The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

Library of Congress

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol  $\rightarrow$  (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol  $\nabla$  (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

Library of Congress
Photoduplication Service

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole  $\rightarrow$  signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole  $\nabla$  signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

PREFACE.

No species of knowledge is more in demand, or confers more real and constant usefulness than that of the law and its practical application in both the private and public affairs of each individual:—and no species of knowledge is more difficult to obtain at the desired moment. There are times and circumstances when the necessary legal counsel cannot be had; and times and circumstances which render it advisable to be one's own legal counsellor; there are matters of minor importance which may not justify or require the expense or formality of a legal consultation; there are private affairs which it may be neither prudent nor desirable to disclose, but which require some legal light for satisfactory solution or adjustment; there are business difficulties, enterprises, ventures, controverted and vexed questions, which constantly demand some knowledge of the law to successfully master, and which are otherwise fruitful of annoyance, distress and doubt. These and many other examples demonstrate the utility of a work of this character, a book which enables one to combine practical law with personal knowledge and experience. The primary necessity of convenient reference to legal subjects is demonstrated by the well-known and universal rule of law that "ignorance of law is no excuse;" every one is presumed to know the law; hence the defence of ignorance avails nothing: one must suffer for every infraction,—and know better afterwards. In this work will be found a very complete law library, compiled with much care, and containing the essence of the various subjects of the law compressed into a comprehensive and convenient form, with its value greatly enhanced by footnotes to leading authorities, to which, when necessary, easy reference in any law library may be had. Forms are given in great profusion and variety; they have been selected and framed with the utmost care and simplicity, and adapted to the practical and common necessities of actual, every-day use.

AN ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF LAW AND FORMS.

ABANDONMENT. See DIVORCE; INSURANCE; MARRIAGE; PARENT AND CHILD; RIGHTS; WIFE.

ABANDONMENT is confined to an individual's property and legal and equitable rights; it is a relinquishment on the part of the owner, without regard to its future possession, and with an intention to abandon.<sup>1</sup>

When a person, considering an article worthless, casts it away, with an intention of abandoning it, he thereby divests himself of his title in it, and has no more cause to complain, if it be taken by another, than if he had never owned it, unless indeed he recovers it without violating the rights of others, or before they take it.<sup>2</sup>

Merely nonuser does not necessarily or usually constitute abandonment; there must be an intention to abandon; and such intention is to be determined as a question of fact from all the circumstances attending the owner's acts.<sup>3</sup>

Abandonment combined with a sufficiently long possession by another party destroys the original owner's rights.<sup>4</sup>

Where an abandonment is acted upon in good faith by another, it destroys the owner's rights.

Legal rights once vested must be divested according to law. Equitable rights may be abandoned at pleasure.

ACCEPTANCE. See BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES, ETC.; CONTRACTS; INSURANCE; RENT; STATUTE OF FRAUDS; TENDERS.

ACCEPTANCE is the receipt with an intention to retain it of a thing offered by another.<sup>1</sup> An agreeing to an act or contract of another by some act which binds the person in law.

Where a landlord takes rent reserved on a lease made by his predecessor, it is an acceptance of the terms of the lease and binds the party.

As distinguished from assent, acceptance denotes the receipt of something in compliance with and satisfactory fulfilment of an undertaking to which assent had been previously given.

A receipt with an intention to retain is indispensable to every acceptance, though a manual taking is not necessary. The intention to retain may exist at the time of receipt or afterwards; and may be indicated by acts, words or otherwise, and will in many instances be implied by circumstances.

ACCEPTANCE. See MEDICAL LAW.

ACCEPTANCE. See PROPERTY, ETC.

ACCEPTANCE. See CONTRACTS.

ACCIDENT. See PRACTICE; REMEDIES.

AN ACCIDENT is that which takes place without one's expectation or foresight; an event which proceeds from an unknown cause; or is an unusual effect from a known cause, and therefore not expected. It is the happening of an event without the concurrence of the will of the person by whose agency it was caused, as the burning of a house from kindling a fire for domestic purposes; or the happening of an event without any human agency, as the burning of a house by lightning.<sup>1</sup> It is such an unforeseen act, event, loss, misfortune or omission as is not the result of any misconduct or negligence.)

An accident which arises from a cause which operates without the aid or interference of man is called an act of God.<sup>1</sup> Accidents which are produced by physical causes, such as loss by lightning, and storms, perils of the sea, inundations, earthquakes, sudden death, illness, and the like, are called fortuitous events.<sup>1</sup> That which happens by a cause which cannot be resisted,<sup>2</sup> which neither of the parties has occasioned or can prevent,<sup>3</sup> and unforeseen events which cannot be prevented,<sup>4</sup> are alike called fortuitous events and inevitable accidents.<sup>5</sup> Unforeseen circumstances which cannot be guarded against by any human agency, and in which man takes no part, are called casualties or inevitable accidents.<sup>6</sup> Interposition of human agency, as the inroad of a hostile army which from its nature and power is absolutely uncontrollable, is denominated irresistible force.<sup>7</sup>

Generally, no one is responsible for that which is the result of superior force or inevitable accident; but a man may be so where he has stipulated that he would, and also where he has been guilty of fraud or deceit;<sup>8</sup> for no man may take advantage of his own wrong.

Where in the performance of a lawful act, without any intention to do harm, and after using due precaution to prevent danger, a person unfortunately kills another, it is an accident or misadventure for which he cannot be held amenable. Examples of this are: 1. When death ensues: 1. From innocent recreations. 2. From moderate and lawful correction in the domestic relation. 3. From acts lawful and innocent in themselves, done with proper and ordinary caution.<sup>9</sup> An act upon which death ensues must have been neither bad in itself, wrong in its nature, nor a prohibited evil or offence.

ACCOUNTS. AN ACCOUNT is a registry of debts and credits, or charges; an entry in a book or on paper of things bought or sold, of payments, services, etc., including the names of parties to the transaction, date and price or value of the article. A detailed statement of the mutual demands in the nature of debt and credit between parties, arising out of contracts or some fiduciary relation.<sup>1</sup>

A bank account is the statement of the amount deposited and drawn, which is kept in duplicate, one in the depositor's bank book and the other in the books of the bank.

<sup>1</sup> Francis' Man. 37; Story Eq. Jur. 174. In Parsons' Contr. 651; 1 T. R. 27. 1 Story Bailm. 23; Lois des Bâ. Pt. 2, ch. 5, § 1. 10-La Code, Art. 222, No. 7. 10-La des Bâ. Comm. 123; 1 East Pl. Cr. 221. 10-2 Miss. 216;

An open account is one in which some item of the contract is not settled by the parties, whether the account consist of one item or many.<sup>2</sup> Thus, where five loads of corn were sold at the same time and delivered, and there was no stipulation as to the price, it is an open account.<sup>3</sup> So, also, when there are running or current dealings between the parties which are kept unclosed with the expectation of fresher transactions.<sup>4</sup> If the plaintiff brings two suits on an open account, it is not improper to admit on the trial of the second action, testimony of payments that were in evidence on the first trial; but the defendant cannot be twice allowed for the same payments.<sup>5</sup>

An account stated is an agreed balance of accounts. An account which has been examined and accepted by the parties.<sup>6</sup>

An original entry of account is the first entry made by a merchant, tradesman, or other person in his account books, charging another with merchandise, materials, work or labor, or cash, on a contract made between them.

Entries in books of account may be admitted in evidence, when it is made to appear by the oath of the person who made the entries, that such entries are correct, and were made at or near the time of the transaction to which they relate, or upon proof of the handwriting of the person who made the entries, in case of his death or absence from the country.<sup>7</sup> The books must have been kept for the purpose, and the entries must have been made contemporaneous with the delivery of the goods, and by the person whose duty it was, for the time being, to make them.<sup>8</sup>

The charges of an account book should be in such a state that they may be presumed to have been the daily minutes of the business or transactions of the party,<sup>9</sup> and such book may be considered as the original, though transcribed from a slate; the slate containing merely memoranda, not intended to be permanent.<sup>10</sup> So, also, from memoranda made by a servant.<sup>11</sup> The form of keeping the book is not material,<sup>12</sup> but it must be a registry of the business actually done,<sup>13</sup> and the charges therein must be specific and particular,<sup>14</sup> and made at or near the time of the transaction to which they relate.<sup>15</sup> If the party keeps a ledger, or the account book has marks, showing that the items have been transferred to a ledger, the ledger must also be produced, that the other party may have the advantage of any items entered therein to his credit.<sup>16</sup> If an account book appear to be manifestly erased and altered in a material point, the charges will not be admitted, unless the alteration is satisfactorily explained.<sup>17</sup>

AN ORIGINAL ENTRY, to be admissible as evidence, must be made in the proper book. In general, the books in which the first entries are made, belonging to a merchant, tradesman, or mechanic, in which are charged goods sold and delivered, or work and labor done, are received in evidence. There are many books which are not evidence. A book made up by transcribing entries made on a slate by a journeyman, the transcript being made on the same evening, or sometimes not until nearly two weeks after the work was done, is not a book of original entries.<sup>1</sup> A book purporting to be a book of original entries, containing an entry of the sale of goods when they were ordered, but before they were delivered, is not a book of original entries.<sup>2</sup> And unconnected scraps of paper, containing, as alleged, original entries of sales by an agent, on account of his principal, and appearing on their face to be irregularly kept, are not to be considered as a book of original entries.<sup>3</sup>

The entry must be made in the course of business, and with the intention of making a charge for goods sold and work done; they ought not to be made after the lapse of one day.<sup>4</sup> A book in which the charges are made when the goods are ordered is not admissible.<sup>5</sup>

The entry must be made in an intelligible manner, and not in figures or hieroglyphics which are understood by the seller only.<sup>6</sup> A charge made in gross as "190 days' work," or "for medicine and attendance," or "thirteen dollars for medicine and attendance on one of the general's daughters in curing the whooping-cough,"<sup>7</sup> were rejected. An entry of goods without carrying out any prices proved, at most, only a sale; and the jury cannot, without other evidence, fix the price.<sup>8</sup> The charges should be specific, and denote the particular work or service charged as it arises daily, and the quantity, number, weight, or other distinct designation of the materials or articles sold or furnished, and attach the price and value to each item.<sup>9</sup>

The entries must, of course, have been made by a person having authority to make it,<sup>10</sup> and with a view to charge the party.<sup>11</sup>

The proof of the entry must be made by the person who made it. If made by the seller, he is competent to prove it from the necessity of the case, although he has an interest in the

But in either case, when the person who made the entry is out of the reach of the process of the court, as in the case of death, or absence out of the State or county, the handwriting may be proved by a person acquainted with the handwriting of the person who made the entry.<sup>13</sup>

The books and original entries, when proved by the supplementary oath of the party, is prima facie evidence of the sale and delivery of goods, and work and labor done.<sup>14</sup> But they are not evidence of money lent or cash paid,<sup>15</sup> nor of the time a vessel lay at the plaintiff's wharf,<sup>16</sup> nor of the delivery of goods to be sold on commission.<sup>17</sup>

These entries are evidence in suits between third parties,<sup>18</sup> and also in favor of the party himself.<sup>19</sup>

Acceptance may be inferred from circumstances; as where an account is rendered to a merchant and no objection is made, after sufficient time.<sup>23</sup> In general, when a party indebted upon an account receives and retains it beyond such time as is reasonable under the circumstances and according to the usage of the business, for examining and returning it, without communicating any objections, he is considered to acquiesce in its correctness, and he becomes bound by it as an account stated. Signature to the account, or express admission is not necessary.<sup>24</sup> This rule is held applicable to accounts between merchants residing in different countries.<sup>25</sup> Such an account is deemed conclusive between the parties,<sup>26</sup> to the extent agreed upon,<sup>27</sup> unless some fraud, mistake, or plain error is shown,<sup>28</sup> and in such case, generally, the account will not be opened, but liberty to surcharge or falsify will be given.<sup>29</sup> But in cases of gross fraud, or gross mistake, or undue advantage, or imposition made palpable to the court, the court will direct the whole account to be opened and taken anew.<sup>30</sup> Acceptance by the party to be charged must be shown by the one who relies upon the account.<sup>31</sup> The acknowledgment that the sum is due is sufficient, though there be but a single item in the account.<sup>1</sup> Acceptance may also be inferred from retaining the account a sufficient time without making objection,<sup>2</sup> and from other circumstances.<sup>3</sup> The acceptance of the account is an acknowledgment of a debt due for the balance,<sup>4</sup> and it is not necessary to prove the items, but only to prove an existing debt or demand, and the stating of the account.<sup>5</sup>

Any admission of a balance or acknowledgment made by the party to another, that a sum of money is due to the latter, is sufficient prima facie evidence to entitle him to recover that sum on an account stated,<sup>6</sup> so where the defendant stated that he would call and settle the amount of the debt sent in,<sup>7</sup> or where he sent money on account, stating he would pay the remainder next week.<sup>8</sup> But a more qualified acknowledgment is not.<sup>9</sup>

An acceptance of a bill is evidence of an account stated by the acceptor with the holder,<sup>10</sup> at all events it is so in an action at the suit of the drawer,<sup>11</sup> or at the suit of a payee, who is also drawer.<sup>12</sup> A promissory note is evidence as an account stated, in an action by the payee against the maker.<sup>13</sup> An I. O. U. is evidence of an account stated.<sup>14</sup> Where accounts are submitted to an arbitrator, not by bond, his award may be given in evidence, under an account stated.<sup>15</sup> Stating an account will, in general, amount to an admission of the title of the party to receive the money.<sup>16</sup>

The account must be stated by a competent person, excluding infants and those who are of unsound mind.<sup>17</sup> Husband and wife may join and state an account with a third person.<sup>18</sup> An agent may bind his principal.<sup>19</sup> Proof of an account stated with the plaintiff's agent is sufficient, proving the party to be such agent; so a plaintiff may recover on an account stated by the defendant with the plaintiff's wife, or an account stated by the defendant's wife, if she proved to be the party's agent. Partners may state accounts, and an action lies for the party entitled to the balance.<sup>20</sup>

The subject-matter of the account must be proved to have been money and a debt. A definite ascertained sum must be stated to be due.<sup>21</sup> It is sufficient to prove an account stated, without giving evidence of the several items constituting the account,<sup>22</sup> it is not necessary that there should be cross demands between the parties, or that the defendant's admission should relate to more than one item or transaction.<sup>23</sup> Accounting in a particular character admits that character.<sup>24</sup> An account stated does not alter the nature of the original debt.<sup>25</sup>

An account stated is not, in general, conclusive evidence against the party admitting the balance to be against him.<sup>26</sup> He would be allowed to show a gross error or mistake in the account, or any fraud or misrepresentation by the other party, if he could adduce clear evidence of that fact. But where an account is settled, and the party gives a bill for the amount, which bill is not paid, he cannot, on an action brought, impeach the charges in the first account which he has settled.<sup>27</sup> And where parties having cross demands, settle and balance their accounts, though part of the plaintiff's demand could not be recovered in the action, the settlement of accounts will bind the defendant, so that he cannot set up that defence to an action for the balance.<sup>28</sup>

The material allegations in an action upon an account stated are: (1) That plaintiff and defendant came to an accounting together, (2) in such accounting defendant was found indebted to plaintiff, (3) which defendant promised to pay, (4) and has not paid.

BOOK-KEEPING is the science of recording business transactions in such a manner that a person may at any time know the exact state of his business affairs.

There are two methods of book-keeping in general use: single and double entry.

SINGLE ENTRY.

In single entry, accounts are kept with persons only, and the amounts entered but once in the ledger.

IN DOUBLE ENTRY accounts are kept with both persons and things, and the amounts entered twice in the ledger—once on the debit and once on the credit side.

6-Pinner's Guide to Book-Keeping.

ACCOUNTS.

Debtor and creditor are correlative terms; the one implies and involves the other. Wherever there is a debit there must be a credit for an equal amount, and wherever there is a creditor there must be a debtor.

The same general results may be shown by either single or double entry, but the latter is superior in this respect;—that it not only shows one's standing with the persons with whom he is dealing, but it also shows the particular kinds of property possessed, and the profit on each kind, thereby furnishing a guide for the management of business.

The principal books used in business are the Day Book, Journal, Ledger, and Cash Book.

The Day Book should contain a concise and comprehensive history of the merchant's business transactions. It being one of the few books allowed in cases of litigation care must be taken in making the records so that an entire stranger, by reading them, would understand fully the nature of the transactions. No erasures are allowable in this book. If a mistake is made, either in words or figures, draw a line through it with red ink, and place the correction above. Do not remove the error; only cancel its effect.

The Journal is a book in which the transactions recorded in the day book are prepared for the ledger, by determining the proper debits and credits and their names. This process is called journalising, and is, in fact, the science of double entry book-keeping.

The Ledger is the general register in abstract of all the debits and credits, arranged in systematic order under their appropriate heads. From this book the merchant can readily ascertain the state of his business affairs, as well as his relations to persons with whom he is doing business.

The Cash Book, in which is entered all cash received or paid out at the time of occurrence. Be careful to give the date, the account to be debited or credited, the explanations, and the amount of each entry. In actual business it is usually balanced every night, the balance agreeing with the amount of cash on hand, added to the bank balance, if a bank account is kept.

There are four distinct classes of accounts, viz., Individual, Non-speculative Representative, Speculative Representative, and Loss and Gain Accounts.

Individual accounts are those accounts clothed with the authority to maintain a suit at law; they include accounts with persons, banks, and all corporate companies.

Loss and Gain accounts are such as show losses and gains only, and do not in themselves represent any value. To this class belong Profit and Loss, Interest, Commissions, Insurance, Expenses, etc.

Representative Non-speculative accounts are those that represent assets or liabilities, in which there can be no increase or diminution of value, as Cash, Bills Receivable, Bills Payable, etc.

Representative Speculative accounts are those which represent value, but on which you may gain or lose: as Merchandise, Real Estate, Personal Property, Shipments, Shipment Companies, Merchandise Companies, and all kinds of Corporation stocks.

MERCANTILE DEFINITIONS.

See "Practical Rules," below.

The principal kinds of business paper in general use are Bills of Exchange (Foreign and Inland), Notes, Checks, and Receipts.

An Account Current is a statement of the mercantile transactions of one person with another, drawn out in the form of Dr. and Cr., dealing only with gross sums, and is an exact copy of the personal account found in the ledger.

An Account Sales is a statement of all the details concerning an individual lot of goods. It is distinguished from an account current by these three particulars: 1. The account current is with an individual. The account sales is of a particular lot of goods. 2. The account current involves net sums. The account sales presents items in detail. 3. The account current may involve the proceeds of many account sales, and all transactions with an individual, whether arising from the sale of his goods or not. The account sales is limited to an account of the transactions arising from the sale of one lot of goods.

A Bill of Exchange is a written order or request from one person to another, desiring the latter to pay to some person designated a certain sum of money therein named. When drawn in one country (or State) and payable in another, it is called a foreign bill. When drawn and payable in the same country (or State) it is called an inland bill, or more frequently a draft. It generally is, and to be negotiable, it must be made payable to "order" or "bearer." The person who draws the bill is called the drawer; the person on whom it is drawn is, before acceptance, called the drawee; after acceptance, the acceptor. The person to whom the money is directed to be paid is called the payee.

A Bill of Goods is an account of goods sold, given by the seller to the buyer, containing the quantity and price of the articles, with a statement of the date and terms of credit.

A Check is an order for money drawn on a bank, or persons doing banking business, having money in their hands, payable at sight.

To Clear an Account is to make both sides equal.

An Invoice is an account of goods sent by a merchant to his consignee, containing the particular marks, value, charges, and other particulars of the goods.

A Ledger Account is a space in the ledger set apart for the debits and credits of a particular kind, with the name of that kind written at the top.

Bills Receivable, Bills Pay.

Accounting accounts are those due, but on which you may Merchandise, Real Estate, Shipments, Shipment Companies, and all kinds like.

LE DEFINITIONS.

Accounts are those kinds of business paper in the form of Dr. and Cr., Bills of Exchange (Foreign), Checks, and Receipts.

Account is a statement of the transactions of one person with another in the form of Dr. and Cr., from sums, and is an exact account found in the ledger.

Account is a statement of all the transactions of an individual lot of goods, from an account current by one person to another. The account current is of three kinds: 1. The account current. 2. The account current. 3. The account current. The account current is of three kinds: 1. The account current. 2. The account current. 3. The account current.

Account is a written order or receipt from one person to another, desiring to receive a certain sum of money therein named. When the account is payable to the order of a person in the same country (or an inland bill, or more frequently is, and to be made payable to "order" of the person who draws the bill; the person on whom it is drawn; the person on whom it is drawn; the person on whom it is drawn; the person on whom it is drawn.

Account is an account of goods sold by one person to another, containing the price of the articles, with the date and terms of credit. The account is drawn on a bank or banking business, payable at sight.

Account is to make both sides of an account of goods sent by one person to another, containing the value, charges, and other items.

Account is a space in the ledger in which the debits and credits of a particular account are written at the end of each day.

Accounting is transferring the journal debits and credits to their proper place in the ledger.

Accounting Note is a promise, in writing, to pay a specified sum at a time therein limited, or on demand, or at sight, to a person therein named, or to his order, or to the bearer.

Accounting Receipt is a writing acknowledging the receipt of money or any other kind of property.

Accounting Balance is a systematic arrangement of the ledger accounts, with their proper debit and credit totals, made for the purpose of ascertaining if the debits and credits of the ledger are equal or balance.

PRACTICAL RULES.

See "Mercantile Definitions," above.

Account. The debtor side shows the amount deposited. The credit side the amount drawn out. It usually closes "By balance."

Account Payable is a written obligation for the unconditional payment of a certain sum of money, at a certain time to a certain person, his order or bearer, without interest, issued by yourself, and payable by you by virtue of your written promise contained in it. At the time of commencing business, bills payable account will be credited for all notes and acceptances outstanding, and during the business for all notes and acceptances issued by the merchant. It is debited for all redemptions. The difference shows the amount still outstanding. It always closes "To balance."

Account Receivable is a written obligation for the unconditional payment of a certain sum of money, at a certain time to a certain person, his order or bearer, without interest, issued by any one but yourself, and payable to you by virtue of the written promise contained in it. Bills receivable account is debited for all notes and drafts on hand at commencing business, and for all received during the business. It is credited for all parted with. The difference is the amount still held. It always closes "By balance."

Account is a non-speculative representative account. The debtor side shows the amount received; the credit side the amount paid out; and the difference is the amount on hand. It always closes "By balance."

Account is a name given to goods received, to be sold on account of the shipper, and at his risk. It is debited for all charges when received, and credited for all sales. When an account sales is rendered, it is debited for all unpaid charges, and for the shipper's net proceeds. The person who receives a consignment is called the consignee.

Account is a name given to all moneys paid or liabilities incurred, from which no direct return is expected, such as clerk hire, store rent, &c. It is closed "By profit and loss."

Account is a speculative representative account. It is debited for the cost of merchandise on hand at commencing, and for all purchases and drafts, and credited for all sales; and when the merchandise has all been sold, the difference between the sides will be gain or loss—gain when the production or credit side exceeds the cost, and loss when the cost or debtor side exceeds the production. To find the gain when the merchandise has not all been sold, add the inventory to the sales or credit side, and from this sum subtract the cost or debtor side; the remainder will be gain. It is closed "To" or "By profit and loss." Should the debtor side be greater than the creditor, the difference between them will be loss.

Real estate, personal property, corporation stocks, and all speculative accounts are treated precisely as merchandise.

Accounting Company is a name given to goods received to be sold on joint account and risk. When received, it is made debtor for the consignee's interest and all charges. It is credited for all sales, and at the time of rendering an account sales, is debited for all unpaid charges and the shipper's net proceeds.

Accounting and Loss account is debited with all losses and credited with all gains. The difference is the net gain or loss. It is closed "To" or "By stock."

Accounting is a name given to goods shipped to be sold on account of the shipper, and at his risk. It is made debtor for the cost of the merchandise sent, and all expenses incurred at the time of shipping. It is credited for the net proceeds when an account sales is received. It is closed "To" or "By profit and loss," if an account sales has been received, but if not, it is credited for its full cost. The person shipping the goods is called the shipper or consignor.

Accounting Company represents the shipper's interest in goods shipped to be sold on joint account and risk. It is made debtor for his interest at the time of shipping, and creditor for his net proceeds when an account sales is received. It is closed the same as a shipment.

Account represents the merchant or stockholder, and is made debtor for what the business man owes on commencing business, for all sums withdrawn, and at the time of closing, for all losses that have occurred during the business. It is credited for all sums invested, and for all gains. It is closed "To" or "By balance;" "To balance" showing the net capital, and "By balance" the net insolvency.

JOURNALIZING.

Journalizing may be, and often is, done without a journal. One journalizes when on hearing of or reading a business transaction he determines that entries should be made on certain sides of certain ledger accounts. The fundamental law of journalizing is that exactly as much shall be placed on the Dr. side of the ledger as goes on the Cr. side, and exactly as much must be placed on the Cr. side as goes on the Dr. side. And no business transaction can be invested in which each of the parties to it does not either receive something, or somebody or thing has cost him value, and at the same time each of the parties to the transaction has parted with something, or somebody or thing has produced him value.

DEBIT THE THING RECEIVED OR WHATEVER COSTS VALUE.
CREDIT THE THING PARTED WITH OR WHATEVER PRODUCES VALUE.

CLOSING A LEDGER.

Closing the ledger is ending the current condition of all the Ledger accounts. In the process, all the gains and losses that have occurred in the business are gathered together in the "Profit and Loss" account and there compared. The gains are placed upon the credit side; the losses on the debit side. When the credit side is the greater the account is closed "To stock," and shows a net gain. The opposite entry "By profit and loss" is made in the Stock account, and increases the capital. When the debtor side is the greater the account is closed "By stock," and shows a net loss. The opposite entry "To profit and loss" is made in the Stock account, and decreases the capital.

A balance sheet is a systematic arrangement of the resources and liabilities of a business.

1. Take a trial balance; if it shows the total of the ledger debits equal to the total of the ledger credits, proceed as directed below.

If the totals referred to above are not equal, re-add each journal column to see if the debits and credits are equal there; if the mistake be undiscovered yet, re-add the ledger debits and credits, and if that does not reveal the mistake, examine each individual post from the journal, and check it where correct. The mistake in your trial balance must arise from faulty work in one of these three items, in every case where the ledger contains no matter excepting what was posted from the journal. Any one can find the mistake who can perform such work (adding and transferring) correctly, and he who finds the mistake will find it in one of these three places.

2. Take an inventory, and credit the Speculative Representative accounts for their respective amounts "By balance," and make the opposite or debit entries in a Balance account, which opens.

3. Close all Speculative Representative accounts "To or by profit and loss," making opposite entries in Profit and Loss account.

4. Close Profit and Loss account "To or by stock," making an opposite entry in Stock account.

5. Commence with the first account now unclosed and close it, and all others unclosed, "To or by balance," making the opposite entries in Balance account.

All closing entries must be made in red ink. The entries subsequent, opposite and corresponding to the closing ones, together with footings, write in black ink. Accounts closing "To balance" show liabilities, those closing "By balance" assets or resources, hence Balance account will show resources on the Dr. side and liabilities on the Cr. side.

Accounts closing "To profit and loss" show gains, those closing "By profit and loss" losses, hence Profit and Loss account will show losses on the Dr. side, and gains on the Cr. side.

When the direction given requires an account closed "To or by another," close it "To the other" if the debit side is the least, and "By the other" when the Cr. side is the least.

There are but three general ways of closing accounts: "To or by profit and loss," by which all the gains and losses are collected in Profit and Loss account; "To or by stock," by which the net gain or loss is taken to the Capital account; and "To or by balance," by which all the resources and liabilities are gathered together in the Balance account.

If no mistake is made in closing the ledger the two sides of Balance account will be equal, for in prosperity the Dr. side comprises all the resources of the business man, and the Cr. side all his liabilities and his net capital—the net capital being the excess of resources over liabilities. And the net capital properly appears among the liabilities, as the books are of the business, and show that the business owes the merchant whatever he has invested in it. So in adversity the Dr. side of Balance account consists of the resources and the net insolvency, and the Cr. side of the liabilities—the net insolvency being the excess of the liabilities over resources. And the net insolvency properly appears among the resources, as the merchant needs to pay or provide the business with what it owes beyond its ability to discharge.

Book-Keeping—Ledger Entries.

The ledger is the principal account book, and as all other books are subservient to it, it seems proper that this should be the first book considered. It is extremely difficult for a person who has no previous knowledge of the subject to understand the use or language of the journal or day-book until he is made acquainted with the nature and use of the ledger.

The ledger is the book of accounts. Into it are gathered, in a condensed form, the entries contained in all the other books. Every transaction must come to this book for final adjustment; in fact, were it not for the great difficulty experienced to avoid errors and the lack of time so nearly make the entries, all the other books might be dispensed with, and the transactions, as they occur, entered under their appropriate headings in this book directly. All other books used in business are merely aids to the book-keeper in preparing the transactions for the ledger.

For each person who becomes indebted to us, or to whom we become indebted, an account is opened in this book, and the date and amount of each indebtedness therein recorded, so that however numerous the transactions that we have with an individual may be, or however widely separated at so times, they are all brought together within a very small space under his account in the ledger, where the accounts can be readily seen, and whether we owe him, or he owes us, and how much, easily determined.

By thus bringing correctly together all the transactions which we may have with an individual, spread over, it may be, many months, and accounting upon one side of his account all items for which he becomes indebted to us (that is, for which he owes us), and upon the other side all items for which we become indebted to him (that is, for which he treats us), we enable it in every manner to quickly determine at any time the difference, or balance as it is termed, and whether it be in our favor or against us. The balance is in our favor when the Dr. side exceeds the Cr., that is, when he owes us more than he treats us; and against us when the Cr. side exceeds the Dr., that is, when he treats us more than he owes us.

By double entry book-keeping we not only keep accounts with individuals but with every kind of property which we own or deal in, such as Merchandise, Real Estate, Cash, Notes, etc. Each kind of property has a separate account in the ledger, the same as individuals, and is made Dr. for what it costs us when we buy, and Cr. for what it brings us when we sell or part with it.
It will be seen by the following ledger accounts with Merchandise, R. Evans, John Jones, William Smith, and Cash, that each account has two sides, being divided in the centre by a triple line. The left-hand side is the debit (abbreviated Dr.) side, and the right-hand side the credit (abbreviated Cr.) side. The term debit comes from the Latin word debit, and means to owe,
and the term credit comes from the Latin word credit, and means to trust. When an individual becomes indebted to us for goods sold to him on credit, or for payments made by us to liquidate our indebtedness to him, such sales or payments must be entered upon the Dr.
side of his account because he owes us for them, and vice versa, when we become indebted to an individual for goods bought from him on credit, or for payments received from him to liquidate his indebtedness to us, such purchases or payments must be entered upon the Cr. side of his account, because he trusts us for them.

The following rules must always be borne in mind, viz.: That whoever or whatever owes us to part with value or to run into debt must be debited in the ledger;
and whoever or whatever brings us in value or gets us out of debt, or causes persons to owe us, must be credited in the ledger.

The following examples will serve to illustrate the following remarks. Carefully consider each example and follow it to its proper account in the ledger. Each example affords equally two accounts, the Dr. side of one and the Cr. side of another.

January 4. Bought of R. Evans on account, merchandise to the value of $1.00.

In this example or transaction we buy a certain kind of property called merchandise, for which we run in debt to R. Evans, and following out what has already been said, we turn to the Merchandise account in the ledger, and upon the Dr. side we enter the date, to whom we owe for the merchandise, viz., R. Evans, and the amount of $1.00, and then upon the Cr. side of R. Evans' account we enter the date, by what he trusts us, viz., Merch., and the amount $1.00. The amounts upon the Dr. and Cr. sides of this ledger, after the above transaction is posted, are equal; it is essential that such should be the case after each transaction is posted.

January 7. We sold to John Jones on account, 1 yds.
fancy cambric (Merch.), @ $2.50; $2.50.

In this transaction we enter upon the Dr. side of John Jones' account, because he owes us, the date, to what he owes us for, viz., Merch., and the amount; and upon the Cr. side of the Merchandise account, because it was merchandise, that produced us the amount that John Jones owes us, we enter the date, by the person who owes us for the goods, viz., John Jones, and the amount.

January 20. Sold to William Smith on account, 20 lbs.
yds. N's best cloth, @ $5.00; $100.00.

January 25. Sold John Jones on account, 1 yds. N's beaver overcoat, @ $7.50; $7.50.

January 28. R'd of R. Evans on account, Bill of Merch., amounting to $2.00.

February 2. Paid R. Evans on account, $2.00.

By looking at R. Evans' account it will be seen that at this date we owe him, or rather he trusts us for goods bought of him January 4th and 28th, $3.00. By this payment of $2.00, he in reality trusts us over this time until we make another payment or purchase him
$1.00. Now, as we cannot erase the $3.00 and insert
$1.00 in its place, we enter the $2.00 upon the Dr. side of his account, thus making his account to show that he still trusts us $1.00, but owes us $2.00. The question is now, when account to credit? R. Evans has been debited $2.00, and some account must be credited the same amount. According to what has already been said it must be that which we posted or entered in to decrease our indebtedness. In this case it was a kind of property called money with which we parted;
it was the money which we paid over to R. Evans that decreased our indebtedness to him. Cash is money described as such. The money received and paid for is entered in the ledger upon an account called Cash, we therefore trust to the Cash account and upon the credit side enter the date, by R. Evans, and the amount, $2.00.

February 22. Received from John Jones on account, $15.

In this example we receive property called money, and as all property when received is debited, we turn to the account in the ledger representing money, viz., Cash, and enter upon the Dr. side the date, To John Jones, and the amount, $15, and as John Jones trusts us for the $15 until he settles in full for the goods sold to him January 7th and 15th, we give his account Cr. for that amount. His account will now show that he owes us $20, but that he trusts us $15.

February 25. Received from Wm. Smith on account, $25.

March 2. Paid R. Evans on account, $20.

March 20. Sold Wm. Smith on account, 30 yds. fancy
cambric, @ $2; $60.

April 5. Sold John Jones on account, 20 yds. N's best cloth, @ $5; $100.

April 15. Sold Wm. Smith on account, 30 yds. N's
cambric, @ $2.75; $82.50.

April 27. Paid R. Evans on account, $20.

May 15. Rec'd from John Jones to balance bill of January 7th and 15th, $25.

June 2. Sold Wm. Smith on account, 20 yds. fancy cash, @ $7.50; $150.

June 15. Paid R. Evans on account, $20.

June 20. Rec'd from Wm. Smith to balance his account to date, $25.00.

In this last example, when Wm. Smith receives credit for the $25.00, the two sides of his account will be even.
In all cases where a settlement in full is made or a statement sent to a customer, his ledger account should be balanced and ruled off. This will save much time and preparatory in future settlements, as all transactions up to the time the account is balanced or closed are supposed to be correct and adjusted, and in future settlements only transactions after the date of balancing are to be taken into consideration. The ruling off of an account divides the adjusted or settled transactions from the new or unadjusted ones.

Journal Entries—Double Entry.
General Form.

The Journal. The Journal is an intermediate book between the day book and ledger. Its use is to describe the proper accounts in the ledger to be debited and credited from each day book transaction, and to arrange the debits and credits in a convenient and easy form for posting. We could dispense with the use of the day book, with much less inconvenience than that of the day book, but it serves an excellent purpose in systematically arranging the day book matter for the ledger, and greatly facilitates the detection of an error in the posting, its use is very general. In many cases the day book and journal are combined in one book under the name of journal day book. This form shortens the work considerably, and is well adapted to many kinds of business.

There are four forms of journal entries, as shown in the following diagrams:

	Dr.	Cr.
ONE DEBIT AND ONE CREDIT.
Mfrs. . . . .	500 00
To cash. . . . .		500 00

To Sam'l B. Smith. . . . .		2,000 00
To cash. . . . .		4,000 00

The following are the journal entries for a few of the day book transactions hereafter given.

It will be seen that the account which we wish to debit in the ledger is named first and the amount carried out into the body of the two right-hand columns, and then under the next line below, a debit to the right, say about three-quarters of an inch, we write the name of the account we wish to credit in the ledger and carry the amount out into the outer of the two right-hand columns.

Day Book Entries—Double (or Single) Entry.

The Day Book. In our remarks upon the ledger we stated that in some cases it might be desirable to describe the day book, although we would in no case believe that it was absolutely necessary to have a book in which to record them as they occur, so that time and care can be taken in transferring them to the ledger.

The book for this purpose is called the day book; by some it is called the blotter, and by others a waste book. In it are entered, in the order of their occurrence, every transaction, bargain, and agreement which we make, and as it is the only book allowed to be produced as evidence in a suit at law (that is, when the transactions are not divided between several books), pains should be taken to record correctly everything pertaining to the transaction, such as the date, articles, prices, amount, and anything else essential to the proper understanding of the transaction in the future. Many bitter contentions resulting in the loss of money, reputation, and friends would be avoided if all bargains and agreements, as well as purchases and sales, were recorded in writing by each interested party as soon as made.

This, of course, can be done in the day book. The aim should be to enter each transaction in as concise or terse a manner as possible, and yet to have everything recorded essential to a right reading, without the aid of the memory, in case you were in the future forced to law upon the matter.

No omission or anything out is allowed in this book, as that would look suspicious and at once destroy its strength as evidence, but if it be discovered that a transaction has been entered incorrectly, the error should be corrected in a separate entry as soon as discovered.

The following are a few of the first entries given in remarks upon the ledger, and are now used here to illustrate the form, etc., of this book. It will be observed that the last entry differs from the others in that it has several kinds of articles recorded. When this is the case, the inner column of the two right-hand columns is used for the sum of each separate item, and the sum total of all the items thus carried to the outer column. When there is but one item in the transaction, the amount is entered only in the outer column as in all the entries before this last.

AGREEMENT. GO REAL PROPERTY. ACKNOWLEDGMENT. See Chapter Law; Statutes. Acknowledgment: Evidence; Loans; Mortgages; Powers of Attorney. For full and adequate series of Acknowledgment Certificates see New York and Pennsylvania Forms. All deeds, mortgages, powers of attorney, and other instruments for the conveyance of insurance of any real property whatever, must be acknowledged, and in conformity with the provisions of the statute in force where the property is situated. ACKNOWLEDGMENT FORM. Reading the officer's printed certificate. The first thing that the certificate of acknowledgment should show is the place where it is taken and made. The officer who certifies to the acknowledgment must be authorized by law, and can act only in the limits of his power or authority for which he is appointed or elected. Thus, an officer or court of Aiken county could not legally take an acknowledgment in Greenville county, and Aiken county may be in Alabama and also in Wyoming. The provisions should be such as to containly read to the effect it is taken. Examples are as follows: State of --- county, ss., or: State of --- county, ss., or: State of --- county, to wit, or: State of --- county of ---, city of ---, ss., or:

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

State of —, city (or department, district, parish, town, township, or other place where the officer takes the acknowledgment) of —, ss.

Territory of —, city, etc., of —, ss.
Province of —, Dominion of —, etc.
Part of —, Empire of —, etc.

Commencement of the Certificate.
After stating the place where the acknowledgment is taken, the certificate, like any other instrument of writing, must have its commencement. Examples of which are as follows:

I certify that, etc., or:
I do hereby certify that on this — day of —, in the year —, before the subscriber, a —, etc., or:

On this — day of — personally appeared before me, a — (giving your official title) in and for said county, same (or personally appeared) O. R., etc., or:

On this — day of —, before me (the undersigned) O. R., a (give official title) in and for said county (or city, etc.) came (or personally appeared) O. R., etc., or:

I, O. R., a — in and for said county (or city, etc.) do hereby certify unto all whom it may concern that O. R. did this day appear before me, etc., or:

So it remembered, that on this — day of —, before me, O. R., a (stating the name of his office) in and for said county, the grantors, O. N., T. R., and R. S., etc., or:

Boston, July 4, 1876, then personally appeared the above O. R., etc.

After commencing the certificate as above indicated, it is necessary to state what the party appearing acknowledges; these forms of statement vary in the different States, and are given in the following pages, to which you are referred.

Commencement of the Certificate.
In order that the certificate shall be authoritative, the officer must by an appropriate conclusion bear witness to and affirm the making of the declaration embraced in the certificate of acknowledgment, and then sign, and if he have any) affix his seal to the same.

The conclusion may be thus:
Given under my hand and seal of office, or:
Given under my hand and seal this — day of —, or:

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and (official or notarial) seal, the day and year last above written (or, the — day of —), or:

In testimony whereof, I have caused the seal of (the — court) to be affixed (at —) this — day of —, or:
In witness whereof, etc.

Officer's Signature and Seal.
The signature of the officer followed by his official title is made at the bottom right side of the instrument. The seal of an officer (when a seal is required by law), if a corral, is generally written at the end of his name and official title; but, if an impression seal, it is stamped at the bottom left side of the instrument.

- [L. S.] M. R., Mayor of —.
- [L. S.] J. P., Justice of the Peace. (Scal.)
- [L. S.] N. P., Notary Public.
- [L. S.] P. O., Presiding Officer of (state what).
- [L. S.] C. C., Clerk of the — Court, or:
- [L. S.] J. J., Judge of the — Court.
- [L. S.] C. D., Commissioner of Deeds for the State of —.
- [L. S.] C. P., Consul of the United States of America resident at —.

These clauses apply to Florida only. It is also necessary that the certificate of acknowledgment of the clerk or prothonotary be authenticated by the judge or justice present at the making thereof, certifying that said acknowledgment was made in his presence, and that

All terms, words, and phrases in this acknowledgment are strictly statutory, are drawn from a comparison of all the statutes, and when this acknowledgment is used it should be either in connection with the particular statutes regulating the terms of the acknowledgment to be taken or copied at large.

It is necessarily long, but exhibits practically and in the aggregate the various methods of securing a free and voluntary acknowledgment. There is no necessity in its use; it being customary to take and conform the acknowledgment according to the provisions of the law of the place where the land conveyed is situated.

Acknowledgment—Administrator.
The only difference between this acknowledgment and those between parties representing themselves personally is this: an individual sets out only his name and acknowledges the conveyance as such. The administrator sets out both his name and official title in full, and acknowledges the conveyance "as such officer."

Write out the acknowledgment as usual to the grantor's name, then write the grantor's (administrator's) name, etc., thus, "A. B., Administrator of the estate and effects of D. D., deceased," continue the acknowledgment as usual, and ending "as such Administrator."

Acknowledgment—Assignee.
See Acknowledgment—Administrator, above. Write out the acknowledgment as usual, and for grantor's (assignee's) name, etc., "A. B., Assignee of the estate and effects of A. B. & Co., bankrupt (or insolvent), continuing the acknowledgment as usual, and ending "as such assignee."

Acknowledgment—Agent or Attorney.
The acknowledgment is in the usual form to grantor's name, which is as follows: "A. B., by A. A., his attorney in fact." Continue the acknowledgment as usual, adding to it, when complete, the following matter: (by virtue of a power of attorney, duly executed by said grantor, bearing date the — day of —, 18—, and recorded in the office of the — county, in the State of —, in volume — page — of —) for and as the act of said A. B.

Acknowledgments—Corporation.
The acknowledgment in such cases is, in the absence of provisions to the contrary, the same as usual, adding the name and description of the officers authorized to acknowledge for the corporation, thus, "The A. B. Railway Co., by P. F., its President" (and S. V., its Secretary), etc., continuing as usual and ending with (a recital of authority and) "as such president (and secretary), etc., for and on the act of said company (or corporation)."

The seal of the corporation is also a requisite to the acknowledgment.

Acknowledgments—Executor.
See Acknowledgment—Administrator, above. The acknowledgment is as usual, except grantor's name and title should be thus, "E. E., Executor of the last will and testament of D. D., deceased," continuing the form as usual, and ending "as such executor."

Acknowledgments—Guardian.
See Acknowledgment—Administrator, above. The acknowledgment is as usual, except grantor's name (and name) of M. L., "Guardian of the person (and estate) of M. L., Or, and M. L., the secretary of D. D., deceased," continuing the form as usual, and ending "as such guardian."

Acknowledgments—Infant or Minors.
The acknowledgment is in the usual form to grantor's name, "J. Acknowledgments and proofs of conveyances may be taken in this State by judges of the supreme and circuit courts and their clerks, chancellors, and registers in chancery, judges of the courts of probate, justices of the peace, and notaries public. If taken in other States of the United States, they may be taken by judges and clerks of any federal court, judge of any court of record in any State, notaries public, or commissioners appointed by the governor of Alabama. No other proof or authentication of such acknowledgment is necessary than the certificate of such officer. Powers of attorney to convey property may be proven or acknowledged in the same manner, and must be received as evidence in the same extent as conveyances. If the grantor is unknown, his identity may be established by witnesses sufficient to satisfy the officer before whom the acknowledgment is made. The execution of deeds, etc., by corporations depends altogether on the act of incorporation. Deeds may be proved as well as acknowledged.

CONNECTICUT.

An acknowledgment, whether within or without the State, is sufficient, if made before a justice of the peace, notary public, judge of some court of ordinary civil or superior jurisdiction, or any officer having power by law to take acknowledgments of deeds. Deeds may also be acknowledged in this State by the commissioners of the school land, judges of probate, town clerks, and commissioners of the superior court. All deeds executed by grantors residing out of the United States may be personally acknowledged before a United States consul, notary public, or justice of the peace. A notarial seal proves itself. Before any of the officers in the United States or Territories, indicated as competent to take acknowledgments, other than those officers last above named, and before any of the officers in a foreign country, mentioned as competent to take acknowledgments, recorded in this State, in order to entitle the same to be made; and the certificate should so state.

FLORIDA.

All deeds, mortgages, or other conveyances, by which any right, title, interest, or claim to any real estate in this State may be conveyed, effected, defeated, impaired, or released, all powers of attorney relating to the same, and all instruments under seal, to be made or recorded in this State, in order to entitle the same to be so used or recorded, in case the same shall be acknowledged out of this State, shall be acknowledged by the party or parties executing the same, or the execution thereof by said party or parties shall be proved by a subscribing witness thereto before a commissioner duly appointed by the governor of Florida. In those cities or counties where no commissioner is appointed, or where he is unable to act, the acknowledgment or proof may be taken before the chief justice, judge, presiding justice, or president of any court of record of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, having a seal and a clerk, or prothonotary; but no proof or acknowledgment taken by any such party shall entitle such deed, power of attorney, or conveyance to be recorded, unless taken within some place or district to which the jurisdiction of the court to which he belongs shall extend, and the place of taking such acknowledgment be by him set forth in his certificate of acknowledgment, and also that the court of which he is such chief justice, judge, presiding justice, or president, is a court of record; the certificate shall state that the party taking the acknowledgment knows or has satisfactory proof that the person making such acknowledgment is the individual described in and who executed the deed or instrument under seal; the certificate of acknowledgment of such chief justice, judge, presiding justice, or president, shall be accompanied by the certificate of the clerk, or prothonotary of the court for which he is such judge, justice, or president as aforesaid, under the seal of said court, that he is duly appointed or authorized as such judge, justice, or president, etc. The acknowledgment of a married woman (residing out of this State) to a deed, conveyance, or instrument under seal, purporting to be executed by her, shall not be taken, unless, in addition to the foregoing requisites, she acknowledges, on a separate or private examination by the officers taking her acknowledgment, apart from her husband, that she executed such deed, conveyance, or instrument under seal, freely, and without any fear or compulsion of or from her husband. The officer must in all cases certify to the identity of the grantor. It is competent for him, however, to satisfy himself of the identity of the parties at his own discretion.

Deeds, etc., executed in this State of lands, or any interest in lands therein, shall be executed in the presence of two witnesses, who shall subscribe their names to the same as such, and the persons executing such deeds may acknowledge the execution thereof before any judge, clerk of the circuit court, notary public or justice of the peace within the State, and if any such deed or conveyance of land shall be executed in any other State, Territory, or district of the United States, such deed may be executed according to the laws of such State, Territory, or district, and the execution thereof may be acknowledged before any judge or clerk of a court of record, notary public, justice of the peace, or other officer authorized by the laws of such State, Territory, or district, to take acknowledgment of deeds therein, or before any commissioner appointed by the governor of this State for such purpose.

If such deed be executed in any foreign country it may be executed according to the laws of such country; any execution thereof may be acknowledged before any notary public therein, or before any minister plenipotentiary, minister extraordinary, minister resident, chargé d'affaires, commissioner, or consul of the United States appointed to reside therein, or before a commissioner appointed by the governor of this State for such purpose, which acknowledgment shall be verified therein by the officer taking the same under his hand, and his seal of office shall be affixed to such certificate.

If any such deed or other conveyance shall be executed and acknowledged in any other State or country, before any officer not having an official seal, he shall have attached thereto a certificate of the clerk or other proper certifying officer of a court of record or certificate of the secretary of state, minister plenipotentiary, minister extraordinary, minister resident, chargé d'affaires, commissioner, or consul (as the case may be), that the person whose name is subscribed to the certificate of acknowledgment was, at the date thereof, such officer as he is therein represented to be; that he believes the signature of such person subscribed thereto to be genuine, and that the deed is executed and acknowledged according to the laws of such State, Territory, district, or foreign country.

The wife may relinquish her dower in any land, tenements, or hereditaments, by joining in the deed made by the husband, or she may execute a separate instrument under her hand and seal, in the presence of two witnesses. When made in this State, her relinquishment of dower (to be effectual) must be accompanied by an acknowledgment under her hand and seal, taken and made separately and apart from her husband, before some judicial officer of this State, that it was made freely and voluntarily, and without any compulsion, constraint, apprehension, or fear of or from the husband. When made out of this State, but within the United States, it shall be taken in the manner aforesaid, by the clerk or prothonotary of some court of record in this State, Territory, or district in which it shall be made, in the presence of the judge or justice, or of one of the judges or justices of the court to which the clerk or prothonotary who takes the acknowledgment shall belong. And the taking of such acknowledgment, and the certificate of the clerk or prothonotary, shall be authenticated under the hand of the judge or justice present at the making thereof, by his certifying that the said acknowledgment was made in his presence, and that the person acting as clerk or prothonotary was at the time of his so doing the clerk or prothonotary of the court of which he is judge or justice.

If any such relinquishment of dower shall be made out of the United States, the acknowledgment of the party making it shall be taken in the manner as aforesaid, by and before some public minister, consul, vice-consul, commercial or vice-commercial agent of the United States residing in the country in which the acknowledgment may be taken, and shall be certified under the hand and the seal of office of such public minister, consul or vice-consul, commercial agent or vice-commercial agent.

INDIANA.
 To entitle any conveyance, mortgage, or instrument of writing to be recorded, it must be acknowledged by the grantor, or proved before any judge or clerk of a court of record, justice of the peace, auditor, recorder, notary public, or mayor of a city in this State, or before any commissioner appointed in any other State by the governor of this State, or before any minister, consul, or consul of the United States in any foreign country.

When any conveyance, mortgage, or other instrument required to be recorded, is acknowledged in any county in this State other than the one in which the same is required to be recorded, the acknowledgment must be certified by the clerk of the circuit court of the county in which the officer resides, and attested by the seal of said court; but an acknowledgment before an officer having an official seal, if attested by such official seal, is sufficient without such certification. A county surveyor is authorized to have a seal, and take and certify acknowledgments of mortgages and deeds for realty.

Any acknowledgment of any conveyance in a foreign country, as above provided, requires no certificate other than the official seal of the officer taking said acknowledgment.
 To entitle to record in this State conveyances acknowledged out of this State and within the United States, the same must be certified by the clerk of any court of record of the country in which the officer receiving the acknowledgment resides, and attested by the seal of said court; but an acknowledgment before an officer having an official seal, attested by his official seal, is sufficient without such certification.
 All deeds may be proved according to the rules of the common law, unless any officer authorized to take acknowledgments, and being so proved are entitled to record.

It is not necessary for a married woman to acknowledge her deed in any form other than that required by unmarriage persons.
 The certificate of any such acknowledgment must be in writing upon or attached to such conveyance.

 Instruments affecting real estate executed within the State must be acknowledged before some court having a seal, or some judge, or clerk or deputy clerk thereof, or some J. P., or notary public, or a county auditor or his deputy.

Instruments affecting real estate executed out of the State but within the United States must be acknowledged before some court of record, or officer holding the seal thereof, or before some commissioner of deeds appointed by the governor of this State, or before some notary public or justice of the peace; or when before a justice, a certificate under the official seal of the proper authority, of the official character of said justice and of his authority to take such acknowledgments, and of the genuineness of his signature, shall accompany said certificate of acknowledgment. Such instruments, if executed without the United States, may be acknowledged or proven before any ambassador, minister, secretary of legation, consul, consul general, consular agent, or any other officer of the United States in any foreign country, who is authorized to issue certificates under the seal of the United States. Such instruments may also be acknowledged or proven before any officer of a foreign country who is authorized by the laws thereof to certify to the acknowledgments of written documents; but the certificate of acknowledgment by a foreign officer must be authenticated by one of the above-named officers of the United States, whose official written statement that full faith and credit is due to the certificate of such foreign officer shall be deemed sufficient evidence of the qualification of said officer to take acknowledgments, and to certify thereof, and of the genuineness of his signature or seal, if he have any.

The certificate of acknowledgment must contain the title of the court or person before whom it was taken; that the person making the acknowledgment was personally known to be the identical person whose name is affixed thereto; or that such identity was proved by at least one credible witness (naming him); and that such person acknowledged the instrument to be his voluntary act and deed.

If the grantor die, or his attendance cannot be procured, or he refuses to acknowledge it, proof of the due execution and delivery of the deed may be made by one competent person other than the vendee or other person to whom the instrument is executed, and the certificate of acknowledgment must contain the title of officer taking same, that it was satisfactorily proved that grantor was dead, or that his attendance could not be procured, or that he refused to acknowledge same, and the names of the witnesses by whom proof was made, that the instrument was executed by the person whose name is signed thereto.

The execution of any deed, mortgage, or other instrument in writing, executed by an attorney in fact, may be acknowledged by the attorney executing the same, and the certificate thereof must contain the title of officer taking acknowledgment, that the person signing same was personally known to be the identical person signing same as attorney in fact for grantor, and that such person acknowledged the instrument to be the act and deed of grantor by him as his attorney therunto appointed, voluntarily done and executed.<sup>3</sup>

In every conveyance of real estate the joining of the wife with her husband is deemed sufficient to pass all her interest in the property, either as his wife or in her own right.

Conveyances by corporations may be executed by any officer thereof, qualified thereto by charter or laws of the corporation, by giving his title as such officer, certifying that he is duly authorized to act, and by attaching the seal of the corporation.<sup>3</sup>

A married woman may convey her interest in real estate in the same manner as other persons.

Corporations execute instruments as individuals, and the acknowledgment and certificate are in the same form, except that the corporation must sign and acknowledge by its principal officer, and affix the corporate seal.

LOUISIANA.

Any conveyance or instrument may be acknowledged before a commissioner of Louisiana, whose certificate under seal will admit it to record there. This officer may also certify to the official character and functions of all public officers in the State, which he is appointed. An acknowledgment made in conformity with the laws of any other State is valid in this State. The official character of the person before whom the acknowledgment is made must, however, be properly verified.

When they are not executed or acknowledged before a commissioner of Louisiana, they must be authenticated as follows:

1st. By some judge of a court having a seal, to have been taken before him, specifying the time and place where taken, or that the officer before whom it was subscribed was the proper officer, and that his situation is in due form.

2d. The genuineness of the signature of such judge, the existence of the court, and the fact that such judge is a member thereof, must be certified by a clerk of the court, under the seal thereof.

3d. The official character of the officer before whom it is subscribed may also be shown by the certificate of the governor, the secretary of state, the chancellor, or the keeper of the great seal of the State, or

4th. It may be taken before any commissioner for Louisiana, duly appointed and commissioned by the governor, and the said commissioner may also certify the official capacity and acts of any judge, justice of the peace, or other public officer, holding a commission or acting under the authority of the State or Territory in which he resides, and for which he shall have been appointed.

Acknowledgment of deeds executed within this State, conveying lands situated in or out of the State, may be made before a notary public, or parish recorder, or his deputy, in the presence of two witnesses, or it may be drawn up and signed as a private act, and then acknowledged with the above formalities, or the witnesses may go before the recorder, and swear that they saw the party sign. If the grantor be unknown, the officer taking the acknowledgment should be satisfied of his identity.

Conveyances, etc., by corporations are executed and acknowledged by the proper officer in the same form as individuals.

Wherever a married woman joins with her husband in any act affecting his real estate, it is the duty of the officer before whom the act is passed to examine her, apart from the presence of her husband, touching the freedom of her action, and to inform her fully of the nature of her rights upon the property of her husband, and it must appear upon the face of the act that this has been done. In other cases, no particular form of words is required.

Acknowledgment—Husband and Wife.

Be it remembered, that on this day came before me, G. B. (name and title of officer), within and for the county and State aforesaid, duly commissioned and acting as such, A. B. and W. B. his wife, to me known personally (or proved such by two credible witnesses) to be the persons whose names are subscribed to the foregoing deed, and the said A. B. acknowledged that he had executed the said conveyance (or other instrument) for the consideration and purposes therein mentioned and set forth, and the said W. B. being by me first made acquainted with the contents of said instrument, in an examination apart from her husband, and fully advised of the nature of her rights upon his property, acknowledged that she executed the same freely and without compulsion or undue influence of her said husband.

Witness my hand and seal of office on this — day of —, (Signature and title of officer.)

SEAIN.

Deeds in order to be recorded must be acknowledged, if executed in this State, before a J. P., or notary public; but if executed out of this State, before any justice of the peace, magistrate, or notary public in any of the United States, or by a commissioner appointed in any other State by the governor of this State; in any foreign country, by any United States minister or consul, or notary public. A wife must join in a deed of her husband to relinquish dower, or may do so by separate instrument. If she joins with her husband, the acknowledgment of either is sufficient. If she executes a separate deed, she must acknowledge it. She need not be examined from her husband in order to acknowledge any deed. The husband must join with the wife in conveying her real estate, when it was deeded to her by him or his relatives, or paid for by his means, but not otherwise.

The acknowledgment of any one grantor is sufficient, and the acknowledgment of the wife is the same as that of any other person.

that the judge before whom the proof or acknowledgment is taken is a judge of record; that such court has a seal; that he is the clerk thereof; that he is well acquainted with the handwriting of such judge, and believes his signature genuine.

In all cases the production of proof or acknowledgment must show that the officer taking the same either knows, or has satisfactory proof, that the person making such acknowledgment or proof is the same individual described in, and who executed the instrument, or a subscribing witness thereon. When the execution is by a married woman within the State, the certificate must state a private examination. Acknowledgment or proof of conveyance by a non-resident married woman, joining with her husband, may be made as if she were sole. No private examination is necessary, but, otherwise, the certificate of the officer must comply with the requirements of certificates in this State.

Every written instrument, except preliminary notes, bills of exchange, and the last will of deceased persons, may be proved or acknowledged, and read in evidence as the trial of any action, with the same effect and in the same manner as conveyances of real estate.

Where the execution of a conveyance is acknowledged by the party in person, the officer taking the same should certify to the identity.

Where the execution is proved by a subscribing witness, he must state his own place of residence, and that he knew the person described in and who executed the conveyance.

Upon the application of any grantee in any conveyance, or of any person claiming under or through him, verified by oath, that a subscribing witness, residing in the county where the application is made, refuses to appear and testify, any officer authorized to take proof or acknowledgments, except commissioners of death and justices of the peace, may issue a subpoena requiring such witness to appear and testify before him.

Whoever conceals or incriminates any person in any conveyance, or mentioned in the certificate of the officer taking the proof or acknowledgment.

Where a deed is acknowledged in this State, to be used or recorded in another State, the certificate should be headed with name of the State, as well as of the county.

If the instrument, the execution of which is to be acknowledged, is not a deed, it should be described as a mortgage, "bond," "note of attorney," "assignment," "instrument in writing," or whatever the case may require; with the addition, the consideration thereon will be found sufficient in the transaction of ordinary business.

Proof of the Execution of a Deed.

Where the Subscribing Witnesses are Dead.

The statutes provide that proof of the execution of a conveyance where the subscribing witnesses are dead shall be made before any officer authorized to take proofs and acknowledgments of deeds, other than commissioners of deeds (justices of the peace being included in this designation), and such judges not of the degree of counsel in the supreme court. The evidence establishing the death of the witnesses, and of the handwriting of such witnesses, or of either of them, and of the grantor, with the names and places of residence of the witnesses examined before the officer, must be set forth in his certificate. The conveyance having been thus proved and certified, may be recorded in the proper office, provided the original deed is deposited in the same office, to remain there for the inspection of all persons desiring to examine it; such record and deposit will be constructive evidence of the execution of the said conveyance to all subsequent purchasers, although such conveyance, nor the record thereof, nor the transcript of the record can be read in evidence.

On this — day of —, A. D. —, before me (name and official title), personally came G. H., to me known, who, being by me duly sworn, and the within conveyance being shown to him, did depose and say, that he knew the parties therein described; that he was well acquainted with A. B., the grantor; that he had frequently seen him write, and knew his handwriting, and that the name of the said grantor subscribed to the said conveyance is in the proper handwriting of the said A. B. And the said G. H. further on his oath said, that he was well acquainted with S. W., one of the subscribing witnesses to the said conveyance, and with his handwriting; that the said S. W., at the time of the date of said deed, resided in the town of —, in the county of —, and has been dead about one year, and that the name of the said S. W., deceased, subscribed as a witness to said conveyance, is in his proper handwriting. And the said G. H. further deposed and said, that at the time of the date of said conveyance, he was, also, and for several years had been, acquainted with one E. F., a shoemaker, who then resided in the said town of —, in the county of —, and in the neighborhood of the said grantor; that the said E. F. died at the town of —, aforesaid, in the year —, and since the date of said conveyance; that he, the said G. H., was not acquainted with the handwriting of the said E. (if necessary, insert here "residing in the neighborhood of the said grantor"), and that he cannot say in whose handwriting the name of the said E. F. is subscribed to the said conveyance.

And I hereby certify, that the aforesaid deposition of the said G. H. is to me satisfactory evidence of the death of all the witnesses to the within conveyance, and of the handwriting of S. W., one of the said witnesses, and of the handwriting of A. B., the grantor therein named.

 ing witness to any deed conveying lands in this State, or the maker of any leases of attorney, or other instruments conveying the same, shall reside beyond the limits of the State, but within the United States, they shall acknowledge the same before a judge, clerk of a court of record, notary public having a notarial seal, mayor of a city having a seal, or J. P. of the State in which such grantor, etc., resides. These officers can also take the private examination of a married woman, to which they must certify under their respective seals. If the instrument is acknowledged or proven before a J. P., a certificate from the clerk of the court of record of the county in which such J. P. resides, must be appended to the effect that such J. P. was acting J. P. at the time of taking the acknowledgment, etc., and that his genuine signature is affixed to the certificate. Any commissioner of affidavits for the State of N. C., appointed by the governor thereof, in any of the States and Territories of the U. S., or in the District of Col., may also take and certify the acknowledgment or probate of deeds or other instruments.

Where the grantor or maker and the subscribing witness reside beyond the limits of the United States, the acknowledgment or probate may be before the chief magistrate of any city in the country where the grantor or witness is resident; or before any em-bassador, minister, consul, or commercial agent of the United States; and whose seal or acknowledgment is entitled under the corporate seal of such chief magistrate, or minister, consul, or commercial agent, and whose certificate is affixed to the seal or other instrument, and the same is exhibited before the probate judge having jurisdiction, he shall adjudge that such deed or other instrument is duly proved or acknowledged, and shall thereupon order its registration where such registration is necessary.

When a deed, power of attorney, or other instrument shall affect the rights of a married woman, it must be jointly executed by both husband and wife, must be acknowledged by, or proved as to both, and she must be examined privily and apart from her said husband touching her voluntary assent thereto, if the wife reside in some other State, her acknowledgment and privy examination must be before a commissioner appointed by the probate judge having jurisdiction, or a commissioner of affidavits for the State of North Carolina, appointed by the governor thereof, for the State in which the wife resides; and a certificate of such acknowledgment and examination must be returned to the probate judge of the proper county.

Whenever the subscribing witness to any instrument required or allowed to be registered, shall be a non-resident, or shall be dead, and the maker shall also be a non-resident or dead, the proof of the handwriting of such witness and that of the maker, before the judge of probate of the county where the instrument is sought to be registered, shall be sufficient evidence of the execution thereof to admit the same to registration, and in case such maker shall have furnished with a mark only, the proof of the signature of such witness shall be sufficient. Whenever any such instrument shall not have a witness, and the maker thereof shall be a non-resident or dead, proof of his handwriting shall be sufficient to admit the same to registration.

Proof by Subscribing Witnesses.
In certain cases where deed is not acknowledged, proof of execution may be made by the subscribing witnesses before any judge of the supreme or county court in this State; and if the witnesses are dead or out of the State, the deed may be proved before such court by proving the handwriting of the grantor, and of any subscribing witness, or adducing other evidence to the satisfaction of the court. If a grantor refuses to acknowledge his deed, any person claiming under him may cite him before a Justice of the peace to hear the testimony of the subscribing witnesses, and if the deed is proved to the satisfaction of the Justice by one or more of the subscribing witnesses, he shall so certify, which shall be equivalent to a due acknowledgment by the grantor. These proceedings must be had in this State.

VIRGINIA.

The court or clerk of any county or corporation in which real estate lies, or personally generally may be at the time being, shall admit any deed or contract respecting it to record as to any person whose name is signed thereto, upon a certificate of his acknowledgment before a Justice, a commissioner in chancery, or notary public within the United States, written on or annexed to it, to the following effect:

Acknowledgment—General Form.

State of —, county of —, ss.
I, J. P., a Justice of the peace (or notary public, or commissioner in chancery of the — court) of the county (or corporation) aforesaid, in the State (or Territory, or District) of —, do certify that A. B. (or A. B. and W. B., etc.) whose name (or names) is (or are) signed to the writing above (or hereto annexed), bearing date on the — day of —, A. D. —, has (or have) acknowledged the same before me in this county (or corporation) aforesaid.

Given under my hand this — day of —, A. D. —, (Signature and title of officer.)

Or upon a certificate of acknowledgment of such person, before any commissioner appointed by the governor, within the United States, so written or annexed, to the following effect:

State of —, county of —, ss.
I, C. R., a commissioner appointed by the governor of the State of Virginia for the said State (or Territory, or District) of —, certify that A. B. (or A. B. and W. B.), whose name (or names) is (or are) signed to the writing above (or hereto annexed), bearing date on the — day of —, A. D. —, has (or have) acknowledged the same before me in any State (or Territory, or District) aforesaid.

Given under my hand this — day of —, A. D. —, (Signature and title of officer.)

Or upon a certificate of the clerk of any county or Territory, General Statutes, §-See Code, ch. 122. In Code, ch. 122, § 2929.

corporation court in this State, or his deputy, or the clerk of any court out of this State and within the United States, that the said writing was acknowledged by such person, or proved as to him by two witnesses before such clerk, or before the court of which he is clerk; or upon a certificate under the official seal of any minister plenipotentiary, chargé d'affaires, consul-general, consul, vice-consul, or commercial agent, appointed by the government of the United States to any foreign country, or of the proper officer of any court of such country, or of the mayor or other chief magistrate of any city, town, or corporation therein, that the said writing was acknowledged by such person, or proved as to him by two witnesses, before any person having such appointment, or before such court, mayor, or chief magistrate.

Admission to record of writing from husband and wife; effect on right of wife.

When a husband and his wife have signed a writing, purporting or contracting to convey any estate, real or personal, or any writing authorizing another to convey, or contract to convey, any such estate, such writing may be admitted to record as to each of them, according to the provisions above, and when it shall have been so admitted to record as to the husband as well as the wife, or if it be a writing executed under a power of attorney, when such writing, as well as such power of attorney, shall have been so admitted to record, it shall operate to convey from the wife her right of dower in the real estate embraced therein, and pass from her and her representatives all right, title, and interest of every nature which, at the date of such writing, she may have in any estate conveyed or embraced therein, as effectually as if she were, at the date, an unmarried woman. Such writing shall not operate any further upon the wife or her representatives by means of any covenant or warranty contained therein which is not made with reference to her separate estate as a source of credit, or which, if it relate to her said right of dower or to any estate or interest conveyed other than her own, is not made with reference to her separate estate as a source of credit.

Conveyance by married woman of her separate estate; how signed; when and where admitted to record.

Nothing contained in the preceding section shall be so construed as to impair or affect any right or power a married woman has, by her sole act, to convey or transfer any estate real or personal which is her separate estate; and any writing, which is to be or may be recorded, signed by a married woman, though not signed by her husband, conveying or transferring any estate, real or personal, which is her separate estate as aforesaid, may be admitted to record as to her, in the same manner as if she were unmarried.

