argue the case before presenting the budget in the House? I can appreciate that you are Minister of Finance for all of Canada, but during your negotiations, did you really argue the case for Quebec, where secondary industry is not as well planned as in Ontario, in textiles, furniture, footwear and clothing?

[English]

I ask the minister what would the difference have been in terms of general stimulation from coast to coast had the provinces been given greater freedom in this regard, had the minister said to them:

[Translation]

You can cut according to your own priorities, depending on what you did before. What is the difference?

[English]

Mr. Chrétien: Never in three weeks of negotiation did the Quebec government raise the possibility of select sales tax cuts. How could I express the desire of Quebec when Quebec itself had not chosen to express one? Selective sales tax cuts cause all kinds of difficulty. That is why it was desirable to have a national scheme. For example, what specific manufactured products would Saskatchewan turn to, to suit the best interests of their province, when they have no manufacturing industry at all? What about the position of the maritime provinces? If you follow that route, spending federal money just to favour local special interests, you run into problems. But on top of that—

[Translation]

This is the important point, never during the three weeks of negotiations did Quebec raise the problem of intrusion into a provincial field, never during those three weeks did Quebec mention the possibility of a selective tax cut, never did they tell me about it. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it was only at three o'clock on Wednesday afternoon that I was told that at six o'clock the same day, that is three hours later, Quebec would cut its sales tax as it saw fit. I told him: "At you own expense, much as Ontario did two years ago". There was no consultation on his part. I tried during three weeks to get information. The hon. member does not understand what is vital in that debate—

● (1732)

[English]

I treated the Quebec government knowing in the back of my mind that they were trying to destroy any federal scheme. That is their main objective, but I treated them like any normal provincial government which is dedicated to the best interest of its citizens. But, of course, at no time did they raise the question of a possible selective tax cut. When I called some ministers of finance afterwards, they all said it was too late for them and they could not agree to my making a special deal for Quebec.

Mr. Grafftey: That is what you are doing now.

Mr. Chrétien: No, I am not making any deal with the Quebec government. I am reducing the income tax of the Quebec residents—there is a big difference. The Quebec government has qualified for $40 million, that is all. What I am doing within my jurisdiction with the money left over from the Quebec government is to reduce the income tax of the Quebec citizens.

Mr. Grafftey: And Quebec will collect it all back.

Mr. Chrétien: Perhaps so. I know they are in a hell of a mess financially and they will have to collect a lot of money in the next few years, no doubt, because of the way they operate things, because of the way they run the province, which is not in the best interests of the province, because of the crazy legislation they are putting forward which pushes thousands of people out of Quebec every year and which pushes investments out of Quebec, and because of the language legislation which creates a climate which will reduce the tax base of Quebeckers ever further. However, it is up to the Quebec people to decide in the next provincial election.

Quebec did not wish to participate in the national scheme but since they qualified partially under the program, I recognized that. Since the Quebec government wanted to have its own way outside of the national program and I did not wish to penalize the Quebec citizens, I have decided to give the money directly to them. Of course, Mr. Parizeau said in his letter that he will have to collect it back, and perhaps even more than that amount. I know that last year he had a deficit of $600 million, and this year he is forecasting a deficit of $1.2 billion. He has not forecast in his budget the $250 million which he will need perhaps for the nationalization of asbestos. I know he will have to raise taxes, but that is his own responsibility. The Quebec citizens will know that in the present federal budget we have put aside some money to reduce their taxes so as to stimulate the economy there. After I have sent the money to Quebeckers, if Mr. Parizeau decides to raise that amount of money or more, he is free to do so; but he will have to deal with the taxpayers in the next provincial election.

[Translation]

Mr. Grafftey: I would like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Did the minister figure out the expenses to pay out the rebate of the federal government directly to Quebec taxpayers paying federal taxes?

Mr. Chrétien: We have an organization called Revenue Canada which has thousands of employees who will have to do that work. Of course, that is going to cost money. It is difficult to measure that exactly because that will be additional work for the staff of the department. That brings me to the question that there is no tax collection agreement between the federal government and Quebec. I am very happy now that the government of Quebec should use the argument that because I am making that tax cut in Quebec they must go out and collect taxes and that is costing them about $150 million a year because they collect their personal income taxes instead of signing an agreement with the federal government which would cost them nothing. We collect income tax for Ontario, New Brunswick, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Those provinces do not have a provincial department of revenue and we collect their income taxes for them. It means only one form, one tax inspector for the citizen in Ontario or British Columbia but there have been two forms, two tax inspectors in Quebec since 1954 and, of course, that is costing them a lot more. That is what they called in 1954 an essential element of Quebec autonomy.

Recently, when I saw Mr. Parizeau he asked me to sign a collection agreement for him, that was really ridiculous. It was a complete denial of the policy established in Quebec by Mr. Maurice Duplessis. I am pretty sure that Maurice must have flipped over in his coffin because do not forget no other premier had dared ask such a thing of the government. But it is well known that we federalists in Quebec have been saying for a long time that it is a useless duplication of service and a pain in the backside for a large number of taxpayers to have to fill out two tax returns, to have two inspectors, to have two sets of books just because of that when it would be easier to have only one form every month for Quebec as for the other provinces. The federal government could send them the amount of money they have coming. But that is what they called in 1954 an essential element of Quebec autonomy. I do not have to make a judgment but I find that is costing them a lot for very little.

[English]

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Red Deer has some questions to ask of the minister but he has a committee meeting to attend this evening. I am prepared to have him use my time now, and I will ask my questions later.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, I rise to seek advice on how the minister intends to handle the farm rollover situation; I believe it is under clause 14. The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board suggested the other night that this would complete the required legislation so far as the family corporation rollover is concerned. I believe I am correct in saying that there is still an anomaly with regard to regulations concerning family corporations which is not covered in this piece of legislation. I would like the minister to tell the House whether he is prepared to bring in an amendment to it or whether he would expect an amendment from this side of the House.

The anomaly consists of the fact that farm property is not always included in the shares of the corporation. Sometimes the owner keeps the farm property outside the corporation and then the corporation rents the property. It is my understanding that this legislation and the legislation which was passed earlier do not provide for the rollover of the property to the next generation simply because it is not the farmer who is the operator of the property but the corporation, as soon as the corporation enters into an arrangement with the owner of the property either to lease it or rent it. There is an anomaly here which needs to be corrected, and I would like the advice of the minister on how it can be corrected if my assumption is correct.

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member is talking about leasing land. If the owner wishes to do that, he can transfer the land to the corporation tax free before the rollover. That is the way in which the provision is understood by my officials, and there is no need for any change in the law.

Mr. Towers: I would like it firmly established so that the statement of the minister today will stand up in a court of law and will be understood by the Department of National Revenue, because at present accountants dealing with the Department of National Revenue find that this is not the case. If the statement of the minister will stand up in court and will be interpreted in this way by the Department of National Revenue, that is all I can expect, but certainly this should be a clear and established fact.

Mr. Chrétien: I have explained the law, Mr. Chairman. I understand what the intention is, but I cannot guarantee what a court will rule. We have a system for passing laws here. The text is there, and from what I can understand, it is somewhat irrelevant to the judge. He can read the text and conclude one way or another. I cannot guarantee what the courts will decide on any piece of legislation. A separation exists between the legislature and the judiciary in Canada. We read the laws as they are passed.

According to my understanding of the legislation, a person can transfer anything he has to his corporation, and from there on there is a rollover. He has to transfer it from his private ownership to his corporation ownership, and after that there is a rollover. There is no rollover if it is not transferred within the corporation.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make this matter clear. Can a farmer who owns land that is being leased to a corporation which is the operator transfer that land without being subject to capital gains tax? Can it be sold or transferred to the corporation?

Mr. Chrétien: The questions asked by the hon. member are covered by the rollover provisions in the act. I feel I have been quite fair to the hon. member, but he is dealing with clause 14. It is difficult for my officials and I to follow the debate, if we are moving from one clause to the other. We are still on clause 1 and questions are of a general nature. I do not know when questions will be of a specific nature.

Mr. Towers: I thought I clarified my reason for adopting this approach earlier. If there is an anomaly, we are prepared to bring in an amendment. We would like to have our amendment ready by the time we reach consideration of that clause. If the minister will have his legal advisers look at that aspect before we reach consideration of that clause, fine and dandy. We cannot afford to allow this legislation to pass and leave any anomaly in existence. I raise this issue in order to expedite the matter and have it clarified. I hope the minister will have his legal advisers take a look at it to ensure that we are on sound ground. Perhaps the hon. member for Moose Jaw will add to that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Chairman, I am very interested in this particular clause. I realize it is clause 14, but before we reach that clause, I wonder if the officials of the minister's department could have a look at this aspect. At this point in time, if a farmer, who owns land and leases it to a corporation, transfers or sells that land to a corporation, that sale would be subject to capital gains tax because it is not being transferred to a son or daughter and he is not transferring shares. What the minister has said is not correct. I think his officials should look into this aspect so that when we arrive at clause 14 we can have a full discussion.

Mr. Chrétien: If a farmer is making a transfer to another entity, a third person, and not a corporation which he owns, he is required to pay capital gains. I was speaking about the transfer of lands to his own corporation. The transfer of farm lands has not been exempted completely from any capital gain. That is not what is meant. My officials are making notes of the hon. member's comments. They will read Hansard tomorrow and attempt to arrive at some clarification, if need be. As we have taken 19 days to reach clause 1, I do not know when we will reach clause 14.

Mr. Neil: There are a number of members on this side who are interested in this particular clause. I am referring to people who are involved in either the practice of law or have constituents who are farmers. The minister can expect a fairly lengthy discussion and a lot of questions on clause 14. If the minister will examine the record, he will find that government members have taken up almost as much time as opposition members.

Mr. Chrétien: A lot of government members are complaining because they have not had a chance to ask questions on clause 14. It is not only on the other side of the House that there is interest in that regard. The hon. member for Assiniboia constantly raised in caucus the problem of the transfer of family farms. A great deal of interest has been expressed both on this side as well as the other side of the House. As we do not have much time for clause by clause discussion, I know a lot of hon. members are very frustrated that we have not reached clause 14 or other clauses of real interest because of the filibuster by members of the Conservative party.

Mr. Neil: Perhaps the hon. member for Assiniboia has pressed this matter in caucus. If the hon. minister will examine the record from 1972 to the present time, he will find that members on this side have pressed for changes repeatedly, and that the changes which have taken place up to this time are a result of that pressure.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Chairman, I think the minister should stop referring to the 19 days. Perhaps he should have a look at the number of hours his party has participated in the debate, as compared to hon. members on this side of the House.

Dealing with clause 1, particularly as it affects fishermen and employees of the coast guard who may be on assignment of sea duty, there are two particular aspects I wish to have clarified for the record. I agree with the minister when he says that it is not up to him to decide here and now how the law is going to be interpreted by the Minister of National Revenue. The officials of the Department of National Revenue have their own ways of interpreting, and I hope there are appeal procedures.

In the circumstances envisaged in clause 1, let us say a fisherman, a member of the coast guard service, or a public servant is at sea in Canada and receives an allowance for his food and lodging, and then is charged for that food and lodging. Would those be self-cancelling? Are they declarable as income, revenue or expenses? How are these envisaged under the provisions of that particular section?

Mr. Chrétien: If he receives an allowance for room and board on ship, according to the interpretation of the law and the changes provided, it will not be taxable income.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Chairman, that is in reply to the first part of my question. If his salary is adjusted and he is required to pay for his food while at sea working, for example, in a commercial fishing operation, may he deduct that as a legitimate expense on his income tax form?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, there is no special provision. If the owner of the ship charges him a certain amount of money for food and lodging while at sea, this is not a legitimate expense to be deducted from his income, aside from the $250 provided for in the act.

● (1752)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): There is a $250 limit. Of course, this is an amendment simply and does not cover the $250?

Mr. Chrétien: It is a general provision that applies to everyone who is an employee, and it covers 3 per cent or up to $250.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is basically an amendment under clause 1 and provides for the non-declarability of an allowance, the non-requirement of declaration of an allowance in respect of food and board only, and does not provide for an ability to deduct as a legitimate expense charges incurred for food and board?

Mr. Chrétien: I understand the interpretation of the hon. member is correct.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I want to get into a somewhat related matter. I understand that one is permitted under clause 1 to discuss general matters in the income tax field. This is very closely related to paragraph (1) and that part of the clause which appears at page 2 in relation to transportation charges. As I understand the reference to transportation charges here, a taxpayer would be allowed to deduct reasonable costs of transportation to and from work. Perhaps I should establish that before I go on with my further inquiry.

Mr. Chrétien: Transportation in this area is similar to the allowance for room and board. It applies only if the transportation is provided to the taxpayer, or he receives an allowance for transportation. In that event the allowance is not taxable. We do not permit the taxpayer employee to deduct the cost of transportation incurred by himself. We simply do not tax an allowance, but we do not permit a deduction from income.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Perhaps it is not as closely related as I had thought to the matter I had in mind. In an earlier income tax provision there was an allowance made for a deduction by disabled people, or there was a refund when a person incurred expenses in the operation of their own vehicles. There was a provision through which such disabled persons could obtain a refund from tax to the extent of the cost of the gasoline.

I am wondering whether the minister would during these discussions entertain an amendment I would be prepared to draft in order to obtain a deduction or an allowance for persons who had to transport handicapped people. I have in mind those who transport these handicapped people for some distance, and under circumstances where the handicapped individual may be required to stay away from home for some period of time. I have a particular case in mind which I brought to the attention of the Minister of National Revenue. It involves a child who unfortunately cannot obtain the necessary training in Victoria and has to travel to Vancouver on Monday morning and return on Friday night. This involves a cost to the family of that child of something in the order of $2,000 a year, in addition to the fee for the education of that handicapped individual.

Would the minister entertain an amendment during the discussion of this particular bill to cover a case of that sort? I could generalize in respect of the amendment, but it would cover handicapped people who may not be able to get the education they require within the general area of their domicile or residence. Would this be a legitimate deduction from income tax for those parents?

Mr. Chrétien: This is not related at all to employment at a special work site. The case the hon. member is referring to at the moment involves a problem. One has a lot of sympathy for the parents, but it is impossible under the Income Tax Act to cover all possible circumstances of this nature. I do not see how we could amend the Act to cover every such case. I am sure there are some circumstances that would not be covered where an individual might incur that type of expense in relation to a child. We have to think in terms of the general application of the law; we cannot provide in the act for specific circumstances.

With regard to the specific case referred to by the hon. member involving a disabled child who has to travel from Victoria to Vancouver for special training, my advisers tell me there is no possible way of drawing up an amendment that would not lead to an absolutely uncontrollable situation. We cannot under the Income Tax Act look after all the individual circumstances, as painful or as difficult as those in the case mentioned by the hon. member may be.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I was using this provision for transportation as a vehicle for posing the question whether the minister would accept such an amendment. He has not actually said he would not, but rather that his officials would have difficulty in drawing one up. Would the minister entertain an amendment that I might draw and present in the course of this debate?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this involves more than just difficulty on the part of my officials. I cannot under the present clause entertain an amendment which is completely unrelated to the act as it now stands. This situation is not provided for in the act and there is no room for an amendment under clause I to achieve the purposes of the hon. member.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The minister is aware of the difficulties of a private member in bringing forth an amemdment of this sort. Private members' bills really do not satisfy the need, and I felt this bill was a vehicle, being an amendment to the Income Tax Act, through which we could make such a change. This seemed to provide an ideal opportunity, particularly tailored to the bringing forth of such an amendment. Is the minister saying he would not entertain such an amendment if I were to bring it forward?

Mr. Chrétien: Under the rules of the House I could not entertain such an amendment during consideration of the present bill.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

● (2000)

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Clarke: I have a question or two, Mr. Chairman, for the minister on clause 1, he will be happy to know. I do not recall anything in the budget speech specifically dealing with these work sites, but I have read very carefully the supplementary information, specifically page 55 where it talks about employees at remote work sites and outlines the matter the way it is now in the act. That sentence reads, "that it is now proposed to apply the exemptions to workers at remote sites". It would seem to require a fairly simple amendment to the Income Tax Act. Looking at the notice of ways and means motion on remote work sites, clause 1 reads in a straightforward manner. Paragraph (ii) refers to a site——at which . . . the taxpayer could not reasonably be expected to maintain a self-contained domestic establishment.

When we come to clause 1 in the bill before us, paragraph (a) makes reference to temporary duties. My first question to the minister would be: Why is it necessary apparently to introduce the temporary nature of the duties when dealing with this feature?

Mr. Chrétien: It is necessary because it is the existing law.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, I cannot dispute that, but I would like to ask why it is that those words are underlined as new words are when we are presented with amendments to a new bill.

Mr. Chrétien: They are under subsection (7) of section 6 and they are underlined because they have been moved to subsection (6) of section 6.

Mr. Clarke: I thank the minister for that explanation, Mr. Chairman. I would then like to ask if he could in any way define the word "remote" or "remoteness" as envisaged by the law.

Mr. Chrétien: I gave the definition earlier this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, but I can repeat it as it is in Bill C-56:

(ii) a location at which, by virtue of its remoteness from any established community, the taxpayer could not reasonably be expected to establish and maintain a self-contained domestic establishment,—

Mr. Clarke: I heard the minister trying to explain that to the hon. member for Churchill this afternoon. I was wondering if he could be more specific. I mean, "by virtue of its remoteness from any established community" could apply to many cases and in lots of cases be envisaged where remoteness might be the reason for a person establishing a self-contained domestic establishment.

Mr. Chrétien: It applies where he or she cannot establish a self-contained domestic establishment. If he or she can, of course, the individual will not be granted an exemption. It applies when the individual has no self-contained domestic establishment in an area that is remote from a normal community that qualifies.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I have one or two questions for the minister. One question arose out of a conversation with a constituent who felt that he had been unfairly treated by the Department of National Revenue. He had been a tradesman but in the town in which he lived there were no jobs for him at the wage he could command, so he went to a community 150 miles away where he made much more. However, he felt that he had more expenses, both commuting back and forth to visit his family and also in his maintenance which he had to provide himself. I presume that this type of change in the legislation would not benefit this person in any way. Am I correct?

Mr. Chrétien: According to the act, if the individual has to pay from his own pocket, those extra expenses are not deductible from his income. If on the other hand those extra expenditures are paid to him by his employer and if the occupation is of a temporary nature, he can qualify under the old act.

Mr. Ritchie: Would I be correct in presuming, then, that if he was paid previous to this allowances for this temporary work, then it became income, but under the change it does not become income?

Mr. Chrétien: As I understand it, there is no change in that respect.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Stevens: On division.

Clause agreed to, on division.

On clause 2—

Mr. Stevens: I wonder if the minister could give a brief explanation of what he is trying to accomplish in clause 2, Mr. Chairman, in addition to the headnote?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this is a relieving technical amendment to the provisions of the act which deals with recapture on the disposal of depreciable business property such as buildings or machinery. When the proceeds on the sale of the property exceed its written down value for tax purposes on depreciated capital costs, the excess may give rise to a recovery of the depreciation claimed in previous years. This recovery or recapture is ordinarily required to be included in income.

• (2012)

Subsection 13, paragraph 4 of the act provides a roll-over. That is, the recapture is not taxable and the income is deferred to the extent that the proceeds on the sale of property are reinvested in a replacement property. At present the property qualifies as replacement property only if it acquired for the same use and for the same business as the former property.

This amendment broadens the test by qualifying a property acquired for a similar use in a similar business. As an example, the change will make it clear that the roll-over would apply where a cattle farmer sells his farm and moves to another location at which he intends to grow wheat and engage in other types of farming.

We have to provide this clarification because in the interpretation of the act by the Department of National Revenue they had a more restrictive interpretation of what we meant when we introduced the roll-over provision in the act last December.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3—

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister could give us a brief explanation of clause 3.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this is a relieving technical amendment dealing with eligible capital property—that is, goodwill or agricultural quotas. The amendment is similar to that described in clause 2 dealing with the roll-over for depreciable property. When goodwill or other eligible capital properties are disposed of, part of the proceeds may be required to be included in income.

Subsection 14, subparagraph 6 of the act permits a taxpayer to defer or roll-over this amount to the extent that the proceeds are used to acquire similar replacement property. At present, a property qualifies as a replacement property only if it is acquired for the same use and is to be used in the same business as the former property.

This change broadens the test by qualifying a property that is acquired for similar use in a similar business.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4—

Mr. Stevens: Again, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister could give us an explanation of clause 4.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this is a relieving amendment. Subsection 15, subparagraph (2) of the act is an anti-avoidance provision. It seeks to prevent funds of a corporation being extracted, tax-free, by shareholders in the guise of loans rather than dividends. This is accomplished by including the amount of such loan in the shareholders' income.

There are certain exceptions. For example, a share purchase loan—that is, a loan by a corporation to an employee to enable him to buy shares of the corporation—is not taxable. However, if the loan is made by one company to enable its employees to buy shares of a related company, technically the loan will not qualify for this exclusion. This is inappropriate. The amendment exempts the loans made to employees of one company in a corporate group to enable them to acquire shares of another company in the group. And, for example, an employee loan made by a subsidiary will be exempt if it is used to acquire shares of the parent company.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister could indicate how many corporations he anticipates will be caught with this new approach? When they bring in the affiliated company concept, how many have they anticipated they will catch?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, under this provision, companies are indeed freer to operate and can make a loan to employees who wish to buy stock in a corporation related to the parent corporation. Under the circumstances, I think this will facilitate the operations of companies making loans to their employees and will allow employees to buy stock in companies directly related to the corporation they work for. What is the exact figure? We do not know. This will merely simplify corporate operations, that is operations to allow employees to invest or take part in the operations of subsidiaries of the corporation which employs them.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps I could put my question another way, Mr. Chairman. When I ask how many are going to be caught, I am trying to solicit an answer to how many are being caught in a harmful way at the present time. We are familiar with the provision which allows a corporation to lend funds to an employee to buy stock in the company itself, but how many are now being frustrated simply because this affiliate definition is not the law?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I am in a position to give a precise answer. We have received representations to this effect and that is why we made the provision. As the provision did not exist before, it is impossible for us to know how many would benefit from it. We have received many representations on this, however, and we felt it was the right thing to do in order to make it easier for employees not only in a corporation itself but in its subsidiaries or related companies. It is impossible to tell how many people would have benefitted if the provision had been there before.

Mr. Stevens: I wonder if the minister could indicate the significance of the date, March 31, 1977? Why is this only applicable after that date?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: That is because amendments in the act last year made it possible to specify this date. Moreover, this provision also existed in the Macdonald budget, and the date set in the legislation passed last fall was precisely March 31, 1977.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: I wonder if the minister would agree that what he is doing, in effect, is correcting a mistake made in the Macdonald federal budget of March 31, 1977?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is a mistake; I think it is a relieving measure. We introduced a good measure but we thought it could be a little bit better. We think we are quite good but we can always improve.

Clause agreed to.

● (2022)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, this is a rather important clause. Perhaps the minister would be good enough to give us a fairly full explanation as to why the government feels this provision is desirable.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, yes, it is important and so I would like to read the explanation. Section 20 is one of the general sections of the act. It lists the various deductions which are allowed in the calculation of income from a business or from property. There are three changes to this section dealing with the new research allowance, interest on insurance policy loans and foreign taxes.

Paragraph 20(1)(t) is strictly consequential. It has a reference to the new section 37.1 which is a special allowance for additional scientific research expenditures.

Subsection 20(2.1) deals with the interest paid on life insurance policy loans. This change does not alter the principle that such interest is either deductible by the policyholder or is added to the cost of his policy. The change is essentially administrative. It simply requires the insured to verify, for those policyholders who want to claim the interest as a current deduction, that the interest has not been added to the adjusted cost base of the policy.

Subsection 20(12) provides relief for certain foreign income taxes. Under the existing act, the income taxes paid to a foreign government on business profits qualify for relief only if the income on which they are imposed has a foreign source. The existing relief takes the form of a foreign tax credit—that is, a deduction from the Canadian tax. The amendment permits a deduction in calculating income for any foreign income tax imposed on income that does not have a foreign source. Thus, for example, the portion of the foreign tax imposed on a consulting contract for a foreign customer only qualifies for relief now to the extent that the services are rendered outside Canada. The amendment will allow the portion of the foreign tax that relates to services performed in Canada to be deductible as an expense.

Clause agreed to.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I have some concerns as to how this clause relates to the Atlantic provinces, particularly in distribution of research and development across Canada and the interpretation of processes. We all know that companies are presently able to deduct all their current operating expenditures—that is, supplies, labour and their capital expenditures as well as new facilities, equipment and expenditures—from their income before calculation of taxes. This clause proposes that a company would also be allowed to deduct an additional 50 per cent of an increase in expenditure in research and development in the taxation year above the average for the three preceding years. This research is in addition to the eligibility of research and development expenditures for the investment tax credit which at present in the Atlantic provinces is 10 per cent.

I am told that total research and development expenditures in the Atlantic provinces in 1975 was $5.4 million. I am also told that no separate figures for the fishing and forestry industries are available, but the activities of these industries are such to involve little or no research and development. However, the government spends large amounts in these areas for research. For example, the fisheries and marine service of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment will spend an estimated $37.3 million in the fiscal year 1978-79.

I wonder if this is so and why we are not encouraging the people in the Atlantic provinces to take on the benefits of this new research and development incentive in clause 6. Before going on, perhaps the minister or his officials would be good enough to advise what the total research and development in Canada was in 1975 and compare it to the $5.4 million. If they are not prepared to give me the answer at this time, I would like to have it later.

I would also like to see how this clause will work. For example, if a firm spent nothing on research and development during the last three years and in the first year of the budget decided to put $5,000 into research, it would, applying the 100 per cent straight write-off allowed at present, and now this 50 per cent proposed research and development write-off under this clause, total $7,500, being $5,000 plus half of the increase, $2,500. On the other hand, if a firm that spent an average of $4,000 during the past three years increases its research and development spending in the first year of the budget, it will get a total deduction of $5,500; that is, the $5,000 plus half the increase, $500.

To be eligible for the above allowances, in my opinion the expenditures have to conform to the definition of scientific research given in Regulation 2900 of the Income Tax Act. Perhaps this definition is too narrow for the Atlantic provinces. For practical purposes, this regulation means the expenditures must be made either to develop new products or processes or to make improvements to existing products processes. For instance, on the east coast we are developing the 200-mile limit. If we in the Atlantic provinces are not taking advantage of this write-off, perhaps the minister could explain why industry is not taking advantage of the write-off. Is it because the definition of "processes" is not clear, that it relates only to manufacturing in the true sense in other parts of Canada? Or if a corporate fisherman owns a fishing boat with an estimated value on the books of $250,000 and he purchases new gear, would this qualify as a process?

I would like to leave that question with the minister and see if he could give an answer. There must be a reason why only $5.4 million was spent on Rand D in 1975 in comparison to the total, which I do not have at present. If the definition is too narrow for the Atlantic provinces to come under that clause, I feel there should perhaps be a widening of Regulation 2900 of the Income Tax Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the hon. member who is concerned about the level of research in the maritimes, as she indicated, of $5.4 million, that it is precisely the reason why, in the last two budgets, we decided to set up new mechanisms to encourage manufacturers and their operators to do more research and development.

[English]

It is because of the particular situation in the maritime provinces that we put the investment tax credit in Bill C-11 which I put forward in this House in December. We provided for the maritimes a tax credit double the national level, from 5 to 10 per cent, so that there is an investment tax credit for research and development much more favourable in the maritimes than in central Canada.

The hon. member asks why the definition of research and development does not seem to fit into the operation in the maritimes. I really do not know why. The research and development definition applies across the land. It is exactly the same definition whether it is British Columbia, Ontario, or Nova Scotia, an area for which the hon. member has particular concern.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that $5.4 million is approximately one-twelfth of the total industrial research and development across the country. In other words, if 10 per cent of the population is living in the Atlantic provinces in Canada and you have $5.4 million of R and D expenditure, I would like to know the total amount spent on research and development for the year 1975.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I share the preoccupation of the hon. member. I am very pleased she has raised this question and shown her interest in the maritimes which only has one twelfth of the research and development in this country. If she has an interest in research and development, she will make speeches encouraging people in the Atlantic provinces to take advantage of the investment tax credit announced last year as well as what we are pushing for today.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, I have two brief questions on this clause. Some individuals are being left out rather brutally, as this provides for a corporation only. Much of the research and development, the finer inventions if you will, has been by individuals who are not part of a corporation. Is there anything to say that individuals should not receive the same benefits as this legislation portends?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I understand there could be some individuals who do research and development on an individual basis. However, the legislation refers to research done by corporations.

Mr. Ellis: I appreciate that is what the legislation says. I know of a certain individual who has begun a year's sabbatical from his employment to begin a new project. This is on his own initiative. He does not receive any assistance in what might be a very major development.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I will take note of the hon. member's representation. I cannot add to the explanation I gave earlier.

Mr. Ellis: The minister has admitted he cannot help individuals. I suppose if this individual were to incorporate, which would cost him $400 or $500, he could then take advantage of the research development assistance. However, this states he must have had a base for the past three years. This individual is starting out entirely on his own this year. What do we use as the base from which to project the assistance when he does not have three years' experience?

Mr. Chrétien: If it is a new corporation, all the expenditures that occur as research and development from thereon will qualify with the new rules for new corporations. If he were to become incorporated at this time, the corporation could apply for the 150 per cent write-off provision in this bill.

Because we wanted to help the incremental—research and development, we had to put in that provision. There is some research and development going on under the old regime. We want to stimulate that. We do not see why we should give the same pattern to those who could operate under the old system in past years.

Mr. Ellis: I have a final question for the minister, if I may. About five years ago the Economic Council of Canada recommended that the IRDIA graphs of Industry, Trade and Commerce be done away with. About one and a half or two years ago IRDIA was dissolved. Does the minister feel this measure he is now introducing fulfils the second half of the paragraph of the Economic Council of Canada wherein it said that IRDIA should be dissolved, but that there should be a compensating tax incentive to industry? Does the minister feel that this really meets that recommendation?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, Mr. Chairman. We think that will fill the need according to the recommendation of the Economic Council.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, on Thursday evening last I had the opportunity of putting some concerns on the record relating to clause 6 of this bill. Can the minister give me some kind of explanation why he rejected the submissions of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and others from the business community and rejected the tax credit principle? I believe the Canadian Manufacturers' Association asked for 25 per cent rather than the additional 50 per cent allowance which was put in this clause.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the main reason is that at the first ministers' meeting in Ottawa in February, it was agreed that there should be a joint effort of the provincial and federal levels. This is a system which involves both the federal and provincial treasuries. That is why we have chosen it, rather than an investment tax credit which would have fallen on the shoulders of the federal government only.

Mr. Huntington: I do not know if the Minister of Finance or his staff have had a chance to read the rather carefully prepared comments I put on the record the other night. Surely he must realize this 15 per cent allowance is very unfair to the small business sector which, with its closeness to entrepreneurial ability, can lift itself into new categories of opportunities. Why was a more thorough examination of the small business interests not applied to the drafting of this clause of the bill?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we have to segregate the question of research and development and the level of tax for small business. We provided a series of incentives for small business in the last budget and with the tax proposition I made some weeks ago to help small business. We must keep in mind that the level of taxation of a small business operating in Canada is very favourable compared to anywhere else. This proposal regarding research and development is in addition to it. We wanted to put all corporations on the same basis.

Mr. Huntington: This is where I part company with the Minister of Finance. I thought I was very careful in putting on the record Thursday night how small business is discriminated against in this whole area of research and development.

Research costs small business in after tax terms much more than it costs large business working at the 42 per cent tax level. Did the remarks I placed on the record the other night fall on deaf ears? Has the Minister of State (Small Business) not discussed this lack of equity with the Minister of Finance?

Admittedly small business has a lower tax rate. Is the minister going to nullify that in the area of research and development? Small business is where the entrepreneurial talent is and where much of the opportunity comes from. Why give small business a much higher after tax cost than large business? I would like an answer to that question.

Mr. Chrétien: I cannot add to what I have said, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that the hon. member is putting forward a good case. I explained earlier that we treat the tax system for small business more favourably than that of the big corporations. Research and development is a different problem, if I can call it that. As it is operated on the tax system, if you pay higher taxes you benefit more.

We have to keep in mind that small businesses are presently paying only half the rate of taxes paid by big businesses. The hon. member can make his argument but we have decided that rather than put the investment tax credit up to 25 per cent we would make this research allowance, because we wanted to make a joint effort with the provinces.

Mr. Huntington: I am surprised the minister should adopt that attitude, particularly in light of the literature which the Minister of State (Small Business) has been showering on the small business community. I would remind him again that over 60 per cent of the working population in Canada is employed in the general area of small business. Government spokesmen pat themselves on the back and, indeed, other nations pat them on the back in recognition of the tax base they have afforded small business. I agree that this lower tax base has been very favourable for the small business community here, but in after tax dollar terms the minister is leaving this community with 59.38 cents cost on the dollar compared with 35.15 cents in the case of large businesses. There is a serious lack of equity here and the minister is neutralizing the tax benefit which has been put in place for the small business community.

If my remarks do not succeed in persuading the minister to change his mind, I honestly think he is making a mistake in refusing to consider certain aspects of this clause. Why not consider granting an option to small business enabling businessmen to take an immediate cash benefit in lieu of carrying the tax credit forward into future years? I know what I am speaking of because I have come through the world of small business and have spent an awful lot of money in my lifetime on research and development. I think there is a great deal we can do in this field for Canadian entrepreneurial talent in the development of new industries and spin-offs if we pay attention to this aspect. After all, that is where the entrepreneurial talent lies. This is where the big corporations come from—the development and putting into place of these ideas.

Mr. Chrétien: I can only repeat that many incentives have been given to small business. Of course, if one segregates one aspect of taxation from others, without taking the whole picture into account, one can conclude, for example, that the cost of research and development is higher for small business than for large corporations. But if one considers all aspects of taxation as they affect large and small businesses, I think we would all agree that small business has the better deal.

I do not blame the hon. member for wanting more and I agree with him that small business is very important. That is why we have taken various steps to assist this sector of the economy. But since we cannot do everything at the same time in all directions, we have decided to proceed with research and development allowances in addition to the investment tax credit which was introduced last year up to 10 per cent, and also to introduce this 150 per cent write-off on the expenditure.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the Minister of State (Small Business) has been very weak in failing to negotiate more successfully with the Minister of Finance. I believe the government will be obliged to consider this matter again and correct a serious inequity which it is leaving in place.

I should like to ask the minister whether he does not believe that the eligibility for the tax credit should perhaps be restricted to Canadian-owned firms so as to prevent a leakage which has followed the placing of handsome sums of money to Canadian subsidiaries of multinational firms. Does he not believe that some of the leakage which has happened in the past could be prevented by restricting this tax credit to wholly-owned Canadian firms?

Mr. Chrétien: I think it would be difficult to make that sort of distinction. It would create all sorts of problems if we were to discriminate between Canadian-owned and foreign-owned corporations. I would point out that some foreign concerns have done very well in this field. Of course, we always hope that the gains achieved through Canadian operations will, first and foremost, benefit operations in Canada. Moreover, there is protection available under the Patent Act, and so on; the Patent Act covers the interest of Canada in research and development carried out in this country. To discriminate against foreign corporations as suggested could create all sorts of international difficulties for us.

Mr. Huntington: So the minister is not taking any measures at all to prevent some of the leakage which has been experienced in the past when the benefit of research carried out in Canada and subsidized through tax remissions has gone to the United States or some other country. I question whether the minister should leave this type of situation wide open.

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member is talking about leakage into the United States of information obtained from research and development in Canada. I would remind him that when the finance committee was in Washington the other day the union representatives there were complaining of the leakage of research and development benefits into the Canadian economy, draining some jobs from the American system into Canada. So these things work both ways.

Mr. Stevens: They were not complaining very loudly.

Mr. Chrétien: Perhaps not, but I want to point out to the hon. member that this is something which works both ways.

Mr. Huntington: I am not aware of any leakage which is flowing north of the border. If the minister has any examples I would appreciate learning about them.

Could the minister explain why, in its approach to this subject, the government saw fit to kill off IRDIA which gave a better cost benefit to small business? Why take IRDIA out of the scheme when it was beginning to work so well?

Mr. Chrétien: One of the difficulties about this program was that it was too bureaucratic, in a sense. Under this arrangement, rather than make all sorts of applications and get into discussion with bureaucrats, the decisions will be made by the corporations themselves. I was President of Treasury Board when this decision was made and it was part of an effort to reduce the size of the federal administration.

Mr. Huntington: Before I ever dreamt of standing here discussing these matters with the Minister of Finance, I had occasion to come to Ottawa in connection with this program and I did find the bureaucracy pretty rough; they wanted to double my true costs in the course of giving me some assistance. The result was, I could never afford it. But if one looks down the record I would be remiss if I did not remind the minister that the small business community is paying 59.38 cents cost on the dollar compared with 35.15 for large businesses.

I think I would be remiss if I did not remind him that under the 50 per cent additional tax credit he is leaving an after tax cost with a large firm of 35.15 cents on the research dollar, whereas under IRDIA the cost was 33 cents. I think he is going the wrong way if he wants to put an incentive in place. Let me come back to the small firm. With the 50 per cent additional allowance, you have an after tax cost with $1 of research of 59.38 cents, whereas under IRDIA you had a cost of 50 cents.

I think the program is not well prepared and planned and has not been studied properly. I think the government are going backwards in that area. In actual fact, they have gone back to a program which was recommended by Glassco in 1962, was studied in 1964 and rejected. We are now in 1978 and we need some new incentives in place. The minister should really give some serious consideration to an amendment before the bill is passed in committee stage and perhaps fix up some of the areas where there is no equity.

I realize I might be on the edge of the subject matter, Mr. Chairman, but I notice that the Minister of State for Science and Technology has come out with a package of research aid amounting to $28 million. I realize that the Prime Minister has requested all departments to cut $500 million, and I wonder if the minister could tell us where he will find this $28 million in this soft buck shuffle.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I did not catch the whole meaning of the question, but I will reply to it later.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I would like to come back to my original point because I did not get an answer to it.

Some hon. Members: Nothing new.

Miss Campbell: Perhaps I should say that I got part of the answer. I have been told that $5.4 million was spent on research and development in 1975 in the Atlantic provinces. Considering that 10 per cent of the whole population of Canada live in the Atlantic provinces, can the minister say whether we are receiving and using this portion, and will we be able to use this portion in respect of the total research and development spent in 1975? In other words, what was the total? If we are not receiving the total, is it because Regulation 2100 of the Income Tax Act is too narrow to allow the Atlantic provinces to benefit from research and development?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I think that because of the very nature of the industrial base in the maritimes we cannot expect their industry to use up their proportion, if I can use that expression, of research and development. Of course, since the base is very low in the maritimes the new system will apply to them earlier, because it will apply to many companies right away.

As I explained earlier, the investment tax credit in the maritimes is double that in Ontario, so I hope this will induce people in the maritimes to do more research and development.

If the hon. member wants my honest assessment of the situation, because of the industrial base in the maritimes I do not think that they will ever be able to use up their share of research and development. Research and development money will always be taken up in areas where industry is concentrated, and that is not the case in the maritimes.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, we have been told that the wording in the income tax changes suggested by the minister will help once again, as the Liberal government seems to like to help, the fat cats in the country, those who are in the high corporate income tax level. In turn, the smaller businessmen, who naturally have a much lower tax level, will not benefit from the deductibility to nearly the same extent as the fat cat, big corporations. Would the minister indicate, first, if this representation is true, and second, why he has not tried to bring better equity into the proposal?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I think I have replied to the same question put by the hon. member's colleague, the hon. member for Capilano extensively. We have to make a distinction between the level of taxes paid by the big and small corporations and allowances for research and development, which are of a different nature. If you segregate just that, you can come to the same conclusion as was reached by the hon. member for Capilano. But on the other side of the question, the level of taxes of the small corporations is half that of the big corporations. Lately we have made provision to ensure that small businesses will have more room to grow, and therefore small corporations' profit now is defined as being $150,000 a year up to $750,000 in accumulated gain.

Mr. Stevens: The minister, as he is wont to do in these committee sessions, likes to avoid the issue when he does not feel it puts either the government or himself in a good light. Let me be specific. If a corporation increases its research and development by $300 in 1978 and its income tax is 48 per cent, what would be the total cost to that corporation of the $400 investment? Let us say they increased from $100 last year, which was their base year, to $400 in the current year, 1978, and their income tax is 48 per cent. What would be the net cost to that corporation of the $400 investement—the minister could throw in his tax credit too if he likes—and, second, what would be the cost to a corporation at the 20 per cent level? Could the minister give us those figures?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I will have to ask my officials to figure that out and I will provide the answer later.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, that is a very simple bit of arithmetic. Surely the officials, with their high-powered computers sitting on the table, could come up with an answer relatively quickly. I will go through it again for them. Take $100 for the base year, which was last year for each company. Let us assume that they go from the $100 level to $400 expenditure for research and development in 1978. All I want to know is what will be the net cost to the corporation which is paying a 48 per cent income tax in 1978, and the net cost to a corporation paying a 20 per cent income tax; and, if you like, throw in the investment tax credit in each case.

Mr. Chrétien: We must make a distinction between a corporation in the maritimes, one in Quebec, one in Ontario, and what kind of corporation it is. I am entitled to ask my officials to make the calculation and give a precise answer to the hon. member.

Mr. Stevens: I will make it a little easier for the minister. Let us say both corporations are in Ontario and both are in the manufacturing and processing business. If the minister needs any other help, I can even send him the answer; but first we will let him try to work it out to see what he comes up with.

Mr. Chrétien: This is an argument between myself and the hon. member. The hon. member for Capilano made the case earlier that if a larger corporation is involved in research and development, because of the 150 per cent provision and because they pay higher taxes, they will get a greater benefit. You cannot separate that from the system under which the small taxpayer pays 20 per cent income tax on his profit. We have recognized this principle when we go this route rather than by way of the investment tax credit. I considered that point with the hon. member's colleague some half hour ago.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, while the officials of the minister are making that calculation, perhaps I can deal with another question on the same clause. In its comments with regard to the minister's tax measures, specifically clause 6, CCH stated that it may be predicted that one of the effects of the new rules will be to cause taxpayers to bunch their scientific research expenditures so as to maximize the deduction. Given the 1975-1977 base of $100, for example, it will clearly benefit the taxpayer to expend nothing from 1978 to 1980 and $400 in 1981, giving him a deduction of $600 in that year, rather than to expend $100 in each of those years, giving him a total deduction of $400.

What is the department's reaction to the CCH comment? Clearly it would be undesirable to have a situation where those who might be investing in scientific and research ventures find it serves their purpose to delay any investment and to have zero investment for one or two years, because if it is bunched in in a later year they will receive a higher deduction as a result of the inept wording of this section.

Mr. Chrétien: In theory, this so-called bunching can happen, but it is unlikely. Some people can stop all research and development and start three years from now in theory, but that is unlikely. I do not think corporations operate that way. That case can be made in theory.

If one wants to cover all possibilities when drafting tax laws, a lot of complexity is added to a very complex system. We realized that there was a possibility of bunching research and development, but we did not think it was advisable to draft a system which would add complexity to something which is already extremely complex.

Mr. Stevens: Having acknowledged that this loophole or weakness exists, why does the minister presume no one will take advantage of it? If we want to trigger research and development in our present economic state in the country, which does not have the real growth we want, and if this inadvertently causes any corporation to delay its research and development in anticipation of receiving a bigger tax deduction further down the road, surely that loophole is undesirable at the present time. Why does the minister feel confident that corporations will not take advantage of that bunching?

Mr. Chrétien: I do not think that will lead businessmen to close down their operations for three years and start again. They will take advantage of the new research incentives. They will not close down and fire their researchers and so on. I do not think they operate in that manner. They want to keep their personnel and keep them working. In theory it is possible, but it is not likely to happen.

Mr. Stevens: Naïvely the minister assumes that there is no multinational corporate reality in this country. Has he not thought of the situation where research and development simply would be transferred to a parent company in the United States, allowing the Canadian company to have on-the-ground activity, but with a view to routing the activity to Canada when it is able to receive its maximum deductibility?

Mr. Chrétien: We will monitor this situation. If there are some abuses, we can always cut back. There is no great incentive for any company to do that. I am glad the CCH expert suggested that possibility. We recognized it, but we could see no reason for making the law more complex than it is just in case this theory was put into practice.

Mr. Stevens: Unfortunately, the theories of this minister have led this country into trouble. Once again through the want of a simple amendment, he will allow something to occur which perhaps will be to the disadvantage of all Canadians.

Has the government completed its arithmetic as to the relative impact of the deductibility on the basis of a 48 per cent taxpayer compared to a 20 per cent taxpayer?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I do not have the answer. When I have it, I will be delighted to give it to the hon. member. There are still 43 minutes remaining.

Mr. Stevens: Can we stand clause 6 for the time being, consider clause 7 and return to clause 6?

Mr. Chrétien: I have no objection to that. We can come back to clause 6, if need be.

The Chairman: Is it agreed to stand clause 6 and proceed with clause 7 at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 6 stood.

On clause 7—

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, as this is the first clause of many which have a bearing on the registered retirement savings plan program, can the minister give us an explanation of all registered retirement savings plan provisions which are in the bill before us?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I could always try to sum things up. As you know, we are proceeding in a rather complex fashion because we always have to refer to the section of the Income Tax Act that is being amended; trying to group all amendments into one would be rather complicated because of the many technicalities of the amendments, as I mentioned when I brought down the budget. I described that new system in my statement to the House on budget night, that is April 10. In short, we are providing more flexibility for those people who have assets and who want to cash in on them over a fairly long period when they retire; I think it would be better to proceed clause by clause. I could read each one of the technical clauses and by the time we have gone through the whole bill, hon. members will have had a complete description. It is very difficult for me to deal with all technical aspects at this point.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, if the minister wants to proceed in that manner, we will have to settle for that. Perhaps he could provide us with the technical explanation of clause 7, then.

Mr. Chrétien: With pleasure, Mr. Chairman. This is a technical amendment. It is consequential on the introduction of new provisions dealing with registered retirement income funds, RRIF, one of the alternatives to life annuities introduced for persons with registered retirement savings plans. Clause 40(2)(g) denies any deduction for certain capital losses. Under the existing act, no capital loss is allowed on a transfer of property by a taxpayer to a trust governed by a registered retirement savings plan, a deferred profit-sharing plan, an employee's profit-sharing plan or a registered home ownership savings plan. This amendment adds registered retirement income funds to the list of trusts for the purpose of this capital loss room. For the clarification of the committee, it is consequential to clause 35 of the bill, wherein we will deal with the substantive amendment.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I received a letter from a constituent who feels the changes under this bill may not be altogether favourable. He indicated that he objected strenuously to the proposal to tax RRSP funds in a lump sum at death, or at latest a spouse's death. In part the letter reads:

> The proposed changes eliminate the flexibility in tax options now available to those who may become entitled to RSP funds after a planholder's death.

● (2112)

I refer to such options as the right to purchase an income averaging annuity and the right of the recipient to pay income tax on the amount received, which is an advantage if the recipient is in a low income tax bracket. Could the minister clarify this?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we at the table have not caught the meaning of the question of the hon. member and it could be useful if he were to repeat it.

Mr. Ritchie: I understand that my constituent feels the proposal to tax RRSP funds in a lump sum at death, or at latest on the spouse's death, is a change. In other words, has there been a change from the previous legislation that would create a tax on the death of the holder, or presumably on the death of his spouse? Is this a change?

Mr. Chrétien: It is my understanding, Mr. Chairman, that as far as RRSPs are concerned there is no change at all. We are here devising a new scheme that is called RRIF. If someone keeps the RRSP fund as actually defined, the situation is the same. He will not be affected by this legislation.

Mr. Ritchie: I would assume, then, there is an option to purchase an income averaging annuity, and a right for the recipient to pay income tax on the amount received in the event that the plan holder dies. I think that is what this person is looking at, a husband having the RRSP which has a value.

That person would like to know whether an income averaging annuity can be bought with the proceeds on the death, presumably, of the spouse.

Mr. Chrétien: There is a period of time within which the person who owns the RRSP can transfer it; that is, by buying a life annuity or opting for this new RRIF system. If he has not done that before the time he dies, then it is too late, as we understand it.

Mr. Ritchie: Is this a change from what was previously in effect?

Mr. Chrétien: No, it is exactly the same situation as was in effect. What we are proposing in RRIF is a new method for a person to transfer his RRSP. Before he could only buy a life annuity; now he can take advantage of this new fund from which he can draw on a regular basis and pay the tax at the level of the year in which he draws the proceeds of the RRIF.

Mr. Ritchie: Just on a point of clarification, let us say that the holder of an RRSP dies, and the amount of what is left in the fund is $10,000. The recipient of that would have to pay income tax as though it had been earned in one year. Is there no means by which the recipient could buy an annuity to spin-out the taxes?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I do not know if the hon. member is referring to the RRIF and what is left to the beneficiary at the time of the death of the holder of the RRIF, and whether it can be passed on to his wife. If it is not going to his wife it is taxed at the level of taxes in the year of his death.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 8—

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister could again give us an explanation of clause 8 for the record.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this is a relieving technical amendment. When a capital property is disposed of a capital gain may arise, one half of which falls to be included in income. Section 44(1) of the act permits a taxpayer to defer or rollover this amount in certain circumstances to the extent that the proceeds are reinvested in a replacement property. At present a property qualifies as a replacement if it is acquired for the same use, and, where the property was used in a business, for the same business as the former property.

This amendment broadens the test by qualifying a property acquired for a similar business. One example of the effect of the change will be to permit the roll-over where land used in one type of farming was sold and the proceeds reinvested in land to be used in a different kind of farming. This change is retroactive to cover property sold after March 31, 1977, the date when this special roll-over was introduced. I think the hon. member will understand that it is consequential to what I have described in respect of earlier clauses where we tried to broaden the interpretation of the roll-over provisions.

Mr. McIsaac: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the minister for further clarification of clause 8. He mentioned in reply to the hon. member opposite that it relates back to clause 2, and cited the case of farm land. Does this apply only to farm land, the sale of an acreage producing grain, let us say, where the proceeds are reinvested in acreage to be used for raising cattle? Or does it also apply to the sale, let us say, of a retail business, such as a shoe store, where the proceeds of that sale are reinvested in a clothing store or novelty store?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, it applies not only to farming but to businesses as well. If you sell your business and you reinvest the money in a similar kind of operation, that is permissible. The problem arose earlier in respect of the definition of farming operation. The definition was too narrow, and if a farmer was operating a grain business there were some rulings by the Department of National Revenue that the reinvestment had to be in grain-producing land. We broadened the definition so that if a person sells a grain-producing farm and buys a new farm to raise cattle, or some other farming operation, that is allowed, rather than the narrow interpretation by National Revenue applying.

Mr. Ritchie: I would like to ask the minister whether there is any limit to the size of the operation we are considering in respect of this roll-over, particularly regarding business. How big might the company be that might qualify?

Mr. Chrétien: In the farming area the roll-over provision does not provide for any limit.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 9—

Mr. Chrétien: I presume the opposition will want me to give the technical explanation. This is a relieving technical amendment. It applies where a partnership has received the proceeds of a life insurance policy as a result of the death of the person insured. As the act is now written, a partnership that has received a policy loan will not be able to distribute the proceeds of the life insurance policy received as a result of the death of the insured without giving rise to a tax liability for its partners. The proposed amendment will provide for more equitable treatment by permitting such proceeds to be distributed at little or no tax cost, regardless of the existence of a policy loan.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, as this is the first of several clauses that deal with life insurance I was interested in getting that explanation from the minister. I would also like to know what it is that has changed in the definition of the adjusted cost base, and how this relates to the other provisions we are going to consider that deal with life insurance.

Mr. Chrétien: This amendment in clause 9 in respect of life insurance proceeds received by a partnership is just a clarification consequential upon Bill C-11 that was passed by the House in December. It is just a clarification to the act. There is nothing substantial in this amendment.

Clause agreed to.

● (2122)

On clause 10—

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, perhaps we could have the usual explanation on clause 10.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this particular amendment—

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, a point of order. It might save time if the minister could deal with clauses 10, 11 and 12. They all refer to clause 35, and perhaps we could get them dealt with at one time.

Mr. Chrétien: On clause 10, Mr. Chairman, this is a technical amendment consequential on the introduction of the new provision relating to the registered retirement income fund, the so-called RRIF. Paragraph 54(c) defines the disposition of property for the purposes of capital gains provisions of the act. Ordinarily, a transfer of property where there is no change in its beneficial ownership is not considered to be a disposition; for example, a transfer of shares by a person to a trust under which he is the beneficiary. However, an exception to this rule is made where the trust is not taxable, as in the case of RRSPs, IPSPs, EPSPs and RHOSPs. This amendment simply adds the reference to the RRIFs.

Going to clause 11, payment from an RRIF. This is a technical amendment and is consequential on the introduction of a registered retirement income fund as an alternative to life annuities for persons with registered retirement savings plans. Section 56 of the act is a general section that requires pension benefits and similar miscellaneous receipts to be included in income for tax purposes. This amendment requires payments out of a registered retirement income fund to be included in income when received.

Section 60, clause 12, deals with payments to RRSPs and from RRIFs. Section 60 of the act permits certain miscellaneous deductions in computing income. This amendment makes two technical changes which are consequential on the introduction of the registered retirement income fund as an alternative to life annuities for persons who have a registered retirement savings plan.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, on this general subject the minister received a letter from an executive of one of our life insurance companies and perhaps I could read into the record certain paragraphs and ask the minister to indicate what his reply was. The communication states:

> The current law provides that the annuitant under an RRSP may purchase a life annuity with guaranteed payments not exceeding 15 years. In other words, for a 71-year-old, payments are guaranteed to age 86 and for life thereafter.
> The budget proposals would allow two new options under which funds could be withdrawn in a systematic fashion amortized to age 90. I regret one aspect of these proposals in that they will create a new welfare class of 91-year-old survivors of exhausted RRSP funds, but that is not the main purpose of my letter.
> It would appear to me that in order to be consistent with the new options, the existing one should be amended, eliminating the 15 year guarantee maximum and substituting a maximum allowable guaranteed period to age 90. This change would allow a prospective annuitant to properly compare the value of a level payout to age 90 under one of the new proposals to a life annuity with payments guaranteed to age 90. As the proposals now stand, the latter option is not allowed.

Perhaps the minister could indicate the government's position on that.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, it has been extended in the bill, and I will give the hon. member the exact clause in a moment.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 11 and 12 agreed to.

On clause 13—

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps we could have an explanation of this clause, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this is a technical amendment. Subsection 69(6) of the act deals with dispositions of natural resource products to the federal and provincial governments, agents thereof and Crown corporations. The taxpayer who makes any such disposition must, under the present wording, include in his income the fair market value of the products so transferred. The change to subsection 69(6) restricts its application to dispositions made by virtue of an obligation imposed by statements or a contractual obligation substituted therefor. In this manner, normal commercial transactions are not interfered with.

In addition, another technical change eliminates "industrial" from the phrase "industrial minerals" used in these subsections. Both of these changes bring these subsections into conformity with the wording in other provisions of the act, in paragraphs 12(1)(o) and 18(1)(m). The changes are applicable after April 10, 1978. This is to conform with the amendment passed in December, 1977, to make the situation consistent.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 14—

Mr. Neil: Mr. Chairman, before supper we had some discussion under clause 1 in connection with the roll-over of the family farm corporation, and in particular with the situation where a farmer did not transfer farm land to the family farm corporation. There are numerous reasons why he may not do so. For example, he may have done some estate planning and, having a large family and wishing to leave some of the land to other members who are not involved in farming, he therefore leases the land to the corporation.

The minister earlier stated that he could transfer to the corporation and then pass on the shares, but, as I say, there may be numerous reasons why he does not want to do so. The minister also suggested that if he did transfer the land to the corporation there would be no capital gains tax.

Over the supper hour I did some checking with a chartered accountant who does considerable family farm corporation work, and he advised me that there is, in fact, capital gains tax payable under certain circumstances. If the person transferring the land is also a shareholder in the family farm corporation, there is no capital gains tax; but if there are other members of the family who are shareholders in the corporation, then there is a problem with capital gains plus other tax problems.

The matter could be solved fairly simply by bringing in an amendment which would provide a change in the regulation covering the roll-over of farm property. I am reading from the "Farmer's & Fisherman's Income Tax Guide, 1977", and the same regulations are found in the Canada Master Tax Guide:

A farmer can pass land on to his son or daughter or child, which includes grandchild, if the property was, immediately before death, used by the taxpayer, the taxpayer's spouse or any of his or her children.

● (2132)

In the past, in order to get around that provision, where the owner of the land leased it to a corporation accountants sometimes found it necessary to recommend to the farmer that he cancel the lease for a year and allow his son to operate the land or operate the land himself. He has then complied with this provision and is able to transfer the land by intra vires gift to a son or daughter.

I think the matter could be solved very simply by adding to that provision the following words:

—used by the taxpayer, the taxpayer's spouse or any of his or her children or by a family farm corporation, the shareholders of which one or more is a member of the particular class.

Would the minister consider bringing in such an amendment? It would solve many of the problems which exist with regard to a transfer, intra vires, from the parent to the children, which will now create problems with this new change regarding farm corporations.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I will certainly look at the hon. member's proposition with sympathy but I think it is quite a complex problem. There could be many members in a corporation and not necessarily all the members are of the same family. I will study the proposition and report back. I am not in a position to agree to it at the moment because in all circumstances there is always a potential for abuse. Even with the best intentions we have to be careful.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that in this particular case there is any room for abuse. I hope the minister will talk to his officials and have them consider the matter overnight or within the next day or two with a view to bringing in an amendment. I cannot see, nor could the accountants I talked to, that there would be any abuse in bringing in such an amendment. It would be of assistance to many farmers in transferring farms to sons and daughters involved in family farm corporations.

Mr. Chrétien: As I said, Mr. Chairman, we are willing to entertain the possibility of change but I do not think it would be advisable to make such a change on the spot. This debate is a good occasion to receive such problems. It will be studied by my officials and if the representations of the hon. member lead to a fair amendment, we have a budget at least once a year, sometimes twice, so it could come back later on.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister what caused him to eliminate from the provisions of his budget, and therefore from this clause, the type of corporation that I might find in my riding—the ordinary small business in a city riding—when something of the sort was introduced less than six weeks later by the Minister of State (Small Business). Why were ordinary businesses not considered with farm businesses in this provision?

Mr. Chrétien: At the time of the budget we considered the possibility of incorporating the whole lot but decided to have a policy for small businesses. I did not want to spread it out with part in the budget and part in the package that was to come later. We saved it for the time when we were to make representation, where we could have a broader picture of small businesses. A bill has been tabled in the House and if we can deal with this bill quickly we will get back to the bill on small businesses.

Mr. Clarke: Does the minister's answer mean that the incorporated farms being dealt with here are not considered to be small businesses?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we considered farming a different type of business. The reason we make the distinction is that the farming community thinks it is completely different from the business community, in a sense, and we have received different representations. Of course, you could argue that some farmers now are really businessmen, but there is still the tradition that a farmer is a farmer and a businessman is a businessman. With the kind of money they make on some of the big farms in the west they do pretty well compared to many of us in parliament.

Mr. McIsaac: Mr. Chairman, I have a brief comment for the minister. First of all, I want to commend him for bringing in this provision in clause 14—

Mr. Stevens: Who suggested it?

Mr. McIsaac: It was suggested by the Saskatchewan Liberal Association, by the Liberal party of Canada, by a number of Liberal members of parliament and by a number of members opposite, if the hon. member wants to know. The suggestion was certainly not confined to any one source.

I want to commend the minister for this and urge him to consider the proposal put forward by my colleague, the hon. member for Moose Jaw. I think we are going quite some distance in making this amendment to include the incorporated farms in order to give relief from the capital gains tax measure. I hope the minister will look at this again overnight and see if it can be broadened.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the minister about a problem which is perhaps indirectly connected to the bill. A farmer retires, sells his farm and then buys an acreage near a city which was formerly raw land, not occupied or used for farming. Then he decides he wants to pass that along to his children. In effect, it is the same as passing on the assets of the farming operation he sold to the children, but at the moment that is impossible under the law; it has to be construed as a sale at fair market value and is taxed as such. He does not even have the right to set his own price if he wants to sell it to his children at lower than the market value. That is not acceptable to the tax department. Can the minister tell us why there is this Scrooge-like approach to the transfer of raw land, which is not necessarily farming land, within families?

Mr. Chrétien: The act provides for the transfer of a farm within a family. This is not to help people get around the tax law and make a buck out of speculation. What we want to do is preserve the family farm concept. If a farmer sells his farm and rolls the proceeds over in another farming operation, he would qualify for exemption; but if he rolls the money into a completely different business or into a piece of land that he will use eventually for speculative purposes, of course that is not a farming operation. If he rolls over his money into a farming operation, even if it is not exactly the same type—say he goes from grain to grazing cattle or pigs or whatever—as long as it is farming he will qualify for the exemption. If he rolls it over into something completely different he will not qualify.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister could explain the philosophy behind what he just said. Why should it be impossible for a parent to transfer property to children prior to death?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we introduced the concept of capital gains in this country some years ago and eliminated the federal inheritance tax to compensate. It used to be that payments were made at the time of the transfer of money after death; now it is made at the time of the capital gain. Of course, if you have assets and transfer them to the children at death, you are not obliged to pay inheritance tax. But you do pay tax on the capital gain.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, judging from the exchange between the minister and various members, including one of his own supporters, there seems to be a possibility that the minister might consider an amendment to clause 14 to give effect to the recommendation of the hon. member from Moose Jaw. I wonder if the clause could stand and we could go on to clause 15 in the circumstances?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I did not say I was entertaining the idea of an amendment at this stage. The situation is very complex although, of course, the hon. member tells me it is quite easy. We cannot just accept an amendment to the Income Tax Act without some study. I thank the member for raising the possibility of providing me with the information, but I do not think it will be possible in a matter of hours to draft an amendment and analyse all the consequences. I do not think we can operate that way.

● (2142)

Mr. Stevens: Let it stand; we have the rest of the week.

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister if the provisions of this section mean that shares in the family farm can be passed on through three generations without tax. In other words, could the tax be deferred anywhere from 60 to 100 years? Is that the effect of this provision?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, Mr. Chairman, if the farm remains in the family. A father can transfer his farm under the roll-over provision with no capital gain to his children, who in turn can pass it to the next generation, as long as it is from father to son. It can go on for generations and the capital gain is postponed until the time when the property or farm is transferred outside of the family.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, if the farm is to be passed on for three generations, that is from father to son to grandchild to a great grandchild, which might run 100 years, and if the purpose is to preserve the family farm, why is there a limit? I understand the desirability, but if it is good for three generations, why is it not good for ten?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, 20 generations or 50, there is no limit, but I guess that I will not be minister of finance when it comes time to change the act. I just said that there is no limit if it is transferred from father to son.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 15—

Miss Campbell: Mr. Chairman, first of all I would be remiss if I did not ask for an interpretation of clause 15, and at the same time congratulate the minister on his family law reform.

This clause allows the property of the marriage to be split if the provinces pass a law that allows for some type of split, and the federal government would allow this, on the capital gains end of it, to be split 50-50. In other words, it is up to the provinces if they get into this area. For instance, in Nova Scotia we have a bill before the legislature called the married persons property act which, upon marriage breakdown, would split the property 50-50. For the purposes of the Income Tax Act the spouses would then have this property split 50-50 on the capital gain. That 50-50 split would be shared between the spouses for the purposes of future income tax liability of the two parties in respect to any capital gain when the property is disposed of by the taxpayer in the course of the marriage.

I think this is great if the provinces get into this and allow for it on marriage breakdown. But it seems to me the federal government has gone one step further and has allowed income splitting, if the provinces wish to get into it. Section 73(1) (a) provides:

> For the purposes of this Part, where at any time after 1977 any particular capital property of a taxpayer has been transferred to
> (a) his spouse,

I go now to the interpretation section, which provides as follows:

> (1.1) For greater certainty, where, by the operation of prescribed provisions of the law of a province . . . a person referred to in subsection (1)
> (a) acquires or is deemed to have acquired—

I will not read the rest of that provision, but the property would become vested in the individual. In other words, property within the marriage can be split. It is my understanding that the province of Manitoba under former premier Schreyer passed an act which split the property of the marriage. This act was proclaimed but later revoked by Premier Lyon.

Am I right in interpreting this section as applying to capital gains within a marriage, if there was a law within a province on property? Property is under provincial jurisdiction. In other words, all the provinces should be asked, for the benefit of spouses, to pass such an act, if I interpret this correctly.

Mr. Lumley: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member's interpretation is correct. However, there is one aspect of her comments which is not totally correct. She indicates the federal government now agrees to income splitting. This is not the case. This clause basically deals with transfers during life.

It might serve hon. members well if we perhaps mention a few specific technical changes with respect to this clause. Section 73 of the act provides that the tax liability that would otherwise arise on certain inter vivos transfers of property is deferred until the time of disposition by the transferee. In general terms, the section currently provides for such roll-over treatment where a taxpayer transfers property to his spouse or to a spouse trust and where farm land, farm buildings or equipment are transferred to a taxpayer's child.

This clause makes the following important relieving amendments to section 73: first, a roll-over is provided for property transferred to a spouse under provincial legislation relating to marital property; second, a roll-over is provided on the transfer of agricultural quota and similar farm property to a child; and third, a new rule is added to provide a roll-over on the transfer to a child of an interest in a family farm partnership or of shares in a family farm corporation.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I would like to get this straight. The way I read that, if a province passed an act pertaining to capital gains, or property acquired during a marriage, and they deemed it to be owned 50-50 by both spouses within the marriage, this act would apply and the gain would be split.

Mr. Lumley: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stevens: As this clause deals in a way with the capital gains question, could the minister indicate if the government have given any further thought with respect to capital gains in the Bryce commission context of at least indexing capital gains before they are taxed or, perhaps better still, giving up the taxation of capital gains period?

Mr. Chrétien: We have received the commission report prepared by the late Mr. Dickinson and Mr. Nadeau. We are studying that at this time. Of course, they make some specific recommendations on capital gains. We will study their recommendations but we are not planning to make a change at this time. This bill makes some changes in terms of capital gains for family farms. Of course, in another bill before the House we have made some capital gains changes for small businesses.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the minister has made reference to two places where they have made some concessions with regard to capital gains. Does he not feel it is a confiscation to continue the taxation of capital gains, giving no indexing effect for inflation?

• (2152)

Mr. Chrétien: The answer is no.

Clause agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 16 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I take it the clause carries on the understanding there is no change in the effect of what is being changed here as far as the French version is concerned.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 17—

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, this is a rather significant change. Perhaps the minister can elaborate on why they are seeking this change.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this relieving technical amendment concerns certain special shares of public companies that are entitled to continue to pay tax-deferred dividends after 1978. This amendment simply ensures that, provided the terms and conditions of these special shares remain unchanged, an amalgamation of the original corporation will not upset their continued entitlement to tax-deferred dividend status.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister can indicate which of the tax motions actually cover the proposal in clause 17.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, perhaps we can stand clause 17 and go to clause 18 while we are trying to find out for the hon. member.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that the committee stand consideration of clause 17 and proceed to clause 18?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stood.

On clause 18—

Mr. Stevens: Again, Mr. Chairman, I think the committee should have an explanation from the minister with regard to this change.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this amendment is designed to block a technique whereby public corporations could arrange their share structures so as to pay tax-deferred cash dividends to their shareholders in the guise of reductions in capital. Any amount paid to a shareholder of a public corporation on a reduction of its capital after April 10, 1978—the date of the budget—is deemed to be a dividend, unless the amount was paid on the redemption, acquisition or cancellation of the share, on the winding-up of the corporation or in the course of a reorganization of the capital stock of the corporation. This simply ensures that such cash payments to shareholders are taxed as dividends as and when they are received.

Mr. Stevens: Under this clause, Mr. Chairman, can the minister confirm or otherwise whether it will still be possible for such a public corporation to pay out taxes paid on distributed income as long as they do it prior to December 31? If they do pay it out, will that be a tax-free dividend as far as the shareholders of the public corporation are concerned?

Mr. Chrétien: I understand the answer is yes, Mr. Chairman.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, with regard to clause 17, the hon. member for York-Simcoe asked which part of the ways and means motion related to clause 17. It is right at the beginning, that it is "expedient to amend the Income Tax Act and provide, among other things". This is one of the other things. This is only a technical change and, therefore, is not described in the ways and means motion.

Mr. Stevens: In view of that explanation, which I was a little frightened was going to be the explanation, perhaps clause 17 should continue to stand.

The Chairman: It has been stood.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I do not know why we have to do that. I have given the explanation. However, if it is to accommodate the hon. member, we can do that and move on to clause 19. I hope we will not end up with too many clauses stood.

Mr. Stevens: The minister is not doing too badly so far. We have just stood two. In fairness, we should have a chance to check the legality of what the minister is doing here in view of the fact that he is trying to get this clause through under a kind of grandfather clause in the original tax motion. It would facilitate the activities of this committee if the minister could indicate if he anticipates any amendments with regard to clauses that we have yet to consider in the bill.

Mr. Chrétien: The answer is no, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stevens: To be specific, do I take it that clause 30 will not be amended, notwithstanding the various suggestions put to the minister in this House and from other sources?

Mr. Chrétien: I do not intend to propose any amendments, Mr. Chairman.

On clause 19—

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps we could have an explanation of clause 19.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, these are important technical amendments to the anti-surplus stripping rules. The anti-surplus stripping rules are designed to ensure that taxpayers cannot artificially extract surplus on a tax-free basis.

The purpose of these amendments is to clarify the operation of these anti-avoidance rules as they apply to small groups of unrelated taxpayers who together control a corporation. The existing act is somewhat ambiguous in its application to such situations.

The new rules set out easy-to-follow tests. They basically apply to non-arm's length sales of shares by a taxpayer who is a member of a group of five or fewer unrelated persons who control the corporation, if the purchasing corporation owns more than 10 per cent of the equity shares of the corporation purchased. The general effect of this change is to restrict the rule to those situations where a surplus strip can actually take place. Since the special Part IV tax applies to intercompany dividends received where the recipient owns 10 per cent or less of the equity shares, there is no need to apply the anti-surplus stripping rule to such situations.

Clause agreed to.

The Chairman: It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the bill at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

● (2202)

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—COAST GUARD BUILDING IN VICTORIA HARBOUR, B.C.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I am taking part in the adjournment debate tonight because of the unsatisfactory nature of the reply given to me on Thursday last to a question concerning the coast guard building in Victoria, B.C. The minister's replies to my questioning were to the effect that, since a building permit had been obtained from the city, he saw no reason to change his decision. He also stressed somewhat the cost of providing a warehouse for the coast guard in Victoria.

Habour development in Victoria is of considerable interest to the city. The history is not common to other jurisdictions. In Victoria there is an Advisory Planning Commission composed largely of elected officials, councillors, school board presidents and the like who consider zoning questions and make recommendations to the city council. This system alone was found to be unsatisfactory because it took account only of zoning regulations.

As a result, an advisory design panel was put in place to pay attention to the historical interests of Victoria and maintain the beauty of the city. This panel was composed mainly of architects and engineers who meet and pass judgment on the design of buildings submitted to them and decide if they are acceptable or not. In the six years or so during which this panel has been operating it is practically unheard of for any entrepreneur or contractor, including the provincial government, to put up a building which does not meet with the approval of the design panel.

Beautification of the harbour started some ten years ago and I particularly recall in this connection the case of an entrepreneur who wished to build, I think it was, a 25-storey hotel on the harbour shore. This would have been completely out of place and after a good deal of protest by civic officials and others it was decided not to grant a building permit and not to accept the building. The inevitable lawsuit followed, but the city was successful. A similar thing happened in connection with a proposal to put up another building of an equal magnitude. It has been accepted by everyone in Victoria that this is the only way in which to control the quality of the building which goes on.

In British Columbia they have what are known as design permit controlled areas—I do not know whether other provinces have them or not. In these areas the word of the design panel is law. The beauty and harmony of the surroundings is considered more important than the feelings of the entrepreneur concerned.

What happened in the case about which I questioned the minister was this: The federal government purchased some land from the Victoria Machinery depot for between $4 and $6 million and proposed to put up a building on that site. They knocked down some old shipyard buildings which were an eyesore anyway, and cleared the site. Then they built some docks and a shed to house a helicopter—I suppose it could be called a helicopter hangar. This is a concrete construction.

The minister made the case the other day that they had kept within the regulations for that zone, that the building does not exceed the height or the size permitted for the zone, but he was unable to make any progress with the advisory design panel. They have suggested several things to the department, all of them found unacceptable, it appears. The department is pulling its weight and insisting on building this metallic structure.

As was said the other day, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has a personality which would incite him to pave over Peggy's Cove to take a wrinkle out of the highway. This is what he is doing in Victoria. While the land owned by the Department of Transport does not fall within the design permit control area or the inner harbour, it is right next door to it, and it is in an area which the city and the provincial government are working hard to bring up to a higher standard, which we thought the federal government was doing. When they started working on this project, the Department of Public Works was in charge of it. They retained Willis, Cunliffe, Tait and Co., an engineering consultant firm, and Peterson and Lester architects.

Then there seemed to have been a falling out between the Department of Transport and the Department of Public Works and, as it was expressed, they fired the Department of Public Works and turned over the work to their own coastguard with sole authority to proceed with the project without the architects. We now have the terrible result of a decision to put up a metallic building and to make no changes to the design so that it would blend in with the community. They have been told that a cement building would be more acceptable. In the matter of cost, the firm which sent in a tender for the concrete building quoted a price which was $17,000 lower than the tender for the other building.

I ask the minister to reconsider the decision and to see whether he could reopen the subject.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I share the hon. member's concern for preserving by all possible means the beauty of the City of Victoria, the more so because I had the pleasure of visiting there on two occasions for over two months, and it was the first Canadian city outside the village where I was born which I was visiting; I am therefore as concerned as he is in preserving the beauty of this really outstanding area of our country.

In order to respond more specifically to the hon. member's concern, I should like to convey to him the information I was able to obtain during the day. As the hon. member already knows, for the past few years the department had been considering to move the Victoria coast guard operation from the bridge on Johnson Street to a location which would not interfere with the activities on the bridge. With the support of the City of Victoria, the department has bought the former Victoria Machinery Depot property and made elaborate development plans for some port facilities, a helicopter hangar and landing area, as well as a building to accomodate administrative offices, a supply depot and workshops. The construction of the helicopter hangar and landing area is completed and has been approved by the coast guard. We expect that the supply depot will be available by December 1978, the workshops by April 1979, and the administrative offices by June 1979. The construction program for the base, including the landscape-garden, the landing to the port and the public parking area on the roof-top of the administrative building should hopefully be ready by August 1979.

[English]

The department has maintained the city's interest as to location and zoning requirements throughout the development of the site. The department, as a good corporate citizen, has applied to the city and received building permits for the completed hangar and for the first stage of the warehouse, the construction of which has commenced; and although not required, it is our intention to continue to apply for building permits for each stage of the complex. The metal panelling of the warehouse is a baked on enamel which will blend in with the colour and style of the present hangar and future buildings. It is our intention to have a functional yet attractive coast guard base at Victoria, bearing in mind the financial restraints with which we are faced.

AIRPORTS—SAFETY FACILITIES AT CRANBROOK, B.C.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on May 15 I asked the minister if he could confirm the fact that there was evidence, or at the very least allegations, of four separate incidents of aircraft on final approach being greeted at four different runways across Canada with vehicles of one type or another being on the runways. In his reply, the minister indicated that he did not have that information available, he was unable to confirm it, and he implied that he would make inquiries in that regard.

On that basis, on June 8 I asked him if he could now confirm the fact, at least in one case, the case of the Cranbrook airport, that the allegation had been confirmed, and that on or about April 20, within virtually two months of the fatal crash at Cranbrook, indeed there was another incident of a vehicle being on the runway while a Pacific Western 737 commercial jet liner was on final approach. As yet the minister has not confirmed that fact. Indeed I question whether he has bothered to make that inquiry.

When I indicated to the minister in a supplementary question that I felt he was shopping for another accident, and that he should address himself to this problem, he said that I was being unfair. As reported in Hansard, he said the following:

> The hon. member is being unfair. He knows full well that the whole question of these communications is presently under investigation both as to the specific incident which occurred and at airports around the country. The inquiry is not related to one airport.

The fact remains that in February there was a fatal crash at Cranbrook which took 43 lives. The only thing unfair about my statement is that it is unfair to expect travellers to Cranbrook, expecting a very, very concerned group of individuals at the airport and an extended effort to control traffic on the runway other than aircraft, to find that simply does not prevail, and that the environment for another fatal accident is present. And a fatal accident could have occurred on April 20, had the weather conditions been similar to those back in February.

The minister indicated that he is concerned about these circumstances across Canada. Also he indicated that he is concerned about air safety. On May 15, he indicated that he was very concerned about having and maintaining the high level of safety we have in Canada. That is simply not the fact and is far removed from the fact.

We have had this other incident in Cranbrook, yet the minister has not had the intestinal fortitude to examine that specific incident in light of the fact that just two months previously there was a fatal crash at that airport. He has not come forward in the House and indicated that he is prepared to look specifically at the obvious problem which is existent at Cranbrook.

The only unfair thing about my question is the fact that the minister seems to care little for the lives of the people flying into Cranbrook and other airports, for that matter, in Canada.

The minister also implied on May 15 and again on June 6 that all is well. Indeed, he said on May 15 that our total air navigational system, including such things as increases to our navigational aids and the like, take up a considerable portion of the federal budget. The navigational aids at Castlegar—and we have been waiting for months, for that which we have been promised for months, namely the replacement of existing navigational aids that have been described to me by one of the Ministry of Transport officials as more appropriately belonging in the Smithsonian Institute—are still there functioning. For how long will they function? There is a very serious problem in respect of getting spare parts for this ancient navigational aid system.

Today I asked the minister about fire safety. He touched upon this in his previous responses to me. The minister is reported in the press as having said that there is some concern. I really think this concern in the press is a concern as expressed in terms of the minister's attitude toward the Cranbrook crash and in terms of the minister's attitude toward air safety in Canada.

For example, the minister is referred to in an article appearing in the Vancouver Sun of May 26, which states in part:

> For example, there is the inquest evidence that those—both inside and outside the ministry—who were concerned with handling Pacific Western Airlines Flight 314 on Feb. 11 did not take all care possible.

In light of the repetition about a vehicle being on the runway at Cranbrook, I would ask the minister to please examine specifically the ground-to-ground and ground-to-air control at Cranbrook. This has not been done, and in my view the minister is shirking a very serious responsibility.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we must have the patience of an angel to listen to such extravagant remarks and hear in the House that the minister is not interested in air safety in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, there are thousands of persons working in air communications, operating radar and not one of them is perfect because we are all human beings. I think that the hon.

member would not dream of having robots operate air communications. Since the accident at Cranbrook on February 11, 1978, it is true that four incidents implying an obstacle left on the runway have been pointed out to Transport Canada. In two of thoses cases, airport vehicles were involved and each time a thorough investigation was performed.

It is certain, Mr. Speaker, that when a question is asked of the minister in the House, he cannot say immediately if an incident has happened or not before an investigation is made. The other two incidents are attributable not to airport vehicles, but to an aircraft which took longer than expected to clear the runway. That type of incident is considered unusual.

The first incident involving a vehicle occurred in Cranbrook, B.C., on April 20, 1978. The aircraft did not have to overshoot the runway since the vehicle was able to move off in time. The investigation revealed that the mistake was made by the radio operator who did not inform the pilot about a possible danger or obstacle on the runway. Appropriate action has been taken so that such incidents will not re-occur.

The second incident involving an airport vehicle occurred in Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, on March 18, 1978. The situation at this airport is different than in Cranbrook as the airport in Sault Ste. Marie has a fully-equipped control tower. The pilot had been authorized to make an approach and was instructed to call the tower at the last observed point, that is the lighthouse, the last observed point of the approach.

The pilot did not call the tower, but the aircraft was sighted by the controller who asked him to re-apply power because a vehicle was obstructing the runway. The control methods used at this airport are now being reviewed to prevent such an incident from occurring again. Once again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to note that the whole matter of control communications in airports is being studied in Cranbrook and everywhere else in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

A 10:21 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

SENTENCE 3

BY THE COURT (LUC TRUDEL JCSP)

Mr. Treu, I will—I'm going to render my sentence in French because I'm much more at ease in this language which is my mother tongue and since it is important in my view I would prefer to speak in French, but I understand that you can easily get a transcription of my judgment, and if you insist, we might have somebody to translate it now.

BY THE ACCUSED

I think, My Lord, that won't be necessary!

BY THE COURT

Okay, but I wish, not only I wish but I'm sure that you're going to do it, you should of course read my sentence and have it translated to you. I think so.

[Translation]

On April 28, 1978, the Court convicted Mr. Treu on two counts, the first being that on or about March 29, 1974, having in his possession or control documents or information that he obtained or to which he had access as a person employed under a company who held a contract made on behalf of Her Majesty, namely Northern Electric Company Limited. Mr. Treu unlawfully retained said documents or information in his possession or control, when he had no right to do so, committing thereby an indictable offence, contrary to s 4(1)(c) of the Official Secrets Act; and the second count being that after having unlawfully retained the said documents or information, the accused failed to take reasonable care of such documents or conducted himself in such a manner as to endanger the safety of such documents and information, again contrary to s 4(1)(d) of the Official Secrets Act. I would like to assure the accused as well as counsel that before rendering my judgment, I went over all the evidence—as I am bound to do by law and my oath of office, I went over all the evidence and exhibits and understood—I believe I understood—all the evidence presented as a whole, except of course for certain technical, very technical parts, which were beyond my knowledge—at least the part which required really specialized knowledge which only the accused and other experts possess. I do however feel that from a legal viewpoint—from the point of view of the law and the facts in this case—I fulfilled my oath of office to the best of my capabilities under the circumstances, after having gone over the facts and taken as much time as was required in the circumstances. I am clearly not saying this for personal reasons.

On the contrary, I am saying this to reassure the accused that, as required by my functions and oath of office, I went over all the evidence, and my judgment was based solely on such evidence and on nothing but the evidence presented in this Court at the trial. In addition, since I rendered my judgement, I spent the whole time between handing down the decision and your appearance today trying to think of the sentence to impose, without of course preconceiving the arguments which would be presented in Court and without making a final decision, since I have no right to do so before hearing your counsel and the evidence they might present or before hearing the arguments of the Crown. I was however aware of the facts in the case and of the law, and it was my duty all the same to start to give the question mature thought and to think of a sentence which I could impose after having convicted you. As you see, neither my judgment nor my sentence are last-minute decisions, and I honestly feel that both are based solely on the facts, the evidence, the law and the precedents, after having—and I repeat—after having studied the file and heard the arguments of both your counsel, and this judgment and sentence are clearly rendered with a clear conscience and in accordance with the way in which I see the facts, law and precedents. I would like to say, Mr. Treu, that in my opinion your trial was fair and in keeping with the laws of Canada as they exist. The Official Secrets Act is obviously a Canadian law with which we are all bound to comply—myself, counsel, newspapers and journalists included. Moreoever, we are all, as citizens—and judges and people in high positions even more so—we are all bound by the laws of this country and I personally believe that the law is above men, above personalities, above all citizens, whether individual or corporate. I admit that the trial was held under exceptional circumstances, as you well know, but it was nevertheless in accordance with the Official Secrets Act. In this respect, Mr. Treu, I would like to quickly review the proceedings in this case for the record. You first appeared before a Judge of the Court of Sessions of the Peace; you were released by this Judge, in accordance with the law, under certain conditions. Your counsel, as was their right and yours too, filed a Petition in Superior Court asking that the conditions imposed by the Judge of the Court of Sessions of the Peace be reviewed. Without going into detail, I believe that, after examining the information and the facts presented, as well as your sworn petition, the Superior Court Judge decided to change some conditions of your release, by obliging you to report to the RCMP once a month instead of twice a month, and other minor changes in the conditions but, essentially, the Superior Court Judge maintained the conditions imposed by the Judge of the Court of Sessions of the Peace. You then appeared before various other judges to remand the case and for other administrative formalities, and then finally the date of the preliminary inquiry was set. The preliminary inquiry was held, and at the beginning of the inquiry, the Crown requested that the trial be held in camera for certain reasons then given. Counsel for the defence, your two lawyers—whom, by the way, I consider competent and honest; I feel they made use of every possible means to defend you—agreed to the closed session. At the preliminary enquiry, and I won't go over all the evidence, but most of the exhibits, or documents, filed at the trial were also filed at the preliminary inquiry, and among other things, the inventory list was filed at the preliminary inquiry, and I later learned, when presiding at the trial, that there had been some correspondence between your counsel and counsel for the Crown concerning the documents which might eventually be filed, although there was a difference of opinion between the counsel as to the documents as a whole. What I am trying to say is that from the beginning of the trial, the Crown which is obviously representing the Justice Department—the federal Justice Department in this case—and in passing, I must add, since it is part of the case, that an authorization from the Minister of Justice was filed—I have it here—in accordance with s. 12. The text is in English, but in accordance with s. 12 of the Official Secrets Act, the Attorney General of Canada, Mr. Basford, has authorized all the proceedings against you in accordance with our laws here in this country. I do not have to tell you—everyone knows—that the Attorney General of Canada holds the highest positions, at least as regards the administration of justice in this country, and no action under the Official Secrets Act can be brought against anyone without the approval or consent of the Attorney General.

Counsel for the Crown informed the court of the intentions and reasons for requesting that the trial be held under such exceptional conditions. As I was saying, he represents the highest authorities of the country and the Court, and in view of the seriousness of the offence and the fact that your counsel was acquainted with the record and the documents and that you yourself were acquainted with all the documents filed at the preliminary inquiry, I believe that in the circumstances, the Court having exercised its jurisdiction in a discretionary way, I believe that in the circumstances it was justified—and I am not saying this to in any way defend (since counsel understand our system) any judicial decision at the trial level, except in certain cases, with respect to its discretion—I don't wish to give a course on law here—they can always be appealed, and I believe that this is good. In fact, not only is it good, it is imperative in our system of law and essential if democracy is to work. I say this so that it will be perfectly clear in my mind that my judgment was rendered within the framework of Canadian law—that I have not departed from it, did not intend to depart from it, and will not depart from it in my sentence either. In my opinion, my judgment in your case was rendered in accordance with the evidence presented in Court, and I will not depart from this evidence and the facts in the case—and it was important and it was important to me to establish this position of the Court since, as you know, much publicity has been given to this case, often confused, inaccurate publicity—certain facts concerning this were brought to my attention from various sources—and there were perhaps a few poor interpretations which were haphazardly made, by people who had something to gain from acting in this manner—You yourself, Mr. Treu were, as I said, represented by competent and honest counsel. You have obviously seen from the beginning how the case developed, you have been warned by the Court on some occasions, you know that a closed session had been ordered, you know that at or near the beginning of the trial, your counsel pointed out to the Court that a Toronto newpaper—I don't remember the name of it and it isn't really important—had failed to comply with the closed session ordered by the Court. I warned Mr. Chabot at that time, and this is of course in the reasons, that I regarded this as a very serious matter and that in my own opinion no one is above the law, neither you nor, as I said earlier, the newspapers, nor, in short, anyone at all. You may not be aware of this but there is such a thing as contempt of Court in the presence of the Court and there is also contempt of Court outside the presence of the Court. In the case of contempt of Court in the presence of the Court, the law give me authority to act immediately; in the case of contempt of court outside the presence of the Court, I have no juridiction. All I can do, or all I could do under the circumstances, or all your counsel could do, was obviously to submit the whole matter to the Crown in charge of these proceedings under the Criminal Code, and in this case the Crown in right of the province. As for me, I pointed out immediately that your counsel should, if he wished to do so institute proceedings immediately or make a report to the proper person—I don't know whether or not he did so—as for me, I did not wish to take any action at that time and I feel that this was justified because I did not wish to becloud my mind in any way; I wished to remain, as I felt it was my duty to do, as objective as possible in the circumstances, and I did not wish to be in any way disturbed, either intellectually or legally, by anything other than the facts, the evidence, as it was revealed in the Court. So I simply kept it all in mind, therefore, until the end of the trial, but I intend nevertheless to clarify the matter and I think that it was understood by counsel and should, reasonably speaking, have been understood by you, because your counsel did after all advise you throughout the trial and before the proceedings and I think you should, reasonably speaking, have understood that the order for a closed session has to be complied with. The personalities involved are of absolutely no importance in my opinion. As I told you Mr. Treu, it is the law that must be respected; it is the law that is most important in our society and it is the only rempart that society has, that we all have. The last rampart that can really protect us is the law and respect of the Courts. I know that this has been said in much more elaborate and learned ways by a great many writers, scholars and jurists but the fact remains that in very simple terms it seems to me that everyone understands that in the long run the only protection that every citizen has is the law and respect for the law and for the Courts. Every time that you or I or a corporate citizen or any other citizen, a journalist or a newspaper for example, in short anyone at all, fails in such a flagrant fashion to respect the law and obey the order of the Court I think we all suffer as a result, the society in which we live and for the benefit of which man has fought for centuries in many cases to gain certain judicial safeguards, a measure of independence for the Courts; people have fought for this and I feel that we should give it our wholehearted respect. What I intend to do therefore, though I can't be sure of what the Courts or the Crown will do about it, but now that the trial will soon be finished as far as I am concerned, in another half or three-quarters of an hour, after my sentence is imposed—because it must be stated quite clearly that you are under my jurisdiction until my sentence is imposed and that you have obviously been under my jurisdiction since the beginning of the trial, which was not over as long as the sentence was not imposed—I therefore intend to make a report to the Crown of what I have read in the newspapers and also of the remarks made by Mr. Chabot since that time and the Crown will take whatever action it considers necessary on the matter. It is not up to me to decide whether or not there was contempt of Court and I am not going to say one way or the other. I will make my report on what I found myself by reading the newspapers. I remember that even before Mr. Handfield mentioned it this morning that after the evidence of both sides had been heard, you gave an interview to the Montreal Star in which you explained your whole defence right in the middle of the trial, which was not finished - the evidence was finished but the trial as such was not finished, there is the sub judice rule, which must obviously be respected and the Courts must not be influenced by any external factors-whatever. I took no action because I did not want to be influenced and in any event the case was subsequently postponed and a fairly long period of time elapsed so that, in my opinion, I did not take all of this into account. I wanted you to understand, however, that for you, as for me, the best defence was the Court and your rights could best have been exercised within the system, within the Courts, either by means of an action for damages or in the presentation of your defence at this trial or in the Court of Appeal, if it was your intention to appeal my judgement to that Court, or to go even further and to exhaust all the remedies to which you were entitled and for which I have the greatest respect. If you think that you reputation was sullied however, or if you think for any reason that the original information that was sworn was in bad faith, I tell you again because I regard this as a special type of case and your counsel could give you more information, but it is quite clear that every citizen is entitled to bring an action for libel, every citizen is entitled to bring a suit for damages, either before the proceedings or, if the informant was acting in bad faith, from the time when the information was laid the right to sue for libel exists from that moment. No one has the right to do harm to another person. And it is at that point that you have your best protection and from the time the information was laid, from the time the proceedings began, for one reason or another, if you could prove the bad faith of the informant, that informant could be ordered, on the basis of the evidence, to pay damages, and could certainly be sued for libel. You have the right, like any citizen, to exercise your remedies, there is also no doubt that although this was said to be a secret trial, there were nevertheless from the outset, as I told you, statements that were made, the newspapers reported the charges, the newspapers reported what was normal in the circumstances, the newspapers also reported what you were tried on and what you were convicted on. What you were convicted on, which I read to you a while ago, were offences under s 4, and I shall not make any further comment, but it is quite clear that the law is public and that everyone is presumed to be familiar with the law. In s 3 of the said Official Secrets Act, the French heading of which is given at the side as "spying" - in French rather as "espionnage" and in English as "spying", it is under s 3 that the draftsman decided to describe the offence of "espionnage" or "spying" in English, and not under s 4. So if anyone has done harm to your reputation or has given an inaccurate report in good faith or in bad faith, but through ignorance, gross negligence or bad faith, which would be worse, I would beg you to exercise all the remedies you may have. You were charged under s 4 and you were found guilty under s 4 and the Act speaks for itself in this regard. All of which is to say, Mr Treu, that there is no, it was not the journalists who convicted you or who would have acquitted you, it is not the journalists who are going to sentence you otherwise, nor is it the journalists who are going to argue your case on appeal, that is not how the system works, nor is it—your reputation, the best protection, at the risk of repeating myself, your own protection and the exercise of your rights must take place within the legal system, since it is still there, despite the imperfections in the system, that you will obtain the best justice, and it is still there that—you must beware yourself, your reactions, and perhaps your friends in some cases. Your lawyer, Mr. Chabot, emphasized to the Court that you were merely defending yourself, but I have not—I shall not repeat what I have been saying for at least ten, fifteen minutes, because it is quite obvious, as I have told you, that it is not—a Member of Parliament is subject to the law, a Minister is subject to the law, everyone, and one does not defend oneself, one is not allowed to take the law into one's own hands and do whatever one wishes with it, no one is above the law, whereas these people—it is no answer that because one sees someone kill another person to say "I have the right to kill him". That is not how it works. Or "If anyone does harm to my property I'll do harm to him". I do not need to give you any more examples, but at any rate everyone knows what I mean, I think. One has only to look at what goes on in the world to realize that the more responsibilities a citizen has, the more he must respect and submit to the law. One has only to look at what happened in the United States when the Attorney General was convicted because he had not obeyed the law to understand that it is important in a society. I come now to the actual sentencing. I do not need to tell you, Mr. Treu, that I have been working in criminal law for some time, whether as a judge or in other capacities, and I think that this is the part—it is often said but perhaps judges feel the need to say it more often because they are the ones that impose these sentences—there is no doubt that this is the most difficult part. It is relatively easy, even if it takes a great deal of work, it is relatively easy, because we have specialized legal knowledge, to study a record and analyse the evidence and end up by reaching certain legal conclusions and, after we have done everything, at least in human terms, with our knowledge, we feel we have performed our duty in the manner in which it should be performed. But when we come to the sentencing part, even if it is governed in the same way by the law and the precedent, the fact remains that the judge is a human being; it is exceedingly difficult for a human being to try another human being or to sentence him, if only because of this human part. That is a task that is almost humanly impossible, and I do not know any judges—and he would not be a good judge, moreover, and would not deserve to be on the bench, in my opinion—who derive any pleasure from sentencing one of their fellow men. That is exceedingly difficult. But this part cannot, of course, any more than the judgment, be based on feelings; the judge must rely solely on the law and on the precedent and on the facts, as well as on the criteria the appellate courts give us, and even then I think that the judge has no choice, whether for a very light sentence or for a harsher one the judge is bound by the law, and here again I think that this is the best protection. In your case it is even more difficult because your lawyers are right, you are an exceptional person, you are certainly not, in my opinion, a criminal; you have committed a criminal act but you are not what one would call an individual with a criminal career, far from it, you are a person who has had a most respectable life, who has great intellectual qualities, who as a human being is likeable, at least in my opinion, who has a family, who has children. You are not an individual—this makes it more complicated and makes sentencing more difficult in such cases. In your duties and in the onerous responsibilities you had you committed a criminal act, in my opinion, since I have found you guilty, but you are not, and I have never considered you to be, a criminal because I have never had any evidence of this, and I do not have any more, so in my opinion you are not one. I must try you, I must sentence you, taking into account, as mentioned this morning, the objective nature of crime, the protection of society, the setting of an example, deterrence and, of course, subjective factors as well: who committed this crime, your age, your personality, your family situation, your previous record—in this case there is none—your possible rehabilitation, your attitude at the time of the crime or immediately after the crime, your degree of premeditation and the circumstances surrounding the crime. Like any court I must weigh all these factors, at least I must select certain of these factors, certain criteria, and weigh them in some kind of balance, and this is what results in the sentence. In some case the rehabilitation factor is more important than in others; in other cases it is the protection of society; in other cases we must take into account personality, which has an even greater influence, which tips the scales in certain cases, with respect to the individual himself. Thus one must take into account both the objective and the subjective criteria, and after weighing, putting all this in the two pans of the balance, try to do justice to the accused in accordance with the law and precedents. And it is this part of course which should guide the judge, it is all these factors which should guide the judge in arriving at his sentence. I do not need to repeat myself, from the subjective point of view I have no doubt at all, Mr. Treu, that you are a respectable person in my view—you were, you still are—and I do not think, as I said, that you are a criminal. Your lawyer drew my attention to certain circumstances—that the documents for which I have convicted you were your work tools, your intellectual property, that the company or NATO, in certain cases, or the Nadgeco company—and that it continued to promote you in your work, that you continued to work, in effect.