Or, if the wife be without the United States, she may appear before any minister plenipotentiary, chargé d'affaires, consul-general, consul, vice-consul, or commercial agent, appointed by the government of the United States to any foreign country, or before any court of such country, or the mayor or other chief magistrate of any city, town, or corporation therein, who shall examine her, and make such explanation as is above required where the wife is in the United States, and if then she make such acknowledgment as is so required, the person having such appointment, or such mayor or chief magistrate, or the proper officer of such court, shall give a certificate, under his official seal, of the said examination, explanation, and declaration, to the effect required where the wife is within the United States, and upon or annexed to such writing in like manner.

WASHINGTON.

A married woman shall not be bound by any deed affecting her real estate or releasing dower, unless she is joined in the conveyance by her husband, and shall, upon examination by the officer taking the acknowledgment, separate and apart from her husband, acknowledge that she executed the deed of her own free will, and without fear of or coercion by her husband. The officer must certify that he has made known to her the contents of the deed.

Acknowledgments of deeds and mortgages may be taken by a judge of the supreme court, judge of the superior court, justice of the peace, county auditor, or his deputy, a clerk of the superior or supreme court, or his deputy, or a notary public.

Acknowledgment—Husband and Wife.
State of —, county of —, ss.

On this — day of —, A. D. —, before me (name and title of officer), personally appeared A. B. and W. E., his wife, personally known to me to be the identical persons described in, and who executed the foregoing conveyance, and I having first made known to them the contents thereof, they did thereupon severally acknowledge before me that they executed the same as their voluntary act and deed, for the uses and purposes therein expressed.

And the said W. E., wife of the said A. B., being by me privately examined, separate and apart from her said husband, did further acknowledge that she executed the same voluntarily, of her own free will, and without the fear of or coercion from her husband.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal the day and year first above mentioned.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Deeds in this State may be executed and so seal, must be acknowledged, unless proved by two witnesses.

Any deed, mortgage, deed of trust, power of attorney, or contract in writing made in respect to real estate or goods and chattels, including leases for more than five years, shall be admitted to record as to any person whose name is signed thereto, upon a certificate of his acknowledgment before a justice, notary public, recorder, prothonotary, clerk of any court within the United States, or commissioner appointed within the same by the governor of this State, written on or annexed to the same; or proved by two witnesses as to him before the proper clerk of the county court or before the proper officer in foreign countries.

If executed out of the United States, the certificate must be under the official seal of a minister plenipotentiary, chargé d'affaires, consul-general, consul, vice-consul, or commercial agent, appointed by the government of the United States to any foreign country, or of the proper officer of any court of such county, or of the mayor or other chief magistrate of any city, town or corporation therein.

Acknowledgment—Single Persons.

No form is prescribed by law for proving the execution of a conveyance, etc., by witness.

The two following forms for certificates of acknowledgment are prescribed by the statute. The officer is not thereby required to certify that the grantors are personally known to him. The question of identity as to the grantors who appear before him is left to the officer certifying the acknowledgment. The wife must in all cases acknowledge the deed before the officer in person. Deeds, etc., can only be proved by witnesses, before the proper recording officer of the county where they are admitted to record; or when executed out of the United States, before a minister plenipotentiary, or other officer above mentioned, having authority to take acknowledgments in foreign countries.

WISCONSIN.

Conveyances, etc., executed within this State, of lands or any interest in lands therein, must be executed in the presence of two witnesses, who shall subscribe their name to the same as such, and the persons executing must acknowledge the execution before any judge or court commissioner, clerk of a circuit court, county clerk, notary public, or justice of the peace; and the officer taking the acknowledgment must indorse a certificate of the acknowledgment, and the true date of making it, under his hand.

Deeds conveying land, or any interest in land situated in this State, if executed in any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, may be executed according to the laws of such place, and the acknowledgment may be before any judge of a court of record, notary public, justice of the peace, master in chancery, or other officer there authorized by law to take the acknowledgment of deeds therein, or before a commissioner appointed by the governor of this State for such purpose, and if executed within the jurisdiction of any military post outside of the State then it may be acknowledged before the commanding officer. But in all such cases, except the acknowledgment be made before a commissioner appointed by the governor, or a notary public (his seal of office affixed), there must be attached to the deed a certificate of the clerk, or the commandant of a military post, or other proper certifying officer of a court of records of the county or district within which such acknowledgment was taken, under the seal of his office, that the person whose name is subscribed to the certificate of acknowledgment, ch. 73, § 3, 4. 2-Code, ch. 73, § 3, 5. 3-See General Statutes.

therein represented to be, that he believes the signature of such person subscribed thereto to be genuine, and that the deed is executed and acknowledged according to the laws of such State, Territory, or District. If such deed be executed in any foreign country, it may be executed according to its laws, and acknowledged before any notary public, with his seal annexed, or other officer authorized by law there to take such acknowlgments, or any minister extraordinary or resident chargé d'affaires, commissioner, or consul of the United States, appointed to reside therein, and certified by him.
A married woman's conveyance, whether by her sole deed or by her joining with her husband to convey her estate or release her dower, must be executed and acknowledged as if she were sole. She may bar her dower, if eighteen years of age, by simply joining in her husband's conveyance; and she may, by letter of attorney, executed in like manner, appoint an attorney, who may be her husband, to sell or convey her estate, or bar her dower in land, and his deed as her attorney shall be effectual.

Deeds of lands within this State may be executed by corporations created under the laws of the State, and shall be signed by the president, or other authorized officer of the corporation, and sealed with the seal of the corporation, and countersigned by the secretary or clerk thereof; and the person signing such deed may acknowledge execution thereof before any officer authorized by law to take acknowledgments. The common practice is for the officers signing the deed to acknowledge the same, and make oath that they are such officers, that the seal is the seal of the corporation, that they have signed and acknowledged such deed, and affixed the seal by order of the board of directors, trustees, or other managing board of the corporation. New York forms are followed, which see.

No separate examination of wife is necessary.
The notary or justice may acknowledge in the form prescribed by the law of the State where the acknowl-

No statutory provision for proof by subscribing witness out of this State. It is made by a proceeding in court on returner to refusing grantor, if to be found, etc.

WYOMING.

If any deed or mortgage shall be executed in any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, the same may be executed according to the laws of such State, Territory, or District, by any officer authorized by the laws of such State, Territory, or District to take the acknowledgment of deeds or mortgages therein, or before any commissioner appointed by the governor of this State for that purpose. In the case where deeds and mortgages are executed and acknowledged outside of this State, and the officer before whom the acknowledgment is taken has no seal, such deed or mortgage shall have attached thereto a certificate of the clerk or other proper certifying officer of a court of record of the county or district within which such acknowledgment was taken, under the seal of his office, that the person whose name is subscribed to the certificate of acknowledgment or proof of the execution of such conveyance by her makes her the same as if she were sole.

ACQUIESCENCE. See ACTS; AGENCY; CON-TRACTS; ELECTION.

ACQUIESCENCE is a quiet consent or silent submission with apparent content: It is distinguished from avowed or express consent on the one hand, and opposition or open disconsent on the other. It is a silent appearance of consent. A failure to make any objection.

Acquiescence in the acts of an agent, or one who has assumed that character, will be equivalent to an express authority for those acts. It is a ratification, and like it relieves the person who has acted, of all responsibility, for it is now made the act of him who has acquiesced in it. Where a person is bound to choose between a paramount right and a testamentary disposition, his acquiescence in a state of things which indicates a choice, when he was aware of his rights, will, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be evidence of such choice.

Acts of acquiescence which will constitute an implied choice or election are to be decided by the circumstances of each case, rather than by any general principle or test.

AN ACT is something done, and for which the person doing is responsible. Something done by an individual as a private person or as an officer. Something done by a body of persons, as, an association, a corporation, legislature, council, or a court. It includes not merely physical acts, but also decrees, orders, judgments, awards, edicts, laws, resolutions,
and determinations.

Acts indicate the intention; the act does not make a person guilty unless the intention be guilty also. This, however, applies only in criminal cases, in civil matters it is otherwise.

Acts of God wrong no one, in other words,
no one is responsible for inevitable accidents.
See ACCIDENT.

Agents. The act of the agent within the scope of his authority in the act of his principal; but beyond such authority the agent alone is responsible, unless the act be ratified by such principal. See AGENCY.

Anticipation. The doing or taking of a thing before its proper time will not vitiate
the act or discharge the obligation if no loss or damage occur, and the act be in good faith.

Authority. To act for another, there must be a lawful delegation of power; to act for one's self, one must be under no legal disability. This authority may be coupled with an interest or not; it may be express or implied, general or special, limited or unlimited. See AGENCY.

Begun. An act already begun, whose completion depends upon the will of the parties, may be recalled; but if it depends upon the consent of a third person, or on a contingency, it cannot be recalled.

Children. An infant is protected against his contracts, but not against his frauds or other torts.<sup>1</sup> With regard to the responsibility of infants for crimes, the rule is that no infant within the age of seven years can be guilty of felony or be punished for any capital or less offence, for within that age an infant is, by presumption of law, id est incapax (incapable of mischief or crime), and cannot be endowed with any discretion; and against this presumption no averment can be received. This legal incapacity, however, ceases when the infant attains the age of fourteen years, after which period his act becomes subject to the same rule of construction as that of any other person. Between the ages of seven and fourteen years an infant is deemed prima facie (without proof to the contrary) to be id est incapax; but in this case the maxim "malice supplies the want of mature years" applies.<sup>1</sup> See INFANTS.

Coercion. Direct or positive coercion takes place when a man is by physical force compelled to do an act contrary to his will. Implied coercion exists where a person is legally under subjection to another, and is induced in consequence of such subjection to do an act contrary to his will.

As will be necessary to the commission of a crime, or the making of a contract, a person coerced into either has no will on the subject, and is not responsible.<sup>1</sup> The command of a superior to an inferior, of a parent to a child, of a master to his servant, or a principal to his agent,<sup>2</sup> may amount to coercion. So of a man who falls into the hands of the enemies of his country, and they compel him, through fear of death, to fight against it. See CRIMINAL LAW.

Compulsion is forcible inducement to the commission of an act.

Acts done under compulsion are not, in general, binding upon a party; but when a man is compelled by lawful authority to do that which he ought to do, that compulsion does not affect the validity of the act; as, for example, when a court of competent jurisdiction compels a party to execute a deed, under the pain of attachment for contempt, the grantor cannot object to it on the ground of compulsion.

But if the court compelled a party to do an act forbidden by law, or had not jurisdiction over the parties, or the subject-matter, the act done by such compulsion would be void.

Constraint. It is a general rule that when one is compelled to enter into a contract, or to perform any contract, there is no effectual consent, though ostensibly there is a form of it. In such a case the act or contract will be voidable or of no effect. But the constraint is thus annul or vitiate the act or contract must be "such as would shake a man of firmness and resolution."<sup>1</sup>

Corporations and bodies politic. The acts of a corporation or body politic are to be treated as the acts of any other persons.

Criminal acts. See CRIMINAL LAW.

Diligence is the doing things in the proper time.<sup>2</sup> There are three degrees of diligence:
1. Ordinary diligence is that degree of diligence which men of ordinary prudence exercise in respect to their own concerns.
2. Great or extraordinary diligence is that which very prudent persons take of their own concerns.
3. Slight diligence is that degree of diligence which men, habitually careless, or of little prudence, generally exercise in the management of their own business.

In the execution of every contract, trust, or undertaking some one of these degrees of diligence is applicable.

Duress by imprisonment exists where a person actually loses his liberty. If one be illegally deprived of his liberty until he sign and seal a bond or the like, he may allege this duress, and avoid the bond.<sup>3</sup> But if a man be legally imprisoned, and, either to procure his discharge, or, at any other fair account, seal a bond or deed, this is not by duress of imprisonment, and he is not at liberty to avoid it.<sup>4</sup> Where the proceedings at law are a mere pretext, the instrument may be avoided.<sup>5</sup>

Duress by threats (which is either for fear of loss of life, or else for fear of mayhem, or of loss of limb) must be upon a sufficient reason.<sup>6</sup> In this case a man may avoid his own act. A man may avoid his own act by reason of menaces for fear of—1. Loss of life; 2. Loss of member; 3. Mayhem; 4. Imprisonment.<sup>7</sup> Restraint of goods under circumstances of hardship will avoid a contract.<sup>8</sup> In case of duress the act is considered involuntary.<sup>9</sup>

The violence and threats must be such as are calculated to operate on a person of ordinary firmness, and inspire a just fear of great injury to person, reputation, or fortune. The age,<sup>10</sup>

sex, state of health, temper, and disposition of the party, and other circumstances calculated to give greater or less effect to the violence or threats, must be taken into consideration. Violence and threats are cause of nullity, not only where they are exercised on the contracting party, but when the wife, the husband, the descendants or ascendants of the party are the object of them. If the violence used be only a legal restraint, or the threat only of doing that which the party using them had a right to do, they will not invalidate the contract. A just and legal imprisonment, or threats of any measure authorised by law, and the circumstances of the case, are of this description. But more forms of law to cover coercive proceedings for an unjust and illegal cause, if used or threatened in order to procure the assent to a contract, will invalidate it; and arrest, without cause of action, or a demand of bail in an unreasonable sum, or threat of such proceeding, or this rule invalidate a contract made under their pressure.

The above rules all relate to cases where there may be some other motive beside the violence or threats for making the contract. When, however, there is no other cause for making the contract, any threats, even of slight injury, will invalidate it.

Fraud annuls all acts, obligations, and contracts which it enters, and the law relieves the party defrauded. If both parties act fraudulently, neither can take advantage of the fraud of the other. If one acts fraudulently, he cannot set his own fraud aside for his own benefit. See FRAUD.

Idiots, lunatics, and non compos mentis are in general absolved from all responsibility for their civil and criminal acts. They have no will, hence the exception. There are exceptions, however, to this rule. See MEDICAL LAW.

Judicial acts are those which belong to a judge and his jurisdiction, and over which he alone can exercise the functions of his office, and for which he is answerable to no other jurisdiction or power. But that which belongs neither to him nor to his jurisdiction he cannot lawfully take cognisance of; if he does, his acts are absolutely void. A judicial act before one not a judge is void; as to a ministerial act, from whomsoever it proceeds, let it be valid.

Ministerial acts are those which are performed under the authority of a superior, as opposed to judicial; thus, the sheriff or constable is bound to obey the judicial commands of the court.

When an officer acts in both a judicial and ministerial capacity, he may be compelled to perform ministerial acts in a particular way;

but when he acts in a judicial capacity he can only be required to proceed, the manner of so doing is left entirely to his judgment.

Misconduct. The wrongful riding of the horse of another, without his leave or license, and thereby causing its death or injury, is an act for which the party is responsible in damages. The unlawful act or behavior of a person intrusted with the administration of justice, by which the rights of the parties and the justice of the case may have been affected, will impair and render void the proceeding affected by it. The unjust performance of some act which a party had no right, or which he contracted not, to do, will create no obligation for recompense therefor, but will render the party performing the act liable for the damages incurred.

Necessity is that which must be, and cannot be otherwise. It is irresistible power, compulsive force, physical or moral.

Where a person's actions are determined by causes beyond his control, he acts from necessity, and is not a free agent. Whatever is done through necessity, is done without any intention; and as the act is without will, and is compulsory, the agent is not legally responsible. "Necessity has no law," it is itself a law which cannot be avoided nor infringed. Notwithstanding this, no person can plead necessity in excuse for crime.

Negligence is the want of due diligence, a lack of care, an omission to do. It consists of the following degrees: 1. Ordinary negligence is the want of ordinary diligence. 2. Slight negligence is the want of great diligence. 3. Gross negligence is the want of slight diligence.

In general, where a party has caused an injury or loss to another by his negligence he is responsible for all the consequences. A person who, during a dark night, drives his carriage on the wrong side of the road, by which he commits an injury upon another, is responsible for the consequences of his negligence. See BAILMENTS.

Non-performance is the neglect or failure to perform that which by one's act or contract, or by the requirements of the law, it becomes his duty to do.

Human action is exactly conformable to the laws which require us to obey them; their non-performance involves us in the natural consequences which follow. The neglect to comply with the terms of our contract makes us responsible for the breach.

Where a legislative act requires a person to do a thing, its non-performance will subject the party to punishment.

or to be performed, official, public, or private, to the public or an individual or individuals, corporations, companies, associations, etc., by words, writing, or printing. See ADVERTISEMENT; NOTICE.

Obedience is the compliance with a command, prohibition, or known law and rule of duty prescribed. To constitute obedience, the act or forbearance to act must be in submission to authority; the command must be known to the person, and his compliance must be in consequence of it.

A child, an apprentice, a pupil, a mariner, and a soldier, respectively owe obedience to the lawful command of the parent, the master, the teacher, commander or captain of the ship, and the military officer having command, and in case of disobedience, submission may be enforced by correction.

Officers who obey the command of their superiors having jurisdiction of the subject matter are not liable for their acts. A sheriff or constable may, therefore, justify a trespass under an execution, where the court has jurisdiction, although such execution was irregularly issued.

Officers acting in the scope of their jurisdiction and authority are justified in all their acts; exceeding this they become liable as a private individual.

Omission is a neglect or failure to do something which a person has power to do, or which duty required to be done, or which the law requires.

When a public law enjoins duties upon certain officers, and they neglect to perform them, they may be indicted for the omission. The omission by private individuals may be productive of loss or injury.

Omission may be innocent when no duty demands performance, and criminal when the duty is neglected.

Overt acts are open acts as distinguished from secret design or intention not carried into effect.

The mere contemplation or intention to commit a crime, although a moral sin, is not an act amenable to the law. The mere speculative wantonness of a licentious or mischievous imagination, however dangerous or even sanguinary in its object, can in no case amount to a crime; but the instant any overt act is manifested the offender becomes amenable to the law. See CRIMINAL LAW.

Fidelity is the violation of faith in agency, office, allegiance, conjugal engagements, and transactions in the highest official circles. It is the act of one who has engaged his faith to do a thing and does not do it, but does the contrary.

Performance is the act of doing something previously contemplated or stipulated for the execution or completion of a thing. It is the act by which one is exonerated from the obligation of his contract or undertaking, previously made or entered into.

9-Weitz, § 24. In-Chief Pr. 75; Hammond N. P. 43.

Personal representatives, while acting in such capacity and within the scope of their authority, are liable only as such. Where they exceed that authority they become personally and individually responsible for their acts.

Persuasion is the persuading or the influencing the mind with arguments or reasons offered, or by anything that moves the mind or passions, or inclines the will to a determination.

While the persuasion is confined within those limits which leave the mind free it may be used to influence another. But if such persuasion so far operates on the mind of the person influenced that he will be deprived of a perfectly free will, it will vitiate his act.

Public acts. See STATUTE LAW. Publication is the publishing or offering to public notice, notification to the people at large, either by words, writing, or printing. The act by which a thing is made public.

To become effectual, awards, wills, laws, etc., must be published, i. e., made known. In this manner, also, public and judicial sales are announced, the service of legal process made, and many other acts proclaimed.

Publicity is the state of being public, open to the knowledge of the community, performance or transaction of business in the view of all persons who choose to be present.

Courts must be open to the public; there can be no secret tribunal, except the grand jury, which acts in the interest of the public, and whose functions are merely for investigation, and not trial.

The acts of the legislature must be made public before they are of effect. They are, in general, made public either by their being placed upon a record, provided for that purpose, and at all times open to public inspection, or by being made public through the medium of newspapers, or by distribution to the various officers by law entitled to them.

Ratification is the giving sanction and validity to something done by another. An agreement to adopt an act performed by another for us.

As a general rule, a person may elect whether he will adopt an unauthorized act or not. But having once ratified the act, upon a full knowledge of all the material circumstances, the ratification cannot be revoked or recalled, and he becomes bound as if he had originally authorized the act. See AGENCY; CONTRACTS.

Reasonable acts are those governed by and under the influence of reason. They are such as the law requires.

When an act is unnecessary, a party cannot be required to perform it as a reasonable act; and a court will neither enforce its performance nor give a remedy for its non-performance.

Refusal is the denial of anything demanded, solicited, or offered for acceptance; failure to perform a duty or agreement. In some cases a neglect to perform a duty which a party is required by law, or his agreement, to do, will amount to a refusal.

Refusal is also the right of taking in preference to others: the choice of taking or refusing.
Option. Pre-emption. Thus a person has the refusal of a horse or a house, or the refusal of a place of business or an employment.

Servants are those persons who engage,
hire, or let their services to another, to be employed at any work or occupation whatever, for the benefit of their employer, and for compensation, subject to the conditions of their employment.

A master is responsible for the tortuous acts of his servant, which were done in his service.
The responsibility of the master grows out of,
and begins and ends with, his control of the servant. On this ground rests the well-established distinction between the negligence of the servant and his wilful and malicious trespass;
the act in either case being done in the course of his employ. For the former the master must answer; for the latter he is not held liable, unless the trespass is proved to have been authorized or ratified by him.<sup>1</sup> The master is responsible for what is done by one who is his servant in fact, for the reason that he has such servant under his constant control, and may direct him from time to time as he sees fit; and therefore the acts of the servant are the acts of the master, because the servant is at all times only an instrument; and one is not liable for a person who is servant only by construction, excepting so far as this essential element of control and direction exists between them. When a master gives general directions to his servant, trusting to his discretion, the master may be liable for his servant's misuse of his discretion; but if he gives specific directions, and the servant transcends them, the master is not liable.<sup>2</sup> Where the negligent party exercises a distinct and independent calling, his employer is not liable,<sup>3</sup> and, if the negligence be committed in the performance of a piece of work undertaken in consequence of a special contract, in such case the contractor is solely responsible.<sup>4</sup>

Skill is the familiar knowledge of any occupation, art, or science, with readiness and dexterity in its execution, performance, or application to practical purposes.
Every person who purports to have skill in a business, and undertakes for hire to perform it, is bound to do it with ordinary skill, and is responsible civilly in damages for want of it.<sup>5</sup>
In some instances they will be responsible criminally.<sup>6</sup> See MEDICAL LAW.
The degree of skill and diligence required rises in proportion to the value of the article and delicacy of the operation.<sup>7</sup> See BAILMENTS.

Stultification is the state of being mentally incapacitated from performing an act. To allege or prove to be insane, for the purpose of avoiding some act or contract.

The rule laid down by the old authorities,<sup>1</sup> that no man should be allowed to stultify himself—that is, plead disability through mental unsoundness—was soon doubted as law,<sup>2</sup> and has been completely overturned,<sup>3</sup> still this defence is frequently interposed.

Time.
When an act is to be done within a certain period from a particular time, as, for example, within ten days, one day is to be taken inclusive and the other exclusive.<sup>4</sup>

Transfer is the act by which the owner of a thing delivers it to another person with the intention of passing his rights in it to the latter;
to make over, to pass, to convey, to sell, to give.

The title to land is conveyed by deed, the property in a bill of exchange is transferred by indorsement, stocks are transferred by assignment, or entering the same under the name of the purchaser in the proper book.

Uncertainty is the want of certainty; that which is unknown or vague.

When the act to be performed is so vague in its terms that it cannot be certainly understood, it is of no effect. The act must be certain in its essence, quality, and quantity, and that is certain which may be made certain.<sup>1</sup>

Certainty is required in contracts, wills, pleadings, judgments, and indeed in all the acts on which courts have to give judgment; and if they be so vague and uncertain as not to be understood, they are, in general, invalid.<sup>2</sup>
See CONTRACTS.

Vacation is the making void, or of no validity; annulling.

An entry which has been made upon a public record, through fraud or imposition, may, upon application, be vacated. A charter, a franchise, an office of trust, etc., may be vacated.

Void, Voidable. Void acts are those having no legal or binding force, such as are null, of no effect, not sufficient to bind parties or to convey or support a right. Voidable acts are those which may be annulled or made void, or may be adjudged invalid, void, or of no effect. They have force and effect in consequence of some inherent quality only, but may be legally annulled or avoided. A contract between an infant and adult is voidable, because it may be avoided or confirmed on the infant's coming of age.

ered the acts of her husband. For her crimes, however, she is liable as if she were a single woman. Where she commits a crime in the Writing is the forming of letters and characters upon paper, parchment, cloth, wood, stone, or other material, for the purpose of recording the ideas which the words or characters express. Printing is construed to mean writing.

Many contracts must be in writing, all deeds for the conveyance of real estate must be in writing. Records, bonds, bills of exchange, and many other obligations and undertakings, must be made in writing.

AN AFFIDAVIT is a statement or declaration reduced to writing and sworn or affirmed to before some officer who has authority to administer an oath. It differs from a deposition in this: that in the latter the opposite party has an opportunity to cross-examine the witness, whereas an affidavit is always taken ex parte.

A counter affidavit is an affidavit made in opposition to one already made. Its essential requisites are the same as an affidavit.

Amendments at common law, independent of any statutory provision on the subject, are, in all cases, in the discretion of the court, for the furtherance of justice. An amendment where there is something to amend by, may be made in a criminal, as in a civil case. But such amendment must be by leave of the court, and upon the terms prescribed.

An affidavit amended by order of the court must be re-sworn to, or it is no affidavit.

Amounts, Descriptions, etc. An affidavit should be positive as to parties; as to a claim, its nature, how it arose, upon what it is grounded, and the amount. If the amount is uncertain, still some amount must be stated.

The names of all the deponents should be mentioned. In general, an affidavit must describe the deponent sufficiently to show that he is entitled to offer it; for example, that he is a party, or agent or attorney of a party, to the proceeding; and this matter must be stated, not by way of recital, or as mere description, but as an allegation in the affidavit; and the affidavit should show that they were severally sworn.

The jurat is that part of an affidavit where the officer certifies that the same was sworn before him.

The jurat should state the date and place where it was sworn, as the venue sufficiently shows that. The jurat should be in special form where deponent is illiterate or blind; otherwise, the common form is sufficient. Where a deponent is a markman, the fact of the affidavit having been read over to him, and his understanding it, should be stated in the jurat.

The jurat must be signed by the officer with the addition of his official title. An affidavit should show on its face that it was made before some officer competent to take affidavits.

Seal. In the case of some officers the statutes conferring authority to take affidavits require also his seal to be affixed.

Whenever an officer has an official seal he should affix it.

Signature of affiant. The affidavit should be subscribed by the deponent or deponents. The absence of the party's signature does not prove that he was not sworn; for it is not necessary to constitute an affidavit, unless required by statute that the party making should sign it. But there must be an official authentication.

Surplusage in an affidavit, not inconsistent with the substantial averments required by the statute, will not vitiate it.

Title of the action. The affidavit must intelligibly refer to the cause in which it is made; in other words, it should show by its title who is plaintiff and defendant, and the court in which the action is pending. The strict rule of common law is, that it must contain the exact title of the action. When there is no proceeding pending, the affidavit must not be

Venus is the place where the affidavit is taken and must be stated—(thus, State of —, county, ss.) to show that it was taken within the officer's jurisdiction<sup>1</sup> and an omission of the venue from an affidavit is fatal. The venue is an essential part of every affidavit, and prima facie evidence of the place where it was taken.<sup>2</sup> If, by the venue, it appears that the affidavit was taken at a place beyond where the officer was authorized to act, it will not be received by the court.<sup>3</sup>

The title of an action is generally as follows:

State of —, ss. In the — Court.
— county, }
A. B., plaintiff, } Affidavit for (state what).
vs. }
C. D., defendant. }

Venus is substantially the same everywhere, though stated differently in different states and countries. Examples are as follows:

State of —, county, ss. (or act. or to-wit).
State of —, city, (or department, district, parish, town, township, or other place, where the officer resides and the affidavit is made).
Territory of —, city (or town) of —, ss.
Province of —, dominion of —, etc.
Kingdom of —, port (or port) of —, etc.
Empire of —, city of —, etc.

AFFIDAVIT FORMS.

The affiant or deponent is sufficiently described in an affidavit, thus:

That A. B. is (the agent or attorney — party (or one of the parties) to this proceeding. (or — ser).

The common form of jurat is either of the following forms:

Subscribed and sworn to before me this — day of —.

Sworn to and subscribed this — day of —.

Common forms of an Affidavit.

An affidavit to be solemn in law must be made before some competent court or officer, having authority to administer an oath; and this oath must be administered within the court or officer's jurisdiction. Thus, if it is administered in Allen county, by a court or officer of Brown county, it would be inoperative, the court or officer having no jurisdiction for this purpose in the latter county. The affidavit for general purposes would commence thus:

State of —, county, ss.

A. B., being duly sworn, says (or alleges) that, etc.

If the affidavit is to be used in a foreign country it should commence thus:

United States of America, State of, etc.

Another form:

State of —, county, ss. (act. or to-wit).

Be it remembered, that on this — day of —, etc.

Or commence thus:

On this — day of —, before me, the subscriber, one of the justices of the peace in and for said county, personally came (or appeared) A. B., of —, and being by me duly sworn (or being by me sworn according to law) says (or alleges, or deposes, or deposes and swears) that, etc.

If an affidavit is to be used in a civil or criminal action or suit, it should state the title of the action, thus:

State of —, ss. In the — court.

— county, }
A. B., plaintiff, } Affidavit (of —, for) —
vs. }
C. D., defendant. }

State of —, county of —, ss.

A. B., being duly sworn, says (or alleges) that, etc.

— How. Fr. 16; 20 Wend. 114; Fr. 493; 3 Mont. Ch. Fr. Edw. 239. 2-3 Iowa Fr. Cas. Cases, 28; see also 6 Conn. 294. Newl. Ch. 165; 21 Paig. Ch. 579. 8 Iowa, 310; 68 Ch. 27. 2 Cam. 536; 8 Ga. 321; 7 Port. E. M. 276; 21 276; 27 Port. La. An. 797; 20 Ohio 305.

It will be observed that a "statement of venue" is twice made in this form. The first relates to the court in which the action is pending, the second to the place where the affidavit is taken.

Conclusion of an Affidavit.

In order that the affidavit shall be effectual it must bear upon its face the evidence of its being duly made. This is done by the officers bearing witness to and affirming its having been so made, by his solemn declaration to that effect. This is called the jurat, to which his signature is absolutely necessary. An officer's official title should always accompany his signature.

General Form of Conclusion or Jurat.

Sworn (or affirmed) before me, this — day of —.

(Officer's signature and official title.)

(Officer's signature and title.)

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand (and affixed my official seal), this — day of —.

(Seal.) (Officer's signature and title.)

If an affiant is blind or illiterate it should be thus:

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this — day of —, A. D. —, the same having been in my presence (or by me) read to this affiant, he being blind (or illiterate), and understanding the same.

(Signature and official title.)

If an affiant is a foreigner it should be thus:

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this — day of —, A. D. —, I having first sworn I, R., an interpreter, to interpret truly the same to this deponent, who is a foreigner, not understanding the English language, and he having so interpreted the same to said deponent.

(Seal.) (Signature and official title.)

Affidavit—General Form.

If made in a legal proceeding, set out the caption or title of the pleading, which commences as follows: The name of the State and county in which the action is brought.

1. The name of the court. 2. The names of the parties, plaintiff and defendant.

State of —, county (city of —), ss.

A. B. (of —), being duly sworn, says (or alleges, or deposes and says):

AGENCY. See ASSIGNMENT; ATTORNEYS; CON-TRACTS; PARTNERSHIP.

AGENCY is a relation between two or more persons, by which one party, usually called the agent or attorney, is authorized to do certain acts for, or in relation to the rights of property of, the other, who is denominated the principal, constituent, or employer.<sup>1</sup> The business of the agency may concern either the property of the principal, of a third person, or of the principal and a third person, or of the principal and the agent, but must not relate solely to the business of the agent. A contract in relation to an illegal or immoral transaction cannot be the foundation of a legal agency.<sup>2</sup>

The agency must be antecedently given, or subsequently adopted; and in the latter case there must be an act of recognition, or an acquiescence in the act of the agent, from which a recognition may be fairly implied.<sup>3</sup> If, with full knowledge of what the agent has done, the principal ratify the act, the ratification will be equivalent to an original authority, according to the maxim, "subsequent ratification is equivalent to prior command."<sup>4</sup> An intention to ratify may be presumed from the silence of the principal, who has received a letter from the agent, informing him of what has been done on his account.<sup>5</sup>

The authority may be general when it extends to all acts connected with a particular business or employment; or special when it is confined to a single act.<sup>6</sup> If the powers are special, they form the limits of the authority; if general, they will be more liberally construed, according to the necessities of the occasion and the course of the transaction.

The creation of an agency, when express,
may be either by deed, in writing not by deed, or by a verbal delegation of authority.<sup>7</sup> When the agency is not express it may be inferred from the relation of the parties and the nature of the employment, without proof of any express appointment.<sup>8</sup> In most of the ordinary transactions of business the agency is either conferred verbally, or is implied from circumstances. But where the act is required to be done in the name of the principal by deed, the authority to the agent must also be by deed, unless the principal be present, and verbally or impliedly authorize the agent to fix his name to the deed.<sup>9</sup>

Adoption or Confirmation. An agency may be presumed from repeated acts of the agent, adopted and confirmed by the principal previously to the contract in which the question is raised,<sup>10</sup> so each agency may be confirmed and established by a subsequent ratification; where any one contracts as agent without naming a principal, his acts enure to the benefit of the party, although at the time uncertain and unknown, for whom it shall turn out that he intended to act, provided the party thus entitled to be principal ratify the contract. And, on the other hand, if the principal accept, receive, and hold the proceeds or beneficial results of such contract, he will be estopped from denying an original authority, or a ratification. And if a party does not disavow the acts of his agent as soon as he can after they come to his knowledge, he makes these acts his own. An adoption of the agency in part adopts as to the whole.

A principal discharges his agent from responsibility for deviation from his instructions when he accepts the benefit of his act. He may reject the transaction altogether; and if he advanced money on goods which his agent purchased in violation of his authority he is not bound to return the goods to the agent when he repudiates the sale, but has a lien on them, and may hold them as the property of the agent. But he must reject the transaction at once, and decisively, as soon as fully acquainted with it. For, if he delays in doing this, that he may have his chance of making a profit, or if he perform acts of ownership over the property, he accepts it and confirms the doings of the agent.

An agent is one who undertakes to transact some business, or manage some affair, for another, by the authority and on the account of the latter, and to render an account of it.

The term agent is one of a very wide application, and includes a great many classes of persons to which distinctive appellations are given, as factors, brokers, attorneys, cashiers of banks, auctioneers, clerks, supercargoes, consignees, ships' husbands, masters of ships, and the like.

A general agent is one authorized to transact all his principal's business, or all his business of some particular kind, or at some particular place.

The terms "agent" and "attorney" are often used synonymously. Thus, a letter or power of attorney is constantly spoken of as the formal instrument by which an agency is created. -Paley Ag. (Dunlap's ed.) 1 n. b. But it is not always easy to find a precise rule which determines with certainty between these two kinds of agency. A manufacturing corporation may authorize A to purchase all their wares, and he is then their general agent for this special purpose, or to purchase all the cotton they may have occasion to buy in New Orleans,

A special agent is one authorized to do one or more special things, in pursuance of particular instructions, or within restrictions necessarily implied from the act to be done.

The importance of the distinction lies in the rule, that if a special agent exceeds his authority, the principal is not bound; but if a general agent exceeds his authority the principal is bound, provided the agent acted within the ordinary and usual scope of the business he was authorized to transact, and the party dealing with the agent did not know that he exceeded his authority. Any specific authority must be strictly pursued; as, for example, one known to be the agent to settle claims, and with specific authority to this effect, cannot be supposed to have authority to commute them. The general rule is, as to the public, that the authority of a general agent may be regarded by them as measured by the usual extent of his employment.

APPOINTMENT. An agent, generally, may be appointed by parol, and so authorized to do anything which does not require him to execute a deed for his principal. He may be authorized by parol to make and sign contracts in writing, and may be authorized without writing to make even those contracts which are not binding upon his principal unless in writing signed by him. A parol ratification is equivalent to an original authority. An authority is presumed or raised by implication of law, on the ground that the principal has justified the belief that he has given such authority, in cases where he has employed a person in his regular employment, as, where one sends goods to an auctioneer, or to a common repository room for sale, the bailee has an implied authority to sell. Such presumptions frequently arise in the case of a wife, or of a domestic servant, or of a son who has been permitted for a considerable time to transact a particular business for his father, as to sign bills, etc. It must be remembered, and then he may be called their general agent for this special purpose in that place. Or to purchase the cargoes that shall come from such a plantation, or shall arrive in such a ship or ships, or five hundred bales of cotton, and then he would be regarded as their particular agent for this particular transaction. 6-21 Ind. 288. 2-3 M. & W. 176; 7 Id. 427; 8 Id. 405; 1 Esp. 121; 2 Cr. & M. 221; 4 M. & W. 512; 5 Id. 629; 1 V. & J. 457; Amb. 493; 21 Penn. however, that an agent employed for a special purpose derives from this no general authority from his principal.<sup>1</sup>

Many persons who are disqualified from acting for themselves, such as infants, aliens, outlaws, and others, may yet act as agents in the execution of a naked authority.<sup>2</sup> Persons non compos mentis cannot be agents for others; nor can a person act as agent in a transaction wherein he has an adverse interest or employment.<sup>3</sup> And whenever the agent holds a fiduciary relation he cannot contract with the same general binding force with his principal as when such relation does not exist.<sup>4</sup>

Del credere Commission is one under which an agent, in consideration of an additional premium, engages to insure to his principal not only the solvency of the debtor but the punctual discharge of the debt, and he is liable, in the first instance, without any demand from the debtor.<sup>5</sup>

AUTHORITY is the lawful delegation of power by one person to another.

Express authority is that given explicitly, either in writing or verbally.

Implied authority is that which the conduct of person possessing the power warrants, and which the law presumes.

General authority is that which authorizes the agent to do everything connected with a particular business.<sup>6</sup>

Special authority is that which is confined to an individual transaction.<sup>7</sup>

Limited authority is that where the agent is bound by precise instructions.

Unlimited authority is that where the agent is left to pursue his own discretion.

Authority coupled with an interest is an authority given to an agent for a valuable consideration, or which forms a part of a security.

Naked authority is that where the principal delegates the power to the agent wholly for the benefit of the former.<sup>8</sup>

The right on the part of the agent to act is termed his authority or power. In some instances the authority or power must be exercised in the name of the principal, and the act done is for his benefit alone. In others, it may be executed in the name of the agent, and if the power is coupled with an interest on the part of the agent, it may be executed for his own benefit.<sup>9</sup>

Construction of. An authority is to be so construed as to include, not only all the necessary and proper means of executing it with effect, but also all the various means which are justified or allowed by the usages of trade.<sup>10</sup>

Delegation of. All persons, not under legal disability, may delegate to another authority to act for them in a matter which is lawful, and otherwise capable of being delegated.<sup>11</sup> But when a bare power or authority has been given to another, the latter cannot, in general, delegate that authority, or any part of it, to a third person, for the obvious reason, that the principal has relied upon the intelligence, skill, and ability of his agent, and cannot have the same confidence in a stranger.<sup>12</sup> A power to delegate his authority may, however, be given to the agent by express terms of substitution<sup>13</sup> and sometimes such power is implied, as in the following cases: First. When, by the law, such power is indispensable in order to accomplish the end proposed, as when goods are directed to be sold at auction, and the law forbids such sales except by licensed auctioneers.<sup>14</sup> Second. When the employment of such substitute is in the ordinary course of trade, as where it is the custom of trade to employ a ship-broker, or other agent, for the purpose of procuring freight, and the like.<sup>15</sup> Third. When it is understood by the parties to be the mode in which the particular thing would or might be done.<sup>16</sup> Fourth. When the powers thus delegated are merely mechanical in their nature.<sup>17</sup>

An authority may be delegated by deed for any purpose whatever; for whenever an authority by parol would be sufficient, one by deed will be equally so. When the authority is to do something, which must be performed through the medium of a deed, then the authority must also be by deed, and executed with all the forms necessary to render the instrument perfect; unless, indeed, the principal be present, and verbally or impliedly authorize the agent to fix his name to the deed; as, if a man be authorized to convey a tract of land, the latter (or power) of attorney must be by deed.<sup>18</sup> But a written authority is not required to authorize an agent to sign an unsealed paper; or a contract in writing not under seal, when a statute makes it necessary that the contract, in order to bind the party, shall be in writing, un- or express restriction annexed thereto, it must be observed, otherwise the principal is discharged. Such authority does not bind the employer, unless it is strictly pursued; for it is the business of the party dealing with the agent to examine his authority; and, therefore, if there be any qualification less the statute positively requires that the authority shall also be in writing.

For most purposes the delegation may be in writing, not under seal, or verbally, or by the mere employment of an agent; or it may be implied from the conduct of the employer, in sanctioning the credit to a person acting in his name. When, however, the act is required to be done under seal, the delegation must also be under seal, unless the principal is present and verbally or impliedly authorizes the act.

Dissolution of. In general, an authority is revocable in its nature, unless it is given for a valuable consideration, is part of a security, or coupled with an interest. It may, in general, be revoked at any moment before the actual exercise of it; and a revocation may be express or implied.

The authority may be renounced by the agent before any part of it is executed, or when it is in part executed. If, by the express terms of the commission, the authority of the agent be limited to a certain period, it will manifestly cease as soon as that period has expired. The authority of the agent is, by the fact itself, positively determined by the completion of the purpose for which it was given.

Extent. The authority of an agent, unless the contrary clearly appears, is presumed to include all the necessary and usual means of executing it with effect. Where, however, the whole authority is conferred by a written instrument, its nature and extent must be ascertained from the instrument itself, and cannot be enlarged by parol evidence.

Generally, in private agencies, when an authority is given by the principal to two or more persons to do an act, and no several authority is given, all the agents must concur in doing it, in order to bind the principal, though one die or refuse. The words "jointly and severally," and "jointly or severally," have been construed as authorizing all to act jointly, or each one to act separately, but not as authorizing any portion of the number to do the act jointly. But where the authority is so worded that it is apparent the principal intended to give power to either of them, an execution by a part will be valid. And generally, in commercial transactions, each one of several agents possesses the whole power. For example, on a consignment of goods for sale to two factors (whether they are partners or not) each of them is understood to possess the whole power over the goods for the purposes of the consignment. In public agencies an authority executed by a majority will be sufficient.

Where a principal has held one out as his general agent, or authorized parties to so regard him by continued acquiescence and confirmation, the principal cannot limit or qualify his own liability by instructions, or limitations given by him to his agent, and not made known in any way to parties acting with such agent. And where an agent is employed to transact some specific business, and only that, yet he binds his principal by such subordinate acts as are necessary to, or are usually and properly done in connection with the principal act, or to carry the same into effect. And he has a reasonable discretion as to the execution of his authority. But an agent is not at liberty to exercise this discretion in the choice of a mode of performing the duty imposed on him, if some other mode, and that only, is fixed either by usage or by the orders of his principal, if he is a general agent; or if he is a particular agent, by the principal's orders alone; for then he must adopt the very mode and no other. An authority to sell does not carry with it authority to sell on credit, unless such be the usage of the trade; but if there be such usage, then the agent may sell on credit, unless specially instructed and required to sell only for cash. And if he sells for credit, having no authority to do so, he becomes personally responsible to his principal for the whole debt. So is he also if he blends his accounts of his principal with his own, or takes a note payable to himself. Where the authority is oral and is known to the party dealing with the agent, usage may enlarge and affect the authority or contract; but usage has not this power where the whole authority is in writing, and this is known to the party dealing with the agent, for such instrument must be strictly followed. If an agent to whom goods are entrusted for a particular purpose, sell the same to a person, or in a manner not within the scope of his authority, the principal may disaffirm the sale and recover the goods of the vendee, if he has not justified the vendee in believing the authority of the agent.<sup>2</sup> If the principal sells goods by an agent, and the agent makes a material misrepresentation which he believes to be true, and his principal knows to be false, this is the falsehood of the principal, and avoids the sale.<sup>3</sup> The acts of an authorized agent are the acts of the principal.<sup>4</sup>

Exercise of. An agent who has bare power or authority, from another, to do an act, must execute it himself, and cannot delegate his authority to a sub-agent; for the confidence being personal, it cannot be assigned to a stranger.<sup>5</sup> But the principal may, in direct terms, authorize his agent to delegate the whole, or any portion of his authority to another; or the power to appoint a sub-agent may be implied, either from the terms of the original authority, from the ordinary custom of trade, or, from the fact that it is indispensable in order to accomplish the end.<sup>6</sup>

When the authority is special, it must, in general, be strictly pursued, or it will be void, unless the variance be merely circumstantial;<sup>7</sup> as, if it be to do an act upon condition, and the agent does it absolutely, it is void; and vice versa. If the person do less than the authority committed to him, the act is void; but if he does that which he is authorized, and more, it is good for that which is warranted, and void for the rest. Both of these rules, however, have many exceptions and limitations.<sup>8</sup> An authority given, by the act of the principal, to two or more persons, cannot be executed by one, though one die or refuse;<sup>9</sup> it being in such case construed strictly, and understood to be joint, and not several.<sup>10</sup> And an authority given to three, jointly and severally, is not, in general, well executed by two; but it must be done by one, or by all.<sup>11</sup> These rules apply to an authority of a private nature, saving in commercial transactions, which form an exception. Where, however, the authority is of a public nature, it may be executed by a majority.<sup>12</sup>

Where an agent is authorized to make a contract for his principal in writing, it must, in general, be personally signed by him.<sup>13</sup> It is a rule, that an act done under a power of attorney must be done in the name of the person who gives the power, and not merely in the attorney's name, though the latter be described as attorney in the instrument;<sup>14</sup> but it matters not in what words it is done, if it sufficiently appear to be in the name of the principal.<sup>15</sup>

The strict rule of law in this respect applies, however, only to sealed instruments; and the rule is further modified, even in such cases where the seal is not essential to the validity of the instrument.<sup>16</sup>

An authority must be exercised within the time limited.<sup>17</sup>

Instructions or orders given by a principal to his agent in relation to the business of the agency must be carefully complied with.

An agent with instructions is bound to regard them in every point; nor can he depart from them without making himself responsible for the consequences,<sup>18</sup> unless he is justified by matter of necessity.<sup>19</sup> If he has no instructions, or indistinct or partial instructions, his duty will depend upon the intention and understanding of the parties, which may be gathered from the circumstances of the case, and especially from the general custom and usage in relation to that kind of business.<sup>20</sup> But he cannot defend himself by showing a conformity to usage, if he has disobeyed positive instructions. If loss issue from his disregard to his instructions, he must sustain it; if profit, he cannot retain it, but it belongs to his principal.<sup>21</sup>

Justification of. The authority given must have been possessed by the person who delegates it, or it will be void; and it must be of a thing lawful, and be otherwise capable of being delegated, or it will not justify the person to whom it is given.<sup>22</sup> This power is the authority by which one person (called the donor) enables another (called the donee) to do some act for him. It is derivative or inherent.

Powers—Derivative are those received from another. When coupled with an interest it is a right or authority to do some act, together with an interest in the matter on which the power is to be exercised.<sup>23</sup> This kind of a power survives the person creating it, and in case of its excess in execution, renders the act valid so far as the authority extends, leaving it void as to the remainder only. Naked powers are those rights of authority disconnected from any interest of the donee in the subject-matter.<sup>24</sup> Inherent or natural powers are those enjoyed by their possessors by natural right, not having been received from another. Such are the powers of a people to establish a form of government; of a father to control his children. The exercise of some of these powers are regulated and restricted by law. Mediate (or subordinate) powers are those incident to primary powers given by a principal to his agent. Thus, an agent authorized to perform certain acts has power to employ all the incidents to his authority to accomplish the thing intended. The general authority given to collect, receive, and pay debts due by or to his principal is a primary power. In order to accomplish this it is frequently necessary to settle accounts, adjust disputed claims, resist unjust demands, and defend suits. These subordinate powers are called mediate powers.<sup>1</sup>

Ratification, when express, is that made in open and express terms. Implied ratification is that which the law presumes from the acts of the principal; thus, if A. buys goods for B., and the latter knowing of the purchase receives them and applies them to his own use, the law will presume B.'s assent to the purchase. By ratifying a contract a person adopts the agency altogether, as well what is detrimental as that which is beneficial.<sup>2</sup>

The principal has, as a general rule, the right to elect whether he will adopt an unauthorized act, or not; having once ratified the act, upon a full knowledge of all the material circumstances, the ratification cannot be revoked or recalled, and the principal becomes bound as if he had originally authorized the act.<sup>3</sup> The ratification of a lawful contract has a retrospective effect, and binds the principal from its date, and not only from the time of the ratification, for the ratification is equivalent to an original authority.<sup>4</sup> Such ratification will, in general, relieve the agent from all responsibility, when he would have otherwise been liable.<sup>5</sup> See CONTRACTS.

Recognition is the acknowledgment or avowal that something which has been done by one person in the name of another was done by authority of the latter. A recognition by the principal of the agency of another is, in the particular instance, evidence of the authority of the agent; and this recognition may be express or implied.<sup>6</sup>

Revocation is recalling or revoking an authority conferred, or the annulling or vacating of an instrument conferring a power previously made. The principal may, at any time, put an end to the relation between himself and his agent by withdrawing the authority, unless the authority is coupled with an interest, or given for a valuable consideration.<sup>7</sup> And this countermand may, in general, at the mere will of the principal, be effected at any time before the contract is completed; even though there be an express agreement not to revoke. But when the authority or power is coupled with an interest, or when it is given for a valuable consideration, or when it is a part of security, then, unless there is an express stipulation that it shall be revocable, it cannot be revoked.<sup>8</sup> Unless the power provides a specific mode of revocation (in which case it must be strictly followed) its authority may be revoked in any form the constituent or principal may adopt.<sup>9</sup> Where third parties have dealt with an agent clothed with general powers, whose acts have therefore bound his principal, and the principal revokes the authority he gave his agent, such principal will continue to be bound by the further acts of his agent, unless such third parties have knowledge of the revocation, or unless he does what he can to make the revocation so notorious and generally known to the world as the fact of the agency.<sup>10</sup> This is usually done by advertising.

Naked powers not coupled with an interest may always be revoked by the express act of the constituent or principal whenever he so elects, he being bound by all the acts of the agent until notice of the revocation; until such notice the agent is entitled to compensation and indemnity for all acts done and liabilities incurred. The act of revocation is merely provisional and contingent until notice is communicated to the agent.<sup>11</sup> Third persons who deal with the agent before notice of the revocation of his powers are not affected by it.<sup>12</sup> But strangers who have never dealt with the agent before the revocation of his powers, if the principal has given public notice of the revocation in such a manner as to render the fact generally known in the vicinity, will have no remedy against such principal.<sup>13</sup> Where, however, the power was conferred in writing, and the agent retains and exhibits it as the evidence of his authority, so that strangers are fairly justified in believing in its continuance, having no adequate means of knowledge of its revocation, the acts of the agent will bind the principal.<sup>14</sup> It is a question of fact whether, under all the circumstances, a party is justified in supposing the authority still continues.<sup>15</sup>

An agent's authority terminates by the bankruptcy of either the principal or the agent, though not necessarily by the bankruptcy of the later.<sup>7</sup> Where the agent has a lien it may be enforced in the name of the assignee.<sup>8</sup>

The authority of an agent may be revoked by death of either principal or agent.<sup>9</sup> In case of a naked authority the death of the principal terminates the authority of the agent by that event itself, and without notice either to the agent or those with whom he deals. Acts done in good faith in discharge of the agent's duty before knowledge of the death of his principal, and which ensures to the benefit of the principal's estate, are binding upon his personal representatives.<sup>10</sup> Where the agent has entered upon the business or incurred expenses he is entitled to compensation.<sup>11</sup> And if he has incurred liabilities he is entitled to indemnity.<sup>12</sup> Powers coupled with an interest which are not revocable by the act of the principal during his life, are, nevertheless, annulled by his death, so far as any act in his name is concerned.<sup>13</sup> Joint authority by two persons terminates by the death of one of them.<sup>14</sup>

A complete execution of the trust, or accomplishment of the business or undertaking, operates an extinguishment of authority.<sup>15</sup>

The agency may terminate by the expiration of the period which it was to exist, and to have effect; as, if an agency be created to endure a year, or until the happening of a contingency, it becomes extinct at the end of the year, or the happening of the contingency.<sup>16</sup>

The extinction or destruction of the subject-matter of the agency destroys with it the power to accomplish the result intended.<sup>17</sup>

The authority of the agent may be revoked by the incapacity of either principal or agent.

Insanity either of the principal or agent terminates the agency.<sup>18</sup> But third persons, ignorant of the fact of insanity, and whose contract with the agent is fair and just, will be protected.<sup>19</sup> An inquisition of lunacy is constructive notice to all;<sup>20</sup> and the inquisition forming the basis of the commission is allowed to antedate the finding of the incapacity, in which case it would probably throw the burden of proof on the other party. If the power confer an interest upon the agent which can be enforced in his name, insanity will not operate as a revocation.

Loss of the principal's interest operates as a revocation.<sup>21</sup>

The marriage of a feme sole terminates her power either as principal or agent,<sup>22</sup> though not necessarily so.<sup>23</sup>

When the authority has been partially executed by the agent, if it admit of severance, or of being revoked as to the part which is un-

executed, it may be revoked as to that part; but if it be not thus severable, and the agent by its execution in part will sustain damage, it cannot be revoked as to the unexecuted part, unless the agent be fully indemnified.<sup>24</sup> This revocation may be by a formal declaration publicly made known, or an informal writing, or by parol; or it may be implied from circumstances, as, if another person be appointed to do the same act.<sup>25</sup> It takes effect from the time it is made known, and not before, both as regards the agent and third persons.<sup>26</sup>

The determination may be by the renunciation of the agent either before or after a part of the authority is executed;<sup>27</sup> it should be observed, however, that if the renunciation be made after the authority has been partially executed, the agent, by renouncing it, becomes liable for the damages which may thereby be sustained by his principal,<sup>28</sup> or, by operation of law, in various ways.

Powers coupled with an interest are, in general, not revocable. Being transferred upon consideration, a power is no more revocable than any other contract.<sup>29</sup> Whenever the power confers an interest in the subject-matter only, and not in the results, and constitutes an essential part of a security upon the faith of which money or other thing has been advanced or liability incurred, it is not revocable even by the death of the principal, but may be thereafter executed, where it can be done without the use of the name of the principal.<sup>30</sup> The consignee of goods for sale who has incurred liability or made advances upon the faith of the consignment, acquires a power of sale which, to the extent of his interest, is not revocable or subject to the control of the consignor.<sup>31</sup> But if orders are given by the consignor contemporaneously with the consignment and advances, in regard to the time and mode of sale, and which are, either expressly or impliedly, assented to by the consignee, he is not at liberty to depart from them afterward. But if no instructions are given at the time of the consignment and advances the legal presumption is that the consignee has the ordinary right of factors to sell according to the usages of trade and the general duty of factors, in the exercise of a sound discretion, and reimburse the advances out of the proceeds, and that this right is not subject to the interference or control of the consignor.

A pledge of personal property to secure the liabilities of the pledgor, with an express power of sale, confers such an interest in the subject-matter that it will not be revoked by his death.<sup>1</sup> But a power to pledge and sell the property of a constituent, and from the avails to reimburse advances made or liabilities incurred by the appointee, is not so coupled with an interest as to be irrevocable.<sup>2</sup> The interest must exist in the subject-matter of the power, and not merely in the result of its exercise, to become irrevocable.<sup>3</sup> Hence, if one give a letter of credit agreeing to accept bills to a certain amount within a limited time, the letter is revoked by death, and bills drawn after the death and before knowledge thereof, reaching the drawer, cannot be enforced against the estate of such deceased party.<sup>4</sup> All contracts which are to be executed in the name of the constituent or principal by virtue of an agency, although forming an essential part of a security upon the faith of which advances have been made, are of necessity revoked by the death of the constituent. Even a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, although not revocable by the act of the party, is revoked by his death.

DUTIES AND LIABILITIES. The particular obligations of an agent vary in accordance to the nature, terms, and end of his employment.<sup>5</sup> He is bound to execute the orders of his principal, whenever, for a valuable consideration, he has undertaken to perform them.<sup>6</sup> When his authority is limited by instructions it is his duty to adhere faithfully to those instructions,<sup>7</sup> but cases of extreme necessity and unforeseen emergency constitute exceptions to this rule;<sup>8</sup> and where the agent is required to do an unlawful or an immoral act he may violate his instructions with impunity.<sup>9</sup> If he have no specific instructions, he must follow the accustomed course of the business.<sup>10</sup> When the transaction may, with equal advantage to the principal, be done in two or more different ways, the agent may, in general, do it in either, provided a particular mode has not been prescribed to him.<sup>11</sup> He is to exercise the skill employed by persons of common capacity similarly engaged, and the same degree of diligence that persons of ordinary prudence are accustomed to use about their own affairs.<sup>12</sup> It is his duty to keep his principal informed of his doings, and to give him reasonable notice of whatever may be important to his interests.<sup>13</sup> He is also bound to keep regular accounts of business and money transactions, and to render his accounts to his principal at all reasonable times, and whenever called on, without concealment or overcharge.<sup>14</sup>

The responsibility of an agent, whether for positive misconduct, or for deviation from instructions, is not measured by the extent of his commission or compensation, but by the loss or injury which he may cause his principal.<sup>15</sup> And, in general, a verdict against a principal for the act of his servant, is the measure of damages which the former may recover from the latter.<sup>16</sup> An agent is bound to great diligence and care for his principal; not the utmost possible, but all that a reasonable man, under the circumstances, would take of his own affairs.<sup>17</sup> And he is bound to possess and exert the skill and knowledge necessary for the proper performance of the duties which he undertakes.<sup>18</sup> If an agent, without necessity, has mingled the property of his principal with his own in such a way that he cannot render an account precisely discriminating between the two, the whole of what is so indistinguishable is held to belong to the principal;<sup>19</sup> for it was the duty of the agent to keep the property and accounts separate, and he must bear the responsibility and consequences for not doing so. If an agent employed for any special purpose discharges his duty and does all he was required to do, he is entitled to full compensation, although the principal declines or refuses to take advantage of the agent's act, or even adopt it.

As to their principals, the liabilities of agents arise from a violation of duties and obligations to them by exceeding their authority, by misconduct, or by any negligence, omission, or act, by the natural result or just consequence of which the principal sustains a loss.<sup>20</sup> And joint agents who have a common interest are liable for the misconduct and omissions of each other in violation of their duty, although the business has, in fact, been wholly transacted by one with the knowledge of the principal, and it has been privately agreed between themselves that neither shall be liable for the acts or losses of the other.<sup>21</sup>

The degree of neglect which will make the agent responsible for damages varies according to the nature of the business and the relation in which he stands to his principal. The rule of common law is, that where a person holds himself out as of a certain business, trade, and profession, and undertakes, whether gratuitously or otherwise, to perform an act which relates to

of neglect which will make the of damages varies according to the business and the relation of the agent to his principal. The rule of that where a person holds himself out as a certain business, trade, and undertakes, whether gratuitously or for hire, to perform an act which relates to the business of another, he is liable to that other as an agent, and his liability is measured by the extent of his compensation, or the value of the service he renders, and not by the value of the property or interest in the business of the principal.

his particular employment, an omission of the skill which belongs to his situation or profession is imputable to him as a fraud upon his employer.<sup>7</sup> But where his employment does not necessarily imply skill in the business he has undertaken, and he is to have no compensation for what he does, he will not be liable to an action if he act in good faith, and to the best of his ability.<sup>8</sup>

As to third parties. Generally, when a person having full authority is known to act merely for another, his acts and contracts will be deemed those of the principal only, and the agent will incur no personal responsibility.<sup>9</sup> But where an agent does an act without authority, or exceeds his authority, and the party to whom he acts is unknown to the other party, the agent will be personally responsible to the party with whom he deals.<sup>10</sup> If the agent, having full authority, contract in the name of a principal, and it happens that at the time of the contract, unknown to both parties, his authority was revoked by the death of the principal, the agent will not be personally responsible.<sup>11</sup>

An agent will be liable on a contract made with him when he expressly, or by implication, incurs a personal responsibility; as, if he make an express warranty of title, and the like; or if, though known to act as agent, he give or accept a draft in his own name;<sup>12</sup> and public as well as private agents may, by a personal engagement, render themselves personally liable.<sup>13</sup>
In general, although a person contract as agent, yet if there be no other responsible principal to whom resort can be had, he will be personally liable; as, if a man sign a note as "guardian of A. B.," an infant, in that case neither the infant nor his property will be liable, and the agent alone will be responsible.<sup>14</sup> The case of an agent of government, acting in that capacity for the public, is an exception to this rule, even though the terms of the contract be such as might, in a case of a private nature, involve him in a personal obligation; it not being presumed that a public agent meant to bind himself individually.<sup>15</sup> Masters of ships, though known to contract for the owners of the ships and not for themselves, are liable for the contracts they make for repairs, unless they negate their responsibility by the express terms of the contract.<sup>16</sup> As a general rule, the agent of a person resident in a foreign country is personally liable upon all contracts made by him for his employer, whether he describe himself in the contract as agent or not, this being the usage of trade, and it being presumed that the credit was given to him and not to his principal.<sup>17</sup> But this presumption may be rebutted by proof of a contrary agreement.<sup>18</sup>

An agent is not personally liable, unless he transcends his agency, or exceeds from its provisions; or unless he expressly declares his own liability, in which case he is liable, although he describes himself as agent; or unless he conceals his character as agent; or unless he so conducts as to render the principal inaccessible or irresponsible; or unless he acts in bad faith. If a sealed instrument is executed by an agent, and it contain covenants which expressly purport to be those of the principal, and the agent in executing it calls himself an agent, he is not liable on those covenants; but if they are not expressly the principal's covenants, the agent is liable on them.<sup>19</sup> If a person dealing with an agent knows his agency, his rights and obligations will be the same as if the agent disclosed it, unless the agent purposely represents himself as a principal and assumes the responsibility of one. And if the agent's act be open to two constructions, one of which binds him, and the other binds the principal, the law prefers the latter.<sup>20</sup> If a party dealing with an agent as agent, and knowing that the principal is bound, takes the agent's note, the principal is discharged.<sup>21</sup> If one describes himself as agent for some unnamed principal, he is of course liable if proved to be the real principal.<sup>22</sup> And one acting as agent is liable personally, if it be shown that he acts without authority.<sup>23</sup> An agent is not responsible to third parties for mere neglect or omission in discharge of his duty, for they must look to the principal.<sup>24</sup> An agent who exceeds his authority renders himself liable to the whole extent of the contract, although a part of it was within his authority.<sup>25</sup>

An agent is personally responsible where money has been paid to him for the use of his principal under such circumstances that the party paying it becomes entitled to recall it.
In such cases, so long as the money has not been paid over by the agent, nor his situation altered as by giving his principal fresh credit upon the faith of it, it may be recovered from the agent.' And if, in receiving the money, the agent was a wrong-doer, he will not be exempted from liability by payment to his principal.<sup>1</sup>

As to torts, there is a distinction between acts of misfeasance or positive wrongs, and nonfeasance or mere omissions of duty. In the former case, the agent is personally liable to third persons, although authorized by his principal,<sup>2</sup> while in the latter he is, in general, solely liable to his principal.<sup>3</sup>

RIGHTS AND PRIVILEGES.—As to their principal. An agent is ordinarily entitled to compensation for his services—commonly called a commission—which is regulated either by special agreement, by the usage of trade, or by the presumed intention of the parties.<sup>4</sup> In general, he must have faithfully performed the whole service or duty before he can claim any commissions.<sup>5</sup> He may forfeit his right to commissions by gross unskilfulness, by gross negligence, or gross misconduct in the course of his agency;<sup>6</sup> as, by not keeping regular accounts;<sup>7</sup> by violating his instructions; by wilfully confounding his own property with that of his principal;<sup>8</sup> by fraudulently misapplying the funds of his principal;<sup>9</sup> by embarking the property in illegal transactions, or by doing anything which amounts to a betrayal of his trust.<sup>10</sup>

The agent has a right to be reimbursed his advances, expenses, and disbursements reasonable and in good faith incurred and paid, without any default on his part, in the course of the agency,<sup>11</sup> and also to be paid interest on such advancements and disbursements, whenever it may fairly be presumed to have been stipulated for, or be due to him.<sup>12</sup> But he cannot recover for advances and disbursements made in the prosecution of an illegal transaction, though sanctioned by or even undertaken at the request of his principal;<sup>13</sup> and he may forfeit all remedy against his principal even for his advances and disbursements made in the course of legal transactions by his own gross negligence, fraud, or misconduct;<sup>14</sup> nor will he be entitled to be reimbursed his expenses after he has notice that his authority has been revoked.<sup>15</sup>

The agent may enforce the payment of a debt due him from his principal on account of the agency by an action for the amount; and he may also have the benefit of his claim by way of set-off to an action of his principal.

against him, provided the claim is not for uncertain damages, and is in other respects of such a nature as to be the subject of a set-off.<sup>16</sup> He has also a particular right of lien for all his necessary commissions, expenditures, advances, and services in and about the property intrusted to his agency, which right is in many respects analogous to the right of set-off.<sup>17</sup> Factors have a general lien upon the goods of their principal in their possession, and upon the price of such as have been lawfully sold by them, and the securities given therefor.<sup>18</sup> There are other cases in which a general lien exists in regard to particular classes of agents, either from usage, from a special agreement of the parties, or from the particular habit of dealing between them; such, for example, as insurance brokers, bankers, common carriers, attorneys and solicitors, packers, calico printers, fullers, dyers, and wharfingers.<sup>19</sup>

As to third persons. In general, a mere agent who has no beneficial interest in a contract which he has made on behalf of his principal, cannot support an action thereon.<sup>20</sup> An agent acquires a right to maintain an action upon a contract against third persons, in the following cases:

1. When the contract is in writing, and made expressly with the agent, and imports to be a contract personally with him; as, for example, when a promissory note is given to the agent, as such, for the benefit of the principal, and the promise is to pay the money to the agent under that name or description;<sup>21</sup> and it has been held that the right of the agent in such case to sue in his own name is not confined to an express contract: thus, one holding, as mere agent, a bill of exchange, or promissory note, indorsed in blank, or a check or note payable to bearer, may sue on it in his own name.<sup>22</sup>

2. The agent may maintain an action against third persons on contracts made with them whenever he is the only known and ostensible principal, and, consequently, in contemplation of law, the real contracting party;<sup>23</sup> as, if an agent sell goods of his principal in his own name, as though he were the owner, he is entitled to sue the buyer in his own name;<sup>24</sup> and, on the other hand, if he so buy, he may enforce the contract by action. The renunciation of the agent's contract by the principal does not necessarily preclude the agent from maintaining an action, but he will still be entitled to sue the party with whom he has contracted for any damages which he may have sustained by reason of a breach of contract by the latter."

3. The right of the agent to sue in his own name exists when, by the usage of trade, or the general course of business, he is authorized to act as owner, or as a principal contracting party, although his character as agent is known."

4. Where the agent has made a contract in the subject-matter of which he has a special interest or property, he may enforce his contract by action, whether he held himself out at the time to be acting in his own behalf or not; for example, an auctioneer who sells the goods of another may maintain an action for the price, although the sale be on the premises of the owner of the goods, because the auctioneer has a possession coupled with an interest."

But this right of an agent to bring an action in his own name is subordinate to the rights of the principal, who may, unless in particular cases where the agent has a lien or some other vested right, bring a suit himself, and suspend or extinguish the right of the agent."

An agent may maintain an action against third persons for injuries affecting the possession of his principal's property; and when he has been induced by the fraud of a third person to sell or buy goods for his principal, and he has sustained a personal loss, he may maintain an action against such third person for such wrongful act, deceit, or fraud." But his remedy for mere torts is confined to cases like the foregoing, where his right of possession is injuriously invaded, or where he incurs a personal responsibility, or loss, or damage in consequence of the tort."

SIGNATURE BY AN AGENT. If A. signs "A. for B." this is the signature of A., and he is the contracting party, although he makes the contract at the instance and for the benefit of B. But if he signs "B. by A.," then it is the contract of B., made by him through his instrument A. In the first case A. is the principal; in the second, B. is the principal, and A. his agent. But with whatever technical inaccuracy the signature is made, it may be determined in each instance from the facts and the evidence, that a party is an agent or a principal, in accordance with the intention of the parties to the contract, if the words are sufficient to bear the construction." But it is still requisite that the name of the principal appear as such in the signature of a deed." Parol evidence may always be admitted to charge an unnamed principal; but not to discharge the actual signer."