I studied all the circumstances surrounding the crime in my judgment, so I do not intend to go over them all in detail because the circumstances of the crime were that—I analysed and studied them all and I recall analyzing Exhibit P-10, I remember analyzing everything that retained your, or rather everything that led to your retaining these documents and keeping them for a fairly long time after you stopped working at Northern Electric. To summarize, Mr. Treu, after thinking about this case and weighing the pros and cons it is my opinion that of the sentences I could hand down, the maximum was fourteen years—this fact has been emphasized. For the purpose of the record, I would simply like to repeat the cases I was given: Lemire and Gosselin, (1948), 5 FC, 181 and following, 92 CCC, 201; the case of Pierre Tanguay, QC, Court of Appeal, No A-4962; the case of Pierre Taillon, QC, Court of Appeal, No A-4963; and R v Wilmott, (1967), 1 CCC, 171, Court of Appeal of Ontario. In addition there is a case which may help you understand the basis of my decision: R v Morrissette, (1970), 1 CCC, (2nd), 307, the principles of which are outlined at page 207 of the second edition of Canadian Criminal Procedure, Salhamy. So I clearly could have—the maximum sentence is fourteen years imprisonment. The minimum under the circumstances would be a suspended sentence, to which I could of course attach a probation order and a fine, at least according to the cases that I see here and that are reported in Martin's under s 663. However, I could not impose only a fine on you and it is up to me to choose to exercise my discretion, and select something between these two extremes. So, to summarize everything I have said as far as I am concerned, I am keeping to the principal factor by, as I said a moment ago, weighing your subjective personality and certain other factors such as setting a good example and deterrence, in view of the context in which you obtained the documents in question because essentially, in your case as in the case of any other citizen who would obtain possession of such documents, within the context of the Official Secrets Act, with very strict and limiting conditions, in my opinion, deterrence and setting a good example should be given more weight than the subjective factor that I mentioned and that your counsel mentioned. It is quite apparent that we cannot—your lawyer asked the following questions many times: "Setting a good example for whom?" or "Deterrence for whom?". This is a very unusual crime—I definitely do not believe it is one for the average person. But I do not think, although I may be wrong, I for one would respect not only would I respect, but with regard to the basis of the judgment or the sentence, I—you should of course exercise all your legal rights, if you think you should. Thus I think more importance should be attached to deterrence, not so much for Mr. "X", the average person but rather to deter people in the same position as you were in, with your responsibilities in view of the possible consequences of such an act and also in view of the confidence placed in you. Even if I took it for granted that it was a question of your responsibility or rather your intellectual property, in part (moreover I mention this in my judgment as well) the fact remains that this intellectual property or your knowledge as a scientist or engineer or . . . At a certain time you made this knowledge available to the government, within the framework of our security regulations, to perform a contract in which the security regulations were to be observed. In this respect you were in fact fortunate—to have all this knowledge—and this intellectual knowledge, this intellectual property that was made available to the company in the performance of a contract in which Canada had an interest—as I mentioned in my judgment—this intellectual knowledge and property were to be observed and protected by security regulations established by the government, and the government—rightly or wrongly—is the absolute master where these security regulations are concerned. Of course the government receives its mandate from society, at least in the present state of the law, and if the government makes a mistake, well the law should be changed. However, within this very specific context, you had enormous, clear-cut responsibilities, and your intellectual property was to have been used within this very restricted context, and was surrendered to the government for good. Once the contract has been fulfilled—as I interpret it in any event—you were no longer entitled to keep these documents and either they were to be destroyed or you were to obtain permission to keep them. This was not done, and this is why I found you guilty and why from that point on the matter presented a danger to state security, at least as I saw it in the judgment. In Morrissette, the following is cited in the second paragraph, or at least on page 207:

[English]

"Deterrence is also an important factor. The problem is different if the purpose of a sentence is to deter the offender from repeating the offence, from that if the purpose is to deter others who may be inclined to commit the same offence, in neither case does it necessarily follow that a long sentence is required to achieve the purpose. Deterrence should be considered from an objective view, if the purpose is to deter others who may be inclined to commit the same offence. In such cases, the gravity of the offence, the incidence of the crime in the community, the harm caused by it either to the individual or the community and the public attitude toward it are some of the matters to be considered."

[Translation]

So the deterrence factor—crime prevention—should definitely be considered objectively, if the goal is to prevent others from committing the same crime, others who could be inclined or have a tendency to commit the same crime in the same circumstances. In other words, the objective seriousness of the crime, the incidence of the crime in the community, the harm caused by it either to the individual or to the community and the public attitude toward it should be matters that could be considered. Of course, if the concept of deterrence is applied to the person who commits the crime, if the idea is to prevent him from committing the same crime again, we should pay more attention to the subjective factors, because if for example an individual had a tendency to commit robbery to prevent him from committing more robberies, we could in that case consider the subjective factor. In addition, if he does not tend to repeat his crime, we should consider his age and the subjective factor would be more important than the objective factor. But where it is not a question of preventing another individual, or rather the accused, from committing the same crime, but rather of preventing other individuals in the same circumstances from being tempted to commit the same crime, in that case the objective factors must be considered. And I think that in your case in any event—I do not have the whole case in front of me, I have only a summary—but as I interpret it, and in any case, I feel that I must give more weight to the objective factor than to all the subjective criteria. In other words I must consider the deterence factor and that of setting a good example so that anyone in the same situation who would be required to have access to such important military documents, according to the evidence presented before me—this factor must take precedence over all the other factors, and I am referring solely to the evidence. And evidence was presented before me that these were extremely important documents at least according to the expert evidence I heard.

Consequently, Mr. Treu, I must sentence you to a prison term, and I am sentencing you to two years' imprisonment on the first count and to one year's imprisonment on the second count, concurrently. That is all.

TRIAL OF ALEXANDER PETER TREU—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43, the circumstances of which speak for themselves. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That this House require that the Minister of Justice appear before a parliamentary committee of this House and show cause why he, as Attorney General, authorized and directed the laying of technical charges against Dr. Alexander Peter Treu, in connection with the protection of documents under the Official Secrets Act, when the government was aware, at the same time, that Dr. Treu was still receiving classified documents and contracts dealing with defence matters from NATO; and that the Minister of Supply and Services should also appear and show cause for the basis on which his Director of Security, Mr. S. M. Jenkyns, the Canadian security liaison with NATO, is alleged to have cancelled Dr. Treu's security clearance and to have been involved in instigating the investigation leading to the trial and conviction of Dr. Treu, when he, Mr. Jenkyns, was either present or knew that Dr. Treu participated in confidential meetings and continued to receive NATO contracts and documents.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The introduction of such a motion for debate can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

According to figures released today by Statistics Canada, employment in Newfoundland has been reduced by 5,000 jobs in twelve months. This, coupled with the fact that today's unemployment rate for the province is a scandalous 17.9 per cent, seasonally adjusted, a substantial rise over previous months, and in real terms the unemployment rate for the province is closer to 30 per cent; and, further, what is even more disturbing is the fact that the government seems to have conditioned itself and the rest of the country to the situation, with its potential for human suffering, with the consent of the House I would move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That this House views with alarm the serious unemployment situation in the province of Newfoundland, and directs the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and the Minister of Fisheries, to comprise a special committee of cabinet to enter immediately into talks with the government of Newfoundland, with a view to putting into place a special job creation program centred around the substantial natural resources of the province.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate can be done only with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CALL FOR DIRECT JOB CREATION PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Considering that unemployment remains at 8.6 per cent for the third month in a row, clearly demonstrating that there has been no improvement in the Canadian economy, and considering that the real unemployment rate for young people in Canada has jumped alarmingly to 19.4 per cent, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to announce a major new direct job creation program comparable in scale to that which has worked so well in the United States, and that he work out the administrative details of such a program at next month's meeting with provincial ministers of finance.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CONDEMNATION OF VIOLATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS BY PARAGUAY AND URUGUAY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Today the newspaper Le Devoir refers to two reports of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights about cases involving serious violations of human rights in Paraguay and Uruguay. The report mentions "sexual tortures on political prisoners." As for Paraguay, the report points out that:

During the siege, several individuals died in mysterious circumstances. Hundreds of people of all political leanings have been arrested without any charge being laid against them nor any judgment delivered. The Catholic Church and other religious organizations have been persecuted, etc.

As a result of those serious violations of human rights, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House severely blame the Paraguay and Uruguay authorities for serious violations of human rights as quoted in the ICHR report and ask that those two states allow the ICHR to investigate on the spot.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

TRIPARTITE MEETING ON GRAIN SHIPMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I would like to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. There is a massive backlog of grain shipments that has developed this spring whereby Canada is at least 1.2 million tons behind schedule, an amount that represents one full month of grain delivery to our ports. Since the demurrage charges paid by the western farmer are mounting daily and are projected to total $30 million by July 31, the end of the current crop year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave):

That the Prime Minister chair a meeting with top officials of the Canadian Wheat Board, and senior management of the railways, and port authorities, in order to try to resolve the disaster threatening western grain shipments. This emergency meeting should be held as soon as humanly possible.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

[Mr. Speaker.]

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT STRATEGY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity which affects almost 500,000 young Canadians. During the past five years the Liberal federal government has allowed the youth unemployment problem to get totally out of control. The government has blamed the problem on world economic problems, the baby boom, the increase in the participation rate—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Dick: Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies):

That the government develop and table in this House an all-inclusive youth employment strategy so that it can be discussed by all members in this House and so that a concerted effort can be mounted by this House to deal with youth unemployment, rather than the current stop-gap, band-aid programs offered by this government.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, with today's tragic unemployment figures showing that our unemployment has jumped 119,000 in the year, 14,000 in the last month, and with 27 per cent of our youth who do not plan to go back to school on the jobless list at the present time, would the Minister of Finance indicate to the House what has gone wrong with his tax credits that he told us would give stimulus to the economy in January and February? What has gone wrong with his employment credit program to create jobs in this country?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the hon. member that he forgot to mention that there were 300,000 more people working this May than there were last May. Of course the increase in the participation rate is still a difficult problem to cope with. I would just remind hon. members that in the last year we have created a lot more jobs, and that the measures which we put forward in the budget of April 10 will take some time to find their way into the Canadian economy. The performance of our economy is just as good as any other country's in the western world with the exception of Japan.

● (1417)

Mr. Stevens: Surely the minister must agree that the greatest challenge we have in this country is that of getting people back to work. The minister says our record is good. Would he tell the House if, as we have suggested repeatedly, he has done a study to determine how the United States has been able to keep its unemployment level down to 6.1 per cent compared to our 8.6 per cent, bearing in mind that if we had the same rate in this country a quarter of a million people would be working today who are not presently working due to the policies of this government?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the increase in the labour force in Canada is double that of the United States, and we have created 300,000 new jobs since last year. I think that is a commendable performance, although there is still room for improvement. The growth of the labour force far exceeds that of other countries and with our expansionist policies we continue to encourage growth in Canada. That is why hon. members sometimes complain of the current level of budgetary deficit of the government, but that policy is aimed at stimulating the Canadian economy.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: I have a final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Apparently the Minister of Finance cannot see the strained situation in this country, of high deficits and high unemployment at the same time. If the minister has not done a study generally with respect to how the United States brought its unemployment levels down, has he at least done what we have suggested also, and that is make a study of the New England states to see how they have been able to get their unemployment levels down to almost half our level, bearing in mind that Newfoundland now has unemployment of over 17 per cent, that there is 13 per cent unemployment throughout the Atlantic provinces, and 11.5 per cent in Quebec?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I know there is a special problem in the east. It is a traditional problem. The Department of Manpower and Immigration has some job creation programs that are directed to the level of unemployment in those parts of the nation. We are following some very aggressive policies on fisheries development which I think will find some long term benefits for that part of Canada.

MANPOWER

DISCONTINUANCE OF JOB EXPERIENCE TRAINING PROGRAM

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As of May 31 all funding ceased to the one program offered by the federal government which was helping to provide useful permanent jobs, that program being the year-round JET program. When the minister replied to a question I put on March 14 this year he stated:

> . . . I am particulary impressed with the job experience training program which has resulted in an increase from 1,000 to 14,000 young people participating. It is a good program.

Did the minister know the program would be discontinued eleven weeks after he made that statement?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is nice to see the conversion of the hon. member. I indicated to him what an excellent program it was, and he poured nothing but scorn on it. When we decided to change the emphasis of that program and move it into the tax credit program, all of a sudden it is a wonderful, brilliant program. It was that before. It was while it was being implemented, and it is a program of which we can be proud. It took the lead for things like the employment tax program. The hon. member had better make up his mind if he wants us to implement this program, which he says is a good one, and give it emphasis so that instead of creating 10,000 jobs we might be able to use it to create 50,000 jobs.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the hon. minister is misleading the House. I never objected to JET on one occasion. I should like to put a supplementary question. In view of the fact that unemployment for young people remains at 15.1 per cent, and for those not returning to school it is up to 27 per cent of people in the age group of 20 to 24, why does the minister terminate a program which was directed toward youth and which was administratively workable, and replace it with a program which is not directed toward youth and which will force the private sector employers into more bureaucratic red tape? Does he feel this is an effective way of helping youth unemployment?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should not lose sight of the fact that we have poured $96.2 million into job creation programs for youth. In addition to that there is the Adult Occupational Training Act under which we have agreements with the various provinces and there is about a 4 per cent youth component in that program. There is the Federal Labour Intensive Program and the Young Canada Works Program. I think the hon. member misses the boat. He sees the glass of water which is 95 per cent full as being 5 per cent empty.

Mr. Dick: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Statistics indicate that the number of male students between ages 20 and 24 not returning to school this year and unemployed at the present time is 27.9 per cent, and for women it is almost 30 per cent. Has the government taken any steps, or does it intend to take any steps, to try to help those people in the 20 to 24 year age grouping, who are not going back to school, to find meaningful jobs?

• (1422)

Mr. Cullen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but we did not wait for this month's or last month's statistics. We saw this as a particular problem with youth and we appointed a national youth advisory group. They have been given a briefing on the various and myriad programs that we have in place. Incidentally, Senator Hubert Humphrey indicated that if the United States followed our lead in dealing with youth unemployment, they would be well ahead of the game.

Mr. Gillies: Did he do that recently?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Was that in his presidential campaign?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, if I needed any indication that our programs are good and are having their effect, that indication is evidenced by the nervousness displayed by the opposition who do not want to listen to answers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INSTITUTION OF DIRECT JOB CREATION PROGRAM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I say to the minister that government programs are 5 per cent water and 95 per cent hot air, right off the top—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister of Finance, for whom I have a question, just a minute ago misinformed the House, I hope inadvertently. He said that we have done as well, dealing with unemployment, as anyone else. The minister should know that unemployment in the United States during the past year has improved. In their March figures they had one million fewer unemployed, precisely at the time we reached one million unemployed in Canada.

Considering the success in the United States of direct job creation programs which have resulted in bringing their unemployment down steadily during the last year and a half, would the Minister of Finance now commit the government to such a program here and discuss the details of implementation with the finance ministers of the provinces with whom he is meeting next month?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did not speak about the unemployment situation. The economic performance forecast for Canada in 1978 will be as good as anywhere else for jobs in terms of growth. However, within that performance we have the very difficult problem of growth in the labour force and the level of unemployment. We are preoccupied with that. I intend to review our economic policies in conjunction with the provincial ministers of finance in Winnipeg on July 7 to try to find a co-ordinated approach in order to solve this problem. But as I said earlier the fact that the Canadian labour force has grown at a pace of 3.5 per cent a year for the last seven years has created some very difficult problems for the Canadian economy which has to absorb that many new people coming into the labour force. We are doing our best to cope with it.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the message is clear. The economy is fine; the problem is there are just no jobs. The minister should tell that to the unemployed in this country.

Considering the Secretary of Labour in the United States has said that for every dollar spent on direct job creation, in addition to other economic benefits, 40 cents are saved in welfare and unemployment costs; considering that reality, that we will save on handouts by direct job creation programs, why is it that the minister will not commit the government now to increase its allocation for direct job creation programs that have worked so effectively in the United States?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the Department of Employment and Immigration has established in this regard a very well known policy for direct job creation. However, the federal budget is limited when it comes to finding employment for all people who are now looking for a job. I just explained that manpower growth is very strong in Canada, but that the creation of new jobs from May to May has also been very significant. Between May, 1977, and May, 1978, 300,000 new jobs were created, and since 1971 the Canadian economy has succeeded in raising the number of its workers from eight million to more than ten million, which is probably a better performance than that of any other developed country in the world.

• (1427)

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, once again the minister misleads the House. Considering that the United States Congress has just decided to allocate $11.5 billion for direct job creation, which is 20 times the equivalent amount allocated for direct job creation by this government, and considering that in addition to providing jobs it is going to increase production of goods and services in that country and reduce welfare costs, why can the Government of Canada not do at least as well for our people as the American government is doing for its people?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think that the policies on manpower and immigration and all those types of programs are as good in Canada as they are in the United States.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REPRESENTATIONS TO PREMIER OF ONTARIO RESPECTING JUSTICE TO FRENCH-SPEAKING RESIDENTS

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Since the Ontario premier would not allow the French language rights bill to be passed, although it had the almost unanimous support of the Ontario legislature, and considering the negative impact that this action will have on Canadian unity and the respect of the fundamental rights of French Canadians, could the Prime Minister tell us whether he intends to make representations to the Ontario premier so that he will at last do justice to the French Canadians in his province?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already stated my views on this matter. Several ministers, including Ontario ministers, have expressed their disappointment following the Ontario premier's decision. Furthermore, I must remind the hon. member that several members of this House, including the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), have moved motions along those lines. The hon. member is aware, I am sure, that our policy on this matter is quite clear. We disapprove of the Ontario policy.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DISCUSSIONS ON RIGHTS OF FRENCH-SPEAKING MINORITIES

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, could the right hon. Prime Minister tell the House whether, in connection with his constitutional proposals, he intends to have discussions with the provinces with a view to their guaranteeing respect for the fundamental rights of French-speaking minorities, thus avoiding repetition of unilateral decisions such as that of the Ontario premier?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will see in the bill we plan to introduce in the House before the end of the month specific proposals to that effect. I must say to the House that, when hon. members read that bill they will see that the federal government plans to proceed above all with the approval of the provinces rather than forcing them to follow a specific avenue. The remark of the hon. member with regard to Ontario could apply mutatis mutandis to the Quebec bill 101.

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS TO CURB UNEMPLOYMENT IN QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister with regard to a problem which affects the province of Quebec more specifically.

According to a recent study, it has been proved that from August 1977 to April 1978, the rate of unemployment which, among men of 35 to 44 years of age was 3.9 per cent and among those of 45 to 54, was 3.8 per cent, rose to 9.2 per cent or 9.3 per cent which represents an increase of 116 per cent to 128 per cent. As the Minister of Finance is supposed to meet his provincial counterparts in the near future, would he be willing to assure us that he will put on his agenda proposals to help that category of people?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, at that meeting, we will have a look at all economic policies throughout the land, and in each one of the provinces. Naturally, I, too, am sorry to see that since November 1976 the Quebec economy has been ailing increasingly.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance.

It is a fact that according to this study, this phenomenon would be attributable to the structural weakness of the manufacturing sector, emphasizing that 55,000 jobs have been lost in Quebec over the past three years. I am sure the minister will understand that all this happened before the election of the current government. Under these circumstances, would the Minister of Finance agree to make concrete proposals to his provincial counterparts concerning especially the manufacturing sector?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we have made considerable efforts trying to help Quebec's economy. Let us take for instance the case of quotas for footwear and clothing. We had taken this action long before the Quebec government decided to intervene.

Also, Mr. Speaker, we have made very extensive efforts in the case of Canadair, a corporation which was about to close, where we increased the number of jobs from 1,200 to 4,800. I should like to indicate that in connection with this project, the Quebec government had refused to co-operate with the federal government's efforts to improve the situation.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I notice that this study also reveals that 55,000 jobs were lost, more particularly in the textile, furniture and footwear industries. Can the Minister of Finance explain why his government waited so long before imposing controls on the import of those products?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think we acted at the beginning of November, 1976, before the change of government in the province of Quebec, in order to protect or help those industries. But the hon. member should also understand that we have to consider the interests of consumers in the other parts of Canada and that in any circumstance the federal government, through its assistance programs under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, does its utmost to stimulate the economy of Quebec. However, the climate is not very good in Quebec at the present time. Let us take, for example, the fact that more than 40,000 or 50,000 people allegedly left Quebec because the climate which persists now is certainly not likely to stimulate the economy of the province.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CABINET COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE REGIONAL UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): If the government would treat this problem with the seriousness it deserves perhaps we might get a new sense of direction from the government in dealing with this situation.

I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. I realize we have a national rate of unemployment of 8.6 per cent—it has been at that level for three consecutive months. I realize that the rate exceeds 11 per cent in Quebec. Coming as I do from a province where the unemployment rate is now 17.9 per cent seasonally adjusted, I ask the Prime Minister how unemployment can be so high in a province which is endowed with resources, developed and undeveloped, has over half of the iron ore exports from this country, timber resources, and 67 per cent of the economic zone? I ask the Prime Minister how it is that—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely the hon. member's question is highly argumentative. Perhaps the hon. member would phrase a proper question.

Mr. McGrath: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I am so concerned with the situation that I did not see or hear Your Honour.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: I assure hon. members opposite that to the unemployed people of Canada this is no laughing matter. I wish to ask the Prime Minister if the government is prepared, as it was ten years ago, to recognize the problem; it then promised a Marshall Aid type program, though no such program was implemented apart from the disastrous DREE program. Will the government admit to the seriousness of the situation in certain of the regions of this country not the least of which is the province of Newfoundland? The Minister of Communications laughs smugly. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government is prepared to establish a cabinet committee to examine the causes of ongoing unemployment in the Atlantic provinces, in Newfoundland, and Quebec, to see if they can come up with some solution to address to this urgent situation.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member suggests some solutions. Those that have been brought forward and are working he discounts as being nothing. For instance, the DREE program which is very much supported by the present government of Newfoundland as it was by the previous government in that province, is something the hon. member dismisses as having no value at all. If the hon. member has some proposals to make perhaps he should communicate them to the government or to the premier of Newfoundland.

As far as my government is concerned, we have been meeting repeatedly with the Newfoundland premier and his officials. I met with them not many weeks ago. I accepted the request to have the Economic Council of Canada launch a special inquiry into the problem of high unemployment in Newfoundland, and the premier and the government of that province, as well as the Government of Canada, are working as actively as they can to reduce the historically high rate of unemployment in that province.

The Minister of Fisheries and other ministers have taken steps in the past several months which will have a great impact on the future of the fishing industry in Newfoundland. All these steps which have been taken are dismissed by the hon. member opposite who prefers to indulge in histrionics.

Mr. McGrath: I suggest to the Prime Minister that the three ministers who have a special responsibility should form a cabinet committee and go to Newfoundland to discuss job creation based on natural resources.

FISHERIES

SHRIMP FISHING LICENCES FOR NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I now ask the Minister of Fisheries whether he can explain to the House why he arbitrarily, and with an arrogance which I regret, decided not to award to Newfoundland all of the shrimp licences to the new fishing grounds discovered off the north coast of that province in an area of high unemployment—licences which would mean immediate jobs for Newfoundland. Why did he take some of these licences and award them to other parts of the country where they did not belong? Why did he take that decision himself without consultation with the government of Newfoundland, knowing what it would mean in terms of jobs?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the hon. member's ignorance of the geography.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): The fact is that Newfoundland and Labrador did benefit—they got five out of the 11 licences allocated, and it was made clear at that time that if further licences were to be issued priority would be given to areas contiguous to where the fishery is taking place—we took a very cautious approach to this new stock of fish which had been discovered. The hon. member should know that if we start to balkanize the fisheries strictly on provincial grounds it would mean the end of the east coast fishery.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOCIAL SECURITY

PROGRESS OF MANITOBA EXPERIMENT WITH GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the need to continue improving the efficiency and economy of Canada's social security program, does the minister have any further progress to report on the special Manitoba study on a guaranteed annual income and how it might influence the national plan? Can the House be assured that the government will not proceed with such a plan until all studies have been completed and thoroughly considered?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not have at hand the date by which we expect to receive the reports on the Manitoba "Mincome" experiments. I will try to have that information available tomorrow. Of course, we will be studying the results of the various experimental projects under the program. There are already reports published and available which I am willing to send to any member who is interested in receiving them. All forms of the income supplementation programs did maintain positive incentives for working Canadians in Manitoba.

STATUS OF WOMEN

RECOMMENDATIONS TO IMPROVE EMPLOYMENT PROSPECTS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the status of women. Prior to 1968, the year the Prime Minister took office, the unemployment rate for women was traditionally lower for women than for men. Since that year women have consistently suffered more than their share of the country's unemployment. Two years ago the female jobless rate stood at 8.2 per cent. Last year it was 9.1 per cent and, today, it stands at 9.9 per cent. This represents an increase of almost 100,000 in two years—from 33 per cent—and is clearly a situation which is intolerable. I wonder if the minister has advocated specific recommendations or proposals either to his cabinet colleagues or to the provincial governments, or the private sector, in order to try to turn this very serious situation around.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): One point which the hon. member forgot to stress in his question is the fact that over the last few years, including the last two years, there has been a tremendous increase in the participation rate of women in the work force. This is a development which we very much welcome.

We realize that many more women want to return to or join the work force. That is a welcome development as far as the composition of Canadian society is concerned. It is not, therefore, very surprising as more and more women join the work force that the percentage of unemployed should increase because of general economic conditions. The solution in this respect, because we do believe in equality of opportunity for everybody, is not specific programs which will be oriented vis-à-vis one particular sex or another but, as the Minister of Finance has been doing consistently over the last few years, to try to have general programs which will direct the Canadian economy in the right course and improve the general prosperity of Canada. If that takes place, I am not worried. Women will take care of themselves very well indeed in the work force.

● (1442)

DISPARITY IN JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR WOMEN

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, since it is obvious that the minister responsible for the status of women has made no recommendations and seems to express no concern, except to acknowledge a social phenomenon which has existed much longer than the last ten years, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

There has been a widening gap regarding the participation of women in the work force. This was referred to by the minister responsible for the status of women. The gap has been widening very seriously over the last year or year and a half, particularly for young women students, who represent 30 per cent of those who are unable to find work at the present time. Given the comments from time to time about problems finding employment through Manpower offices, can the minister indicate whether he is completely satisfied that Canada employment centres in no way discriminate against female applicants, and has he issued any recent or special directives to his local officials to counter the growing disparity in job opportunities for women, particularly young women?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, thanks to the initiative of my colleague, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, who has special responsibility for the status of women, we have embarked upon a series of studies in this area to see how we might better accommodate the growing number of women who wish to participate in the work force. Thanks to the initiatives shown by my colleague, this is highlighted not only for the government but for all Canadians.

There has to be an attitudinal change in business about hiring. There is a mental block from time to time that only males can do particular jobs. The board of directors of a particular bank is a good example. That attitudinal change has to take place. Certainly from my own departmental standpoint we are working on a series of programs to see what we can do to help women who want to join the work force, and to help women who are returning to it in ever greater numbers.

Frankly, I do not feel it is necessary that there should be any concern about discrimination as far as Manpower offices and Canada employment centres are concerned. What we are endeavouring to tell our Manpower officials is that they should be going out more and more into the business community and telling the business community to keep in mind that a large percentage of the work force is in fact female, that job openings should be for both sexes, and that there is no discrimination at Manpower offices.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

TRIAL OF ALEXANDER PETER TREU

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the Peter Treu case. Anyone reading the report this morning by George Bain in the Gazette must conclude that justice was not done and that the accused was denied the rights to which every accused should be entitled.

This matter has been before the House in recent weeks, once through the initiative of the hon. member for Peace River. The article in today's Gazette outlines the responsibility of the government to act. As one reads over what this reputable writer has to say, one can only be reminded of the Dreyfus case. Justice must be done, and it must appear to be done. Anyone reading this report could conclude neither. I point out to the Prime Minister, on whose shoulders the responsibility must rest, having regard to the revelations, particularly in today's press, that if ever there was a case in which a new trial should be ordered by the Government of Canada, it is this Treu case. I ask him to look into it because the way this trial was conducted was nothing short of scandalous.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman refers to an article in this morning's Gazette which I have not seen, and therefore I cannot base my reply on that. The right hon. gentleman also refers to the evidence in this case. As far as I know that evidence is secret, and I do not see how the right hon. gentleman could have access to it any more than I could. The judgment itself is secret, but as the right hon. gentleman knows, the Minister of Justice has made an application—which, I understand, will be heard Friday—for the publication of that judgment. It is his belief and our hope that after having read the judgment perhaps a little more light will be shone on this case.

We have the assurance that the secret trial was made secret at the demand not only of the Crown but also with the acceptance of the defence—

Some hon. Members: Wrong.

Mr. Trudeau: —and that therefore both parties agreed to this procedure.

We also know that the case is being appealed, and the right hon. gentleman knows that, if justice is to be done, the usual way for litigants to obtain justice is to appeal to a higher court and not to jump from the judicial system to the legislative or parliamentary system, as the right hon. gentleman is suggesting.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is interesting, but it is the right of the Government of Canada to grant a new trial when every vestige of reasonable conduct is set aside during a trial. Except for the sentencing, which took place in open court, all of the trial was conducted in secret. Even the judgment is not available to be seen. Witnesses were sworn to secrecy and were not allowed to hear other witnesses.

One witness, a United States air force officer, has been bound to an undertaking not to talk about the Treu case since 1975. There is no justice in that kind of conduct, and I appeal to the Prime Minister to ensure that justice is in fact done by ordering a new trial. Appeal courts will not be able to determine that any of these things were of such a nature as to deny a fair trial.

Anyone outside the legal circumference can come to no other conclusion than that what was done in this case was a disgraceful travesty of justice.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman is suggesting that the federal government interfere with the judicial process. If we were to do that, he would be the first to cry indignantly that that should not be done.

A case begins before a magistrate in a province. Magistrates are not even appointed by the federal government. This case comes under a law which is a law of this parliament but which has not been changed since the right hon. gentleman was Prime Minister, so the issue is not a matter of taking issue with the law which the right hon. gentleman himself knew about when he was Prime Minister. He is taking issue with a process before a court which is not under our jurisdiction, and between parties who did not ask our advice on how to proceed but who accepted a procedure and who have now gone to appeal.

The right hon. gentleman is suggesting that the government of the day intervene in this process, say we do not trust courts of appeal, and tell them what to do. That is absolute nonsense.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I was in the courts before many hon. gentlemen opposite ever knew they existed. I simply point out that the supreme court of all is the Parliament of Canada, and where there is grave injustice—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman is trotting out that old cliche—

An hon. Member: Oh, a cliche.

Mr. Trudeau: —that parliament is the supreme court of the land. There is a division of powers in this country. The government and parliament make laws. It is up to the courts to administer them and apply them. The right hon. gentleman would be the first to object if, on the basis of some newspaper article, we were to intervene in the judicial process. Absolute bunk!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

ENERGY

DEVELOPMENTS IN PROPOSED TAKEOVER OF HUSKY OIL BY PETRO-CANADA

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. My question has to do with the press report which indicates that the Occidental Petroleum Company of Los Angeles and the Husky Oil Company of Calgary through their management and directors have agreed to the acquisition of Husky by Occidental. In view of the minister's statement in the House yesterday that the acquisition of Husky by Petro-Canada was in the national interest, I should like to ask the minister whether or not Petro-Canada still has some opportunity to revise its offer, or whether the deal is closed completely except for the compliance of the shareholders and, if it is, I want to ask the minister what action he proposes to take to retain this large deposit of heavy oil for Canadians to be developed by Canadians for the benefit of the people of this country.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The hon. member may have seen the press release issued by Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada has made it known that they are reviewing their position in the light of the exchange offer made by Occidental to the shareholders of Husky Oil. As to the second part of the hon. member's question, perhaps it is best answered by reference to the press release which was issued by Occidental when they noted that their particular proposal would have to receive the approval—I believe those were the words—of both governments.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that our light conventional crude reserves have only a life index of some ten years and that Canada will have to depend on heavy crude in order to lessen its dependence on imported oil, I wish to ask the minister, in the event that Occidental and Husky go through with the deal—and there is every indication that they intend to—since this matter will have to come before the Foreign Investment Review Agency, whether it is the government's intention, either through Petro-Canada or through the minister, to point out to FIRA how important the development of these heavy oil reserves is to Canada, particularly in view of the fact that there is a good deal of evidence that Husky has not been very aggressive in developing them, either through lack of capital resources or for some other reason, and that it is essential to proceed with that development as quickly as possible in the interests of the Canadian people.

Mr. Gillespie: I am sure the hon. member knows, as I do, that FIRA and others in Canada are well aware of the government's priorities with respect to the development of heavy oils in western Canada. I have stated the position of the government many times in the House. However, I think the hon. member would not want me to prejudge in any way the question of an application before FIRA regarding significant benefit to Canada.

IMPACT OF PROVINCIAL TAXES ON EXTRACTION OF SASKATCHEWAN HEAVY OIL DEPOSITS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Given the fact that the tax and the royalty regime of the province of Saskatchewan is one of the major reasons for the delay in the development of the heavy oil deposits in that province—

Some hon. Members: No way!

Mr. Nystrom: Here's another apologist for the large companies.

Mr. Andre: —and given the fact that Petro-Canada as an agent of her Majesty would be exempt from any taxes—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: The Exxon kid!

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker I wonder if the noisy members of the NDP would allow me to finish my remarks.

Also, given the fact that Petro-Canada would not have to pay any taxes levied by the province of Saskatchewan, can the minister confirm that one of the reasons the government has encouraged Petro-Canada's takeover bid of Husky is in order to avoid the payment of these taxes or royalties to the province of Saskatchewan?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I am sure that if the hon. member were familiar with the land holdings of Husky he would know that one of the reasons that Petro-Canada is interested in moving into the situation is that the Saskatchewan government does not have a very significant lever with respect to the Husky properties. A very large proportion of those properties is freehold and they are not royalty paying properties.

REVIEW OF TRIAL OF ALEXANDER PETER TREU

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister introduced to the House a document which spoke, among other things, in its first resolution about the importance of human rights and respect for civil liberties in this country. Today he defended passionately the practice of the Government of Canada of maintaining a secret trial in the case of Dr. Treu. He has told us that even though the article by Mr. Bain has been published for two days now, the Prime Minister has not informed himself of the allegations and of the information contained in the article.

May I ask the Prime Minister a simple question? This is a short article, it is light, witty, and easy to read. Would the Prime Minister, with that interest in civil rights which he brought to parliament and then apparently forgot, review the facts set forth in that article, inform himself, and report back to parliament today on whether or not, on the basis of having become informed, he is prepared to instruct his Minister of Justice to ask for a new trial?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Maybe the article is easy to understand, but I suggest that there must be facts which are either not understood by the Leader of the Opposition or are not stated in the article. The Leader of the Opposition suggests—and those are his words—that the government is maintaining a secret trial—

Some hon. Members: Supporting a secret trial.

Mr. Trudeau: The word used by the Leader of the Opposition was "maintaining". But the words are secondary. The fact is that the trial was started with the two parties agreeing on the procedure before a provincial court. Now the appeal is in process; an appeal has been lodged by the defendant. Every notion of a Bill of Rights with which I am acquainted says that justice must follow its course and there should be no interference from politicians, such as we see on the other side of the House, into the judicial process.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, there are hundreds of thousands of people who came to this country because they found the process of a secret trial reprehensible, and have an apprehension of secret trial. The Prime Minister knows that the appeal procedure in Dr. Treu's case could take up to a year and a half in the life of a man whose resources and reputation are already spent. Would the Prime Minister do this one simple thing in the name of the civil liberties which he claimed to honour before he became the Prime Minister of this country, and review the facts of the case which are available to him as Prime Minister in a way that they are probably unavailable to some others of us in the House, and would he then make a statement to the House on whether or not he is personally prepared to consign Mr. Treu to another year and a half of proceedings that may well be secret, or whether he would order a new trial?

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition shows ignorance of the law when he suggests that the proceedings of the trial are available to me any more than they are to him. I understand they may well be made available to a member of his party who will now act as co-counsel.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Trudeau: What is shameful about making such a remark? They are certainly not available to me. The government has taken some steps through a motion before the court to plead that the judgment should be made public, and this motion will be heard on Friday. If the judgment is made public I would hope that the Leader of the Opposition—and his other leader over there, and his counsel—will acquaint themselves with the judgment before pleading a case of which they know nothing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): This makes the Shcharansky trial look good.

PRIVILEGE

CBC COVERAGE OF SOCIAL CREDIT PARTY CONVENTION IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. On May 8 last, the hon member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) rose on a question of privilege. According to his question of privilege, I believe that he considered that the coverage of the leadership convention of the Social Credit party held in Winnipeg on May 7, 1978, was inadequate. On May 11, 1978, the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) gave his reply. I have taken under consideration the complaint of the hon. member for Bellechasse, the reply of the hon. Secretary of State as well as the precedents concerning parliamentary privileges. The definition of parliamentary privilege is well known to hon. members, and I shall repeat it in English—

● (1502)

[English]

Parliamentary privilege is the sun of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions, and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals. Thus privilege, though part of the law of the land, is to a certain extent an exemption from the ordinary law.

[Translation]

Therefore, parliamentary privilege is extended collectively to the House and individually to the hon. members. It does not extend to the political party as such, and it does not go much further than the right of the House to obtain the services of members of the House and the right of hon. members to freedom of speech in this House. It goes without saying that I fully appreciate the difficulty raised by the hon. member for Bellechasse, which is essentially a grievance. It is unfortunate that our procedure does not provide hon. members more opportunities to express grievances and obtain direct answers.

It is therefore impossible for me to consider this matter in the context of parliamentary privilege and I can only suggest to the hon. member for Bellechasse that he pursue this affair by other means, perhaps before the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, which is now considering the estimates of the Secretary of State.

MR. MACDONALD (EGMONT)—LENGTHY REPLIES OF MINISTERS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order regarding a situation which, to my mind, has become increasingly worse in recent months and which typified itself today in the difficulties I had with Your Honour in asking a further supplementary question. I realize the considerable pressure Your Honour is under in respect of the limited time of the question period. However, one of the basic difficulties we are encountering increasingly here is in respect of questions posed directly to ministers. I know that no minister is under any obligation whatsoever to answer a question, but I would think that at least it should be the tradition of this House, since this tradition seems to be more honoured by breach than by observance, that it should now be part of the rules that there should be some inhibition, if not prohibition, on ministers giving lengthy answers that in no way respond to the questions posed.

In two instances this afternoon in respect of the exercise of jurisdiction by the minister responsible for the status of women and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen), I asked specific questions about actions that might be taken under their jurisdictions, given the serious situation with regard to unemployment of women today. Instead of that I received lengthy answers which in no way even attempted to deal with the questions posed. The additional question was an important one I wished to raise with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) regarding an outstanding obligation on his part, and with the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Lalonde) on the status of the government's own employment of women—its equal opportunities program which was introduced in 1975.

This makes it difficult, if not impossible, for the question period to serve its fundamental purpose, particularly if ministers are allowed to answer at length but in no way deal with the questions that have been put, taking up so much time of the House that it is impossible for a number of members to ask either subsequent questions or to follow up specifically on the questions they originally posed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member raises a very valid point. Unfortunately, in his particular example this afternoon, if he will take the trouble to measure, he will find his questions were equally as long as the answers given.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BROADBENT—POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on what I consider to be a very serious question of privilege. On June 1 I raised in this House the question of the possibility of a clear conflict of interest involving the situation of a former minister of finance, the same man who was former minister of national defence, in taking a position, so soon after he exercised these particular government responsibilities, with the MacDonnell-Douglas Corporation.

My concern at that time was that the minister, having had such major responsibilities in the government as finance and defence, should have exercised more discretion in terms of time in moving to a corporation which was in itself involved in serious negotiations and contract proposals involving millions of dollars with the federal government.

I have been disturbed subsequent to that time, June 1, by further developments involving the government, which by no means eradicate my concern about the possibilities of political interference in contracting procedures of the federal government. According to minutes of a meeting that took place in 1975, involving the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson), who was then the minister of state for urban affairs, it is stated, and I quote from those minutes:

The minister wants to make sure the firms chosen for major contracts ... are cleared politically with the ministers responsible, through his office.

This matter was appropriately raised in the House yesterday by a member of the Conservative party in the form of a question. When that particular matter was raised in a responsible fashion in the form of a question, I had hoped the minister, in this case the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), who dealt with it would have taken the opportunity of removing any possibility that there was political interference in the awarding of major contracts in government financial operations.

Quite the contrary took place. Not only did the minister not say that this was not the practice in 1975, he went on to say, and I quote from Hansard from yesterday at page 6277:

—I do not see anything wrong with that statement.

What are the implications of this? It would seem to me that the implication is that for a major contract—and God knows what happens if the contract is just a minor one—the normal competitive tendering processes are being ignored. I hope the minister will take the time to clarify this situation.

If it is normal to get political clearance, then it is normal by logical processes to conclude that the normal competitive tendering procedures are being abrogated in some way. This is why we have to be concerned about this matter. As I understand it, the normal contracting procedures do allow for some ministerial discretion. The company with the lowest bid does not automatically get the contract, and that makes sense; there are good arguments which can be made in support of that. For example, the firm with the lowest bid may not be a reliable supplier. For other reasons in the consideration and the view of the ministry the company may not have the capacity to deliver on time or in kind. There could be other technical considerations that would cause a responsible minister not to accept the lowest bid.

However, the implication of the minute of 1975, to which I referred earlier, and the answer given yesterday in the House by the Minister of Finance, is that among the considerations that pertain to major contracts is the political reliability of the company concerned. How is that to be defined? Is it a bonus by that company to the Liberal Party of Canada? Is it to be defined as a company that normally helps out the Liberal party of Canada, if not in a direct financial way, by some other means? It seems to me that political reliability cannot mean anything else other than one of these two possibilities. I submit that either one of them is contrary to the public interest.

I thought that it had been taken for granted some time ago in the procedures of this parliament that major contracts are to be resolved entirely on non-political considerations. I was deeply disturbed when I read that original minute of 1975 where it said political considerations were going to come into play, and I was even more disturbed yesterday in the House when I heard the Minister of Finance, who had the opportunity to deny the practice, in fact confirm it, saying that he could see nothing wrong with the statement.

My question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is very straightforward, and I can rely on a prima facie case. I would think that the people of Canada would be scandalized by the implications, unless this matter is cleared up irrevocably today. Canadians expect the Government of Canada to have honest, clear-cut, non-political dealings with corporations involving public funds. If that is not the case, then it reflects unfavourably on all members of this House. All members of parliament are implicated when there is a serious wrongdoing by the government, if that is what is involved.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

If you rule, Mr. Speaker, after we hear from others who may want to participate in this question of privilege, that I have a prima facie case, I will move that the matter be referred to the committee on privileges and elections.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will certainly hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), but whatever legitimate concern the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) wants to raise, although it may be a matter of very grave concern, of valid concern and of widespread public interest, I have no difficulty in saying that I cannot fit it in under the guise of privilege under any circumstances. It does not constitute a procedural matter in any sense of the word. However, if the minister wishes to reply, I will give him the opportunity to do so.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think this matter deserves an explanation even though it is not a proper question of privilege. With regard to the questions asked yesterday by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), he referred to the fact that a minister wished to be informed as to what was going on in his region. There is the obligation that every minister follow the rules as set out by the Treasury Board, which state that all contracts are awarded to the lowest bidder. If it is not the lowest bidder that gets the contract, then it has to be approved by the Treasury Board, and there must be valid reasons as to why the lowest bidder did not get the contract. This has happened, of course.

What the hon. member was referring to, however, perhaps needs clarification. It is absolutely normal that ministers would want to be made aware of what is happening within their regions. It is extremely important because among the responsibilities of the ministers in cabinet is that they make sure that what is done by this government is made well known to the people.

There is no inference that the normal way of proceeding is to interfere with the allocation of contracts. The rules and regulations are well known. They are established by the Treasury Board and all contracts have to be approved according to the practices. When they say that matters should be referred to the regional ministers, it is just normal practice because the minister coming from one part of Canada or another has a role as a minister to make sure that the activities of the federal government in that area are knwon to him in order that he can explain it to the public. This is not interference into the due process of the allocation of contracts. That is what I meant.

It is very normal that a minister representing a region would want to be informed, and he is certainly entitled to know if there is a contract being allowed within his jurisdiction. In no way did I intend to lead the House to believe yesterday that a minister has the right to intervene in the allocation of contracts. It is just not the practice because the rules and regulations are well known. Every contract must go to the lowest bidder unless there is a valid reason not to do so. When it is allocated, it is allocated by the Treasury Board and not by the minister himself.

Mr. Broadbent: There is nothing in there about its being regional.

Mr. Chrétien: I just wanted to say that that was the context of my comments in the House yesterday. If a minister seeks to be informed of what is going on in his province, it is not intervention in the due process of the allocation of contracts. This is not a question of privilege; it is merely a political point.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) was the one who raised this point yesterday. I have indicated that there is nothing so far that has persuaded me to believe there is a question of privilege in this debate. I have nothing to say about the practice. There may be areas of debate and discussion, or attack and criticism of the practice, but that has nothing to do with the procedural decision I must make as to whether or not this matter can pre-empt the business of the House on the basis of privilege. I see no privilege in it.

However, in fairness, I ought to hear one other member, and that is the member for Central Nova, who first raised this matter yesterday.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear the minister elaborate on the explanation which he gave yesterday, but with the greatest of respect, sir—and I had hoped to ask some questions today—the issue still has not been cleared up, at least in my mind. I am being very specific in referring to the words of the minute, and they are the world "politically cleared". I am not talking about projects, as the minister said yesterday and as I believe he is referring to today, or ordinary information on a joint government project, or keeping one minister informed because he happens to be in another province. I am talking about a situation which I believe to be true.

For example, Oswald Parent, the former Liberal minister of intergovernmental affairs, I believe, used to collaborate, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) well knows, with now Senator Marchand on certain of these projects. I suggest to the minister, with the greatest of respect, that what was done in fact was that there was a short list prepared before the NCC officials even knew about it. The point I bring to the minister now is that any rules of consideration or tendering were pre-empted long before this situation ever arose. I suggest again to the House and to the minister that this is a matter of great import, as the leader of the New Democratic Party has pointed out.

It was, sir, precisely this form of "profitable federalism", as the government referred to it, that the voters in Quebec rejected when Claude Ryan said to them, "vote for a clean government." My party has been accused in this House of contributing to separatism. It is this kind of shoddy dealing that was rejected by the people of Quebec and which, incidentally, caused the rejection of now Senator Marchand and the then minister of intergovernmental affairs, Mr. Parent, in their respective elections by the voters of Quebec, that is probably contributing to this situation. With the greatest of respect I would say to the minister that I think he owes the House a bit more of an explanation; and he ought to be more frank with the House when he says that this matter strictly referred to projects, as he did yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have no machinery by which I can hear the minister a second time. The matter, as has been recognized by the minister and has been described by both members of the opposite side, is a serious matter. Indeed, it is regrettable that the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) did not have an opportunity to pursue the matter in question period today. The House, obviously, was occupied on other matters for the duration of the question period, but I would hope that the hon. member and other hon. members would have an opportunity to pursue it quite fully in the days to come.

That, however, only stresses to me the point that the matter, while important, is one that has to be pursued in the normal way. It does not in any way have a connection with the privileges of hon. members to operate in the House, and if it is a matter, as the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) says, that reflects badly on any members of the House, that does not in any way stretch it into a question of privilege. To do so, it seems to me, would be to say that every grievance against the government or government practice would be such as to qualify that subject for pre-eminence over every other order of business under the heading of privilege, and that would stretch our definition of privilege beyond all recognition.

Accordingly, having given all three participants an opportunity to carry this matter slightly today, it will have to be pursued in a more normal means in ensuing days.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. BAKER (GRENVILLE-CARLETON)—POLITICAL CLEARANCE OF CONTRACTS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Yesterday, I was very critical of the government with respect to absent ministers. I stand by that. With respect to the issue which has been raised by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), however, I just want the House to know that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Buchanan) had hoped to be here today to answer questions. He was kind enough to phone me to indicate that he would not be here today but would be available tomorrow with respect to this matter.

I do not know whether there has been any communication by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) with respect to this matter as referred to in the House yesterday. It was the Minister of National Defence who was the minister in question at the time the meeting took place in September, 1975. I merely raise this matter as a point of order because, naturally, we would want to direct some questions to him as to what he may have meant by the words "firms chosen"—not "projects"—for particular matters, and on the aspect of political clearance.

● (1522)

The reason I say that and put the government on notice is that for the first time, in answer to the response by the leader of the New Democratic Party to the point raised by the hon. member for Central Nova, the minister has introduced the concept of regional ministers who are politically clearing projects. That is the first time. It does not come out of the—

Mr. Chrétien: I never used that term.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I think it is extremely important that the government consider whether it might be appropriate for the Minister of National Defence to make a statement to clear up this matter one way or the other.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Finance (Mr.Chrétien) on the same point of order.

Mr. Chrétien: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I never used the term "clearance". I just said that some ministers want to be informed of what is going on in the government in relation to the regions. I think there is nothing abnormal about it but it is not interpreted in the normal process of allocation of contracts with the normal tenders.

I have not had a chance to talk to the Minister of National Defence but I know he was not in the House yesterday nor in his office. He is ill, Mr. Speaker, and I do not know when he will be back. I have not seen him today and I do not know when he will be available.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, may I just say that the Minister of National Defence was good enough to call my office today and explain that he could not be here. I want to thank him publicly for that courtesy.

MR. MACKAY—RESPONSE OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order which is very short. It concerns the response of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and also has reference to page 6324 of Hansard. I may be mistaken, Mr. Speaker, but I believe this is important. I believe that the Prime Minister, in making the points he did, left the impression with the House that the matter of Alexander Peter Treu was primarily a matter of provincial responsibility. He used the words "magisterial responsibility" when he referred to this particular point.

I think it would be useful to read a very brief excerpt, which I guess the Prime Minister has not had the chance to read, from yesterday's Hansard, the sentence pronounced by His Lordship Luc Trudel. Referring to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), he said:

> I must add, since it is part of the case, that an authorization from the Minister of Justice was filed—I have it here—in accordance with s. 12. The text is in English, but in accordance with s. 12 of the Official Secrets Act, the Attorney General of Canada, Mr. Basford, has authorized all the proceedings against you in accordance with our laws here in this country, I do not have to tell you—everyone knows—that the Attorney General of Canada holds the highest positions, at least as regards the administration of justice in this country, and no action under the Official Secrets Act can be brought against anyone without the approval or consent of the Attorney General.

I bring this up only to point out that the Prime Minister may have inadvertently not, perhaps, misled the House but may have placed too much emphasis on the provincial aspect of this matter when really it is a very serious federal matter. He should have made that clear.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He does not understand the law.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on the same subject, I would like to add that all the right hon. Prime Minister said was that the judge who presided over the trial had been appointed by the justice minister of the province of Quebec. The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) should know that in any case the trial which was closed to the public was held in such a way, as the right hon. Prime Minister remarked today, with the agreement of both parties.

MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH)—REFERENCE FOR STANDING COMMITTEE ON FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order and I would like some advice on this matter. On Thursday last I asked the governmemt House leader if he could provide us with a reference for the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry so that we could investigate further the matter of the fishing dispute between this country and the United States. I was wondering whether I should wait or pursue this daily on a point of order until we get it. I would be grateful for your advice on this, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) will respond at the earliest opportunity.

FEDERAL COURT ACT, 1978

MEASURE TO PERMIT EXAMINATION OF CONFIDENTIAL DOCUMENTS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-462, to amend the Federal Court Act (executive privilege).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, this bill is designed to repeal section 42(2) of the Federal Court Act. That act provides that a minister of the Crown may, by means of filing an affidavit, absolutely debar production of any document disclosure of which he thinks may be injurious to international relations, national defence or security, federal-provincial relations or disclosing a confidence of the Privy Council. The repeal would mean that a court might examine the document and order its production if the court saw fit.

An important principle is involved in this bill. If it is passed, a minister cannot allege or put forward an absolute power to keep a document secret from the scrutiny of the courts in cases where the court says it wishes to see the document to assure itself whether the affidavit is properly filed and whether the exemptions to which it refers in fact exist, instead of leaving it to the minister to judge his own case.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOTMENT OF TIME TO CONSIDER BILL C-56 IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, further to the notice I gave the House yesterday afternoon concerning allocation of time for the committee stage of Bill C-56, I move, seconded by the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport), (Mrs. Campagnolo):

That in relation to Bill C-56, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, two sitting days shall be allotted to the further consideration in committee of the whole stage of the bill; and that on the second of the said days, fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business in such sitting, all proceedings before the committee shall be interrupted, if required for the purpose of this order and every question necessary to dispose of the bill at the committee of the whole stage shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have only the answering of questions before completion of routine proceedings. I wonder if the House might be disposed to take them at this time and conclude routine proceedings, then proceed with the two-hour debate on this motion and follow with orders of the day. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Chrétien) stood.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 798, 884, 952, 954, 1,326, 1,356, 1,396, 1,605, 1,612 and 1,693.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that all remaining questions be allowed to stand.

HAMILTON MUNICIPAL AIRPORT

Question No. 884—Mr. Alexander:

1. Was an announcement made regarding the Hamilton Municipal Airport and the government's plans for its expansion to a Regional Airport and, if so, on what date was the announcement first made?

2. How much money was set aside at that time for this purpose?

3. How much money is now available for this purpose?

4. Of this money, how much is for the purpose of (a) acquisition of land (b) reconstruction and extension of runway or runways (c) new terminal facilities (d) navigational aids, control tower and hydro relocation?

5. How much land and what number of passengers per year are involved in the planned new facilities?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. March 2, 1972.

2. An amount of $25,000,000 was identified in the 1972 Canadian air transportation administration five year plan for expenditure at Hamilton in the 1973-76 period to expand the airport. Funding approval was not pursued as, subsequently, the Hamilton airport study program was undertaken. This study program was announced on September 23, 1974 and has now been completed. On January 30, 1978 Transport Canada announced approval of the recommendations of the study program as contained in the Hamilton airport technical recommendations report. The primary recommendation was that further development of air facilities to serve the Hamilton-Niagara-Brantford area should take place at the existing Hamilton airport.

3. Now that the site decision has been taken and after the master plan for airport development has been drafted, an investment schedule will be developed and will be included in the Cata five year capital plan.

4. Not applicable.

5. Additional land requirements for the three concepts for development of the existing Hamilton airport range from 650 to 865 acres. The present airport site now occupies 819 acres. The additional land will be required to accommodate a new runway. Forecasts used in the Hamilton Airport Study Program estimate annual enplaned plus deplaned passenger levels of 960,000 in 1985 and 1,680,000 in 1990 assuming that airport facilities are developed in the Hamilton area to meet the air travel needs of this area. This also assumes that air services for the Hamilton area will be provided by air carriers on a basis similar to that provided to serve other Canadian urban centres.

HOUSING UNITS FOR NATIVE PEOPLE—N.B.

Question No. 952—Mr. Howie:

Since January 1, 1977, how many new housing units were constructed for native people in New Brunswick?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised as follows by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation: During 1977, CMHC financed new housing in New Brunswick under its Rural and Native Housing Program as follows:

	Units	$000
F/P Partnership (Section 40)	106	2,762
Assisted Home Ownership (Section 34.15)	5	133
Indians Off Reserves (Section 58)	4	94
Indians On Reserves (Section 59)	1	20

Question No. 954—Mr. Howie:

Since January 1, 1977, what amount was (a) loaned (b) granted for new housing units for native people in New Brunswick?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised as follows by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation: (a) See the answer to question 952 answered this day. (b) Grants have not been made to assist in financing new housing for native people in New Brunswick.

PARKS CANADA GRANTS

Question No. 1,326—Mr. Jones:

1. How much money, if any, was given by Parks Canada, or any government department, to assist in the production of the play De Conquête en Conquête (From Conquest to Conquest). Please specify grant or grants given, reasons for grant or grants given, and general nature of such grant or grants, if any?

2. What other such grants have been awarded, if any, and what were the respective amounts of these grants?

3. In the awarding of these grants, is the material to be produced reviewed, and if so, what were the comments of the department or departments with respect to the above allocations?

4. Is the government aware that the play in question one, above, is termed "hate literature" and if so, what actions are they pursuing as a result?

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): In so far as the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs is concerned, the reply is the following: 1. Through its Summer Student Employment Program, the Department of Employment and Immigration awarded Parks Canada a grant of $50,000 given to the theatre company "Les Productions pour enfants de Québec Inc" for the summer of 1977. The grant was awarded to cover research and direction costs, production costs (costumes, scenery, music, lighting, etc.) and the performers' salaries.

2. None.

3. The theatrical adaptation of this particular work was reviewed by Parks Canada interpretation officers before it was performed publicly. The purpose of this review was to check the historical and sociological accurateness of the play's message; it was not meant to impose any government censorship on the theatre troupe.

4. As for the play being considered "hate literature", we should point out that more than 2,500 people have seen the play and no complaints have been made. The department does not consider it "hate literature".

DE HAVILLAND—DASH-7

Question No. 1,356—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. To date, in overall terms, what is the total government support for the development and production of the Dash-7?

2. To date, what is the amount of (a) loans (b) grants (c) contributions (d) interest on loans, given to de Havilland of Canada by the government?

3. What is the total number of employees at de Havilland of Canada and how many are engaged in the development and production of the Dash-7?

4. What are the names and the salaries of the top five executive officers employed at de Havilland of Canada?

5. What is the average amount per capita of government loans, contributions or grants for employees involved in the development and production of the Dash at de Havilland of Canada?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. As of March 1, 1978, $92,985,760.

2. As of March 1, 1978; (a) $3,072,919; (b) Nil; (c) $114,999,547; (d) Nil.

3. The total number of employees at de Havilland is 4,000. Current direct labour, excluding labour overhead: Dash-7 production, 700; Dash-7 development, 300. Total employment on Dash-7 development and production since the start of the project to date is about 3,890 man-years.

4. The top executive officers of de Havilland Aircraft of Canada are: President, Mr. R. Bannock; Senior vice president, Mr. D. B. Annan; Vice president, Special Projects, Mr. W. T. Heaslip; Vice president, Engineering, Mr. R. D. Hiscocks; Vice president, Customer Support, Mr. F. A. Johnson; Vice president, Finance, Mr. S. B. Kerr; Vice president, Marketing and Sales, Mr. J. A. Timmins. Following normal commercial practice, the individual salaries of the senior executives of de Havilland Aircraft of Canada are confidential.

5. The average amount of per capita government support of the development and production of the Dash-7 to date is $23,900. This support contributed for the most part, towards the direct employment in the development phase and the manufacture of the prototype aircraft. As such, it represents capital costs which will create employment in future years in terms of Dash-7 production over the life of the aircraft.

POST OFFICES—ALBERTA

Question No. 1,396—Mr. Schumacher:

1. By year since January 1970, how many post offices have been closed to date in the Province of Alberta?

2. Where were these post offices located and, in each case, what alternative service has been provided?

3. In each case, what was the cost involved in (a) closing the operation (b) providing alternate service?

4. In each case, what savings have been gained by the Post Office Department through the actions taken?

5. How many other post offices in the Province of Alberta are under consideration for closure in (a) 1978 (b) after 1978 and where is each located?

6. What alternative service is proposed for post offices in the Province of Alberta which are being considered for closure in (a) 1978 (b) after 1978?

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): (See list below.) Records are not kept in such a way as to provide information on the closing of sub post offices since January, 1970. Following is information on the closing of post offices only since January, 1970. 1. 1970, 39; 1971, 3; 1972, 2; 1973, 5; 1974, 1; 1975, 7; 1976, 3; 1977, 3; 1978, 1. Total closing of post offices excluding subs—64.

2. See list below. (Alternate service is usually the nearest existing post office).

3. (a) There are no records which would provide accurate figures as to the cost of closing a revenue post office. The main factors would be a visit to the office by a postal official plus administrative work, cost would be less than $100. (b) Since alternative service is usually the nearest post office or existing rural route, additional cost would be negligible.

4. See list below. (Saving—Represent annual salary and rental allowance paid to the Postmaster of a particular revenue office at time of closing. Where no figures are shown, it is because we no longer have pay records prior to October 1970.

5. At the present time two offices are under consideration for closing. Coronado, Alberta—Closing being recommended due to lack of customers and business. Northville, Alberta—Temporarily closed due to lack of a postmaster. If this situation prevails, this office may be permanently closed in 1978.

6. Alternate service proposed for the one remaining customer at Coronado is the rural route emanating out of Gibbons, Alberta, post office. Alternate service proposed for customers at Northville, would be Wildwood, post office. This is the present arrangement under the temporary closure. Generally speaking, the alternate service provided is the nearest post office or a possible site on an existing rural route if the customers so desire.

PIERRE ROBERT ALLARD

Question No. 1,612—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is Mr. Pierre Robert Allard employed by the National Capital Commission and, if so (a) on what date was he hired, in what capacity and at what salary (b) has he or is he doing a specific project for the Commission's General Manager referred to as "Secret" and what is the nature of the project (c) what is a complete list of his experience as a planner and what are the details of his educational background?

2. In September 1976, was he sent as a visiting lecturer to the University of Moncton with the approval of NCC and, if so (a) was his salary paid by the NCC during his absence (b) were moving expenses for himself and his family paid and, if so, what was the amount paid to cover the move in both directions?

3. What were the nature of his lectures at the University of Moncton and specifically what subjects did they deal with?

4. Has Mr. Allard entertained foreign diplomats at government expense and, if so, on what date and for what reasons and did he specifically hold a private luncheon in the Executive Office of the NCC on or about December 1977 and, if so, at what total cost to the taxpayer and what are the names of the countries the diplomats represented?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): 1. Yes. (a) He was hired on continuous strength on September 1, 1969 as an architect-planner at a salary within the AR-2 range ($10,670 to $12,127). (b) No. (c) Mr. Allard pursued studies at the Académie Royale and at the École de design in Brussels. He trained for various periods with architects and town planners in Belgium. In Canada, he studied at the Centre d'études nordiques at Laval University, the Centre de recherche arctique de l'Institut H.E.C. in Montreal, and l'Institut d'urbanisme et d'aménagement at the University of Montreal. In October 1969, he was admitted as a member of the Canadian Institute of Planners. With the NCC, Mr. Allard participated in the preparation of the report "Hull 1969-95" and the preliminary sketches for downtown Hull. He headed up studies for Gatineau Park and studies of recreation and leisure in the Quebec portion of the national capital region, as well as a number of regional studies on the national capital region dealing with such topics as road systems and water and sewer infrastructures. In 1974, he co-ordinated the planning group for the public report entitled "Tomorrow's Capital".

2. Yes, through the Public Service Executive Interchange Program with the approval of the National Capital Commission. (a) Yes, salary range of $29,573 to $33,200. (b) Yes, at a cost of $717.37.

3. The lectures dealt with the following subjects: the national capital region, problems of a capital for Canada; accomplishments in the national capital and their application throughout Canada; urban aesthetics; urban and regional problems in general. He also prepared a development plan for the campus of the University of Moncton.

4. No.

RURAL MAIL DELIVERY

Question No. 1,693—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

In 1976-77, did the government accept, for the Province of Quebec, submissions for rural mail delivery for approximately 76 miles and, if so, for what amount in each case?

S.O. 75C

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): One. Rigaud R.R. No. 2, 79.8 miles, $12,761.83.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOTMENT OF TIME TO CONSIDER BILL C-56 IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 75C, I move, seconded by the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo):

That, in relation to Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions, two sitting days shall be allotted to the further consideration of the committee of the whole stage of the said bill; and

That on the second of the said days, fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business in such sitting, all proceedings before the committee shall be interrupted, if required for the purpose of this order and every question necessary to dispose of the bill at the committee of the whole stage shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to make lengthy remarks. I merely wish to say that today is the twentieth consecutive day of debate on the budget I proposed last April 10 and that this motion provides that, apart from the rest of the day, as soon as it is passed, two additional days will be allotted for consideration of that bill in committee and then we shall proceed with third reading before the bill is referred to the Senate. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that to date, we have spent 22 days or maybe 23, 24 or 25 to discuss that bill and the budget which leaves only two months to the government to dispose of its current business and, as we have other bills to discuss, I thought it would be wise to move this motion as soon as possible at the committee stage, which will leave us several other days for debate. We might witness something exceptional, because following the tabling of my motion yesterday, immediately after, we have seen the committee proceed much more expeditiously so that yesterday, at the time of adjournment at ten o'clock, we were considering clause 20 which makes me believe that if we proceed as expeditiously today we might dispose of that bill even before the expiration of the allotted time for the consideration of that bill in committee.

• (1532)

[English]

I want to say in conclusion that after I gave notice that I would introduce this motion there was a change of attitude on the part of the opposition parties. They became co-operative and I welcomed that. Yesterday during the last two hours of the day at "notre dix-neuvième jour" of the procedure we managed to approve the first clause. After that we proceeded quite rapidly to clause 20. We will be commencing at that clause when we come back to the committee stage today.

We have today as well as two more days to complete the committee stage. Of course, there will be third reading. We have already spent 19 days on the budget debate and the study of this bill, excluding another day that we spent on the customs tariff bill and other bills relative to the fiscal measures that were introduced in the budget of April 10. I am confident with the change of attitude in the House yesterday that we can proceed rapidly with the committee stage. It will be a good precedent, in spite of the motion that I have introduced which will be voted on later—

Mr. Gillies: Withdraw the motion.

Mr. Chrétien: —if we can dispose of the bill even before the time allocated for this motion is used up by the House of Commons.

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if this minister had any respect for the institution of parliament, which we know he does not, if it was his feeling that we could reach the conclusion of this stage of the debate without imposing closure, then he should not violate the traditions of this House by introducing closure when even he knows that it is not necessary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: At the very least, what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has done is to indicate that it was highly premature for him to force upon this House one more piece of evidence of his distrust of parliament and his dislike of debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: On this most important budget measure we have had only two days of discussion of the detail of the proposals which the Minister of Finance is bringing in. Since the minister assumed his portfolio, which is clearly beyond his capacity, he has throughout his tenure as minister been complaining about his inability to carry the burdens of the office of Minister of Finance, burdens which previous ministers, even of his government, were able to carry out without complaining and without the kind of failure of effect which has marked the tenure of this Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Indeed, he is becoming and deserves to become known in the country not as the Minister of Finance but as the minister of closure. He invoked closure on Bill C-11. He invoked closure last week and he has invoked closure again this week. The reason for that is not simply because the minister is incompetent. What we have here is closure caused by television. As debate last night revealed in the House of Commons, the Minister of Finance—forced to answer questions from this side of the House and from his own members—does not know why he is introducing some of the measures that are in the budget bill, and the government does not want his incompetence to be telecast into the living rooms of the nation. That is why we have closure here. So instead of giving us a new minister who understands his job, this government cuts off debate in the House of Commons.

When we were debating last week's closure motion—and with this minister we get closure and a violation of parliament at least once a week—the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) recalled that at one stage of the 1956 pipeline debate, which was the worst abuse of closure in the history of this parliament, Mr. Howe was able to stop debate after reading only one phrase or one sentence. Considering that we may not be able to deal with all of the clauses in this complex, important bill in the limited time the minister proposes, it could very well be that some of these measures will be passed without even one sentence of debate. In the case of some clauses it may be that not one word of debate will be allowed by this government.

This has happened here. This shutting out of the right and the duty of parliament to debate is happening at the stage of proceedings in this parliament when there is supposed to be detailed examination. Instead we will be denied even one word of debate because every word, every question, demonstrates that this minister is too incompetent to do his job.

There are some provisions of this bill which need detailed study. To have impact we cannot send them out without analysis, which may perhaps cause concern and disharmony in the country. Because of closure, some of these measures may pass into law without any real discussion of their consequences in this House and without any real analysis of the effect that they will have on the Canadian economy.

The measure to impose a minimum age for the starting date of a registered retirement savings plan will impose a real hardship on some Canadians. A number of financial institutions are concerned about provisions for the taxation of benefits from savings plans at death. Many questions remain unanswered. This is the place and this is the stage of debate where those questions could be put and where those answers should be forthcoming.

As the minister should know, and certainly as members on this side of the House know, section 32 will have the effect of making it much harder for small businesses to finance continuing operations and to expand into new areas. Not a word will be uttered, unless we reach that stage, about the effect that restrictions on the use of dividends will have on the working capital positions of small businesses.

There are some tax penalty clauses in this bill. Some members of our party are hoping to discuss past enforcement standards for the Income Tax Act, particularly as it relates to individuals like John C. Doyle. We will not be able to explore that with closure. We have here an absurd situation with closure at the detailed study stage of this bill after only two days of debate, indeed introduced only after one day's debate of a very complex, detailed bill.

It is interesting to note that in the other institution of this parliament, the banking, trade and commerce committee is now studying in detail many of the matters which I have raised. They are hearing witnesses in an attempt to determine whether these budget resolutions, which this minister is pushing through this House, are in fact workable. It is an irony and a tribute to the disrespect for democracy of this minister and this government that, in the legislative assembly where members are appointed, there is a right to detailed debate. But here, where we are elected, that right to detailed debate is cut off by a minister who cannot stand the heat of the questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I make the point that by this invocation of closure—by closure once a week which we get with this minister—on almost every bill that he brings in, the minister is not just restricting the ability of members on this side of the House to do our job and to analyse this bill. He is also seriously restricting the ability of members of his own party to carry on examination of the provisions of this bill. Some of them may not want to, but there are some—and I am pleased to see the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) in the House—who may want to introduce amendments to some of the clauses, unless closure prevents us from getting to them.

● (1542)

I think, for example, of clause 30. There may well be a disposition on the part of that member of the minister's party to introduce an amendment to that offensive clause of the bill if he is given a chance and not denied that by closure. Perhaps another reason why we have closure is to stop members of the government party from having an opportunity to comment on the legislation which this minister is trying to force through the House of Commons.

Last night there were other members—I think of the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell) and the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac)—who asked good questions about some of the measures in this legislation. They indicated their concern about the negative impact these measures might have upon their regions.

This government does not want to hear about what is wrong with budget measures they introduce but do not understand. Instead, the minister wants to force them through this parliament in a way that offends the principles of this place and prevents us from doing our job.

We in this party oppose this closure. We think it is an inexcusable abuse by this government. We are not going to debate it at length today. We are not going to take the two hours that are available to members on this side of the House, but we are certainly going to vote against this imposition of closure by this minister of closure. We hope it will be possible for this House of Commons, having dealt with this attempt to limit debate by this minister, to get on with an examination of the budget, an examination that is limited by a government that subjugates parliament's duty to examine to its interest in maintaining the image of its own incompetent minister.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we in the New Democratic Party join with the official opposition in stating our absolute opposition to the motion that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has presented to the House today. I must say that I thought from the way he was speaking when he rose to take part in this debate that he was going to withdraw the motion. He said that yesterday, when he gave notice, we were still on clause 1, but as a result, so he said, of his giving that notice things have moved a bit and we have reached clause 19 or 20. I doubt whether it was his threat that produced that. In any event, he was now of the opinion that the closure motion was not needed, that we might finish the debate in two or three days in any case. If that is the situation, why does he affront parliament by bringing in another of these closure motions?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Almost every time that we on this side of the House refer to this device as a form of closure, the minister interrupts that it is not closure but an allocation of time. I do not know why he did not interrupt me. I suppose he is busy doing something else.

May I remind him that what that this motion does is to close off debate. You can call it any name or title you want: the effect of the motion is to close off debate. As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has already pointed out, the effect of this motion could well be, if members decide they want to debate some of the matters in detail, that there are clauses in this bill that will not be debated at all.

There are 59 clauses in this bill. We have dealt with about 19, although we stood two or three. It could well be that if this closure rule comes into effect and the axe falls when the minister wants it to fall, there will be important measures in this bill that will not have been discussed in committee of the whole.

Mr. Gillies: Thank God we have the Senate.

Mr. Stevens: You cannot close the Senate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't get irrelevant on this side just because the minister has been irrelevant today in telling us about the number of days we have been debating his budget. You notice that he refers to all of the debate that has taken place since April 10. He counts up the six days that were spent on the main motion for the approval of the government's financial provisions. Then he counts the days that were spent on second reading of this bill and on the amendment that was proposed by my leader. He adds up to the number of some 20 days.

Surely what counts now is the time this House is permitted to spend on the actual details of this bill. All we have had so far is two days. I suggest that this is an affront to parliament. It is another abuse of a rule that ought not to be there at all and this House should not tolerate it.

I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that since we are under this kind of restriction every hour counts, and there is no need for us to use the two hours granted to us. We are stating from our side of the House that this motion should not be passed. We shall be voting against it. I hope there will be members on the other side who will either see our viewpoint or stay out and let the House for once say that it believes in free debate in this place.

There is one other point I want to make. It has been demonstrated in the life of this session of parliament that when the government brings in good legislation, measures that are acceptable, this House does not waste any time on them. There were two veterans affairs matters dealt with, in both cases in an hour or so. Others were brought in by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) which made good sense and were dealt with quickly. It is only when legislation is faulty, bad, inconsistent or imposes unfairness or injustice that the House insists upon debate. The government responds to that by saying: "No. We are king around here. We run the show. We have decided this is to go through and there in fact need be no debate."

One of the things that has been going on in this debate has been an attempt on the part of members of the opposition side to get the minister to answer specific questions about clause 30. He keeps saying he will do that when we get to clause 30. I have no idea how long the clauses between 19 and 29 are going to take. It could be they will take all the time and we will never get to clause 30. In the end we might never get the answers, yet we will be expected in one moment to vote on the committee of the whole stage and to proceed to third reading. That is no way to run the parliament of Canada. We are voting against this motion.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have been sitting in the House for ten years and we have seen a few motions such as the one introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) today. We have even discussed in the House the passage of that famous Standing Order 75C enabling a minister to restrict unilaterally the debate as the Minister of Finance is doing today.

Mr. Speaker, we are constantly before the following dilemma between the government and the opposition, that is the government wants to pass bills quickly while the Opposition wants to consider them in depth to gather all the information before the question is put. As a result of that dilemma, the government is always inclined to conclude the debate quickly. It happens sometimes that the debates are too long, but in the present case, I would like to point out that the minister is presuming that the debates will be dragging. That is a cavalier and arrogant way of measuring the value of the debate and contributions of members of this House. That bill was not even discussed properly considering that already it has somehow come up against opposition on second reading and then in this debate in committee, well, no sooner had we begun this debate that the minister already anticipated that it would be too long and he had to limit it. That is in my opinion, an entirely abnormal way of holding up the rights of this House.

Mr. Speaker, like other members who spoke before me, I must object categorically to that. Indeed, I believe that if you finally reach the conclusion that a new rule will be established in this House, the debates will automatically be limited as soon as the issue being considered is controversial. Well, Mr. Speaker, a regime applying such principles is a dictatorial regime. So I do not believe that this government should be allowed to get into that. So, Mr. Speaker, as I said, I am most strongly opposed to that, particularly as an independent member of this House, being accountable only to the voters of my riding, who have the right like anyone else to know the opinion of their representative in this House, perhaps even more than other members, I must categorically object to that decision.

The minister, the Prime Minister and the whole government have already become so tied up in a way that I would describe as stupid in this debate and the fact the minister should continue to want to breach our rights in another way leaves the impression that he thinks he is condoning the ill-intentioned and clumsy moves he made by cutting down this debate. As other members have suggested before me, the minister regrets what he did and no longer wants to hear about the solution he proposed.

We are not in this House to cover up the mistake made by a government or by a particular minister. That is why I do not believe they are justified in breaching the rights and privileges of members of this House simply because a minister messed things up. Mr. Speaker, as my voters expect, I hope I will have an opportunity to discuss this bill which indeed affects them very much.

• (1552)

[English]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks at this stage. This will be the only opportunity I shall have to participate because I shall be leaving later today for parliamentary business outside Canada.

On listening to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) it occurred to me we should do some hard thinking as to why there was not the same unanimity on this bill as there was with regard to the veterans legislation to which he referred. Mr. Speaker, the day of the traditional budget has gone. The days when the minister could call in his advisers and prepare appropriate tax and fiscal measures in great secrecy and then introduce them with a flourish in a dramatic way are probably gone for ever. There are many reasons for this, not the least of which is the new economic situation in which we find ourselves, the continuance of inflation at a time when unemployment is so high. We look to those in the academic community for guidance in these matters but there is no Lord Keynes on the scene today.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has a difficult task. He has to devise a new type of budget in new circumstances. For one thing, combined municipal and provincial expenditure substantially exceeds that of the federal authority, as has been the case for some years. The state of the economy in the various regions of the country is, moreover, so diverse that it is no longer possible to take a uniform course as dictated by the wisdom of the minister of finance and the mandarins in Ottawa. This implies discussion with provincial spokesmen and, of course, abandonment of the traditional approach to the budget which was one of complete secrecy since, in the process of consultation, there is bound to be some sacrifice of that principle.

I congratulate the Minister of Finance for his innovative approach. He travelled. He consulted with provincial ministers. He sought ideas. The approach he took to the previous budget was based on personal income tax cuts and corporate tax concessions which failed to stimulate the economy. It did not work. Mr. McKeough of Ontario suggested there ought to be a cut in sales tax. That was a suggestion which came from a member of a government of a different political complexion but was adopted as the essence of the solution found by the Minister of Finance in his search for a new approach.

Eight of the provinces agreed with that approach. No sales tax existed in Alberta. A different deal was struck with the maritimes which, as we all know, had special problems. The minister thought a consensus had been reached. But Quebec held out. Then, after the budget had been announced, a game was played in hindsight by the spokesmen for Quebec. It was not played in good faith because whatever the federal government did there would be an attempt at political one-upmanship.

Any concerned Canadian who is worried about the management of our economy knows we cannot rely on the traditional fiscal and monetary tools to do the job in the way it has been approached in the past. Innovation has proved to be a difficult procedure. Nevertheless, those responsible for the attempt to denigrate the preparation of a budget by a new process will have to answer to the voters and to the people generally. I support the budget because it is the first of a new type which the situation demands. Today a minister of finance must innovate. He must be flexible and the measures he takes must respond to the needs of different parts of the country.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, in effect, that if we can all agree on something we can put it through quickly—we do not even need to debate it. The point is that we do not agree. Even the analysis of the subject matter is open to disagreement among prominent people both in the academic and in the business world. As I say, today a minister of finance has to innovate, but whenever there is innovation there is bound to be a difference of opinion.

Opposition spokesmen complain that we have spent only a short while on this stage of the bill. Of course, it means nothing to them that we have already spent six days discussing the budget itself and another 11 days on second reading, or that debate at that stage was brought to an end only by a time allocation order. I noted that when the minister gave notice of a time allocation order yesterday with respect to the committee stage there was a sudden change of heart and things moved along a little faster. But I for one am standing up and saying I support the new approach. I support the innovation.

I look forward to more innovation in future budgets and to new attempts to do things based on consultation and respect for regional differences and problems. This bill has to pass. We cannot debate until the end of time. We cannot go through the sophistry of saying that there have been six days for the budget, 11 days for something else and a day for tariff resolutions but that that is all irrelevant and that we have to work on all these clauses and spend all the time we have. No legislative body can afford that luxury. Let us get on with the job.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion carried.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Before calling orders of the day and resolving into committee of the whole, perhaps I might indicate to the House at this time the matters to be dealt with pursuant to Standing Order 40 tonight at the ordinary time of adjournment. The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae)—Consumer Affairs—Reason for beef price increases; the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack)—Agriculture—Requested increased milk quotas for Ontario cheese manufacturers; the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—Canadian Culture—Importation of U.S. editions of Canadian books.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Monday, June 12, consideration in committee of the whole of Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions—Mr. Chrétien—Mr. Ethier in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose last evening clauses 16 and 17 were allowed to stand, clause 19 was agreed to.

On clause 20—

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, for the record, perhaps the minister could tell us the significance of the addition of the 4.1 reference in this section.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this is a technical amendment consequential on the amendment to subsection 84(4.1) in clause 18 of the bill. Subsection 84(4.1) treats certain distribution under the reduction of capital of a public corporation as a dividend brought in in a return of capital.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 21—

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, as the explanatory note to this clause states that it is designed to correct an error relating to the application of subsection 85(7) as amended by chapter 1 of the statutes for the current session, could the minister tell us what the error is that they have made here and why we are being called upon to correct it?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, as usual, I will read the technical explanation. This is a relieving technical amendment bringing into force the provision of last year's tax legislation, being Bill C-11. Section 85 of the act provides a roll-over that is a mechanism for the deferral of tax that will otherwise arise on certain transfers of property to a Canadian corporation. In order to qualify for this roll-over an election must be filed by the due date of the tax return for the year of transfer.

In a number of situations, taxpayers failed to file the required election on time. Subsection 85(7) was amended in Bill C-11 to permit the filing of an election within three years from the normal due date. The amendment in Bill C-11 was made applicable to transfers of property made in 1975 and subsequent taxation years. The Bill C-11 amendment should have been effected before an election normally due after May 6, 1974. This change simply corrects the coming into force accordingly.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, could the minister confirm that this is one of the amendments that he hoped to make in the committee of the whole stage with respect to Bill C-11 but got caught in his own closure mechanism and was not able to make the amendment at that time?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, it was an amendment that I wanted to put forward in the debate, but because there was a lot of foot dragging in second reading, we did not have the time to proceed normally clause by clause and we had to limit the debate, I believe, after five weeks. Of course, it is one of the consequences that when we do not have the collaboration of the opposition in the early stages of a bill we get caught in these difficult situations in the last hours that the bill is in front of the House.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, it is most unfortunate that this minister continues to misrepresent the facts to the House and to the Canadian public. The fact is he brought in closure prematurely with respect to Bill C-11. The committee of the whole was just nicely into the consideration of the bill clause by clause. The minister had indicated that he had 11 or 12 amendments that he felt should be made to the bill because it had been inadequately drafted.

In spite of the fact that he has his own amendments to make, he brought in closure at that time, not only shutting out his own people who had questions to raise on the bill and shutting out the opposition, but shutting out his own capability to make amendments. Now we are in the rather ludicrous position of finding that closure once again has been put on us within a day of getting into clause by clause discussion of this bill, and part of the time of the closure is now being utilized to allow the minister to pass amendments that he was not able to pass because of closure being invoked by himself on Bill C-11.

This type of inept handling, not only of Bill C-11 but of Bill C-56, must be driven home time and time again. When we say that this is the most incompetent, the most inept Minister of Finance since confederation, we kid nobody. The fact is he is.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 22—

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, as this clause relates directly to clause 6(1) which was stood, as you will recall, yesterday, it may be sensible to stand clause 22, and I think one or two other clauses as well. It would enable us to consider all those clauses at once. We would also like clause 6 to be delayed a little longer because one of our members is considering a possible amendment to it, and, therefore, it would facilitate the committee if we could stand clause 22 at this time.

• (1642)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is there unanimous consent that clause 22 be stood?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we should proceed either with clause 6 or with clause 22. We postponed two clauses yesterday. If the hon. member wants to deal with clause 6, we can go back to it and after that go to clause 22; or if he wants to pass clause 22 right away, that is fine.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, obviously the minister gets more and more uncertain of his position as we go along. If he does not want to stand clause 22, perhaps he can give us the explanation for it and we can then decide whether it should be passed.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, section 87 of the act provides the technical rules that apply when two or more Canadian corporations amalgamate. The four amendments to this section relate to the research allowance, charitable contributions, paid up capital and certain involuntary dispositions.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 23 to 26 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 27—

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, as we pass these clauses, particularly clauses 25, 26 and 27, I take it we have the undertaking of the minister that if there should be some change in clause 35, which is the clause that is interrelated with these various clauses, any necessary consequential change could be made subsequently to some of these clauses that we are passing.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, if we do make amendments to clause 35, we will make the necessary amendments to the clauses which have already been accepted by the committee.

[English]

Clause agreed to.

On clause 28—

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, this is a fairly important change that is being proposed. It is important to certain life insurers and I think the minister owes the House an explanation why it is requested.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the amendment is required to deal with losses of certain life insurance companies. Bill C-11 contains rules to deny the carryforward into 1978 of losses and deductions for prior years to the extent that they arose as a result of the reduction of excessive reserves deducted in past years. The technical formula by which this is achieved produces a harsh result for certain small insurance companies that have suffered losses. The proposed amendment provides relief for losses in the few cases where the formula now in the law operates too severely.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, would the minister explain whether this is a proposal to plug a loophole or to "even out" at the request of the industry?

Mr. Chrétien: It is to assist small companies that have incurred heavy losses, in order to be fair to them.

Mr. Ritchie: I want to ask the minister about the form of those losses that the insurance companies suffered. In what manner were these losses suffered, in a general way?

Mr. Chrétien: It is related to real losses apart from the reserves.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 29—

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I should like some clarification of this clause as I think a very important step is being taken. The explanatory note reads as follows:

This amendment, which would delete a reference to the Northwest Territories as not being a province for the purpose of section 120, together with the amendment to subsection 124(1) proposed in clause 31, would implement paragraph (12) of the income tax motion, which read as follows:—

What is the implication?

Mr. Lumley: It is nice to see you.

Mr. Alexander: The parliamentary secretary is so smart that perhaps because of the incompetence of the minister he is liable to get the minister's job. I want to ask the minister what is going on in terms of the required deletion, as the minister sees fit, of the Northwest Territories as not being a province.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: The inappropriate remark from the hon. member does not call for any comments. I would simply say that if he had read the act, he would readily understand that this is a very positive measure designed to allow the Northwest Territories to reach a more autonomous status than they had before. This is in line with the policy established by this government when I was Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development with a view to transferring to the northern council more power than it had under the governments which were in power before the Liberals came in. Regarding this amendment, Mr. Chairman, I will read the general comment as I have done for the other clauses, and I quote:

Since January 1, 1978 the Northwest Territories have their own income tax system and have since concluded a tax collection agreement with the government of Canada.

The amendment proposed to the definition of the term "province" contained in paragraph 120(4)(b) of the act results from the Northwest Territories being granted the status of a province for the purposes for the Income Tax Act. Before January 1, 1978 residents of the Northwest Territories had to pay a federal income tax of 43 per cent under section 120(1) of the act. Residents of the Yukon remain subject to this additional federal income tax. The amount of income tax payable by Northwest Territories residents for fiscal year 1978 and subsequent years will not be modified by this change because the additional tax which they would otherwise have had to pay to the federal government will be paid to the Northwest Territories government.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, with respect to the Northwest Territories I would like to ask the minister if he can tell us the approximate rate of taxation to which the taxpayers of these territories will now be subjected? Is it based on an average of the federal income tax and that of the various provinces? Is it rather calculated on the basis of the tax in Alberta or Ontario? And with regard to the Yukon which as a territory has not yet availed itself of the powers granted to it on January 1, 1978, what will be the rate of taxation for the taxpayers of that region?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the bill does not provide for any change in the amount of tax paid by the people from the Northwest Territories at this time. They will pay the same income tax as their neighbours from the Yukon, and we will not change in any way the amount of income tax paid by the people from the Northwest Territories, but we will change the process through which the government of the Northwest Territories will be able in the future to increase or reduce income tax within its budgetary authority. Of course, there is a collection agreement with the federal government, but through this bill we are giving the government of the Northwest Territories the authority to pass legislation pertaining to income tax.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Why is the Yukon not included? Perhaps at that time the Yukon council did not request it, but since the minister told us a moment ago, when he explained the reason for this amendment, that this would affect that Yukon and the Northwest Territories which have, since January 1, 1978, a power of taxation, that is why I was wondering—I think I did hear the minister say so—under what authority a territory had the rights of a province to levy that kind of tax.

Mr. Chrétien: Under our policy of devolution of authority to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, we allowed them, from January 1 in the case of the Northwest Territories, to levy income taxes because we made the same offer to the Yukon but the council of the Yukon did not pass the legislation and they did not make the request to have the system applied in the Yukon.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 29 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 30 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Lachance: On clause 30, Mr. Chairman, I would simply like to ask the minister whether, as far as the province of Quebec is concerned, according to the fact that the House decides in favour of one of the two formulas put forward, namely either the $85 refund if the taxation year 1977 is considered as the base for reference or a $100 refund if 1978 is used as the year of reference, he will be able to choose, as Minister of Finance, the formula he prefers, and whether the bill as it now stands, and in particular clause 30, authorizes him to add the province of Quebec to the schedule of the provinces which have already reached an agreement and will receive $100 for 1978. In other words, is he empowered to disregard clause 2 amending section 122.1(2) which stipulates that where no fiscal agreement exists between the federal government and the provinces, there is an $85 reimbursement? Can he disregard that provision and refer instead to clause 1 which provides for a $100 reimbursement merely by changing the schedule?

Mr. Chrétien: Legally, Mr. Chairman, we have a choice, once clauses 30(a) and (b) have been passed, to add the province of Quebec to the schedule to part I of the act. However, the government has decided to proceed as the bill stipulated as introduced, that is by reimbursing immediately $40 million to the Quebec government, and reimbursing to the Quebec taxpayers an amount of up to $85 as provided for in this bill. Naturally, as we know, Mr. Chairman, I made proposals to the Quebec government exactly two weeks ago with a view to coming to an agreement, and if the Quebec government had accepted my proposal on that Wednesday, we could have included Quebec in the first schedule, and payments could have been made in the spring of 1979. But, in the reply I received from Mr. Parizeau one week later, he told me that, as the formula advocated by the second part of clause 30 was public knowledge, he had no objections to it and advised me that he would, one way or the other, take steps to recover those amounts of money, which it is in his power and his duty to do if he has budgetary problems and has to increase his taxes; and I have no business interfering in that field.

The second proposal he made in his letter would lead to amendments in clauses 30(a) and 30(b). That, of course, would involve interest payments and a substantial change in clause 30. Since I gather, from his letter, that he would be satisfied if we adopted clause 30(b) concerning Quebec, I did not think it appropriate to choose the other alternative as this would result in major changes and administrative complexities. So I shall opt for the formula which seems acceptable to the Quebec government. I had myself suggested that Quebec be included in clause 30(a), but that was rejected by Mr. Parizeau who wanted a cash payment of $40 million, which was impossible under 30(a). That is why 30(b) seems acceptable to Mr. Parizeau, and the government has decided to go that route.

● (1652)

[English]

Mr. Stevens: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Hon. members will recall that the Speaker ruled that this clause could not be dealt with until we had a proper ways and means motion concurred in by the House. Was the ways and means motion tabled by the minister concurred in?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: The motion was concurred in yesterday afternoon.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: We are informed by the Minister of Finance that the motion was concurred in yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I merely wanted to ask the minister to clarify the statement he made. I may be incorrect but my understanding is that Mr. Jacques Parizeau, the minister of finance of the province of Quebec, had asked for $40 million as part of the settlement, and that the balance, the $186 million, could be paid on either basis, either by an $85 rebate on this year's tax or by a rebate of $100 for 1978.

The minister says that there is some administrative difficulty. I would have thought the opposite would be true, that it would be much better if all the provinces were on the same basis, namely that this reduction would be for the 1978 tax year and would be for $100. The government has always been strong in saying that it does not want any special status for any province, it wants them all to be treated alike. If it is correct that Mr. Parizeau said that he does not care which of the options the federal government selects, I cannot understand why the Minister of Finance has not selected the one which would have had uniform application to all the provinces and removed a good deal of the irritation that has been generated during this debate.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, in Mr. Parizeau's letter, what is called his option two, he is asking for $40 million right away and $85 for those taxpayers on the list for 1978, but to be deducted from the income tax of the Quebec taxpayers only in the spring at the time of filing. That is why in his request there is something different from the other provinces. The week before I offered to deduct $100 in the spring of 1979, but he rejected that proposition. He wanted $40 million cash and $85 in the spring. As we wanted to make the federal contribution of the money left over—because there was no agreement on the $186 million—not to penalize Quebeckers but because there was no agreement between the governments we decided to proceed with the $85 payment right away.

There are a lot of people who do not know why we have to proceed that way. As the hon. member knows, I believe it was at the time when he was premier of Saskatchewan that Mr. Duplessis decided to have his own tax collection system and that is why we have to operate in a different fashion. It is not due to any action by the federal government. For Saskatchewan, Ontario and Manitoba on budget night the federal government reduced the income tax by $100, and those ministers of finance a week later raised their income tax by $100, and agreed to my plan to reduce sales tax.

In the case of the province of Quebec there was no such agreement. There has been no tax collection agreement with Quebec since 1954. That is why we have to rebate the money to the Quebec taxpayers directly. If the provincial governments want to collect any part of it or all of it, or even more than it, it is within their own power to do so. It is always their privilege and option to do whatever they want with their own tax, just as the federal government does with federal tax.

If Mr. Parizeau had agreed to what I offered two weeks ago, namely to have Quebec included in option one, I would have been willing to do this and it would have been exactly as with the other provinces regarding clause 38. But he does not want that. Mr. Parizeau wants $40 million cash because he has qualified partially to participate in the national program. As for the rest, I am just following the government's intentions at the time of tabling the bill.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Before recognizing the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands on a point of order raised previously by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, if we refer to the Votes and Proceedings for Monday, June 12, at page 858 in the fourth paragraph, the motion reads:

> The order being read for the consideration of a ways and means motion to amend the Income Tax Act (Sessional Paper No. 303-1/308D), laid upon the table, Thursday, June 8, 1978;
> Mr. Chrétien, seconded by Mr. Cullen, moved,—That the motion be concurred in.
>
> And the question being put on the motion, it was agreed to.

● (1702)

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time the minister has tried to explain this situation by virtue of the fact that Quebec is the only province which does not have a tax collection agreement with the federal government. I know they have not got that. In fact, I was at the conference when Mr. Duplessis announced they would not continue the tax collection agreement with the federal government. However, I do not follow the logic of the minister as to why that needs to make any difference.

If the federal government made it clear that when people submit their 1978 income tax returns next spring they will be allowed a $100 deduction, the provincial government of Quebec could then adjust this tax as it saw fit. They could either collect that $100 or let the Quebec taxpayer have it. I see no reason why there should be two different schemes on two different bases.

A good deal of the difficulty the minister has had with this bill has been quite unnecessary. The minister several times has been very critical of the government of Quebec because he does not agree with their separatist policies. Neither do I, but I resent this intent to smear anybody who asks for fair and equal treatment for Quebec as being a separatist or as being in bed with the separatists. That is a cheap type of politics that will not get the minister or the government anywhere. It smacks of the McCarthy era. If they could not call you a communist, they said you were soft on communism, in bed with a communist or advocating what a communist would advocate if he were in your place. That does not do anything for anybody.

We have to look at this fairly. I did not get into the fight when the minister was being attacked. I think he has a difficult job and is doing the best he can. However, I say the minister got himself into a good deal of trouble by the ham-handed way in which this whole question of the reduction of the retail sales tax has been handled.

First, there was a finance ministers' conference and then a first ministers' conference. Those were the places where it should have been suggested to the provinces that the federal government thought that the most speedy way in which to give a stimulus to the economy was to cut the retail sales tax, and that the federal government was prepared to make some compensation in return for such action.

That was not done. The finance ministers and the premiers went home and proceeded to prepare their budgets. I ask the members of this committee to put themselves in the position of a provincial premier. After working out his budget, he has a very small surplus. He thinks he will break even and might even have enough to cover any unforeseen contingencies. He then receives a telephone call or a visit from the federal Minister of Finance who says he is prepared to pay two thirds of the cost of cutting the sales tax by three percentage points for six months, or two percentage points for nine months.

What does that mean to the provincial treasurer? It means he will be put in a deficit position. He does not want to be in a deficit position, but he cannot turn it down. What position would he be in on budget night when the Minister of Finance would say that he offered province A or province B a cut in sales tax of three percentage points and that province did not want it? What if that province turned down millions of dollars which it would have received in compensation?

The minister did not say that the provincial treasury would have had to find the money to put up the provincial share of that reduction. If given enough notice prior to making their budget, the provincial treasurer and premier could probably adjust to that. However, they cannot do it on the basis of a few days' notice. That is the reason why much of the difficulty has occurred. The minister overlooks that.

In handling the situation vis-à-vis Quebec, instead of making a cause célèbre out of the situation, the Minister of Finance would have been much better to have been completely flexible. I am convinced he has done a great deal more to strengthen the hand of the Quebec government than to weaken it. Also, having two different formulae and two different tax years as a basis for paying this rebate will continue to rankle among the provinces. It was totally unnecessary. There could have been a uniform arrangement. There is no reason why the minister could not have paid the $40 million to Quebec and put them on the $100 deduction for the tax year 1978. If the minister had done that, he would have saved himself a lot of headaches.

Mr. Chrétien: I am pleased to hear the hon. member say that I should have consulted even more. I would like him to talk to his leader who, the day before the budget, got up in this House and asked me to tell the House and the nation that I had not fulfilled my obligation as the Minister of Finance to budget secrecy, that by talking to the provinces I had done away with the great British tradition of having no one know anything about the budget beforehand.

The hon. member has more experience than his leader. Perhaps he will teach him a lesson on that. I may not have had enough consultation, but it was much too much for the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. He felt I had betrayed the great British tradition of secrecy where, some years ago, the minister of finance only informed his cabinet colleagues hours before presenting his budget.

I say to the hon. member that this was not done in any rush manner. I first raised the problem at the meeting I had with the finance ministers in October. It was felt that the problem in the economy was too low a demand and that we had to stimulate that demand.

When I raised the question with them in October, there was some interest, although not much. I again raised it in the month of January. There was more interest, but no agreement. For three weeks before the budget I tried to negotiate an agreement with all the provinces. Eight were involved—Alberta with no sales tax was not involved—and they agreed to the procedure I set out to deal with this problem in a difficult situation. Everyone said yes except Mr. Parizeau of Quebec. He came along 48 hours later with a different scheme. It was too late for the other provinces to do the same because they had already introduced their own legislation.

In terms of the problem for the treasury, if there is an increase of something like 15 per cent over normal sales in the six month period, the provinces will generate enough money to cover their one third of the cost. In fact, I have heard some reports from the treasurers of the different provinces. They are very pleased with the increased retail tax revenue following the cut. They only have to pay one third of the cut, and there has been a 15 to 20 per cent increase. The added revenue they receive will certainly compensate for their losses.

I have done my best. I am the first to say that the mechanism is not perfect. I have tried to involve the provinces for the first time in history in attempting to develop an economic policy that makes sense for everybody. Some say that I went a bit too far. Others have told me that I was naive not to force everyone to sign an agreement before the night of the budget.

● (1712)

It was not, in my judgment, naivete. It was—

Mr. Stevens: Incompetence.

Mr. Chrétien: Having regard to the hon. member's great success in banking, he would be well advised to shut up.

Mr. Stevens: Go on. Tell us about it. Tell us about the banking.

Mr. Chrétien: I considered the separatist minister of finance from Quebec not as a separatist but as a minister of finance who was there to do what was best along with the ministers from the other provinces to stimulate the Canadian economy. Some say I should have forecast that he wanted to throw a wrench into the gears of a good federal scheme, but I do not apologise for treating him as a normal minister of finance. If I had got up in this chamber on the night of the budget and said: "I am sorry, I did not try because I could not trust the Quebec government since they do not share the same goal of a prosperous Canada as we do", everyone would have laughed at me and said: "Chrétien, you are wrong; you should have treated all the ministers of finance equally".

What I want to say is this: I have tried to do something that no Minister of Finance has tried to do before. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands will recognize that as being the case. Never before has the federal Minister of Finance gone to Saskatchewan to discuss a federal budget before introducing it into the House. At the time the hon. member was premier, if I am not mistaken, cabinet ministers were informed what was in the budget on the day of the budget. So I think I have come a long way from a tradition which, in my judgment, no longer makes much sense as long as speculation in the marketplace is avoided.

I believe there should be more consultation. Indeed, it is my opinion that some of these matters should be referred to a committee of the House so that an input might be made not only by the very good advisers we have within the department but by the House of Commons on certain specific questions. I have already made a reference this year of commodity tax problems to a committee of this House so that the subject can be examined and recommendations made. I do not know whether I shall accept them or not but I should like to have input from both sides of the House before I make up my mind. The process is not easy, because if the public are allowed to know too much about what one is thinking there is a risk of speculation which could lead to major difficulties. Any attempt to combine the British tradition of secrecy of the budget with, if I might use the phrase, participatory democracy involves some risk, but I have taken many risks since I became Minister of Finance and I am willing to take that one too.

To return to the Quebec situation, if Mr. Parizeau had replied to me by saying that my proposition of two weeks ago to the effect that a $100 deduction based on the Quebec taxpayer list of 1978 was acceptable, and would have confirmed the Quebec situation to the others, I would have been pleased. But one of the problems is that although the flow of money is going into the economy of the other provinces right away, in the case of Quebec, since there is no agreement, there is $186 million which I keep in my treasury. If I want that money to go into the Quebec economy, I have to take the 1977 taxpayer list and send the taxpayers their rebate right away. Otherwise they have to wait until we have the 1978 list. That list will be available only in 1979, and so the money will not be in the Quebec economy, in theory, until the spring of next year. Since I was dealing with a budget intended to stimulate the economy right away, I think I have to move quickly. That is why I am proposing my present course.

There is, of course, another element, though people forget about it. Because we are dealing directly with Quebec taxpayers and not collecting the taxes for Quebec, there are some 200,000 Quebeckers who will not receive a rebate if I take the list of 1978, for the reason that since we have deducted for them $100 so far this year, in January or February or later, they will not qualify at all. It is only those who pay between $100 and $185 in taxes who will qualify. So we would have eliminated 200,000 Quebec citizens from being entitled to that credit.

I do not know what Mr. Parizeau will do. Perhaps he will decide to tax back. He has not told anybody yet. Perhaps he will consider adjusting income tax rates, perhaps he will consider adjusting the sales tax or the corporation tax. I do not know. I have to treat the taxpayers of Quebec on the basis of the knowlege I presently have, and on that basis, if I want the money to flow into the provincial economy and if I do not want to penalize 200,000 taxpayers in Quebec, I have to take the taxpayers list of 1977. That is the only one available to me at this time. I will then send those taxpayers a tax rabate based upon the tax they paid last year.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, the minister is worried about the 200,000 taxpayers who won't be covered if this matter is left until 1978. He is saying nothing about the hundreds of thousands of people who buy goods but will not get any rebate because they do not earn enough to pay income tax.

He said to the provinces: We want you to reduce your retail sales tax as being the fastest way to get money into circulation, to give the economy a shot in the arm. Would it not have been comparatively simple to have said instead: We will make an estimate, which can be adjusted at the end of the fiscal year, as to what it will cost you to cut your tax either 3 per cent across the board for six months or 2 per cent across the board for nine months, or even to make selective adjustments, and we will pay you in cash 90 per cent of what our share would be, and make the adjustment at the end of the year? We may owe them some money, or they may owe us some money, but we will have paid them whatever is the federal government's share of reducing the sales tax in a lump sum that would have gone into the treasury and been available to everybody.

What the minister is now proposing is to hand money out to taxpayers, many of whom do not need it. The amount of money they are getting bears no relation whatsoever to what they have paid by way of sales tax, as compared with others who are going to get nothing although they may have paid a great deal in sales tax, being responsible for bringing up large families. I have never understood why the minister made this so complicated.

May I say one other thing to the minister. He is quite incorrect when he says my hon. friend from Oshawa-Whitby took exception to the minister's consulting the premiers. The day before the budget my hon. friend objected to the fact that the press was already reporting that aspect. He did not know the premiers were being consulted; the minister told us later they were being consulted. My hon. friend was objecting to the press being informed and to leaks of information.

We in the party have never held to any sacred tradition by virtue of which provincial governments or other agencies of government were not to be consulted before a budget was bought down. There may, it is true, be certain instances in which a person would make a killing on the stock market by having advance information about certain forms of taxes which were to be proposed, but this happens very seldom.

I do know something about the preparation of budgets, having prepared some 18 of them. Not only have I consulted with my cabinet but I have consulted with my caucus, and sometimes with my party, as well as with representatives of the municipalities through their organization. There is no need for all the traditional secrecy. I agree with the minister as to that and I am glad he is moving away from the old tradition. But he has yet to convince me that this cumbersome way of compensating for the reduction in sales tax has been justified.

I get the impression that the government has been clutching at straws. The government recognizes, as does everyone with an elementary knowledge of economic rules, that the way to get the economy moving is to put purchasing power into the pockets of people with low incomes. We all recognize that today we are not suffering from inflation. If we were suffering from inflation, we would be producing more goods. We do not have a situation in which too much money is chasing too few goods. We are not operating at more than 82 per cent of our capacity. Our problem is that the people who have money do not need any more goods so they are reinvesting it.

• (1722)

Those who need goods do not have the money to buy them, and therefore the minister is quite right in recognizing that we do have to stimulate the economy. But how did the government stimulate it? It tried to do so by cutting corporation taxes. When the predecessor to the minister's predecessor, Mr. Turner, was cutting corporation taxes, we told him that corporations would not invest money—even if they had tax cuts—when they were not using the capacity they had.

Now this minister has clutched at another straw. He says he talked to the finance ministers at the finance ministers' conference—I think that was in January—and that there were discussions for a while at the first ministers' conference in February. But was any specific proposal put before them? I know there may have been casual reference to the fact that if retail sales taxes were cut, that would give the economy a shot in the arm; but was any specific proposal put before them? Did the federal government say it was prepared to pay the majority or part of the cost to reduce sales taxes in order to get money into circulation, particularly among low-income people? If a proposition like that were put before the first ministers or finance ministers, I think they would have accepted it; but to put it before them after they had made up their budgets and finished two conferences at which no agreement was reached really was to make their situations worse. The minister has made the situation difficult for the provinces and difficult for himself, but totally unnecessarily. I ask him specifically whether a concrete proposal was put before the finance ministers or before the first ministers when they met in January and February?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, in a way we put forward a precise proposition to the ministers of finance in October. The proposal was to reduce sales taxes by two points. I was to pay half and the provinces were to pay half. That was rejected on or about October 10, 1977.

We kept talking about it. There were discussions among officials and ministers, and we made some progress. It was not discussed at the first ministers' conference because we felt it should be dealt with at the finance ministers' level. I do not think I took anybody by surprise. The provinces were well informed six months prior to the budget that this was my priority. I was trying to get agreement.

The hon. member asks why we did not adjust cash payments to the provinces and let them have all the freedom they wanted with that money. I tried to find a way to put money into circulation without having to make a federal government expenditure. If I signed cheques amounting to $800 million, I would have been obliged to write that amount into my expenditures, and the provinces could have used that money to cut taxes. I know the NDP would not have objected to that approach, but many people would have considered me a big spender politician if I had added $800 million to my expenditures. I wanted to find a way which would not add to my expenditures, but which would put money into circulation. Under the scheme I am reducing my take by about $800 million and making room for the provinces so that they can raise their income taxes.

The hon. member wonders why we did not give the provinces freedom. We gave them freedom. At the beginning I told them I wanted to cut sales taxes and we discussed how to do that. I proposed that we pay the totality of the money to the maritimes because they could not afford to participate. They do not have a manufacturing base, and they can ill afford to go into a scheme like this. Everyone agreed that that made sense.

I told Alberta that there was nothing in this scheme for Alberta. I told the Alberta finance minister that I would like to help him by cutting his sales tax. He laughed and said that Alberta has no sales tax. I told him Alberta would not be involved but that he should not be too nervous because there would be other things in the budget to please some sector of Alberta's economy. That is why there is a special provision in the budget for the heavy oil schemes which are of great interest to Alberta.

There were all kinds of suggestions made by all the other provinces as to how to cut sales taxes. We decided to call a meeting in Ottawa of the officials of all the different governments. They were to come to Ottawa for a full day. We even provided for two days if that much time would be necessary to work out the details.

Some officials said they did not want to cut their sales taxes on alcohol, cigarettes and recreation. Ontario officials said that because they had just raised those taxes. They said putting money into that area would not stimulate the economy. The officials agreed among themselves that this scheme would not apply to those three commodities. B.C. and Saskatchewan had a different problem because, being on both sides of Alberta, if they were to cut sales taxes by three points for six months there would be a lot of political pressure not to reintroduce them later on. However, they said that the two-point scheme would make more sense and would be less difficult.

I proposed that they cut their sales taxes two points for nine months rather than three points for six months. We discussed that with the other provinces. I made the same offer to the other provinces, and nobody else was interested. Now I am being asked why this was not discussed. A question was asked by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi with respect to selective sales taxes. This was not raised by Quebec at all at the time of the negotiations, so we could not forecast that Quebec wanted that. Quebec did not express its views about it or show any interest in it, so I could not make an offer, discuss it or call a meeting on it.

On the day of the budget Mr. Parizeau said he had no answer for me, contrary to the agreement we had. He came along 48 hours later with his special way of cutting taxes. I do not want to judge whether his scheme is good or bad; it is within his jurisdiction. He did what he wanted to do, and that is fine with me. Mr. McKeough did the same thing in Ontario two years ago with his own money. I was informed at three o'clock in the afternoon on the Wednesday following the budget that the sales tax in Quebec would be cut selectively at six o'clock that night. There was no consultation. I was informed three hours prior as to what was to be done unilaterally. The question was whether I could accept that and whether I would pay for it. I told Mr. Parizeau that that was not part of the deal which had been agreed upon by the others and that I did not know what I would do.

Before I gave him my answer I called some other ministers of finance and told them what Quebec was doing on its own. I told them that Quebec would like to qualify for the national scheme. Three ministers of finance said that it was too late; they had already announced the scheme in their own jurisdictions. Their sales taxes had been cut since that Monday night, and it was now too late for them to make the same choice. I had given my word with regard to a procedure to all ministers of finance. I tried to get them to agree to Mr. Parizeau's scheme, but they said "no way". I had given my word to the ministers of finance prior to the budget. The proposition was on the table. It was agreed upon as the most sensible way to cut sales taxes.

Since there was no agreement with the other finance ministers with regard to the Quebec proposal, I could not agree. I had given my word to the ministers of finance and I evolved the scheme with them during the three weeks. Mr. Parizeau decided to go unilaterally, but under the scheme the province was qualified to receive $40 million only and we decided to pay it as a result of the tax collection agreement.

Hon. members will see that under this act there is provision for an adjustment at the end of the year. We forecast that in the reduction of income tax in Ontario, $100 will be too much for the cut in the sales tax, so that province will have to pay us back some $56 million; but in the case of British Columbia, it will not be enough and we will have to add $90 million and make an adjustment at the end of the year after verifying their books.

We did not come to an agreement with Quebec that would be acceptable to other ministers of finance; that is why we had this unpleasant confrontation. I am sorry about it; I did not provoke it, and I meant well. I even wanted to do something which was proposed by the Tory critic in a memorandun to members of his caucus in January in which he said they had to keep pressing the federal government for a scheme to cut sales tax at the retail level. This memo was read in the House by the Minister of Public Works, proposing a scheme to cut sales tax at the retail level. There were other proposals.

Mr. Stevens: You mean, the federal tax.

Mr. Chrétien: No. I will read it later. It mentioned the federal sales tax and also the provincial tax. I know the hon. member changes his mind according to the political mood, but he concluded at that time that cutting sales tax at the retail level was the most efficient way of doing it. There was a consensus on that. That is what I tried to do. Perhaps I am imputing motives to Mr. Parizeau.

Mr. Stevens: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The minister has referred to a memorandun allegedly written by myself in which I said that the provincial sales tax was the proper approach. I would like him to produce that memorandum.

Mr. Chrétien: I quoted what the Minister of Public Works read to the House from a text which he attributed to the hon. member for York-Simcoe. If the hon. member wishes to deny he ever wrote such a memorandum, I will accept his word and later I will produce the document.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Will you produce it?

Mr. Chrétien: If you did not say that, then say so.

Mr. Stevens: Produce it.

Mr. Chrétien: I do not have the document.

Mr. Stevens: You are wrong, again.

Mr. Chrétien: If the hon. member denies he ever wrote such a piece, let him say so. I just said I had good reason to believe that when the Minister of Public Works spoke, he spoke with some knowledge. We will find out where he got his documentation. I do not have it with me. I am just saying that in the case of Quebec, they did not want to agree to the national scheme. I said, and I repeat, that I am not surprised. In their view of Canada, any good thing that is proposed by the federal government is not in their political interests. We know what their political interests are. Their political interests are to prove that confederation has never worked, is not working now, and will never work in the future. It was in their political interests to throw a wrench into the gears of my scheme. I said they did not want to try it, but I worked in good faith and treated them as I treat any other government, as is proper so long as they are part of confederation.

What Quebec did, after eight provinces had reached agreement, was to come 48 hours later and say to us that they wanted something else. I have no choice: I will pay them $40 million and I will pay $85 to each Quebec taxpayer right away. If Mr. Parizeau wishes to collect it back in taxes, that is within his jurisdiction and he can do so. It is up to him, not me. If he wishes to incur a bigger deficit, that is his option. I am not running his shop. We are reducing the tax of the federal taxpayers in Quebec right away so that the money will be in their pockets as quickly as possible.

Mr. Stevens: That is the good political way of doing it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I see that the hon. member for York-Simcoe wishes to speak and I will certainly not monopolize this discussion. I just want to say two things with respect to what the minister has just said.

First of all, I find it absolutely appalling that a Minister of Finance would say the reason he adopted a clumsy technique of making rebates, which is inequitable and unjust, rather than paying cash to the provincial governments for tax collection which they have forgone, is that by so doing he would have enlarged his budget by some $800 million and would have been criticized for it. Surely, it is incomprehensible that a minister would adopt such a clumsy, unworkable and administratively difficult process.

Mr. Chrétien: It is not at all difficult.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister shakes his head. We will see before he is finished with it. I have watched rebates. I have watched the Social Credit government of Alberta making payments to every citizen who was to get a certain share of the oil revenue. Some people were paid twice, many people were not paid, and some dead people were paid. The minister has not finished with that one yet. I think it is administratively clumsy, unfair and inequitable. The only reason the minister gave for it was that if he had adopted a more simple procedure, he would have added several hundred million dollars to the budget and would have been criticized. The people of Canada would not be so naive as to criticize him if they recognized that the money was being used to enable provincial governments to reduce their sales tax for a short period of time. The minister does not have much faith in the public if he advances that as an argument: it is a very weak argument indeed.

The other point I want to make is that when the minister outlines, as he has several times, his quarrel with the government of Quebec with respect to selective sales tax cuts, he gives as his reason the fact that the other provinces were not in agreement and thought an agreement had been entered into and, therefore, Quebec should be required to make a lateral tax cut rather than a selective tax cut as they did.

I do not think the minister has always felt it necessary to follow what the provinces have done. If the provinces had chosen to select an across-the-board tax cut, they should have been prepared to accept it. They agreed to that, and I do not see why they should have objected to a selective tax cut, because one of the values of a selective tax cut is not only that it would reduce the taxes paid by the consumer, but it would, at the same time, stimulate local industry. Certainly, if British Columbia had had the opportunity to cut taxes on building materials in order to stimulate housing, it would have had a double effect: it would have reduced the expenditures of the consumer and, at the same time, given quite a fillip to the forest products industry.

Therefore, I think the main objective the minister had in mind was to stimulate the economy, and whether a province wanted to do it by lateral tax cuts or by selective tax cuts was, it seems to me, totally irrelevant. I remind the minister that that is not the reason he gave to the House when he was debating the matter on second reading and when we were discussing changes in the ways and means motion. The minister then said that to allow any province to apply selective tax cuts was equivalent to putting up tariffs, and that was protectionism. That is sheer nonsense. It would have been protectionism if a province had said, "We will cut the tax for those things that are produced in our province, but if a product comes in from another province the sales tax will apply." That would have been protectionism. But to remove a portion of the sales tax, or all of it, from any single commodity which would be of benefit to whatever province produced it would have been of benefit to the economy and would certainly have been of benefit to the consumer.

I am not going to belabour this any longer, but I say again to the minister that the difficulty in which he finds himself results from lack of long-term planning. Much of this difficulty could have been eliminated if the government, instead of proceeding on an ad hoc basis, trying something today and something else next week, had sat down last fall and made a concrete proposal. The minister said he made a concrete proposal, offering provinces 50 per cent of the cost of the cut in retail sales taxes. I tell him right now that if I had been representing the provinces, I would not have accepted 50 per cent compensation from the federal government. Does the minister realize that in many of the provinces, retail sales tax revenue is one of the most important items—the largest item in some of them? To ask the provinces to absorb half the cost of that reduction would be asking them to assume a burden they cannot afford. Therefore, the minister could not have expected anything else. If he was going to offer to put up two-thirds, he should have made that offer last October, rather than making it a couple of weeks before the announcement in the budget.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I heard the rather weepy tale of the minister respecting how we arrived at the position we are in today regarding provincial sales tax cuts. Could the minister be a little more specific as to the situation at present, as opposed to telling us how he got into his present difficulties? Specifically, we have the letter of June 7 which the minister appended to Hansard of June 8. Has the minister replied in writing to the letter from the minister of finance for Quebec?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I talked to the minister of finance of Quebec on the phone on Monday.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: I take it from the minister's comment that he has not gone to the extent of sending a formal, written reply; is that correct?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: I think, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Parizeau's letter gave me complete liberty to choose one option or the other. I talked to him on the phone on Monday, and I advised him of the government's intentions at that time.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Could the minister advise hon. members of the gist of what he told Mr. Parizeau would be the government's position?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: I told him exactly what I announced in the House of Commons yesterday evening, namely that we intended to proceed with clause 30(b).

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the minister has repeated quite frequently, and again today during the debate, that Mr. Parizeau has accepted his position in respect of the $85 tax rebate to Quebeckers. Would the minister listen as I read into the record certain portions of Mr. Parizeau's letter, and then clarify why he feels Mr. Parizeau has accepted his government's position. In the first paragraph, Mr. Parizeau states:

Since your budget speech of April 10 last, we have had several opportunities to explain the point of view of our respective governments concerning the federal proposal on the provincial sales tax reduction.

[Translation]

Mr. Dupras: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Labelle on a point of order.

Mr. Dupras: Mr. Chairman, I would simply like to know whether the letter the hon. member is reading is the letter read a few days ago by my colleague the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay). We could save the time of the House and this long reading because the hon. member for Lévis has already read that letter.

[English]

The Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member could answer that. I do not have the letter before me.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, like yourself, I have no idea what letter the hon. member is referring to. I am trying to do this in a relatively orderly way. I want specifically to refer to certain parts of Mr. Parizeau's letter and ask the minister for his comments. I was reading from the first paragraph, which states:

Since your budget speech of April 10 last, we have had several opportunities to explain the point of view of our respective governments concerning the federal proposal on the provincial sales tax reduction. Following our exchange of correspondence and our discussions, it seems clear that our governments disagree about the formula for the sales tax reduction in Quebec and that it would be useless to seek a formula other than the one which was approved by the Quebec government and supported unanimously by the National Assembly.

In view of that opening paragraph of Mr. Parizeau's letter, would the minister explain why he feels Mr. Parizeau accepted his proposal? I would think to most people that letter indicates exactly the reverse in the opening paragraph: it says they could not arrive at an agreement.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, if you allow me, I will add that the hon. member would have derived a lot of benefit from reading the following paragraph, which reads like this, and I quote:

In this regard, I would like to submit to you a three-part proposal which includes the various elements of solution suggested in recent weeks.

And then, he starts to describe first clause 30(b), and after that, he switches to another proposition.

Of course, it is clear; it is evident. There has been no agreement as to how Quebec could participate in the national sales tax reduction program. This much is clear. Two days after the presentation of the budget, everybody knew that. However, in his letter, Mr. Parizeau, after enumerating all the elements, comes up with a three-part proposition, and his first one corresponds exactly to clause 30(b). I concluded from that that he agreed with clause 30(b). For me, this is quite clear; it is very simple to understand.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister will be patient with us. He is leap-frogging ahead, anticipating questions I will be putting to him later. Dealing with paragraph one, if we can take them one at a time, will the minister agree with Mr. Parizeau's observation where he states:

—it seems clear that our governments disagree about the formula for the sales tax reduction in Quebec—

Is that a fair statement of the situation between the two governments?

Mr. Chrétien: We disagreed, Mr. Chairman. I have said that many times. I do not have to repeat it again.

Mr. Stevens: At least now we have established that Mr. Parizeau, when he stated in the letter that there was disagreement, was stating the truth even as it exists in the mind of the Minister of Finance. Let us go to the second paragraph of Mr. Parizeau's letter, where it is stated:

Your government therefore accepts to pay to Quebec in one form or another the federal contribution originally offered in its provincial sales tax reduction proposal, which amounts to $226 million. Recognition of this principle should have led to a settlement between our two governments. You have not accepted that.

Will the minister indicate whether Mr. Parizeau is correct in that observation?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I think I made one, two, three, four, five different propositions to Mr. Parizeau. The first one he ever made was in this letter of June 7. Prior to that he unilaterally cut sales taxes. I would make this one point to the committee, Mr. Chairman, as a lawyer, that if a lawyer were to proceed in that way before a judge, he would soon find himself out of a job.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, whether the minister likes it or not, all we are trying to do is seek the truth in one way or another and, hopefully, we will get it on the record. If the minister could bring his attention back to paragraph two of Mr. Parizeau's letter, I would be pleased if he would tell the House whether the observation of Mr. Parizeau which I read into the record is correct; that is, the $226 million sales tax reduction proceeds to which Mr. Parizeau thought Quebec was entitled were, in fact, not agreed to between the two governments. Is Mr. Parizeau correct in the observation to which I referred in paragraph two of this letter?

● (1752)

Mr. Chrétien: If I have said it once, I have said it a thousand times in the last two months: there was no agreement. I made a deal with eight ministers of finance. One did not make a deal. That is clear in French, English, Greek, Spanish or joual, and should not have to be repeated.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, at least now we have it established that there was no disagreement in the minister's mind with respect to Mr. Parizeau's observations in paragraphs one and two and that they in fact had not agreed. I wish the minister would in future quit creating the aura that somehow or other there has been at last an agreement between Mr. Parizeau and himself. I could come to the next matter which I believe the minister refers to as either clause 30(a) or (b); I am not sure of the letter he attaches to it. I refer the minister to the fourth paragraph of Mr. Parizeau's letter. It reads:

> Second, if you do not intend to amend Bill C-56, the government of Quebec will take the necessary action to recover a global amount equivalent to the sum which otherwise would have been paid to the province by the federal government. However, should the federal government choose to amend Bill C-56 and pay the balance of $186 million through a personal income tax reduction at the end of the 1978 fiscal year, the government of Quebec might consider recovering that amount through a special tax equivalent to the federal rebate.

My question to the minister dealing with the fourth paragraph is this: Why does he imply that Mr. Parizeau is accepting his position, when in this paragraph he makes it so clear, "if you do not intend to amend Bill C-56, the government of Quebec will take the necessary action to recover a global amount . . . ? I would think that any ordinary person, reading that paragraph, would conclude that Mr. Parizeau is basically saying, "If you will not accommodate us in the way I am suggesting; if you will not amend"—presumably, clause 30; the clause we are now dealing with—"we will take steps to collect, in a global amount, the equivalent of the sum which otherwise would be coming to us." Would the minister explain why he wants that, and implies that Mr. Parizeau is now agreeing with what he is doing in clause 30?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I repeat it for the umpteenth time. In this regard, says Mr. Parizeau, I am submitting a three-part proposal: Point No. 1: $40 million cash; point No. 2: 30(b); point No. 3: the other proposal he made. These proposals are put forward by Mr. Parizeau and are in accordance with the bill. So I do not think I am putting words in Mr. Parizeau's mouth; indeed, he said so himself on television. I understand the hon. member was unable to follow him on television, but I did hear him as did many others, and here is what he said: As far as we are concerned, we can live with Mr. Chrétien's proposal. That was a surprise in Quebec and I was surprised as well, because in the previous weeks, strong words were used to discredit this proposal. It was unfair and so on. No word was strong enough to describe how bad the situation was.

In his letter dated June 7, 1978, he said: I am submitting a proposal to you and that was precisely what he could not admit . . .

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, does the minister not sense the important constitutional differences between what he is saying and what has been represented by the National Assembly to be a better approach with respect to the handling of this provincial sales tax matter in Quebec? As I understand it—and this is the reason I have gone through this letter paragraph by paragraph—it is abundantly clear that what the Minister of Finance—

[Translation]

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Lévis on a point of order.

Mr. Guay: Mr. Chairman, since this debate started, members of the opposition have kept referring to the unanimity in the Quebec National Assembly. They say: they agreed on a resolution, all opposition parties, the Liberal party, the PNP, and all parties agreed on a resolution. I would like to ask the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) whether they—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member will agree with me that his point of order is a question that could be put to the minister and a point he could make in a contribution of his choice and that it has nothing to do with order. It is quite simply a difference of opinion with other members.

Mr. Guay: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Lévis on a question of privilege.

Mr. Guay: Mr. Chairman, I want to point out to the Chair that as a member of this House I am quite simply asking hon. members of the opposition what they are talking about, what is in that resolution and I think I have the right to do so because I know exactly what is in it—

The Chairman: Order. This is a question the hon. member could have put on second reading and which he can put in the debate now in the process of taking part in the debate but not under a point of order or a question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, if I could continue with my question to the minister, the thrust of it was simply this: does the minister not see the constitutional differences between the approach that he is insisting on taking with respect to the payment of $85 to individual taxpayers in Quebec, compared to the suggested alternative, which would simply be to make provision within the 1978 income tax payment for a $85 deduction from the federal tax otherwise payable by residents in Quebec and in anticipation of that $85 being taken up by the provincial government in Quebec as they see fit? In short, that would put Quebec on virtually all fours with the other eight provinces but would reserve the constitutional problem about which the minister seems to be so careless.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member is no better with constitutional problems than he is with banking problems. There is no problem with the constitution. Mr. Parizeau has the power to do as he wishes within his jurisdiction, as I have in my jurisdiction. There is no problem with the constitution in the way the government pays the money. It could be a matter of agreement between the two governments. I am merely cutting the income tax of federal taxpayers in Quebec. There is no problem with the constitution in that. The hon. member should have someone explain to him that one plus one equals two.

The Chairman: Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

● (2002)

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, before dinner I was discussing with the minister his general reaction to the Parizeau letter of June 7. I was asking whether the minister did not feel there was a constitutional problem in the way he has persisted in handling the payment of $85 to residents of Quebec, compared to the much easier system he used with the other provinces, which was simply giving a reduction for 1978 of $85 with respect to federal tax. That would be something in which residents of Quebec could share, and in turn the Quebec government would simply take over the room given up by the federal government.

I was making the point that if the minister had co-operated in following that approach, he would have been in a similar position to that which he is now working out with the other eight provinces, which is presumably an approach that would be acceptable not only to Mr. Parizeau but to the majority of members of the National Assembly.

It makes such sweet, reasonable sense that once again I ask the minister why he persists in doing it the hard way, as opposed to the relatively easy way of giving a reduction of $85 to the residents of Quebec in 1978 similar to the $100 he is giving the other provinces, and let the Quebec government adjust their own tax structure to take up the $85. The two things would dovetail during 1978 and the minister would avoid the confrontation which he seems to relish with the Quebec government.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I have explained the situation many times, but I suppose I have to repeat it. I have answered that type of question since April 12, but the hon. member still does not seem to understand. There was no agreement with Quebec to cut sales taxes. They left $186 million on the table. The government decided not to penalize the citizens of Quebec because there was no agreement. We decided, within our own jurisdiction, to cut income tax up to $85 with that money for Quebec residents who pay taxes. We chose 1977 over 1978 because we wanted that money to be in the Quebec economy right away. If we had waited, the money would not have been in the Quebec economy until next spring. If Mr. Parizeau has to raise some money because he made a miscalculation in his budget, he can do it tomorrow. He could have done it yesterday. He can do whatever he wants, in his jurisdiction.

If he needs more money because he could not come to terms with the federal government, that is up to him. He can raise sales taxes, he can raise income taxes, he can raise corporation taxes, he can invent a new tax within his own jurisdiction. We decided that $186 million was available, but he did not take it up in the national program so we are sending back to Quebec taxpayers amounts up to $85. We want it to be done as quickly as possible.

We do not know what kind of system Mr. Parizeau will choose in order to raise this money or other moneys. Some 200,000 people in Quebec will not receive the $85. Because we had already given a tax exemption of $100 in January and February, we chose 1977, as well as the fact that the money will come into the economy right away. The problem did not arise in the other provinces, because there was a national agreement with them. We reduced our income tax and they increased theirs and used the money to cut the sales tax in the way we wanted. The money is flowing into provincial coffers because of the agreement between the other provinces and the federal government. The money will flow into the provincial economies from April 10 until October 10.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, in answer to an earlier question, I believe the minister stated that one of the reasons he did not want to make a payment to the other provinces who preferred to go the deduction route was that he did not want to pass through the expenditure column at the federal level whatever the amount would have been, say $800 million. I think he pointed to the members on this side of the House as those who would have complained if he had increased his spending. Would the minister state if I am correct in understanding that as one of the reasons for his favouring the deduction route for the other provinces, as opposed to some type of expenditure route?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, what we have done is simple. We decided the night of the budget that we would reduce personal income tax where there was an agreement for cutting sales tax. Legally, the only thing we have done is reduce personal income tax by $100 in provinces except Quebec and Alberta, for different reasons. We asked the provinces, in return, to raise income tax and, with the proceeds, reduce sales tax.

The federal government will verify the books at the end of the year. If we have cut our tax too much in relation to the amount the provinces need, they are to return some money to us. On the other hand, if we have not cut income tax enough and the provinces spend more in reducing sales tax, the federal government will compensate for the difference. What we have done is to reduce the income tax of federal taxpayers in all the provinces except Quebec and Alberta.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the minister will save a lot of time this evening if he will try to answer the questions. Specifically, did I understand him correctly when he explained why he chose to go the reduction route which he has just described with the other provinces? Did he say that one of the reasons he did not want to go through an expenditure increase was that he did not want to go through some type of assistance whereby he would be paying money to the provinces and it would show in the spending estimates of the government? Instead, he felt it was more desirable to simply reduce their income tax revenue and in that way it would not be an expenditure increase when he worked out his deal with the other eight provinces: is that correct?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I said this afternoon, and I repeat it: yes. One reason was that we were to reduce our income tax, thus making room for the provinces who agreed to raise their own income tax and with their profits they would cut their sales tax. We operated in that way because it was the best way to reduce our taxes—in other words, our take from taxpayers federally—and make sure that the money was directed in the best way to stimulate the economy.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, the minister has now agreed that one of the reasons he chose that route with the other eight provinces was that he did not have to increase his spending at the federal level. Would he indicate why he chose to increase his spending as far as Quebec was concerned? Why has he adopted a concept of paying $85 per person to residents of Quebec which will increase spending in some fiscal year?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the $85 for taxpayers of Quebec is a reduction in taxes. We will be reducing the taxes of those taxpayers by $85. It will not be seen as an expenditure. It is a reduction of taxes on the taxes we received from those taxpayers in 1977. It is not an expenditure.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I suppose we should all study to see how the minister twists an $85 payment going back to the residents of Quebec into something that he said is not a federal expenditure. I am willing to acknowledge that he is pigeon-holing it; he is neatly saying that in his mind the $85 is a refund on 1977 tax payable. But I suggest that surely it has to go through an account somewhere and would normally show as an expenditure, perhaps with respect to refunds in a previous year, in this case 1978.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, it is a reduction of the tax paid by taxpayers in 1977. It is not an expenditure; it is a reduction of the tax liability of Quebec taxpayers for 1977. That is not a payment and it will not be written in the books as an expenditure of the government. It will be a reduction of the revenue, which is another way of saying a reduction in taxes.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, let us put it this way. Will the Quebec moneys, whether they are an expenditure, a refund, a reduction or however the minister would like to term it, be reflected in the 1978 fiscal year for the government?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, will the bulk of the refunds, reductions or whatever with regard to payments of the amounts going to those who live in the other eight provinces be reflected in the government's 1979 fiscal year?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: The situation is the same, Mr. Chairman, because the tax cuts will be made during 1978 in the other provinces. As I am speaking, the federal government is collecting $100 less for every taxpayer in the other provinces, except Quebec and Alberta, and at the same time, Ontario and Manitoba taxpayers are paying their respective provincial governments $100 more, and with their profits, these provinces are reducing their taxes. As we are collecting their taxes on their behalf, we are of course making payments to them on a six month basis beginning in April.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I will take another run at it. The minister has identified the fact that the Quebec payment, be it a refund, an expenditure or whatever, will fall into the federal government's fiscal 1978 figures; in other words, the March 31, 1978, fiscal year end. My second question was, where will the other amount fall: will it fall into fiscal 1979?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: In both cases, Mr. Chairman, the payments will be made during the taxpayers' year, because the taxpayers' year is not the same as the government's fiscal year. The taxpayers' year is 1978. The government's fiscal year is from April 1, 1978 to March 31, 1979. In both cases, payments will be made on the basis of the 1978-79 income year; as to the federal government's revenues, that is the 1978-79 fiscal year.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I thought I understood the minister first of all when we were dealing with 1977 payments in Quebec. But how can he say that the payments he will be sending to Quebec residents will fall into fiscal 1978—in other words, in the current year, March 31, 1979—while five minutes ago he was telling us that it was not an expenditure this year but a refund of 1977 income taxes? Surely the minister cannot have it both ways: it is something that will be reflected in fiscal 1978—which I presume it is, if it is a refund for 1977 taxes—or, in fact, it is not as he has been representing it to be, and that is a refund for 1977. Would the minister clarify that? I am talking about two different types of situations. As far as the fiscal books are concerned, will the Quebec payments be relfected in fiscal 1978 and, second, will the payments with respect to the other provinces be reflected in fiscal 1979?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the reductions will fall into the federal government's fiscal year 1978-79. In making those reimbursements to Quebec taxpayers based on the reduction of tax liability for 1977, the cash loss will be seen in the fiscal year 1978-79 for the federal government. It is exactly the same thing for the cash that we are losing in relation to the other provinces. It will fall within the fiscal year 1978-79 in terms of cash requirements for the federal government.

● (2022)

Mr. Stevens: As we have been contemplating certain amendments to clause 30, will the minister indicate whether he would entertain an amendment which would have the effect of simply putting the Quebec situation on a basis comparable to that of other provinces, rather than having this $85 going out in a cheque in relation to 1977? The thrust of our amendment would be simply to make the $85 a deduction with respect to 1978 for residents of Quebec.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I cannot accept that proposal because it would not be acceptable to the Quebec government. In his letter, Mr. Parizeau demanded in addition the payment of interest, something which was not provided in all payments made to the other provinces and since that aspect is not acceptable this is why we are not prepared to entertain any amendment to clause 30(a) or 30(b).

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, will the minister clarify whether it is simply the payment of interest that is the reason he does not want to go along with that proposal, or are there other reasons why he does not want to accept the proposal I have made?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: On several occasions, I explained to the House all the reasons why the government has suggested when it introduced Bill C-56 an immediate refund of $85 to Quebec taxpayers. We wanted that incentive to be injected immediately in the Quebec economy. We also wanted to cover 200,000 taxpayers who would not be included if we take the 1978 taxpayers' roll because having already received a $100 reduction, then they would not qualify for the $85 refund. The third reason is that if I agreed to the proposal of the hon. member for York-Simcoe, the money would be injected into the Quebec economy only in the spring of 1979 and in the case of taxpayers filing their income tax return late, either in March or April, before the tax returns could be analysed and finalized many among them would receive their refund only in June and even perhaps in July 1979.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the minister a few questions as to numbers, particularly in relation to the Quebec situation vis-à-vis the other provinces which have accepted 3 per cent across-the-board. If the province of Quebec had instituted the 3 per cent across-the-board tax cut, what would each percentage point have cost? What is the estimate in dollars?

Mr. Chrétien: If Quebec had complied with the national scheme, it was calculated that the total amount that would be flowing would be $225 million for two points. They had to put into play half of it as their contribution. It was to cost them $112 million, that is, if they had complied like Ontario and Manitoba. That varies from province to province according to the amount of money collected on sales tax.

Mr. Ritchie: Will the minister tell us what the estimated 1 per cent is in selective tax cuts? How much is that worth in relation to the $113 million total across-the-board? What is the total the department estimated as the 1 per cent although, as the minister says, they must give 2 per cent?

Mr. Chrétien: Across Canada?

Mr. Ritchie: How much is 1 per cent of the selective tax cuts which the province of Quebec instituted? What is the estimated loss to the provincial treasury?

Mr. Chrétien: With regard to the selective system they have adopted, we have calculated that two points for six months would be $40 million, more or less, subject to verification. Therefore, it is $20 million per point on the selection of the four items.

Mr. Ritchie: I believe the Quebec tax is 8 per cent. Assuming it is 8 per cent, the abatement or loss of tax to the province would be $160 million. Is that correct?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, for six months. However, they decided to cut for a full year. That is why they calculated it would cost them $320 million. We are not sure about those figures. It will be very difficult to verify that; there is controversy about it. According to the papers, Quebec claims the cost of those cuts for one year will be $320 million. According to extrapolations by officials of the department and the treasury in Ontario, that does not seem possible. We hope to be able to determine that figure more precisely at the end of the year.

I want to advise the hon. member that this is very complicated, because when you go from eight to zero you have no base on which to verify it. When you go from seven to four, it is quite easy to verify. If they collect four, you just multiply up to seven and you know exactly their cost. However, with zero there is no base to verify precisely, as is possible in the other provinces.

Mr. Ritchie: If I recall correctly, the minister stated that his department had made an estimate. Would he care to put that estimate on the table, or does he feel he should not do that at this time?

Mr. Chrétien: We are talking about $40 million: that is the estimate we made from their figures. At the end of the year, as we do with the other provinces, we will verify that to see whether it is accurate. There is a difference in view between the treasury of Ontario and the treasury of Quebec in terms of the number of dollars. There is a difference of opinion on our side as well, but we are not into retail sales tax. I am not trying to create a controversy; that is a comment made, according to the press, by the Ontario government six or seven weeks ago. At the end of the year we will try to find a way to make sure whether it is $40 million, or less. I do not think it could be more. According to our estimates, it will be somewhat less than that.

Mr. Ritchie: I suggest to the minister that the payment of $186 million to Quebec is quite different from that being given to the province of Ontario or the province of Manitoba. In order for them to get the abatement through income tax, the room left in the $100, they must have a sales tax cut. The province of Quebec is not under the obligation to have a sales tax cut, or has not assumed it is going to have a sales tax cut. Therefore, there is a fundamental difference between the two payments. I would regard the $186 million injected into the Quebec economy as a payment to individuals. Before it can be earned in the other provinces or abated by the federal government, there must be a sales tax cut. That must reflect in the actual purchasing of consumer goods, which will stimulate business, which is what the minister indicated in the first place.

Mr. Chrétien: That is exactly the point I have been trying to make for two months. That is because Quebec has not come into the national scheme. They left on the table $186 million, because they qualified for $40 million of the $226 million which we had planned as our contribution to an across-the-board cut of two points for six months.

● (2032)

As they did not agree to the national scheme, they left $186 million on the table. Rather than penalize Quebec's citizens, we decided to cut the income tax for an equivalent amount to the benefit of taxpayers in that province. We did not sign an agreement with Quebec because Quebec did not want to sign the same agreement as the others. It was always envisaged by my ministry that if we could not get everyone to agree, there would be another income tax cut; but we preferred our policy of cutting sales taxes. We decided we would deal with the provinces in which there was a sales tax, and since there was $186 million left we further decided to cut income tax to the taxpayers in Quebec by that amount.

Mr. Ritchie: I understand that direct tax remissions made to citizens tend to be put into savings, whereas in order to save under sales tax cuts, citizens have to buy something. Has the minister any estimate of the effects of the economic stimulus brought about by the injection of $186 million into the economy as a cash payment, as opposed to the effect of cuts in sales tax of a similar amount?

Mr. Chrétien: We have not made that calculation. But I have always said I would much have preferred Quebec to join the national scheme. As the province has not done so, we have decided to cut the income tax of federal taxpayers in Quebec by $85. We recognize it would have been better for the national economy had Quebec joined in the sales tax cut agreement.

Mr. Ritchie: This is a type of non-tariff barrier by selective cuts, and at least it is a change. Presumably, Quebec looked over the range of goods it manufactured and tended to favour its own economy. In the rest of the country, Quebec would have the benefit, whatever it might be, of the lower sales tax, and in essence the provincial treasury is protected since it has lost only $20 million as far as the 3 per cent is concerned. It seems to me the effect has been a non-tariff barrier to some extent inasmuch as the Quebec sales tax has remained the same as they affect industries which are not prominent in that province.

Mr. Chrétien: The intention of the Parti Québécois is clear. They have issued communications indicating they took the course they did in a protectionist frame of mind to aid the Quebec economy. The other day the hon. member for Lévis read a letter in this House which was really quite funny. On June 3, Mr. Parizeau wrote a letter to the shoe manufacturers of Quebec who had asked him to cut the sales tax on shoes. He said that to cut the taxes from 8 per cent to zero would be no good at all; that such a policy would make no sense. That was his view in January. But he did a complete about turn in April so as to undermine the national scheme. They were doing it in the way in which the hon. member suggests, in a protectionist spirit for the sake of their own economy.

In the case of shoes, according to the letter written by Mr. Parizeau to the shoe manufacturers, more than 60 per cent of the shoes sold in Quebec do not come from Quebec. In fact, more come from Ontario than from Quebec. But the avowed intention of the government was to protect its own economy and to try to break the so-called national common market. We have not yet made a study to determine whether their scheme is better than ours. If all the provinces were to go ahead on a selective tax basis, Ontario would probably prefer to cut sales tax on automobiles, British Columbia would go for building materials, and the maritimes, Saskatchewan and Manitoba would have chosen products appropriate to them.

The argument which I used in the west was this: even though you do not have a manufacturing base of great strength, half of the cost in the retail economy is not the cost of production but the cost of services—transportation, publicity, storage, and so on. These factors make up half the cost of all goods bought from a store. That is how I persuaded them to join the scheme. It was designed to stimulate the retail business in the local economies. But the Quebec government has claimed over and over again that Mr. Parizeau was out to be a protectionist and did not give a damn about the Canadian market.

Mr. Ritchie: I understand from some figures given out at the conference held in Montreal that Quebec benefits more than any other province from the Canadian market in commodities because it produces goods which, by and large, have greater sales in the rest of Canada than do the goods of most of the other regions.

Mr. Chrétien: If we look at the general aspect of the Canadian economy, Quebec is not the province which benefits most from the domestic market. Ontario, which has a much larger share of the manufacturing sector, benefits more than Quebec. This is one of the criticisms directed at me during the preparation of my program—that I was helping Ontario more than Quebec. It could be true that this program is helping Ontario more than Quebec, but I would point out it is helping Quebec more than any of the other eight provinces. Some clothing is manufactured in Manitoba, but the part of it which goes into the local economy is less than in Quebec.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that this piece of legislation has created provinces with special status. It seems obvious that the minister was anxious to bring down a budget at this time because he was posturing in preparation for a July election. Earlier today the hon. gentleman told the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands that he would welcome input from a committee of this House, and that he was a great believer in the principle of participatory democracy. It is hard to believe this is the same minister who has brought in closure on two occasions in connection with the legislation before us. That is a fine way to support participatory democracy.

Mr. Chrétien: I wish to raise a point of order, Mr. Chairman. We have so far spent 19 days in debate on this measure. We are on clause 30, and at second reading this legislation was filibustered for 11 or 12 days. We could have reached clause 30 a long time ago. There is no precedent for such a long debate on a tax bill.

Hon. members have been rambling without dealing with the clauses. We spent two days on clause 1. There was general debate, and the hon. member is still making general comments. We had an occasion this afternoon to talk about time allocation. Hon. members opposite did not want to speak at that time; they wanted to discuss clause 30. The hon. member should ask questions and I would be happy to reply. He had 19 days in which to speak, but was not seen in the House on those days.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Chairman, my comments are related to clause 30. It is interesting, the degree to which the minister has been participating in this debate ever since he brought in closure. This afternoon, when he was speaking, he went on for approximately 15 minutes on one answer which could have been given in two minutes. If the minister is serious in criticizing me for going on, he should take a little advice himself.

Mr. Chrétien: Ask a question.

Mr. Elzinga: As has been said on many occasions in this House, Alberta has no sales tax and that is why Alberta originally agreed to the proposal put forward by the minister. However, when Albertans became aware that the minister was going to give an $85 rebate to Quebeckers for the 1977 taxation year, they became concerned. It is obvious that some individuals will participate twice under this proposal. If a Quebec resident moved to Ontario but filed his 1977 tax form in Quebec, would he be eligible for the $85 rebate, while at the same time being able to take advantage of the sales tax reductions in Ontario?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, any citizen who moves from one province to another finds himself in a different situation. If a citizen of Ontario moves to Quebec, or the reverse takes place, he will qualify because the list for 1977 is used. If somebody moves to Newfoundland, he moves to an 11 per cent sales tax rate. If he moves from Alberta, he leaves a province where there is no sales tax. It is a person's own choice. We will take the list of 1977 taxpayers. The same thing would happen if we used the 1978 list, because there is movement of people during the year.

Mr. Elzinga: It is obvious that an individual who moves out of Quebec will receive the $85 rebate. In addition, he will have the advantage of living in a province where sales tax is reduced, so in essence there will be a double benefit. Earlier this afternoon we heard from the minister about the great concessions being offered to Alberta with regard to the heavy oil industry. It should be pointed out to the minister that these concessions are not simply for Albertans; they are for all Canadians. When we review what Albertans have contributed to confederation through our oil and natural gas industries, we find that because our prices are below the world price, Alberta has saved Canadians about $10 billion. I think that is a significant contribution to confederation on the part of Albertans.

It becomes more and more obvious that this government has no concern whatsoever for the province of Alberta. This has even been stated by this government's own Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce: he has stated that the government has no feeling for Alberta whatsoever. Just to substantiate my point, I would like to read a couple of lines from the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix. In a Canadian Press story headed "Horner says Post "Lonely", we find the following:

> Jack Horner says he has had a lonely first year as federal Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.
> Horner told a nominating convention recently he is frustrated because there is no one else in the cabinet "who really deeply cares about the province of Alberta."

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Epp: Do you want him to table it?

Mr. Elzinga: The truth seems to hurt my hon. friends. It can be documented that over and over again Alberta has been shortchanged under numerous government programs. We can read about the contract awards of the Department of Supply and Services. The former minister of national defence, the hon. member for Winnipeg South, has stated that he hopes to see equitable spending in all government departments. This matter has been pursued by numerous hon. members on this side of the House. Various government programs are not equitable as far as Alberta is concerned.

Mr. Chrétien: Clause 30, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Elzinga: With regard to clause 30, Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Elzinga: —hon. members opposite feel that theirs is the only party to keep this country together. The leader of my party has spoken about this. The proposals in clause 30 are a fine example of the disunity the Liberal party is creating within Canada. The Minister of Finance claims that we, as federal Conservatives, are in bed with the Quebec separatists simply because we support the position which has been taken unanimously in the Quebec National Assembly. We have the Minister of Transport who says we are spreading anti-Quebec lies and hatred across the west.

I would like to share with the House what a journalist in the Montreal Star has said about this. He is curious as to how we can be in bed with one group while at the same time hating them. It is ironic that one minister says we hate them, and another says we are in bed with them. However, that is the kind of trickery we see far too often on the part of hon. members opposite. That concludes my remarks on clause 30.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I would like to follow up my comments on second reading and ask whether the minister received any formal objections from the government of Alberta or a minister of the government of Alberta when the sales tax rebate for Quebec was modified to become an income tax rebate in the amount of $186 million.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I spoke to Mr. Leitch about this. I informed him of my plans. I do not recall exactly what he said. He did not write me a letter or communicate any formal protest. We discussed the matter. Everyone at that time was very sorry that the Quebec government did not agree to the national scheme. Everyone understood that I was doing my best to solve a difficult problem. Hon. members can understand the frustration we all felt. Of course, I took the brunt of it. Mr. McKeough of Ontario has made two speeches about this. The others kept rather silent about it, but they understood that they were to come out on the day of the budget with a "yes" or "no". Quebec did not respect that commitment, and that put everyone in a difficult position.

I explained what I was trying to do, that I was trying to solve the problem as best I could, and before I tabled this bill I informed the provincial ministers of my intentions. I cannot say that all provincial ministers rejoiced. They were quite sorry and their reaction was, "Jean, do your best". They did not raise any formal protest, but I must recognize that they were not happy.

Mr. Epp: I am sure the minister is correct when he says he was encouraged to do his best after the difficult fiasco he got himself into. I ask him whether there were objections to the proposals contained in clause 30 long before the Quebec government made known its objections to the sales tax rebate. I am referring to the meeting of the four western premiers: they met shortly after the budget was announced in this House on April 10. The western premiers took very strong exception on two counts, not one, of intrusion into provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Chrétien: It is not what they said, Mr. Chairman. I would like to correct the hon. member. He should read the letter of the Prime Minister in reply to Mr. Blakeney who wrote on behalf of the western premiers. They said they agreed with the substance of the proposition but they were not satisfied with the extent of consultation. I have explained to the House many times that when they agreed with the substance and complained about the form, they were not talking about invasion of their jurisdiction.

With regard to the extent of consultations, I have explained to the House all the limitations I have in terms of consultations. I went to all the provinces to meet their ministers of finance. I was faced with the possibility of an eventual leak, which actually occurred in a column by Dalton Camp in the Toronto Star the night before the budget. Everyone knows that I am not in daily communication with Dalton Camp. I never talked to him in my life. I do not know where the leak came from, but he had the full story.

They agreed with the substance of the proposal but complained about the extent of consultation. It is the kind of statement that is so easy to make. We have spent 20 days on this bill and only today did we start to move on to other clauses; yet people still rise and say that not enough time was given. We have to make a decision once in a while if we want the House to operate. When I was in England, I felt sad that we do not operate our House of Commons in the same way as the British. They would never spend 20 days on a bill.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out to the minister that England is a unitary state, not a federal state, and therein lies the difference when you talk about consultation. I have another question for the minister. There is a distinct difference of interpretation here. I believe he has agreed with me that the western premiers were not pleased with the consultative approach. I do not think many arguments have come forward to the minister, from any quarter, that the reduction of the direct retail sales tax is the quickest way to stimulate retail buying. You have no argument from me on that score.

The point I am trying to make—I think the minister has to concede it — is that whether we say consultations were sufficient, or not, is at this point not something with which I will agree. But the point that must be made is that the western premiers were saying that the consultations had not gone far enough in that there was an encroachment into provincial jurisdiction. That point must be made. The minister mentioned earlier that there will be federal reinbursement to these provinces for lost revenue, for the 2 per cent reduction in sales tax over a six-month period. To what extent will this increase the deficit in current accounts?

Mr. Chrétien: We have operated through an income tax cut across the board, and the calculation was that the federal share of this program would be $1.1 billion. The federal cost was about $680 million—I speak from memory—and half of it would come from a reduction in our own expenditures of, say, $340 million: the other $340 million was to be added to the deficit, or the cash requirements. So before the budget was brought down, the cash requirements were about $11.1 billion and I said that the cash requirement would be about $11.5 billion, an increase of some $350 million. So the total package was $1.1 billion and the cost in terms of our deficit would be about $350 million.

Mr. Epp: I take it from the minister's comments, to confirm what he said earlier, that the extra draw on the federal treasury will bring the projected deficit to $11.5 billion. The minister has mentioned that approximately $340 million or $350 million will be saved in the sense that expenditures will be cut back in that order. Can he indicate, in broad terms, where those savings will take place?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the President of the Treasury Board is working on the program. In the letter which was circulated, the Prime Minister gave orders to the various departments to come up with plans for a reduction in expenditures. We are in the process of doing that internally. When the program is completed, the announcement will be made.

Mr. Epp: Will the reduction of approximately $340 million or $350 million be from the expenditures that were deemed to be passed on May 31? I know that some committees kept on meeting after that date. Were those the expenditures from which savings are to take place?

Mr. Chrétien: We are having to reduce expenditures in the fiscal year 1978-79.

Mr. Epp: I should like to ask the minister the following question: There has been a fair amount of discussion of the fact that the provinces had to go along with the plan, and I am not saying whether the plan was good, bad or indifferent. In the past we had what is known as a 50-cent dollar; in other words, the federal government makes cost-sharing arrangements under which the provinces, especially those with lower per capita incomes, simply must take part in the program because of the argument that it is a 50 per cent cost rather than a 100 per cent cost to the provincial treasury.

In this case, one could argue that the federal government was advancing a 66⅔-cent dollar to the provinces. Has the minister had any consultation with the provinces as to what effect the reimposition of the sales tax will have on Canada's economic situation as we go into the winter months of 1978-79? It is hypothetical in one sense, and in another it is not; but I wonder what will happen to the Canadian economy when the provinces reimpose the sales tax at its level prior to the April 10 budget.

Mr. Chrétien: We have looked into that. We felt that reintroduction of the sales tax, if the provinces decide to reintroduce it in mid-October, will come at the time of an increase in sales because of the pre-Christmas period. We have looked at the experience of Ontario which tried that two years ago; that was what started the wheels rolling. We have reason to believe there must be a difference in the economy, sometimes, between what is an investment and what is a non-investment, if production is reflected in the increase from the 83-cent dollar to the 89-cent dollar. This is the kind of push that can get the wheels rolling in the right direction; everyone has recognized that. Of course, when the time comes in the fall when the sales tax is reintroduced by the provinces who need the money, they will not be as completely happy with it as they were to join this program.

I would like to say to the hon. member, who comes from Manitoba, that sales in that province since the April 10 budget have increased substantially. I met someone from Winnipeg the other day, when I was in Toronto to make a speech, who told me that he is a good friend of the minister of finance in Manitoba, Mr. Craik, who said that sales tax revenues are increasing very satisfactorily. As I was saying this afternoon, if increases in sales are in the order of 15 per cent in that period, the province will have recaptured all the money it has invested in the program. This is not so in my case because I am not collecting the sales tax alone; I will lose the revenue completely.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, it has been my theory all along that excessive taxation acts as a damper rather than a generator of revenue. Very often the government takes revenue out of private hands, thus reducing spending power. Obviously, the provinces will speak on their own behalf at the end of the six-month or nine-month period. The provinces had very little choice because two-thirds of the sales tax savings was to be advanced by the federal government.

Have projections been done, based on the early part of 1979? Generally, retail sales rise in the last quarter as a result of Christmas sales. Traditionally there is a dramatic slump in the first quarter of the year. Are we selling 1979 potential sales in 1978? This could have an adverse effect on the high unemployment and high cost months of the first quarter of 1979.

Mr. Chrétien: It is not shifting the time of buying. Perhaps that will be the effect in some cases, but that is not the intention. Perhaps a person who wants to buy a television, an automobile, or something like that, will do so right away. It is intended to be a boost to the economy. At the present time, there is a difficulty because Canadians are not spending some of their savings. For the third year in a row we have been faced with record levels of savings—11.5 per cent. I am not saying that people should not save, but perhaps they should save a little less in order to stimulate the economy.

As the hon. member indicated earlier, the fastest way to get the ball rolling is to stimulate the economy through a reduction in retail sales tax. This is the first time it has been attempted and it is unfortunate that Quebec did not agree. I should like to thank all ministers of finance, except the Quebec minister, for collaborating in this great scheme. Of course, the Quebec minister of finance is attempting to prove that confederation is not working, but I am sure that view is not shared by the hon. member.

Mr. Epp: At the present time there is an income tax rebate in the order of $85 per federal income taxpayer in the province of Quebec, for a total of approximately $186 million. The March, 1977, budget did not stimulate the economy as hoped; therefore, the route employing a reduction in sales tax was taken by the minister. In view of the fact that Canadian savings are at an all-time high, what portion of that $186 million which will be reimbursed to Quebec federal income tax payers will be savings?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to make such a calculation. We recognize that some people will save their rebates. We hope they will not, but it is impossible to arrive at an exact figure. In January and February there was an income tax cut of $100 because of the mini-budget of October 20, 1977. We realize that some of that money went into savings but we cannot measure precisely the amount; we could only make a guess.

Mr. Epp: The minister's tax cuts took place in January and February, and now taxpayers of the province of Quebec will benefit by another rebate. To what extent will the economy of Quebec be stimulated by the $186 million, as opposed to the $40 million which resulted from direct sales tax cuts on selective items?

Mr. Chrétien: As I said earlier, I would have preferred it if Quebec had joined the national scheme; there is no doubt about that. But that province did not want to participate in the same manner as the other provinces. As money was left over, we decided to reduce income taxes. That was a second best proposal. Perhaps Quebec feels its selective tax cuts were a better approach. It would have been nice if Quebec had mentioned its proposition during our three weeks of consultation. In that event, perhaps I would have joined with Quebec in believing that they had a good scheme. It was raised as a possibility 48 hours after I had given my word, on behalf of the federal government, to the other eight provincial minister of finance. Thus, we decided to take the second best route by giving a tax rebate.

Mr. Epp: I should like to return to the situation in Alberta which has been raised by other hon. members. If my understanding of per capita income is correct, Albertans enjoy the second highest in Canada, Ontario being the highest. If a person in Alberta makes "X" number of dollars and has the same family responsibilities as a person in any of the other provinces earning the same amount, what rationale is there for not providing a rebate to an Albertan? He will not receive any income tax or sales tax rebate. Of course, he could not receive a sales tax rebate because he was not required to pay one. But when the rebate was changed to an income tax rebate, a federal taxpayer in Quebec would receive two advantages. First, he would receive the income tax rebate because of his residency in Quebec. Then, if he moved to a province which received the benefit of sales tax reduction, he would receive another advantage.

How can the minister rationalize the statements of the Prime Minister indicating that that is not a special deal, particularly when one considers that residents of Alberta are left out in the cold without either a sales tax or income tax rebate?

Mr. Chrétien: That answer was given to the committee a couple of minutes ago. We were faced with a situation similar to one in which two individuals made $10,000 each. One paid sales tax and the other did not. We decided to benefit the person who was paying sales tax. I had occasion to call Mr. Merv Leitch in Alberta to indicate that we wanted to cut the sales tax of the province. He indicated that they did not have a sales tax. Thus, my proposition was not feasible. We were interested in assisting those who were required to pay sales taxes. In order to treat everyone equally it would be necessary to have a sales tax system across Canada applied uniformly in each province. One must remember that the residents of the province of Newfoundland pay 11 per cent sales tax on everything they buy, whereas Albertans are not required to pay any. They are not in the same situation. In such a scheme nobody is in exactly the same situation.

The government paid all the costs for the maritime provinces because we felt they could not afford to participate using their own money. We made a special case with Saskatchewan and British Columbia because they had a specific problem. In the case of Alberta, they do not have a rebate because we made money available only to the provinces where there was a sales tax. However, we are very preoccupied with the economy of Alberta; for example, we have given some stimulus to the heavy oil scheme. There is no heavy oil scheme in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island or Newfoundland. There is no discrimination against any of the other provinces because heavy oil is found only in Alberta, and probably will be in north Saskatchewan one day. The government wishes to help this type of economy because it is good for the country. There are different situations for different taypayers because there is not the same level across-the-board in Canada. It varies from one province to another.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I listened with care to what the minister said, and I wanted to intervene between speakers rather than interrupt an hon. member. In the course of answering the hon. member for Pembina with respect to the time spent on this bill, the minister said there had been 20 days. The minister now indicates he was wrong in that respect. He was covering the budget period as well as this bill. The minister knows full well that the budget time is allotted under the Standing Orders. I do not want there to be any misrepresentation of the factual situation with respect to the time on this bill, however inadvertent it might be. I am sure, too, that the minister would not want to mislead the House in that way.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I will be extremely precise: six days on the budget debate, 14 days on this bill. This amounts to about two months of the work of the government because the rest of the time is taken, more or less, by opposition days in this House. We have not yet completed debate because there are two more days to go, and we have third reading. I wish, as the hon. member said earlier, we could import some of the good, British tradition— and for a French Canadian like me to want to import British tradition is something—and have the power to say that the debate will last three or four days. The British do not spend 20 or 30 days on a tax bill. It is my hope that we will import some of the British common sense into this House.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether that is government policy or not, but it is very interesting. The government seems to be moving in this way and I am delighted to see my friend attracted to British traditions to such a great degree. I know that it has not escaped him, however, that during the course of this bill we have been in the unprecedented position, with respect to a tax bill, to have closure within two stages of the bill within days of one another, or time allocation, to be more precise: but a rose by any other name is still a rose.

I want to make it clear to the minister that he can hold his view with respect to time, as I can mine, but there is only one view with respect to the facts. I am sure it was through inadvertence that the minister was talking in terms of a 20-day debate on this bill. He has now cleared that up and I am grateful to him.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Chairman since the Quebec government decided not to accept the finance minister's proposal contained in the budget, I would like to know why the minister took exception to Mr. Parizeau's proposal of giving the approximately $200 million difference from the sales tax to the Quebec government? He was to give that money to the Quebec government rather than refunding $85 to some taxpayers.

Mr. Chrétien: That is very simple, Mr. Chairman. If the hon. member followed the debate, and being a conscientious member, I am sure he did, he will remember that on budget night we reduced the income tax of taxpayers in the eight provinces party to the program. Quebec did not qualify for the program, except for an equivalent of $40 million which I am ready to pay. It left $186 million on the table. So we reduced the income tax in the other provinces. We are reducing the income tax of Quebec residents. It is as simple as that. We are rebating the federal income tax paid by the taxpayers, since we are not collecting the Quebec government's taxes because there was no collection agreement. If Mr. Parizeau has to increase his taxes tomorrow, the day after, next month or next year, that is his business. Since the time of Maurice Duplessis, it has been important for Quebec to collect its own taxes. Being of the Mauricie region, I am sure that Maurice must have turned in his grave when he saw Mr. Parizeau asking me to collect taxes for him, because that is the greatest sin against autonomy. Duplessis would never have done that. Barrette would never have done that. Sauvé would never have done that. Lesage would never have done that. Johnson would never have done that. Bertrand would never have done that, and Bourassa would never have done that.

Mr. La Salle: Neither would I!

Mr. Chrétien: Neither would he. But Mr. Parizeau did. The virginity of Quebeckers was worth $185 million. What do you want me to do about it?

Mr. Beaudoin: Quite so, but you say that you would hand over an amount of $40 million to the province of Quebec in an envelope—

Mr. Chrétien: Yes.

Mr. Beaudoin: —and they turned it down?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes.

Mr. Beaudoin: Then they agreed and you are going to hand the money over to them in an envelope?

Mr. Chrétien: We are going to send approximately $40 million in equal payments for April, May, June, July, August and September. For the rest, we are going to grant a tax cut to all taxpayers. Why have we decided on this method? Because there is no tax collection agreement with the province of Quebec. In the other provinces, the operation was painless. On budget night, I reduced the federal tax by $100. The finance ministers in Ontario or New Brunswick increased their respective taxes by $100. And with the profits they made, they will reduce their sales tax by 3 per cent on all goods for the next six months. However, Quebec refused to go along with this scheme. Quebec did what it wanted to do. When some say that I infringed upon provincial jurisdictions, that is not true. Not at all! In proof of this, Mr. Parizeau did what he wanted, exactly what he wanted, I did not stop him. It was in his jurisdiction. And as for me, I do what I want, that is I cut the taxes of Quebec taxpayers by $85 as soon as possible.

● (2122)

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out to the minister that I knew the answers to the questions I just asked, but I ask them as the man in the street would ask them now because he believes all the press reports and he says: the federal government has interfered with the provincial government's business, and so forth, he says that Mr. Parizeau is the saviour of New France. I want to know why and where?

Mr. Chrétien: That is exactly the problem, because everybody got excited as though it were a constitutional problem. Here is what I did: on the very first day I said that the sales tax came under provincial jurisdiction because I phoned the provincial finance ministers I told them: "Gentlemen, you have a so-called sales tax; could I help you to reduce it? I will pay you 2 per cent during six months. If you cut it by 3 per cent for six months, you will pay the difference". Eight ministers of finance said: "Yes, Mr. Chrétien, we agree". The discussions went on for three weeks. During those three weeks, the Quebec finance minister, Mr. Parizeau, remained silent. When the agreement was concluded with the other finance ministers, he said 48 hours later: "I do not want that, I want something else. He had missed the boat.

Mr. La Salle: The train!

Mr. Chrétien: It is quite simple. I had given my word to the other finance ministers. It is like the train, but I will not repeat the saying about watching the train go by, but it is as simple as that. It is just as if the hon. member for Richmond were going with ten others. There is a car or a small bus going to Montreal. After the bus has left, someone aboard says: No, I want to go to Quebec city." The others tell him: "Listen, this bus is going to Montreal. We cannot go to Montreal and to Quebec city at the same time." So the one who wants to go to Quebec city has to walk because the bus only goes to Montreal. It is as simple as that. If Mr. Parizeau had been willing to discuss, it would have been all so simple. But I said it before and I say it again: the Quebec government is bent on proving that everything we are doing now is wrong. Even before the paper on the renewal of the Canadian Federation was published, even before he got a copy. Mr. Lévesque said: "It is profoundly insignificant". He had not even read it yet.

Mr. Beaudoin: That is what we want to know.

Mr. Chrétien: As I said, they are bent on proving that federalism cannot work. No wonder! But when I simply proposed to help them cut their sales tax, they all took refuge behind the constitution. There is no constitutional problem at all in all this, there has never been and there will never be. The sales tax comes under provincial jurisdiction, I admitted it and said: "I will help you." It is as if I told the hon. member it is his business if he wants to go home. But if I offer to pay two-thirds of his trip, he can tell me to go to hell. Only, if he wants to pocket the money, I shall be very happy to give it to him.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to tell the Minister of Finance that if he had given the very simple explanation he has just given me also to the journalists, there are still some left who are honest, things would not have been as complicated as they have been with the province of Quebec in the last three months.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I agree wholeheartedly. I tried for all I am worth to give that explanation. I was given a chance to explain myself only last week, seven weeks after, when the French network of the CBC invited to me to appear on the program Téléscopie for 25 minutes. All that network did until then was to run around the halls and find people who were against the idea.

An hon. Member: Like the hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. Chrétien: They avoided the people who were for it. It is as clear as that. It is painful, but that is democracy. I am not complaining too much about it, Mr. Chairman, because it must be remembered that one has to be in good health to put up with a system like that. Let me explain: I am glad to see the hon. member understands and is asking questions so people will understand. I am not personally worried about the people from that point of view. They have a lot more judgment than they are often given credit for and the best proof of that is that in spite of the great controversy over the sales tax our rating increased according to the Gallup poll.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Finance a question about the proposal he allegedly made to all provincial ministers of finance to reduce the sales tax by 3 per cent where his contribution would be 2 per cent on all products in all Canadian industries and all retail sales outlets across Canada, in face of the refusal of Mr. Parizeau who preferred a selective sales tax.

Could the minister say whether from the point of view of the collection of a selective sales tax such a collection could pose problems with respect to forecasts or lower revenues because according to what we hear, and I heard it said as recently as this past weekend, some retailers because certain products do not qualify for the sales tax cut in Quebec would want to use other products and thus the province would be deprived of revenues because this would mean a reduced tax base for the province of Quebec and then there could be a danger if the sales tax were less than anticipated that Mr. Parizeau would be tempted to increase his taxes next year and perhaps call it "Chrétien's" tax. Could the minister say whether this would make sense, that the selective sales tax cut could result in reduced revenues and an increase in taxes next year in Mr. Parizeau's budget?

Mr. Chrétien: Of course, the question is whether the implementation of a selective tax cut from 8 per cent down to nothing will result in an administrative problem to the Quebec revenue department. I do not know. Let me say the temptation is great, and I give you an example, and I say it is very complicated—if you buy furniture there is no sales tax but if you buy a television set there is a sales tax. They say that sometimes people might put down "chair" instead of "television" on a bill. I do not know about this. It is up to the Quebec revenue officials to see to it that the law is obeyed. However, there is a lot of confusion because not all textile products have been exempted: You must pay 8 per cent on drapes, carpets, sheets, pillow cases, but there is no tax on other items such as suits. I have enough problems of my own without solving theirs and deciding how they will collect their taxes.

I do know one thing. When time comes to determine the consequences of all these decisions, it will be very complicated because according to our agreement with the other provinces, we shall have to check how much this has cost them. If a province which had a sales tax of 7 per cent reduces it to 4 per cent, it is very easy to know how much this costs because we shall simply transpose the whole amount of the 4 per cent tax at 7 per cent and this will give us the exact cost. It is a simple mathematical operation. It is easy to figure out. But when you talk about going from 8 per cent down to nothing, you have no data on the amount sold because you have no invoice, no account to the government, no means of control. I am not saying that it was done intentionally, I am simply saying that we have no means of control. This is where the particular problem raised by the Ontario finance minister Mr. McKeough, and his deputy minister, arises namely that according to their own extrapolation they cannot see how a selective tax cut by the Quebec government could cost Quebec $320 or $340 million. They took their own figures and made extrapolations to come to the conclusion that it would cost $250 million. I am caught between both, and as no agreement has been reached with the government of Quebec, I cannot make a judgment, I can only reduce my income tax. The financial critics of the opposition in Quebec will have to see if the Ontario government is right on that. I do not wish to interfere in the administration of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Chairman, has the minister recognized in his statement that the selective tax cuts proposed by Mr. Parizeau could mean a reduction of his revenues, next year and an increase in his next budget?

Mr. Chrétien: I have no comments to make as the hon. member might come to the conclusion that there are some abuses. I do not know. I do not intend to look for them, but Revenue Canada will check the amount of $40 million at the end of the year. I have no judgment to make. Since the hon. member is asking me questions about the financial situation of the government of Quebec I should point out that I am not the financial critic of the opposition in Quebec, but if I were I would have fun. In the circumstances I must make my own fun here in Ottawa.

[English]

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, it was fairly obvious that the government intended to have an election during the period this sales tax reduction was in effect. Now that we are not going to have the election, I wonder if it is the government's intention to continue the program until October 15 or 16 when it will start to expire.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we have no such plan at this time. I know the maritime ministers of finance have made some public comments about that. I expect to have a discussion on the effect of the sales tax cut when I meet the ministers of finance on July 7 and 8.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that this program is discriminatory toward the province of Alberta, may I ask if any consideration was given to that province as its minimum wage is about 90 cents an hour less than it was in the province of Quebec when this matter was discussed?

• (2132)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member please repeat his question? I am sorry, but I missed it.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, was any consideration given to the fact that the minimum wage for the province of Alberta is about 90 cents an hour less than it is in the province of Quebec, when the minister had discussions with regard to putting this program in place?

Mr. Chrétien: It was not under consideration. I had occasion to tell the minister of finance of Quebec at one time that having the highest minimum wage in the world was not conducive to having a very good economic situation in Quebec because having that kind of minimum wage tends to push up all the costs. This was not relative to sales tax at all; it was in another context that I raised that point.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, could the minister tell us the effect this payment to the provinces will have on equalization payments?

Mr. Chrétien: The effect on the equalization payments was one of the problems discussed during the three weeks that we debated with the provinces. We have devised a formula, that is written in the act, by which the equalization payments are isolated from this temporary scheme. This means that the scheme will have no effect on the equalization payments. Some of the maritime provinces were afraid they would lose on equalization payments if we did not to make provision for that. That is another example of the consultations that I had during the three weeks before the budget.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to make some remarks at the time of consideration of clause 1, but knowing the minister was nervous about general comments on clause 1 and how he wanted to proceed as quickly as possible to clause 30, I thought he would now like to hear a few of the comments I have saved up for this occasion. I am sure the minister has heard some of these comments before.

Mr. Chrétien: Many times.

Mr. Clarke: I am hopeful I may be able to reiterate in a different way some of the concerns that have been expressed. Particularly, I am concerned about the apparent view of the public and the media who seem to think that this bill has only to do with the provincial sales tax issue. In fact, if one can believe what one hears via the media, it only has to do with the Quebec sales tax issue. It should be obvious to anyone who has been following the debate up to clause 30 that many other issues are covered in this legislation other than sales tax.

It is obvious from the speeches the minister has heard from this side of the House that the emphasis as far as the sales tax issue is concerned has been the unusual payment—which is all I can call it—of the cash refund, a refund of tax paid relative to the 1977 taxation year to the residents of Quebec. I compare that with the remarks of the Prime Minister who earlier in this debate referred many times to the so-called tax room that the federal government has been prepared to give on the 1978 taxation of individuals in Canada.

I am not quite sure how the two relate to one another. The Prime Minister was hard-pressed to explain and he could not understand why nobody else could follow what was happening. It is also obvious that the retail sales taxes affected by the measures of the Minister of Finance are provincial measures and do not have the raison d'être of this House in respect of their determination. The Minister of Finance has told us all about the consultations he has had with the various ministers. He has told us in a very self-righteous manner how he had almost achieved agreement with the various ministers of finance and, as well, how the province of Quebec let him down in not finally agreeing with his proposal. Not only did the province of Quebec not agree, but the minister tells us they turned around two days after he had made the announcement on his agreement with the other provinces and said they would not agree with the federal government's proposals. I find it difficult to reconcile that with the Prime Minister's great pains to explain on a number of occasions in the Houses that the treatment of all provinces was the same.

The Prime Minister went to great lengths to explain to the Leader of the New Democratic Party that he could not understand how the Leader of the New Democratic Party and other members on this side could not understand how a refund of $85 in cash against the 1977 income tax of certain taxpayers was not the same as allowing tax room—that was his expression—in the 1978 taxation year to provinces other than Quebec. One might be forgiven if he could not understand how that is not the same. But yesterday the Minister of Finance said—and I note the parliamentary secretary is nodding agreement with what I am about to say, and I am glad he is so perceptive—that he had told the minister of finance of Quebec that if he did not go along with the national scheme, the province would not qualify for the same plan as the other provinces. I do not understand—and I hope I may be forgiven—if the Prime Minister said that all provinces are being treated the same, how the Minister of Finance can tell us, the House of Commons, that the treatment he was prepared to give the province of Quebec was the same as he was prepared to give the other provinces.

The Minister of Finance says he will pay it back to the taxpayers: I think that was the expression he used—he is paying it back to the taxpayers of Quebec who have already paid the money. But he knows, and I note that he has been very careful not to say much about this in the current debate, that Quebec taxpayers who do not pay income tax because they are too poor will not receive any benefit from the refunds paid to the taxpayers of Quebec.

I hear my colleague—

[Translation]

—for Brome-Missisquoi and the hon. member for Joliette who have expressed their agreement with—

[English]

—my statement.

The minister has indicated how those in British Columbia will benefit. I recognize that the taxpayers of British Columbia will benefit because the federal government is giving tax room, in the Prime Minister's words, to the taxpayers of that province. I also recognize that there is a difference in the treatment being accorded the residents of British Columbia because everybody in the province will benefit through a reduction in sales tax. People in Quebec who are not paying the sales tax will not receive that benefit.

● (2142)

I said at the outset that there are many issues included in this bill. I draw attention to the fact that some of the other issues touch on personal income tax. Some of these questions were debated as we proceeded to clause 30; some were not. Touching on personal tax, we are dealing with matters such as employee loans, deferred profit-sharing plans, registered retirement savings plans, life insurance in more than one way—I will come back to that in a moment—and the transfer of family farms. I might say another word about that in a moment. There are also measures in this bill dealing with corporation tax, such as surplus stripping and other matters dealing with life insurance companies as opposed to life insurance and the individual.

The minister likes to assure us that everything in this bill is simple, that it will all be understood by the people and that we should have no hesitation in passing his wonderful measures. I want to refer to an article in the April, 1978, CA Magazine. It makes an observation on the 3 per cent inventory allowance which I questioned in some detail last time the minister presented us with a bill such as this. I quote from CA Magazine:

> The government therefore was introducing an annual allowance, equal to 3 per cent of the tax cost of qualifying inventory on hand at the start of the year, as a deduction in computing income from a business. That seemed simple enough, and when the amendment was introduced and eventually passed in the fall of 1977, few people challenged the legislation in terms of whether it was workable.

Most businesses have now completed the first fiscal period for which the inventory allowance applies and the problem areas have begun to surface: basic issues such as what kinds of inventory qualify, under what circumstances and when. That these problems, and the lack of answers, did not come up earlier is undoubtedly due largely to the apparant simplicity of the provision and also to the fact that many people were focusing their attention on timing rather than substance.

I make that reference to indicate that the minister and his officials who sit waiting for something to do should be considering the real effect of that measure, and some of the measues contained in the bill before us, on the business community and individuals before so glibly assuring the House that there is no problem and these matters should be passed quite easily. To support that contention I refer to the tax letter issued on April 10, 1978, by Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Company, an international firm of chartered accountants which makes reference to the provisions concerning insurance companies. I quote from the tax letter as follows:

An unintended result of the 1977 technical changes would have eliminated from any future deduction for certain life insurers, non-capital losses in existence as at December 31, 1977. It is proposed that such losses be restored as non-capital losses of the 1977 taxation year.

I am a chartered accountant, not a lawyer. However, I think that unintended result was dealt with by the minister in the presentation he made to the House. The point I am making is that the intentions of the minister are so unclear, when we come to clause by clause study, that it is very difficult for us to know exactly what is meant. If it is difficult for us, I am sure it is far more difficult for the average Canadian to know what is intended by the minister.

I think we will be coming to other clauses of this bill which will deal with the individual and insurance policies, in particular insurance policy loan, the difficulty parliament had, the difficulty the individual holder of a life insurance policy had, and probably what the business community and the life insurance industry had in dealing with the provisions for interest on insurance policy loans and the accounting thereof in the last budget. I thought we buried that issue the last time we had a budget debate. I again quote from the Peat, Marwick, Mitchell letter:

It is proposed that interest on policy loans made prior to April 1, 1977, would now be treated the same as interest on such loans made after March 31, 1977, i.e., deducted or added to the adjusted cost base of the policy. In addition, interest paid before 1978 on policy loans will not be included in computing the "adjusted cost base" of the policy at any time after March 31, 1978.

I hope I will be able to ask a few questions of the minister when we come to that clause. I hope the committee will agree that wording such as that, which has caused such confusion to the renowed firm of chartered accountants, Peat, Marwick, Mitchell, really has no place in the legislation we are considering. There are no fewer than two sections of the ways and means motion which deal with interest on policy loans, section 3 and section 15 which purport to deal with the adjusted cost base of a life insurance policy after March 31, 1978.

We dealt with the clauses which touch on the passing on of family farms held by corporations to the heirs. At that time I commented on the fact that these farm businesses were accorded different treatment from small businesses in a city constituency such as the one I represent. I also commented that I felt it unreasonable that less than six weeks after the Minister of Finance presented his budget dealing with this kind of transfer and the avoidance or deferment of capital gains tax on farm properties, the Minister of State (Small Business) introduced provisions to provide for the passing on and deferment of capital gains tax in the case of small businesses.

I might also say the minister alluded to this in answering my questions earlier—that the definition of "small business" is completely unclear in the mind of parliament. The minister has not given us the definition that we need. He said that farms are treated differently from other businesses. I want to put on record the fact that businesses which I and other city members might be familiar with are not to be considered small businesses unless they deal with such things as manufacturing, processing, wholesaling, retailing and one or two other restrictive items. The point is that no small business, regardless of its family history, concentration or anything else, will be considered eligible for the passing on of these benefits if it is involved in any kind of service business. Apparently this covers such businesses as real estate and insurance. We are not told why family businesses which happen to render services or be involved in real estate should be excluded from the benefits passed on by the Minister of State (Small Business). However, I recognize we are not debating this topic at the moment; no doubt there will be opportunities to do so.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, of course I had a few comments to make on this clause. I think it is a very important clause for us members from Quebec. I am sure the minister is aware of that. Mr. Chairman, I would also like to take this opportunity to note that the minister seemed very relaxed during most part of the evening and the day about the answers he had to give, seemingly finding them very simple. The Quebec government, backed by a unanimous National Assembly, was entirely to blame and its proposition was totally wrong.

Even then, I think one must—

Mr. Guay: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member for Joliette permit me to ask him a question?

An hon. Member: He is not honourable.

Mr. La Salle: Someone dared say I am not honourable, so I refuse to allow the question, Mr. Chairman.

I should like to continue my remarks. I know the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) will surely have time to put the questions he must to the Minister of Finance. Anyway, as I pointed out a while ago, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lévis went to consult the Minister of Finance. I have a feeling that some arrangement was arrived at on what questions the hon. member for Lévis could put and which would perhaps embarrass the Minister of Finance too much. The Minister of Finance would have told him—

Mr. Guay: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Joliette says that I go for my information to the Minister of Finance; I feel that is the best place to go for it; he goes for his to the separatist premier of the province of Quebec instead of going to his leader or to the hon. member for York-Simcoe who is the financial critic of his party, unless he was replaced recently.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lévis seems to have been insulted because Premier Lévesque did not invite him into his office. I had the great honour, just as the right hon. Prime Minister did of course, of meeting the Quebec premier. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the hon. member for Lévis, I should like to add that I told Mr. Lévesque that quite a long time had elapsed since I had had a cup of coffee with a provincial premier. The last time had been when I had met the late Daniel Johnson, a former premier of the province of Quebec. I do not know why, but some people are blaming me for meeting the Quebec premier, although the right hon. Prime Minister himself has met with all premiers.

Mr. Guay: He is the Prime Minister.

Mr. La Salle: Our leader has met with all Canadian premiers too. The Minister of Finance gets to meet them from time to time, and we have nothing against that, Mr. Chairman. So I wonder why the hon. member for Lévis once again criticizes the fact that I had the pleasure to meet a man who, whether you like it or not, was legally elected in the province of Quebec in spite, of course, of the efforts made by our friends opposite.

Any way, Mr. Chairman, I would still like to make a brief history of this piece of legislation and of this clause in particular. The Minister of Finance made his comments this afternoon, and I remember some of his remarks; he talked about the agreement reached with his provincial counterpart. And there, my question is specifically directed to the Minister of Finance. I do not want to repeat it. The Minister of Finance talked about an agreement with his provincial counterpart, so here is my first question: could the minister explain what kind of agreement was reached with his provincial counterpart and when?

Mr. Chrétien: What agreement?

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, I remember and noted immediately that the Minister of Finance talked about an agreement reached with his Quebec provincial counterpart because several members in his party have accused the Minister of Finance of not keeping his word and saying the minister of finance of Quebec had not replied.

I would like to ask him a second question. The Minister of Finance is a man who is surely capable of answering a second question also. I think that in the proposal that was made, in the observations—I do not call that proposals, I call that observations—it seems the minister of finance of Quebec would have hoped for a way of finding a settlement where the federal government could have dealt as between one government and another. And I wonder whether with a little effort at this point the Minister of Finance could tell us if he cannot within the prerogatives that are his come up with a formula which would preserve a very basic principle we have been fighting for for two and half months, a treaty between governments. I imagine the Minister of Finance with the prerogatives his position gives him could come up with something which would be readily acceptable to both sides of the House but would include that basic principle which we and others would also hope for and which Quebec and the National Assembly would accept, I am sure, namely a treaty between one government and another. Could the Minister of Finance clarify that for us?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I cannot help laughing when the hon. member is so convinced about the separatist cause. He is already talking of treaties between two governments in Canada, of agreements between governments. When you talk of treaties, you are talking about two independent countries.

Mr. La Salle: The government concludes agreements with the provinces.

Mr. Chrétien: A treaty is between two countries.

Mr. La Salle: Let us say arrangements.

Mr. Chrétien: I would not like to give a lecture in international law but a treaty is between two countries. Very well, but that is because the hon. member's thoughts always have strong separatist overtones. Obviously he could not help using those words. Slips of the tongue like this one can happen. It is very simple. I discussed with the provincial ministers about a possible agreement between provincial governments and the federal government relating to the sales tax. All ministers had agreed that they would be in a position to tell me "yes" or "no" when I would phone them in the afternoon of budget day just before tabling my budget. When I phoned Mr. Parizeau, he said "I'm not saying either yes or no". But all other ministers had answered yes. Then I claimed, and I repeat it, that Mr. Parizeau had broken a gentlemen's agreement. Some will say it is Mr. Parizeau's word against mine. That is correct. But there is circumstancial evidence. Why would the other ministers have taken the responsibility of answering yes on the very day I tabled the budget if there had not been a previous agreement between all of us? It would be easy for me to satisfy any court that there was an agreement between Mr. Parizeau and myself by presenting circumstancial evidence.

Mr. La Salle: He did not say either yes or no.

Mr. Chrétien: All the others said yes.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—REASON FOR BEEF PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, last week I asked a question of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand) about rising beef prices as reflected in retail outlets. I think we all appreciate the difficulties farmers and beef farmers of this country have faced over the last three or four years. In my own community, many farmers have had to sell off their herds simply because they could not make ends meet: there just was not enough revenue to justify the expense of raising cattle.

I do not think any Canadian would object to a 35 per cent or 40 per cent increase in the price of cattle on the hoof. The price of slaughter cows in Winnipeg between early March and June 3 went up 39 per cent. The price of A1 steers increased by 38 per cent. When I see the increase in retail prices, I do not think this is the problem we are facing: I think there is a very important need for stability in the beef market across the country. I think all Canadians, farmers and consumers alike, could do nothing but gain from such stability.

There are some difficulties. The agricultural industry in this country is divided among provincial jurisdictions. The difficulties in bringing these together are very important. I think these difficulties have some effect on stability. However, there is more to it than that. Just doing some comparisons in retail outlets, I found that the price of ground beef went up from 79 cents to roughly $1.39 in about three months, an 87 per cent increase. I mentioned this figure before. But at the same time the price of cows went from $36.15 to $50.25, an increase of only 39 per cent.

I know there are some variations here, but let us look at it in another way. When the slaughter cow price was $36.15 on the Winnipeg market, ground beef cost 79 cents. That was 119 per cent higher than the price on the hoof. Some of this is explained by the fact that there are bones, loss of water, fat, and so forth. However, when the price went to $50.25 on the hoof, the price in the store for ground beef went to $1.39. That is an increase of 178 per cent. Those are the kind of differences we have to examine.

We can go through the same thing with more expensive beef. The price of T-bone steak went from $2.50 to $3.75, while the price of No. 1 steers went from $49.95 to $68.90 on the Winnipeg livestock exchange, an increase in the price of No. 1 steers of 36 per cent and an increase in the price of T-bone steaks of 50 per cent. I recognize that there may be some variations and it is always difficult when we do not have a large research group to do the kind of things we have to do; but I must say I am suspicious of these increases. We are now out of price and wage controls. In a sense, prices were controlled. Certainly, prices at the processing and retail levels were controlled; but prices at the farm gate were not.

Over a period of two or three years several hundred large companies had to turn money back because they made profits in excess of 90 per cent or 95 per cent of their five-year average. With the phasing-out of these controls coming at the same time as the increase in the beef price on the hoof, which I think is justified, some things have happened and we should look at them very carefully.

I would like the minister and the government to take a much closer look at this variation, the difference in an increase of, say, 39 per cent and 87 per cent. That is what I am concerned about. I think it should not only concern the consumer; it should concern the farmer; and I am sure it does because in many ways farmers are being blamed. They should not be blamed because they are getting a legitimate increase, yet the consumer is paying what I consider to be close to robbery.

Mr. Alan G. Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say at the outset that in a very general sense, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand) does, indeed, share the concern of the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae). This is one reason why last fall the minister, assisted by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), initiated the three-phase food policy conference program which took place last autumn and winter. This is just a beginning. It is the intention of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, again assisted by the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and others, to move from this base to work toward the further development of a desirable food policy for Canadians which will give consideration to both the production and consumption ends of the scale, bearing in mind the complexities of moving and processing produce from the time it leaves the farm gate to the point at which it may be purchased by consumers at the local level. This is a long-term program.

As I understand the specific situation at hand, there are two main factors behind the recent rapid increase in the price of cheaper beef cuts such as hamburger and blade roast, relative to the more expensive cuts such as T-bone steaks and sirloin steaks. The first, and principal, factor is the natural unfolding of the beef cycle; the second is the current high level of the export of cows to the United States. Let me explain more fully. The beef cycle has two distinct phases: an expansionary phase and a liquidation phase. Over the past few years we have been experiencing the liquidation part of the cycle, not just in Canada but in North America as a whole. This came after a nearly uninterrupted expansion in cattle herds which started away back in the early 1950s. During this time, beef producers expanded cattle herds nearly every year in response to over-increasing consumer demand. Per capita consumption, mainly in beef, doubled over this period from about 50 pounds in 1950 to more than 100 pounds in 1975 and 1976.

The liquidation phase of the beef cycle is characterized by a high level of slaughterings and low prices for cattle and for beef at the retail counter. Also, during this time the supply of beef from which hamburger and blade roasts can be cut is greater than during the expansionary part of the beef cycle. This is because farmers tend to sell off their cows. Thus, the rapid increase in prices for the lower quality cuts relative to the high priced cuts reflects a turning point in the beef cycle: Canada is facing a tight squeeze on its low-grade beef supply and cow marketings are expected to continue to decrease through 1978. The decline of the Canadian dollar relative to the U.S. dollar has aggravated this situation by making it attractive, at times, for American buyers to purchase Canadian cows which could have been slaughtered in Canada.

AGRICULTURE—REQUESTED INCREASED MILK QUOTAS FOR ONTARIO CHEESE MANUFACTURERS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight on a matter very vital to our national economy and pursuant to my question appearing in Hansard of June 9, 1978, page 6230, as follows:

Following the recent meeting between the Minister of Agriculture and the Ontario minister of agriculture, has a solution been reached to provide increased milk quotas to Ontario cheese manufacturers who are experiencing a serious shortage of milk in their efforts to supply markets waiting for cheese?

The question of the above date and the S.O. 43 motion of May 31, 1978, moved by myself and seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), arise from strong representations made to me and to my party and our agricultural critic, the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), and the agricultural committee of the PC party, by the Ontario Cheddar Cheese Association and its member manufacturers regarding the diminishing and inadequate supplies of milk available to the Ontario Cheddar cheese factories.

Also we have received a brief from the Ontario Cheddar Cheese Association, an organization recently formed in that industry. They total at least 32 cheese manufacturing concerns which speak with one voice in the interests of a sound economy for the dairy and cheese producing industries of Ontario. The No. 1 problem in the industrial milk field is the severe shortage of market-sharing quotas for the province of Ontario. This is widely recognized by producer and processor alike. When one couples the MSQ shortage with the specialty cheese market expanding at a high percentage every year, the Ontario Cheddar cheese processor is being placed in an unbearable situation. Cheddar cheese factories cannot begin to supply the markets which they have developed carefully over long years. Buyers are purchasing a higher percentage of their Cheddar cheese out of the province at the present time.

In 1969, the Murchie-Stewart report advised that several of the smaller plants in Ontario be phased out of operation under the plant consolidation assistance program, and that the remaining plants update their facilities to handle extra milk in a more efficient manner. Most Cheddar factories have spent large sums of money in the past to acquire a greater quota. Now they are faced with the same quota diminishing year after year to the specialty cheese market, at no cost whatsoever to them. The Cheddar processors have virtually no way of expanding their businesses or even holding them at a reasonable level because of this situation. Cheddar plants are running far below their processing capacity during peak milk periods. In the winter months, when monthly percentages go as low as 3 per cent or 4 per cent, this situation becomes critical. The rapidly diminishing milk supply, the variance of monthly milk percentages from a low of 3 per cent or 4 per cent to a high of 14 per cent in May and June, and the fixed overhead costs of these plants place a great deal of the factories in a most undesirable position. Some are facing the prospect of closing their plants for good.

The Ontario Cheddar cheese industry has had a proud and historic record ever since the dairy industry was first instituted in the province. In fact, it was the heart of the dairy industry for a number of years. Ontario has become famous throughout the world for its excellent quality of Cheddar cheese. Now we must ask ourselves whether we will let this great industry wither and die; or will we finally take steps to preserve an industry as much a part of our Ontario heritage as farming itself?

There is one more point I should like to make in the limited time I have. We have a continuing responsibility to see that the Cheddar cheese industry of Ontario obtains its proper and sufficient quota of milk supply. Over the past 20 years, the Canadian government has participated in the amalgamation of cheese factories: it has spent millions of dollars in subsidizing these factories in the succession of amalgamations. Many of the older ones which were obsolete and inefficient, closed. Amalgamation grants were given to the other successor factories which were willing to make improvements and investments in the interest of the economy of the industry. If Ontario's share of the national quota for cheesemaking milk is not increased, we are not supporting past policies; the money put into these amalgamations will go down the drain like so much whey—and perhaps the result will be a bankruptcy of the industry. I, for one, will not stand idly by and see this happen. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) agrees with me.

When I was in Britain a month ago as a delegate to the CPA conference, I asked assembled members of the British Parliament, in a question and answer forum, why our markets for Canadian cheese in Britain were shrinking so drastically. The answers were not very optimistic: they pointed out that Britain was now a member of the EEC and every country of that common market was a cheese producer to some degree. I point out to the minister that in this regard it is our duty to watch every facet of the cheese economy in that every member country of the EEC is subsidized in the products they produce and in the export of those products. We can be—and must be—just as astute.