SUB-AGENTS. An agent can do for his principal only that which his principal authorizes, and if the principal appoint an agent to act for him as his representative in any particular business, this agent has not thereby a right to make another person the representative of his principal. A mere agent cannot generally appoint a sub-agent, so as to render the latter responsible to the principal," but may when such is the usage of trade, or is understood by the parties to be the mode in which the particular business may be done." The principal may, if he chooses, give this very power to his agent." A substitute of an agent who has no power to employ him, cannot be held as the agent of the original principal; but is only the agent of the agent who employs him, and who is accordingly his principal, and the person so employed is bound only to his immediate employer, and can look only to him for compensation." But a substitute, appointed by an agent who has this power of substitution, becomes the agent of the original principal, and may bind him by his acts, and is responsible to him as his agent, and may look to him for compensation. If the agent has either express or implied authority to appoint a sub-agent he will not, ordinarily, be responsible for the acts or omissions of the substitute," and this is especially true of public officers; but the sub-agent will himself be directly responsible to the principal for his own negligence or misconduct." The agent of an agent is generally accountable only to his own principal, and not to the principal of the party for whom he acts; that is, only his immediate employer can call him to account."

Where sub-agents are employed without the knowledge or consent of the principal, their remedy is against their immediate employer only, with regard to whom they will have the same rights, obligations, and duties as if the agent were the sole principal. But where sub-agents are ordinarily or necessarily employed in the business of the agency, the sub-agent can maintain his claim for compensation both against the principal and the immediate employers, unless the agency be avowed, and exclusive credit be given to the principal, in which case his remedy will be limited to the principal."

A sub-agent will be clothed with a lien against the principal for services performed and disbursements made by him on account of the sub-agency, whenever a privity exists between them.<sup>3</sup> He will acquire a lien against the principal if the latter ratifies his acts, or seeks to avail himself of the proceeds of the sub-agency, though employed by the agent without the knowledge or consent of the principal.<sup>4</sup> He may avail himself of his general lien against the principal by way of substitution to the rights of his immediate employer, to the extent of the lien of the latter.<sup>5</sup> And there are cases in which a sub-agent, who has no knowledge or reason to believe that his immediate employer is acting as an agent for another, will have a lien on the property for his general balance.<sup>6</sup>

Arbitrators are private extraordinary judges, to whose decision matters in controversy are referred by consent of the parties. REFERENCE is used as a synonym of arbitrator, but is in its origin of broader signification, and less accurate than arbitrator.

Appointment. Usually a single arbitrator is agreed upon, or the parties each appoint one, with a stipulation that, if they do not agree, another person, called an UMPIRE, named or to be selected by the arbitrators, shall be called in, to whom the matter is to be referred.<sup>7</sup> The jurisdiction of the umpire and arbitrators cannot be concurrent; if the arbitrators make an award it is binding; if not, the award of the umpire is binding.<sup>8</sup> If the umpire sign the award of the arbitrators, it is still their award, and vice versa.<sup>9</sup> Arbitrators may appoint an umpire after their term of service has expired, if the time has not gone within which the umpire was to make his award.<sup>10</sup> Subsequent dismission of the parties without just cause will have no effect upon the appointment; but they should have notice.<sup>11</sup> If an umpire refuse to act, another may be appointed as often as the thing shall happen.<sup>12</sup> In general, any objection to the appointment of an arbitrator or umpire will be waived by attending him.<sup>13</sup> Any person selected may be an arbitrator, notwithstanding natural incapacity, or legal disability, as infancy, coverture, or lunacy,<sup>14</sup> or disqualification on account of interest, provided it be known to the parties at the time of making the submission.<sup>15</sup>

Duties and powers. Arbitrators cannot delegate their authority; it is a personal trust.<sup>16</sup> The power ceases with the publication of the award;<sup>17</sup> and death after publication and before delivery does not vitiate it.<sup>18</sup> They cannot be compelled to make an award,<sup>19</sup> or disclose the grounds of their judgment.<sup>20</sup> An arbitrator may retain the award till paid for his services, but cannot maintain an action for them without a promise,<sup>21</sup> which may be implied from circumstances.

Proceedings. Arbitrators proceed on the reference as judges, not as agents of the parties appointing them.<sup>22</sup> They should give notice of the time and place of proceeding to the parties interested.<sup>23</sup> They should all conduct the investigation together, and should sign the award in each other's presence;<sup>24</sup> but a majority is sufficient.<sup>25</sup> In investigating matters in dispute, they are allowed the greatest latitude.<sup>26</sup> They are judges both of law and fact, and are not bound by the rules of practice adopted by courts.<sup>27</sup> They may decide in justice and honesty, and need not follow the law; the award will be set aside only when it appears that they meant to be governed by the law but have mistaken it.<sup>28</sup>

Revocation of powers of arbitrators may occur at the pleasure of either party at any time before final award.<sup>29</sup> It is not competent for the parties to deprive themselves of this power by any form of contract.<sup>30</sup> But when the submission releases the original cause of action, and the adversary revokes, the party so releasing may recover the amount so released by way of damages caused by the revocation.<sup>31</sup> Where the submission is made a rule of court it becomes practically irrevocable, since such an act would be regarded a contempt of court and punishable by attachment. This is the only mode of making a submission irrevocable. A submission by rule of court is made irrevocable by the express provisions of the statutes of most of the States, and the referee is required, after due notice, to hear the case ex parte where either party fails to appear. See GENERAL STATUTES.

The form of the revocation is not important if it be in conformity with the submission; or if, when it is not, it be acquiesced in by the other party. The revocation should, in general, be of as high a grade of contract as the submission. Where the submission is in writing the revocation ought to be in writing; and however the form of revocation is expressed it must be distinct and intelligible.

A party may revoke the submission by any act which renders it impracticable for the arbitrator to proceed.

Where the arbitrator declines to act it will operate as a revocation of the submission.

Bankruptcy of a party does not operate to revoke a submission to arbitration, though it may justify the other in revoking.

The death of either party, or of an arbitrator, or of one of them, will operate as a revocation of the submission. It is competent to make provision in the submission for the completion of the award notwithstanding the death of one of the parties, by proceedings in the name of the personal representative. Where the submission is by rule of court, and the cause of action survives, this provision is not necessary, it may be revived and prosecuted in the name of the personal representative.

The power of the arbitrator is determined and destroyed by the occurrence of any fact which incapacitates the party from proceeding with the hearing.

Insanity in either party, or in an arbitrator, will determine and destroy the authority to proceed.

The marriage of a single woman is a revocation of the arbitrator's power. So, also, if she is joined with another in the submission her marriage is a revocation as to both. The exceptions to this rule are purely statutory.

The bringing of a suit upon the cause of action embraced in the submission, at any time before the award, is an implied revocation.

When one party to a submission consists of several persons one cannot revoke without the concurrence of the others, though his death would operate as a revocation on the part of the party of which he was one, but if the cause of action survived, his personal representative might be substituted in his stead.

Where the revocation is by the express act of a party it will be effectual when notice reaches the arbitrator. But in case of death, insanity, or marriage, either of these events of themselves terminates the power of the arbitrator at once, and all acts done by him thereafter are absolutely void.

Submission is the agreement, oral or written, by which parties agree to submit their differences to the decision of a referee or arbitrators. It is sometimes termed a reference.

Any matter may be determined by arbitration, which the parties may adjust by agreement, or which may be the subject of a suit at law. Crimes, however, and, perhaps, actions on penal statutes by common informers, cannot be made the subject of arbitration and composition by arbitration. Disputes respecting rent, or tithes, charges of slander, breaches of contract, matters of account, trespass to person or property, etc., etc., may be submitted to arbitration. Parties may by parol submit any matters in controversy between them to arbitration; and this is the common law of the land. And, notwithstanding the statutes, parties may submit to arbitration as at common law. When a statute provides a new, and does not abrogate the old mode, and parties may adopt either mode at their own election, but they cannot pursue both at the same time. Any one capable of making a disposition of his property, or release of his right, or capable of suing or being sued, may make a binding submission to arbitration; but one under civil or natural incapacity cannot be bound by his submission. In general, in cases of incapacity of the real owner of the property, as well as in many cases of agency, the person who has the legal control of the property may make the submission; including a husband for his wife; a parent or guardian for an infant; but not a guardian ad litem; a trustee for his cestui que trust; an attorney for his client; an

The submission which defines and limits, as well as confers and imposes the duty of the arbitrator, must be followed by him in his conduct of the award: but a fair and liberal construction is allowed in its interpretation. If general, it submits both law and fact. If limited, the arbitrator cannot exceed his authority.

The award is the judgment or decision of arbitrators, or referees, or umpires, on the matter submitted to them. The writing containing such judgment. A court has no power to alter or amend an award.

Enforcement. An award may be enforced by an action at law, which is the only remedy for disobedience when the submission is not made a rule of court, and no statute provides a special mode of enforcement.

Form. The award should, in general, follow the terms of the submission, which frequently provides the time and manner of making and publishing the award. It may be oral or written, or by deed. It should be signed by all the arbitrators in the presence of each other. An award will be sustained by a liberal construction, that it may be supported sooner than be lost.

Effect. An award is a final and conclusive judgment between the parties on all the matters referred by the submission. It transfers property as much as the verdict of a jury, and will prevent the operation of the statute of limitations. A verbal or written award following a verbal or written submission will have the same effect as an agreement of the same form directly between the parties. The right of real property cannot thus pass by mere award; but no doubt an arbitrator may award a conveyance or release of land, and require deeds, and it will be a breach of the agreement and arbitration bond to refuse compliance; and courts will sometimes enforce this specifically.

Arbitration and award may be pleaded to an action concerning the same subject-matter, and will bar the action. To an action on the award nothing can be pleaded against the award; not even fraud.

To be conclusive, the award should be consonant with, and follow the submission, and affect only the parties to the submission; otherwise, it is an assumption of power, and not binding. It must be final and certain, conclusively adjudicating all the matters submitted, and stating the decision in such language as to leave no doubt of the arbitrator's intention, or the nature and extent of the duties imposed by it on the parties. It must be possible to be performed, and must not direct anything to be done which is contrary to law. It must be without palpable or apparent mistake. An award may be in part good, and in part void; in which case it will be enforced so far as valid, if the good part is separable from the bad.

Attorneys are those who act for others by virtue of appointment. They are of various kinds.

AN ATTORNEY IN FACT is a person to whom the authority of another, who is called the CONSTITUENT, is by him lawfully delegated.

The term, "attorneys in fact," is employed to designate persons who act under a special agency, or a special letter of attorney, so that they are appointed in the matter for the deed or special act to be performed; but, in a more extended sense, it includes all other agents employed in any business, or to do any act, or acts, in and about the same, for another.

All persons who are capable of acting for themselves, and even those who are disqualified from acting in their own capacity, if they have sufficient understanding, as infants of a proper age, may act as attorneys for others.

A Letter or Power of Attorney is an instrument of writing by which one or more persons (called principals or constituents) authorize one or more other persons (called the attorneys) to do some legal act for, in the stead, and place of the former. An instrument of writing authorizing a person to act as the agent or attorney of the person granting it. This instrument is more generally called a power of attorney.

A general power authorizes the agent to act generally in behalf of the principal.

A special (or limited) power is one limited to particular acts.

A power of attorney may be oral or under seal.

It is a general rule that one acting under a power of attorney cannot execute for his principal a sealed instrument, unless the power of attorney be sealed. And where the statute prescribes certain formalities, and makes them requisite for the execution of an instrument, a power to make that instrument must, in general, be itself executed with similar formalities.

J. 250; 5 Bing. 368; 12 Wend. 295; 9 Id. 68; 11 Id. 244; 7 Met. 244; 2 Mo. 354.

But, as oral or written powers are equally parcel, one by oral authority may sign the name of his principal without a seal thereto; and so he may be authorized orally to bind his principal by written contract, when the statute of frauds requires a writing signed by the parties sought to be charged, as the foundation of an action.

Powers of attorney are strictly construed. General terms used with reference to a particular subject-matter are presumed to be used in subordination to that matter.

Where a power is special, and the authority limited, the attorney cannot bind his principal by any act in which he exceeds his authority. The authority of an attorney is to be strictly construed; though it is to be taken to include all necessary means of executing it with effect. Hence a party dealing with an attorney under a power of attorney of another, should look to the terms of the power to see that the authority given is sufficiently broad.

If a power prescribes any condition in its execution, it must be strictly pursued.

Where a power is vested in several persons jointly, all should unite in executing it.

An attorney acting under a power cannot delegate his authority or appoint a substitute, unless the power expressly gives authority to do so.

A revocation of a power takes effect as to an agent, from the time it is communicated to him; as to third persons, from the time it is communicated to them.

An attorney in a simple power of attorney must act only in the name of his principal; in signing, should sign his principal's name, adding his own, thus: A. B., by C. D., attorney.

It is only necessary to have a power of attorney and the substitution acknowledged, when the power given is to convey, or otherwise affect or encumber any land, tenement, or hereditament. In such case the acknowledgment and filing for record is the same as a deed or mortgage.

POWERS OF ATTORNEY FORMER.

The general elements of a power of attorney are:

1. The names of the principal or principals (constituents) and of the attorney or attorneys, and words of appointment.
2. The names and description of the duty imposed, and the particular mode of performance.
3. The character of the power imposed, whether general or limited (with conditions, limitations, restrictions, etc., if any).
4. The power of substitution and revocation.
5. The ratification or confirmation.
6. The signature of the principal or principals.
7. The proper attestation and acknowledgment, when required by law (as, in case the power is to convey or encumber real estate).
8. The recording, when required by law (as, in case the power is to convey or encumber real estate).

A client is one who employs and retains an attorney and counsellor to manage or defend a suit or action, to which he is a party, or to advise him about legal matters.

Appearance by attorney is the general rule, and appearance without, the exception.<sup>1</sup> It results from the nature of their functions, and of their duties, as well to the court as to the client, that no one can, even by consent, be the attorney of both the litigating parties in the same controversy.<sup>2</sup>

When a party has been aggrieved, and is desirous of obtaining redress for the violation of his rights, he should adopt the best means to put himself completely in the right, and to secure the evidence required to support his case. As most persons are ignorant of the means to be adopted to gain that end, the party should immediately apply to some attorney to aid him.

Although a party may himself conduct a suit brought by or against him, yet experience proves it is very dangerous for him to manage his own case, whatever may be his learning or qualities. He labors generally under such an excitement that it would be difficult to behave with that temperance and discretion so necessary to the proper management of a cause; besides, it is proper that he should not come in personal collision with the opponent, for this would produce many indiscreet acts which would be prejudicial to his cause.

In the selection of an attorney it is important to select not a mere lawyer, but a man of honor and honesty, having a knowledge of his professional duties, of the world, and being a good negotiator: one who is disposed to avoid litigation, and, above all, one who has not any connection with the adverse party. Pay him a retaining fee. When an attorney is thus employed, there is an implied contract, on his part, that he will use due diligence in the course of legal proceedings. He is bound to act with the most scrupulous honor, and to attend to the interest of his client only.<sup>3</sup>

The principal duties of an attorney are: to be true to the court and to his client; to manage the business of his client with care, skill, and integrity; to keep his client informed as to the state of his business; and to keep his secrets, confided to him as such.

An attorney at law, by his admission as such, acquires rights of which he cannot be deprived at the mere discretion of the court.<sup>4</sup> Such an attorney need not prove his authority to appear in court. Appearance by an attorney has been allowed in England from the time of the earliest records of the courts of that country: they are mentioned in Glouville, Broome, Fleta, and Britton; and a case turning upon the party's right to appear by attorney, reported Year B. 7, 1140, 1141, 1142, 1143, in France, such appearance was first allowed by letters patent of Philip le Bel, 1140, D. 125, 126; 1 Fourcel Hist. des Advoc. 42, 43, 44, 45; 2 Lein. for any party in court, and act for them there, unless his authority be denied, and some evidence be offered tending to show that he has no such authority.<sup>5</sup> But a person who is not an attorney at law, and who offers to appear for another in court, by special authority, must prove such authority if requested.<sup>6</sup> An attorney's implied duty to use reasonable skill, care, etc., is the same as that of other persons, to whose care and skill anything is intrusted.<sup>7</sup> He is not responsible for a mistake in a doubtful point of law,<sup>1</sup> or of practice,<sup>2</sup> nor for the fault of counsel retained by him.<sup>3</sup> He is liable for disclosing privileged communications.<sup>4</sup> If discharged by one party, he may act for an opposite party, provided he makes no improper use of knowledge obtained by him while acting for the first party.<sup>5</sup> But he may not act for an opposite party if discharged by his first client for misconduct.<sup>6</sup> The law implies a contract on the part of the client to pay his attorney the legal fees, or statute rate of compensation.<sup>7</sup> And if a client asserts that the services were to be rendered for a less compensation, the burden rests on him to prove this bargain.<sup>8</sup> If a bargain be proved, the attorney cannot recover more by showing that his services were worth more.<sup>9</sup> And even if he shows that the case was deemed, with good reason, a desperate one, this will not sustain his claim for an excessive compensation, as, half the sum recovered.<sup>10</sup> If, during the suit, an attorney makes a contract with his client, which is void for champerty, he may still recover a proper compensation for services rendered before the illegal bargain.<sup>11</sup> An attorney cannot maintain an action for compensation for services, merely by proof that the services were rendered; but must go further and show that they were requested, or, in other words, that he was retained as an attorney or counsel.<sup>12</sup> And he cannot recover his bill against his client, if his client has received no benefit whatever from his services by reason of his want of care and skill.<sup>13</sup> An attorney is, in general, personally liable on an agreement made by him, in his own name, although only personally concerned in the matter.<sup>14</sup> And where employed in the usual way to conduct a suit, he has, in general, no authority to enter into a compromise without the sanction of his client, express or implied.<sup>15</sup>

are, in general, prescribed by the General Statutes of each State.

A retainer is the act of a client, by which he engages an attorney or counsellor to manage a cause, either by prosecuting it when he is plaintiff, or defending it when he is defendant. The retaining fee is that given to counsel on being consulted, to insure his future services.

The effect of a retainer to prosecute or defend a suit is to confer on the attorney all the powers exercised by the forms and usages of the courts in which the suit is pending.<sup>7</sup> He may receive payment;<sup>8</sup> may bring a second suit, after being non-suited in the first for want of formal proof;<sup>9</sup> may cause a review of the judgment for error;<sup>10</sup> may discontinue the suit;<sup>11</sup> may restore the action after a non pro.<sup>12</sup> may claim an appeal, and bind his client in his name for the prosecution of it;<sup>13</sup> may submit the suit to arbitration;<sup>14</sup> may sue out an alias execution;<sup>15</sup> may waive objections to evidence, and enter into a stipulation for the admission of facts, or conduct of the trial,<sup>16</sup> and for the release of bail;<sup>17</sup> may waive the right of appeal, review, notice, and the like, and confess judgment.<sup>18</sup> But he has no authority to execute a discharge of a debtor, but upon the actual payment of the full amount of the debt,<sup>19</sup> and that in money only;<sup>20</sup> nor to release sureties;<sup>21</sup> nor to enter a re-traxit;<sup>22</sup> nor to act for the legal representatives of his deceased client;<sup>23</sup> nor to release a witness.<sup>24</sup>

There is an implied contract on the part of an attorney who has been retained, that he will use due diligence in the course of legal proceedings, but it is not an undertaking to recover a judgment.<sup>25</sup> An attorney is bound to act with the most scrupulous honor; he ought to disclose to his client if he has any adverse retainer, which may affect his judgment or his client's interest; but the concealment of the fact does not necessarily imply fraud.<sup>26</sup>

A warrant of attorney is an instrument of writing, addressed to one or more attorneys therein named, authorizing them, generally, to appear in any court, or some specified court, on behalf of the person giving it, and to confess judgment in favor of some particular person named therein, in an action at law. It usually contains stipulations not to interpose any proceeding in error, or any matter in equity to act to delay the person in whose favor the judgment is sought.

A warrant of attorney is given to the creditor as a security; having it in his possession, he may sign judgment and have execution issued without the formality of an action at law.<sup>27</sup> A warrant of attorney given to confess judgment is not revocable, in general, and notwithstanding a revocation, judgment may be entered upon it.<sup>28</sup> The death of the debtor, however, generally operates as an effectual revocation. So, also, the death of the constituent operates as a revocation, and where a warrant has been executed by two, it is vacated by the death of one of them; but such warrant, given by two, being merely ministerial, may be executed in the name of the survivor. In case of the constituent's death, courts will, however, allow judgments to be entered as of a term prior to the death of a constituent. A warrant of attorney to confess judgment executed by an unmarried woman is revoked by her marriage in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary; but if executed by an unmarried woman the courts will allow judgment to be entered up in the name of the husband and wife. The virtue of a warrant of attorney is spent by the entry of the one judgment; a second judgment entered upon the same warrant of attorney is irregular, and cannot lawfully be enforced.

The general authority given by the warrant of attorney is usually qualified and restricted by a bond which commonly accompanies it, together with the conditions of desistance, stating the terms upon which it was given and restraining the creditor from making immediate use of it.

Great frauds are often committed under color of bonds and warrants of attorney; in many of the States they are absolutely prohibited on experience of the abuse made of them. They can be tolerated only with a liberal exercise of discretion by the court in inquiring into them. A warrant of attorney to confess judgment should contain not only a grant of authority, expressed clearly and intelligibly, but a designation, by name or description, of the person who is to execute it. It must be subscribed by the defendant, but its form may be as follows:

Auctioneers are those who sell or conduct the sale of goods, merchandise and real property, by public sale to the highest bidder. They are generally licensed for this purpose by public authority.

An auctioneer is the agent of the seller, and of the buyer for some purposes. He has a special property in the goods, and may bring an action for the price. He has a lien upon them for the charges of the sale, his commission, and the auction duty. He must obtain the best price he fairly can, and is responsible for damages arising from a failure to pursue the regular course of business, or from a want of skill; and where he sells goods as the property of one not the owner, is liable for their value to the real owner. See AUCTIONS, SALES.

Bailiffs are persons to whom personal property is delivered for some specific purpose; as, to be carried from one place to another, to be cared for and kept in good condition, to be manufactured, to be held as security, and the

BROKERS are those engaged for others to make and conclude bargains for them, for a fee or commission. Those who are engaged for others in the negotiation of contracts relative to property, the custody of which they have no concern.<sup>1</sup> There are several classes of brokers. See FACTORS, below.

A broker is for many purposes the agent of both parties. He is in the first place deemed only the agent of his original employer, and becomes the agent of the other when the bargain or contract has been definitely settled in its terms between the principals.<sup>2</sup>

EXCHANGE BROKERS negotiate bills of exchange, domestic and foreign, and other securities, make and conclude bargains for others, in matters of money, securities and merchandise, learn the rates of exchange and notify their employers of the same. Their business sometimes includes the purchase and sale of under-current currency, gold and silver, as well as drafts and checks drawn or payable in other cities. This is at their own risk and for their individual profit, and is not, therefore, included in the business of brokerage.

Exchange and merchandise brokers negotiate the sale of merchandise without having possession or control of it, as factors or commission merchants do.

INSURANCE BROKERS or agents, see Stock Brokers, procure fire, life and marine insurance, and negotiate between insurers and insured.

NOTE BROKERS negotiate the purchase and sale of bills of exchange, negotiable bonds and promissory notes, for which they are paid a percentage or commission by the seller, whose name it is not their custom to disclose. There is an implied warranty that what they sell is what they represent it to be; and should a bill, bond or note sold by them turn out to be a forgery, they are responsible. But by showing a payment over to their principals, or other special circumstances attending the transaction, which vouchsafes them in the premises, they will be discharged.<sup>3</sup>

PAWN BROKERS make it their business to lend money upon property deposited with them in pledge, at various rates of interest, being licensed therefor, and exempted from the operation of usury laws. See BAILMENTS; PAWN BROKERS.

REAL ESTATE BROKERS or agents negotiate the purchase and sale of real estate, procure loans on mortgage security, collect rents, lease houses and lands, draw conveyances, and furnish abstracts of title to property. See CONVEYANCING.

SHIP BROKERS negotiate the purchase and sale of ships and freighting vessels. Like other brokers they receive a percentage or commission from the seller or freighter.

STOCK BROKERS are those employed to buy and sell shares of stock, whether of the public funds, of banks or other corporations. In the larger cities stock brokers are associated together under a corporate name, as "Board of Brokers," "Merchants' Exchange," "Board of Trade," and the like. These associations are governed by rules and regulations made by themselves, to which each member is subject. Membership is procured by ballot or vote. A member defaulting in his obligations is expelled and forfeits his seat. A regular register or record of all the transactions of the body is kept by an officer of the association. Questions and disputes between members are settled by an arbitration committee. The stocks dealt in at the sessions of the board are those placed on the list by a regular vote of the association, after the same has been examined into by a committee for that purpose. The official record of sales is the best evidence of the price of any stock on a particular day.<sup>4</sup>

Carriers are those who undertake to carry property or passengers from one place to another. See BAILMENTS.

Clerks are assistants in a shop or store, who sell goods, keep accounts, etc.; those who are employed in the use of the pen in an office, public or private, in keeping records and accounts. A clerk is always a subordinate. He differs from a factor in this, that the latter wholly supplies the place of his principal in respect to the property consigned to him, while a clerk attends to only a part of the business, while his employer superintends the whole.

Consignees are the persons to whom goods or other things are delivered in trust, for sale or superintendance; called also factors. The goods or property sent is called the consignment.

When the goods consigned to them are their own, and they have been ordered to be sent, they are at his risk the moment the consignment is made, according to the consignee's direction; and the persons employed in their transmission are his agents.<sup>5</sup> When the goods are not the consignee's, if he accept the con-

Factors or Commission Merchants are agents employed to sell goods or merchandise consigned or delivered to them, by or for their principals for a compensation commonly called factorage or commission.

Where the agent accompanies the ship, taking a cargo aboard, and it is consigned to him for sale, and he is to purchase a return cargo out of the proceeds, such agent is properly called a factor; he is, however, usually known by the name of a supercargo. A factor differs from a broker in some important particulars, viz. He may buy and sell for his principal in his own name as well as in the name of his principal; on the contrary, a broker may as such should buy and sell in the name of his principal. Again, a factor is intrusted with the possession, management, disposal, and control of the goods to be bought and sold, and has a special property and a lien on them; the broker, on the contrary, has usually no such possession, management, control, or disposal of the goods, nor any other special property or lien.

A domestic factor or commission merchant is one who resides in the same country with his principal. By the usages of trade, or intendment of law, when domestic factors are employed in the ordinary business of buying and selling goods, it is presumed that a reciprocal credit between the principal and the agent and third persons has been given; when a purchase has been made by such a factor, he, as well as his principal, is deemed liable for the debt; and in case of a sale the buyer is responsible both to the factor and principal for the purchase money; but this presumption may be rebutted by proof of exclusive credit.

A foreign factor or commission merchant is one who resides in a different country from his principal. Foreign factors are held personally liable upon all contracts made by them for their employers, whether they describe themselves in the contract as agents or not. In such cases the presumption is that the credit is given exclusively to the factor. But this presumption may be rebutted by proof of a contrary agreement.

A factor or commission merchant is required to use reasonable skill and ordinary diligence in his vocation. He is bound to obey his instructions; but when he has none he may and ought to act according to the general usages of trade—to sell for cash when that is usual, or to give credit on sales when that is customary. He is bound to render a just account to his principal, and to pay him the moneys he may receive from him.

He has the right to sell goods in his own name; and when untrammelled by instruction, he may sell them at such times, and for such prices, as, in the exercise of a just discretion, he may think best for his employer. He is, for many purposes, between himself and third persons, to be considered as the owner of the goods. He may, therefore, recover the price of the goods sold by him in his own name, and, consequently, he may receive payment, and give receipts, and discharge the debtor, unless, indeed, notice has been given by the principal to the debtor not to pay. He has a lien on the goods for advances made by him, and for his commissions. He has no right to barter the goods of his principal, nor to pledge them for the purpose of raising money for himself, or to secure a debt he may owe; but he may pledge them for advances made to his principal, or for the purpose of raising money for him, or in order to reimburse himself to the amount of his own lien. Another exception to the rule that a factor cannot pledge the goods of his principal is, that he may raise money by pledging the goods for the payment of duties, or any other charge or purpose allowed or justified by the usages of trade.

It is a general rule that when property remitted by the principal, or acquired from him by his order, is found distinguishable in the hands of the factor or merchant, capable of being traced by a clear and connected chain of identity, in no case the link of it degenerating from a specific trust into a general debt, the creditors of the factor who has become bankrupt have no right to the specific property, even when it is money in the creditors' hands; but the rights of third persons dealing bona fide with the factor or commission merchant as a principal, where the name of the principal is sunk entirely, are to be protected. See GENERAL STATUTES.

Forwarding Merchants are those who receive and forward goods, taking upon themselves the expenses of the transportation, for which he receives a compensation. He has no concern in the cars or vessels in which they are transported, and no interest in the freight. See BAILMENTS.

Masters of Ships are commanders or first officers of merchant ships; captains.

The master of an American ship must be a citizen of the United States; a similar requirement exists in most maritime states. In some countries their qualifications and skill must be attested by examination by proper authorities; in the United States the civil responsibility of the owners for their acts is deemed sufficient.

A vessel sailing without a competent master is deemed unseaworthy, and the owners are liable for any loss of cargo which may occur, but cannot recover on a policy of insurance in case of disaster.<sup>1</sup> The master is selected by the owners, and, in case of his death or disability during the voyage, the mate succeeds. If he also dies in a foreign country, the consignee of the vessel, or the consul of the nation, may, in case of necessity, and in the absence of other authority, appoint a master. The master himself may, in similar circumstances of necessity and distance from the owners, appoint a substitute.<sup>2</sup> During the temporary absence of the master the mate succeeds.<sup>3</sup> See CHARTER PARTIES, CONTRACTS, MARITIME LAW.

Partners. It may be stated, as a general principle which governs all partnerships in trade, that each individual partner constitutes the others his agents for the purpose of entering into all contracts for him within the scope of the partnership concern, and, consequently, that he is liable to the performance of all such contracts in the same manner as if entered into personally by himself.<sup>4</sup> In truth, the law of partnership is a branch of the law of principal and agent. If two agree that they should carry on a trade and share the profits of it, each is a principal and each is an agent for the other, and each is bound by the other's contracts in carrying on the trade as much as a single principal would be by the act of an agent who was to give the whole of the profits to his employer. See PARTNERSHIP.

Principals are those who, being legally competent to do any act for their own benefit, or on their own account, confide it to another person to do it for them.<sup>5</sup> The word principal is used in opposition to agent, and in this sense it signifies that the principal is the prime mover. It is also used in opposition to the word surety; thus we say, the principal is answerable before the surety.

Every one of full age, and not otherwise disabled, is capable of being a principal; for it is a rule that whenever a person has power, as owner, or in his own right, to do a thing, he may do it by another.<sup>6</sup> Infants are generally incapable of appointing an agent; but under special circumstances they may make such appointments. For instance, an infant may authorize another to do any act which is beneficial to him, but not to do an act which is to his prejudice.<sup>7</sup> Idiots, lunatics, and other persons not legally competent, are wholly incapable of appointing an agent.<sup>8</sup>

THE LIABILITIES TO AGENT ARE: 1. To reimburse him all his advances, expenses, and disbursements lawfully incurred about the agency, and also to pay him interest upon such advances and disbursements whenever interest may lawfully be presumed to have been stipulated for or to be due to the agent.<sup>9</sup> 2. To pay him his commissions as agreed upon, or according to the usage of trade, except in cases of gratuitous agency.<sup>10</sup> 3. To indemnify the agent when, without his own default, he has sustained damages in following the directions of his principal. For example, when the agent has innocently sold the goods of a third person under the direction or authority of his principal, and a third person recovers damages against the agent, the latter will be entitled to reimbursement from the principal.<sup>11</sup>

As to third persons. The principal is bound to fulfil all the engagements made by the agent for or in the name of the principal, and which come within the scope of his usual employment, although the agent in the particular instance has in fact exceeded or violated his private instructions.<sup>12</sup> And where an exclusive credit is not given to the agent, the principal is liable to third persons upon contracts made by his agent within the scope of his authority, although the agent contracts in his own name and does not disclose his agency.<sup>13</sup> But if the principal and agent are both known, and exclusive credit be given to the latter, the principal will not be liable though the agent should subsequently become insolvent.<sup>14</sup>

Where money is paid by a third person to the agent by mistake, or upon a consideration that has failed, the principal will be liable to repay it, although he may never have received it from his agent.<sup>15</sup>

A principal is affected by notice to his agent respecting any matter distinctly within the scope of his agency, when the notice is given before the transaction begins, or before it is so far completed as to render the notice nugatory.<sup>16</sup> The notice to the agent may be implied as well as express: knowledge obtained by the agent in the course of that very transaction is notice. Notice to a servant of the principal, or one employed by the principal, affects the principal only when given about the very thing the servant is employed to do.<sup>17</sup> Notice to a corporation binds it only when made to an officer, whose situation and relation to the corporation imply that he has authority to act for the corporation in the particular matter in regard to which the notice is given.<sup>2</sup>

Liabilities for unlawful or wrongful acts of agents. The principal is not, in general, liable to a criminal prosecution for the acts or misdeeds of his agent, unless he has authorized or co-operated in such acts or misdeeds.<sup>3</sup> He is, however, civilly liable to third persons for the misfeasance, negligence, or omission of duty of his agent in the course of the agency, although he did not authorize or know of the misconduct, or even although he was guilty of misconduct, and he is liable for the injuries sustained by sub-agents who are retained by the principal, either express or implied.<sup>4</sup> But the responsibility of the principal for the misfeasance or unlawful acts of his agent is limited to cases properly within the scope of the agency.

A principal is not liable for the wilful acts of his agent whereby damage is occasioned to another, unless he originally commanded, or subsequently assented to the act.<sup>5</sup>

A principal is liable for the fraud or misconduct of his agent, so far, that on the one hand he cannot take any benefit from any misrepresentation fraudulently made by his agent, although the principal was ignorant and innocent of the fraud;<sup>6</sup> and on the other hand, if a party dealing with an agent suffer from such fraud, the principal is bound to make him compensation for the injury so sustained;<sup>7</sup> and this, although the principal be innocent,<sup>8</sup> provided the agent acted in the matter as his agent, and distinctly within the line of business intrusted to him.<sup>9</sup>

In contracts made without mentioning the name of the principal, the principal may avail himself of the agreement; for the contract will be treated as that of the principal as well as of the agent. If, however, the person with whom the contract was made was bona fide dealt with the agent as owner, he will be entitled to set off any claim he may have against the agent in answer to the demand of the principal; and the principal's right to enforce contracts entered into by his agent is affected by every species of fraud, misrepresentation, or concealment of the agent which would defeat it if proceeding from himself.<sup>10</sup>

and they may, therefore, be reclaimed by the owner.<sup>11</sup>

Where the principal gives notice to the debtor not to pay money to the agent, unless the agent has a superior right from a lien or otherwise, the amount of any payment afterward made to the agent may be recovered by the principal from the debtor.<sup>12</sup>

Money paid by an agent may also be recovered by the principal under any of the following circumstances: 1. Where the consideration fails. 2. Where money is paid by an agent through mistake. 3. Where money is illegally extorted from an agent in the course of his employment. 4. Where the money of the principal has been fraudulently applied by the agent to an illegal and prohibited purpose.<sup>13</sup>

Rights of action under a contract made by an agent. In contracts by deed no party has a right of action under them but the party whose name is to them;<sup>14</sup> but in the case of a simple contract an undisclosed principal may show that the apparent party was his agent, and may put himself in the place of his agent;<sup>15</sup> but not so as to affect injuriously the rights of the other party.<sup>16</sup> When the name of the principal is disclosed at the time of the contract is made by the agent, the former is the proper party to sue upon the contract.

Against third persons. In general, the principal, as against third persons, has a right to all the advantages and benefits of the acts and contracts of his agent, and is entitled to the same remedies against such third persons in respect to such acts and contracts as if they were made or done with him personally.<sup>17</sup> But to this rule there are the following exceptions:

1. When the instrument is under seal, and it has been exclusively made between the agent and the third person; as, for example, a charter party or bottomry bond made by the master of a ship in the course of his employment. In this case the principal cannot sue or be sued on it.<sup>18</sup>

2. When an exclusive credit is given to and by the agent, and therefore the principal cannot be considered in any manner a party to the contract, although he may have authorized it and be entitled to all the benefits arising from it. The case of a foreign factor buying or selling goods is an example of this kind. He is treated, as between himself and the other party, as the sole contractor, and the real principal cannot sue or be sued on the contract. This is a general rule of commercial law, founded upon the known usage of trade, and it is strictly

3. When the agent has a lien or claim upon the property bought or sold, or upon its proceeds, which is equal to or exceeds the amount of its value, the principal cannot sue without the consent of the agent.<sup>3</sup>

— Third persons are liable to the principal for any tort or injury done to his property or rights in the course of the agency. If both the agent and third person have been parties to the tort or injury, they are jointly as well as severally liable to the principal, and he may maintain an action against both or either of them.<sup>4</sup>

The rights and powers of principals arise from obligations due to them by their agents or third parties.

Those in relation to their agents are:

1. To call them to an account at all times in relation to the business of the agency.<sup>5</sup>

2. When the agent violates his obligations to his principal, either by exceeding his authority, or by positive misconduct, or by mere negligence or omissions in the discharge of the functions of his agency, or in any other manner, and any loss or damage falls on his principal, the latter will be entitled to full indemnity.<sup>6</sup> But the loss or damage must be actual, and not merely probable or possible.<sup>7</sup>

3. Where both the principal and agent may maintain a suit against a third person for any matter relating to the agency, the principal has a right to supersede the agent by suing in his own name; and he may by his own intervention intercept, suspend, or extinguish the right of the agent under the contract.<sup>8</sup> But an exception to this rule arises in favor of the agent to the extent of any lien or other interest or superior right he may have in the property.<sup>9</sup>

Actions against agents to determine the right of a principal. Where money is paid to one as agent, to which another as principal has color of right, the right of the principal cannot be tried in an action brought by the party paying the money, against the agent as for money had and received to the use of such party; but such action should be brought against the principal.<sup>10</sup> For a party who deals with an agent (acting as such, and within the scope of his authority) has, in general, no right to separate him from his principal, and hold him liable in his personal capacity. The agent owes an account of his actions to his principal, and that he may be able to render that account, the law, except under special circumstances, refuses to impose upon him a duty to any third party.

Proxies are persons deputed or substituted to act for others or to represent them. A proxy is the agency of another who acts as a substitute for his principal; appearance of a representative; agency of a substitute. It is also the instrument by which a person is appointed so to act.

The right of voting at an election of an incorporated company is not a general right, and the party claiming it must show a special authority for that purpose.

A Ship's Husband is an agent appointed by the owner of a ship, and invested with authority to make repairs and attend to the management and other concerns of the ship. He is the general agent of the owners of the ship, and may be appointed orally or in writing. He is usually, but not necessarily, owner of the ship.<sup>11</sup> See MARITIME LAW.

Supercargoes are persons specially employed by the owners of cargoes to take charge of and sell to the best advantage merchandise which has been shipped, and to purchase returning cargoes and receive freight as they may be authorized. A supercargo is an officer or person in a merchant's ship whose business it is manage the sales and superintend all the commercial concerns of the voyage.

Supercargoes have complete control over the cargo and everything which immediately concerns it, unless their authority is either expressly or impliedly restrained.<sup>12</sup> Under certain circumstances they are responsible for the cargo.<sup>13</sup> A supercargo has no power to interfere with the government of the ship.<sup>14</sup>

ANIMALS are all animated beings endowed with the power of voluntary motion, except those of the human species. They are either domestic or wild, base or valuable.

There are animals which, though domestic and reclaimed, are not such that, at common law, a larceny may be committed of them, by reason of the baseness of their nature. Of this class are dogs and cats; and others, though wild by nature and reclaimed by art and industry, as bears, foxes, apes, monkeys, ferrets and the like, fall within this class.* A larceny can not be committed on the young of these animals in the nest, kennel, or den.<sup>1</sup> The owner of the land has, however, a qualified property in them by reason of their helplessness.<sup>2</sup> To be the subject of a larceny under the statutes the animal must be the property of another and of value. Animals of a valuable nature are those capable of being a qualified property, such as cattle, poultry, and the like. But see below.

Agistery is the taking and feeding of another's cattle in the public commons or upon one's own land, for compensation. Those who pursue this occupation are called agisters. They must not put more cattle upon a common or pasture than the herbage will sustain or than they have a right to do;<sup>3</sup> if they do they are liable in damages.<sup>4</sup> They are not, like innkeepers, bound to take all horses (or cattle) offered to them; but are not liable for any injury done to such animals in their care, unless they have been guilty of negligence, or from their ignorance negligence may be inferred.<sup>5</sup> Agisters of cattle have no lien<sup>6</sup> in the absence of a statute allowing it.<sup>7</sup>

Beasts are any four-footed animals which may be used for food, labor, or sport, distinguished from birds, fish, etc. Beasts of the chase and beasts of the forest are all those wild animals which it is lawful to hunt; among which beside others may be included the bear, wolf, fox, etc.<sup>8</sup>

Bees, while unreclaimed, are by nature wild animals.<sup>9</sup> Those which take up their abode in a tree belong to the owner of the soil, if unreclaimed, but if reclaimed and identified they belong to their former owner.<sup>10</sup> If a swarm has flown from the hive of A. they are his so long as they are in sight, and may easily be taken, otherwise they become the property of the first occupant.<sup>11</sup> Merely finding a tree on the land of another, containing a swarm of bees, and marking it, does not vest the property of the bees in the finder.<sup>12</sup> They do not become private property until actually hived.<sup>13</sup>

Cattle, in common usage, signifies only beasts of the bovine genus, as oxen, bulls, cows and their young. In laws respecting domestic beasts, horses, sheep, mules, asses and swine are generally distinguished from cattle. Where, however, a law gives damages for a trespass by cattle breaking into an enclosure, this will include horses, etc.

Cows are animals of the bovine species that have had a calf,<sup>14</sup> and under penal statutes which mention both cows and heifers an improper naming of the one for the other, in an indictment, would be fatal.<sup>15</sup>

Cruelty to animals is in many cases an indictable offence, and punishable by fine, imprisonment, or both. The character of the acts which constitute cruelty is in general specified by the statute defining the offence and prescribing the punishment. See GENERAL STATUTES.

Dogs are animals of a domestic nature. The owner of a dog has such property in him that he may maintain an action for an injury to him, or to recover him when unlawfully taken away and kept by another.<sup>16</sup>

Dogs, if dangerous animals, may lawfully be killed when their ferocity is known to their owner, or in self-defence,<sup>17</sup> but a person attacked cannot lawfully return to kill the animal in revenge. When a dog is bitten by a rabid animal it may be lawfully killed by any one.<sup>18</sup>

When, in consequence of his vicious propensities, a dog becomes a common nuisance, the owner may be indicted; and where one commits an injury, if the owner had knowledge of his mischievous propensity, he is liable for the injury.<sup>19</sup>

A man has a right to keep a dog to guard his premises, but not to put him at the entrance of his house, because a person coming there on lawful business may be injured by him, and this, though there may be another entrance to the house.<sup>20</sup> But if a dog is chained, and a visitor so incautiously go near him that he is bitten, he has no right of action against the owner.<sup>21</sup>

Doves are animals of a wild nature. They are also called pigeons. Doves are not the subject of larceny unless they are in the owner's custody, as, for example, in a dove house; or in the nest and before they can fly, or otherwise in the actual possession of another.<sup>7</sup> So also where they are reclaimed and tame, and return to their house or box.<sup>7</sup>

Estray animals are those whose owner is unknown.<sup>8</sup> Any beast, not wild, found on one's premises, and not owned by the occupant. Proceedings in the taking up of stray animals are ex parte (one-sided—by taker up), and governed by the general statutes.

A party who wishes to detain property as an estray must show an exact compliance with the law on the subject of taking up estrays, both on his own part and that of the officer before whom the appraisement was made.<sup>9</sup> He must perform all those acts which the law requires to be performed, in order to vest the property of the stray in him,<sup>4</sup> and that such acts have been performed must affirmatively, and in detail, appear on the record.<sup>5</sup>

If a man finds stray cattle in his field, he is not bound to impound or retain them for the owner, but may drive them off into the highway without being liable for a conversion.<sup>6</sup> But a person who chases a horse out of his field with a large, fierce dog, commits an unlawful act, and is liable for any injury which the act occasions.<sup>8</sup>

A person who takes an estray to keep for the owner, but does not pursue the course prescribed by statute, is not liable to an action, unless he uses the stray<sup>9</sup> or refuses to deliver it on demand.<sup>1</sup> Riding a horse to discover the owner is not use.<sup>2</sup> See GENERAL STATUTES.

Fish are animals of a wild nature. No one has any property in them until they are captured; and, like other wild animals, if having been taken they escape and regain their liberty, the captor loses his property in them. A person has no right to fish in the waters of another, and acquires no property in the fish caught except by the owner's consent. See FISHERY; REAL PROPERTY.

Game is birds and beasts of a wild nature, obtained by fowling and hunting.<sup>3</sup> Laws regulating the killing or taking of birds and beasts are in force in the different States and may be consulted by reference to the GENERAL STATUTES.

Horses are animals of a domestic nature of the age of four years and upwards;<sup>1</sup> under the age of four years they are called colts.<sup>1</sup> The word horse is used as a generic name for all animals of the horse kind.<sup>2</sup> and fraud. The lender is liable in case the thing lent is unfit or dangerous, and thereby occasions injury; as, if the owner of a horse, knowing it to be vicious and unmanageable, lends it to one ignorant of its bad qualities, concealing them from him, and by reason thereof the rider is thrown from it and injured.<sup>1</sup> The animal should be used only for the purpose, and to the extent stipulated. A borrowed horse cannot be used by a servant.<sup>2</sup> And one borrowing a horse for a week to go to Boston, keeping him a month, or goes to Albany, is responsible for any accident to the horse in his journey to Albany or after expiration of the week.<sup>3</sup> When no time is fixed a reasonable time for the purpose intended will be presumed. During the loan the borrower must care for and provide the horse with food, drink and shelter.<sup>3</sup> If from exhaustion he refuses his food he should be cared for and unworked until restored. If he dies from disease,<sup>7</sup> or is killed by inevitable accident, or the like, the borrower is not liable. When the purpose of the loan is accomplished or the time thereof is elapsed, he should be returned to his owner. A misuser of the animal will pat an end to loan.<sup>3</sup> See "Hiring," below.

DEFECTS that are patent, that is, which are manifest, open and plain to an ordinary observer (as a horse minus an eye or tail), and those also which are known to the buyer, are not usually covered by a general warranty.<sup>1</sup> The former requires no skill to discover them, and the latter may be objected to or acquiesced in at the time of purchase. In the case of latent defects existing in such a condition that they could not be detected by the buyer, and are known to the seller, who fails to disclose them to the buyer, this is a constructive fraud, unless the animal is sold "with all faults." By consenting to purchase the horse "with all faults," the purchaser takes upon himself the risk of latent or secret defects, and calculates the price accordingly.<sup>2</sup> But even this kind of a purchase would be voidable if the seller had purposely, and to deceive the purchaser, covered, filled up, patched, plastered, or otherwise practised fraud to conceal any defects, and the seller would be held liable.<sup>3</sup>

HIRING out a horse and carriage to perform a particular journey carries with it the warranty of the person letting that the horse<sup>1</sup> and carriage, and each of them, is fit and competent for such journey, and this though a particular horse has been selected out of the owner's stable.<sup>2</sup> But if a horse is hired for one purpose and is used for another, and is injured, the hirer is liable for the damage sustained. The hirer is in all cases answerable for ordinary neglect.<sup>7</sup> If, therefore, he uses the hired horse

a prudent man would his own, he is not answer- able for any damage which the horse may re- ceive.<sup>1</sup> If, however, he keeps the hired horse after a stipulated time, or uses it differently from his agreement, he is in any event liable.<sup>2</sup> If a horse is taken sick on an agreed journey, without fault of the hirer, the expense of the cure must be born by its owner.<sup>3</sup> If the hirer pre- scribe the medicine he is liable for improper treatment; but not so if he calls in a farrier.<sup>4</sup> The hirer must pay for his shoeing during the hire, unless the horses are driven by the ser- vants of him who lets them.<sup>5</sup> If the hirer lets the horse the owner may recover its value of the purchaser, though the purchaser had in good faith given the hirer full value for it, as the hirer could give him no better title than he had himself.<sup>6</sup> If one under the pretence of hiring gets a horse out of the possession of the owner and offers it for sale, there is no criminal offence until the sale is actually ef- fected.<sup>7</sup> If the horse were first hired in good faith and afterwards sold, this at common law is no felony.<sup>8</sup> If through the hirer's negli- gence the horse is stolen he must answer for it.<sup>9</sup> In general, the owner of a horse is liable for any accident which may befall it when fairly used by the hirer.<sup>10</sup> If a person hire a carriage and any number of horses, and the owner sends his postilion or servant with them, the hirer is discharged from all attention to them, and any damage done through the negli- gence of the servants must be answered for by their employer or master.<sup>11</sup> The hirer of a horse and carriage is liable for damage occasioned by the negligence of himself or his servant. Where two persons hire a carriage they are both answerable for any damage occasioned by the negligent driving of one of them. Where it is hired by one only, the other, if he is a mere passenger, is not liable.<sup>12</sup> Where the driver and servant are together in a carriage, and an injury ensues, the master, from his mere presence, is a co-trespasser, if the act of his servant amounts to a trespass.<sup>13</sup>

UNSOOUNDNESS is a disqualification for work which arises either from disease or accident.<sup>14</sup> If at the time of sale the horse has any disease which either does actually diminish the natural usefulness of the animal so as to make him less capable of work of any description, or which in its ordinary progress will diminish the natural usefulness of the animal; or if the horse has, either from disease or accident, undergone any alteration of structure that either does at the time, or in its ordinary effects, will diminish the natural usefulness of the horse, such horse is un- sound.<sup>15</sup> Sound means that the animal is sound and free from disease at the time he is war- ranted sound,<sup>16</sup> and the only qualification which it is susceptible of arises from the purpose for which the warranty is given.<sup>17</sup> A horse is sound when he is free from hereditary disease, is in possession of natural and constitutional health, and has a physical perfection consistent with his natural formation.<sup>18</sup>

VICE is unsoundness; a horse is free from vice when he has no bad habits that make him dangerous, or are injurious to his health, or in any way diminishes his natural usefulness.<sup>19</sup>

WARRANTY is distinct from the contract of sale; and unless it is made a part of the con- tract of sale (as, having agreed as to the terms of the sale, the buyer says I will purchase of you if you will warrant the article so and so, etc.), there is no warranty founded on the sale.<sup>20</sup> Warranty is a distinct contract, and must be supported by a consideration; in the above example, the consideration is the purchase. If the warranty is made after the sale there must be a new and distinct consideration.<sup>21</sup> See WARRANTY.

Hunting, or the chase, is the act of acquiring possession of animals, wild by nature, by force, cunning, or address. The act of pursuing wild animals for the purpose of catching or killing them. It is practised for food, exercise, diversion, or for the destruction of noxious animals. The hunter acquires a right to such animals by possessing them, and they thereby become his property.<sup>22</sup> But no man has a right to enter the lands of another for the purpose of hunting without his consent.<sup>23</sup>

Injuria to animals of a domestic nature are the subject of an action at law for the damage sustained, and where it amounts to cruelty, in many States, to a criminal prosecution. See CRIMINAL LAW, PLEADING, PRACTICE.

Mischivous animals render their owners liable when known to them to be so, and they are responsible when they permit them to go at large, for the damage they may do.<sup>24</sup> Any per- son may justify the killing of ferocious animals.<sup>25</sup>

Pounds are enclosures erected by public authority, in which cattle and other beasts are confined and detained when taken in trespass- ing, stray, or going at large in violation of law.<sup>26</sup>

like, a man may have an absolute property, because they continue perpetually in his possession and occupation, and will not stray from his house and person unless by accident or fraudulent enticement, in either of which cases the owner does not lose his property.<sup>3</sup> But in animals wild by nature a man can have no absolute property; they belong to him only while they continue in his possession, for if at any time they regain their natural liberty, his property instantly ceases, unless they have the intention of returning, which is only to be known by their habit.<sup>4</sup>

Animals, wild by nature, so long as they are reclaimed by the art and power of man, are the subject of a qualified property; but when they are abandoned, or escape, and return to their natural liberty and ferocity, without the intention of returning, the property in them ceases. While this qualified property continues, it is as much under the protection of the law as any other property, and every invasion of it is redressed in the same manner.<sup>5</sup> If an animal belongs to the class of tame animals, as for instance, to the class of horses, sheep, or cattle, he is then clearly a subject of absolute property; but if he belongs to the class of animals which are wild by nature, and owe all their temporary docility to the discipline of man, such as deer, fish, and the several kind of fowl, then the animal is the subject of qualified property, and which continues so long as the tameness and domestication remain. Whether the animal be wild or tame is referred to our knowledge of his habits, derived from fact and actual experience.

Pursuit alone gives no property in animals wild by nature.<sup>6</sup> The animal must have been brought within the power of the pursuer before property in the animal vests; for mere pursuit without bringing the animal within the power of the party is not sufficient. The possession must be so far established by the aid of nets, snares, or other means, that the animal cannot escape. An action will not lie against a person for killing and taking an animal which has been pursued by another, and was then actually in view of the person who had originally found, started, and chased it; for the mere pursuit and being in view of the animal did not create a property, because no possession had been acquired.<sup>7</sup> And property in a wounded wild beast does not attach until the beast is actually taken.<sup>8</sup>

Sales of domestic animals are governed by the general law of sale of personal property, and whether they are in the owner's possession, or under his immediate control, at the time of sale, is not a matter of much moment. But to make a valid sale of animals of a wild nature, the vender must have a qualified property in them, produced by reclaiming, taming, or confining them, as deer in his park, doves in his dove-cot, or fish in his private pond, etc.

Young. It is a rule that the young of domestic or tame animals belong to the owner of the dam or mother, according to the maxim;<sup>9</sup> "The offspring follow the condition of the mother." This is the law in case of slaves and animals.

AN APPRENTICE is a person bound in due form of law to a master, to learn from him his art, trade, or business, and to serve him during the time of his apprenticeship.<sup>1</sup>

Apprenticeship is a contract by which one person who understands some art, trade, profession, or business, and called the master, undertakes to teach the same to another, who is a minor, and called the apprentice, who, on his part, is bound to serve the master during a definite period of time, in such art, trade, profession, or business. It is the term for which an apprentice is bound to serve his master.<sup>2</sup>

Assignment. Apprenticeship is a relation which cannot, in the absence of a statute allowing it, be assigned.<sup>3</sup> Though if under such an assignment the apprentice continue with his new master, with the consent of all the parties and his own, it will be construed as a continuation of the old apprenticeship.<sup>4</sup>

Binding out. By the common law an infant could bind himself apprentice by indenture because it is for his benefit.<sup>5</sup> But on account of liability to abuse, this right has been regulated by statute, and is not binding upon the infant unless entered into with the consent of the parent or guardian; the father, if both parents are alive; the parent and guardian where he has both, with the infant's consent, which must be made a part of the contract;<sup>6</sup> or if the infant is a pauper, then by the authorities and without his consent.<sup>7</sup> The contract need not specify the particular trade to be taught, but is sufficient if it be a contract to teach such manual occupation, or branch of business as shall be found best suited to the genius or capacity of the apprentice.

A Contract of apprenticeship is generally by deed or indenture,<sup>1</sup> to which the infant, as well as the parent or guardian, must be a party, or the infant will not be bound.<sup>2</sup> It continues, generally, if the apprentice be a male, during minority only; if a female, until she arrives at the age of eighteen.

To be binding on the apprentice, the contract must be made as prescribed by statute.<sup>3</sup> An indenture not entered into according to law is utterly void, as concerns the apprentice therein bound; but it can only be avoided by the apprentice himself;<sup>4</sup> and if the apprentice do elect to avoid it, he will not be allowed to recover wages for his services, the relation being sufficient to rebut any promise to pay which might otherwise be implied.<sup>5</sup> The master will be bound by his covenants, though additional to those required by statute.<sup>6</sup>

The age of every apprentice must be inserted in the indenture; but the age as stated in the indenture is only prima facie evidence, and may be contradicted by proof of the true age.<sup>7</sup>

In a common indenture of apprenticeship the father is bound for the performance of the covenants by the son.<sup>8</sup> But in an action for non-performance or desertion by the son, he may answer that the master has abandoned the trade which the son was apprenticed to learn, or that he has driven the son away by cruel treatment.<sup>9</sup>

Duties, etc. An apprentice is bound to obey his master in all his lawful commands, take care of his property, and promote his interest; endeavor to learn his trade or business, and perform all the covenants of his indenture, not contrary to law. He must not leave his master's service during the term of the apprenticeship.<sup>10</sup> The apprentice is entitled to payment for extraordinary services, when promised by the master,<sup>11</sup> and even when no express promise has been made, under peculiar circumstances.<sup>12</sup>

The duties of the master are to instruct the apprentice, by teaching him, in good faith, the knowledge of the art which he has undertaken to teach him, though he will be excused for not making a good workman if the apprentice is incapable of learning the trade, the burden of proving which is on the master.<sup>13</sup> He ought to watch over the conduct of the apprentice, giving him good advice, and showing him a good example, and fulfilling toward him the duties of a father, as in his character of master he stands in the place of the parent. He is also required to fill all the covenants he has entered into by the indenture. He must not abuse his authority, either by bad treatment, or by employing his apprentice in menial employments, wholly unconnected with the business he is to learn, or in any service which is immoral or contrary to law;<sup>14</sup> but may correct him with moderation for negligence and misbehavior.<sup>15</sup> He cannot dismiss his apprentice but by consent of all the parties to the indenture, or with the sanction of the court approving the indenture,<sup>16</sup> even though the apprentice should steal his master's property, or by reason of incurable illness become incapable of service—the covenants of the master and apprentice being independent.<sup>17</sup> He cannot remove the apprentice out of the State, unless such removal is provided for in the contract, or may be implied from its nature; and if he do so remove him, the contract ceases to be obligatory.<sup>18</sup>

Employment and Enticing Away, etc. When an apprentice is employed by a third person without the knowledge or consent of the master, the master is entitled to all his earnings, whether the person who employed him did or did not know that he was an apprentice;<sup>19</sup> but in an action for harboring or enticing away an apprentice, a knowledge of the apprenticeship by the defendant is an indispensable requisite to recovery in such an action.

The plaintiff should prove the apprenticeship by the indenture, which should be produced and proved in the usual way. It should be proved that the defendant knew of the apprenticeship at the time of his enticing away or harboring the apprentice,<sup>20</sup> but it is sufficient to show that the apprentice was enticed away or harbored by the defendant. The damages must be proved.<sup>21</sup> The value of the services lost should be shown. The measure of damages is not to be ascertained at the actual loss the plaintiff sustained at the time, but for the injury done by causing the apprentice to leave the plaintiff's employment.<sup>22</sup>

The defendant should be prepared to disprove the plaintiff's case; he cannot, however, avail himself of any objection to the indenture of apprenticeship.<sup>23</sup> He should reduce the damages as far as he can.

ASSIGNMENT. See ACCOUNT; ASSIGNMENT; BOND; BOOKKEEPING; LEASE; MORTGAGE, ETC.

AN ASSIGNMENT is a transfer by writing, as distinguished from one by delivery. It is a transfer or making over to another the whole of any property, real or personal, in possession or in action, or of any estate or right therein. A transfer of title or interest by writing; the writing by which the assignment is made.

An assignment differs from a lease, which is the conveyance of a less term than the lessor has in the estate.

Every demand connected with a right of property, real or personal, is assignable. Rent to grow due; the right to cut trees, which have been sold on the grantor's land; the services of an indentured apprentice; a replevin bond; a claim for sheriff's fees; future debts; a guarantee; and a mere possibility, coupled with an interest, may be assigned. As a general rule, all choses in action, such as bonds, mortgages, notes, judgments, debts, contracts, agreements, as well relating to personal as real estate, are assignable, and will pass to the assignee a right of action in the name of such assignee, against all parties liable to an action.

When a chese in action is assignable, it may be assigned in separate parcels to different persons; and either of the assignees may maintain an action to recover the portion to him assigned. Where, however, a debt is assigned in separate parcels, it is, in effect, a splitting of the cause of action, and the whole debt, notwithstanding the assignments, should be sued for in one action. If the owner of some part of the debt will not join as co-plaintiff, he should be made a defendant. A single debt (a single cause of action) cannot be converted into several debts (several causes of action) unless with the consent of the debtor.

Some choses in action are not assignable. For example, an officer's pay or commission; or the salary of a judge; or claims for fishing; or other bounties of the government; or rights of action for fraud or tort. Nor can personal trusts be assigned; as the right of a master in his apprentice; or the duties of a testamentary guardian. A person cannot sell to another a debt against himself; a debtor has no assignable interest in debts owing by him. A demand due from a person to himself and another as partners, is, to the extent of his own interest in it, no debt against him.

Consideration. An assignee of a right of action is not bound to show that he gave any valuable consideration for the assignment. The owner of the cause of action may give it away if he choose, and the donee will have as good a right as though he were an assignee for value. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed the assignment was for a sufficient consideration. Proof of a valuable consideration is only necessary to be made when a defence is set up, which, unless the plaintiff was purchaser for value, would conclude him; as where the object is to prove that the alleged assignment is a mere sham. And when, in pleading, the assignment is alleged to have been for value received, the allegation as to value received is immaterial.

No formality is necessary to effect a transfer of a chose in action. Any transaction between the contracting parties which indicates their intention to pass the beneficial interest in the instrument from one to the other, is sufficient for that purpose; a debt or claim may be assigned by parol as well as by writing.

Proof of Assignment. An assignment is proved by the evidence of the payee of the note in suit, that he had indorsed (or delivered without indorsement, for a valuable consideration) the note to the plaintiff, and that he has no interest in the note when sworn. The production by the plaintiff, on the trial, of an assignment to himself, after due proof of the execution thereof by the assignor, is sufficient evidence of a delivery of such assignment; and that it was delivered on the day it bears date.

Warranty. In every assignment of an instrument, even not negotiable, the assignee impliedly warrants that the instrument is valid, and the obligor liable to pay it; and that there is no legal defence to its collection, arising out of his own connection with the original transaction. That the party was competent to contract; and that the amount is unpaid.

Where a debt is assigned it carries with it all the collateral securities held by the assignor for its collection, although they are not mentioned or referred to in the assignment. An assignment of a guaranteed note carries with it the guarantee; and the assignment of a debt carries with it, as an incident, a collateral mortgage, by which it is secured.

The proper technical and operative words in assignment are "assign, transfer, and set over"; but "give, grant, bargain, and sell," or any other words which show the intent of the parties to make a complete transfer, will operate an assignment.

Assignment—Dower.

By Her.

The assignment of dower is an act by which the share of a widow in her deceased husband's real estate is ascertained and set apart to her.

The assignment may be made by the heir, or his guardian, or the devisee, or other person in possession of the lands subject to dower, or it may be made after a course of judicial proceedings, where a voluntary assignment is refused. In this case the assignment is made by the sheriff, who sets off her share by metes and bounds. The assignment should be made within the time limited by law after the death of the husband, during which time the widow shall remain in her husband's principal residence. The share of the widow is usually one-third of all the real estate of which the husband has been possessed during the marriage; and no writing or delivery is necessary in a valid assignment, the dower being so according to the view of the law of the possession of her husband. If the guardian of a minor heir assign more than he ought, the heir on coming of age may enforce an abatement of dower.

Know all men by these presents:

That A. B. was in his lifetime, and at the time of his death, on the — day of —, seized in fee of diverse lands and tenements in — (or as follows: describing them), which upon his decease descended unto I. B.

AN AUTHORITY is an enactment or an opinion relied upon as establishing or declaring the rule of law which is to be applied in any case. The opinion of a court, or of counsel, or of a text-writer, upon any question, is usually fortified by a citation of authorities.

The authority of the constitution and of the statutes and municipal ordinances are paramount;

if there is any conflict among these the constitution controls, and courts declare a statute or ordinance which conflicts with the former to be of no authority.

The decisions of courts of justice upon similar cases are the authorities to which most frequent recourse is to be had; and although in theory

these are subordinate to the first class, yet in practice they continually explain, enlarge, or limit the provisions of enactments, and thus in effect largely modify them. The word authorities is frequently used in a restricted sense to designate citations of this class.

The opinions of legal writers of the vast number of treatises, commentaries, and textbooks, are another and still more subordinate class of authorities. Opinions of a text-writer

upon any particular point must be considered not merely as the opinion of the text-writer, but as the supposed result of the authorities to which he refers. If, on examination of those authorities, they are found not to establish it, his opinion is disregarded. Where, however, the writer declares his own opinion as founded upon principle, the learning and ability of the writer, together with the extent to which the reason which he assigns commend themselves to the reader, determine the weight of his opinion. In estimating the learning and ability of an author, his judicial or non-judicial station is not a just test of his authority, though it may be borne in mind.

An authority may be of any degree of weight from that of absolute conclusiveness down to the faintest presumption.

Abbreviations are one or more letters used for a word, thus: Bl. Comm., for Blackstone's Commentaries, U. S. A., for United States of America. They are also arbitrary marks or signs, thus: $ for dollar, and the like. Christian names, articles of trade and commerce, quantities, qualities, as well as text-books, reports, etc., are frequently represented by abbreviations often understood by the individual, professional, tradesman, etc., only. In matters of importance, as accounts, agreements, amounts, dates, names, qualities, and the like, abbreviations should be avoided, as tending to misconstruction, misunderstanding, and controversy; yet, if an abbreviation is adopted in the inception of any transaction, it should be carried through to its final consummation.

Abbreviations should approach as nearly as possible to the outlines of the original word.

Tables of abbreviations, etc., of authorities in general use, and cited in this volume, may be found in the various law catalogues, legal bibliography, reports, etc.

Citation of authorities is the reference to the text of the acts of legislatures, treatises, text-books, reports of causes decided by the courts, for the purpose of supporting the propositions advanced, and to offer facilities for their examination and comparison upon particular subjects.

The knowledge of the law is to a great degree the knowledge of precedents. This makes a frequent reference to such precedents necessary, in order to confirm a statement of the law. Constant reference to enacted law is absolutely necessary. Reference to works of legal writers is also necessary, to elucidate doubtful points of law. The laws of the general government are generally cited by their date, as: Act of June 15, 1876; Act of 1876, Ch. 170, U. S. Statutes at Large, etc. In most States reference is had to the General Statutes. Text-books and reports of cases decided in the various courts are cited by the number of the volume and page. Sometimes the book is cited by paragraphs or sections.

Law is that which is laid down or established by the supreme power of a State, by the legislature. It is the aggregate of those rules and principles of conduct which the governing power in a community recognizes, and which it will enforce and sanction, and by and according to which it will regulate, limit, or protect the conduct of its members. It includes not only the acts of the legislature and constitution but reports of adjudicated cases, text-books, treatises, etc.

Leading cases are those cases decided by a court of last resort which decides some particular point in question and to which reference is constantly or frequently made, for the purpose of determining the law in similar cases. The character of a leading case depends upon its priority, the character of the court, the amount of consideration given it, and its freedom from collateral matters and questions.

Maxims are principles of law universally admitted as just, and consonant with reason. Maxims of law are similar to axioms in geometry.<sup>1</sup> They are authorities and principles part of the general customs or common law of the land, and are of the same strength as statute law, when the judges have decided what is a maxim; and this belongs to the judges and not the jury.<sup>2</sup> Maxims of the law are considered law.<sup>3</sup>

Precedents are those legal acts, decisions, formulae, instruments, etc., which are deemed worthy to serve as rules or models for subsequent cases. It is much better to stick to the known general rules than to follow any one particular precedent which may be founded on reasons unknown to us.<sup>4</sup> A former decision is in general to be followed, unless "manifestly absurd and unjust"; and in the latter case it is declared, when overruled, that the former sentence was not law, not that it was bad law. The consideration and deliberation upon which it was made is an important element.<sup>5</sup> The length of time during which it has been acted on as a rule of property is to be considered, and the length of time it has stood unquestioned; since where a rule declared to be law, even by an inferior tribunal, having been habitually adopted and acted upon by the community, becomes thus imbedded in the affairs of men, and it may frequently be better to enforce it as it is than to disturb or unsettle it. In order to give precedents a binding effect there should be a current of decisions.<sup>6</sup> The antiquity and frequency of their adoption in questions of property might unjustly affect vested rights by a departure from them, and this, therefore, is very cautiously done.

Written forms of procedure which have been sanctioned by the courts, or by long professional usage, and are commonly followed, are also precedents.<sup>7</sup> See PLEADING.

Principles are truths or propositions so clear that they cannot be proved or contradicted, unless by propositions which are still clearer. Principles are of two kinds—universal and first principles. Universal principles are those known as axioms and maxims. First principles are those which, First, are so clear that they cannot be proved by anterior or more manifest truths; Second, are almost universally received; Third, are so strongly impressed on our minds that we conform ourselves to them whatever may be our avowed opinions. Courts recognize but do not establish principles; thus "the right to defend one's self continues as long as there is an unjust attack," was a principle long before it was ever decided by a court.