I am not asking that the Ontario Cheddar Cheese Association be subsidized tonight, tomorrow, or ever. All I am asking is that they be given an ample share of our national milk quota for cheese manufacturing only, to create more production for farmers, to protect the investment and the jobs of the men who make Ontario Cheddar cheese, and to supply the waiting markets with their peerless product.

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Caron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack), I shall say that the Minister of Agriculture is not responsible for the rules governing the distribution of quotas among the provinces but rather the Canadian supply management committee. This committee is made up of representatives of the governments and the producers of each province under the leadership of the Canadian Dairy Commission.

The control of the industrial milk production in Canada results from a national agreement whereby each province accepted as a basis the percentage of milk which it produced at that time. The same principle applies for eggs, broilers and all other commodities.

As it is a national scheme, there is no evidence that the Canadian consumers do not get the dairy products of the quality and in the quantities they want. So, there is no evidence that Cheddar cheese is scarce at the national level. The supply is adequate.

As for Ontario and specialty cheeses, the Canadian production which stood at 106.1 million pounds in 1974-75 has gone up to 160 million pounds in 1977-78, or increase of 50.8 per cent.

At the same time, in Ontario, the specialty cheese production has gone from 41.2 million pounds to 62.9 million pounds, which represents an increase of 53 per cent, practically the same as the national average.

Given the Ontario production compared with the Canadian production as a whole, it is obvious that the problem experienced by the Cheddar cheese producers is due to the fact that Ontario has reduced the quantities of milk available for this type of dairy product to the benefit of butter producers. It is therefore a problem of milk movement within the province of Ontario itself and consequently it comes under provincial jurisdiction.

The Ontario request for an increase in its marketing quotas is no different from the requests of all the other provinces. Every province from East to West is asking for increased marketing quotas and every Canadian dairy producer wants an increase in his individual marketing quota, and wonders why he does not get it. The answer is quite simple.

The Canadian government has implemented a stable dairy policy and both the producer and the manufacturer are getting a fair return on their investments and their work.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please! I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time is now expired.

CANADIAN CULTURE—IMPORTATION OF U.S. EDITIONS OF CANADIAN BOOKS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight in pursuit of a matter that I raised about five times during the earlier part of this session with respect to a very serious problem that faces Canadian publishers and authors, particularly the two dozen or so authors of this country who are successful enough to have their books published abroad, primarily in the United States. It is a problem, really, affecting whether or not we can be masters of our own house with respect to the adequate protection of writers and publishers in this country. I suppose in some ways it is a classic Canadian dilemma, for I know of no other country that has so exposed its writers and publishers to the low-cost selling of wholesale editions of works from abroad as we do.

It is not a new problem, Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out the first time I raised this matter on November 18, 1977. As far back as 1972 the Ontario royal commission on publishing gave notification that the relevant provision of the Copyright Act was "unworkable in practice and should be reviewed and clarified. We have known of the very serious situation."

Subsequently, since 1975, the government has been notified directly by the Writers Union of Canada, among others, that thousands of dollars in revenue were being lost to publishers and authors and that we were rapidly destroying incentive for major authors to have their works published here. We have made successive representations to this government. I have raised the matter on a number of occasions in this session, but it has been impossible to get action from the government. I find this incredible in view of the fact that the basic solutions are not too difficult.

As a solution I have suggested repeatedly enforcement of the law through a test case or a specific amendment to the law in instances that would cover, under the Copyright Act, the kind of exposure we are getting today—this kind of threat, the undermining of the publishing industry and the authors of this country. On November 18, 1977, the Secretary of State said there would be clarification of the difficulties in the very near future. On February 27, he said he would "look into it with the utmost dispatch." On June 6, he said they would be making some announcement about this in the very near future.

On other occasions, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand) indicated he was also concerned about the problem and would be taking appropriate action. It is quite obvious that he is not prepared to take any action that would involve amendments. As a matter of fact, a fairly straightforward amendment was proposed to the minister by those who represent not only the writers but others involved in his problem, to make the law clear and, in effect, make it say what it is supposed to say and be workable. To this time, the minister—as I understand it—has not taken this matter up with his officials or attempted to draft an amendment. If he has done so, he has not communicated it to this side of the House.

In spite of the offers that have been made informally to pass a specific amendment with dispatch, I do not think any attempt has been made to do so. As far as the powers of seizure by Revenue Canada are concerned, which I believe the minister has indicated might be employed against the sale of remaindered issues, I think it is, at best, an imperfect solution in view of the inevitable and lengthy litigation required before the writers would know if the existing law gives them adequate protection.

We have allowed a situation to develop where the three major book chains in this country, Coles, W.H. Smith and Classic, have opened up the market to the sale of thousands of remaindered editions—American publications of Canadian authors. Initially, only Coles was involved in 1975 when the problem became more acute. By 1977, all three major booksellers who cover a substantial portion of the Canadian market were involved, and virtually nothing has happened.

My specific question tonight relates to the February 27 question I raised in the House, first with the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) and latterly with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I referred to the specific instance of one publication, a book intitled The Book of Eve, by Constance Beresford-Howe, published by MacMillan of Canada and on sale in Montreal and Toronto despite being listed for a year and a half under schedule C in response to complaints by both the author and the publisher. Counsel for both Revenue Canada and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs stated they will not take action because they claim schedule C does not specifically encompass books.

In earlier discussions, the Secretary of State and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said they might develop a mechanism that would reduce the effective notification period from something like six months to one month. On February 27, the Secretary of State said, "I will look into it with the utmost dispatch." If that is the kind of utmost dispatch we get from the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) or from any other minister of the government, these poor authors and publishers will have to wait a mighty long time. The early expression of pious hope or the use of moral suasion on the three major Canadian book chains seem, to me, to have been abandoned by this government. As yet it appears that we have received no substantial indication of action. I would hope that tonight the parliamentary secretary can give us an indication of clearcut leadership that will now be taken on this very important problem.

● (2227)

Mr. Alan G. Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the minister and his officials are well aware of the position advanced by the Writers Union of Canada concerning remainders. What appears on the surface to be a simple, direct problem capable of rapid solution is, however, far more complex than would appear to the hon. member's eye. The writers have available to them the normal civil processes available in all forms of intellectual property law. For a multitude of reasons, they have not fully exploited the benefits available to them under these provisions.

If the government were able and decided to enter directly into litigation, the long-term consequences could be significant indeed. Officials of the department, in conjunction with officials of the Departments of Justice and National Revenue, have been attempting to find a solution to the problem that would permit a judicial review of the existing legislation and, at the same time, relieve the potential financial liability writers would face in bringing the matter to trial. I am pleased to say that we are now close to the solution and in a few days it may be possible to make an announcement to that effect.

One proposal put forth by the Writers Union, and supported in a statement by the hon. member, is for a quick and simple amendment to the existing statute. The minister has considered this and is reluctant to proceed on the matter. In part, this reluctance stems from the fact that the entire copyright law is undergoing comprehensive review which has recently generated more than 90 briefs on proposals made to the government last year. If the government were to make an exception for the Writers Union in this case, it would quickly be inundated with requests for special treatment in a myriad other cases. The benefits of a general and comprehensive review would be lost and the consequences to the long-term welfare of both creators and users of copyright material would be significant indeed.

A careful reading of the proposed amendment mentioned by the hon. member in an earlier communication to the minister raises some doubt as to the central purpose of the amendment. It would appear, to some at least, that the change would not only exclude remainders but the importation of any foreign editions of Canadian authors whether or not they were available in Canada. If this is, indeed, one of the possible outcomes, then Canadian readers and buyers of books could possibly experience a substantial increase in book prices and Canadian authors might expect a decline in sales since there are few, if any, products whose sales are immune to substantial price increases.

Our objective in revising the copyright legislation is to make it an act that is cognizant of current technology that will afford both users and creators and environment which offers both access and protection without undue cost to either, and this includes an effective solution to the remainder problem that is consistent with these over-all objectives.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 10.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

MEASURES TO INCREASE INCOMES OF PERSONS LIVING BELOW POVERTY LINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), I move:

That this House views with disgust—

If I could revert to being a printer this afternoon, I would set that word in large, bold type.

—the recommendation of the Advisory Group on Executive Compensation in the Public Service for increases in executive salaries in the public service to a new maximum of $73,200 a year, and this House calls on the government to reject such a recommendation and to concentrate instead on measures to increase the incomes of pensioners and all persons and families, some 25 per cent or more of the Canadian population, who are faced with the problem of trying to live below the poverty line, it being the view of this House that our first concern should be to meet the real needs of our ordinary people.

FUNDING OF CONSUMER ASSOCIATION OF CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I have just been informed by the Saskatchewan minister of consumer affairs, the hon. Ed Whelan, and the president of the Consumer Association of Canada, Ruth Lotzkar, that the federal Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand), in a speech to the CAC in Regina earlier this week implied that federal funding may be withdrawn from that organization unless it ceases its criticism of the federal government's food policy and other policies. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez):

That this House instruct the minister to make a statement on motions explaining his remarks to the CAC in order to alleviate the fear that, in order to secure a government grant, the CAC or, indeed, any other organization, must follow a Liberal party policy line.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FISHERIES

SHRIMP FISHING LICENCES FOR NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that a new shrimp fishery resource off Labrador and the northern peninsula of Newfoundland has been discovered sufficient for at least the issuance of 11 shrimp fishing licences, and that the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) has now made a decision, without consultation with the Newfoundland government, that eight active shrimp licences should be issued for fishing off Labrador and Newfoundland but that only two will go to Newfoundland, while three go to New Brunswick, one to Nova Scotia and two to Quebec, with three licences additional to be reserved for Labrador residents who cannot yet use them because of lack of suitable fishing vessels and equipment, and in view of the fact that Fishery Products Limited has now announced it must give up plans to establish a shrimp processing operation at St. Anthony since such an operation would need four licensed shrimpers and not just the two licences reserved for Newfoundland so that heavy unemployment will continue at St. Anthony in Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House deplores the fact that the Minister of Fisheries of Canada has reserved only two shrimp fishing licences for Newfoundland of eight active licences to be issued, deplores his lack of consultation and co-operation with the government of Newfoundland, and directs the minister to change his decision so that at least four shrimp fishing licences go to Newfoundland fishermen to supply Fishery Products Limited at St. Anthony, thus creating extensive employment at St. Anthony; and that this action be taken immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

OVERPAYMENTS TO BENEFICIARIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa (Mr. Trudel):

That this House views with concern the $4.3 million overpayment of unemployment insurance benefits to 15,385 claimants in the Nova Scotia, Vancouver and Montreal areas, and requests that the Minister of Employment and Immigration consider the introduction of an amendment to the unemployment insurance legislation which would give the minister discriminatory authority to nullify the obligation of the commission to collect moneys wrongly paid in cases where an incorrect coding results in the payments of extended benefits that it would not be possible for claimants to detect.

TRANSPORT

GRAIN HANDLING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Yesterday, Mr. Justice Emmett Hall told the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications that the special investigation into grain transportation announced by the Minister of Transport seems to be an unnecessary matter that will delay and continue the existing conditions much beyond the period in which they could be improved.

In view of the fact that the Hall royal commission made recommendations to modernize our grain handling and transportation systems and to improve the utilization of railway cars, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That this House requests the government to require the Minister of Transport to cancel plans for a special investigation that would waste $600,000 studying what has already been studied thoroughly by the Hall royal commission, and this House calls upon the Minister of Transport to implement immediately the recommendations of the Hall royal commission which would deal with present problems in grain movement to the Pacific coast.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

INCREASE IN FOOD PRICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the consumer price index announcement of today shows the most dramatic food price increases in many years, and in view of the fact that the Mallen report—a report done for the Food Prices Review Board—found that in the Canadian retail food trade "there is a definite correlation between high concentration and high profits" and "high concentration is associated with higher prices," I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That this House urge the government to adopt the policy options put forward by the Mallen report, including the establishment of a Crown corporation to enter into the retail food industry to compete with private firms in highly concentrated cities.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ALLEGED POLITICAL INTERFERENCE IN OPERATIONS OF CRTC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Recent reported statements by Pierre Camu, chairman of the CRTC, have revealed that the governement House leader in the Senate was behind the CRTC requests for 80 hours of CJOR, Ed Murphy's Reaction Line, and this appears to be a case of partisan political interference in a regulatory body. I move, seconded by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse):

That the government House leader be requested to make a statement in the other place, giving a full account of his actions and that the Minister of Communications make a statement on motions detailing the steps she intends to take to ensure that there is no political interference in this regulatory body.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

RATE OF INFLATION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance on a day when the figures indicate that for the first five months of 1978 the rate of inflation in this country was higher than before the controls program was brought in. The minister knows that when this government imposed controls, against its promise, it forecast a 4 per cent inflation rate for the fall of this year. When the minister brought in his budget, he forecast a 7 per cent inflation rate for 1978. Today's figures show that following the present trend in this country we will have an inflation rate of at least 11 per cent.

Will the Minister of Finance tell us what, in his analysis, has gone wrong? Why has the government failed to deal with inflation as they promised they could, what changes does he intend to introduce, and when will the House of Commons receive those changes?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was disappointed to see the inflation rate was high this morning. It was mainly due to food prices, which have increased very substantially mainly due to the beef cycle. As I have said many times, food is often imported, and in the beef industry there was a very substantial increase due to normal cycles and the fact that the income of producers is rising. We are out of controls—

An hon. Member: You are out of control.

Mr. Chrétien: —in the case of food: we do not have price controls any more. We hope that this situation is temporary and will improve. I do not intend changing the policy at this time. I do not intend to reimpose wage and price controls.

• (1417)

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the job of the minister is not to come into this House and express disappointment. His job is to come here and express new policy when it is clear that his policy is failing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: Don't cheat the farmers.

Mr. Clark: He knows that this is not a temporary situation. We hear the hon. member for Crowfoot, the bold and lonely member who has so little influence here—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —on policy that even his colleagues will not accept his advice not to blame the farmers because he has been blaming the beef farmers of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: My question, in face of this do-nothing government, is: if they will not change their policies—and we have been told they do not intend to—will they at least be honest enough to change the inflation forecast, and will the minister tell the House the new forecast for inflation?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the hon. member that the inflation rate in the other sectors of the economy is 6.2 from year to year. The change has been caused by food prices. Many of these foods are imported, over which we have no price control, nor do we expect to have any control. In the beef situation, as everyone knows, because of low prices in the past there was reduction in farmers' stocks and this is the price we have to pay at the present time. We do not intend at the moment to put that price increase on the backs of the farmers. I hope the hon. member will not speak from both sides of his mouth on that subject.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, what is relevant here is that this government, when they imposed controls, forecast an inflation rate of 4 per cent for this fall. It is now likely to be three times what they forecast. Obviously, their policy has failed. We want to know what changes in policy they intend. If they do not intend to change any, what changes in forecast will they give us? Since the minister indicated yesterday that he will meet on July 7 with the provincial ministers of finance, can he tell us what specific proposals the Government of Canada intends to put before that federal-provincial conference; or is this just another conference which the minister has called so he can try to share the blame with the provinces for the failure of his federal leadership.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I just said a few minutes ago that the inflation rate was 6.2 per cent in the other sectors of the economy, except in the case of food. I explained that we have no control over the price of beef and of other food products we consume in Canada, and that we do not intend to impose controls. Farmers are now asking more than before for their steers. We are in a market economy and this is a matter of supply and demand. We have eliminated controls in Canada since April 15 and prices are determined by supply and demand. The opposition had been urging us to do just that for one year and a half, to go back to a free market economy, and that is exactly what we have now.

[English]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, if this minister refuses to tell the House of Commons what policies he intends, will he at least tell me, without getting into any specifics—I know how much trouble specifics on economic policy give this minister—does he intend to make any concrete proposals to deal with the current serious economic problems when he meets with his provincial counterparts in early July?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I point out to the hon. member that we review the general economic performance of Canada. I would like the hon. member to realize that we are creating jobs in Canada at a rate greater than experienced in the past ten years. We are confronted with a large increase in the participation rate, but I would like to tell the hon. member that all forecasters around the world at this time are predicting that only Japan will outperform the Canadian economy this year.

GOVERNMENT PLANS TO REDUCE EXPENDITURES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Instead of trying to put the blame for inflation on the food producers of this country—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: What a hypocrite.

Mr. Stevens: —would the minister indicate whether he would be willing to bring in a budget or, if he cares to, at least make an economic statement showing new spending plans for the government for fiscal 1979 and fiscal 1980, with the earnest hope that they will narrow the $11.5 billion deficit which they have run up that is contributing to inflation? Hopefully, they will bring that down to a manageable level by fiscal 1980. Will he do that for the Canadian public?

● (1422)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the usefulness of having a new budget. The hon. member does not yet understand the last one: we are still debating it after two months. We are not about to have a budget every month. The Canadian economy is basically healthy. We are having a problem this month with food prices. I recognize that it is difficult. We do not intend to freeze the prices of farmers. Members opposite are very good at speaking loudly and looking angry, but they never come up with propositions which make any sense at all.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, only yesterday the same minister was taking credit for stealing some of our ideas. Even if you accept his 6.2 per cent underlying inflation level, the minister fails to point out that that is 2.2 per cent higher than their target of October, 1975. In his refusal to give spending and deficit estimates for 1980 and ensuing years, does the minister realize that he is going directly against the recommendations of the OECD nations which asked all industrialized countries first to better control their spending and, second, to show forecasts for two to five years as to where they are going?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition supports the idea of an additional $2 billion in deficit at this time because he would propose to cut further the taxes of the citizens, which would mean that we would have a deficit of $13.5 billion. I think the financial critic and the Leader of the Opposition should meet to try to put their ideas together because they are both moving in completely opposite directions.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REASON FOR INCREASES IN PRICE OF BEEF AND CHICKEN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs: it concerns recent increases in the price of beef. We realize the farmer is just now catching up to what he should have received for beef over the last four or five years. I am interested in knowing whether the minister has completed the inquiry as to whether there is profiteering at the wholesale, packing and retail levels, or are the wholesalers and retailers taking advantage of the increase that has been given to the farmer? If he has finished that inquiry, what are the recommendations? Will he set up a special agency to roll back the prices which retailers are charging?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have not completed our examination of that problem. The preliminary report indicates there has not been undue profiteering.

An hon. Member: Undue?

Mr. Allmand: Well, profiteering. I do not want to nit-pick on those words. The initial report is that there has been none. However, I am continuing to look at this situation very closely. If there is any evidence of that, we will act. I remind hon. members that we have before this House Bill C-13 to deal with concentration and mergers. If the opposition would help us get that bill through, we will be glad.

Mr. Nystrom: On Monday of this week, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture issued a statement saying that the retail price of chicken has gone up by some 28 per cent in the last five months, while the price to the farmer has gone up by only 8.9 per cent. In other words, the middleman is once again making the profit. There has been a 27 per cent increase at the retail level, and a 20 per cent increase at the processing level. Has the minister investigated the reason for such a tremendous spread? If so, what is he going to do about it?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I brought the question of chicken prices to the attention of my officials several days ago. I noticed the same statistics which the hon. member has brought to the attention of the House. I have asked for answers with regard to that spread, and I hope to get them soon.

● (1427)

INCREASE IN PRICE OF VEGETABLES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My final supplementary question is to the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture. I am sure the right hon. gentleman has noticed that the price of vegetables has gone up by some 39 per cent in the last year. He knows we are not self-sufficient in the production of vegetables, beef, chicken and hogs; indeed, in almost all the foods in respect of which prices have risen so sharply.

I would ask the Prime Minister what he intends to do to make this country more self-sufficient in the production of food. If you exclude grain and oilseeds, last year, according to the government's own figures, we were a net importer of food to the tune of $1.8 billion. What does the right hon. gentleman intend to do to ensure that we produce more food, which would give a better income to farmers, a stable price to consumers and more jobs to Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand this question was dealt with in part before my arrival in the House. I can only repeat what has already been said, that the hon. member is right, we are not self-sufficient in food, and that some 30 per cent of what we consume is imported, a circumstance which is in large part due to the seasonal nature of our production. We import food because in many instances we cannot grow it in Canada during the season when it is required for consumption here.

In the case of beef, the single factor most responsible for the increase in the food price index, the beef cycle as predicted has caught up with us and we are now paying a high price because for the last two years beef producers have been receiving a very low price. Now that they are getting a higher price—a more reasonable one—we are sympathetic to the consumer, but we cannot blame the beef producer or attempt to take it out on him.

NATIONAL UNITY

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO INFORM PUBLIC OF SEPARATIST MOVEMENT

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

While governments and constitutional experts are discussing the main issues of our collective future, political conditions are deteriorating. The Pepin-Robarts Commission on Canadian unity has yet to publish its report. The Prime Minister has recently tabled a white paper on proposals for discussion.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he intends to distribute some kind of publication to let ordinary people know—since I feel that newspapers do not give accurate reports on what is going on here—what is going on in Quebec especially about the separatist movement now at work in Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I share the concern of the hon. member and I can say to him that the federal government and surely the members on this side of the House consider that it is their essential responsibility to speak about those problems to the people. However, I would refer the hon. member to a group established within the civil service, one of the main duties of which is to inform the population about the reality of Canadian federalism and to underline its extensive benefits for the entire country, especially Quebec. I will be pleased to make sure that the hon. member obtains the address of those offices and that the many publications issued by them are made available to the hon. member if they are not already.

Mr. Beaudoin: According to some experts, on November 15, 1976 the voters wanted to get rid of the Bourassa government. Now a recent survey made in Quebec shows a clear rise of separatist feelings among Quebeckers. If the duty of senior officials is to warn or wake up people to the fact that national unity is in danger, what does the right hon. Prime Minister intend to do to improve a situation which, in my opinion, is alarming, this rise of separatism in Quebec?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the survey mentioned by the hon. member. Those that have been brought to my attention tend to show, on the contrary, that the influence of separatism among voters has long since peaked and that indeed the percentage has not varied much over the last ten years. I also suggest that the Parti Québécois shares this view and that it probably did not see the figures the hon. member is talking about either, because I see that they take offence whenever somebody says they are separatists. They claim not to be, they are not even "independentists" any more. Now they are for a confederation. What that means, I am not very sure, but they reject the word separatist itself, so I would be surprised if they would do so because people are becoming favourable to that movement.

Mr. Beaudoin: One last supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to demonstrate to the Prime Minister that Canadians generally and especially English Canadians in Toronto and in a number of English-speaking capitals in Canada are saying vocally and in print that Quebec's separation would not mean a blow more violent than the unforgettable deportation of the Acadians. On the other hand, it is a fact that many countries which were not yet ready for independence have fallen flat on their faces, made a terrible mistake, and joined the Communist bloc. Under these circumstances, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will take steps to set up a non-political organization—which might include hon. members of this house—to travel everywhere in Canada and inform the man on the street of what is going in Canada.

Mr. Trudeau As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons why the Pepin-Robarts Commission was set up by the House and the government a year ago was to travel everywhere in Canada and contact the man in the street and all those who wanted to appear at its hearings to discuss these matters. As to the part hon. members may play, I should like to advise the hon. member that soon after we introduce the bill in the House before the end of this month, we intend to propose the establishment of a parliamentary committee to consider this bill. I am aware of the fact that parliamentarians—both members of the House of Commons and the Senate—are in contact with the public and that they will be able to voice the preoccupations and aspirations of the man in the street.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PROTECTION AGAINST PROFITEERING

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who shows even less willingness to carry out his statutory responsibilities on behalf of consumers than his predecessor. I ask the minister if he was quoted correctly when he was reported in the press of May 27 as having said:

> Consumers can expect less federal government protection in the future, according to Warren Allmand, Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

If the minister was quoted correctly, can he tell the House exactly where consumers are to find protection? In the face of charges by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture with respect to price-gouging and profiteering on chicken, and charges by the Canadian Cattlemen's Association of profiteering on beef, where can consumers find protection if they cannot get it from the one who has statutory responsibility; or does the minister subscribe to the view just expressed by the Prime Minister that all consumers can expect from this government is sympathy?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to correct the very erroneous story which came out of a meeting I had in Harrison Hot Springs, British Columbia. The story was completely false.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We heard your voice.

Mr. Allmand: As a matter of fact, I indicated to the meeting that it was my intention to go ahead with several measures to help consumers, and I was asking for support. I do not know how the reporter could come up with that kind of story. I could mention to the hon. member many measures we have brought forward, including the recent bill with regard to which the hon. member co-operated very much, to protect consumers against tax rebate discounting.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the House and the country will be glad to know that the minister is alive and well. Given the very serious charges of profiteering and price-gouging in the marketplace during this current wave of food inflation, and given the fact that there is no agency within the Government of Canada to monitor this situation apart from what we can expect from the Economic Council of Canada, has the minister in keeping with his statutory responsibilities to protect consumers, met with the chairman of the Economic Council of Canada with respect to forming some kind of alliance to ensure that that agency, which does not have statutory responsibility, will be able to adequately monitor the marketplace to ensure that this kind of gouging and price-fixing does not continue?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I did not meet with the chairman of the Economic Council of Canada because, as the hon. member says, the Economic Council does not have the power now to deal with this problem. However, there is an officer, contrary to what the hon. member says, who does have that power, and that is the director of investigation and research who has certain powers to investigate abuses of concentration, monopolies, and so forth. I have spoken to him. He has investigated, and is investigating these situations.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware of the fact that the Prime Minister wrote a letter to the chairman of the Economic Council of Canada asking the council to discharge this monitoring responsibility in the post-controls period? If so, is the minister now telling the House that this role has been taken away from the Economic Council of Canada? If that is so, who is going to discharge this role?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, of course I am aware of that direction by the Prime Minister, but that is not in place now. The Economic Council of Canada is in the process of setting up a system of monitoring prices which will go into effect once the Anti-Inflation Board is phased out. As the hon. member knows, the Anti-Inflation Board still has jurisdiction and will continue to have jurisdiction until the end of the fiscal year of the corporations which are now operating, which will be later this year.

INCREASE IN PRICE OF BEEF

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Live cattle market prices have dropped by about $7 in the United States, and by a little less here in Canada, due partly to the impact of President Carter's recent announcement about a 16 per cent increase in the American import beef quota and partly because of a too rapid increase in live cattle prices over the last two months.

In view of the fact that most cattle producers in Canada will not receive a nickel's worth of benefit from this recent increase until they market their grass cattle some time next October or November, does the minister not feel that the middleman's take in this whole operation should be questioned either by his office or the AIB?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I answered earlier in the question period, we are examining that question. However, up until now I have been told by the people who are doing the examination that there is no evidence of infractions of the Combines Investigation Act or of profiteering as defined therein. I might say that if the House is not satisfied, as I am not satisfied, with our present Combines Investigation Act, we have a bill before the House which will greatly improve things. I would be quite willing to discuss with opposition members their willingness to pass that bill quickly.

Mr. Clark: That is not MacEachen's priority.

Mr. Allmand: Yesterday, I met with the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. We had a very good meeting. They put to me their points of view on this subject. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was also there, and we had a very good exchange.

An hon. Member: Now we know what happened.

Mr. Allmand: We are presently looking at some proposals to deal with the price situation in Canada.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his remarks. I ask if he is aware that in Toronto, retail beef marks-ups have jumped from 30 per cent last year to over 40 per cent in recent weeks and that the supermarket share of the consumer's beef dollar has jumped from 30 cents a pound in January to as high as 74 cents a pound now. Does the minister not feel that action is necessary now?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I already said that before these questions were even raised in the House I referred those mark-ups to my officials for examination. The mark-ups are continually under examination. Some of them are relatively recent, but they will be given very close attention and if there is an abuse of market power, we will deal with it.

PUBLIC WORKS

UTILIZATION OF SOLAR ENERGY

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State for Science and Technology: it relates to the fact that on May 3 this House unanimously agreed to a motion in favour of the utilization of solar energy. In view of the recently announced measures by the Minister of State for Science and Technology to increase the level of research and development by using the procurement practices of the federal government to support industrial research and development in Canada, would the minister inform this House whether he intends to ensure that from now on federal procurement contracts for the construction of new federal buildings will be used to provide a dependable and continuing market source for Canadian solar equipment, thereby encouraging the industrial development of solar equipment and the growth of a competitive solar equipment industry?

● (1442)

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that my colleagues, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Supply and Services, and myself, wearing both hats as Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology, share the concern raised by the hon. member. We are now discussing and looking at some options. It is my expectation that announcements will be forthcoming on this matter within the next few days.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REVIEW OF TRIAL OF ALEXANDER PETER TREU

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister having regard to the statements he made yesterday in which he said that parliament is not supreme and there is a division of power. He went on to indicate that there was no right on the part of the Government of Canada to grant a new trial. That is what he said.

The Hon. John Turner introduced an amendment to section 617 of the Criminal Code which allows the attorney general of Canada to order a new trial: that was done on December 19, 1968. The Prime Minister became leader in April, 1968. Thus, one can safely assume that the Department of Justice was preparing this amendment when he was minister of justice. I refer to this matter because he was all wrong yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must ask the right hon. member to put a question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I appear to be the only member of the House who cannot ask a question properly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have no idea whether the right hon. member wishes to simply challenge my authority in this respect. The right hon. member has already put a considerable preamble and I think I have extended considerable leniency. Yesterday, I extended the same kind of leniency when the right hon. member was putting his question. However, there are other hon. members who want to share the question period and I must ask the right hon. member, if not in consideration of others—a precedent which we follow—at least in consideration of his colleagues, to put a question rather than a long preamble.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not raise the question as to the words the Prime Minister used yesterday, "absolute bunk," as reported in Hansard. All across this nation Canadians heard the Prime Minister say what he thought.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It starts with "bull" and ends with another four letter word. Those are the words he used yesterday and they were translated into the word "bunk."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have today received several letters and wires from across the country in this connection.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Minister of Justice made a statement to the press—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must insist that the right hon. member use the question period as it is intended, and put a question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if Your Honour had been as fast on the draw yesterday, when the Prime Minister used those words, things would have been better in Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is nothing shameful about what I am saying. In connection with the Morgentaler case, on January 22, 1976, the Minister of Justice—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I want to rise later on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

HOUSING

CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING PROGRAM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Will he confirm the correctness of the statement made in Toronto yesterday at a meeting arranged by the co-operative housing organizations, which indicated that the date of implementation of new co-operative housing programs has been set back to January 1, 1979, and that in the intervening months a real exchange of views will take place with those organizations?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Yes, I can confirm that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, is it correct to assume, since the minister has agreed to continue the present policy for co-operative housing until a new policy has been agreed upon, that the present policy and the present system for determining rents in respect of non-profit housing—that is, those established by provincial and municipal governments and private, non-profit organizations—will continue until a new policy has evolved?

Mr. Ouellet: No, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN PRICE OF VEGETABLES

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The rise in the price of fresh vegetables last month alone was a staggering 22.2 per cent which, incidentally, is four times the rise in the price of meat during the same period. For the minister's information, vegetables are absolutely necessary for a balanced Canadian diet. Will he tell the House why the government allowed this to happen?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I have said, there is no control on prices in Canada. If the hon. member is proposing control of the price of food and vegetables in Canada, perhaps we can consider that. I do not think that is the type of policy they advocate, as they were complaining only a few months ago that we had too much control.

Mrs. Pigott: Mr. Speaker, the minister is really saying that the deep devaluation of the Canadian dollar, which his government promoted, is responsible for this situation. At the time he was devaluing the dollar, did the minister have an estimate of the impact of devaluation on food prices? If he did, why did he go ahead, knowing that millions of Canadian housewives who see their income falling below the rate of inflation every time they go through a check-out counter would have to bear the consequences of his action?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have already said that there is not only value in the devaluation of the dollar; there is also a price to pay. Of course, we have to pay more for the food we are importing because the Canadian dollar has a lower value. At the same time, there are a lot of positive elements in a dollar which is weaker than the American dollar. Many Canadian industries have benefited enormously, such as those involved in exports, the paper industry, the wood industry and the aluminum industry. Many industries which export products outside of Canada are benefiting by the weaker dollar. As I have indicated, there are advantages and disadvantages. If we compare the two, I think so far the 90-cent dollar has been very good for the Canadian economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO RE-ESTABLISH SUBSIDY ON SKIM MILK POWDER

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, I will direct this very simple question to the Minister of Finance.

A few months ago, the Minister of Agriculture decided that consumers could pay 50 per cent more for skim milk powder. In the light of that decision which affects low income families whose income happens to increase at a rate of 3 per cent slower than the rate of inflation, and given the considerable increase in food prices last month, would the Minister of Finance be ready to re-establish that subsidy?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did not listen to the question carefully because I thought it was directed to one of my colleagues. I will listen to it again or answer it tomorrow after reading the official report.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I am simply asking the Minister of Finance, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, whether he would be willing to re-establish the subsidy on skim milk powder which was removed by the minister some time ago, in view of the increase in food prices?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I will convey the hon. member's representations to my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, who is responsible for this program.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INQUIRY AS TO MEASURES TO IMPROVE ECONOMIC SITUATION

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

Given yesterday's announcement that the unemployment rate had reached 11.5 per cent in the province of Quebec and that it was said today that the inflation rate is now 9 per cent for all Canada, and considering that there are 60 hon. members from the province of Quebec on the government side, without putting the blame on the Parti Québécois, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will explain this situation to Quebeckers and what immediate steps he will advocate to settle the situation as quickly as possible?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, as far as the unemployment rate is concerned, I have to repeat what has been said earlier today in the House, that all factors contributing to inflation in all sectors except food are doing down. So, except in this particular sector, in all others which have been subject to controls and in some which will continue to be controlled until the end of December, inflation is going down. The sector where inflation is rising both in the province of Quebec and in other provinces, is the food sector. As the Minister of Finance has stated, we believe this creates a real problem for consumers. However, it remains that farm income, both in Quebec and elsewhere, is not excessive and the price increases in this sector are largely due to external causes, particularly the frost in California and the fact that 30 per cent of our food products are imported.

SOCIAL SECURITY

MEASURES TO ASSIST FAMILIES MOST AFFECTED BY INFLATION

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In view the fact that yesterday's reports concerning unemployment and today's reports concerning inflation seriously affect poor families and senior citizens receiving a pension here in Canada, what immediate action can we expect from the minister to remedy the situation of those families?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, inflation obviously affects disadvantaged Canadians and that is why this House has voted the indexing of family allowances, which now stand at $25.68 per child per month. This is in addition to social benefits, to which all Canadian taxpayers contribute, in a proportion of 50 per cent, through the provinces; some of which are also to be indexed every three months. This may not be ideal but it is the best method currently available to ensure that old age security pensions and related programs for needy people stay in line with the value of the dollar.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

CURBING OF INFLATION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, it has become customary for this government, whenever attempting to defend its inability to deal with inflation, to blame matters on international trends, yet over the last six months the rate of inflation in Great Britain, for example, was 6.8 per cent, on an annual basis, while in the same six-month period ours was 9 per cent. Could the minister tell us—if, indeed, inflation is an international trend—why the British government, without controls, managed to do so much better than he did with controls, to say nothing of West Germany and Japan?

ENERGY

SURVEY OF HEAVY WATER NEEDS

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. There seems to be concern in the country that we are heading for an oversupply of heavy water if facilities presently under construction are completed. Did the minister's department or Atomic Energy of Canada Limited carry out a survey of future needs of heavy water before the $1.5 billion plant at La Prade was put under construction?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the decision in respect of the building at La Prade was taken some years ago when the Quebec government had put forward a plan which I think involved some 10,000 megawatts of power. At that time there were discussions with Ontario Hydro about heavy water requirements for the Ontario Hydro system. It was agreed that Ontario Hydro would build heavy water plants to supply its requirements for nuclear reactors and the federal government would build a plant at La Prade which would look after the heavy water requirements of Quebec and other provinces, as well as for export.

Recently, Ontario Hydro scaled down its forecast in respect of power needs for the province. Indeed, we have seen them stretching out their thermal stations and cancelling some. I believe they have also been cancelling some of their orders for residual oil. The result of all this is that they may well end up with a surplus of heavy water. I believe that is the reason they are considering moth-balling the Bruce "D" heavy water plant.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, is the minister telling us that in respect of future needs for export, Canada might be able to supply—I believe the minister told us this in committee—the heavy water for plants now under construction in Argentina and South Korea? Is the minister telling us that no federal export permits will be given to Ontario Hydro to supply heavy water to meet any export needs?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, recently, as a result of the error in forecasting on the part of Ontario Hydro, there was an indication that Ontario Hydro would like to discuss with us some participation in export sales. They have created a problem for themselves as a result of over-forecasting their needs. I believe they have even made the suggestion that because they have made an error in forecasting, the federal government should reduce in some way the program which is well advanced and committed at La Prade.

ALLEGED HARASSMENT OF ONTARIO RESIDENTS WORKING IN QUEBEC

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister: it stems from a recent story in a Toronto newspaper about a Toronto carpenter, David Grier, who has been ordered to appear in court in Hull, Quebec, on September 6. Mr. Grier has been charged with the crime of working in Quebec earlier this year, a charge that has been levelled at many other Ontario residents who have worked on construction jobs in the province of Quebec. I ask the Prime Minister whether he will direct the appropriate minister of the Crown to intercede on behalf of Mr. Grier and other Ontario workers who are being harassed by the PQ government of Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may be attempting to be helpful to Mr. Grier, but I can assure him that he is not. The two provincial ministers of labour—that is, of Quebec and Ontario—are meeting and discussing this general matter. It is a matter of provincial jurisdiction which has to do not only with labour legislation and contracts but the administration of justice. Though I understand the hon. member's concern, which I share to a certain degree, I do not think he is being helpful by intervening in this way at this time.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CELEBRATION OF CANADA WEEK

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. Yesterday, an important press conference designed to inform the media of the Canada Week celebration was held in Montreal. Of course, the journalists, technicians and cameramen of the CBC, a Crown corporation subsidized to the tune of $486 million dollars by all Canadian taxpayers, were there. Unfortunately, they were not seen or heard on the French news report. Would the minister responsible for the CBC remind this corporation of the importance for all Canadians of the Canada Week festivities?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with the hon. member on the importance of Canada Week, and I shall certainly raise the question with and convey his representations to the CBC president.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

CURBING OF INFLATION

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance, if he will resume his seat: he is like the reluctant debutante. The Minister of Finance has stated that there is a steady decline in the underlying rates of inflation, despite the figures we have seen. The minister has reached that conclusion by eliminating food, energy and imports. Could the minister tell us where he is going to find a Canadian who does not eat, who does not need heat or ventilation and does not use anything that is imported? Also, when this mythical Canadian is found, how will the underlying inflation rates help him?

● (1502)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time we have used the underlying rate of inflation to describe the real inflation cause within the country. As I said earlier, the food problem always has a very different cycle in the operation of inflation. This was a very bad month and we have given an explanation for it. Part of the cause is the fact that much of our food is imported, there have been poor crops in the United States and beef prices are at a point in the cycle that is not advantageous for consumers at this time. We do not intend to penalize meat producers for that reason.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, there is a steady decline in the minister's credibility because of the nonsense he is spouting in answer to our questions. The minister has agreed that the question of increasing costs of imports due to decline in the price of the dollar is a factor. Is it still the government's policy, despite the effect of the declining value of the Canadian dollar, on inflation to follow the advice of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that the Canadian dollar should be 90 cents all the time and that par is 90 cents? Is that the Canadian government's policy? Does the Minister of Finance agree that par is 90 cents, no matter what effect it has on inflation?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we have said that the lower value of the dollar has advantages and disadvantages. One of the advantages is that it is helping, for example, the export of fish taken in Newfoundland. There is a price to pay for the declining dollar; one is that imported foods are more expensive. So we have a balance between the two. We do not have a fixed price for the Canadian dollar because it is floating: at this time it is between 89 cents and 90 cents.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TABLING OF SCHEDULE OF CLASSIFICATIONS OF SUPPORT STAFF

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will be aware that the matter of support staff positions for all members of the House of Commons have been under consideration for some time. I will be tabling a document today in that regard.

Before going on to routine proceedings, I thought that all hon. members would want to be informed of some rather important and significant steps that have been taken with respect to the staff of members' offices, particularly described as support staff for members of the House of Commons. In light of comments that have been made somehow a number of negotiations and efforts that have been taking place over the last 12 months regarding the support staff of members have managed to be either overlooked or ignored in discussions that have taken place with respect to the positions of staff of the House of Commons.

I should like to report to the House that the study is an excellent piece of work which has been done in the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services in respect particularly to the staff of members of the House of Commons. I say that in this way because, with respect to the provisions which we have recently enacted in regard to salaries of personnel of the House of Commons, we have always endeavoured to establish a balance which would seem to be just and reasonable between those who work for the House of Commons and the taxpayers who pay all of the bills for the operation of the House of Commons by trying to find out whether or not all of the members of the personnel of the House of Commons have been paid in such a way as to reflect favourably on their counterparts in the public service and in the private sector. By endeavouring to negotiate increases annually which keep employees of the House of Commons slightly ahead of their counterparts in the public service and the private sector, we feel certain that, without collective bargaining, they are enjoying the benefits of the best of both worlds.

In respect, however, to support staff for members of the House of Commons, who constitute a substantial aspect of the personnel of the House of Commons, it has long been recognized that this effort to tie support staff positions in the offices of the members of the House of Commons to some equivalent positions in the public service has not been a satisfactory arrangement because, obviously, many members have personnel and support staff who fulfil functions which cannot be described in the public service. By attempting to correlate those positions to positions in the public service, we have met with the rather legitimate concern on behalf of the support staff of the members of the House of Commons that, while the salary ranges may reflect favourably in respect to the secretarial positions in the public service, their responsibilities do not correlate accurately. Therefore, the objective of the very excellent and thorough work in the standing committee has been to find a regime which would liberate the support staff from this correlation to positions in the public service which are primarily secretarial in nature.

The Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services has done a very excellent review of this situation, and after careful consideration and several studies they came forward with recommendations which were recently reviewed by the commissioners of internal economy. As I say, the object was to establish a new and special classification for the support staff for members of the House of Commons. After the commissioners of internal economy reviewed the recommendations, it was agreed that effective at the beginning of the next parliament they would become operative.

Since this parliament is now continuing for some time, it was recently asked by the members' services committee whether that implementation date could be fixed in a different way, and the commissioners of internal economy reviewed the matter and agreed that it would be appropriate to make the recommendations effective September 1 of this year. Accordingly, I am now able to table a schedule on classifications of support staff for members which we feel reflects the unique responsibilities of persons who work in the offices of the members of the House of Commons as support staff, and gives an option of several different formulae that may be adopted by a member of the House, depending on the particular needs that he or she may have. This is all within a fixed budget that is attributable to the support staff for the member.

I table this schedule today simply to indicate that the matter has been under review for almost a year and has been the subject of very careful and very extensive study. I would also say that between now and the implementation date members will find, upon tabling of this minute of the commissioners of internal economy, that they will now enjoy a number of options in terms of employment as of September 1 and positions and salary ranges which are freed from any correlation in the public service.

In addition to that, by the implementation date of September 1 it is hoped that a further option may be arrived at in co-operation with the management and members' services committee and the commissioners of internal economy, both of whom have expressed agreement in principle with this further option, and that is an option which may release some of the constraints that are upon the constituency offices in terms of the over-all staff requirements for members. That is to say simply that a further option will be studied to see whether or not one of the senior positions in the scheme which I am now tabling may be utilized in the constituency office. That, of course, bears with it a number of other consequences in terms of salary and other allowances in the constituency office, and it is worthy of very careful exploration and more precise definition. I merely wanted to indicate to members of the House that that matter will be further studied in the hope that that option can also be achieved in time for the implementation date of September 1.

[Mr. Speaker.]

MR. TRUDEAU—REPLY TO REMARKS OF RIGHT HON. MEMBER FOR PRINCE ALBERT

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, because the intervention by the right hon. gentleman for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) did not end in a question, I was not afforded an opportunity to answer the erroneous allegations he made, and that is why I am raising it on a point of privilege at this time.

There are two matters I want to draw to the attention of the House. The first is that the right hon. gentleman alleged that I said there was no right on the part of the government or the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) to order a new trial. I did not say that. I was arguing that, in the case before us, in these circumstances it was not the proper procedure to order a new trial. As I argued, the case was before the courts, and in the very section quoted by the right hon. gentleman, section 617 of the Criminal Code, it does say "upon application on behalf or by a person." I know of no such application having been made.

Mr. Baldwin: I made it in this House.

Mr. Trudeau: I would like to know what mandate the hon. member has to make such an application on behalf of the courts in this House.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): He has a perfect mandate, a membership in this House.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this is a perversion of the Criminal Code. If any lawyer in this House could stand up and make on behalf of somebody before the courts an application in the name of the Criminal Code, we are really confounding the two orders.

Mr. Baldwin: I made it to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Trudeau: Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, one of the remedies in the Criminal Code in this very section is to refer the matter to the court of appeal. That is where the matter is now, and it would seem to me that that is where it best lay for the moment.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You do not even understand the problem.

Mr. Trudeau: The second point, Mr. Speaker, is that the right hon. gentleman suggests that in some way the record of Hansard was tampered with and that the word which appears in Hansard, the word "bunk", is not the word I actually used; and he rather deliberately indicated that I had used some other expression which was, presumably, less parliamentary in usage.

The record in Hansard, Mr. Speaker, is the record of the word I used, and hon. members of this House and those who watch the proceedings on television know that that is the word I used. If the hon. member wants to challenge that, then I will formally ask him to make it a point of privilege and we will refer you to the record, Mr. Speaker, and we will refer to the witnesses. I understand that a morning paper from Toronto has also perverted the words I used and invented some others. The word I used is "bunk", the word I think should have been used is "bunk", and that is what it was.

● (1512)

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, having in mind what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said, let me now respond to that allegation on a point of privilege. Section 617 of the Criminal Code reads:

The Minister of Justice may, upon an application for the mercy of the Crown by or on behalf of a person who has been convicted in proceedings by indictment—

On behalf of Dr. Treu I made application to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) in this House for a new trial which can be construed according to the provisions of this act. It was rejected by the Minister of Justice; it was rejected by the Prime Minister. This is the Prime Minister and this is the Minister of Justice who gave effect to the provisions of the Criminal Code by ordering a new trial for Dr. Morgentaler who had been convicted twice.

Mr. Trudeau: He made application.

Mr. Baldwin: Although I have my views on the question of capital punishment, this is the same government as its predecessor which, over a period of 15 years, has on a great many occasions interfered with the processes of the court by ordering commutation of sentences. They have no right in this instance to say that the government have not intervened in issues between citizens and the court.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, having been dragged into this, I should just like to make a short comment. First of all, I would refer to section 617 of the Criminal Code and my action with regard to Dr. Morgentaler. I exercised my right under section 617 to order a new trial after all appeals had expired and on the basis of a very formal and documented application from the counsel of record for Dr. Morgentaler. There is no such application in front of me with regard to Dr. Treu.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, on the second point of privilege referred to by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), it is with sorrow that I rise. I was in the House yesterday afternoon, as I think you and a number of other members were, at the time the Prime Minister got into a rather heated exchange with another member of the House. As I understand it now, the Prime Minister has indicated that if any member challenges the interpretation he put on his words yesterday afternoon, he would like to see the matter referred to a committee.

Sir, with due regret and with sorrow in my voice—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: I heard what the Prime Minister said yesterday. He did not say "bunk". I therefore challenge the Prime Minister that this matter should be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: If any application is to be made on procedural grounds in respect of what may or may not have been said by any member at any time, it will have to be upon proper notice under our rules. It will have to be a notice of motion with which I can deal. I have no motion in front of me now respecting the words spoken yesterday by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or by any other member. When I have such an application in front of me, I will be only too happy to deal with it, but it will have to be on proper procedural grounds. I have no application in respect of that.

In addition, it may be that even what is now being alleged to have been said will or will not constitute disorder, privilege, or any other ground. I am obviously going to have to see it as a subject of formal application before I can deal with it. I have no formal application in front of me.

The right hon. Prime Minister indicated in his question of privilege that he felt he had a point to respond to, which is often the practice during the question period. He made other observations which drew a response from the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and in turn from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford).

The matter still resolves itself into a dispute, however, or a disagreement between members and does not constitute a question of privilege. The matter now raised by the right hon. Prime Minister on procedural grounds is therefore finalized.

Mr. Lawrence: On a point of order, sir, maybe my understanding of what happened this afternoon is incorrect and you will quickly slap me down. I understood that the Prime Minister rose on two questions of privilege. They were the Prime Minister's questions of privilege, not mine.

With a great deal of bravado on the second point the Prime Minister indicated that, if any of us disagreed with his interpretation of what he said yesterday, then he was challenging us to rise in our place. I have risen in my place. I am indicating from what my memory is of what happened yesterday that the Prime Minister is absolutely wrong and in effect, perhaps unintentionally, is attempting to mislead the people of this country, if not the—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: He did not say "bunk".

Mr. Speaker: I will tell it to the hon. member one more time. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) has decided to participate in this discussion. I have not set aside his point. I have simply said that if he has a point to raise it will have to be done on proper procedural grounds. I am not interested in whether challenges have been issued or taken up. If matters are to be raised in this House they will have to be raised on proper procedural grounds.

If the substance of the matter is a remark made by any member at any time yesterday, if it constitutes a question of privilege it will have to be on the basis of the proper notice within our rules. When I hear the question of privilege argued and see the ultimate motion, then I can make a ruling. Without that there is nothing upon which I can make a ruling.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have already had three messages from those who listened to the TV last night. One is from a professor at Lakehead University who wrote:

I want you to know that there is public resentment at the language Mr. Trudeau used in replying to you yesterday. It is so offensive that it cannot be tolerated.

I told him he should write to the Prime Minister and tell him how outraged he is, and to please forward a copy of the letter to you, Mr. Speaker. I remember "fuddle-duddle" on another occasion. The Prime Minister said he used the expression "fuddle-duddle". I heard what he used—a four letter word beginning with "f" and ending with "k" followed by "you". You cannot make "fuddle-duddle" out of that.

It was very obvious yesterday when he was talking so blatantly and with such certainty that he did not realize the amendment had been made to section 617. I would remind him that the Criminal Code contains a special provision, section 617, which provides that the federal Minister of Justice may, upon an application for the mercy of the Crown by or on behalf of a person who has been convicted in proceedings by indictment, direct by order in writing a new trial if after inquiry he is satisfied that in the circumstances a new trial should be directed. This is a special remedy to provide in the Criminal Code at least one safeguard in the whole judicial process. It should be used carefully, sparingly and only in extraordinary circumstances.

If ever there were extraordinary circumstances, they obtain in the present case. He did not know about this and gave these opinions on the law yesterday. He was all wrong and today he has to say that of course he knew of the existence of this section—which he did not know of or he would not have made the statements he made. Your Honour has already directed that I may not refer to what was said and I will not. I will simply say that the Prime Minister yesterday decided he could get away with that and he got caught by an intimate organ. I am not going to identify it.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) say they heard something that I did not say. Mr. Speaker, I will make a motion if it is necessary. I just ask you to do what is done in such cases—to listen to the audio tape, if such is within your power, and report to the House tomorrow.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Oh, no.

● (1522)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that the two hon. members who said this are misleading the House. I am not saying they did this deliberately, but I am saying they are.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Trudeau: Shut up, George.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The long established practice of parliament is very clear. That is to say, when an hon. member of this House rises in his place and puts a matter on the record, it is accepted by the House. The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said today that he did not speak the words yesterday of which he is accused. There is a very long established practice that the word of any member of this House is accepted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: If at any time any hon. member of this House does not wish to pursue that course and wishes to pursue a separate course based on any allegations contrary to the word of an hon. member in this House, there are well established procedures for doing that. I simply say that that will have to be done formally and in accordance with correct procedure. However, at the moment the right hon. Prime Minister has given his word to this House and the practice is, of course, that that word is accepted.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DINSDALE—DELAY IN TABLING POST OFFICE ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding any further with the introduction of new business, two questions of privilege are outstanding. First of all, there is one raised by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) with respect to the tabling by the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) of his report and other related matters, and second, a question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) in respect to the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Buchanan). I have had an indication from both ministers of their willingness to respond to the questions of privilege, the Postmaster General today and the Minister of State for Science and Technology hopefully either tomorrow or Friday.

Perhaps this will be the appropriate time to recognize the Postmaster General.

[Translation]

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) on Thursday, June 8, 1978. I should like to indicate that I was absent from the House when it was raised. Whenever I am absent from the House, it is always for very good reasons. An international philatelic exhibition was being held in Toronto, and I had to be there to welcome the general director of the Universal Postal Union and the new postmaster general of the United States. I can say, therefore, that I had excellent reasons not to be present in the House, because I was fulfilling the duties of my office.

The question of privilege which the hon. member for Brandon-Souris raised had several parts, the first one dealing with his appearance before the Standing Committee on Transport. Mr. Speaker, I am not the one who decides what the procedures of a committee are going to be. It is the chairman of the committee who decides and who must defend his position. I do not believe that there is a question of privilege in this case.

In second place, I will deal with the tabling of the annual report of the Post Office. It was quite normal, as I was appointed Postmaster General at the beginning of February and knew that the annual report should have been tabled at that time, that I should, as minister responsible for the Post Office, look at what was written in this report before tabling it; the report was tabled in both official languages within 14 weeks. After checking the records at the National Library and according to my information, I must say that since 1956, the Post Office annual report has never been tabled on time. I do not believe that I can be accused of starting a new trend. The 1977-78 report will be tabled on time.

A third point mentioned in the question of privilege is that during a meeting of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, the hon. member obtained from myself and my officials four copies of the annual report, two in French and two in English. He complains that he was left with the two reports in French and that these were of no use to him since he does not understand this language. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry about this, but one of his colleagues, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling), who was next to him, laid hands on both English copies. That is why the hon. member for Brandon-Souris was left with both French copies.

I should also like to note, Mr. Speaker, that in 1956-57, as several members on the other side will recall, the English version of the Post Office report was tabled on October 18, 1957, and the French version on June 22, eight months later. I believe that we were right to hand the report in both official languages to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. I am very sorry that he cannot read French, but he still had the report.

Mr. Speaker, the fourth point mentioned in his question of privilege concerned the Crown corporation. I suggest that he read the minutes of the committee on transport on this subject. A committee made up of representatives of three departments is looking into this matter and the report will be made public in due time.

The fifth and last point concerns the postal rates increases and the allegation that the government illegally increased those rates. Mr. Speaker, I believe that even if we feel that the method used to increase the rates was quite legal, the matter is now sub judice and it is wiser to leave the decision to the judges. So, Mr. Speaker, I think that in the five points I have made, I do not see any grounds for a question of privilege, but obviously the decision is in the hands of the Chair.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: As I indicated to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, I would welcome the intervention of the minister, after which I would have the opportunity to study both arguments put forward by the hon. member and by the Postmaster General in order to make a determination. I will do this as soon as possible to see whether a question of privilege exists.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 64 for the production of papers is acceptable to the government.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that notice of motion No. 64 be deemed to have been agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COPY OF LATEST ACCOUNTING BY GOVERNMENT OF QUEBEC OF FUNDS FOR SECOND LANGUAGE INSTRUCTION

Motion No. 64—Mr. Herbert:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the latest accounting by the government of Quebec of the federal funds provided for minority and second language instruction.

(Motion agreed to.)

Mr. Pinard: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED GOVERNMENT WASTE AND INCOMPETENCE

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the present government is the most wasteful in Canadian history and has established an unmatchable standard of incompetence, leading to today's high inflation and record high unemployment.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will note that, in accordance with subsection (11) of Standing Order 58, proceedings on this motion will expire later this day at the ordinary hour of adjournment.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I sincerely believe that in this motion today there is a warning that all of us here at the seat of the federal government in Ottawa should heed. I sincerely believe that the present form of parliamentary democracy in Canada will become unstuck and will fail in the next decade if we do not return this federal system of government to a standard of accountability and morality acceptable to the Canadian people.

Anyone engaged in productive work, being accountable at all times to the tax collector, has to be not only outraged but actually frightened at the standard of incompetence and indifference with which this government manages our tax resources. We are now at the point where, for every dollar we earn, we collect only 80 cents. A person lucky enough to have a job must work from nine o'clock in the morning until two o'clock in the afternoon to pay his tax. Only after two o'clock in the afternoon is he working for his own spending money.

We are at the point where the rules of the game in the private sector are now so uncertain and confused that there is little incentive to expand and to risk savings which on an after tax basis are too expensive to risk. We are at the point where entrepreneurial talent and capital, aware of what has happened in England and seeing that the "English disease" is now well upon us in Canada, have left the country for a form of government which nurtures that aspect of man that reacts to incentives.

At the root of one of the problems this government faces is the disastrous situation within the federal system where mandarin status is measured by man-years and by the size of budget and expenditure control. Nowhere today does one find that old fashioned concern for the taxpayers' dollar. Nowhere within the system can one find a top level concern for what the tax resource is spent on for the value received in return for an expenditure of our tax resource.

Our work in the committees of this House allows us to meet some very bright and able people in our public service. Coming from the street, as I do, and from the world of productive work—and by that I mean adding to the value of goods in a competitive marketplace—what I see as a very basic problem is a legislation drafting environment, a resource allocation and management process that has absolutely isolated itself from the world of productive work and the value system of the taxpayer.

To people like myself, Ottawa is an "Alice in Wonderland", a fairyland where accountability in terms fundamental to a taxpayer is completely lacking. When I say that the present government is the most wasteful in Canadian history with a standard of incompetence, and yes, morality that threatens the very concept of peace, order and good government, I owe the House some examples to back up that statement.

Some years ago when the late Arthur Laing, a former minister of public works, retired he made a statement in Vancouver to the effect that, if the Canadian people really knew what was going on, there would be a revolt. Although never a supporter of Arthur Laing, I knew the man well and his statement troubled me. Therefore, when elected in 1974 I started to look around the Department of Public Works to see what his remark was all about.

In the late 1960s, I guess about the year 1968, a successful history of Crown construction with a system of checks and balances and accountability came to an end. We saw the evolution of politically well-connected developers moving in on the domain of the Department of Public Works to the point where, in the next decade, that department was reduced to little more than a real estate management function with the National Capital Commission acting as its agent in the capital region.

For example, in the 1960s there were three major building projects being undertaken by the Department of Public Works. One was the Department of External Affairs building which was a $69 million project. There was a building to house the Ministry of Transport, a $68 million project. They were planning and had even expropriated land in LeBreton flats for a $100 million building to house the Department of National Defence.

The story, as I understand it, goes something like this. The external affairs building, as we know it today in all its beauty on Sussex Drive, was completed. The building designed for the Ministry of Transport was completed, but into it was moved the Department of National Defence. The Place de Ville tower, moving up through all height restrictions in place in the city of Ottawa to protect the aesthetic features of the Peace Tower, was built to house the Department of Transport.

That left us with LeBreton flats, 122 acres, which has cost the people of Canada a little over $53 million; in other words $434,426 per acre. Remember that this land was expropriated from 258 owners for a national building in 1962. When we now see property of this cost being used for another purpose, such as subsidized public housing, we really have to wonder where all our marbles have gone. How can the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) expect us to believe that the story that the eight public housing units built on one quarter of an acre of this land at a stated cost of $40,000 to $46,000 is true when the land value per unit is over $13,000? If Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation claims that the land cost is only $25,000 for the one quarter acre on which these eight units are built, who is going to pay for the difference of $83,000 for that one quarter acre which has a real book value of $108,600? Where in public accounts will this difference show up? What department of government will subsidize this difference? The Minister of State for Urban Affairs is talking about 425 public housing units at 30 units per acre on land that has a value and a direct cost of over $434,000 per acre. That land ends up costing $15,000 per subsidized public housing unit.

Another example to explain the rationale behind this motion is the CN recapitalization bill which we have finished debating in committee and in this House. We allowed CN a debt cancellation and capitalization program so that they can go into the private money markets, which are very disciplined, for more of their borrowing to meet those needs. This is the third recapitalization in which the Crown corporation has been involved, and some of us are very concerned lest the same thing happen as happened after the 1952 recapitalization when the CNR went on a spending spree and spent $1.8 billion.

● (1542)

In talking about waste and incompetence let me draw attention to the ferry crossing which the CNR has been asked to provide between Matane, Baie Comeau and Quebec city. Originally Canadian Pacific had carried out a feasibility study on the Baie Comeau-Quebec city project. They found that with a $10 million capital investment they could provide a completely workable service which could earn them a profit upon which they would have the privilege of paying taxes to both the provincial and the federal governments.

Then the politicians got into the act. They asked for a triangular run between Matane, Baie Comeau and Quebec city. Further feasibility studies were carried out and the CPR concluded that the project was not feasible. So the CNR entered the scene. Mr. Speaker, the CNR is in for $100 million and feasibility studies show there is no way in which the company can ever turn a profit. This is the kind of waste and decisionmaking which illustrate the need for a system which will give the people some voice in the decisionmaking process followed by these corporations.

I turn now to the operations of the National Capital Commission in Hull, Quebec. They have led to empty office towers in Ottawa, to space left unoccupied to the financial detriment of the whole community. This is waste without equal in the peacetime history of Canada. Les Terrasses de la Chaudière project, the nature of which insults every working taxpayer in Canada, has yet to be explained in believable terms by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Buchanan).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: But over and above this new assault on the public purse, we now learn that the National Capital Commission and the government have spent $150 million on roads in the city of Hull. Where else in Canada, including Ottawa, has such a level of federal assistance been given to any town or city? Why cannot the productivity of the port of Vancouver be increased immeasurably by the use of $150 million in grants from the federal government to create the multi-level crossings which are needed to serve this port, a port which is in an obsolete condition? This amount of money would enable the port to be restored to a high state of productivity and reduce the amount of energy and time lost in coping with single level crossings such as are presently in place.

For a further example of the waste that concerns me I turn to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It is a small matter, some might say, but we uncovered an appropriation for a million dollars to enable the Indian arts and crafts fund to begin to buy and put together a collection of Indian art and offer some work and social services to the Indian bands. It is bad enough that the department should go $400,000 beyond the appropriation. It is serious enough that no discipline should have been exercised other than moving to another job the officer who was responsible so that he could not continue to overspend appropriations which had been voted. But when I find that money voted for a social service within the Indian communities has been used to purchase $44,000 worth of stamped out metal from a works in Vancouver, and that most of it has ended up as junk which cannot be sold, I am incensed.

How can any of us believe that the expenditure of this $44,000 ever benefited any Indian band or any Indian artist? Who has enough influence with the government to obtain a $44,000 order for stamped out Indian artifacts which are not even genuine? This is the kind of waste and incompetence which sets up a fury in my mind and which I want to stop before I cease to be a member of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: I could give many further examples but I will use the example of the Ehettasaht Co-op. The Department of Indian Affairs rushed in and in a period of eight months went through some $5.5 million, leaving behind an unbelievable tale of waste and woe in the private sector. And then the organization went bankrupt. Where is the planning, the heart, the sensitivity to the use of public funds when it comes to examples like this? There were two or three similar cases in Alberta.

This is the type of misuse of the tax resource which will cause the system to become unstuck. We cannot allow it to continue at its present level. Within the Department of Indian Affairs we have seen rip-off after rip-off, innocent disaster after innocent disaster. In trying to give Indian bands independence, allowing them to spend sums of money more or less unsupervised, the department has left them without any training or ability to account for the funds granted to them. We are not doing these bands a favour by leaving them alone in this situation, part of the spill-over of carelessness in utilizing tax revenue.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation troubles me. Section 3 of the Broadcasting Act reads as follows:

Government Waste

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should be owned and controlled by Canadians to safeguard, enrich and strengthen the cultural, political and social fabric of Canada.

In the last decade this Crown corporation has cost us more than $2.5 billion. In this past year of restraint the number of employees increased from 11,293 to 12,222, and spending increased by $55 million compared with the previous year. When one recalls the words of section 3 of the Broadcasting Act, can one honestly say that the corporation is fulfilling the purposes for which it was brought into being?

An hon. Member: No!

Mr. Huntington: I cannot. I think the corporation has failed and that somehow or other we must strengthen the act so as to bring it under control, or else sell it to the private sector with a stronger broadcasting act in order to serve the people of Canada better.

I should like to turn for a few minutes to the bilingualism program which has been voted more than one billion dollars since the inception of the program. Has this program served the country well? Has it given us a sense of community from coast to coast? Has it produced a generation of young people coming out of our school system with a basic knowledge of a second language? The answers to these questions are obvious. It has not. When one reflects on what could have been done through the last decade with wise application of this resource in view of such an important national need, one can only cry with anguish.

• (1552)

Our Post Office will cost some $568 million in 1978 over and above revenues received. When we compare this to the $700 million cost for the postal system in the United States which serves ten times our population, again one has to question the competence of the management of the Canadian Post Office. Anarchy exists in our Post Office. Bad management and incompetence are facts of life which must be corrected.

In the last 15 years federal government spending has risen from $7 billion to $45 billion. In this period taxes have increased 239 per cent and personal incomes 142 per cent. I believe that we are very close to taxpayer resistance in Canada, and is it any wonder? During the last three years of restraint operating costs have risen 56 per cent, and total federal spending is up 45 per cent.

Last year the Unemployment Insurance Commission cost us $4.4 billion, and the 1979 main estimates show that the commission will need a further $5.3 billion next year.

In my opinion all of this is a negative weight on the taxpaying work force of the country. In 1978 the prediction for inflation, according to the Conference Board, is 7.4 per cent. According to the Bank of Montreal it is 8 per cent. The Bank of Canada says 7.8 per cent, yet the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) says 7 per cent. The present rate is 9 per cent, and even if the consumer price index did not increase at all between May and December of this year, we will still have a rate of inflation well over that stated by the Minister of Finance. We are into an area of consumer price index increases as a result of our 90-cent dollar, and there are serious consequences for national consumer purchasing power. I would like to remind the House of that now famous quote, which is as follows:

I am confident we have got a grip on the problem and . . . will wrestle inflation to the ground. We are going to bring inflation under control—that I pledge to you.

Mr. Alexander: Who said that?

Mr. Huntington: The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), on May 27, 1974. Here is another famous quote:

You can never spend more than you have; otherwise you have endless inflation.

The Prime Minister was reported to have said that in the October 20, 1975 Maclean's magazine.

The fact is that the government is able to pay for only 80 per cent of what it is spending today and we are not told what value we are receiving for that spending. One has to be watchful of the true direction and destination of this ship of state with this present Prime Minister on the bridge. As a direct result of this waste, incompetence and inflation we have a national nightmare for some 933,000 Canadians who today cannot find work in a nation with unbelievable wealth in its resources and potential wealth in its people. No single factor has caused more anxiety nor brought more shame to this country than the figure of one million jobless last winter. We did not experience an unemployment rate below 8 per cent in the first five months of 1978, yet eleven years ago the jobless figure was 3.8 per cent. Today it is 8.6 per cent. We stand to lose all that this country once stood for. The glue will yield if we do not act responsibly.

Believe me, hon. members opposite are so close to the malaise that they cannot see the facts. Waste exists not just in the management of government but also out in the private sector. The waste in the private sector is caused by a taxation system which encourages waste and gives incentive to waste, and I think that this is one of the major challenges any federal government has ahead of it in bringing about a taxation system which will tax cost, not profit, which is the incentive which makes the system work.

Credit must go where credit is due. The present government is the most wasteful in Canadian history. It has established an unmatchable standard of incompetence which has led to today's higher inflation and record high unemployment.

Mr. Lefebvre: You don't believe that.

Mr. Huntington: I certainly do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to thank my colleague, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), for his motion.

[Mr. Huntington.]

Mr. Speaker, we will never debate enough the disastrous economic situation in which the government has precipitated us. The ministers seem to be sitting on their hands, waiting for the situation to work itself out on its own. But statistics prove that the economic situation, instead of improving, is worsening. If we examine the latest statistics on unemployment, though unemployment usually decreases when summer comes, we note that in May 14,000 more persons were without work, that is 8.6 per cent, and realize that unemployment is much too severe in a country with so many possibilities for development. Unemployment rates of 17.9 per cent in Newfoundland, 12.9 per cent in New Brunswick and 11.5 per cent in Quebec are totally unacceptable. And in the face of that state of affairs, we have no program to stir the economy. Urgent steps must be taken right now. We cannot wash our hands of the situation and hope it will improve by itself. In such circumstances, no one would dream of acting that way; yet, our government proves the contrary.

So today we have almost one million unemployed. Such a situation has serious consequences from the economic and human points of view. Lives are wasted, opportunities lost; there is bitterness, shame and even suicides. Economically, the consequences are severe. Almost $4 billion are spent each year in unemployment insurance benefits. There was a loss of 224 million work days last year, not to mention the spectacular drop of the dollar as a direct consequence of the economic mess in which we find ourselves. Let us not forget that the statistics took in a significant number of unemployed. There are the unemployed on Indian reserves. There are those being trained by manpower centres. There are the thousands of people who gave up looking for work because they cannot find any and who are excluded from Statistics Canada. We can talk of a real unemployment of 11 per cent to 12 per cent in future.

Yesterday in the House I heard my colleague for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) talk of a real rate of unemployment of 30 per cent in his province. I know for a fact that in the region I represent the rate is not much lower. That is the saddest consequence of that economic catastrophe. The Maritimes and Quebec have the highest rates of unemployment, Alberta and the western provinces the lowest. The economically weak regions are suffering unfairly and the situation gets worse with every release on unemployment statistics. The rich becomes increasingly richer and the poor increasingly poorer. Governments usually cut taxes or interest rates in periods of high unemployment to promote business expansion and job creation. I must confess that the sales tax cut is likely to stimulate the economy. Everybody agrees on that. But the government insisted on unilaterally imposing its will on the provinces which often have different priorities because some are in a worse economic mess than others. The government refusal to allow Quebec to reduce its sales tax according to the priorities of that province resulted in our losing a month in sterile debates.

Our balance of payments is also an indication of the failure toward which we are headed. Last year we had a deficit of $4.2 billion in our balance of payments. Even though we had a surplus in raw material and farm products, we incurred a deficit of $7.5 billion mainly in the service sector and, I want to stress this, in interests and dividends on the $50 billion borrowed abroad. We also had a $1.6 billion deficit in tourism. We recorded an unbelievable deficit of $11 billion with respect to manufactured goods.

Mr. Speaker, the premier of Ontario recently estimated that by balancing our current payment account with respect to finished products, we could generate some 170,000 additional jobs. Our economy is really suffering from a chronic illness. Our productivity and our competitive position is faltering. Many of our industries are threatened, namely textiles, shipyards, auto parts, television sets and other electronic equipment. No other province suffers as much as Quebec where 24 per cent of the labour force works in the manufacturing sector. Even though these industries are protected by tariffs, the fact remains that 36,000 Quebeckers have been laid off last year in the soft sectors which are the textile, clothing, footwear and furniture industries. The government of Quebec did take certain steps to help these sectors and among other things it has abolished the sales tax on these products. Yet the federal government has naturally hampered its efforts by refusing to grant the government of Quebec a fiscal transfer which would have enabled it to be on the same footing as the other provinces.

Mr. Speaker, because of the different priorities in each region, it is inconceivable to try and impose uniform solutions throughout the country. These solutions come late, much too late unfortunately, from a government which has run out of imagination.

We are not concerned about prevention or cure and, if we are we do not prescribe the proper medication—unless it is the drugstores that do not fill the correct prescriptions.

We have just been given a document entitled "A Time for Action". When I consider the economic situation I think it is not only time for action but time for a fast action. Of course, we are offered several answers but they come really late. For instance, the project announced by DREE to invest in touristic developments in the Gaspé Peninsula and the Lower St. Lawrence comes after years and years of representations and supplications. The Gaspé Peninsula is undoubtedly tourism-oriented, but that is nothing new, Mr. Speaker, yet only today do we decide to develop that industry. And we need to develop it if we want to balance our payment deficit in that sector.

As I was born in the Gaspé Peninsula where I lived for many years, I know much about fishing. It is an important sector of the economy of my region and this is why, Mr. Speaker, I participate with interest in the fisheries committee. I even have the opportunity to make interventions in the House like my colleagues from Newfoundland and the Maritimes to ask for improvements in maritime fisheries even if it does not always please my colleague for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) who would rather have me keep silent. But I am too much concerned by the development of eastern Quebec to keep silent. With the advent of the 200-mile limit, the government suddenly realized that there is a fishing industry in Canada. So much so that after the demise of the fisheries department we shall see the birth of a new one called the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. We had the opportunity to discuss the lack of foresight of the government in that sector during the presentation of an opposition motion by my colleague for South Shore (Mr. Crouse).

And what about the mining sector. There have been lay-offs at Falconbridge and Inco in Sudbury. And in Gaspé there has been the closure of Madeleine Mines in Ste. Anne des Monts and the slowing down of production in Murdochville. However, little if not nothing has been done to encourage our mining industry. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a small digression. A Liberal government had to be defeated and a PQ government elected before shelved projects like the salt mines in the Îles-de-la-Madeleine and limestone deposits in Madeleine and Port Daniel in Gaspé could be dusted off and revived.

To conclude, I suggest that we can no longer continue to ignore the weak sectors of our economy and the poorer regions. The Canadian problem is one of regional disparity. As long as we do not make any effort to develop our country more equally I am afraid that social pressures will increase and that our economic problems will only perpetrate the division process.

[English]

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have been provided with an opportunity to participate in this debate. At the outset, I should like to indicate that I concur in the motion before the House accusing this government of being the most wasteful in Canadian history.

I do not want to deal specifically with the projects which exemplify government wastefulness, as the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) has so aptly done. I want to deal specifically with the area of unemployment. The government has been wasteful in handling the economy, to such an extent that at the present time there are over 900,000 people unemployed in Canada. That is a waste and drain in human terms as well as in economic terms.

Recently the treasury of the province of Ontario indicated that one out of every three graduates from now until the 1980s can hope to obtain employment. That should not ease the minds of all hon. members.

We have heard a lot about the number of man-days lost due to strikes and lockouts. The figures for 1978 released by the Department of Labour show that 278,200 man-days were lost in the month of February. I agree that is a lot of lost man-days; but for every man-day lost due to industrial disputes, whether lockouts or strikes, there are 30.5 man-days lost due to unemployment. I calculated for the month of February, with 278,200 man-days lost due to lockouts and strikes, and extrapolating the man-days lost because of unemployment, that 9,730,000 man-days were lost due to unemployment. That is lost productivity to the nation as a whole. The estimated yearly financial loss to Canada amounts to $12 billion in income and output, or about $520 for every Canadian, man, woman and child. Unemployment affects both the working people and the victims of unemployment.

Another piece of interesting information came from some calculations done by the Canadian Labour Congress. Since 1974 unemployment has cost every Canadian family $11,000. Last year alone unemployment insurance payouts amounted to over $4 billion. What was the productivity in respect of that $4 billion? There was no productivity at all. This government should be ashamed of itself for showing in its estimates that unemployment insurance payouts are $4 billion, with not one iota of productivity to show for that $4 billion. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, people can sit on their asses and collect unemployment insurance with not one stitch of productivity to show for it. It is a shameful record that this government stands in its place trying to defend this this afternoon. It is projected that unemployment insurance this fiscal year will exceed $5 billion. That is a shameful record.

I cannot understand for the life of me the kind of decision-making and unplanned approach of which this government is guilty. I recently attended a committee meeting studying the bill dealing with the Export Development Corporation. We found consistently that government agencies were prepared to finance unemployment in this country. They used taxpayers dollars to create competitive industries abroad, not necessarily in third world countries but in countries such as the United States, when in fact they will not spend that sort of money in Canada to modernize those aspects of the economy that need modernization in order that they can be productive and compete for the sale of our products abroad.

We had a perfect example of that in respect of the layoffs by Inco and Falconbridge in the Sudbury Basin. We urged this government that in place of allowing these workers to go on unemployment insurance it ought to stockpile nickel, because it is more important for the workers to be productive and the value would be in the nickel produced. We felt this was better than allowing the companies to put 2,000 or 3,000 workers on unemployment insurance, and certainly better than getting into the whole process of transporting workers from the Sudbury Basin to Alberta, or wherever, at more cost to the taxpayers. We suggested, not only for the welfare of the worker in terms of his productivity but also in terms of his standard of living, that it was much better for a worker to be productive, working and receiving a pay cheque than being unemployed and receiving an unemployment insurance cheque. This party has consistently urged that approach on the government.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

The government must involve itself in creating full employment in this country. We cannot afford to carry on, as we are at present, without a policy of full employment. We require a commitment to full employment rather than a policy of riding on the backs of the workers with 8.6 per cent unemployment, amounting to over 900,000 people unemployed.

The warning came in September of 1977. This is not something new to this government; it received warning in 1977. The warning went out to all industrial nations of the world. It went out from the chief of the International Monetary Fund, managing director Johannes Witteveen. He said that a continuation of anti-inflation programs would keep unemployment at record levels and slow economic growth to recession levels. He went on to say that it was the international responsibility of nations to pursue markedly higher rates of economic expansion if we are to get out of our current economic slump.

The effects of the government's anti-inflation program on the economy have been quite spectacular. As a matter of fact, writing for the Toronto Globe and Mail an economist, Arthur Donner, estimated that in the period from 1974 to the end of 1976 the Canadian economy lost $25 billion in real growth and 600,000 man-years of employment. This was a result of the government's anti-inflation program. If restraint continues, by the end of 1978, he estimates, we will have lost $49 billion worth of production and 1.3 million man-years of employment, and all this for a marginal effect on the inflation rate.

That prediction is coming true. The latest statistics on our productivity were published in the Globe and Mail this morning in the business section. It was pointed out there that the Canadian manufacturing sector of the economy operated at 82.7 per cent of capacity .n the first quarter, down from 88.3 per cent in the fourth quarter, the lowest level since the 82.5 per cent in the 1975 fourth quarter.

Obviously mismanagement of the economy has resulted in the cutback of our productivity as a nation, and that cutback in productivity manifests itself in the 900,000 people unemployed at the present time. The government knows well, and its own statistics department has given the figures, that even being very generous there are about 45,000 available jobs at any given time and 900,000 persons looking for employment in this country.

Time and again we have seen this government look for scapegoats. We have seen ads by the Unemployment Insurance Commission moving the blame away from the government. This government never accepts responsibility for mismanagement of the economy. It finds a scapegoat and diverts the attention of the Canadian public. The UIC has spent in excess of $1 million for advertisements suggesting very surreptitiously that there are people on unemployment insurance who have their hands in our pockets. Following that, it spent another $100,000 or $200,000 on a survey intended to show, in effect, that its advertising program was satisfying a large sector of the Canadian public. If that in itself is not a waste of taxpayers' money, I do not know what is.

This government refuses to move or interfere directly in the economy in a way that would establish full employment as a policy for this nation. For example, I have mentioned the capacity at which the Canadian economy is operating; at the present time it is 82.7 per cent. What did we see in the third last budget? We saw the government stimulating the corporate sector to the tune of $1.1 billion. That was a stimulation directed toward expansion. That $1.1 billion has been paid out, but where are the employment opportunities? Why do we expand an operation that is not operating at full capacity? Where is the logic in that? It seems to me that what the government has to do is stimulate consumption, especially among low income Canadians in order that they can improve their standard of living, and that money should have been spent for that purpose. It seems to me that that would have stimulated the productive capacity of the nation.

That lack of productivity indicates that we are not building enough houses in the nation. It is fairly obvious that the government is not providing the services which are essential to a modern economy. For example, there is the case of transportation where the government should have spent money directly to create employment in the service sector.

There are needs in our communities across the country. There are parts of my riding which still have one well in the centre of the town, and everybody goes down with a bucket to get water for the day's usage. There are still those communities that have outhouses in my riding, and this is 1978. This is not a Third World country, it is Canada. Some 42 per cent of the urban housing in my riding is still substandard. The government is still not building the kind of accommodation that bespeaks an industrially developed nation.

There was a PCB spill by the CPR that leaked into the water table, and the community has been unable to afford a water system so that the residents could be assured that they would not be drinking the polluted water. There are some facilities and services which are needed, and there are municipalities which have set their priorities, but because of a lack of capital they are unable to move forward with those particular programs. All of those programs are labour intensive, but what does the government do? It spends hundreds of millions of dollars on one-shot approaches such as Canada Works and Young Canada Works. These programs are fine so far as they go, but they do not get at the problem of unemployment in the nation.

The government has a responsibility to make sure that there is work for every Canadian who wants to work. It is their responsibility so to arrange the economy, so to manage the economy that it does produce the jobs. I consistently hear that the post-war baby boom has created this great surge of unemployment. Listening to the government, one would think that there is no registration of births, that suddenly all of these young people who are now coming into the work force suddenly appeared as though they were springing out of the ground, from dragon's teeth. The way the government talks, one would assume that births are not registered in this country and that we are not able to project the number of young people who will be coming into the work force down the line and, therefore, so arrange the economy. This government does not plan. There is no economic planning by this government.

I mentioned the situation of the Export Development Corporation. Here we have the EDC lending large multinational corporations long-term loan money to develop their overseas operations in direct competition with the operations they have in Canada.

While they are trading off the jobs in the mining sector in the long term for short term, high technology jobs, we have the government funding DREE. What is DREE trying to do? DREE is trying to attract industry to go into areas like mine. It is obvious that one is nullifying the other. If an industry receives an order from Inco in Guatemala to build whatever it is they are going to build, then, obviously, they expand the plant in southern Ontario. They are not going to build a plant in northern Ontario to produce that stuff. So, in effect, you have the one nullifying the other. There is no cohesive or meshed plan with respect to how to go about creating employment and how the EDC and the DREE program relate to each other. What is the interface of those two programs?

These branches of government are completely in isolation. The president of the EDC rubs his grubby little hands and says, "We made $18 million last year, we are here to make a profit." That is not good enough for the people, for example, who work in the mining sector, the pulp and paper industry or in the steel industry. They see that, in effect, Canada through its Crown corporation, the Export Development Corporation, is putting them out of business and contributing to their unemployment.

It seems to me that the workers who come through my riding office are not in the least bit interested in the $155 unemployment insurance cheque they get every week. They are interested in a pay cheque because in a pay cheque there is human dignity. This way they can keep their families without having to depend on the state or on the bureaucracy which keeps growing and growing.

As a matter of fact, I do not know why the government thinks it has to use its departments to fight the unemployment situation alone. The unemployment insurance office in Sudbury had to hire 11 people last week to deal with the increase in unemployment insurance cases. I do not know where the sense is in that at all.

The workers who go through the unemployment office and who are now unemployed are mostly the young, because they are the first ones to go there. But they are more interested in having a job; they are not interested in the unemployment insurance program. Yet the government runs its advertising program to suggest, very surreptitiously, that anyone who is collecting unemployment insurance is somehow or other ripping off the system. Anyone who is unfortunate enough to be caught in the unemployment insurance fiasco somehow or other gets the feeling he is stealing from the government or stealing from those who are working. It is a very inhuman system, and I repeat to the minister and the government that they must stop the waste and the high unemployment that we have in the country. The government has to involve itself directly through municipalities and public programs in creating employment in those periods in the economy when certain forces beyond our control affect unemployment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I interrupt the hon. member at this time to inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. Alan G. Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in joining in this debate this afternoon I would like to refer to one or two of the points raised by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) wherein he refers to an article he was reading in today's edition of the Globe and Mail. I think he was using some of those extracts to indicate what he considers to be real problems in the Canadian economy, lack of activity in the private sector, inadequate government direction, et cetera.

I would like to draw to his attention—I am not sure that we were reading the same article, presumably not—a front page article in this same Globe and Mail wherein there was very positive indication of some very substantial progress that seems to have occurred in the Canadian economy in the first five months of this year. This article was referring to reports that jobs are being created at the present time at a historically rapid rate. It refers particularly to the first five months of 1978, primarily in the manufacturing, transportation, communication, retail and wholesale areas. There is reference to 180,000 jobs having been created in the Canadian economy in the period January 1 to May 31, 1978. That 180,000 job figure would give an annual rate, if it was to continue at the present pace, of some 434,000 jobs per year. If that rate is achieved for the balance of 1978, it would be the highest rate since 1973.

● (1632)

In fact, 180,000 jobs, Mr. Speaker, created in the first five months is equivalent to the total number of jobs created during all of 1977. If that is not progress, Mr. Speaker, if that is not some indication of the kind of leadership that is being shown by this government, the kind of things that are happening in the Canadian economy at the present time, then I am not sure what sort of positive signs the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) is seeking.

Mr. Speaker, I think these figures are interesting enough that I would like to mention a few more of them from the same paper that the member for Nickel Belt was quoting. There has been an increase in the labour force—the highest ever—in the same five-month period of 525,000 people, whereas the increase was 308,000 for all of 1977. This, of course, is where the problem comes in, Mr. Speaker. Our labour force continues to grow at a rate higher than the Canadian economy is able to absorb. Nevertheless, the record figures on both sides, I think, are important to state because it is some indication of the extreme degree of activity that is going on.

At the present time, 57.1 per cent of the population of Canada is employed, which is up from 56.5 per cent as of last December; 71.8 per cent of all men are employed and 42.8 per cent of all women. These increases, Mr. Speaker—and again I emphasize this—came from the private sector. This refers back to the motion we have before us today, by the member for Capilano (Mr. Huntingdon) regarding what he claims is the incompetence of the government in its handling of expenditures, and, presumably, of the economy. Yet we are told that the employment ratios in this country today are at the highest point they have ever been, and this is occurring mainly in the private sector.

Noted economists have stated that there is indeed strength in the Canadian economy at the present time. As I said in a speech in this House recently, that kind of news is not the kind of news that the official opposition in this country wants to see. It is not the kind of news that the unofficial opposition, the NDP, wants to see. But it is positive news, Mr. Speaker. It is important to state over and over again that while there are problems in the Canadian economy, problems that are being addressed by this government, there exist also very significant indicators of strength, and I think it is important that those go on the record. In fact, one prestigious investment firm, Wood Gundy and Company, because of recent news on the economic front, Mr. Speaker, is already revising its forecasts of job creation for 1978.

Coming back to the motion, Mr. Speaker, I have worked with my colleague, the hon. member for Capilano, on public accounts committees over recent years and I think we have both been conscious of concerns that the Auditor General has brought before the public accounts committee. In some cases Crown corporations, agencies or even departments of government, have perhaps adopted too enthusiastically the kind of direction that emanated from the Glassco commission of many years ago that encouraged less central controls and more expenditure initiatives at the departmental level. That gave the government some problems and, Mr. Speaker, as over-all expenditure levels of the government have increased, these problems have obviously become of a more acute nature.

The important thing to note is that the President of the Treasury Board, (Mr. Andras) and the government have faced these problems and have done two very important things in the last two years. The position of Comptroller General of Canada has now been firmly established. The first incumbent is now on board as of April 1, and I think this development is something my colleague the hon. member for Capilano, myself and others on the public accounts committee and other members in this House welcome enthusiastically.

In addition, the government has appointed the Lambert commission to look into all aspects of government expenditures and financial control. When the member for Capilano refers to incompetence, surely that must indicate that in his mind the government is doing nothing about these kinds of things. I think the record clearly shows that some very concrete and positive steps have been taken on every issue that the Auditor General has placed before this House of Commons and before the public accounts committee. That, Mr. Speaker, in my mind, is the kind of responsiveness that the Canadian public want to see in their federal government, and it is the kind of responsiveness that this government has indeed shown over and over again.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that when the member opposite formulated his motion he made it so encompassing that one could probably discuss everything from sour cherry production in Ontario to energy conservation, all within the context of government competence. I would like to refer to one or two of the points that perhaps are included in his indication of incompetence, such as growth in the public service.

There is, Mr. Speaker, an allegation of waste in this area, and there is an allegation of irresponsibility on the part of the government. Yet, the man-year growth in the public service and the program of performance measurement that is now under way is something with which I think all members in this House should become more familiar, particularly the member for Capilano who I know is intensely interested in what is happening with the public purse.

The administration committed itself to restricting growth in the public service at the same time as it announced its program of fiscal restraint. It should come as no surprise when I say that the program has met with the same kind of success as the fiscal program has achieved.

The main estimates that the President of the Treasury Board introduced in February marked the second consecutive year that growth in the public service was held to six-tenths of one per cent. I mention those figures, Mr. Speaker, as against the figures I quoted a little earlier, to show the dramatic increase that is occurring in the labour force in the number of people working in this country. In the public service, the federal public service, the growth has been held to six-tenths of one per cent, which is a little over half of one per cent.

To record such a marginal increase, Mr. Speaker, it means that 18 departments had their man-year allocation reduced and 18 were permitted no increase. Thirty-six departments and agencies, generally service-oriented agencies such as the RCMP, the Post Office and national defence, were allowed more man-years to cope with specific problems confronting them.

Whenever we talk about cutting back government expenditures or not increasing government expenditures where new services are needed, some very basic questions come up. For instance, I see the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) in the House this afternoon. He has to decide which new homes in which cities are to be denied mail service in order to cut man-years. Should certain areas of the RCMP be cut and should the military be held in check? These are questions the administration has to wrestle with in order to maintain this near zero expansion of the public service in a country which is growing and developing.

In the same year as we have held manpower growth down to six-tenths of one per cent, the labour force in Canada increased by 2.5 per cent in 1977-78 and is projected to grow by a very significant amount. As I indicated earlier, no increases have been permitted for the year in the number of senior personnel man-years for four consecutive years. That is an area that has come under attack from hon. members opposite at different times.

If further evidence is needed to demonstrate the responsibility of government, let me turn to the administration of some programs. The government has acted to enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of its operations through the measurement of program performance. There has been considerable progress in this area since the experimental projects of the early 1970s. Departments now are required to have adequate and reliable means for measuring all programs in place by 1980.

Since government operations do not have readily identifiable indicators, such as profit or return on investment—the simple indicator that the private sector always has—many different kinds of indicators have been developed in the federal system. They use example indicators that relate results achieved to resources used and to planned results. They describe the service aspects of performance and focus on production-type measures. All of these help managers develop systems to assist them in assessing how well their programs are running.

This approach to program management is operating so well that it is fast becoming a tool on which decisions can be based and is an integral part of the management process. The monitoring of this process enables departments to evaluate whether changes or improvements can be made in the method by which a program is delivered; whether programs have outlived their usefulness and can be eliminated; or, whether priorities have shifted, making it more or less important.

Members of this House were given a copy of a report on "Performance Measurement" last fall. In light of this motion I commend this report to the hon. member for Capilano and to his colleagues on that side of the House. It denies, in practical working environment evidence, the allegations that prompted this debate today.

I might just mention in closing that the kinds of things we are saying and the effectiveness of government cutbacks are being recognized in various publications and articles, and by such writers as Dian Cohen who is never hesitant in criticizing the government on those aspects of the management of the economy where she considers the government is doing a poor job. In a recent article in a leading business publication headed "Ottawa Trying", Dian Cohen did indeed make reference to the fact that this time the government seems to be really talking business in its efforts to maintain a control over spending. That is one example. There are others by leading writers of the day.

When the hon. member for Capilano recommends we rework the whole tax system, as he did, and move to taxes based on costs, he has to understand what it would do to companies which are starting out in business that have losses for a number of years. This is getting into a system where profits are no longer taxed but where expenditures are taxed.

An hon. Member: Make them efficient.

Mr. Martin: Well, some companies in the development stage cannot turn a profit for a good number of years. We prefer doing positive things to stimulate capital investment in the small and medium business area—

An hon. Member: That is junk.

Mr. Martin: Programs have been announced recently by the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) and by the Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Buchanan) in the R and D area. These are some of the things that have been done recently. To turn around now and follow the suggestion of the spokesman for the official opposition that we completely junk the existing tax system, which not long ago went through a very trying and lengthy examination before a royal commission, and move to a new and untested system that is only theoretical at this point, is less than a responsible suggestion to the Canadian people.

There are many other statistics that can be quoted to indicate the positive things that are happening in Canada at the present time.

Mr. Alexander: People are smartening up.

Mr. Martin: I want to say that it seems to be in the immediate interests of the official opposition to become, one and all, prophets of doom and gloom. I am little surprised at the hon. member for Capilano because I know his business background. I am sure there are not many businessmen in his own riding who would support this kind of doom and gloom approach.

An hon. Member: Why do you think I am here?

Mr. Martin: These businessmen are looking at what their plans will be for the next several years. This kind of talk does not behoove an official opposition party that somewhere in its fondest imagination assumes one day it might form the government of this country. As I say, it is nothing but a fond hope and probably stretches very far into the future. Canadians are simply not going to buy this type of negative attitude. They will not buy the approach that says "Look, I am being told I am far worse off than I think I am". That is the kind of approach the official opposition is pushing across this country at the present time. I think this is less than responsible at a time when there are real problems in the Canadian economy, problems which can be tackled and are being tackled in a positive way and not in the negative way the member for Capilano and others on the opposition side have been approaching the question today.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, every time we have one of these motions I listen to the parliamentary secretary and he gives the usual government pitch. If things were so great, why did the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) not go to the people? Why did he not go and get another mandate? I will tell you why. It is because the people are finally catching up to this incompetent group.

Mrs. Holt: He has a mandate. Why does he have to go and get one?

Mr. Alexander: The government do not like these motions because it gives the opposition an opportunity to tell the Canadian people the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

An hon. Member: Soap opera.

Mr. Alexander: I watched and listened to the parliamentary secretary and he was deceptive, he was less than honest and he was not complete. He was selling the same old garbage about how great this government is and will be. Since he said something about behooving, I say I do not think it behooves a party to destroy a country. That is what this government has done over the last ten years as far as I am concerned. Certainly we have real problems in this country. The most important thing I can say about this is that this government has created most of them. The government does not tell us anything like that.

I want to congratulate the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) on placing this motion before the House, a motion which the parliamentary secretary did not read. This is typical of parliamentary secretaries. They get a little speech that some bureaucrat prepared for them and they do not know what they are talking about. Let me read the motion so we can all understand what it is we are talking about . It reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the present government is the most wasteful in Canadian history and has established an unmatchable standard of incompetence, leading to today's high inflation and record high unemployment.

An hon. Member: Very well done.

Mr. Alexander: Congratulations to the hon. member for Capilano. That statement is a fact, sir. This government epitomizes incompetence, indifference and arrogance at their worst. The Liberal record is the most disastrous thing that has happened to this country in a decade.

The part I like in terms of the record is the advent of television. Before television this government was able to bamboozle and flim-flam the people. I say to the people there is no need to read the papers; just turn on the television set. The government's incompetence, indecision, bungling and ineptness, as well as the flim-flam that forms the whole history of this particular administration, and in particular its front bench, can be seen via television.

I notice that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) has a book on his table. He is probably going to blast away at poor Ed Murphy. Thank goodness we have him. He is president of CJOR Radio. He prepared a book entitled "A Legacy of Spending". If I was rich enough I would buy this book and send it to every voter in the country, because it gives a history of waste. I want to read a few statements from this book—

An hon. Member: What is the foreword?

Mr. Alexander: In the foreword, brochure or pamphlet it just spells out Liberal incompetence and waste—

An hon. Member: Smear.

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member calls it a smear. It is documented by quotes from newspapers, statements from Hansard and replies to questions on the order paper. And he calls it a smear! No wonder the government does not want anyone to read this book. Let me just read the foreword. I do not even know who wrote it. It is some chap by the name of Lindsay B. Semple. It reads:

● (1652)

There have been many instances throughout history where there emerged a ruling elite with enormous control over the material resources and products of their subjects. One of two things normally occurred—either they continued to grow until they impoverished the producers in the nation state and of course themselves, or they were thrown out by revolution.

In Canada there has emerged a monstrous bureaucracy and state spending mechanism. As this resume clearly demonstrates it has exploded in recent years. It is uncontrolled and uncontrollable. The implications for the future of this country and you are awesome.

Ed Murphy should be highly commended for documenting this national tragedy. Read this resume carefully, copy it, and pass it on to your neighbours. It could be the beginning of a new awareness and perhaps even a movement to halt the insidious disease that infects this great nation. Lindsay B. Semple, M.A. (Econ.)

I do not know who he is, but he is certainly telling it as it is. Let me read another quotation. This is why the Liberals do not want anybody to read "A Legacy of Spending." I know the President of the Treasury Board has a copy. Here is a quote that really focuses attention on where the problem is:

"There is only one place where inflation is made in Canada and that is Ottawa. The unions don't make inflation for a very simple reason; the unions do not own a printing press on which they can turn out those multi-coloured pieces of paper called money. The reason you have inflation is because the government has been printing too much and spending too much." Milton Friedman, Nobel Prize Laureate in Economics, CBC Radio, Feb. 20, 1977.

Let me read another quote. This is the way the government operates. I quote from page 5:

As the spending becomes larger and larger every year, less and less disclosure exists.

I do not want to single out the President of the Treasury Board. Sometimes I wonder why all the cover-up. Why not tell the people the truth? We had a little get together here in terms of over-classification. If it had not been for the opposition, the Canadian people would not know there are a number of public servants over-classified because of this government's ineptness. As a result, we are losing some $19 million per year. That is only as a result of a study in the Ottawa-Hull area. Would we ever have known about that? No. We have to get these things flushed out somehow. Thank goodness there are people prepared to put their jobs on the line and pass a little brown envelope under somebody's door so that we know what is going on and can tell the Canadian people the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

The record breaking feats of this government are nerve shattering and unbelievable. I want to put something on the record in terms of incompetency. I look at the smiling face of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Martin). There is another dead issue. They have not done anything. They did not start to think about the small businessman until we pushed them into it.

What about the 89 cent dollar? Did you ever see such indecision, not knowing what to do, until now we have a dollar which has been totally destroyed? This has led to a position where our imports have been adversely affected as well as confidence in this country. That is part of this government's record in terms of a "great feat."

What about government spending? Ten years ago it was $10 billion. Today it is $50 billion. Talk about restraint! What is going on in this country? Why the flim-flam? Why the dishonesty? By feeding inflation we have a deficit of $11 billion. We spend more than we take in. That is another part of this government's great record.

What about the one million unemployed? That is another great record for this government, breaking the one million mark in terms of unemployment. That is something which will go down in history.

Talking about records, what about this government's tremendous record in fragmenting the country? As a result of Bill C-56, some will get cheques and others will get deductions or tax cuts. It is blackmailing the provinces. Has anyone here ever seen the likes of it?

What about the all-time record of selfishness? Make the worker take 6 per cent in terms of a pay increase while this government sits idly by and watches inflation reach 9 per cent. The yearly total will be about 11 per cent. In October, 1978 this government said it would be 4 per cent. What kind of dishonesty are we experiencing here?

What about another all-time record in deceit? If we attack or question this government in terms of its policies vis-à-vis the province of Quebec, what do they call us? We are either a separatist or we are helping the separatist cause. In other words, this government believes it is God, that you dare not attack it; you are wrong if you do and you are helping the separatist cause. What a lot of nonsense. I wish I could swear like the Prime Minister!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Did you see him try to defend the indefensible here this afternoon? I will not get involved in that. However, I watched television the other night and I am still trying to figure out what he said.

Mr. Lefebvre: He said "bunk".

Mr. Alexander: I hear another parliamentary secretary. I do not want to get involved in that. I was involved in "fuddle-duddle" and I saw what he said in that regard. What about the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), slandering the opposition?

Mr. Mazankowski: Smearing.

Mr. Lefebvre: What are you doing?

Mr. Alexander: I am telling people the truth.

Mr. Lefebvre: That's a lot of bunk.

Mr. Alexander: That minister stood there and deliberately slandered and smeared the opposition. It was less than nice. He said we were going across the country lying. Boy, you can always tell when this government is in trouble!

What about another record in terms of unforgettable feats, a record in arrogance? I want to pick out two or three statements made by the Prime Minister of this country, a man who is supposed to show some compassion to one million unemployed. He says it is not up to the government to find jobs. Am I telling a lie in that regard? I do not hear as much as a mumble from across the way. They know the hon. member for Hamilton West tells the truth. The people of Canada want the truth. Do you remember, Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister or one of his ministers, it does not matter which one because they are all in the same group—

Mr. Philbrook: You are wrong.

Mr. Alexander: I hear "Dr. Philpott".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order please. Will the hon. member please address another member of the House of Commons by his constituency and not by his name.

Mr. Alexander: It is the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook), who will not be here after the next election. The Prime Minister knows that and that is why he is delaying.

Countless hundreds of thousands of our youth are looking for direction and leadership from this government. What do they get? This is another sad day. I see the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) hiding her head in shame. Do you know what the Prime Minister said? He said: "If you want a job, go out of the country."

Mrs. Holt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Alexander: I only have three or four minutes left. If the hon. member can't stand the heat, let her get out of the kitchen.

Mrs. Holt: The hon. member has suggested that I, as a member of this House, feel ashamed or am hiding my head. My head is upright. I am proud of what the government is doing. The hon. member has absolutely no right to suggest that I am hiding my head in shame.

Mr. Alexander: My time is running on. All I know is that the conclusion is clear and undisputed. The Liberals, particularly those in government, are no longer looked upon as being best able to unify this country, the most competent or best able to deal with the economy. Those things are now myths.

Mr. Lefebvre: Who said that?

Mr. Alexander: I just went over the record. Do you think the Canadian people are stupid? Do you think they do not know what the score is? Talk about unity! We have disunity. We have a separatist government. The Prime Minister was less than honest when he said that separatism is dead. Do you have national unity today? We do not. I do not want to say the government would lie to the Canadian people because I might get into trouble. However, that is no longer the party which can unify this country.

• (1702)

What about competence? Heaven knows, this is the most incompetent administration this country has ever seen.

As for the economy, I have given the House seven or eight cases to show that the government has destroyed any credibility it might have possessed. Today, ministers opposite are being questioned as never before. With every week that passes more and more people believe that the Prime Minister and his cabinet have proven themselves totally incapable of running the country. Take a look at those responsible for economic and financial affairs over there on that side. I will leave out the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs because he is not quite "somebody" yet. There is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chretien). We know who he is. How about the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner)?

An hon. Member: A very able parliamentarian.

Mr. Alexander: How about the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand)?

Mr. Philbrook: A great fellow.

Mr. Alexander: How about the Minister of National Revenue?

An hon. Member: Who is he?

Mr. Alexander: There you have a key as to what is going on in this country. I will leave the President of the Treasury Board out of it for a moment. There is something about him that I find attractive for the time being.

Mr. Andras: Be careful!

Mr. Alexander: If that is the kind of competence they can show over there, the situation can only get worse. As a matter of fact, there is not enough talent there to enable the Prime Minister to make a switch, even; the ship is sinking and they are all going. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) is going. The former minister of finance has gone. Mitchell Sharp has gone. A few have gone to the Senate. What about those who are left? Mr. Speaker, could you take any member of that group over there behind the President of the Treasury Board and put them on the front bench? There is no one.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Alexander: Look at today's headlines. Items like this make the Canadian people wonder where the country is going. Here is one item: "Highest Food Price Jump in 25 Years".

Here is another: "May Living Costs hit New Three-Year Record". Yet all the time the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and his friends are telling us things are great. Does he not read the newspapers? How these parliamentary secretaries ever got appointed I shall never understand. It must be the result of influence or good looks or regional considerations; it cannot be for brains, with all due respect.

Do they not recall the Prime Minister, back in 1975, introducing his great controls program and saying, along with the minister of finance at that time, that by 1978, in October, inflation would be running at 4 per cent? What went wrong? Was it blind stupidity or incompetence, or both? The Canadian people want to know because they are now facing inflation running at 9 per cent and all the economic indicators show we are heading for even more trouble.

People do not want to hear any more bland assurance from parliamentary secretaries that everything is all right. Hon. members opposite say: "Put us back in power. We understand; we will work these things out". Mr. Speaker, the record of the party opposite is one of complete disaster. They have almost succeeded in destroying this country.

Members opposite may describe what I am saying as "doom and gloom", but the people understand my sentiments. I am speaking today so as to be of some assistance to the Liberal backbenchers who appear to live in another world. I do not think they listen to their constituents at all. On second thoughts, I believe they are beginning to do so because they are asking the Prime Minister now why he did not go to the people—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Alexander: I was just getting started, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Well, Mr. Speaker, after reading the motion before us and listening to the comments made so far I can only say I am appalled by the extravagance, the bias, the naivete and the lack of balance in both the motion itself and in the remarks of most of the hon. members who have taken part in this debate.

The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander)—my good friend on a personal basis—has been in his usual good voice. Two or three years ago I was tempted to describe his comments as bombast and rhetoric. We have had a double dose today in a speech which contained very little substance, very little by way of constructive suggestions.

The hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) told us that when he came here from the business world he got the impression that this institution was an "Alice in Wonderland" creation. The hon. member for Hamilton West made a similar comment. After listening to the observations of members opposite I have to say they are living in a dream world. They have no sense of proportion.

Of course Canada is experiencing economic problems. Of course there are ways by which the efficiency of government can be improved, as is the case in every country. But their performance would be more credible if only occasionally they would acknowledge that we do not live upon an isolated island totally detached from the rest of the world. We do not. We are a leading trading nation; one in four of our jobs depends on our ability to export. But those exports are influenced by economic conditions throughout the world and we cannot escape that fact. Hon. members opposite would have far more credibility if they admitted, just on occasion, that there were other factors affecting our economy. Because if they ever became really responsible, instead of being merely critical—a state of affairs which I personally believe would be disastrous—they would have to take these things into account.

The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) talked, for instance, about the Export Development Corporation. He talked about the export of jobs. Mr. Speaker, that corporation exists in order to assist Canadians to produce goods and sell them abroad. The goods being sold are Canadian goods and it is Canadian jobs which are associated with their production. Does the hon. member suggest we can stand idly back from the kind of competition which goes on around the world and let other people handle these opportunities? I can assure him it would be somebody else's goods which would be sold and other people whose jobs would be involved. He should recognize that the corporation is serving a good purpose and performing a good function.

I wish to concentrate in my speech today on more specific points relating to my responsibility in the portfolio I hold and into the allegations of waste made so bluntly and extravagantly in the motion. Where have members opposite been in the last several months? Where were they when I introduced the main estimates which showed that for the third consecutive year a restraint program unparalleled in recent history had been undertaken?

Where were they when a few days later I placed in the hands of every member, whether they read it or not, a document called "The Impact of Administrative Restraint" which talked about a saving of $100 million annually by administrative action alone?

• (1712)

Where is there recognition that the office of Comptroller General has been created? Where is there recognition that the Auditor General Act has been passed and that it enhances his powers and gives him powers which I think are second to none for that kind of parliamentary officer anywhere in the world? I say again that I am appalled, in the light of that record, that hon. members opposite would bring forward such an ill-conceived and irresponsible motion as the one which is being debated today. It is ill-conceived and irresponsible because it lacks substance. I have to say that it is long on politics but devoid of substance.

Let me review the record of this government since we announced our restraint program. Hon. members will recall that we announced that the growth of spending over time would not be permitted to exceed the growth in the gross national product. We tried to balance that comment. That comment was a candid acknowledgement that expenditures had been rising too quickly in the past under all governments in this country and, frankly, nearly all the governments of the western world.

It was a candid acknowledgement that something had to be done, that government spending could not go on rising at the rate it had been and that it had to be checked or else the economic well-being of the country would be jeopardized. Never before had a Canadian government made such a commitment in advance to such a policy, and while the commitment was dramatic, I can tell the House now that it is my view that the results have been even more dramatic. We have been setting targets consistently which have been below gross national product growth forecasts. We have been holding spending below those targets.

I will not claim that it has been easy. Some important proposals have had to go down the drain. Some very ambitious projects had to be scaled down from their first presentations. In the first year I recall that more than $1 billion had to be trimmed from departmental forecasts shortly before the estimates were tabled.

Without going into all the details I hope the House will allow me to delve briefly into the past and to highlight the spending estimates for this year. In 1976-77, which was the first full fiscal year under the restraint program, we held spending to more than $1 billion below our target. That gave us a 10.2 per cent increase over the previous year, while the current dollar g.n.p. for that same period grew by about 13.4 per cent.

The 1977-78 fiscal year, which just ended March 31, was even tougher. When main estimates were tabled a year ago, I announced that total spending would be $45.120 billion. It was subsequently reduced. First, we reduced the publicly stated target by $670 million to make room for the tax cuts announced in the March, 1977 budget.

Following that we faced some unforeseen and rather extraordinary requirements for economic spending and for transfer payments to the provinces. For example, we decided we needed another $200 million for various job creation programs. We had to find another $440 million for cash payments to the provinces because the income tax points we transferred to them the previous fall under the agreement covering hospital insurance, medicare and post-secondary education did not produce as much revenue as had been expected. So we had to find another $440 million and stay within these reduced ceilings.

We did, despite those pressures, keep the lid on, and I was really quite pleased to be able to inform the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), in the preparation of his April 10 budget, that we now expected total spending for fiscal year 1977-78 to be at least $200 million below the final target we had set; in other words, about $44.250 billion. That was a full $870 million less that the target set when I tabled the main estimates in February of 1977.

Coming to fiscal year 1978-79, in February I tabled the main estimates, as hon. members will recall. They included a statement of a maximum total spending target of $48.8 billion, which was an increase of about 9.8 per cent over the 1977-78 expenditure forecast, which was then $44.45 billion. So for the third consecutive year we are well within the forecast growth of the gross national product.

That was the figure I tabled in February, but here again history is repeating itself. In conversation with the Minister of Finance in trying to make as much room as possible in terms of the deficit for the tax cuts he announced on April 10, we further reduced our spending plans by another $350 million. So the 1978-79 growth pattern will be within about 9.5 per cent over the previous year, not the 9.8 per cent predicted in the main estimates.

I think the figures speak for themselves. In 1974-75, the mid-seventies, that responsive and expensive period of minority government, spending increased 28.3 per cent over the previous year. In 1975-76 it dropped to 18.4 per cent. It went down to 10.2 per cent in 1976-77 and, taking into account the one-time only changes in our budgetary system, to about 10 per cent in 1977-78, and we have a forecast percentage increase this year of 9.5 per cent.

I do not think that is a litany of incompentence and wastefulness. What that sounds like to me is a record of financial management which is responsible and responsive because we have slowed down the rate of government spending. We have brought it into line with the growth of the economy, and we are trying to do that without going in the other direction and undermining the economic development and requirements of this nation.

I was interested in a comment by the C.D. Howe Research institute in its "Policy Review and Outlook" for 1978, published by that responsible and respected organization. Judith Maxwell said that it was evident that the country had made a good deal of progress in eliminating the excesses which were so alarming on previous occasions, particularly back in the 1972, 1973, 1974 period.

Mr. Andre: Was that a Liberal government then?

Mr. Andras: She was referring to all governments of all political stripes in this country.

Mr. Andre: It was a Liberal government, though, was it?

Mr. Andras: Yes, with Conservative governments in Ontario and some other places, unfortunately, and governments of other flavours in other provinces of this country.

Judith Maxwell also said that on fiscal policy governments have moved a long way toward controlling the rate of growth in their spending, and that restraint has occurred at all levels of government. However, I want to put a balance into this. She wrote also—and I agree, in spite of the fact that my own inclination would be to want to see our expenditures going down even more rapidly than they are—that it is also important to keep in mind that constraints on government spending, as necessary as they may be in the long run, act as a constraint on economic recovery and, given the balance of the economy in 1977, governments must try to find a balance between their desires to get their finances in order and their responsibility to stabilize economic activity.

While members of the official opposition particularly want to decry the rate of reduction in government spending and boast about $2 billion tax cuts and that sort of thing, the fact is that ours is a responsible approach to ratcheting down and getting our spending in better order; but perhaps it does not have the dramatic and assumed political appeal of the Draconian measures I have heard suggested. Those suggested measures have never been backed up by indications as to how those changes will be accomplished. In any event, the rate of growth in government spending has been slowed down.

Perhaps the telling argument to that effect was the show put on by honorable members opposite during consideration of the main estimates in February. At that time, the spokesman for the official opposition accused me of being and continuing to be a spendthrift. He indicated that no progress has been made. Yet the spokesman for the New Democratic Party took the opposite view and suggested that we were being far too niggardly and should continue to increase our spending.

I have a rather comforting feeling that perhaps we are on the right course. If either one had agreed, I am afraid I would have been somewhat nervous, returned to the drawing board and rechecked my thinking. I do not want to argue political philosophy in this debate. I am attempting to assemble some of the facts in order to demonstrate, in my view, the questionable value of the motion before us.

I have put the following question before the House during similar debates in consideration of main estimates and budget debates in the past: What really prevents us from making greater inroads in the growth of government spending? I have indicated that I would like to see the growth rate drop even faster than it has so far, with one caution or proviso which I illustrated by quoting the C. D. Howe Research Institute.

One of the major reasons, of course, is the statutory obligations and commitments approved by the House to share in the financing of provincial activities and many, many other programs mainly of a social nature. The increases in such programs are unquestionably built in and difficult to control. Approximately 60 per cent of the budgetary estimates for 1978-79 fall into this category.

Reductions in these statutory programs, or even cuts in their rates of growth, are made much more difficult by the fact that the majority of them involve transfers to individuals or to other levels of government. I am referring to old age security payments, fiscal transfers to the provinces, family allowances, the Canada Assistance Plan, unemployment insurance, post-secondary education, medicare and extended health care.

These few programs to which I have referred account for approximately 40 per cent of the budgetary estimates for this year. When one adds to the statutory 60 per cent of estimates requirements for other contractual programs or formula payments, such as those for CMHC housing programs where we have agreements with the provinces, occupational and manpower training, fiscal transfers to the territories, veterans' pensions and allowances, and many more, there is obviously not much room left to cut back on government spending without very deep and sober thought.

To put it another way, approximately $10 billion of the $48.8 billion target for 1978-79 will be transferred to the provinces. Another $10 billion plus will go to individual Canadians. These payments supplement the incomes of millions of Canadians—senior citizens, growing families, workers temporarily unemployed, people undergoing new training, native people and veterans. In an economic fashion, these payments are used largely for shelter, food, clothing and other basic necessities.

Major reallocations of resources have been taking place constantly in order to accommodate increases in statutory programs. They have been taking place during every fiscal year without our limit on total spending being exceeded. While the final accounts are not available for 1977-78, I am confident spending will be held to approximately $44,250 million, which is $870 million below the ceiling I announced before that fiscal year began. That was accomplished in the face of some very large, unforeseeable demands of almost $1 billion for programs such as job creation and payments to the provinces. Without the increases in the payments to individuals and to the provinces, many of which programs are indexed, our rate of increase in spending would have been less than 3 per cent this year.

I would have liked to have the time to deal with some of the other comments made during the course of this debate, particularly those which apply to my portfolio. I enhance the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Martin) and his references to the control on public service man-year growth. I would have liked to elaborate more on the administrative restraint program which is ongoing. Not only does that program save over $100 million a year now, but it is reducing—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks, I should like to correct something which the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) said. He said, when the estimates came down last March, that I accused him of being a spendthrift. I should like to correct that statement. I do not think he is a spendthrift. I am convinced his government is a spendthrift. I accused him of peddling flim-flam in terms of explaining government spending patterns. If one requires any other evidence of flim-flam on the part of this minister, he only has to read his speech of today. Again his speech was full of inexcusable flim-flam.

The minister is President of the Treasury Board. That organization has three areas of responsibility. One is to manage government spending—the estimates—examine the budgets of various departments, approve such budgets, estimate government spending annually, and supervise government departments to ensure that they are effective and efficient. The second is the responsibility for the public service. The third is the management of the public service bilingual program.

Dealing with the first responsibility, let us look at how well it has been fulfilled by the Treasury Board. Turning to the 1976 report of the Auditor General on managing government spending, the Auditor General said the following:

I am deeply concerned that parliament—and indeed the government—has lost or is close to losing, effective control of the public purse.

In terms of that aspect of its mandate, the Auditor General, who is not a party hack for the Progressive Conservative or New Democratic parties, but is an officer of parliament, said that the Treasury Board had failed in that regard. How does the Treasury Board look after the public service? Through the proverbial brown envelope route and as a result of an audit, we have found out that approximately 16 per cent of public service positions are misclassified. That means of any seven public servants performing the same task, six are classified properly and the seventh is classified too high. In other words, the seventh is being paid more than the other six for doing the same job.

● (1732)

Is this going to build up the morale of those six doing the same job as the seventh but getting paid less? Is it going to soothe the Canadian public which has to pay more than it ought for the services of that seventh individual? If you use that example to measure the success of Treasury Board in fulfilling its responsibilities in terms of the public service, it has failed miserably.

Surely no one in this country has the gall to claim the bilingual program has been administered properly when examples of abuse, misuse and mismanagement in that program are too legion to enumerate. In all three areas of responsibility the Treasury Board has failed miserably.

The present minister has not been in that position for long and cannot be expected to carry the entire blame. Those who preceded him are now in even higher positions of authority. We can understand why the Treasury Board has been so poorly run when we look at the records of the previous ministers. For example, a previous minister of the Treasury Board is now Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). When we consider what he is doing with his responsibilities in that area we can clearly understand why the Treasury Board is in such poor shape.

The minister opened his remarks today by saying it is time we faced up to the facts. He said that we do not live on an island, and admitted we had some problems. It was very gracious of him today to admit that we have problems. I guess his admission that he is trying to do something about cutting back on spending is an admission of the accuracy of the motion of my colleague, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington). If he did not tacitly agree that there was tremendous waste and incompetence in the way things were being handled, he would not be engaged in this program about which he has been bragging. In this way he has as much as admitted failure in terms of the incompetency of that program.

The minister indicated we are on the right path now. He said that this government is on the path toward fiscal responsibility. He said the government is going to bring spending under control. He mentioned some figures which I will get to in a minute, because they were really nothing more than flimflam.

Not long ago, on April 13, 1969, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said on national television that we would be on the way to financial disaster if nothing were done to bring spending under control, that spending vast sums on welfare, education and other programs while allowing inflation to continue would merely place hundreds of thousands of Canadians on a treadmill they could not escape.

The Prime Minister then dedicated himself to fiscal responsibility and to bringing government spending under control. That was in 1969. Since then spending has increased by 240 per cent. Why in the world would any sound Canadian believe this minister today when he says things will be different as a result of some new program? We had the clear example of the Prime Minister dedicating himself on national television to restraint, and we all know what happened as a result of that dedication. The fact of the matter is that no one should trust what that Prime Minister or that government has to say. There is an old expression that when a con man catches you once, that is his fault; but if he catches you twice, it is your own fault. I do not think the people of Canada will be fooled twice by this less than honest government.

The minister is proud of the fact that he has controlled expenditures by keeping growth to less than 10 per cent. I believe he referred to 9.8 per cent, or possibly even 9.5 per cent, and he was patting himself on the back. How did he do that? The implication was that he accomplished this by being very frugal and by cutting out waste and the misappropriate spending of money.

The fact of the matter is that the way he did this was by disguising spending. Until the estimates were placed before us last year, Crown corporation loans formed part of government spending. They recognized that when the EDC made a loan as an agent of Her Majesty it was exactly the same as the government making a loan, and it was included in the estimates. All loans by EDC or any other Crown corporation, such as CMHC, were included. Such loans are excluded from the estimates this year.

When you take from the estimates $1 billion in Crown corporation loans, it looks as though government spending is $1 billion less. If that is not flim-flam, what is it? I suggest it is pure, unadulterated flim-flam, and certainly it is being less than honest with the Canadian people.

The minister had the gall to stand in the House and pat himself on the back, so much so that his arm must be sore claiming he has been effective in cutting back. But what he really has done is to disguise and hide spending from the people of Canada. That really is intolerable and I do not think the people of Canada will be fooled by it.

That is not the only way large expenditures were disguised. This government pushed $1 billion in spending on the provinces which had formerly been shown in the estimates. Again that makes it look as though the government has reduced the level of expenditure by $1 billion. By subtracting loan payments from expenditures you engage in flim-flam. All you are doing is disguising the spending which actually occurs.

Let me give another classic example of this procedure. Whenever a Crown corporation runs up a tremendous debt, this government turns it into equity. All of a sudden the debt disappears, as do the interest payments associated with the debt. All of a sudden by magic the Canadian public no longer has the obligation to pay the interest on the debt, because the debt through transfer has been turned into equity. That is a marvellous scheme, but it is nothing more than flim-flam. This is the type of thing that medicine show snake oil salesmen use, and the public will not fall for it again.

The other thing I want to take the minister to task for is his statement that the government has appointed a Comptroller General with unlimited powers to police government spending. His words were unfounded because the Comptroller General has in fact no such powers. He occupies the position of a deputy minister and no more. We hope and pray his efforts will be effective; do not get us wrong in terms of motivation. However, the claim that, through creation of the position of another deputy minister, the government will cure all the problems is simply inaccurate.

It would take more than 20 minutes, more than 40 minutes, more than a week and more than a month, to list and describe just a few of the examples of waste and extravagance on the part of this government. Let me talk about one additional example in view of the presence in the House today of the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne).

I am prompted to speak of this example because of a memo that came over my desk a couple of weeks back in which the Postmaster General had the colossal gall to say that Canadians could post a letter more cheaply than the citizens of any other country in the world. He had the colossal gall to propose that complete fabrication, and it is a complete fabrication. He completely and conveniently dismissed the fact that the Post Office is operating with a deficit this year of $571 million.

An hon. Member: Where is the mail cheaper?

Mr. Andre: If the parliamentary secretary will allow me to explain, he will then understand. The Postmaster General completely neglected to include in this calculation the Post Office deficit of $571 million this year. You and I, Mr. Speaker, have to pay for that deficit, and the fact that we do not have to pay for it by buying stamps valued at more than 14 cents for a first class letter does not mean we do not pay for it. Of course we pay for this deficit. The fact of the matter is that in a family of four, that expenditure amounts to the mailing of 700 letters a year. In other words, we are being charged for 700 letters a year that we do not mail to cover the deficit of the Post Office, that superbly run organization.

● (1742)

The Post Office in the last decade, the Liberal decade under this present administration, has increased the amount of mail it carries by 18 per cent. It has gone from some five billion to six billion pieces of mail each year. In that same time postal employees have increased by 43 per cent, from 46,000 to 66,000. In other words, every employee in the Post Office now handles 60 per cent of the mail that he handled ten years ago. This is what automation has brought us, that great new introduction of this government. That automation has, in fact reduced the productivity of every postal worker by 40 per cent, plus it has given us collectively a bill of $571 million to cover its losses.

I wish to cite one other example at this point, and that is with regard to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. I mention it because of this hassle with Petro-Canada, and because I had to go back and look at the debates on Petro-Canada. The then minister of energy, mines and resources, Donald Macdonald, stood up in the House and said that Petro-Canada will be a marvel and will bring in all kinds of energy, and that Crown corporations in energy do very well.

Well, Mr. Speaker, Atomic Energy of Canada is an outstanding example of how effective a Crown corporation can be in improving Canada's energy situation. It was just two or three months later that the people of Canada found out that Atomic Energy had lost something like $300 million in Argentina, that we had given untold millions to Shaul Eisenberg and who knows how much to Korea and Japan. We found out that that organization could build reactors and give them away. They have cost Canadians hundreds of millions of dollars, and there is plenty of evidence that in fact some of that money may not only have been wasted but used in a corrupt manner. As I indicated, I could go on and on, but thanks to Mr. Ed Murphy a lot more people know about the waste of this government.

It is important to realize the consequences of all this waste upon this country, and this is something that we as responsible parliamentarians have to be concerned about. An example is "Proposition 13" in California which was voted on by the taxpayers a couple of weeks ago. That could not happen here because we do not have as democratic a system, but there was a message there. Anybody in this House who deludes himself or herself into thinking that Canadians do not share some of the same views as those California taxpayers is not being of service to this country or their constituents. The fact is there is a growing resentment in this country toward taxes and taxation, not just in terms of the level, but because of how much the public see wasted and how much incompetence they see.

I had an accountant tell me the other day that he has clients asking him to do things in terms of claiming tax deductions for which, if he had suggested them ten years ago, they would have fired him. He gave this by way of an example. Ten years ago there was a willingness on the part of people to pay taxes. They felt obliged to pay as responsible citizens, that they were fortunate to be part of this country and to be able to pay their share. They certainly did not resist it. Although I do not think anybody voluntarily pays, they did not resist or resent it. This is not true today, for there is great resentment and concern about the misspending of the government.

Another thing that happens, and which is equally important, is a general discrediting of government and parliament. There is a feeling among the public that the government cannot be trusted. The public feel that they have been lied to too often in the past. The result of this is that we as parliamentarians get painted by the same brush. There is a cynicism with regard to parliament and government. There is the feeling of them and us, an adversary mood of parliament versus the people. It is not government of the people for the people. We are going back to the old days of when the state was a tyrant and the people were its subjects, and that feeling is increasing in this country.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a very serious situation because if it is not arrested and turned around we will have a much less democratic country than you and I, and I am sure anybody in this House, plan for. Cutting that waste is important in terms of the funds and dollars involved, but I think it is even more important in terms of the confidence of the people. When governments waste, spill and misuse public funds, they bring upon themselves the discredit of the people and as a result weaken our society and the democratic fabric of our nation.

I know there are others who wish to speak. I could go on for hours on this subject, but I will sit down and allow some time for the remaining speakers.

[Translation]

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it seems obvious from reading that motion and listening to hon. members of the official opposition that nobody on the other side of this House took the trouble of reading the last report of the Auditor General of Canada. For their information I feel I have to bring to their attention what everyone has known for several months. On page 9 of his report of March 31, 1977, the Auditor General writes:

> Other positive, constructive and important actions by the government since the tabling of my 1976 report, some of which will be referred to in subsequent paragraphs of this part and all of which have significant impact on financial control, include: > the announcement on December 16, 1976, by the President of the Treasury Board of new government policy and guidelines concerning the commercial practices of Crown corporations;
>
> the enactment by Parliament of the new Auditor General Act and its proclamation by the Governor General effective August 1, 1977;
> the granting by Parliament on the advice of the government of a significant increase in resources to the Audit Office through main estimates for 1976-77; and > the release on August 18, 1977, by the President of Privy Council of a paper setting out Government Proposals on the Control, Direction and Accountability of Crown Corporations.

[Mr. Andre.]

Still on page 9, paragraph 2.10 says, and I quote:

> Taken together, these actions by the government and Parliament comprise, in the phraseology I used in my 1976 report, "strong, appropriate and effective measures" to achieve ultimately a satisfactory system of financial management and control within the federal government and the restoration to Parliament of an appropriate degree of control over the public purse.

Those are the words, Mr. Speaker, of a very competent person, namely the Auditor General of Canada.

● (1752)

[English]

I should like to come back now to some of the claims made by the opposition. Where do they want to start in achieving these greater economies? Will they start with payments to individuals which went up by $926 million this year, or with payments to pensioners, the unemployed, young families, or will they attack all three groups? I forgot the veterans, which is a small group. Perhaps they want to start their savings there.

If this hits too close to their constituents, maybe they would like to take on the provinces since 46 per cent of the increase in our spending this year resulted from increased transfer payments. Before they do that I should remind them that equalization payments for 1978-79 alone account for 26 per cent of the total revenue for Newfoundland, 29 per cent for Prince Edward Island, 27 per cent for Nova Scotia, 24 per cent for New Brunswick, 10 per cent for Quebec, 13 per cent for Manitoba and slightly more than 2 per cent for Saskatchewan. That is one of the questions that has not been answered today.

In his speech the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) pointed out that this government made further advances in the reduction of waste and the improvement of control. One of the most obvious measures that the opposition does not mention very often is the legislation which created the position of Comptroller General. When the appointment was made the Auditor General said that he was more than pleased, and in reply to questions in the public accounts committee on several occasions he indicated his approval. No one on the other side has mentioned that.

Aside from the legislative changes there is also progress in the field of financial administration, some of which I would now like to detail. On November 8, 1977, Treasury Board issued a circular to revise the policy on grants and contributions. Principal features included revised definitions of a "grant" and a "contribution" and clarification of the requirements for Treasury Board approval of terms and conditions for all payments of contributions.

A significant change, restricting advance payments to three months, will prevent long-term financing of projects at an interest cost to the federal government. It will discourage the payment of contributions without progress reports and without an accounting for the amount claimed by the recipient.

All departments and agencies are reviewing their grants and contribution programs against the new policy, and where they do not meet the requirements will seek approval of revised terms and conditions from the Treasury Board.

The financial administration branch has also completed a review of cash control procedures in departments and agencies resulting in a new policy directive. The directive provided for proper physical security of cash, an adequate division of duties, periodic verification of advances, and the manner in which funds will be transferred from one responsible officer to another. All departments and agencies were required to report on the manner in which this policy was implemented.

A policy directive has also been issued to govern the use of departmental credit cards. The general policy is that credit cards will not be issued to employees. Recognizing that certain departments have a need for such cards, they may be issued on the written authorization of the deputy head who is not permitted to delegate this authority. Conditions of use and payment must be agreed to by the employee. Monitoring of credit cards accounts takes place monthly by a departmental financial officer.

At present the financial administration branch is doing a study of practices and alternatives for the deposit and transfer of public money. The study includes various methods in use by other organizations in Canada and abroad. The objective of the project is to develop a policy, and a method for the deposit and transfer of public money which will reduce the amount of money in transit at any point in time and improve internal control over funds deposited and transferred. A major revision to the guide on financial administration issued in 1973 is also under way.

We are also developing a policy on interdepartmental charging to classify the types of interdepartmental services provided, various methods of charging for such services and the conditions to be considered in deciding whether or not these methods should be applied.

To ensure accuracy and timeliness of financial reports, the branch is completing the development of a policy and related system to ensure that payables at the end of a fiscal year are reported in the accounts of Canada. This policy will give effect to the implementation of recommendation 24 of the report on the study of the accounts of Canada.

The branch is also preparing a draft of a concise guide to the estimates and public accounts, which was requested by the Standing Committee on Public accounts.

Another group within the financial policy development division is responsible for the development of policy and standards for financial systems employed by departments and the approval of departmental systems proposals to ensure that they meet established policy and standards. Work of the group includes completion of a study to determine the most appropriate methods of achieving timely and accurate financial reports for government departments and agencies. A policy on departmental financial reporting systems and related standards has been drafted, and several studies are currently being done on specific proposals for improving the departmental financial reporting system of the Department of Supply and Services.

For several years the Public Service Commission has been offering an accelerated series of courses in professional accounting and other related subjects necessary for accreditation by one of the professional accounting bodies.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would just say that this motion provided an opportunity for the President of the Treasury Board, the parliamentary secretary and myself to reply to these unfounded charges made by the opposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being six o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 58(11), proceedings on the motion have expired.

This House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

RATE OF INFLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the disheartening response of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to the question of the government's plans to combat record inflation prospects facing our country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That this House reject the only stated government policy, namely, that Canadians should henceforth cease eating, drinking, lighting, heating or cooling their homes in order to bring down the rate of inflation to the level projected in the last budget of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIR SERVICE TO WESTERN CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I request permission to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the promise made by the Prime Minister during the 1974 election of early action to provide a first-class air service to western Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan in the interests of economic growth, and in view of the press release of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) on January 31, 1977, requesting applications from carriers to provide commuter air service and jet service to these areas, and the application of Great Lakes Airlines to provide the necessary jet service now before the air transport committee, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That the minister use his good offices to urge the air transport committee to reach a decision on the application at the earliest possible date, particularly in light of the air transportation requirements of the Canada Winter Games to be held in Brandon next February.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

BEEF IMPORTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Last Friday, the U.S. announced that beef imports to that country will be increased by 16 per cent. As a result of the American move, Canadian beef markets have already fallen by 10 per cent. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin):

That the Minister of Agriculture assure this House that the government will not increase beef imports but, rather, will adopt measures to bring about self-sufficiency in the Canadian beef industry.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

PRODUCTION OF STEEL BEAMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. As Canadian steel mills are unable to supply the current demand for wide-flange beams in Canada, in view of the fact that Canadian steel mills are on controlled bookings allocation and, as a result, the British Columbia industry is unable to purchase wide-flange requirements from Canadian mills within practical time-frames, and because importers are unwilling to import wide-flange steel beams before the determination of dumping duty, thus causing hardship and injury to the B.C. steel industry, with unnecessary lay-offs involved, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke):

That nominal dumping duties be announced immediately so that the steel industry can import wide-flange steel beams that Canadians mills are unable to supply.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ECOLOGICAL DAMAGE OF GARRISON RIVER DIVERSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion concerns the letter that the Premier of Manitoba sent to the leaders of the United States Congress requesting that they not continue funding the Garrison project. In view of the immense harm the project could do to the ecology of Manitoba water systems, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That this House expresses its complete support for the letter sent by the Premier of Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

TRANSPORT

ESTABLISHMENT OF PRAIRIE RAIL AUTHORITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. On Tuesday last, Mr. Justice Emmett Hall told the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, "The task that was committed to the Prairie Rail Action Committee was premature and impossible of fulfilment within the time-frame given that committee". He also said PRAC recommendation to abandon the portion of the rail line from Liberty to Dilke was "a serious mistake". Therefore, before the Prairie Rail Action Committee can do any more damage to the grain handling system, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That this House request the government to require the Minister of Transport to reject PRAC abandonment recommendations to date, to disband the PRAC, and to bring forward legislation to set up the prairie rail authority as recommended by the Hall royal commission.

[Mr. Huntington.]

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

OPERATION OF SAINT JOHN, N.B., BRIDGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mike Landers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the terms of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the report of the Auditor General in 1976, and again in 1977, describes loans to the Saint John harbour bridge authority as being uncollectable, and in view of the fact that a write-off of these loans would be in accordance with standard accounting practices, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail):

That the Government of Canada commence negotiations with the province of New Brunswick in the near future, with the ultimate goal in mind of the write-off of the $25 million in loans to the Saint John harbour bridge authority and toll-free passage for all vehicular traffic, with operating costs to be assumed by the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL SECURITY

STATUS OF MIKHAIL KVATOV—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent necessity concerning evidence presented by the Crown at the preliminary trial of Peter Worthington under the Official Secrets Act several years ago; specifically, a statement by RCMP witness Spooner that Soviet diplomat Mikhail Kvatov was a KGB agent involved in certain activities from 1975 to 1976, the revelation of which by Mr. Worthington in the Toronto Sun allegedly prejudiced the security of the state. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Solicitor General explain to the House the complete inconsistency between the RCMP testimony and information given on request to the member for Leeds by the RCMP during the week of June 3, 1975, with regard to the same Mikhail Kvatov stating that he was a bona fide diplomat and was not engaged in KGB activities and, finally, that the minister confirm whether or not the court was lied to by the RCMP or whether the member for Leeds was lied to.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

OUTFLOW OF CAPITAL

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It is based on very unhappy statistics brought out by Statistics Canada last week indicating that the exodus of capital from Canada continues, $335 million having been invested by Canadians abroad in that quarter alone, resulting in an outflow of capital in the 90-day period of over $3 million a day. Is the Minister of Finance aware of these figures? Does he find this exodus of capital alarming and, if so, would he give some explanation to the House and the people of Canada as to why this is occurring? I might add that over $1 billion has gone out in the last 12 months.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the policy of the government is to let capital flow inside and outside of the country, we do not want to impose exchange controls. In order to have a lot of foreign capital in our economy, we must allow Canadians to make their own decisions about their investments. However, we are looking at the situation and watching it very carefully.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my question is, again, to the Minister of Finance. It is obvious from the figures, which the minister does not deny, that the international community is now judging Canada as an unprofitable place in which to invest. Would the minister indicate whether he plans any steps to make the Canadian investment climate a little more attractive, so that needed capital for this country's development might start flowing in, instead of going out as has been the case?

• (1417)

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, Canada has always been recognized as a good place for investment. A tremendous amount of money enters the country regularly, and we have the best illustration in the articles published last week which indicated that U.S. bankers who established a $3 billion line of credit for Canada said that if we had wanted more it would have been possible to obtain it.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance does not see the difference between raising debt funds to cover current account expenses of his government and needed capital that is not coming into the country. Is there an industrial strategy in place in this country to which the minister can refer us, and is there an industrial strategy that the world can see because, frankly, it is a very confusing picture? We have the Export Development Corporation financing pulp mills and steel mills to compete with Canada's in future years. We even have Petro-Can planning a $500 million investment to heighten the outflow of capital still further. Do we have an industrial strategy?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we are working very intensely on that. I do not know if the hon. member is aware, but I discussed that matter very thoroughly last February with the premiers of the provinces. As a result of the February conference, studies are being made in order to elaborate the strategy in every sector of the Canadian economy. We have made a lot of progress in that regard. In terms of the difference between debt and equity investment in Canada, a lot of people in Canada were complaining for a hell of a long time that there was too much equity coming in and not enough debt financing.

INVESTMENT IN UNITED STATES INDUSTRY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. There is a grand total, including bonds, short and long-term investment, of $18 million in investment capital leaving Canada daily. The Conference Board recently reported that 26 Canadian firms have made major investments in the United States. That is a clear indication that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has completely failed in his portfolio: he cannot attract business here and he does nothing to keep in Canada those already here. Can the minister explain to the House why these 26 Canadian firms are investing in the United States?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if you look at the figures, you will see that since the beginning of 1978 the balance of payments in trade in Canada is in favour of Canada: it is increasing from year to year. Three years ago we had a deficit in trade balance; with the trend this year, we will have a trade balance in favour of Canada of more than $5 billion. That means we must be doing something right. We are one of the few nations which can claim such a favourable trade balance in favour of its own economy.

Mr. McKenzie: Perhaps the minister can explain why they are not consulting firms such as John Labatt Limited, which has announced plans for a wheat-starch and gluten facility in South Carolina, and the St. Laurence Steel and Wire Company which has leased facilities in New York state and will produce hockey masks. Will the Minister of Finance make inquiries, as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is obviously not doing anything to keep these firms here. Why can these hockey masks not be made in Canada?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not have to defend the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce: he can defend himself very well. I just pointed out the great balance in terms of trade for Canada. It is improving from month to month. That is certainly due to the fact that we have a very good Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

ENERGY

TAKEOVER OF HUSKY OIL COMPANY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding the struggle which is going on between Petro-Can and Occidental Petroleum Company of Los Angeles, each seeking to acquire a controlling interest in Husky Oil Company of Calgary. If the government follows its previous practice, this matter will not be referred to parliament but dealt with by FIRA and then by cabinet. Members of this House may find some day that this great asset has been transferred to the control of a foreign company. I ask the minister whether he is prepared, either today or on motions tomorrow, to make a statement to the House concerning the negotiations which are in progress and the intentions of the government with respect to a matter which he himself said in the House the other day was of national interest.

● (1422)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I am sure there will be opportunities during the question period from day to day to answer questions such as those put forward by the hon. member today and on previous occasions. I shall be pleased to bring hon. members up to date on events as they may unfold. With respect to making any more formal or lengthy statement, I am not planning one at the present time—it might be premature—but, as I say, I would be pleased to answer specific questions.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I think the House is entitled to a statement of the government's intentions. The minister knows perfectly well that Husky controls more than 1.5 million acres of proven oil reserves on the Alberta-Saskatchewan border and that by using new technology it has a possibility of recovering 16 billion barrels of heavy crude oil. This is of great importance to Canada in a period when our light oil is being phased out.

Is the minister prepared to give specific assurances to the House that the government will take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that the control of Husky Oil Company and of its assets will continue to be maintained in Canada either by Petro-Canada or by Petro-Canada in partnership with the governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan?

Mr. Gillespie: As I have said in the House in the last few days and on many occasions in the past, development of the heavy oils of western Canada, particularly those of Saskatchewan, is very much a national priority. Indeed, at a meeting of first ministers, the Premier of Saskatchewan and the Prime Minister addressed themselves to this question. One of the results of that meeting was a commitment to move forward with the development of this heavy oil. We have regarded the takeover bid by Petro-Canada as being fully consistent with the priority we have assigned for the development of this heavy oil. Petro-Canada decided on the takeover route because its officials had reached the conclusion, as a result of negotiations and discussions with Husky Oil in the preceding months, that they would not be able to bring this oil-rich land into production for the benefit of Canada and Canadians. That is why Petro-Canada has gone forward with the blessing of the federal government.

If, as a result of the offer by the Occidental group, development of this heavy oil would be in every way guaranteed, one would have to come to the conclusion, it seems to me, that a Canadian objective had been secured. For this reason, I do not wish to prejudge either offer at the present time. The offer has been put forward in good faith by Petro-Canada. The president of Petro-Canada has told me his organization intends to proceed with this offer. What further action the consortium of Husky and Occidental may take, I am not in a position to forecast, nor am I in a position to speculate—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a final supplementary to the Prime Minister? Can the Prime Minister tell us the policy of the government with respect to this matter? We have just heard the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources say that the acquisition of Husky is in the national interest. The press quotes the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce as saying, "I am not shedding any tears over Petro-Canada". He says Petro-Canada can go out and buy land and put up a refinery of its own.

● (1427)

What is the policy with respect to this matter? There have been conflicting statements from two ministers and I think the House and the country are entitled to know whether the Prime Minister, as head of the government of this country, is prepared to commit himself to saying that this tremendous economic asset will be retained under the control of Canadians and preferably under the control of the federal government and the two provincial governments involved.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): With respect, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member either misunderstood or misinterpreted the answer of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He did not say it was in the national interest that the acquisition by Petro-Canada move ahead. He said it was in the national interest that these heavy oils and the freehold land under which the oils lay be exploited. He was quite clear in indicating that Petro-Canada was seeking that, and if somebody else was seeking that, that would also be in the national interest.

INDUSTRY

MEASURES TO IMPROVE PRODUCTIVITY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Statistics Canada has just reported that railway car loadings, which are an accurate measurement of industrial activity, decreased by 7 per cent during the first five months of this year compared with the same period a year ago, and that Canadian industry is operating at only 82.7 per cent of its capacity, the lowest point it has reached in three years—and it is going down. Would the minister advise the House, either now or on motions tomorrow, what plans he has to turn this very serious situation around and restore Canadian industry to a healthy condition?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have in progress right now a number of distinct measures which will assist Canadian industry a great deal. While Canadian industry might well be operating at 85 per cent capacity—

Mr. Hees: It is 82.7 per cent.

Mr. Horner: It is 82.7 per cent, then, I am not going to argue about the figure. What I am saying is that we must be realistic. Part of that industry is always under repair and all of it is not capable of producing at 100 per cent capacity at all times. I think the House should bear that fact in mind.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, It has been made very obvious that the minister has no plans to turn around this very serious situation. Has he nothing better to offer than his present plan for helping Canadian industry, that of reducing import tariffs by an average of 40 per cent against all products coming into this country which compete with Canadian industrial products on the Canadian market which, if allowed to take place, will make competition for our Canadian industries far more difficult on the Canadian market and will increase unemployment very materially indeed?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I thought the hon. member was aware of the things we were doing to help Canadian industry. We have set up 22 sector studies which encompass management, labour, provincial governments, the federal government, retailers and importers. These 22 sector studies will result in reports by the end of this month. We hope to make the reports public by about the third week in July. They will be submitted to a national board which will make a coherent effort on behalf of industry to make a presentation to the first ministers' conference.

With respect to tariff negotiations, I am amazed at the negativism—I really should not be amazed, after the months I have listened to hon. members opposite—in the hon. member's suggestion that a reduction of tariffs will hurt Canadian industry. A reduction of tariffs will broaden Canadian industries' marketability around the world. We have 23 million people, but there are 200 million people immediately south of us, so if our Canadian industry has a better opportunity to get into that larger market we will enhance opportunities for Canadian industries.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, these problems have been with us for several years. Long before now the government should have had a concrete plan for turning around this very serious situation. Does the minister not realize that the time for setting up boards, commissions and studies and more boards, commissions and studies has long passed and that we should have been getting action long before now to get the economy of this country rolling?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's West.

EMERGENCY MEASURES TO ASSIST INDUSTRY

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In the last quarter of last year, Canadian industry operated at a rate of 84 per cent utilization. It is down to 82.7 per cent this quarter, the worst since 1961. Last spring the minister said that Canada's economy would be a lot healthier next spring, that the devalued dollar would begin to be felt and the devaluation would give the manufacturing industry room to breathe. How is it that the minister's forecast is not accurate and that, instead, Canadian manufacturing is in its worst state since 1961? What emergency measures is the minister taking, apart altogether from studies and task forces?

• (1432)

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree, and I do not think the House should agree—certainly, Canadians should not agree—that our industry is in as terrible a shape as opposition members make it out to be. We have had a continuous merchandising trade surplus for the last 17 months.

An hon. Member: Selling our resources.

Mr. Horner: Selling resources? Let me tell the House that 10 per cent of our total exports are agricultural goods, 20 per cent are oil, gas and minerals, and 66⅔ per cent are manufactured and semi-processed goods.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: We are becoming a large industrialized nation and we are doing very well at it because we have built up a trade surplus in the past 17 months. In retrospect, if one looks at the United States, one finds that they have had a merchandising trade deficit for the last 32 months. So we are doing very well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian industry has so much room to breathe that it is not even operating. Last fall, in November, the Economic Council of Canada said that we faced five years of high unemployment, continuing inflation, modest growth and a large deficit in international payments. The minister said then that the council probably did not have all the available information at its disposal when it was doing its forecast and that it was wrong, it was too pessimistic. Now we have exactly what the council said—high unemployment, continuing inflation, modest growth and large deficits in international payments.

Would the minister apologize to the Economic Council of Canada, and will he produce the data that he had which showed that the council was wrong? In other words, will he continue talking through his stetson, or will he admit that we are in serious trouble and tell us what we are doing about it?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should read a more up-to-date report of the Economic Council of Canada.

AIRPORTS

NOISE LEVELS IN AREA OF TORONTO AIRPORT

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport who I understand is aware of the concern over the controversial proposal to build a 450-unit housing development beside Centennial Park in Etobicoke, just to the south of Toronto international airport. In view of the fact that provincial approval to build the units was based on the hypothetical noise exposure forecast figures produced by the minister's department, will the minister order his officials to conduct on-site testing, financed by the federal government, of the actual noise levels in order to ensure that local and provincial authorities are in possession of up to date, accurate information about noise levels in the area?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take the suggestion under consideration. I have already asked my officials to do a further analysis of the noise situation and of the impact upon the airport of any possible further housing development in that area. I also hold the fairly strong personal view that such development is rather inadvisable notwithstanding what the technical situation may be with regard to the noise contours and location of the houses, because from knowledge in the past it has been clear that where housing has developed near an airport there is later increased pressure to decrease the usefulness of the airport and the great investment we have in it. Accordingly, I am today writing to Mr. Snow to this effect.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his answer and ask whether or not he is aware of the proposal that has been made by Alderman Dick O'Brien, of Etobicoke, that the federal government will do as is done in other instances around federal airports, which is to purchase the land which would be used for this housing development and contribute it to the borough of Etobicoke as an extension to Centennial Park upon which it abuts. Is the minister giving serious consideration to that proposal?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, kept me fully aware of all opinions and events in this area. Of course, it is the tradition with regard to airports that the zoning should ordinarily be done by the province and by the municipality, and therefore that the impact upon lands should be taken into account by them as well. I think it may be seen as a fair division of responsibility if we, as the federal government, involved in investments in major airports put those investments in place and that the local people should make a contribution with regard to zoning.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

MEASURES TO COMBAT INCREASES IN PRICE OF FOOD

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, since the matter involves the responsibilities of several ministers. Last June, the government tabled a document entitled "A Food Strategy for Canada" and in it the government appeared to be committing itself to carry out a number of specific measures to "concentrate on the competitiveness of food processing, distribution and retailing " and "to encourage the food system to provide food and food services" to consumers in, among other things, "the simplest, most economical and most direct manner."

Would the Prime Minister himself, or through the relevant ministers, inform the House when all these programs will be implemented, or at least the extent to which they are already implemented, in the light of public concern over the current rate of increase in food prices?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter was discussed in part yesterday, and I think the relevant answer to at least part of the minister's question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Freudian slip.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, if you wish, Freudian slip.

Mr. Hees: Is he coming back?

Mr. Trudeau: He will certainly come back before you will, George.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Not if you have the courage to call an election.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: You couldn't think of a comeback, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: Do you know who this loudmouth is, ladies and gentlemen? It is the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings. I name him.

Mr. Hees: Your memory is improving.

Mr. Trudeau: If you read yesterday's Hansard, you will see what I said to you. So, Mr. Speaker, to get back to the very serious question of the hon. member for Windsor West, let me say that we have assurances that there is no excess profit gouging or profiteering in the food retailing or processing industry. But of course, as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said yesterday, we are looking into the matter and we are making sure that our information is correct and continues to be correct.

As to improving the situation, the minister said yesterday that we hope in the weeks to come to make any announcements which will become government policy.

MONITORING OF FOOD PRICES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The new monitoring agency announced today by the Economic Council of Canada to take over during the post-control period will not have the investigatory authority that the Food Prices Review Board had under the Inquiries Act. Would the Prime Minister tell the House how this monitoring agency can function effectively in the marketplace if it does not have this investigatory authority, and whether or not the agency will, as did the Food Prices Review Board, report publicly or to the cabinet?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If the hon. member refers to the letter which was made public this morning by the chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, I believe he will have the answer to both those questions. In the case of inquiries under the Inquiries Act or in any other form, the answer is that in areas where the Economic Council of Canada's special commission finds that a special inquiry is called for, it will so recommend to the government, which will then act in one way or another under the present legislation or by putting another proposal before the House. I believe that covers the question asked by the hon. member.

Mr. McGrath: Members of the House have not received a copy of the release this morning and hence we do not have the advantage which the Prime Minister has. Is he saying to the House that the new monitoring agency will only be able to operate after the fact—in other words, they can only recommend an inquiry after the fact—as opposed to being able to move in and identify abuses which are taking place in the marketplace? Is that the position of the new board and, if so, how can it operate effectively and do a job in monitoring the marketplace?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, it is after the fact and it is with material which is readily available publicly. Power has not been given to this new body to carry out investigations or to call witnesses on its own. I might remind the hon. member that this government, early this session, put legislation before the House to set up a post-AIB monitoring board. We heard great argument from all sides but particularly from the Tory party that they did not want to support it. In particular, at the first ministers' conference in February, a majority of the provinces indicated that they did not want, and would not support, the initiatives for post-controls of the Minister of Finance. As a result of that, we accepted a compromise, which was moved forward by the provinces, that we would make a request to the Economic Council. That request was made and the Economic Council studied the matter. The answer is given in a letter which was made public this morning at a press conference by Mrs. Ostry and equally, I believe, it was made public by my office.

KICKBACKS TO SUPERMARKETS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It is in the area of prices and concerns the kickbacks which are being made to Dominion Stores and other companies in Ontario as revealed by a special committee of the Ontario legislature. Now we have evidence that at least one dairy is giving a 26 per cent kickback to Dominion Stores in fluid milk, a canned food processor gives a rebate or a kickback of some 10 per cent to Dominion Stores, and a kickback of some 15 per cent on vegetables by some chain stores as well as 10 per cent on apples.

In view of the fact that this will result in rapid concentration and that some stores are now paying more at the wholesale level for their commodities than the large supermarkets are at the retail level, can the minister indicate if he has had a chance to investigate this entire area of kickbacks by processors, and so on, to the chain stores? If he has not had a chance to look at it, what will he do?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I said approximately a week ago, this matter has been under examination by the director of investigation and research under the combines act. According to the combines act, if these rebates were offered to all stores on an equal basis, then they would be legal. However, if the evidence indicates, as the hon. member states, that there is discrimination in the offering of rebates, then of course it would be illegal and the director could take legal action against them. At one point we did not have that evidence, but if evidence has now come in, then of course it would be illegal under the combines act and action can be taken.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, there is at least one case where the kickback from canned food processors to Dominion Stores is at least 10 per cent greater than it is to A and P. Therefore, I assume that is illegal and the minister will take action. I can provide him with that evidence.

I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of National Revenue, the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Testimony before an Ontario committee indicated that Loblaws' rebates are paid out in part to a separate company called Intersave, a name which I think is quite appropriate for Loblaws. In view of the fact that supermarket profits are already high—for example, in the case of Safeway, up 61 per cent and in the case of Loeb, up 163 per cent—can the minister indicate if her department has investigated these kickbacks? Can she assure us that chain stores are not using this method of kickback in order to evade taxes which are otherwise due to the Canadian people?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will transmit to the Department of National Revenue the allegations of eventual tax evasion by the companies the hon. member referred to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POLITICAL CLEARANCE OF MAJOR CONTRACTS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. On Monday, the hon. member for Central Nova questioned the Minister of Finance who was the Acting Prime Minister at the time. His questions concerned a meeting which was held some time ago between the present Minister of National Defence and the chairman of the National Capital Commission wherein the following quotation appeared:

> The minister (meaning the present Minister of National Defence) wants to make sure that the firms chosen for major contracts of this sort are cleared politically with the ministers responsible through this office.

Can the minister tell the House if that quotation still represents his method of handling bids for government contracts?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in the context of that particular quotation, which I do not recall, it accurately reflects my position. It was not on bids. Of course, bids always go to the lowest bidder unless there are exceptional circumstances.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danson: We are talking about contracts for professional services. I would always consult the regional minister in an area to make certain all the contracts which do not go by tender are distributed properly and do not all go to one company in a region, and to ensure that ample opportunity is given to smaller companies in different parts of the region, smaller communities and disadvantaged areas, in order for them to take full advantage of it, rather than the traditional firms which might have very close connections in the public service. I think it is up to ministers to fulfil their responsibilities to see that there is proper distribution of contracts throughout an area and that all companies have an opportunity, particularly when there are no bids.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, the procedures for awarding the contract for the new fighter aircraft entail the Minister of National Defence taking the final selection of his department to cabinet. If the five firms involved are to be screened in any way to determine their political clearance, does the minister not believe an undue advantage will accrue to that firm which has on its board of directors the former minister of finance, the Hon. Donald Macdonald? Has the minister issued any directives to ensure that his former colleague will not exert any influence whatsoever on the decision?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, first of all, there are a whole number of factors involved in that decision and no political influence in that sense would be exercised. If it was the purpose of MacDonnell-Douglas to get one of the finest directors on its board that it could choose from among Canadians. They have achieved that purpose. If that company believes it is helping them to get a contract, of course they have made a mistake because they would be underrating both the government and Mr. Macdonald.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danson: The fact of the matter is that he is a man of great integrity. I might say that he has had no contact with me on this matter since he went to that board of directors. The only effect it might have is that that company perhaps will have to prove itself 110 per cent, where the others have to prove themselves 100 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You mean it does have an effect.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of National Defence actually believe that MacDonnell-Douglas took on Mr. Macdonald for his knowledge of aircraft, particularly fighter aircraft?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EMPLOYMENT OF YOUNG CANADIANS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question, concerning youth and student employment, is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Finance who is the chief economic minister. According to statistics which I have in my hands today issued by the government, 605,000 students will leave Canadian educational institutions in 1978 and become available to the labour force in 1978. Because of these unusually large statistics, can the Prime Minister tell us specifically what the government plans to do about it in terms of new initiatives to employ these young Canadians, in view of the general employment situation in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in part an overwhelming proportion of these young Canadians will find jobs in the private sector.

An hon. Member: Tell them to leave the country.

Mr. Trudeau: In so far as the others are concerned, just yesterday and the day before the Minister of Employment and Immigration gave figures to the hon. member and his colleagues indicating that a very high proportion, something like 30 per cent to 40 per cent, of government direct spending for job creation will be going to young Canadians.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the government is not reacting on the basis of these statistics today because they are based on the babies born in the post-war baby boom. In view of the very high rate of unemployment among students and young Canadians, and the very high statistics which the government has been well aware of for some time and informed us of today, can we not expect, without delay, some new and dynamic initiatives from the government to challenge the excellence of the younger generation?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose the hon. member, certainly not his party, is suggesting that the government be the employer of last resort for all Canadians. That is why I insist that the private sector is creating jobs, as has been made clear repeatedly in this House, at a rate which is substantially higher than that of any other industrialized society. The rate has been something like 300,000 jobs on a year over year basis. This is a higher rate than the 10-year historical average in Canada.

● (1452)

An hon. Member: Bunk.

Mr. Trudeau: Someone over there says "bunk", Mr. Speaker, or something that sounded like that. I am not sure what this Latin word means in English, but I can tell him that the figures I am giving are the true figures.

Mr. Stevens: No, they are not.

Mr. Trudeau: It serves no purpose, to the opposition or anyone, to say that this country and this economy are not creating jobs at a very high rate. They are, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

LABOUR RELATIONS WITHIN CORPORATION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. I am sure the minister is well aware of the developing impasse between the CBC staff announcers and management of a renegotiated contract which expired last July. In view of the conciliation report which was brought down earlier this week which, as I understand it, has been accepted by the announcers and rejected in part by the CBC management, and the report that there were over 250 violations of the previous contract during the last ten-year period by CBC management, has the minister expressed any concern to the president of the CBC, on behalf of the government, about the questionable industrial relations that exist within CBC management, or has he conferred with the Minister of Labour about possible violations of the Canada Labour Code?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in a general way there are continuing discussions between myself and the president of the CBC about a variety of problems that exist in the corporation, including those of management and labour relations. As to the second part of the hon. member's question, there have not been specific discussions with the Minister of Labour to which he referred.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of the very high series of reported violations under the previous contract, and the fact that there seem to be very real threats posed to present CBC staff announcers under the proposal brought forward, that they would adopt such a situation as a new category of short-term announcers with. seemingly, no particular benefit to the corporation, could the minister indicate whether, in view of one strike vote already being held by NABET and the possibility of another one next week, there will be any attempt made to have the CBC management adopt more appropriate industrial relations for a Crown corporation?

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, I do not interfere directly in the management of the CBC; but I will be happy to do as I have in the past and bring his representations to the attention of management.

ENERGY

SAFETY OF NUCLEAR GENERATING PLANTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of press reports concerning the serious allegations of Mr. Arthur Porter, commissioner of the Ontario Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning, that information on the safety of nuclear generating plants was withheld from his commission by the Atomic Energy Control Board, has the minister investigated those allegations and can he assure the House that safety information of the Atomic Energy Control Board was not withheld from this royal commission?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have assured myself of those facts. I asked the president of the Atomic Energy Control Board what the allegations were based on and he told me he was not sure what they were. He then talked to Mr. Porter, the royal commissioner. I think the royal commissioner was perhaps under some misapprehension and had not realized, when he made his statement, that indeed the Atomic Energy Control Board had placed before the royal commission information of which the royal commissioner should have been aware. Subsequently, in a radio interview, the royal commissioner made a statement to the effect that he had erred in his judgment with respect to the words he had chosen and that, indeed, there was no risk with respect to the safety of Canadian nuclear reactors.

TAKEOVER OF HUSKY OIL COMPANY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He said a few minutes ago that Petro-Canada had the blessing of the Government of Canada with respect to its offer to Husky Oil. I would like to ask the minister whether Petro-Canada has secured the financial backing of the Government of Canada with respect to this offer which, as I understand it, amounts to something in excess of $500 million altogether and, if so, was this taken care of in the cash requirements put before the House at the time of the budget of the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the financial arrangements for the transaction, in the event that it is a successful bid, have been considered. Petro-Canada has negotiated a line of credit for the purposes of financing the greater part of the purchase. It would require some assistance from its capital budget which has already been submitted and approved, so there will be no additional funds provided to Petro-Canada by the federal government with respect to its over-all capital budget.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the amount of capital it is anticipated that Petro-Canada would raise on its own, would this be raised by Petro-Canada without the guarantee and support of the Government of Canada? Is the minister saying, in effect, that this transaction would add nothing more to the cash requirements of the Government of Canada other than the amount already provided for in the budge as presented?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the fact.

FISHERIES

TARIFF ON EXPORTS TO EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. In a statement released by the minister's department on June 13 concerning the results of ICNAF consultations in Bonn, we read that negotiators established reserves on several important stocks which will be allocated later either to Canadian fishermen or to other states in return for economic and commercial benefits offered by those states.

In light of that statement, and in view of the impact caused by the present boundary negotiations that are under way between Canada and the United States which reflect upon Canada's fishermen, plus their need for expanded markets, I would ask the minister what kind of economic benefits he has in mind and what steps he has taken to secure the lowering of the 15 per cent tariff on Canadian fish when sold to the European Economic Community to a 3 per cent or 4 per cent level as charged by the Community to Norway and Iceland, for example, so that Canadian fishermen would at least have a fighting chance in those European markets.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I notice that the hon. member did not mention our success in negotiating the prevention of countervailing with the U.S. authorities; but since he has not, I will. It was a very great victory for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who in fact was able to demonstrate that we had separated the issue of countervailing and duties from the issue of boundaries. I recognize that hon. members opposite did, in fact, rejoice at the success.

With regard to the question asked by the hon. member, as he knows, quotas are being discussed for the year 1979. In some cases we expect Canadian fishermen to reach and even go beyond their quotas in the offshore fisheries and therefore there may be room for expansion in 1979. For that reason, we have kept some reserve for Canadian fishermen if they demonstrate that they can, in fact, take the additional quotas. The idea of commensurate benefit is exactly for the purpose expressed by the hon. member, namely, to gain access to markets. We are willing to say to certain nations which have vessels that are not sufficiently occupied or plants that are very short of supply, "if you offer us good access to your market, we will consider the possibility of offering some access to our zone".

SPORT

WHA SIGNING OF JUNIOR HOCKEY PLAYERS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport). It concerns the announcement today that three more under age junior hockey players are about to sign with the World Hockey Association, a clear violation not only of their own rules but of the minister's stated government policy that she opposes this kind of raiding of junior hockey. Can the minister advise the House what she proposes to do to stop what could be a state of anarchy existing in junior hockey if we continue to allow professional teams to sign under age players across Canada?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to set up an inquiry into the non-professional levels of hockey as recommended in the all-party committee report on international hockey, chaired by Senator Buckwold. It is my intention to have that committee meet before the end of this month.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. McGRATH—ANSWER GIVEN BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would not deliberately mislead the House, and I know that he would want to correct the record in his reply to my question when he accused this House of opposing legislation to set up the regulatory monitoring agency to succeed the Anti-Inflation Board especially during the post-controls period. That, of course, is not true. I have checked with my House leader, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), and with the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). They confirm what I knew anyway—that we did not oppose that proposition. I know the Prime Minister would not want to mislead the House.

● (1502)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course I accept the word of the hon. gentleman, but this is an interesting development. If the House would really prefer the act which had been proposed by the minister for the post inflation period, I wish we had heard about it before now. The difficulty in getting it through the House was precisely because we had been hearing it had not been accepted by the other side.

Mr. Stevens: The minister said there was no act.

Mr. Trudeau: The minister said that he was prepared to move in the post inflation period with a special monitoring body. This was before the House for debate for quite some time—this was stated, if I recall correctly, in the Speech from the Throne. When we had the first ministers' conference it was indicated by the premiers that they preferred something else, and it is the something else that we have now, Mr. Speaker, the Economic Council of Canada.

If the hon. gentleman says they have not taken a position on that, I wish they had, because we would now have some other form of action.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see two other hon. members rising on points of order. The Minister for Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Buchanan) has indicated his intention to participate in the question of privilege raised earlier by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). I wonder if I could take these points of order briefly, and then take the minister's intervention.

MR. CROUSE—FISHERIES—COUNTERVAILING DUTIES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, a moment ago I raised a question with the hon. Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc). In his response the minister stated that he was somewhat surprised that we on this side had not referred to the agreement that had been reached on the countervailing duties proposed by the United States. In defence of my position I must say that we did not raise the question of countervailing duties during the period that this matter was under discussion, at the expressed request of the minister. He stated to me personally that to raise this matter at such a delicate period in the negotiations between Canada and the United States could jeopardize those negotiations to the detriment of the interests of the Canadian fishing industry.

As the minister is well aware, the United States government has the right at any time to implement countervailing duties. It was only because he insisted or suggested that they would take away some of the assistance, namely, the two cents per pound paid to fishermen on October 1, that he was able to obtain agreement, so we are still in a very delicate situation with regard to the interests of Canadian fishermen.

I regret that the minister took what appeared to me to be an opportunity to make a cheap political attack on this side of the House when we had done everything possible to assist him in securing a rational and reasonable solution to what is, in my opinion, a very serious and very delicate problem.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if I offended the hon. member, I apologize. The fact is, in the preface to my answer to his question, I alluded to the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) whose heated exchange with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) is recorded in Hansard. He certainly showed signs of great nervousness at the possibility of countervail which, by the way, had been discussed for many, many months, and which had nothing to do with the present boundary difficulty.

I certainly recognize that the hon. member, in response to my request at one point, abstained from questioning in a delicate moment in our negotiations before this agreement was suspended, and for this I give him full credit. If I did have a complaint it was not with the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), who has shown great responsibility in these matters, but it was possibly to make a point to the hon. member for St. John's West.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STEVENS—PRIME MINISTER'S REMARKS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises from the remarks just made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he indicated some type of monitoring agency bill had been suggested to parliament and that the official opposition had somehow discouraged either its passage or introduction.

There is a great misunderstanding here, Mr. Speaker. Like my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), I would not say that the Prime Minister has deliberately misled the House. The fact is that a draft bill, some 30 or 40 pages long, calling for the setting up of a monitoring agency and extensive regulatory powers to be given to the federal government, came into our possession, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) denied it categorically. He said there was no such legislation. He refused even to accept the draft I had in my hands, and in any event said he had no authority at all concerning such a bill and, if it had been drafted, it had not been done on his instructions. For the Prime Minister to indicate that the Minister of Finance was on the verge of introducing some such bill, is totally wrong.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely the point raised by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), further to that raised by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), constitutes essentially a difference of opinion or a dispute as to interpretation between them and the Prime Minister of what he said. It does not constitute a question of privilege.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the business of the House. The government House leader has indicated the list of legislation on previous occasions. If the deputy House leader has anything to add from the point of view of the government, I would appreciate knowing it. While he is on his feet perhaps he could designate Tuesday, June 20, and Thursday, June 22, as allotted days, in accordance with the discussions I had with his colleague.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, to answer the second question first, I am pleased to confirm that we will designate Tuesday and Thursday of next week as allotted days, the two remaining days in this period. As the opposition House leader realizes, today is an opposition day. Tomorrow and on Monday we will carry on with Bill C-56, if the debate continues until then. Then we will set aside the two opposition days which I have noted, and continue with the balance of Bill C-56 until it is concluded through third reading. Following that, we will call Bill C-36 and deal with report stage of the Export Development Act, then the language of trial bill at report stage, Bill C-42; next, the continuation of report stage of Bill C-48, the Customs Tariff Act, and on to Bill C-59, second reading of the bill affecting small businesses.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the minister's colleague indicated there might be some flexibility in the order of calling these bills. I wonder if the deputy House leader could indicate if that stands, and then we could discuss the order.

There has been a considerable amount of concern in the House about the case of Alexander Peter Treu. There has been some suggestion by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), supported by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), that it might be appropriate for the House to consider establishing a special joint committee with the other place to deal with the Official Secrets Act. Given that kind of feeling on both sides of the House that it is perhaps time to examine that statute, would the deputy House leader convey this to his colleague and see if there can be some discussion about establishing a committee so that the matter could be examined in a way other than that which it has been heretofore?

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, on the first point, the government is always prepared to be flexible about the priorization, although we are committed to those particular bills. Our House leader will discuss that with House leaders of the respective parties.

With regard to a special committee to deal with the Treu case or the Official Secrets Act, I can indicate in a preliminary way that there is no disposition toward this at the present.

● (1512)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I note that there are three ministers here seeking to table documents under the regular tabling of documents. I wonder if we might move to do that and release them before we take the intervention of a question of privilege.

MR. STEVENS—PRIME MINISTER'S REMARKS

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without directly reopening the matter, which you did rule as closed, I think I owe it to the other side, with their permission, to make a point clear which was raised by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). He did indicate that I had alleged the existence of a bill. I am informed by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lumley) that there was no such bill. The matter was discussed. I personally talked about it with leaders of the business and labour communities in meetings which I had with them. I know the substance was discussed in the committee. But the hon. member is correct, there was no bill and I should not have indicated that the bill was before the House.

MR. ANDRE—RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, my comment will be brief. On June 8 the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) raised by way of privilege the question of my misleading the House in my statement on "Measures to Strengthen and Encourage Research and Development in Canada", which I made to the House on June 1.

The hon. member made reference to two points in his remarks, and I would like to reply to both points, first on the question of gross national product versus gross domestic product.

Economists calculate gross domestic product on at least two different bases. No doubt it is this fact which has led the hon. member for Calgary Centre to suggest that a research and development expenditure target of 1.5 per cent of gross domestic product is substantially lower than a target of 1.5 per cent of gross national product.

In Canada gross domestic product is published at factor cost, but for international comparisons of R and D expenditures the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development calculate on what they term purchasers' values. The OECD calculation is higher because it includes indirect taxes less subsidies.

Point of Order—Mr. D. Munro

Based on this OECD definition of gross domestic product, which we have used for standard international comparisons, our target of 1.5 per cent of gross domestic product for 1983 translates to 1.46 per cent of gross national product. For practical purposes we believe in setting a five-year target; 1.5 per cent of gross domestic product, as I have used, is equivalent to a target of 1.5 per cent of gross national product, which is a much more widely known term.

The second point which the hon. member for Calgary Centre raised related to the question of accuracy of footnoting which appeared in the discussion paper. On that point, Mr. Speaker, the historical figures of Canadian research and development expenditures expressed in terms of gross national product which I used in my statement are the latest and most reliable data available from Statistics Canada and the cited "Bank of Canada Review." The research and development expenditures appear in a 1978 Statistics Canada publication on "Research and Development Expenditures in Canada, 1963-1977" and will in due course appear as revisions to the Statistics Canada Catalogue 13-003. Due to an oversight, the footnote to the table in my statement was not amended when the original data, from an August, 1977 publication, were changed to reflect the latest information available.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. minister has now replied to the point referred to by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). I will have to give both arguments some consideration, together with the two arguments on the point raised a few days ago by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). I will try to conclude the matters either tomorrow or Monday at the very latest.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH)—BROADENED REFERENCE FOR FISHERIES COMMITTEE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, when I rose to speak on my point of order before Statements by Ministers, the deputy House leader on the government side was still in the House. I had intended to ask him if any progress had been made on securing a broadened reference for the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. Since he is not in the House, I will put it on the record. I do hope that some sort of a report will be forthcoming soon, particularly in light of the fact that on the 19th of this month the negotiators for the two sides will be meeting to continue their discussions toward a permanent treaty between our two countries on these matters.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT USE OF LOSS LEADERS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-463, to amend the Combines Investigation Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to outlaw the practice of the use of loss leaders. This is a practice to sell goods below cost, which has been detrimental to the operation of small businesses and has resulted in a concentration of power, especially in the food industry.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PRIME MINISTER

Question No. 347—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Prime Minister during a recent visit to London and the western Ontario area in the course of a speech state that Canadians were too concerned with summer homes in the country and two cars in the yard and, if so (a) what were the exact words he used (b) in what location did he make the statement and to what audience (c) is the Prime Minister aware that radio news broadcasts carried voice clips of such a statement?

2. Has the government adopted a policy to close the Prime Minister's summer residence at Harrington Lake as a restraint and economy measure and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

3. Has the government adopted a policy to sell one of the two $85,000 Cadillacs used by the Prime Minister as a restraint and economy measure and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): See Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fourth Edition, citation No. 171(a), (e), (h), (l) and (q).

JUSTICE—LEGISLATION

Question No. 963—Mr. Howie:

Since January 1, 1977, did the Department of Justice pay or engage outside lawyers or consultants to assist directly or indirectly in the preparation of legislation?

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Yes.

[Mr. Pinard.]

P.M.'S VISIT TO B.C.

Question No. 1,281—Mr. Cossitt:

During his early February 1978 visit to British Columbia, did the Prime Minister meet with a group of labour leaders and specifically did he say to them "Do you think we are out to screw the Canadian people?" and, if so (a) what is a full explanation of what the Prime Minister meant by this remark (b) is the Prime Minister prepared to immediately produce evidence to Parliament showing that he is not out to "screw" the Canadian people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The Prime Minister did not meet with labour leaders on the February, 1978 visit to British Columbia, his only visit to that province during the first quarter of 1978.

Question No. 1,282—Mr. Cossitt:

During his early February 1978 trip to British Columbia did the Prime Minister in a speech in Prince George state in part, that unemployment has grown faster in Canada than elsewhere and specifically did he say "Let's not get into subleties" and, if so (a) has it been or is it the policy of the government to let unemployment grow faster in Canada than elsewhere (b) what is a full explanation of what the Prime Minister meant when he said "Let's not get into subtleties"?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No. During his February, 1978 trip to British Columbia, the Prime Minister did not say in a speech in Prince George that unemployment has grown faster in Canada than elsewhere. He did say, "We have a worse rate of unemployment than the average of industrialized nations", which is, of course, a different thing. He did say, when referring to the Canadian labour force participation rate, "let's not get into subleties". (a) No. (b) The Prime Minister was explaining why our unemployment rate was higher than the average of the industrialized nations despite the fact that we create jobs faster in Canada than in other industrialized nations. One reason was the high rate of growth of the labour force. Another was the high participation rate. Explaining the latter, the Prime Minister said, "let's not get into subleties".

Question No. 1,283—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the Prime Minister's trip to certain points in British Columbia commencing on or about February 2, 1978 (a) what was the total cost to the taxpayer, including transportation, accommodation, food and drink for the Prime Minister and all those accompanying him on the trip (b) what specific government aircraft were involved in this entire operation and what was the total cost (c) what are the names and job designations of all persons accompanying the Prime Minister at any time during the trip?

2. Did the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport), the Minister of Justice and the Minister of State (Environment) accompany the Prime Minister at any time during the trip and, if so, what are all the costs including transportation, etc. for their participation?

3. Is it government policy to use government aircraft at taxpayers expense to shuttle the Prime Minister and members of the Cabinet to various places in the country for pre-election campaigning and, if so (a) what reasons are such privileges extended by the government only to the Liberal Party (b) what reasons justify such expenditure of public funds?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. See reply to question 2,881 answered October 17, 1977.

2. Yes. See 1 above.

3. See 1 above.

RCMP

Question No. 1,472—Mr. Beaudoin:

Over the past ten years, has the Royal Canadian Mounted Police seized any documents from the Canadian Dairy Commission and, if so (a) in which years (b) for what reasons (c) what was the nature of the documents seized (d) have there been any lawsuits as a result?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): No. (a), (b), (c) and (d) Not applicable.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE TO REVIEW PROVISIONS OF THE INDIAN ACT

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent) moved:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to consider and report upon the provisions of the Indian Act;

That fifteen members, to be named at a later date, act as members on the part of this House on the said committee;

That the said committee have the power to send for persons, papers and records and to examine witnesses; to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House; to report from time to time; to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable; and to delegate to sub-committees all or any of its powers except the power to report directly to the House;

That the committee have power to travel from place to place within Canada; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to say to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner), and to the government that the motion before the House is not viewed by my party as one of non-confidence.

The motion is in response to the serious problems afflicting the aboriginal people in Canada and holds the promise for a more enlightened Indian policy. One of the remarkable paradoxes in Canadian history is that at the very time Canadians are debating the historic constitutional rights of the two "founding races" we continue to proceed with a policy of assimilation of our aboriginal people.

There is irrefutable evidence that the policy of assimilation, which has been part of our political history, most recently expressed in a formal way in the policy white paper of 1969, has not only been rejected by the Indian community but more important has failed to resolve their serious social, economic, and political problems.

It is essential to have a brief glimpse of the past if we are to understand the present and forge a new future.

There has been considerable legislation affecting the Indians in Canada since the eighteenth century to the present. During this period, government policy has shown little variation from its original position of assimilation for Indian people into white society at the earliest possible time.

Prior to 1844 Indians were administered by the British Indian department, which was a branch of the military. Indian policy began when the government sought military alliances with the Indians to aid in war ventures, and to secure their friendship during peace time. After 1844 the administration of Indian Affairs was transferred to the Province of Canada, away from the authority in England.

By 1867 the Province of Canada had an intensely developed Indian policy administered by the Crown Lands Department. Two statutes passed in 1856, "An Act for the Better Protection of the Lands and Property of Indians in Lower Canada", and a similar act in Upper Canada, were introduced by government to protect the Indians and their lands from abuse only until such time as they became "civilized or assimilated".

In 1857 the Civilization of Indian Tribes Act expressly made assimilation its goal. It was declared that Indians who were "sufficiently advanced education wise or capable of managing their own affairs" would be enfranchised.

The Management of Indian Lands and Property Act declared the commissioner of the Crown lands to be the chief superintendent of Indian Affairs. He was vested with the power to dispose of lands reserved for the Indians which they had released or surrendered.

At confederation, the policy of the Province of Canada was inherited by the federal government in the British North America Act, section 91(24), giving the government legislative authority over "Indians and lands reserved for Indians".

The bases of the policy were several: alienation of Indian interest in land through treaties; reservation of land for Indians; and the existence of a government department charged with managing the affairs of Indians. The main objective of the policy was to bring about a "detribilization" from the native way of life to that of the white majority. In 1868 the federal government integrated this policy into legislation which eventually became the basis of the first federal statute, the Indian Act of 1880.

The main quality running throughout this act was the pervading power of the superintendent general. The Indian Act of 1880 was not a new policy but rather an aggregation of previous legislation. The protectionist and assimilation attitudes of pre-confederation remained the central theme of the policy. This was apparent during Sir John A. Macdonald's speech during debate on second reading of the bill when he stated, as reported at page 1991, volume II, 1880, of the House of Commons debates:

We are bound to protect them—the general rule is that you cannot make the Indian a white man—all we can hope for is to wean them by slow degrees from the nomadic habits, which have almost become an instinct, and by slow degrees absorb them or settle them into lands. In the meantime, they must be fairly protected.

Despite subsequent revisions and modifications the 1880 Indian Act is in essence still in effect today, indicating that the Indian Affairs branch has undergone no major ideological shifts.

During the years 1946 through 1948 a joint special committee of the Senate and House of Commons considered the Indian Act and the general administration of Indian Affairs. The 1946 hearings dealt mainly with witnesses from the Indian Affairs Department. The thrust of their argument, that more funds and a larger and more highly paid staff would solve the problems, failed.

The hearings represented the first attempt to consult the Indians themselves on such matters as treaty rights, the Indian Act, enfranchisement and band membership. However, only two major briefs were submitted by Indian associations. The presentation by Dr. Diamond Jenness, an anthropologist, entitled "The Liquidation of Canada's Indian Problem within Twenty-five Years", was widely heralded, and with the exemption of abolishing reserves and enfranchisement, the plan was substantially implemented.

These proposals formed the backbone of Indian Affairs philosophy and was reflected in the 1969 white paper, the 1975 local government guidelines, and the James Bay legislation.

As a result, the present Indian Act was passed in parliament in 1951 which primarily consolidated all previously independent changes. Although in some minor ways the 1951 act was a slight improvement, there was little change in the federal government's restrictive attitudes toward Indian rights and freedoms.

The 1959 joint committee was not established to study a revision of the Indian Act, but devoted its energies and gathering of material to issues such as education, housing and band funding, which eventually lead to some amendments.

In the intervening periods, a commendable study on education was carried out under the chairmanship of the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson). Otherwise, virtually nothing occurred until the June, 1969, white paper. The white paper introduced by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) proposed the abolition of the Indians' special constitutional position, repeal of the Indian Act, and phasing out of the Department of Indian Affairs. In total it denied the existence of an Indian cultural and political reality.

At the time of the tabling of the white paper, my colleague, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), stated on June 25, 1969, as reported at page 10583 of Hansard:

> It would be callous gamesmanship and a very real tragedy if this statement had any other inspiration than a genuine attempt to help the Indian people.

The white paper was rejected by the Indian community and the Indian sentiments were expressed in the red paper of 1970, prepared by the Indian chiefs of Alberta, who described the 1969 policy as:

> A scheme whereby a generation or shortly after the proposed Indian Lands Act expires, our people would be left with no land; and consequently the future generation would be condemned to the despair and ugly spectre of urban poverty in ghettos.

They recommended that the Indian Act should be reviewed by Indian people but should not be repealed. The paper went on to say:

> The only way to maintain our culture is for us to remain as Indians. To preserve our culture it is necessary to preserve our status, rights, lands and treaties. Our treaties are the basis of our rights.

The review process of the Indian Act commenced in the Indian community, and that process continues and will be invaluable in the revision of the act. In response to the obvious fact that the Indian view was essential when determining how the Indian Act would be changed, a joint cabinet and National Indian Brotherhood committee was established to determine the best way to amend the Indian Act to suit the future needs of Indians. After lengthy discussions between the committee of the National Indian Brotherhood and representatives of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Department of Justice, an Indian Act consultative process was agreed upon by the joint National Indian Brotherhood cabinet committee on December 12, 1975. To date that process has met with failure. I have no doubt the minister's comments of last Friday in response to the NIB withdrawal from the joint cabinet committee will be used by the minister in an effort to convince the House that progress has been made and that the situation is well in hand. That tactic will not succeed.

● (1532)

The joint National Indian Brotherhood cabinet committee has undoubtedly served a useful function and may do so in the future. However, I am not convinced it is the most appropriate structure to deal effectively with the Indian Act. Let us have no illusions as to who will shoulder the blame and suffer the consequences if the joint committee fails in its objectives; it will be the Indian leaders and the Indian people, not ministers of the Crown.

Why do I have reservations about the existing structure? The government, despite the withdrawal of its policy white paper, has through administrative and legislative action continued to pursue a policy of assimilation and integration. The 1975 local government guidelines which we debated in this chamber on June 12, 1975, were based on the principle of assimilation. The James Bay legislation, by setting a precedent under which the Cree and Inuit decided to accept lands under provincial jurisdiction, is a glaring example of the assimilation policy pursued by the present government. Under these circumstances I ask: are this government and its ministers to be trusted with an issue as fundamental as the Indian Act?

The joint NIB cabinet committee, by its very nature, is shrouded in secrecy, and this prevents members of parliament, the Indian community, and the public from assessing the motives and actions of the government. During the past decade, matters before cabinet have been hidden from the public under the guise of cabinet secrecy. Lack of information constantly thwarts our attempts to ensure responsible, open administration, and the government has not been timid in exploiting every opportunity for political gain. Such a committee is advantageous to the cabinet, but a liability to the Indian leaders, the Indian community, and to parliament.

We should recall that by introducing the white paper in 1969 the government skillfully trapped Indian organizations into supporting the Department of Indian Affairs. The government knew the white paper would be rejected by the Indian community and that it would be forced to accept the only alternative available at the time—support for a department committed to assimilation and integration. We all know the Department of Indian Affairs has increased in size since this manoeuvre was carried out, and has extended its influence over the Indian people. Again, the question should be asked: is this the most appropriate structure, knowing the department plays an integral part in the negotiation process and recognizing that it is ingrained with the philosophy of paternalism and assimilation?

The current situation in Canada is not unlike that which existed in the United States in 1969 At that time the findings of a government study commissioned by President Nixon stated that the termination issue in the United States still "poisons Indian affairs and causes almost every act of government to be viewed with suspicion."

The government has antagonized Indian leaders in all areas of the country, producing a polarizing effect on the policy of assimilation. Many Indians see assimilation and integration written into every administrative decision and, as a result, are frequently reluctant to accept help. At times they refuse help which is desperately needed because they fear and believe that to do so would lead to a further undermining of their rights. The policy of assimilation has had dire consequences for the Indian people both in political and human terms.

Important issues such as Indian culture and identity, consultation and self-determination, rights and treaties, hunting and fishing rights, education, health, economic viability of reserves, urban migration, enfranchisement and membership, are but a few of the political problems which remain unsolved.

Last Friday the minister made reference to the enfranchisement of Indian women. The hon. gentleman knows members of all political parties have expressed their concern about the matter and are anxious to see the Indian Act revised. However, if the minister was serious in his statement—and I have no reason to doubt his sincerity—then he must realize it is essential to review the broader question of enfranchisement and membership. The minister knows the law not only affects Indian women but discriminates against Indian men and Indian children. My colleagues will enlarge on a number of these issues as the debate progresses.

In human terms, present conditions are scandalous. An infant mortality rate of 40 per 1,000 live births among the Indian community compares with 21 per 1,000 live births among Canadians generally. A suicide rate of 20 per 100,000 population compares with a national figure of 9.7 per cent; 87 per cent of Indians live in sub-standard housing as compared to 11 per cent for the rest of Canadians; 54 per cent of Indian households receive incomes of under $2,263 per annum, while the figure for other Canadians receiving similar incomes is 20 per cent. The life expectancy for Indian people is 36 years as compared with 62 years for the rest of the population. Only 6 per cent of Indians complete high school education though the figure throughout Canada is 88 per cent.

It is now apparent that the serious social, economic, and political problems experienced by the Indian community will not be resolved until we can assure the Indian people that it is our desire and intention to honour the special relationship between the federal government and themselves. Such an assurance could best be achieved by bringing in a new Indian Act which derives its authority from the British North America Act. Such an act should be a sensitive and accurate reflection of the views of the Indian community.

The Indian Act is the single most important piece of legislation affecting Indian people. By its very nature it focusses on virtually all the fundamental issues relating to Canada's Indians, including their continued existence as an identifiable culture.

The issue involves minority rights, acquired rights, and aboriginal rights. Since the past has too often seen misunderstanding and misinterpretation of Indian rights and liabilities, it is essential that the Indian people be active participants in the deliberations. In our search for solutions in the past we have either intentionally or unintentionally attempted to impose our values on a minority group. It is therefore not surprising that the Indian people may well reject many of our values. This should not be viewed as a failure of our system, nor as individuals should our personal values be perceived as being inadequate or threatened. Rather, we should view the differences as the expression of a people attempting to retain its culture and identity. It is therefore essential that members of the House of Commons and of the other place—and, indeed, all Canadians—have a clearer understanding of these differences.

● (1542)

Those with a knowledge of the Indian Act and related matters are aware of the voluminous legal opinions which have accumulated over the years. I have no doubt that such documents will be of immeasurable assistance to those involved in the deliberations. However, since we are dealing with a disadvantaged minority, it would be useful to remind hon. members of an observation which is frequently made in discussions concerning equality, and specifically legal equality, as it relates to a disadvantaged group. Individuals who have equality in fact or who have a very strong bargaining position usually find legal equality invaluable. For those in a position of political and economic weakness, legal equality alone serves the stronger interest in society at the expense of the weak.

To a group struggling to assert and protect a special identity, equality may in fact be a negative concept. I am confident that such a committee would recognize this fact, and its discussions would be based not only on legal evidence but also on the basis of the human elements involved in the issue.

I want to make one additional comment on why it is necessary to review the Indian Act and the reason for proposing a joint committee of both Houses to assist in the task. To me, an additional compelling reason for this motion is to ensure that the aboriginal people of Canada have a meaningful input into the national unity debate. The government document "A Time for Action" tabled in the House of Commons on June 12, 1978, is long on rhetoric but short on substance. It does not suppress the fears that the concepts forming the basis of the white paper of 1969 have been put to rest.

When the white paper was introduced in 1969 by the present Minister of Finance two legal concepts were used to support the policy of the government, and I think we should be reminded of these. The first concept was that the legal basis for special Indian claims is untenable, that treaties should be terminated, and that aboriginal claims are not real claims. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was forced to reverse his position, and considerable research and a growing body of information regarding this issue have accumulated rapidly in the last few years. However, I notice that no reference is made respecting this important matter in the document which was tabled by the Prime Minister.

Second, it was asserted that the division of powers in the British North America Act which makes Indians a federal responsibility is discriminatory and leads to inferior services. It was reasoned that the separate legal status of Indians is charged with keeping the Indian people:

> —apart from and behind other Canadians. The Indian people have not been full citizens of the communities and provinces in which they live.

Thus, in 1969 the conclusion was that Indians should become wards of the provinces. Although the argument of the government was and continues to be unfounded, we have seen the James Bay legislation which confirms that the original concept of the government is still being pursued.

We also know that provincial governments have and continue to include Indian people in provincial programs. In addition, the federal government has not been reluctant or timid to use its strong fiscal arm either to entice or to coerce provinces into cost-shared programs, with the expressed intention of assisting regional disparity and helping the disadvantaged.

The argument of the government for transferring responsibility for Indians to the provinces is, therefore, specious. The critical issue, I must repeat, is the federal financial responsibility and constitutional responsibility, and surely the timing is appropriate for a joint committee of both Houses to study this specific issue.

Following the rejection of the policy in the white paper, research and negotiations over aboriginal rights and treaty rights have intensified, as I indicated earlier. In addition, the National Indian Brotherhood, provincial organizations, and bands have been actively reviewing and consolidating their position with respect to revisions to the Indian Act.

I recognize that the issues are complex and that difficult questions remain to be answered, but I must conclude that the Indian people and their leaders are now better prepared to make a substantive and constructive contribution to a joint committee than at any time in their history. I have no doubt that the Indian leaders across Canada are genuinely concerned about whether they have the political cohesiveness necessary to undertake such a project. That feeling is understandable, and in many ways is analogous to the feelings of Canadians who are reflecting on the broader question of national unity.

If the Indian community desires a more definitive role in confederation, and I have no doubt that that is its view, it must avoid the hazard of being engulfed and forgotten in the broader debate. The responsibilities are onerous, and the path will be difficult. Each of us, whether we are Indian or non-Indian, can be immobilized by the threat of failure. The risk is not failure but, rather, the possibility that the voice of Canada's aboriginal people will be but a whisper or unheard as events pass before us. Such a joint committee would be invaluable as a repository for such a dialogue at this critical time in our history.

In conclusion, let me summarize by stating that the motion was introduced in the knowledge that existing conditions affecting Indian people are unacceptable in both economic and human terms, in the knowledge that meaningful progress in resolving major issues will be impossible until the Indian people are reassured about their rights and relationship with the federal government, and with the conviction that a thorough study of the Indian Act by a joint parliamentary committee, whose mandate and terms of reference are acceptable to the Indian people, will provide the basis for a responsible, sensitive report which will not only allay the present fears of the Indian people but also offer them hope for the future.

A nation's image and the character of its people is reflected in their attitudes toward the disadvantaged. This motion would provide Canada and Canadians with an opportunity to recognize the important contribution the aboriginal people have made to our nation, and would give us a chance to recognize the importance of their culture and indentity, and to ensure that justice will be served.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth), who is usually the spokesman for our party on questions such as this, is in his constituency, and he has asked me to speak on behalf of our party and to express some of the views he has on the motion before us today and on the whole question of the problems of native people in this country.

Let me begin by saying that we will support the motion put forward by the official opposition although, since we believe in the abolition of the Senate, we can hardly be said to be enthusiastic about the part of the motion which would provide for membership on the proposed committee of members of the Senate.

However, the problems of native people in this country, both status and non-status, are so tremendous, and native people are in such a perilous situation—they are obviously at the bottom of the ladder in every facet of life in this country which is of importance to the people—that we welcome this opportunity to discuss their problems today, and we are prepared to support the appointment of a committee such as the one proposed by the official opposition.

Hon. members should give some thought to the actual situation. According to the 1971 census there were 295,000 native Indian people in Canada. The average income of Indians on reserves for the last year for which we have figures, 1974-75, was $1,959. The national average income for the same year was $8,200. In other words, the national average was more than four times as great as the average income of native people living on reserves. Do I need to remind members of the House of how poorly any family can live when the average income of a person is less than $2,000 a year? Most of them live in isolated areas in which the cost of many basic essentials of living is much greater than it is in the settled parts of Canada.

There is another problem. Any member of parliament who represents an area with a growing native population—and I represent a part of Winnipeg which has seen an explosion of the native population in recent years—knows that when they are moving into the city, native people are at the lowest economic level of any of the people in the area. Let us look at some facets of native existence. In our federal prisons, of the 9,100 persons held in those prisons, 568 were Indian, 180 were Metis and 115 were Inuit. Since native people make up only 2 per cent of Canada's population, it is obvious that our native people are greatly overrepresented in our prisons, probably ten times as much as they should be.

If one looks at the provincial jails, the percentage of native inmates, especially in western Canada, is staggering. In the case of one institution for women that I know, the percentage runs to over 90 per cent of the total inmate population.

Let us look at infant mortality rates. A couple of years ago the infant mortality rate in Canada as a whole was 15 deaths per 1,000 births; for Indian people it was 38.6 deaths per 1,000 births, and for Inuit it was 53.2 deaths per 1,000 births. When one looks at education, the minister can say that we have made great strides, that native children are staying in schools longer than they had in earlier years. What is happening at present is that native children get to grade 10, but in grade 10 there is a mass exodus. We are not succeeding in holding native children in the high schools more than a fraction of what we do for children who attend Canadian high schools as a whole. Given this situation, I say that we have a crisis.

I was disappointed that the resolution put forward today simply proposed the setting up of a committee to study the Indian Act. It seems to us that simply to study the act would be a mistake, that the problems of the native people are much greater and go much further than simply what is incorporated in the act.

If we are going to discuss the act, there is one provision of the act with which we need to deal because there has been so much discussion amongst the native people themselves. It is an issue which was raised by the hon. member who introduced this debate, and that is the section in the Indian Act which discriminates against native women as against the men. The situation is really quite simple. There is no question that Indian women have been treated unfairly and unjustly, and there is no question that justice must be done, that Indian women's equal rights with Indian men must not only be recognized but restored. The Indian women who are unjustly treated must receive restitution and compensation.