Reason is that power by which we distinguish truth from falsehood and right from wrong, and by which we are enabled to combine means for the attainment of particular ends. Reason is the soul of the law, for when the reason ceases the law ceases. A person deprived of reason is not, in many cases, criminally responsible for his acts, nor can he enter into any contract.

Seals are impressions upon wax, wafer or some tenacious substance capable of being impressed.<sup>1</sup> The public seal of a foreign state proves itself, and public acts, decrees and judgments exemplified under this seal are received as true and genuine,<sup>2</sup> if such state has been acknowledged within the jurisdiction within which the forum is located.<sup>3</sup> The seal of a notary public is taken judicial notice of the world over.<sup>4</sup> See SEALS.

BAILMENTS. See AGENCY; CONTRACTS. BAILMENT is a delivery of personal property by one party to another, to be held according to the purpose or object of delivery, and to be returned or delivered over when the purpose or object of the delivery is accomplished. It is the delivery of goods in trust upon a contract, either expressed or implied, that the trust shall be faithfully executed on the part of the bailee.<sup>1</sup>

The Bailor is the person delivering the goods.

The Bailee is the person to whom the goods are delivered.

Practically, bailments are of three kinds:

2. Bailments which are for the benefit of the bailee, or some person represented by him.

3. Bailments which are for the benefit of both parties.

There are three degrees of care and diligence required of the bailee, and three degrees of negligence, for which he is responsible, according to the purpose and object of the bailment. Thus, in the first class, the bailee is required to exercise only slight care, and is responsible only for gross neglect; in the second, he is required to exercise great care, and is responsible even for slight neglect; in the third, he is required to exercise ordinary care, and is responsible for ordinary neglect.

Diligence is the doing things in the proper time.<sup>1</sup> The following are the three degrees of diligence:<sup>2</sup>

1. Ordinary diligence is that degree of diligence which men of ordinary prudence exercise in respect to their own concerns.

2. Great or extraordinary diligence is that which very prudent persons take of their own concerns.

3. Slight diligence is that degree of diligence which men, habitually careless, or of little prudence, generally exercise in the management of their own business.

Negligence consists of the following degrees:

1. Ordinary negligence is the want of ordinary diligence.

2. Slight negligence is the want of great diligence.

3. Gross negligence is the want of slight diligence.

There is a supplementary class of bailments, founded upon the policy of the law, in which the bailee is responsible for loss without any neglect on his part, being, with certain exceptions, an insurer of the safety of the thing bailed.

When a person receives goods or property of another to keep without recompense, and he acts in good faith, keeping them as his own, he is not answerable for the loss or injury, as he derives no benefit from the bailment; he is responsible only for bad faith or gross negligence.<sup>3</sup> But this obligation may be enlarged or decreased by a special acceptance,<sup>4</sup> and a spontaneous offer on the part of the bailee increases the amount of care required of him.<sup>5</sup> Knowledge by the bailee of the character of the goods,<sup>6</sup> and by the bailor of the manner in which the bailee will keep them,<sup>7</sup> are important circumstances. So, when a person receives an article, and undertakes gratuitously some commission in respect to it, as to carry it from one place to another, he is only liable for its injury or loss through his gross negligence. It is

The borrower, on the other hand, who receives the entire benefit of the bailment, must use extraordinary diligence in taking care of the thing borrowed, and is responsible for even the slightest neglect.<sup>9</sup> He must apply it only to the very purpose for which it was borrowed;<sup>10</sup> he cannot permit any other person to use it;<sup>11</sup> he cannot keep it beyond the time limited;<sup>12</sup> and cannot keep it as a pledge for a demand otherwise arising against the bailor.<sup>13</sup>

In the third class of bailments the benefits derived from the contract are reciprocal; it is advantageous to both parties. In the case of a pledge given on a loan of money or to secure the payment of a debt, the one party gains a credit, and the other security, by the contract. And, in a bailment for hire, one party acquires the use of the thing bailed, and the other the price paid therefor; the advantage is mutual. So, in a bailment for labor and services, as when one person delivers materials to another to be manufactured, the bailee is paid for his services, and the owner receives back his property enhanced in value by the process of manufacture. In these and like cases the parties stand upon an equal footing; there is a perfect mutuality between them. And, therefore, the bailee can only be held responsible for the use of ordinary care and common prudence in the preservation of the property bailed.<sup>14</sup>

The diligence required is proportioned to the value of the property bailed, or the delicacy of the operation to be performed.<sup>15</sup> A man would not be expected to take the same care of a bag of oats as a bag of gold; or a bale of cotton, as a box of diamonds; or a load of wood, as a box of rare paintings; or a rude block of marble, as an exquisitely sculptured statue. The bailee should proportion his care to the injury or loss which is likely to be sustained by any improvidence on his part.<sup>16</sup>

A BAILEE is one to whom goods are bailed; the party to whom personal property is delivered under a contract of bailment. His duties are to act in good faith, and perform his undertaking in respect to the property intrusted to him, with the diligence and care required by the nature of his engagement. When the bailee alone receives benefit from the bailment, as where he borrows goods and chattels for use, he is bound to exercise extraordinary care and diligence in preserving them from loss or injury.<sup>17</sup> When the bailment is mutually beneficial to the parties, as where goods and chattels are hired or pledged to secure a debt, the bailee is bound to exercise ordinary diligence in preserving the property.<sup>1</sup> When the bailee receives no benefit from the bailment, as where he accepts goods, chattels, or money to keep, without recompense, or undertakes gratuitously the performance of some commission in regard to them, he is answerable only for the use of the ordinary care which he bestows upon his own property of a similar nature.<sup>2</sup>

The bailee is bound to redeliver the property, according to the nature of his engagement, as soon as the purpose for which it was bailed shall have been accomplished. In bailments which are beneficial to both of the parties to the contract, the bailee has a right to retain the thing bailed until the object of the bailment has been accomplished. A bailee for work, labor, and services, such as a mechanic or artisan, who receives chattels or materials to be repaired or manufactured, has a lien upon the property for services.<sup>3</sup> Other bailees, innkeepers, common carriers, and warehousemen, also have a lien for their charges.<sup>4</sup>

The bailee has a special property in the goods or chattels intrusted to him, sufficient to enable him to defend them by suit against all persons but the rightful owner. The depositor and mandatory acting gratuitously, and the finder of lost property, have this right.<sup>5</sup> A bailee, with a mere naked authority, having a right to remuneration for his trouble, but coupled with no other interest, may support trespass for any injury amounting to a trespass done while he was in actual possession of the thing.<sup>6</sup>

A bailee cannot dispute his bailor's title.<sup>7</sup> A bailee is not responsible for losses by robbery,<sup>8</sup> lightning, tempest, inundation, and other like calamities, unless there has been some unjustifiable delay, or the party has taken upon him the risk of the casualty, or he is at the same time guilty of neglect.<sup>9</sup> But losses by more private or secret theft, to excuse the party, depend upon the nature of the bailment, and the particular circumstances of the case.<sup>10</sup>

A BAILOR is one who bails a thing to another; the party who delivers personal property under a contract of bailment. The bailor must act in good faith toward the bailee;<sup>11</sup> he must permit him to enjoy the thing bailed according to the contract; and, in some bailments, as in hiring, warrant the title of the thing hired, and, probably, keep it in suitable order and repair for the purpose of the bailment,<sup>12</sup> according to custom, or as the parties may agree.<sup>13</sup>

CARRIERS are those who undertake to transport goods from one place to another.<sup>14</sup>

Carriers are either common or private carriers. Common carriers are such as carry goods for hire, indifferently for all persons.

The definition includes carriers by land and water. They are, on the one hand, stage-coach proprietors, railway companies, truckmen, wagoners and teamsters, carmen and porters, and express companies, whether such persons undertake to carry goods from one portion of the same town to another, or through the whole extent of the country, or even from one state or kingdom to another. And, on the other hand, this term includes the owners and masters of every kind of vessel or water craft who set themselves before the public as the carriers of freight of any kind for all who choose to employ them, whether the extent of their navigation be from one continent to another, or only in the coasting trade, or whether employed in lading or unlading goods, or in ferrying, with whatever mode of motive power they adopt.<sup>15</sup>

Common carriers of passengers are such as carry persons for hire, and are bound to carry all who offer.<sup>16</sup>

Private carriers are such as do not carry goods for hire indifferently for all persons.

COMMON CARRIERS. Where a carrier undertakes to carry only for the particular occasion, he cannot be held responsible as a common carrier. So, also, if the carrier be employed in carrying for one, or a definite number of persons, by way of special undertaking. To constitute one a common carrier, he must make it, for the time, a regular employment to carry goods for hire for all who choose to employ him.<sup>17</sup> This rule embraces the proprietors of stage wagons and coaches, omnibuses and railways;<sup>18</sup> also carters, expressmen, porters, ship-owners, and all who engage regularly in the transportation of goods or money, either from town to town, or from place to place in the same town.<sup>19</sup>

Common carriers are held to the responsibility of insurers for the safe delivery of property intrusted to their care, upon the grounds of public policy, to prevent fraud, and collusion with thieves, and because the owner, having surrendered up the possession of his property, is generally unable to show how or where the loss occurred.<sup>20</sup>

Common carriers are responsible for all loss or damage during transportation, from whatever cause, except the act of God, or the public enemy.<sup>21</sup> The carrier is not responsible for loss: 10 N. losses occurring from natural causes, such as frost, fermentation, evaporation, or natural decay of perishable articles, or the natural or necessary wear in the course of transportation, provided the carrier exercises all reasonable care to have the loss or deterioration as little as practicable.)

Carriers both by land and water, when they undertake the general business of carrying every kind of goods, are bound to carry all which offer; and if they refuse, without just excuse, they are liable to an action. But any common carrier, whether a natural person, or corporation, may restrict his business within such limits as he may deem expedient, and he is not bound to accept goods out of the line of his usual business.

Authority of Agents and Servants. The board of directors have all the power that resides in the corporation, unless restricted by the charter and by-law; other agents and servants cannot bind the company beyond their sphere of operation, and an agent who assumes to bind the company beyond his sphere, cannot. But the fact that a company has ratified other similar contracts of the particular servant might be evidence against them. A notice by the company of want of authority in servants, renders their acts void. A servant may bind the company even when he disobeys their directions, if acting in the scope of his authority. A common carrier of goods is liable for the acts of all the servants of his sub-contractors, and it makes no difference that the employments were allowed to be retained by the servants as a part of their compensation, unless this were known to the owner of the goods, and he contracts with the servants as principals. An owner may countermand the destination of goods through the proper agent. An agent's authority is a matter of fact.

watch in a trunk is proper baggage. So, also, is money for expenses, books for reading, clothing, spectacles, tools of trade, and many other similar things. A carrier is responsible for baggage when the passenger goes by another conveyance. Carriers cannot restrict all responsibility for baggage, but may make reasonable regulations and follow them.

Stage proprietors and omnibus drivers, who assume to carry luggage for all who apply, from railway stations about the towns, are responsible as common carriers; and it does not affect the responsibility of such carriers where they enter the names of passengers on way-bills, but do not enter the baggage; where they are employed by hotel-keepers to transport their guests, both are responsible.

Responsibility for. It is an elementary principle of law that railways, steamboats, and other carriers of passengers, although not liable for injuries to their passengers without their fault, are nevertheless responsible, as common carriers, for their baggage, or luggage. Where one company checks baggage through a succession of lines, owned by different companies, each company becomes responsible for the whole route. The baggage-check given at the time of receiving such baggage is regarded as prima facie evidence of the liability of the company, and such responsibility continues until the delivery of the same to the passenger, or to his order; a check therefor "stands in the place of a bill of lading," and when different railways, forming a continuous line, run their cars over the whole line, and sell tickets for the whole route, the action lies against either company for the loss of baggage; they remain liable until a full and unequivocal delivery to the owner. But the company is not liable unless the baggage is given in charge of their servants, and if the servant accepts, the carrier is responsible for the baggage. Their liability results from duty, and not from contract.

the receipt of goods, is generally the written evidence of the contract between the parties, and is expected to contain all the exemption from general responsibility which it is competent for the carrier to claim. Parol evidence is not admissible to vary the contract of shipment thus evidenced.<sup>1</sup> But as between immediate parties the bill of lading is not conclusive as to the quantity or condition of the goods at the time of shipment, especially when there was no opportunity to inspect them.<sup>2</sup> Between the consignor and carrier the bill of lading is (in the absence of proof to the contrary) evidence of the truth of its contents.<sup>3</sup> Questions of quantity and quality of goods cannot be raised where intermediate carriers are concerned.<sup>4</sup> A bill of lading may be explained,<sup>5</sup> but cannot be contradicted or controverted as to the terms of the contract, by oral evidence.<sup>6</sup> The goods must be forwarded according to the bill of lading.<sup>7</sup> If a shipper give separate bills of lading to the different owners of wheat, shipped in the same car, he is liable to each owner for the conversation of his portion.<sup>8</sup> The statement in a bill of lading that the goods were received in good order is not conclusive evidence of that fact; but it is competent to show that such was not the fact.<sup>9</sup> A bill of lading must be construed with reference to the nature of the route and the course of business.<sup>10</sup> The bill is conclusive as to third parties who act upon it.<sup>11</sup> A transfer by indorsement and delivery of the bill of lading passes to the indorsee all vested and contingent rights of action.<sup>12</sup> An exception in a bill of lading does not affect its general construction.<sup>13</sup> The bill as to the receipt of goods is evidence only as between the parties, but conclusive as to parties acting in good faith under it.<sup>14</sup> But in cases of fraud the estoppel will not bind the owner of a vessel or his interest in it.<sup>15</sup> Delivery must be made, if practicable, as agreed,<sup>16</sup> or the carrier must show loss by excepted risks.<sup>17</sup> Terms used in a bill of lading, as in other written instruments, will receive such construction as the usage of the business requires.<sup>18</sup> An assignment of a bill of lading transfers the title to goods but not the claim for damages.<sup>19</sup>

2. In the case of goods to be forwarded beyond this Company's line their liability is to extend only to their own portion of the route over which the goods are to be transported.

4. Claims for loss or damage shall be made in writing immediately, and if delayed for more than ten days after the delivery of the article, or after due time for the delivery thereof, the Company shall not be liable. In case of loss or damage to any of the goods herein mentioned, for which this Company would be liable, it is agreed that they shall have the benefit of any insurance that may have been or may be effected on said goods, and shall in no case be answerable over to the insurers.

5. In pursuance of a law of New Jersey, passed March 10th, 1853, authorizing Railroad Companies to limit their responsibility for $200 for every 100 pounds of goods, unless additional compensation be paid, it is agreed that this Company are not, in any case, to be liable for more than a dollar a pound for the loss or damage to the goods carried under this agreement.

6. In the case of goods received for transportation from connecting lines, this Company shall have the benefit of any exemptions from liability stipulated for in the bills of lading given to the shipper or consignor.

7. The goods herein referred to shall be subject to a lien, and may be retained for freight and charges on other goods, due from the party on whose account they are transported, as well as for freight and charges on the goods retained.

Marked as per margin, and to transport goods of government, war or the enemy, restraint of government, at sea, in port, machinery, boilers, steam, sea, rivers and steam navigation of any nature and kind accepted on what of this line at the port of ———, upon surrender of this bill of lading, and payment in bankable money of freight and charges thereon, and all arrangements of freight and charges upon other goods due by the same consignees or owners; or if the marks indicate a destination to a point beyond said port, to a connecting company or companies to be transferred and delivered by it or them to such person or persons upon such surrender and payment as aforesaid.

Upon the following conditions: In cases where the marks in margin, as above, indicate an ultimate destination beyond the port of ———, this line is authorized to deliver the goods from their wharf as above, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore mentioned, to any connecting steamboat, railroad, transportation, express or forwarding companies or agents, to be transported to such ultimate point, and delivered by them to the person or persons above named; which companies or agents so selected shall be regarded exclusively as the owner or consignee's agent, entitled to the benefit of the conditions and provisions of this and of their own bill of lading, if any, given therefor, and of all insurance.

In cases of loss, detriment or damage to the goods, the transportation company in whose actual custody they shall be at the time of its occurrence shall alone be responsible therefor. This line shall not be liable beyond the port of ———, though it may have fixed, charged or received a through rate of freight, and may have delivered the goods as above provided, to be transported to such ultimate point.

This line is not responsible for the goods while on the pier or wharf awaiting shipment, nor after they have been discharged upon the wharf at the port of ———. Transportation companies taking possession of them for delivery to any place beyond are not responsible after their arrival at their wharf, depot or station at such place. The goods shall be received by the consignee or owner at the ultimate port of delivery, package by package, and if not taken away during the day of their arrival, may, at the option of this line, or at that of such other company, be sent to shore, or be permitted to lay where landed, or be returned to the port of shipment, — all at the expense and risk of the owner, shipper or consignee.

No responsibility will be assumed for gold, silver, precious stones or metals, jewelry or treasures of any kind, pictures, plate-glass, china, glass or statuary, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, in which their nature and value are expressed, nor for goods not specified in this bill of lading, nor for any package beyond the value of $100, unless another valuation be in such bill of lading declared.

All claims for damage to goods must be adjusted in the presence of an officer of the company having the same then in custody before they are removed from the station or wharf. Their value, unless they shall subsequently have fallen in price, shall be taken to be their value or cost at the place and time of shipment. Unless written demand for damage done shall be made upon the company liable therefor, or upon the company which actually delivered the goods, within ten days after delivery, it shall be taken to have been waived, and no suit therefor shall be brought to recover the same.

Weights, contents and condition of packages being unknown, no responsibility therefor is assumed. There shall be no liability for coopers or mending, for loss in weight, for leakage, breakage, sweat or rust, nor for frost, heat, natural decay of goods, or unavoidable exposure to weather. Yarnish, turpentine, camphene, burning fluid, or inflammable goods of any description, on deck only, and in all cases to be at owner's risk.

And it is further expressly stipulated, that in case the steamship shall be detained at the quarantine, and be there obliged to discharge the articles named in this bill of lading, that all risk and liability to the steamship or to the owners thereof, shall cease, and the obligations of the steamship under this bill of lading be deemed to have been fully accomplished, when the articles shall have been delivered from the tackles of the steamship, and all risks and expenses incurred thereafter shall be on account of the aforesaid owner, shipper or consignee.

The acceptance of this bill of lading is an agreement on the part of the owner of the goods to abide by all its stipulations, exceptions and conditions.

Course of Business and Usages of Trade. Those who employ railway companies are bound to know their manner of transacting their business, for the usages of any particular trade, such as are uniform and general, are presumed to be familiar to all having transactions in that trade or business.
Contracts for transportation contain by impli-

Damages and other Incidents. Damages for total loss are the value of the goods at the place of destination.<sup>1</sup> If the goods are only damaged the owner is bound to receive them and the amount of damage.<sup>2</sup> Upon evidence of a servant's unfaithfulness or negligence, some explanation must be given, or the company will be held liable.<sup>3</sup> A company is liable for special damages where they act in bad faith,<sup>4</sup> but ordinarily they are not liable for special damage.<sup>5</sup> The consignor owning the goods is the proper party to sue.<sup>6</sup> Actions may be brought in the name of bailees, or agents who have the rightful custody of the goods, and who make the bailment (but a recovery in such cases bars the claim of the general owner),<sup>7</sup> or in the name of the owner.<sup>8</sup> Where

Demurrage. Demurrage is a claim by way of compensation for the detention of property which is subsequently restored.<sup>7</sup> An allowance made to the owner of a vessel for delay or detention in port beyond the appointed time of departure. This expense is paid by the merchant who causes the detention. Strictly speaking, it is only due when expressly stipulated for in the contract for affreightment.<sup>8</sup> A railway has no lien for the compensation impliedly due them, for the detention of their cars an unreasonable time, in discharging a cargo, the cars remaining during the time in a public highway.<sup>9</sup>

Duty in general, etc. It is a well-settled principle of the law that common carriers, both of goods and passengers, are bound to carry for all persons that apply, unless they have a reasonable excuse for the refusal so to do.<sup>1</sup> Railway companies, and others who carry goods, in any mode, for all who apply, are common carriers.<sup>2</sup> Railways are made liable as common carriers of passengers' baggage and of freight,<sup>3</sup> and their responsibility results, not from any contract, but from the nature of the office and business; and action may be in tort or contract.<sup>4</sup>

— at common law. A carrier is bound to follow instructions given by the owner or his agent, unless that becomes reasonably impracticable, whether given at the time or before delivery.<sup>5</sup>

Express carriers who undertake to sell commodities intrusted to them are common carriers of the money received.<sup>6</sup> Usage to collect and return price will bind carriers.<sup>7</sup>

Railway companies, steamboats, and other carriers, who allow express companies to carry parcels and packages on their cars or boats, or other vehicles, are liable as common carriers to the owners of the goods for all loss or damage which occurs, without regard to the contract between them and such express carrier.<sup>8</sup>

— by course of business. The business of common carriers is not one imposed upon any particular person, natural or artificial, and any one may undertake it at will, and may enter upon so much of the entire business as he chooses, and will be bound to the extent of their usage, and course of business;<sup>9</sup> but this question arises only when they refuse to carry.<sup>10</sup> They are bound to serve all who apply; for it is the general duty of all who undertake to serve the public in any particular business to serve all who come.<sup>11</sup>

A carrier cannot tranship freight, except in cases of strict necessity.<sup>12</sup>

It is competent to prove whether goods usually arrive in a safe or damaged condition as a ground of presumption of negligence, or the contrary.<sup>13</sup>

An owner of goods consigned by railway is bound to take notice of the course of the business, and call for them at the ordinary time of arrival, and remove them, or the carrier is only responsible for ordinary negligence.<sup>14</sup>

Freight of dangerous quality. The owner must inform the carrier of the character of the goods, whenever it is essential to be known, either on account of carrying the particular goods safely, or of carrying them in such a manner that other goods may not be damaged by coming in contact with them; and for any default in this particular the owner is responsible, not only to the extent of any damage occurring to the goods, but even beyond that.<sup>1</sup>

Delivery, time of. A carrier is not bound, unless he stipulate absolutely to deliver goods by a particular time, to do more than to deliver in a reasonable time, under all the circumstances attending the transportation.<sup>2</sup> But if the carrier contract specially to deliver in a prescribed time, he must perform his contract, or suffer the damages sustained by his failure.<sup>3</sup> He is liable upon general principles, where the goods are not delivered through his default, to the extent of their value at the place. In the absence of a special contract the carrier is bound to deliver the goods at their destination; or, at the end of his route, to the next carrier, in a reasonable time according to his usual course of business,<sup>4</sup> or according to contract.<sup>5</sup> A delay caused by an unusual press of business will not make the carrier liable,<sup>6</sup> nor the loss of a bridge from an unusual freshet.<sup>7</sup> A carrier is excused by the custom and usual course of navigation.<sup>8</sup> Where two companies are using the same line, the one is not liable for delay caused by the negligence of the other.<sup>9</sup>

A carrier is liable upon general principles where the goods are not delivered through his default, to the extent of their value at the place of their destination; and this includes the profits of the adventure.<sup>10</sup> If the goods are only damaged, or not delivered in time, the owner is bound to receive them. He will be entitled to damages, but cannot repudiate the goods and recover from the carrier as for a total loss.<sup>11</sup>

In an action against a carrier for damage done to goods carried, it is enough to prove the good condition of articles when put into his possession and their deteriorated state when received from him. Any damage resulting from bad package will go to lessen the amount of damage.<sup>12</sup>

— bad package, internal decay. Losses from natural causes, as frost,<sup>13</sup> evaporation,<sup>14</sup> or natural decay of perishable articles,<sup>15</sup> the carrier exercising all reasonable care to preserve them,<sup>16</sup> and from the natural and necessary wear by careful transportation,<sup>17</sup> in the mode to which the carrier is accustomed, or from the defective nature of the vessels or packages in which the things are put by the owner or consignor, will excuse the carrier. The carrier is not responsible for natural decay or leakage.<sup>18</sup> So, also, except for damages caused by delay, where the owner selects his own carriage, and loads it;<sup>19</sup> but the carrier must do all in his power to arrest damage to goods, though he may not have been in fault on account of, or responsible for its occurrence.<sup>20</sup> The owner must bear the damage of loss from dampness of the hold, as one of the accidents of navigation, if it be excepted from the risk, and is no fault of the carrier.<sup>21</sup> A bill of lading, stating the goods in good order, is only prima facie evidence of that fact and refers to the external appearance of packages.<sup>22</sup> The owner is responsible for loss from defects in the article.<sup>23</sup>

— Lien for. A carrier is entitled to a lien for freight for goods carried;<sup>24</sup> but if he once deliver the goods this lien is waived.<sup>25</sup> Or, if the goods be damaged in a manner for which the carrier is liable, the owner may deduct the amount of injury from the freight.<sup>26</sup> But the goods must be carried, and ready for delivery, or the carrier has no right to detain them for freight.<sup>27</sup> But if freight through be paid to the first carrier, lien does not ordinarily attach.<sup>28</sup> A wrong doer cannot create a valid lien against the real owner.<sup>29</sup> A passenger carrier has a lien upon baggage for fare.<sup>30</sup> Carriers have no lien for a general balance of account.<sup>31</sup> Carrier's liens may be waived in the same manner as other liens.<sup>32</sup> But if a delivery be obtained by fraud, the goods will be restored by replevin.<sup>33</sup> The last carrier upon the route may detain the goods until the whole freight is paid,<sup>34</sup> and charges during transit of warehousemen and forwarders.

A carrier cannot sell goods in satisfaction of lien.<sup>7</sup> An owner may pay freight and sue for goods lost.<sup>8</sup> A carrier is bound to keep goods a reasonable time, if they are refused by the consignee.<sup>9</sup> The carrier's lien does not cover the expense of keeping it until the debt is paid, when it is detained against the will of the debtor,<sup>10</sup> but it covers the back charges.<sup>11</sup> The lien for freight in favor of the last company is not affected by defaults of the first company.<sup>12</sup> Carriers have no lien for goods carried for the national government.<sup>13</sup>

If an owner accept goods at any intermediate place short of the original destination, he will be liable to pay freight pro rata.<sup>14</sup> And when the carrier pays for the loss of goods, it is equivalent to delivery, and he is entitled to deduct freight.<sup>15</sup> If goods are unlawfully detained, the consignee being ready to pay freight, may maintain trover, without formal tender.<sup>16</sup> A consignee, indorsing a bill of lading, without recourse,<sup>17</sup> or a mere agent for the delivery of goods for another, is not personally responsible for freight.<sup>18</sup> As in other cases of lien, a waiver will be presumed by an unconditional delivery of goods,<sup>19</sup> but a delivery of a part of the cargo will not operate as a waiver of the lien upon the portion not delivered.<sup>20</sup> It is a question of fact whether there has been a complete delivery.<sup>21</sup> There is no lien for a general balance,<sup>22</sup> such a custom is void.<sup>23</sup> A carrier's lien does not attach upon loading the goods on board, or until the voyage is entered upon,<sup>24</sup> or where there is a special contract as to payment.<sup>25</sup> Freight may be demanded before delivery,<sup>26</sup> but is only payable according to the bill of lading.<sup>27</sup> Where a carrier claims more than is due, it dispenses with tender of the amount actually due.<sup>28</sup>

— Payment of. A carrier is entitled to demand his pay in advance; but if no such condition is insisted upon at the time of the delivery of the goods, the owner is not obliged to tender the freight, nor in an action is it necessary to allege more than a willingness and readiness to pay a reasonable compensation to the carrier.<sup>29</sup> A refusal to carry excuses any tender of compensation.<sup>30</sup> Payment of freight and fare will sometimes be presumed.<sup>31</sup> A carrier is not bound to receive goods which he is not accustomed to carry, or when his means of conveyance are all employed, or before he is ready to depart,<sup>32</sup> or where property is publicly exposed to the depredations of the mob,<sup>33</sup> or where goods are not safe to be carried.<sup>34</sup> So, too, he may excuse himself by showing that loss happened through negligence of the owner of the goods in packing or otherwise, or from internal defect, without his fault.<sup>35</sup> The carrier cannot refuse to carry a parcel because the owner refuses to disclose the contents. There should be uniformity in rate of charges.<sup>36</sup> Goods may be rated according to custom.<sup>37</sup>

Goods must be received, and carried in the order in which they are offered.<sup>38</sup>

Insurable Interest in Goods.—The carrier has an insurable interest in the goods, both in regard to fire and marine disasters, except such as result from inevitable accident, such as fire by lightning and the like.<sup>39</sup> Carriers may insure for their own benefit, and their insurable interest continues so long as the liability of carrier continues, even where they employ other carriers.<sup>40</sup> A warehouseman or wharfinger may insure and recover the full value of the goods "in trust."<sup>41</sup> Carriers, not responsible for loss by fire, may insure goods in their possession, describing them as "goods in trust as carriers," and recover their full value.<sup>42</sup>

Responsibility—Carrier's, begins when. The liability of the carrier begins when the goods are delivered to him, or his proper servant, authorized to receive them for carriage. A delivery at the usual place of receiving freight, or to the employees of the company in the usual course of business, is sufficient.<sup>43</sup> But where carriers have a warehouse at which they receive goods for transportation, and goods are delivered there not to be forwarded until some event occur, the carriers are, in the meantime, only responsible as depositaries;<sup>44</sup> and where goods are received, as wharfingers, or warehousemen, or forwarders, and not as carriers, liability will be incurred only for ordinary negligence.<sup>45</sup> Where goods are so marked as to pass over successive lines of railway, or other transportation having no partnership connection in the business of carrying, the successive carriers are only liable from the time of receiving the goods.<sup>46</sup> depositories;<sup>5</sup> and if the defendants are both warehousemen and carriers, and receive goods with instruction to forward immediately, they are liable as carriers.<sup>6</sup> Instructions to forward may be inferred from the course of business, in the absence of express proof.<sup>7</sup>

For Carriage beyond the Company's Road. In the absence of special contract, the carrier is only liable for the extent of his own route, and for safe storage and delivery to the next carrier.<sup>8</sup> He may undertake for the whole route,<sup>9</sup> and this is presumed when they are connected in business,<sup>10</sup> even though the connection is only temporary.<sup>11</sup>

Carriers are only responsible for safe carriage and delivery to the next carrier according to ordinary usage.<sup>12</sup> Where special directions are given to a carrier they must be followed.<sup>13</sup> And it makes no difference that portions of the route are by steamboat and other portions by land where no railway exists.<sup>14</sup>

Receiving freight for the entire route binds the carrier to that extent, unless proof be given to rebut that implication.<sup>15</sup>

For Parcels carried by Express, etc. Carriers who allow servants to carry parcels are liable for their loss,<sup>16</sup> and allowing perquisites to go to agents will not excuse a company.

An owner of parcels carried by express may look to the company,<sup>17</sup> and may sue any of the subsequent carriers in the line of transportation, guilty of a default in duty, although his contract was made with the first carrier, to whom he delivered the goods.<sup>18</sup>

Express companies are responsible as common carriers, and such companies who carry parcels or baggage from one city to another, or from one depot to another, are common car-
full sense of the term, common carriers.<sup>2</sup>

The limitations by which express companies may restrict their responsibilities must be made in such a mode as: 1. Presumptively to have come to the knowledge of the owner of the goods, or his agent, authorized to act on his behalf.<sup>3</sup> 2. They must be of such a natural and reasonable character that the law can recognize them as not inconsistent with good policy and fair dealing. An agent authorized to procure goods is competent to bind the owner by the conditions accepted by him.<sup>4</sup>

An express company is bound for safe carriage through its line, and for safe delivery to the next express agent, and in many cases for safe delivery at the point of destination,<sup>5</sup> and cannot be excused from this except by a clear and understanding stipulation to that effect on the part of the employer, and, in a particular which is reasonable, and not against good morals or good policy,<sup>6</sup> and must deliver to the consignee at the earliest moment after arrival, and within the usual business hours; and inconvenience is no excuse for omitting personal delivery.<sup>7</sup>

Where goods are sent by carrier to be paid for on delivery, the consignee is entitled to a reasonable time to inspect the goods before he accepts them.<sup>8</sup>

Notice brought home to the other party will,
in general, control the carrier's responsibility, except for negligence.<sup>9</sup>

Carrier's, ends when. The responsibility of a carrier terminates after the arrival of the goods at their destination, and a sufficient time has elapsed for the owner to receive them in business hours. After that the carrier may put them in a warehouse, and is only responsible for ordinary care.<sup>10</sup> And a carrier's responsibility continues until an actual delivery to the consignee, or at his dwelling or place of business; if he deliver a parcel to a wrong person, without fault on the part of the owner, he is liable as for a conversion; but this mode of delivery has no application to the ordinary business of railways as common carriers of goods, for they are not bound to deliver ordinary freight, or give notice of their arrival. In carriage by water the carrier is, as a general rule, bound to give notice to the consignee of the arrival of goods. Nothing more is ever required of carriers by ships and steamboats than landing goods at the wharf, and giving notice to the consignee, and keeping the goods safe a sufficient time after to enable the party to take them away; after that the carrier may put them in warehouse, and will only be liable as a depositary, for ordinary neglect. Generally the consignee must have a reasonable time to remove the goods. After this the carrier is only liable for ordinary neglect. If the goods arrive out of time, the consignee must have time to remove them after knowledge of their arrival. So, also, if the company's agent misinform the consignee. When the consignee assumes control of goods the carrier is excused. The keeping of goods in warehouse at intermediate points is not for the convenience of the carrier, but the owner of the goods. If the next carrier has a place of receiving goods, responsibility ceases upon delivery there. Warehousemen, who are also carriers, are generally held responsible on receipt of goods.

Goods addressed by a carrier to his own agent does not terminate the carrier's responsibility upon delivery to him.

Where goods have been tendered to the consignee and refused by him, there is no rule of law that the carrier is bound to give notice to the consignor; he is only bound to do what is reasonable; he is bound to keep them as carrier, until the owner or consignee, by the use of diligence, has time to remove them; when his duty as carrier ceases, he may put the goods in his own or another warehouse. Where the carrier by water cannot find the consignee, he may exonerate himself, by delivery to a responsible warehouseman. The carrier's responsibility ends when the warehouseman's crane is attached to hoist the goods. An unlawful seizure, or invalid lien, is no excuse to the carrier for non-delivery. In carriage by water, the delivery to the consignee must be according to the custom of trade, and the usages of the port, and in regular business hours. A tender to the party entitled to receive the goods will exonerate the carrier, as such, and he will then only be responsible as an ordinary bailee; but any reasonable arrangement between the carrier and consignee as to mode of delivery will be binding, and the carrier exonerated by delivery in the mode thus stipulated, and he will be responsible for any injury to the goods resulting from not delivering in conformity to the arrangement.

In carriage by water, in general, there must be notice to the consignee, and delivery at the wharf, or else the goods put in safe condition, to remain until called for.

A carrier cannot charge for carrying to and from the depot, unless the customer requires such service to be performed by him.

Carriers—Notice restricting. Common carriers may qualify their common law responsibility by special contract, but not so as to excuse gross negligence.

So, also, by notice brought home to the knowledge of the owner of the goods, and assented to by him, the carrier may qualify his responsibility; but as a matter of evidence it is received with caution, and the carrier must show the consignor acquiesced to the demands of the notice by making no remonstrance; but neither will excuse the carrier for negligence.

Notice of one kind will not excuse the carrier from responsibility of another.

A written notice will not affect one who cannot read. A carrier must see to it that his notice is made effectual, and it must be shown that knowledge of notice came to the consignor.

A carrier cannot stipulate for exemption from liability for negligence; but he may be allowed to stipulate for exemption from responsibility as an insurer.

The carrier's responsibility as a warehouseman's crane is goods. An unlawful is no excuse to the carrier.

In carriage by water, negligence must be according and the usages of the business hours. A tender receives the goods will a such, and he will then an ordinary bailee but must be taken between the carrier's mode of delivery will be exonerated by delivery unaltered, and he will be responsible to the goods resulting in conformity to the arrangement.

In general, there must be care, and delivery at the place put in safe condition, and for carrying to and the customer requires to be performed by him.

The carrier must comply with their common law contract, but not so as to be liable.

When brought home to the carrier of the goods, and the carrier may qualify his liability as a matter of avoidance it is, and the carrier must be subjected to the demands of no reversionary but a carrier for negligence will not excuse the carrier.

It does not affect one who cannot see to it that his goods, and it must be shown that notice came to the carrier.

The carrier is liable for the goods consigned to him, but he may be allowed to exonerate himself from responsibility as

It is reasonable to claim exemption from risk in transporting fresh fish. So, in carrying dogs and horses, unless a value is declared, and a premium above that value paid, for a fanciful value is often attached to these animals, and these limitations must be claimed at the time of the delivery to the carrier, and the burden of showing the reasonableness of the condition annexed to the carrier's undertaking devolves upon the carrier. The exception of one risk cannot cover another.

A carrier is always responsible for negligence.

NOTICE FORMS. See "CONDITIONS" in "BILL OF LADING," above.

Stoppage in transitu. Stoppage in transitu is the right which resides in the vendor of goods upon credit to recall them upon discovering the insolvency of the vendee, before the goods have reached him, or any third party has acquired bona fide rights in them. A carrier is liable if he do not surrender the goods to one having the right of stoppage in transitu, but may delay them until that right is determined.

The right to stop goods in transitu is nothing more than the extension of the lien which the vendor has on all sales, for the price, until after delivery (so long as the goods are under the control of the carrier, but not when they reach the consignee's agent for another purpose), to the very point of the goods coming to the actual custody of the vendee, or his agent.

Carriers are compelled to solve the question of the claimant's right (upon admonition by telegraph from an unknown party miles distant), at their peril.

Conflicting claims of this kind may be determined by replevin, or interpleader, or the carrier may deliver the goods to the rightful claimant, and defend against the bailor.

COMMON CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS. Common carriers of passengers are bound to carry all who offer. They are responsible for the utmost care and watchfulness, and this extends to everything connected with the transportation. They are not responsible as insurers of the safety of their passengers as common carriers.

riers of goods are. But they are bound to the very highest degree of care and watchfulness in regard to all their appliances for the conduct of their business; so that, as far as human foresight can secure the safety of passengers, there is an unquestionable right to demand it of all who enter upon the business of passenger carriers. And it will make no difference if the passenger do not pay his fare, so also where the train is hired for an excursion, or is under control of State officers. Passenger carriers are not responsible for accidents without fault, they contract only for their own acts. They must adopt every precaution in known use. It is their duty to inform passengers of peril requiring caution to escape. A person purchasing a ticket becomes a passenger, and is entitled to protection on reaching his seat in the carriages. Passenger carriers are bound to exclude disorderly persons from their carriages, and a company is bound to fence its stations so as to hinder passengers entering by a dangerous way. A passenger carrier who attempts to carry ordinary passengers and soldiers at the same time is responsible for the consequences.

The passenger must be ready and willing to pay such fare as is required by the established regulations of the carriers in conformity with law. But an actual tender of fare or passage-money does not seem requisite in order to maintain an action for the absolute refusal to carry, and much less is it necessary in an action for any injury sustained. The rule of law is the same in regard to paying fare in advance that it is as to freight, except that the usage in the former case being to take pay in advance, a passenger is expected to have procured his ticket before he had taken passage; and the law will imply payment according to such usages. Carriers of passengers are bound to carry for the whole route for which they stipulate, and according to their public advertisements and the general usage and custom of their business. But they are not bound to carry persons of offensive and disorderly conduct.

By-laws or Statutes. It is incident to all corporations to enact by-laws or statutes for the control of their officers and agents, and to regulate the conduct of their business generally. In the case of railways this includes the regulation of the conduct of passengers and others who are in any way connected with them in business; but such regulations must be reasonable and not against law.<sup>2</sup> By-laws in violation of common right are void.<sup>3</sup> By-laws are not required to be in any particular form, unless required by express provisions of the charter or laws of the State.<sup>4</sup> Railways may lawfully discriminate between fare paid in the cars and at the stations.<sup>5</sup> They cannot refuse to be responsible for baggage.<sup>6</sup> The by-laws or statutes operate upon the members of the corporation from their promulgation, and upon all others from the time of knowledge of the same.<sup>7</sup> Regulations for the accommodation of passengers, during the passage, must yield to the right of others to be carried;<sup>8</sup> this is the general practice in all modes of transportation in America.

By-laws of a company must be published.<sup>9</sup>

As to Passengers. Passenger carriers may establish reasonable regulations in regard to the conduct of passengers, and discriminate between those who conform to their rules in regard to obtaining tickets, and those who do not—requiring more fare for the latter.<sup>10</sup> Passengers may be required to go through on the same train or forfeit the remainder of their tickets.<sup>11</sup> Where one procures a railway ticket marked "good for this trip only" with the view to go in the next through train, but is unexpectedly detained, he may lawfully claim to go upon the ticket on a subsequent day.<sup>12</sup> Railway passengers, when required by the regulations of the company to surrender their tickets in exchange for the conductor's checks, are liable to be expelled from the cars for a refusal to comply with such regulation, or to pay fare again.<sup>13</sup> A passenger is liable to be expelled from the cars for refusal to exhibit his ticket at the request of the conductor in compliance with the standing regulations of the company.<sup>14</sup> Railway companies may exclude merchandise from their passenger trains. A company is not bound to carry a person daily upon his paying fare, when his trunk or trunks contain merchandise, money, and other valuable matter, known as "express matter," where its by-laws exclude merchandise from passenger trains and confine its transportation to freight trains.<sup>15</sup>

An officer in fact may enforce the rules of the company,<sup>16</sup> but is liable for an excess of force.<sup>17</sup> A company cannot enforce a rule against a passenger where they are in fault.<sup>18</sup>

As to Stations and Grounds. Railway companies may exclude persons without business,<sup>19</sup> and regulate the conduct of others. The superintendent may exclude from the stations and grounds persons who persist in violating reasonable regulations prescribed for their conduct, and thereby annoy passengers and interrupt the officers and servants of the company in the discharge of their duty.<sup>20</sup>

A railway freight station or freight warehouse is not exempt from search-warrant; and it is not necessary that such warrant should be executed during the usual business hours, or that the officer should consult the person who has charge of such station.<sup>21</sup>

Damage—Rule of—For Injury of Passengers. The party injured must recover all his damages, present and prospective, in one action;<sup>22</sup> but these should be obvious and not merely conjectural.<sup>23</sup> New trials are allowed for excessive damages<sup>24</sup> only in extreme cases.<sup>25</sup> The plaintiff may show the value of his time lost.<sup>26</sup> There is no well-defined rule for estimating damages, it generally rests very much in the discretion of the jury.<sup>27</sup> In an action or loss of service, mental anguish cannot be included.<sup>28</sup> A woman claiming damages for personal injury cannot prove the state of her family or death of her husband.<sup>29</sup>

The right to damages is a question of law; the amount, one of fact.<sup>30</sup> Special damages cannot be recovered unless alleged and proved.<sup>31</sup> A plaintiff who claims damages for loss of time and business, may prove the nature of the business, and probable profits.<sup>32</sup>

Duty of connecting Companies to Passengers and others. A company is bound to keep its road safe;<sup>33</sup> and they cannot excuse themselves from liabilities for injury to passengers carried over any part of their road because it was occasioned by the act of another company.<sup>34</sup> Passenger carriers are bound to make their landing-places safe.<sup>35</sup> But those who ride upon freight trains by favor, can only require such security as is usual upon such trains.<sup>10</sup> Owners of all property are bound to keep it in such a state as not to expose others to injury, as the fencing off a hole or area adjoining a highway, and dangerous to passers-by;<sup>11</sup> and this rule extends to railways, where persons are rightfully on them;<sup>12</sup> and one who keeps open works is bound to keep them safe for use.<sup>13</sup> Corporations are presumptively responsible to the same extent as natural persons in the same situation.

The general duty of common carriers of passengers is not the same as where goods and baggage are ticketed through.<sup>14</sup> Through tickets in the form of coupons are to be regarded as distinct tickets for each road, sold by the first company as agents for the others, and may be used when the holder elects.<sup>15</sup> The first company are to be regarded as agents for the others.<sup>16</sup> If the business of the entire line is consolidated, it is different,<sup>17</sup> but in general it is not regarded as a case of partnership.<sup>18</sup> The companies being in different States and kingdoms makes no difference.<sup>19</sup> The first company were held liable for baggage not checked when demanded.<sup>20</sup> So, also, for an injury occurring on another line over which they had sold tickets.<sup>21</sup> A stage route intersected by a ferry hired to carry the coaches over, is responsible for the safety of passengers on the ferry.<sup>22</sup>

The sale of through tickets for an entire route composed of several successive companies of carriers having no partnership connection, does not render each company liable for the injuries to passengers occurring on any part of the route.<sup>23</sup>

Free Pass. One who rides upon a free pass, or in the baggage-car, is not thereby deprived of his remedy against the company for injuries received through their want of due care, provided he was at the time a passenger and without fault on his own part.

Injuries—Wrongful Expulsion from Cars.

Where a passenger is wrongfully expelled from cars, the company is not held liable for exemplary damages unless they ratified the expulsion,<sup>24</sup> but upon principle the company should be liable for special damage. And in such cases they are trespassers if they refuse to deliver baggage.<sup>25</sup> The company must keep strictly to the terms of any by-law regarding the production of tickets when called for.<sup>26</sup> Conductors are bound to exclude disorderly or offensive persons.<sup>27</sup> One wrongfully expelled from the cars is not entitled to special damages, unless it occurs clearly without his fault.<sup>28</sup> Where a ticket is lost, the person is liable to pay fare.<sup>29</sup> One wrongfully put on shore, by a passenger boat, short of his destination, may show, to enhance damages, that it was done in an insulting manner.<sup>30</sup>

Fault of the Party Injured. Where a passenger is injured on a railway, the prima facie presumption is that it resulted from the want of due care on the part of the company.<sup>31</sup> But, nevertheless, it is competent to prove that the damage occurred without their fault.<sup>32</sup>

Passengers may recover if they have reasonable cause to leap from the carriage and sustain injury;<sup>33</sup> but not where their own misconduct exposes them to peril.<sup>34</sup> But where one incurs peril by attempting to escape danger, the author of the first motive is liable for all the necessary or natural consequences.<sup>35</sup> But one leaps from cars because the train passes the station at his own risk,<sup>36</sup> but may recover compensation for the inconvenience, loss of time, and labor of travelling back.<sup>37</sup> If a person being safely seated is injured while leaving the cars, he cannot recover if he was guilty of negligence which contributed to his injury.<sup>38</sup> The company are bound to stop their trains at all stations where they profess to leave passengers a sufficient time for them to alight. If they do not, and one is injured in consequence, while attempting to leave the cars, the company are liable.<sup>39</sup> No recovery can be had when the passenger leaves on the wrong side.<sup>40</sup>

Married Woman. In a suit by the husband for injury to the wife, he may recover the expenses of the cure.<sup>41</sup> But such expenses cannot be recovered in a suit on behalf of the wife for her personal injuries.<sup>42</sup>

Law of Place. Corporations can only act in conformity with the law of the State or sovereignty by which they are created; hence, they are liable as carriers only, to the extent, and in conformity to the law of the State or jurisdiction where the contract was made or duly undertaken; and it will make no difference whether the action is in form "upon contract" or "for tort" (or wrong), this is in conformity to the general rule of law, upon the subject of contracts and torts.<sup>43</sup>

Liability—What will excuse a Company from carrying Passengers. A company is not bound to carry where the carriages are full.

But it should undoubtedly be an extreme case to justify the absolute refusal of a passenger.<sup>1</sup> They are not bound to carry disorderly persons or those otherwise offensive—as infected by contagion, or offensive in person or conduct.<sup>2</sup> A carrier is liable in tort for breach of duty aside from any contract.<sup>3</sup> The purchase of a ticket does not constitute the contract;<sup>4</sup> the company has a right to impose reasonable regulations as to the carriage of passengers.<sup>5</sup>

— of a Carrier where both parties are in fault. Railway companies are not liable as passenger carriers unless they are in fault,<sup>7</sup> nor when the plaintiff's fault contributes directly to the injury;<sup>8</sup> but where there is an intentional wrong on the part of the defendant, he is liable, notwithstanding negligence on the part of the plaintiff.<sup>9</sup> The plaintiff may recover for gross neglect of the company, although in fault himself,<sup>10</sup> but not where he knew his neglect would expose him to injury.<sup>11</sup> And he may recover, though riding in the baggage car.<sup>12</sup> But the company does not owe such duty to wrongdoers.<sup>13</sup> The plaintiff may recover, although out of his place on the train,<sup>14</sup> but he must be lawfully in the place where injured.<sup>15</sup> Passengers are bound to conform to the regulations of the company and directions of conductors.<sup>16</sup> Proof of the company's negligence is on the plaintiff,<sup>17</sup> negligence on the plaintiff's part is not presumed,<sup>18</sup> and after proof of presumptive negligence, the company must show that no reasonable precaution could prevent it.<sup>19</sup> One crossing a railway track must look out for trains or he cannot recover.<sup>20</sup> Rushing across a track when a train is approaching is foolhardy misconduct, and no recovery can be had for the injury.<sup>21</sup> So for injury the result of heedlessness.<sup>22</sup> Negligence to preclude recovery must directly tend to produce the injury.<sup>23</sup> Ordinarily, proof must be given of defendant's negligence, and that but for such negligence the injury would not have occurred.<sup>24</sup> Passenger carriers must provide suitable accommodations for all passengers,<sup>25</sup> then passengers must conform to the usages and rules of the company or fail to recover.<sup>26</sup> Where a passenger is injured by the fault of carrier's employees, he may recover, but not if done by his own invitation.<sup>27</sup>

— where one company uses the track of another. A railway company which receives the cars of another company upon its track, placing them under the control of its agents and servants, and drawing them by its locomotive power, assumes toward the passengers the common liability of passenger carriers;<sup>1</sup> and it makes no difference in regard to the liability of the company to passengers passing over their road, whether they purchased tickets of them or of any other railway company or agent authorized to sell such tickets.<sup>2</sup>

Passenger carriers who run over other roads than their own are responsible for the entire route, and must take the risk of the negligence of the employees of the other companies.<sup>3</sup>

— where trains do not arrive on time. A company is liable for not delivering a passenger according to contract,<sup>4</sup> but they may excuse themselves by special notice. They are liable for damages caused by the discontinuance of a train.<sup>5</sup> Carriers not performing according to previous notice are liable to all injured, as for breach of duty,<sup>6</sup> but are not liable for an injury caused by a stage company connecting with the railway.<sup>7</sup> They will not be liable where passengers mistake the place of changing cars, and, by remaining in the same car, are carried out of their intended route, upon proper notice of the course of their trains and places of changing cars.<sup>8</sup> In order to enable the plaintiff to recover special damages claimed to have been sustained by reason of the failure of a contract to carry him as a passenger, it must appear clearly and by affirmative proof that the damages were sustained without any fault on his part, and in spite of his utmost efforts to avoid them.<sup>9</sup>

Negligence—what is prima facie evidence of. Where a stage coach is overturned when laden with passengers, it is regarded as prima facie evidence of negligence in the proprietor or his servants.<sup>10</sup> And where any injury occurs to a passenger upon a railway, it has been considered prima facie evidence of the culpable neglect of the company.<sup>11</sup>

Payment of money into court in actions against. Payment of money into court where the declaration in tort is general, only admits damages to the extent of the amount paid.

But in cases of special contract it admits the contract and breach alleged.<sup>4</sup>

PRIVATE CARRIERS. Private carriers incur the responsibility of the exercise of ordinary diligence only like other bailees for hire.<sup>5</sup>

— for compensation. Private carriers are bound to the same diligence and skill as prudent and careful men ordinarily exercise in similar employments. They must do everything, and omit nothing, which careful men are accustomed to do in similar business where they themselves are both the carriers and owners of the goods. Warehousemen and forwarders are responsible to the same extent as private carriers.<sup>6</sup> So, also, tow-boat owners and wharfingers.<sup>7</sup> Deputy postmasters are bound to care and diligence,<sup>8</sup> but not as common carriers.<sup>9</sup>

A common carrier may become a private carrier.<sup>10</sup> Where goods are injured while in the custody of a private carrier or warehousemen, the burden is upon him to show that it occurred from some other cause than his want of care, diligence, or skill.<sup>11</sup>

The recovery of judgment without satisfaction, against a private carrier, in an action of assumpsit, for not transporting and delivering the articles according to his contract, is no bar to an action against a third person who has purchased the property of the bailee.<sup>12</sup>

— without compensation. A contract to convey without compensation is not binding until entered upon; then it must be faithfully performed; and if any damage befall the property in the course of transportation, through the fault of the carrier, he is responsible for it;<sup>13</sup> but his duty depends upon the nature of the property.<sup>14</sup> It is his duty to carry according to his known custom and usage.<sup>15</sup> If injury happen to the property while in the custody of the bailee, the interference of the bailor to remedy the evil will not release the bailee from the consequences of his default.<sup>16</sup>

A gratuitous bailee has such an interest in the property while in his custody, and is so far responsible for its security that he may maintain an action against a stranger for any injury to it.<sup>17</sup>

Warehousemen and wharfingers are not gratuitous bailees.<sup>18</sup>

COMMISSION is an undertaking without reward to do something for another with respect to a thing bailed.<sup>19</sup>

DEPOSIT is a naked bailment of goods to be kept for the depositor without reward, and to be returned when he shall require it.<sup>20</sup>

An irregular deposit arises where one deposits his money with another for safe keeping, in cases where the latter is to return, not the specific money deposited, but an equal sum.

A quasi deposit arises where one comes lawfully into possession of the goods of another by finding.

The rule of responsibility in deposits is, that the bailee must act in good faith, and in the manner as he conducts his own affairs;<sup>21</sup> and special undertakings by the bailee are binding upon him to the extent understandingly made.<sup>22</sup>

The degree of diligence to be exercised by the bailee depends upon circumstances; he is not responsible for theft or robbery without his fault.<sup>23</sup>

A depository is bound to take only ordinary care of the deposit, which will, of course, vary with the character of the goods to be kept, and other circumstances.<sup>24</sup> He has, in general, no right to use the thing deposited,<sup>25</sup> unless in cases where permission has been given, or may from the nature of the case be implied.<sup>26</sup> He is bound to return the identical deposit, and in the same state in which he received it; if it is lost, or injured, or spoiled, by his fraud or gross negligence, he is responsible to the extent of the loss or injury.<sup>27</sup> He is bound to restore, not only the thing deposited, but any increase or profits which may have accrued from it; if an animal deposited bear young, the latter are to be delivered to the owner.<sup>28</sup>

In case of irregular deposits, as those with a banker, the relation of the banker to his customer is that of debtor or creditor, and does not partake at all of a fiduciary character. It ceases altogether to be the money of the depositor, and becomes the money of the banker. It is his to do what he pleases with it, and there is no trust created.<sup>29</sup> The banker is not liable for interest unless expressly contracted for; and the deposit is subject to the statute of limitations.<sup>30</sup>

If the bailee puts the goods to a use not justified by the bailment, he is guilty of a conversion, and responsible for all losses.<sup>31</sup>

In cases of a joint deposit, where there is a special undertaking to keep and restore to all jointly, the bailee cannot deliver to one.<sup>32</sup> ties gives a thing to another to keep, who is to do so gratuitously, and obliges himself to return it when he shall be requested. See EXECUTIONS; PRACTICE, post. m-2 Ld. A depository is not liable to an action for not restoring a thing, until after demand, unless he have put it to some use not justified by the bailment.<sup>f</sup>

Whenever a person receiving the goods has an option to return the same thing, or another article of the same kind and value, the property passes to him as effectually as in an ordinary case of sale and exchange, and the risk is with the bailee,<sup>g</sup> or person receiving the goods.

A mere deposit of money, or other thing, is always subject to recall at the election of the depositor.<sup>h</sup>

Money requires more watchful care than most other property.<sup>i</sup>

FORWARDING MERCHANTS are persons who receive and forward goods, taking upon themselves the expenses of transportation, for which they receive a compensation from the owners, but who have no concern in the vessels, cars, or wagons by which they are transported, and no interest in the freight. A forwarding merchant is not deemed a common carrier, but a mere warehouseman or agent.<sup>j</sup> He is required to use only ordinary diligence in sending the property by responsible persons.<sup>k</sup>

GRATIS undertakings are those without reward or compensation. When a bailee undertakes to perform some act or work gratis he is answerable for his gross negligence if any loss should be sustained in consequence of it; but a distinction exists between a misfeasance and a nonfeasance—between a total omission to do an act which one gratuitously promises to do and a culpable negligence in the execution of it—in the latter case he is responsible, while in the former he would not, in general, be bound to perform his contract.<sup>l</sup>

HIRE. Hire is a bailment in which compensation is to be given for the use of a thing or for labor and services about it.<sup>m</sup>

There are three species of this contract:

1. The hire of labor and work to be done, or care and attention to be bestowed, or the goods let by the hirer for a compensation.
2. The hire of the carriage of goods from one place to another for a compensation.<sup>n</sup>
3. The bailment of a thing to be used by the hirer for a compensation to be paid by him.

This contract arises from the principles of natural law; it is voluntary, and founded in consent; it involves mutual and reciprocal obligations; and it is for mutual benefit. In some respects it bears a strong resemblance to the contract of sale; the principal difference between them being that in cases of sale the owner parts with the whole proprietary interest in the thing, and in cases of hire the owner parts with it only for a temporary use and purpose. In a sale the thing itself is the subject of the contract; in hiring the use of the thing is the object.<sup>o</sup>

HIRING THINGS. The engagements of a person who takes anything to hire are to put the thing to no other use than that for which it is hired; to use it well; to take care of it; to restore it at the time appointed; to pay the rent or hire; and, in general, he ought to observe whatever is prescribed by the covenant, by law, and by custom;<sup>p</sup> and he stipulates for requisite skill and diligence to accomplish the purpose of the bailment, prudently and safely.<sup>q</sup>

In hiring horses, the hirer is bound to feed properly at his own expense, and treat the animals judiciously and prudently, unless where the owner retains control of the team by his driver.<sup>r</sup>

A hirer may allow his servants to use the thing, he being responsible for their conduct.<sup>s</sup> But he is not ordinarily responsible for the acts of the servants of the owner.<sup>t</sup>

The right of possession of the thing during bailment is in the bailee.<sup>u</sup>

If the thing fails to answer the purpose, the hirer is not bound to pay the price;<sup>v</sup> the same rule applies to letting of the use of things for a term of time at a fixed price.<sup>w</sup> The price is only due to the extent of the service.<sup>x</sup>

LETTING THINGS. The leading incidents of this class of bailments are as follows:

1. The thing bailed must be of a personal quality;
2. It must be tangible and under the power and control of the bailor, either as his own property, or under his own control, with the assent of the owner;
3. It must of course be a thing capable of being let;
4. There must be a price agreed between the parties, or at least it must be implied that a reasonable compensation is to be paid for the use in some way;
5. There must be a delivery of the thing to the bailee for a particular time, or for some particular use, and until that is accomplished. A hirer of things is bound to exercise watchfulness to keep them securely.<sup>y</sup>

In case of mere deposit of goods, or where there is only a payment for horse room, and nothing for care and custody of the things bailed, the bailee is not responsible for the loss, unless upon proof of some particular default or neglect; unless there was a total default in

In cases where the thing delivered for manufacture is not to be returned in specie but in kind, it is a sale, and not a bailment, as where grain is delivered to be paid for in flour, etc.

Bailees for hire commonly have a lien for work and materials furnished by them. But no lien can be created except by the owner's consent.

Where work is not done in time, or according to contract, the bailor is only responsible for what it benefits him.

A bailor for work for reward is not entitled to use material superior to those stipulated, with any view to higher compensation, unless there is evidence of the previous or subsequent assent of the bailor; nor will the bailor be allowed to charge extra compensation for extra work, unless the deviation was previously or subsequently sanctioned by the bailor.

Agisters of cattle or livery-stable keepers are only bound to use such care and diligence as prudent men do in their own affairs.

delivering up the goods on demand, and no explanation, or an evasive one, or one that is improbable.

WORK AND CUSTODY. All mechanics and artisans, who undertake to do work and repairs in the line of their employment, naturally become responsible for competent knowledge, skill, and experience, and also for the exercise of that diligence, care, and faithfulness which is requisite to the successful accomplishment of the work. And where the result of the undertaking is not successful, the laborer is not entitled to compensation; and he is also liable to an action for any injury to the materials furnished and with which he attempted to work.

The general property of the thing bailed remains in the bailor, and if during the course of the work it is destroyed by fire or otherwise, without the fault of the bailee, the loss will fall on the bailor, and he will also be liable to the bailee for the work already accomplished; but articles made to order are at the risk of the owner.

In cases where the thing delivered for manufacture is not to be returned in specie but in kind, it is a sale, and not a bailment, as where grain is delivered to be paid for in flour, etc.

INNKEEPERS. An inn is a house for the lodging and entertainment of travellers; often a tavern where liquors are furnished for travellers and others.

An innkeeper is the keeper of a common inn for the lodging and entertainment of travellers and passengers, their horses and attendants, for a reasonable compensation. But one who entertains strangers occasionally, although he may receive compensation for it, is not an innkeeper.

A guest is a traveller who stays at an inn or tavern with the consent of the keeper.

A boarder is one who being an inhabitant of a place, makes a special contract with another person for board, including food and lodging, and is to be distinguished from a guest.

A boarding-house or restaurant keeper is not an innkeeper, either as to duty, right, or responsibility.

GUESTS—RIGHTS AND RESPONSIBILITIES.

All who become the patron of an innkeeper (not of a victualer, or boarding-house keeper, or a farmer, or other person), in his capacity as such, are guests. But it is requisite that the place where entertainment is sought be a common inn; and the guest must become a patron of the inn upon the expectation of both parties, to pay for what he receives; and the guest must not have changed his relation of a transient guest to that of a permanent boarder; for, if so, he is no longer entitled to that higher degree of responsibility which attaches to the office of an innkeeper. One may acquire the rights of a guest as to his horse by leaving him at the stable of an inn. So, also, where, in addition to that, he took some of his meals at the inn.

If, after taking lodgings at an inn, a guest leaves his horse there and goes elsewhere to lodge, he is still to be considered as a guest; but not if he merely leaves goods for keeping, for which the landlord receives no compensation. The length of time a man is at an inn makes no difference, whether he stays a day, a week, or a month, or longer, or only for temporary refreshment. So, always, that though not strictly transient, he retains his character as a traveller. But if a person comes under a special contract to board at an inn, he is not, in the sense of the law a guest, but a boarder.

Innkeepers are generally liable for all goods belonging to the guest brought within the inn. It is not necessary that the goods should have been in the special keeping of the innkeeper to make him liable. This rule is founded on principles of public utility to which all private considerations ought to yield.<sup>7</sup>

A restaurant-keeper is not responsible as an innkeeper.<sup>8</sup> But one who occasionally entertains travellers may be an innkeeper.<sup>9</sup> And one is never not responsible, as such, to another not a guest.<sup>10</sup>

An innkeeper is responsible for an injury to a horse left at his stable, while driven for exercise.<sup>11</sup>

One wishing to become a guest at an inn, and ready and willing to pay for his entertainment, may recover damages for refusal to receive him.<sup>12</sup>

INNKEEPERS—DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES. An innkeeper is bound to take in and receive all travellers and wayfaring persons, and to entertain them if he can accommodate them, for a reasonable compensation;<sup>13</sup> and he must guard their goods with proper diligence. He is liable only for the goods which are brought within the inn.<sup>14</sup> A delivery of the goods into the personal custody of the innkeeper is not, however, necessary in order to make him responsible; for, although he may not know anything of such goods, he is bound to pay for them if they are stolen or carried away, even by an unknown person;<sup>15</sup> and if he receive the guest, the custody of the goods may be considered as accessory to the principal contract, and the money paid for the apartments as extending to the care of the box and portmanteau.<sup>16</sup> The liability of an innkeeper is the same in character and extent with that of a common carrier.<sup>17</sup> He is responsible for the acts of his domestics and servants, as well as for the acts of his other guests, if goods are stolen or lost;<sup>18</sup> but he is not responsible for any tort or injury done by his servants, or others, to the person of his guest, without his own co-operation or consent.<sup>19</sup> But the innkeeper will be excused whenever the loss has occurred through the fault of the guest.<sup>20</sup>

An innkeeper is responsible presumptively for all losses, and can excuse himself only by showing that he did all in his power to prevent it.<sup>21</sup> He is responsible for all money and other articles the guest finds in convenient to carry with reference to his expenses and business. And if money is stolen from the guest, he may recover, although he omitted to put it in the safe;<sup>22</sup> but this will depend somewhat on the amount and use.<sup>23</sup> The obligation upon the guest to place his money in the safe seems to depend upon the amount and what is prudent.<sup>24</sup>

The guest must deposit his goods in the ordinary place, in care of the proper person. There is no particular course to be adopted by the guest, except to be prudent. It is the duty of the host to be watchful at all points.<sup>25</sup> He must not trust to the opinion of his guest, but see to it himself that the goods are positively kept safe. The omission of the guest to fasten his door, etc., will not excuse indifference on the part of the host. Where the guest exposes his money to be seen by others, and then leaves it within their reach, he has no redress if it is stolen.<sup>26</sup>

The guest must either take exclusive possession of his goods or else utterly disregard all ordinary precautions for safety, in order to exonerate the innkeeper;<sup>27</sup> and to charge the guest with negligence, exonerating the innkeeper, it should appear that the guest fully understood the danger and persisted in leaving his goods exposed.<sup>28</sup>

The innkeeper is responsible for all money and other property the guest finds it convenient to have with him, he using all reasonable precautions himself not needlessly to expose it to loss.<sup>29</sup> An innkeeper must furnish reasonable lodgings.<sup>30</sup>

A mere boarding-house keeper cannot be subjected to the responsibilities of an innkeeper.<sup>31</sup> And so if a guest takes a room at an inn for the purpose of selling goods therein, the landlord is presumptively not responsible for their safety.<sup>32</sup>

LIEN UPON THE EFFECTS OF THE GUEST. The innkeeper is entitled to a just compensation for his care and trouble in taking care of his guest and his property; and, to enable him to obtain this, the law invests him with some peculiar privileges, giving him a lien upon the goods brought into the inn by the guest; and, it has been said, upon goods on the person of his guest for his compensation;<sup>33</sup> and this, though the goods belong to a third person, if he was ignorant of the fact.<sup>34</sup> He has a lien upon all the goods of a guest in his custody for all expenses incurred;<sup>35</sup> and this will extend to his horse, harness and carriage, for the keeping of his horse, and probably for the whole sum due;<sup>36</sup> and this lien will not be affected by any defect in the title of the guest.<sup>37</sup>

An innkeeper has no lien upon the effects of his ordinary boarders for their expenses incurred.<sup>1</sup>

An innkeeper has a lien upon a traveller's horse put in his stable, although he lodge elsewhere. So, also, upon all property the guest leaves in his possession, for all expense incurred.<sup>2</sup>

The lien of an innkeeper is not affected by the fact that the guest is an infant.<sup>3</sup>

The landlord may also bring an action for the recovery of his compensation.

LOANS are bailments without reward. Bailments of articles for use or consumption without reward. The things so bailed.

A loan, in general, implies that a thing is lent without reward; but, in some cases, a loan may be for a reward; as, the loan of money.<sup>4</sup> It would be an inquiry too purely speculative, whether this use of the term loan originated in the times when the taking of interest was considered usury and improper—the bailment of money which was to be returned in kind—the supposition would furnish a reasonable explanation to the exception to the general rule that loan includes properly only those bailments where no reward is given or received by the bailee. In order to make a contract usurious there must be a loan,<sup>5</sup> and the borrower must be bound to return the money at all events.<sup>6</sup> The purchase of a bond or note is not a loan,<sup>7</sup> but if such a purchase be merely colorable, it will be considered as a loan.<sup>8</sup>

— FOR CONSUMPTION. A loan for consumption is a contract by which the owner of a personal chattel, called the lender, delivers it to the bailee, called the borrower, to be returned in kind. For example, if a person borrows a bushel of wheat, and at the end of a month returns to the lender a bushel of equal value. This class of loans is commonly considered under the head of bailments; but it lacks one essential element of bailments: that of a return of the property; it is more strictly a barter or exchange; the property passes to the borrower.<sup>9</sup> Those cases, sometimes called ventem (the corresponding civil law term), such as where corn is delivered to a miller to be ground into meal, or wheat into flour, are either cases of hiring of labor and service, as where the miller grinds and returns the identical wheat ground into flour, retaining a portion for his services; or constitute a mere exchange, as where he mixes the wheat with his own, undertaking to furnish an equivalent in corn. It amounts to a contract of sale, payment being stipulated for in a specified article instead of money.