We believe that this unjust and discriminatory section of the Indian Act was brought in, not by Indians but by white political leaders and by white bureaucrats who probably wanted to make their work easier, and to reduce the number of status Indians. We think that that situation cannot and should not continue, and we think it should be rectified by simply striking out the section in the current Indian Act which creates that discriminatory situation, and inserting a clause retroactively reinstating those women and their children who have suffered from that section. I say to the minister that if the government is prepared to bring forward that kind of amendment, he will get agreement from this party to pass it with very little, if any, debate, and I think the same would be true of the other parties. If the minister really believes that this should be done, he should proceed with it and not plead lack of time for debate.

I am concerned about what this year's estimates show in the way in which the government is curtailing expenditures for services for the native people. The estimates for 1978-79 call for an expenditure of $650 million. That is an increase of just $17 million over last year's estimates. That works out, as far as I can calculate it, to an increase of less than 3 per cent. Surely the minister and the government recognize the fact that the cost of living is rising by something between 8.5 per cent and

10 per cent at present. Surely they recognize that just to hold the services where they were last year, an increase of 8.5 per cent to 10 per cent is required. Yet what we see is that the increase proposed, and therefore the increase for the department, is less than 3 per cent. I think this makes that kind of proposal for dealing with the problem of the poorest people in this country a national disgrace. Native people have often wondered whether the department and its personnel are employed to help native people meet their needs, or whether they are employed simply to give well paid, comfortable employment to several thousand white people.

Let me indicate briefly what I mean, in the figures which I have been able to accumulate. I will use some figures supplied by the government in response to questions I put on the order paper about 18 months ago which were answered on March 21, 1977. In 1975-76 the department employed 11,543 people; in Ottawa it employed 2,375 people. According to the figures the government provided—and I think I added them correctly, but if they are wrong, they will not be wrong by very much—the number of native people employed by the department in Ottawa, out of 2,375 people two years ago, was just 59. In the 1978-79 estimates we see that the manpower in Indian and Eskimo affairs programs will be 5,913. Of these, three are 26 executives, 2,000 in scientific and professional fields, 1,390 in the administrative and foreign service, 194 in the technical fields, 1,010 in the administrative support section, and 1,289 in the operational section. How many of the people who receive incomes of $25,000 or more are native people? I do not have the figures, but the minister and I know that the percentage would be no more than one or two.

● (1602)

I should like to refer to a press release dated March 8, 1977. It was issued by the Public Service of Canada. The subject is: "Native Employment in the Pubic Service is Studied". Mr. Gallant, the Chairman of the Public Service Commission, said the following:

> Native people comprise about 4 per cent of the Canadian population, but they occupy less than 0.5 per cent of the officer-level positions in the public service.

It would be surprising if native people felt that white people were doing well when supposedly dealing with aboriginal misery. How much of the budget is used for the benefit of natives? Mr. Gallant has indicated that the government has done poorly in the field of employment for native people, even within the department which supposedly deals with Indian and Eskimo problems.

Dealing with the area of grants and contributions, last year $2.8 million was provided for research into Indian treaties and rights. This year only $2.2 million will be provided, which is a reduction of $600,000. Have the problems concerning Indian treaties and aboriginal rights been solved? Has an agreement been reached? Of course not. Are the differences between the government and native people becoming more apparent? Is the government putting pressure on native organizations by cutting back their funds? As far as I am concerned, that is the real reason. Native organizations are entitled to an explanation of that cutback.

Dealing with the area of contributions under agreements with the provinces for the provision of welfare and other services, as well as contributions to Indian associations and groups, last year the contributions totalled $29 million. This year they have been reduced to $21 million, which is a decrease of $8 million. Why? Is there less need for welfare? Do the Indian bands and associations require less assistance with their problems? I do not believe that. If that money is not to be paid out in the form of welfare, perhaps it should be used for economic development. Approximately $24 million was provided for Indian and Eskimo economic development. That has been reduced to $22 million, which is a decrease of $2 million. Money for both welfare and economic development for native people has been cut back, at a time when needs are greater and costs are rising.

In the last 15 years the government has changed from an authoritarian and paternalistic approach to consultation and dialogue. It seems to be returning to the area of more big brother pressure. At one point larger amounts of money were provided for education and welfare, and then cutbacks occurred. There was the beginning of thinking in terms of employment for all native people, and then there was lack of action. At one point money was provided for economic development, and then cutbacks occurred.

What has been Ottawa's response to this crisis? When native people leave reserves and come to the cities, Ottawa takes the view that they become a problem of the cities and provinces. In cities such as Winnipeg, Regina and Calgary, just to mention a few, native people constitute a high proportion of the welfare cases, child neglect cases, the jail population, and the alcoholism problem. When native people remain on the reserves they are the responsibility of the federal government. Once they move into the cities, Ottawa indicates that they are no longer a federal government responsibility and washes its hands of them. The headaches and the problems are left to the cities and provinces. The situations and the problems of native people are the responsibility of all people in this country and on this continent. The native people of this continent have been mistreated since the day white men arrived.

A solution to native problems will not be reached easily. It will take more money than we are willing to spend. It will require more consultation and co-operation with native organizations than we have been willing to partake in. If we are willing to work with the native people, a solution to the problem which has bedevilled this continent for more than 200 years will be reached. If those approaches are taken, we can look forward to the day when native people will live in socio-economic conditions equal to the rest of Canada. That has not been reached yet, and I see no real desire on the part of the government to attain that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the motion we are debating calls for the appointment of a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons to consider and report upon the provisions of the Indian Act. I was somewhat surprised by this motion because the House of Commons already has the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development whose members may, if they so desire, obtain the permission of Parliament to carry out special studies dealing with Indian affairs.

That committee can also be empowered to call witnesses and travel. That has been done in the past. I myself was once a member of such a committee; we met with Indians and Inuit in their communities, and we were able then to hear their comments and recommendations on Indian affairs. The only thing that can be added to that committee is the presence of senators to make the same studies which were made before. I say the same studies but it will certainly not be the same studies because although the same problems exist in certain areas, that committee will certainly have fresh recommendations to make.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that with respect to Indian affairs some things are wrong in Canada. In his speech the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes) mentioned his fears of seeing Indians being assimilated to our way of life. I believe he may be a bit right and the danger that exists of seeing that assimilation occur might perhaps be confirmed when we see particularly large projects being carried out such as one currently in progress in the province of Quebec with respect to the James Bay power development project. We have one slated to start soon in the Yukon Territory,namely the pipeline to be built across Alaska, the Yukon and part of Alberta to the United States. There is another one planned from the King Christian Islands and Ellesmere Islands for the transportation of natural gas to eastern Canada and the United States. Those are large projects bringing with them in those regions large numbers of white men with modern methods, modern techniques and, in short, all their ways of life.

Today you only have to consider what is happening on the James Bay work sites and you can see that workers expect more than they did in the past. Today they want to have as much comfort as possible and I believe that is reasonable too. They want as much comfort as possible to do that work. Indians working on those projects are inclined to follow our working methods, to take our lifestyle and I am not sure yet that that is good for them because they do not seem to be prepared to accept or learn fast enough that transition from one life style to another.

So when we discussed the pipeline project on August 4, 1977, in the speech that I made on that occasion I pointed out to the government that I agreed in principle with the project proposed by Foothills Pipe Lines (Yukon) Ltd. but I had reservations and I would like to name a few here having regard precisely to the Indians in that region, and I quote:

> That the government negotiate with our native people, with every consideration they are entitled to as original owners of the territories concerned.

This is a reservation which I was making on the occasion of the debate on the pipeline. I added:

> That it allow them to assert themselves without imposing upon them a way of life to which they were not born and, as our needs for natural gas are very relative, without imposing any temporal constraints upon them as has been the case with the James Bay Inuit with regard to negotiations.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, I suggest once again that in all projects of this magnitude one must be very careful and this is where I think that the fears which the member for Lambton-Kent alluded to are justified. In our past relations with the Indians, I think we do not have much to brag about when it comes to what we have given them, either in terms of the projects such as the one I just mentioned, and there have been others before, or in terms of exploration projects for tapping natural or other resources. What we have succeeded in giving them is alcoholism, tuberculosis and many other contemporary diseases caused by the weakening of their natural resistance to the elements.

Mr. Speaker, if this committee is struck, I think it will have to get some feed back from the Indians, and I should perhaps use the word Inuit. It will have to try and understand what they really want and what they expect from a government such as that of Canada. I think they want to participate in the development of this country as well in its economic activities, they want to participate in that in their own way and not in our way. This is what we, the white people, find difficult to understand. I think we must keep in mind quite clearly that they have their own way of living and that we should not proceed too quickly in trying to assuage them to our own way of life. I think this is where we are mistaken when we try to proceed too quickly.

Since Canada became a nation in early 1763, Indian affairs were administered by the British Crown. Starting in 1763, these responsibilities were transferred to the Canadian Crown. In 1912, with regard to the province of Quebec, there was the Quebec Boundaries Extension Act, but it was only towards the mid-60s that the Quebec government started to show some interest in Quebec Indian affairs. One cannot overlook the few errors made by the government at that time in dealing with the Indians or their affairs. Those errors were repeated by the present government to the extent where the Indians came to the federal government who accepted to provide them with an amount of about $10 million to help them defend themselves against the encroachments the provincial government was then planning by denying them almost all the rights they had to the lands entrusted to them by the act of 1912.

I think that, all in all, things worked themselves out not too badly, but mostly because the Indians had access to our courts and members of the judiciary who defended them and obtained rulings that were favourable rather than unfavourable to them. So, I think those will be the tasks the committee will be entrusted with if it is created and, as far as I am concerned, it would be reasonable enough since such a committee has not gone out to the northern communities for several years now.

True, Justice Berger's Commission went around the main Indian communities affected by the development of the pipeline, but many other Indian localities and regions have not been visited for a very long time, and I think that the committee could gather some interesting and important information for the government and the minister. It could also change the government's policy by recommending measures that would be more satisfactory for the Indians. I think we should accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Lambton-Kent to reshape that committee, not to reshape it but to add to it members from the Senate, to make it a joint committee and to allow it to meet Indians from all parts of Canada, hear their opinions and make the changes that are necessary to meet their demands.

● (1612)

[English]

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start off by expressing disappointment with the approach to the resolution. I have no doubt that the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes), in his characteristic and bipartisan way, has attempted to put forward a useful proposal to deal with a difficult issue that has remained unresolved for a period of years despite a great deal of effort by governments, parliamentary committees, and Indian associations in attempting to come to grips with it.

● (1622)

My disappointment, I suppose, stems from the rather lengthy and over-laboured treatment of an issue which is at least ten years old, namely the 1969 policy paper. I would remind the hon. member for Lambton-Kent that it is now 1978. I think there have been at least three ministers who have disavowed the direction of that paper. I know that my predecessor, who is here in the House today because of the debate, others before him, and also myself, have repeated with all the conviction and eloquence that we can severally muster, that we are not talking about assimilation. That is not our purpose; that is not our objective; it is quite different from that.

Despite all those assertions and the concrete steps taken by the government to move to support Indian self determination, the key spokesman for the official opposition, the hon. member for Lambton-Kent, on an occasion when he could have addressed the difficulties with the Indian Act, spent most of his time going over history—quite interesting but not particularly germane—and then went into a protracted discussion of the 1969 white paper. I do not know if anyone on this side of the House—I am not sure about the other side—is any wiser about precisely how the official opposition would deal with the Indian Act other than to send it to a standing committee.

If there is a subject that has been debated, studied, agonized over, worried about, disputed and contended—if it is not the constitution, then it is the Indian Act. Even the Indians are becoming a little impatient, I suspect, with our inability, often in conjunction with them, to deal with the basic constitutional background that governs their lives internally and their relationship with the Government of Canada, the Crown, and the people of Canada.

I know that the hon. member is trying to do this with immense good will. I must tell him that we will probably be voting against it, however, largely because we see it as a set-back. We are not at the point to refer this issue—which has been under discussion, under analysis, has been studied and had workshops for five or six years—holus-bolus to a joint committee and ask it to come up with an answer to problems with which we have made slow progress. I know the hon. member for Lambton-Kent will in part understand my disappointment and why the issue will not be dealt with that way.

I do not want to labour my disappointments today, because actually I am in a more positive mood than my remarks would indicate. I will come to that in a second, but as I must express some disappointment with the Conservative party, I must also say I was a little disappointed with the New Democratic Party. I have taken into account, however, that as the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) pointed out, he was pinch-hitting for the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth). He rather skirted around the Indian Act and tended to treat it as a peripheral or marginal issue. I do not have much to disagree with him on some of the things he said regarding jobs, programs, education and other things, and I think the parliamentary secretary will deal with some of these matters when he speaks.

We tend to minimize the significance of dealing with the Indian Act. If there is an analogy it is the analogy of the urgency and importance we attach to dealing with the Canadian constitution.

Miss MacDonald: Being sent to a committee.

Mr. Faulkner: There is a stage in these things where I am prepared to see a parliamentary committee work, but it is not now and I will come to what I hope to do instead. Hon. members may come around to seeing the wisdom of my proposal versus theirs. I do not want to be partisan because I would like to enter this discussion and debate in a healthy spirit of mutual respect and willingness to bring it to a head.

Let me repeat that the Indian Act is not a peripheral issue, it is not marginal, it is central. Unless we can deal with it with the best will in the world, governments or departments will not achieve the objectives that the Indians have today. What is central to amending the Indian Act is at long last to deal with the core issue, and that is the powers of the chiefs and the band counsels—at long last to deal with the powers vested in the minister, powers which today are anachronisms at best. It is only through amending the Indian Act that we can achieve that transfer of responsibility from a minister and a government to the duly elected people, the bands, namely, the chiefs and the band counsels. That transfer of responsibility is the only way we will see the sort of development for which we hope.

I am committed to amending the Indian Act. The last major revision was in 1950. The act no longer reflects the needs or the interest of the Indian people, nor does it adequately reflect a proper role for the minister. When we begin to examine the process of amending the Indian Act there is one question we must be clear on and, if we are not, the NIB will be clear on it for us.

I should like to direct the attention of the House to the presence in the gallery of the NIB representatives, particularly its president, which reflects their interest in this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Faulkner: Conversations with the president of the NIB, members of its executive or president of provincial associations or chiefs will serve to remind the House that any amending process cannot touch, eliminate, or affect the trust responsibilities of the minister, the historic links with the treaties and, in turn, the links between the treaties and the Crown. If we start meddling in that relationship I think we can forget about getting any sort of co-operation from the Indian people in the process of amending the Indian Act. Those links are not just symbolic. To the Indians I have met, they are real and symbolic. They are the principle, the legal, and constitutional connection. Any attempt to fiddle with that will compromise the whole exercise. We have to be clear that that issue, that part of it, is not open for discussion and negotiation.

● (1632)

We must also be clear that in the exercise we are engaged in, that what we are attempting to do on the one hand is to preserve those historic and important links with the past and on the other hand trying to frame a law which will provide new opportunities for the future. Those new opportunities essentially relate to band government, local powers, and things of that kind. I say that simply to reassure the House that I am anxious to amend the Indian Act. I have indicated that to the President of the National Indian Brotherhood and to other provincial association presidents. I am anxious not to lose time as a result of the interregnum caused by the breakdown of the NIB cabinet committee process. I am anxious to continue consultation, and I can tell the House today that continuing consultations are a reality between myself and the president of the NIB, as well as others, and among our staffs. I think there is a general disposition to deal with these issues.

Getting back to the motion, I doubt that one will find there is widespread support that we should simply refer it to a parliamentary committee. I would be anxious, and I hope the Indian leadership will support me on this, to continue to build on the work that has been done prior to the joint NIB cabinet committee during its hearings, and in the future.

To deal with the suggestion that not much has happened or that not much has been accomplished, in this connection I would like to review some of the areas of broad agreement that have emerged from the joint NIB-cabinet discussions to give the House some indication of the basis on which I would see the pulling together of the work done to date. In my judgment, on real agreement, in the sense that the cabinet and the NIB and its executive committee agreed to something, the achievements were modest. They dealt with surrenders. In the areas which we had sort of identified as potential areas of agreement, I think the agreements were more substantive, which means we are at a point in time of trying to pull it together rather than to define a lot of new areas. But I am open to new areas that go beyond what is simply defined and dealt with in the joint NIB cabinet committee. I will do that in consultation with the NIB.

Let me review some of the accomplishments in the consultations to date. I would like hon. members to bear in mind that it was a very difficult process. I am surprised the hon. member for Lambton-Kent did not deal with it at greater length. When there are a lot of people in a room trying to get an agreement by definition, it is much more difficult than trying to get two people to come to an agreement There were considerable hurdles, suspicions—

An hon. Member: He was not invited.

Mr. Faulkner: He would only have complicated it further by just one more voice, reasonable voice as it is. There were serious hurdles to overcome in making this process work. But despite all of that, there were some important developments. In the process, broad agreement has been reached on at least some of the following principles and objectives. The New Indian Act should be regarded by the government, by the parliament, and by Canadians generally as a special constituent law governing the whole relationship between the Indian people and government, and in effect with the larger society as a whole. It should contain a preamble or declaratory section attesting to the continued special status of Indians in Canada, to their aboriginal descent and historical link with the Crown, to the treaty rights for the need to preserve and protect their Indian laws, and to the on-going responsibility of the federal government.

An important point I think we agreed to, and one I am still sort of mulling over, concerned the fact that the revision should be phased rather than an attempt made at wholesale revision. For this reason some of the earlier revisions might subsequently require further modification as later revisions are made. My own feeling on this is that we should try to deal with as much as possible, and if we find that in the process of trying to amend the totality of the Act leads to no progress on some of the substantive areas of agreement, we should approach it in a phased way. I think that is generally agreed with the NIB as well.

There should be an elective or opting-in principle which would allow bands wishing to do so to take advantage of revised provisions of the act, particularly in the area of band government. This elective principle is intended to take account of the fact that bands all across the country are at various stages of development, requiring flexibility in the legislation to respond to their particular needs.

This opting-in principle would be exercised through a clearly defined procedure for band referendum, which could also be the means whereby bands would make all their major decisions.

The underlying aim of the first phase of Indian Act revision, perhaps of most revisions would be—and this is absolutely crucial—to enlarge the powers, functions and responsibilities of bands to enable them to take charge of their own affairs in ways and means of their own choosing.

One area where we had some difficulty concerned the preamble section. What happened basically was that discussions about the philosophy of the act kept running up against difficult questions of how it might be expressed in its operative sections. One thing we had decided to do was deal with the preamble later in the process but still within the framework of the first phase of the revisions. Accordingly, in the past year or so discussions have tended to focus on a number of specific subjects of particular concern and interest to Indian bands in various parts of the country.

Top priority has been given, for example, to ways and means of giving effect to the agreed policies of Indian control of Indian education. Members of the House who were also members of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development a few years ago will recall how that policy evolved with substantial assistance and advice from the standing committee. Since that time an increasing number of bands have been able, through administrative arrangements, to assume local control of Indian education through the establishment of school boards and other means. What is desired by the Indian people, and what is indeed needed now, is a solid statutory base for the transfer or delegation of authority and responsibilities now exercised by the minister under the act, without diminishing his fundamental responsibility in relation to Indian education. How we define that will be an important area of discussion, and one I think we can resolve.

In the joint discussions so far there has been wide area of agreement on the practical measures for carrying out these transfers and delegations. But full agreement has foundered on differences in the NIB cabinet committee about the nature and extent of Indian rights in the field of education. That is still difficult. I recognize that, and it is something we will have to try to resolve.

In the matter of land surrenders, both the NIB and the government are agreed on the formula for allowing Indian bands to assume virtually full control of Indian lands for all purposes except outright sale. The Indians themselves have wished to preserve in the Indian Act the protection afforded to Indian lands by the surrender provisions relating to such sales.

As suggested, the central issues arising out of the current consideration of Indian Act revision relate to the future of band government. There seems to be wide agreement, for example, that bands should be given the opportunity, or option, to acquire legal status and personality under the Indian Act, coupled with enlargement of band bylaw powers. It is recognized, however, that there are some difficult questions that need to be identified and resolved, for example, the extent, if any, that laws of general application, particularly provincial laws, would continue to be applied on reserves where the band government had assumed wide powers and responsibilities. That is an issue with which we will have to deal. There are also problems of bylaw enforcement and the administration of justice on Indian reserves generally.

As I suggested earlier, there is no disagreement with the need and desirability to enlarge band powers to allow those bands wishing to do so to take full control of their local affairs. In this regard we have been discussing a system of band charters, by which we mean negotiated agreements which would in effect become the constitution for the band concerned. The likelihood is that there would be some variation in these charters, in the form of categories of charter from which the bands could choose in order to meet their particular needs.

It is envisaged that the revised Indian Act could provide the statutory base for such a charter system, which would be open to bands wishing to exercise the option and expressing their wish through referendum. Other bands, and for some time this might include a majority of the 565 bands in the country today, might choose to remain under existing provisions of the Indian Act for the purposes of their local government. That would be a decision they would have to make. In other words, they would have a choice. That flexibility may be important in getting agreement to the Indian Act.

The intent in all this is to provide the flexibility of response which the government and Indian leaders agree is needed to meet the situation in which Indian bands today find themselves at various stages of political, social and economic development.

Finally, in these areas of current concern is the pressing question deriving from the discriminatory aspects in the present act in relation to Indian women. The government has decided that such discrimination is no longer tolerable in our society and we know that this view is broadly, if not unanimously, shared in both Houses of Parliament. Ministers have informed the Indian leaders, through the NIB cabinet committee, that the provisions discriminating against Indian women, and in particular section 12(1)(b), must be revised. While there is undoubtedly widespread and grave concern among the Indian bands about this complex issue of discrimination, I believe that there is growing awareness on the Indian side that it is an issue that must be resolved satisfactorily and as soon as possible. It is important to add that recently the NIB made a very significant statement in this regard. I think we are getting very much closer to an agreement about how this issue is to be dealt with.

I want to respond briefly to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) that somehow we treat this issue independent of a revision to the Indian Act. I do not think that makes any sense at all. It would only exacerbate the feelings of the Indian people. It would appear to them that all the issues of basic importance to them are being put to one side while we preoccupy ourselves, admittedly with an important issue, one which we have agonized about a lot, and appear in this way to be insensitive to some areas of concern. Therefore I say it should be dealt with, but in the context of a range of amendments to the Indian Act.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): When will that be?

Mr. Faulkner: I am coming to that. I knew you would never ask, so I put it in the speech.

I do not wish to conclude this statement without further reference to Indian rights as perceived by the Indian people. If one single issue can be said to have delayed or sidetracked proceedings in the NIB-cabinet committee and eventually led to the NIB's unilateral decision to withdraw from the committee, it was the broad and complex issue of Indian rights. Nor should we minimize that much work has to be done on these key questions to get them worked out in ways that would enable the federal government and provincial governments to give practical expression to the objectives which the Indian people are seeking in asserting such rights.

I believe that this work is continuing in a variety of ways and at different levels of contact with Indian groups. I have in mind in particular the tripartite arrangements that now exist in several provinces, involving senior representatives of the federal and provincial governments concerned and the leaders of provincial Indian associations. One way or another they are focusing on rights, issues and, particularly, on hunting and fishing rights, which I regard as crucial to the whole effort to reach a mutually satisfactory relationship between the Indian people and our wider society. I have asked my officials to give high priority to these admittedly difficult questions in interdepartmental consultations at the federal level, in claims negotiations, and in the tripartite working arrangements I just mentioned.

Hunting and fishing rights, and to some extent trapping and gathering rights as well, to my mind are central to the thinking of most Indians about their future identity in Canadian society. For people in the remote areas, it is a matter of lifestyle and even subsistence. For many other Indians it is a key element in continuing their culture. Without for a moment underestimating the complexities or the long, hard work that will be needed to bring about mutually satisfactory results, I am personally persuaded that we should include in our proposals for Indian Act revision, even in the first phase, some provision for safeguarding hunting and fishing rights which the Indian people maintain tenaciously are essential to their future well-being as Indians in this country.

What I have attempted to do is convey to the House that some substantial work has been done. Some areas for amendment have been identified. I hope I have conveyed to the House some sense of the direction we are moving in, the areas we would like to see amended in the first phase.

Coming again to the question of the motion before the House, my contention is that the Indian Act has been the subject of discussion between the Indian leadership and the government for a period of years. Areas for amendment have been identified, discussions have been going on continuously, and research has been undertaken.

Given this, and the regrettable breakdown in the structure that was in place, what do we do? Do we refer it back to square one, i.e. support this particular motion, throw it back to a parliamentary committee made up of Senators and members of the House of Commons and ask them to tell us what to do? Alternatively, do we say that work has been done and it is now up to people like myself who have responsibility to come forward with some proposals, and not just throw the Indian Act out and ask them to tell us what to do, but to build on the work we have done and to come forward with some proposals for discussion? Frankly, that is the way to go.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): You would be called by the committee.

Mr. Faulkner: I would be prepared to refer the proposals at some point to a parliamentary committee, and we can discuss this, instead of saying, "Listen to me as the Minister of Indian Affairs. I have no idea what to do about the Indian Act. Will you please tell me, and will you go out and consult with the Indians?"

An hon. Member: Now you are being honest.

Mr. Faulkner: I never should have said that. Instead of that, we should pull together the work that has been done, give it some form and then put it forward in formal proposals. I believe that is the direction in which we should go and that is the direction I propose to go. I hope to have some proposals for consideration by the fall.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member seeking to ask a question?

Mr. Nystrom: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That can only be done with the consent of the minister. Does the minister agree to accept a question from the hon. member?

Mr. Faulkner: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, on Monday last when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) tabled his constitutional white paper or proposals I asked him whether the government was going to put Indian rights or aboriginal and treaty rights in the Constitution and make sure they were guaranteed by the Constitution. Many of my friends in the Indian Brotherhood, such as Chief Noel Star Blanket, and many Saskatchewan Indian chiefs asked me about it.

The Prime Minister said to me:

> Mr. Speaker, we will make quite sure in the bill we want to present, and in any further action, that any rights enjoyed by the Indian and native people, the Inuit, will not be taken from them but, on the contrary, will be protected.

[Mr. Faulkner.]

He was talking about the bill he is going to present to amend the Constitution. Can the minister elaborate a bit on what the Prime Minister said? Obviously the Prime Minister was speaking in general terms since he was responding to questions from many of us on all aspects of the Constitution.

Since he said that, many of my Indian friends have asked me what that means and what process is going to take place. Are the Indian people going to be consulted by the government? The Prime Minister referred to a parliamentary committee studying the Constitution and consulting the Indian people, which is fine. Can the minister elaborate on what the government has in mind about enshrining those aboriginal and treaty rights in the Constitution?

● (1652)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In case the minister should take more than half a minute, and in view of the fact that his time is about to expire, perhaps the House would consent to what is being suggested.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Faulkner: I do not think I can add very much to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said. What I attempted to indicate this afternoon is that the question of treaty rights is of fundamental concern to the Indian people whether that concern is addressed by way of provisions in the Constitution or by way of an amended Indian Act. I have not, really, thought that through, though if I can be candid with the House I would personnally look upon the Indian Act as the better instrument. When the Prime Minister says the process in which we are engaged is one of protecting and ensuring rights rather than detracting from them, I am in accord with that completely. I am open to advice as to the instrument we should use in achieving this objective. I am not discounting the use of the Constitution; I am just not sure how it could be done, so I do not think I can give further clarification other than confirm his commitment to deal with this important consideration.

The other thing to bear in mind in terms of this constitutional paper—and I am rather pleased with this—has to do with the renewal principles: the second item identified, after the first item which deals with the rights of individual citizens, is the traditional rights of Indian people. The importance of this cannot be lost on the House, even on some of its more jaded members. We have identified this as being a priority area and we shall attempt to address it in a way which will win the support and co-operation of the Indian people.

Miss MacDonald: Would the minister accept a further question? The minister mentioned that this was referred to in the principles. Why was there no reference to it in the concluding chapter?

Mr. Faulkner: I am not sure I follow the question, unless the hon. member is arguing that the concluding chapter should be a reaffirmation of the chapter on principles. The important fact is that it was cited among a number of principles for the renewal of our constitutional arrangements in our federal system, identifying it as an important principle in the renewal process. That is something I am pleased about as Minister of Indian Affairs.

Miss MacDonald: I do not think the minister understood my question. Since reference was made to these rights in the chapter dealing with principle, why was not a similar reference made in the concluding chapter which listed the government's proposals respecting changes it intended to seek in constitutional arrangements?

Mr. Faulkner: I do not wish to prolong this exchange but I still find difficulty following the question, unless what the hon. lady is saying is that in the concluding chapter we should have identified precisely how we propose to treat each one of the principles. I do not think the concluding chapter attempts to do that.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my first reaction to the minister's remarks is of course, one of disappointment. The idea of establishing a joint House of Commons and Senate committee to study a variety of aspects relating to the hon. gentleman's portfolio is one which originated in the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs. It was advanced to the committee by the president of the National Indian Brotherhood. More important, it was one which was supported by the Liberal members of the committee.

Therefore we are disappointed that the minister should have chosen to advise and instruct the members of his party not to support what we consider to be a very important and fundamental exercise, especially in view of the debate which is going on today, a debate which is taking place in every corner of our country, by every level of government, by every segment of our society, and by all fair-minded and thinking people. I am talking, of course, about discussions on constitutional and institutional reforms to which all parties in this House are committed and which will affect all Canadians for all time to come. Of course, they will have very profound effects upon the native community as well.

The discussions include the protection of minority rights. As we read through the paper which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) tabled, we see that he views these rights of individuals and minority groups as being of fundamental concern to him. Again, Mr. Speaker, our native people are a highly visible minority group in our society, one which needs the trust, support, and help of us all. What about the rights of the Indians and Inuit? What about the contribution they made to the evolution and history of this country?

The debate today is timely because over the last ten years, since the introduction of the white paper in 1969, we have gained a much better understanding of Indian rights and the concerns and aspirations of the Indian community. A number of commissions and inquiries has been established and a number of authorities have given the government advice. One of those was the Indian Claims Commissioner who was appointed in 1969, Mr. Barber. There was Mr. Justice Berger's study of the potential impact of massive industrial development in the Mackenzie Valley basin. Then there was the Lysyk inquiry in the Yukon, and the James Bay settlement, as well as the negotiations which have taken place in the Yukon with respect to the settlement—the extinguishment, as some people call it—of Indian claims in that region.

It was on the suggestion of the native groups which appeared before the committee that my hon. friend from Lambton-Kent introduced the motion we are debating today. I would reiterate that it was with the support of the Liberal members of that committee, and I am deeply disappointed that the minister should have taken his usual partisan stance by saying that his is the best proposal and that his alternative is the one that will be accepted by those he named, the National Indian Brotherhood. If they were so pleased with the way the government has reacted to their proposals in the past, they would still be on the joint NIB cabinet committee. They are not. The fact is that no concessions have been made by the government. All the things which were discussed were conditional on something—whether it was self-determination with respect to Indian education or whether it was an assumption of greater responsibility by bands and chiefs. There were conditions attached. The minister attached conditions to all the concessions which were being discussed.

There have been a number of previous inquiries of this kind, but I am saying that another one would be timely now because we are much better equipped. Native people have developed much better leadership over the last 25 years, and it would have to be the intention of the committee to include that leadership in a dialogue which might be carried out.

There were two previous inquiries of this kind. One was initiated in 1946. It sat through three sessions of parliament. When one reads through some of the transcripts, one can see that inquiry was brought about mainly because a number of native Indians had distinguished themselves during the Second World War and were returning home to find that their brothers in their home country were still being discriminated against, but in a manner much more offensive and oppressive than what they had seen abroad where they had been liberating people from oppressive authorities. The government consented to the appointment of an inquiry which was much like the one we are suggesting today. That inquiry sat through three sessions of parliament. It proposed some amendments to the Indian Act, which eventually became law in about 1950.

There was another special joint committee in 1961. That committee gave much thought to Indian self-government, but because of a change in government in 1963, no legislation resulted from those discussions.

I would like to refer to the basic concept of aboriginal rights and title, which is very important today because some aspects of special rights and privileges—the citizen plus status which our Indian and Inuit people have a right to demand—need to be enshrined in the Constitution. The Indian Act itself has not been an effective enough tool to deal with this fundamental problem.

As my colleague, the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes), has said, in order to identify and delineate the concept of aboriginal rights, one needs to go back over the history and evolution of the Indian Act. One needs to go back as far as the royal proclamation of 1763, which laid down the basic colonial policy which this government has followed. The policy was one of assimilation.

The policy was, as soon as possible and as quickly as feasible, to have Indians become Christians, and to enter into a period of transition which would take them from their traditional lifestyle, which was one of hunting, fishing, trapping and living with nature generally, to one of agriculture.

Even before that, in the early 1600s, white settlers in the maritimes and in the St. Lawrence Valley dealt with Indians in a different way than they did after the proclamation. They dealt with them as trading partners. They dealt with them in the fur trade, which was then the lifeblood of the economy of the North American continent.

In early history there was a different colonial policy, which was adhered to by the other partner, the other founding race. The maritime region was under French control. The King of France looked upon the native people as partners, not subjects. As a matter of fact, when in 1713 Acadia was ceded to the British Crown, it is contended by historians today that the King of France had no right to cede to the British Crown a sovereignty which he did not possess, namely, sovereignty over the native people in that area.

However, after 1763 the pattern was set. The proclamation formed the basis for the treaties which followed, but the treaties and the proclamation were never intended to be interpreted in the way they were. I wish to quote a short paragraph from a treaty which has been dealt with by courts, with regard to the question of aboriginal rights. Decisions have been made on this question. This treaty says:

And whereas it is just and reasonable and essential to our interests and the security of our colony that the several nations or tribes of Indians with whom we are connected and who live under our protection should not be molested or disturbed in the possession of such parts of our dominions and territories as, not having been ceded to or purchased by us are reserved to them or any of them as their hunting grounds—

The treaties which followed the proclamation were looked upon by Indian people as treaties of friendship and peace. They were not looked upon by the Indian people who signed them as a surrender of their traditional rights or as a sell-out of their land, which is more to a native person and his culture than it is to a white man. Our native friends tell us that the land is their soul and that the animals which live on the land are their spirits. One does not cede his soul, and one does not sell his spirit. The native people of this country have never done that.

Let me quote from an order in council setting up the treaty commission which studied and effected Treaty No. 8 in western Canada, as follows:

—that the Commissioner of the North West Mounted Police had pointed out the desirability of steps being taken for the making of a treaty with the Indians occupying the proposed line of route from Edmonton to Pelly River—

I am not going to go into the delineation of that area.

—Indians, were inclined to be turbulent and were liable to give trouble to isolated parties of miners or traders who might be regarded by the Indians as interfering with what they considered their vested rights—

So, Indians were turbulent, and there was a need for a peace treaty. That was what treaty No. 8, as with all other treaties, was all about.

This document states further, and I quote:

As it is in the interest of the Province of British Columbia, as well as in that of the Dominion, that the country to be treated for—

It does not say "ceded", but "treated for."

—should be thrown open to development and the lives and property of those who may enter therein safeguarded by the making of provision which will remove all hostile feeling from the minds of the Indians and lead them to peacefully acquiesce in the changing conditions—

From that we see that the treaty was intended to be a document of peace and friendship, but the final sentence of the quotation I just read says that the treaty was to be considered a tool for assimilating native people to our way of life. I repeat:

—and lead them to peacefully acquiesce in the changing conditions—

Indians were very skeptical about the men who came from afar to make these treaties. I quote from the commissioners' report on Treaty No. 8. It reads:

● (1712)

There was expressed at every point the fear that the making of the treaty would be followed by the curtailment of the hunting and fishing privileges... impressed with the notion that the treaty would lead to taxation and enforced military service. They seemed desirous of securing educational advantages for their children, but stipulated that in the matter of schools there should be no interference with their religious beliefs.

It is stated further:

Our chief difficulty was the apprehension that the hunting and fishing privileges were to be curtailed. The provision in the treaty under which ammunition and twine is to be furnished went far in the direction of quieting the fears of the Indians, for they admitted that it would be unreasonable to furnish the means of hunting and fishing if laws were to be enacted which would make hunting and fishing so restricted as to render it impossible to make a livelihood by such pursuits.

How naïve the native people were in those days!

The report continues:

But over and above the provision, we had to solemnly assure them that only such laws as to hunting and fishing as were in the interests of the Indians and were found necessary in order to protect the fish and fur-bearing animals would be made, and that they would be as free to hunt and fish after the treaty as they would be if they never entered into it.

We assured them that the treaty would not lead to any forced interference with their mode of life, that it did not open the way to the imposition of any tax, and that there was no fear of enforced military service.

The natives had reason to be suspicious because Treaty No. 11 was almost a carbon copy of the treaties which were made in the south. Indians were to be converted to Christianity and to the pursuit of agriculture. It was for that reason that each Indian person was granted a tract of land of 160 acres per person, or 640 acres per family. One does not carry on effective and life sustaining hunting and trapping on 640 acres. The intention was to convert natives to pursuing the same kind of life as the white society which had encroached upon them. The terms of the treaty demanded a peaceful acquiescence to the changing conditions. The process of assimilation did not work and Indians were very reluctant to agree to it. They were reluctant to be placed on reserves and to have that imposed on them.

This is an interesting document which I recommend to all my colleagues. It is one that accompanies this treaty, but it is not dissimilar from all the documents that have accompanied other treaties. It states here:

Indeed, the Indians were generally adverse to being placed on reserves. It would have been impossible to have made a treaty if we had not assured them that there was no intention of confining them to reserves. We had to very clearly explain to them that the provision for reserves and allotment of land were made for their protection, and to secure to them in perpetuity a fair portion of the land ceded, in the event of settlement advancing.

I do not know what was worse, confinement on the reserve or the granting of freedoms later on, such as the freedom to vote, which was granted to the natives in 1968, the freedom to buy alcohol in government stores, and the freedom to conform to the white man's way of life which ended in what some people call a slow process of annihilation and other people, who use a harsher term, call genocide.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret but I must inform the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, just before I speak on the motion I would like to refer to something that was said by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) at the beginning of his speech, if I understood him correctly. If I heard right, he said that the motion proposed today by the Conservative party was born in the standing committee where it received the support of all members. If that is what the hon. member said—and I am now having it checked out very carefully—then, to the best of my knowledge, he is not correct. What the committee agreed to do, if it completed its work on the estimates, was to have the annual report of the department referred to it so it could do more work in a general way as the steering committee decided. If the hon. member said what I thought he said, I plan to raise this at the first opportunity on a poinnt of order.

Now I wish to speak to the motion put forward today by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes). There is no doubt, as the minister himself said in his remarks, that this motion is well motivated and sincere. What the motion seeks to do is to establish yet another parliamentary committee to inquire into the problems facing the Indian people in Canada. It proposes to do so under the umbrella of the Indian Act in its present form, with all its imperfections and shortcomings, and all hon. members here know that there are many, many of those. The act in its present form is certainly unacceptable. Then it proposes that the committee would discuss the need for revisions of the Indian Act, and probably in time a report would issue from that committee on what the changes in the act should be and how the act can be made more relevant in the view of the committee, more relevant to the modern day in which the Indian people in Canada are now living.

I respectfully submit that the hon. member, in attempting to have this motion approved by the House, is really turning back the clock. It is actually not a progressive step at all but a retrograde step. When I say that, it is not in any way to disparage the good intentions of my hon. friend opposite for I know him in his work in the committee to have a genuine concern and interest in the Indian people in Canada. He is truly one of the progressive members of his very conservative party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: A red Tory.

Mr. Penner: Nor have I lost faith in the good work which can be done by parliamentary committees, given the right situation and acting at the appropriate time. Certainly, for example, it is the responsibility of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development to examine regularly and carefully the work of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to see that it is doing its job, as we expect it to, and that the public moneys which are used for programs to assist Indian people are put to the best use for the greatest benefit of Indian people.

Besides the examination of estimates and the clause by clause study of legislation, I believe also that parliamentary committees should be doing more investigative work. There should be frequent inquiries into national problems by committees of the House. But I argue that in this case, with respect to this proposal that a special joint committee be set up, the timing of the proposal of the hon. member is all wrong. It is much too late in the day for undertaking the establishment of the task force which is suggested by my hon. friend. In fact, to be blunt, it is something akin to a slap in the face to the Indian leaders in this country because it says in effect that all of the good, hard, productive, difficult work that they have done is of no account, that nothing has happened, and that a parliamentary joint committee should get down to work and do something because the Indian leaders have not done anything up to this point. I reject that suggestion and I say it is unfair, untrue, and a slap in the face to the Indian leaders of Canada.

The process of actual consultation with the Indian people and the task of reaching agreement on a revision of the Indian Act is already well under way, and the minister has gone into some detail to tell us about that. It has gone beyond the stage where a travelling joint committee could serve a very useful purpose.

• (1722)

While I do not wish to appear mean, nevertheless the motion today gives the impression that the Conservative party has just discovered that there is an Indian community in Canada. In this motion they say to the members of parliament that something must be done about Indian people and about the outmoded Indian Act which has not been substantially revised for a long time. In fact, it has not been revised since 1951.

Hon. members opposite should know that a lot has happened already. In 1973 a proposed revision of the entire act emerged from a study done by an Indian group in Alberta. That study was funded by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. At the national level, a joint committee of the National Indian Brotherhood and the federal cabinet was established to deal with major policy issues arising as a result of the relationship between Indian people and the government. This committee had its first meeting in April, 1975, and there were subsequent meetings until April of this year when the NIB withdrew. Within that period of time a great deal of good, substantive work was done. The Brotherhood and Indian associations across the country remain determined to find a way to accomplish early and meaningful revisions of the Indian Act. Highly competent people are working within the National Indian Brotherhood. They are engaged in this difficult exercise, working along with the government through meetings to bring about revisions which will make this act relevant and make it do what Indian people expect.

The Government of Canada is more than prepared to meet, discuss, and find agreement for amendments. It may be done in phases so that the meetings, discussions, and agreements will have to take place again in the future. In the midst of all this solid, substantive, and valuable work, the Conservative party comes forward and indicates that we should strike a special joint committee, and send it out into the highways and byways of Canada. They speak about the need for a new Indian Act. It is similar to setting out to rediscover the wheel.

There have been special joint committees in the past. Hon. members opposite mentioned some of these. As well there have been ministerial inquiries. But the Indian people of Canada know that not much of value has come forth from all of this. There is a proposal in this motion to do again what was done before. We know there was little real progress in this difficult area until capable, dedicated Indian leaders applied themselves to this difficult task. Then we started to make progress. When the Indian Act is revised finally, it will be much more a tribute to those people than it will be to any of us in this place, or even in fact to the Government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: I do not wish to be thought of as one who belittles in any way the roles of parliamentary committees, be they special, joint, or standing. There is much strength in our committee system. Most of the time it serves the people of Canada well. Of course there will be a time for a committee of this House to become deeply involved with revisions to the Indian Act. It may be after the bill, containing the revisions, has been given second reading in the House. Perhaps it will be earlier, as was suggested by the minister.

It may be necessary for the minister to take a federal position. That position will be dealt with by cabinet and then referred to the standing committee. I believe a great deal of good work could be done if that took place. There is no doubt about the fact that there is a role for the committee, but the role of a special, joint or standing committee is not to paddle about the edges of the problem. It seems to me this is just what the motion is suggesting. The committee has to jump into the deep water where all the action is right now. When that time comes, I hope Conservative members of the committee will know how to swim.

I really wonder why the Indian people of Canada would want such a special joint committee poking about in their problems and concerns. Why should they place any particular trust or confidence in the work of such a committee as the one proposed in the Conservative motion? If they did not have trust and confidence in its work, there would be very good, historical reasons for that. We would be able to understand if that were the case. If Indian leaders and their people said to us, "Thanks, but we really do not need your inquiry or your special joint committee", we could understand this reaction.

I should like to refer to the year 1969, since it was brought up by hon. members opposite. On June 25, 1969, the government tabled its statement on Indian policy in the House of Commons. This document is referred to now as the Indian White Paper. That is a rather curious description, but one which carries with it a very useful message. Of course, at the time the statement was not perfectly understood.

A speech of the then minister of Indian affairs and northern development, which was given in Saskatchewan, was reprinted in Hansard dated December 1, 1969. The speech was entitled: "The Government Policy on Indians—What is the Debate About?" The minister went to some pains in that speech to explain what the statement was not, and then he went on to explain quite clearly what it was. It was a statement to be discussed. It indicated that the provinces should extend their services to Indians, and that the federal government should transfer funds to help the provinces do this. It is not my intention to go over all the proposals contained in that statement, but I should like to return to June 25, 1969, to see what was said in the House with reference to the work of a previous special joint committee. It was said that that committee had considerable input into the formulation of the 1969 statement.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), on June 25, 1969, in his address to the House, is reported at page 10583 of Hansard as saying the following:

> I thank the minister for the statement he has made. There was a reminiscent tone to it. I recall during the last years of administration under the leadership of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) that a joint committee studied this issue. The wording of the report of that committee dealt with the winds of change which were blowing through the ranks of the Indian people of Canada. Many of the thoughts which the minister expressed in his statement were good thoughts, repeating the thoughts in the report of the committee.
> We welcome the statement by the minister. It amounts to an acceptance of many proposals made by the Indian people through the years, and made by those who have worked on their behalf, in this party and elsewhere.

Following that, the spokesman for the New Democratic Party, the then hon. member for Skeena, Mr. Howard, said the following:

● (1732)

As I say, we listened with interest to what the minister said, because in a sense what he was saying was exactly the same thing as many Indian leaders and people have been saying for quite a number of years, and in a sense what he said was a reiteration of what many of us in this House have been saying for the last five or ten years.

The hon. member for Peace River and I had the opportunity in 1959, 1960 and 1961 of participating in the Joint Senate and House of Commons Committee on Indian Affairs, to which the hon. member for Peace River alluded, and the report of which committee contained the same ideas and concepts that the minister has now outlined. Even though it has taken some period of time to get a cabinet minister to agree with those concepts, it is still welcomed.

Now we have a special joint committee proposed to look at the Indian Act. The Indian people of Canada say that parliamentary committees do not listen very well. The hon. member said that what he heard from the Indian people was contained in the policy paper of 1969. When the Indian people saw the policy paper of 1969, they in fact told us quite clearly that that is not what they said at all, and that is not what they wanted. So what faith, what confidence, can they have in setting up another special joint committee to look into the provisions of the Indian Act? All members know that the statement of 1969 has been categorically rejected by the Indian people of Canada.

As I said, many of the proposals that flowed from the work of that committee are contained in that 1969 document. If we agree to the motion by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent today, I would have personal cause to be nervous about it. And I think that the Indian leaders of Canada would be more than nervous; they might be very hesitant about the results of the work of such a committee. In any event, before the committee ever gets its gear together there will either be a bill or a set of proposals to examine, and we will be very busy right here. There will be no time to flit from place to place within Canada, as the motion says, "sending for persons, papers and records and examining witnesses".

I must say that as parliamentarians we so often decry bureaucracy, but whenever we want to give the appearance of doing something we put forward a purely bureaucratic approach, and that I think is what we have in this motion today. —"Form another committee, take a look at the problem, listen to what people have to say and see if you can come up with something that is useful and valuable as a solution". This, from what I have heard today, is the answer of the Conservative party of Canada to an immensely complex and difficult issue.

The almost unanimous rejection by Indian leaders of the 1969 policy statements served as a major rallying force for Canada's Indian people. It has taught them and the government some valuable lessons. The government's reaction has been to drop the 1969 policy proposals. Chief Heber Maitland of Kitimat in northern British Columbia told a district manager's conference last year that the 1969 paper taught Indian people that they could no longer tolerate being treated like children of the government. It taught Indian leaders that they could and they should speak out in the best interests of their people, and it also taught the government to listen to Indian people.

It is the role of Indian leaders to inform the government about the needs of their people, and as a responsible government it is our role to listen and to take appropriate action. With respect to the revision of the Indian Act, I submit that that is precisely the process that is going on. Over the last several years it has been the policy of the government to involve Indian people in finding their own solutions to problems as they themselves perceive them. The Indian people are encouraged to define their own needs and to propose their own solutions. Indian involvement begins at the district level and then it extends to the national level.

As the minister suggested—and I agree entirely with him—the key to success in developing, implementing and maintaining a good working relationship between the department of Indian Affairs, on behalf of the federal government, and the Indian people is the effectiveness of local control and local government in Indian communities. Under the Indian Act the band council constitutes the authority to regulate life on the reserves. They make decisions that affect land and people within their boundaries, much the same way as do municipalities.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to enter into an extensive debate with the parliamentary secretary, but he did make one or two remarks that I would like to comment upon. He took issue with the remark of the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) regarding the setting up of the committee. I do not believe that the parliamentary secretary was in attendance at the committee meeting where this issue was raised. At that meeting there were representatives of the National Indian Brotherhood, and as a result of some of the comments that were made by some of the witnesses, the member for Prince George-Peace River put out this suggestion. It is interesting to note that the member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson), a member that sits on the government side, spoke very much in favour of setting up such a committee.

The parliamentary secretary also said that it appeared as though we on this side have just suddenly learned about the Indian people. I would suggest to him that it is because of this party back in 1973 that aboriginal rights were finally recognized by the government. The Indian people have a great deal of faith in our committee system. They come down quite often with their problems, and relate them to us. Unfortunately, the minister does not pay too much attention to what takes place in committee, but the ministers change so often that perhaps the minister is never in his portfolio long enough to really get a handle on the problems of the native people.

I am very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to participate in this debate this afternoon which calls for the setting up of a joint Senate and House of Commons committee to consider and report on the provisions of the Indian Act. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes) made some excellent remarks in giving an overview of and historical background to the act.

I came to Ottawa in 1972, and in the six years since that time I have been a member of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. During that time as a member of the committee and as a member of our caucus committee we have probably met with every native organization across Canada as well as many representatives of individual bands. During those meetings these people have expressed their concern about many problems such as health, housing, culture, economic development and survival as a people. They have expressed their concern about the Indian Act, which is basically the only protection they have. The representatives have indicated time and time again in the committee that they would like to see the Indian Act revised and updated, but they want an input into the act because it affects them so vitally.

The Indian people want to play a part in the preparation of a new act, but ultimately the responsibility of final consideration for the act and its passage rests with parliament. This is why our party feels that the setting up of such a committee as recommended in our motion today is so urgent. It would be a committee, as the motion states, that would travel throughout Canada to visit various communities where members are able to see at first hand and understand the problems of native people. I suggest that there are very few members in this House today who have any real appreciation of the problems that exist in the native communities.

● (1742)

A short time ago we had representatives of the National Indian Brotherhood before the standing committee as witnesses. I was impressed by the remarks of one witness in particular, Mike Martin, chief of Eel Ground Reserve in New Brunswick. I should like to quote a portion of his evidence in issue No. 3 of the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Indians Affairs and Northern Development for Thursday, May 4, 1978, at page 3:13, where he said:

> We should have better recreation programs on our reserves to fight drugs and vandalism on the reserves.
> As I stated a little while ago, people have been killed on reserves, dying because of other people shooting at another person. In fact, not too long ago, I lost my 21-year old son; he came home drunk one morning at five o'clock, he went down to his room, put a cartridge shell into a gun, stuffed it under his chin and blew his head right out. That is my experience about what has taken place on reserves in vandalism and drugs. I lost my son, not too long ago, on account ot that. When I say this is what is taking place, it is taking place. If some of you people could take time—I know you have quite a lot of travelling funds in your pocket, free travelling funds in your pocket—to go up to the reserves, spend more time and see exactly what is taking place on the reserves, you would know what is taking place. You would know how the people are suffering on the reserves—housing—anything else that has been mentioned here. Even the people of the Department of Indian Affairs, who are running the programs do not come up to see us and see what is taking place. All they say is, "We know what is taking place on your reserve."

I suggest the situation is critical, Mr. Speaker. I lay the blame on this government which over the years has adopted an attitude of paternalism and a program of assimilation. The government has failed to listen to the voice of the Indian people and to the Indian leaders who express the collective views of their people.

[Mr. Neil.]

If I had time I should like to read a letter from Chief David Ahenakew to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), a copy of which came across my desk this morning. He is concerned about the situation in Saskatchewan and issues a warning about the possible consequences. I know Chief Ahenakew, who is doing and has done an excellent job in Saskatchewan. The letter that he sent to the Prime Minister, of which I think many members have a copy, is a warning, a warning that must be heeded.

I recall talking to Chief Ahenakew a couple of years ago when he said, in effect: "We do not want any handouts, we do not want your welfare; welfare is destroying our people. What we want is opportunity, encouragement, the responsibility to make decisions on our own." He indicated that mistakes would be made, but then the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has made a great many mistakes. He looked to the future, a future when native people would be self-reliant and able through their own endeavours to take care of themselves. They are not looking for handouts. How can they become self-reliant, Mr. Speaker? It can only be done through adequate education, adequate training and economic development.

I should like to spend a few minutes on the subject of economic development. A few years ago the government set up an Indian economic development fund. The concept was based on the white paper of 1969 and was established in 1970. It was funded with some $50 million to be used over a period of five years and basically was to fund small, viable businesses to a maximum of $50,000. It was also to act as a lever for funds from other agencies such as DREE.

The facts of what happened are well documented in the committee hearings of 1977 and in the opposition day debate of June 22 of that year. The Indian economic development fund has not been a success, Mr. Speaker. A study carried out in 1976 by the firm of Woods, Gordon & Co. indicated in part:

> It is our opinion that, in dealing with individuals and small enterprises, the fund has had some measure of success. However, in large complex projects, the fund's performance in relation to its original mandate has been a dismal failure.

The fund was intended to be used on projects to a maximum of $50,000. I suggest that through the ambitions of members of the department it was expanded to include such large enterprises, to mention only one, as The Pas shopping centre. This is a project which started at some $6 million and, with an over-run, ended up in excess of $8.3 million. The over-run was primarily due to the requirements of the Department of Public Works with respect to the structure of the building.

I could cite many other glaring examples which are well documented. Evidence given in committee will indicate that from the inception of the program until we held our committee meetings in 1977 the total number of projects was 2,577, yet they only created 4,722 jobs—less than two jobs per project.

It is interesting to note that with respect to larger projects of half a million dollars or more the fund invested some $45 million, or between 40 per cent and 50 per cent of the total funds available, yet that $45 million created only 58 jobs. At the committee hearings we learned that every one of the projects costing over $500,000 was in financial difficulty.

This government has failed miserably in attempting to create economic self-sufficiency for native people in Canada. It has also, unfortunately, created doubts in the minds of many of the ability of the native people to handle their own economic development. The evidence will show, however, that in most instances the smaller projects were successful, particularly those under $100,000. Had officials of the department kept within their mandate and funded smaller projects, the program would have been generally successful.

The Indian Act has a bearing on the economic future of the Indian people. Despite what the parliamentary secretary has to say, I visualize this committee as being similar to the Special Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which travelled extensively, gained first-hand knowledge about our penitentiary system and tabled an excellent report. This proposed committee could do the same. It could see at first hand some of the projects funded by the Indian economic development fund. It could see the housing conditions. It could examine health, listen to presentations and receive suggestions and recommendations from the band level.

I appreciate that there is not much general agreement among the native community with respect to changes in the act, but studies have been carried out and are carried out through funding of the NIB by the government and I believe the problem areas within the act have at least been identified.

As the hon. member for Lambton-Kent pointed out earlier, we are presently in a debate and a dialogue on national unity. We concern ourselves about bilingualism and multiculturalism and yet we are overlooking the indigenous people of our country, the people who were here long before the white man. I suggest that a committee such as we have proposed in this motion would receive wide media coverage in its travels. It would perhaps make Canadians aware of a matter which at the present time they know little about.

Such a committee would also make members of parliament sensitive to the problems that exist. It would enable them to consider constructively and intelligently a new act, an act that hopefully will be one out of which new policies may evolve, for example, policies for local government based on input from the people who are concerned so that without bureaucratic interference they will be able to build their own future as you and I, Mr. Speaker, have been able to do.

I see that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. In closing I would simply like to say that I urge the government to give serious consideration to what we feel is an excellent and constructive motion, one which could do a very fine job in making decisions on a new Indian Act.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, with your consent I would raise a very brief point of order with respect to what was said by the hon. member for Prince-George Peace River and followed up later by his colleague the hon. member for Moose Jaw. I am sure that neither hon. member wants to mislead the House, but they have left the impression that the motion we are dealing with today emanated from a recommendation by the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I can prove quite conclusively that no such recommendation ever emanated from the committee. If I may take one moment of the House's time—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I was just about to inform the hon. member that I do not consider this to be a point of order. His point is argumentative and a question for debate. This matter was referred to by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River and also by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, and now the hon. member for Thunder Bay wants to refer to it. I do not feel that I should recognize any more speakers on this point. This is a question for debate and it is argumentative. Therefore, I do not consider the hon. member has a point of order.

Mr. Jack Pearsall (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, with only a moment or two left and not wishing to have my speech interrupted, with the consent of the House may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order please. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

• (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

• (2012)

Mr. Pearsall: Mr. Speaker, I enter the debate this evening on the motion proposed by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes), not with the intention of criticizing the hon. member because my association with him in the past four years as a fellow member of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development is such that I hold him in high esteem. Rather, I want him to know, and I want the House to know, that my concern is with the mechanics of the motion.

My riding of Coast Chilcotin has within its borders more than 30 Indian reservations; some are close to towns and cities while others are to be found in very remote locations. The hon. member proposes that the parliamentary committee to be established should go to all places in Canada to sit down and hold discussions. This may work out well in those areas which are close to cities and towns but I would be most disturbed to think that we might decide to take 15 members of this House and an equal number from the other place and pour them into these various remote areas. It may work well enough in the cities but I could name places in my riding in which we could face some quite remarkable scenes and Heaven knows what actions.

I mention, for example, Oweekeno, where a band is situated right up at the top of Rivers Inlet. I wonder how the hon. member would propose to bring a group of pin-striped clad characters from Ottawa into such an area. The only way to get in there is by a small float plane, probably with a maximum capacity of three or four. We would spend all day bringing people into places like Oweekeno.

Another place which comes to mind is Nemeihia Valley in the heart of the Chilcotins. I am sure the hon. member knows of the places I am talking about because he does his homework and knows British Columbia as well as I do. I want also to mention Nazko. These are areas which rarely see many white people. Indeed, they may see the odd trapper or prospector, occasionally a rancher or member of parliament going in there to do his best.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pearsall: As a consequence, I cannot picture this group of individuals coming from Ottawa to go into, for instance, Nazko and Nemeihia Valley to sit down and say to the chief and council: "Okay, we are here for five hours; you have ten minutes in which to have your say and then bring on all the rest." These people have not grown up with that kind of life. They would not understand the kind of parliamentary committee system under which we operate here. We are caught up in this cocoon where we jump from one place to another to attend the various committees on which we serve. We are allowed ten minutes to ask questions. How could you expect to operate such a system in these remote areas where the people are not accustomed to speaking in front of large groups like ours, particularly when they are not even used to speaking to white people?

I believe that the NIB, nationally and provincially, have managed to get through to their people. The various groups with which I deal all the time are men and women who are as close as it is possible to get to the native people. Are we going to abandon their efforts and say: "No, I'm sorry, you have done a good job but we want to find out a bit more on our own"? How can we sit down with a group of people who are totally unaccustomed to our ways and give them five minutes to speak to us? They won't say a word. They will just sit there and look at us. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent knows, having gone into these areas, that you have to go in and sit down and personally talk to the chief and council. You get more out of that kind of action than you ever will by bringing in a committee. I understand what the hon. member wants to do and I admire him for it, but the mechanics he proposes to employ would just put a stop to it all. That is what disturbs me so much.

Now, we have talked about the remote areas. I am very fortunate in my riding to have a number of very advanced Indian reservations. I don't mind naming them—I think they should be named. They are an honour to their people, an honour to all the people of Canada. For instance, there is the Sliammon band, on the outskirts of Powell River, my own hometown. They have done a tremendous job in the last few years and are well ahead, thanks, perhaps, to the industries which surround them. In Sechelt, just to the south on the sunshine coast, there is a wonderful group who have done an excellent job—it is close to the city. I could move on and name, for example, the Squamish band which the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) represents. A portion of the band is to be found in my riding. These are areas which would understand the system and could sit down with a parliamentary committee. They are very experienced in politics and would win the battle over us any day—something which I am sure the hon. member for Lambton-Kent already knows.

But let us not forget that the great majority of the Indian people in Canada do not live close to cities. That is the point which disturbs me so much. As well-intentioned as the proposal may be, Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that such a committee could do the job that the National Indian Brotherhood or all the provincial bodies can do. I would far rather see an opportunity afforded us to keep on with the business we are doing today, meeting with Mr. Starblanket, meeting with Mr. Manuel and those who have been before them. This is the route we have taken and I believe it is the route we should stay with. Otherwise we must have some idea how we can explain to, say, a chief up in Kingcome Inlet: "I am sorry, Chief. You wanted to make a presentation to the B.C. Indian Chiefs but Ottawa says that won't work. We have a new committee coming out here. We are going to bring you some senators and members of parliament. You will be given five minutes to tell them your story"—

An hon. Member: How about 15?

Mr. Pearsall: Well, 15 is not enough. These people have suffered for a hundred years from the presence of the white man, and now you propose to give them 15 minutes to explain their cause. I am sure the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) really did not mean that. We have to give them the time they need. They do not talk in a hurry as we have learned to do because our time is limited. We are talking with native people who are accustomed to a very slow and easy way. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent knows that, and so does the hon. member for Moose Jaw. They know what happens when you go among the native people. One does not hurry things, you just sit down. It may take a whole hour just to get an introduction but this is their way of life.

As I say, I respect what the hon. member wants to do but the mechanics just will not permit it to happen as he suggests. I just foresee our running into terrible confusion where, instead of getting the information we need and desire, we will get nothing. Some of these Indian people are quite timid. They just sit back and refuse to say a word. I would far rather see us carry on as we have been doing, listening to Mr. Starblanket and the other Indian representatives.

I heard what the minister had to say this afternoon. We do have a committee which is studying the question. We understand one another. We are working on something we all believe in. I have great respect for the hon. member who proposed this motion, as I have for all members of the committee. I honestly believe the Indians realize we are trying to do something. But we have the Indian Act. It is a horrible act. It has been in effect for over one hundred years and it is about time we changed it. But let us do it in the way we can do it best, by bringing in representatives of the native people and letting them tell us what they would like to see done. They should not be limited to ten minutes. Witnesses have come a long way. They should be given hours, if necessary, in which to talk to us.

What have we done to our native people in the course of a hundred years? We have pushed them down and never given them a chance. They cannot tell their story in half an hour. These people have not been brought up in a TV culture. They are talking about trying to get back where they belong.

Although I understand what the hon. member for Lambton-Kent is getting at, I feel that the mechanics involved with his proposal would not fit into the program. Frankly, what I am seeking is greater association and confrontation—and I think that is the right word to use—with our native people. As an individual member of parliament I am prepared to continue doing what I have been doing in the four years since my election here. I have been sitting down with these people, spending my time with them and bringing their problems to the minister. I have had excellent results, as I am sure have other hon. members. We are moving in the right direction, but let us not abandon completely the native representatives who come here time and time again. Different speakers this afternoon have been saying that we are going to be throwing them out and telling Mr. Starblanket and other representatives to get lost because we do not need them. That is not the way to proceed. I respect what the hon. member is trying to do, but I feel that if we throw native leaders out, we will get into a very serious situation. We must not tell them to get lost. We must stay with them.

When we talk about Indian rights and land claims, we must stay with the people themselves but we must get information from them. How can we as a group of 30 or more—it does not say in the motion how many there might be; there could be 100 of us for all I know; I do not know what the Senate representation might be—get across to people in remote areas? That bothers me. I do not think we will. That is why I would be much happier if the hon. member for Lambton-Kent, the hon. member for Moose Jaw and myself could bring people here to Ottawa and give them more time. I am sure those hon. members would agree with me. We are ten minutes ourselves into Heaven knows what.

Sometimes I wonder if we really know where we are going, because we have ourselves tied into a cocoon of committees. The people of Canada want to speak, and I am referring to both Indian and white. However, they are not being given that opportunity. The rules are not just made by the government. We have a system here.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Hear, hear!

Mr. Pearsall: I notice that the hon. member is applauding. I am glad because I think he understands that we must get down to the basics and understand that we are dealing with native people who are not accustomed to the jet set lifestyle we have here, where everything is done by the clock, we are hit with gavels all over the place and where there are bells ringing. We in this place are the crazy ones! We are letting ourselves be tied into things where everything is done in five minute intervals, or more or less, depending upon what we are dealing with.

Let us sit down and analyse this thing properly. I think the minister was quite right when he said that we are negotiating. We are negotiating well. There have been great accomplishments in the past few years. I am glad to know this, and I am sure all hon. members are; but one thing which will really cause us problems and which I do not think will be settled by having this special committee is that hunting and fishing limits will be involved. Those are crucial issues out in British Columbia. The northern gas pipeline will be involved. I know that the hon. member for Lambton-Kent knows this because we have both been members of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. We know what the B.C. chiefs are saying. As a member of that committee I have a responsibility for trying to get a message to them. There are many things in the Indian Act, but a committee of white men cannot deal with them effectively.

In this House this evening is one of our hon. colleagues who knows what this is all about. I do not know whether he will be speaking tonight. I refer to the Minister of State (Environment) (Mr. Marchand). He knows, and I feel very honoured to be associated and working with my colleague. I only hope that he gets an opportunity to speak tonight and to tell the story as he has heard it from his people. We are looking into a mirror, but has anybody ever wondered what is being reflected? I do not think we are getting the real story, and that is why I reject what the hon. member for Lambton-Kent is proposing. I think he has an excellent idea, but its time will come later.

I think the body to deal with these matters should be the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but I hope native people will be given permission to present themselves without any interference from Ottawa because they have been charging Ottawa with interfering all through the years.

I was born on the west coast. I have lived all my life among native people as well as with my own white people. I know the feeling and the stories of the people. I do not want to leave the impression that I am trying to destroy what the hon. member is proposing, but I feel that the mechanics of his motion will not permit what he is asking. I think we should stay with the system we have had. I think we should try to develop that system further. I do want to see the National Indian Brotherhood carry on with what it is doing. I would like to see it spend more time with us, and I feel that the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development is the committee to deal with native questions. However, let there be equal participation. If we do not have that, later it will be said that the whites took over and "did it to us again". I do not think there is a member in this House who would want to have that thrown at him. I understand that there could be hon. members here who represent constituencies which have no native groups, but there are close to three dozen bands within my riding. I must think of those people as I make my decision here tonight.

I feel that I cannot go along with the motion presented by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent because I feel I would be letting down my native friends within my riding who want to get their story across. They do not feel they can get it across by coming to a city or by having a group come to speak for them. That is not their way of life, and I do not think we should impose our way upon them at this crucial moment when we are going to make revisions to the Indian Act. It is about time we made those revisions.

I am not going to take any more time. I think I have put my message across, and I hope my hon. friends understand what I have been saying.

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in the debate on the motion moved by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes) I can say that never in my short tenure in this House have I seen three government members scratch so hard to speak against a motion. They are scratching from the very bottom. I think they are talking out of both sides of their mouths. If any of the hon. members opposite who have spoken today were to come across a mukluk, I do not think they would know whether to eat it or wear it. That is about how much knowledge they have of Indian people.

Since arriving here in Ottawa four short years ago I have been a member of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I represent about 35 Indian reserves. There are more treaty Indians in my riding than in the riding of many other members in this House, and I think I speak with a little bit of authority. I have spent some 32 years living and working with Indian people. Hon. members opposite talk about our great standing committee to which everybody can come. Witnesses appear, we hear them and so forth, but this government is not prepared to meet the Indians on their own ground. The government always wants Indian people to come here to Ottawa. The government wants to control Indian people by remote control.

The hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. Pearsall) spoke about going to reserves in pin-stripe suits. I expect that that is the way he approaches the Indian people. He does not really have an honest feeling about how to deal with the Indian people and with Indian problems.

● (2032)

Time and time again I have seen witnesses appear before the parliamentary committee where they get 20 minutes or half an hour to present their briefs. What action does the standing committee ever take on those briefs? Not one darn bit of action. The brief is presented and that is it; everybody goes away smiling and shaking hands, and the brief gathers dust like so many studies done by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development over the years. The Indian people are studied to death.

I think we would get a tremendous support from the Indian people across Canada for a standing committee which would go out and meet the Indian people on their own terms and on their own ground, instead of them having to come down to Ottawa and meet the fellows in the pin-stripe suits. That is how much regard these fellows have for the Indian people.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, in speaking in favour of the motion, that the Indian people at the community level, at the band level in remote locations, and so on, are the first people of Canada, and we must remember that. But this government is treating them as if they were the last people in Canada. To date the federal government has consistently imposed on the Indian people its policies and programs with little regard for the needs and concerns of the Indians. Policies which originate here in Ottawa dribble through numerous bureaucratic hands before reaching the Indian communities. Of course, when those policies take that route they are bound to fail. The reasons are numerous and obvious to us down here in Ottawa. Unfortunately, they are probably not as obvious to people in the remote locations.

Let me just recount what has taken place in the department in my short tenure of four years here. Today the minister gave us the impression that all is well, everything is going fine, that there is continuity in the work of the department. Let me tell you how much continuity there is in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, just one of the departments with which the Indian people must deal. In the past four years there have been so many changes in the structure and organization of the department that it is very doubtful that there is any continuity in policy for more than two months at a time. We have witnessed in the past four years the appointment of three different ministers in charge of Indian affairs. We still do not have a minister who is quite dry behind the ears in so far as that department is concerned. He has been here for a few months and already he is the expert who knows how to solve all the problems. I wish him well. We have had two different deputy ministers and we have had a change of assistant deputy ministers, all in four short years. And yet the department expects the Indian people to have continuity and control at the band level, to know what is going on and to run their affairs properly.

Let me tell hon. members what happened in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in four years because of the change in administration here in Ottawa. There has been a reorganization of the department, which means that nothing works for the next six months. There has been realignment in the department, which means that nothing works for another six months because everybody is shuffling papers around and moving people from desk to desk. In the meantime, people back in the reserves are not receiving the attention they deserve. Then lo and behold, in comes a new ADM. What is he going to do? He comes up with a program called "Fine Tuning". Again that program changes everything around. Now the latest program is called "Fusion".

Let me tell the House that all that change in the past few years has meant to us here in Ottawa and to the Indian people mass confusion, not fusion. That is exactly what it has meant. One wonders how workable all these activities have made the department. One can be quite sure that all these goings on have only frustrated the Indian people back in the areas where the programs and the moneys have finally dribbled down. As I have mentioned before, these activities frustrated the Indian people who are trying to develop their communities within the confines of a confused and confusing organization, and this is being perpetuated right down through the system.

Indian affairs policies cannot possibly reflect the broad range of cultural, economic and geographical differences of the Indian communities across this country. That is why we must have a committee travelling across the country and getting the feeling of the grass roots people. There is a place and a job for the National Indian Brotherhood and there is a place and a job for the various provincial organizations, such as the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood and the FSI. There are pressure groups and they have their job to do. But there is also a job for the parliamentary committee to hear recommendations of people other than those I just mentioned, such as the NIB and the MIB. They do a good job but they have so much work to do that sometimes they cannot even get to some of the locations that a special standing committee could reach. Decisions cannot be made without due consultation with the Indian people.

The thinking of the department here is that it could develop a program here in Ottawa and send it out to the communities, but only the department can administer the program. This year officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development have said in Ottawa in the committee that they have reduced their spending by 3 per cent. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what that means to the Indian reserves back at the community level where the band council is trying to administer a program and develop band government? It means a reduction of 17 per cent at the band level by the time it dribbles all the way down to them. Their head office is not suffering. It is the band, the people whom the department is supposed to serve, who are suffering. They are the ones who will lose 17 per cent and who will have to lay off 50 per cent of the people to carry out the program. If the program is not carried out properly, department officials say to them: "Apparently you cannot handle this so we will have to step in and send some of our people in to run the program. You people just stand aside. We know how to do it because we have all the experts who know how to handle Indian people and how to do this work".

Recognition by the federal government of the crucial need for Indian input in the determination of programs was not given until the mid-1960s. The formation of regional Indian advisory councils occurred in the late 1960s. The objective of the government was to provide the Indian people with a consulting role with regard to policy and in the area of amendments to the Indian Act. That the government never seriously offered the Indian people more than token gestures of involvement was fully demonstrated in their 1969 policy white paper on Indians. The government's idea of the role of Indians regarding policy was simply that they would administer on the local level policies designed by the department. In fact, the white paper made an absolute mockery of the consultation process that had supposedly occurred.

What the bands want and are after today at the band level is band government. They want to be able to control what goes on in their communities. They are sick and tired of someone arriving in their communities in the morning and leaving at night—the 24-hour experts, I call them. They arrive, lay out some particular program and leave, and that is probably the last the band sees of them. Of course, the individual who arrives from the department does not leave any funds to administer the particular program. He feels the Indian people at the band level should be doing this for nothing because a lot of them are receiving welfare. He feels they should just do the administration work for nothing. The department fails to recognize that when it brings someone in from the regional office the money required is coming from a program, and that money should be going to the Indian people. The government had obviously not been listening to the Indian people because they have been saying this for quite some time, and this is something we do not hear at this level. We just do not get this information.

I sometimes feel that the ideas presented by the Indian people never really get past the regional level, if they ever get that far, for the simple reason that there are too many people in the department who are protecting their own jobs and do not want too much autonomy for some of these bands. Of course, that could be argued, but that is exactly what I have found during the 32 years I have been working with and for the Indian people in northern Manitoba.

When this 1969 white paper came down the Indian people were angry. They certainly felt, and understandably so, betrayed by a government which had made a great pretence of consulting with the Indians. The problems of today can be related to the fact that the Indian people do not trust this government. That is why they are leery of even discussing some things with the government. Trust is something that has to be developed, and it cannot be developed overnight. Trust is something that is developed through years and years of working with these people.

The Indian associations insisted that resources be made available to enable band councils to determine local needs and to run their respective communities. The Indian associations have consistently maintained that only a grass roots approach will work for the Indian people. This requires a decentralization of the top heavy Indian Affairs structure, and a true partnership between the Department of Indian Affairs and the band councils. A far more flexible approach to policy formation is also necessary.

However, not until 1974 were band councils given serious recognition. The band council was finally viewed as a distinct political body, legally elected with a number of important functions. The band could raise and spend funds, could hire band staff, contract with other levels of government and administer a variety of programs. However, the programs were and are still predominantly those designed by the Department of Indian Affairs. Although the government's intentions seemed laudable on paper, the Indian people were still rather concerned, and they are now, about any real input they had in the development of their communities. This is a very strong feeling.

The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and an increasingly wide array of other federal agencies still dominate the situation at the band level. They make plans and the numerous agents fly in and out of the reserve, foisting their plans on communities in a largely uncoordinated fashion. The band councils have numerous local concerns to deal with, and it is unrealistic to expect that any and all band councils can deal with all these agents and plans in a reasonably coherent manner. A major goal of the Indian people remains that of realizing a community development plan which ultimately results in autonomous, self-sufficient communities.

I would like now to deal briefly with education in particular communities. In many of the communities we know that education has been in the limelight for several years, simply because of the approach this government has taken toward education of the Indian people. Under the terms of the Indian Act, and as stated in various treaties, the federal government has legal responsibility for Indian education.

Traditionally the government's concept of education for the Indian people has been dangerously narrow in scope, and consequently most ineffectual. The government's attempt to assimilate Indians through education has had numerous disastrous effects, not the least of which has been high drop-out rates and general disdain for a system which is alien and rejects their own cultural values.

For more than a hundred years Indian education has been directed and controlled by churches and/or the federal government. Generations of Indian people will recall being shipped out long distances as children to attend a variety of residential schools, mission schools, boarding schools and industrial schools. The sense of helplessness and loneliness experienced by children cut off from their families and communities remains a blight on our history. Every attempt was made to negate their cultural identity and the values with which they had been raised. Their language rights were eroded by teachers who discouraged the children from speaking their own mother tongue. They were subjected to literature that depicted their culture and values in a distorted and often negative fashion. The fact that Indian people have made valuable contributions to history was a fact simply overlooked by their educators. The lack of well qualified teachers and the often dismal and inadequate facilities only compounded the problem.

Well aware of the failures, the federal government decided in the late 1940s to take a more active interest in the education of Indian children. The major objective of that interest, however, was to bring Indian children into the mainstream of the dominant society. The policy was that of enforced assimilation, with a resultant loss of all Indian cultural identity. Once again parental and community wishes were entirely overlooked. This system which has denied the Indian people any control over the lives of their children has, of course, resulted in a massive failure.

Once again the federal government was faced with the failure of its educational policies. In the late 1960s the department decided that some participation by Indian people in the education of their children was required. The notion that their children needed to be integrated into the mainstream was still dominating the department's policies and was, in fact, even further reinforced. The trend was now to integrate children into the provincial school systems. Federal-provincial contracts were formulated without consulting the parents or the Indian people generally. Indian participation was evidently no more than a token gesture. It was the Indian people themselves that initiated the most important developments in education, beginning in the late 1960s.

I see that my time is drawing to a close, Mr. Speaker, but I have one letter here from Oxford House and I would like to refer to one small part of it. This explains why we should have a committee able to travel to these reserves. This letter concerns a school that closed down because the roads were in such terrible condition that the school bus could no longer use them. The letter is signed by Chief Jack Grieves of Oxford House and four of his councillors. Today that school is still not open and the children are not attending because of the policies of this federal Indian affairs department.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity of speaking for a few moments on the motion of the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes). I do not suggest that I support the motion, but I certainly welcome the opportunity to speak on it and to make one or two comments about the speech of the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith).

For him to portray himself as the only one who represents a large number of Indian bands or status Indians is an utter falsehood. We have many members on this side of the House who represent large numbers of Indian bands. My own constituency alone has 4,000 status Indians and about 12 Indian bands. For the hon. member to make the suggestion that he or certain members on his side of the House are the only people to have an opportunity to visit band councils and to meet with the native people is certainly unjustified.

I want to pay special tribute to the parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Milne), who has had an opportunity to meet on one of the Indian reserves in Algoma riding, the Mississauga reserve, with chiefs from several bands to discuss special problems that affect bands throughout the Algoma-Manitoulin area, because he certainly did an excellent job. Contrary to what the hon. member for Churchill said, he was able to effect many changes that were raised at the meeting.

The hon. member for Churchill talks about mass confusion in the Department of Indian Affairs. I cannot think of anything that would prejudice the consultations and negotiations which are going on now between the National Indian Brotherhood and the department with regard to amendments to the Indian Act than to send out a committee across the country before these negotiations and consultations are completed. The hon. member for Churchill portrays practically every employee of the Department of Indian Affairs as a blackhearted wretch. He did not actually use those words, but he as much as said that every individual in the department does not have the best interests of the Indian bands at heart. That is a false concept because, surely, we have many dedicated public servants who are doing an excellent job working with band councils and Indian groups to improve the situation on the Indian reserves. It certainly does not take very long for the chiefs and councillors and band council members to tell you which ones are which.

The motion before the House is to set up a special committee to consider and report on the Indian Act and what revisions or amendments should be made in that regard. In 1968-69 there was very extensive consultation across the country which involved the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras). It was a very valuable exercise, but the important thing now is for the department and the minister to have consultations with the National Indian Brotherhood and other groups across the country and to bring before parliament the proposed amendments resulting from those consultations. If you were to send a committee out across the country at this stage, it would only negate those consultations and confuse the issue rather than result in constructive amendments to the act.

I would like now to put the problem in its proper perspective. A few years ago an incident occurred in my constituency where many young people aged 18, 19 and 20 years suddenly found that they could vote in the federal election at the time the provincial and federal law for voting age was changed from 21 to 18. I had presented a private member's bill to lower the voting age for status Indians in the elections of band councils and chiefs. The bill was on the order paper for a couple of years. I believe that practically everybody in the country, including most members of the National Indian Brotherhood, band councillors and certainly young people who are deprived of voting at age 18, 19 or 20 at the present time, would like to see that amendment become law.

The National Indian Brotherhood has made it very clear—and I have received feedback to this effect—that they do not want to open the act up on a piecemeal basis, making changes here and there with only one or two changes actually being effected. This, in effect, is what we would be doing if we were to pass an amendment like that of the private member's bill. The National Indian Brotherhood wants to negotiate with the department and the minister amendments to the entire act.

This afternoon the hon. member for Lambton-Kent portrayed the Indian bands and Indian reserves by laying out all their difficulties, the social and economic problems with which they are faced. Well, we are working to improve the situation, and if hon. members will look back just eight or ten years, the period of time that I have been a member in this House, they will see some dramatic and impressive changes that have occurred, at least in my constituency. Perhaps the most impressive in that regard is the kind of leadership which has developed to make this progress, to provide for social amenities on the Indian reserves. It seems to me that this leadership has sprung up because in the old days it was simply a case of the band council acting as an advisory group to the Indian agent who ran the whole show.

Today, however, we have Indian bands operating many programs such as housing, education, economic development, direct employment, nursing homes, parks and recreational facilities. There has been a tremendous step forward in this area over the past eight or ten years, and the band councils have proven their ability to operate extensive and complicated programs that are often much more complicated, at least in my area, than those operated by a municipal council of comparable size. We would be remiss if we did not point out that kind of progress.

The area to be most concerned about in the future is economic development, especially for the remote reserves where it is difficult for band members to find employment. This has to be a chief concern of the department, the minister and all of us, because if people do not have job opportunities the system breaks down.

I want to congratulate the Indian bands on the facilities they are providing for their band council members. A few weeks ago I had an opportunity to attend the official opening of a recreational and cultural facility at the Sagamok reserve. There was also a new band administrative centre with firehall and police station, an excellent facility. Other bands throughout the Algoma-Manitoulin area have provided equivalent facilities as well.

Another reserve I would like to mention is the one adjacent to Sault Ste. Marie, where the Batchewana band have built an excellent recreational complex, administrative centre and industrial park where many small light service industries are locating. This not only provides a tax base for that band but provides jobs. There is much progress being made, but we have a considerable way to go.

• (2102)

As for the economic development aspect, when we get around to making amendments to the Indian Act I think it is very important that we provide power for band councils to be able to lease property on the reserve. I understand from what the minister has said that it is the plan that band councils be given the power, substantially, to lease land without having a surrender vote, although if they actually sold land they would need to have a surrender vote. That is one of the important issues that was raised with the parliamentary secretary at the reserve meeting held in Mississauga last November.

Another thing that we want to see established is post-secondary education. In northeastern Ontario we have been watching a battle to ensure that funding is provided for post-secondary education this fall. There is some concern that when we amend the Indian Act, whatever regulation or statute is established will ensure that post-secondary education receives the same consideration that public and elementary school education receives now. The uncertainty there is about this is a great hardship to the people involved and it is undesirable at a time of high unemployment. I think it is important that the matter be clarified, as the minister has indicated it will be in the near future.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, the motion before us to establish a special committee to roam the country at a time when consultations are taking place is premature. I do not think the motion should pass. The minister has indicated that he hopes to bring in amendments to the act, perhaps next year, and to get substantial agreement with the National Indian brotherhood later this year. That is the procedure to follow. The bill would come before parliament after agreement has been reached with the national association and various representatives of native groups could appear before the committee. That is the positive, constructive and least confusing way to proceed on this most important matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the minister's contribution to this debate earlier in the day, there is no doubt in my mind that the reference of the Indian Act to a special parliamentary committee as proposed by my colleague the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes) is even more of a necessity than I believed.

It is obvious from the minister's remarks that if this act is to be amended with the full participation of the Indian community, they must be provided with a forum where they can make their views known, where all aspects can be dealt with, not in camera but under the full scrutiny of public opinion. It is to be hoped that this would force the minister, his advisers and members of the government to give the revision the priority it should have and which they have denied it to date.

This afternoon the minister scoffed at the idea of a committee such as this and derided its potential value. He did not think the Indian Act needed further study. He said that no other matter has been studied so much, unless it be the constitution. I would say to the minister, as he probably knows, that after a year and a half of urgings and motions from this side of the House, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has finally agreed to set up a special parliamentary committee to deal with constitutional matters. I hope the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner) will see the wisdom of that move by the Prime Minister, belated though it is, and that he will reverse his position on the motion before us.

Sir, the minister said that he would rather build on the work that had been done prior to the breakdown of the NIB-cabinet joint committee. He went on to outline what had actually been achieved but then treated us to a review of the various matters which had been dealt with, the various attempts that had been made, which in his own words had foundered.

In lieu of a special parliamentary committee working on this necessary revision, the minister plans to soldier on by himself, and his closing remarks were: "I would hope to have some proposals by the fall". Pious hopes by the minister are no substitute for action and involvement—no longer good enough for the native people who have had to bear the inconsistencies and bureaucratic strictures of the Indian Act for far too long. They must be provided with a new forum, a special forum in which to make their views known, and a special parliamentary committee could perform that function.

I want to deal particularly with the discriminatory clauses in the Indian Act, clauses which relate to band membership and particularly as they apply to Indian women. The minister mentioned these clauses. He said in response to a question from the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) that he would tell him and the House how this matter—these discriminatory clauses—would be dealt with, but then he never did.

I should like to refer the minister and the House to a special publication put out in April of this year by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women entitled "Indian Women and the Law in Canada: Citizens Minus". The preface reads as follows:

> When native women in Canada realized that there was no documentation of the discrimination against us we requested the assistance of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women. We asked them to work with us jointly in our efforts to prepare this documentation.

The result was the booklet I have referred to. Later in this publication there appears the following passage:

> For one hundred and nine years Indian women in Canada have been subject to a law which discriminates against them on the grounds of race, sex and marital status.

For the past nine years various attempts have beem made to revise the Indian Act in order to rid the act of its discriminatory clauses. To date, none of this has met with success. As my colleague the hon. member for Lambton-Kent has already outlined, there was the federal government white paper in 1969 which was received with outrage and hostility by the Indian community.

Several years later, in 1974, a committee of the National Indian Brotherhood under the chairmanship of Harold Cardinal, then president of the Alberta Indian Association, prepared a draft revised act which recommended that discrimination be removed from the act and that Indian women not lose status on marriage.

In 1975, a joint committee of the government and the NIB was set up to revise the Indian Act and the whole issue of Indian women and band membership became a political football in their negotiations. So ineffective was the work of that committee that the NIB withdrew from it this spring, claiming that it was a charade and that they had not received one major decision from the government in the entire time they had been working on it. Its attempts, as the minister said, "had foundered".

I have always believed—indeed, I have spoken about this before in the House—that Indians themselves should have the primary input into any redraft of the Indian Act. That is why I put so much hope into the work of that joint committee and why I regret its collapse. Now some other vehicle must be found which will enable us to remove, once and for all, the very real discrimination that exists against Indian women.

I have met with many groups of Indian women on this subject and others, but particularly on this subject. I have been greatly encouraged and amazed by the solidarity of both status and non-status women in the way in which they are working together to resolve their problems as women. I have met individual Indians who are deeply affected by the injustice of the Indian Act. I think of women like Mary Two-Axe Early of the Caughnawaga reserve who told me, sadly but indeed angrily, that it is easier for the dogs to be buried on the reserve than it is for her, a full-blooded Indian who has been stripped of her status. So while committees are formed, talk and collapse, the Indian women are forced to sit in frustration.

The Advisory Council on the Status of Women in the report I have mentioned said this at page 91 about the now defunct joint committee:

> The NIB in the present joint government-Indian negotiations to revise the Indian Act, has refused to allow status or non-status native women's organizations to be represented in these negotiations. Curiously the federal government does not see anything at all amiss with the fact that the NIB can unilaterally make such a decision. As "Indians" meant only males to the governments in the past, so it is today.

And, as that report further points out:

> This denial of the human rights of Indian women on the part of both the government and the NIB has been compounded by the fact that this same government has carefully excluded any possible recourse in law by removing the Indian Act from the reach of the new Human Rights Act which came into force on March 1, 1978. Indian women have nowhere to turn and are denied the basic human rights enjoyed by other Canadians.

After nine years of talk about changing the law, Indian women are still suffering from its discriminatory clauses. The best known of these is section 12(1)(b). I am sure as many members realize that infamous clause states that, upon marriage to a white man, an Indian woman must leave the reservation, may not own property on the reserve, must give up any property she does own, cannot inherit any property, cannot take part in band business, cannot have her children recognized as Indian, is prevented from returning to live with her family even if she is poverty-stricken, ill, widowed or divorced, and finally loses the right to burial on the reserve.

Canadians, native and non-native alike, can and have been concerned about this one section of the law which most people in the country consider discriminatory. But what about all the other sections that have not generated a hue and cry, the ones that we have not raised a fuss about, probably because many of us are unaware that they exist? That whole section of the Indian Act which deals with definition and registration of Indians, sections 5 to 17, needs close scrutiny to see just how much injustice exists for both men and women.

For example, the 1951 revision introduced a new system of registration on band lists. I will not go into the problems this created when many people were left off the lists because of inadequate and faulty registration procedures. But suffice to say that persons, men and women, who were legally entitled to be included were left off. That particular effort split families and caused major disruptions in Indian communities.

The sections regarding band lists are in themselves discriminatory. Section 10 states:

> Where the name of a male person is included in, omitted from, added to or deleted from a band list or general list, the names of his wife and his minor children shall also be included, omitted, added or deleted, as the case may be.

Does this section not have just as much built-in discrimination as section 12(1)(b)?

And what about section 12(b), which states:

> The addition to a band list of the name of an illegitimate child may be protested at any time within 12 months after the addition, and if upon the protest it is decided that the father of the child was not an Indian, the child is not entitled to be registered.

Should we not be just as concerned about the rights of an illegitime child whose paternal antecedents it may be difficult to prove? These are but two examples of further discrimination within these clauses. If we were to examine the act clause by clause, many questions indeed similar to these would be raised.

The punitive and discriminatory clauses against Indian women and children might be more acceptable, or at least they might seem less unjust, if they were, in fact, a result of tribal custom or tradition, if it were a law that the Indians themselves had imposed. But it is not such a law. Rather it is a white man's law, imposed at white man's convenience, in order to encourage and speed up the process of assimilation of the Indian with the white man.

The Indian Act, as originally handed down in the late eighteen hundreds and subsequently amended, is based upon a patrilineal descent model. In this regard, the act may be seen as an extension of white Canadian colonial policy, for traditionally not all native peoples were organized along these lines. Iroquoian and many northwest coastal groups, for examples, emphasized matrilineal descent, and women in these societies maintained focal economic and political roles. By legislating these roles to males, the Indian Act represented, and continues to represent, imposition and interference by the federal government.

The process of assimilation of the Indians was seen by the settlers as a good thing. It was to Christianize and civilize them. Furthermore, the Indian women made good wives since they knew much more than the white men, such as how to survive the harsh conditions of the new country.

But that process of assimilation that was beneficial to the white settlers has not been beneficial to Indian communities. The traditional and essentially unchanged emphasis on family relationships in Indian communities must not be underestimated. Traditionally it is the Indian women who transmit Indian cultural values and language from one generation to the next. The enfranchisement of Indian women, the loss of their status, represents a great loss to the Indian community.

When this act was drawn up and even when it was amended, assimilation was the name of the game. Between its lines it is easy to sense the attitude of its framers, namely that in the long run it would be best for Indians to merge quietly into the rest of Canadian society. For example, section 15 of the present act provides a kind of lump sum payment to Indians who give up their legal status as such. That is not quite a bribe to deny their Indian identity, but it is certainly very close to one.

Many Indians in the past who opted for enfranchisement have done so without realizing the full consequences of their act. They did not realize that along with the lump sum payment went virtual banishment from the reserve and its amenities. It has become more and more obvious in recent years, as Indian groups have become more and more vocal about their rights and their heritage, that assimilation in white society and blind acceptance of white society's values is the last thing that the Indian wants.

It is time for the Indian Act to undergo total revision so that it can incorporate the desires and demands of the Indian community as to the kind of status they have in relation to the rest of Canadian society, and it must be spelled out clearly so all those who live under its mandate will be aware of all the consequences and implications of the various sections.

● (2122)

In this regard, it is indeed interesting to note what the advisory council's report has to say about the way in which the Indian Act is perceived by many Indians. It says and I quote:

> Indian Rights for Indian Women is at present considering options for a definition of membership which would replace the present discriminatory sections of the Indian Act. Their work is complicated by the fact that neither Indian women nor Indian men have much knowledge of the contents of the Indian Act, if indeed they have heard of it at all. Even if they possess a copy of it, it is phrased in tortuous English which is very difficult to understand even if one's first language is English.
> From 345 questionnaires administered by six native women researchers it was found that 49 per cent of both men and women had never heard of the Indian Act. Of the 51 per cent who had, less than half had ever read the act. Sixty-one per cent of the native people interviewed had a relative or close friend who had lost his or her Indian status and 86 per cent of these were through marriage. Only 16 per cent agreed with the present method of according status only through the male.

Considering how the Indian Act affects so many aspects of these people's lives, it is incredible that they should be allowed to remain in ignorance of its provisions. Can one picture the banking community being as ignorant of the Bank Act or as ignored in its drafting?

It is important that the needs and desires of the Indians themselves be taken into consideration in the review and redrafting of the Indian Act. That is what our proposed committee would do—solicit the views of the Indian community, including the women. This committee would deal with all aspects of the Indian Act, but especially those clauses which so blatantly discriminate against women. It would listen to the demands of the Indian women's organizations. So far these demands have been ignored. As the advisory council report points out:

> To be born poor, an Indian and a female is to be a member of the most disadvantaged minority in Canada today, a citizen minus. It is to be victimized and utterly powerless, and to be, by government decree, without legal recourse of any kind.

That such a situation should exist in Canada today is appalling. We Canadians are often smug about such matters. We are prone to look down our noses at other countries where discimination is practised and to pretend that we are so tolerant. However, we can take no pride in our supposed tolerance so long as the blatant discrimination that is in the Indian Act remains on our statute books.

In removing those discriminatory sections of the act, and in seeking real input from the Indian community in the review and overhaul of the entire act, the committee that we are proposing would enhance our credibility as a nation concerned with human rights. If the committee did its work well, it might even begin to erode some of the distrust that the Indian community has felt toward the white man and his government for so long.

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on the motion and comment on some of the viewpoints expressed by members opposite as well as to set out one or two ideas which I hold personally about revision of the Indian Act.

I feel strongly that to support the motion put forward by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes) would not be in the best interest of the parliamentary process or of the Indian people themselves. When speaking earlier this day, the minister said it was his view that it would be much more constructive and productive to set out some concrete proposals so that when they were referred to the committee, it could take positive action. That is the correct course and I, personally, very much endorse it.

The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) went to some length to take credit for having gotten the government to adopt the procedure whereby they established a committee to study the constitution. I draw to her attention that it is the procedure which the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner) is following in the constitutional question where some very specific proposals are being put forward for consideration.

If the process put forward by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent had been followed in the constitution, the whole process would not go very far. It would not be very effective and would not serve this House very well in addressing a badly needed subject. I just make the comment that I think the parallel is here.

The minister said earlier today that a number of areas have been identified with the Indian leadership where there is agreement in terms of revising the act, and that these can move forward. Indeed, the minister said it is hoped that by next year these can be put together in some form. Whether that form will be a bill, white paper, a series of proposals or whatever, at that point it would be referred to the committee. The committee would then have something useful to work with.

I would like to argue—and I am glad that my friend, the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. Pearsall), who spoke earlier shares this view—that rather than have a special parliamentary committee consisting of members of this House and the other place, the proper committee would be the standing committee.

In discussing this with the Indian leadership, particularly the president of the National Indian Brotherhood, today, he drew to our attention that a good deal is required in the educational process before we can effectively deal with some of these matters. he has a very good point.

With regard to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, those who have been members of that committee for four years or longer and regularly attend and participate are a good deal more effective than members who join it in the short term. They have had the opportunity to listen to many different points of view. In their duties, they have met many of the Indian leadership people, band chiefs and councils and have travelled to many of the reserves. There is a good deal of expertise in the standing committee. It would be better to refer the matter there than to establish a new committee.

It is good that the hon. member for Lambton-Kent has put this motion before us for debate. It has given members of all parties the opportunity to put forward their points of view on the revision on the Indian Act. In so doing, I thought a number of his colleagues would have had some positive and creative suggestions to offer in terms of revising the act rather than rehashing some of the old issues that may or may not be related to revising that act.

I would like to comment on some of the remarks made by members opposite in order to clear up the point about the fact that the minister was not following what was agreed to in the standing committee. I refer the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) and the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) to the proceedings of the standing committee for Thursday, May 4. While discussing the establishment of a committee, the chairman concluded the discussion by saying, and I quote:

> I think we would have to have an order of the House, No. 1, referring the Annual Report; No. 2, authorizing us to engage additional staff; No. 3, allowing us to travel. But these are matters which would have to be discussed by the steering committee and I would suggest that we hold a meeting shortly for that purpose. Is that agreed?

The committee agreed to that. Out of the steering committee came agreement that if the estimates were terminated as has been scheduled, it would ask for a reference to the standing committee of the annual report. If the time for consideration of the estimates was to be extended, it would not so ask. Therefore, no request to the House was made for a reference and that committee was never formulated.

Members opposite made a number of points regarding discrimination against Indian women. I do not want to in any way misquote the hon. member for Lambton-Kent, but I think he made the comment that this question was addressed mainly or specifically to discrimination in the act against Indian women. It is certainly the intention of the minister when contemplating revision of the act to consider the whole question of the rights of Indian men, women and children, matrimonial contracts, property laws and a number of related issues.

The hon. member for Kingston and The Islands spoke at some length on this question. I think she gave the impression that everyone in the Indian community was excited about the possibility that this process would be completed very quickly and that it would be simple. The issue is a good deal more complex than the hon. lady suggests and there is not unanimous agreement among the reserves with respect to it. One of the Indian leaders with whom I had a conversation earlier—she is in the gallery this evening—made the point that there is considerable opposition to it. The government would proceed very slowly and carefully on this question and consider it in the broadest context, rather than within the somewhat narrow limits which were set out during the debate.

The present act contains an almost unbelievable number of anachronisms which must date back a long way. Perhaps I might be allowed to put two or three examples on the record. Under section 32, for example, an Indian may not sell agricultural produce from a reserve in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta without permission. The section reads:

> A transaction of any kind whereby a band or any member thereof purports to sell, barter, exchange, give or otherwise dispose of cattle or other animals, grain or hay whether wild or cultivated or root crops or plants or other products from a reserve in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta to a person other than a member of that band is void unless the superintendent approves the transaction in writing.

Under section 120 an Indian child who does not attend school regularly become a juvenile delinquent. The section states:

> An Indian child who is expelled or suspended from school or who refuses or fails to attend school regularly shall be deemed to be juvenile delinquent within the meaning of the Juvenile Delinquents Act.

There are many provisions of this type which need to be changed in order to bring the legislation more in keeping with the times and with the increased maturity of the Indian people.

I am somewhat concerned that so many of the contributions made in the debate today should have referred back to the white paper. Their intention seemed to be to make the point that revisions to the act would probably be a rehash of the white paper. Surely, from the minister's statement, it is apparent that the intention is completely the opposite. The intention is to give more authority to the band councils and to the elected people on the reserves so that they themselves can make the decisions which affect their day to day operations, their cultural identity and the preservation of their culture.

It seems to me the thrust of the amendments will be in the opposite direction to that suggested by a number of speakers. It is a disservice to the process in which we are about to engage to rehash all the negative aspects of the white paper rather than look positively on the situation the government is creating through a new Indian Act.

I think it was the hon. member for Moose Jaw who quoted from a conversation with Chief Ahenakew a couple of years ago during which the chief said, in effect: "We don't want any handouts, we don't want any welfare because welfare is destroying our people; what we want is opportunity, encouragement, responsibility to make decisions on our own; we look to the future when native people would be self-reliant and able through their own endeavours to take care of themselves."

The hon. member then went on to discuss the shortcomings of the endeavours of the government to assist the Indian economy. Everyone is concerned about the low average income of the Indian people. I am sure all hon. members will support the efforts being made to improve that situation. The Indian economic development fund has certainly had its problems, but we should in fairness acknowledge that within the white business community there are substantial numbers of failures; not every project financed by the private sector is a success.

While there have been difficulties and some failures, there have also been a number of outstanding successes not only from a financial point of view but also from the point of view of increased confidence and experienced leadership developed as a result of this program. So I really think this has been one of the more positive of the department's undertakings. This is not to say that changes are not needed in the way the fund is administered or even in the concept of the fund. It seems to me it is important that members should think this issue through at the present time because there is a strong relationship between the future development of this project and the revisions to the act which are now being considered.

The minister, along with other members, commented on the Indian socio-economic development strategy report issued last December by the National Indian Brotherhood. This was really the product of extensive consultation within the Indian community across the country and it seems a number of revisions to the act would be required to meet its objectives. For one thing, there is certainly a need to clarify the status of legal contracts, whether, in fact, corporations would have full legal status, what is the legal position of corporations, whether they would have the right to sue Indian people involved in economic development where moneys are owing, and what rights Indian people enjoy before the courts. There is a direct relationship between all these questions and the revisions which, perhaps, should be made to the act to enable certain changes to be accomplished.

It seems to me one of the most welcome changes to the Indian Act is the one the minister mentioned today which would give the bands more authority to deal with land. I do not mean by that severances or surrender or outright sale, but certainly there might be opportunity for bands entering into economic development projects to set aside for a time parcels of land which could be used for equity purposes and, hopefully, draw in a much higher rate of private financing than has been available previously. In the private sector, once land is assembled, it is used as a basis for equity against borrowing. It is extremely difficult for Indians to do this under present procedures. If there were provision for negotiated agreements with the bands, the more mature bands would certainly be able to make decisions with regard to the type of economic development they wished to undertake. However, they will certainly need more control over the use of land than they have at the present time if land is to be considered an asset and key in terms of promoting better economic development.

What we are proposing in relation to legal status of bands and transfer of powers and responsibilities is something which extends beyond the notion of developing band government for Indian people. It is something which promises to reach to the heart of the social and economic development of the Indian people. Mr. Ahenakew has made a plea for Indian people to be provided the opportunity, encouragement and responsibility to make their own decisions, thereby becoming self-reliant and able through their own endeavours to take care of themselves. It is our job to make that possible. I am sure all hon. members in this House are dedicated to doing that in terms of leadership within the Indian community.

I want to join other hon. members who have spoken in this debate in paying tribute to the leadership given to Canada through this government by the Minister of State (Environment) (Mr. Marchand). He is the only Indian in the cabinet and, I believe, in the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in the three minutes which are left to me there is little opportunity to discuss two other matters which are very vital parts of the Indian Act. Perhaps I should say they should be vital parts of the Indian Act or at least of Indian policy. The matters to which I am referring deal with housing and health.

I heard the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Milne) and of the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner). I heard them criticize the speeches which have been made today by hon. members of the official opposition, and I can only say that I am very disappointed. Because I have taken the time to listen to and to read the speech by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes), and I feel that his speech was on a very high and constructive level. The criticism he made was of a constructive nature. There was nothing in his speech which hit below the belt, a habit we see very frequently opposite.

It is my opinion—and it is shared by others—that the hon. member for Thunder Bay, who I suppose has periodically served on the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development and who has been parliamentary secretary to the minister, is probably still of the opinion that a potlatch is something to secure the lid of his Tupperware.

I was surprised at the remarks of the parliamentary secretary this evening. He said that he thinks perhaps some changes could be made here and that perhaps some changes could be made there. That is a clear indication of the thinking of this government. It is patchwork thinking in Indian affairs whether it deals with economic programs, social programs, health or housing. It is patchwork, make-work and ineffective.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 58(9) to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the motion.

The question is on the motion in the name of the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes). All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Holmes) which was negatived on the following division:

LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS FOR MR. SHCHARANSKY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of new reports that the trial of Anatoly Shcharansky, who has now completed 15 months in jail, is about to begin, and in keeping with the support which this House has shown for Mr. Shcharansky and his activities on behalf of human rights in resolutions unanimously adopted on February 8 and March 2 of this year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

That the Government of Canada, conscious of the serious ramifications to east-west relations which this trial will have, publicly repeat its offer to grant immediate landed immigrant status to Mr. Shcharansky and that it remind the U.S.S.R. of its obligations to uphold human rights in accordance with commitments it voluntarily undertook in the Helsinki Final Act.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

"ROYAL" NEWFOUNDLAND CONSTABULARY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the government of Newfoundland, through official channels, has requested that the Government of Canada take such actions as are necessary to request permission from Her Majesty the Queen to permit the use of the prefix "Royal" in the title of the Newfoundland constabulary, so that the Newfoundland constabulary could thereafter be known as the Royal Newfoundland Constabulary representing one of the oldest police forces in North America, still policing St. John's, the oldest city in North America, and in view of the fact that this request was first made in August, 1977, and passed on to the Secretary of State for Canada in that month with an acknowledgment from him on November 7, 1977, but nothing further has transpired despite correspondence since, and in view of the fact that Her Majesty the Queen is scheduled to visit Newfoundland and St. John's in July, at which time the recognition of the oldest police force in North America by permission to use the prefix "Royal" would be most appropriate to be celebrated, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House of Commons supports the request of the government of Newfoundland and the Monarchist League of Newfoundland for a request to be made for the addition of the prefix "Royal" to the title of the Newfoundland constabulary and that this request be made and arrangements completed, if the request is accepted, so that an appropriate ceremony can be held during the visit of Her Majesty the Queen to St. John's, Newfoundland, on July 26, 1978.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

LEGISLATION PROHIBITING AID TO COUNTRIES VIOLATING HUMAN RIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That in view of the representations of the Latin American Working Group supported by the churches and other organizations, and in view of the second anniversary of the Soweto affair, that the government bring forward for immediate debate Bill C-371 which received first reading in October, 1977, which prohibits chartered banks and Crown agencies from extending loans and other assistance to foreign countries continually violating human rights, of which Chile and South Africa are two notorious illustrations.

DUTY ON STEEL BEAMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerning the dumping duty on wide-flange steel beams. As British Columbia Steel fabricators can only acquire a fraction of their requirements from Canadian mills, as offshore steel prices are already higher than Canadian prices, and since offshore steel prices plus dumping duty make it impossible for the industry in B.C. to survive, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke):

That wide-flange steel entering through B.C. ports be exempt all dumping duty immediately.

CLOSING OF OXFORD HOUSE SCHOOL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgency. For the second time in four months the Oxford House school has been closed, thus depriving 370 students of completing the term. Road conditions on the Oxford House reserve are in such a deplorable state that the chief and council took this action to prevent injury to students travelling on school buses. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

That the minister take immediate action to provide funds and expertise to repair the roads on the Oxford House reserve so that the 370 students can complete their term.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

INCREASE IN SALARIES OF STAFF—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

In light of the revelation that the directors and staff of the Anti-Inflation Board have demanded an 11.5 per cent increase in salaries, including a substantial catch-up provision already approved by Treasury Board and listed in the estimates, and since this is completely contrary to the purpose and spirit of the anti-inflation program, therefore this House calls on the government to roll back the salary provision for the Anti-Inflation Board staff to the statutory maximum of 6 per cent.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

EFFECTS OF INFLATION ON INCOMES OF CANADIANS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance: it arises from the statement made yesterday by the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, Mr. Renouf. He confirmed it is likely there will be at least 7½ per cent inflation rate this October compared to the previous October. He went on to state that he thinks sometimes there has to be an actual decline in real incomes for the workers of Canada, referring to the fact that the 6 per cent ceiling would result in such a real income decline for our workers.

Will the Minister of Finance indicate if this, in fact, is the attitude of the government, that the workers of Canada should be prepared to accept a real income reduction? If inflation is 7½ per cent, and they abide by a 6 per cent ceiling, it will mean a $200 average reduction in earnings and in real buying power for the workers of Canada. At 9 per cent it will be a $400 reduction.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we said yesterday or the day before, when discussing the figures of inflation, that internal inflation in Canada is 6.2 per cent. I have stated many times that it is not possible to guarantee that everyone in Canada will be protected against inflation which is imported. That is a policy which cannot be achieved. When inflation is not caused within our own economy—for example, when prices increase elsewhere—it is impossible to protect everybody in Canada against such inflation.

Mr. Stevens: The Minister of Finance is, in effect, confirming the loss of real buying power that our workers may experience. Surely even he agrees they have to continue to eat and heat their homes. Does the minister support the salary increase that the AIB have taken unto themselves which results in an 11.5 per cent, in effect, salary increase when all contracts are taken into account? Bearing in mind that the 6 per cent ceiling was generally presented as something that all workers in Canada were to abide by, why does the AIB get an 11.5 per cent increase?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I did not have time to talk to Mr. Renouf this morning. However, I understand he does not accept the proposition that those working for the AIB are receiving such an increase. I understand he is going to deny that. I will be in touch with him to verify this. It would not be acceptable that they receive that level of increase, if that is the case. In any event, I will be talking with Mr. Renouf as quickly as I can.

• (1117)

Mr. Stevens: Again to the Minister of Finance. As Mr. Renouf's explanation yesterday with respect to the 11.5 per cent increase was that people are on contracts as opposed to receiving an actual wage, would the minister tell us whether the figure mentioned is the actual figure, whether on a contract basis or otherwise and, if so, will he order that it be rolled back so that there may be at least some equity attached to the government's plan to hold people to a 6.5 per cent ceiling?

Mr. Chrétien: I said I would look into that. I cannot accept the accuracy of the figure at this time because I have not spoken to Mr. Renouf. I understand it is not the case. Of course, if he has granted increases which are outside the allocation permitted under the AIB, I will look into the matter and act accordingly.

STUDY OF RATE OF INFLATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Yesterday, the chairman of the Economic Council, announcing the setting up of the new centre for the study of inflation and productivity, said the centre would be concerned with studying the reasons for the underlying rate of inflation, the components of which, of course, include food and energy. Considering that these two represent one-third of the basket which makes up the consumer price index and 60 per cent of the total increase in the rate of inflation over the past year, I ask the Prime Minister whether this is some kind of sick joke at the expense of Canadian consumers. If not, who will look into the cause of the serious increase in the price of food which is weighing so heavily on consumers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not have the benefit of having the text of the lady's press conference before me, so I cannot check the context in which she said those words. If, as the Minister of Finance has just indicated, it was an assertion that no government could guarantee to indemnify all Canadians against higher costs abroad, that is the only reasonable position one can take. It is impossible for the government to guarantee that they will be held safe from price increases which appear in energy or food coming from abroad. Any attempt to the contrary would be mere hypocrisy.

Mr. McGrath: The Prime Minister did not have the same inhibitions a few years ago when the government established the Food Prices Review Board with complete investigatory powers to look into the underlying reasons for inflation in food prices. Now we are to have the ridiculous situation in which another agency, employing 75 people, will have no authority to look into food prices or energy prices. Moreover, we were told yesterday that the Anti-Inflation Board will continue to exist into the eighties, yet neither agency will concern itself with the price of food.

On behalf of Canadian consumers who can expect nothing but higher prices this summer, I suggest to the Prime Minister that the same criteria must surely exist now as existed when the Food Prices Review Board was established by the government. Does the government intend, at the very least, to direct the Economic Council to concern itself with the prices of food and energy which are of major interest to consumers?

Mr. Trudeau: The food monitoring action which was taken some years ago had to with gouging and excess profits in the distribution and processing industries in Canada. It has nothing to do with the high cost of food produced abroad, for the reason that it is impossible to force foreigners to accept what we think to be a fair price. If the hon. member made as great an effort at understanding as he seems to make at misunderstanding, I think this debate would be more easily understood by Canadians.

Mr. McGrath: I am trying to get the government to take a position which Canadian consumers will understand, because at this point they are confused. Beef and chicken are produced in this country, and there are charges by the Canadian Cattlemen's Association of profiteering and undue price spreads and charges by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture of price-gouging and profiteering with regard to chicken prices. Who is going to look into this? The new agency set up by the Economic Council of Canada does not have the terms of reference to do so. The AIB does not have the terms of reference to do so. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has no enthusiasm for the job. Who, in the name of God, is going to look after the interests of Canadian consumers?

• (1122)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member does not have to shout. The answer has been given several times in this House. The AIB is still in existence and will be until the end of December. It still has authority to look into cases of excessive pricing and gouging on the part of companies which will not have made their reports by then. When certain companies, unions or workers come out from under the cover of the AIB, they will be subject to the powers of examination of this new body set up by the Economic Council of Canada.

If this body finds that, with the normal accusations to which the hon. member is referring before it, there is proof which everybody can investigate through open sources but the truth still cannot be found, then that body will recommend to the government some investigatory action, some roll-back or some other action the government might take. At that point I hope we will have the support of the hon. member, who will remember his position today, but the opposition constantly waffles on whether it will support controls or not. I think hon. members opposite will have to make up their minds.

Mr. Clark: Zap, you're frozen.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOTIVE PLANTS TO BE LOCATED IN CANADA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Just over an hour ago the minister made the extraordinary announcement that he is appointing Mr. Simon Reisman to examine the Canadian automotive industry and to report some time early in the fall. Just two weeks ago the minister promised me in the House that during the month of June he would have an announcement to make about one automotive company and possibly about all three. The announcement was to be about their decision to expand needed facilities here in Canada.

Would the minister now confirm that today's pathetic announcement about the establishment of another study in addition to the Arthur report and the Ontario government study really means that he has failed completely to get the commitments from the Big Three he promised the House?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I at no time promised the House that I could get commitments from the Big Three. I told the House that we were attempting to get commitments from them. I think the House should recognize that we are entering into a new era in the automobile industry, brought about by the energy conservation measures with which the United States government and Canada have asked the industry to comply and the environmental measures with which both governments have asked the industry to comply. The industry has said that because of these and other things, it will have to make tremendous investments in plant repairs, renovation and new plant construction. Figures tossed about from time to time have been as high as $60 billion.

As I look at our own study, I see that between 1966 and 1970 about $159 million annually was spent in the automobile industry for updating the industry in Canada. Between 1970 and 1975 that decreased to $142 million annually. As a government, we are concerned that with regard to new investment either in plant renovation or in new plants we get the share which is demanded by the Canadian market. That is why we have given Mr. Reisman powers under the Inquiries Act to conduct a full investigation and to talk to the American government and to the Big Three automobile companies. If necessary, Mr. Reisman even has the power to attempt to talk to offshore automobile manufacturers so that we can make certain that because of its market demand in the total picture, Canada gets its fair share of the investment.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister took a long time to say nothing. I pointed out to the minister last fall that it was the intention of the industry on this continent to invest some $58 billion in new equipment. I urged last fall that something be done to make sure that we got our share to make up for the loss of 20,000 Canadian jobs because of the incompetence of this government. The minister has been saying for months that he has talked with the industry. Did he go specially to General Motors, Chrysler and Ford and ask them for written commitments about their investment plants for the next three years? That would be fully consistent with the pact. If the minister did so, will he now tell the House what the companies told him?

• (1127)

Mr. Horner: We are continuing negotiations with the Big Three. I do not think there is any advantage in disclosing the stage of the negotiations right now with any one of the Big Three. However, I would like to say that we did set up a sector study on the automobile industry, headed by a very knowledgeable person, namely, Mr. Bell. I consulted him, and also Mr. White of the UAW. Both those persons, because of their direct involvement with the industry, felt that the steps we were taking were wise and prudent and that in the long term they would benefit Canada greatly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The minister knows that not only the Canadian UAW but the Automotive Parts Association of Canada on the business side is 100 per cent opposed to the steps he announced this morning. They recognize that to carry out another study is simply to acknowledge failure, simply an attempt by the government to buy further time. I use the word with care because I think it is appropriate, considering the fact that we have not had our share of investment for more than eight years. They are investing $58 billion in the next half a dozen years, and the minister has obtained not one commitment that he can report back to the House. Would he admit that there is a crisis in the implementation of the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement, would he admit that he has failed to resolve that crisis and, finally, related to that, will he resign because of his failure?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House will recognize the argumentative nature of the question.

HOUSING

PROCEDURE FOLLOWED BY CMHC IN CERTAIN CASES

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and deals with the AHOP housing program for 1976 and 1978. Can the minister tell us what happens when a house has been sold and the documents have been sent to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation office before May 1, 1978? In that case, does the 1976 or the 1978 act apply?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if this is a specific case, I will be glad to look into it if the hon. member will send me all the particulars. At all events, all projects submitted before May 1 and approved before that date are subject, of course, to the previous regulations. As regards the requests submitted to the departmental officials after May 1, they are subject to the terms and conditions of the new regulations.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary. I readily admit that the applications filed after May 1 fall within the ambit of the new act. But in the case of applications filed before May 1, but held up in the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation office in order to be received or dealt with after May 1, does the old or the new policy apply to them, because some of the documents were sent well before May 1 and the Val d'Or office refused to accept them?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the specific case of those documents would have to be looked into. If they pertain to a general application without specific details, I think it would be difficult to accept them. If, on the other hand, they constitute a complete file respecting former requirements and regulations and that was not dealt with for lack of time or because there was a backlog of applications in the last days of April, then of course, as our officials at the regional level have discretionary powers, they would have to determine whether they fall within the first or the second category.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC BOYCOTTS

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and it is in connection with the Arab boycott of Israel and the Jewish people. In that connection, our party supports legislation to make any compliance with that boycott illegal in Canada, but yesterday the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was quoted by the Canadian Press as stating that the government does not plan legislation. He said:

> —if we please the Canada-Israel committee, then we harm our chances of doing trade with the Arab states.

My question to the Prime Minister is, what is the priority of the government? Is it to ensure that Canadian Jewish people have their civil and human rights recognized, observed and upheld, and opposing any kind of boycott based on religious grounds; or is the government's priority doing trade with the Arab countries no matter what the humiliation, no matter what we have to put up with to do it? Which is it?

● (1132)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the obvious dilemma in which the hon. member has put himself is not one in which the government wants to put itself. We believe in protecting Canadian citizens by ensuring the government in no way supports the boycott. This is a firm and practised policy. The effect of it is that very little, if any, significant trade is done in the Middle East by Canadians under the boycott. To trade in that area it is important to have government support, and one cannot receive Canadian support if he is complying with the boycott. Beyond this, we are not taking freedom away from individual Canadians who want to trade in the way they want, without government support, in any part of the world except those which are against the law, as in the case of the United Nations boycott on Rhodesia.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Can he tell the House what the minister meant when he said:

> —if we please the Canada-Israel committee, then we harm our chances of doing trade with the Arab states.

Is the basis of the government's policy to please the Canada-Israel committee for whatever purposes that might entail, perhaps voting purposes or whatever, or does the government intend to do what is right no matter whom it pleases? Whether it pleases the Canada-Israel committee or not, is the government policy one which is going to battle to the hilt by legislation any attempt to force Canadians to deal with Arab countries only on a certain basis of racial or religious prejudice, or is the government only interested in trying to please the Canada-Israel committee? What is the basis of the government's policy?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the hon. member is a bit mixed up. Certainly, our policy is not to please him or the Canada-Israel committee. Our policy is to do what is right. I have just explained to the hon. member what we are doing. In the first place, we are not taking away freedom from all Canadians to do what they want in various parts of the world. I understand the Tory party is to do that, pass a law which will make it a crime to do certain things in other parts of the world.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: You do that.

Mr. Trudeau: This is what the hon. member is suggesting is Tory policy. It is not our policy.

Mr. Stevens: We know what your policy is.

Mr. Trudeau: Our policy is to ensure that the government will not support in any way people who are complying with a boycott which is contravening our concept of rights and dignity. But we are not making it a crime if some individuals want to comply with that policy on their own. What we are saying is that the effect of the governemtn's action is making such trade in the Middle East under boycott policies impractical and probably non-existent.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the government has a partial boycott policy which it wants to enforce in legislation. If the policy of the Prime Minister is so effective in preventing boycotts, why does he not go the whole way and make it illegal for a Canadian citizen to participate in that kind of boycott? Why does he hold back? If his policy is effective, then we are irritating the Arabs in any event. We are aggravating them and it may affect our trade. It seems to me that what the minister is saying is that we want an ineffective parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, now the hon. member is worried that it is going to affect our trade. I think he is contradicting himself in his very question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Bunkum!

FINANCE

REASON FOR HIGH PRICE OF FOOD

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the low income earners of this country who, because prices for food consumed in the home have increased nearly 20 per cent in a year and fresh vegetables have gone up by 40 per cent in the same period, can no longer afford to feed their families adequately. Will the minister tell the House whether he has investigated the real impact of food price inflation on low income earners who spend over 40 per cent of their income on food?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I have said many times, we have policies which provide compensation and payments to people who are in those categories of society. Most of those schemes are indexed with the cost of living, such as pension plans, unemployment insurance and other payments made by the provinces to people on welfare. Our policy is well known. We have indexed those social schemes in order to meet the conditions of those people.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In light of the fact that the minister has no idea of the impact of his inflationary policies on low income earners, will he tell the House why he has not prevailed upon Statistics Canada, which produced this month's bogus inflation statistics that excluded food and energy at his request, to come out with what my party has long recommended—a low income person's index?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is spreading a false rumour. We are not asking Statistics Canada to change its formula. On a scientific basis, it decided that its formula has to be modified in order to meet the real cost of living in the land. We have used the same pattern for the past years. Some countries have three or four different indexes which are published every year. For scientific reasons, Statistics Canada modified its own formula. It is a very independent organization. There have been discussions with Statistics Canada and the labour movement. There were meetings between ministers, Statistics Canada and labour representatives. We do not want an index which suits us, or anyone. We want to have the truth in terms of inflation. Scientifically speaking, Statistics Canada has to make some changes.

CMHC APPLICATION OF AHOP

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs: it concerns the recent decision by CMHC to encourage conversion from the Assisted Home Ownership Program to the Assisted Rental Program. This is of particular concern in the metro Toronto area where there is a surplus of condominium units for sale and an acute shortage of rental accommodation. Therefore, I should like to ask the minister if he is prepared to instruct CMHC to be more flexible with the ARP square footage regulations so that more AHOP condominium units will be eligible for ARP assistance.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is an excellent suggestion. I will convey to the officials of CMHC in Toronto, and in other large cities across Canada where it could be applied, the need to have some flexibility in evaluating the regulations of CMHC.

DUMPING DUTY ON WIDE-FLANGE STEEL BEAMS

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Less than six months ago the Anti-Dumping Tribunal upheld the Algoma appeal and applied dumping duty to wide-flange steel beams. In view of the unnecessary injury and injustice imposed on British Columbia steel workers and industries, will the Minister of Finance now acknowledge that more than one market can exist in Canada, that Canadian producers are protected by freight rates which control and identify these markets, and that this is a concept fundamental to equity in the Canadian federation?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have some difficulty accepting the principle that we have many countries within Canada. I think we need some national policies. We can make some adjustments once in a while. In the case of the steel problem in British Columbia, as part of the decision of the board it was decided to give an extension of time up to the end of this month to the people who consume that type of steel in British Columbia. I understand we have now received a letter requesting an extension of that exemption.

I have to tell the hon. member that when the problem came to my desk in February I had been in touch with the British Columbia government which at that time said it would be quite satisfied if I extended this special case until the month of July. Now they seem to have changed their minds and are asking for a further extension, which is something we are looking into at this time.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, the minister's answer indicates to me, and to anyone knowledgeable on this subject, that he has not been properly informed on this most important matter. In view of the unnecessary waste and disturbance which is being caused by this Anti-Dumping Tribunal ruling, will he now agree that we should isolate duties and safeguards to regions where safeguard is prompted through the threat or reality of injury? Also, will he not agree that injury should be isolated to the region or market where the injury can be identified and where recognition of this principle is prompted?

● (1142)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is on a very dangerous course. If I were to subscribe to the theory which he is advocating, we would have ten different markets controlled internally in Canada and we would no longer have a country. On every issue raised in the last six months by the other side, I detect that they would rather have ten different nations as opposed to one Canada.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC BOYCOTTS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I must say that members on this side of the House and, I am sure, the reasonable Canadian public very much regret that kind of distorting and baiting by the Minister of Finance who should behave himself more responsibly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: As soon as the other side quietens down, Mr. Speaker, my question will be to the Prime Minister. If I correctly understood the Prime Minister, in responding to my colleague from St. John's West, he said that present Canadian policy has the effect of making trade by Canadian firms with Arab countries, to use the Prime Minister's words, "impractical and probably non-existent". If that is the case, why did the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce say that any change in that practice would harm Canada's chances of trading with Arab nations? In other words, how can we harm what does not exist?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member used a preamble to lecture my colleague, the Minister of Finance, I am sure that he would not mind if I were to answer that preamble and support the Minister of Finance. The indignation of the Leader of the Opposition would be better addressed—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Shameful.

Mr. Trudeau: —to his own members who stand up here and take positions which are indeed—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You are shameful, too.

Mr. Trudeau: —conducive to the destruction of the national market of Canada.

An hon. Member: Canada's Senator McCarthy.

An hon. Member: I cannot support that statement.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Trudeau: Come over here and make me sit down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we all know the Prime Minister's position, which was established in 1968 in a campaign, of gentle deception, that there is only one patriot in this country and that is himself, and that all the rest of us, because we happen to oppose what he has done to this country in the last decade, are somehow unpatriotic. That is not at all becoming to the Prime Minister. We are quite prepared to let those statements be judged by the Canadian public. I hear the member for Crowfoot, who should perhaps be reminded—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that each side of the House is getting very far away from the purpose of the question period.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the House for following the attempt by the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister to avoid answering a question about a very difficult position they have put themselves in regarding policy in the Middle East. The Prime Minister did not answer my earlier question. The situation is we have the Prime Minister of Canada saying that the present policy of Canada limits, almost to the point of non-existence, Canadian trade with Arab nations in which the boycott clause might be involved. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is quoted as saying, and to my knowledge he has not yet denied that statement although that is a frequent practice of his—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has now said that for Canada to adopt a policy different from the one which is now in place, to use his words, "might harm our chances of doing trade with Arab states." I ask the Prime Minister, if this policy which he is following now is so very effective in eliminating trade, how would a change in that policy harm trade that does not exist?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, once again referring to the little homily which the Leader of the Opposition dealt with in his preamble, he suggests we are talking about unpatriotic conduct. I suggest that he himself is trying to drag a red herring across the path of the discussion. He heard his own member suggest a theory regarding dumping policy, a policy which in effect would regionalize the country. This is not a question of bad patriotism; it is a question of bad economics. The hon. Leader of the Opposition should not draw the question of partriotism into the discussion.

In so far as what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has said, I would be glad to refer the hon. member's question to the minister and ask him to show the context in which he said that. Indeed, it is the current practice of the Leader of the Opposition to trot out things that he reads in the newspapers and which are generally inaccurate.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, my question is really quite simple. On this matter of the effectiveness of Canadian policy in relation to the Arab boycott, are we to believe the Prime Minister when he says that this policy now eliminates any trade by Canadian companies with countries imposing a boycott, or are we to believe the contrary statement of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to the effect that a stronger policy, a policy of the kind we advocate and the United States of America practises, would stop trade involving countries practising a boycott but now exists because of the Government of Canada's position?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it would be surprising if we had a Tory policy which was clear on this matter. I can tell hon. members what government policy is. When there are boycott clauses, we do not support companies which want to enter into trade with boycott clauses. The effect of this is that there is very little trade, if any, in contravention—

Mr. Clark: Your minister says the opposite.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition wants to ask questions, he should at least listen to the answers, not provide his own.

Mr. Gillespie: Stand up.

Mr. Trudeau: I am saying that this is government policy. Apparently, if I listen to the Leader of the Opposition and his own members, the Tory policy would be to make trade with the Middle East impossible and make a law there. The policy we are taking now is that we can trade with the Middle East provided there is no respect of the boycott policy, which is supported by the government. The effect of this is that there is, indeed, a great deal of trade with the Middle East, and we welcome this because it is not contravening our anti-boycott policy and because our trade which is taking place is beneficial to Canadians.

We are not subscribing to any boycott policy practised by the Arab countries. This is our policy. But I understand that the Tory policy would be to pass a law. Either it would be a law which has the results we are obtaining now, or it would be a law which indeed would make trade with the Middle East, regardless of whether the boycott policies are respected or not, illegal. This is not our position.

ENERGY

TAKEOVER OF HUSKY OIL COMPANY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As the minister knows, during the past week we have seen a game of stock market badminton going on between two American companies, Husky Oil of Cody, Wyoming, and Occidental Petroleum Corporation of Los Angeles. Every time Petro-Canada has made an offer for the purchase of the Husky facilities in Canada, Occidental has raised the bid. This has happened twice in one week. The result is that the value of the stock has gone up by nearly $200 million, which ultimately the Canadian people are going to pay for.

I want to ask the minister, in view of the apparent and almost transparent collusion between those two companies to run up the price of the holdings of Husky, what action does the minister and the government intend to take to deal with this very apparent deprivation of the Canadian people, not only of their oil resources but it is going to make them pay an extra $200 million for the privilege of losing those resources.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised a legal question with me, the question of collusion and whether or not that could be prosecuted under Canadian law. That is a question I would be quite prepared to refer to the law officers of the Crown for an opinion.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, last Monday, June 12, at page 6268 of Hansard, in answering the hon. member for Calgary Centre the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said:

—he would realize that the activities, including acquisition by Petro-Canada, are very much in the national interest—

● (1152)

In view of that statement, in view of the statement made in the House yesterday by the Prime Minister and the statement allegedly made outside the House by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, is the House to understand that the government has changed its position and that what is in the national interest is not whether Petro-Canada develops the heavy oil reserves of the Alberta-Saskatchewan border but that they be developed no matter whether it is done by Canadians or foreign interests and controlled outside this country? Is that the position the government is taking since last monday?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in position. I was answering a question the preamble to which made it quite clear that the questioner questioned whether the Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, should be involved in acquisitions or not. If the hon. member reads my answer again, he will note I was indicating that acquisitions were within the mandate of Petro-Canada.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

AIB REPORT ON BEEF PRICES—SALARY INCREASES FOR AIB STAFF

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Finance follows an earlier statement by the Prime Minister to the effect that many beef distributors and processors still fall under the guidelines of the AIB. This was confirmed yesterday by Dr. Renouf following the fact that the AIB report for this quarter will not be ready until mid or late July.

Since most increases in beef prices occur in this quarter, if the minister has not had discussions with the Anti-Inflation Board would he take the matter up with them to see whether the report could be accelerated, in order to ensure there will be no excess profit-taking and that if there has been, it can be stopped as quickly as possible.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think it is a good suggestion that we ask the AIB to have a special look at the businesses of people involved in products where there have been great price increases. I will be asking Dr. Renouf to make a special effort in that field.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I should like to confirm that Dr. Renouf, chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, denied that he was asking for big increases for AIB employees that would be above those allowed for other Canadian workers.

MORTGAGE DEFAULTS UNDER AHOP

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board and follows a question I put to him on Monday regarding the study dealing with AHOP mortgage defaults. My information is that the document was denied on the basis that it was a matter of national security. The minister undertook to look into this question. Can he tell the House whether it was classified as a national security document and, if so, why? If it is not so classified, when can we expect him to table the report in the House?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have initiated some checking into the allegation of the hon. member. I do not believe his description of the document is correct. I have made reference to my colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. He has been away and I do not know whether he has had the opportunity to check on it, but perhaps he could respond to the question in more detail.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question asked by the hon. member is that the percentage of all AHOP mortgage accounts in arrears of three months or more in December, 1977, was 0.53 per cent, compared to 0.36 per cent a year ago; so it is an infinitesimal percentage of arrears and I do not know why the hon. member is so upset about this.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I ever gave the impression of being upset. My question, which the minister did not answer, is whether there was a study by Treasury Board and whether it was classified as a national security document. If so, why was it so classified? If not, will the minister table the study in the House? Perhaps he could also indicate whether the government would be prepared to table today the terms of reference given for Mr. Bill Teron's leave of absence, so that we could be in a position—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely that question cannot be a related or supplementary question.

Mr. Whiteway: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TRADE POLICIES VIS-À-VIS SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, returning to the subject of Canada's trade policies on South Africa. On December 19, 1977, the Secretary of State for External Affairs announced the policy of withdrawing Canada's trade counsellors from South Africa in protest against that country's apartheid policy. Today, CUSO announced it is withdrawing its investment in the Royal Bank in protest against that bank's policies of making loans to South Africa. This amounts to an escalation of Canada's steps against South Africa.

I wish to ask the Prime Minister if CUSO policy represents government policy. If so, why was the Royal Bank singled out when five major banks are making loans to South Africa?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no responsibility for CUSO, nor does this government. I wonder what the hon. member's question is based on.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely astonished at the answer, since CUSO is Canada's largest governmental international development agency. It comes under the Department of External Affairs; it is funded by the Departent of External Affairs and funded by CIDA. I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether an action by a governmental agency, an agency funded by Canadian government funds, represents government policy?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is obviously confusing CIDA and CUSO. His allegation concerns CUSO, which is a private, non-governmental organization. We do not control it; we do not direct what it should do or should not do. It does get funds from the government, as many non-government organizations do, but are free to act and we do not try to dictate to them on the use of funds.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POST-AIB MONITORING BOARD

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and concerns the Anti-Inflation Board. Today, the Prime Minister confirmed that the anti-inflation program would wind down by December 31. While referring to the monitoring agency, the Prime Minister referred to a post-AIB monitoring board. The announcements made yesterday were that the new agency would be monitoring the consumer price index. If the Anti-Inflation Board will have nothing to do after December 31 this year, may I ask the Minister of Finance why the estimates provide for 330 continuing employees as of March 31, 1979?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the chairman explained that correctly yesterday. Of course, there will be some documentation to complete for the companies who have to report, who will finish by the end of the year. The reports will have to be analysed and verified, and there may be some problem that they have to comply with the law and pay back some funds, or another mechanism to make sure that the excess profit will be returned to consumers, and so on. It will take the number of man-years to wind up the operation. The hon. member has to recognize that it will wind down from 900 to 300 and by the end of the fiscal year 1979-80 nobody will be involved.

SALARIES OF AIB STAFF

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Finance is on the subject already raised, the Anti-Inflation Board. The minister has given us the explanation of the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, but if one looks at the estimates tabled by the minister there is an increase of some $479,000 for salaries and a decrease of over 60 people in the staff for the coming year. It seems obvious there is provision for an increase in the neighbourhood of 11 per cent for salaries.

Will the minister direct the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board to see that no employee of the board will receive in the coming year more than the 6 per cent which is permitted other workers?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, employees of the AIB are under the same rules and regulations as other employees of the government, and negotiation of their contract comes under the authority of my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question. Since any requests for wage and salary increases of more than 6 per cent are studied, monitored and decided by the Anti-Inflation Board, who is going to decide on requests and proposals for increases of more than 6 per cent made by people working in the Anti-Inflation Board, and who will monitor and process those requests?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, their increases will be given them by Treasury Board. Therefore, Treasury Board will apply to those employees the same rules and regulations that apply to all other employees of the government.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. WHITEWAY—PROCEEDINGS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order relating to the question I raised—my first supplementary question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). I find no fault with you suggesting and ruling that the last part of my supplementary question had nothing to do with my original question. I do not argue with that, but surely my entire question ought not to have been ruled out of order on that basis. It was not a repetition of my first question because my first question was addressed to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras). At least, sir, I ought to have been permitted to ask a supplementary question. My first supplementary question ought to have been answered by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. At least, Mr. Speaker, I should have been given the opportunity of a second supplementary question.

● (1202)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has clearly confirmed my disposition, and that is that he had gone on to try to add in a matter which in no way related to his first two questions. I do not know how he could expect to have favourable treatment in the question period in doing something which he has now clearly acknowledged is out of order. In any case I was not certain whether the minister was rising to answer the first part of his question or not.

MR. ANDRAS—ANTI-INFLATION BOARD STAFF SALARIES

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it would be dangerous to leave the impression which seems to have arisen out of the questioning today regarding the actions of the Anti-Inflation Board and salary revisions. It is absolutely lacking in fundamental research and examination of the facts to suggest that the base increase in estimates, salary-wise, from one year to another, reflects only individual settlements of classification, salaries or employees or positions, or contract negotiations. I will get a detailed analysis of how that is put together. But in the meantime I plead with hon. members and those observing this situation to recognize that those differences include some aspects of retroactive pay. It includes a change in mix—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Andras: —it includes a change in mix—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I am sure the House is interested in the offer of the minister to table the document and do the research that he has just indicated. However, I am reluctant to let him go on at any great length about the components of it. To do so would be quite out of order at this time.

MR. ALEXANDER—ANTI-INFLATION BOARD STAFF SALARIES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I was rising on the same point of order. We find that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has restricted the private sector to 6 per cent, and we are trying to determine whether the same rules and regulations will apply—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Alexander: —to government employees, and as yet—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: —as yet the President of the Treasury Board—

Mr. Andras: Because I got cut off.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Do I understand that the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) is now pleading with me to allow the hon. President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) to finish what he had to say?

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, he has not said anything yet, and all we are trying to find out is whether—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a precedent that I want to understand. Is the hon. member for Hamilton West asking me to permit the minister to have the floor now? Is that correct?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, if you want a direct answer, the answer is, no, because—

An hon. Member: Hit and run.

MR. STEVENS—ANTI-INFLATION BOARD STAFF SALARIES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a related point of order. I might be able to clear the air on this misunderstanding with respect to the AIB.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: I happen to have the actual transcript of what Mr. Renouf said yesterday before the Standing Committee on Finance dealing with this question of salaries—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will realize that either we will launch into a discussion of a matter that is not listed on the orders of the day and not scheuled for discussion at this time, or we will not. To do so would be clearly out of order. In order to do that we would have to take some very special steps in respect to permission and agreement of the House. At the moment I do not even have an application for consent to do that.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 447, 1,115, 1,286, 1,519, 1553 and 1,615.

EXPENDITURES IN NEW WESTMINSTER

Question No. 447—Mr. Leggatt:

In each fiscal year since 1970, what amount was spent in the constituency of New Westminster by the Department of Employment and Immigration and those agencies that report to it?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): $24,426,802.

For the Department of Manpower and Immigration: (fiscal year), 1970-71, $1,321,042; 1971-72, $2,540,033; 1972-73, $3,252,085; 1973-74, $1,929,381; 1974-75, $2,718,200; 1975-76, $2,927,937; 1976-77, $4,057,109; 1977-78 (to September 30, 1977, $1,906,341; $20,652,128.

For the Unemployment Insurance Commission: (salaries and overtime) (calendar year), 1971, 1972, 1973, 1974 The information is not available; 1975, $1,210,991; 1976, $1,204,-872; 1977, $1,358,811.

For the UIC the financial system is not designed to identify costs other than those for salary and overtime by constituency and to attempt to provide a reply to this part of the question would be a very lengthy and costly procedure.

EXPENDITURES IN NICKEL BELT

Question No. 1,115—Mr. Rodriguez:

For each fiscal year since 1970, what amount was spent in the constituency of Nickel Belt by the Department of Employment and Immigration and those agencies that report to it?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): $39,938,255.

For the Department of Manpower and Immigration: 1970-71, Not available; 1971-72, $2,059,620; 1972-73, $2,284,192; 1973-74, $3,359,861; 1974-75, $5,173,803; 1975-76, $5,366,-925; 1976-77, $7,120,138; 1977-78, $5,571,793 (to December 31, 1977): $30,936,332. (Above totals include personnel costs and other expenditures).

For the Unemployment Insurance Commission: Personnel costs (calendar year): 1971, Information not available; 1972, Information not available; 1973, $656,487; 1974, $723,413; 1975, $828,981; 1976, $711,522; 1977, $790,047; $3,710,450. Other Expenditures (Fiscal Year): 1970-71 Not available; 1971-72, Not available; 1972-73, $774,890; 1973-74, $892,-898; 1974-75, $989,820; 1975-76, $909,612; 1976-77, $800,-398; 1977-78, $923,855.00; $5,291,473. The amount reported above does not include the unemployment insurance benefit payments as the financial system is not designed to identify costs by constituency.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ADVERTISEMENTS

Question No. 1,286—Mr. Jones:

1. Who pays for the unemployment insurance advertisements?

2. Is this in the long run the money of those who are collecting the benefits?

3. Should the advertisement then read, "Cheating on Unemployment Insurance is stealing from your neighbours, friends, fellow employees employers and the Government of Canada," and yourself?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1, 2 and 3. See Beauchesne's Rules and Forms of the House of Commons, citation 171 (a) and (j).

MR. A. E. MASTERS

Question No. 1,519—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is Mr. A. E. Masters, president of the Maritime Employers Association, a member of the Montreal Port Authority and, if so, does the government consider this appointment an affront to the shipping communities in Halifax and Saint John and an antagonism to good management/labour relations in the ports?

2. What was the total payment to Mr. Masters' by the government for each year of his appointment?

3. Will the government remove Mr. Masters' immediately from his position as member of the Montreal Port Authority?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. Mr. Masters has been a member of the Montreal Port Authority since it was established as an advisory body. The port authority membership includes representatives from both labour and employers, and Mr. Masters' knowledge and expertise in labour matters associated with shipping is considered an asset in providing advice to those responsible for management at the Port of Montreal.

2. 1972, $3,225; 1973, $2,237.50; 1974, $2,600; 1975, $2,650; 1976, $2,300; 1977, $2,400.

3. No.

QUEBEC AND ONTARIO FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Question No. 1,533—Mr. McKinnon:

1. How many new-born babies were added to the (a) Quebec (b) Ontario family allowance rolls during the year (i) 1973 (ii) 1974 (iii) 1975?

2. Is the (a) Quebec (b) Ontario region for family allowance purposes coincident with the boundaries of the Province and, if not, what are the differences?

3. For the year 1975, what were the ages of the mothers in part 1?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Statistics Canada reports the following live births:

	Ontario	Quebec
1973	123,776	84,057
1974	124,229	89,364
1975	125,775	93,597

These figures do not provide an answer as to precisely how many new family allowances accounts were opened on behalf of new-born babies in those years because: (a) the children's parents may not have been residents of the province in which the birth was reported; (b) applications are not made on behalf of all surviving live births; (c) applications include those on behalf of new residents of the two provinces.

2. (a) and (b) Yes.

3. Information not available.

MR. LIONEL ORLIKOW

Question No. 1,615—Mr. Epp:

1. Did Mr. Lionel Orlikow receive funding in the form of a grant, loan, payment, etc., from the government for services rendered in fulfilling a specific contract, mandate, arrangement, entered into exclusively or jointly by the government and Mr. Orlikow and, if so (a) in what amount (b) for what purpose (c) for what period of time?

2. Is anyone working with him or for him?

3. Is he working in conjunction with any provincial or municipal government?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): 1. No. (a), (b) and (c) Not applicable.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

EXPENDITURES IN RIMOUSKI

Question No. 1,468—Mr. Allard:

1. Since the implementation of the Local Initiatives Program, did the government allocate money to the constituency of Rimouski and, if so, in what amount?

2. For each project accepted, what was the (a) name of the project (b) amount allocated (c) year of acceptance (d) name of the municipality involved (e) number of jobs created?

Return tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Tuesday, June 13, consideration in committee of the whole of Bill C-56, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to authorize payments related to provincial sales tax reductions—Mr. Chrétien—Mr. Ethier in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Tuesday, June 13, 1978, clauses 6 and 17 were allowed to stand, and clause 30 was before the committee.

On clause 30—Deduction from tax otherwise payable.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, I should like to add to the remarks I was making a few days ago. I think it is still important to remind the committee of the fundamental principle we have always fought for on this side of the House, namely that arrangements should be made between governments, federal and provincial, not only when dealing with Quebec but with all the provinces. I know the minister has reminded us repeatedly that there were agreements with eight out of nine provinces. The position of my colleagues, which is also mine, has always been that whenever one province cannot accept the federal proposal, it is possible—and there have been precedents—for the minister of the federal government to enter into special arrangements in order to allow the citizens of that province to benefit from the generous proposal now before us.

● (1212)

I really think, Mr. Chairman, that I am not exaggerating when I say that Quebec did submit such a proposal. We remember full well, and we have even repeated it, that the Minister of Finance proved that Quebec did not commit itself with regard to the proposal made by the Minister of Finance, and that it should. That is one interpretation that could be discussed at great length. The Minister of Finance also knew that the Quebec budget had not been brought down. The Minister of Finance should therefore have expected Quebec, in response to the federal government proposal, to try and direct those credits to the areas experiencing severe problems.

In general, I am sure people would not blame any government for trying to stimulate those areas while at the same time allowing the citizens of Quebec to benefit from that money, according to the method suggested by the Quebec government, namely a cut in the 8 per cent sales tax. To that, of course, some will answer that Quebec or any other province are quite free to reduce their taxes as they see fit. But the fact remains that the proposal submitted by the Quebec government, in the present state of the situation in Quebec as we know it, was designed to meet a special need which all hon. members do recognize.

So, my question to the Minister of Finance is this. I am well aware that there is a bill before the House and that we are considering it in committee. I think that the minister gave the impression that he did not want to amend the bill. The Quebec premier, in his phone call yesterday, qualified, I believe, Quebec's position—and I must agree with the Minister of Finance that in my view, Mr. Parizeau's proposal or letter was not clear enough. It recognized the authority of the federal government and also noted that if the government's position remained unchanged, Quebec did not want to loose these millions of dollars.

We also acknowledge that the second proposal contained in the letter is closer to the formula proposed by Mr. Ryan, the leader of the Quebec Liberal party, and also that Quebec would have preferred this proposal. In any event, the minister will recognize that Quebec would have preferred the second proposal. The minister is saying: I have introduced my bill and I do not intend to amend it. Nevertheless, it remains that normally the federal government should do its utmost to come to an agreement with the provincial governments. The second proposal contained in this letter would meet much more the wishes of all members and all parties in the National Assembly. I would therefore ask this question of the Minister of Finance:

Would the Minister of Finance be willing to reconsider today the clause before us and attempt to come to an arrangement with the Quebec government under which the federal government would not pay the taxpayers directly, but which would meet the objectives that the Minister of Finance set out in his budget?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I have tried time and time again to come to some agreement. Since the budget was brought down, I have made four additional proposals to the Quebec government which were all turned down with a good deal of arrogance. I called the Quebec finance minister several times but he called me for the first time only recently, and last Monday, I confirmed to him that I was proceeding with the bill in its present form. I should like to point out to the hon. member, more especially as he just said that the sales tax provision was included in Mr. Parizeau's budget, that it is not so. He made unilateral tax changes on a Wednesday, outside the agreement which the other provinces and outside his budget which he did not table before the following Monday. Therefore, he acted unilaterally and gave me only a three-hour notice. He did not negotiate, he just said: "I'm doing it alone". I replied: "You certainly have a right to do so, it is your tax, your jurisdiction, you do as you please." But you accept only part of the federal proposal. And, ultimately, I agreed to pay the $40 millions for which Quebec qualified.

Then, two weeks ago, I had several contacts with Mr. Parizeau, and, in order to avoid confusion, I even invited my colleague, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations to attend a telephone conference like those that are announced every day on television, and at the other end of the line there was at least Claude Morin, the minister of intergovernmental affairs. So there could be no confusion, since there were also a group of officials in my office at that time, and I suppose there were some other people in the other office too. Even after that, my proposals were rejected. One week later, that is on June 7, I received a letter from Mr. Parizeau in which he said, concerning that proposal we are discussing today, and I quote:

"—on the very basis of the originality of the economic and tax policies of the government of Quebec—"

That was not in his letter, but at the press conference he held at that time—

[Mr. La Salle.]

"—I would like to examine the first one—", but that is the one we are considering now and proceeding with.

Last Wednesday he told me: whether you choose 1977 or 1978, it makes no difference to me. That was quite an about-face compared to the position they held before. He also said that in terms of the originality of the economic and fiscal policies, that was the one he preferred. But it was exactly what I had proposed on May 15 and the Quebec government tells me: We can accept that! When I have been trying for almost a month to convince everybody that it was acceptable. I report to my colleagues in the cabinet and they say: Congratulations! At last they see it your way! Last week, instead of gloating over it, because it was a significant retreat on the part of the Quebec government, I was even very modest when I received Mr. Parizeau's letter. So I proceeded as I had been announcing for a month, reduction of $85 so that the money can flow immediately into the Quebec economy.

Mr. Parizeau said in his letter last week that he intended to recover. He can recover whenever and whatever he wants. He is responsible in his own field. If he spends money before receiving it, I am not the financial critic who will hold him responsible before the National Assembly. But I decided that, as the government of Quebec did not subscribe to our national plan endorsed by the other eight provinces up to $186 million, and as the hon. member for Joliette came in the House at that time saying that we were unfair towards Quebec, I would not penalize Quebeckers and I would reduce their income tax. That is what we did, and that is what we are doing today.

If Mr. Parizeau needs $186 million, $190 million, $300 million or even $50 million, he simply has to increase his taxes. I do not want the Quebec taxpayers to be penalized. If he can convince them that it would be in their best interests to do something else than take the money I am offering Quebec, and if they accept that, good for him. However, he refused to go along with a national agreement, but he was free to take part. I did not force him.

He said "no", two days later and he acted on a unilateral basis in his own jurisdiction, according to his own priorities. This proves that I did not interfere with his area of responsibilities. But since he did not qualify on a national basis for this amount of $186 million, and we wanted to inject $186 million into the Quebec economy we decided on a tax abatement for 1977. The reason why we chose the 1977 fiscal year, and I repeat it once again, is that 200,000 taxpayers would not benefit if we had chosen the 1978 taxpayers' list; moreover, the money would not reach the Quebec economy until 1979. So this is quite fair to Quebeckers. If Mr. Parizeau now realizes "he has painted himself into a corner" that is his problem, I was willing to co-operate. I am not the one who refused to agree. And then in yesterday's letter he tells me to forget about last week's letter. Listen, we are no longer kids. You saw Mr. Parizeau's press conference last week. He was very confident, all smiles, and said that if Mr. Chrétien chose option No.

1, that was the one he preferred because the originality of his fiscal and economic policies will be improved. I imagine the originality disappeared during the week and the minister now has problems.

That is too bad, I have problems too. The hon. member for Joliette gave me a couple. He also created problems for himself and I find that at this point when we are talking about good relationships in Canada, it is rather surprising to see the premier yesterday threaten me on television and threaten the Parliament of Canada. I think that is going a bit too far. Earlier the hon. member for Joliette who is the ambassador of the Parti Québécois to the Tories, if not this House, rose and said: What do you want? Accommodate them! I made accommodations, Mr. Chairman, more than would have been expected under these circumstances. However, I think that what I am doing is quite fair to Quebec taxpayers. But Mr. Parizeau painted himself into a corner; he says he wants $186 million, he spent $186 million and put it down in his books, in his budget as an account receivable from the federal government—without an agreement. Any business accountant who would do a thing like that would get fired. There was no contract, there was no contractual obligation between the federal government and the province, he possibly thought that politically he could twist my arm, well, he possibly assumed that, and I showed a lot of flexibility but for him it was all or nothing.

The hon. member for Joliette spent whole question periods telling me: Send Quebeckers a cheque. It took me weeks to make them understand that we were not sending the other provinces any and that I could not do it for Quebec. Eventually, Mr. Parizeau recognized that I was right, that it was logical, then he asked me for a collection agreement, contrary to all Quebec traditions since 1954. The last time we spoke about that, that is Tuesday, the hon. member for Joliette said if he were Parizeau he would never have asked for it because it was betraying the Quebec traditions since 1954, if I understood him correctly.

And now they are in a bind, they want us to help them out. They should have tried to co-operate with us from the beginning. Again last week they were saying: Do as you wish with your taxes, Mr. Chrétien, it is your jurisdiction. I recognize he may do whatever he wants in his jurisdiction, so there is no problem. I do what I want in my jurisdiction and he does what he wants in his. He says: Do what you want! I decided to go ahead with my bill. Now that I have made this decision, he turns around once more and demands exactly the opposite of what I wanted to do. I hope it is a serious government. When he writes to the Minister of Finance of Canada, I expect him to stand by his word. On budget night, Mr. Parizeau did not answer yes or no.

I was justified in being furious because the others did respect the agreement. I thought that throughout this dispute it was possible for the Minister of Finance of Canada who has a national responsibility to talk with Mr. Parizeau as a minister of finance without any consideration for his political goal—the destruction of Canada—that I could deal with him as I did with the minister of finance of Ontario or of British Columbia. And when I met him in Montreal with Mr. McKeough, he told me himself that for the first time in the history of Canada before presenting a budget the Minister of Finance was talking of fiscal economic policy, of the monetary policy of the Bank of Canada, of the value of the Canadian dollar and its effect on the economy of Quebec or Ontario. I was told it was fantastic. But he should have played the role of an elected government trying to provide good administration and not only trying to prove that Confederation does not work.

He could have suggested amendments to my proposal at that time and perhaps I would then have become his ally. But he preferred to remain silent and after an agreement was reached 48 hours later, I was accused of being inflexible. I believe I went very far in my offers. I even offered the full Ryan formula two weeks ago. Now, it is no longer the Ryan formula, it is something else which includes interests and $40 million cash. There is no end to this. We have been trying to solve this problem for two months. The House lost many hours before June 7 when Mr. Parizeau said: You are entitled to do what you did and the Quebec government will let you do as you wish.

I have now made my choice and as I said before I have no intention of changing my mind. Now, I am being threatened. Threats do not scare me. If Mr. Parizeau needs $200 million, $500 million or $1 billion, this does not bother me, it is his problem. When I have problems, I try to solve them. He must do the same. He must now face reality. He has strutted like a peacock for two months and now he must pay the piper. Let him do so. For my part, I shall go on being fair with Quebec citizens, and I shall send them up to $85 for each taxpayer in 1977. Mr. Parizeau wants to take his tax roll from 1977 and send us a bill of $85 or more if he needs more. That is his business. It is his problem. The voters will judge. For my part, I shall have reduced the taxes of Quebec taxpayers by up to $85. If Mr. Parizeau wants to get it back from the taxpayers, let him do so. If he wants to get more, let him do so. The taxpayers will know that the federal government has reduced the taxes of federal taxpayers. In this way, justice will be done.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, I would like the minister to tell us if it would be possible for him to establish an agreement under which the taxes paid by Quebeckers to Ottawa could be freed to allow the Quebec government to recuperate these taxes, as this would change nothing to the proposal, would not increase by one cent the contribution of the federal government, and would also meet one of our basic principles, that is that the agreements would be between governments. I would like to know if the minister could do this. I would like him to tell us if he could do this and then I have other questions to ask him. I believe the minister has every means to do this if he so decides.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the government took a long and hard look at this issue on many occasions. We took a decision within our jurisdiction. As you know, it was impossible to reach an agreement with the Quebec government. From the outset I was looking for an agreement and I came up with four additional proposals. But it is obvious he does not want any agreement. Again yesterday they did not try to get an agreement. They said: "Accept our conditions or else". Big words. Listen, we are not kids anymore. I have seen worse than that. I am not impressed by those threats. That is no way to work out solutions. I made five proposals but Quebec refuses to accept them. What can I do?

As a member of the National Assembly told me last night, they came out with that last night because they wanted to draw the attention of reporters away from the bloody mess which the government finds itself in after the National Assembly was closed down because of a demonstration. They wanted to empty the press gallery so no one would see that the government was in trouble with a motion which would have forced it to recognize that the justice minister was wrong. I cannot make a judgment, but the newspapers reported that he refused to have the doors of the assembly opened by the police. And then to get the reporters out of that debate, they held a press conference at 8:50, right in the middle of the speech of opposition leader, Mr. Gérard D. Lévesque. What can I do? We are now at the eleventh hour. For two months and four days now we have been stuck with that issue, a measure supported by all people in Canada, that is a sales tax reduction to improve demand.

• (1232)

Last week, after several attempts and even after endorsing the Ryan formula, not without some misgivings, I decided to go ahead, come what may. If they have problems, let them solve them. When I have problems, I deal with them, even if the opposition members make my life very difficult and I do not blame them. What can we do? That is democracy. I assume my responsibilities, and I did so upon receipt of the letter of June 7, after untold negotiations and interventions by many people from all sides who tried to help us find a solution. I am going ahead with what was in fact my original proposal which was agreeable last week to the Quebec government and that became suddenly, one week later, socially unfair. Let us not forget that there is nothing unfair in tax cuts. They go to taxpayers. Not to people who do not pay taxes.

When I cut taxes by $100 in January it was for the benefit of taxpayers. Those who do not pay taxes, are on welfare or unemployment insurance, have other programs and are not affected by tax cuts. Only taxpayers are affected by tax cuts and there is nothing socially unfair in this. I believe that there is much fairness in giving out $85 because if I had applied a tax percentage formula, the better off would have got much more than $85 and I wanted to give the maximum. As we are talking about social justice, I wish to mention to the hon. member that in Mr. Parizeau's proposal, when he cuts the sales tax it is on luxury items. Someone who buys a $10,000 fur coat saves $800 on the sales tax. If you buy Roche-Bobois furniture imported from France at Valiquette's in Montreal, or that kind of stores, you are going to save $800 on a $10,000 purchase while with my proposal even a millionaire gets no more than $85.

Mr. La Salle: I would rather not discuss the government's proposal. It was recognized as valid and effective, a view shared by other provinces. I think that the Minister of Finance who is accusing the Quebec government of having changed its mind, has himself changed his mind and I am not blaming him for that. At first, he refused categorically to accept a selective tax reduction but now he accepts it and the Quebec government will be able to play with that money any way it wishes in applying a selective tax reduction. This means an 8 per cent increase in the taxpayer's income, whichever way we look at it, and I believe is a good measure. We think that it is possible to reach an agreement with other governments and we are convinced that the Minister in spite of his stubbornness should come to an agreement, not to indulge Mr. Parizeau but as a matter of principle. We would be very glad to see the two governments enter into an agreement and we would support any amendment aiming at a settlement on a government to government basis. When the minister repeats that he made four or five proposals which were all turned down and that he too, refused offers which were extended to him, nevertheless we insist an arrangement should be worked out which would allow the federal government to abandon the field of taxation altogether as refunds are being given to all other provinces, pursuant to agreements which have been going on for years. In the present case I am sure the Finance Minister could suggest an agreement which we would be able to support and which would be made on a government to government basis. We are ready, if necessary, to put forward specific proposals ourselves to induce the government to seriously consider such an arrangement in keeping with basic principles of federal and provincial co-operation. In so doing, our purpose is not to ingratiate to Mr. Parizeau and I agree with the federal finance minister that he has unfortunately rejected too hastily the last proposal made by his federal counterpart. Forty-eight hours before it was turned down, we tried again to induce the Minister of Finance to come to an agreement with the Quebec government, and if it were a Liberal government, we would have done the same thing. The government can keep on trying to fool us as it has done for the past two months with all kinds of arguments and reasons.

The Minister of Finance mentioned earlier the problem which the Quebec government had yesterday with its civil servants. It is none of our business, Mr. Chairman. I think that we are dealing presently with clause 30 and if Mr. Parizeau is having problems with the civil servants, I do not even want to talk about it today. If he were willing to put aside his stubbornness, the Minister of Finance could move an amendment to his bill which, we in the opposition would fully support in order to safeguard this basic principle, namely to come to an agreement as was done with the other provinces between the two levels of government.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I have stated on several occasions that I have tried repeatedly to reach an agreement. This has not been possible. I think that our position is the most equitable, the clearest and the most in keeping with the spirit of the negotiations I had with the other provinces. The other provinces might also have wanted a selective cut. I called the finance ministers of the other provinces and asked them whether it was acceptable to them that I agree to the Quebec proposal. I called three finance ministers. They answered me: not at all, because had we been given the same choice, we would have done the same thing. So it was too late. The provinces did not agree. Besides, Mr. McKeough of Ontario made two speeches on this subject.

We therefore decided not to penalize the Quebec taxpayers because they have a higher level of taxation. That suits me fine because my proposal is quite flexible. In the maritime provinces, we have paid for the three percentage points. In the case of Quebec, we have paid $40 million to the provincial government because it went along with the national scheme to the extent of some $40 million. There has been a great deal of flexibility. Quebec has left $186 million on the table. The fairest and most equitable way of rebating that money is to repay Quebec taxpayers, who will know that in Chrétien's budget of April last there are incentives for Quebec's economy. And if Mr. Parizeau in turn wants to provide incentives in his budget, that is his business. This way people will know for sure that I operated within my jurisdiction, and he did in his jurisdiction. So they can give credit where credit is due, for better or for worse. It will be the electors' choice. Nobody will suffer there. In the motion the hon. member for Lévis was attempting to read in this House concerning the unanimous vote in Quebec's National Assembly, he was referring to a just solution for Quebeckers. But Quebeckers as Quebeckers are losing nothing, absolutely nothing, as taxpayers. This is fair and just.

The hon. member for Joliette wants me to make an arrangement with Quebec's government. I tried. I am glad he now recognizes I have been making efforts. He calls on still more flexibility on my part. Listen, I tried everything. There are 24 hours left before second reading. There have been no counter-offers. This is an ultimatum. It is either this, or else. Well, this does not impress me. So I go on with my bill. And anyway Quebeckers lost nothing, it is altogether fair that those who paid taxes in 1977 get tax credit, the vacating of a fiscal field.

Anytime the Quebec government may occupy a fiscal field. In January, when I cut the personal income tax by $100, they would have taxed those $100. Only, Quebec taxpayers will know of course the Quebec government did it. What do they want, finally? They would like to get all the credit for what they did with sales taxes, then they would like me to come up and fill the gap. Is that two-way federalism? I do not believe so. That is not fair. I want to show Quebeckers that the Canadian government stimulated the economy to the tune of $186 million, not including the $40 million sales tax for which they qualified. Nobody is losing. If Mr. Parizeau wants to collect that money rather than face a deficit, as Mr. Lévesque indicated last night on TV, he is free to do so. Last week, as I said a while ago, he thought that it was for the originality of the Quebec economic and fiscal policies. Well, alright, let him be original in his fiscal and budgetary measures.

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance recognized that Quebec is trying to achieve the purposes set forward in his budget of April 10 last. This is why he admitted that he must refund $40 million to Quebec. The $186 million payment remains in abeyance. The minister suggested in his bill a direct and immediate refund to Quebec taxpayers. This is provided in clause 30(b). This proposal, in my opinion, has some major disadvantages and raises a basic question. On the one hand, it is costly for all Quebec taxpayers. Indeed, the cost of issuing refund cheques and the corresponding collection costs by the Quebec department of revenue will come to about $3 million. That is what the Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons recognized at page 51, chapter 20 of its 1972 report, and I quote:

> With regard to the method of compensation provided in the federal government's proposal should a province elect to opt out, direct reimbursement to individuals is unacceptable to us. From the administrative standpoint it implies that all individuals in a non-participating province would first pay a certain amount of tax in one form or another to the federal government; they would then receive a cheque or a tax credit from the federal government; finally these same individuals would be taxed again by their provincial government, which would likely want to set up a program to replace the one in which it refused to participate. Administratively, this procedure seems too unwieldy.

On the other hand, the repayment formula, as described in section 30(b) is likely to create important distortions in the current operations of the government of Quebec: it implies that, in order to make up for the missing sums, the government of Quebec would have, through immediate legislation, to impose a special tax with a view to recovering the $85 Ottawa is paying to Quebec taxpayers.

The whole operation takes on a special connotation at this stage of the constitutional debate. As a matter of fact, the white paper entitled "A Time for Action" states, under the heading "Renewing the Practice of Federalism", and I quote:

The character of Canadian federalism has varied with time, so that today the federal and provincial governments are more interdependent than at any point in our history.

The federal government proposes the following objectives so that this interdependence may operate effectively while permitting each order of government to serve its citizens as well as possible:

—to bring about a less contentious federal-provincial relationship;

—to eliminate wasteful duplication of legislation, regulations, policies, programs or services, and generally to make the effective provision of services by government less costly.

An a little further on:

To take deliberate steps to ensure that, for its part, the federal government takes fully into account the constitutional responsibilities and priorities of provincial governments, by consulting the provinces when preparing a legislative proposal, formulating a policy, or designing a program that is in an area of shared jurisdiction or that could have a significant effect—financial or other—on an area of provincial responsibility or an activity within that area;

In the federalist system, when one level of government decides to withdraw partly from a program whose aim touches the field of its exclusive jurisdictions, the corresponding compensation to the taxpayers of that province must not be made over the head of the provincial government concerned. In this case, the Quebec decision to selectively remove the tax on four particular items was not a decision that was made, in our political regime, by individual taxpayers. It was made by their government, a government formed after a democratic election.

Since the political and constitutional responsibility for this decision rests with the government of the province of Quebec, it is with this government that the federal government must agree on the compensation formula. This is at the very heart of the sharing of responsibilities in a federal government structure. Of course, the Quebec minister of finance can write to his federal counterpart that "if you do not amend Bill C-56, the government of Quebec will take the necessary action to recover a global amount equivalent to the sum which otherwise would have been paid to the province by the federal government". However, should the federal government persist in this attitude, it would go against the spirit and the general philosophy of a federal experience which they precisely intend to renew, according to their own words. Respect for the legislative and executive independence of each level of government in a healthy federal structure demands that the responsibility for decisions taken remains in the hands of governments.

Under the formula described in clause 30(b), the federal government would directly return to the taxpayers part of the taxes it collected as compensation for a decision made by an autonomous and legitimate provincial government. Under the second formula, which provides for a tax rebate, or a cut in the tax to be paid in the next taxation year, the federal government would avoid the process of tax collection and reimbursement and leave the corresponding tax room to the province.

In the first case, the federal government collects taxes and reimburses them; in the second case, it lowers its taxes. In other words, in the first case, the government reduces its revenue, and in the second case, it cuts down on its expenditures. This is a major difference since the power to tax matches the power to spend. In the case of clause 30, a basic question is asked: How may the federal spending power be exercised? In other words, does the federal government have the power in our federal system to hand out directly to the citizens of a province a financial compensation when the government of this province partly withdraws from a program dealing with something that properly falls within an exclusively provincial jurisdiction?

If the answer is yes, what is there left of the jurisdiction of exclusive powers of the provinces? Can this precedent not serve in the future to justify some federal intrusion, even of a temporary nature, in the field of education, for instance? The limits to the federal government spending powers were partly defined in a judgment rendered in 1937 by the Privy Council in the well-known case of unemployment insurance. In this regard, the Privy Council ruled that the federal parliament is empowered.

—to collect taxes to establish a special fund which would be used to pay subsidies to individuals, corporations or public agencies in the interest of the whole population, but in so doing, the federal parliament cannot take any action which "can intrude on the provincial civil rights or be related to the areas exclusively under provincial jurisdiction.

However, as Professor Ivan Bernier of Laval University wrote, from this point onward, nothing is clear:

Should it be considered that the federal Parliament has full discretion to act in areas of provincial jurisdiction so long as it does not legislate as such? Or, on the contrary, that the federal parliament must not encroach upon areas under provincial jurisdiction or that it can spend in those areas, but without laying down any conditions.

Yet, neither the provincial government nor the federal government have tried since to have this issue clarified by the courts. We can then conclude that there is a modus vivendi which allows the federal parliament to initiate measures in areas that come clearly under provincial jurisdiction without the province openly challenging the legality of such measures, as they prefer to benefit from the amounts offered to them.

But on the political level, the debate is going on. In 1969, the federal government published a white paper suggesting that the Parliament of Canada has the power to make conditional grants in areas coming under exclusive provincial jurisdiction and to compensate directly the taxpayers of the provinces which would refuse to participate in all or part of the program put forward by the federal government.

The final report of the joint special committee of the Senate and the House of Commons tabled in 1972 stated that the repayment was to be made directly to the government of the province.

Since then, no discussions nor rulings have shed light on that debate.

The letter of the Quebec finance minister dated June 7 does not shed any more light on that debate. It leaves the federal government free to choose between a direct payment to the taxpayers or a tax rebate at the end of the next taxation year.

The first proposal contained in Mr. Parizeau's letter dated June 7 may seem surprising when one reads the briefs and position statements submitted by Quebec at previous constitutional conferences and during prior discussions on the limits of the federal government spending power. Quebec has always maintained that the federal government could not in the exercise of its spending powers intervene in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction and pay contributions directly to the citizens of an opting out province.

● (1252)

The letter of June 7 does not contain any reassertion of the traditional Quebec position with respect to the spending powers of the federal government and the direct reimbursement of taxpayers. Nor does it express any intention of questioning the constitutionality of clause 30 of Bill C-56 the nature and limits of which, needless to remind you, have not been defined by the courts. Nor the letter of June 14 which was made public yesterday reiterate the essence of the principle involved in clause 30. Yet the question remains unanswered and the debate open. There is no doubt in my mind that we must avoid creating a precedent that would only postpone a definition of federal spending powers commonly acceptable to the federal government and the provinces in the constitutional debate that is getting under way.

Therefore, considering the arguments previously made I believe that the hon. Minister of Finance should undertake to reimburse Quebec taxpayers using the tax abatement formula set out in subclause (1) of clause 30(a) and to withdraw subclause 30(b). By doing so the spirit of federalism would be observed, a practice the federal government wants to renew; he would avoid the distortions caused by the imposition of a special tax and he would put an end to the political debate which rallied unanimous support in Quebec. Otherwise, the debate which should redefine the constitutional balance in this country will be seriously endangered. I would like, Mr. Speaker, to put a question directly to the Minister of Finance.

The hon. Minister of Finance has said that one of the reasons why he wants to reimburse directly Quebec taxpayers is to immediately inject an amount of $186 million in the Quebec economy. Will the minister not recognize however that the effect of that stimulus will certainly be limited and short-lived since it is not at all certain that the tax-payers who will be receiving it will use it to increase their spending but rather that they will put it in their savings accounts or spend it abroad. Does he not also recognize that the stimulus will certainly be short-lived because according to the letter of June 7, Quebec will soon retrieve a similar amount from the taxpayers?

Mr. Chrétien: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think that if Quebec had accepted my proposal last April and reduced its tax on all items within the economy of Quebec just as the other provinces had agreed to do, we would not have had any problems and this is the direction in which we would have liked Quebec to move. However, they even refused to talk about it and failed to answer yes or no. Because we have no agreement with Quebec and since they did not accept the national scheme, the other alternative was to reduce our Income Tax and that is what we are actually doing. With respect to the national scheme, I can say that they have stimulated the Quebec economy for up to an amount of $40 million and this is what we are acknowledging.

As for the balance, we are doing what we intended to do, namely reducing our federal income tax. Sure enough, if Mr. Parizeau turns around and retrieves that amount, the effect of the measure will be nil but Mr. Parizeau alone and not I will be blamed for it.

In addition, I would like to go over the hon. member's remarks when he says that I am making ill use of my spending power. I am not doing so in any way. There has been an agreement covering these $40 million and that we acknowledge. As far as the balance is concerned—the money which remains on the table—we could have told them that since they chose not to accept it, we were going to keep it in the bank for as long as they refused to take it, even for years to come, as it was the case under Mr. St. Laurent with the funds that were meant for the universities. The federal money would go into a trust account or in escrow and remain there for years until Quebec would decide to make use of these funds.

We did not want to do the same, we put the money immediately into the Quebec economy and the money will be there immediately. If Mr. Parizeau recovers it, well the electors or the taxpayers will judge Mr. Parizeau's actions. The hon. member says that the principle of fiscal withdrawal is very good. But what is the difference between withdrawing from a tax field in 1977 or in 1978? It is the same thing. When Mr. Parizeau says that it will cost him $1.5 million to recover it, well what can we do about it? If we are willing to accept this argument, we could also accept the argument put forward by the federalists back in 1954 to the effect that Quebec made a ridiculous move by establishing a department of revenue in Quebec which costs more than $100 million a year, which implies that each taxpayer should fill in two income tax returns, have two tax inspectors. However, it was said that the economy of Quebec might well foot that bill.

People may say that it is necessary, others that it is not, but the provinces can act as they please in their area of jurisdiction. We acknowledge that and we are acting with the utmost expediency. This is not a compensation I am offering the Quebec government because they turned down the scheme I had proposed. I never imposed anything upon the Quebec government. I asked them whether they wanted me to help them in such and such a way. After I had negotiated for three weeks the terms and conditions of my proposal, they did not deem appropriate to notify us of their own idea about selective cuts. I am not to blame for that. However, because of this innovation, and because it was the first time a federal minister of finance was consulting with his provincial counterparts and trying to agree on a joint program with the provinces, Quebec decided to go ahead with their own scheme after I had brought down my budget and before they introduced their own. They chose to reduce unilaterally their sales tax, just as Ontario had done some two years ago. The Ontario government had acted unilaterally when they had reduced their sales tax on cars from 6 per cent to 0 per cent. They did not ask the federal government to compensate for that, for they had acted in their own best interests, without ever taking into account the economic interests of the nation; they did not therefore seek any compensation from the national government. Since we were left with $186 million, I funnelled them into Quebec's economy as fast as I can. And if Mr. Parizeau wants to recoup them, I made fiscal room, as I had done in January last when implementing the $100 income tax cut. If they want to fill that room let them do so. They will do it now. If the hon. member wants to avoid a lot of problems, if he wants to put an end now to all this fuss, here is the answer: I cut my own tax . If Mr. Parizeau feels he must go and get it, let him do so next month, or next week, and that is the end of the debate. I cannot see why people are concerned with the 1977 or 1978 issue. In both cases it was a personal income tax cut, and the alternative would have been a collecting agreement.

I must tell the hon. member, when I made that proposal during the negotiations that the Quebec government in that area only reacted like offended virgins. "Mr. Chrétien, how dare you propose such a thing? There is no way that we Quebeckers will ask the Canadian government to collect our taxes." But now they are stuck, and all of a sudden no mention is made of autonomy and so forth. After trying for two months to get into my hair. Well, that is that. We made a decision, we made fiscal room as the hon. member is requesting it, and if the Quebec government want to step in, let them do so. That is their privilege, indeed it is their duty if they feel that it is needed. The fact is that we will have vacated a $186 million tax field, and this is not a payment to taxpayers as intended in the proposals because we are not vacating a tax field. We made a proposal which Quebec felt was unacceptable, and $186 million were left on the table so we are now giving that money back to the Quebec taxpayers. Things are not as they were, we wanted to act as soon as possible. So my feeling is there is no basic disagreement between the hon. member's proposal and mine. He wants this to be done next spring, and I said that we shall do it now so that we do not hear any more about it.

Mr. Joyal: One of the reasons he would make direct payment was that there were no estimates for interest on the loss of revenue until the next fiscal year. However, will the minister not agree that if the amount of $186 million remains in the federal treasury until the end of the current fiscal year, it will bear interest that could eventually be used to cover interest on income lost by Quebec.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member assumes that there is an agreement with the government of Quebec. There would be such agreement if they had agreed to cut their sales tax the same way the other provinces did; then we could have negotiated such an arrangement. But there is no such agreement because, without taking into account the priorities of the federal government, Quebec decided to act unilaterally in its best interest according to its own views.

Of course, I would urge the hon. member to read carefully the finance minister's letter to the Association of Shoe Manufacturers where he laughed at the idea of lowering the sales tax from 8 per cent to 0 per cent. That was not a long time ago; that is very recent. But when he shows in which spirit he acted, we can see that he was just trying to trip us, while we were only seeking to improve the economic performance of our country. That is what people do not understand or do not want to understand in our proposals. Last week, even though Mr. Lévesque had not even seen the white paper yet, he found it altogether insignificant. It is always like that. What do you want? I find it difficult to act as Minister of Finance for all of Canada and integrate everybody in the best interest of the Canadian economy when you know that the very aim of one government is precisely to prove that the Canadian federation cannot work. I acknowledge the hon. member's lofty motives, but I would like to mention that he did not say a word about that. Following representations made by many members from both sides of the House, I have shown great flexibility, but this was matter-of-factly ignored by Mr. Parizeau.

The Chairman: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2 p.m.

[Translation]

The Chairman: Order, please. When the committee took recess at one o'clock, clause 30 of Bill C-56 was under consideration.

On clause 30:

[English]

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister some questions concerning the treatment of taxpayers in some provinces compared to the treatment of taxpayers in other provinces. The Prime Minister has tried to explain to the House a number of times that the treatment was exactly the same for taxpayers in British Columbia, for instance, as for taxpayers in Quebec. May I ask the Minister of Finance if he sees the treatment of taxpayers in the province of Quebec the same as the treatment of taxpayers in British Columbia and, if so how?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, on the night of the budget I reduced the income tax of the province of British Columbia up to $100 per citizen, as in clause 38. In the case of the province of Quebec, I am reducing their income tax by $85, so there is approximately $15 that I am not paying to taxpayers in Quebec because Quebec qualified only partially under the program. As they have their own system of taxation and so on, I am paying $40 million to the Quebec government. There is a distinction that way. The Quebec taxpayer is receiving $15 less of a tax cut than the taxpayer in British Columbia.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, the minister fails to explain how a reduction in a 1978 tax is the same or similar—

Mr. Chrétien: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. Of course there is another difference. Rather than taking the list of taxpayers in 1978, I am taking the list of 1977 for the reasons I gave the House many times.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, the minister said just now "another difference is"—so he then admits there is a difference between the treatment of taxpayers in British Columbia who are not getting any money in their hands and the taxpayers of Quebec who are getting $84 cash in hand. I know from the debates in this House that the taxpayers of Quebec are not happy about that and the representatives of the taxpayers in Quebec are unhappy about it. In fact, by a unanimous motion of the Quebec National Assembly this was declared an improper move on the part of the federal government.

When I go to British Columbia my taxpayers want to know when they are going to get their refund, cash in hand, such as the minister is giving to the taxpayers of Quebec. Can the minister give me an answer to take back?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member can take back a very good answer. I reduced the tax of taxpayers in British Columbia by $100. The same day the British Columbia government increased the tax of the same taxpayers by $100. As we collect the money for both, it is channelled directly to the coffers of the British Columbia government. We do not have a tax agreement with the province of Quebec, so we cannot operate in the same way. We have not collected, Quebec provincial tax since 1954; the provincial government collects that and sends its own assessment to the taxpayers.

The night I reduced income tax by $100 in British Columbia the provincial government raised the provincial income tax of the same people by the same amount of money. By the end of the year when they file their tax return, they will have paid $100 less to the federal government and $100 more to the provincial government. We do not operate that way in Quebec because we have not collected their taxes since 1954. If British Columbia had been in the position of Quebec, collecting their own income tax, we would have sent $100 right to British Columbia taxpayers and the minister in British Columbia would have been obliged to raise his taxes by $100.

Mr. Clarke: I will try to explain that when I go back to British Columbia tonight, Mr. Chairman. I hope I will have as much success as the minister seems to indicate.

Let me refer to another difference. In the case of a taxpayer in British Columbia who is being given a sales tax reduction from 7 per cent to 5 per cent with the help of the federal government on all retail purchases, he will get real benefit from that for nine months regardless of which government it comes from. How does the treatment offered by the minister to the taxpayer in the province of Quebec equal that kind of treatment when I hear the minister saying over and over again that he will give an $85 refund by cheque to the taxpayers of Quebec—to those people fortunate enough to pay at least $85 in income tax? In other words, the poor individual in British Columbia who pays no tax, or less than $85, will get some benefit because the sales tax on such basics as telephone service, electric lights, clothing, toothbrushes and practically everything has been reduced. The person in Quebec who does not pay income tax will not get any benefit from the measure the minister offers. How does he see that as equal treatment of taxpayers in different provinces?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I made precisely the same offer to the Quebec government and they refused it, so taxpayers in Quebec who buy a car, say, do not benefit. They can blame their government as they turned the offer down. As over $186 million was left I decided not to penalize Quebec citizens because there was no agreement with the federal government, and the provincial government did not want to comply with the national plan. Therefore, Quebeckers who buy a toothbrush will pay more tax than people in British Columbia. I offered to reduce taxes by the same amount as British Columbia, but Mr. Parizeau refused. As it is a provincial tax it is up to the provincial government to decide. In the scheme of Mr. Parizeau in Quebec, the person who buys a fur coat for $100,000 will have the benefit of an $800 tax cut. The person who buys $10,000 worth of imported furniture will get a tax benefit of $800. Mr. Parizeau's scheme is worse than what I am doing for Quebec. I gave a maximum of $85 to Quebeckers. Mr. Parizeau can give them almost unlimited benefit if they buy the four items on which the sales has been cut.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, I will try that one on, and see how it applies in British Columbia. May I ask the minister what the estimated cost amounts to of the total reductions that are being offered to all of the provinces?

• (1422)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, in our calculations I cannot give you a precise amount, but the federal part is $825 million. Perhaps later on I will be able to give you the exact amount. I can inform the hon. member that $847.3 million was our estimated cost to the federal treasury. We predicted the cost to the provincial treasury would be the difference—we used to speak about $1.1 billion, so it is less than $300 million.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Chairman, since there is an $847 million cost, as the minister indicated, for this scheme, how was it that the minister took such objection to ideas put forward by this side to have some further income tax reductions to spread the goodies around among the taxpayers? Why was it so much more sinful to spend, say, $1 billion on reducing income taxes, or spending $1 billion on reducing sales taxes in a field which the minister really did not have the right to get into?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, first I want to tell the hon. member that all observers of the economic scene last week attributed the good performance of the American economy to the fact that demands has increased very substantially. The best way to help stimulate consumer demand in Canada is to reduce the tax paid at the consumer level, which is a tax that is applied by the provinces. The government offered the provinces a scheme to reduce that tax. Eight provinces accepted the offer, and Quebec refused. The government could not force Quebec to reduce its sales tax. It was quite evident that they decided to do something other than what the other provinces wanted to do. But the federal government does not have to pay for that. The government just pays that portion that complies with the national scheme. We decided not to penalize the Quebec citizens and to return to them in the form of a tax rebate the $186 million, which amounts to $85 for each taxpayer according to the 1977 list.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, if I enter the debate on this bill at this time it is because for several reasons I preferred to concentrate on something else. I have heard the remarks made by several members of this House and listened to the questions asked during the question periods, and for several days I have read the newspapers. I am surprised that my good friend the Minister of Finance should have unfortunately stepped into a trap from which he has great difficulty freeing himself. It is good to see that there has been an agreement. An effort was made to come to some agreement with the provinces in order to offer a common front concerning a budget proposal.

[English]

I am going to say to the minister that he has no business using his spending power. I am speaking on behalf of a province that is not directly affected by his original proposal with regard to the sales tax. But may I say at the outset that his statements that there are other compensations—and incidentally statements of the Prime Minister—in the budget for the people of Alberta may come to pass only if certain, shall we say, operations are put into play over the next few years with regard to the development of non-conventional oil resources. In so far as the citizen of Alberta is concerned, he is directly discriminated against. Albertans should be entitled to some relief if we use federal funds to compensate citizens of other provinces generally. What is wrong with the people of Alberta? I know my colleagues from Red Deer and from other constituencies in the province have argued this point but I am arguing it again because the minister has moved away from the field of sales tax, and he has entered the domain of income tax, which brings up an entirely new ball game.

Why should the citizen of Alberta not be compensated in so far as income tax is concerned? He is as much a taxpayer as any other taxpayer in Canada. Why should he be discriminated against in this proposal?

If the minister's proposal with regard to sales tax has been turned down by the government of Quebec—and I say the government of Quebec is fully entitled to move in the field of retail sales tax as it, and it alone, sees fit—so can the government of Newfoundland, and Newfoundland has variations on sales tax. There are some things which are not taxed in Newfoundland that are taxed in other provinces. We can go right across the country and see variations in the sales tax which are perfectly in accordance with the constitution. But, no, the minister here by his proposal has said, "You must remove 2 per cent of the sales tax for nine months, or 3 per cent for six months. And this must be across the board. There has to be uniformity across the country." I cannot see that, nor can I see the Prime Minister who said that everything must be done the same way. The government has not done that for Alberta. That is an example of discrimination right there in their plan. That was item No. 1.

The second discrimination exists in the system itself, as I have pointed out. Various provinces have exceptions to the sales tax. That is of their own doing. Now, because Quebec chose to act in its own way with regard to the sales tax, the minister says, "All right. I am going to compensate the people of Quebec for a portion of what would be the allocation to Quebec, and we are going to compensate income tax payers." But they are not the ones who are paying the sales tax. The minister, in his wildest dreams, will never insist that all sales taxpayers in Quebec are income tax payers. So the compensation is different. That is another form of discrimination.

Then I come to my third point which is the element of rebate of income tax to an individual Quebec taxpayer. I say that is a discrimination against income tax payers of the province of Alberta. They do not get any adjustment for sales tax because there is no sales tax in that province.

• (1432)

When it comes to the income tax rebate, the federal government is trying to stimulate the economy. When the Minister of Finance makes his payment of the income tax rebate to the citizens of Quebec, he has to admit it is for the purpose of economic stimulation in that province. Why not the same for Alberta? The provisions of Bill C-56, in so far as they affect the petroleum industry at some indefinite time in the future, are no compensation for the immediate spending power of the citizens of the province of Alberta, or of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia or wherever. They are entitled to it just as much. For that reason, I oppose clause 30.

[Translation]

I want to deal with another matter, Mr. Chairman, namely the speech made this morning by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont who is opposed, not to the principle of stimulating the economy of the province of Quebec or of any other province, but to the federal government encroaching upon an area of provincial jurisdiction.

[English]

It is a total breach of the spirit of our constitution.

[Translation]

This is not the first time we have seen it happen. So, I invite my colleagues, here, in the House of Commons, to read the speech made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont—I had hoped he would be here this afternoon, but he made his contribution this morning—as I say, I therefore invite the hon. members from the province of Quebec, to set aside petty politics and acquaint themselves with what their colleague from Maisonneuve-Rosemont had to say about federal encroachments upon provincial jurisdictions. This is actually a rape. But we saw the same thing when the federal government tried to gain control over natural resources when we moved in the oil area against the province of Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, in view of this and the fact that we will have a tax allocation for the people of Alberta, I would move an amendment to clause 30 as follows:

That Bill C-56 be amended at clause 30, at page 34, by striking out lines 14 to 35 and substituting therefor the following: (a) $100 for an individual residing in any province other than Quebec, $85 for an individual residing in Quebec, and (b) the amount that would, but for this subsection, be the tax payable by him under this Part for the year.

I have it here in both French and English.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, I listened carefully to the amendment moved by the hon. member and I suggest that on procedural grounds it is out of order as it goes directly against the amended ways and means motion, and more particularly it goes against and is in total disagreement with the provisions of clause 13 of the amended notice of ways and means motion.

Mr. Chairman, you will recall that the Speaker of the House made a ruling not long ago, that is on May 19, 1978, forcing the Minister of Finance to amend the notice of ways and means motion and specify in clause 13 of that motion the details corresponding to subclause 30(b) of Bill C-56. But even if at that time we had suggested to the Chair that it is not necessary to have a notice of ways and means motion when reducing taxes, in the ruling of the Chair it was clear that since it had been deemed appropriate to put it in a ways and means motion and it had been deemed appropriate to include a clause 13 dealing with clause 30 of the bill but that we had to be consistent and amend the ways and means motion to complete it and make it consistent with clause 30(b).

That has been done, Mr. Chairman. Now what the hon. member suggests is to delete paragraph (b) from clause 30 and to include the province of Quebec in the first part of clause 30, and to provide a special status, that is he now wants an income tax deduction of $100 for the residents of the other provinces for 1978, as provided for in the first part of clause 30 and, still for 1978, the amendment suggests that the reduction be $85 for Quebec taxpayers.

Mr. Chairman, here is the proposed change. According to the provisions of clause 30 of Bill C-56, before the proposed amendment, the rebate will be $85 for 1977 for Quebec. However, clause 13 of the ways and means motion includes two items: first it says the 1978 taxation year and second the 1977 taxation year. What the hon. member proposes is to have only 1978 for all provinces, and of course that is contrary to the ways and means motion as amended which hon. members now have. I certainly would not expect the House and you, Mr. Chairman, to read clause 13 in full because it is quite long.

● (1442)

Mr. Chairman, I would like to draw your attention to Standing Order 60(11) which clearly states the following:

(11) The adoption of any ways and means motion shall be an order to bring in a bill or bills based on the provisions of any such motion.

We have agreed to the amended ways and means motion, Mr. Chairman, and what the House decided at that time now constitutes an order to bring in the bill now under consideration, which must be based on the provisions of this motion. According to the provisions of this motion, for all provinces except Quebec, the year involved is 1978, and for Quebec, it is 1977. Any amendment to change this, Mr. Chairman, goes clearly against the ways and means motion, which must be strictly followed under our standing orders, and I would like to refer in this regard to the ruling of the Speaker which appears in the Votes and Proceedings of Friday, May 19, 1978. This ruling starts on page 784 and ends on page 786.

To support my argument, Mr. Chairman, I would like to read two quotations from this ruling. The first reads as follows—and these are the words of the Speaker:

That is, it appears that section 122.1(2) to be enacted by clause 30 represents a substantial departure from paragraph (13) of the ways and means motion or from any other part of the ways and means motion besides, paragraph (13), in endeavouring to deal, not with the residents of a prescribed province, not for the taxation year 1978, but with the residents of a province which is not a prescribed province and for the taxation year 1977, depending on the ultimate interpretation to be placed on the language which I, of course, do not now decide.

A bit further on, Mr. Speaker said the following:

We must begin from the premise that a ways and means motion as the basis of a tax bill is the procedural device used to protect the financial initiative of the Crown.

Mr. Speaker went on to say:

The cure is simple. It requires a ways and means motion to cover the provisions of section 122.1(2) to be enacted by clause 30 of the bill.

And to conclude, the Speaker of the House ruled and I quote:

Meanwhile, the bill may proceed certainly through second reading, and if necessary into committee up to and including clause 29 of the bill. We have examined carefully the procedents which would support this point. They are clearly recited in Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, nineteenth Edition, page 790, which reads as follows:

—and he quoted Erskine May.

Mr. Chairman, I say that, by deleting paragraph (2) of Bill C-56, to amend paragraph (1) and to include $85 for the province of Quebec, but for taxation year 1978, the hon. member contradicts paragraph 13 (a) of ways and means motion that says that the first provision of clause 30, 122.1 (1) and I quote the motion:

(13) That,

(a) for the 1978 taxation year, . . .

—this is important—

. . . the tax otherwise payable by an individual, . . . resident in a prescribed province on December 31, 1978,

—be reduced by $100.

Then the hon. member proposes:

(a) $100 for an individual residing in a province other than the province of Quebec—

—by including this provision, as he wishes to do in Section 122.1(1), the hon. member contradicts completely what suggests the ways and means motion at paragraph 13(a) that says that it will strictly apply to the taxation year 1978 and to prescribed provinces, and that the amount paid will be $100. In fact he proposes the payment of $85 and prescribes that it will be for the province of Quebec. By deleting paragraph 2 in clause 30, section 122.1(2) he renders useless the amendment made to paragraph 13(b) of the ways and means motion. So, on several counts, the member is clearly out of order and goes against the ways and means motion. He is also doing precisely the opposite of what the Chair has instructed us to do before we could consider clause 30. What he is suggesting is that we go back. Mr. Chairman, I am not for all practical purposes preventing members of the opposition or members of the House in general from amending a bill in the committee of the whole. But what I am suggesting, Mr. Chairman, is that when we are considering bills which result from a budget or bills which require a ways and means motion, the procedure to amend such bills is very limited. When we are dealing with bills resulting from a budget and tax bills, what parliament has tried to do is to allow the Minister of Finance and the government to decide in which areas taxes would be collected, and that cannot be changed at will.

The act requires us to introduce and have adopted a ways and means motion which has been amended at the request of the Speaker to the satisfaction of the House. Mr. Chairman, the amendment moved by the hon. member only goes against our rules and procedure and only does the opposite of what parliament allows us to do. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, while reserving my judgment at this time, I would not want my intervention to be considered as a discussion on the merits of the amendment but strictly on procedural grounds and for technical reasons. I say that the amendment is unacceptable and that valuable time would be lost debating it, since the Chair is quite likely to reject it as unacceptable from a procedural standpoint. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I wish to point out to the hon. member an answer given last week by the Minister of Finance to the member for Lafontaine-Rosemont to the effect that he may well get most, and I repeat most, of the results sought by his amendment without having to—

[Mr. Pinard.]

The Chairman: The hon. member is entering the debate, the substantive debate. I do not think that this would help the procedural discussion at this stage.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I find it very surprising that the parliamentary secretary managed to have my amendment declared out of order on procedural grounds. He is presently refuting the argument put forward by my colleague from York-Simcoe and myself when we told the Speaker that Bill C-56 was not in order, because it was contrary to section 59(11) of the rules of the House and because it introduced in the bill an important element which was not covered by the ways and means motion. That is one thing. But the parliamentary secretary now indicates that once a ways and means motion has been passed, there cannot be any amendments to the bill. Who says so?

Mr. Pinard: Our Standing Orders?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Someone says our "Standing Orders". But if I want to replace the year 1977 by 1978, that is in order. That is the point. The hon. member is shaking his head. Well, frankly, he is mixed up, because my amendment is quite in accordance with section 122.1. The reimbursement formula is varied, I agree, but I have the right, and it is the right of the hon. members to change the law. And I suggest we do that for the benefit of the Alberta people. They would be entitled to a $100 rebate, and I have the same right as the hon. member, to lower a tax. It has always been acceptable that we reduce taxes. I may not increase them but I may put forward an amendment, and it has been acceptable over the years that a member may affect legislation through an amendment lowering taxes, and this is all I have done. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it follows in my view that my amendment would be acceptable from a procedural point of view.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, first this may involve major technical problems, because if the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West were to be accepted, we would have to amend other clauses. He failed to provide for consequential amendments, and furthermore there is no point in expanding on the procedural aspect that has been so aptly explained by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council. We are now, Mr. Chairman, in a somewhat ludicrous situation. In mid-May, when the bill was first introduced, the opposition objected that clause 30(b) was not covered by a notice of ways and means motion and the Chair supported their contention. When, however, we vote on a ways and means motion, we are giving an order to the House, if I understand the procedure, to proceed according to the ways and means motion. And it is because the opposition fought for a ways and means motion covering clause 30(b) that our margin for amending clauses 30(a) and 30(b) is so much more restricted. Ironically, a point made by the opposition is today restricting the committee's flexibility to proceed in any way.