— FOR USE. A loan for use is a bailment of an article to be used by the borrower without paying for the use.<sup>10</sup> A loan for use (called commodatum in the civil law) differs from a loan for consumption (called mutuum in the civil law) in this, that the commodatum must be specifically returned, the mutuum is to be returned in kind. In the case of a commodatum the property in the thing remains in the lender; in a mutuum the property passes to the borrower.

The loan, like other bailments, must be of something of a personal nature;<sup>11</sup> it must be gratuitous<sup>12</sup> for the use of the borrower; and this is the principal object of the bailment;<sup>13</sup> and must be lent to be specifically returned at the determination of the bailment.<sup>14</sup> The general law of contracts governs as to the capacity of the parties, and the character of the use;<sup>15</sup> he who has a special property may loan the thing, and this even to the general owner, and the possession of the general owner still be that of a borrower.<sup>16</sup>

The borrower may use the thing himself; but may not, in general, allow others to use it during the time, and for the purposes, and to the extent contemplated by the parties.<sup>17</sup> He is bound to use extraordinary diligence;<sup>18</sup> he is responsible for accidents, though inevitable, which injure the property during any excess of use,<sup>19</sup> he must bear the ordinary expenses of the thing,<sup>20</sup> and must restore it at the time and place, and in the manner contemplated by the contract,<sup>21</sup> including also all accessories,<sup>22</sup> or increase. He must, as a general rule, return it to the lender.<sup>23</sup> The borrower of goods is responsible for any damage or loss, if it was occasioned by his neglect, or if he used the goods in a manner not warranted by the terms of the loan;<sup>24</sup> he is bound to exercise all the care and diligence that the most careful persons are accustomed to apply to their own affairs; and in his case the omission of the most exact and scrupulous caution is regarded as culpable.<sup>25</sup>

The borrower puts the thing to any other use at his peril, and he must do all he would to preserve his own property, of equal value.<sup>26</sup>

The borrower is not responsible for loss by robbery without his fault.<sup>27</sup>

The lender may terminate the loan at his pleasure;<sup>28</sup> he is perhaps liable for expenses, adding a permanent benefit.<sup>29</sup> The lender still retains his property as against third persons, and, for some purposes, his possession.<sup>2</sup>

MANDATE is a bailment of property in regard to which the bailee engages to do some act without reward.<sup>3</sup>

Mandates and deposits closely resemble each other; the distinction being, that in mandates, the care and service are the principal, and the custody the accessory; while in deposits, the custody is the principal thing, and the care and service are merely accessory.<sup>4</sup>

The mandatary is the person employing another to perform a mandate.<sup>5</sup>

The mandant is the bailor in a contract of mandate.

The mandatary is the one who undertakes to perform a mandate.

For the creation of a mandate it is necessary:<sup>6</sup> 1. That something should exist which should be the subject-matter of the contract; 2. That it should be done gratuitously; and 3. That the parties should voluntarily intend to enter into the contract.

There is no particular form or manner of entering into the contract of mandate prescribed, in order to give it validity. It may be verbal or in writing; express or implied; in solemn form, or in any other manner.<sup>7</sup> The contract may be varied at the pleasure of the parties. It may be absolute or conditional, general or special, temporary or permanent.<sup>8</sup>

A voluntary undertaking is not obligatory; but if entered upon, the confidence created by the delivery of the goods imposes upon the bailee the duty of performing the service according to the expectation thus voluntarily created.<sup>9</sup> But a bailee without reward, or profession of skill, is only bound to act according to his ability.<sup>10</sup> The mandatary, upon undertaking his trust and receiving his article, is bound to perform it as agreed upon,<sup>11</sup> and is responsible only for gross negligence,<sup>12</sup> but in considering the question of negligence, regard is to be had to any implied undertaking to furnish superior skill, arising from the known ability of the mandatary.<sup>13</sup> He must render an account of his proceedings, and show a compliance with the conditions of the bailment.<sup>14</sup>

One may, by special undertaking, or intermeddling with goods, make himself responsible for all losses.<sup>15</sup>

A mandatary may use the thing in a reasonable manner, by himself or his servants; but if he possesses skill, he is bound to use it the same as a hirer, who undertakes to use skill.<sup>16</sup>

A mandatary, who does not dispute for compensation, must be understood to act without, unless the circumstances indicate the contrary.<sup>17</sup>

A promise of a bailee to return goods does not increase his responsibility.<sup>18</sup>

The question of gross negligence is one for the jury, and the plaintiff must show it.<sup>19</sup>

The dissolution of the contract may be by renunciation by the mandatary before commencing the execution of the undertaking; by revocation of authority by the mandator; by death of the mandator; by death of the mandatary; by insanity or bankruptcy of either party; and by change of state of the parties; and, in some cases, by operation of law.<sup>20</sup>

PAWN OR PLEDGE is a bailment of personal property as security for some debt or engagement. It is when the debtor delivers any personal property to the creditor, to be kept by him until the debt is paid; and upon failure of the debtor to meet his obligation, according to its terms, to dispose of the pledge in payment of the debt as far as it will go, and if anything remains after full payment, to return it to the pledgor.

There is a clear distinction between mortgages and pledges. In a pledge the legal title remains in the pledgor. In a mortgage it passes to the mortgagee. In a mortgage the mortgagee need not have possession. In a pledge the pledgee must have possession, though it be only constructive. In a mortgage at common law, the property, on non-payment of the debt, passes wholly to the mortgagee; in a pledge the property is sold, and only so much of the proceeds as will pay his debt passes to the pledgee. A mortgage is a conditional conveyance of property, which becomes absolute, unless redeemed at a specified time. A pledge is not strictly a conveyance at all, nor need any day of redemption be appointed for it. A mortgagee can sell and deliver the thing mortgaged, subject only to the right of redemption.

A pledgee cannot sell and deliver his pawn until the debt is due and payment denied. Pledge and mortgage are, therefore, different in law.<sup>a</sup>

Any tangible property may be pledged. Hence, not only goods and chattels, and money, but also negotiable paper may be put in pledge. So may choses in action, patent rights, coupon bonds, and manuscripts of various sorts.<sup>b</sup> A life policy of insurance, or a wife's life policy may be pledged. So, also, a bank can pledge the notes left with it for discount, if it is apparent on the face of the notes that the bank is their owner. But the common law does not permit the pay and emoluments of officers and soldiers to be pledged from public policy.<sup>c</sup> Hence, probably, a fishing bounty could not be pledged, on the ground that pensions and bounties to soldiers, sailors, etc., for their personal benefit, cannot be pledged.

One may pledge future accessions to existing property;<sup>d</sup> as bricks to be made upon a brick-yard, in security for the use of the same;<sup>e</sup> and the product of a farm to be held as security for rent.<sup>f</sup>

A pledge in security of a debt does not suspend the right of action upon the debt, unless it be so stipulated.<sup>g</sup>

The pledge of negotiable securities shuts out all equitable defences.<sup>h</sup>

Coupon bonds pledged are not to be collected by the pledgee, but sold in the market;<sup>i</sup> but he may collect the interest coupons as they fall due.<sup>j</sup>

A bond and mortgage secured on real estate may be pledged.<sup>k</sup>

Where an illegal debt is secured by pledge, the pledgor cannot recall the pledge without payment of the debt.<sup>l</sup>

Factors have no power to pledge the goods of their principals,<sup>m</sup> unless that power is expressly given by statute.<sup>n</sup>

The pledgee may assign the goods and debt so as to transfer his interest.<sup>o</sup>

A CO-PLEDGER may hold a pledge for another pledgee also, and it will be a good pledge for both. If the pledge be not large enough for both debts after sale, and no other arrangement be made, the prior pledgee will have the whole of his debt paid before any part of the proceeds is applied to the subsequent pledgee. If there is no priority of time they will divide ratably. But an agreement between the parties will always determine the rights of two or more pledgees.<sup>p</sup> When possession is given to one of three pledgees, to hold for all three, the other two have a constructive possession, which is equally good, for the purpose of sharing, when in actual possession; hence the mere manual possession of one pledgee will not give a right to discharge a whole debt of the holder, and a part only of his co-pledgee's. So, by the rule of constructive possession, if the holder should lose the pledge by his own negligence, he would be liable to his co-baillees out of actual possession, as well as to his bailor.

DELIVERY OF PLEDGE. The first essential thing to be done is the delivery of the pledge to the pledgee. Without his possession of the thing the transaction is not a pledge.<sup>q</sup> But a constructive possession is all that is required of the pledgee. Hence, goods at sea or in a warehouse may pass by transfer of the munniments of title or by symbolic delivery. Stocks and equitable interests may be pledged; and it will be sufficient if, by proper transfer, the property be put within the power and control of the pledgee.<sup>r</sup> Stocks are usually pledged by delivery of the company's certificate, leaving the actual transfer to be made subsequently. But the joint stock company must be notified of the transfer.

Prima facie, if the pledgee redeliver the pledge to the pledgor, third parties without notice might regard the debt as paid; still this presumption may be rebutted. A temporary redelivery to the pledgor makes him only the agent or bailee of the pledgee, and the latter does not lose his special property or even his constructive possession.<sup>s</sup>

It is no objection to the validity of a pledge that the creditor has sufficient security for the payment of the debt; he is entitled to hold all his securities until the debt is paid.<sup>t</sup>

FACTORS cannot at common law pledge his principal's goods, and the principal may recover them from the pledgee's hands.<sup>u</sup> This power is, by statute, subject to various modifications, given to factors in many States.<sup>v</sup> See GENERAL STATUTES.

HOLDING THE PLEDGE FOR OTHER DEBTS. A pledge cannot, in general, be held for any other debt than that which it was given to secure, except on the special agreement and consent of the parties.<sup>w</sup>

LOSS OF PLEDGE. A pledgee is not responsible for theft or robbery, unless he refuses to return the goods after the bailment expires.<sup>2</sup> Loss by theft is prima facie evidence of a want of ordinary care, and the bailor must rebut the presumption; the facts in each case regulate the liability. Theft is only evidence, in short, and not absolute presumption of negligence. Perhaps the only safe rule is, that where the pledgee pleads loss by theft as a ground for not performing his duty, to excuse himself, he must show that the theft could not have been prevented by ordinary care on his part. If the bailor should assert in his complaint that the pledge was lost by the bailor's fault, he would be compelled to prove the charge as laid.

PROPERTY IN THE PLEDGE. A pledgee has at common law a special property in the pledge, and is entitled to the exclusive possession of it during the time and for the objects for which it is pledged. If a wrong-doer take the pledge from him, he is not thereby ousted from his right. His special property is enough for him to support replevin or trover against the wrong-doer. He has, moreover, a right to action because he is responsible to his pledgor for proper custody of the bailment. The pledgor, also, may have his action against the wrong-doer, resting it on the ground of his general property. A judgment for either pledgor or pledgee is a bar against a similar action by the other.<sup>3</sup>

The bailor, having a special property, recovers only the value of his special property as against the owner, but the value of the whole property as against a stranger, and the balance beyond the special property he holds for the owner.<sup>4</sup> So, if the owner begins the action and recovers the whole damages, including those for deprivation of possession, it must be with the consent of the pledgee.

A pledgee may bring replevin or trover against the pledgor if the latter remove his pledge before paying the debt, and thus injure the pledgee's rights, on the ground that the owner has parted with his absolute right of disposing of the chattel until he has redeemed it from its state of pledge.<sup>5</sup>

REDEMPTION. Where no definite day is appointed the pledge may be redeemed at any time, in the absence of a statute to the contrary; hence, if the pledgee himself do not give notice to the pledgor to redeem, the latter has his whole lifetime in which to do so; and his right of redemption survives and goes to his representatives.<sup>6</sup>

SALE OF PLEDGE. If the pledgor fail to pay the debt, the pledgee may sell the pledge. A demand of payment, however, must be made before the sale; and if the pledgee mentions no time of sale, he may demand at once, and may sell in a reasonable time after demand.<sup>7</sup> The pledge must be sold at public auction, and, if it be divisible, only enough must be sold to pay the debt. In general, also, the pledgee must not buy the pledge when put up at auction. He must not bid bona fide and bring up the pawn. Still, the purchase of the pledgee is not in itself void, but voidable at the election of the pledgor, and the latter may ratify the purchase by receiving the surplus over the debt, or avoid it by refusing to do so; the pledgee may charge the pledge with expenses rightfully incurred, as costs of sale, etc. If the pledge when sold bona fide does not bring enough to pay the debt, the pledgee has still left a good claim against the pledgor for the balance.<sup>8</sup>

TRANSFER OF PLEDGOR'S INTEREST. The pledgor may sell or transfer his right to a third party, who can bring trover against the pledgee if the latter, after tender of the amount of his debt, refuse to deliver the pawn.<sup>9</sup> A creditor of the pledgor can take only his interest, and must pay the debt before getting the pawn. The pledgor's general property in the pawn may be sold at any time on execution, and the purchaser or assignee of the pledgor succeeds to the pledgee's, and may himself redeem. A pledgee may dispose of the pledge in payment of the debt at maturity.<sup>10</sup> A pledgee may assign a debt and pledge together.<sup>11</sup>

USE OF PLEDGE. The reasonable use of a pledge is allowed, provided it be of no injury or peril to the bailment. The reason is, that where use of the pledge is beneficial to it, or cannot depreciate it, the consent of the pledgor may fairly be presumed, but not otherwise. If the pawn be in its nature a charge upon the pawnee—as a horse or cow—he may use it moderately, by way of recompense. For any unusual care he may get compensation from the owner, if it were not contemplated by the parties or implied in the nature of the bailment.<sup>12</sup> The pawnee is answerable in damages for an injury happening while he is using the pawn. Still, though he use it tortuously, he is only answerable by action. His pledgee's lien is not thereby forfeited.<sup>13</sup> A pledgee can exercise a horse, but not loan it for hire; the rule is that if he derive any profits from the pledge they must be applied to the debt.<sup>14</sup> Hence, if a slave be pledged as security for a debt, the creditor must account for the profits of the slave and apply them to extinguish the debt.<sup>15</sup>

RECEIPTOR. A receiptor is a person who, when goods are attached, becomes surety to the officer to have them forthcoming on demand, or in time to respond to the judgment, when the execution (or order of sale) shall be and at once, and may after demand.<sup>1</sup> The public auction, and, if it must be sold to pay the debt, the pledgee must appear at auction. He may bring up the pawn. The pledgee is not in itself a lien of the pledgor, but he may charge the goods, or avoid it by re-pledge when sold, or the pledgee when sold enough to pay the debt, or if left a good claim against the balance.<sup>2</sup>

Receipt for Attached Property.

Filed —, Date —, Received of C. C., son of A. B., in said county, the following property, by him attached in the above entitled action, to wit: (here particularly describe the property, so it can be identified,) promising to redeliver such property to said officer on demand. B. E.

Usually, a friend of the defendant, though the plaintiff, may become bailee.<sup>3</sup> The bailee has no power to sell the goods,<sup>4</sup> but must return the identical articles delivered to him, or pay the debt upon demand,<sup>5</sup> and he is liable to the officer for the property, or its full value,<sup>6</sup> or the extent of the officer's liability,<sup>7</sup> or for damages.<sup>8</sup> He is the servant or agent of the officer.<sup>9</sup>

If the bailee abandon possession and custody of the property, and it is attached by another officer,<sup>10</sup> or come into possession of an adverse claimant,<sup>11</sup> the lien of the first attachment is lost.

An officer, by the levy of an attachment, acquires a special property in the goods seized, which is not lost by the bailment,<sup>12</sup> and he becomes liable for them, at the termination of the suit, either to the plaintiff<sup>13</sup> or defendant,<sup>14</sup> but not to the plaintiff where the bailee, nominated and approved by such plaintiff, is in default.<sup>15</sup>

Property may be returned to the person in whose possession it was found or to the defendant upon the execution of an undertaking for its return to the officer as required by law. This undertaking, like the bailment of attached property, does not discharge the lien of the attachment.<sup>16</sup> Property thus bonded cannot be seized under another attachment, or under a junior execution.<sup>17</sup>

TELEGRAPH COMPANIES. The electro-magnetic telegraph is an instrument or apparatus which, by means of iron wires conducting the electric fluid, conveys intelligence to any given distance with the velocity of lightning.<sup>18</sup>

A telegraph is a message sent by telegraph,<sup>19</sup> a telegraphic message, dispatch, or communication.

The telegraph is a machine for communicating intelligence from a distance by various signals or movements previously agreed on; which signals represent letters, words, or ideas, which can be translated from one station to another, as far as the signals can be seen. This machine was invented by the French about the year 1793-94. The electro-magnetic telegraph is an apparatus for communicating words or language to a distance by the use of electricity as above stated.

Telegraphic communications must be proved in the same manner as other writings, such as letters and contracts, are—that is, by the original. If that is lost, it may be proved by copy, or, in default of that being obtainable, by oral testimony.<sup>20</sup> Sometimes the person to whom it is addressed is in the office when it is received; in such case, if it is not reduced to writing, it can only be proved, like other matters resting in parol, by the recollection of the witnesses in whose hearing it was repeated.<sup>21</sup>

Where both parties agree to communicate by telegraph, each assumes the risk of his own messages.<sup>22</sup> If one employ a special operator, he assumes the risk of transmission;<sup>23</sup> it is his own act by his agent.<sup>24</sup> Notice that the company will not be responsible for mistakes in unreported messages is binding.<sup>25</sup> But they are always responsible for ordinary neglect.<sup>26</sup> Companies can only be regarded as insurers of the accuracy of repeated messages,<sup>27</sup> and responsible where specially cautioned;<sup>28</sup> but, generally, are not responsible for errors in unreported messages, except on proof of negligence or want of skill.<sup>29</sup> They are not responsible as common carriers, and may limit responsibility to their own lines and to repeated messages, if not guilty of negligence.<sup>30</sup> It is the duty of the company to transmit the messages promptly and fairly. The company must make good the loss resulting directly from any default on their part.<sup>31</sup> So, also, in cases of failure to send messages by telegraph companies, according to their duty and undertaking.<sup>32</sup>

Where a merchant in San Francisco received a telegraphic message from New York, which leads him into a purchase involving inevitable pecuniary loss, such as would not have occurred but for an error in the transmission of the message, he is not compelled to seek through an

The pledgee is not in itself a lien of the pledgor, but he may charge the goods, or avoid it by re-pledge when sold, or the pledgee when sold enough to pay the debt, or if left a good claim against the balance.<sup>2</sup>

The pledgee in the pawn may be executed, and the pledgor succeeds to the debt if redeemed. A pledgee in payment of the debt may assign a reasonable use of a thing, and it is of no injury to the creditor. The reason is, that it is beneficial to it, or the consent of the pledgor is not otherwise. If there is a charge upon the thing—he may use it to compensate. For any compensation from the pledgor contemplated by the parties of the bailment, the pledgee is liable in damages for any loss he is using the pawn. If he is not, he is only answerable for the pledgee's lien is not lost, and the pledgee can exercise a lien; the rule is that from the pledgee they are not liable. Hence, if a creditor for a debt, the profits of the slaves are not the debt.

THE TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

delays, arising from causes which cannot at all times be guarded against, including sometimes negligence of servants and agents whom it is necessary to employ. Most errors and delays may be prevented by repetition, for which, during the day, half price extra is charged in addition to the full tariff rates.

The Telegraph Company will receive messages for transmission between stations in the United States east of the Mississippi river, to be sent without repetition during the night, at one-half the usual rates, on condition that the sender will agree that he will not claim damages from it for errors or delays, or for non-delivery of such messages, happening from any cause other than the acts of its corporate officers, beyond a sum equal to ten times the amount paid for transmission; and that no claim for damage, shall be valid unless presented in writing within twenty days from sending the message.

The Company will be responsible to the limit of its lines only, for messages destined beyond, but will act as the sender's agent to deliver the message to connecting companies or carriers, if desired, without charge and without liability.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE, NEGOTIABLE BONDS, AND PROMISSORY NOTES. See BOOKKEEPING; MERCANTILE LAW.
BILLS OF EXCHANGE, BANK NOTES, BONDS, CHECKS, CERTIFICATES OF DEPOSIT, AND PROMISSORY NOTES, are commercial substitutes for money, evidences of indebtedness, and the general mediums of business and mercantile exchange. They are negotiable and non-negotiable.

Negotiable is a term applied to a contract, the right of action of which is capable of being transferred by indorsement (of which delivery is an essential part) in case the undertaking is to A., or his order, A., or his agent, or the like, or, by delivery alone, in case the undertaking is to A., or bearer, the assignee in either case having a right to sue in his own name with all the rights of the assignor.

Bills of exchange, promissory notes, government, State, county, township, district, municipal and corporate bonds, and bank notes, to order or bearer, are universally negotiable; and bills of lading,<sup>8</sup> and notes not to order or bearer, are quasi negotiable; that is, an indorsement will give a right of action in the name of the assignee. In general, any chose in action can be assigned so that the assignee can bring an action in his own name, and with all the rights of the assignor. There are, however, some exceptions to this rule; as, in some States; this quality of negotiability is restricted by statute; for example, in some States, in addition to being payable to order or bearer, they must also be payable in a bank incorporated under some law of that commonwealth, or some bank organized therein under some law of the United States; and in others all promissory notes are by statute negotiable, but not as inland bills of exchange unless they are payable in a bank in the State<sup>9</sup> having an actual existence at the time the note is executed,<sup>10</sup> and the note must, on its face, designate the particular bank,<sup>11</sup> as this cannot be ascertained or shown by extrinsic evidence.<sup>12</sup>

Non-Negotiable. Notes payable in specific articles are not negotiable,<sup>13</sup> but are assignable. When given for value received, and it is so expressed on the face of the instrument, it is not necessary in the first instance to prove the consideration for the promise.<sup>14</sup> But when such note does not purport to have been given for value received, it is a special contract; and if no consideration appear upon the face of it, and none be alleged, it cannot be given in evidence under a count for money; nor can the real consideration be proved.<sup>15</sup>

Notes payable in chattels, goods, or choses in action, not being promissory notes, are to be construed and enforced as other parol contracts. So, also, an order for a given sum, payable in goods or the proceeds thereof, is not a bill of exchange, and therefore, when the drawee has accepted such bill, the payee cannot recover on it, unless he avers and proves that the acceptor has in his hands either goods or the proceeds of them, such as are described in the order, sufficient for the payment. But if the order is so drawn as to imply that the drawee has a fund in his hands sufficient to meet the draft, the acceptance of it, though it be not a bill of exchange, is deemed an admission which will support an action for money had and received.<sup>16</sup> So, the acceptance of a draft drawn on a present fund in the hands of the drawee is prima facie evidence of the sufficiency of that fund.) The possession of a promissory note not negotiable is not prima facie evidence of a transfer to the plaintiff before maturity of the note, or before the commencement of the action. An indorsee must aver and prove the consideration of the transfer to him.<sup>1</sup> Non-negotiability, like overdue paper, is notice to all that the note or instrument is subject all the time to such just defences as the maker may have; and whoever takes such non-negotiable paper, even before due, takes it subject to all such equities.<sup>2</sup>

A BANK NOTE is a promissory note,<sup>3</sup> payable on demand to the bearer, made and issued by a person or persons acting as bankers, and authorized by law to issue such notes.

For many purposes they are not looked upon as common promissory notes, and as such mere evidences of debt, or security for money. In ordinary transactions of business, they are recognized, by general consent, as cash. The business of issuing them being regulated by law, a certain credit attaches to them that renders them a convenient substitute for money.<sup>4</sup> The practice is, therefore, to use them as money; and they are good tender unless objected to.<sup>5</sup> They pass under the word "money" in a will, and, generally speaking, they are treated as cash.<sup>6</sup> When a payment is made in bank notes they are treated as cash, and receipts are given as for cash.<sup>7</sup> A payment of a debt in bank notes discharges the debt;<sup>8</sup> but it is the duty of the persons receiving them to ascertain, as soon as possible, their value, by presenting them for payment.<sup>9</sup> Payment in forged bank notes is a nullity.<sup>10</sup> But where the bank itself receives notes purporting to be its own, and they are forged, it is otherwise.<sup>11</sup> If a note be cut in two for transmission by mail, and one-half be lost, the bona fide holder of the other half can recover the whole amount of the note.<sup>12</sup>

Bank notes are governed by the rules applicable to other negotiable paper. They are, assignable by delivery.<sup>13</sup> The holder of a note is entitled to payment, and cannot be affected by the fraud of a former holder, unless he is proved privy to the fraud.<sup>14</sup> The bona fide holder who has received them for value is protected in their possession, even against the real owner from whom they have been stolen.

Bank notes may be taken on execution; but they are not to be sold.<sup>15</sup>

BONDS issued by States or corporations under authority of law, and drawn in negotiable form, are another species of negotiable paper. The title to these instruments, which are generally made payable to bearer, passes by mere delivery. The form, design, and nature of the instrument show that it is intended for negotiation and sale, like a negotiable note or bill of exchange. It is itself an absolute contract for the payment of a certain sum of money to the bearer; and the common usage is to sell such bonds in the market, and transfer them by delivery.

A BILL OF EXCHANGE is a written order from A. to B., directing B. to pay to C. a sum of money therein named.

A. is called the drawer, B. the drawee, and C. the payee. Sometimes A., the drawer, is himself the payee. And usually the bill is made payable, not to the payee alone, but to his order or to the bearer. When B., the drawee, has undertaken to pay the bill, he is called the acceptor.

If the bill is made payable to C., or bearer, C. may transfer the bill to D., by merely delivering it into his hands; then D. stands in the same situation with regard to B., the acceptor, as C., the original payee, did.

If the bill is payable to C., or order, then C. cannot transfer, except by a written order, usually on the back of the bill, called an indorsement, after which C. is called the indorser, and D., to whom it may be so transferred, the indorsee.

A foreign bill of exchange is one of which the drawer and drawee are residents of countries foreign to each other. In this respect the States of the United States are held foreign to each other.

An inland bill of exchange is one of which the drawer and drawee are residents of the same State or county. The distinction between inland and foreign bills becomes important with reference to the question whether protest and notice are to be given in case of non-acceptance.

A holder of a bill of exchange is the person who is legally in the possession of it, either by indorsement or delivery, or both, and entitled to receive payment either from the drawer or acceptor, and is considered as an assignee.

The bill must be written. It must be properly dated both as to place and time of making. The subscription of the sum for which the bill is payable will aid an omission in the bill, but it is not indispensable. The time of payment should be expressed; but if no time is mentioned it is considered as payable on demand. The place of payment may be prescribed by the drawer, or by the acceptor on his acceptance, but is not, as a general practice; in which last case the bill is considered as payable, and to be presented at the usual place of business of the apparent parties to a bill are fictitious persons.

The rights of a bona fide holder are not thereby fictitious,<sup>1</sup> or even where the drawer and payee are both fictitious;<sup>2</sup> and all the different parties need not be different persons.<sup>3</sup> The qualifi-bearer, or must contain other equivalent and operative words of transfer.<sup>14</sup> But negotiability is not necessary to the validity of a bill in

CHECKS.

A certified check is a check which has been recognized by the proper officer as a valid appropriation of the amount of money therein specified to the person therein named, and which bears upon itself the evidence of such recognition. Certification of a check is usually accomplished by writing the name of the officer authorized to bind the bank in that manner across the face of the check.<sup>1</sup> There is a practice of marking checks "good" by the banker, which fixes his responsibility to pay that particular check when presented, and amounts, in fact, to an acceptance. Such a marking is called certifying; and checks so marked are called certified checks.

A check is a written order or request, addressed to a bank, or persons carrying on the business of banking, by a party having money in their hands, desiring them to pay, on presentation to the person therein named, or bearer, or to such person, or order, a specified sum of money. The chief differences between checks and bills of exchange are: 1st. A check is not due until presented, and, consequently, it can be negotiated at any time before presentation, and yet not subject the holder to any of the equities existing between the previous parties.<sup>2</sup> 2d. The drawer of a check is not discharged for want of immediate presentation with due diligence, while the drawer of a bill of exchange is. The drawer of a check is only discharged by such neglect when he sustains actual damage by it, and then only pro tanto.<sup>3</sup> 3d. The death of the drawer of a check rescinds the authority of the banker to pay it; while the death of the drawer of a bill of exchange does not alter the relations of the parties.<sup>4</sup> 4th. Checks, unlike bills of exchange, are always payable without grace.<sup>5</sup> A bank check is substantially the same as an inland bill of exchange; it passes by delivery when payable to bearer, and the rules, as to presentation, diligence, of the holder, etc., which are applicable to one, are generally applicable to the other.<sup>6</sup>

Checks are in use only between banks and bankers and their customers, and are designed to facilitate banking operations. It is of their very essence to be payable on demand, because the contract between the banker and customer is that the money is payable on demand.<sup>7</sup> A check on a banker is, in legal effect, an inland bill of exchange, drawn on a banker, payable to bearer, on demand, and subject, in general, to the rules which regulate the rights and liabilities of parties to bills of exchange.<sup>8</sup> It is generally made payable to bearer, but its character is not changed by the fact that it is made payable to the order of the person to whom it is given.<sup>9</sup> Being indorsed, the holder, if he would preserve his right to resort to the drawers and indorsers, must use the same diligence in presenting it for payment and in giving notice of the drawer's default, as that would be required of him as the holder of an inland bill.<sup>10</sup> A check ought to be drawn within the State where the bank is situated, because if not so drawn they become foreign bills of exchange, subject to the law merchant. This law requires that they be protested, and that due diligence be used in presenting them, in order to hold the drawer and indorsers. It is not necessary to use diligence in presenting an ordinary check in order to charge the drawer, unless he has received damage by the delay.<sup>11</sup> It must be presented for payment within a reasonable time; and it is ascertained that the holder is required to use even greater diligence in presenting it for payment than is necessary in presenting common inland bills of exchange.<sup>12</sup> The maker's or drawer's undertaking is not that he will pay the amount, but that the bank will pay it on presentation. The drawer of a check is not discharged by the holder's failure to present it in due time, unless he have sustained actual prejudice, as by the failure of the banks.<sup>13</sup>

In common with other kinds of negotiable paper, they must contain an order to pay money, and words of negotiability. This enables a bona fide holder, for value, to collect the money without regard to the previous history of the paper.<sup>14</sup> They must be properly signed by the person or firm keeping the account at the banker's; and it is part of the implied contract of the banker that only checks so signed shall be paid.

Checks being payable on demand are not to be accepted, but presented at once for payment.

Giving a check is no payment unless the check is paid.<sup>15</sup> But a tender was held good when made by a check contained in a letter, requesting a receipt in return, which the plaintiff sent back, demanding a larger sum without objecting to the nature of the tender.<sup>16</sup>

A check cannot be the subject of a gift in prospect of death, unless it is presented and paid during the life of the donor; because his death revokes the banker's authority to pay.<sup>17</sup> Though in such a case a check has been considered as of a testamentary character.<sup>18</sup>

A PROMISSORY NOTE is a written promise to pay a certain sum of money at a future time unconditionally.<sup>3</sup>

A holder of a promissory note is one to whom a promissory note is indorsed for collection as an agent, for the purpose of transmitting notices.<sup>3</sup>

A promissory note differs from a mere acknowledgment of debt without any promise to pay, as when the debtor gives his creditor an I. O. U.<sup>4</sup> In its form it usually contains a promise to pay, at a time therein expressed, a sum of money to a person therein named, or to his order, for value received. It is dated and signed by the maker. It is never under seal.

A note by two or more makers may be either joint or joint and several. A note signed by more than one person, and beginning, "We promise," etc., is a joint note only. A joint and several note usually expresses that the makers jointly and severally promise. But a note signed by more than one person, and beginning, "I promise," etc., is several as well as joint.<sup>5</sup> So, a note beginning, "I promise," and signed by one partner for his copartners, is a joint note of all.<sup>7</sup> A note in the form "I promise," etc., subscribed by two persons, is a joint and several note.<sup>8</sup> Persons who sign their names to a note will be presumed to be joint makers in the absence of anything to the contrary on the face of the note.<sup>9</sup> But one of the signers of a note, joint in form, is not estopped by its terms from showing that he is surety; such showing does not contravene the stipulations of the note.<sup>1</sup>

No precise words of contract are essential in a promissory note, provided they amount in a 3-Story Prom. legal effect to a promise to pay.) A promise to deliver the money, or to be accountable for it, or that the payee shall have it, is sufficient.<sup>2</sup>

Although a promissory note, in its original shape, bears no resemblance to a bill of exchange, yet when indorsed it is exactly similar to one; for then it is an order by the indorser of the note upon the maker to pay the indorsee. The indorser is, as it were, the drawer; the maker, the acceptor; and the indorsee, the payee.<sup>1</sup> Most of the rules applicable to bills of exchange equally affect promissory notes.

There are two principal qualities essential to the validity of a note: 1. That it be payable at all events, and not dependent on any contingency.<sup>3</sup> 2. It is required that it be for the payment of money only,<sup>4</sup> not in bank notes.<sup>4</sup>

A promissory note payable to order, or bearer, passes by indorsement, and the holder may bring suit on it in his own name. And though a simple contract a sufficient consideration is implied from its nature.<sup>5</sup>

CONSIDERATION. Negotiable notes and bills of exchange are presumed to have been made for a valid and adequate consideration, and whether they purport to have been given for value received or not, it is unnecessary for the plaintiff in the first instance to allege or prove a consideration. In this respect they differ from other parol contracts.

Between the original parties the consideration may be inquired into, but the burden of proof lies on the defendant to rebut the presumption raised by implication of law. The consideration may also be inquired into where the plaintiff takes the note after it becomes due, or has been dishonored, for in such cases the purchaser takes it subject to every defence which existed against it before it was negotiated, but it lies with the defendant to show that the plaintiff received it after it was due. The consideration may also be inquired into where the plaintiff purchased the note or bill, knowing it to be void in the hands of the party from whom he received it, either on account of fraud, failure, want, or illegality of consideration. When a purchaser takes a bill or note with notice of the facts impeaching its validity, or with sufficient information on the subject to put him upon his inquiry, he cannot recover upon it as a bona fide holder. But though he has such notice, yet if he derives his title from a bona fide holder for value, he may recover thereon.

The law presumes in favor of negotiable paper a good consideration, until the contrary appears; it presumes that the holder is the owner until circumstances of suspicion are shown; it presumes in relation to indorsed paper that the indorsement was made before it became due; that the party in possession took the same in the usual course of business for value; that the maker of a note is the primary debtor; and that the acceptor of a bill of exchange is primarily liable thereon.

Parol or verbal evidence is not admissible to contradict or vary an absolute engagement to pay money on the face of a bill or note, but it is admissible to establish a defence on the ground of want, failure, or illegality of consideration. 15 Pick. 22; 6 Id. 299; 14 Id. 293; 4 Minn. 270; 3 Id. 243; 7 Watts, 130. 7-9 Wend. 620. 17-2 Adol. & Ellis (N. NOTE. Negotiable notes are presumed to have adequate consideration in their own right, but if it appears from the face of the instrument that the consideration is not adequate, or that it is intended to defraud a creditor, the instrument is not negotiable. In the latter case, the instrument is treated as an ordinary contract. The burden of proof is on the party who seeks to enforce it, and he must show that the consideration is adequate. The instrument is not void, but it is not negotiable, and the holder is not entitled to the benefits of negotiability. The instrument is subject to every defence which is available to the maker.

in favor of negotiable instrument, until the contrary appears. The holder is not bound to inquire into the facts impeaching its validity, but he must show that the instrument is not negotiable.

is not admissible to impeach the validity of a bill or note, but it is admissible to impeach the consideration of a bill or note, or the illegality of the consideration.

including want or failure of consideration, or illegality of the consideration, or fraud, or duress, or mistake, or coercion, or any other defect of the contract. The instrument is not void, but it is not negotiable, and the holder is not entitled to the benefits of negotiability.

eration, or fraud. A verbal agreement made at the same time, and inconsistent with the note, cannot be proved to vary its terms,<sup>1</sup> either in respect to time of payment,<sup>2</sup> period of collection,<sup>3</sup> or the condition on which it is to be enforced.<sup>4</sup>

FAILURE OF. An entire failure of consideration has the same effect as the original and total absence.<sup>5</sup> The failure of consideration, either in whole or in part, may be set up as a defence between the original parties, or any other than a bona fide holder without notice.<sup>6</sup> But in order to constitute a perfect defence or bar to a recovery in such an action, a total failure of the consideration must be shown.<sup>7</sup> Where a note is given on a sale of goods for the purchase money, the rule is, that if the chattel be of no value to any one, it cannot be the basis of a bargain. If it be beneficial to the purchaser, he certainly ought to pay for it; if it be a loss to the seller, he is certainly entitled to remuneration for his loss.<sup>8</sup> Though the thing sold possess only a speculating value, still if there be no deception practised, and the purchaser does not exact a warranty, but gives his note for the price, there is not what the law regards as a failure of consideration.<sup>9</sup> There is a plain distinction between mere inadequacy and a total or partial failure of consideration.<sup>10</sup> Inadequacy of consideration is not in itself any defence to an action on a bill or note.<sup>11</sup> But a total failure or want of consideration is a perfect defence, and a partial failure is, to that extent, a good defence.

GOOD FAITH. No one can be considered a bona fide holder of a negotiable note or bill of exchange unless he receives the same in good faith, or, as it is sometimes expressed, without notice of the facts and circumstances going to impeach its validity or diminish the amount recoverable thereon. Though he takes the note before due, he cannot recover on it if he takes it with the knowledge that it has been paid.<sup>12</sup> A person cannot be deemed a bona fide holder who takes partnership paper for the debt of an individual partner.<sup>13</sup>

ILLEGALITY OF. It is a fundamental principle that contracts which have for their object anything repugnant to the general policy of the law, or are contrary to the provisions of a statute, are void;<sup>14</sup> and when a note or bill is founded upon or given to secure the performance of such a contract, neither of the parties to the transaction can enforce it against the other.<sup>15</sup> If part of the consideration of a bill or note be fraudulent or illegal, the instrument is vitiated altogether.<sup>16</sup> Where parties have woven a web of fraud or wrong, it is no part of the duty of courts of justice to unravel the thread<sup>17</sup> as between the immediate parties to the instrument.<sup>18</sup> If a bill originally given upon an illegal consideration be renewed, the renewed bill is also void,<sup>19</sup> unless the amount be reduced by excluding so much of the consideration for the original bill as was illegal.<sup>20</sup>

Contracts made in furtherance of immorality, or designed to facilitate and continue an immoral course of life, are illegal and void; as, where rooms are let for the purpose of prostitution,<sup>21</sup> or notes and bonds are given to secure the continuance of illicit intercourse.<sup>22</sup> But past illicit intercourse is not an illegal consideration for a bond or other specialty to indemnify the injured party where executed for that purpose alone.<sup>23</sup> So, contracts for sale of libelous or immoral and obscene works,<sup>24</sup> or for the commission of an unlawful act,<sup>25</sup> and contracts of indemnity against the consequences of an unlawful act,<sup>26</sup> are illegal and void, and, consequently, no action can be sustained upon a promise based thereon.

Agreements for the general restraint of trade are illegal and void,<sup>27</sup> on the ground of public policy; but a partial restraint, not injurious to the public, founded on a fair and beneficial consideration, is valid.<sup>28</sup>

It is a general rule of commercial law that the illegality of the consideration of a bill or note will not invalidate it in the hands of a bona fide holder if taken in the usual course of trade, unless made void by statute.<sup>29</sup> In general, no person is entitled to be considered the bona fide holder of negotiable paper unless he acquires the same before it becomes due in good faith and for value.<sup>30</sup>

VALUE. On a question of title, where negotiable notes or bills have been misappropriated, lost, or stolen, if a subsequent holder takes them innocently for a full or valuable consideration by giving money, or money and goods for them, in the usual course of trade, he is entitled to recover on them.<sup>31</sup> As between him and the real owner the equities are equal, and therefore the law, in order to facilitate the negotiation of commercial paper, allows the holder who has acquired it fairly, in the usual course of business, and parted with value for it, to hold it even as against the real owner.<sup>1</sup> If the holder has acquired the instrument without having parted with value for it, there is no good ground for excluding a defence interposed by the parties to the bill or note.<sup>2</sup> And hence the law does not protect the innocent holder of negotiable paper against an equitable defence, unless he has received it in the usual course of business for a valuable consideration; it is not enough that he be a bona fide consideration, as between the parties to the transfer; it must also be valuable.<sup>3</sup>

WANT OF CONSIDERATION. A valid and sufficient consideration is the very essence of every contract not under seal; and promissory notes and bills of exchange are no exception to the general rule.<sup>4</sup> Where a note is made for the accommodation of the payee, it is self-evident that no action can be sustained thereon in the name of the payee against the maker.<sup>5</sup> No more can the drawer of a bill maintain an action thereon against the drawee who has accepted the same for his accommodation.<sup>6</sup> Between the parties to the transaction the making of such a note or the accepting of such a bill is a mere loan of credit, designed to enable the borrower to raise money, either generally in the market or in a particular manner; and, until the bill or note is negotiated, no obligation attaches to the instrument. A note made for the accommodation of the payee has no legal inception until it is transferred for value.<sup>7</sup> The maker of a note,<sup>8</sup> the drawer of a check,<sup>9</sup> an indorser,<sup>10</sup> and the acceptor of a bill,<sup>11</sup> for the accommodation of another party, without restriction in respect to the use which is to be made of the paper, authorizes the accommodated party to make any use of it of which the paper is capable; to deliver it for future advances,<sup>12</sup> as collateral to<sup>13</sup> or in payment of an antecedent debt,<sup>14</sup> or he may get it discounted and appropriate the proceeds. But in order to recover on such paper, which has been misappropriated, the plaintiff must have received it in good faith. Evidence that he gave value for it is prima facie proof of good faith, and whatever shows him to have acquired the paper in bad faith, or with notice of facts impeaching its validity, will defeat his right of recovery.<sup>15</sup> So, if a bill or note be lost or stolen, and afterward negotiated to one having no knowledge of these facts, for a valuable consideration, in the usual course of business, his title is good, and he shall recover the amount.<sup>16</sup> Where a note or bill has been diverted from its original destination, in violation of the agreement upon which it was made or indorsed, the holder cannot recover upon it against the accommodation maker or indorser, without showing that he received it in the ordinary course of trade, giving for it a valuable consideration.<sup>17</sup> And, in general, where the holder takes a note or bill after it is due, he takes it subject to every defence existing against it in the hands of the person from whom he receives it,<sup>18</sup> because he acquires it out of the ordinary course of business, and after it has been dishonored.<sup>19</sup>

An exchange of notes for the same amount made by two firms of the same tenor is, in legal effect, a sale.<sup>20</sup> So, when a person gives his own note in exchange for another note, he is a purchaser for value.<sup>21</sup> So, cross acceptances for mutual accommodation are, respectively, considerations for each other.<sup>22</sup> A fluctuating balance may form a consideration for a bill.<sup>23</sup> The same general rules as apply to the nature of the consideration for other simple contracts, are also applicable to the various contracts on a bill or note. Consideration is, in general, either some detriment to the plaintiff, sustained for the sake or at the instance of the defendant, or some benefit to the defendant moving from the plaintiff. It is not necessary that the consideration should move to the defendant personally; if it moves to a third person by his desire or acquiescence, that is sufficient. Therefore, the debt of a third person is a good consideration to support a contract on a bill payable at a future day.<sup>24</sup> Thus a note cannot be supported as a gift, for a gift is not consummated and perfect until the delivery of the thing promised, and until then the party may revoke his promise.<sup>25</sup>

From whatever cause arising, the want of consideration will defeat a recovery on a note, bill, or check, as between the original parties. Want of consideration destroys the validity of a note without any regard to the bona fide of the transaction.<sup>26</sup> Fraud destroys the contract. But if the party defrauded would disaffirm the contract, he must do so at the earliest practicable moment after the discovery of the cheat, and must return whatever he has received upon it. But if the thing received be entirely valueless, or a different thing from that contracted for, the contract is void. CONSTRUCTION. Contracts are to be construed so as to carry into effect the intention of the contracting parties. Where the language is plain and unambiguous, there is no room and no occasion for interpretation. On the other hand, where the words used admit of two interpretations, the rule is to adopt that which will give effect to the contract according to the understanding of the parties. It is an established principle that the construction of personal contracts is to be regarded by, and their validity depends upon, the laws of the place where they were made, except when made with a view to performance in some other State or country, and then the law of such country is to prevail. The remedy on contracts is regulated according to the law of the place where a judicial enforcement is sought.

DRAWING AND MAKING. Bills of exchange and promissory notes are usually written on paper. They may be written on parchment, cloth, leather, or any other substitute for paper, capable of being transferred from hand to hand. They may be written in any language, and in any form of words; and, like any other contract, may be written in pencil as well as in ink. It is enough if the words employed import an absolute engagement to pay a certain sum of money. There are no precise words requisite to make a promissory note. The signature or indorsement of negotiable paper may be by a mark.

A date in general is not essential to the validity of a bill or note; and, if there be no date, it will be considered as dated at the time when it was made. The date expressed in the instrument is prima facie evidence of the time when the instrument was made. And this rule applies to written instruments in general. In general a bill or note may be post dated or ante dated.

The time of payment is regularly and usually stated at the beginning of the note or bill; but if no time be expressed the instrument will be payable on demand. The expression "after sight," on a bill of exchange, means after acceptance, or protest for non-acceptance, and not after a mere private exhibition to the drawee; for the sight must appear in a legal way. A bill payable so many days after sight means legal sight, and the bill begins to run from the presentment and acceptance, and not from the time of mere presentment. A bill or note must be certain as to the time of payment. So, also, the amount to be paid. The order to pay need be in no particular form; any expression amounting to an order, or direction, is sufficient.

The payee should be described so that he cannot be confounded with another person of the same name. A promise to pay a given sum on demand, for value received, without saying to whom, is mere waste paper.

The signature of a drawer or maker of a bill or note is usually subscribed in the right hand corner; but it is sufficient if written in any other part. "I, J. S., promise to pay," has been held a sufficient signature of a promissory note. A man who cannot write may sign a bill by his mark. If a bill be not made payable either to any payee in particular, or to the drawer's order, or to the bearer in general, it is mere waste paper.

Unless a bill or note be payable to order, or to bearer, it is not negotiable, though still a valid security as between the original parties. A bond, note, or bill of exchange, drawn payable to any person or persons alone, and not drawn payable to any order, bearer, or assigns, is not negotiable. A bill or note may be payable to A. B., or order, or to A. B., or bearer, or to the drawer's own order. If made payable to order, it is assignable by indorsement; if made payable to bearer, it is assignable by mere delivery.

It is not necessary to make notes and bills payable at any particular place, unless required by statute. It is very convenient to name the place of payment in the body of the instrument; and when this is done it should be presented at that place for payment.

The words "value received" are not necessary to a bill of exchange or other negotiable instrument, for it is implied, and need not be alleged or proved.

It is common to insert in bills of exchange words of advice, specifying to what account the amount directed to be paid is to be charged. The drawer sometimes gives the drawee a general direction in words like these, "and charge the same to my account," and sometimes makes it specific by directing the payee to "put it to the account of A. B.," or "to the B. road assessment," or to the cargo of a certain ship, etc.* But such words of advice are not essential in bills of exchange.<sup>1</sup>

A bill of exchange being an open letter of request for the payment of money, must be regularly addressed to the person on whom it is drawn; and this is usually done at the bottom on the left hand of the bill. For no one can be liable as acceptor but the person to whom the bill is addressed, unless he be an acceptor for honor.<sup>2</sup>

AMBIGUOUS, CONDITIONAL, AND IRREGULAR INSTRUMENTS. A note cannot be made by a man to himself, without more. Neither can it be made to himself and another man.<sup>3</sup> But a note made payable to the maker's order becomes, in legal effect, when indorsed in blank, a note made payable to bearer,<sup>4</sup> and when specially indorsed a note payable to the indorser's order.<sup>5</sup>

If an instrument be made in terms so ambiguous that it is doubtful whether it be a bill of exchange or promissory note, the holder may treat it as either at his election.<sup>6</sup>

A man may draw a bill on himself.<sup>7</sup>

Bills and notes must be for the payment of money only, and not for the payment of money and the performance of some other act.<sup>8</sup> Therefore a note to deliver up horses and a wharf and pay money at a particular day is no promissory note.<sup>9</sup> Nor must a bill or note be in the alternative.<sup>10</sup> And it must be for the payment of money in specie.<sup>11</sup> And for the payment of money.<sup>12</sup> The order or promise must be to pay absolutely, and at all events the payment must not depend upon a contingency.<sup>13</sup> It is not material that the time when the event may happen is uncertain, provided it must happen at some time or other; thus, a note payable on the death of A. B., or of the maker, is good.<sup>14</sup> The bill or note must not be made payable out of a particular fund,<sup>15</sup> for the fund may prove insufficient.

If a bill be defective as a bill or note it may still be evidence of an agreement.

Any material alteration made in a note after its execution or indorsement, such as inserting words of negotiability or altering the time or place of payment, discharges the previous parties to it.<sup>16</sup> But where a blank is left in it, there is an implied authority to the holder to fill up the instrument, and make it in fact what it was designed to be.<sup>17</sup> If made payable to blank, the person to whom it is negotiated may fill it up by inserting his own name.<sup>18</sup> If made payable to the person who shall thereafter indorse it, it is negotiable without any alteration, and may be transferred by indorsement.<sup>19</sup> Also, if a person sign his name upon a blank piece of paper, and deliver it to another to draw above his signature, he by that act authorizes it to be filled up for any amount.<sup>20</sup>

AGREEMENTS INTENDED TO CONTROL THE OPERATION OF BILLS OR NOTES. Such agreements are either written or verbal. Such written agreement is either on the instrument itself or on a distinct paper; and is either contemporaneous with the completion of the bill or note, or it is a subsequent agreement. A memorandum on a bill or note, made before it is complete, is sometimes considered as a part of the instrument so as to control its operation, and sometimes not. If a memorandum make the payment contingent, it will be incorporated in the note.<sup>21</sup> But, where it is merely directory, as if it points out the place of payment,<sup>22</sup> or be merely the expression of an intended courtesy,<sup>23</sup> or import that a collateral security has been given,<sup>24</sup> or be intended to identify the instrument,<sup>25</sup> it does not affect its operation.

A written agreement, on a distinct paper, to renew, or in other respects, to qualify the liability of the maker or acceptor, is good as between original parties.<sup>26</sup> But a written agreement, though contemporaneous, will not restrain the operation of the bill or note, if it be collateral, that is, if other persons besides the parties to the bill or note be parties to it.<sup>27</sup>

No verbal agreement can take effect, if con-

temporaneous with the making of the instrument; for that would be to allow verbal evidence to vary a written contract.<sup>7</sup> Evidence is admissible to deny the receipt of value, but not to vary the engagement.<sup>8</sup>

GUARANTY. The engagement of a surety is accessory to the agreement of the principal, and it is a general rule of law that whatever discharges the contract of the principal discharges also that of the surety. It results from the definition of a surety's engagement, as being accessory to a principal obligation, that the extinction of the principal obligation necessarily extinguishes that of the surety, it being of the nature of an accessory obligation that cannot exist without its principal; therefore, whenever the principal is discharged, in whatever manner it may be, not only by actual payment or a compensation, but also by a release, the surety is discharged likewise; for the essence of the obligation being that the surety is only obliged as for all of the principal debtor, he then being no longer obliged when there is no longer a principal debtor for whom he was obliged. In this manner the surety is discharged by the extinction of the debt.<sup>9</sup> A person who guarantees a note is no party to the note.<sup>10</sup> His contract is special, and must be specially declared on.<sup>11</sup> An absolute guaranty of payment made on a good consideration, indorsed on the back of a note, is an engagement that the maker shall pay it at maturity, and that if it is not so paid the guarantor will himself pay it.<sup>12</sup> A guaranty for collection is a very different contract from a guaranty of payment; the latter being a contract that the money shall be paid at maturity, while the former is in substance a warranty that it is collectable.<sup>13</sup> A guaranty that a note is collectable is a conditional promise, binding upon the guarantor only in case of diligence. In order to perfect the obligation so as to render him liable thereon, the guarantee must use diligence in the endeavor to collect the note, for this is a condition precedent.<sup>14</sup> The terms of the guaranty must be complied with before the guarantors can be rendered liable on the contract. Notice of non-payment is not necessary in order to charge the guarantor, but it is advisable to give him notice, inasmuch as it frequently becomes important to prove notice as a means of rebutting the presumption of laches in the party guaranteed.<sup>15</sup> A general guaranty of the note, or a guaranty of its collection, implies a right on the guarantor's part, that the party guaranteed shall use diligence in collecting the debt of the principal debtor, and give to him (the guarantor) every opportunity to protect himself against his principal.<sup>16</sup> The terms of the contract of guaranty are construed strictly.<sup>17</sup>

INDORSEMENT AND TRANSFER.

To indorse is to write on the back. Bills of exchange and promissory notes are indorsed by a party's writing his name on the back.

An indorser is the person who makes an indorsement.

An indorsee is the person to whom the indorsement is made.

The indorsement is that which is written on the back of an instrument in writing, and which has relation to it; writing any name on the back of a promissory note or other negotiable instrument.

A blank indorsement is one in which the name of the indorser only is written upon the instrument. Though generally made by writing the indorser's name on the back, a writing across the face may answer the same purpose.<sup>18</sup>

A conditional indorsement is one made subject to some condition without the performance of which the instrument will not be or remain valid.<sup>19</sup>

An indorsement in full is one in which mention is made of the name of the indorser.<sup>20</sup>

A qualified indorsement is one which restrains, or limits, or qualifies, or enlarges the liability of the indorser, in any manner different from what the law generally imports as his true liability, deducible from the nature of the instrument.<sup>21</sup> The words generally used are "sans recours" ("without recourse").<sup>22</sup>

An indorsement is generally made primarily for the purpose of transferring the rights of the holder of the instrument to some other person. It has, however, various results, such as rendering the indorser liable in certain events; and hence an indorsement is sometimes made merely for the purpose of additional security. This is called accommodation indorsement when done without consideration other than an exchange of indorsements.

A restrictive indorsement is one which restrains the negotiability of the instrument to a particular person or for a particular person or purpose.<sup>23</sup>

THE EFFECT OF THE INDORSEMENT on a negotiable promissory note or bill of exchange is to transfer the property in the note or bill to the person mentioned in the indorsement when it is made in full, or to any person to whose possession it may lawfully come thereafter even by mere delivery, when it is made in blank, so that the possessor may sue upon it in his own name, as well as if he had been named as the payee.<sup>24</sup> And any person who has possession of the instrument is presumed to be the legal holder of the instrument so as to sue and sometimes not. If the payment contingent, it is the note.<sup>25</sup> But, where as if it points out the mere expression, or import that a color given, or be intended, it does not affect its effect, on a distinct paper, to qualify the liability of the acceptor, is good as a bill. But a written agreement, contemporaneous, will not render the bill or note, if it be other persons besides the maker or note be parties to bona fide holder and owner for value, until the contrary is shown. When the indorsement is made before the note becomes due, the indorsee and all subsequent holders are entitled to recover the face of the note against the maker, without any right on his part to offset claims which he may have against the payee; or, as it is frequently stated, the indorsee takes it free from all equities between the antecedent parties of which he had no notice.<sup>a</sup>

Indorsers, also, unless the indorsement be qualified, become liable to pay the amount demanded by the instrument by the failure of the principal (the maker of a note, or acceptor of a bill), upon due notification of such failure, to any subsequent indorsee who can legally claim to hold through the particular indorser.<sup>b</sup>

Where a person, not the payee of a note on demand or on time, puts his name on the back at the time of its inception, he is liable as an original promisor or surety, but not as indorser.<sup>c</sup>

Notes and bills payable to order, or to bearer, or containing any words to make them assignable, may be transferred so as to give the indorsee a right of action against all antecedent parties; and bills or notes containing no express words to make them assignable, may, in general, be assigned so as to give the assignee a right of action upon them against the assignor.<sup>d</sup>

A bill or note, if payable to order, is not transferable except by indorsement; if payable to bearer, it is transferable by mere delivery.<sup>e</sup> If a bill be made payable to A., or order, for the use of B., B. has but an equitable title, and the right of transfer is in A. alone.<sup>f</sup> No one but the payee or person legally interested in the instrument can convey the title by indorsement.<sup>g</sup> Indorsements are of two kinds: an indorsement in blank, or, as it is sometimes termed, a blank indorsement, and an indorsement in full, or a special indorsement. No particular form of words is essential to any indorsement. The mark of a person who cannot write is a sufficient indorsement.<sup>h</sup> A blank indorsement is made by the mere signature of the indorser on the back of the bill; its effect is to make the instrument thereafter payable to the bearer.<sup>i</sup> An indorsement in full, besides the signature of the indorser, expresses in whose favor the indorsement is made. Thus, an indorsement in full by A. B. is in this form: "Pay C. D., or order; A. B.," the signature of the indorser being subscribed to the direction; its effect is to make the instrument payable to C. D., or his order only, and accordingly, C. D. cannot transfer it otherwise than by indorsement. The omission of the words "or order" is not material in a special indorsement, for the indorsee takes it with all its incidents, and, among the rest, with its negotiable quality, if it were originally made payable to order.<sup>j</sup> The indorsee may convert a blank indorsement into a special one in his own favor by superscribing the necessary words.<sup>k</sup> The indorsee may also convert the blank indorsement into a special one in favor of a stranger, by superscribing above the indorsement the words "pay A. B., or order;" and if he transfer the bill in that way instead of indorsing, he is not liable as an indorser.<sup>l</sup> Where there are several blank indorsements, the holder may fill up the first one of them to himself, or may deduce his title through all of them.<sup>m</sup> The holder of a promissory note indorsed in blank may fill it up with any contract consistent with the character of an indorsement.<sup>n</sup> It is not essential to the validity of these written transfers that they be on the back; they may be on the face of the bill.<sup>o</sup> All payees of a bill or note must join in the indorsement.<sup>p</sup> There is no legal limit to the number of indorsements. A misspelling will not necessarily avoid an indorsement.<sup>q</sup> Neither indorsement nor acceptance are complete before delivery of the bill.<sup>r</sup>

LIABILITY OF AN INDORSER. Every indorser of a bill is in the nature of a new drawer, and is liable to every succeeding holder in default of acceptance or payment by the drawee. But a man may indorse a bill without personal responsibility, by expressing on his indorsement that it is made with this qualification, that he shall not be liable on default of acceptance or payment by the drawee. An indorsement "without recourse," or at the indorsee's "own risk," will not expose the indorser to any liability.<sup>s</sup> While these words, or any words which convey the same meaning, protect the indorser from any demand on him, they convey to the indorsee the paper itself, with all the negotiable qualities, in the same way as an indorsement with no words of restriction or exception would do;<sup>t</sup> but without these the indorser is liable for the whole amount.<sup>u</sup> A party transferring a bill may also decline personal responsibility, by converting an existing blank indorsement into a special one in favor of his transferee.<sup>e</sup> A bill may be indorsed conditionally, so as to impose on the drawer, who afterward accepts, a liability to pay the bill to the indorser or his transferees in a particular event only. An indorsement admits the signature and capacity of every prior party.<sup>f</sup> The striking out of an indorsement by mistake will not discharge the indorser.<sup>g</sup> Nor the striking out by mistake of the acceptance.<sup>h</sup> But the striking it out by design will. In an action by the holder of a note against an indorser, the plaintiff cannot be permitted to strike out the name of any indorser prior to the defendant.<sup>i</sup>

When a bill is returned to the first indorser
after protest, he may strike out his indorsement, though it be in full, and maintain an action in his own name.<sup>j</sup> A holder of a bill, with several indorsements in blank, may strike out all the indorsers' names after the first, and write over the first indorser's name an assignment to himself.<sup>k</sup>

OF A PERSON TRANSFERRING BY DELIV-ERY. A transfer by mere delivery, without indorsement, of a bill of exchange or promissory note made or become payable to bearer, does not render the transferer liable on the instrument to the transferee. It is a general rule that the transferer is not even liable on the consideration, if the bill or note so transferred by delivery, without indorsement, turn out to be of no value by reason of the failure of the other parties to it. For the sending to market a bill or note payable to bearer without indorsing it, is prima facie a sale of the bill; and there is no implied guaranty of the solvency of the maker, or any other party.<sup>l</sup> Such seems to be the general rule governing the transfer by delivery, not only of ordinary bills of exchange and promissory notes, but also of bank notes. Nor is there any hardship in such a rule, for the remedy against the transferer may always be preserved by indorsement or by special contract.
The rule, however, is not without exceptions.
If instead of cash the creditor consents to take notes, this is a favor to the debtor, and it will thence be inferred, in absence of evidence to the contrary, that the notes were not to be in payment, if they turn out to be of no value without the fault of the creditor. A bill of exchange or promissory note, either of a debtor or any other person, is not payment of a precedent debt, unless it be so expressly agreed.<sup>m</sup> Giving a creditor a bank check is not payment.<sup>n</sup> But if the bill or note, made or become payable to bearer, be delivered without indorsement, not in payment of a pre-existing debt, but by way of exchange for goods or other bills or notes, or for money transferred to the party delivering the bill, at the same time, such a transaction is a sale of the bill by the party transferring it, and a purchase of the instrument with all risks by the transferee. It is extremely clear, that if the holder of a bill send it to market without indorsing his name upon it, neither morally nor the laws of the country will compel him to refund the money for which he sold it, if he did not know at the time that it was not a good bill.<sup>o</sup> A transfer by delivery, though he does not in general warrant the solvency of the maker of a promissory note or bill of exchange, does warrant that the bill or note is not forged or fictitious.<sup>p</sup> A transfer by delivery cannot be liable in any case to a subsequent transferee, either on the instrument or the consideration.<sup>q</sup> But, in all cases, if notes or bills are transferred as valid, when the trans-ferer knows they are good for nothing, the suppression of the truth is a fraud, and he is liable.

If A. could show fraud or knowledge of the maker's insolvency in the payer, then it would be wholly immaterial whether the notes were taken at the time of the sale or afterward.<sup>r</sup>
The doctrine of implied warranty in sales applies to the sale of a note, so that one who sells an indorsed note gives an implied warranty that the indorsement is genuine.<sup>s</sup>

RIGHTS OF THE INDORSEE. A transfer by indorsement vests in the indorsee a right of action against all the parties whose names are on the bill, in case of default of acceptance or payment; and against an innocent indorsee for value, no prior party can set up the defence of fraud, duress, or absence of consideration.<sup>t</sup> If a bill be reindorsed to a previous indorser, he has, in general, no remedy against the intermediate parties, for they would have their remedy over against him, and the result of the actions would be to place the parties in precisely the same situation as before any action at all.<sup>u</sup> But where the holder has previously indorsed, and the subsequent intermediate indorser has no right of action or remedy on that previous indorsement against the holder, there are cases in which the holder may sue the intermediate in-dorser.<sup>v</sup> It is competent for an indorser of a note, on again coming into possession of the note, to maintain an action thereon, without producing extrinsic proof of ownership.<sup>w</sup> If any person who indorses a bill of exchange to another, whether for value or for the purpose of collection, comes into the possession thereof again, he is regarded, unless the contrary appear in evidence, as the bona fide holder and proprietor of such bill, and is entitled to recover, notwithstanding there may be on it one or more indorsements in full subsequent to the one to him, without producing any receipt or indorsement back from either of such indorsers, whose names he may strike from the bill or not, as he may think proper."<sup>1</sup>

Where a bill or note is merely indorsed to another and deposited with him as a trustee, he can only use it in conformity with the stipulations on which he became the depository of it. The trust may be indorsed on the bill itself by a restrictive indorsement, or a restrictive direction appended to the payee's name, so that into whose hands soever the bill may travel, it will carry a trust on the face of it. The following have been held restrictive directions or indorsements: "The within must be credited to A. B."<sup>2</sup> "Pay to A. B., or order, for my use." "Pay to A. B. for my account." "Pay to A. B. only."<sup>3</sup>

The omission of the words "or order" in a special indorsement will not restrain the negotiability of a bill.<sup>4</sup>

—OF TRANSFERRED BY DELIVERY. The indorsee of a bill payable to order and not made payable to bearer by a blank indorsement, has no right to the bill, either so as to retain it against the real owner, or to sue any party upon it unless the indorser had a right to indorse.<sup>5</sup> Whereas, if a check, bill, or note be made, or have become, payable to bearer, the title of the holder, both as against the former holder, on the one hand, and the maker, acceptor, or indorser, on the other, is not affected by any infirmity in the title of the transferrer, provided the holder took it bona fide. A note payable to A., or bearer, may be negotiated by delivery only, even if it be indorsed by A.<sup>6</sup> If a man takes bona fide an instrument made or become payable to bearer, he has a good title to it, with whatever degree of negligence he may have acted, unless his gross negligence induced a finding of fraud.<sup>7</sup> Gross negligence may be evidence of bad faith, but it is not the same thing.<sup>8</sup>

TRANSFER UNDER PECULIAR CIRCUMSTANCES. An indorsement may be made either before or after acceptance. If any bond, note, or bill of exchange is indorsed or delivered after the day on which it is made payable, and the indorsee may institute an action thereon, against the maker, drawer, or obligor; the defendant will be allowed to set up the same defence that he might have done had the same action been instituted in the name and for the use of the person to whom the bond, note, or bill was originally made payable.

After a bill or note is due, it comes disgraced to the indorsee, and it is his duty to make inquiries concerning it. If he takes it, though he give a full consideration for it, he takes it on the credit of an indorser, and subject to all the equities with which it may be incumbered.<sup>9</sup> An indorsee of an overdue bill or note is liable to such equities only as attach on the bill or note itself, and not to claims arising out of collateral matters.<sup>10</sup> The same rule applies to checks transferred a long time after they are issued, for a check is payable immediately, and the holder keeps it at his peril, and a person taking it after it is due takes it also at his peril.<sup>11</sup> A promissory negotiable note, payable on demand, unless transferred within a reasonable time, will be considered overdue and dishonored.<sup>12</sup> The law, in the absence of any evidence on the subject, presumes a transfer to have been made before the bill was due.<sup>13</sup> In the absence of all proof as to the time when a note was indorsed, the court will presume that it was indorsed while current.<sup>14</sup>

If any such bond, note, or bill of exchange is indorsed on or before the day on which the same is made payable, and the indorsee institutes an action thereon, the defendant may give in evidence on the trial any money actually paid on such bond, note, or bill of exchange, before the same was indorsed or assigned to the plaintiff, on proving that the plaintiff had notice of the said payment before such indorsement was made and accepted.

After the death of the holder, his personal representatives should transfer.

PARTIES. Whatever a man may do by himself—except by virtue of a delegated authority—he may do by his agent.<sup>15</sup> Disqualifications for contracting on one's own account are not disqualifications for contracting as an agent for another; for an agent is a mere instrument. Therefore, infants, and other persons laboring under disabilities, may be agents.<sup>16</sup>

No particular form of appointment is necessary to enable an agent to draw, accept, or indorse bills, so as to charge his principal. He may be specially appointed for this purpose, or may derive his power from some general or implied authority. The authority of an agent to transfer a note by indorsement may be created verbally, whether the principal be an individual or a corporation, and such authority may be inferred from facts and circumstances connected with the transaction.<sup>5</sup> When a person has authority, as agent, to draw, accept, or indorse a bill for another, he should do it in such a manner as to show that it is the act of his principal; as by signing it "A. B., by C.

D., his agent." Preceding his own name with words that express the fact that he signs for another.<sup>6</sup> Subsequent recognition of an agent's acts is equivalent to previous authority; provided the agent, when he acted, assumed to act as agent.<sup>7</sup> An authority is often implied from circumstances; as, if an agent has formerly been in the habit of drawing, accepting, or indorsing for his principal, and his principal has recognized his acts.<sup>8</sup>

CORPORATIONS carrying on business under no restraining act may make promissory notes and draw bills of exchange where these are the usual and proper means to accomplish the purposes of their organization; and such notes and bills are presumed legal and valid where they are not prohibited by law, and are received in good faith. But are invalid where given in violation of law, or for purposes wholly foreign to those for which the corporation was created.<sup>9</sup>

DRUNKENNESS when total, producing a complete, though temporary, suspension of reason, is of itself a defence to an action on a bill or note.<sup>10</sup>
The person intoxicated has no agreeing mind.<sup>11</sup>

EXECUTORS. The executor of a deceased party to a bill or note has, in general, the same rights and liabilities as his testator.<sup>12</sup> Therefore, if a bill be indorsed to a man who is by a person ignorant of his death, that is an indorsement to the personal representative of the deceased.<sup>13</sup> On the death of the holder of a bill or note his executors or administrators may indorse; and an indorsement by the executors or administrators is, for all purposes, as effectual as an indorsement of the deceased.<sup>14</sup> Presentment; notice of dishonor, and payment, should be made by and to the executor, or administrator, in the same manner as by, or to, the deceased.<sup>15</sup>

INFANTS can make a binding contract for necessaries only. And an infant can never bind himself even for necessaries when he has a parent or guardian who supplies his wants.<sup>16</sup>
What are considered necessaries depends upon the rank and circumstances of the infant in the particular case. All his other contracts are considered voidable and void. A distinction usually of importance; 1st, because a void-able contract may be afterward affirmed, but a contract absolutely void is incapable of confirmation; and, 2d, because a void contract may be treated by all parties as a nullity; but contracts voidable can only be avoided by the contracting party himself. An infant's contract on a bill or note is voidable only, and his liability may be established by ratification after full age.<sup>17</sup>

The confirmation or ratification must be distinct, and with a knowledge that he is not liable on the contract. A mere acknowledgment of a debt, or a payment of a part of it, will not support an action on such a contract.<sup>18</sup> When an infant indorses negotiable notes or bills, he does not pass any interest in them as against himself; his act is voidable, but neither the acceptor nor subsequent indorsers can allege his infancy to evade their liability; nor can the drawer of a bill set up the infancy of a payee and indorser as a defence to an action thereon against himself.<sup>19</sup> An infant may sue on a bill,<sup>20</sup> but he sues by his guardian or next friend,<sup>21</sup> and payment should accordingly be made to him.

Parties contracting with an infant assume all the inconveniences incident to the protection which the law allows him.

MARRIED WOMEN are in general restricted by statute, and bargain, sell, and convey their real and personal property, and enter into contracts with reference to the same, subject to such restrictions.<sup>22</sup>

NON COMPOS MENTIS. It is a general rule of universal law that the contracts of a lunatic, an idiot, or other persons non compos mentis from age or personal infirmity, are utterly void.<sup>23</sup> Sanity is to be presumed, and the burden of proof is on the party denying it.
But after a general derangement has been shown, the burden is upon the other party to show the sanity at the time of doing the particular act.<sup>24</sup>

PARTNERS. The law presumes that each partner in trade is intrusted by his co-partners with a general authority in all partnership affairs. Each partner, therefore, by making, drawing, indorsing, or accepting negotiable instruments,<sup>25</sup> in the name of the firm, and in the course of the partnership transactions, binds the firm, whether he signs the name of the firm, or signs by procuration, or accepts, in his own name, a bill drawn on the firm.* Partners are bound by a note given by one party in the partnership name, although in violation of private instructions from one partner to another.* A partner has no right to bind his co-partner by a note, except in a partnership transaction.* It is binding, nevertheless, in the hands of a bona fide holder, without notice.* But an action cannot be maintained against the firm where a partner has signed his name only to the instrument, though the proceeds were in reality applied to partnership purposes,* unless the name of the signing partner were also the name of the firm.* But a partner cannot bind his co-partner by a joint and several note.* The firm is not liable where the partner varies the style of the firm, unless there be some evidences of assent by the firm to the variance, or unless the name used though inaccurately yet substantially describe the firm.* Even if a partner exceed his authority, and pledge the partnership credit on a negotiable security for his own private advantage, his co-partners are liable. But if a party taking a bill or note of the firm knew, at the time, that it was given without the consent of the other partners, he cannot charge them.* And the taking of a joint security for a separate debt raises a presumption that the creditor knew it was given without the concurrence of the other partners.* If there existed fraud and collusion between the partner and his creditor, the bill is void in the hands of the fraudulent holder, not only against the partnership but against other parties to the bill.* But securities which may be unavailing against the firm when in the hands of the party privy to the transaction, will, nevertheless, bind them when in the hands of an innocent indorsee for value.*

A dormant partner, whose name does not appear, is bound by bills drawn, accepted, or indorsed by his co-partners in the name of the firm.*

Though a man really have no interest in a firm, yet if he suffer himself to be held out to the world as a member of it, he thereby authorizes those to whom he has been held out to treat him as a contracting party.* To make a man

Having funds in his hands belonging to the drawer, it is his duty, according to mercantile usage, to honor the bill by accepting it.* If he has been supplied with funds expressly to meet the bill, or have money on deposit under such circumstances as to imply a contract on his part to accept the draft, he owes it as a duty to the drawer, to accept the bill; just as a bank or banker is bound to honor and pay checks drawn by customers on a cash account.* Without acceptance a banker is liable to his customers, if, having sufficient funds, he neglects to pay his checks. A bill can only be accepted by the drawee,* except for honor.* If the drawee be incompetent to contract, as, for example, by reason of infancy, etc., the bill may be treated as dishonored. Acceptance by one partner binds the co-partner.* But a bill drawn on several persons not in partnership should be accepted by all, and if not, may be treated as dishonored.* Acceptance will, however, be binding on such as do make it.* There cannot be two or more separate acceptors of the same bill not jointly responsible. There is no custom or usage of merchants, according to which, if a bill be drawn upon one man, it may be accepted by another. A bill must be accepted by the drawee, and failing him by some one for the honor of the drawer. There cannot be a series of acceptors.* Acceptance after the time of payment is binding.*

ACCEPTANCE AND PAYMENT.

Acceptance is an engagement to pay the bill when due<sup>3</sup> in funds in his hands belonging to his duty, according to mention the bill by accepting it.<sup>4</sup> It is implied with funds expressly to have money on deposit under an agreement to imply a contract on his part, he owes it as a duty to accept the bill; just as a bank or honor and pay checks drawn on cash account.<sup>5</sup> Without acceptance is liable to his customers, if funds, he neglects to pay his bill can only be accepted by the drawer's honor.<sup>6</sup> If the drawee be contract, as, for example, by etc., the bill may be treated as acceptance by one partner only.<sup>7</sup> But a bill drawn on a partner in partnership should be paid, if not, may be treated as acceptance will, however, be made to make it.<sup>8</sup> There cannot be separate acceptances of the same bill. There is no such thing as a bill being accepted by one partner, and the other failing him by some one for drawer. There cannot be a bill after the time of making.

The following rules are, in general, observed in regard to the acceptance of bills of exchange: No person should be charged as an acceptor of a bill of exchange, unless his acceptance is in writing, signed by himself or his lawful agent. If such acceptance be written on paper other than the bill, it should not bind the acceptor, except in favor of a person to whom such acceptance shall have been shown, and who, in faith thereof, shall have received the bill for a valuable consideration.

An unconditional promise in writing to accept a bill before a bill is drawn, is deemed an actual acceptance in favor of every person to whom such written promise shall have been shown, and who, upon the faith thereof, shall have received the bill for a valuable consideration. A letter written within a reasonable time before or after the date of a bill, intelligibly describing it, and promising to accept it, is, if shown to one who takes it on the credit of the letter, a mutual acceptance binding on the promisor.<sup>9</sup>

Every holder of a bill presenting the same for acceptance may require that the acceptance be written on the bill, and a refusal to comply with such request should be deemed a refusal to accept, and that the bill may be protested for non-acceptance.

The preceding rules should not be construed to impair the right of any person to whom a promise to accept a bill may have been made, and who, on the faith of such promise, shall have drawn or negotiated the bill, to recover damages of the party making such promise, on his refusal to accept such bill.

The design of these rules is to discourage the taking of such acceptances and engagements to accept; for where anything less than a written acceptance on the bill is taken, the instrument is left incumbered with conditions and qualifications greatly impairing its character as a negotiable instrument. The acceptance must be in writing, and must be signed by the acceptor or his agent.<sup>10</sup> The usual and regular mode of making an acceptance on the bill is writing the word "accepted," and subscribing the drawee's name. According to the law merchant, any words written by the drawee on a bill, not putting a direct negative upon its request, as "accepted," "presented," "seen," the day of the month, or a direction to a third person to pay it, is prima facie a complete acceptance.<sup>11</sup> The acceptance under the statute must be signed, but the signature of the drawee written across the face of the bill is a sufficient writing and signing.<sup>12</sup>

If any person upon whom a bill of exchange is drawn, and to whom the same is delivered for acceptance, destroys such bill, or fails or refuses, within twenty-four hours after such delivery, or within such period as the holder may allow, to return the bill accepted or non-accepted to the holder, is deemed to have accepted the same. The person on whom a bill of exchange is drawn, when it is presented to him for acceptance, ought to determine whether he will accept it or not; and if he determine not to accept it, he is bound to return it, for the party is entitled to the immediate use of the thing, and if the drawee deprive him of the use of the instrument by destroying it, he is liable as if he had written his name upon it.<sup>13</sup>

A bill drawn upon one by himself is considered as an accepted bill;<sup>14</sup> so, if it is not addressed to any one, and so of a corporation.<sup>15</sup>

The holder is entitled to require from the drawer an absolute engagement to pay in money according to the tenor and effect of the bill, unincumbered with any condition or qualifications. A general acceptance, without any express words to restrain it, will be such an absolute acceptance.<sup>16</sup> An acceptance varying from the tenor of the bill, either in the time, the sum, the mode, or place of payment, is conditional.<sup>17</sup> In respect to the sum, acceptance for a part of the amount required to be paid, is good according to the custom of merchants and binds the acceptor.<sup>18</sup> So, an acceptance to pay at a different time or place, or in a different manner than that specified in the bill, binds the acceptor according to the terms of his engagement.<sup>19</sup> The conditional acceptance becomes absolute as soon as its condition is performed.<sup>20</sup> If the drawee offer a qualified acceptance, the holder may either refuse or accept the offer. If he mean to refuse it, he may note the bill, and should give notice to the antecedent parties. If he intend to acquiesce to it, he must give notice of the nature of the acceptance to the previous parties, and obtain their consent.

Qualified acceptances are of two kinds: conditional and partial, or varying from the tenor of the bill. Whether an acceptance be conditional or not is a question of law.<sup>21</sup> A verbal condition is inadmissible in evidence to qualify the absolute written engagement, even between the original parties.<sup>22</sup> A partial or varying acceptance varies from the tenor of the bill, as where it engages to pay part of the sum,<sup>23</sup> or to pay at a different time from that at which the bill is made payable by the drawer.<sup>24</sup>

The liability of the acceptor, though irrevocable when complete,<sup>25</sup> does not attach by merely writing his name, but on the subsequent delivery of the bill, or upon showing to some person interested in the bill, the acceptance thereof. Hence, if the drawee has written his name on the bill, with the intention to accept, he is at liberty to cancel his acceptance at any time before the bill is delivered, or at least before the acceptance is shown. Cancellation of the acceptance by mistake does by other parties does not destroy the bill.

The acceptor is primarily liable to pay the bill; he is the principal debtor to the holder, and the drawer and indorser are parties liable on his default. The acceptor of a bill stands, for most purposes, in the same situation as the maker of a note. The acceptor's liability can only be discharged by payment, or other satisfaction, by release or by waiver. The liability of an acceptor, though complete, may be discharged by an express renunciation of his claim on the part of the holder. Nothing short of an express discharge, founded upon a good consideration, will do. The cancellation of the acceptor's name by the holder is a waiver of the acceptance. Where a third person accepts, it is a question of fact whether that cancellation were with the assent of the holder. The liability of the acceptor, as such, will be also waived or extinguished, by taking from him a co-extensive security by specialty. But if the new security recognize the bill or note as still existing, it is not extinguished. An intentional alteration of a bill or note in any material particular, after it has become an available security, without the consent of the parties interested, cancels or destroys the instrument. Thus, altering the amount, or the date by which the time of payment is postponed, or the place of payment, or the terms of the acceptance, avoids the bill or note.

By acceptance the drawee admits the signature and capacity of the drawer, and cannot, after thus giving the bill currency, be admitted to prove that the drawer's signature was forged. An acceptor is bound to know the drawer's handwriting, and cannot resist payment to a bona fide holder, though the bill be a forgery. It, moreover, admits, and so does the maker of a promissory note, the then capacity of the payee, to whose order the bill or note is made payable, to indorse. If the drawee has once admitted that the acceptance is in his own handwriting, and thereby given currency to the bill, he cannot afterward exonerate himself by showing that it was forged.

PRESENTMENT FOR ACCEPTANCE. If a bill of exchange be drawn payable at sight, or a certain number of days or months after sight, or after demand, presentment is necessary in order to fix the time when it shall become payable; and the law, not deeming it wise or equitable to prescribe a fixed period within which such bill is to be presented for acceptance, so as to charge the drawer and indorser, declares briefly that it must be presented within a reasonable time, and leaves it to the court to determine what is a reasonable time under the circumstances of each particular case. The law does not fix a time for the presentment of bills for acceptance where they are drawn payable on or after sight; the rule in such cases is, where there is no usage of trade, that the bill must be presented within a reasonable time, which is a mixed question of law and fact, to be determined by the jury with the assistance of the judge. A bill payable on demand must be presented within a reasonable time, or the drawer will be discharged. Until such presentment there is no right of action against any party; and unless it be made within a reasonable time, the holder loses his remedy against the antecedent parties. When a bill is drawn payable a specified length of time after date, or on a day certain, the holder need not, for the purpose of charging the drawer and indorser, present it for acceptance before it becomes due and payable.

It is in all cases advisable for the holder of an unaccepted bill to present it for acceptance without delay; for, in case of acceptance, the holder obtains the additional security of the acceptor, and, if acceptance be refused, the antecedent parties become liable immediately. If accepted the holder acquires thereby additional security of the acceptor. If the drawee refuses to accept, recourse may be had immediately to the drawer and indorsers for payment. If the holder present the bill for acceptance, though not bound to do so, he must give notice of the non-acceptance to the drawer and indorser, without delay. Presentment should be made during the usual hours of business. Business hours, except in the case of banks, range during the whole day down to the hours of rest in the evening. The holder may, however, put the bill in circulation without presenting it. Presentment should be either to the drawee himself, or to his authorized agent,

ACCEPTANCE. If a bill is payable at sight, or a day or months after sight, no presentment is necessary in order that it shall become payable, unless the holder is not deeming it wise or prudent to present it within a fixed period within which it is presented for acceptance by the drawer and indorser. It must be presented at the time, and leaves it to the holder that is a reasonable time of each particular case. The time for the presentment where they are drawn by the rule in such cases of trade, that the bill is to be presented within a reasonable time, is a question of law and fact, to be determined by the jury with the assistance of the law. Payment on demand must be made at a reasonable time, or the holder is liable. Until such presentment, no action against any party is made within a reasonable time. The holder loses his remedy against the drawer. When a bill is drawn for a certain time after date, or for a certain time after sight, the holder need not, for the purpose of presenting to the drawer and indorser, present it before it becomes due.

It is advisable for the holder to present it for acceptance, in case of acceptance, to obtain the additional security of the drawer. If acceptance is refused, the drawer becomes liable immediately. The holder acquires thereby additional security. If the drawer is a merchant, he may have had indorser and indorsers for the bill. If the holder is not bound to do so, he must present it to the drawer at the usual hours of business, except in the case of a bill payable on demand, the whole day down to the closing. The holder may, in such a case, present it in circulation without presentment should be either to the drawer or to his authorized agent.

and should be made in such a manner as to give him an opportunity to act deliberately. If the drawee desire it, the bill should be left with him twenty-four hours, unless in the interim he either accept or declares his resolution not to accept. If more than twenty-four hours be given, the holder ought to inform the antecedent parties of it.

NON-ACCEPTANCE. The proceedings necessary to be taken by the holder, on a refusal of a drawee to accept, are the same in most respects as are required to be taken by him in the case of non-payment of a bill of exchange or a promissory note. The principles applicable to the giving of notice to the drawer and indorsers, are, under the law merchant, the same in either case, and it will be considered together in a subsequent section. But the rules more immediately relating to the conduct that should be pursued by the holder, where the bill is dishonored by non-acceptance, will now be briefly considered.

Generally, a failure to give the drawer and indorsers notice of non-acceptance discharges them; the notice is required so that these parties may take prompt measures of self-protection, the drawer, by withdrawing, or withholding the further accumulation of, effects in the hands of the drawee, and the indorsers by obtaining or securing payment from the parties respectively liable to them. The drawer and indorsers are liable to an action by the holder immediately after the bill is refused acceptance, and before it is payable, on giving due notice of non-acceptance. The mere fact that the drawer has no funds or effects in the hands of the drawee, is not alone sufficient to excuse the want of notice, if it appears that the drawer had a reasonable expectation that his bill would be accepted and paid. If the drawer has no funds, and knows that he has none in the hands of the drawee, and no right to expect that his bill will be honored, he is not entitled to notice of dishonor. Drawing under such circumstances does not give the drawer a right to insist upon the rule requiring notice. When a bill is drawn merely for discount, and without any expectation that it will be accepted and paid by the drawee (as where it is drawn and indorsed for the accommodation of the drawer), notice of non-acceptance is not necessary. Fraud in other parties to the bill does not deprive the indorser of his right to notice where he is not privy to the fraud. And the mere fact that the drawer has no funds in the hands of the drawee, though known to the indorser, does not deprive the latter of his right to insist on the usual notice. The death of the drawee may render a presentment for acceptance fruitless and unnecessary, but does not dispense with the necessity of giving timely notice of the dishonor of the bill. Neither does the death of the drawer or indorser discharge the holder from his duty to give the usual notice; but the notice must be sent to the representative. If the holder know, or can ascertain who they are, and their address. If the holder does not know of the drawer's death, notice should be given in the usual way. And when there are joint indorsers, not partners, it is incumbent upon the holder to give notice to the representatives of the deceased; if he fails to do so he loses his remedy against the survivor, for the latter is thereby deprived of his right of contribution from the estate of his co-indorser. Bankruptcy, or known insolvency of the drawer or maker, does not excuse neglect to make presentment, or to give notice. Where the drawee cannot be found, or has absconded, it is sufficient to use due diligence to present the bill for acceptance or for payment; provided the holder takes care to communicate the requisite notice to the indorser. Where the drawer or indorser has absconded, or cannot be found, it is enough if the holder use due diligence in giving the required notice. Services of notices or protest on parties residing in the town or city where such protest is made, may be by depositing such notice in the post-office in a sealed envelope, addressed to such person, with the postage prepaid. Sudden illness, or death of the holder, or his agent, or other accident, may constitute an excuse for the want of regular notice to any of the parties, in case it be given as soon as possible after the impediment is removed. And this is clearly in harmony with the general principles of the commercial law, which in no case requires the performance of an act that has been rendered impossible through no fault of the holder. The breaking out of a war, blocking up the usual channels of communications; the prevalence of a malignant fever, that puts a stop to all business; and, in general, any such inevitable accident as prevents the giving of notice, and is not traceable to the neglect of the holder, will excuse delay so long as the preventing cause continues. When it is said that the notice must be sent as early as on the next day after dishonor, the meaning is, that it must be forwarded on the next business day. If the protest be made on Saturday, notice is properly sent on Monday, by the first mail that closes after the commencement of the ordinary hours of business. So, if the protest be made on the third day of July, the notice will be sufficient if sent on the fifth. For the same reason, if the third day of grace be a holiday, the demand of payment must be upon the next preceding day of business, unless there be a provision of statute to the contrary. Penna. notes due on Saturday may be paid the following Monday. A foreign bill dishonored should be protested, and information of the protest sent with the notice. A protest is, in form, a solemn declaration, written by the notary under a fair copy of the bill, stating that payment or acceptance has been demanded and refused, the reason, if any, assigned, and that the bill is, therefore, protested.

Ordinarily the bill is presented for acceptance in the first instance by the holder, or his agent; and, if refused, is then taken to a notary, who is to present it again to the drawee for acceptance; and if he then refuse, the officer thereupon makes a minute upon the bill, consisting of his initials, the month, the day and year, and the reason, if any be assigned, for non-acceptance, together with his charge. The making of this minute is usually called noting the bill, and is only a preliminary step—a memorandum for the use of the notary when he comes afterward to draw up the protest; it is unknown to the law, and is, in itself, of no legal effect. If there be no notary in or near the place where the bill is dishonored, it may be protested by any substantial person of the place, in presence of two or more witnesses. A notarial certificate of protest in a foreign country or State proves itself, and is sufficient evidence of the dishonor of a foreign bill. The custom of merchants requires that there should be a protest in case of the non-acceptance of a foreign bill of exchange; and the proper officer to make this protest is a notary public. Drawn up in the usual form, the certificate of the notary should be authenticated by his seal of office; so executed, it is received in all courts, without any auxiliary support, as evidence of the protest in a foreign State.

is a question of law for the court.<sup>7</sup> Any form of notice to an indorser is sufficient to fix his liability, if the instrument in question was intended to be described in such notice, and the party was not misled or deceived thereby as to the instrument intended.<sup>8</sup> It is not necessary that a copy of the protest should accompany the notice of the dishonor of a foreign bill,<sup>9</sup> but information of the protest should be sent.<sup>10</sup> When a bill or note is delivered to a bank for collection, there is an implied contract on the part of the bank to give notice in the manner required by the usage and custom of the business.<sup>11</sup> The agent to whom the bill is indorsed for collection is the holder for the purpose of giving and receiving notice, and it is perfectly immaterial through how many hands the notice may have to pass, so it be transmitted with reasonable diligence by each of the successive parties.<sup>12</sup> Notice of non-acceptance by a mere stranger is insufficient. Where a bill is drawn by one of several partners on the firm, in relation to partnership business,<sup>13</sup> or where the drawers and acceptors are the same persons, no notice of protest need be given. For in each of these cases the party to be charged has notice of the dishonor of the bill so drawn in the very act of dishonoring it.<sup>14</sup> After a bill of exchange has been dishonored for non-acceptance, it is not necessary to present the same for payment.<sup>15</sup>

PRESENTMENT FOR PAYMENT.
Although a presentment for payment is not necessary for the purpose of perfecting or completing the liability of the acceptor of a bill or the maker of a note, it is a condition precedent to the liability of the drawer and indorser. As against the maker of a promissory note, or the acceptor of a bill of exchange, it is not necessary for the holder to aver or prove a demand of payment; a suit is a sufficient demand, as in other cases of a precedent debt or duty.<sup>16</sup> The drawer by accepting the bill, becomes the principal debtor, and thenceforth stands in the same relation to the holder as does the maker of a note.<sup>17</sup> The holder is required to perform two distinct acts in order to charge these parties, or, in other words, to convert the conditional contract made by them into an absolute undertaking. Hence, a waiver of non-payment by the indorser does not, according to the law merchant, dispense with the demand itself.<sup>18</sup> But a waiver of protest, where the term is evidently used in its popular acceptance, is a waiver of both demand and notice.<sup>19</sup> In actions upon bills of exchange by an indorsee against an indorser, the plaintiff must prove a demand of, or due diligence to get the money from the drawee (or acceptor); and in actions upon promissory notes, by an indorsee against an indorser, the plaintiff must prove a demand of, or due diligence to get the money from the maker of the note.<sup>1</sup> The same rule applies with equal force to foreign as well as inland bills,<sup>2</sup> and includes within itself an exception in favor of those cases in which the holder is unable to make a demand with the exercise of due diligence.<sup>3</sup> The drawer of a bill is only responsible after a default on the part of the acceptor.<sup>4</sup> When the maker has absconded;<sup>5</sup> when the maker is a seaman on a voyage, having no domicilia in the State;<sup>6</sup> when he has no known place of residence or place of business at which the note can be presented for payment;<sup>7</sup> and when he makes the note here and remains from the State, and takes up a permanent residence elsewhere, before it becomes payable, the holder is not bound to follow and search him out, for the purpose of making the usual demand of payment.<sup>8</sup> Neither the bankruptcy, insolvency, nor death of the acceptor of a bill, or of the maker of a promissory note, is of itself sufficient to dispense with the necessity of a regular demand of payment.<sup>9</sup> But the insolvency of the maker or acceptor is often an important circumstance, with other evidence, tending to show a waiver of demand and notice;<sup>10</sup> just as the absence or death of the maker or acceptor may be shown by way of dispensing with the necessity of a formal or personal demand.<sup>11</sup> Presentment for payment is not necessary in order to charge a man who guarantees the payment of a bill or note.<sup>12</sup> Where the house of the maker or acceptor is closed, it is the duty of the holder to make diligent inquiry for him. Want of demand is excused when the drawee cannot be found.<sup>13</sup> The holder should inquire for the acceptor in the neighborhood in order to excuse presentment.<sup>14</sup> If the drawee be dead, presentment must be made to his personal representatives; and if he have none, then at his house.<sup>15</sup> The death of a maker of a note and the insolvency of his estate, do not dispense with the necessity of demand and notice in order to charge an indorser.<sup>16</sup> If the holder die, presentment should be made by his personal representatives. ness, will excuse a delay to present for payment so long as the preventing cause continues.<sup>1</sup>

— MODE OF. The demand may be made upon the maker or acceptor personally, but must be made at a reasonable time and place. A demand in the street is not sufficient, unless the party on whom it is made declines wholly to pay, or offers something which is not a payment, and does not object to the place on the ground that he is not there ready to pay.<sup>2</sup> The presumption always is, that the maker or acceptor is prepared to pay at his residence or place of business.<sup>3</sup> And if the notary meets him in the street and presents the bill for payment, and he offers to pay at his place of business, or at his residence, the notary is bound to give him an opportunity to do so.<sup>4</sup> So, where the drawee of a bill of exchange absent themselves from their place of business and make no provision for its payment, a presentment there to a clerk or book-keeper is a sufficient presentment to charge the drawer and indorsers.<sup>5</sup> The bill or note should be actually presented for payment. It should be produced,<sup>6</sup> for the acceptor has a right to see the bill before he determines whether he will pay it or not, and if he pays it he has a right to have it delivered to him as a voucher in his settlement with the drawer.<sup>7</sup> And for the same reason the maker of a promissory note is entitled to have it surrendered on payment. A demand made by a person who has not the bill or note in his possession is insufficient.<sup>8</sup> So, a request by letter through the post-office, a notary or agent for collection cannot safely surrender the note or draft on receiving a check for the amount; and if he does so, should ascertain promptly whether the check will be honored, so that in case it is not he may, nevertheless, protest the note or draft for non-payment, and give regular notice of its dishonor to the parties to be charged thereon. Receiving a check on a bank in payment of a draft or note would not extinguish the latter in the absence of any intention to give the maker or acceptor a further credit,<sup>9</sup> but the surrender of the note or bill would embarrass the holder in his attempt to recover the instrument,<sup>10</sup> and a delay to protest the same for non-payment on the day it became payable would discharge the drawer and indorsers.<sup>11</sup>

— TIME OF. For the purpose of charging the drawer and indorsers, bills and notes should be presented and payment thereof demanded on the very day they become payable, and that is rendered necessary by the terms of the instrument as modified by the law or custom of the country. The time can neither be hastened nor delayed a single day.<sup>12</sup> To determine with accuracy the time when a bill or note becomes payable, it is necessary to ascertain the legal principles upon which time is computed. On checks, notes, and drafts payable on demand, ordinarily no question can arise; they are payable on demand, strictly according to the terms of the instrument.<sup>13</sup> But when a bank check is post dated on a Sunday, or a note or other contract not entitled to days of grace falls due on Sunday, that day is excluded from the calculation and considered as stricken from the calendar; and the party bound must make his payment or perform his engagement on the Saturday preceding. The period of a year is a determinate space of time, consisting of three hundred and sixty-five days; the added day of bissextile or leap year and the day immediately preceding being counted together as one day. The word "month" means a calendar month, unless otherwise expressed.<sup>14</sup> In computing the time when bills and notes payable a certain number of days, months, or years after date, become due, the rule is to exclude the day of the date from the calculation, and include the day of payment, assuming that no days of grace are allowed;<sup>15</sup> and if entitled to days of grace, these are to be added. In each case to the time the note was run.<sup>16</sup> So, when a bill is drawn payable ten days after sight, the day on which it is accepted is excluded from the computation, and, adding the usual days of grace, payment thereof may be demanded on the thirteenth day after the acceptance.<sup>17</sup> Where a note is payable a certain number of days from the day of the date, the day of the date is to be excluded from the computation.<sup>18</sup> And when a bill is drawn payable so many months after date or sight, the computation is made by the calendar, and, without counting the days of grace, the bill will become due on the date of the month corresponding with the day of the date or acceptance; that is, if the bill be dated or accepted on the tenth of the month, it will mature or become due on the tenth. Thus, if dated or accepted on the 10th of February, payable two months thereafter, it will become due on the 10th of April, or on the 13th, adding days of grace.<sup>19</sup> But when a bill is drawn payable one month after date, the computation is not carried into the third month. Thus, a bill dated on the 30th or 31st of January, payable one month after date, expires on the last day of February, whether it has twenty-eight or twenty-nine days in it. So, if dated on the 29th, 30th, or 31st day of August, and payable one month after date, it will fall due on the last day of February, and including the days of grace, on the 3d of March.<sup>20</sup> The computation of bills or notes drawn payable one or more months from date, is made according to the Gregorian calendar, that is to say, from the day of the month it bears date to the corresponding day of the month of its maturity.

without any attention to long or short months. For instance, a note drawn on the 28th, 29th, 30th, or 31st of January, and due a month from date, will be due on the 28th of February, if the year be not bissextile, because the month of February has no other corresponding day. Those drawn on the 28th or 29th of February, and due one month from date, will be due on the 28th or 29th of March, because the corresponding days are found in the month of March. A bill drawn on the 31st of March, and due one month from date, will be due on the 30th of April; and, on the other hand, one drawn on the 30th of April will be payable on the 30th of May, and not on the 31st. This mode facilitates greatly the ascertaining of the day of protest, and the computation of interest. It is extremely simple.<sup>2</sup> There is another element to be taken into account in the computation of time when bills or notes become due, known as days of grace.<sup>3</sup> In computing the time when a note or bill becomes due, the days of grace are added therein, just the same as if they formed part of the bill or note itself.<sup>4</sup> To every practical purpose, therefore, the days of grace are a part of the instrument itself. And the negotiability of a note is as perfect and unrestricted during those days as before their commencement,<sup>5</sup> and no action can be brought upon the instrument until the third day has expired.<sup>6</sup>

All bills of exchange are entitled to three days of grace in time of payment. Whenever the third day of grace falls upon Sunday, the 4th day of July, the 25th day of December, the 1st day of January, or upon any day appointed by the President of the United States or the governor of this State for a public fast or thanksgiving, the next preceding business day shall be deemed the last day of grace.<sup>7</sup>

As a general rule, notes that are not negotiable are not entitled to days of grace.<sup>8</sup> This class of notes comprehends such as are not drawn in negotiable terms.<sup>9</sup> Such as are payable in specific articles,<sup>10</sup> and such as neither the statute law nor any recognised or established custom has rendered negotiable. If entitled to days of grace by custom, and not by virtue of statute law, the custom must be proved affirmatively.<sup>11</sup>

The maker of a note and the acceptor of a bill are entitled to the usual hours of business, on the third day of grace, in which to make payment; and when a note is not drawn payable at a particular place, or at a bank, the demand of payment may be made at any time before the usual hours of rest. For the purpose of presenting a note or bill for payment, the proper hours of business range through the whole day, down to bed-time in the evening.<sup>12</sup> In other contracts the party has until the last instant of the day to make payment; and negotiable paper is no exception to the general rule.<sup>13</sup> Parties to a note or bill may, if they choose, draw the instrument without grace; and if the intention appear on the face of the bill not to allow any days of grace, it will become due and payable like any other contract. But a note payable on a particular day, without defalcation, is entitled to the usual days of grace; and when days of grace are allowed, the indorser has a right to insist upon them to the same extent as the maker.<sup>14</sup> As the drawer of a bill, for many purposes, stands in the attitude of a first indorser, he also has a right to claim the usual days of grace. In order to charge him, the presentment for payment must be made on the third day of grace.<sup>15</sup>

— WHOM BY. Bills and notes should be presented for payment by the holder, or by his authorized agent, and a person to whom a note or bill is indorsed for collection is to be regarded as a holder for the purpose of making a demand and giving notice. But an authority to demand payment need not be in writing,<sup>16</sup> and need not be given in express terms.<sup>17</sup> If the notary or agent have the paper in his possession, ready to be delivered up, his right to demand and receive payment will be implied.<sup>18</sup> A mere stranger cannot charge the parties by giving them notice of dishonor,<sup>19</sup> but a party in possession of the paper, though it comes into his hands by accident, as by death of an agent, may and ought to present it for payment, and give the usual notice of refusal.<sup>20</sup> And when a negotiable note or bill comes into the hands of any person under a blank indorsement, prima facie he is the holder and entitled to demand and recover the amount due thereon.<sup>21</sup> So when the instrument is drawn payable to bearer, Where the holder dies before the note or bill becomes due, it should be presented for payment by his legal representatives.<sup>22</sup> — WHERE AND TO WHOM. The demand of payment is not a mere form; it is an act necessary to be performed by the holder in order to charge the drawer and indorsers; and accordingly, in an action against either of these parties the plaintiff must allege a presentment to the maker or acceptor for payment.<sup>23</sup> But it is necessary for him to prove, in support of his averment, that the paper was presented to the maker or acceptor personally.<sup>24</sup> Presentment to his bookkeeper, while he is absent, is sufficient.<sup>25</sup> It is sufficient if shown to have been presented at his house or place of business.<sup>26</sup> A note drawn or bill accepted without specifying the place of payment should be pre-

presented for payment to the maker or acceptor at his residence or place of business.<sup>6</sup> If made payable at a place named, it is essential to show, in an action against a drawer or indorser, a presentment at the place appointed.<sup>7</sup> A note made payable at a particular bank (or a particular place)<sup>8</sup> is sufficiently demanded if left there for collection on the day it becomes due.<sup>9</sup> The instrument being made payable at a specified place, it is immaterial where the maker or acceptor resides; and it is sufficient if the presentment be made at the place so named or otherwise agreed upon between the parties.<sup>10</sup> But if a note or bill is drawn payable at a bank, and be not left or presented there for payment at its maturity, the drawer and indorser are prima facie discharged.<sup>11</sup> The note or bill being in the bank ready to be surrendered upon payment dispenses with the necessity of making a formal demand.<sup>12</sup> If a note be made or a bill be accepted by several persons who are not partners, a demand of payment must be made on each, as in other cases, personally or at his dwelling-house or place of business.<sup>13</sup> If one of them dies before the day of payment arrives, the demand must be made upon his legal representatives.<sup>14</sup> But where a firm accepts a bill, and one of the partners dies before it becomes due, the presentment for payment should be made to the survivor, on whom, in the first instance, the liability of the firm devolves.<sup>15</sup>

NON-PAYMENT. The contract of the drawer of a bill of exchange and indorser, whether of a negotiable note, bill, or check, is conditional; and one of the conditions upon which it depends is due notice of non-acceptance or non-payment.<sup>16</sup> If the holder fail to give the notice of dishonor required by law, the general rule is that the drawer and indorsers are discharged from their respective liabilities.<sup>17</sup> If the bill be presented in the first place by the holder, and payment refused, it should thereupon be placed in the hands of a notary, whose duty it is to present it again to the drawee and demand payment; and in case he again refuses to pay, the notary makes a minute of the refusal, of the reason assigned therefor, and of the time, adding his initials. From this minute he afterward draws up the protest, which is a formal declaration of presentment and refusal to pay, in the usual form, stating the facts according to his minute.<sup>18</sup> A protest on a foreign bill is a part of the custom, and is said to be incident to the constitution of the bill.<sup>19</sup> It should be made by a notary public, or, if there be no such notary in or near the place where the bill is payable, by any inhabitant in the presence of two witnesses.<sup>20</sup> Bills of exchange drawn in one country on another, or in one State on another, are foreign bills.<sup>21</sup> The States of the Union are not foreign to each other in the same sense as are separate and independent nations, but they are so far foreign to each other that the convenience of trade and commerce requires drafts drawn in one State on another to be considered as foreign bills. So far as the relations of business are concerned, no distinction can be reasonably made between bills drawn in England on France, or in France on Spain, and bills drawn in Ohio on New York, or in Iowa on Louisiana.<sup>22</sup>

The demand of payment from the maker or drawee on the last day of grace, and notice of non-payment thereof to the drawer or indorser, within a reasonable time thereafter, is due diligence concerning the same, unless the indorsement shall express other conditions. And such demand of payment and protest must be made by the notary in person; he cannot delegate his official authority.<sup>23</sup> The protest should be made as of the day on which the bill or note becomes payable—that is, on the third or last day of grace; though it need not be drawn up and completed in form until afterward.<sup>24</sup> It should bear the date or show that the protest was made on that day.<sup>25</sup> With exceptions hereinafter mentioned, notice must be given of the non-payment of every foreign and inland bill, promissory note, and check, in order to charge the drawer and indorsers under the law merchant. No precise formula of words is necessary to be used in giving the notice; it is sufficient if the language used is such as in express terms, or by necessary implication, conveys notice to the drawer or indorsers of the identity of the note or bill, and that its payment, upon due presentment, has been neglected or refused by the maker or acceptor.<sup>26</sup> And it is immaterial whether the notice be verbal or in writing.<sup>27</sup> An immaterial variance between the description contained in the notice and the bill or note referred to will not vitiate it. To render the variance fatal it must be such that, under the circumstances of the case, the notice conveys no sufficient knowledge to the indorsers of the identity of the particular note or bill which has been dishonored.<sup>28</sup> Notice of the dishonor

of a bill or note by non-payment "implies that the holder means to insist on the liability of the person notified, and does not intend to give credit to the acceptor or maker, and is universally understood to be equivalent to a demand of payment." If this is not the language of the transaction, why is the notice given? The notice advertises to the indorser that the holder looks to him for payment. He can understand the notice in no other way, for it necessarily implies that the party giving it intends to insist upon his right of recourse. The notice need not state who is owner of the note or bill, or at whose request it is given, nor the day when the note was protested for non-payment, or the place where it was payable. For a protest is a declaration in writing, made by a public officer, under his oath of office, that the bill or note to which it relates was, on the day it became due, duly presented for payment, and that payment was refused; and a notice of such a protest is not merely a notice that this declaration was made, but that the facts so declared had really occurred. The important thing is for him to know in due time that the paper has been dishonored, that he may take prompt measures for his own security. It is not necessary that a copy of the protest should accompany notice of the dishonor of a foreign bill. It is sufficient to inform the drawer or indorser that the bill has been protested for non-payment. But the protest must be produced on the trial, for that is the indispensable evidence that the bill has been dishonored.

A notarial protest is evidence of a demand and refusal to pay a bond, promissory note, or bill of exchange, at the time and in the manner stated in such protest, until the contrary is shown.

When the residence of the parties is known to the notary, it is his duty to give or send the notices to such parties as are intended to be made liable. When the residence of such parties is in the same city or town in which the protest is made, and the residence of such party is known to the notary, there should be a notice in person delivered by the notary, or left at the dwelling or business house of the party sought to be charged on the day of the dishonor of the paper, or before the expiration of the business hours of the succeeding day. Where the residence of the parties sought to be made liable is unknown to the notary, it is his duty to forward the notices to the holder of the paper by the first mail after the protest, or on the day succeeding it.

Where the party entitled to notice resides in one place and transacts business in another, and receives letters in each, and notices to be given by mail from a third place, it may be directed either to his place of residence or business. But the holder is bound to adopt that mode of service which is the most certain to bring the notice home to the indorser. Where the residence of the drawer or indorser is known, and the notice may be transmitted by mail, the service is completed by inclosing the notice in a letter or envelope and depositing the same in the post-office, properly addressed and prepaid. Where the law permits service by mail, the indorser takes the risk of miscarriage and of all accidents which may prevent the due transmission and delivery of the notice. If there be no mail, and no direct and regular communication, the notice should be sent by the safest and most expeditious conveyance. In any case, the holder is at liberty to send the notice by a private conveyance if he chooses to do so. Where the service of notice is made by mail, the holder must take care that the letter is accurately directed; if a delay occurs through his neglect in this particular, it will discharge the party entitled to notice. If the drawer or indorser designate the place where the notice is to be sent, by writing it under his name, the notice should be sent to the place specified. When the holder does not know and cannot, on diligent inquiry, ascertain the drawer or indorser's residence or place of business, reasonable and due diligence is tantamount to actual notice. If a notary inquire of persons who, from their connection with the transaction, are likely to know the residence of the indorser, and are not interested to mislead the notary, and he acts on the information thus obtained, it is due diligence on his part. The loss of a bill is no excuse for the absence of protest.

NOTICE OF SERVICE, BY WHOM. Notice from a mere stranger is not sufficient to charge the drawer or indorser. The notice required by law is something more than a mere knowledge of dishonor, communicated to the drawer or indorser; it is an act to be performed by the holder or his agent, or by some person who is a party to the bill or note, or who would on the same being returned to him, and after paying it, be entitled to call for payment or reimbursement. It is sufficient when it comes from the holder, to charge all the parties. Because he has a right to look to them all for payment, provided he gives to the drawer and indorsers reasonable notice of his intention to do so. And a notice from the holder to all the parties inures to the benefit of each party who stands behind him on the paper; thus, if the holder gives due notice to the first and second indorser of a promissory note, the second is entitled to recover thereon against the first indorser on showing that such notice of dishonor was duly given.<sup>1</sup> If the holder gives notice to his immediate indorser, and he to his indorser, and the notice is in this manner carried back to the drawer of a bill, the holder is entitled to bring an action thereon against either of the parties that have been duly notified.<sup>2</sup> A party to whom a note or bill is indorsed for collection may give the notice with the same effect as if the indorsement had been made for value.<sup>3</sup> Even where the paper is not in form indorsed to the bank.<sup>4</sup> Possession of a bill or note by a notary is evidence of a right to protest it; and when a notice signed by a notary public is duly given it is presumed to be done by the authority of the holder.<sup>5</sup> An indorser who has been discharged by the notes of the holder or subsequent parties cannot afterward take up the note or bill and give notice so as to charge prior parties, because all of them are discharged by the same want of diligence.<sup>6</sup> A notice given by a party in possession of the bill, as banker, attorney, or agent, is sufficient, though given in his own name.<sup>7</sup> Where the holder is not satisfied with the responsibility of his immediate indorser, his only safe course is to give notice to all the parties.<sup>8</sup>

NOTICE OF SERVICE, UPON WHOM.

Generally. It is necessary to give notice of non-payment to the drawer and indorsers of notes and bills in order to charge them. A person who indorses an absolute guaranty on the back of a negotiable promissory note is not entitled to notice of dishonor,<sup>9</sup> and one who transfers a bill without indorsement is not, by the law merchant, entitled to notice; as where a draft is delivered by a debtor to his creditor on account of the indebtedness.<sup>10</sup> When a note is made payable to the order of two or more persons who are not partners, and indorsed by them, the notice of dishonor must be given to each; and if one of them die before the note falls due, the holder must be careful to charge the estate of the deceased indorser, or else he will not be entitled to recover thereon against the other.<sup>11</sup> In case of a partnership, notice to one is notice to all.<sup>12</sup> If the indorser be dead at the maturity of the note, and there be executors or administrators at that time known to the holder, notice must be given to them. If he does not know that the deceased has left a will, or whether any administrators have yet been appointed or not, it is sufficient to address the notice to the executor or administrator of the deceased, or to the indorser.<sup>13</sup>

Notice addressed to the legal representative of the deceased indorser to the place of his last residence, is good,<sup>14</sup> the holder not knowing the name of the representative.<sup>15</sup> Where a note or bill is indorsed by a firm, and one of the members dies before it falls due, it is sufficient to give notice of dishonor to the surviving partner. For the survivor represents the firm, and is legally answerable as such for its debts.<sup>16</sup> Though a partnership has been dissolved by mutual consent, notice to one of the members, given before the fact of dissolution has been made public, is notice to all.<sup>17</sup> For the partnership still subsists for the purpose of winding up the business and closing the concern, and each may be understood to act as the agent of the rest until notice of dissolution has been made public. As a general rule, failure to give the drawer or indorser due notice of non-payment discharges him. The presumption of law is that he is injured by the want of notice.<sup>18</sup> That the drawer is deprived of the opportunity which he ought to have had to withdraw immediately his effects from the hands of the drawee, and that the indorser is prevented from taking prompt measures to obtain and enforce payment of the note or bill.<sup>19</sup> And this presumption is so strong as to uniform as to exclude proof that the drawer was not injured, in all cases except those in which the evidence is offered to bring the case within one of the recognized exceptions to the general rule.<sup>20</sup>

Exceptions. An agreement made by the drawer or indorser, before dishonor, waiving notice of non-payment, or waiving the protest of a bill or note, will render him liable thereon just the same as if due notice had been given.<sup>21</sup> And any conduct on the part of the drawer or indorser calculated to or actually inducing the holder to omit serving him with notice will have the same effect.<sup>22</sup> Any words by an indorser, waiving demand and notice before dishonor, will render a formal demand and notice unnecessary.<sup>23</sup> A stipulation by the indorser of a note to waive notice of dishonor dispenses with the necessity of giving him notice, but does not dispense with the demand itself; the two acts are perfectly distinct, and each is a condition precedent to the holder's right of recovery.<sup>24</sup> But where the indorser of a note requests the holders not to protest it, and waiving the necessity of protest thereof, this is a waiver of both demand and notice; for the term protest, when used among men of business, includes all those acts which are by law necessary to charge an indorser.<sup>25</sup> A waiver of demand legal representative of the place of his last holder not knowing the nature of the bill due, it is sufficient to the surviving partner to represent the firm, and such for its debts, as has been dissolved by one of the members, dissolution has been made. For the purpose of winding up the concern, and to act as the agent of dissolution has been made, failure to give the notice of non-payment or resumption of law is want of notice. That the opportunity which withdraw immediately of the drawee, and prevented from taking and enforce payment and this presumption is to exclude proof that injured, in all cases evidence is offered to one of the recognized rule. Payment made by the drawee dishonor, waiving or waiving the protest under him liable thereon notice had been given. Part of the drawer or actually inducing the holder with notice will any words by an indorser notice before dishonor demand and notice by the indorser of dishonor dispenses giving him notice, but the demand itself; the distinct, and each is a holder a right of re-indorser of a note re-protect it, and waiving hereof, this is a waiver; for the term of business, in are by law necessary A waiver of demand or notice made by a drawer or indorser is not a new contract—it is only a waiver of one of the conditions precedent to his liability, and does not, therefore, require any consideration to support it. A verbal or written communication to the holder, dispensing with the necessity of demand and notice, will be sufficient. Where the indorser writes a waiver of demand and notice over his signature on the note, his contract becomes absolute; he is bound to pay the note as unconditionally as if he had signed it as maker. It puts him in the same situation as if the demand had been made and notice of dishonor given in due time. A waiver of notice, made before dishonor, cannot be proved under an allegation of due notice; the complaint must state facts constituting the cause of action on which the plaintiff seeks to recover.

If the indorser has taken full and ample security against the liability incurred by him, he is not entitled to notice, because he cannot be prejudiced by want of notice; partial or doubtful security falls short of this, and leaves the reason of the rule for requiring notice in full force.

When a bill is accepted for the accommodation of the drawer, notice is unnecessary; for it is obvious that the drawer cannot be injured by the want of notice of non-payment, or that he can suffer any legal damage in consequence of not receiving notice. So, when a note is made for the accommodation of an indorser who is ultimately holder to pay it; for it is clear that he can lose nothing from the failure to receive the usual notice of dishonor. But an accommodation drawer or indorser is entitled to strict notice. As to all the other parties to the instrument, his rights and duties are the same as in the case of business paper.

A drawer is not entitled to notice where he has no funds or effects in the hands of the drawee, but to this exception there are important modifications. If the drawer has made or is making consignments to the drawee, and draws before the consignment comes to hand; or if the goods are in transitu, but the bill of lading is omitted to be sent to the consignee, or the goods are lost; or, if the drawer has any funds or property in the hands of the drawee, or there is a fluctuating balance between them in the course of their transactions; or if there is a running account between the drawer and drawee, and the latter has been in the habit of accepting the bills of the drawer without regard to the state of their accounts; or, if the drawer has a reasonable expectation that the bill will be paid, he is entitled to notice of dishonor. If the drawer of a bill has no funds or assets in the hands of the drawees, or expectation of funds, or any arrangement or agreement with them to accept the bill, he cannot ordinarily suffer any injury for the want of notice, and he is not entitled to it.

The indorser's right to notice is not at all affected by the drawer's want of funds or effects in the hands of the drawee; unless the act of drawing be fraudulent and the indorser implicated in the fraud.

Ignorance of a party's residence will excuse delay in giving him notice, when the time is consumed in the use of diligence to acquire the necessary information. It would be very hard, when the holder of a bill does not know where the indorser is to be found, if he lost his remedy by not communicating immediate notice of dishonor of the bill. The holder must not allow himself to remain in a state of passive and contented ignorance; but if he uses reasonable diligence to discover the residence of the indorser, notice given as soon as this is discovered is due notice of the dishonor of the bill, within the usage and custom of merchants; for exercise of reasonable and due diligence is equivalent to actual notice. The holder or indorser who acts upon credible information—information on which he has a right to rely, in giving notice of dishonor, retains his right of recourse notwithstanding he may have been misled in regard to the residence of the party to be charged. Delay in giving notice may also be excused, because the day on which the holder should have given notice is a public festival, on which he is strictly forbidden by his religion to attend to any secular affairs. "The law merchant respects the religion of different people. For this reason we are not obliged to give notice of the dishonor of a bill on our Sunday," or a Jew on a day during which his religion does not permit him to attend to any sort of business.

Generally, the indorser of a note not negotiable is not entitled to the usual privilege of an indorser of negotiable paper; he stands as principal and not as surety to his indorser, and has no right to insist upon a previous demand of the maker and notice of non-payment.

Where the drawer or indorser has been discharged by the acts of the holder, and that fact appears, there must be, in order to render him liable, clear proof that the promise was made with a full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances.<sup>4</sup> A promise to pay under a misapprehension of fact is no waiver of the consequence of laches; nor is a promise made in ignorance of a material fact a waiver; as where the drawer or indorser promises to pay without knowledge that no notice has been sent.<sup>5</sup> If it be shown that the holder has been guilty of laches, it must also appear that the promise was made with a full knowledge of them, or it will not bind the party making it.<sup>6</sup> But if no laches are shown, a promise to pay is presumptive evidence of due notice.<sup>7</sup>

—NOTICE OF SERVICE—WHEN. Notice of dishonor cannot be given until after a demand and refusal of payment.<sup>8</sup> A premature notice is a nullity. It is not necessary that the party giving the notice should have, at the time, personal knowledge of the dishonor.<sup>9</sup> A notice given on the day the bill or note becomes due is not too soon, for, though payment may still be made within the day, non-payment on presentment is a dishonor.<sup>10</sup> And when the third day of grace falls upon Sunday, fourth of July, twenty-fifth of December, first of January, or any day appointed by the President of the United States or the governor of this State for a public fast or thanksgiving, the presentment for payment and notice of non-payment may be made on the next preceding business day, which is in either case the last day of grace.<sup>11</sup>

Where the parties reside in the same place, notice to the drawer or indorser on the day of the dishonor and after it, or in the course of the next succeeding day, is reasonable, and is in time;<sup>12</sup> but the notice is not in time unless it be given so as to reach the party residing in the same place on the day succeeding the dishonor. If sent by post, it must be deposited in time to be delivered on that day.<sup>13</sup> If by private hand, it must be served before the expiration of the day succeeding the dishonor.<sup>14</sup> It is not at all material in what manner the service is made if the notice actually reaches the party in due time.<sup>15</sup> That is, on the right day and within the customary hours of business, having respect to the usages of the place.<sup>16</sup>

Where the parties do not reside in the same place the notice of dishonor must be put into the post-office early enough to go by the mail of the day succeeding the last day of grace,<sup>17</sup> unless the mail of that day is closed at an unreasonably early hour, or before early and convenient business hours.<sup>18</sup> If there be two mails leaving on the same day, the first closing before the common hours of business, it is sufficient to transmit the notice by the second.<sup>19</sup> Indeed, the holder is not bound to send off the notice by a mail that closes before the usual hours of business begin, even if there be no second mail leaving on that day.<sup>20</sup> The holder is not bound, in any case, to send off the notice on the day of the dishonor; nor if either of the indorsers bound to transmit the notice to his indorser on the day he receives it. Each party has a day for giving notice.<sup>21</sup> The result of the authorities then is, that the holder of a bill or note is bound to despatch the notice of dishonor by mail on the day after default is made in payment of it, unless the mail closes at an unreasonably early hour; that an indorser is bound to use the same diligence in sending it forward on the day after he receives it; and that neither of them is obliged by law to send it forward on the very day the bill is dishonored or the notice received. When no mail leaves on the day after notice is received, or the paper is dishonored, it is sufficient to put the letter in the post-office in time to go by the next mail.<sup>22</sup> For the purpose of giving notice, a bank or banker, with whom a bill is deposited for collection, is to be considered as a distinct holder, and has a day to give notice to his customer; while the customer has another day in which to give notice to the antecedent parties.<sup>23</sup> The rule is the same, though the paper be transmitted through several banks, indorsed from one to the other for collection.<sup>24</sup> The holder should give notice of dishonor to all the parties to whom he intends to look for payment,<sup>25</sup> but it is enough for him to send or give due notice to his indorsers for the purpose of charging the party indorsing the bill over to him;<sup>26</sup> and it is the business of each indorser to take care that the party responsible to him is duly notified.<sup>27</sup> The over diligence of one will not supply the want of diligence in another.<sup>28</sup> Reasonable diligence in giving notice (when there is no dispute about the facts) is a question of law.<sup>29</sup>

he must give directions before or at the time of payment.<sup>6</sup> If no appropriation be made by him, it then devolves upon the creditor to make it.<sup>7</sup> Yet the creditor must make such an application as the debtor could not reasonably or justly object to,<sup>8</sup> and such as would be most for his interest at the time.<sup>9</sup> If there are two demands and the debtor pays a sum exactly equal to one of them, it will be considered as having been paid in discharge of that.<sup>10</sup> If one be due while the other is not, the payment applies to the former.<sup>11</sup> The law will make the application first to the interest and then to the principal.<sup>12</sup> To the debt which is prior in date.<sup>13</sup>
To the debt that is less secured.<sup>14</sup> If application be directed by neither, then the law will make the application according to equity.<sup>15</sup> A debtor or creditor cannot appropriate a payment in such a manner as to affect the relative liabilities or rights of sureties without their consent.<sup>16</sup>

—MADE—HOW. Payment of negotiable notes and bills must always be made in money.<sup>17</sup>
If drawn payable in anything else they are not negotiable, and are not governed by the rules applicable to negotiable paper. For instance, a note made by a farmer, payable in farm produce, without specifying any time or place of payment, is payable on demand made at the farm of the debtor; and in an action against the maker, it is necessary to show a refusal to pay on such demand.<sup>18</sup> The same principle applies to where a merchant gives his note payable in goods, or a mechanic gives his due bill payable in work; the goods must be demanded of the merchant at his store, and the work must be required of the mechanic at his shop.<sup>19</sup> There is no absolute safety short of a payment of money. If the holder takes payment in bank bills, it may turn out that the bank has failed; and if he takes a check it may be dishonored. The custom of merchants requires that the holder of a bill shall present
the instrument, at its maturity, to the acceptor, demand payment, and upon receipt of the money deliver up the bill.<sup>20</sup> If he departs from this custom, and especially if he takes a draft on a banker, or any other security, whereby the time of payment is extended, though only till the next morning, the drawer and indorsers will be discharged. But, if the time of payment is not extended, and the holder retains possession of the bill, so that he is ready to surrender it on payment to the drawer or in-dorser, and the demand and protest are made and given in due time, there is no reason why the taking of a check on the bank as a means of obtaining the money on the bill, should operate to discharge any of the parties thereto.<sup>21</sup>

The taking of a note, or draft, or check is no payment unless the parties make it such by express and positive agreement.<sup>22</sup> The note of the debtor, receipted as cash, is not an absolute payment; nor is the note of a third person, unless it be expressly accepted as payment.<sup>23</sup> Such receipt may be explained or even contradicted.<sup>24</sup> But the creditor receiving a draft drawn by his debtor or a third person, may make it by his own laches, or by taking some other security in its stead.<sup>25</sup> When bills are taken in payment of a debt, and the creditor sues on the original consideration, payment of the bill will be presumed until the contrary appear.<sup>26</sup> And where a creditor takes from his debtor a check on a bank or a negotiable note, he cannot recover on the original consideration without showing the check to have been dishonored or surrendering the note to be cancelled.<sup>27</sup> A check drawn payable to the order of the creditor and indorsed by him, produced by the debtor, is evidence of payment of so much money;<sup>28</sup> and proof of delivery of the check to him in payment of the debt, though payable to bearer and the production of it by the drawer, will raise the presumption that the person to whom it was delivered received the money on it.<sup>29</sup>

Payment means payment in due course and not by anticipation; and if a negotiable note or bill of exchange be paid before its maturity, and not surrendered, and afterwards came into the hands of a bona fide holder, it is valid security in his hands.<sup>30</sup> A bank that pays a check prematurely does not thereby appropriate the drawer's funds; it is a payment without authority.<sup>31</sup> The acceptor of a bill, whether inland or foreign, and the maker of a promissory note, should pay it on demand at any time within business hours on the day it becomes payable; and if it be not paid on such demand, the holder may instantly treat it as dishonored.<sup>32</sup>
But the maker or acceptor has, as we have seen, the whole of that day in which to make payment; and though he should in the course of the day refuse payment, and thus entitle the holder to give notice of dishonor, still if he makes payment afterward on that same day, it will be sufficient, and will render the notice of the dishonor of no avail.<sup>2</sup> The indorser, of course, becomes liable to an action as soon as the credit given to the maker or acceptor has expired.<sup>3</sup>

— WHO BY. The maker of a promissory note and the acceptor of a bill of exchange, being the parties primarily liable, are bound to pay the bill or note at its maturity; hence the payment of a note by the maker, or the payment of a bill by the acceptor, when properly made, discharges the drawer and indorsers thereon, and cancels or puts an end to the security as an existing obligation.<sup>4</sup> When a bill is paid by an accommodation acceptor, the law implies a contract on the part of the drawer to refund to the acceptor the amount so paid, with such damages as he may have sustained in the transaction.<sup>5</sup> Having been paid, it remains in the hands of the acceptor as a voucher to be used by him in his settlement with the drawer, or as an item of evidence in an action brought for the recovery of the money paid.<sup>6</sup> The same principles apply to the case of a promissory note, made for the accommodation of the payee, or of some other person to whom it is delivered for negotiation.<sup>7</sup> And payment of the note by the surety, while it cancels the note, raises an implied contract on the part of the principal debtor to repay the same to the surety.<sup>8</sup> As between the makers of a note and the payee or holder, the makers are all principals, though one of them signs as "security."<sup>9</sup> As between themselves, the relation of the parties may be proved.<sup>10</sup> Payment of a note or bill by an indorser is a satisfaction of it only in respect to subsequent indorsers. An indorser who takes up by paying dishonored paper becomes the holder as against prior parties,<sup>11</sup> and may transfer it or put it into circulation; it is paid only as to subsequent indorsers;<sup>12</sup> for a bill is not discharged until paid by or on behalf of the acceptor, nor a note until paid by or on behalf of the maker.<sup>13</sup> For this reason, when an indorser takes up a dishonored note or bill, he is at liberty to put it again in circulation;<sup>14</sup> whereas payment by the maker of a note or the acceptor of a bill discharges it, so that it is no longer negotiable.<sup>15</sup> One who voluntarily and officiously pays the debt of another, without request or authority to do so from the debtor, cannot recover from him the sum paid.<sup>16</sup> After a foreign bill has been protested for non-payment, any person may pay it (under protest) for the honor of the drawer or indorser, and is entitled to demand repayment, not only from the person for whose honor he made the payment, but from all other parties who are liable to that person.<sup>17</sup> With this exception to the general rule, there is no reason why an officious payment and satisfaction of a bill or note should not be held to cancel the security.<sup>18</sup>

— WHO TO. Payment should be made to the holder and real proprietor of the bill, or to some person authorized by him to receive the same;<sup>19</sup> it should be made to the party having the title and possession of the instrument.<sup>20</sup> If drawn payable to bearer, or indorsed in blank so that the title passes by mere delivery, possession alone is presumptive evidence of title and sufficient authority to demand and receive payment.<sup>21</sup> The maker or acceptor will be protected in paying a note or bill to the party presenting it under such circumstances as would give a right of action thereon to a purchaser in good faith for value.<sup>22</sup> And he is bound to pay a bona fide holder who has parted with value for the same before it became due, notwithstanding it may have been previously lost or stolen.<sup>23</sup> But having notice that the bill or note has been lost by the real proprietor or stolen from him, he should not pay the same to the finder, or other person, until the latter establishes a clear title or gives an adequate indemnity against the claim of any other person.<sup>24</sup> With notice of the loss, the maker or acceptor pays at his peril; for if it turns out that the party in possession was not the real owner of the bill nor entitled to recover thereon as a bona fide holder, he will be obliged to pay it over again to the real proprietor.<sup>25</sup> In determining the question of title, where a note or bill is presented for payment, the maker or acceptor must ascertain whether the indorsements are properly made, so as to vest the title in the person demanding payment.<sup>26</sup> The maker must at all events see that he pays to the order of the payee, for if his indorsement is a forgery, or spurious, it is a payment by mistake.<sup>27</sup> If the indorsements on the note or bill be in blank, it is sufficient to make certain that the payee's indorsement is genuine; but if the successive indorsements be special, the holder cannot derive title to the paper through a forged indorsement. Thus, where the payee of a note drawn payable to him, or order, indorses it specially payable to A. or order, and he again indorses it specially payable to B. or order, the title to the note is in B., and no other person has the right to demand payment of it except as his agent.<sup>28</sup> Possession of a note transferable by delivery only, or indorsed in blank, is prima facie proof of title.<sup>29</sup> The case is different where the payee indorses it in blank; here, though there are subsequent special indorsements on the note, the holder is at liberty to deduce his title through the first indorser; and hence the maker is protected in paying the note to the party in possession, just the same as if it had been originally made payable to bearer. If the first indorsement be special and the second in blank, the subsequent holder takes title through both of these indorsements, and the maker should see that both of them are genuine when he pays the note. Where the person receiving payment on a forged bill has no recourse to any other party thereon, or has the same right of action, notwithstanding the want of notice, the question of laches does not arise. Thus, where the drawee accepts and pays a bill payable to the order of a fictitious person, or to the order of a real person who never had any interest in the bill, and whose name has been forged upon it by the drawer, the bill being negotiated in that condition, and none of the parties but the drawer having any knowledge of the forgery, the drawee or acceptor cannot recover back the money. The title to the bill passes in the same manner as if it had been drawn payable to a fictitious person, or to bearer; and inasmuch as the acceptor has no recourse to the prior parties, he has no right to recover back the money so paid. Where a bank pays a forged check, or a check that has upon it the genuine signature of its customer, but has been fraudulently altered to a larger sum, it cannot debit the drawer with the sum so paid without authority. But if a bill or check be drawn in so careless and improper a manner as thereby to enable a third person to practise a fraud, the customer and not the bank must bear the loss. A draft that has not been accepted and a bank check should not be paid after notice from the drawer countermanning the authority, nor after the death of the drawer, which is a revocation of the authority.

The person transferring a negotiable note or draft, whether by indorsement or delivery, impliedly guarantees the title to it, unless the transfer be made under such circumstances as to show clearly that the purchaser took it at his own risk. And hence the person who obtains money or goods on the instrument, or has it discounted, is bound to refund what he has received, in case it proves to be a forgery. But if the transfer is made without indorsement, the person transferring it is liable only to his immediate assignee—he is not a party to and is not liable on the bill.

A party paying money under a mistake of law cannot recover it back; but if he pay money under a mistake of the real facts (and has not omitted to avail himself of the means of knowledge in his power), he may recover back such money.

— RECEIPTS. Where a part payment is made on a negotiable note or bill, the party paying should have a receipt indorsed upon the instrument; otherwise, he may be compelled to pay it over again to a bona fide holder. But the maker of a note or due bill not negotiable, may safely pay money on it to the payee, where he has no notice or reason to suppose that it has been assigned. When paid in full it should be surrendered or cancelled, so that the maker may not afterward be compelled to prove that it has been satisfied. The acceptor of a bill on being called on for payment is entitled to have the bill surrendered to him as a voucher, and the maker of a negotiable note stands in the same relation; neither of them can be compelled to pay, unless the holder produces and offers to deliver up the instrument, or tenders sufficient indemnity, where it has been lost. And the indorser paying a note has the right to demand that it be surrendered to him. A receipt not specifying by whom the payment was made, indorsed on the back of a bill, is presumptive evidence that the bill was paid by the acceptor. But the signature of the person signing the receipt must be proved, and it must appear to be that of a person entitled to receive payment. A receipt indorsed on a note may be contradicted or explained like any other receipt for money paid. The maker or acceptor of notes and drafts not negotiable, cannot refuse to pay on the ground that they are not produced and ready to be surrendered. The assignee of such paper takes it subject to whatever defence the maker or acceptor may have to it, as against the payee. Where the creditor accepts the note of a third person as payment, it is a good accord and satisfaction.

— RELEASE OF PRINCIPAL DEBTOR. The drawer of a bill, and each of the successive indorsers; whether of a note or bill, being charged with notice of non-payment upon a due demand made, is bound to pay the amount and take up the paper. He cannot, like a surety, require of the holder active diligence to collect the money of the party primarily liable to pay; nor does he generally enter into the contract without a full and valuable consideration. By entering into a contract with the maker of a note, or acceptor of a bill, extending the time of payment, the holder tacitly engages to give the same credit to all the parties who may be entitled to a remedy over against the maker or acceptor. To give his contract legitimate effect is to arrest the remedies of all the parties on the bill or note, and thus convert the contract of each into a different undertaking. So when the holder enters into an agreement with the maker or acceptor, founded on a good consideration, giving him time for payment, the contract operates as a release of the drawer and indorsers.<sup>1</sup> But a contract not based upon a valid consideration, does not have the effect of a release; for delay under such a contract is, in the eye of the law, merely gratuitous.<sup>2</sup> A contract made with the drawer of a bill, or with the prior indorser of a note or bill, will discharge all subsequent indorsers,<sup>3</sup> but will not operate as a release of the maker or acceptor.<sup>4</sup> As between the first and subsequent indorsers, the former is regarded in the light of principal; he stands behind them upon the paper, and is bound to take it up in case of the default of the maker. The contracts of the several indorsers are like so many links in a chain, and if the holder consent to dissolve the first, the chain is no longer capable of hindering either of the parties.<sup>5</sup> So long as the holder makes no valid and binding agreement for delay, he is at liberty to use every endeavor to secure the payment of the bill or note; he may receive part payment; he may take new securities; he may negotiate for delay; he may receive and transmit propositions to the indorsers for an extended credit;<sup>6</sup> and he may voluntarily forbear to bring an action against any or all of the parties, so long as he can without coming into contact with the bar raised by the statute of limitations. An agreement made by the holder with the principal debtor, extending the time of payment, or even releasing him from his liability, will not discharge the drawer or indorser if he assents to the arrangement.<sup>7</sup> So, if the holder give time to the maker or acceptor, and the drawer or indorser afterwards promises to pay, with knowledge of the fact, he is precluded from taking advantage of the indulgence so granted.<sup>8</sup> A release of a debt or liability given on a good consideration extinguishes the indebtedness;<sup>9</sup> but a release without consideration, and not under seal, is void.<sup>10</sup> A new consideration gives effect to a release not under seal.<sup>11</sup> Where one of the makers of a promissory note adds to his signature the word "surety," the holder is bound to treat him as such, and cannot vary the terms of the contract by extending the time of payment, or otherwise, so as to increase the risk of the surety without discharging him. An extension of credit to the debtor for one day discharges the surety as effectually as if made for one year.<sup>12</sup> Taking security from or giving time to one of several joint makers of a note, or acceptors of a bill, does not discharge the others.<sup>13</sup> Several sureties who successively sign a note at the request of the principal, without communication with each other, are bound, on the failure of the principal, to contribute equally to the payment of the note.<sup>14</sup> The word surety added to the signature of a maker is evidence that he did not give the note for value received by him.<sup>15</sup> Where a bill of exchange is accepted for the accommodation of the drawer, the holder does not discharge him by giving the acceptor further time for payment; for here the drawer is ultimately liable to pay the amount secured by the bill, and does not stand in the light of a surety.<sup>16</sup> Nor will an agreement with the drawer, giving him time for payment, discharge the acceptor for his accommodation.

So, in respect to a promissory note, if made for the accommodation of the payee, delay granted to him will not discharge the maker.<sup>17</sup>

PRACTICE.

— DAMAGES is the rate or per cent. paid to the holder of a bill of exchange which has been dishonored. It is the subject of distinct statute regulation in nearly every State of the Union. See GENERAL STATUTES.

— EVIDENCE. Generally, the pleadings show what the plaintiff must prove to maintain his action, and what the defendant must prove to establish his defence. When a single fact is put in issue, such as the making of the note, or the acceptance of the bill in suit, one party holds the affirmative and the other the negative; and the entire evidence is directed to the proof or disproof of that fact. In all actions, allegations of the execution of written instruments and indorsements thereon, of the existence of a corporation or partnership, or of any appointment or authority may be taken as true, unless the denial of the same be verified by the affidavit of the party, his agent or attorney.<sup>18</sup>

In an action by the payee against the maker of a negotiable note or the acceptor of a bill of exchange, it is generally enough to produce the instrument, prove the signature of the defendant and the amount due thereon. If the action be against several acceptors of a bill or makers of a note, the handwriting of each must be proved, unless the defendants are sued as partners, in which case it must be shown that the defendants were partners, and that the note or acceptance was made or given in the name of the firm by one of the firm.<sup>19</sup> If the action be against the makers of a joint and several promissory note, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove that it was made by the parties described in the complaint. A note beginning "I promise to pay," and signed by two persons, is a joint and several note.<sup>20</sup> The acceptance being made after sight of a bill, admits the drawer's signature.<sup>21</sup> The acceptor admits also the ability of the drawer, and that the draft was properly drawn; so that, though drawn by an agent, it is not necessary, in an action against the acceptor, to show the agent's authority;* and the production of the bill by the payee is sufficient proof of his title to it.* In an action by an indorsee against the acceptor, the plaintiff must prove his acceptance and the payee's indorsement; and if the indorsement be special, it must appear to have been made to the plaintiff, or he must show a subsequent indorsement to himself. Bills and notes made payable to bearer circulate and are considered as money; and, as the title passes by delivery, possession is evidence of the holder's property in them.* And there is no legal difference between a bill or note payable to bearer and one payable to a particular person or bearer; in either case the holder is prima facie the lawful bearer, to whom the same is payable.* The same presumption is raised in favor of the holder of a note or bill drawn payable to order after the same has been indorsed in blank.* On a note for value received, made payable to one or other of two persons, action should be brought in the name of both, and recovery may be had on proof of the execution of the note.* In an action against an indorser of a bill or note, the plaintiff need not prove the signature of the maker, drawer, or prior indorsers; nor can the defendant impeach the genuineness of the bill or note, for his indorsement admits the ability and signature of every antecedent party.* There is a warranty implied in the transfer of every negotiable instrument that it is not forged.* In an action by an indorsee against his immediate indorser, the latter is estopped from denying the drawing and indorsement of the bill to himself.* The plaintiff need not prove, in an action upon negotiable paper, that the same was made, accepted, or indorsed for an adequate consideration; the presumption being that the contract of the several parties to the instrument was entered into for value received, and that the holder acquired it by the usual course of business for value. But this presumption may be overcome. For instance, if it be shown that the bill or note in suit has been lost, or has been stolen from the holder, the plaintiff must show himself to be a prima facie holder for value. This he may do by showing that he took the paper fairly, in the usual course of business, and gave a valuable consideration for it.* So, if it be shown that the bill or note was obtained by fraud, duress, without consideration, or as an illegal consideration, or for a particular purpose and dishonestly used for another.* As to what defence is allowed if the instrument is negotiated when overdue, see ante, INDORSEMENT. And payment before due may be given in evidence against indorser.

In actions against the drawer of bills and checks, and against the indorser of negotiable paper, the plaintiff must prove as well as allege that the paper was duly presented for acceptance or for payment and dishonored, and that due notice thereof was given to the defendant. When an action against the drawer or indorser is brought upon a bill that has been accepted, payable at a particular bank or place, the plaintiff must prove a presentment for payment at the place designated in the acceptance,* and within the usual hours of business.* Where a bill is drawn payable a certain number of days after sight, or after demand, the plaintiff must prove a presentment to the drawee for acceptance as a means of fixing the time of payment;* but this is not necessary where a bill is drawn payable so many days or months after date. In an action against a drawer or indorser of a foreign bill, the plaintiff must prove, besides the presentment and notice of dishonor, a protest for non-acceptance or non-payment.* The protest, when made by a notary in a foreign State, and attested under the seal of his office, proves itself, and is evidence of presentment and refusal.* It is well settled that bills of exchange drawn in one State of the Union and payable in another are foreign bills, within the meaning of the rule which makes the notarial protest prima facie evidence of the presentment and dishonor of such bills.*

— LIMITATION. See General Statutes.
— PLEADING.* Forms of pleading are much changed. The parties are required to plead respecting the facts which constitute the plaintiff's cause of action, or the defendant's ground of defence in the manner prescribed by the law; and the rules by which the sufficiency of the pleadings is to be determined are those established by the law. The action must be brought in the name of the lawful holder and owner of the paper, and the complaint must contain a statement of all the facts necessary to be proved on the trial, in order to entitle the plaintiff to recover thereon against the defendant.* An executor, administrator, guardian, trustee of an express trust, a person with whom, or in whose name, a contract is made for the benefit of another, or a person expressly authorized by statute, may bring an action without joining with him the person for whose benefit the action is prosecuted; but generally every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest. The phrase, "a trustee of an express trust," includes a person with whom or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another.* Mercantile agents and factors, who, according to the usage and custom of merchants, do business in their own names for other parties, are trustees in fact, and are entitled to sue on contracts made by them with third persons. Hence a factor taking a note payable to himself on the sale of his principal's goods is prima facie entitled to recover thereon.* The complaint must show the title of the

A BOND is an obligation in writing, and under seal.<sup>1</sup> It may be single—a simple obligation—as where the obligor binds or obliges himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to pay a certain sum of money to another on a day named. It may be, and usually is, conditional, as, that if the obligor does some particular act, the obligation shall be void, or else remain in full force and effect.
 A bond absolute for the payment of money differs from a promissory note only in having a seal.<sup>2</sup>

A COUNTER BOND is a bond to indemnify.
 A FORTHCOMING, REDELIVERY OR REPLEVIN BOND is a bond given for the security of the sheriff, constable, or other officer, conditioned to produce the property attached or levied on when required.<sup>3</sup>

JOINT BONDS are the bonds of two or more obligors. Actions to enforce them must be joint against them all.

JOINT AND SEVERAL BONDS are the bonds of two or more obligors, who bind themselves jointly and severally to the obligees. The obligees can sue all the obligors in such a bond jointly, or any one of them separately, for the whole amount, but cannot bring a joint action against a part—that is, treat it as joint with some and several as to others. Upon payment of the whole by one of such obligors, a right to contribution arises in his favor against the other obligors.

CONDITION. The condition is a vital part of a conditional bond, and generally limits and determines the amount to be paid in case of a breach,<sup>4</sup> but interest and costs may be added;

A condition annexed to a bond is termed a defeasance. A condition defeating a conveyance of land in a certain event is called a mortgage. Conditions annexed to realty are to be distinguished from limitations. A stranger may take advantage of a limitation, but only the grantor or obligor, or his heirs, can take advantage of a condition.<sup>5</sup>

Conditions must be made at the same time as the original contract, conveyance, or obligation, but may be by a separate instrument, which is then considered as constituting one transaction with the original.<sup>6</sup>

Unlawful conditions are void. Conditions in restraint of marriage generally are held void.<sup>7</sup> Otherwise of conditions restraining from marriage to a particular person, or restraining a widow from a second marriage.<sup>8</sup> A condition in general restraint of alienation is void,<sup>9</sup> but a condition restraining alienation for a limited time may be good.<sup>10</sup>

ASSIGNMENT. The rule that a condition cannot be assigned, and that no one but the heirs can take advantage of a breach, does not uniformly obtain in modern times, and in many of the States the common law rule is broken in upon.<sup>11</sup>

CONSTRUCTION. Conditions which go to defeat an estate or destroy an act are strictly construed; while those which go to vest an estate or enforce an act are liberally construed.<sup>12</sup> The condition of an obligation is said to be in the language of the obligee, and for that reason is to be construed liberally in favor of the obligor.<sup>13</sup> But whenever an obligation is imposed by a condition, the construction is to be favorable to the obligee.<sup>14</sup>

FORM. Any words suitable to indicate the intention of the parties may be used in the creation of a condition, as "On condition," "Provided always," "Provided nevertheless," "For that," etc.

The words of condition need be in no particular place in the instrument.<sup>15</sup>

EFFECT. The effect of conditions may be to suspend the obligation; as, if I bind myself to convey an estate to you on condition that you first pay me one thousand dollars; in this case no obligation exists until the condition is performed; or, 2, to rescind the obligation; as, if you agree to buy my house on condition that it is standing unimpaired on the tenth of May; or, I convey to you my farm on condition that the conveyance shall be void if I pay you one thousand dollars; in such cases the obligation is rescinded by the nonperformance of the condition; or, 3, it may modify the previous obligation; as, if I bind myself to convey my farm to you on the payment of five thousand dollars if you pay in bank stock, or six thousand if you pay in money; or in case of gift or bequest may qualify the gift or bequest as to amount or persons.

The effect of a condition precedent is, when performed, to vest an estate, give rise to an obligation, or enlarge an estate already vested.<sup>1</sup> Unless a condition precedent be performed no estate will vest; and this even where the performance is prevented by act of God, or of the law.<sup>2</sup> Not so if prevented by the party imposing it.<sup>3</sup>

If a condition subsequent was void at its creation or becomes impossible, unlawful, or in any way void, the estate or obligation remains intact and absolute.<sup>4</sup>

In case of a condition broken, if the grantor is in possession the estate reverts at once.<sup>5</sup> But if the grantor is out of possession he must enter,<sup>6</sup> and is then invested of his previous estate.<sup>7</sup>

PERFORMANCE should be complete and effectual.<sup>8</sup> An inconsiderable casual failure to perform is not non-performance.<sup>9</sup> Any one who has an interest in the estate may perform the condition; but a stranger gets no benefit from performing it.<sup>10</sup> Conditions precedent, if annexed to land, are to be strictly performed, even when affecting marriage.<sup>11</sup> Conditions precedent can generally be exactly performed; equity will not generally interfere to avoid the consequence of non-performance.<sup>12</sup> But in cases of conditions subsequent, equity will interfere where there was even a partial performance, or where there is only a delay in performance.<sup>13</sup> This is the ground of equitable jurisdiction over mortgages.

Non-performance of a condition which was possible at the time of its making, but which has since become impossible, is excused if the impossibility is caused by act of God,<sup>14</sup> or by act of law, if it was lawful at its creation,<sup>15</sup> or by act of the party, as; when the one imposing the obligation accepts another thing in satisfaction, or renders the performance impossible by his own default.<sup>16</sup> If performance on one part becomes impossible by act of God, the whole will in general be excused.<sup>17</sup>

Where conditions are liberally construed a strict performance is required; where conditions are strictly construed a reasonably exact performance is sufficient.

If the place of performance be agreed upon, neither party alone can change it, but either may with the consent of the other.<sup>18</sup>

Generally, where no time of performance is limited to the person who has the benefit of the contract may perform the condition when he pleases, at any time during his life,<sup>19</sup> and need not do it when requested.<sup>20</sup> But if a prompt performance be necessary to carry out the will of a testator, the beneficiary cannot have a lifetime in which to perform the condition.<sup>21</sup> In this case no previous demand is necessary.<sup>22</sup> But even then a reasonable time is allowed.<sup>23</sup>

DATE AND DELIVERY. The date is not considered of the substance of a deed; and therefore a bond which either has no date, or an impossible date, is still good, provided the real day of issuing dated or given, that is, delivered can be proved.<sup>24</sup> It must be delivered by the party whose bond it is, or by another.<sup>25</sup> But the delivery and acceptance may be by altering.<sup>26</sup>

FORFEITURE. Upon the forfeiture of a bond courts will not permit a man to take more than his principal, interest, and expenses, in case the forfeiture accrued by non-payment of money borrowed, damages sustained upon the non-performance of covenants, and the like.

In case of a bond conditioned for the payment of money, the payment or tender of the principal sum due with interest and costs, even though the bond were forfeited and suit commenced thereon, is a satisfaction and discharge.<sup>27</sup>

If a bond lie dormant for twenty years it cannot afterwards be recovered, for the law raises a presumption of its having been paid, and the defendant may plead solvit ad diem (he paid at the day) to an action upon it.<sup>28</sup> In some cases, under particular circumstances, even a less time may found a presumption.<sup>29</sup>

The statute as to the presumption of payment after twenty years is in the nature of a statute of limitations. It is available as a bar to an action to recover on the instrument, but not where the party asks affirmative relief based upon the fact of payment.<sup>30</sup>

ment must be in writing and sealed," except in States where private seals are abolished by statute or otherwise; where, however, seals are required, a sealing sufficient where the bond is made, is held sufficient though it might be an insufficient sealing if it had been made where it is sued on. The signature (and seal) may be in any part of the instrument.

Where a bond is required by statute, every material requirement must be observed. If it contains anything illegal, it is so far void. If it contains anything superfluous, it is so far treated as mere surplusage. If any material thing is omitted, the statute is not complied with.

PARTIES. There must be proper parties;
a man cannot be bound to another in connection with others.

No person can take the benefit of a bond except the parties named therein. Except, perhaps, in some cases of bonds given for the performance of their duties by certain classes of public officers.

If the bond run to several persons jointly, all must join in suit for a breach, though it be conditioned for the performance of different things for the benefit of each.

PENALTY. The principal sum in a bond is usually one-half of the penal sum specified in the condition. The recovery against a surety in a bond for the payment of money is not limited to the penalty, but may exceed it so far as necessary to include interest from the time of the breach. So far as interest is payable by the terms of the contract, and until default made it is limited by the penalty;
but after breach it is recoverable, not on the ground of contract but as damages, which the law gives for its violation.

CONDITION—INDEMNITY.

To Indemnify Tenants on Paying Rent, When Title is in Dispute.

Whereas the above-named A. B. claims from the said C. D. rent of certain premises in (state where), to wit, _____ dollars, due on the _____ day of _____, and one E. F. also claims some title to said _____

A. B. agrees to indemnify partners against suits against them extended to suits against one of them, in a place where by law it is necessary that a suit be against all the partners of a firm liable. Now the condition of the above obligation is such:

That if the above-bounden A. B., his heirs, executors, and administrators, or any of them, shall well and truly, at all times, indemnify and save harmless the said C. D., his heirs, executors, and administrators, from and against any and all actions, suits, damages, costs, and expenses for or by reason thereof, then this obligation is to be void; otherwise, to remain in full force.

CONDITION—LIFE, TO KEEP A PRISON DURING.

The condition of this obligation is such:

That whereas the above-bound A. B., for and in consideration of the sum of _____ to him in hand paid by the above-named C. D., hath agreed and undertaken to keep and maintain the said C. D., during his life; if, therefore, the said A. B., his executors or administrators, shall from time to time, and at all times hereafter during the natural life of the said C. D., well and sufficiently maintain and keep the said C. D. in the house of him, the said A. B., with meat, drink, clothes, and all other things necessary and convenient.

CONDITION—MARRY, OR TO PAY A SUM OF MONEY.

The condition of the above obligation is such:

That if the above-bounden A. B. do, on or before the _____ day of _____, espouse and marry D. D., daughter of the said C. D., if the said D. D. will therewith assent and the laws of this State (or Commonwealth) will permit the same; or, if it shall happen that the said A. B. shall not marry her as aforesaid, then if the said A. B. shall well and truly pay, or cause to be paid, unto the said D. D., her executors, administrators and assigns, the sum of _____ dollars on the _____ day of _____ next ensuing the said _____ day of _____, above mentioned and limited for the said marriage, then this obligation is to be void; otherwise, to remain in full force.

CONDITION—PAY OFF AND CANCEL A MORTGAGE.

Whereas the above-bounden A. B. and W. B. his wife heretofore agreed to convey, and have this day conveyed to the said C. D. certain lands in (here briefly designate the premises), by a full warranty deed; and whereas said premises are subject to the payment of a mortgage, bearing date the _____ day of _____, executed by the said _____ and his wife, to _____ of the city of _____, and county of _____, for the purpose of securing the payment of the sum of _____ dollars, in _____ years from the day of the date thereof, with semi-annual interest, as secured by the condition of a bond, of the date therewith, executed by the said _____ to the said _____, which said mortgage is a lien upon the premises aforesaid, and was recorded in the office of the clerk of the county of _____, on the _____ day of _____, at pages _____ and _____, of book _____ of mortgages, at _____ o'clock p. m., and upon which there is now remaining due and unpaid the said principal sum of _____ dollars, with interest from the _____ day of _____ last past; which sum the above-bounden A. B. agreed to pay, and to satisfy and cancel of record said mortgage.

Now, therefore, the condition of the above obligation is such, that if the above-bounden A. B., his heirs, executors, and administrators, or either of them (or the above-bounden A. B. and W. B., or either of them, or their or either of their heirs, executors, or administrators), shall well and truly pay, or cause to be paid, unto the said (mortgagee), or his executors, administrators, or assigns, all such sum and sums of money as are or may hereafter become due on the said bond and mortgage, executed by the said A. B. and his wife as aforesaid, and forever satisfy and discharge the

AN AGREEMENT is a mutual contract in consideration between two or more parties.

A "contract" is "the agreement of two competent parties about a legal and competent subject-matter, upon a mutual legal consideration, with a mutuality of obligation."

All contracts are divided into two classes:

1. SIMPLE CONTRACTS are those not of speciality or record. They are the lowest class of express contracts, and answer most nearly to our general definition of a contract. They are by parol (which includes both oral and written). The only distinction between oral and written contracts is their mode of proof. And it is inaccurate to distinguish verbal from written; for contracts are equally verbal whether the words are written or spoken—the meaning of verbal being expressed in words.
2. SPECIALTIES are those which are under seal, as bonds, conveyances, deeds, and mortgages. They are not merely written, but

17 Mass. 101; 4 Conn. 51. "A contract is an agreement, upon sufficient consideration, to do or not to do a particular thing." 1 Bl. Com. 426. A mental reservation is of no effect, 1 Disney, 500. 6-See 2 Burr, 1670; 7 T. R. 350, n.; 11 Mass. 27, 30; 3 Id. 299, 301; 7 Conn. 571; 1 Calves, 386.

signed, sealed, and delivered by the party bound. The solemnities connected with these acts, and the formalities of witnessing, gave, in early times, a character and importance to this class of contracts, which implied so much caution and deliberation (consideration) that it was unnecessary to prove the consideration, even in a court of equity.<sup>6</sup> Very little of this real solemnity (except witnessing) now remains, and a scroll is substituted for the seal, though seals have in some States been abolished and witnessing rendered unnecessary. Still the distinction with regard to specialties remains intact. When a contract by specialty is changed by a parol agreement, the whole contract becomes parol.

The law makes no distinction in contracts, except between contracts which are, and contracts which are not, under seal.<sup>7</sup>

Specialties include contracts of record,<sup>8</sup> as judgments, recognizances, and the like. These are the highest class of contracts. They are contracts entered into by the intervention of some public authority, and are witnessed by the highest kind of evidence, viz., matter of record.

"Agreement" is seldom applied to specialties; "contract" is generally confined to simple contracts; and "promise" refers to the engagement of a party without reference to the reasons or considerations for it, or the duties of other parties.<sup>9</sup>

An agreement ceases to be such by being put in writing under seal, but not when put in writing for a memorandum,<sup>10</sup> or as a simple contract.

Conditional contracts are those which are to have full effect only in case of the happening of certain events or the existence of a given state of things.

Executed contracts are where nothing further remains to be done by either party; as, the sale and delivery of goods for a price paid.

Executory contracts where something further is to be done in order to perform the contract; as, the purchase of a horse to be delivered on payment of the price.

Executory agreements are such as rest on articles, memorandums, parol, promises or undertakings, and the like, to be performed in the future, or which are entered into preparatory to more solemn and formal alienations of property.<sup>11</sup>

An executed agreement always conveys a chose in possession, while an executory agreement conveys a chose in action only.

Express contracts are where the terms of the contract are openly uttered or put in writing at the time of making.

Implied contracts are those which the law presumes the parties to have made, although the terms were not openly expressed.

Thus, every one who undertakes any office, employment, or duty, impliedly contracts with his employers to do it with integrity, diligence, and skill; and he impliedly contracts to do whatever is fairly within the scope of his employment.<sup>12</sup>

Implied promises, or promises in law, only exist where there is no express stipulation between the parties touching the same matter; for a thing which is expressed invalidates that which otherwise might have been implied by intendment of law.<sup>13</sup>

Oral contracts are "simple contracts."

Verbal contracts are "simple contracts."

Written contracts are "simple contracts" or "specialties."

The essentials of a legal contract are:<sup>14</sup>

1. CONSIDERATION, for this is in legal contemplation the causa of the contract.

2. SUBJECT-MATTER, the object, or what the parties to it propose as its effects.

3. PARTIES, for there can be no contract without parties.

4. ASSENT of the parties, without which there is no contract.

The legal obligation of a contract consists in the right of either party to have it enforced against the other, or to recover compensation for its breach by due process of law.<sup>15</sup>

There is no contract which the law will recognize and enforce, unless the parties to it have agreed to the same thing, in the same sense.<sup>16</sup> Thus where the defendants wrote to the plaintiffs, offering them a certain quantity of "good barley at a certain price, the plaintiffs replied, "Of which offer we accept, expecting you will give us 'fine' barley and full weight."

The court held that there was not a sufficient acceptance to sustain an action for non-delivery of the barley.<sup>17</sup> So, if a person sends an order to a merchant to send him a particular quantity of goods on certain terms of credit, and the merchant sends a less quantity of goods, at a shorter credit, and the goods sent are lost by the way, the merchant must bear the loss, for there is no agreement, express or implied, between the parties.<sup>18</sup>

At a sale by auction, every bid by any one present is an offer by him, and it becomes a contract as soon as the hammer falls, or the bid is otherwise accepted, but until it is accepted it may be withdrawn by the bidder; but a buyer is discharged from a purchase made under "catching conditions."<sup>19</sup>

There is an apparent exception to this rule, when, for example, A. declares that he was not understood by B., or did not understand B. in a certain transaction, and that therefore there is no bargain between them; and B. replies by showing that the language used on both sides

was understood by B., or did not understand B. in a certain transaction, and that therefore there is no bargain between them; and B. replies by showing that the language used on both sides (Ky.) 80; 2 T. R. 126; 23 Penn. St. 297. <sup>13</sup> 2 M. & W. 333; 2 Johns, 200; 10-11 T. R. 126; 23 Penn. was explicit and unequivocal, and constituted a distinct contract. Here B. would prevail.

The reason is, that the law presumes that every person means that which he distinctly says. The first point is, to ascertain what the parties themselves meant and understood. But it must be their intention as expressed in the contract. Thus, if a contract spoke of "horses," it would not be possible for the court to read this word "oxen," although it might be made certain by extrinsic evidence that it was so intended.

If the parties, or either of them, show that a bargain was honestly but mistakenly made, which was materially different from that intended to be made, it would be a good ground for declaring that there was no contract.

Fraud destroys all obligations and contracts into which it enters, and the law relieves the party defrauded. If both parties act fraudulently, neither can take advantage of the fraud of the other. If one acts fraudulently, he cannot set his own fraud aside for his own benefit.

ABANDONMENT of a contract is only lawful when it will in no wise prejudice the rights of the other party, and this though there be no consideration, provided the act or work has been undertaken; for though not required to do an act gratuitously, if a person undertakes it he is answerable if he does not fulfil his engagement. See BAILMENTS, GRANTS, above; NUDUM PACTUM, below.

ABATEMENT may always be made; that is, a less may be taken for a greater sum due, and will be a satisfaction of such larger sum, provided it carries with it an additional benefit. Thus a reduction may be made by a creditor for the prompt payment of a debt due him from another. So with any other advantage or inducement.

ACCESSORY CONTRACTS are made to assure the performance of a prior contract, either by the same parties or by others. Of these are mortgages, pledges, suretyship, etc.

If the accessory contract is a contract by which one is to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, it must, under the statute of frauds, be in writing, and disclose the consideration, either explicitly or by the use of terms from which it may be implied. Such a contract is not assignable, so as to enable the assignee to sue on it in his own name. An accessory contract of this kind is discharged not only by the fulfillment or release of the principal contract, but also in any material change in the terms of such contract by the parties thereto, for the surety is bound only by the precise terms of the agreement he has guaranteed. Thus, a surety will be discharged if the right of the creditor to enforce the debt be suspended for any definite period, however short; and a suspension for a day will have the same effect as if it were for a month or a year. But the surety may assent to the change and waive his right to be discharged because of it. If the parties to the principal contract have been guilty of any misrepresentation, or even concealment, of any material fact, which, had it been disclosed, would have deterred the surety from entering into the accessory contract, the security so given is voidable at law on the ground of fraud. So, the surety will be discharged should any condition, express or implied, that has been imposed upon the creditor by the accessory contract be annulled by him. An accessory contract, to guarantee an original contract which is void, is void also.

It is a general rule that payment or release of the debt due, or the performance of a thing required to be performed by the first or principal contract, is a full discharge of such accessory obligation. And that an assignment of the principal contract will carry the accessory contract with it.

ACCIDENT. See title ACCIDENT, above.
ACCORD is an agreement to receive some act or thing in satisfaction of a claim or injury. A satisfaction agreed upon between the party injuring and the party injured, which when performed, is a bar to all actions upon this account. Accord is generally used in the phrase "Accord and satisfaction."

An accord must be legal. An agreement to drop a criminal prosecution as a satisfaction for an assault and imprisonment is void.

Satisfaction should proceed from the defendant. Accord and satisfaction by a co-partner is a bar to an action against the others; and acceptance of satisfaction from one joint wrongdoer discharges the rest; accord and satisfaction to one of several co-plaintiffs will be so to all.

It must be advantageous to the creditor, and he must receive an actual benefit therefrom which he would not otherwise have had. Restoring to the plaintiff his chattels, or his land, of which the defendant has wrongfully dispossessed him, will not be any consideration to support a promise by the plaintiff not to sue him for those injuries.<sup>3</sup> The payment of a part of the whole debt is not a good satisfaction, even if accepted;<sup>4</sup> otherwise, however, if the amount of the claim is disputed<sup>5</sup> or contingent;<sup>6</sup> and if the negotiable note of the debtor,<sup>7</sup> or of a third person<sup>8</sup> for part, be given and received, it is sufficient; or if a part be given at a different place,<sup>9</sup> or at an earlier time, it will be sufficient;<sup>10</sup> and, in general, payment of a part suffices if any additional benefit be received.<sup>11</sup> And the receipt of specific property, if agreed to, is sufficient, whatever its value;<sup>12</sup> but both delivery and acceptance must be proved.<sup>13</sup>

The satisfaction must be a reasonable and complete satisfaction of the thing demanded, and operate as an extinguishment of the original cause of action. Therefore, acceptance of a less cannot be a satisfaction, in law, of a greater sum, unless there be a release or some consideration for the residue.<sup>14</sup>

An accord that the defendant shall employ workmen in two or three days is bad.<sup>15</sup> An accord to pay a less sum on the same or a subsequent day is bad.<sup>16</sup> The performance of an uncertain accord will not aid the defect.<sup>17</sup>

An accord without satisfaction is no bar to an action. The execution of the accord must be complete and perfect,<sup>18</sup> except where the new promise itself is a satisfaction for the debt or broken contract.<sup>19</sup>

Generally, if the new promise be founded upon a new consideration, and is clearly binding upon the original promisor, this is a satisfaction of the former claim,<sup>20</sup> and otherwise it is no satisfaction.<sup>21</sup> But even a promise, which would not itself be a satisfaction, may, if it be fully performed at the right time, and in the right way (and not merely tendered), become then a satisfaction.<sup>22</sup> If a new promise is executory, and not binding, it is no satisfaction until it be executed, and, although it is to be performed on a future day certain, the promisee may have his original action before the new promise becomes due;<sup>23</sup> but if it be a binding promise for a new consideration, performable at a future day certain, then the original right of action is suspended until that day comes; but if the promise is not then duly performed, this right revives, and the promisee has his election, to sue on the original cause of action, or on the new promise, unless by the terms or the legal effect of the new contract the new promise is of itself a satisfaction and an extinction of the old one.<sup>24</sup> Thus, where one takes a negotiable promissory note, on time, for money which is due or to become due, this note is conclusive evidence of an agreement for delay or credit, and no action can be maintained on the original cause of action until the maturity of the note;<sup>25</sup> if then the note is not paid, an action may be brought upon the note, or on the original cause of action, unless the facts show that the promisee took the note in payment, or the law implies it.<sup>26</sup>

An agreement to cancel and release mutual claims, or to discontinue mutual suits, is a mutual accord and satisfaction; and either party may rely on it as a bar against the further prosecution of the suit or claim by the other.<sup>27</sup>

If there be a new agreement, resting on sufficient consideration, and otherwise valid, to suspend a previous claim or cause of action, until the doing of a certain thing, or the happening of a specified event, the action cannot be maintained on that claim in the meantime.

To show that the accord and satisfaction were simultaneous, and consisting of the delivery of a certain thing, it must be proved, not only that the thing was delivered, but that it was received in satisfaction.<sup>28</sup> But if property of the debtor came lawfully into the possession of the creditor, and they then agreed that it may be retained by him, and shall be in satisfaction of the debt, this is a good accord and satisfaction.<sup>29</sup>

The accord and satisfaction must be advantageous to the creditor;<sup>30</sup> he must receive from it a distinct benefit, which otherwise he would not have had.<sup>31</sup>

If the promise be executed literally, or in form, but is rendered inoperative or worthless to the creditor, by the debtor's act or omission, it has no effect as an accord and satisfaction.<sup>32</sup>

If an accord and satisfaction be made by a third party, and is accepted as satisfaction, it is and screen himself from the payment of what has been done under the contract. So, too, if one party, without the fault of the other, fails to perform his side of the contract in such a manner as to enable him to sue upon it; still, if the other party has derived a benefit from the part performed, it would be unjust to allow him to retain that without paying anything.

ARRANGEMENTS between creditors and debtors not tainted by fraud, agreed to by all parties, and carried out in good faith, will be binding. It must have been assented to by all parties. Settlements of this kind, where it is sought to avoid litigation and loss, are favored by the law, and result more satisfactorily than the usual forms of assignment.

The prevention of litigation is not only a sufficient but a highly-favored consideration, and no investigation into the character or value of the different claims submitted will be entered into for the purpose of setting aside a compromise, it being sufficient if the parties entering into the compromise thought at the time that there was a question between them.

Arrangements between partners themselves cannot limit or prevent their ordinary responsibilities to third persons, unless the latter assent to such arrangements. But where the creditor has express notice of a private arrangement between the partners, by which either the power of one to bind the firm, or his liability on partnership contracts, is qualified or defeated, such creditor will be bound by the arrangement. The act or contract of one partner, even in a transaction purely of a partnership nature, does not bind the firm, if the creditor has express notice from the other partners that they will not consider themselves responsible, for the authority of one partner to bind the firm is only implied; and no one can become the creditor of another against his express and declared will.

ARTIFICES, cheats, finesse, frauds, stratagems, and tricks, though in their very nature false, must also be fraudulent in order to render the party guilty of them responsible to the other for damages. See CONCEALMENT, FRAUD, MISREPRESENTATION.

ASSENT. There is no contract unless the parties thereto assent; and they must assent to the same thing in the same sense. "There must be a request on the one side and an assent on the other; nor is this any more a contract if it be in writing than if spoken only." The assent must comprehend the whole of the proposition; it must be exactly equal in its extent and provisions, and must not qualify them by any new matter. Thus, an offer to sell a certain thing on certain terms, may be met by the answer, "I will take that thing on those terms;" and, if the proposition be in the form of a question, as "I will sell you so and so; will you buy?" the whole of this meaning may be conveyed by the word "yes," or any other simple affirmative answer. And thus a legal contract is completed. But where the answer, either in words or effect, departs from the proposition, or varies the terms of the offer, or substitutes for the contract tendered one more satisfactory to the respondent, in these cases there is no assent, and no contract.

In general, some time must elapse between an offer and its acceptance. But the proposer may himself determine how long the offer shall continue. He may say, "I will give you an hour, or, until this time to-morrow, or next week, to make up your mind. Then the party to whom the proposition is made knows how long the offer is to continue. He may avail himself of the hour, the day, or the week given, for inquiry or consideration, or making the necessary arrangements; and if, within the prescribed time, he expresses his assent (supposing the proposition not in the meantime withdrawn), he completes the contract as effectually as if he had answered in the same way at the first moment after the offer was made. If an offer gives a day for acceptance, without consideration for the delay, he may at any time, within that day, before acceptance, recall his offer. So he may if he gives no time. If he makes an offer, and instantly recalls it before acceptance, although the other party was prepared to accept it the next instant, the offer is effectually withdrawn. But acceptance before withdrawal binds the parties, if made while the offer continues; and the offer does continue in all cases, either a reasonable time (and that only), or the time fixed by the party himself. So, also, where the proposition and reply are both made by letter." Thus, if A, in Boston, on the first

If the offer was to sell goods, B., on tendering the price, may claim the goods; if the offer was to insure B.'s ship, B. may tender the premium and demand the policy, and hold A. as an insurer of his ship. And so of any other offer or proposition.

ASSIGNMENT. See that title.
ATTESTATION is the witnessing of an instrument in writing at the request of the party making the same, and subscribing it as a witness<sup>1</sup> in order to prove the instrument if necessary, and for the purpose of identification.<sup>2</sup> In some cases instruments in writing, as assignments, conveyances, etc., require attestation by one or two witnesses.

AUCTIONS. See AGENCY; AUCTIONEERS; SALES.

AUTHORITY. See AGENCY; AUTHORITY.
AWARD. See AGENCY; ARBITRATORS.

BAILMENTS. See that title.

BARGAIN CATCHING. A merely hard bargain is not a ground for relief in law. But see CONCEALMENT; CONSIDERATION; FRAUD; INADQUACY; MISREPRESENTATION; below.

BARTER is a contract by which parties exchange goods for goods. It differs from a sale; a barter being always goods for goods, while a sale is of goods for money, or for money and goods. In a barter there is a fixed price, in a barter there is not.

BILL OF EXCHANGE, ETC. See that title.

BILL OF LADING. See BAILMENTS; CARRIERS; NOTICE.

BILL OF SALE. See SALES.

BINDING OUT. See APPRENTICESHIP.

BIPARTITE is of two parts. It is a term used in CONVEYANCING, which see.

BLANKS. When a blank (a space left in a writing which is to be filled up with one or more words to complete the sense) is left in a written agreement which need not have been reduced to writing, and which have been equally binding whether written or not, it is presumed in an action for the non-performance of the contract that parol evidence may be admitted to explain the blank. A blank may be filled by consent of parties, and the instrument will remain valid,<sup>1</sup> though not where the blank is in a part material to the operation of the instrument as an instrument of the character which it purports to be,<sup>2</sup> at least without a new execution.<sup>3</sup>

BONA FIDE. The law requires all persons in their transactions to act in good faith; and a contract where the parties have not acted bona fide (in good faith, honesty, purity of intention, as distinguished from male fide, or bad faith) is void at the pleasure of the innocent party.<sup>1</sup> If a contract be made with good faith, subsequent fraudulent acts will not vitiate it, although such acts may raise a presumption of antecedent fraud, and thus become a means of proving the want of good faith in making the contract.<sup>2</sup>

BREACH of contract, or the violation of an obligation, engagement, or duty, may be of any of the terms, or of the entire contract. A continuing breach is either where the condition of things constituting the breach continues during a period of time, or where the acts constituting the breach are at brief intervals repeated.<sup>1</sup> See PLEADING.

CARRIAGE. See BAILMENTS; CARRIERS.

CERTAINTY, accuracy, and distinctness of statement should be observed in every contract. If a contract be so vague in its terms that its meaning cannot be certainly collected, and the statute of frauds precludes the admissibility of parol evidence to clear up the difficulty,<sup>1</sup> or parol evidence cannot supply the defect, the contract will be of no effect.<sup>2</sup> But it is a maxim of law that "that is certain which may be made certain."<sup>3</sup> For example, if a man sells the oil in his store at a certain price per gallon, although there is uncertainty as to the quantity of the oil, yet inasmuch as it can be ascertained, the maxim applies, and the sale is good.<sup>4</sup>

CHAMPERTY AND MAINTENANCE. Champerty is a bargain with the plaintiff or defendant in a suit for a portion of the land or other matter sued for, or claimed, in case of a successful termination in favor of the party for whom the champertor undertakes to carry on the suit at his own expense. A common instance of champerty is where an attorney agrees with his client to collect or enforce by suit a particular claim or claims in general, receiving a certain proportion thereof,<sup>1</sup> or a percentage thereon.<sup>2</sup>

Maintenance is the intermeddling of a stranger in a suit for the purpose of stirring up strife, and continuing the litigation. There are, however, many acts in the nature of maintenance which are justifiable from the circumstances under which they are done. 1. Because the party has an interest in the matter or thing in variance.<sup>3</sup> 2. Because the party is of kindred or affinity, as father, son, husband, wife, heir apparent, etc.* 3. Because the relation of landlord, tenant, master, servant, etc., subsists between the party to the suit and the person assisting him. 4. Because the money is given in charity.* 5. Because the person assisting the party to the suit is an attorney or counsellor, and the assistance strictly professional—for a lawyer is no more justified in giving his client money than another man.* Contracts growing out of maintenance are void.*

ChamPERTY differs from maintenance chiefly in this, that in chamPERTY the compensation to be given is a part of the matter in suit, or some profit growing out of it,* while in simple maintenance the question of compensation does not enter into the account.*

ChamPERTY is treated as the worse offence; for by this a stranger supplies money to carry on a suit on condition of sharing in the land or other property gained by it. Contracts of this sort are set aside both in law and equity.*

CHANGE. See DEVIATION, below.

CHARTER PARTIES. See FORMS, below.

CHOICE. See ELECTION, below.

CLAUSES are parts of an instrument of writing. In the forms hereafter given they are so framed that they may be readily shifted from one form to another without change. Being separate paragraphs, each containing a single, certain, and material part of the agreement, they will assist greatly the precision and clearness of the instrument, and render it less liable to confusion, doubt, and misconstruction.

COERCION. Direct or positive coercion takes place when a man is by physical force compelled to do an act contrary to his will. Implied coercion exists where a person is legally under subjection to another, and is induced in consequence of such subjection to do an act contrary to his will.

As will is necessary to the commission of a crime, or the making of a contract, a person coerced into either has no will on the subject, and is not responsible.* The command of a superior to an inferior,* of a parent to a child,* of a master to his servant, or a principal to his agent,* may amount to coercion.

COLLUSION and fraud of every kind vitiate and render void all acts which are infected with them,* and any agreement between two or more persons to defraud another of his rights by the forms of law, or to obtain any object forbidden by law, falls within this rule.

COMMISSION is the compensation allowed agents, factors, executors, guardians, receivers, trustees, etc., and such persons as manage the affairs of others, in recompense for their services. The right to such allowance may either be the subject of a special contract, may rest in an implied contract to pay as much as the services are worth, or may depend upon statutory provisions.* The right does not generally accrue till the completion of the services, and does not then exist unless proper care, skill, and perfect fidelity have been employed,* and the services are such as have not been illegal or against public policy.* The amount of such commissions is generally a percentage on the sum paid out or received. When there is a usage of trade at the particular place or in the particular business in which the agent is engaged, the amount of commission allowed to auctioneers, brokers, and factors is regulated by such usage.* In case a factor guarantees the payment of the debt he is entitled to a larger compensation (called a del credere commission) than is ordinarily given for the transaction of similar business, where no such guaranty is made.* The amount which executors, etc., receive is, in general, fixed by statute, subject to modification in special cases by the proper tribunal.*

COMPROMISES (agreements made between two or more parties, as a settlement of matters in dispute between them) and settlements are sustained by the law,* they are also highly favored.* The amount in controversy must, however, be uncertain.* There can be no compromise of a criminal offence.*

COMPULSION. Acts done under compulsion are not, in general, binding upon a party; but when a man is compelled by lawful authority to do that which he ought to do, that compulsion does not affect the validity of the act; as, for example, when a court of competent jurisdiction compels a party to execute a deed, under the pain of attachment for contempt, the grantor cannot object to it on the ground of compulsion. But if the court compelled a party to do an act forbidden by law, or had not jurisdiction over the parties, or the subject-matter, the act done by such compulsion would be void.

CONCEALMENT is the improper concealment of any fact or circumstance by one of the parties to a contract from the other, which in justice ought to be known. Concealment when fraudulent avoids the contract, or renders the party using it liable to the damage arising in consequence thereof.<sup>1</sup> But it must have been such facts as the party is bound to communicate.<sup>2</sup> A concealment of extrinsic facts is not, in general, fraudulent, although peculiarly within the knowledge of the party possessing them.<sup>3</sup> And the rule against the concealment of latent defects is stricter in the case of personal than of real property.<sup>4</sup> Where there is confidence reposed concealment becomes more fraudulent.<sup>5</sup>

CONDITIONS, limitations, qualifications, or restrictions which modify or destroy the original act or contract with which it is connected, and clauses having for their object the suspension, rescision, or modification of the original agreement, should always be included and appear in the contract, for when the parties at last reduce their agreement to writing, it is looked upon as the final consummation of their negotiations, and the exact expression of their purpose, and that which is not incorporated in their written contract will be considered as intentionally rejected.<sup>6</sup>

Conditions are affirmative where they are positive; collateral where they require the doing of a collateral act;<sup>7</sup> compulsory where they expressly command a thing to be done; consistent when they agree with the other parts of the contract; copulative when composed of distinct parts or separate conditions, all of which must be performed—they are generally conditions precedent, but may be conditions subsequent;<sup>8</sup> covert when implied; disjunctive when they require the doing of several things—if a condition become impossible in the copulative it may be taken in the disjunctive;<sup>9</sup> express when created by express words;<sup>10</sup> implied when the law supposes the parties to have had them in mind at the time the transaction was entered into, though no condition was expressed;<sup>11</sup> impossible wherein they cannot be performed by natural means; lawful when allowed by law; positive when the event or act contemplated is required to happen; possible when they may be performed; precedent when they must be performed before the act or obligation takes effect—they are to be distinguished from subsequent conditions;<sup>12</sup> repugnant when inconsistent with, and contrary to, the original act; restrictive when they impose a restraint;<sup>13</sup> single when they require the doing only of a single thing; subsequent when their effect is not produced until after the commencement or completion of the obligation—the condition in a mortgage defeating the conveyance is a common example; unlawful when forbidden by law; void when of no validity or effect; voidable when they require the confirmation or ratification of one or more of the parties.

Conditions must be made simultaneously with the original contract or conveyance, though, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, they may be by a separate instrument of writing. They are then considered as constituting one transaction with the original.<sup>14</sup> Unlawful conditions are void. Any words suitable to indicate the intention of the parties may be used in the creation of a condition. "On condition" is the common form of commencement. The words of condition need be in no particular place in the instrument.<sup>15</sup>

Conditions which defeat or destroy are strictly construed, while those which limit, extend or vest are liberally construed.<sup>16</sup> The condition of an obligation is said to be the language of the obligee, and for that reason is construed liberally in favor of the obligor.<sup>17</sup> But whenever an obligation is imposed by a condition the construction is to be favorable to the obligee.<sup>18</sup>

Where conditions are liberally construed a strict performance is required, and a less exact or strict performance is allowed where there is a strict construction of the condition. Performance should be complete and effectual.<sup>19</sup> An inconsiderable casual failure to perform is not non-performance.<sup>20</sup> Any one who has an interest in the matter may perform the condition, but a stranger will derive no benefit from performing it.<sup>21</sup> Conditions precedent can generally be exactly performed; and equity will not generally interfere to avoid the consequences of non-performance.<sup>22</sup> But in cases of conditions subsequent equity will interfere where there is even a partial performance, or where there is only a delay of performance.<sup>23</sup> Generally, where no time of performance is limited, he who has the benefit of the contract may perform the condition when he pleases, at any time during his life,<sup>24</sup> and need not do it when requested.<sup>25</sup> But if a prompt performance be necessary to carry out the will of a testator, the beneficiary will not have a lifetime in which to perform the condition.<sup>26</sup> In this case no previous demand is

If a place be agreed upon, neither party alone can change it, but either may with the consent of the other.*

Non-performance of a condition which was possible at the time of its making, but which has since become impossible, is excused if the impossibility is caused by act of God,† or by act of law, if it was lawful at its creation;‡ or by act of the party, as when the one imposing the obligation accepts another thing in satisfaction, or renders the performance impossible by his own default.‡ If the performance of one part becomes impossible by act of God, the whole will, in general, be excused.‡

CONFIDENCE. See TRUST, etc., below.

CONFIRMATION is a contract making firm and unavoidable that which was before voidable. When a party, acting for himself or by a previously authorized agent, has attempted to enter into a contract, but has done so in an informal or invalid manner, he may confirm the act and thus render it valid. It will then take effect as between the parties from the making of the original contract.‡ To make a valid confirmation the party must be apprised of his rights, and where there has been a fraud in the transaction he must be aware of it, and intend to confirm his contract.‡ A confirmation may make a defensible or voidable contract good, but cannot strengthen or make valid a void contract.‡ See INFANTS, PERSONAL RELATIONS.

CONSIDERATION is the material cause which moves a contracting party to enter into a contract.‡ The price, motive, or matter of inducement to the contract, a compensation or equivalent—whether it be that which is paid or otherwise—or the inconvenience suffered by the party from whom it proceeds.

Consideration is concurrent where it arises at the same—or when the promises are simultaneous; continuing when it is executed only in part; equitable when a moral consideration; executed when received before the obligor made the promise; executory when the undertaking is for future performance; good when of blood (kinship), natural affection, natural duty, generosity, prudence, and the like;‡ gratuitous when not founded on such a deprivation or injury to the promisee as to make the consideration valid in law;‡ impossible when it cannot be performed; moral when sufficient to support an executed contract, and valuable when it confers some benefit upon the party by whom the promise is made, or upon a third party at his instance or request; or some detriment sustained at the instance of the party promising by the party in whose favor the promise is made.‡

Consideration is the very life and essence of a contract; and a contract or promise for which there is no consideration cannot be enforced at law.‡ The consideration is the cause of the contract,‡ and a consideration must be provided, where the contract is in writing, but not under seal, as much as if the contract were oral.‡ The exception to this rule in case of mercantile negotiable paper is considered elsewhere. Where the consideration is expressed in a written contract, no other can be proved unless there are words to indicate other considerations.‡ Where the consideration is not expressed, it may be proved.‡ And where the contract declares it was made for a valuable consideration, this is prima facie evidence of such consideration.‡

ADUQUACY. If the consideration is valuable it need not be adequate; that is, the court will not inquire into the exact proportion between the value of the consideration and that of the thing to be done for it.‡ But it must have some real value; and if this be very small, this circumstance may, even by itself, and still more when connected by other indications, imply or sustain a charge of fraud.‡ Mere folly or want of judgment will not defeat a contract.‡ The courts refuse to disturb contracts on questions of mere adequacy. When adequacy of consideration becomes material, whether it exists is a question for the court.‡

AFFECTION. Natural affection—the affection which a husband, father, brother, a wife, mother, sister, or other near relative naturally feels towards those who are so nearly allied to him—sometimes supplies the place of a valuable consideration in contracts. Natural affection is a good consideration in a conveyance of land.

ASSIGNMENT OF A DEBT or right is a good consideration for a promise by the assignee.<sup>1</sup> So the assignment of a debt or chose in action with the consent of the debtor is a good consideration for the debtor's promise to pay the assignee. It is merely a promise to pay a debt due, and the consideration is the discharge of the debtor's liability to the assignor.<sup>2</sup> But if either transaction amounts to maintenance, which is illegal, the consideration fails, and the promise is void.

CONTRARY TO MORALS, ETC. Contracts which are incentive to crime, or of which the consideration is an engagement or obligation improperly prejudicial to the feelings of a third party, offensive to decency or morality, or which have a tendency to mischievous or pernicious consequences, are void, being against sound morals.<sup>4</sup>

DEPOSIT. See title BAILMENTS, DEPOSIT. EQUITABLE. See MORAL, below.

EXECUTED CONSIDERATIONS are those which are wholly past. An executed consideration will not generally be sufficient to support a contract. It is something done before the obligor makes his promise, and therefore cannot be a foundation for that promise unless it has been executed at the request (express or implied) of the promisor; such a request plainly implies a fair and reasonable compensation.<sup>5</sup>

EXPRESSING. The consideration in simple contracts if not expressed must be proved, and this may be done by extrinsic evidence.<sup>6</sup> If expressed, such expression is prima facie evidence of the consideration. Contracts, under seal, as bonds and deeds, judgments, and negotiable instruments, imply by their very nature a consideration, and in the absence of an expression of consideration none need be proved.

FAILURE OF —. A want or failure in the whole or in part, of the consideration of a written contract, may be shown as a defence, total or partial, as the case may be, in an action on such contract, brought by one who is not an innocent holder in good faith.

The failure of consideration must be total, 5 Bingham, 474; 4

When the consideration appears to be valuable and sufficient, but turns out to be wholly false or a mere nullity, or where it may have been actually good, but before any part of the contract has been performed by either party, and before any benefit has been derived from it to the party paying or depositing money for such consideration, and the consideration wholly fails, the promise resting on such a consideration is no longer obligatory, and the party paying or depositing money upon it can recover it back,<sup>7</sup> but where the consideration falls only in part, the principles analogous to those which govern an inquiry into the adequacy of a consideration would be applied to it. If there were a substantial consideration left, although much diminished, it would still suffice to sustain the contract. But if the diminution of failure were such as in effect and reality to take away all the value of the consideration, it would be regarded as one that had wholly failed.

But where a person, with full knowledge of all the circumstances, pays money voluntarily, and without compulsion or duress of person or goods, he shall not afterward recover back the money so paid.<sup>8</sup>

FORBEARANCE. An agreement to forbear for a time proceedings to enforce a well-founded claim is a valid consideration for a promise.<sup>9</sup> But this consideration fails if it be shown that the claim is unsustainable at law or in equity,<sup>10</sup> but mere proof that it is doubtful will not invalidate the consideration.<sup>11</sup> Nor is it necessary that the forbearance should extend to an entire discharge; any delay, which is real and not merely colorable, is enough.<sup>12</sup> Nor is it material whether the proceedings to be forbore have been commenced or not.<sup>13</sup> Nor need the agreement to a delay be for a time certain; for it may be for a reasonable time only, and yet be sufficient consideration for a promise;<sup>14</sup> but the actual time of forbearance should be proved, and if this be judged by the court to be reasonable, the action will be sustained;<sup>15</sup> but where the stay of action is wholly uncertain, or such as can be of no benefit to the debtor or detriment to the creditor, it is not enough.<sup>16</sup>

GOOD. A contract upon a good consideration is considered merely voluntary, but is good against the promisor or grantor when once executed,<sup>1</sup> but void against creditors and subsequent bona fide purchasers for value.<sup>2</sup> The term is sometimes used in the sense of a consideration valid in point of law, and it then includes a valuable as well as a meritorious consideration.<sup>3</sup> Generally, however, "good" is opposed to "valuable," which see.

ILLEGAL considerations can be no foundation or cause for a contract. Violations of morality, decency, and policy, as contracts to commit, conceal, or compound crimes, are in contravention of law. So, also, with a contract for future illicit intercourse, or in fraud of a third party, or the like. In general, if any part of the entire consideration for a promise, or any part of an entire promise, be illegal, the whole contract is void,<sup>4</sup> because public policy will not permit a party to enforce a promise which he has obtained by an illegal act or an illegal promise, although he may have connected with this act or promise another which is legal. But if one gives a good and valid consideration, and thereupon one promises to do two things, one legal and the other illegal, he shall be held to that which is legal,<sup>5</sup> unless the two are so mingled and bound together that they cannot be separated, in which case the whole promise is void. Where the consideration is altogether illegal, it is insufficient to sustain a promise, and the agreement is wholly void. See next paragraph.

IMMORAL. Contracts for an immoral consideration are generally void. An agreement in consideration of future illicit cohabitation between the parties,<sup>6</sup> an agreement for the value of immoral and libellous pictures,<sup>7</sup> or for painting a libel,<sup>8</sup> or for an immoral wager,<sup>9</sup> cannot, therefore, be enforced; for whatever arises from an immoral or illegal consideration is void. It is a general rule that whenever an agreement appears to be illegal, immoral, or against public policy, a court of justice leaves the parties where it finds them. When the agreement has been executed the court will not rescind it; when executory the court will not aid its execution.<sup>10</sup>

which one cannot perform without a breach of the law is bad, and so is one which cannot be performed at all.<sup>12</sup> The reason is obvious; from such consideration no possible benefit or advantage could be derived by the one party, nor detriment to the other. But a promise is not void merely because it is difficult or even improbable. And it seems that if the impossibility applies to the promisor, personally, there being neither natural impossibility in the thing, nor illegality nor immorality, then he is bound by his undertaking, and it is a good consideration for the promise of another,<sup>13</sup> because if a party binds himself to such an undertaking, he may either procure the thing to be done by those who can do it, or else pay damages for not doing it.

KINDS. Considerations are good or valuable. A good consideration is such as that of blood, or of natural love and affection, where a man grants an estate to a near relation, being founded on motives of generosity, prudence, and natural duty.<sup>14</sup> A valuable consideration is usually in some way pecuniary or convertible into money.<sup>15</sup> An equitable consideration is valid between parties, although it be not valuable; but only a valuable consideration is valid as against a third party as a subsequent purchaser,<sup>16</sup> whose debt existed when the contract was made; an attaching creditor, or the like. A mere moral consideration is nothing.<sup>17</sup>

LABOR. See WORK, etc., below.

LITIGATION. The prevention of litigation is not only a sufficient but a highly-favored consideration,<sup>18</sup> and no investigation into the character or value of the different claims submitted will be entered into for the purpose of setting aside a compromise, it being sufficient if the parties entering into the compromise thought at the time that there was a question between them.<sup>19</sup>

LOAN. See title BAILEMENTS.

MANDATE. See title BAILEMENTS.

MARRIAGE is a valuable consideration, though it be not convertible into money, nor of pecuniary value.<sup>20</sup>

MORAL OBLIGATIONS are often said to be a sufficient consideration. It is a rule, however, that such moral obligation must have once been valuable and enforceable by law, but has ceased to be so by the statute of limitations, or by the intervention of bankruptcy. The claim, in such case, remains equally as strong on the conscience of the debtor. The rule amounts only to a permission to waive certain positive rules of law as to remedy. If the moral duty were once a legal one which could have been made available in defence, it is equally within the rule.

PROMISES. Mutual promises made at the same time are concurrent considerations, and will support each other if both be legal and binding. And it is so previous to performance and without performance. As, if one promises to become a partner, and another promises to receive him into the firm, both of these promises are binding, each being sufficient consideration for the other. If one promises to teach a certain trade, this is a consideration for a promise to remain with the party a certain length of time to learn, and serve him during that time; but without such promise to teach, the promise to remain and serve, though it be made in expectation of instruction, is void. The reason of this is, that a promise is not a good consideration for a promise unless there is an absolute mutuality of obligation, so that each party has the right at once to hold the other to a positive agreement. A promise to accept and pay for goods is a good consideration for a promise to deliver them, for the buyer may tender the price and demand the goods; and the seller may tender the goods and demand the price. The exception to this rule is in case of contracts between infants and persons of full age; the promise of an infant is a consideration for the promise of an adult, though the infant may avoid his contract, while the adult cannot.

SERVICES. See WORK, etc., below. STRANGERS' RIGHTS. A third party may maintain an action on a promise made to another for his benefit, for such promise is to be deemed made to the third party, if adopted by him, though he was not cognizant of it when made. SUBSCRIPTIONS for shares in a chartered company rest upon a sufficient consideration, for the company is obliged to give the subscriber his shares, and he must pay for them. Concerning voluntary subscriptions for charitable purposes, there is much confusion of authorities. Subscriptions to a common object are not usually mutual nor really concurrent, and can be held and enforced only on the grounds of public policy. A subscription to be binding ought to be a promise to some particular person or committee. There should be an agreement on the part of such person or committee to do something on their part, as to provide material to erect, extend, or repair a building, or the like. If advances were fairly authorized and have been made on the strength of the subscriptions, it is sufficient to make them obligatory. Where several promise to contribute to a common object, desired by all, the promise of each may be a good consideration for the promise of others. In general, the subscriptions on certain conditions in favor of the party subscribing are binding when the acts stipulated are performed.

TIME. Considerations may be of the past, of the present, or of the future. When the consideration and the promise founded upon it are simultaneous, then the consideration is of the present time; the whole agreement is completed at once. When a consideration is to do a thing hereafter, it is of the future, and is said to be executory; when the promise to do this is accepted, the latter promise rests on a sufficient foundation, and is obligatory. When a consideration is wholly past, it is said to be executed.

Generally, a past or executed consideration is not sufficient to sustain a promise founded upon it, unless there was a request for the consideration previous to its being made. Without such previous request a subsequent promise has no force. But this previous request need not always be express, or proved, because it is often implied. As where one accepts or retains the beneficial result of such voluntary service. And where one is compelled to do for another what that other should do, and was compellable to do; here, also, the law implies, not only a previous request that the thing should be done, but also a promise to compensate for the doing of it; as where one is surety for another, and pays the debt which the other owes. And where one does voluntarily that which he is not compellable to do, for another who is compellable to do it; as if one who is not surety, nor bound in any way, pays a debt due from another, he has not the same claim and right as if he had been compellable to pay this debt; for now the law, if there be a subsequent promise to repay the money, will indeed imply a previous request; the reason is, that the debtor shall not be obliged to accept another party as his creditor without his consent, for he may have partial defenses, or other reasons for arranging the debt with him to whom it is due, and not with another; but if the debtor choose to promise him repayment he is held to such promise and the consideration, though executed, is sufficient.

TRUST AND CONFIDENCE. If one intrusts money, goods, or property of any kind, to any person, on the faith of that person's promise to act in a certain way in reference to such money, goods, or property, such person having accepted the trust will be held to his promise, because the trust is itself a sufficient consideration for a promise to discharge and execute the trust faithfully. For if a person makes a mere gratuitous promise, and then enters upon the performance of it, he is held to a full execution of all he has undertaken.

VALUABLE considerations are the only ones which are good against subsequent purchasers and attaching creditors, and these are always sufficient if rendered at the request, express or implied, of the promisor. A valuable consideration is usually in some way pecuniary or convertible into money; and a very slight consideration, provided it be valuable and free from fraud, will support a contract. The civilians divided it into four classes, viz.: 1. "I give that you may give." 2. "I do that you may do." 3. "I do that you may give." 4. "I give that you do." See GOOD KINDS; and the various paragraphs on the subject of consideration, above and below.

VOID IN PART. If there be more of several considerations, which are relied on the ground of a promise, some of which are sufficient, but not all, and the others are good and sufficient, then the consideration may be severed, and those which are void disregarded, while those which are valid will sustain the promise. But where the consideration is entire and incapable of severance, it must be wholly good or wholly bad. If the promise be entire, and not in writing, and a part of it relate to a matter which, by the statute of frauds, should be promised in writing, such part being void avoids the whole contract; but if it be such in its nature that it may be divided, and the part not required to be in writing by the statute may be enforced without injustice to the promisor, that portion of the agreement will be binding.

WORK, SERVICE, AND LABOR. Work and service are a very common consideration for a promise, and always sufficient, if rendered at the request of the party promising. This request may often be implied; it is so, generally, from the fact that the party making the promise accepts and holds the benefit resulting from the work or service. And it is an equally sufficient consideration for a promise if the work or service be rendered to a third party at the request of the promisor.

If the work and service rendered are merely gratuitous, and performed for the defendant without his request or privity, however meritorious or beneficial they may be, they afford no cause of action. So, if a workman employed and directed to do a particular thing choose to do some other thing, without the direction or assent of his employer, the implied promise of the employer to pay for his labor will not extend to the new work; but if the work is accepted by the employer, it would be a sufficient consideration for a promise to pay for it, and such acceptance might imply such promise.

CONSTRUCTION is determination of the meaning and application as to the matter in question of the provisions of a written instrument—drawing conclusions respecting subjects that lie beyond the direct expressions of the term. A strict (or literal) construction is one which limits the application of the provisions of the instrument or agreement to cases clearly described by the words used. A liberal (or equitable) is one by which the letter is enlarged or restrained so as to more effectually accomplish the end in view.

A leading principle of construction is to carry out the intention of the authors of or parties to the instrument or agreement, so far as can be done without infringing upon any law of superior binding force. In regard to cases where this intention is clearly expressed, there is little room for variety of construction; it is mainly in cases where the intention is indistinctly disclosed, though fairly presumed to exist in the minds of the parties, that any liberty of construction exists.

What a contract means is a question of law. It is the court therefore that determines the construction of the contract. If there are peculiar expressions used in it, which have, in particular places or trades, a known meaning attached to them, it is for the jury to say what the meaning of these expressions was, but for the court to decide what the meaning of the contract was.

Words, if of common use, are to be taken in their natural, plain, obvious, and ordinary significations; but if technical words are used they are to be taken in a technical sense, unless the contrary intention clearly appear in either case from the context.

All instruments and agreements are to be so construed as to give effect to the whole, or as large a portion thereof as possible.

CUSTOM OR USAGE. An established custom may add to a contract stipulations not contained in it, on the ground that parties may be supposed to have had these stipulations in their minds as a part of their agreement, when they put upon paper or express in words the other part of it. So, custom may control and vary the meaning of words. For this purpose the custom must be established and not casual, uniform and not varying, general and not personal, and known to the parties. Nor is it necessary that the word sought to be interpreted by the custom should be, of itself, ambiguous. Custom is the thing to be proved, and usage is the evidence of the custom. Whether a custom exists is a question of fact. The custom must be established by the evidence of witnesses who speak directly from the fact of the existence of the custom. Generally, the knowledge of a custom must be brought home to the party who is to be affected by it. But if it be shown that the custom is ancient, very general and well known, it will often be a presumption of law that the party had knowledge of it. No custom can be proved, or permitted to influence the construction of a contract, or vary the rights of parties, if the custom itself be illegal; neither will courts sanction a custom by permitting its operation upon the rights of parties, which is of itself wholly unreasonable. So a usage among plasterers to charge half the size of the windows at the price agreed on for work and materials is unreasonable and void. No custom, however universal or old, or known, unless it has actually passed into law, has any force over parties against their will; and no usage can be incorporated into a contract, which is inconsistent with the terms of the contract. Where the terms of the contract are plain, usage, even under that very contract, cannot be permitted to affect materially the construction to be placed upon it. See CUSTOM, below.

EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE. It is very common for parties to offer evidence external to the contract, in aid of the interpretation of its language. But "writing cannot be construed or taken away by the evidence of witnesses; such evidence cannot be admitted to contradict or vary the terms of a valid written contract." For when parties at last reduce their agreement to writing, it is looked upon as the final consummation of their negotiation, and the exact expression of their purpose; and that which is not now incorporated into their written contract may be considered as intentionally rejected. As to parties or the subject-matter of a contract, extrinsic evidence may and must be received and used to make them certain, if necessary for that purpose. Thus, upon a bequest to my cousin, T. S., if I have two cousins of that name, evidence may be adduced to show which of the two the testator intended, and whether parcel or not of the thing devised is always a subject of parol evidence. A devise simply to John Smith would necessarily create some uncertainty. Where the language of an instrument has a settled legal meaning, its construction is not open to evidence. Thus, a promise to pay money, no time being expressed, means a promise to pay it on demand; and evidence that a payment at a future day was intended, is not admissible. But a promise to do something other than pay money, no time being expressed, means a promise to do it within a reasonable time.

The date of an instrument, or if there be no date, the time when it was to take effect, which may be other than the day of delivery,<sup>6</sup> or the amount of the consideration paid,<sup>7</sup> may be varied by testimony. And an instrument may be shown to be void and without legal existence or efficacy, as for want of consideration,<sup>8</sup> or for fraud,<sup>9</sup> or duress, or any incapacity of the parties,<sup>10</sup> or any illegality in the agreement.<sup>11</sup> In the same way extrinsic evidence may show a total discharge of the obligations of the contract; or a new agreement substituted for the former, which it sets aside;<sup>12</sup> or that the time when,<sup>13</sup> or the place where,<sup>14</sup> certain things were to be done had been changed by the parties; or that a new contract, which was additional and supplementary to the original contract, had been made;<sup>15</sup> or that damages had been waived;<sup>16</sup> or that a new consideration, in addition to the one mentioned, had been given, if it be not adverse to that mentioned in the deed.<sup>17</sup> And if no consideration be named, one may be proved.<sup>18</sup>

A receipt for money is peculiarly open to evidence. It is only prima facie evidence either that the sum stated has been paid, or that any sum whatever was paid.<sup>19</sup> If a contract refer to principles of science or art, or use the technical phraseology of some profession or occupation, or common words in a technical sense, or the words of a foreign language, their exact meaning may be shown by the testimony of "experts," that is, persons possessing the peculiar knowledge and skill requisite for the interpretation of the contract.<sup>20</sup>

The law will not make, nor permit to be made for parties, a contract other than they would have made for themselves. If the contract which the parties have made is incurably uncertain, the law cannot enforce it; it will only declare such supposed contract no contract at all, and leave the parties to the mutual rights and obligations which may then exist between them. But the law will not pronounce a contract incurably uncertain, and therefore null, until it has cast upon it all the light that can be gathered, either from a collation of all the words used, or from all cotemporaneous facts which extrinsic testimony establishes.<sup>21</sup>

GENERAL RULES. The subject-matter of the contract is to be fully considered.<sup>22</sup> The construction which would make the contract legal is preferred to one that would have the opposite effect.<sup>23</sup> The presumption is—of greater or less strength, according to the language used, or the circumstances of the case—in favor of the comprehensive over the restricted, the general over the particular, and the common over the unusual sense.<sup>24</sup> The whole contract should be considered in determining the meaning of any or all its parts.<sup>25</sup> The contract should be supported rather than defeated.<sup>26</sup> All instruments should be construed against him who gives or undertakes, or enters into an obligation.<sup>27</sup> A lease to one to hold for seven, fourteen, or twenty-one years gave to the lessee, and him alone, the option at which of the periods named in the lease should determine.<sup>28</sup> No precise form of words is necessary even in a specialty.<sup>29</sup> On the contrary, it is so far immaterial in what part of an instrument any clause is written, that it will be read as of any place and with any context, and, if necessary, transposed in order to give effect to the certain meaning and purpose of the parties.<sup>30</sup> Where clauses are repugnant and incompatible, the earlier prevails, if the inconsistency be not so great as to avoid the instrument for uncertainty.<sup>31</sup> The law frequently supplies by its implications the wants of express agreements between the parties; but it never overcomes by its implications the express provisions of parties.<sup>32</sup> If these are illegal, the law avoids them. If they are legal, it yields to them. Preference should be given to the written part of the instruments which are in part printed and in part written;<sup>33</sup> but if the whole contract can be construed together so that the written words and those printed make an intelligible contract, this construction should be adopted.<sup>34</sup>

INTENTION. The first point is, to ascertain what the parties themselves meant and understood. But courts cannot adopt a construction of any legal instrument that shall do violence to the rules of language, or to the rules of law.<sup>4</sup> Words must not be forced away from their proper signification to one entirely different, although it might be obvious that the words used, either through ignorance or inadvertence, expressed a very different meaning from that intended. Thus, if a contract spoke of "horses," it would not be possible for the court to read this word "oxen," although it might be made certain by extrinsic evidence that it was so intended. This is a rule which should be constantly borne in mind in putting a construction upon any legal instrument.<sup>5</sup> So if parties used in a contract technical words, these words could not be wrested from their customary and established meaning, on the ground that the parties used them in a sense which had never before been given to them.<sup>6</sup> So, too, if a manufacturer agrees to make and finish certain goods "as soon as possible," this means within a reasonable time, due regard being had to the manufacturer's means, his engagements, and the nature of the articles.<sup>7</sup>

PRESUMPTIONS OF LAW. It is a presumption of law that parties to a simple contract intended not only to bind themselves, but their personal representatives; and such parties may sue on a contract although not named therein.<sup>8</sup> It is also a legal presumption, that every grant carries with it whatever is essential to the use and enjoyment of the grant.<sup>9</sup> Where anything is to be done, as goods to be delivered, or the like, and no time is specified in the contract, it is then a presumption of the law that the parties intended and agreed that the thing should be done in a reasonable time.<sup>10</sup>

CUSTOM is such a usage as, by common consent and uniform practice, has become the law of the place, or of the subject-matter to which it relates. General customs are such as constitute a part of the common law, and extend to the whole country. Particular customs are those which are confined to a particular locality. In general, when a contract is made in relation to another, about which there is an established custom, such custom is to be understood as forming a part of the contract, and may always be referred to for the purpose of showing the intention of the party in all those particulars which are not expressed in the contract.<sup>11</sup>

But if the meaning of the contract is certain and beyond doubt, no evidence of usage will be admitted to vary or contradict it.<sup>1</sup>

In order to establish a custom, it will be necessary to show its existence for so long a time that "the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," and that the usage has continued without any interruption of the right; for, if it has ceased for a time for such a cause, the revival gives it a new beginning, which will be what the law calls within memory. It will be no objection, however, that the exercise of the right has been merely suspended.<sup>2</sup> It must also have been peaceably acquiesced in and not subject to dispute; for, as customs owe their origin to common consent, their being immemorially disputed, either at law or otherwise, shows that such consent was wanting.<sup>3</sup> In addition to this, customs must be reasonable and certain.

Evidence of usage is never admissible to oppose or alter a general principle, or rule of law, so as, upon a given state of facts, to make the legal rights and liabilities of parties other than they are by law.<sup>4</sup> With respect to a usage of trade, however, it is sufficient if it appears to be known, certain, uniform, reasonable, and not contrary to law.<sup>5</sup> But if not directly known to the parties to the transaction it will still be binding upon them if it appear to be so general and well established that knowledge of it may be presumed.<sup>6</sup> See CONSTRUCTION, above.

DAMAGES.

Liquidated damages are those whose amount has been determined by anticipatory agreement between the parties.

Where there is an agreement between the parties for the doing or not doing particular acts, the parties may, if they please, estimate beforehand the damages to result from a breach of the agreement, and prescribe in the agreement itself the sum to be paid by either by way of damages for such breach.<sup>7</sup>

The sum named in an agreement as damages to be paid in case of a breach will, in general, be considered as liquidated damages, or as a penalty, according to the intent of the parties. The mere use of the words "penalty" or "liquidated damages" will not be decisive of the question if, on the whole, the instrument discloses a different intent.<sup>8</sup>

Such a stipulation in agreement will be considered as a penalty merely, and not as liquidated damages, in the following cases: Where the parties in the agreement have expressly declared it, or described it, as a "penalty," and no other intent is deducible from the instrument;<sup>1</sup> where it is doubtful on the language of the instrument whether the stipulation was intended as a penalty or as liquidated damages;<sup>2</sup> where the agreement was evidently made for the attainment of another object or purpose, to which the stipulation is wholly collateral;<sup>3</sup> where the agreement imposes several distinct duties or obligations of different degrees of importance, and yet the same sum is named as damages for a breach of either indifferently;<sup>4</sup> where the agreement is not under seal, and the damages are capable of being certainly known and estimated;<sup>5</sup> where the instrument provides that a larger sum shall be paid, upon default to pay a lesser sum in the manner prescribed.<sup>7</sup>

The stipulation will be sustained as liquidated damages in the following cases: Where the agreement is of such a nature that the damages are uncertain, and are not capable of being ascertained by any satisfactory and known rule;<sup>6</sup> where, from the tenor of the agreement, or from the nature of the case, it appears that the parties have ascertained the amount of damages by fair calculation and adjustment.<sup>8</sup>

DATE includes the time (i. e., day, month, and year) and place when and where an instrument of writing was made. And when the place is mentioned in the date, the law presumes, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that it was executed at the place of the date.<sup>7</sup> Written instruments generally take effect from the day of their date, but the actual date of their execution may be shown, though different from that which the instrument bears. The date is not of the essence of the contract, but is essential to the identity of the writing by which it is to be proved;<sup>8</sup> and if a written date is an impossible one the time of delivery must be shown.<sup>9</sup>

DEATH. Contracts are, in general, not affected by the death of either party. The executors or administrators of the decedent are required to fulfil all his engagements, and may enforce all those in his favor. But to this rule there are the following exceptions: The contract of marriage; the contract of partnership; those contracts which are altogether personal, as, where the decedent had agreed to accompany the other party to the contract on a journey, or to serve another, or to instruct an apprentice.<sup>1</sup> In all those cases where one is acting for another, and by his authority, such as agencies and powers of attorney, where the agency or power is not coupled with an interest, the death of the party makes an immediate revocation. Whenever any express or implied authority is being exercised by another, the death of the party giving it is a revocation.<sup>2</sup>

Persons who have been once shown to have been in life are presumed thus to continue until the contrary is shown; so that it lies on the party asserting the death to make proof of it.<sup>3</sup> But proof of a long-continued absence, unheard from and unexplained, will lay a foundation for presumption of death. The general rule is, that the presumption of the duration of life ceases at the expiration of seven years from the time when he was last known to be living.<sup>4</sup> Such continued absence for seven years from the particular State of his residence, without showing an absence from the United States, is sufficient.<sup>5</sup>

DEBTS may be evidenced by the various forms of contracts, as conditional conveyances, judgments, mortgages, simple agreements, etc., etc. The distinguishing and necessary feature is that a fixed and specific quantity is owing, and no future valuation is required to settle it.<sup>6</sup>

DEFAULT is the non-performance of a duty, whether arising under a contract or otherwise.<sup>1</sup> By the statute of frauds "no action shall be brought to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person, unless the agreement," etc., "shall be in writing," etc. See title FRAUD, and FRAUD, below.

DELIBERATION (the understanding by which the party examines whether a thing proposed ought to be done or not, or whether it ought to be done in one manner or another) relates to the end proposed; to the means of accomplishing that end; or to both. It is a presumption of law that all acts committed are done with due deliberation—that the party intended to do precisely what he has done. But he may show the contrary. In contracts, for example, he may show that he has been taken by surprise.

DELIVERY is frequently symbolical, as by delivery of a key to a room containing goods,<sup>1</sup> marking timber on a wharf, or goods in a warehouse, or by separating and weighing or measuring them, or otherwise constructively delivering, as by the delivery of a part for the whole.<sup>2</sup>

Delivery is not necessary to complete a sale of personal property, as between the seller and buyer; but as against third parties possession retained by the seller raises a presumption of fraud, which presumption is by some authorities regarded as conclusive; by others merely as strong evidence of fraud to be left to the jury. The rules requiring actual full delivery are subject to modification in case of bulky articles. A condition requiring delivery may be annexed as a part of any contract of transfer. In the absence of contract the amount of transportation to be performed by the seller to constitute delivery is determined by general usage. See PERFORMANCE; SALES, below.

DEMAND. In cases of action arising upon contract it is frequently necessary to secure to the party all his rights and to enable him to bring an action, that he should make a demand upon the party bound to perform the contract or discharge the obligation. Thus, where property is sold to be paid for on delivery, a demand must be made and proved on trial before bringing an action for non-delivery, but not if the seller has incapacitated himself from delivering them. And this rule and exception apply to contracts for money.

DEPENDENT contracts are those by which it is not the duty of the contractor to perform until some obligation contained in the same agreement has been performed by the other party. DEPOSIT. See BAILEMENTS.

DESCRIPTION is that which is said or written to designate a person or thing, or demonstrate condition, mode, object, subject-matter, or whatever forms a part of, or is essential to, the contract. Several descriptions may be employed to denote the same person or object; and the rule of law in such cases is, that if one of the descriptions be erroneous it may be rejected, if, after it is expunged, enough will remain to identify the person or thing intended. That is, if there be an adequate description with convenient certainty of what was contemplated, a subsequent erroneous addition will not vitiate it. On the other hand, if the matter stand in doubt upon the words, whether they import a false reference or description, or whether they are words of restraint that limit the generality of the former words—the law will never intend error or falsehood.

DEVIATION. When a contract is to build a house according to the original plan, and a deviation takes place, the contract must be traced as far as possible, and the additions, if any have been made, must be paid for according to the usual rate of charging.

DISAFFIRMANCE, or a declaration of disagreement to conform to the terms of a voidable contract already entered into, may be made by an infant declaring that he will not abide by his contract with another, and in many other cases. Disaffirmance is express or implied—express when the declaration is made in express terms that the party will not abide by the contract; implied when a party does an act which plainly manifests his determination not to abide by it, as when an infant made a deed of his land, and on coming of age he made a deed of the same land to another.

DISCOUNT. See INTEREST; MONEY.

DISSENT. The law presumes every person to whom a conveyance has been made has given his assent to it, because it is supposed to be for his benefit. To rebut this presumption his dissent must be expressed. See ASSENT, above.

DISSOLUTION. See PARTNERSHIP.

EARNEST is the payment of a part of the price of goods sold, or the delivery of a part of such goods, for the purpose of binding the contract. The effect of earnest is to bind the goods sold; and upon being paid for without default the buyer is entitled to them. But, notwithstanding the earnest, the money must be paid on taking away the goods, because no other time for payment is appointed. Earnest only binds the bargain, and gives the buyer a right to demand, but a demand without the payment of the money is void. After earnest given the vendor cannot sell the goods to another without a default by the purchaser; and therefore if the latter does not come and pay, and take the goods, the vendor ought to go and request him, and then if he does not come, pay for the goods and take them away in convenient time, the agreement is dissolved, and he is at liberty to sell them to any other person.

ENTIRETY. If the part of the contract to be performed by one party consists of several distinct and separate items, and the price to be paid by the other is apportioned to each item to be performed, or is left to be implied by law; such a contract is generally severable. The same rule holds where the price to be paid is clearly and distinctly apportioned to the different parts of what is to be performed, although the latter is in its nature single and entire.

But the mere fact that the subject of the contract is sold by weight or measure, and the value is ascertained by the price affixed to each pound, or yard, or bushel, of the quantity contracted for, will not be sufficient to render the contract severable.<sup>6</sup> And if the consideration to be paid is single and entire, the contract is entire, although the subject of the contract may consist of several distinct and wholly independent items.<sup>7</sup>

EQUALITY. The law presumes that contracting parties act upon a perfect equality. When, therefore, one party uses any fraud or deceit to destroy this equality, the party aggrieved may avoid the contract. In case of a conveyance or grant to two or more persons jointly without designating what each takes, they are presumed to take in equal proportions.<sup>8</sup>

EQUIVALENT. Sometimes a condition must be literally accomplished in the particular form specified; and some may be fulfilled by an equivalent. When such appears to be the intention of the parties, as, if A. promises to pay B. one hundred dollars, and thereupon A. dies, A.'s executors may fulfil A.'s engagement; for it is equivalent to B. whether the money be paid by A. or his executors.<sup>9</sup>

EQUIVOCAL. It is a general rule in the construction of contracts that when an expression may be taken in two senses, that sense shall be preferred which gives it effect. See CONSTRUCTION; above.

ERASURE or obliteration in an instrument of writing renders it void or not under the same circumstances as interlineation.<sup>10</sup> See ALTERATION, above; INTERLINEATION, below.

EXCEPTIONS are such clauses as exclude something from the effect or operation of the contract which will otherwise be included. They differ from reservations, exceptions being always a part of the things granted, while the latter is of things not yet existing but which are newly created or reserved. See CONVEYANCES.

FORMALITY. No precise form of words is necessary even in a specialty.<sup>11</sup> On the contrary, it is so far immaterial in what part of an instrument any clause is written, that it will be read as of any place and with any context, and, if necessary, transposed in order to give effect to the certain meaning and purpose of the parties.<sup>12</sup>

FRAUD avoids every contract, and annuls every transaction into which it enters. The fraud must be material to the contract or transaction which is to be avoided because of it; for if it relate to another matter, or to this only in a trivial and unimportant way, it affords no ground for the action of the court.<sup>13</sup> It must, therefore, relate distinctly and directly to this contract; and it must affect its very essence and substance.<sup>14</sup> The fraud must work an actual injury;<sup>15</sup> for if no damage be caused by the fraud, no action lies.<sup>16</sup> If a purchaser makes false representations of his ability to pay, his property, or credit, the sale is void, and no title passes between the parties to the contract. It must appear that the injured party not only did in fact rely upon the fraudulent statement,<sup>17</sup> but had a right to rely upon it in the full belief of its truth; for otherwise it was his own fault or folly, and he cannot ask the law to relieve him from the consequences.<sup>18</sup> Concealment is not in law so great an offence as misrepresentation. Concealment, to be actionable, must of course be of such facts as the party is bound to communicate.<sup>19</sup> A false representation, in order to have the full effect of fraud, must relate to a substantial matter of fact, and not merely to a matter which rests in opinion, or estimate, or judgment.<sup>20</sup> Where a party rescinds a contract on the ground of fraud, he must do so at once on discovering the fraud.<sup>21</sup> If both parties act fraudulently, neither can take advantage of the fraud of the other, for the law will not interfere between them; and this is so, if both parties are acting fraudulently, although the beginning, and the greater fraud, may be on one side or the other.<sup>22</sup> And if one acts fraudulently, he cannot set his own fraud aside for his own benefit; for no man can be permitted to found any rights upon his own wrong.<sup>23</sup> Therefore if one gives a fraudulent bill of sale of property for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, he cannot set that bill aside and annul that sale, although those who are injured by it may.<sup>24</sup>

Material misrepresentations which go to the substance of a contract, avoid it, whether they are caused by mistake, and occur wholly without fault, or are designed and fraudulent.<sup>25</sup>

GAMING when considered in itself, without regard to the end proposed by the parties interested, is not contrary to natural equity; the contract is considered a reciprocal gift which the parties make under certain conditions. Some games depend upon skill alone, as billiards; others upon chance, as a lottery; and others of both skill and chance, as backgammon. In general, at common law, all games are lawful unless some fraud has been practised, or such games are contrary to public policy. Each of the parties to the contract must have a right to the thing played for. He must have given his free and full consent, and not have been entrapped by fraud. There must be equality in the play, and the play must be conducted fairly. But even when all these rules have been observed, the courts will not countenance gaming by giving too easy a remedy for the recovery of money won at play.<sup>1</sup> When fraud has been practised, as in other cases, the contract is void. In many of the States gaming is prohibited under penalty, and no recovery of money lost or won at gaming can be had.

HYPOTHECATION. See BAILMENTS, CONVEYANCES, FLEDGE.

ILLEGALITY of a contract is in general a perfect defence. This seems too obvious to need illustration. The objection that a contract is immoral or illegal as between plaintiff and defendant, sounds at all times very ill in the mouth of the defendant. It is not for his sake, however; that the objection is ever allowed, but it is founded on general principles of policy, which the defendant has the advantage of, contrary to the real justice, as between him and the plaintiff, by accident. The principle of public policy is this: No action can be founded upon or arise out of fraud.<sup>3</sup> No court will lend its aid to a man who founds his cause of action upon an immoral or an illegal act. If from the plaintiff's own stating, or otherwise, the cause of action appears to arise from an illegal or an immoral consideration, or the transgression of a positive law of the country, then the court says he has no right to be assisted. It is upon that ground the court goes, not for the sake of the defendant, but because they will not lend their aid to such a plaintiff. So if the plaintiff and defendant were to change sides, and the defendant was to bring his action against the plaintiff, the latter would then have the advantage of it; for where both are equally in fault the condition of the defendant is better than that of the plaintiff.<sup>4</sup>

INTERPRETATION is the discovery and representation of the true meaning of any signs used to convey ideas.<sup>5</sup> The "true meaning" of any signs is that meaning which those who used them were desirous of expressing. A person adopting or sanctioning them "uses" them as well as their immediate author. Both parties to an agreement equally make use of the signs declaratory of that agreement, though one only is the originator, and the other may be entirely passive. The most common signs used to convey ideas are words. When there is a contradiction in signs intended to agree, resort must be had to construction; that is, the drawing of conclusions from the given signs, respecting ideas which they do not express. Construction is usually but erroneously confounded with interpretation. Close interpretation is adopted if just reasons, connected with the formation and character of the text, induce us to take the words in their narrowest meaning. This species of interpretation has generally been called literal, but the term is inadmissible.<sup>6</sup> Extensive interpretation (or liberal) adopts a more comprehensive signification of the word. Extravagant interpretation is that which substitutes a meaning evidently beyond the true one; it is, therefore, not genuine interpretation. Free or unrestricted interpretation proceeds simply on the general principles of interpretation in good faith, not bound by any specific or superior principle. Limited or restricted interpretation is when we are influenced by other principles than are strictly hermeneutic ones.<sup>7</sup> Predestined interpretation takes place if the interpreter, laboring under a strong bias of mind, makes the text subservient to his preconceived views or desires. This includes artful interpretation, by which the interpreter seeks to give a meaning to the text other than the one he knows to have been intended.

There can be no sound interpretation without good faith and common sense. The object of all interpretation and construction is to ascertain the intention of the authors, even so far as to control the literal signification of the words; for words are to be so understood that the subject-matter may be preserved rather than destroyed.<sup>8</sup> Words are, therefore, to be taken as those who used them intended, which must be presumed to be their popular and ordinary signification, unless there is some good reason for supposing otherwise, as where technical terms are used. When there is no ambiguity in the words, then no exposition contrary to the words is to be made.<sup>9</sup> When words have two senses, of which one only is agreeable to the law, that one must prevail.<sup>10</sup> When they are inconsistent with the evident intention they will be rejected.<sup>11</sup> When words are inadvertently omitted, and the meaning is obvious, they will be supplied by inference from the context. Impossible things cannot be required. The subject-matter and nature of the context, or its objects, causes, effects, consequences, or precedents, or the situation of the parties, must often be consulted in order to arrive at their intention, as where words have, when literally construed, either no meaning at all or a very absurd one. The whole of an instrument must be viewed together, and not each part taken separately; and effect must be given to every part, if possible. Assistance must be sought from the more near before proceeding to the remote. When one part is totally repugnant to the rest & will be stricken out; but if it is only explanatory it will operate as a limitation. Reference to the lex loci on the usage of a particular place or trade is frequently necessary in order to explain the meaning.

Words spoken cannot vary the terms of a written agreement; they may overthrow it. Words spoken at the time of the making of a written agreement are merged in the writing.<sup>1</sup> There are exceptions to this rule, as in a case of fraud.<sup>2</sup> Where there is a latent ambiguity which arises only in the application and does not appear upon the face of the instrument, it may be supplied by other proof;<sup>3</sup> for an ambiguity which arises out of a fact may be removed by proof of the fact.<sup>4</sup> The rule that an agreement is to be construed most strongly against the party benefited can only be applied in doubtful cases. The more the text partakes of a solemn compact, the stricter should be its construction. Penal statutes must be strictly interpreted; remedial ones liberally;<sup>5</sup> and generally, in regard to statutes, the construction given them in the country where they were enacted will be adopted elsewhere. The general expressions used in a contract are controlled by the special provisions therein. In agreements relating to real property, the lex rei sitæ prevails; in personal contracts, the lex loci contractus, except where they are to be performed in another country, and then the law of the latter place governs.<sup>6</sup> When there are two repugnant clauses in a deed which cannot stand together, the first prevails; with a will the reverse is the case. In all instruments the written part controls the printed. Dates and amounts written at length are preferred before figures.

In addition to the above rules, there are many presumptions of law relating to agreements, such as, that the parties to a contract intend to bind their personal representatives; that where several parties contract without words of severalty, they are presumed to bind themselves jointly; that every grant carries with it whatever is necessary to its enjoyment; when no time is mentioned a reason-

JOINT CONTRACTS are those in which the contractors are jointly bound to perform the promise or obligation therein contained, or entitled to receive the benefit of such promise or obligation. It is a general rule that a joint contract survives, whatever may be the beneficial interests of the parties under it. When a partner, covenantor, or other person entitled, having a joint interest in a contract not running with land, dies, the right to sue survives in the other partner, etc.<sup>1</sup> And when the promise or obligation is to perform something jointly by the promisors or obligors, and one dies, the action must be brought against the survivor.<sup>2</sup> When all the parties interested in a joint contract die, the action must be brought by the executors or administrators of the last surviving obligee against the executors or administrators of the last surviving obligor.<sup>3</sup>

JUDGMENT. The whole purpose of the law being to settle questions and terminate disputes, it will not permit a question which has been settled to be tried again. But the party insisting on the former recovery as a bar to an action, must show that the record of the former suit includes the matter alleged to have been determined.<sup>4</sup> Consequently, where the declaration in the first suit states a particular matter as the ground of action, and issues taken by the defendant, parol proof is inadmissible to show that a different subject was litigated upon the trial.<sup>5</sup> A judgment on the same matter in issue is a conclusive bar.<sup>6</sup>

LAW OF. See CONSTRUCTION, INTERPRETATION, above.

LEGISLATION. All those whose interests are to be affected by legislation, may, both morally and legally, for the protection or advancement of their interests, use all means of persuasion which do not come too near bribery or corruption; but the promise of any personal advantage to a legislator is open to objection, and therefore void.<sup>7</sup> And a contract tending to corrupt appointment to office, even by a private corporation, is, for a similar reason, void.<sup>8</sup>

LETTERS. Where a proposition is made by letter, the mailing a letter containing an acceptance of the proposition completes the contract.<sup>9</sup>

MARITIME CONTRACTS include, among others, bills of lading, charter parties, contracts of affreightment, marine hypothecations, contracts for maritime service, in building, repairing, supplying, and navigating ships or vessels, contracts and quasi contracts for averages, contributions, and jettisons.<sup>6</sup> The term "maritime contract" in its ordinary and proper signification does not strictly apply to contracts relating to the navigation of our great inland lakes and rivers; and yet contracts in respect to their navigation from State to State are within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States to the same extent as though they were arms of the sea and subject to tidal influences.<sup>7</sup> Such contracts are, therefore, denominated maritime contracts.

MEMORANDUM is an informal written instrument recording some agreement or fact, and is usually commenced thus, "Memorandum, that it is agreed," etc., or, "Be it remembered, that," etc. It is also a noting of the chief points of the agreement or contract. It should, to have any effect, be signed by both parties, or by a disinterested person who has a competent knowledge of its character and the circumstances to which it refers. If the parties sign it, it binds them. If a witness sign it, it is merely corroborative evidence of the matters noted.

MISNOMER. The use of a wrong name or a mistake in a name in contracts will not, in general, avoid the contract if the party can be ascertained.<sup>8</sup>

MIS-READING OR MIS-RECITAL of an agreement, contract, or other written instrument to an illiterate or blind man who is a party to it amounts to a fraud, because the contract never had the assent of both parties.<sup>9</sup>

MISREPRESENTATION must be both false and fraudulent in order to make a party making it responsible to the other for damages.<sup>10</sup> Misrepresentation as to a material part of the consideration will avoid an executory contract.<sup>11</sup> A misrepresentation, to constitute fraud, must be contrary to fact; the party making it must know it to be so,<sup>12</sup> excluding cases of mere mistake,<sup>13</sup> and including cases where he falsely asserts a personal knowledge,<sup>14</sup> and one which gave rise to the contracting of the other party.

MISTAKE is some unintentional act, omission, or error arising from ignorance, surprise, imposition, or misplaced confidence.<sup>15</sup> That result of ignorance of law or fact which has misled a person to commit that which, if he had not been in error, he would not have done.<sup>16</sup>

As a general rule, mistakes of law do not furnish an excuse for wrongful acts, or a ground of relief from the consequences of acts done in consequence of such a mistake.<sup>17</sup> An act done or a contract made under a mistake or ignorance of a material fact is voidable and relievable.<sup>18</sup> The rule applies to cases where there has been a studied suppression of facts by one side, and to cases of mutual ignorance or mistake.<sup>19</sup> But the fact must be material to the contract, i. e., essential to its character, and an efficient cause of its concoction.<sup>20</sup> A mistake sometimes prevents a forfeiture in cases of violation of revenue laws.<sup>21</sup>

An award may be set aside for a mistake of law or fact by the arbitrators apparent on the face of the papers.<sup>22</sup>

The word which the parties intended to use in an instrument may be substituted for one which was actually used by a clerical error.<sup>23</sup>

MODIFICATIONS or changes in the contract may be provided for at the time of making the contract by a condition which shall have that effect; for example, if I sell you a thousand bushels of grain upon condition that my crop shall produce so much, and it only produces eight hundred bushels, the contract is modified; it is for eight hundred bushels, or whatsoever is produced, and no more. A contract may be modified by the consent of both parties after it has been made.<sup>24</sup>

MUTUALITY. See OBLIGATION OF, below.

NAKED CONTRACTS are those made without consideration; for this reason they are void. A naked contract is a mere agreement without the requisites necessary to confer upon it a legal obligation to perform.<sup>25</sup> The term and the rule which decides upon the nullity of its effects are borrowed from the civil law.*

NEGOTIABLE CONTRACTS. See BILLS OF EXCHANGE, BONDS AND NOTES.

NOTICE. When contracts "express that they are to be done "on notice," either a general or some specified notice, such notice is indispensable." Generally, where anything is to be done by one party on the performance of some act by the other, this other must give notice of such act."

OBLIGATION OF. The legal obligation of a contract consists in the right of either party to have it enforced against the other, or to recover compensation for its breach by due process of law.)

Obligations are absolute when they give no alternative to the obligor, but requires fulfilment according to the engagement. Accessory obligations are dependent on the original or principal obligation—as, if I sell you a house and grounds, the principal obligation on my part is to make you a title for it; the accessory obligation is to deliver you all the title papers which I have relating to it, and take care of the estate till it is delivered to you and the like. Alternative obligations are those where a person engages to do or to give several things in such a manner that a payment or performance of one will acquit him of all—as if A. agrees to give B., upon sufficient consideration, a horse or one hundred dollars, it is an alternative obligation." It is necessary that two or more things should be promised disjunctively; where they are promised conjunctively there are as many obligations as there are things enumerated; but where they are in the alternative, though they are all due, there is but one obligation, which may be discharged by the payment or performance of any of them. The choice of performing one of the obligations belongs to the obligor, unless it is expressly agreed that it shall belong to the creditor." If one of the acts is prevented by the obligee, or the act of God, the obligor is discharged from both." Civil obligations are those having a binding operation in law, and which gives the obligee the right of enforcing it in a court of justice. They are such engagements as are binding on the obligor." They are divided into express, implied, pure, conditional, absolute, alternative, determinate, indeterminate, divisible, indivisible, single, penal, joint, and several; they are, also, purely personal, purely real, or mixed. Conditional obligations are those whose execution is suspended by a condition which has not been accomplished, and subject to which it has been contracted. Determinate obligations are those having for their object a certain thing; as, a delivery of the horse, H.; this obligation can only be discharged by delivering the identical horse. Divisible obligations are those that, though being a unit, are susceptible of being lawfully divided with or without the consent of the parties. See APPORTIONMENT, above. Express obligations are those by which the obligor binds himself in express terms to perform his obligation. Imperfect obligations are those which are not binding on us as between individual and individual, but for whose performance we are accountable to the Almighty only, such as charity or gratitude; in this sense an obligation is a mere duty." Implied obligations are those which arise by implication of law; as, if one send you daily a loaf of bread, a newspaper, or periodical, or the like, as to a regular customer or subscriber, without any express authority, and you make use of it in your family, the law raises an obligation on your part to pay the baker or publisher the value of the bread, newspapers, or periodicals, etc. Indeterminate obligations are those where the obligor binds himself to deliver one of a certain species, as a horse, and the delivery of any horse will discharge the obligation. Indivisible obligations are those not susceptible of division; as, if I promise to pay you a hundred dollars, you cannot assign one-half of this to another so as to give him a right of action against me for his share. Joint obligations are those by which two or more obligors promise the obligee to perform an obligation. When the obligation is only joint, and the obligors do not promise separately to fulfil their engagement, they must be all sued, if living, to compel the performance, or, if they be dead, the survivors must all be sued. Natural or moral obligations are those which cannot be enforced by action, but which is binding on the party who makes it in conscience and natural justice. Penal obligations are those embraced in a penal clause, which is to be enforced if the principal obligation is not performed. See DAMAGES, above. Perfect obligations are those which give a right to another to require us to give another something or to do something; they are either natural, moral, or civil. Personal obligations are those by which the obligor binds himself to perform an act without directly binding his property for its performance; it also denotes an obligation in which the obligor binds himself only, not including his heirs or representatives. Primitive or principal obligations are those which are contracted with a design that they should be the first fulfilled. Principal obligations are those which are the most important objects of the engagement of the contracting parties. Pure or simple obligations are those which are not suspended by any condition; either because contracted without condition, or because contracted with one which has been fulfilled. Real obligations are those by which real estate and not the person is liable to the obligee for the performance. As, when a person buys an estate subject to a mortgage, he is not liable for the debt, but the estate is. Secondary obligations are those which are contracted to be performed in case the primitive cannot be. As, if I sell you my house, I (primarily) bind myself to give you a title; if I cannot, my secondary obligation is to pay you damages for my non-performance of the primary obligation. Several obligations are those by which one or more individuals bind themselves separately to perform an engagement. In this case each obligor may be sued separately; and if one or more of them be dead, their respective legal representatives may be sued. Single obligations are those without penalty, as where I promise simply to pay you one hundred dollars.

IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS. The constitution of the United States provides that "no State shall pass" "any law impairing the obligation of contracts."<sup>10</sup> In general, only contracts are embraced in this provision respecting property or some object of value, and confer rights which can be asserted in a court of justice. The law of place acts upon a contract, and governs its construction, validity, and obligation, but constitutes no part of it. The law explains the stipulations of the parties, but never supercedes or varies them. This is very different from supposing that every law applicable to the subject-matter, as statutes of limitation and insolvency, enters into and becomes a part of the contract; this can neither be drawn from the terms of the contract, nor presumed to be contemplated by the parties to the contract. There is a broad distinction taken as to the obligation of a contract and the remedy upon it. The abolition of all remedies by a law operating at the present time is, of course, an impairing of the obligation of the contract. But a legislature may vary the nature and extent of remedies, as well as the times and modes in which these remedies may be pursued, and for suits not brought within such times as may be prescribed. A reasonable time within which rights are to be enforced must be given by laws which bar certain suits.<sup>11</sup> The meaning of the obligation is important with regard to the distinction taken between the laws existing at the time the contract is entered into and those which are enacted afterwards. The former are considered to have been in contemplation of the parties, and so far a part of their contract; the latter are said to impair, provided they affect the contract at all. See LAWS.

right when not expressed is always implied. Persons may change their will at any time if it be not to the injury of another; they may, therefore, revoke or recall their offers at any time before they have been accepted, and in order to deprive them of this right the offer must have been accepted on the terms in which it was made.<sup>12</sup> Any qualification of, or departure from, these terms, invalidates the offer, unless the same be agreed to by the party who made it.<sup>13</sup> When the offer has been made, the party is presumed to be willing to enter into the contract for the time limited; and, if it be not fixed by the offer, then until it be expressly revoked or rendered nugatory by a contrary presumption.<sup>14</sup> See ACCEPTANCE.

PAROL CONTRACTS are those which are made verbally or in writing not under seal—for those which are under seal are such as deeds or specialties, and embrace bonds, judgments, recognizances, undertakings, etc., etc.)

A contract which is made under seal, and afterwards modified verbally, becomes thereby wholly a parol contract.<sup>15</sup> In States where seals are abolished the principle of distinction in contracts is still the same, though no seal be required.

PARTIES may act independently and severally, or jointly and severally.

They may act as representatives of others, as agents, factors, and brokers, servants, attorneys, trustees, executors and administrators, and guardians.

They may act in a collective capacity, as corporations, joint-stock companies, and partnerships.

They may be new parties, by novation, assignment, and by indorsement.

They may be parties disabled in whole or in part, as infants, married women, bankrupts or insolvents, non compos mentis, drunkards, etc.

In general, all persons may be parties to contracts; but no person can contract with himself in a different capacity (as A., being a member of the firm of A. & Co., he cannot contract with the firm of A. & Co., because he cannot contract with himself) as there must be an agreement of mind. And no want, immaturity, or incapacity of mind, in the consideration of the law, disables a person from becoming a party. Such disability may be entire or partial, and must be proved.<sup>16</sup>

In case of death of a sole party the debt or contract survives against his heirs, executors, and administrators.

In case of the death of one or more of the joint obligors or promisors the joint debt or contract survives against his heirs, executors, or administrators of the deceased obligor or promisor, as well as against the survivors.

When all the obligors or promisors die, the debt or contract survives against the heirs, executors, and administrators of all the deceased joint obligors and promisors.

PARTNERSHIP. See that title.

PAYMENT TO AN AGENT IN THE ORDINARY COURSE OF BUSINESS BINDS THE PRINCIPAL, UNLESS THE LATTER HAS NOTIFIED THE DEBTOR BEFOREHAND THAT HE REQUIRES THE PAYMENT TO BE MADE TO HIMSELF. Payment to an attorney is as effectual as if made to the principal himself, but not so to an agent of the attorney appointed by the attorney to see the debtor; and where one contracts to do work and sues for its price, the defendant may prove that the plaintiff had a partner in the undertaking, and that he has paid that partner. It is a general rule that payment to one partner is good, and binds the firm. So payment to one of two joint creditors is good, though they are not partners in business. Payment to the creditor's wife will not be a good payment, unless she was his agent, either expressly or by course of business. One may be justified in making payments to a party who is sitting in the creditor's counting-room, and apparently intrusted with the transaction of the business, and authorized to receive the money, although he be not so in fact. In general, it is only a money payment that binds the principal so that he is not affected by any claim which the debtor may have against the agent. And an agent authorized to receive payment in money cannot bind his principal by receiving goods or a bill or note.

PAYMENT IN BANK BILLS. A payment in good bank bills, not objected to at the time, is a good payment; and so is a tender of such bills, but the creditor may object and demand specie. A tender of copper cents cannot be made under the constitution of the United States. If the bills are forged the payee may treat them as a nullity, for such bills are not what they purport to be. But such forged notes (or coin) must be returned by the receiver in a reasonable time, or he must bear the loss. Where the bills of a bank that has failed are paid and received in ignorance of such failure, the loss falls on the party paying, but they must be returned in a reasonable time.

PAYMENT BY CHECK. Payment is often made by the debtor's check upon a bank. The holder is not bound by receiving it, but may treat it as a nullity if he derives no benefit from it, provided he has been guilty of no negligence which has caused an injury to the drawer; nor is it necessary to preserve the payee's rights that it should be presented on the day it was received. And if drawn on a bank in which the drawer has no funds it need not be presented at all in order to maintain an action upon it.

PAYMENT BY DELEGATION. Payment may be made by an arrangement whereby a credit is given or funds supplied by a third party to the creditor, at the instance of the debtor.

PAYMENT BY LETTER. In general the debtor is discharged, although the money does not reach the creditor, if he was directed or expressly authorized by the creditor so to send it, or if he can distinctly derive such authority from its being the usual course of business; but not otherwise.

PART PAYMENT. Payment of a part of a debt, or of liquidated damages, is no satisfaction of the whole debt, even where the creditor agrees to receive a part for the whole, and gives a receipt for the whole demand; unless it were a payment of a debt by a fair and well-understood compromise, carried faithfully into effect. And if a part be paid before all is due, or in any way more beneficial to the creditor than that prescribed by the contract; here there is a new consideration for the release of the whole debt. And if a stranger pay from his own money or give his own note for a part of a debt due from another, in consideration of a discharge of the whole, such discharge is good. If a creditor by his own act and choice compel a payment of a part of his claim by process of law, this will generally operate as an extinguishment of his whole claim, under the rule that he shall not divide an entire cause of action as to give himself two suits upon it. He may often bring his action for a part, but a recovery in that action bars a suit for the remainder. As, if one has a demand for three articles un-

PERFORMANCE. To make this defence effectual, the performance must have been by him who was bound to do it; and whatever is necessary to be done for the full discharge of this duty, although only incidental to it, must be done by him. Nor will a mere readiness to do discharge him from his liability, unless he makes that manifest by tender or an equivalent act.

IMPOSSIBILITY OF PERFORMANCE. If the performance of a contract becomes impossible by the act of God, that is, by a cause which could not possibly be attributed to the promisor, and this impossibility was not among the contingencies which a prudent man should have foreseen and provided for, this would seem a sufficient defence. But mere hardship or difficulty of performance by the promisor will not suffice.

KIND OF PERFORMANCE. The performance must be such as is required by the true spirit and meaning of the contract, and the intention of the parties as expressed therein. A mere literally accurate performance may wholly fail to satisfy the true purpose of the contract. But if the contract expresses and defines the exact method, and that method is accurately followed, this is a sufficient performance. If the contract be in the alternative, as to do a thing on one day or another, or in one way or another, the right of election is with the promisor, if there be nothing in the contract to control the presumption. A. contracted to deliver "from one to three thousand bushels of potatoes," held he might deliver any quantity he chose within the limits of the contract. If the contract is to do one of two things by a given day the debtor has until that day to make his election; but if he suffer that day to pass without performing either, his contract is broken and his right of election gone. Where A. agreed to deliver to B., by the first of May, from 700 to 1,000 barrels of meal, for which B. agreed to pay on delivery at the rate of six dollars per barrel, and A. delivered 700 barrels, and also before the day tendered 300 barrels more, to make up the 1,000 barrels, which B. refused, it was held that B. was bound to receive and pay for the whole 1,000 barrels; the delivery of any quantity between 700 and 1,000 barrels being at the option of A. only, and for his benefit.

PART PERFORMANCE. A partial performance may be a defence, pro tanto, or it may sustain an action pro tanto; but this can be only in cases where the duty to be done consists of parts which are distinct and severable in their own nature (thus, in an entire contract for sale, or manufacture, of a large quantity of an article or articles, at an agreed price for each, the current of authorities holds that a delivery and acceptance of part, gives a right to recover for that part, deducting whatever damages the other party sustained by the non-fulfilment of the contract;) and are not bound together by expressions giving entirety to the contract. It is not enough that the duty to be done is in itself severable, if the contract contemplates it only as a whole.

TIME OF PERFORMANCE. If the contract specifies no time, the law implies it shall be performed in a reasonable time, and will not permit this implication to be rebutted by extrinsic testimony going to fix a definite time, because this varies the contract. What is a reasonable time is a question of law. If the contract refers to "the day of date," or "the date," and expresses any date, this day and not that of the actual making is taken, but if there is in the contract no date, or an impossible date, then the day of the actual making will be understood to be meant by the day of the date. The rule which makes notes which become due on Sunday without grace, payable on the Monday following, applies to all contracts. No one is bound to do any work in performance of his contract on Sunday, unless the work by its very nature, or by express agreement, is to be done on that day, and can be then done without a breach of the law.

PRESENCE OF PARTIES in many contracts and judicial proceedings is necessary in order to render them valid. A party to a deed executed by himself must personally acknowledge it, when such acknowledgment is required by law to give it its full force and effect; and his actual presence in person is indispensable, unless another person represents him as his attorney, having authority from him for that purpose. A lunatic, a man asleep, or insensible, or if the act were done secretly so that he knew nothing of it, would not be considered present.

PROPOSALS or formal offers to perform some undertaking, stating the time and manner of performance, and price demanded, or one or more of these particulars, either directly or by implied or direct reference to some announcement requesting such an offer, are not to be considered as subject to different rules from any other offer. Until it has been accepted, a proposal may be withdrawn by the party who makes it. To be binding, the acceptance must be in the same terms without any variation whatever.

PUNCTUATION is not regarded in the construction or interpretation of a written instrument, or in written law.

RATIFICATION. See title AGENCY; and AFFIRMANCE; CONFIRMATION, above.

READING. When a person signs or executes an instrument of writing it is presumed that it has been read to him; but this presumption may be rebutted. See BLIND; ILLITERATE; PRESSENCE; above.

REFERENCE. See AGENCY; ARBITRATORS.

RESCISSION. Whatever party has the right to rescind must do it within the time specified, if there be such a time, or otherwise within a reasonable time. What is a reasonable time is a question of law for the court only. Generally, as a contract can be made only by the consent of all the contracting parties, it can be rescinded only by the consent of all. But this consent need not be expressed as an agreement. Generally, where one fails to perform his part of the contract, or disables himself from performing it, the other party may treat the contract as rescinded. No contract can be rescinded by one of the parties, unless both can be restored to the condition in which they were before the contract was made. If, therefore, one of the parties has derived an advantage from a partial performance, he cannot hold this and consider the contract as rescinded because of the non-performance of the residue, but must do all that the contract obliges him to do, and seek his remedy in damages.

RELEASES may either give up, discharge, or abandon a right of action, or convey a man's interest or right to another who has possession of it or some estate in the same.

A release is a good defence, whether it be made by the creditor himself, or result from the operation of law. No special form of words is necessary, if it declare with entire distinctness the purpose of the creditor to discharge the debt and debtor. It may expressly extend to only a part of a claim or debt, or to the party released, with express reservation of rights against other parties; in which case it will be construed only as a covenant not to sue. But if a plaintiff is met by a general release under his seal to the defendant, he cannot set up an exception by parol; and where a release is general it cannot be limited or qualified by extrinsic evidence, although a receipt may be. A release may be by operation of law, as, if parties intermarry.

REQUEST. In some cases the necessity of a request is implied from the nature of the transaction; as where a horse is sold to A., to be paid for on delivery, A. must show a request, or impossibility on the part of the vendor to comply if requested, previous to bringing an action; so, on a promise to marry. If the contract, in terms, provides for a request, it must be made. It should be in writing and state distinctly what is required to be done.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE. An agreement by one who exercises a certain trade, business, or occupation, to abandon the same, and thereafter exercise it no more, whether under seal or not, or whether with or without consideration, is void. The unreasonableness of "contracts in restraint of trade," and business, are: 1. Such contracts injure the parties making them, by diminishing their means for obtaining livelihoods and a competency for their families. They tempt improvident persons, for the sake of present gain, to deprive themselves of the power to make future acquisitions. 2. They tend to deprive the public of the services of men in the employments and capacities in which they may be most useful to the community as well as to themselves. 3. They discourage industry and enterprise, and diminish the products of ingenuity and skill. 4. They prevent competition and enhance prices. 5. They expose the public to all the evils of monopoly. Against evils like these, wise laws protect individuals and the public, by declaring all such contracts void. But contracts which are limited as to time, or place, or persons, for a good consideration, are valid, and may be enforced. These rules extend to all branches of trade and all kinds of business.

SAID means "before-mentioned." In contracts and pleadings it is usual and proper, when it is desired to speak of a person or thing before-mentioned, to designate them by the term "said," or "aforesaid," or by some similar term; otherwise the latter description may be ill for want of certainty.

SET-OFF. Set-off is a mode of defence by which the defendant acknowledges the justice of the plaintiff's demand, but sets up a demand of his own against the plaintiff, to counterbalance it in whole or in part.<sup>1</sup>

SETTLEMENTS are agreements by which two or more persons who have dealings together so far arrange their accounts as to ascertain a balance due from one to the other. They are also payments in full.

SHIPPING ARTICLES are agreements in writing or print between the master and seamen or mariners on board of his vessel (except such as shall be apprenticed or servant to himself or owners), declaring the voyage or voyage, term or terms of time for which such seamen or mariners shall be shipped. It is also required that at the foot of every such contract there shall be a memorandum, in writing, of the day and the hour on which each seaman or mariner, who shall so ship and subscribe, shall render himself on board to begin the voyage agreed upon. For want of shipping articles the seaman is entitled to the highest wages which have been given at the port or place where such seaman or mariner shall have been shipped for a similar voyage, within three months next before the time of such shipping, on his performing the service, or during the time he shall continue to do duty on board such vessel without being bound by the regulations, or subject to the penalties or forfeitures contained in said act of Congress; and the master is further liable to a penalty.<sup>2</sup>

Shipping articles ought not to contain any clause which derogates from the general rights and privileges of seamen; and if they do, the clause will be declared void.<sup>3</sup> A seaman who signs shipping articles is bound to perform the voyage, and he has no right to elect to pay damages for non-performance of the contract.<sup>4</sup>

SIGNATURE is the act of putting one's name at the end of an instrument to attest its validity. It is the name thus written. It is not necessary that a party should write his name himself to constitute a signature; his mark is sufficient, though he is able to write.<sup>5</sup> A signature may be made by another party at the request, and in the presence of the contracting party. A signature may be made by a party, another person guiding his hand with his consent.<sup>6</sup>

SILENCE cannot be considered as a consent to a contract, except in cases where the silent person is bound in good faith to explain himself; in which case silence gives consent.<sup>7</sup> But no assent will be inferred from a man's silence unless he knows his rights, and knows what he is doing, nor unless his silence is voluntary.

SIMPLE CONTRACTS are those the evidence of which is merely oral or in writing not under seal nor of record.<sup>1</sup> See introduction to the subject "CONTRACTS," above.

SPECIALTIES are writings sealed and delivered containing some agreement.<sup>2</sup> See introduction to the subject "CONTRACTS," above.

SPECIFICATIONS are the particulars and details of the contract at large.

SPELLING though bad will not void a contract when it appears with certainty what is meant. For example, where a man agreed to pay thirty pounds he was held to pay thirty pounds; and scutus was holden to be scutcheon, and undirted to be undertold.<sup>3</sup>

STAKEHOLDERS must deliver the thing holden by them to the person entitled to it, on demand. It is frequently questionable who is entitled to it. In case of an unlawful wager, although he may be justified for delivering the thing to the winner, by the express or implied consent of the loser,<sup>4</sup> yet if before the event has happened he has been required by either party to give up the thing deposited with him by such party, he is bound so to deliver it; or if, after the event has happened, the losing party gives notice to the stakeholder not to pay the winner, a payment made to him afterwards will be made to him in his own wrong, and the party who deposited the money or thing may recover it from the stakeholder.<sup>5</sup>

STATUTE. All contracts made in violation of a valid statute are absolutely void and of no effect.

SUB-CONTRACTS are those made by persons who have contracted for the performance of labor or services with a third party for the whole or part performance of that labor or service.<sup>1</sup> See AGENCY; "Sub-Agents," above.

SUIT. It is a good cause of abatement of an action upon contract that another is then pending for the same cause and between the same parties.<sup>2</sup> But the prior action must be between the same parties,<sup>3</sup> and the plaintiff must sue in the same capacity.<sup>4</sup> For no man can use the machinery of the law merely to vex and distress another.

SUNDAY. Labor of whatever kind, other than the household offices of daily necessity, or other works of charity and necessity, on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday,<sup>5</sup> is, in general, under penalty, prohibited, but all persons do not come under prohibition.<sup>6</sup>

If a contract is commenced on Sunday, but not completed until a subsequent day, or if it merely grew out of a transaction which took place on Sunday, it is not for this reason void.<sup>2</sup> Thus, if a note is signed on Sunday, its validity is not impaired if it be not delivered on that day.<sup>3</sup> But, a contract made in violation of the express provisions of the Lord's day Acts, is void, like any other illegal and prohibited contract.<sup>4</sup>

SURETYSHIP. See title PAYMENT.

SURPRISE. See DELIBERATION, above.

TENDER. If the tender be of money, it can be a defence only when made before the action was brought.<sup>1</sup> A tender may be made to a quantum meruit.<sup>2</sup> A tender does not bar the debt as a payment would, for in general he is bound to pay the sum which he tenders whenever he is required to do so.<sup>3</sup> But it puts a stop to accruing damages or interest for delay in payment, and gives the defendant costs.<sup>4</sup> It need not be made by the defendant personally; if made by a third person, at his request, it is sufficient;<sup>5</sup> and if made by a stranger without his knowledge or request, a subsequent assent of the debtor will operate as a ratification of the agency and make the tender good.<sup>6</sup> Any person may make a valid tender for an idiot.<sup>7</sup> If an agent, furnished with money to make a tender, at his own risk tenders more, it is good.<sup>8</sup> So, a tender need not be made to a creditor personally; but it must be made to an agent actually authorized to receive the money.<sup>9</sup> If the money be due to several jointly, it may be tendered to either, but must be pleaded as made to all.<sup>10</sup> The whole sum due must be tendered,<sup>11</sup> as the creditor is not bound to receive a part of his debt. If the tender be for the whole debt, it is valid.<sup>12</sup> If the obligation be in the alternative, one thing or another, as the creditor may choose, the tender should be of both, that he may make his choice.<sup>13</sup> To make a tender of money valid the money must be actually produced and proffered,<sup>14</sup> unless the creditor expressly or impliedly waives this production.<sup>15</sup> The debtor is not bound to count out the money, if he has it and offers it.<sup>16</sup> No condition must be annexed to the tender,<sup>17</sup> which the creditor can have any good reason whatever for objecting to; as, for instance, that he should give a receipt in full of all demands.<sup>18</sup> The tender should be in money made lawful by the State in which it is offered.<sup>19</sup> Generally, a tender is valid, and effectual if made at any time after the debt is due; and a demand made after the tender if for more than the sum tendered, will not avoid the tender.<sup>20</sup> Certainly not, if the demand is for more than the real debt, although the excess was for another debt truly due.<sup>21</sup>

TENDER OF CHATTELS. The thing tendered may not be money, but some specific article. If one is bound to deliver chattels at a particular time and place, it may not be enough if he has them there; they may be mingled with others of a like kind which he is not to deliver. Or they may need some act of separation, or identification, or completion, before they could become the property of the other party.<sup>22</sup> Generally, if no time or place be specified, the articles are to be delivered where they are at the time of the contract,<sup>23</sup> unless collateral circumstances designate a different place.<sup>24</sup> If the time be fixed,<sup>25</sup> but not the place, then it will be presumed that the deliverer was to bring the articles to the receiver at that time, and for that purpose he must go with the chattels to the residence of the receiver,<sup>26</sup> unless something in their very nature or use, or some other circumstances of equivalent force, distinctly implies that they are to be left at some other place.<sup>27</sup> It may happen, from the cumbrousness of the chattels or other circumstances, that it is reasonable and just for the deliverer to ascertain from the receiver, long enough beforehand, where they shall be delivered; and then he would be held to this as a legal obligation.<sup>28</sup> So, too, in such a case, the receiver would have a right to designate to the deliverer, a reasonable time beforehand, a place of delivery reasonably convenient to both parties, and the deliverer would be bound by such direction.<sup>29</sup> If no place be indicated, and the deliverer is not in fault in this, he may deliver the chattels to the receiver, in person, at any place which is reasonably convenient.<sup>30</sup> And if the receiver refuses or neglects to appoint any place, or purposely avoids receiving, as, for instance, that he should give a receipt in full of all demands.<sup>31</sup> The tender should be in money made lawful by the State in which it is offered.<sup>32</sup> Generally, a tender is valid, and effectual if made at any time after the debt is due; and a demand made after the tender if for more than the sum tendered, will not avoid the tender.<sup>33</sup> Certainly not, if the demand is for more than the real debt, although the excess was for another debt truly due.<sup>34</sup> giving notice of a place, the deliverer may appoint any place, with a reasonable regard to the convenience of the other party, and there deliver the articles.<sup>2</sup>

If the promise be to pay money at a certain time, or deliver certain chattels, it is a promise in the alternative; and the alternative belongs to the promisor;<sup>3</sup> he may do either the one or the other, at his election; nor need he make his election until the time when the promise is to be performed; but after that day has passed without election on his part, the promisee has an absolute right to the money, and may bring his action for it.<sup>4</sup> A contract to deliver a certain quantity of merchandise at a certain time means, of course, to deliver the whole then.<sup>5</sup>

If by the terms of the contract certain specific articles are to be delivered at a certain time and place in payment of an existing debt, this contract is fully discharged and the debt is paid, by a complete and legal tender of the articles at the time and place, although the promisee was not there to receive them; and no action can thereafter be maintained on the contract.<sup>6</sup> But the property in the goods has passed to the creditor, and he may retain them as his own.<sup>7</sup>

If there be a contract to deliver wares or goods which are merchandise, and belong to a certain trade, this means wares or goods of the kind, fashion, and quality in common use in that trade, and not such as are antiquated and unsalable.<sup>8</sup>

TERM is that space of time allowed for the performance of a contract, as if a builder engage to construct a house for you, you must allow a reasonable time for fulfilling his engagement.<sup>9</sup>

TRANSPORTATION. See DELIVERY; PERFORMANCE, above.

TRIPARTITE consists of three parts. See CONVEYANCING.

UNCONSCIONABLE bargains are those contracts which no man in his senses not under delusion would make, on the one hand, and which, on the other, no fair and honest man would accept.<sup>10</sup>

UNLAWFUL CONTRACTS are of two kinds: those which are void and those which are not. When the law expressly prohibits the transaction in respect of which the agreement is entered into, and declares it to be void, it is absolutely so.<sup>11</sup> But when it is merely prohibited without being made void, although unlawful it is not void.<sup>12</sup> See CONDITIONS; CONSIDERATION; CONSTRUCTION, above.

USURY. See INTEREST; PAYMENT.

VIS MAJOR. See title ACCIDENT.

VOID CONTRACTS are those which have no force or effect whatever.

Wagers upon the result of an election have always been considered as void, as being contrary to sound policy, and tending to impair the purity of elections.<sup>13</sup> All wagers are considered illegal, and contrary to good policy.<sup>14</sup> Wagers as to the mode of playing, or the result of any illegal game, as boxing, wrestling, cockfighting, etc., are void at common law.<sup>15</sup> See STAKEHOLDER, above.

VOIDABLE CONTRACTS are those which have some force or effect, but which, in consequence of some inherent quality, may be legally annulled or avoided; for example, a contract made by an infant with an adult may be avoided or confirmed by the infant on his coming of age. Voidable contracts are, generally, of binding force until avoided by the party having the right to annul them.<sup>16</sup>

WAIVER. If after knowledge of a supposed fraud, surprise, or mistake, a party performs a contract in part, he will be considered as having waived all objection.<sup>17</sup> One may renounce or waive that which is in his favor, provided it be of no detriment to, or prejudice another's rights.

WARRANTY. See INSURANCE; SALES.

WORDS are to be understood in a proper or figurative sense, and they are used both ways in law. Every one is required to use words in the sense they are generally understood; for as speech has been given to man to be a sign of his thoughts for the purpose of communicating them to others, he is bound, in treating with them, to use such words or signs in the sense sanctioned by usage—that is in the sense in which they themselves understand them—or else he deceives them.<sup>18</sup>

WORK AND LABOR. See BAILMENTS.

CONTRACT FORMS.

Articles of agreement consist of a written memorandum of the terms of an agreement. They may relate either to real or personal estate, or both; and if in proper form will create an estate or trust, such that a specific performance may be enforced.

The instrument should contain:

1. The date, which should be truly stated.
2. The names of the parties, stated clearly and explicitly, with their additions, for the purposes of distinction, as well as a designation as parties of the first, second, etc., part.
3. The subject-matter of the contract, including the time, place, and more important details of the manner of performance.
4. The covenants to be performed by each party.
5. Should be signed by the parties, or their agents. When signed by an agent, the proper form is, A. B., by his agent (or attorney) C. D. (or as in the form below).

To render an agreement complete, six things must concur. There must be: 1. A person to contract. 2. A person able to be contracted with. 3. A thing to be contracted for. 4. A lawful consideration. 5. Clear and explicit words to express the agreement; and, 6. The assent of the contracting parties.

By Agent or Attorney in Fact.

If A. signs "A., for B.," this is the signature of A., and he is the contracting party, although he makes the contract at the instance and for the benefit of B. But if he signs "B., by A.," then it is the contract of B., made by him through his instrument A. In the first case, A. is principal; in the second, B. is the principal and A. his agent. The name of the principal must appear as such in the signature of a deed, and in agreements, the words must be sufficient to bear that construction of the signature. Parol evidence may always be admitted to charge an unnamed principal, but not to discharge an actual signer.

This agreement, made this _____ of _____, A. D. _____, by and between A. B., of _____ county, in the State of _____, of the first part, by C. D., his attorney in fact, and E. That for and in consideration of the covenants and payments hereinafter mentioned to be made and performed by the said party of the second part, the said party of the first part doth hereby covenant and agree to complete in the most substantial and workmanlike manner, to the satisfaction and acceptance of the engineer of said company:

All bridges, etc., etc.

All grading, masonry, etc., etc.
Etc., etc.

The said work to be finished as described in the following specifications, and agreeably to the directions received from the said engineer or his assistants, on or before the — day of —,

SPECIFICATIONS FOR GRADING.

1. Under this head will be included all excavations and embankments required for the formation of the road-bed; cutting all ditches or drains about or contiguous to the road; the foundations of culverts and bridges, or walls; the excavations and embankments necessary for reconstructing turnpikes or common roads, in cases where they are destroyed or incumbered with the formation of the railroad; and all other excavations or embankments connected with, or incident to, the construction of said railroad.

2. All cuttings shall be measured in the excavations, and estimated by the cubic yard, under the following heads, viz., earth, loose rock, solid rock, embankment.

Earth will include clay, sand, loam, gravel, and all other earthy matter, or earth containing loose stone, or boulders intermixed, which do not exceed in size three cubic feet.

Loose rock shall include all stone and detached rock lying in separate and contiguous masses remaining not over one cubic yard; also, all slats or other rock that can be quarried without blasting, although blasting may be occasionally required to remove the same.

Solid rock includes all rock occurring in masses exceeding one cubic yard which cannot be removed without blasting.

3. Earth, gravel, and other material taken from excavation (except when otherwise directed by the engineer) shall be deposited in the adjacent embankment, the cost of removing which, when the haul is not more than — feet, will be included in the price paid for excavation; all material necessarily procured from without the road, and deposited in the embankment will be paid for as embankment only, but all material necessarily procured from within the line of the railroad, and hauled more than — feet, will be paid for as excavation and also as embankment. In procuring material for embankment from without the line of road, the place will be designated by the engineer in charge of the work, and in excavating and removing it care must be taken to injure or disfigure the land as little as possible.

4. The embankment shall be formed in layers of such depth, and the materials disposed and distributed in such manner, as the engineer may direct, with the required allowances for settling. Material necessarily wasted from the cutting shall be used in widening the embankment, or be deposited in the vicinity of the road, according to the directions of the engineer.

5. The ground to be occupied by the excavations and embankments, together with a space of twelve feet beyond the slope stakes on each side, or ten feet beyond the berm ditch where one is required, shall be cleared of all trees, brush, and other purchaseable matter. When the filling does not exceed two and a half feet, the trees, stumps, and saplings must be grubbed; but under all other portions of the embankment it will be sufficient that they be cut close to the earth; no separate allowances will be made for grubbing and clearing; but its cost will be included in the price for excavation.

6. Construction, when directed by the engineer in charge of the work, shall deposit on the side of the road, or at such convenient points as may be designated, any stone or rock that they may excavate; and if, in so doing, they should deposit material required for embankment, the additional cost, if any, of securing other material from without the road will be allowed. All stone or rock excavated and deposited as above, together with all timber removed from the line of the road, will be considered the property of the said company, and the contractor upon the respective sections will be responsible for its safe-keeping until removed by said company, or until the work herein contracted for is finished.

7. The line of road, or the grade, may be changed if the engineer shall consider such change necessary or expedient; and for any considerable alterations the injury or advantage to the contractor will be estimated and such allowance or deduction made in the price as the engineer may deem just and equitable; but no claim for an increase in price of excavation or embankment on the part of the contractor will be allowed or considdetermined by the engineer, provided he shall give the engineer in charge immediate notice in writing of the cause of the detention.

Not shall any claims be allowed for extra work unless the same shall be done in pursuance of an order from Specifications for Masonry.

1. All masonry will be estimated and paid for by the cubic yard of twenty-seven cubic feet, and will be included under the following heads, viz., brick work, bridge masonry, rectangular culvert masonry, arched culvert masonry, vertical and slope wall masonry,
and retaining walls.

2. Brick work. Where bricks are used in arches, piers, or abutments of bridges, they shall be made of the best clay, well-tempered, moulded and burnt; they shall be thoroughly wet, and laid in a mortar made of the best hydraulic cement mixed with such portion of sand as the engineer in charge may direct. Laying of bricks dry and subsequent grouting will not be permitted, excepting in the courses which form the keys of arches. The joints to be of such thickness, and the bond to be of old English, Flemish, or such other character as the engineer may prescribe, either for the walls or arches. No hair, cracked, broken, or salmon brick to be used in the work.

Brick Drains. When required, shall be of such form as the engineer in charge may designate; if barrel or circular, the lower half shall invariably be laid dry upon bed duly dressed to radius of exterior of drain; the upper half to be laid in hydraulic cement, or lime-mortar, as the engineer may direct.

Form of Bids. See below.

3. Bridge masonry. When rock foundation cannot be had for abutments and piers the masonry shall be started upon heavy timber sunk to such a depth as to prevent it from decaying and to prevent the possibility of undermining. The timber piers shall be composed of one or more courses, according to the depth of the water, the height of the masonry, or other circumstances of which the engineer shall judge and determine. The masonry will be of two qualities, either to be adopted at the discretion of the engineer.

First quality bridge masonry will be rock range work. The stones to be accurately squared, jointed and bedded, and laid in courses of not less than twelve nor exceeding twenty inches in thickness, regularly decreasing from bottom to top of pier or abutment. The stretchers shall in no case have less than sixteen inches bed for a twelve-inch course, and for all courses above sixteen inches they shall have at least as much bed as face; they will generally be at least four feet in length. The headers shall be of similar size with the stretchers, and shall hold the size in the heart of the wall that they show on the face, and be so arranged as to occupy one-fifth of the face of the wall, and they shall be similarly disposed in the back. When the thickness of the wall will admit of their interlocking they shall be disposed in that manner.

When the wall is too thick to admit of that arrangement, stones not less than four feet in length shall be placed transversely in the heart of the wall to connect the two opposite sides of it. The stones for the heart of the wall shall be of the same thickness as those in the face and back, and must be well fitted to their places; any remaining interstices shall be filled with sound stone chips. The face stones to be set in hydraulic cement mortar, the interior stones to be laid dry, and every course to be thoroughly grouted. The proportion of sand, cement, and lime, in the mortar and grout, to be as directed by the engineer. The upper surface of each course shall be level throughout with the upper bed of the face stones thereof. The stones, forming the points of piers, which set on ice-breakers, shall be neatly dressed on their faces; the other face stones may be left with the face as they come from the quarry, unless the projections should exceed two inches, in which case they shall be roughly scabbled down to that point. The abutments and piers, or such portions of them as the engineer may direct, shall be covered with a course of coping, not less than — inches thick, well dressed, and fastened together with clamps of iron.

Second quality of bridge masonry shall be rubble work, laid in irregular courses, and shall consist of stones containing generally, six cubic feet each, so disposed as to make a firm and compact work; and no stone in the work shall contain less than two cubic feet, except for filling up the interstices between the large blocks in the heart of the wall; at least one-fifth of the face shall be composed of headers, extending full six feet into the wall, and from the back the same proportions and of the same dimensions, so arranged that a header in the back shall be between two headers in the face. The corner-stones shall be neatly hammer-dressed so as to have horizontal beds and vertical joints.

4. Culvert masonry—Archbed. The foundations of archbed culverts, when the bottom of the pit is common earth, gravel, etc., will generally consist of a pavement formed of sizes set edgewise, not less than twelve inches in depth, secured in the same manner as described below for rectangular culverts. When the foundation upon which a culvert is to be built is soft and compressible, and where it will at all times be covered with water, timber well bawn, and from eight to twelve inches in thickness, according to the span of the culvert, shall be laid side by side crosswise upon longitudinal sills;
and where a strong current will be forced through during floods, three courses of sheet piling are to be placed across the foundation, one course at each end, and one in the middle; to be sunk from three to six feet below the top of the timber according as the earth is loam or less compact. The abutments are to be built of range work or in broken courses, the face stones bedded and jointed. The stretchers in the face are to have beds of at least fifteen (15) inches, and in no case less bed than rise, and they are to be not less than two feet long, measured in the face of the wall. The headers shall extend through the wall in cases where it does not exceed three and a half feet thick, and they shall not have less than eighteen (18) inches length of face. They shall be not less than one header in every seven feet of face, measured from centre to centre of headers, and so arranged that a header in a superior course shall be placed between two headers in the course below; the backing stones shall be of large size, and have parallel beds, laid so as to break joints with one another, and when the thickness of the wall exceeds three and a half feet, headers of the same dimensions as those in the face shall be placed in the back of the wall, in the proportion of one for every two headers in the face. The arch stones shall have accurately cut beds and joints and shall be laid in courses throughout. The ring stones shall be neatly cut and composed of alternate long and short bed stones of not less than three feet, and eighteen inches, respectively. The parapet and wing walls shall be built similar to the abutments and covered with a well-dressed coping, not less than ten inches thick and three feet wide. The outside stones to be laid in cement mortar, and the whole wall thoroughly grouted. The expanded hatching to be good rubble work, built as directed by the engineer.

Culvert masonry.—Rectangular. All rectangular culverts will be built dry, with a water way of not less than two and a half by three feet; the abutments will rest on a pavement of stone, not otherwise, of at least ten inches in depth, confined and secured at the ends by deep curbstones, which must be protected from undermining by broken stone placed in such quantity and position as the engineer may direct. The abutment walls shall not be less than two feet thick, and built of good-sized and well-shaped stone, properly laid and bound together by stones occasionally extending entirely through the walls. The upper course to have at least one-half of the stones headers; and the stretchers in no case to be less than twelve inches wide; no stone in this course to be less than six inches thick. The covering to be of sound, strong stone, at least twelve inches thick, and to lap its whole width not less than ten inches on each abutment. The thickness of the covering stone and dimensions of the whole walls to be increased as the discretion of the engineer.

5. Rip-rap. Where the excavation of the road-bed does not furnish sufficient stone for the protection of walls and embankments, the same shall be procured at such places, and disposed in such manner as the engineer may direct, and be estimated and paid on a rip-rap.

6. Steps wall and vertical masonry. The vertical walls shall be good, dry rubble work, and of such dimensions and built with such batter as the engineer may direct. Steps walls shall be built of such thickness and slope as may be required by the engineer, no stone, however, to be used in their construction which do not reach through the walls, or that are less than six inches in thickness and twelve inches in length; the beds of the stones to be placed at right angles to the face of the bank; the joints must be close and free from spalls.

7. In all masonry the stone or brick must be of a quality, size, and shape to be approved of by the engineer. Such portions of the masonry as the engineer may require to be laid in lime mortar, or hydraulic cement, shall be so laid; the ——— furnishing or paying for the lime and cement used. If, in the progress of the masonry, an increase in the number of headers specified should be required by the engineer, such additional number shall be laid in the work as he shall designate.

The price per cubic yard paid for all masonry, whether of brick or stone, shall in every case include the furnishing of all materials, together with (or less) the cost of scaffolding, centering, etc., and all expenses attending the delivery of these materials, and all risks from floods or otherwise.

And the said party of the second part does promise and agree to pay to the said party of the first part, for all the work to be performed under this contract, as follows, to wit:

- Earth excavation, per cubic yard, 30 cents.
- Each excavation, " " 50 "
- Bridge masonry, " " 85.00.
- Etc., etc.

On or about the last day of each month during the progress of this work, an estimate shall be made of the relative value of the work done, to be judged of by the engineer, and 75 per cent. of the amount of said estimate shall be paid to the party of the first part, on or about the 15th day of the following month. And when all the work embraced in this contract is completed, agreeably to the specifications and in accordance with the directions and to the satisfaction and acceptance of the engineer, there shall be a final estimate made of the quality, character, and value of said work, according to the terms of this agreement, when the balance appearing due to the said party of the first part shall be paid to him within thirty days thereafter, upon his giving a release, under seal, to the party of the second part, from all claims or demands whatsoever growing in any manner out of this agreement, and upon his procuring and delivering to the parties of the second part full release in proper form and duly executed, from mechanic and material men, of all liens, claims and demands for materials furnished and provided, and work and labor done and performed upon or about the work herein contracted for under this contract.

It is further covenanted and agreed between the said parties, that the said party of the first part shall not sub-let or transfer this contract, nor any part thereof, to any person (excepting the delivery of materials), without the written consent of the engineer, but will at all times give personal attention and superintendance to the work.

It is further agreed and understood that the work embraced in this contract shall be commenced within five days from this date, and prosecuted with such force as the engineer shall deem adequate to its completion within the time specified; and if at any time the said party of the first part shall refuse or neglect to prosecute the work with a force sufficient, in the opinion of the said engineer, for its completion within the time specified in this agreement, then, and in that case the said engineer in charge, or such other agent as the engineer shall designate, may proceed to employ such a number of workmen, laborers, and overseers as may, in the opinion of the said engineer, be necessary to insure the completion of the work within the time hereinbefore limited, at such wages as he may find it necessary or expedient to give, pay all persons so employed, and charge over the amount so paid to the party of the first part as for so much money paid to him as this contract; or for the failure to prosecute the work to the satisfaction of the engineer, for non-compliance with his directions in regard to the manner of constructing it, or for any other omission or neglect of the requirements of this agreement and specifications be the part of the party of the first part, the said engineer may, at his discretion, declare this contract or any portion or section embraced in it forfeited; which declaration and forfeiture shall annul and release the said company from any and all obligations and liabilities arising under this contract the same as if this agreement had never been made; and the reserved percentage of ten per cent. upon any work done by the party of the first part may be retained forever by the said company.

And the said party of the first part has further covenanted and agreed to take, use, provide, and make all proper, necessary, and sufficient precautions, safeguards, and protections, against the occurrence or happening of any accidents, injuries, damages, or hurt to any person or property during the progress of the construction of the work herein contracted for, and in be responsible for, and to indemnify and to reimburse the said parties of the second part, and the said engineer, from the payment of all sums of money by reason of all or any such accidents, injuries, damages, or hurt, that may happen or occur upon or about said work, and from all fines, penalties and loss incurred, for or by reason of the violation of any city or municipal ordinance or regulation, or law of the State, while the said work is in progress of construction.