● (1452)

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a very brief comment following the comments of the minister, who has clearly misunderstood the procedural argument put forward before Mr. Speaker, with which he agreed. Initially, the ways and means motion which the minister suggested the House concur in referred only to the year 1978 and only to a reduction of $100 as far as taxpayers were concerned. The bill he brought in, Bill C-56, clearly was drafted after the initial concept which went into the original ways and means motion had changed. In short, Bill C-56 which is now before us includes the proposed subsection (b) to which the minister has referred but which in no way was encompassed by the original ways and means motion. Our argument was that in his wisdom the minister wanted to amend the ways and means motion as was indicated in clause 30 of Bill C-56, to give him greater parameters. The minister now turns that around and says that we are arguing against subsection (b). All we are saying is that the ways and means motion which he now has before us does allow a parameter which is sufficiently broad to allow proposed subsection (b) to be considered. However, we do not think subsection (b) should remain in the legislation, and we state that while it can be considered, it should be deleted. We are asking that the committee of the whole now delete it.

Before we vote, perhaps the minister could expand on what specific clauses would have to be amended should our motion carry. He has made a representation in his classic fashion in which he makes statements like that only to find he usually cannot back them up. I would like him to tell us what clauses have to be amended.

The Chairman: I do not think the question in itself has anything to do with the point of order because I might say at this time that that argument does not stand.

[Translation]

In my view, the point made by the hon. member on the need to amend other clauses if we were to carry the amendment put forward by the hon. member has no bearing whatsoever on the proposal's acceptability. It is not for the Chair to decide whether a piece of legislation makes sense or not, whether a clause is good or bad, nor whether an amendment is positive or negative. The Chair must only consider the proposal from a procedural point of view. This is a point I should like to clarify. I do not know whether there will be other speeches in this debate on the proposed amendment. If there are members who want to notify me, I am ready to hear them.

Now, with reference to the very interesting and enlightened comments of the Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council, I wish to point out to him that in his ruling, the Speaker of the House especially asked the government to apply the same principle to all provinces as far as clause 30 is concerned and more or less concluded that if the government had deemed it fit in its ways and means motion to include a provision dealing with the first part of clause 30, that is the part dealing with some specified provinces, the Speaker logically asked the government to amend its ways and means notice to give it the same effect in the case of an unspecified province. The parliamentary secretary wants to refer to part of a ruling appearing on page 785 of Votes and Proceedings of May 19, 1978, which states the following and I quote:

> However, clause 30 in the bill goes on to deal with matters not contained, in my opinion, in paragraph (13) or elsewhere in the ways and means motion, to deal with those taxpayers not in a prescribed province and perhaps even not in the same taxation year. That is, it appears that section 122.1(2) to be enacted by clause 30 represents a substantial departure from paragraph (13) of the ways and means motion or from any other part of the ways and means motion besides, paragraph (13), in endeavouring to deal, not with the residents of a prescribed province, not for the taxation year 1978, but with the residents of a province which is not a prescribed province and for the taxation year 1977, depending on the ultimate interpretation to be placed on the language which I, of course, do not now decide.

At that stage, the Chair indicated quite clearly that he did not want to give his decision as to the need to have a notice of ways and means motion to comply in principle with clause 30. But I want to deal briefly with that matter, and perhaps to indicate that the implications of Ways and Means motions and those of royal recommendations are different. The ways and means motion deals with taxation and the royal recommendation relates more to expenses which may be incurred.

The parliamentary secretary claims that the hon. members would not have the right to bring in at this stage an amendment which would somehow amend the bill before us, simply because this amendment would amend the bill and would make it somewhat different from what the proposal in the ways and means motion could be. I would like to refer to the remarks made by the parliamentary secretary on the possibilities which are open to the hon. members in the face of such bills, namely taxation bills.

I suggest that he should read Beauchesne's Parliamentary Procedure, citation 265 (1) which says and I quote:

> No member other than a minister of the Crown may introduce a bill for the reduction of duties. The government must take full responsibility for the taxation levied to provide the revenue. But the House enjoys complete freedom to make every representation possible to the government with regard to the manner in which the ministers discharge this responsibility. This duty the members may perform by moving amendments to reduce the taxes proposed by the administration.

Without agreeing completely with the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton West, I shall point out to hon. members that the purpose of the proposed clause 30 is tax reduction. It is not a taxation measure, it is intended to reduce taxes paid in the 1977 or 1978 taxation year. On that point, I shall now quote from Erskine May, nineteenth Edition, at the top of page 780, which deals with tax reduction. I quote:

● (1502)

[English]

Alleviation of Taxation

Provisions for the alleviation of taxation are not subject to the rules of financial procedure. The repeal or reduction of a tax, for instance, by the finance bill, is sometimes preceded by a—

[Translation]

And I think this may, at the same time, refute somewhat the objection of the hon. parliamentary secretary, and I repeat—

[English]

—specific ways and means resolution. But this procedure is not necessary if the House has agreed to a resolution for the general amendment of law.

[Translation]

To my mind, the hon. members have enough leeway to move amendments reducing even further the cut, so to speak, provided for in clause 30 of the bill. It remains to be seen whether the proposal of the hon. member for Edmonton West meets all those requirements, or whether it exceeds what is allowed because it goes beyond the scope of the original proposal in the ways and means motion, and in the bill now before the House, by in fact including a province which, though not one of the prescribed provinces, was not covered in the government bill. On this particular point, I should like the committee to allow me to suspend consideration of clause 30 for further consideration of the matter or else to carry this study further while leaving it to the Chair to issue a ruling at the next sitting of the committee. On this last point, I would like to hear the comments of the hon. members.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I think your suggestion to wait until the next sitting before issuing a ruling on this matter is quite adequate and that you have dealt very fully with the point that was raised. Personnally, and following representations made by the parliamentary secretary, I think that, on the basis of the ruling made recently by Mr. Speaker, it might be wise to let His Honour give his own point of view in this matter.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I should like to add this comment. The question of a province prescribed is subjected to an order in council. So let's listen carefully. If the government, even under the law such as I propose to amend, because it says, at the beginning of clause 122(1), which reads as follows:

122.1(1) An individual . . . who resided in a prescribed province . . .

This question results from an order in council and, actually, given the circumstances, the government could keep from prescribing the province of Alberta and that would not go beyond the subject matter of the notice of ways and means motion. But I would say that it is precisely on that point that the matter has been well settled.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we do not have to go on on a debate concerning the form and the hon. member is presently talking about the substance while we are discussing the procedure. We could have a whole debate because I have not had the time to discuss the substance of the hon. member's motion, and before discussing that, I would like to know if the form is in conformity with the prescribed rules. Mr. Chairman, you proposed to reserve your decision about the form of the motion until you can consult with the Speaker of the House. We could pursue consideration of section 30 without having a debate on the substance of the amendment, as was proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

[The Chairman.]

The Chairman: Before recognizing the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I want to tell the hon. minister that I have received the remarks of the hon. member for Edmonton West without changing my decision concerning reserving my ruling, a decision I will render as a responsible Chairman of the committee, without any obligation for consultation nor directives, but I will take my responsibilities concerning other decisions I have made.

[English]

Does the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre wish to add a comment which would be helpful to the Chair before next Monday?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, that is my middle name, being helpful to the Chair.

May I say that I concur in your suggestion that you be permitted to reserve your decision on this matter, and I should like to support the statement you made a moment ago that the decision is one for you to take, although you still have the right to ask for advice from anyone you wish. But since I did not take part in the procedural discussion earlier, I should be grateful if you would let me have a couple of minutes to express my view on what I think is important about the issue now before us, speaking in procedural terms.

First, I think it should be clear that the fact that Mr. Speaker ruled that there had to be a ways and means motion supporting the provisions in the bill does not mean that, once that ways and means motion has been carried, the House is required to pass what the government puts in the bill on the basis of that motion. We still have freedom in committee of the whole to make our own decision about clauses, whether to pass them or reject them or try to amend them. I say, therefore, that I think all of the argument that was made on the ruling given by Mr. Speaker that there had to be an amended ways and means resolution does not get in the way of what the hon. member for Edmonton West is trying to do.

So far as the ways and means resolution is concerned, it seems to me that the only question that now has to be asked is whether the clause, if it were amended by the proposal of the hon. member for Edmonton West, would still come within the terms of the amended ways and means resolution. As I read the first paragraph of resolution 13(a), it seems to me that it does cover the proposed amendment because in fact it permits the reduction of the tax by $100 across the board; the amendment suggests it be $100 in some provinces and $85 in others.

The only other point I wish to make is to confirm, and to put myself on the side of, the argument you have already given from the chair, that members in committee of the whole on a taxation bill do have the right to move amendments that alleviate taxation or cause a reduction. I hope that you will give consideration to these points between now and Monday when you try to make up your mind on this very important procedural decision.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, on your observation that you thought a province was being added as a result of the amendment of my colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton West, I would point out that under section 248(1), which is a definition section of the Income Tax Act, the word "prescribe" is defined. When we find "prescribe" in the context of the Income Tax Act, it is described as meaning:

"prescribed", in

The case of a form or the information to be given on a form, means prescribed by order of the minister, and, in any other case, means prescribed by regulation—

● (1512)

The point I am trying to underline is that the import of my colleague's amendment is not to add a province. He is saying simply that the province could be added, if the minister saw fit. For that reason, we think the amendment generally is desirable. Quebec and Alberta could be added as prescribed provinces.

The Chairman: I thank the hon. member for his explanation in addition to what was said by the hon. member for Edmonton West. This decision is important. We do not meet such difficulties or controversies that often. Since the change of the rules in this House, it is difficult to interpret exactly citations or previous decisions, especially with the elimination of the resolution stage of a bill. As I have requested, I should like some time to make a decision not later than next Monday. It is clear in my mind that I must examine the entire pattern. I am sure that would be to the benefit of us all.

Is there any objection to standing clause 30, or should we stand the amendment and continue debate on clause 30?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, our general disposition would be to stand clause 30. The disposition of this amendment will have a substantial bearing on clause 30 itself. Clauses 6 and 17 were stood. Perhaps we could gain a little time by reverting to clause 6 for debate, then proceed to clause 17, followed by clause 31 if we get that far this afternoon.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, yes, I am willing to discuss other clauses; but before doing that, I should like to talk about the substantive aspects of the amendment of the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Clark: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chrétien: Is that not acceptable?

Mr. Clark: No, it is not.

Mr. Chrétien: Why not? I do not know why hon. members opposite do not want to hear an argument on an amendment to clause 30 which was put forward. We can still deal with clause 30 if we want.

Mr. Clark: Surely it is quite clear to the Minister of Finance that he cannot have things both ways in the House, even though he may be able to get away with it outside the House. His parliamentary secretary, on instructions from the minister, introduced a procedural argument to stop this committee from dealing with the substance of the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Edmonton West. The chairman has quite properly ruled that he wants to reserve his decision on that. I think it is most irregular for the Minister of Finance to attempt to rise, in the face of such a ruling, to discuss the substance of the matter.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Lumley: That is for Mr. Chairman to decide.

The Chairman: Order, please. I am sure the hon. Leader of the Opposition did not want to reflect on the intervention of the parliamentary secretary. Hon. members are adult enough to stand up on their own feet and answer for themselves. The hon. parliamentary secretary has proven in the past that he is able to contribute seriously in this place, as was the case today. I accept the rest of the points made by the hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Clark: Of course my point was not to reflect on the parliamentary secretary of Your Honour. It was simply to stop the Minister of Finance from getting away with a most improper procedure. For the benefit of those who might not understand exactly what his motives were, what precisely was he attempting to do?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I want to be agreeable to the committee. I have some good arguments on the substance of the motion put forward by the hon. member. We are still on clause 30, and permission to return to clause 6 was requested. I said yes, but I wanted to make some comments about the motion of the hon. member. We can stay on clause 30 and debate it if we want. As yet, we have not agreed to go on to the consideration of other clauses. The hon. member for York-Simcoe asked us to return to the consideration of clause 6. I indicated that was agreeable, but I should like first a few minutes to deal with some aspects of the hon. member's amendment. Hon. members opposite do not agree with that, and the hon. Leader of the Opposition is suggesting motives for this. It is always the same tactic.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Hon. members opposite do not want us to tell them in the House that they are trying to pay off the PQ.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

The Chairman: Order please. I would like to indicate to the minister that even if the hon. member for Edmonton West and all other members were ready to discuss the proposed amendment, this cannot be done since the amendment has not yet been accepted by the Chair nor been submitted to the committee. We would discuss clause 30 in its present format, but only, in my opinion, with unanimous consent. In view of the fact that consideration of clause 30 has reached a point where the Chair is not ready to hand down a decision on the amendment, I think that, but for unanimous consent, we cannot continue with consideration of this clause without a ruling on my part. I have asked hon. members to give me until Monday to hand down a decision. If the minister does not want me to delay my decision, I shall hand it down immediately and then he may perhaps debate the amendment if I accept it, otherwise we would have to proceed with another clause, as was suggested by hon. members.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, as we are intent on co-operating with the House and proceed as quickly as possible with consideration of the bill, we would be willing to consider clauses 31, 32, 33, 34 and 6, the other standing, as I did not foresee discussing it this afternoon. I would prefer to go on with clauses 31, 32, 33, 34 and some hon. members are ready to ask questions on that. I know that some members have important questions to raise, but since there is only 40 minutes left it might be better to go on to other less controversial clauses.

[English]

The Chairman: Is the committee agreeable that we stand clause 30 and proceed from clause 31 onward?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: If clause 30 is stood by consent, we can then consider clause 31; but to return to clause 6 also would require unanimous consent, and there does not seem to be such consent. Does the committee consent to standing clause 30?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 30 stood.

On clause 31—Deduction from corporation tax

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I should like to give the usual explanation concerning clause 31, and I quote:

> Since January 1, 1978, the Northwest Territories have been collecting a 10 per cent tax on the taxable income which a corporation has earned during the year in the Northwest Territories. The purpose of the technical change to section 142(1) of the act would allow a corporation with a permanent base in the Northwest Territories to deduct from the federal tax which is otherwise payable an amount equal to 10 per cent of the taxable income it has earned during the year in the Northwest Territories. Therefore, there is no change in the total amount of the tax to be paid. Corporations with a permanent base in the Yukon will not be able to avail themselves of such a deduction because, unlike the Northwest Territories, the Yukon does not have its own tax system.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Clause agreed to.

On clause 32—Qualifying taxable dividends paid

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, clause 32 makes important amendments to the computation of the cumulative deduction account, the technical term for a corporation's post-1971 retained business income. This is an important computation since the special low rate of corporate tax for small businesses is only available if such retained income is $750,000 or less.

The purpose of the amendment is to prevent an artificial increase in the $750,000 ceiling. Through the creation of holding companies, certain corporate groups could be structured to effectively circumvent this ceiling in the $750,000 total business limit and thereby take undue advantage of the small business deduction. This situation arose as a result of the exemption from part IV tax of dividends received by a corporation with an interest of more than 10 per cent in another private company.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the Minister of State (Small Business) is in the House today. Perhaps we could hear from him as to how the government of which he is a member can be so utterly deceitful when dealing with the small business community in this country. I am referring to the fact that this proposed clause 32 imposes, a serious limitation, if it is carried, on the effect of the small business dividends position as far as the Income Tax Act is concerned. As the minister has indicated, the effect of what they intend to do in section 32 is to disqualify dividends which small business corporations may make in the future with respect to their cumulative $750,000 over-all limit. The effect of this clause would be to limit the deductibility of dividends which go to other corporations that have invested in the small business concerned.

Perhaps I can put it this way, Mr. Chairman. Many small businesses in this country have been able to raise equity funds through other corporations, some of them even being venture capital corporations, which are willing to take the risk of putting new capital into a small business in anticipation of getting dividends back if the business makes a profit. The thrust of what the minister is proposing in clause 32 is to say that, in the event that that occurs and the dividend is paid by the small business corporation, not to an individual but to a corporation—and as I say, it may be a venture capital corporation—then that dividend shall not be given the same weight. In fact, it will be given no weight as far as the over-all cumulative $750,000 of retained earnings is concerned, which the Income Tax Act allows a small business corporation to build up and still preserve their relatively low income tax.

That is why I am pleased that the Minister of State (Small Business) is here, because how this government in the one breath can be talking about doing such great things for small businesses, and in the other breath the Minister of Finance comes into the House today and through this section proposes something that would make a very, very difficult situation—and in some cases even create a hardship—for small businesses, is certainly hard for many of us on this side of the House to understand.

Having said, that, I would like the minister to indicate to us how many corporations he feels are getting out of this income tax net at the present time without this section being passed. How serious a problem is this of dividends going from small business concerns to other corporations, and does the minister feel there is a leak that should be plugged, such as he is proposing in clause 32?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we do not have the numbers of the corporations that use this route to avoid paying their normal share of the tax burden. We do see the danger of this situation arising and we merely wish to make sure that it is not abused. Of course, we have done some very positive things for small businesses in the last while, and it would not serve any good purpose to permit some big corporations to abuse or use that route to obtain some benefits which are not necessarily in the best interests of small businesses.

What we want to do, Mr. Chairman, is to have the small entrepreneurs expand, and we have many new measures for this. I would like to congratulate my colleague the Minister of State (Small Business), who has done a very good job since taking over that portfolio, to communicate with small businesses and to perform a series of things that have been accepted by the small business community in Canada. I had the pleasure the other day of meeting the president of the Canadian Federation of Small Business, Mr. Bulloch, and he was telling me that they have made more progress in the last one and a half years than has been made with the government in years. The crocodile tears of the hon. member for York-Simcoe are unwarranted because under the present government, and especially under the leadership of my colleague the Minister of State (Small Business), we have made a lot of progress.

To give a technical explanation, I will read the statement. The small business deduction permits a Canadian controlled private corporation to pay a reduced rate of corporate income tax of up to $150,000 of active business income earned in Canada in each year, until the corporation has accumulated $750,000 of active business income. The technical mechanism that keeps track of the business income accumulated by the corporation for the purpose of the $750,000 test is referred to as the cumulative deduction account, CDA. The CDA is increased by active business income earned and is reduced by dividends paid out of such income.

Bill C-56 will restrict the deductions for dividends paid in computing the CDA in certain circumstances. Let me explain why. Prior to April 10, 1978 the tax system permitted dividends paid by one private corporation to another to be received free of the 25 per cent part IV tax which normally applies to such dividends, provided that the recipient corporation owns more than 10 per cent of the equity of the payor and that the recipient and companies associated with it have not yet accumulated $750,000 of active business income.

This technical structure had two serious defects. First, it frustrated corporate joint ventures involving medium and large sized private corporations. This was highly undesirable and the source of numerous representations. Secondly, it provided a mechanism whereby shareholders of many small Canadian companies could recognize their holdings and, in effect, multiply the amount qualifying for the low rate of tax. These reorganizations involving the use of holding companies could be used to multiply the amount of income subject to a low rate of tax so that, in extreme cases, the $750,000 limit might effectively be increased to a $7.5 million limit. Then, of course, it is not any longer small business.

This was clearly inappropriate. The government moved to solve both these problems. First, subclause 42(2) will facilitate joint ventures involving medium and large sized private corporations. Then, in order to check the abuse that already existed and the further abuse that would be possible as the result of subclause 42(2), the government proposed clause 32.

Clause 32 would restrict the deduction for dividends paid in computing the CDA. In effect, the payor corporation or, if the payor is a member of a corporate group, the group, can deduct in computing its CDA only those dividends on which the recipient pays income tax. This is appropriate. It prevents the game that was being played by certain taxpayers prior to April 10 whereby they organized their holdings to facilitate payment of exempt intercorporate dividends to reduce the CDA. It prevents the multiplication of the amount qualifying for the low rate of tax through the use of holding companies.

A number of representations were received by my officials to the effect that clause 32 would produce an unduly harsh result where dividend income flows through a private holding company. Subclause 42(1) should resolve any difficulties in this regard. It allows a private corporation in receipt of a taxable dividend to elect to pay the refundable part IV tax, with the result that the dividends will reduce the payor corporation's CDA.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I think it is very clear from the remarks of the minister that he is trying to cope with something when he does not know the size of the problem. This is typical of this government's actions. They set up a provision allowing small businesses to have the advantage of relatively low income tax up to $125,000 per year or a cumulative amount of $750,000, and then panic when they find that some small businessmen actually take advantage of this. I asked the minister in how many situations this had become a problem and he said he could not put a number on it. Reading his prepared text, he said several times that he had many representations on it.

My question to the minister is very simple. If he cannot tell us how many situations are actually involved in this type of payment of a small business corporation dividend to another corporation, could he indicate why he has not at least left an opening so that if a dividend is paid from a small business corporation to another corporation which, in turn, pays a dividend to individuals, it can be treated as an ordinary dividend without saying that it is disqualified with respect to the cumulative dividend account of the small business corporation?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, we will achieve that effect with clause 42(2). In reply to the previous question, the hon. member wants to know exactly how many people abused this system. That is a very funny comment to make. He says, in effect, "don't move until they have run away with the government's money." When we see there is a danger of loopholes and tax evasion, we have to make sure, if we want to have small business, that big business does not run away with the taxpayers' money. It is as simple as that. The hon. member would be the first one to get up a couple of years from now and ask why we did not block it when we heard about it. When I saw it was a loophole I blocked it, because I knew that everyone has to pay his fair share of the tax burden. We want to have small business and we do not want big business to use the channel of small business to run away with money that they should take to the treasury. The blue collar workers pay their taxes at the source and do not have all those loopholes.

I am concerned that we keep a fair system of taxes. I can see the hon. member for York-Simcoe is always comfortable in loopholes. Probably he knows more than anybody else about loopholes in the tax system. My job is to plug them, not to help people to run away with a free ride on government money.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Chairman, I simply want to join with the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is a pair of incompetents.

Mr. Abbott: Thank you—in saying that, notwithstanding the fact that measures are introduced to provide small businessmen with opportunities under the tax system, any one of us knows there is always the possibility that the breadth of such a provision will allow people to take advantage of something that was never designed for them. The system which was provided is, in all honesty, designed for people who are earning under $150,000 and who have not accumulated $750,000 retained earnings.

For the hon. member for York-Simcoe to speak as though we have betrayed the small business community just because some slick player that he may be acquainted with is unable to take advantage, is, I would suggest, an outbreak of hypocrisy that we are all too familiar with around here. The fact is that when one speaks of things that are pretty shabby, unfortunately in many communities, and in the business community, there are people who can look with sharp-eyed interest at provisions that were not designed for them, take advantage of them and make a big dollar. We have even known, Mr. Chairman, of people who have taken advantage of the banking system to make a fast dollar.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I might make the passing comment that if the Minister of State (Small Business) knows of somebody who has taken advantage of the banking system to make a fast dollar, he should stand up and make it clear what case he is referring to. I know of none and I do not think any members over here know of any.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for York-Simcoe and his friends put a bank together under the banking system, made a very comfortable profit out of it and left a lot of other people holding the bag.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I should like the minister to back up that statement. If he is referring to me, I can assure him that I did not make a nickel. In fact, I lost money out of the promotion of the Bank of Western Canada for which, incidentally, we still have a charter. If the Minister of Finance would like to activate the charter I am sure many Canadians, especially in western Canada, would not mind activating that bank.

I ask the minister to withdraw the allegation that I made any profit out of the promotion of the Bank of Western Canada, because that is simply an untruth and he has misled the House with this statement.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Chairman, I certainly will not withdraw the implication that the hon. member formed a bank with other associates and partners. If he is saying to me that he made no money out of that operation, then this statement comes as a surprise. What we do know without any question is that a great many innocent shareholders lured into the enterprise by him and his associates lost a great deal of money.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I now ask the hon. minister to withdraw two statements; first of all, the statement that I made a profit out of the promotion of the Bank of Western Canada, and second, that others got lured into it and lost a lot of money. Both statements are totally untrue and the minister is misleading the House.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, yesterday when an altercation took place between the Prime Minister and other members of the House, Mr. Speaker indicated that when the Prime Minister made a statement of what he said in the House of Commons we had to accept that statement. The hon. member for York-Simcoe is in no different position than is the Prime Minister or any other minister. From time to time we can play games with each other. A lot of people do not understand those games, but I think it is part of the traditions and rules of this House that when a member of this House makes an assertion with respect to a particular matter and that assertion is denied, that ought to be accepted.

It should be accepted graciously by the Minister of State (Small Business). The hon. member for York-Simcoe has made an assertion in answer to a charge, an imputation by the Minister of State (Small Business). I think in all decency and propriety, having regard to the rules of the House, the hon. minister should stand and withdraw.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for York-Simcoe, having full knowledge of the business, asserts that he made no profit in the bank and derived no net profit from his participation in that venture, then I must accept his word. He was very close to the scene, so I will withdraw the comment.

● (1542)

If he is also saying that I must withdraw the comment that shareholders were encouraged to purchase stock and subsequently lost money, my information would be to the contrary and that that indeed did happen. So I do not think I can withdraw that point. But I must agree that, if he asserts that he made no profit in that venture, I must accept his word.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. minister for withdrawing the first allegation, but I would reiterate that I asked him to withdraw the second allegation because he does not know of what he speaks. The fact is people were not lured into the bank, as he is representing. The fact is that shareholders of the bank received their money back, not as he is representing, that there was substantial loss to those shareholders. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I resent this remark very much, having spent one-quarter of a million dollars of my own money trying to ensure there would be no rip-off of the shareholders of the Bank of Western Canada. I am not going to stand in this House or any other place and have any member insinuate that, somehow or other, they were ripped off by inference on account of something that I did.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Chairman, I never said anybody was ripped off. The hon. member said that nobody lost substantial amounts. Is he prepared to say they lost amounts which might have been, in their judgment, substantial, or in his? Is he saying that nobody lost any money in that venture?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Shoddy practice.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order please. Hon. members are now getting into a debate. The hon. minister withdrew his first statement, and we accept the word of the hon. member for York-Simcoe. Therefore, I consider the matter closed.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, that would be a very convenient way of getting over what is a difficult situation on a Friday afternoon, but there is outstanding an allegation that a member of the House has said—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Chrétien: There was a ruling.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, there is an allegation outstanding with respect to a member of this House. The member has said it was false and untrue. The Minister of State (Small Business) was gentlemanly enough to withdraw his comment with respect to the first matter on a denial by the hon. member for York-Simcoe. I believe he should do the same thing with respect to the second matter.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He was not convicted, so you better watch it.

An hon. Member: He doesn't have a record.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It is important that he should recognize that what applied in the first case should in all propriety apply in the second case.

The Deputy Chairman: Order please. I suggest to all hon. members that the minister said there was money lost and the hon. member for York-Simcoe said there was no money lost. Therefore, I suggest we examine the blues on Monday and we will render a decision at that time.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, in getting back to clause 32 I may make the passing reference that I always know when I am getting to the quick with these Grits, who always like to refer to the Bank of Western Canada.

The Deputy Chairman: I suggest we return to clause 32.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, if the minister ever wants a reference to any committee of this House with respect to the Bank of Western Canada, I would be more than willing to give it, and I will tell a few things that have never been disclosed before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Deputy Chairman: Order please. I suggest we all get back to clause 32.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, if I could come back to clause 32—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, let there be no doubt, I have noticed the little seals are banging their desks—

The Deputy Chairman: Order please. I point out to the hon. member for York-Simcoe that clause 32 was under discussion and I suggest we return to that clause.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, if the rabble over there would quit interrupting me, I could come back to clause 32.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Stevens: After all, it was not my doing to introduce the Bank of Western Canada; it was the Minister of State (Small Business) who did so. Dealing with clause 32—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Who lost the money?

Mr. Stevens: Dealing with clause 32, the minister has referred to the effect of clause 42, which is consequential upon the passage of clause 32, if it does pass. The minister has left the inference that somehow or other the point that I was raising concerning the payment of dividends from small businesses to a corporation and then out to an individual is not covered. The minister has left the inference that the effect of clause 42 would be to permit that payment of a dividend through the corporate chain. As I understand it, clause 42 simply facilitates the payment of the dividend, but there is no credit left with the small business corporation respecting their cumulative dividend account.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I think it is exactly as the hon. member has concluded; the transfer of money can be made under clause 42. But when transferred to that type of corporation, the income of the corporation, up to $750,000 is affected in a different fashion.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, that is just my point. What they have done is that they have set up—and we endorsed it as hon. members will recall—a special provision with respect to small businesses, giving them the privilege to have a relatively low income tax on $150,000 per year to a cumulative amount of $750,000. To the extent that they pay dividends out, they can credit those dividends against the cumulative $750,000 account. The thrust of this section is to take away the dividend credit provision if the dividend is paid to a corporation.

The point I am trying to make, Mr. Chairman, is that surely this is a backward step. When we become analytical as to where the dividends are being paid from the small business corporation, we are automatically, by that restriction, curbing the amount of capital small businesses will have available to them in future. My point is simply that when something appears to be working, when there is some flow of capital coming into small businesses, why is that now being killed by saying that, in the event that small business pays a dividend to the corporation that put up the capital, we are going to take away the cumulative effect of the over-all provision that we have said is available to small business? It is just the reverse of the situation that one would normally expect if we want to encourage venture capital in this country to go into small businesses in order to give them a shot in the arm.

I will ask the minister once again—I see he is anxious to reply. What is the rationale in killing off this type of activity when apparently it has been working a little better than the government expected?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I explained that clause 42 facilitated the flow through of the dividends. But what I explained in the earlier written note that I gave the committee is that it is possible with the present system for companies having the proper set-up to receive the preferential rate of taxes that goes to small companies not up to the amount of $750,000 of cumulative profit, but up to $7.5 million. You can do that by using the rules. A clever person with lawyers and so on and a very complex system could have not only $750,000 of taxes paid at the lower level, the preferential level, but have it accumulated up to $7.5 million. For that reason, it would be unacceptable for us not to move when we see a potential loophole like this. The hon. member should congratulate my officials for being able to forecast that loophole. If we had not forecast it, he would be the first in a few years from now to say we had not done our job properly.

• (1552)

What we are trying to do here is help small business. We do not want to create the situation where there is a loophole for big business. In order to give some further explanation of a more technical nature, may I have permission to read this text. To correct this situation, the amendments provide that dividends on non-control holdings that are exempt from part IV tax will not reduce the payer's cumulative deduction account. This ensures that, to the extent the part IV tax is not paid, the payor corporation's small business deduction entitlement is limited to $750,000. A consequential amendment to part IV permits the receiving corporation to elect to pay the part IV tax on otherwise exempt dividends. In this manner the payor corporation's cumulative deduction account is reduced, its small business entitlement is refreshed, and the part IV tax serves to ensure that an appropriate rate of corporate tax is paid on surplus retained in the corporate sector.

In structural terms, the amendment to subsection 125(6) modifies the definition of "cumulative deduction account" to provide that those dividends paid after April 10, 1978 to non-controlling private corporations owning more than 10 per cent of the payer's voting stock do not reduce the payor corporation's cumulative deduction account. Subsection 125(7) provides an exception to this general rule for dividends on which the recipient private corporation elected to pay the part IV tax.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I think I have made the point. The minister has read what the officials have given him as an explanation. He obviously does not understand the thrust of the clause. He simply has to read what he is handed.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, if we were to give prizes in this House, the hon. member would receive the prize as the one who throws around more cheap shots than anyone else. I will explain it in French.

[Translation]

Let us take nine companies . . . As it is too technical for them in English I will explain it half in French and half in joual and perhaps they will understand. Mr. Chairman, if nine companies decide to merge, they could control only 11 per cent of all shares, and with these nine different companies controlling 11 per cent, they would be able to get the preferential tax rate of this little company, abusing the system. In other words, those companies with interests in the small company could manage things so that this small company would declare a maximum profit of $7,500,000 to avoid the rate applied to bigger corporations. In my mind, Mr. Chairman, there is a real danger of people abusing the advantage which we are seeking to give to smaller companies. What we want here is to allow smaller companies to obtain a preferential rate, to reward initiatives in Canada and to allow them to pay only half the usual rate applied to larger corporations. But what can we do? As my good friend the late hon. member for Témiscamingue, Mr. Réal Caouette, used to say, financial sharks might come and create corporations with shares in small companies to avoid paying the normal tax rate which applies to corporations. In view of the circumstances we are trying to block this kind of loophole. This does not mean that we are against investments by corporations in smaller companies. But this must not become a way out for bigger companies anxious to avoid paying the normal rate applying to them. If the hon. member still does not understand, what can I do? I cannot explain it any better.

[English]

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if I might be allowed to pass to the Minister of Finance or his parliamentary secretary some amendments that I have just finished reading and preparing concerning clause 6. May I be allowed to pass them across so that they can study them on the weekend in the hope that we can get to clause 6 on Monday of next week?

The Deputy Chairman: I suggest to the hon. member that he can do that directly to the minister or his parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member wants to give me notice of amendments he wants to introduce on Monday, I will be delighted to see whether something can be done about them. If they are good ideas but cannot be accommodated in the last hour on the bill, I want him to know I always welcome good ideas. I know this hon. member brings out some good ideas. If he will give them to me, I will be pleased to study them.

Before resuming my seat, I want to read something prepared by my officials. They have been good enough to put it in another language. We will use another language because we know this is very difficult for the hon. member for York-Simcoe. It would take a month and a half for this hon. member to understand this. We would be glad to give him seven, eight or nine versions of what, in my opinion, is very simple.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Before we reach four o'clock and rise from committee of the whole, for the record and for the benefit of those who might be following today's proceedings it should be made clear that Friday afternoons are not always like this. It is nice to see so many members with us today, but they should know that usually this is a pretty peaceful place on a Friday afternoon.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I am very grateful to the members of my party who are here in such great number to support my proposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I wish to set the record straight. When a private corporation pays a dividend to a holding company which, in turn, pays a dividend to an individual, clause 40 permits a flow-through. The small business company paying the dividends to the holding company can deduct its dividends in computing its CDA.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being four o'clock p.m., it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to consider the bill at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being four o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions, public bills and private bills.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it seems that there is unanimous consent to proceed with the debate on notice of motion No. 5, without prejudice to the previous notices of motions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it agreed that items Nos. 13, 3, 7, 9, 2, 18 and 12 stand by unanimous consent and that we proceed with item No. 5?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is so ordered.

FOOD

ADVISABILITY OF PROVIDING INTERNATIONAL AID

The House resumed from Friday, March 10, 1978 consideration of the motion (Mr. MacDonald) (Egmont):

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of providing (a) international food aid at an annual level at least equal in nutritional value to the amount by which Canadians consume more than the world's average per capita protein diet (b) international agricultural development assistance at an annual level at least equal to the gross revenues accruing to Canada from the world arms trade and the vigorous advancement of these initiatives for adoption and implementation by the United Nations.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to take part in this continuing debate on the subject of the supply of food to many millions of people around the world. This is an area in which I have been very interested for a number of years. I have a professional background in agriculture and I have studied the question in some depth.

In the last day or so I have had an opportunity to read the remarks of the Mister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) on the occasion of his address to the fourth session of the World Food Council in Mexico City. I want to be among those congratulating the minister on what I thought was an excellent presentation and I would commend his remarks to the attention of all hon. members. I believe the mover of the motion before us would be encouraged by the response of Canadian farmers to this most urgent problem.

In discussing a subject as significant and wide ranging as this, it would be well to situate our views in the global context of food production and nutrition. The Minister of Agriculture dealt extensively with this issue. I might also remind the House that last year in Ottawa, at Carleton University, a symposium was held on the subject—I am sure members on both sides followed the proceedings closely and, quite likely, made contributions to them.

It is generally agreed that while some progress has been made, the international community has not been very successful in overcoming the world food problem. In too many countries there are acute food shortages. Although, on a global basis food production per capita has kept pace with the growth in population and mass famine has been avoided, we have not been able to give a consistency to efforts to overcome food shortages over time and in different parts of the world.

Since the end of World War II, opinions about the magnitude of the world food situation have swung like a pendulum between pessimism and optimism. Thus, in 1945, the main problems were rehabilitation of agriculture in war-devastated countries and formulation of agricultural policies that would bring stability and prosperity to farmers all over the world. However, as surpluses began to accumulate in North America in the early 1950s, it seemed that getting rid of the surpluses was more of a problem than shortages. There was a wave of optimism. It appeared that the world was on the verge of a food breakthrough. But by the mid-1960s, acreage controls, food aid programs, unfavourable weather in a number of countries, as well as increased exports by major suppliers, reduced the surpluses. In 1966, world grain stocks were rapidly drawn down, mainly as a result of greatly expanded imports by India and the U.S.S.R. Pessimism crept in. More and louder statements were being made about the impending shortages.

By 1972, any optimism about the world food situation and prospects that was prevalent in the previous decade gave way to widespread anxiety. The world food situation in 1973 was the most difficult since the years immediately following the devastation of World War II. Supplies were down. We had a World Food Conference to work out an international program to increase food production, to improve human nutrition.

Agricultural production, especially grains, did recover in 1975-76 and food production by 1976-77 was at a record level. The strong demand, short supplies and higher prices led to a substantial increase in grain production, especially in North America which now provides about 80 per cent of the world's grain exports. Larger crops in these two years have enabled a rebuilding of world cereal stocks which had been drawn down for three consecutive years to their lowest level in 20 years. According to FAO, at the end of this past crop year these stocks totalled 163 million tons, or 18 per cent of apparent consumption. Carry-over stocks of wheat at the end of the 1976-77 crop year were the highest since 1969-70.

Both total and per capita food production, as recorded by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, rose in 1975 and 1976. Following a gain of about 3 per cent in per capita food production in the developing countries as a whole in 1975, there was a further rise of about 1 per cent in 1976. By developing regions, per capita food production in 1976 was at or close to peak levels in each, with the major exception of Africa. FAO also reported that in general, dietary energy supplies which dropped sharply in many developing countries, particularly in 1972 and 1973, appear now to have recovered approximately to the levels prevailing in 1969-71. There are, however, many countries, especially in Africa, where recovery has not yet taken place.

On the whole, I would say that we are now in a period of cautious optimism. The magnitude of the world food situation now and to 1985 should be viewed in the light of the following data, none of which is new, relating to population, land resources, income, consumption and food requirements and investment:

1. Currently four billion people have to be fed. By 1985 it will be around five billion people.

2. In 1976, there were 115 developing countries—the majority being new nations—with a population of nearly three billion, or 73 per cent of the total world's population, and will likely reach 75 per cent in 1985.

3. It is expected that the marked rural-urban migration will continue and the trend toward urbanization will accelerate, especially in the developing countries. The effect of this urbanization is a progressive disappearance of good farmland and an increase in the number of people seeking employment off the farms. This rapid urbanization in the developing countries will result in a more intensive competition for capital between the rural and urban areas and this may affect seriously agriculture's capacity to expand food production.

4. Among the factors of production, the world has the people—the working force. It also has the land, but not enough of it is in production. On the whole, the land resource is not a major factor in retarding the rate of expansion of food production, although there is a growing concern over availability of water and the encroaching desert.

Not long ago I had an opportunity to attend a meeting with the Minister of Agriculture and during his remarks my hon. friend dealt rather extensively with the effect of the encroachment of desert on good agricultural land. This was something I had not really thought about or read very much about. I found it a very interesting phenomenon, but if it is as extensive as some of the people who have given scientific papers dealing with climatology and the encroachment of desert indicate, I think this will be one of the emerging issues we will be talking about a great deal in the years ahead as agricultural production is affected.

I do not recall accurately the numbers the minister was using that evening, but it did seem to me that the magnitude of the expansion of desert into good agricultural land was greater by a large measure than any encroachment of the urban society into good agricultural land, and therefore might give some indication of the size of the problem we are talking about. I am sure my good friend across the way is quite an authority on this. Perhaps he will be speaking later in the debate, and perhaps he might address some remarks to this question, because if he did he might enlighten a large number of members of this House on this interesting and very serious problem.

The real problem comes down to more effective use of the land resource. The ratio of the total land under cultivation to total population is .6 hectares per person in developed countries and .3 hectares per person in the developing countries. Those statistics indicate the high degree of efficiency which exists in North American agriculture and the long way efficiency has to go in developing countries.

There is a considerable amount of potentially arable land in the world. We could probably double the area under cultivation. However, as various studies have shown, it would require substantial sums of money to get this potential agricultural land under cultivation. Perhaps I might also add that it seems to me that even in Canada—and I have a much better knowledge of Ontario; I was born and raised in a farm community—the number of acres under cultivation could be greatly increased. In fact, I am sure it could be doubled. I just wanted to interject my own point of view.

When we start talking about the world food supply, we always seem to talk about the potential to produce, and somehow we leave the impression that our agricultural sector is not doing its share. The agricultural sector in Canada is, I suppose, one of the most productive of any in terms of the productivity we often talk about in this House. I think the agricultural sector in Canada has increased its productivity on a percentage basis faster and further than almost any other sector. In terms of encouraging more land use in Ontario and across the country, it should be stated that this would be fine if someone other than the farmer was willing to pay for it.

Food Aid

Many people in our urban society continue to think that there is the potential in Canada to feed the rest of the world. I think I said that 85 per cent of the world's grain production is on the North American continent. If we are going to increase land use, people other than farmers should have to bear the costs of continued low prices for marginal operations. If exports to developing countries need to be financed, and in many cases underwritten, that should be the responsibility of some sector other than the farm community. I suggest that the farm community in Canada is ready, willing and able. It has been demonstrated by outstanding new farmers that they can get started, and some report to me quite often that they are making substantial progress. This could be achieved quite easily, but the people of Canada must decide that they want to contribute in a more substantial way to a world food program. That assistance and that commitment should be financed either by the treasury of the Government of Canada or in some other way, but it should certainly not be the responsibility only of the farm community.

The Food and Agriculture Organization states that about two billion people out of the three billion in developing countries are dependent on agriculture for a living. They produce only 40 per cent of the world's food. By country, the proportion of population turning to agriculture for a living in developing countries ranges from 50 per cent to 90 per cent. There are thus too many people in agriculture in developing countries, and they are not producing enough food.

I am sure all members of this House have listened a number of times to the Minister of Agriculture when he has talked about the tremendous increase in productivity we have experienced in Canada since World War II. One Canadian farmer produces enough food for himself, his family and 50 other people. That is almost double the production of back in the fifties. Contrasting that with the situation in developing countries, I can understand the changes which will be required to make agriculture a highly productive occupation and to utilize the land in terms of its potential to feed people.

On a per capita basis it is estimated that developed countries produce annually over 600 kilograms of grains, while developing countries produce close to 200 kilograms. Again, that indicates that agriculture in this country per man produces something like three times what developing countries are producing, and with a third or less of the manpower.

On the income side, the average per capita income in developing countries is less than one tenth of that in developed countries. This in itself is a very large problem. Because per capita income is so low, it is almost impossible for people to accumulate enough capital to enter into extensive mechanization. It must be very difficult to enter into any type of program which would allow land assembly of sufficient quantity that mechanization would make any sense. I suppose in most of these countries the only solution would be fairly extensive assistance from government to assemble larger blocks of land and to finance mechanization.

Indeed, those very well may be the kinds of things world organizations should be looking at, because if we look back on the history of agriculture even in this country, that was one of the severe problems experienced. Farm communities could not generate enough capital to assemble large acreages which would make mechanization possible. An entirely new approach was taken by lending institutions after the second world war which made this possible, and that allows us to be one of the best fed nations in the world and one of the most productive from an agricultural point of view.

The average per capita income in developing countries is less than one tenth of that in developed countries. In 1973, for instance, the per capita gross national product in developing countries was estimated at U.S. $310 compared with the average of $4,180 in developed countries and $5,372 in Canada. One has only to stop and think about those figures to see the magnitude of the disparity. If in fact in Canada many agricultural sectors are very marginal with regard to size and it is common to generate an average income of about $5,400, one can imagine when in other countries that income is only about $300 how far we have yet to go in the global development of agriculture. The income disparity is greater than the averages indicate. In developing countries there are some 300 million people who are unemployed or underemployed. Estimates made by the World Bank indicate that 750 million people in the developing world are considered to be poor and, of these, 85 per cent are in absolute poverty, based on an arbitrary criterion of annual per capita income of $50 or less.

My colleague the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) has had the opportunity to travel to certain parts of the world and has seen how great this poverty really is. I think all members of this House and particularly those from agricultural communities would agree that the fundamental thing which has to happen to change this situation is the development and the maturity of agricultural organizations within each of these developing countries.

The total grain consumption per capita in one form or another in developed countries is somewhat over 500 kilograms, and in developing countries with market economies it is only about 180 kilograms. About 10 per cent of the grain consumption in this latter group was from imports. In some countries the percentage of grain imports over consumption was even higher. One might reach from that figure the conclusion that Canadians are well fed with a great variety of high quality food, and in spite of the questions and statements expressed in the House in the last few days, as a percentage of total income, food continues to be one of the best bargains there is in Canada. I think that when we are debating our current concern about consumers with respect to food prices, we should not be doing it from the point of view that somehow farmers are presently making a fortune. I suggest that many farmers in Canada are making a good income at this time, but they require a good deal of it to pay off some of the losses.

● (1622)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the parliamentary secretary that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to say that I did not intend to take part in this debate, but when my agricultural colleague the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Milne) started to speak, I must say he attracted my interest and I decided I would like to make a few comments.

His theme appeared to be the importance of food production at the local level, and he seemed to zero in on the speech of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) made recently in Mexico. I want seriously to suggest that he did not mention in any way the politics of world food production or even the politics of domestic food production, and that is a very important aspect of food production.

I want to say a few words now about the involvement of politics in our domestic food production. Believe me, I have been very much involved in that over quite a number of years and I can think of a number of political involvements which, looking back over the years, we might have been better off avoiding. First of all, I will mention the famous LIFT program, the lower inventory for tomorrow program, which was developed when we had the so-called surplus grain. It is true we produced an immense amount of grain and it seemed as though we would have trouble marketing it.

The initials of the program were quickly twisted around to mean "lower incomes for tomorrow" program. The impact of that totally political program was to interrupt in a massive way the whole program of grain production and livestock production on the prairies for a number of years. I do not think the public at large is quite aware of how significant was the interruption that took place as a result of that program, together with the complementary program which encouraged grain farmers not only to go out of grain production, but to re-seed their cultivated lands to forages, and there was a significant shift to forages. Of course, the only way they could harvest forages is to introduce livestock, mainly cattle, to graze those forages. This was the beginning of a distortion in our cattle cycles, and we are still suffering from it. It enhanced the swings of the cattle cycle. Again this was a solely political decision, and a federal one.

Now I want to speak about more recent developments and comment on another issue, which I am sure is well within the memory of everyone in the House. I am thinking now of the political decision which was made in 1976 in the face of unrestricted access to our Canadian beef markets. The government of the day and the present Minister of Agriculture permitted offshore imports to come into Canada in substantial quantities. Actually, about 186 million pounds of it came in in 1976 from Australia and New Zealand in the face of the highest ever domestic production of our own beef. If you do not think that caused consternation and grave hardship in our domestic cattle industry, Mr. Speaker, then all I can say is that you are not aware of the facts of cow life, if you like, especially in western Canada. That situation more than any other single factor prevented the beef cattle cycle from turning around at least one year earlier. The upturn that finally came early this year in the turnaround in beef prices, and all cattle prices, I am sure would have come at least a year earlier had it not been for that one situation in which the Government of Canada permitted unrestricted imports of offshore beef for nine months in 1976. We should never forget about that.

In addition to that, the hon. member spoke about desert regions encroaching on good farm land. I must say I took special interest in that comment; it reminded me of a situation very close to my own home. Whether I like it or not, I am a product of ten years of drought in southern Alberta and southwestern Saskatchewan which took place in the 1930's. I was only 13 years old when it started and I lived through the whole ten years of it. I know what drought has done in western Canada, although most people nowadays are not aware of, and do not seem to be interested in, what can happen when our climate plays tricks on us and we get into a prolonged drought.

I want to remind the hon. member that we had a grim taste of that ten-year drought period last year. I spoke about it many times in the House but I felt I was not taken very seriously. All of last year, beginning with the previous winter, we had a situation which was in every respect as serious as the three worst years in the 1930s, 1931, 1932 and 1937. With respect to soil moisture, the year 1977 was as serious as any of those three years in the 1930s. With respect to surface water, on our cattle ranges especially but anywhere as far as that goes, whether on cultivated land in the form of a prairie slough, dams, dugouts, streams and even sources of water in dug wells, the situation was worse for farmers than at any time in the 1930s.

This was unusual in that since the 1930s we have had millions of dollars worth of really good conservation projects developed on the prairies through the PFRA. That agency has done a tremendous job in that respect. I say this not because I am implying that that combination of geography, the chinook winds and the dry climate, is the result of a political decision in any way, but when we politicians think that we can interfere and distort or change—thinking we are going to do some good—patterns in which nature has a bigger hand, we should be exceedingly careful before taking on such an undertaking.

I think that in agriculture especially we have not learned the lessons we should have learned from the drought times of the 1930s and from the single bad drought year last year. I think we should reflect on that before we forget about it. Perhaps also it is fair to say that more damage was done over the years in agriculture by too much political involvement or intervention rather than too little. We should keep that in mind, especially when we start long range planning.

• (1632)

I should like to refer to a program which exists in the cattle industry. Canadian cattle producers should be commended for their new Beef Watch Program. This program was financed by the cattlemen; there is not a nickel's worth of government money in that program. It is financed by check-offs. Most of the check-off money which finances this program comes from Alberta and Ontario, with some from British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. The biggest portion comes from where most of our cattle are, Alberta and Ontario. Anyone who will take the trouble to read the reports of this program will be carefully advised. Hopefully the provincial and federal governments, as well as the cattlemen, will read these reports. A concise report is given twice a year in the months of November and May. It started only last fall, but will continue every year. It will assist both producers and governments in understanding the beef cycle as well as the total cattle industry. We would do well to study that report. So far the Beef Watch Program is only in its infancy. The two reports which have been issued are exceedingly good. I sent copies of those reports to every member of the House.

As I said at the outset, Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in this debate, but I am pleased to have made this contribution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, there are hundreds of millions of starving people in the world, according to the estimates of the United Nations. It is clear that hon. members on both sides of the House are equally agreed that we have a heavy moral responsibility to provide aid to those less fortunate than ourselves. It seems to me that a highly desirable way to exercise that responsibility is to make every effort to assist these countries in becoming self-sufficient in food production.

Rural development generally, and development of the agriculture sector specifically, are of vital importance to the future of the less developed countries of the world. Since 1970, Canadian food aid to the third world has risen by more than 19 per cent every year, to approximately $225 million in fiscal year 1975-76. This $225 million is about one-quarter of all CIDA disbursements for the fiscal year. The initial figures for fiscal year 1977-78 show more than $230 million in food aid.

Canada's food aid program has now been operating for more than 25 years and has provided the world's hungry countries with food valued at approximately $1.7 billion. Obviously we must continue to respond to these needs; but as I said before, we must also help these countries become self-sufficient. The bilateral programs of CIDA offer an excellent opportunity for Canada to deal with individual countries in the development of food production. For instance, our experience in wheat growing is being utilized in the development of third world wheat production. Many countries, including some of the poorer countries in Africa, are working currently toward self-sufficiency in wheat production through CIDA funding and technology transfer from Canada. Our contributions to multilateral organizations are also in direct support of this agricultural development, in addition to our assistance to the numerous non-government organizations.

However, food aid represents a small proportion of the food requirements of developing countries. Indeed, all food aid accounts for about 5 per cent of their consumption. Hence, the long term solution to bridging the food gap is in development programs to enhance food production in less developed countries. CIDA is increasing its efforts in food production, handling, and preservation in less developed countries as rapidly as Canadian resources permit.

In developing countries, the agricultural sector—principally farming, but forestry and fisheries as well—is a most important source of employment, income, foreign exchange earnings, and investment capital, in addition to its most obvious role as the source of food. Under point seven of Canada's Strategy for International Development Co-operation, 1975-80, the Canadian International Development Agency gives priority to food production and rural development, both crucial requirements for development in the third world.

Four years ago during fiscal year 1973-74, 6.3 per cent of CIDA's total bilateral budget was allocated toward development projects in the agricultural sector. In 1975-76, an average of 13.9 per cent or about $65 million of all bilateral disbursements were for such projects. For 1977-82, agriculture will be the most important single sector to be handled by bilateral programs, CIDA's largest branch. Disbursements of about 33 per cent of total bilateral funds are anticipated. All figures are exclusive of bilateral shipments of fertilizers which obviously play an important role.

CIDA bilateral programs are handled by five regional divisons: Asia, the Caribbean, Latin America, Francophone Africa, and Commonwealth Africa. These divisions handle agricultural projects in eight main categories: crop production, crop storage, animal production, irrigation and drainage, agricultural inputs, agricultural services, fisheries and forestry.

Through its multilateral programs branch, CIDA supports various international and regional institutions engaged in agricultural development, such as financial institutions, United Nations agencies, and agricultural research institutions. Approximately 20 per cent or about $65 million of all multilateral funds are channelled through these institutions for agricultural projects in developing countries.

[Miss Nicholson.]

Canada works through five major lending institutions: the World Bank group, the Inter-American Development Bank, the Asian Development Bank, the African Development Fund, and the Caribbean Development Bank. Over-all, an averge 33 per cent or about $2.5 billion in loans by these banks in 1976 went to agricultural projects. As all multilateral contributions by Canada are categorically untied aid, and since CIDA disburses approximately 50 per cent of all multilateral assistance through these banks, this is one of the more important ways Canada helps agricultural progress in developing countries around the world. One hears often in the developed countries that the untied nature of our agricultural aid, which is geared toward helping countries become self-sufficient, makes that aid acceptable to developing countries.

Essentially there are three United Nations agencies which are involved in agricultural development: the United Nations Development Program, the Food and Agriculture Organization, and the International Fund for Agricultural Development. Canada has given or committed substantial amounts of funds in support of these institutions. During fiscal year 1976-77, for instance, CIDA contributed at least $34 million to UN agencies, of which about $29 million was in support of UNDP alone. As about 25 per cent of total UNDP outlays go to agricultural development, this is another example of Canada's role in the development of agriculture in the Third World. Furthermore, in support of the IFAD, a new addition to UN specialized agencies, Canada has committed through CIDA an estimated $6 million in funds for the fiscal year 1976-77.

● (1642)

The WFP is the main focus of the UN's food aid activities, and it uses contributions from many national sources to organize projects that fall into three main categories: food for work projects intended to help the recipient country improve its food production by offering food as a partial wage for workers engaged in development projects; vulnerable group feeding projects for children, nursing mothers, and the elderly; emergency relief projects for victims of natural and civil disasters.

For 1977-78, Canada pledged $150 million in food aid to the WFP, with an additional $50 million for 1978 should the need arise. Furthermore, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees received $1.89 million from Canada in food aid in 1975-76 for refugees from the Middle East wars of 1948 and 1967.

Meanwhile, the United Nations children's fund, UNICEF, received during the same period $3.5 million as general UN funds, $3 million from bilateral funds for UNICEF projects in Indochina, and $2 million in food aid for the poorest developing countries. The work of the various international institutes engaged in agricultural research is co-ordinated by the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research (CGIAR). Sponsored by the World Bank, the UNDP and the FAO, the group backs research at 11 centres around the globe, dealing with all major food crops of importance to the Third World and covering the majority of the planet's ecological zones. CIDA has also contributed to ten of these research units in the year 1976-77.

One might also mention the non-government organizations. CIDA has provided matching grants in support of many NGO's to a total amount of $38 million during the fiscal year, and at least 30 per cent of this total was spent on projects for agricultural development. These, then, are some of the tools that are at our disposal, and we must remain firm in our commitment to use them.

Hunger remains a vicious assault on the well-being and dignity of mankind, but perhaps an equal threat to the dignity of human beings is to be constantly dependent. Hence, our solutions to dealing with hunger must include ways of helping people help themselves.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Milne) and the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) gave a detailed description of the Canadian food aid programs intended for the developing countries and of the aid that Canada is giving to those countries to help them attain a higher degree of self-sufficiency where food is concerned and improve the welfare conditions of their rural communities.

I would like, in turn, in the few minutes that are left to give a general picture of the main problems relating to rural development in third world countries and the role that Canadian technology is expected to play in those parts of the world.

It is important at the start, Mr. Speaker, to distinguish between two types of technological changes in agriculture: first, there are the innovations with respect to plant biology and soil improvement; the second, the introduction of various types of farm machinery. Obviously, there is a clear difference from the functional point of view. The inputs where soil improvement is concerned are precisely those that are intended to increase the production yield per land unit whereas the various types of machinery are intended to replace human or animal energy or both with mechanical energy. Taiwan and Japan are two examples of countries having experienced the former type while the agricultural revolution in Mexico went for the second type. With rural communities that represents 70 per cent to 90 per cent of their population, most third world countries must necessarily rely on agriculture to get them going economically. A few exceptions such as Algeria, Nigeria and Zambia are lucky enough to have their own mineral resources, but the commodities that are thus produced are generally exported and rarely serve as a basis for local industry.

Because of the population explosion those countries have experienced in the last 20 years, they are all facing a very serious problem of underemployment. To solve that problem, many efforts and investments have been made in the last 20 years to industrialize the urban areas—I am still talking about third world countries. As a consequence, several underdeveloped countries are now faced with a series of serious and now well-known dilemmas, whether economic, social and cultural, political, or even environmental.

The recent oil crisis, among other benefits, has forced us to review the relationship between technology and development. Such a policy of urban industrialization having failed to create the employment that was anticipated, third world countries, particularly those with little or no mineral resources, opted for rural development as a basis for their economic development. Generally, the objectives of that rural development are as follows:

First, to make the country as self-reliant as possible as concerns food production and second, to create employment and improve the standard of living of rural communities. However, the basis of rural development in underdeveloped countries remains agricultural development and the marketing of the resulting products on the home and foreign markets. Apart from food production, the areas of food and irrigation as well as low-cost housing are those where proper technology can make the greatest contribution at the present time. Since these are priority areas in the developing world, it follows that the research and development of appropriate technologies must be concentrated first on those areas. I shall come back later to the area of food production, but for the moment, I would like to talk about the problem of water supply for domestic and agricultural purposes.

Mr. Speaker, in too many areas throughout the world, this supply is on the decrease or only sporadic. A series of technological devices to collect rain water and develop underground water sources is required in addition to simple distribution and pumping systems. In spite of their surprising power of survival, rural communities have the major inconvenience of not being able to increase their production with their present basic and even primitive tools and technology. This technology is just sufficient to allow a farmer working with his wife and two or three children to cultivate, under difficult conditions, over half an hectare, often with no other tool than a pickaxe, and if climatic conditions are favourable, this can provide the strict minimum for the family to survive.

To improve the social and economic conditions of agriculture and farmers and to give back their former prosperity as much as possible, to rural areas, which are constantly losing their leaders to the cities, we must improve the efficiency of agricultural equipment and technology. These equipments and technologies will be adequate as long as they allow small farmers to stay on their farms and increase their production without a corresponding reduction in farming employment. Second, this equipment must be easy to maintain and durable to avoid a stoppage of the operations because of a lack of replacement parts, which happens very often with "over-sophisticated" tools. Third, this equipment should be produced in small rural plants and repaired by local craftsmen to create employment in the community and ensure a better use of local resources. Fourth, it should reduce the dependency of developing countries by reducing the importation of tools and replacement parts that might represent too heavy a burden on the national budget.

Trying to increase the production of small farms with North American or European equipment would prove too costly and create an unacceptable level of social and economic dependency for developing countries. This is the situation as far as power equipment is concerned particularly since the skyrocketing increase in oil product prices. Animal driven machinery for which the energy is supplied by locally produced feed grains is a better solution. Fifth, that new technology should be accepted by the local people. In fact, it is the acceptation, ownership and management levels of a technology that to a large extent will determine its integration into the activities of the community and its efficiency as a development tool.

Mr. Speaker, it reminds me of a remark I heard while on an African trip to drought striken areas of Sahel where we had to supply water to people suffering from lack of water. The Government of Canada and other countries wanted to help them by drilling wells and installing pumps. It was a marvelous idea. We drilled several wells and installed several pumps and it was fine as long as the pump was working. In case of a breakdown, they had no trained personnel or skilled labour to repair those engines or pumps. That is why we say it is better to use a technology which is better suited to the level of those developing countries. The small farmer will adopt farming innovations, but only if the three following conditions are met: for instance, if his operation is profitable, the condition applies to the investment required for larger quantities of a same resource as well as to the adoption of a new method. Before investing in a new resource, the farmers of those countries will have to be shown a tangible example of the possible profits they might get from that new production, in easily comparable conditions. Hence the need for an acceptable level of knowledge and the importance of rural counselling and advising services. The farmers must also be able to finance those projects. Even if the project seems profitable, the small farmer must have the means to take the risk and have access to credit to finance those innovations.

Unfortunately, innovations that increase the value of the land, such as irrigation, fertilizers and new seeding methods do have a bearing from the point of view of the size of the business. The majority of poor farmers, to wit, India since the start of the Green Revolution, does not have access to non-usurious credit, and the lack of efficient vulgarization services deprives them of the chance to pass judgment on the profitability of innovations that are clearly financially advantageous. Even when conditions allow it, the inevitable time lags before farmers can adopt those new methods are extremely long. That is what is known as the progressive nature of innovation. According to a recent survey made in India, the average time that elapses between the moment when a small farmer first hears about a new method and the time when he finally applies it is 7.2 years in the case of new seeding methods, 5.2 in that of the use of new chemical products, and four years in that of the Japanese method of growing rice.

Finally, it must be recognized that appropriate technological changes, even in the best possible circumstances, will not supply jobs to all rural families. Farming as well as non-farming industries will have to be developed in rural areas. We must also be conscious of the fact that there is a price to pay in underdeveloped countries to ensure the application of a technological change in farming, whatever the benefits may be. Indeed, a technological change requires an incentive under the form of public investment. Thus it can be necessary to develop an education or a credit program; the innovations will perhaps have to be made suitable to local conditions and the costs of new inputs will perhaps have to be directly or indirectly subsidized, especially if the proposal is inflexible.

What can Canada as well as its International Development Agency do? The underdeveloped countries insist that industrialized countries should devote .05 per cent of their gross national product, or about 10 per cent of their research budget, to develop technologies which would meet their special needs, that research being preferably carried out by the underdeveloped countries themselves. Without supporting the idea of a set and arbitrary objective, the Canadian International Development Agency recognizes the importance of proper technology as a tool for development and supports this proposal from the developing countries, especially since Canada is making great efforts towards that end, particularly in research programs and research encouragement.

At the meeting of the United Nations Committee on Trade and Development, UNCTAD IV, which was held in May 1976 in Nairobi, CIDA, through the Canadian delegation at the conference, proposed the pairing formula between, on the one hand, Canadian government and provincial research institutes as well as universities, and, on the other, scientific institutes from developing countries so that Canadian researchers might become aware of technological problems in developing countries, that these—

TEMPORARY REMOVAL OF CUSTOMS DUTY ON U.S. BEER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that employees at Manitoba breweries have been on strike for several weeks, thus depriving citizens of that province of beer during a time of suffocating heat, and in view of the federal government's apparent lack of concern regarding the plight of the Manitoba drinker, particularly the working man who cannot always afford the higher-priced spirits, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith):

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to do the following: first, remove the customs duty on American beer until the strike is over, thus enabling thirsty Manitobans to bring beer back from neighbouring North Dakota and Minnesota at reasonable prices; second, to relax the import rules relating to bilingual labelling of beer until the strike is over. This, combined with the lifting of the duty, would enable American distributors to supply the Manitoba market with beer without having to alter labelling techniques.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL MUSEUMS

APPOINTMENT OF SECRETARY GENERAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a deeply disturbing matter. In view of the fact that the government has refused to appoint Ms. Jennifer McQueen as Secretary General of the National Museums of Canada, thus providing yet another example of discrimination in senior public service appointments, following as it does a similar case involving the Anti-Dumping Tribunal, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House condemns the government's repeated failures to promote qualified women to senior government positions and urges the Prime Minister to reverse this most recent example of discrimination by appointing Ms. McQueen as the new Secretary General of the National Museums of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA-U.S. AGREEMENT ON FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Having regard to the meeting today being held in Ottawa to resume negotiations for a permanent Canada-United States bilateral agreement on fisheries and boundaries, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen):

That this House approve an open-ended reference permitting the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry to meet, as circumstances warrant, to examine matters related to these important conversations.

CREATION OF MERCHANT MARINE TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Considering that thousands of Canadian shipyard workers are unemployed, considering that it would be in the general interest of Canada to set up a merchant marine contributing to the economic development of the country, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House recommend to the Minister of Transport to order the construction of ships which would provide employment to skilled workers in that field and enable Canada to take advantage of its navigable waters as well as the sea.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

CAPITAL GAINS TAX ON FAMILY FARMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of importance arising from contradictory statements made by the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Transport related to the deferral of capital gains tax on rollover of family farms. The statement made by the Minister of Transport added to the confusion when he said in the House on June 6 that Bill C-56 is complete in this regard, though in fact it is not. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That the Minister of Finance withdraw Bill C-56 for appropriate amendment as he promised in committee on April 25.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), I move:

That this House notes that in many parts of Canada this is Senior Citizens' Week and expresses its appreciation of the contribution our senior citizens continue to make to the life of the nation and calls on the government to express that appreciation more substantially by taking steps to raise the basic amount of the old age pension, to make the pension available to persons between 60 and 65 who are out of the labour market and, in particular, to improve the position of those of our older people who suffer most, namely, single, widowed and other unattached women, it being the view of this House that these steps be taken without delay, preferably in the present session of parliament.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that it is important to recognize the grievances reiterated a thousand times by the Federation of Francophones outside Quebec, that the federation has clearly indicated what the situation is in its now famous report entitled "Lord Durham's Heirs", that a study was published recently comparing the situation which is made to the English-speaking minority inside Quebec to the situations which are made to the French-speaking minorities outside Quebec, and that this subject deserves the full attention of the House, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette):

That an interdepartmental committee be set up to meet the main officials of the Federation of Francophones outside Quebec for the purpose of discussing the study entitled "Deux poids, deux mesures" and proposing solutions to correct these unfair and regressive inequalities.

NATIONAL SECURITY

ALEXANDER PETER TREU—LIFTING OF SECURITY CLEARANCE BY DSS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister on the subject of industrial security. It seems that the security clearance of Alexander Peter Treu was lifted by the industrial security branch of the Department of Supply and Services back in 1973, but that Treu nevertheless continued to get a very substantial number of NATO contracts—

Mr. Basford: Not classified ones.

● (1417)

Mr. Stanfield: I would like some explanation, and I am certainly seeking information as to how it could happen that he could continue to get contracts from NATO, especially since apparently the industrial security branch of the Department of Supply and Services is also the security liaison for NATO in terms of issuing these kinds of contracts in Canada.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. gentleman asks the question. I wish those who were writing abundantly on that matter had thought of asking questions too. The simple answer, as the Minister of Justice indicated, is that the contracts received from NATO during the latter period were not classified as confidential.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, when the security clearance is lifted, as it was in these circumstances, is the person affected notified of this? Was Treu, for example, notified that the security clearance had been lifted back in 1973, or is this something which is not done?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the security clearance was attached to the particular function Mr. Treu was then exercising. He was working for one of the major companies in security areas and when he left the company his security clearance ceased by the very fact of his leaving.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, was Treu informed that the security clearance had been lifted, and is there any provision for appeal in these circumstances? Is there any procedure laid down for an appeal so that a Canadian citizen who is affected in this way will know that he has been affected and will know what procedure he can follow if he considers himself to be unjustly dealt with?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would have to find out if he was actually informed, but I repeat that it is my understanding that Treu was cleared for security and for working during the period he was working for a certain company, and when he left that company where he was cleared ex officio, he was no longer cleared. I do not know if there was a positive gesture made to inform him that he was no longer cleared. I suppose that he concluded he no longer had the clearance of that job, but I will inform myself of that. I will do the same thing as to the appeal procedure.

CRITERIA USED TO DETERMINE SECURITY RISK

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Supply and Services. My question relates to the criteria used by the industrial security branch to determine through its director, Mr. Jenkyns, who or what is a security risk. As it appears that there may not be an appeal from either a refusal to pass security clearance or a revocation of a previous security clearance, it makes the criteria doubly important. Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether these criteria are in written form and, if so, would he undertake to table them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that question. I will take it as notice.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will understand that there might be concern about an inability to table. I accept his undertaking, but an inability to table would naturally and reasonably lead one to believe that the criteria may not exist.

I wonder if the Prime Minister's recollection will enable him to answer another question. Did the cabinet at any time approve security clearance criteria for use by the Department of Supply and Services through the director of this particular branch?

Mr. Trudeau: Not, to my recollection, while I was Prime Minister. There may have been some criteria established before. But I will find out. There are, of course, practices which exist and which provide for an appeal for civil servants who are not satisfied with the treatment they receive. However, to what extent these practices apply to security matters is something into which I will have to inquire.

NUMBER OF SECRET TRIALS HELD IN CANADA

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary is to the Minister of Justice, on the broader issue of the Treu case. Is the Minister of Justice aware of any prosecution in Canada in the last 111 years—except, of course, during wartime—under any Canadian penal statute, whether it be the Criminal Code, the Official Secrets Act, the Unemployment Insurance Act, or what have you, where the entire trial from its inception through to judgment was held in secret? An obvious exception, of course, would be the recent trial of Dr. Treu. Has there been any other case in Canadian history, except during war years, which has involved secrecy?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the answer to that. If there have been, the number would be extremely small because the number of prosecutions under the Official Secrets Act has been extremely small. If long ago any were held totally in camera—not in secret, but in camera—I, literally, do not know. I can inform myself of that and inform the hon. member.

ENERGY

DECISION OF OPEC COUNTRIES TO FREEZE OIL PRICES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the decision taken over the weekend by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to freeze oil prices at current levels until the end of the year, could the minister tell the House whether the Canadian government will follow this example and cancel the current Canadian policy of increasing the price of oil by $1 a barrel and the price of gas 17 cents per 1,000 cubic feet on July 1 which, if allowed to take place, would add approximately 1 per cent to the consumer price index and cause an increase in unemployment by approximately 30,000?

● (1422)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I, too, was very pleased to see that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries decided not to increase the price of oil at this time. This is very much the position taken by the Canadian government. Representations were made to OPEC urging moderation on their part.

As to the question of Canadian oil prices, the hon. member will know that a year ago an arrangement was reached among the consuming and producing provinces to move our prices up toward world prices in orderly jumps of $1 every six months. That particular move will take place effective July 1 of this year. For the information of the hon. member, that would still keep Canadian oil prices significantly below world prices and significantly below the average price in the United States.

Mr. Broadbent: It was widely assumed among OPEC a year ago that they would probably have a further increase on July 1. They had enough sense to change their mind because, as they pointed out on the weekend, further increases in the price would only cause further deterioration in world economies and lead to more unemployment. The minister is factually wrong in terms of the comparison with the U.S. price.

I should like to ask whether, in light of this, the minister will confirm that studies undertaken by his department show that if the $1 per barrel increase is allowed to go ahead on July 1, for the first time in recent history the oil price for Canada will be almost identical to that in the United States, taking away from us the $1 competitive advantage for Canadian industry which is so central a concern and need right now, with the high unemployment levels we have?

Mr. Gillespie: No, Mr. Speaker, I have already referred to the fact that our studies indicate that there will be a continuing and significant differential between the Canadian price and the U.S. price.

Mr. Broadbent: It will not be the first time that the minister's figures and ours have differed. Ours show that the gap is going to be almost wiped out entirely. Apart from that important fact, is he saying that the government will not reconsider its position and will cancel the intended increase in price that is coming on July 1, which will be so disastrous for the consumers of Canada and for Canadian industry which needs all the competitive advantage it can get?

Mr. Gillespie: I have already referred to the fact that the price increase which will take place this summer was arrived at through negotiation with the producing and consuming provinces of this country, that it was supported by a majority of the consuming provinces of the country and, further, that the federal government is providing in the order of $1 billion in subsidies in order to cushion the effect of higher international prices against the Canadian price.

FUTURE USE OF "MACLEAN"

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport and of his parliamentary secretary, may I direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister?

Considering that the MacLean, owned by the Department of Transport, is lying abandoned in the port of Quebec, could the Prime Minister tell the House what will become of this ship which has honoured Canada for many years? Will she be turned into a national museum or sold to private enterprise?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that this matter is of highest concern to the Minister of Transport, and he will give an answer to the hon. member when he is back in the House tomorrow.

DUMPING DUTY ON WIDE-FLANGE STEEL BEAMS

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance is not in his place, I will direct my question, if I may, to the right hon. Prime Minister. Can he tell the House what the rate of dumping duty on wide-flange steel beams will be after June 29?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member might want to repeat his question. It seems to ask for a specific point of information.

Mr. Huntington: I wish to ask the Minister of Finance if he can tell the House what the rate of dumping duty on wide-flange steel beams will be after June 29.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are looking into the problem, and we do not know as yet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: When I have a specific answer, I will be glad to inform the hon. member.

Mr. Huntington: In light of the fact that Algoma's production is at capacity, that shipments are allocated and that British Columbia fabricators cannot get their supplies within practical time limits, in addition to the fact that offshore steel is more expensive than Canadian-produced steels, will the Minister of Finance explain the need for dumping duty safeguards? I ask this question in view of the fact that the minister said the following as reported in Hansard of February 20, 1978:

● (1427)

B.C. producers will always have access to international steel as long as it is not dumped on the Canadian market.

On the same day he said:

If the steel is not dumped, there will be no special duty applied; it will be just the normal duty.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I repeat the same statement; we welcome steel coming from abroad as long as it is not steel dumped on the Canadian market.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. Why does he consider it bad economics to limit the safeguards for dumping on the market within Canada where safeguards are needed as a result of the threat or reality of injury, and leave other markets in Canada not facing the threat or reality of injury free of safeguards?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the producers in Canada expect to be able to produce for the entire Canadian market. If they are precluded from producing for a province because it has privileged access to some overseas market, then obviously the producers in Canada will not reach their optimum size.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

POLITICAL CLEARANCE BEFORE MAJOR CONTRACTS AWARDED

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. Last week I read from the 1975 minutes of a meeting attended by the then minister of state for urban affairs and the then chairman of the National Capital Commission. The minutes read as follows:

The minister wants to make sure that firms chosen for major contracts of this sort are cleared politically with the ministers responsible through his office.

At the time, the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council stated that he did not see anything wrong with that statement. Does the Prime Minister see anything wrong or abnormal with that statement? Is it the practice of his government to make sure that individual firms are cleared politically before major contracts are awarded? I want to emphasize that I am not talking about joint projects, but firms and contracts being cleared politically.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I heard the Minister of National Defence answer that very question at great length last week.

URBAN AFFAIRS

CLEARANCE OF SEWER AND ROAD CONTRACTS FOR HULL, QUEBEC

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister declines to answer my question, I ask the Minister of State for Urban Affairs if he can state straightforwardly who in general cleared the firms and contracts for the sewer and road network in Hull, which contracts are still continuing?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not too sure what the hon. member is talking about.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I heard that it was Gus MacFarlane.

IMMIGRATION

ESTIMATE OF REFUGEES ALLOWED INTO CANADA THIS YEAR

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In statements attributed to the minister last weekend, he indicated that Canada, upon the request of the United Nations commissioner on refugee matters, would be prepared to take additional refugees. Can he tell the House how many refugees he expects to land in 1978, notwithstanding that he will have to make that statement in November of this year when he gives the annual global flow? In his talks with United Nations officials, was there any discussion as to whether the definition of refugees should be expanded or modified?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, given the situation in Southeast Asia, first of all, Canada responded to the small boat refugees and agreed to take 50 families per month in addition to those we have already taken. I am not sure whether they have landed today or not, but one group will be landing very shortly: they were picked up by a Greek freighter. Second, we focused our attention on the overland refugees in Thailand. There were some 180,000; it is down to approximately 100,000 now.

Thailand has indicated that it is prepared to help with resettlement, as the United Nations has requested, on the understanding that some countries will take some of the South Vietnamese refugees. We are looking at the numbers we feel would be appropriate for us. I will make representations to my colleagues to take more in addition to the 7,000 we have taken already since 1975. Probably we will take more on a family basis, bearing in mind the reunification aspect.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, can the minister indicate whether he had any other refugee movements in mind when he made the statement that we were aware of the boat families and the Vietnamese refugees? Specifically, in respect of groups which are now defined as displaced persons by the United Nations or by the international community, as opposed to the definition of refugee, will the minister indicate whether he is considering changing the definition of such persons from "displaced person" to "refugee"? Would he also indicate whether, as a result of his discussions with the commissioner, persons coming from behind the iron curtain could also be classified as refugees more easily than is now the case?

● (1432)

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member in that I did not answer the latter part of his first question. We did not get into discussion at all about changing the United Nations' definition of "refugee". They may very well do that on their own initiative after discussions—I do not know—but that did not come up. What we are endeavouring to do, in so far as people behind the iron curtain or in eastern European countries are concerned, is find a mechanism whereby we can be of help to them when they come out of the country and have to settle in refugee camps.

They are not, technically, refugees within the meaning of the act, and we are trying to find some way to help them. We think we have done so in the sponsorship program that I announced. We shall see how that works. But so far as changing the definition of "displaced person" to "refugee" is concerned, that has not come up and has certainly not been brought to my attention.

HOUSING

DEFAULTS IN AHOP MORTGAGES

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and has to do with AHOP defaults. In view of the fact that in respect of his new housing proposal, namely, graduated payment mortgages, there has been some reluctance on the part of major lending institutions to participate because of problems regarding debt being greater than equity after a period of five or ten years, will the minister indicate whether he has done an assessment of AHOP, a program that has seen more defaults in the first three months of this year than was the case totally last year?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have done a survey and, as the hon. member asked two weeks ago, we sent him statistics which indicate quite clearly that in spite of the fact that he wants to promote these defaults as being a big thing, they represent less than 1 per cent of our total loan guarantees in Canada for people buying new homes. Therefore, it is a very minimal percentage of all loans are being made in Canada. I really do not know why the hon. member is trying to make such a point of something that is not, in fact, a big factor.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question has to do with AHOP defaults as well as with several studies, one of which is an interdepartmental study by his own department and the Minister of Finance and the other by Treasury Board specifically at the urging of major lending institutions and with reference to AHOP defaults. My information is that the study was classified as a national security document. Will the minister indicate whether that study is so classified and, if so, why? If it is not so classified, will the minister undertake to table it in the House this afternoon?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has an obsession about whether or not studies are classified. When appearing before the standing committee of the House, we produced all the available material. We have given ample examples to the hon. member of the type of defaults. The statistics are there to be seen. I do not know what the hon. member is trying to pursue in dreaming of a so-called study that does not exist.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, would the minister not agree that since there are four times more AHOP defaults projected for this year than was the case last year, and in view of the fact that there are as many defaults in the first three months of this year as there were in total last year, he ought to reassess the AHOP program in conjunction with a reassessment of the new graduated payment mortgage program which is similar in its dramatic, disastrous effects?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how the hon. member looks at these statistics; but if there was 1 per cent default on 100 per cent at one time, and there is now a default rate of four times that, that is only 4 out of 100, which is still a very minimal number. It was not even 1 per cent last year; it was a portion of 1 per cent. When multiplied by four, it is still less than 1 per cent. I think it is so minimal that we should not worry about it.

IMPROVEMENT OF AHOP TO ASSIST LOW INCOME EARNERS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs in relation to the graduated mortgage scheme which he introduced as a strengthening or improvement of the AHOP program. In light of the fact that the CMHC budget has been cut by $500 million, and the fact that the government's new housing strategy rules out any form of subsidy to low income earners or to the poor, how does the minister intend to introduce this graduated payment scheme, and how does he intend to gain the support of lending institutions and the provincial governments in respect of his new scheme and new approach?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this new technique was explained to the lending institutions in Canada and to the provinces specifically at the time of the last federal-provincial conference. It is not something new; it is something that exists with relative success in the United States. It exists in British Columbia with successful experience so far.

The response we have received from lending institutions has varied from enthusiasm to prudent reservation. Indeed, the co-operative movements, the caisses populaires and the credit unions, have expressed support for the program, while the banks have expressed some reservation. At any rate, we do not intend to force any lending institution to use the new, graduated payment mortgage program. It is there as an extra tool to be used. If some lending institutions use it, we will be pleased. We have already received indications that it is being used in some areas of Canada with success.

I believe that, like any other new financial scheme, it will take some time before it is in operation. I do not expect the banks to jump for it and to be the leading financial institutions in this regard. However, as the program materializes and shows success, I am sure that all the banks in Canada will approve the system, hopefully in the not too distant future.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that none of the lending institutions has so far agreed to proceed with this program, nor have any of the provinces agreed to support it, since the program is widely known among the poor as a reverse indexation of mortgage payments, and since the program does not work in the United States unless it is coupled with a write-off of the interest portion for income tax purposes, is the minister and the government prepared to bring in new measures and announce additional changes in strategy to allow middle, low income and poor people to continue to live in decent housing in this country?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the government has, indeed, brought forward a substantial number of new measures to help low income people. All our new strategy is directed toward helping through the creation of a greater number of units for low income people in Canada. What the hon. member is talking about is perpetuating federal subsidies to people with higher incomes who in fact do not need government subsidies.

When the hon. member indicated earlier that the provinces and lending institutions had not accepted the graduated payment mortgage scheme, he was wrong. In fact, lending institutions have accepted it and some mortgages have already been granted in Canada since the suggestion made by the federal government.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POST-AIB MONITORING BOARD

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I am sure we were all pleased to learn today that "the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board denied that he was asking for pay increases for AIB employees that would be above those allowed for other Canadian workers". The chairman was also quoted by Canadian Press as saying that he had no idea when the board would actually close its doors.

● (1442)

Since the Economic Council of Canada has now agreed to take on the function of monitoring inflation, I wonder if the minister could assure the House that the Anti-Inflation Board will be closed down as early as possible in order to avoid duplication, unnecessary expense, and to support the business community of Canada?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it will, of course, be phased out as quickly as possible. The hon. member should know that a great number of companies throughout the country will have to report at the end of the year, for the third year of compliance with the program: their books will have to be inspected in order to ensure they have not abused the system. As soon as their books have been verified and everything has been accounted for, the AIB will wind down starting in the 1979-1980 fiscal year.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

SALARIES OF STAFF

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the President of the Treasury Board. I am not interested in what the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board has to say; I want to know what the government's intention is in this regard. Apparently, the Minister of Finance says that the workers of Canada shall not receive any more than 6 per cent. Even though the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board states he is not asking for, I believe, 11.5 per cent per year, could the President of the Treasury Board advise the House the government's position in this respect? I would hope the minister would indicate that under no circumstances would he countenance the AIB seeking anything more than 6 per cent. In other words, equality shall prevail: is that the position of the government?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the position of the government. The fact is there is no aberration of the anti-inflation guidelines. The increases proposed to the Anti-Inflation Board are completely within the guidelines. There is no special treatment and there are no extraordinary circumstances. While there is a fair degree of complexity in the calculation of the salary account, main estimates to main estimates which the question period would not permit me time to detail, I am sending all hon. members a more detailed elaboration of exactly how this takes place.

Had the reporters taken the responsibility to check out the story, this very damaging and erroneous impression would not have been left across the country. I hope that when the media receive the explanation which I am sending them today, they will give the same prominence—that is, headlines on the front pages of the newspapers and prominence in other media—as they gave the erroneous story on Friday.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REVIEW OF RATE OF INFLATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that matter has been cleared up. I will now ask the Minister of Finance a question. In light of the fact that inflation is now running at approximately 9 per cent or more, and given the fact that the Minister of Finance, in an arbitrary way, picked the figure of 6 per cent out of the air—I believe some time last year—is that figure under review at this time, in light of the hardship experienced by many Canadians suffering as a result of the incompetence of this government?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not about to review those figures. If one looks at the internal inflation figures within the Canadian economy, internal inflation last year was 6.2 per cent.

NATURAL RESOURCES

CANADIAN OWNERSHIP THEREOF

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister regarding a commitment he made during the federal election campaign of 1974. In June of that year, the Prime Minister made a commitment with respect to Canadian ownership of resource industries, in the following words:

> The Liberal party of Canada sets as an objective that major new projects in the natural resource field should have at least 50 per cent, and preferably 60 per cent, Canadian equity ownership.

I ask the Prime Minister if that commitment still stands with reference to the launching of new resource industries or the transfer of Canadian-owned industries to non-resident Canadians? Is that commitment still in operation?

[Mr. Alexander.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the commitment as it was made still stands.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Saturday's Toronto Star claims to have a document that was issued last January, signed by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, in which he outlines four options with respect to Canadian ownership—one of which is that the 50 per cent to 60 per cent Canadian ownership clause be dropped, with the stipulation that no public statement be made regarding it unless the public should think that the government had made a retreat—I ask the Prime Minister if he can assure the House that before there is any change with respect to this ownership commitment, the government will make a public announcement; and secondly, if this 50 per cent to 60 per cent provision will obtain when the matter of the acquisition of the Husky Oil Company is before FIRA and before the cabinet.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member refers to a document which I do not remember seeing, and certainly which is not before me now. I am not surprised that documents follow the guidance I issued in their presentation to cabinet. In other words, it presents the government with several alternatives, rather than presenting it with a solution which is sometimes inspired by the civil service as opposed to giving the politicians a choice between several options. I am happy to see that the document to which the hon. member referred has respected these guidelines and is giving some options.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has done everything except answer the question.

Mr. Alexander: That is typical.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I asked him, will he assure the House, in view of the comments of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce about keeping any decisions secret, that if there is to be any change with respect to the Canadian ownership provisions, a public announcement will be made and that commitment will stand when the whole question of the acquisition of Husky Oil company is before FIRA and before the cabinet.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asks me what we will do if something happens. I think that even he will recognize that that is a hypothetical question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AID TO ZAIRE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Canada has announced that it will participate in a western aid package to Zaire, a total package of $116 million, of which Canada will contribute $7 million in emergency food aid and other humanitarian relief. May I ask the Prime Minister if assurance can be given to the House that the committee which is being set up in Kinshasa to monitor this aid will have a Canadian representative? I ask the question in light of the $20 million in aid which has been given to Zaire in the past seven years and the reports of corruption and black markets operating in food aid in that country.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian delegation has not announced any new aid programs for Zaire, it simply announced the stepping up of the present program.

AGRICULTURE

EXPANSION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA DAIRY INDUSTRY

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture. If my information that a meeting of the Canadian Dairy Commission is being held today is correct, could the minister advise the House if he has asked the commission to consider the request of the British Columbia dairy industry that measures be taken to provide, through a higher percentage of the market share quota or some other mechanism, the opportunity for the industry to expand in line with its requirements in the province of British Columbia?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, any change in the market share quota is to be decided by the members of that committee which is made up of members from all the provinces participating in the dairy program in Canada and not just the dairy commission or the Minister of Agriculture. It would be decided by that group.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the directors of the Fraser Valley Milk Producers' Association are taking under consideration the advisability of withdrawing from the national program, would the minister make it a matter of personal concern and bring it to the attention of the committee in order that some remedy might be found for the problem?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the committee is very much aware of the problem, and I am sure the Fraser Valley producers are very much aware of the economic loss they would suffer if they withdrew.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

DECENTRALIZATION POLICY

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State.

Is it his department's policy to decentralize its offices concerned with provincial administration, much as it is in the various other federal departments?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is our policy, and it is currently being implemented.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Since the Department of the Secretary of State has announced probable decentralization in two Ontario regions, namely Hamilton and Sudbury, can the minister explain why, contrary to what is happening in Ontario, and despite this decentralization policy, there are reports, in Quebec, of closing offices in Rouyn-Noranda, Sherbrooke and Trois-Rivières?

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure I understood the first part of the hon. member's question. I will take his representations as notice and answer him directly.

FINANCE

PUBLICATION OF GNP FIGURES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and it is very simple. Could the minister indicate why the g.n.p. figures for the first quarter of this year have been delayed again? It was anticipated they would be released today. Why are they being delayed?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, those figures are produced by Statistics Canada, which is an independent organization that does not come under my responsibility.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I put the following question to the minister. Does he believe that his April 10 budget estimate of real growth in the economy of approximately 5 per cent is still on target, or is it anticipated there will be less growth, or more growth?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, when I have a statement to make about that, I will make it. So far, I have not changed my estimate that the growth in the Canadian economy will be close to 5 per cent.

Oral Questions

FISHERIES

CANADA-U.S. AGREEMENT ON FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries: it concerns the negotiations which will resume today on the bilateral agreement. The American negotiator, in a statement which was released, said he felt the earliest feasible resumption of reciprocal fishing would improve the prospects of reaching a long-term agreement, which is what they are attempting to do. The statement goes on to say that within the next couple of days it is expected that on the American side the interim agreement will be ratified. I ask the minister whether, in those circumstances, reciprocal fishing will be resumed.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we have made it clear that local arrangements would be simplified if the agreement were ratified by the United States Congress. My colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I have also made it clear that these current negotiations are not intended to restore the suspended 1978 agreement, but are to look at a long-term arrangement and especially at mechanisms to arbitrate interpretations or disputes of the type that led to this suspension. If the American negotiators have some proposals to make, we will examine them very carefully. The negotiations are not for resumption of the 1978 agreement, but for long-term agreements.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, is the minister saying that continuation of the present status, where Canadian fishermen may not fish in American waters and American fishermen may not fish in Canadian waters, will assist in the conclusion of a long-term agreement?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I believe it might help people to reflect seriously on the need for a long-term and permanent agreement with mechanisms to arbitrate disputes.

CONSIDERATION OF MINERAL RIGHTS IN FISHERIES' NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Fisheries. To what extent are both sides concerned over mineral rights slowing down reaching a settlement on this thorny problem?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have no indication whatsoever that this is an issue in the present problem.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CLOSING OF OXFORD HOUSE SCHOOL IN MANITOBA

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question was to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. On June 9, the chief and council of the Oxford House band of Indians ordered the school on their reserve closed to its 370 students. This action was taken to prevent possible injury of students who travel by school bus over ungravelled roads which are in a deplorable and almost impassable condition. I ask the parliamentary secretary, what action has been taken over the past ten days to ensure that the roads will be repaired and the 370 students will be able to complete their term?

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the House will remember that the hon. member raised this issue last Friday. Following his intervention, I asked the department for a report. I am informed that the road is not an issue. Last year, over $50,000 was allocated for the improvement of the road, and it is in very good shape.

There is a secondary issue relating to a contractor who took substantial amounts of equipment into the reserve, which is in an isolated location—as the hon. member well knows—over ice and snow, and with the difficulty of removing it he has lobbied with the band for some $750,000 for training within the reserve. We do not have this kind of money, and we do not intend to approve that kind of allocation when there is similar equipment owned by Indian people which could be used for this purpose if, indeed, there is a need. I think this matter should be concluded by an appeal from both sides of the House for the children to return to school.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I understand that $50,000 was provided, but I ask the parliamentary secretary what the people are supposed to use to repair the roads. In Oxford House, the band has only shovels and wheelbarrows for road repair. Will the department look into this matter?

Mr. Milne: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will satisfy ourselves on that point. I was under the impression that the Indian band made representations for the $50,000 so they could work on the roads themselves. This money was to purchase and haul gravel. I thought allocation of the $50,000 was in keeping with their request.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED UNNECESSARY DELAYS CAUSED BY IMMIGRATION AUTHORITIES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. A member of the Bermudian government complained to delegates at a Commonwealth Parliamentary Association conference that certain Bermudians coming to Canada as visitors were detained for a number of hours by immigration authorities and deported.

Quite apart from individual cases, is the minister aware that cases of discrimination are all too common at certain airports, such as Toronto, and cause deep resentment among members of the Commonwealth and Caribbean countries, contrary to the policy of parliament and the department's own policy? Will the department take active steps to ensure that immigration officials are adequately acquainted with Canadian policy against discrimination on the grounds of race?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my deputy minister and I myself have visited the airports to indicate the government's policy in this regard. I am satisfied that there is no discrimination. That does not mean people are not going to cry discrimination every time there is a finding against them.

As far as the individual cases are concerned in which the hon. member says he is not interested, these people came in as visitors, one of them had a criminal record which he freely admitted and was put in a detention centre until transportation back to his home could be found; the other individual came here as a visitor and did not have a penny in her pocket or anyone to contact in Canada—hardly a bona fide visitor. If the individual who made the criticism had taken the time to contact our office and find out what the facts were, we would have made that particular statement.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, may I say to the minister, in passing, that I was not asking about individual cases; I was asking about a practice which I know to be common and which he should look into.

My supplementary question is this: Has the minister or the government received a request from the high commissioner of the United Nations for refugees for Canada to accept a larger quota of political refugees, as distinguished from economic refugees, a matter which I think he discussed with the hon. member for Provencher? Will the government take positive action with respect to the commissioner's request, especially in light of the rapid and substantial decline in the flow of immigrants to Canada?

● (1502)

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I want to dissociate myself from the comments made by the hon. member's saying that he is personally familiar with discrimination at various airports or any particular one. If he has specific cases, of course I want to root them out and find out about them. However, to make a blanket condemnation is a disservice to people who have a very tough job to do at our borders. When the answer sometimes comes back no and we get the criticism that it is because of race, I check into those cases. I will be happy to look into any which the hon. member has to raise.

With regard to taking prisoners, in so far as Chile is concerned we had 100 political prisoners and their families. We doubled that quota. We have also indicated that in so far as Brazil is concerned we will do what we can in that area, taking at least 100 prisoners and their families for starters. That is being negotiated by the United Nations high commissioner for refugees in co-operation with us and other countries.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DINSDALE—DELAY IN TABLING POST OFFICE ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Speaker: I indicated last week that I would endeavour to rule today on two outstanding questions of privilege, the first raised by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) on June 8 relating to the late tabling of the Postmaster General's annual report.

At the time the hon. member raised the question, he made certain other complaints concerning the alleged illegal increases in postal rates and the lack of an adequate number of copies of the annual report for use in committee, procedures followed in committee for examining the estimates of the Post Office, and the making of an announcement outside the House concerning the creation of a committee to examine the advisability of transforming the Post Office into a Crown corporation. The hon. member made an argument that this series of complaints, taken in total, constituted a contempt of the House. The minister replied to those complaints on Wednesday, June 14, 1978.

Members will be aware, however, that in our practice the Chair has never allowed itself to be drawn into committee proceedings. Therefore, the procedures followed for examining estimates and the number of copies of documents available in committee are matters to be determined by the committee.

Similarly, there have been other occasions when members have complained that certain announcements ought to be made in the House rather than outside, and again the Chair has ruled consistently that is not a matter which can be determined by the Chair. These complaints have therefore been treated as grievances rather than as breaches of privilege.

The hon. member also alleges the government acted illegally in the manner in which postal rates have been increased. Hon. members will be aware that I have a duty to decide questions of order, not of law, and furthermore, I understand that this issue is now before the courts. In my opinion, therefore, it is an issue to be settled by the courts, and the Chair should not intervene.

That leaves us with the main issue of the hon. member's complaint, namely, the late tabling of the report of the Canada Post Office for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977. Again, however, I feel that the hon. member is raising a grievance rather than a question of privilege. I do not see how, under the guise of privilege, the Chair can be drawn into determining a question of law. I would, in this connection, refer hon. members to a ruling of my predecessor on a related matter.

The Constitution

On June 27, 1972, the then hon. member for Wellington complained of the circumstances connected with the tabling of a report prepared by the National Harbours Board. He alleged that the procedure followed did not conform with the law or the Standing Orders. The Speaker ruled that he might have a grievance, but he had not established a case for priority of debate under privilege. With respect, I feel that this matter cannot be accepted under the definition of privilege.

MR. ANDRE—RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Speaker, on June 8, 1978, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) raised a question of privilege in which he alleged that certain figures published in two documents tabled in the House by the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Buchanan) contained data that "are not fact and are not accurate."

He complained specifically of documents entitled "Research and Development in Canada—Discussion Paper" and "Measures to Strengthen and Encourage Research and Development in Canada."

In his reply on June 15, 1978, the minister acknowledged, and I quote:
